* Brickleberry episode "Hello Dottie". When Woody outsources most of his employees' jobs to India (as in he has the work done by robots which are being remote controlled from India), Steve falls in love with one of the outsource workers, whose face is shown on a monitor mounted on the robot. Eventually, he decides to fly to India to meet her in person. When he arrives, he discovers that below her beautiful face, she is grossly overweight, with hairy man arms. Steve promptly heads back to America.

* Brickleberry gift card. Bobby is (obviously) not impressed by that offer, and promptly throws both of them into a pig pen buried in pig feces.
* Brickleberry got cancelled after 3 seasons, the creators failed to find a 4th season on another home channel so they settled on a comic book that focused on Future Steve going back in time to stop alien cows from taking over the earth. In the last issue, Future Steve finally saved the day and helped everyone survive the impending alien cow invasion, but because of this he can't exist anymore.... then only his skin vanishes first! And THEN his muscles! It hurts so much, and he regrets ever saving everyone.
* Brickleberry had an episode where Woody and Malloy kicked out of their mansion by the Secretary of Interior after Woody (under Malloy's advice) really pissed her off with a cartoon offending her and they scheme to take it back by either killing her or buttering up to her.
* Brickleberry has Steve showing Ethel an old episode of the Flamey The Bear Show, where Flamey shows the kids how to fight forest fires, by crushing a guy in a fire costume with a giant bucket full of water.
* Brickleberry has the Ranger Games episode where Steve, desperate to beat the ringer Woody replaced him with on the gymnastics event, runs off to get some steroids, except he doesn't realize that you still have to work out, so he ends up massively overweight with excess body mass and a deep voice.
* Brickleberry - In "Steve the Fearless Pilot", this happens to Woody a lot.
* Brickleberry is revealed to be wearing a toupee in season 1 when a gust of wind blows it half off his head, forcing him to admit that he went bald in early puberty. Naturally, the entire cast being what it is, mercilessly mock him for it, and Malloy flushes the toupee down the toilet.
* Brickleberry is this trope in spades. Among its more notable features are games such as "Meth Eating Contests", Whack A Mole with real moles, and a rollercoaster named The Paralyzer, that just comes to a dead stop in the middle of the track.
* Brickleberry is very stupid and very self-centered, showing no remorse for the trouble he causes others.
* Brickleberry, leading to a horrified Woody screaming in rage at his dick.
* Brickleberry, once when Woody is looking for a replacement ranger when Steve thinks (wrongly) that he has a terminal disease, and once showing Ethel's questionable dating choices. Interestingly, there is actually some overlap between the two, as both interview segments have a mentally challenged man in it.
* Brickleberry: Woody's grocery list gets stuck in a book of black baby names in "Aparkalypse".
* Brickleberry, yet the Internet Movie Database gives the show a 7.4 score.
* Brick Mansions. Walker doesn't do any Parkour in the film, there's a clear division of labor with Belle in the running role and Walker in the shooting and driving one.
* Brick never got an official name, but it was filmed in San Clemente High School.
* Brick of the Rowdyruff Boys wears a red shirt, red cap and black pants and shoes.
* Bricks Of Egypt 2: The Acid Eye is colored green and sheds acid tears that can destroy every block that can be found (except for the Key blocks).
* Brick Something of a subversion, as outside of his basement office, he's clearly quite shy and eager to be liked.
* Brick. Takes a few beat-downs, but stands up again regardless (though his attempts to be truly implacable fail spectacularly when he swallows too much of his own blood and makes himself sick.)
* Brick the main character is attacked by a thug seeming to disrupt him. The origin of this is not revealed and it's implied it'll provide a greater wrinkle to the plot. The explanation isn't revealed until the end, and it turns out he was just hired by another character the protagonist humiliated earlier in the film for revenge.
* Brick (though more because Brendan needs his connections than any actual like of each other). Both of them act as though they have every right to do what law enforcement does, though Brendan takes things significantly further than any rational person should, up to and including going undercover in a drug ring and then assuming the Vice-Principal will cover his absences in class so he doesn't have to deal with consequences for his actions.

* Brick Top keeps a group of perpetually starved pigs on hand to eat, and thus dispose of, the bodies of people he kills.
* Brick, where Tug puts Brendan through a test of character by driving a fast-moving car just an inch away from running him over. Brendan doesn't get the "unflinching" part right but at least he doesn't jump away, which impresses Tug enough.
* Brickworld Saga had a truly massive standoff with over twenty participants on five different sides, including pirates, cyborgs, and the undead.
* Bridal Carry Katara while jumping down a couple stories, and also once carry Zuko, despite both of them clearly being heavier than him and his thin build wouldn't hint he possessed that sort of strength. But that's nothing compared to supporting an entire boulder on his back when training with Toph. He's also fallen a few stories out of a tree, and got back up seconds later with no lasting injuries.
* Bridal magazines presume that the vast majority of their readers are brides-and-grooms-to-be who will only be subscribing (or picking up a few issues here and there in the grocery store checkout line) for the duration of their engagements, and thus repeat articles (with very slight tweaks) on a 16-20 month cycle.
* Bride and Prejudice, Darcy makes a real effort for Lalita that includes drums.
* Bride and Prejudice some of the conflict between William Darcy and Lalita is because they both make cultural assumptions about the other.
* Bride and Switch: It can be the whole plot, when the heroine is replaced en route to her wedding, or a final complication.
* Bride and Switch— The bride isn't who the groom thinks she is.
* Bride of Chucky are vicious murderers, but love each other... most of the time.
* Bride of Chucky has Damian Baylock being killed by the evil doll after Tiffany, Chucky's accomplice and the title character, handcuffs him to the bed.
* Bride of Chucky has the series killer doll being resurrected by his old girlfriend whom he turns into another doll.
* Bride of Chucky. They collaborate to plant a bag of marijuana on Jesse just because he's dating Warren's niece, Jade.
* Bride of Discord, came to him offering friendship and asking him to use his powers to help pony-kind, with Discord implying he developed a crush on her. But they quickly had a falling out after Discord's attempts at "helping" ended up just creating more problems, causing Celestia to snap at him. He did not take the one pony to offer him compassion in his life snapping at him well, at all.
* Bride of Frankenstein author Mary Shelley telling Percy Shelley and Lord Byron that while her tale was one of terror it was meant to instill a moral lesson.
* Bride of Frankenstein certainly counts, being played by the gorgeous Elsa Lanchester. Although she only gets a few minutes of screen time, she's memorable enough to become one of the most famous Universal monsters.
* Bride of Frankenstein, Dr. Pretorius keeps a collection of tiny people created via his experiments in glass display jars.
* Bride of Frankenstein, Dr. Pretorius lures the Monster aside with a promise of booze and puts a sedative into a glass that presents to him. Once the Monster finishes his drink, it knocks him off of his feet.
* Bride of Frankenstein hailed it as "one of those rare sequels that is infinitely superior to its source."
* Bride of Frankenstein, Henry is thought to be dead in the beginning but turns out just fine after being taken home.
* Bride of Frankenstein included the Monster murdering the Burgomaster.
* Bride of Frankenstein introduces his sinister old mentor, Dr. Pretorius.
* Bride of Frankenstein, on Dr. Pretorius' orders, kidnaps Elizabeth so that her husband will co-operate in making a bride for him.
* Bride of Frankenstein: The Bride is meant to be conventionally attractive, as she was built by the Doctor to be a suitable wife for his earlier creation. Just like her mate, she's assembled from stolen corpses.

* Bride of Frankenstein, villagers and policemen try to stop the Monster with bullets, to no avail.
* Bride of Frankenstein, which was straight horror. Director James Whale purposefully wanted to give the sequel a different tone to stand on it's own.
* Bride of Portable Hole Full of Beer supplement, includes a prestige class that slowly figures out that it is a RPG character as it progresses. At the final level, the character enters the real world and moves in with the player.
* Bride of the Monster: First footage of a snake on a branch is used to make it look like a big rubber one in a tree is alive. Later, footage of moving alligators is used to make it appear as though a character is shooting at them; in the riff, Joel and the robots make comments such as "He's shooting at a different movie!" And of course, stock footage of an octopus underwater is used with scenes of an unmoving obviously fake one.
* Bride of the Monster note that the near-constant rain is unnatural for their area. At one point Dick Craig and his partner Marty discuss the situation. "Something strange about this rain. Lightning's been going crazy too. Maybe, it's like the papers say- all these atom bombs explosions, distorted the atmosphere". It is implied that Vornoff's experiments may be affecting the weather, but the lines seem to also reflect then-contemporary anxiety about climate change.
* Bride of the Monster: William Benedict, of child actor group the Bowery Boys, appears as a newspaper seller.
* Bride of the Rat God finds American crosswords easier than the British ones.
* Bride of the Rat God is used to sacrifice the wearer to the Rat God. It ends up being used as a prop in a Hollywood film.
* Bride Of The Slime Monster. Using a great deal of misinterpreted pantomime, he tries to get one of the locals to teach him how to say "See you in the funny papers," which is the magic phrase needed to travel to another movieverse. His first attempt comes out as "Looking at you with the humorous books."
* Brideshead Revisited), and treats Charles to a drink at a gay club. He also mentions having had cross-dressing interests in the past.
* Brideshead Revisited idea, and Julia's acquiescence demonstrates how subjugated she is to them.
* Brideshead Revisited, Sebastian (an adult) wanted a hairbrush for his teddy bear: not to brush him with, but to threaten him with a spanking when he was sulky.
* Brideshead Revisited when Rex Mottram attempts the same to marry Julia.
* Bridesmaid. Elle didn't want to cheat on her husband though, she simply wanted to confess the long-lasting feelings she had for Fleur. Fleur liked her back but thought it was unrequited the entire time.
* Bridesmaids, and apparently, a lot of moviegoers of both genders agreed. Female writers at Slate.com and other sites practically begged readers to buy tickets to convince studio execs to greenlight more female-driven scripts.
* Bridesmaids. Annie's idiot roommate opens the bag of peas and pours them down her back, then blames Annie for not specifying to keep the bag closed.
* Bridesmaids ends up in a relationship or is in one from the beginning: Helen, Becca, and Rita are all married. Lillian gets married to Doug, Annie ends up with Rhodes, and the happily-single Megan is revealed to have hooked up with the Air Marshal, with whom she shared a single (admittedly flirty) scene, and he accompanies her to the wedding. Even Annie's divorced mom is heavily implied to hook up with the guy from roadside assistance at the very end.
* Bridesmaids ends with everyone partying to "Hold On" by Wilson Phillips at the wedding reception.
* Bridesmaids. His main function in the plot is to make kooky observations about vegetables and encourage Annie to follow her dreams. It's a slightly more nuanced example than most: his biggest romantic gesture is presented as (at best) well-meaning but tone-deaf, and while he encourages her to follow her dreams (by returning to her love of baking and dream of owning a business), he also encourages her to deal with the mundane realities of her life (by fixing her tail light). She also repeatedly tells him that she doesn't need him to "fix" her.

* Bridesmaids involve very short skirts or dresses displaying her long legs and several lines draw attention to them. (Usually in a more comedic way, but still.)
* Bridesmaids, not helped at all by the fact that all the bridesmaids had just eaten at the same dubious Brazilian restaurant.
* Bridesmaids: The flight to Las Vegas is actually not that bad, except for Annie. She takes a pill from Helen, manipulates her into taking it with alcohol, and this causes her to slip into hallucinations and a break from reality thanks to a paranoid seat mate who keeps fantasizing about the plane crashing. She ends up stumbling around the cabin, declaring that the plane is about to crash, and the plane ends up getting grounded and they all have to bus back home.
* Bridesmaids, the main character is talking to a smugly newlywed couple and asks where they went on their honeymoon. They both say, "Disney World," and then the wife adds, "Sorry, we finish each other's sentences," as if there was any way they weren't both going to say the same thing.
* Bridesmaids was also fairly raunchy, since the film isn't afraid to put women on the receiving end of slapstick, particularly at the bridal fitting where half the women puke in the bathroom (and on each other) and the other half experience explosive diarrhea.
* Bridesmaids: 'We'd like to invite you to no longer live with us anymore.'
* Bridesmaids: when the main character is getting the attention of a cop who doesn't want to acknowledge her, among numerous other examples.
* Bridesmaids who takes a dump, in the middle of a street, after they all contract food poisoning. Made worse by the fact that she was trying on an expensive wedding dress at the time.
* Brides of Christ is set during the Sixties, but avoids many of the stereotypes.
* Brides of Dracula wiki. Focuses on the characters through different incarnations.
* Brides of the Emperor, the main military force for the Adeptus Ministorum and considered one of the most elite forces utilized by the Imperium.
* Bride Wars had the two friends sabotage each others weddings from sabotaging a dye job until it escalates into having a embarrassing slide show done on the wedding day.
* Bride Wars was dubbed in Slovak twice for airing. The first dub aired on TV Markiza. The second dub aired on TV JOJ in 2015.
* Bride Wars was originally a high school comedy. Which explains so much.
* Bridezilla - A bitchy bride who treats other wedding goers badly and insists on getting her way.
* Bridezilla (due to her obsession with having the perfect fairy tale wedding). Salem says that the only way to cure her is for a prince to slay her. In this case it's her fiancée Aaron telling her off for some of her crazy wedding ideas.
* Bridezilla: Planning the perfect wedding brings out a bride's absolute worst.
* Bridezillas her cousin dance for her in a gold singlet and sneakers.
* Bridge Bunnies: Young women who control the spaceship from the bridge.
* Bridge Commander does allow you to take direct control over the ship and treat it like a fighter, especially if you're piloting a Bird-of-Prey (they only have forward-firing weapons).
* bridge dropping have proposed that she's still alive and is being held captive by Moriarty/Moran and that her rescue (and Moran's survival) will drive the plot of the inevitable third movie. And, of course, Holmes himself, for some reason, actually is hiding.
* Bridge in which he and his partner Toni have strong hands ... that don't quite mesh.
* Bridge of Birds. Also, the heartless tend to long for the "cold" things (treasure) above all else.
* Bridge of Birds find one of these carved into the wall of an ancient ruined city, describing the monster that ruined it.
* Bridge of Birds Li Kao claims a beautiful woman makes every morning are "checks to make sure that her makeup has hardened into an immovable mask" and "looks into the mirror for any visible sign of humanity, and is relieved to find none".

* Bridge of Birds, Number Ten Ox describes a sexual encounter in very abstract terms by explaining that the best way for two young people to "become acquainted" is through activities such as Fluttering Butterflies, Hounds by the Ninth Day of Autumn, and Six Doves Beneath the Eaves on a Rainy Day.
* Bridge of Birds, so he mimics the villains in fairy tales rather than think on his own.
* Bridge of Birds. Solving crime, however, was a much more interesting challenge, and he chose to do so for the rest of his life instead.
* Bridge of Birds that Ten Ox doesn't mind being called "Boopsie" by her at all.
* Bridge of Birds, the barbarian king who is holding Moon Boy (sort of) captive has a regiment of all-female bodyguards.
* Bridge of Birds, the Duke of Ch'in (a pastiche of the historical Qin Shihuangdi) is revealed to have had his heart removed by the wisest man in the world, who implies that he was the one who did the same to Koschei the Deathless.
* Bridge of Birds. There's actually an early draft of the book that reveals the author had originally intended for Li Kao to be the narrator and Ten Ox to be only a peripheral character. Comparing this draft with the final product shows just how much the promotion of Ten Ox to this character role (and the addition of many plot elements) improved the book; for one thing, Li Kao's narration of his life story isn't quite as effective when he tells it in a drunken ramble to a skull in a pool as when he tells it to Ten Ox to assure him that he's not going to give up in his quest to heal the ill children of Ten Ox's village.
* Bridge of Birds, there's a morbidly obese merchant who orders an obscene meal, but then passes on dessert because he says he needs to watch his diet.
* Bridge of Birds, with the added element that the books in question were pornographic.
* "Bridge of No Return" in the Joint Security Area of Panmunjeom, where POW and other prisoner exchanges (such as the freeing of the crew of USS Pueblo, captured in 1968, the last men to cross the bridge) have been held since the armstice that has paused the Korean War. It was called "The Bridge of No Return" because once one crossed the bridge, they could never change their mind later on. It was officially decomissioned in 1976, and has been in disrepair ever since.
* Bridge of Spies, a historical thriller about the trial of a Soviet spy in America, while at the same time an American spy is captured in the USSR.
* Bridge of Spies becomes this, taking the case of accused Soviet spy Rudolf Abel because he believes even those working against the United States deserve protection under the Constitution.
* Bridge of Spies, Donovan encounters these in East Berlin, who steal his coat.
* Bridge of Spies features standard beatdowns from Soviet and East German security forces. Meanwhile, American police aren't too excited about helping James Donovan after his defense of Soviet spy Rudolf Abel, leaving him to the wolves of America's populace.
* Bridge of Spies in return — as part of a spy exchange between the United States and the Soviet Union.
* Bridge of Spies. In the first scene, Abel receives a phone call from his superiors and doesn't give any sort of greeting. Later on, the American agent receives a call from an East German agent, and silently picks up the phone, listens, then hangs up without a word. One would think in that situation it would be important to verify who you're talking to.
* Bridge of Spies is portrayed as a surprisingly likable and sympathetic character who is just trying to serve his country. He's also unflappably calm in the face of impending death.
* Bridge of Spies James Donovan cites this trope as a reason why Rudolf Abel cannot be considered a traitor unlike the Rosenbergs — Abel was merely following the directives given to him by his senior officer. Abel himself gives a cynical, and typically Russian, definition of this concept:
* Bridge of Spies: James Donovan's efforts to defend accused Soviet spy Rudolf Abel puts him and his family at risk of bad publicity and violence. His wife implores him to stop, but he continues, and later attempts the prisoner exchange without telling her because he thinks doing the right thing is what's most important. When she finds out what he did she isn't pleased at first, but ultimately she smiles as if to accept that she loves him precisely because he stands up for what he believes in.

* Bridge of Spies makes the American hatred for Communists in this time period abundantly clear; attorney James Donovan gets harsh glares and his family is threatened simply for doing his job of defending the Soviet spy Rudolf Abel. There is also a scene featuring American schoolchildren watching a nuclear war safety video.
* Bridge of Spies), since he's keeping a man he knows to be innocent solely to help East Germany get a leg up in the Soviet hierarchy.
* Bridge Over Troubled Water's final studio album, turned out to be a huge success, topping the charts in the US for 10 weeks and the UK for 33 non-consecutive weeks, and even won a Grammy for Album Of The Year. It helped that it contained some fan favorites such as the title track, "El Condor Pasa (If I Could)", "Cecelia" and "The Boxer".
* Bridgeport: After the original Bridgeport Machines, Inc. knee-and-column vertical milling machine with ram-and-turret mounting for the milling head. Machinists generally refer to the original as just "Bridgeport" and other manufacturers' as "Bridgeport-style".
* Bridgerton, Anthony, who is now Lord Bridgerton and in charge of his family's estate, has high standards for his sister and shoots down any man she shows interest in. He's less than pleased when Daphne and his old friend Simon, whom he knows to be a rake, start talking.
* Bridgerton: Despite being a highly desirable bachelor, Simon is determined not to marry as he wants his abusive father's line to end with him. Nevertheless, he falls for Daphne and they end up married.
* Bridgerton even though Regency shilouettes don't require them, which contributed to the fitting issues of the dresses.
* Bridgerton includes various pop songs reworked into Regency-style music.
* Bridgerton series. An entire family of girls with no musical talent, and three-quarters of the family are in denial about it enough to insist that all of the eligible maidens play a musicale every year.
* Bridgerton: Simon Basset, Duke of Hastings, to avoid unwanted suitors enters a fake romance with Daphne Bridgerton, who expects the relationship to raise her reputation in the marriage market once it is over. "Over" doesn't happen.
* Bridgerton within a month of its debut, and was renewed for three more seasons before the sophomore season even dropped.
* Bridges are the site of many historical battles, due to their value as "choke points" that an enemy must file through slowly. The Battle of Stirling, depicted in the movie
* "Bridges In the Sky" starts with a full minute and a half of synth drones, throat singing, and Eastern instrument effects before the main song starts. It still manages to be
* Bridget actually started having a high-pitched but bearable tone in the original
* Bridget & Joan's Diary, Joan likes her tea the way she likes her men: still warm.
* Bridget Forrester born on-air in 1992 turned 13 in 1997, and turned 18 in 2000. She has aged naturally since then.
* Bridget has a lot of fanart (pornographic or otherwise) that averts the
* Bridget Hoffman—most notably shown the movies's iconic poster.
* Bridget Jones), and finally, there is a documentary about wild lions: "The male penetrates the female and leaves. Coitus is brief and perfunctory." Poor Bridget!
* Bridget Jones, and unsurprisingly falls into water. He doesn't want to be the only one wet and tries to swing the boat with Bridget as well. Prim and proper Natasha is horrified ("How childish!"), but Mark looks as if he envied them.
* Bridget Jones a "Tarts and Vicars" party, but that the organizers changed their minds and failed to inform Bridget or her father.
* Bridget Jones, Bridget (51) dates Roxter (30), who enthusiastically talks about how great it is to be with a "cougar." Bridget's friend Talitha is 60 and seems to attract similar guys.

* Bridget Jones, Bridget dances with a teenage boy she meets at a party during a smoke break.
* Bridget Jones, Bridget decides to make a caramelised oranges dish the night before, but needs to go to bed, so she reverses this idea, putting it on a lower temperature for a longer time. She ends up with something that looks like the picture in the book, if a bit darker. Her guests are prompted to ask "What is this Hon? Is it Marmalade?"
* Bridget Jones. Bridget runs after Mark, her big love, to tell him to she loves him and that she wants to get back together. She dresses up and looks really pretty, but she gets massively splashed by water from puddles that cars drive into when she gets out of a taxi. Suddenly she doesn't look that great and she's probably cold, too.
* Bridget Jones, Bridget tries to buy a pregnancy test, but she is unable to speak the local language and everyone in the store ends up thinking she already is pregnant.
* Bridget Jones' Diary: After a gag when Bridget has just given a speech for which she thought her microphone was not working, Mr Fitzherbert says "I'll just switch this on". Feedback is heard when he does so.
* Bridget Jones' Diary, an acquaintance of Bridget has a habit of making stinging remarks. This is shown as a "jellyfish counter" on the screen, which increases with each remark. It decreases when Bridget manages to insert stinging remarks of her own, but eventually goes off the scale and explodes.
* Bridget Jones' Diary: As Bridget's boss, Daniel orders Bridget to tell him about girls teaching her French kissing, whether it is true or not.
* Bridget Jones' Diary: Bridget finds out that Daniel cheats on her with a skinny American and that he wants to marry her. But she will not be defeated by a bad man and an American stick insect. She chooses vodka and gets drunk.
* Bridget Jones' Diary, Hugh Grant and Colin Firth briefly suspend their fist fight in a restaurant to join in a chorus of "Happy Birthday".
* Bridget Jones' Diary, in which two guys hurl themselves through plate glass like action movie heroes and then simply lie whimpering in agony in the glass shards below, too hurt to move. (On the other hand, they still only get extremely small cuts).
* Bridget Jones' Diary left a pair of running shoes near the front door, which she quickly puts on her bare feet so she can chase Mark Darcy into the snow.
* Bridget Jones' Diary than Uncomfortable Elevator Moment to Bridget Jones.
* Bridget Jones' Diary where Bridget is suckered into going down a fireman's pole whilst wearing a skirt. And being filmed from underneath.
* Bridget Jones, of all people, gets a named bullet in the mail in the second book.
* Bridget Jones's Diary at a book launch. Bridget, who's giving the introductory speech, spots him in the crowd just after she's described the book her company is publishing as "the greatest book of our time" ... and goes on to tell Archer that "yours aren't bad either".
* Bridget Jones's Diary where she has to take A-level French while wearing nothing but her Domestic Science apron. When she tells it to Daniel (her boyfriend) he asks her to "run over the bit" about the apron again.
* Bridget Jones.) She chooses the latter but in a surprising aversion, despite some initial alarm at the size of the panties, her date is actually turned on by them.
* Bridget Jones smug married couples: Hugo and Jane, Cosmo and pregnant Woney, Alistair and Henrietta, Julia and Michael, Joanne and Paul, and Natasha Glenville dating Mark Darcy. They ask her uncomfortable questions about her love life and why there are so many single women. Luckily, Bridget's able to strike back as she hints that one in three marriages ends in divorce these days.
* Bridget Jones: The Edge of Reason does this with the protagonist playing this role.
* Bridget Jones: The Edge of Reason he is revealed to think she got back together with his ex-friend Daniel. The couple gets back together in the end.

* Bridget Jones: The Edge of Reason, in which the race for love goes on for interminable length, even cycling through THREE different songs before Bridget reaches Darcy.
* Bridget Jones: The Edge of Reason, the protagonist is described as "someone someone who thought Iran was David Bowie's wife, and who didn't know where Germany was". At least the latter allegation is corroborated.
* Bridget Jones: The Edge of Reason, who has an apartment that would resemble a teenager's room. She takes it as evidence of how he's not spontaneous enough.
* Bridget Jones: When Bridget screws up her cooking, she takes a swig from a bottle of some alcohol.
* Bridget Jones" who is always able to bring down her self-esteem with cutting remarks and ends up convinced that she is horribly prematurely aging. As a result, the next time she goes out she spends ages applying lots and lots of makeup, to the point that when she arrives her friend Tom tells her she looks like Barbara Cartland.
* Bridge to Terabithia 2: The Last Time, and his little sister Maybelle just happens to barge in at the wrong time.
* Bridge to Terabithia 2: The Last Time (he's a teenage boy, what'd you expect), the two girls' reactions are somewhere between the lines of this trope.
* Bridge to Terabithia 2: The Last Time: Jess Aarons and Leslie Burke, now at college-age, sometimes does this, notably in the one chapter when Mr. Burke gives Jess and his daughter a lift back from the airport.
* Bridge to Terabithia 2: The Last Time: Jess allowing the injured Leslie to lie down on his lap after he apologized about losing his temper on her a few months prior.
* Bridge to Terabithia 2: The Last Time, so Leslie Burke in this version follows this trope; however there's an entirely new OC, Dylan Hils, a young blonde boy which is one of the kindest, sweetest characters in the entire story so this trope applys to him as well.
* Bridge to Terabithia 2: The Last Time where Jess and Leslie have two children - a girl and a boy - who seemed like carbon copies of their parents...
* Bridge to Terabithia 2: The Last Time who had dated six girls in two years, not counting his on-off relationship with his current girlfriend, the new character Sonia Taylors.
* Bridge to Terabithia 2: The Last Time who is often curious and a borderline keet towards his elder sister, not unlike Leslie when she first met Jess when they were children.
* Bridge to Terabithia 2: The Last Time, with the second chapter being in a University setting. Jess Aarons and Leslie Burke are now dating each other, but Jess suddenly develops feelings for Amelia Edmunds, niece of his old music teacher and former crush Julia Edmunds who happens to be in the same class with him. When Jess ends up kissing Amelia after a bet gone wrong, a rather jealous Leslie convinces Amelia (whom she is also friends with, but is oblivious that Jess and Leslie are romantically involved) to go on a date with Jess. It ends up with Amelia pressuring Jess to have sex with her, causing him to suffer a mental breakdown and decide to go back to Leslie.
* Bridge to Terabithia a Christian, though apparently a more moderate or liberal one than the Christians she offended with her open message. In fact, the author's parents were missionaries to China, and the author herself is married to a Presbyterian minister; moreover, many of the issues that caused offense are actual live debates in Christian theology, with there being serious arguments on both sides firmly rooted in logic and in Scripture. Furthermore, the film's backer, media mogul Phillip Anschutz, is an outspoken conservative Christian.
* Bridge to Terabithia as well, with Jesse believing that her death is all lies, believing she saw her over at her house when they went to pay their respects, and finally mistaking May-Belle's voice for Leslie's.
* Bridge to Terabithia create a fantasy world in order to escape their hardships at school.
* Bridge to Terabithia, during the scene when Jess gives Leslie Prince Terrien (a puppy) as a present.

* Bridge to Terabithia has this line from 8-year-old Maybelle, right at the end of their church visit.
* Bridge to Terabithia is better at running than the boys and is teased for it, but makes a friend in the main character, who got her the chance to run.
* Bridge to Terabithia is that they were going for a timeless feel, and as such the movie doesn't have much that would date it to the 2000s.
* Bridge to Terabithia is the kind, positive, and energetic heroine of the story who dies in a very bittersweet ending so the main protagonist could mature.
* Bridge to Terabithia: Jesse builds a bridge from the ordinary world to Terebithia to replace the rope he and Leslie originally used.
* Bridge to Terabithia, Jesse gives to the kid sitting behind him in the classroom a punch that projects the latter against the wall, in response to a very cruel joke said kid told just before.
* Bridge to Terabithia, linking our world with the world of Jesse and Leslie. Jesse built it to replace the rope he and Leslie used through most of the work.
* Bridge to Terabithia, misleading most audiences into thinking the film to be a Narnia-esque fantasy epic rather than the poignant, down-to-earth drama dealing with lost innocence that the film actually was.
* Bridge to Terabithia says that when he mentioned he would review the movie in his "Princess Hate" editorial, people responded, "If you touch that timeless treasure, I will impale your testicles on a set of toothpicks." He says that he no longer has any feeling down there because of the past abuse of his testicles, which he then shows.
* Bridge to Terabithia. She doesn't look anything like either her book or 1985 film versions. Leslie is instead a twelve-year-old with blonde bob-length hair and she dresses in bright, girly clothes.
* Bridge to Terabithia since she had a very harsh time after her husband's death.
* Bridge to Terabithia since the book's release. The 1985 made-for-tv film, however, kept Leslie's tomboyish look (albeit with slightly longer hair).
* Bridge to Terabithia: The 2007 film version has a scene on a bus where little Maybelle made fun of Jess and Leslie's relationship like this. Leslie covers Maybelle's mouth when she's about to get to the K-I-S-S-I-N-G part though.
* Bridge to Terabithia thinks highly of Leslie Burke because she beat all the fifth grade boys in their race and she can impress teachers with her imaginative essays and ability to appear focused in class.
* Bridge to Terabithia was only Jess having a bad dream. Sure enough, the very next thing Jess does is to sever the rope swing to prevent his dream from happening, but this only leads to bigger problems when Leslie finds out about what he had done.
* Bridge to the Sun: Gwen, an American woman living in Japan during World War II because she was married to a Japanese diplomat, listens to a Tokyo Rose broadcast. Unlike most examples of this trope, Tokyo Rose (or rather a fictional representation of her, not Iva Toguri or any real person) shows up on screen, and unsuccessfully attempts to recruit Gwen for propaganda broadcasts.
* "Bridge to the Turnabout", due to the crime scene being seemingly cut off from everyone else by a bridge that burned down shortly after the deed.
* Bridge Trilogy, between Eddie, Maryalice, Chia, and Masahiko. It doesn't help when Zona Rosa gets involved.
* Bridge Trilogy materials, also had quite a bit of this (as well as the China variant), despite having been written during the 1990s. This is partly due to the Tokyo setting, though, and much less pronounced in the Bay Bridge scenes.
* Bridge Trilogy started showing this post-1999. Anyone else happen to remember a gloves-and-goggles-VR Internet coming into existence in the 2000s? Didn't think so.
* Bridget's intro has him rushing into the stage and tripping his opponent to the ground
* . Bridgette actually is pregnant, but her friends mistake her eating habits and morning sickness as bulimia.
* Bridgette and Courtney do it in "Not Quite Famous" from behind a curtain.
* Bridgette has the same problem as Trent. She has characterization, but she never really gets any focus from the writers except for her role as

* Bridgette is a vegetarian, finding creatures to be friends and not food. In
* Bridgette's apology song is explained here as being written by Trent to help her with winning Geoff's heart back, since he and Justin both believe she would never have willingly cheated on Geoff and thus side with Bridgette when Geoff breaks up with her.
* Bridgette's feelings for Alejandro are explained to be the result of Alejandro raping her during the flight to Egypt, which causes her to develop * bridge with a big window in the front that looks out on space and is usually at the front or top of the ship. The decks of the spaceship will be parallel to the direction of flight.
* Bridge, with the number of different varieties of coups, endplays, and the like, it's quite possible to make sure you make your contract (or your opponents lose their contract) no matter what is played, despite said contract appearing to be hopeless (or completely solid). The most common variety would be the endplay (by intentionally losing a trick to opponents, you force an opponent to give you at least two more tricks due to lack of leads), but the squeeze play (where an opponent is forced to discard too many cards, allowing their good cards to be easily captured) and the coup (generally a play to force a foe into promoting one of your other cards) also frequently work like this. The defense can also pull these off, although generally not as easily.
* Bridgit Mendler also has blonde hair as Teddy but showed an old school photo of herself in an episode with red hair, and complained about not being able to get a suntan in another episode. That is a common complaint for redheads.
* Bridgit Mendler, refers to the film as a Disney movie in one of the bonus features on the DVD, since Disney commissioned the American dub.
* Bridle Gossip points out how ridiculous everypony is being. Not that anypony listens, or, when the truth comes out, acknowledges that Twilight was right.
* Bridle Gossip runs into this problem when her big sister Applejack is so focused on protecting her from a perceived threat that she completely ignores everything Apple Bloom tries to do or say, only noticing her when she gets frustrated enough to leave.
* Bridle Gossip": The "leaves of blue" Zecora tries to warn the Mane Six about turn out to be the source of their strange conditions in the second half of the episode. The leaves belong to a patch of Poison Joke, a plant which causes humorous, often ironic afflictions on those who come in contact with it.
* Bridle Gossip", when the entire town seems to be deserted, Spike asks if his breath smells, with the obvious implication. Twilight's reply is a casual "No worse than usual."
* Brie Bella. (And then, double-subverted in that both of the Bella Twins remained faces for a time).
* Brie Bella around 2014 came to be defined more as Daniel Bryan's wife when she wasn't managing her sister Nikki. People sometimes forget she was a Divas' Champion at one point too.
* Brief Accent Imitation when some former soviets ask if an official is "Coorv-ed"
* Brief Accent ImitationWhen someone briefly imitates another accent, usually for comedic effect.
* Briefcase Full of Blues album, "Good evening Ladies and Gentlemen, and welcome to the Universal Amphitheatre. Well, here it is, the late 1970s, going on 1985, and you know, so much of the music we here today is... pre-programmed electronic disco, we never get a chance to hear master bluesmen practicing their craft any more. By the year two thousand and six, the music known today as the Blues will exist only in the classical records department of your local public library. So tonight, Ladies and Gentlemen, while we still can, let us welcome, from Rock Island, Illinois, the Blues band of Joliet Jake and Elwood Blues—The Blues Brothers!"
* Brief Chronicle of Another Stupid Heartbreak (2019), by YA author Adi Alsaid, has a Filipino-American main character.
* Brief Encounter is presented as Laura's confession of her affair to her husband who she refers to as "you" throughout the film.

* Brief Instructions on my Paradoxes of Defence, that was used centuries later to train soldiers in the Boer War.
* Brief Lives. (It's unlikely any of the other Endless would mistake a human for one of their own, but Delirium and reality are not always on speaking terms.)
* Brief Lives starts one chapter with a rough count of the number of humans and human-like beings on Earth who remember mammoths, Atlantis (the first one), dinosaurs, and were around before the Earth formed. Then it follows a 15,000-year old lawyer on his way to work, until he's crushed by a pile of falling bricks.
* Brief Lives storyline features Bernie Capax, a dull, unassuming lawyer who dreams of the mammoths he once walked among. He's usually a lawyer; people always need lawyers. He's quite surprised to hear himself scream "NOT YET!" when he's killed in a freak accident.
* Briefly alluded to in an episode where a planet implodes, leaving behind something the size of a large boulder with a few of its native animals pathetically hanging on. As far as the cast is concerned, this is an acceptable level of survival for them.
* Briefly becomes very common during the earliest (chronological) arc of

* Briefly, when released in June 1969, "Silver Wings" was the A-side to the working man's anthem "Working Man's Blues." The two were flipped within two weeks of release, and while "Working Man's Blues" eventually went to No. 1, many radio stations still played "Silver Wings," a song that took Merle in a new direction: a pop-styled lament about loneliness on the road.
* Brief Moment, working-girl Abby meets Rod, a millionaire with no day job. And it doesn’t work out well for them.

* Brief references to the French Revolution or Oprah's Book of the Month club can
* Brie in Episode 4. While the group is trapped in an abandoned school due to hordes of Walkers outside, Kenny attempts to break through a door to a room believed to contain weapons. He sends Ben to find a tool to hack the door open, and he brings back a hatchet he found stuck in the handles of double doors leading outside. The hatchet was put there by Lee to stop the Walkers from getting in. Brie gets killed when the Walkers break in.
* Brie Larson and Jacob Tremblay are shown to have become close friends after filming
* Brie Larson was that the stable good paycheck it would bring her would allow her the financial freedom to be in smaller projects.
* Brienne ends up inverting this after Locke's bear leaves her with a nasty-looking set of massive claw scars on her neck.
* Brienne generally keeps her calm, even when slicing down a gang of murdering rapists. However, when she witnesses Renly's murder or is dragged off to be raped by some Bolton bannermen, she starts to scream.
* Brienne however has no problem sharing a bed with her squire Podrick Payne, and it's not played for sexual tension at all as he's only twelve.
* Brienne is an interesting case, which logically leads her to keep her helmet on when she'd rather not be recognized.
* Brienne is described in a way that would make her Normal Ugly, maybe with a shade of Ugly Cute (given she has pretty eyes), but she looks mannish and acts on it, which is considered extra-repulsive in the society she lives in, so she is considered Super Ugly.
* Brienne is not most people's idea of eye candy, but try telling that to Tormund!
* Brienne isn't happy about being saddled with Podrick, insisting she doesn't need a squire at all. At first it seems she was right to be so hesitant as Podrick is quite inexperienced with knightly activity and often makes more work for Brienne. Eventually he becomes more useful, thanks in no small part to her begrudging training.
* Brienne is one of only three people who know the truth about why Jaime murdered Aerys Targaryen.
* Brienne of Tarth, a lesser noblewoman unfortunately born with an unattractive, manly appearance, who as only heir to her father took it upon herself to become knight. In-universe she is constantly made fun of for her ugliness and not taken seriously as knight. Among the fans, she's popular for her prowess as well as taking her vows and oaths as knight seriously, one of the few to do so, but also for showing a gentler, more feminine side, and not being someone who just goes round killing people. Basically, the fandom has a soft spot for good characters who subvert the in-universe expectation that
* Brienne of Tarth also shows significant skill but is generally underestimated because of her sex. She's the winner of Renly's tourney, defeating all opponents, including Loras Tyrell, who is considered a great warrior. She quickly takes down the members of Renly's Kingsguard who try to kill her, and even the Kingslayer seems impressed when he first sees her in action. Come Season 3, she easily defeats Jaime. Granted, he was wearing manacles at the time and somewhat out-of-practice, but it's still no mean feat, particularly since near the end of their engagement, she actually looked slightly
* Brienne of Tarth and Renly Baratheon are a gender-swapped example. In the ordinary course of events a match between the third son of a Great House and the only daughter and heir-apparent of a minor one might not have been so impossible, but then Renly puts a crown on his head and places himself out of Brienne's league. The small matter of
* Brienne of Tarth, another heroic character, also receives her a signature sword, called Oathkeeper to reflect her loyal and steadfast nature,
* Brienne of Tarth can't resist trolling Jaime Lannister about this in their
* Brienne of Tarth gets a lot of sneering for being "big" and dressing like a man, but Jaime is the only one who outright calls her ugly, and that's only when he's trying to get on her nerves. So she's considered Flawed Average in her society for

* Brienne of Tarth is a skilled and dutiful warrior who experienced a lot of criticism not only for her
* Brienne of Tarth is in love with King Renly Baratheon because he's the only man who recognizes her worth as a human being and a warrior, and does not judge her based on her appearance or gender. He himself understands how painful it is to be frequently mocked for not adhering to rigid gender roles (his older brothers Robert and Stannis have bullied him for his lack of combat experience, not to mention his homosexuality), so his empathy towards Brienne's situation allows him to be accepting of her masculinity.
* Brienne of Tarth is treated pretty poorly by the men she meets, as they scoff at her for acting manly, but laugh on the rare occasions she's forced to act feminine. Brienne says that the women are worse. One of the reasons she falls so hard for Renly is because he was nice to her,
* Brienne of Tarth recalls her father in both "The Children" and "The High Sparrow", smiling fondly whenever she mentions him. It can be assumed she has a similar relationship to him as Arya has to her father, as Brienne clearly does not commit to socially expected female behavior and seems to have been brought up as a warrior in accordance with her own wishes. After she's been taken captive, her father offers a great ransom so she might be set free.
* Brienne's one request from King Renly is to join his Kingsguard and keep him safe from all harm. Later, it is revealed she has a pretty big crush on him.
* Brienne's precise words when asked how tall she is are: "Taller than both Renly and Jaime and significantly heavier [more muscular] than either of them... a bit shorter than the Hound, maybe roughly the same height as Robert [Baratheon].")
* Brienne starts her fights with proper poise and footwork, but when she's pushed she'll go absolutely feral on her enemies, biting and screaming like a maniac until they are down.
* Brigada Explosiva Contra Los Ninjas. The entire cast was Argentinian, even the ninjas.
* Brigadas Blancas (White Brigades) were a combination of Mexico City police, Federal District police, and Mexican soldiers with the aim to dismantle the September 23 Communist League, a Marxist-Leninist urban guerrilla group that opposed the Priista government. While they had been active in several Northern and Central Mexico states since the early 1970s, it wasn't until 1976 when then-President Luis Echeverría would sign his approval for operations in Mexico City. Every agent working for the Brigada Blanca received a monthly wage of 3,000 pesos and "as much as needed" for general expenses (not bad for 1970s Mexico).
* Brigade Models, with scout tanks, cruiser tanks, and dreadnought-tanks.
* Brigadier Alysande Stuart, who headed up W.H.O. (Weird Happenings Organisation) in
* Brigadier Bambera". Unless you think there's some other interpretation to be put on him asking if she's single the day after their first meeting involved her beating him up and manacling him.
* brigadier generals landed with the American forces at Omaha and Utah beaches: Norman Cota and Theodore Roosevelt III, both of whom are credited with rallying the forces on the beaches and pressing the attack inland. Roosevelt, well into his 50s, suffered from arthritis and used a cane at the time, and would die of a heart attack a month later.
* Brigadier Guy Loup is an example from the French side. When the Riflemen capture two of his men responsible for a particularly brutal massacre of a Spanish village, Sharpe has them executed on the spot. He has no shortage of volunteers for the firing squad.
* Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart cuts an impressive figure as the head of UNIT, defending Earth from extraterrestrial threats while trying to keep the Doctor's chaotic energy in check. His commanding voice is certainly an asset in this role, filled with enough authority to speak at least one trope into existence:
* Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart. No matter what kind of "space thuggery" was invading Earth this week, he never asked his people to do anything he was unwilling to do himself, and his first priority was always taking care of them. Like in the Narnia example above, he always led first, and retreated last.

* Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart) seem to have smoothed the way for him in the classic series. However, with UNIT being less prominent in the newer series (and without a regular point of contact with an Earth government) the Doctor does seem to be treated more as a loose cannon at best.
* Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart, who sports a badass moustache in most of his appearances. His evil alternate-universe counterpart in "Inferno", on the other hand, is clean-shaven. The Doctor seems unable to resist making note of this difference with several cutting remarks regarding the evil Brigadier's looks and personality over the course of the serial, which does little to lighten the evil Brigadier's mood. Slightly lessened by the fact that it wasn't Nicholas Courtney's real facial hair; it was a prop. His evil counterpart in "Inferno" is how Courtney always looked off-camera.
* Brigadier Sir Nils Olav, Colonel-In-Chief of the Norwegian King's Guard!
* "Brigadoom" suffered pretty heavily from this trope, after retreating behind a nigh-impregnable shield on Brunnis II and cracking the immortality problem. It's implied this contributed to their insular behaviour and eventual downfall.
* Brigadoon, after Tommy and the town of Brigadoon have seemingly vanished forever from each other, he is seen talking with his fiancée in a New York bar, and her words accidentally become song cues in his mind, bringing up visions of the townspeople of Brigadoon and his lost love Fiona.
* Brigadoon are unable to cross the borders of their town, lest the entire village disappear.
* Brigadoon borrows its plot (without acknowledgment) from the obscure 19th-century German short story "Germelshausen", setting it in the Scottish Highlands.
* Brigadoon have passed on Earth! How many years will it be before the land the town inhabits is rolled over by an ice-age glacier, or flooded by the polar ice caps melting, or the Earth becomes uninhabitable in some other way? And this was supposed to keep the townspeople safe!
* Brigadoon in Brigadoon. Mr. Lundie replies: "A stranger can stay if he loves someone here — not jus' Brigadoon, mind ye — but someone in Brigadoon enough to want to give up everythin' an' stay with that person. Which is how it should be. 'Cause after all, lad, if ye love someone deeply, anythin' is possible." Fiona comments, "I think I like that part best," clearly anticipating the show's happy ending.
* Brigadoon is far too bland to compete with Tommy's memories of Scotland.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan are supposed to function like this, though differences of opinion get in the way. (They're based on the Three Musketeers.)''.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan. Because of the impending mutual collapse of the two worlds, Brigadoon is visible in Earth's sky for the entire series, and vice versa. (On Submaton Color you can see both worlds at the same time.)
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan can cut through almost anything on Earth, including bullets and gun barrels. However, it's not always successful against weapons made on Brigadoon.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan gives us Melan Blue, a robot a little taller than (most) human beings, and Marin, a young teenager who seems to be short for her age.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan had a two-volume manga adaption. The manga's plot was somewhat simpler.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan have a gun at the end of one arm and a sword at the end of the other, hence the name. They also have a second set of odd-looking retractable arms, which have stubby hands that they use for holding things.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan is very wise and very generous. She adopted a foundling to replace her own lost child, and she cares for an alien robot like he was a member of the family.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan. It seems to be played for comedy at first, and it's a lot stronger on Moe's side than on Marin's. As the series progresses further they both start to show interest in the opposite sex.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan. It's in Japan instead of Scotland, the protagonist is a teenage school, girl instead of male hunters, there's robots, etc.

* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan, it's quite possible that this is a goodbye kiss. The new ending theme for the episode may hint at a happy ending, but not in a conclusive way.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan just worried about whether he saw her patched underwear.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan's hero, Melan Blue, is completely clueless about romance; he doesn't even know what a kiss is. Justified in that he belongs to a race of robots that apparently don't reproduce sexually (he tells Marin that he doesn't have parents), so why would he need to know about sexuality or romance?
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan Tadashi is nearly always seen drunk, drinking, or asking for more sake. It's shown to have seriously damaged his family.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan that it's a bit confusing at first. Marin's imagination usually involves violent death.
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan was sent to earth for her safety. She's taken in by a kind Japanese family, but her sense of time is much different from theirs, and she barely ages at all before the couple die. She also marries their grandson, and she explains that she would die before him and that she, technically, wasn't human. He doesn't care and they get married anyway. Again, she seems as if she's in her twenties by the time he's lying on her death bed in at least his seventies. In the manga, at least. In the anime, the situation was somewhat different (and in ways, a lot more confusing).
* Brigadoon: Marin and Melan with equal parts comedy and drama. But wait! There are fighting robots with swords! There's a serious science fiction plot that occasionally verges on fantasy. And there's fanservice, including an unfortunate amount of lolicon fanservice. Who was this series for, anyway?
* Brigadoon that happens to be real, depending on how one looks at it.
* Brigadoon, the 1954 film based on the stage play, features a Scottish village which only appears every one hundred years and became isolated based a local pastor's prayer for a miracle to protect the villagers from change. The miracle is then jeopardized by Harry's wish to leave.
* Brigadoon, the town appears in the real world once every 100 years. The time passes the same during the day. At night, the town moves forward to the next century.
* Brigadoon Tommy turned down joining Brigadoon, but magically gets let in anyway 4 months later.
* Brigador enemies that WILL one-hit-kill you, and the nearest ammo depots are across the entire map, past barriers that need to be demolished for you to get past, giving the aforementioned suicide enemies ample chances to kill you. To add insult to injury, you are not given any special weapon (active camo, EMP, smoke, cone-of-death) to give you any way to fight back or help you evade the enemies prior to getting ammo. Expect to retry this stage a LOT.
* Brigador have Tanks that look like Space Rovers with turrets mounted to them.
* Brigador often refer people who live in planets as "soil vermin", "groundlings", or "dirt eaters".
* Brigador still resembles blocky seventies/eighties tech, such as tanks greatly resembling old Space Race lunar rovers.
* Brigador. They're said to have found with "insides turned to paste".
* Brigador utilize many suicide bombers. They usually use bikes or cars to charge into you, but some of them even disguise themselves as civilians.
* Brigador, which prevents the enemies from detecting you or firing in your direction as long as you are hidden within it.
* Brigandine: Samurai is a character class of some characters within the game and promotes into a Shogun. Take note that this is despite the setting being a medieval Europe-like world. The Japanese version called it 'Sword Master', but it doesn't take away from how their sprite/model is basically an O-Yoroi armor set (usually worn by Samurai).
* Brigandine want to be sitting next to a Hydra unit who's found a piece of water to camp on.

* Brigandine whacks people with his tome when he is forced to fight up close.
* Brigands, Pirates, and Berserkers tend to count as this as well, generally having high strength and decent speed, but atrocious skill stats. Berserkers take it even further by having
* Brig Ball Bouncing: A character locked up in solitary confinement is bored. They pass time sitting down against the wall, throwing a ball against the opposite wall over and over.
* Brig Ball Bouncing: A prisoner passes the time by bouncing a ball against the wall of their cell.
* Briggid fears that either Jamke or Midayle will pull this on her since they both had
* Brigham City uses elements of religious horror based on the LDS faith and puts them to work quietly in the background. This makes the film jarring to members of the LDS church without being over the top.
* Brigham City, Wes has most of the men in the town go from door to door to find the missing woman Jamie Harlan. If the home owners don't comply, then Wes tries to strong-arm his way in.
* Brigham City, where the serial killer targets redheads. He's asked at the end why he killed a blonde. He replied that she was a redhead... when he was done with her.
* Brighella. Dresses in white with a bit of green, and probably plays the lute. Typically has a small, pointy beard. Variants include: Fenocchio, Flautino, Sbrigani, Franca Trippa/Francatrippa/Francatrippe, Turlupin/Tirelupin, Sgnarelle, and Gandolin.
* Brighid was also present for the Aegis War, but as a Blade, lost her memories as she reincarnated. She relies on a personal journal she kept - and is painfully aware that, being a personal journal, her account could be biased.
* Bright and Cheery Amnesia. She spends the rest of the manga completely unfazed by the fact that she forgot three years of her life, instead being happy that she gets to experience some things for the first time again.
* Bright and historical events such as the Mexican-American War are also referenced and the Crips exist despite orcs being an oppressed minority.
* Bright), and the main character is a black man who is prejudiced against the non-human races.
* Brightburn", after fifteen years conquering the world, Brandon is lured back to Brightburn and confronted by a warrior in a suit of armour. The full-body suit and modulated voice lead Brandon to assume the warrior is male, and it's only after his opponent has revealed their access to grenades based on the radiation generated by Brandon's ship that he does enough damage to the suit to realise that his opponent is female, and he only identifies her as his old crush, Caitlyn Connors, after she's done enough damage that he's begging for his life.
* Brightburn: Brandon drew his "B" symbol all over the inside of his notebook. He also left it on the plane he downed.
* Brightburn: Brandon's eyes turn red when he's about to use his laser vision.
* Brightburn. Brandon's parents are amused to find that he has torn out pages of risque magazine ads and hid them under his mattress... until they also find bizarre anatomical drawings and photographs of gore along with them.
* Brightburn has the notebook of central character Brandon Bryer, where his mother discovers pretty detailed drawings of the cruelty he both already committed and intends to do.
* Brightburn. Noah berates his wife when she told him that giving a rifle to Brandon is not the smartest birthday gift, and leaves her when he's attacked by Brandon. It's hard to tell if the latter is just him not thinking straight, saving Brandon, actually leaving his wife, or all three.
* Brightburn. Unlike the Big Blue Boyscout, he showcases how frightening and dangerous his powers are when put to use without a noble cause or morality.
* Brightburn, when various parties try to threaten Caitlyn to make Brandon stop, Caitlyn points out that killing her isn't a good idea as she's the only reason Brandon hasn't just destroyed Earth already, so it's pointless to threaten her.
* Bright can leave a human body like this, with their bones glowing orange and everything else turned into ash.

* Bright (despite the fact that the Dark Lord was an elf and the hero who defeated him was an orc). Fairies are common, non-sapient pests; a human killing one is seen as a disturbing act, but not a crime. There are references to "the nine races", suggesting that other stock fantasy races also exist—one scene has a centaur police officer in it, for example.
* Brighter Day is set in a brightly-colored mental hospital on a cloudless day...and the player is all alone except for the giant eyeballs that are everywhere looking for you.
* Brighter Than A Thousand Suns is a history of the discovery of atomic fission and the development of the atom bomb, but an early scene in a German university town features a foreign student rushing into a shop and making an improper request of a shopkeeper's daughter. It turns out that in German if you switch a couple of vowel sounds then "Do you have a scale? I want to weigh something" comes out as "Do you have a cradle? I want to do something risky."
* Brighter Than A Thousand Suns worked on the bomb "lowballed" their estimates to avoid looking foolish, and the visitor felt that "as a guest, I supposed that I should name a flatteringly high figure."
* Brightest Day and many were unified under "people resurrected by the White Entity for a specific task", but each series involved was pretty much self-contained with little overlap.
* Brightest Day could animate and control the corpses of sea creatures as a side effect of his death and resurrection. As the main page for the comic states, "Summoning a zombie kraken may be the most awesome thing he's ever done."
* Brightest Day does this to evil green Martian D'Kay. Fortunately, the white battery makes him get better.
* Brightest Day Even if the plan weren't horribly flawed, she's infertile and deeply in denial about it.
* Brightest Day) this after he deflects her questions about his past life with claims that he wasn't anyone special.
* Brightest Kingdom, your Renaissance fantasy kingdom is in a war against dark forces who have almost wrecked the kingdom. Your government will happily fund the research programs of the Engineering and Wizard guilds equally - after all, a dead Orc is a dead Orc regardless of whether it was killed with magic or a machine gun.
* Bright Eyes' "An Attempt To Tip The Scales" segues from a proper song to a mock-interview skit via an ambient electronic drone, which keeps looping in the background throughout the interview... Until Conor Oberst casually asks his interviewer "can you make that sound stop please?", at which point the loop abruptly stops.
* Bright Eyes has a song of said title, with the singer hoping for reconciliation with the world and for acceptance once again.
* Bright, facing discrimination from other species and largely living in impoverished neighborhoods and ghettos.
* Bright Falls Mysteries exploitation films with real shifters and vampires. It is actually part of a massive money laundering scheme he's doing for the Vampire Nation that is currently having their casinos investigated.
* Brighthammer 40k. Essentially, it takes Warhammer 40k from the cynical side of the scale and slams it down to the idealistic side.
* Bright is a mix of Christianity and European pagan faiths. They worship Jirak, an orc that united the free peoples and saved the world from the Dark Lord, while their priests dress themselves like Celtic druids.
* Bright Is Not Good: Being associated with brightness does not make you morally righteous.
* Bright Is Not Good: Just because something comes in bright colors doesn't mean that it's good.
* Bright Lights, Big City by Jay McInerney is one of the more famous English language examples.
* Bright Lights, Big City: Jamie hops on a departing subway train to escape from his estranged brother.

* Bright Lines Ella is attracted to her female cousin Charu. It's even more complicated becuse Ella was orphaned as a child and raised as Charu's sister. Charu strictly sees Ella as her older sister, but Ella only sees Charu as a cousin.
* Brightly Burning cloisters some of its nuns (as a sort of spiritual exercise, to which the nuns fully consent). The cloisters are fairly roomy, even including a bath, and the criminal's family can send her any sort of luxury they want. But she will never get out, and she has absolutely no control over her "wardens".
* Brightly Burning Lifebonding is far from an unambiguously good thing.
* Brightly Burning placed with much younger students based on his prior education.
* Bright Man has a solar panel on his chest that charges his Flash Stopper, and has a yellow face.
* Bright Man is mentioned early in the first part of "The Beginning", several parts before his actual appearance in the next episode.
* bright—and a reminder every time the offender looks at their car—but it's a proverbial red flag to other drivers: they know to be more cautious around that vehicle.
* "Brightness" and "Brightlord", referencing the lighteyes most notable feature (and the light-based magic of the setting).
* Bright Noa calls Amuro Ray this when slapping him because his father never punched him... Yeah, it doesn't make much sense, but he probably meant the fact that he was never corrected for showing a whiny behaviour.
* Brighton Beach Memoirs, Eugene has somewhat of a crush on his cousin Nora. However, it's not romantic so much as that he's entering puberty and there's a beautiful girl in the house. His older brother Stanley has a similar attraction to her.
* Brighton Beach Memoirs, Eugene's brother Stanley loses all his money in a rough pool hall, made somewhat less intimidating by the fact that the hustler is Jason Alexander.
* Brighton Beach Memoirs: Eugene tries to do this with his hot cousin Nora after being coached on the technique by his older brother, but it backfires on him when she accidentally walks in on him using the toilet.
* Bright, orcs, elves, and other fantasy races live alongside humans in modern-day LA.
* bright rainbow stripes to the sides and roof, large yellow "Super Máquina" logos, and a rainbow-colored scanner.
* Bright-Sided examines in detail the history, origins, and political aspects of this and the related "positive thinking" belief system.
* Bright Slap, most people would think that what Amuro truly said was "You hit me! Not even my father hit me!" The real scene, however, had Amuro say something between the two sentences, and getting slapped a second time:
* Bright's proposal for SCP-001 was able to fight back and kill all of the fairies.
* Bright Star who inspires him to write a sonnet that shares a name with the film's title. Will she challenge him and motivate him to new heights and help him achieve success that lasts until the 21st century? Well, it is based on a true story, so take a wild guess.
* Bright, the battle of the Alamo, the Crips and Bloods, and Black Lives Matter all get referenced at some point.
* Bright to save the world and is revered by orcs as their messianic figure. Ironically, most orcs had sided with the Dark Lord and because of this, are victims of racism and prejudice today for their ancestors' actions, nevermind it was one of their own that saved the world from the setting's ultimate evil.
* Bright was because many of their ancestors sided with him and the story's villains are seeking to bring him back to life.
* Bright with him. He asks the help of his friend Deputy Rodriguez, a sheriff from outside of his department, because he is not involved in the crooked cops' scheme and he is the only one that can be trusted to contact the federal agents for help.
* Brigid's Charge has a sympathetic take on Mother Leeds, and the "Devil" is nothing more than a (human) child who died soon after birth. However, a local doctor spreads rumors about the baby transforming into a monster to discredit her reputation as a healer.

* Brigitta Dau's only anime role is girl-type Ranma in the first 6 episodes of the anime and first two OVA episodes. Though she also had a role in the '90s
* Brigitta McBridge is another businesswoman with the potential to match Scrooge (and she has occasionally
* Brigitta McBridge is another excellent cook, and, differently from Donald, is actually capable of turning a profit out of it, even starting businesses (and large scale ones) from time to time. Part of her success is that she knows where to find the

* Brigitte than even Moira. Her ultimate heals 30 health per second, even overhealing as necessary.
* Brig Scarlet Flamingo has its share of attractive heroes and average-looking or outright ugly villains, but two characters who are considered gorgeous by almost everybody are among the vilest of all:
* Brilliancy,, the trope is turned upside down. Roy knows his wife has been taken - he just doesn't know who did it, or why.
* Brilliant, but Lazy: A character who's smarter than they let on, but is too caught up in more trivial topic areas to apply their knowledge.
* Brilliant, but Lazy, achieves Exceeds Expectations or higher O.W.L.s in Defense Against the Dark Arts, Charms, Transfiguration, Herbology, Care of Magical Creatures and even Potions, which is noted to be a fairly exclusive class once he applies himself.
* Brilliant, but Lazy and manages to score higher than Carlton on a standardized test.
* Brilliant, but Lazy and starts to become more involved in the challenges, cooperate with his team, and make friends.
* Brilliant, but Lazy: A person who is actually quite smart, it's just that they'd rather not put in much effort in their assignments.
* Brilliant, but Lazy by most other students, but some of his comments imply that he might suffer from some form of chronic fatigue.
* Brilliant, but Lazy. His only actual utility is buying things at shops at half price.
* Brilliant, but Lazy: I have the skills, but don't bother applying myself with them.
* Brilliant, but Lazy: It's shown that a student with bad grades is actually very smart, they just lack the motivation to do their schoolwork properly.
* Brilliant, but Lazy, one could go so far as to ask the same question about mainstream public education in general.
* Brilliant, but Lazy or managed to engineer some of their own, the Goa'uld are in trouble. The Goa'uld actually recognize this, and so do their best to destroy potential competition before they can pose a real danger.
* Brilliant, but Lazy who often used his charisma to get his way, Gilbert is the most shy and socially awkward of the group in spite of her determination and leadership skills.
* brilliant effect Considering the rumors of the real Butch Cassidy surviving the shootout, this makes it rather interesting.
* Brilliant Energy weapons ignore armor bonuses to AC because they pass through armor, but they cannot hurt undead, constructs, or objects.
* brilliant energy weapons, which are often called "lightsabers" by the fandom. They're not quite the same, though: they simply ignore/pass through non-living matter without damaging it. This made them rather unpopular with players: they ignored a target's worn armor, but not magical effects like a wizard's defensive spells or natural armor like a dragon's scales, and they couldn't even harm undead or constructs at all. Combined with how expensive they were, most players chose to pass on them in favor of choosing just about any other weapon enchantment.

* Brilliant Lights Will Cease To Burn and rarely checks what people are saying about him, but he's glad that his message is reaching so many people.
* Brilliant Lights Will Cease To Burn before assuring the reader that none of this happens in this story.
* Brilliant Lights Will Cease To Burn, Izuku has Rain and Flower cover the ground with wet petals after being outmatched by Fight. When Fight tries to step forward, she slips, allowing Izuku to slam the pommel of his sword into her head to knock her out and let him seal her.
* Brilliant Lights Will Cease To Burn, Izuku wonders what he did wrong in his past life to be dragged all over the city as the Cardcaptor and be forced to compromise his morals on multiple occasions, including breaking into Japan's largest museum to seal Libra.
* Brilliant Lights Will Cease To Burn, the fae are somewhere in between their modern and folkloric portrayals. Appearance-wise, they are cute and/or beautiful pixie-like creatures, but they act much more like their traditional counterparts, temporarily granting people powers through contracts and generally causing mischief. They outright said that they would have whisked Izuku away and made him their pet if it weren't for the fact that he's the only living magician on Earth.
* Brilliantly done after Ted reveals he is in the middle of a 57-day dry spell; Barney nonchalantly asks to borrow Ted's water, reaches over the table to get it, before doing a spit-take,
* Brilliantly done in the "My Lucky Charm"/"My Hypocritical Oath" episode of
* brilliantly lampoons the romance comics of the 1940s and 1950s by keeping the original panels and rewriting all the speech bubbles.
* Brilliantly mocked by Sarah Haskins. Who serves yogurt at their wedding?
* Brilliantly (or fiendishly) exploited by a Norwegian ad for a cell phone service that advertised itself as being able to find info on anything by simply typing in a word into a text message, no key terms required. The disclaimer at the bottom of the ad specifically stated that their service did nothing more than do a search of
* Brilliantly parodied in a UK advert for BBQ sauce done in the style of a shampoo ad, complete with the narrator saying "And now the sciencey bit" and an animation of ingredients being absorbed into a line of sauce, like all those cheesy graphics of hair strands absorbing various particles.
* Brilliantly subverted in the episode "House and Garden." The episode's monsters are shadowed whenever they're shown to make them creepy; when their appearance is revealed (think a giant cactus man) they're predictably silly looking. Then it's shown how they're created, and they become absolutely
* Brilliantly used in the episode "Thank God It's Doomsday", when Homer asks God to take back the Apocalypse:
* brilliant means of disposing of the carcass eventually decided upon was to blow it up with dynamite, which resulted in someone's new car being destroyed by a 500 pound chunk of rotten whale blubber. He was quoted by the local newspaper as saying he was never going to get his insurance agent to believe it. (For the record, he was able to do so rather easily, though the insurance agent did say that it was a new one.)
* Brilliant Traces opens with the protagonist stumbling into a cabin in rural Alaska from a blizzard, monologuing about how her car died and she was forced to find her way blindly through the storm.
* brilliant use of this trope, as Equestria as a whole seems to have a late 1800's type decor and level of technology, while the Crystal Empire has been sealed away for over a thousand years and hasn't changed since then.
* Brilliant young has more faith in his prodigious mind than his scrawny stature.
* Brillo the detective can still hear, even though it's been shut down...
* Brimstone and are now living on earth. Some of these died more than a thousand years ago, yet they have adjusted just fine to the modern world, with some even holding steady jobs. The hero on the other hand is a cop who died just fifteen years earlier and is sent to recover the escapees, and he struggles to adjust to how much has changed in that time.

* Brimstone, and who went to Hell after she murdered the families of the men who raped her) goes swimming at night with her new boyfriend. When he gets a little too frisky and triggers her, her demonic powers kick in and she boils him alive in the water.
* Brimstone Angels just guidelines as far as he's concerned. That said, tieflings with a lot of human blood are still depicted as being somewhat more human looking than those who are closer to the fiendish end of the family tree.
* Brimstone: By the end, the Reverend is an old, grey-haired man, but he's only become more psychotic over the years.
* Brimstone Ezekiel Stone gets a second shot at life and a way out of Hell if he returns 113 souls that managed to escape.
* Brimstone Files. Unfortunately, it also caused the heart muscles to lethally expand and gave its users a temper worse than "roid rage".
* Brimstone is a hunter of the damned, who is tasked by the Devil with hunting down those who escaped from Hell and sending them back there.
* Brimstone killed the man who raped his wife. When Ezekiel was later killed in the line of duty he was sent to Hell because, no matter how deserving of death the rapist had been, Stone's actions had been motivated by anger and the need for revenge instead of a desire for justice. The Devil sent him back to Earth to hunt down and return 113 escaped souls with the promise of a chance at entering Heaven (Not a guarantee, just the offering of a chance) if he captured all the escapees. Notably, Ezekiel has no personal regrets about what he did.
* Brimstone kills herself when she finds the protagonist sent her partner back to Hell, as it's the only way she can be with him.
* Brimstone: The Reverend essentially becomes a slasher villain by the end, murdering anyone in his way and refusing to let injuries slow him down.
* Brimstone to get out of Hell, if he recaptured a set of other damned souls who had escaped.
* Brimstone Valley Mall and has a new boyfriend whom he has sincere feelings for. The two of them can barely be in the same room without sniping at each other, but they obviously still care for each other, and still hang out every day regardless.
* Brimstone Valley Mall, and not one they're in a particular hurry to do.
* Brimstone Valley Mall and scrapping her plans. However, whenever she does get past the planning stage, her inventions work wonderfully.
* Brimstone Valley Mall a total flake, and that is just not the sort of quality you want in a bandmate—anyone who's ever been on a team project of any sort and had to deal with this sort of thing can fully sympathize with Misroch's complaints.
* Brimstone Valley Mall follows the main demons Misroch, Belzagor, Xaphan, and Asmoraius, but the sixth episode of Season One focuses almost entirely on the adventures of Trainee, a teenage girl who works under Misroch at their hot dog stand.
* Brimstone Valley Mall, not because she's Jewish or a woman (and in fact, they chide Belzagor for just assuming she's Christian). The legions of Hell have no issue with Misroch being non-binary, or Asmoraius being gay, and Satan is portrayed as being a woman, or at least taking the form of one.
* Brimstone Valley Mall: Perhaps unsurprisingly, the war between Heaven and Hell has been going on for longer than any demon or angel can remember, and while both sides have agents on Earth and make moves against the other's cause relatively frequently, the result is an eternal a stalemate. As Asmoraius explains, no one on either side is even sure who's winning, because "the score has been pretty much even as long as anyone can remember."
* Brimstone Valley Mall proud of his flamboyant clothing and makeup, opting for elaborate Victorian styles that make him look like he walked out of a Gothic romance novel, and then immediately went clubbing. He's less than enthused that his boyfriend's clothing choices consist entirely of polo shirts.
* Brimstone Valley Mall they are at hiding it, and how everyone remains clueless anyway. For example, their employee finds a hand in the fryer on the first day, and not only continues to work there, but doesn't suspect anything is wrong with the food until she's told.

* Brimstone Valley Mall through-and-through, and while they won't hesitate to call them on their shit, they are still a dear friend to all of them.
* Brimstone Valley Mall? Totally fine. Flaking out on band practice or degrading your friend's ambitions? Absolutely not!
* Brimstone Valley Mall who is completely unabashed in his flirting with everyone and love of sex, with his tastes frequently being implied to be quite kinky. (He met Hornblas at an orgy, for one thing.) However, this is never portrayed as a character flaw, he's generally quite friendly and fun to be around, and he's shown to have genuine feelings for at least two of his onscreen partners.
* Brimstone Valley Mall works and what the deal with the Y2K Party is.
* Brimstone, Zeke finds out that Gilbert Jax, the guy who raped his wife, is one of the 113 souls that escaped from Hell and that he has to find and send back. He also finds out that Jax has started with his old pattern again. He finds out that Jax is living with mother again, and tracks him to the mother's house. There he encounters the mother and talks to her, although he doesn't have the heart to tell her the truth about her son. Jax returns home at that point, and screams that "Getting my mother involved in this is low, Stone". Zeke defeats Jax, but afterwards still doesn't have the heart to tell his mother the truth, and lets her believe that he sent her son back to Heaven instead of Hell.

* brine pools, they die and their remains petrify from all the salt and mineral in the pool.
* Brine, which doubles in power (which makes it stronger than a Hydro Pump) when the target has less than half of its HP left. This makes the move's primary purpose to finish off weakened enemies.
* Bring Down the Sky DLC, puts most of the other examples to shame. He plans to divert a meteor at a human colony, killing millions and ruining the planet's biosphere, in revenge for humanity daring to fight back against batarian pirates and slavers. While most other batarians mistrust humanity to some extent, for the vast majority of them it's because of propaganda and nowhere near as intense as this guy.
* Bring Down the Sky, one of the missing engineers' bodies shows signs of "burn marks and concussive damage." You can listen to her final audio log: "They're trying to find a way in. I think they're attaching something to the door. If I don't make it, tell my family I love — "(sound of huge explosion).
* bring either order or destruction to the world this was his destiny before.
* Bring 'Em Back Alive: In "Storm Warning", Buck escapes being murdered aboard a ship, then is forced to wait out a storm with his shipmates, one of whom is the would-be killer.
* Bring 'Em Back Alive: While on a safari in "The Chase", Buck and a photographer are tracked by a tribe of hunters led by a sadistic escaped convict.
* Bring Help Back: A character is tasked with bringing back help for the others in a dire situation.
* Bring Help Back: A group in distress sends one of their own to get help for them.
* "Bring Him Home" was supposedly written for Colm Wilkinson's voice and range. Similarly, Christine was changed from a member of the chorus to a member of the corps de ballet in order to show off Sarah Brightman's skills en pointe.
* bring home their adopted children, which everyone believed was only one child, not two. Everyone reacts in shock except for Joey, who asks what the big surprise is, putting 2 and 2 together shortly afterward.
* Bring in 'da Noise, Bring in 'da Funk features a number in which a series of increasingly well-dressed black men try and fail to get a cab. The final man in the series is a soldier carrying Colin Powell's memoirs.
* bringing Dean's dead body back from the fight with Metatron, Sam hits the scotch.
* Bringing Down the House comes over for dinner, Charlene, who was convinced to act like the maid, puts milk of magnesia on her dinner, but Peter takes it and eats it. Luckily he was able to reach the bathroom as it took effect.
* Bringing Down the House mistakes Queen Latifah's character for a waitress at the

* Bringing the machine up to the shower to record Roger singing in the shower.
* bringing the Muppets back to the screen, so many celebrities asked for cameos that they couldn't actually fit all of them into the movie.
* Bringing Up Baby (1938), Susan counts it out on the toes of one foot. She should know in advance that it will come out to "He loves me," but she still seems surprised and excited when it does.
* Bringing Up Baby and Cary Grant walking behind her to spare her embarrassment.
* Bringing Up Baby, but pours out his bottle of whiskey when he sees the leopard.
* Bringing Up Baby, David Huxley ends up wrestling a leopard in the middle of a pond. Soaking wet and filthy, he returns to Susan Vance's home where she loans him her very girly robe while his clothes dry out. Susan's aunt, Elizabeth, is less than impressed with his wardrobe choices.
* Bringing Up Baby, David slips on an olive Susan dropped and falls really hard on his butt.
* Bringing Up Baby has bought what she calls a leopard, but is actually a jaguar, from Brazil, where leopards don't live but jaguars do.
* Bringing Up Baby — although in something of a variation, it's Wild who falls for Uptight first, Uptight for many reasons wanting nothing to do with her for a large part of the movie. Wild doesn't so much teach Uptight to loosen up as she does drag him kicking and screaming into it.
* Bringing Up Baby mentions that their marriage is only meant to solidify their working relationship and must entail no domestic entanglements of any kind.
* Bringing Up Baby's madcap heiress on the golf course; she mistakes his ball for her own, and he follows her around trying to convince her that it's his ball, not hers. She then drives off in his car, with him teetering on the running board.
* Bringing Up Baby, so when Cary's fiance is shown again the lack of sparks becomes even more apparent.

* Bringing Up Baby. The house owner opens the window and thinks he is dealing with lunatics.
* Bringing Up Baby wore a skirt with lots of metal rings to make it swing beautifully, and at one point she twirled too quickly and the leopard lunged at her (saved by the trainer's whip however). Overall, Katharine Hepburn was quite fearless around the leopard while Cary Grant was less so - requiring doubles for lots of scenes where David interacts with Baby.
* Bringing Up Bates, the titular family has reunited at the family home, including all the older children and their significant others. They're getting ready for their "I Love You Day" celebration when they see four guys coming up to the house. Dad Gil heads outside to find out what they're up to, then pops back into the house a few minutes later, saying "We've got a surprise here, people." It turns out Gil's eldest son, Zach, hired a barbershop quartet to deliver flowers to wife Whitney and sing her two songs. Gil, his wife Kelly, and several of the younger siblings (particularly the boys) offer their take on the romantic example Gil has set for his sons over the years and the romantic example Zach set with this latest gesture.
* Bringing Up Father frequently ended up falling downstairs, tripping over something, or slipping on a polished floor.
* Bringing Up Father. This satire on domestic abuse ran in Mad #17, 1954.

* Bring It Back Alive: A character must capture a dangerous creature alive.
* bring it from somewhere, and to get rid of it, she has to send it somewhere else; tampering with the weather has a high ecological cost in this 'verse.
* Bring It On. Amusingly, one of the TV spots for the original film even intentionally invoked this.
* Bring It On: A series of films that focus on high-school cheerleading competitions.
* Bring It On before she wakes up and realizes it was just a bad dream.
* Bring It On, Campbell falls victim to this trope when trying say that she's been redistricted.
* Bring It On example. Torrence's mother hates that her daughter is a cheerleader and instead wants her to be an honours student. When Torrence announces that she's been made captain, all Mom does is complain that she's not taking an extra lab.
* Bring It On features a montage of unsuitable candidates trying out for the cheerleading team, before Missy comes in and blows them all away with her gymnastic talent. Not that they were all useless: the rejects include a ballet-dancer (male), a dancer with a routine aimed at titillation (female), and the younger sister on one of the active cheerleaders who simply seems underage (and unenthusiastic).
* Bring It On has this when the gay cheerleader of the team talks to another male cheerleader of another team.
* Bring It On is a mostly typical sports movie — except it's from the point of view of the (usually evil) rich bitch team. Their uniforms even have "RCH" spelled out across their chests.
* Bring It On is from an inner-city school that invented all of those winning routines but didn't have the money to compete. Once they get an Oprah Expy to fund them in the Nationals, the two teams go head-to-head, each with something to prove. Naturally, the team with more underdog credentials wins (though it is justified since it was their routines that had won five years in a row - it was just a different squad performing them).
* Bring It On — Films centering around cheerleading. 6 made since 2000.
* Bring It On Missy that there's more to the sport than what she expects.
* Bring It On movie, when a cheerleader deliberately distracts the referee by bending over in her extremely short skirt.
* Bring It On of men across the franchise. This is the reasoning behind the bikini car wash as a fundraising effort in the first movie.
* Bring It On: One nervous competitor in the National Cheerleading Finals mentions that she has "butterflies". Her coach ascribes this to anxiety and tries to perform a calming exercise. The ill girl attempts this, then whoops a goodly mess onto the coach. Supplemental material on the disc release mentions this scene was done with canned clam chowder as the "vomit."

* Bring It On series, the cheerleaders do this often, in uniform and out of uniform.
* Bring It On showed one character reviewing for the SATs by converting the answers into cheers to make them easier for her to memorize.
* Bring It On, the following exchange occurs when Missy intercepts her brother Cliff as he's visiting the cheer squad's car wash fundraiser:
* Bring It On, the routines often feature elements like pyramids, throws and trampoline-assisted leaps which are banned in high-school cheerleading as excessively dangerous.
* Bring It On: the Toros don't score very well in the semi-finals (using a routine that's the exact duplicate of another squad's routine, which is normally grounds for disqualification) but because they're defending champions they get to go to the finals anyway.
* Bring It On with cheerleaders instead of gangs. The two squads are even called the Sharks and the Jets.
* Bring It On with the cheerleader training montage after the Toros bought routine is disqualified.
* Bring It On with this. "So how’s second place?" "Feels like first."
* Bring It to Cardin Winchester while staring down Team CRDL, Izuku makes them all question their chances with him when he hangs a giant "if" over whether or not they can beat him by showing off One For All: Full Cowl.
* Bring Me All Your Elderly!, there's a sequence where Toph and Suki are waiting while Sokka teaches his movie counterpart sarcasm. Suki suggests I Spy to pass the time, but...
* Bring Me All Your Elderly! to realize that movie!Katara is, in fact, a girl and he should be attracted to her. Aang just keeps digging himself deeper and confusing movie!Aang.
* Bring Me All Your Elderly! to save Zuko after he's had too much cactus juice.
* Bring Me Back Home has a long sequence with Marinette trying ice skating and getting some instruction from Adrien, followed by Ladybug agreeing to try it at Chat Noir's suggestion (neither mention to the other that they were at the same rink earlier that day). Marinette isn't very good at it, thanks to her usual klutziness, but Ladybug at least manages a lap without falling over.
* Bring Me Back Home has a subversion: when Ladybug goes ice skating with Chat Noir, he gives her the same instruction that Adrien gave Marinette a few hours earlier: "Just step, step and glide." She picks up on it and asks if it's a common thing to say. He says it is, so she doesn't think any more of it.
* Bring Me Back Home, this is Marinette's reaction when she meets Felix, her parallel universe counterpart Bridgette's crush, and immediately picks up on his cold indifference to her. After getting into an argument with him later, Marinette notes that she's probably ruining Bridgette's chances with him, but wonders if that might be doing her a favour.
* Bring Me Back Home, while questioning Marinette (actually her parallel universe double Bridgette) about her sudden and unexplained dislike of Chat Noir, Adrien notices that her pigtails are suddenly much longer than they were the day before. It remains to be seen just what he deduces from this information.
* "Bring Me Down" by Lenka was used for a Dulux paint ad in Canada in early 2012, in which a woman is unsatisfied with her bleak-looking living room and cheerfully paints it red while her husband is set aside. The lyrics tells of a woman drifting apart from her partner, criticizing him that he's done nothing while their relationship crumbled, and that she needs to leave before she falls right back into his arms. The lyrics are

* Bring Me the Head of Prince Charming covers vanish, and you have this.
* Bring Me the Head of Prince Charming, there is an organized competition between the forces of heaven and hell over who will control fate for the next thousand years.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman after a gang lord places a 300 million peso price on her head. None of the other professional killers who try to claim the bounty are as good as the Machine Gun Woman.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman: Despite lying wounded and bleeding on the ground, the Machine Gun Woman saves Santiago by firing a shot that takes off the top of Panguinao's head; sending it flying high into the air.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman, gang lord Che Longana puts a bounty of 300 million pesos on the head of the Machine Gun Woman, which attracts all kinds of killers; from common street thugs to elite hitmen.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman, Mecánico is killed by having a dipstick shoved up his ass.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman: Panguinao uses a whip as one of his weapons. He kill Shadeline with a single stroke after tying his spur to the end of it.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman, Santiago brings the Machine Gun Woman to Longara tied up as his prisoner, intending to then turn her loose so she can kill Longara. The plan fails because he forgot to tell her that Longara was holding his mother hostage.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman: Santiago undergoes a lock-and-load montage when he decides to return to the Tango Club and rescue the Machine Gun Woman. He straps on all of the weapons he finds in the back of the Machine Gun Woman's jeep; transforming himself into a skinny version of Rambo.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman takes place in less than 24 hours. Santiago is given 24 hours to bring in the Machine Gun Woman, and at no time in the ensuing chaos does night fall.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman, the Machine Gun Woman cuts the heads off Longara's hitmen to prove that she has killed them. Santiago is horrified when he sees her take an axe to their corpses.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman, the Machine Gun Woman has no issues with having sex with Santiago while tied up,after he has captured her and says that he cannot risk untying her.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman: When Santiago first arrives at the Tango Club, Che Longara is surrounded by a group of topless dancers.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman: When the Machine Gun Woman pushes him out of her jeep and drives off, Santiago steals a sports car to chase her. The last we see is him being flagged down by the police while she drives off into the distance.
* Bring Me the Head of the Machine Gun Woman with her machine guns, or dance her way through a firefight without receiving a scratch.
* Bring Me the Horizon - "Go To Hell For Heaven's Sake" , "True Friends", and "Throne".
* Bring Me the Horizon has one at the end of "For Stevie Wonder's Eyes Only": "For I am Death, bitch!"
* Bring Me the Horizon has turned everyone in Oli's neighborhood (and possibly beyond) into cackling, murderous psychopaths except for maybe three people (Oli, an elderly woman who may be his grandmother, and a woman trapped in her car as a pack of psychos hammer on it and ultimately blow it up). A man in a hazmat suit is visible during the final sequence.

* Bring Me to Life of her to him, Angel loses his temper and punches a hole through the wall.
* Bring Me to Life, she never tried to make excuses for her actions or pretended to be anything else, while Jasmine adamantly insists she did what she had to do and was trying to save the world.
* Bring Me to Life, which Buffy had withheld from the others, going so far as to accuse her of deliberately sending Annabelle and Chloe to their deaths and being in league with the First; she's cut off when Buffy punches her in the face.
* Bring My Brown Pants: Someone soils themselves in response to getting scared.
* Bring News Back: Pheidippides at the Battle of Marathon, who managed to warn Athens that Sparta would not aid them in time for the battle.
* Bring News Back: The characters must get information to the right people.
* Bring News Back: Where a character must go back in person (often through long, dangerous roads) to deliver important news.
* bring Oasis back, a non-canon strip depicted Torg wheeling in a charred corpse and exclaiming "Look who's back!", to drive home the point that 'Oasis is dead, dead, DEAD, and isn't coming back EVER.' ...of course, it didn't stick...
* Bring on the Night", where Xander's making jokes while the Potentials are scared to death waiting for night to fall and the übervamp to come crashing in:
* Bring on the Night", who was revealed to have been the First Evil in disguise when the real Eve was found dead in a motel room.
* "Bring on The Thundah!"_ has his steam name changed to THUNDER for this video, only for the server to change the map to cp_Egypt, to Jerma's dismay.
* bring out the worst in people's egos, or is it just an (extra)ordinary notebook?
* brings this up repeatedly as a minor theme. The Night Elves are one of the oldest races on Azeroth and once ruled most of the known world on top of being biologically immortal. However, their longevity makes them extremely slow to change or progress as a society. Harry notes their capital city has the population of a small town at best and Adrastia quickly deduced that they're one major disaster away from extinction. When creating new bodies for himself and Luna, Harry bases them off trolls, citing that they're the most biologically advanced race, being even older then night elves while having mortal lifespans. By contrast, the night elves are at most twenty generations old and, according to Harry, haven't even evolved a proper racial survival instinct yet.
* brings up "female problems": "Female problems? La la la la la la la la..."
* Brings up this possibility again. It's purposefully left up to the reader to interpret it for themselves.
* bring the Americans down with them. the leader of the Enclave, a faction made up of the descendants of high-ranking government officials, outright states this was the case with later games corroborating this claim at various points.
* Bring the Anchor Along: If restraints can't be broken, haul along what they're tied to.
* Bring the Anchor Along: When a character can't untie themselves from something, so they just have to bring the something with them.
* Bring the Crunch DLC, the monsters (really just crackheads in monster costumes) can use vine attacks like the Plantmancer.
* bring the dead back to life! While the person's consciousness had been converted into energy by the being that had possessed him, the episode seems to imply that they can always re-materialize a previously saved version of a crew member.
* Bring The Soul" as background music. The person who took their picture mentions that Twitter has high demand because of people anticipating their appearance at the 2018 Billboard Music Awards, which is when said part of the film takes place.
* Bring Up the Bodies has a serious example with Henry VIII's near-fatal jousting accident, in which he was unconscious and thought dead for hours and the court began splintering into factions for another civil war. He tells Cromwell that the events of the afternoon must never be mentioned, for the stability of the realm and to keep foreign powers from getting ideas, and Cromwell agrees—the official story will be that he was out for ten minutes at most and it was no big deal.

* Bring Up the Bodies. It's not the first time Henry's been mad at him, but the level of rage and the particular accusation is enough to make Cromwell's head feel rather insecure on its shoulders. He just manages to withdraw by making a blacksmith's gesture that confuses Henry into shutting up, then immediately seeks out a goblet of wine.
* Brink activate their 'Disguise' ability by scanning an enemy's corpse, then taking on that character's appearance.
* Brink aspect, disarming explosives planted by enemy players (though they can also plant land mines).
* Brink can learn the ability to mark enemy players by pointing the iron sights over them for a few seconds. The marked enemies will emit a red aura that makes them visible to all friendlies for a few seconds, even through walls.
* Brink global warming has caused the seas to rise, covering most of the Earth.
* Brink, involves a roller skating competition. The good team are called Soul-Skaters (since they skate for fun), although, at the actual competition, they are called Team Pup 'N Suds (long story), while their less-than-moral opponents are the highly-paid X-Bladz. All the kids go to the same school, and the main conflict is between Andy "Brink" and Val, the leaders of the respective teams. In fact, for a time, Brink joins the X-Bladz to make some money, while his family is experiencing financial troubles, over his father's objections. However, when Val shows himself to be a dirty cheater and gets Brink's friend injured, Brink quits (one of Val's team-members also quits) and reconciles with his estranged friends in time for the competition.
* Brink is a first person shooter with what's called SMART; "Smooth Movement Across Random Terrain". It has a dedicated "Parkour" button, as well as more precise manual controls. Look up at a ledge, hit the SMART button, and you jump and climb onto it automatically. Look down and press the same button, and you slide. Approach a railing and hit the button, and you climb over it.
* Brink is set aboard The Ark, an experimental floating colony designed to be completely self-sufficient.
* Brink of Consciousness: Dorian Gray Syndrome is fond of keeping the perfectly-preserved bodies of his victims in huge glass tubes all over his mansion and grounds.
* Brink!, the titular character's rival is actually quite a skilled skater as leader of the X-Blades, but his animosity towards the main character ends up getting him exposed as a cheater.
* Brink was permanently made free on August 2017, Steam version only, without being Freemium, although the DLC which features several new maps and features, still for sale with a price tag.
* Brisco & Bowler recruit chronic recidivist Pete Hutter to their
* Brisco County Jr. being killed, and then getting away from it at the beginning of the next episode with a ridiculous convoluted explanation as to how they got free in the nick of time.

* Brisingr ends up getting both. Nasuada has him whipped for his disobeying of a direct order (from an incompetent superior, who ends up getting demoted) in order to save the lives of the men he had just been put temporarily in command of. But she gives him his own unit, which means he reports directly to Nasuada and no one else. Keep in mind he just joined the Varden not long before and has only a handful of missions under his belt.
* Brisingr for disobeying orders during a battle (never mind that his superior actually lauded his actions, which saved many of his subordinates’ lives. The problem was that he couldn’t be seen to be getting away with insubordination).
* Brisingr has a chapter narrated from the perspective of the dragon Glaedr.
* Brisingr his enemy’s neck from five feet beneath him, it’s unlikely he could exert enough force from that angle to deal a lethal blow, let alone cleanly sever skin, muscle, and spinal cord.

* Britain's Article 50 letter to the European Union, which both use the exact phrase.
* Britain's experimental Windscale nuclear reactor was simultaneously an example and an aversion of a Failsafe Failure. The reactor was constructed in order to give Britain parity with the United States in the nuclear arms race, but a combination of modifications to the reactor's operating procedures and incomplete understanding of graphite's response to nuclear bombardment resulted in situations where the reactor would periodically give off spikes of high heat, for which the original temperature monitoring equipment was woefully inadequate. It also lulled the operators into getting accustomed to seeing occasional high temperatures in the normal course of operation. Thus, when the reactor caught fire, it was at first thought nothing was wrong. It continued for three days at temperatures exceeding a thousand degrees centigrade whilst the temperature sensors - located away from the hotspots - reported normal operating conditions. The original design allowed for the uranium fuel cores to be pushed through their channels into a cooling bath, but by the time the fire had been discovered the cores were too hot to move. Not only had they become jammed by heat expansion, they were so hot that metal poles used to try and move them simply melted on contact. After several failed attempts to cool the reactor it was eventually brought under control by flooding the cores with water.
* Britain's failed death ray, an ambitious project which laid the foundational principals for modern radar in the process of trying to figure out if a practical death ray was possible with then-current technology.
* Britain's Got Talent described him as "the funniest unfunniest comedian I've ever heard."
* Britain's Got Talent looked at her awkward appearance and assumed she was going to be a total disaster. When an amazing voice comes out of her mouth, the judges were visibly floored and left commentators asking why we assume lack of physical beauty automatically means lack of talent.
* Britain's Got Talent) was the best selling album of the year in spite of being released in the fourth quarter. Nonetheless, she didn't get any singles in the Top 40 from either record.
* Britain's Got Talent when Connie Talbot (6 at the time) sang the most adorable rendition of "Somewhere Over the Rainbow", and he damn near cried. (It helped that Talbot sang better than a lot of adults on the show.)

* Britain's model Banana Republic. Anyhow, note how Roosevelt is aiming the gun at the monarchical European figure while the poor, defenseless Latin American cowers beneath him. The image doesn't actually show gunboat diplomacy as such but instead presents a benign ideal of it, as one would expect of a (biased) US political cartoon.
* Britain's most prolific serial killer, Dr. Harold Shipman, was originally investigated over allegations that he had forged the will of a recently deceased patient. The fake will was traceable to his typewriter, which led to the patient being exhumed. Traces of diamorphine were found in her body, and other apparently healthy patients who died suddenly were then also exhumed. It has been suggested that Shipman deliberately invoked the trope himself, making the ham-fisted forgery because he

* Britani Knight in the tournament finals to become the first champion of Pro Wrestling Eve. Then she came down with glandular fever.
* Britani Knight volume 43 and said she was putting out a help wanted ad for a new daughter, as Britani's run in the promotion had basically been the apotheosis of everything that had gone wrong up to that point.
* Britannia Hospital ends with the villainous Professor Millar unveiling his vision of humanity's future; a brain housed in a plastic pyramid. As a demonstration of its intellect, Millar has the brain recite Hamlet's "What a piece of work is a man" speech, but it gets hung up on the final words, repeating "how like a God!" until the film ends.
* Britannia, King Haakon of Norway arrives with a huge army to oversee the conquest of Britain. While a strong general with a formidable force, he is also an old man and will likely die not long after he arrives.
* Britannian Military, and they're notoriously bigoted towards conquered subjects. Granted, the whole society is like that, but the military are the ones conquering and killing them. One faction in particular, the Purists, are completely against Honorary Britannians joining the army and have no problems with framing people for murder in order to reap the political benefits.
* Britannia that wants to die serving his ideals. Having acknowledged the memories fully halfway through the season, he freely admits to being selfish, hypocritical, and, in his own words, "despicable".
* Britannia, the anthropomorphic personification of the peoples of Great Britain, and the once and future British Empire.
* Britannic Patroness Of The Mediterranean features a sinking experience starting at about 8:10 AM, five minutes before she strikes the mine, and ends 55 minutes later at 9:10 AM, when she slipped beneath the waves. And there are no cuts in-between.

* Brit band Verve became The Verve after a run-in with the jazz label Verve.
* Brit Com, and she needs to keep him talking so they can trace the call. A few minutes in, Nelson asks how the police are supposed to have known this, and she looks blank for a second, then hangs up.

* Britcom are mostly accurate to tropes of the era, but there is one gag about Hennimore being told to record his boss on his phone (which turns out to be a rotary phone with a 1970s camcorder in place of the handset).
* Brit Com, being a comedy gave the writers numerous excuses to resolve them in absurdist manners.
* Brit Com cuts between the behind-the-scenes work on a panel show with the panel show itself, usually to undermine the chummy demeanour of its host and show how panel show contestants are fed answers and jokes ahead of time.
* Brit Com. Frank Pike doesn't want to evade military service, but his medical test reveals a rare blood group. He's excused from active service on the grounds that they'd have nothing to transfuse him with in the event of injury. So he stays in the Home Guard instead.
* Brit Com has the character Redwald captured by vikings twice. He is returned in a sack each time, upon which he's asked if he's been treated "mmm... rudely"; he confirms it each time with specific mention of sobriquets like "the Cucumber" and "the Twelve-Inch".
* Brit Com just as Lofty arrives safe and sound... and promptly gets a rollicking when Williams sees him.
* Brit Com may count as a variation. The title character, played by Charlie Drake, can never hold down a job for more than one episode, but his reason for getting fired is never the same twice.
* Brit Com, played by Stephanie Cole (who was only 50 at the time); she was a photojournalist and a war correspondent for most of her life, spent her 65th birthday hanging from a helicopter and gives everyone hell in her.
* Brit Com saw him forced to dress up as Daffodil Man in order to sell some product or other door-to-door.
* Brit Com-style cheerfulness and enthusiasm. Peter, a minister who detests the entire culture of spin but nonetheless has to deal with Stewart regularly, constantly snarks at him and relishes every opportunity to undermine or humiliate him.
* Brit Com (three nightwatchmen in an office building wiling the time away) had Terrence Oblong, a gorilla who joined the team for an episode. Type 1 or 2.
* Brit Com where the heroes leave their boring job by tying their boss to a swivel chair and pushing him out the window. On the ground floor, it is hoped, although it may well be a fantasy sequence...
* Brit Com, which apparently involved climbing out of an upper window while beating himself over the head with a tin tray.
* Brit Com) who claims she once promised to marry him. There are a couple of scenes where Eric has to hold rapid-fire conversations with himself while changing clothes out of sight.
* britcom who will only rent the flat to a couple. It eventually turns out this was all based on a misprinted advertisement.
* Brit is a comic book character created by Robert Kirkman who is an average-sized man of about 60 who is completely invulnerable to harm, thanks to a serum created by his father. Unlike many other invulnerable characters in the Image universe, he has no other abilities, having the strength of a 60-ish-year-old man who works out.
* British actor Heather Sears pulled out a very creditable Irish accent for her few lines in * British actor Joseph Long is of Italian descent and has played Italian, Greek, Cypriot, Spanish, Chilean, Russian, Israeli, and Arabic characters.

* British advert for Walkers Crisps, playing on footballer Paul Gascoigne's famous tears at the 1990 World Cup, fits him with water being sprayed from two plastic tubes for a rare Live-Action version of Ocular Gushers.
* British agent Quiller is the target of one of these in Tunisia. Fortunately, the bombers didn't have the chance to wire the bomb to the ignition, so they set it to go off when the car experienced a sharp vibration, such as the door closing. And then a heavy bus rumbled by and triggered it while Quiller was still halfway across the street. In Adam Hall's typical narrative style, it's stated:

* British aircraft carriers suffered much less severely from kamikaze attacks in the Pacific than American ones, as the British usually had armored decks, while the American had only wooden decks that could be easily smashed through by a plane.
* British Airways Flight 38 and was in control of the plane when it lost power. Together with the other pilots he managed to get it down without any casualties. Afterwards, one newspaper had the headline "Coward in name only."
* British Airways Flight 38 lost power to both engines and landed just short of the runway at Heathrow airport on January 17, 2008.
* British Airways flight 5390 had a cockpit window blow out at altitude, and the pilot was sucked mostly out of the plane. Cabin crew held on to his legs to keep him from going the rest of the way, but with the combination of trauma, hypoxia and hypothermia, they assumed he was dead, and holding on to him was just to prevent possible further damage by his corpse impacting parts of the plane. He survived.
* British Airways Flight 5390. Incredibly, the plane landed safely with no loss of life (and yes, that includes the pilot).
* British Airways Flight 5390 involved the blow-out of a cockpit windscreen with pilot Tim Lancaster left half outside the plane at 17300 feet altitude on June 10, 1990. After a successful landing and recovery, Tim Lancaster was back at work flying.
* British Airways Flight 9 had all four engines stall due to volcanic ash before being restarted. The plane made a successful instrument landing at Jakarta on June 24, 1982, after the ash had reduced visibility through the cockpit windows.
* British Airways' slogan used by the airline between 1974 and 1983 was "We'll take more care of you," not "We'll take good care of you."
* British. Also there weren't just comic strips mocking the axis leadership - characters which had existed before the war such as Desperate Dan, Lord Snooty and Pansy Potter occasionally fought the Nazis during the war.
* British/American-on-Afghani: During April 2006, British convoy called in an airstrike from American warplanes on Afghanistan police officers, mistaking them for attacking Taliban forces, killing one and wounding twelve. Note that in this case, the U.S. pilots were attacking as specified by the British, and not making an error of judgment of their own.
* British and Americans whenever portrayed by C S Forester. To some degree, he was writing propaganda.
* British and Irish international sports teams present a unique situation) complicate matters further.
* British angry and defensive when his "advice" is rejected or disputed. After Michael left the US version, Andy Bernard started out as one of these. Although it is quite clear that he is new to management, he is still relatively reasonable and kind to the employees and is arguably more competent as a boss than as a salesman.
* British Army either have a long history (such as the Diehards, or the Ever-Sworded), or are very bad jokes (the Agile and Bolton Wanderers, or Hell's Last Issue).
* British Army. He states on several occasions that he is from the "5th Northumberland Fusiliers". The unit name is a carryover from the original Doyle stories. Watson served with the 5th (Northumberland Fusiliers) Regiment of Foot at the Battle of Maiwand in 1880. The regiment was renamed simply to 'Northumberland Fusiliers' in 1881, but was frequently referred to as the "5th Northumberland" for decades thereafter. The regiment became part of the Royal Regiment of Fusiliers in 1968, before the current John Watson was even born. Additionally, he was a surgeon - not a normal soldier - so he should really be saying he's from the Royal Army Medical Corps.
* British Army officer Jack Churchill (of no known relation to Winston Spencer Churchill) famously fought with an English longbow and a claymore. His motto made this
* British Army regulations do allow the wearing of a beard if there is a serious medical or religious reason (e.g., skin condition prevents shaving or the soldier is a devout Sikh) or 'operational reasons' as decided by a sufficiently high ranking officer (e.g., patrolling in the desert for weeks and there's not enough water for shaving). Of course none of these are mentioned or obvious in the episode so Artistic License is the most likely explanation.

* British army While the 'tank' units normally had dedicated 'Infantry' tanks like the Churchill, some 'tank' units were equipped with exactly the same Shermans as 'Armoured' regiments leading the untrained observer to wonder what the fuss was about. Add in the confusion in the way what is called a 'Regiment' is really a battalion sized unit that is part of it's parent regiment but commanded as part of a brigade, and it is little wonder many casual military history buffs give up and research Panzer divisions instead.
* British artist and fraudster Thomas Griffiths Wainewright fled arrest for the poisoning of his sister-in-law (he was also suspected of poisoning his uncle, mother-in-law, and his friend, in order to cash in on their life insurances) and took refuge in France. Since this was the 1830s, there was no surviving evidence to convict him of murder when he voluntarily returned to Britain seven years later. There was, however, enough to convict him of a forgery case that had taken place in 1824, and he was deported to a
* British artist Sir Stanley Spencer was invited to receive an award at a ceremony in London. While getting off the train at Euston station, a gentleman mistook him for a porter and asked for help carrying his bags. Stanley obliged and helped the man carry his bags across London. When he arrived at the ceremony that evening, the award was handed to him by the gentleman he'd helped earlier that day.
* British band Sweet's biggest hit in the United States wasn't "The Ballroom Blitz" or "Fox on the Run", both of which only hit #5, but the novelty song "Little Willy", a #3 hit. The band hasn’t looked back too fondly of this song and rarely play it live. Even their final top 10 hit "Love is like Oxygen" is probably better remembered.
* British band The Horrors were often accused of being a rip-off of Australian post-punk band The Birthday Party. This subsided once they
* British band The Jellybotties won't ever exactly be tearing up the charts in their homeland or anywhere else, but they experienced a bump in popularity when Alan Davies sang a few bars of "Peter Cushing Lives in Whitstable" on
* British bank First Direct (part of HSBC) market themselves as an aversion of this — people calling through to their main telephone banking line are put through to the first available operator immediately, with no IVR in between (HSBC themselves use an IVR, however.)

* British Board of Film Classification / 3 Soho Square, London w1 3hd":
* British boxer Nigel Benn, AKA "The Dark Destroyer", would talk openly about how he was only really in it for the money, and about how there was rarely anything personal against his opponent, how he was seriously worried about the possibility of brain damage, and how he was going to quit boxing as soon as he felt able. The UK boxing press thought this was all a jolly bad show, and gave Benn a rather negative reputation at the time.
* British boy bands are infamous for being unable to achieve much success internationally.
* British Brevity: Cable and streaming series shunned the traditional 22-to-26-episodes-a-year "American season" in favor of the more flexible "British system" of 6 to 13 episodes, seasons not necessarily adjusting to a yearly schedule, making it easier to "binge-watch".
* British Brevity means that, by American standards, many classic British TV shows are fairly short-lived. American viewers unfamiliar with this may be surprised when they get into some of these shows and find that they only had enough episodes to fill half a US TV season. Just a few examples:
* British Brevity: The tendency for British shows to be short (in comparison to American shows).

* British Brevity, where the whole season is one serial but very short:
* British businessman Roger Cooper was arrested in Iran, accused of espionage and sentenced for 'Death Plus Ten Years', the title of his book on the affair. He was released after only five years.
* British cable channel Bravo (no relation to the American one) was shut down at the end of 2010 for ambiguous reasons, namely that it served the same demographic as fellow Sky-owned channel Sky1.
* British cars were this before the 1960s, when most of them came under the * British casualties from the 1814 Battle of New Orleans were simply buried in the very damp area where they fell. During Hurricane Katrina, some skeletons surfaced as the ground washed away.
* British cautionary advert where a young teen watches himself through a glass window as he forces sex on his struggling girlfriend, at that point convinced she wants it. The teen is banging on the glass, crying, and shouting "You're raping her!" at his other self, who cannot hear. The advert ends with the warning, "If you could see yourself..."
* British channel E4 trumpets Thursday nights as its strongest night of the week, using it for premieres and first showings of imported American sitcoms such as
* British charity St. John Ambulance, which trains people in first aid and provides voluntary first-aiders in the community, ran an advert showing a father undergoing cancer treatment. He survives, but then at the party intended to welcome him home from the hospital, he chokes to death because no one knows how to do first aid. The intended message was that the death rate from cancer is only slightly higher than that for people who could have been saved by basic first aid knowledge.

* British comedian Jim Davidson's stand-up routine in the seventies and eighties featured the infamous character Chalky White, a caricature of West-Indian males. While nowadays it's seen as a racist stereotype, Jim was always on Chalky's side, portraying him as a likeable, put-upon underdog.
* British comedian Lee Evans discusses how detergent ads always come on when a serial killer is on the loose:
* British comedian Mark Steel sometimes jokes about the fact that he was expelled from school for truancy, pointing out that the punishment basically amounted to being forced to do more of the thing that earned him the punishment in the first place.
* British comedian Rob Wilton had a routine where he was a fire chief who spent a ridiculous amount of time taking down the details from an emergency phone call, and an even longer time passing them on to his crew chief. The punchline is, "It's a big fire... should be, by now."

* British comedy brothers Mike and Bernie Winters, both London Jews, had a strong streak of Borscht Belt, or perhaps in this case Cockney Kosher, running through their act, which was a well-loved mainstay of British TV variety shows in
* British comedy duo Hale & Pace and their "Well 'Ard" Song. "Always drinking from a broken glass - cracking walnuts in my..." Cue soccer fans storming into the pub: "Arsenal! Arsenal!"
* British Comedy Greats is not really science fiction. Because it's satirical, apparently. It is likely that the author was trying to make the distinction between genre as driving force of plot and genre as setting.
* British comedy personality Harry Hill stated in an interview that he was asked by a man on the street who he was because the man recognized him from somewhere. The man started naming celebrities who he thinks he could be leading Hill to say: "How about Harry Hill?" The man said no, stating that he looked nothing like him.
* British Comic called "Minnie's Mixer", which played this for laughs. The eponymous device looked like an electric food mixer, but when pointed at two objects in close proximity could fuse them together. Most often used to mix people or pets with objects. Fortunately the process was reversible.
* British comics set in World War 2 tended to concentrate on the Desert War up until El Alamein, the last major battle won by the British and Empire forces without the involvement of American troops.

* British commercial TV is not officially allowed product placement. But it gets around this by a process where somehow the adverts reinforce the theme of the show and the two mutually feed off each other. For instance,
* British computing lore tells of an engineer who, back in the days of massive mainframe computer setups, could diagnose which modules would need to be repaired just by listening to a description of the symptoms (as opposed to the usual technique, which was basically trial and error). Having discerned the problem in this way, he would head out to the installation site, unfold a big diagram of the hardware, and toss chicken bones over them like a fortune teller. Invariably, to the confusion of the customers, the bones knew which parts to replace...

* British food used to have this reputation, before London became gourmet mecca. Unless you're from France or Germany.
* British Football (soccer) legend Sir Alex Ferguson is known for the "hairdryer treatment", which consists of yelling at useless players mere inches from their face. In the words of Jaap Stam "it might sound like a beauty salon...it really really ain't." In one infamous incident, Ferguson kicked a loose football boot right across the dressing room, in a towering rage. It hit golden boy David Beckham full in the face, causing cuts and bruising. While Beckham shrugged it off as one of those things — at least in public — he left the club soon afterwards "by mutual consent".

* British historian Sir Simon Schama partially averts this. He's a longtime supporter of Tottenham Hotspur FC, but when he lived in the United States, grew to have a great affection for baseball, particularly the Boston Red Sox.
* British House of Commons's 1853 Budget ran nearly five straight hours) and important the speech tends to be — to say nothing of all-too-likely Opposition heckling — the Chancellor is well-advised to take advantage of that exception. Past chancellors have opted for:
* British humor: A new galley slave replaces an old one who has died. As the old slave's body is flung overboard, the overseer flogs the rest of the slaves, who respond by opening their breech-clouts and urinating into the air. Confused, the new slave asks his bench-mate what is going on, and receives the reply "we always have a whip-round and a piss-up when somebody leaves." (collection of money and a drinking party)

* British Humour: We're an entire nation of complete arseholistic sarcapocalyptic buffoons.
* British illusionist Derren Brown has made several television specials investigating supernatural claims and eventually concluding that they are false; though he tends to leave the audience to decide for themselves what they believe, he will at that point have argued that all the evidence presented to him looks mundane and that he doesn't buy it. In other shows on TV and stage, he replicates precisely the kinds of things charlatans claim to do while explicitly stating that he has no paranormal abilities.
* British India the country is not nearly as homogeneous as, say, China.

* British infantry units realized there was no comparison between their Bren guns and the standard German squad MGs (MG34 and MG42) when it came to laying down sheer volume of fire (the Bren remained unparalleled for delivering short bursts of extremely accurate MG fire, but sometimes you need more than a thirty-round magazine). As often as not captured German MGs would be pressed into service - but at the risk of their distinctive sound bringing down the wrong sort of attention from friendly forces mistaking the users for Germans. The Armored Corps in particular would often used the Besa machine gun, in 8mm Mauser, on models of tanks designed in Britain (American tanks such as the Sherman retained their Browning machine guns) because of the difficulty in chambering it in .303 and because their supply chain was separate from the main Army's, thus not causing many issues by the use of non-standard equipment. It also allowed them to use captured German ammunition.

* British newsreader George Aligiah likewise seems to have his eyebrow fixed into this position.
* British nuclear bomber crews were issued with eyepatches for fear that in a war they'd be blinded by all the atomic weapons going off. When one eye was blinded by a nuclear flash, they were supposed to switch over to the other, and hopefully there'd be a crewmember still able to see by the time they reached their target (returning home was not an issue, as there wouldn't have been enough fuel anyway).

* British-on-British: In Sangin Province during August 2006, an RAF Harrier was called in to assist British troops during a firefight with the Taliban. The Harrier strafed the British instead, missing the enemy by 200 meters. This angered Major James Loden of 3 PARA, who called the RAF "Completely incompetent and utterly, utterly useless in protecting ground troops in Afghanistan." Some British paratroopers have even said they prefer American air support to the Royal Air Force.
* British-on-British: Later that year in July, a British WAH-64 Apache was called in to support a unit from 2 PARA against Taliban fighters. After attacking the Taliban positions, the Apache mistook the 2 PARA unit for more Taliban and opened fire, wounding nine of them.
* British-on-Danish: In Helmand Province during September 2007, British soldiers fired Javelin missiles at a unit of Royal Life Guards, killing two of them. The British soldiers had mistakenly identified the Royal Life Guards' camp as a Taliban hideout, and requested permission to attack. The Royal Life Guards, not realizing
* British orders of Knighthood provide for a public degradation ceremony for disgraced Knights. The last victim was Francis Mitchell in 1621, sentenced for "Grievous Exactions" (abusing a government position). In his case his spurs were broken and thrown away, his belt cut, his sword snapped over his head and a declaration made that he was "no longer Knight but Knave" before he was led away to be imprisoned in The Tower of London. For nobles this could be taken further with an "Attainder": an attainted person is not only stripped of their insignia of rank but also of any inherited titles and everything they own, and their children are forcibly disinherited (their lands etc. default to the Crown).

* British Rail Class 43 High Speed Train. Designed in 1975, the last new unit was produced in 1982 and the type has been in continuous service ever since, with only three power cars being taken out of service after being written off in accidents. No diesel locomotive has yet surpassed the top speed of 148mph achieved in trials. It was initially intended as a stopgap due to delays in development in the tilting Advanced Passenger Train - which never entered full service due to not working properly and loss of political support.
* British Rail in 1948. Nevertheless, most preserved railway equipment will wear the colours of one of those railways when not in British Railways paint. Averted by the fourth of the Big Four, the Great Western Railway, which dated back almost to the dawn of the railway in the 1830s being majorly connected to Isambard Kingdom Brunel and was the only of the pre-Grouping companies to retain its identity.

* British record producer Joe Meek won a lawsuit filed against him for allegedly copying "La Marche d'Austerlitz" in the song "Telstar" a few months after his suicide.
* British Redcoats, who wore bright red uniforms with white crossbelts. This was before camouflage was much of a factor in warfare. The bright red color helped commanders keep track of troop movements amid smoke-covered battlefields. The color also blended together when British troops stood together, making it difficult for enemies to count their numbers.
* British regulations do not allow the Houses of Parliament to be used in television unless it is part of the news (and even then it can only be used in specific ways). The result of this is that Manchester Town Hall is used to double for the Houses of Parliament in basically any television programme which requires them. Very noticeable as the floors are covered with Manchester's
* British Resistance, the security forces at last manage to corner main character David Garnett. * British singer/rapper Taio Cruz is almost never seen without a pair of sunglasses on. He is occasionally seen without them, but the sunglasses is his signature image.
* British sitcom has taken this premise to its limits. Focusing on the lives of the Brockmans, the kids are only given a basic outline, almost all their dialogue is improvised, and the adults' role is to keep everything following the basic direction of the story. Whilst the adults are heavily scripted they do a significant amount of reacting to all of the amazing things the kids say. The result is the kids' dialogue is probably the most authentic on TV (ignoring anything that's nonfiction) and far more imaginative than anything the writers could come up with.
* British Smiles." It’s incredibly xenophobic, but Ralph understandably cries and says “that’s enough”.
* British soaps are prime-time and generally get a bit more critical respect than their US counterparts, making tropes like this rather discredited. That the soaps are intended to occur approximately in real time also helps (as in an episode is generally set on the date it airs on TV), so it's expected that characters age exactly as the actors do. It also makes the actors want to stay on longer, and given the

* Britney Spears getting moody with her, image issues, mental health problems, and negative backlash. Although she has been under conservatorship since 2008, she has continued to perform at Vegas and make albums.
* Britney Spears has one of the biggest groups of detractors in all of pop land but somehow manages to get those #1 singles and albums, sell out tours, get hired for big bucks for TV shows, and generally remain relevant and popular in the public eye.
* Britney Spears have moved out of this category if they managed to grow up with any grace or artistry. Christina Aguilera successfully transferred to other genres, but this resulted in her falling well out of the limelight, so her hatedom has died down a bit. Britney Spears started to die down, but then it flared back up again when Kevin Federline entered her life and the media debacle that surrounded that. She's calmed down since then, and is starting to gain a bit of respect again for moving on with her career.
* Britney Spears - her hair has been dyed many colors (her natural color is brown) but she is famous for being a blonde.
* Britney Spears is about appreciating self-love in the absence of one's partner.
* Britney Spears is a prime example. For two episodes, no less. The show does this a LOT, though, and Britney just got the most hype about it. Her appearance drew in such good ratings, it may have saved the show from cancellation in its third season.
* Britney Spears is basically a music video to celebrate her pregnancy.
* Britney Spears is both invoking and subverting this trope when she sings "Hit Me Baby (One More Time)" in pigtails.
* Britney Spears, is much better known than the album version, which received little if any public promotion.
* Britney Spears is shown doing it during a sketch when she hosted. Like Hans & Franz, she had a device under her top to make them go up and down.
* Britney Spears' "Oops! ...I Did It Again" uses some sound effects to give the impression that this is where Britney is saying goodbye to someone, who gives her what's hinted to be [[Film/Titanic the Heart of the Ocean]] before leaving. The music video, however, depicts them as being on Mars with the guy as an astronaut, even having the "All aboard!" line said by mission control.

* Brits Natalie Dormer and Rory Kinnear as Germans Elsa Branson and Dr. Kraft. Dormer also plays Mexican-American Rio and American Alex Malone.
* Brits to label the 50 American states (spoiler: One person got them all, but beyond her only a few of them even got Scotland and England in the right places).
* Britsune Garden. However, she tends to show this trope's side more, and she has shown that she is fond of modern culture in many ways, including some casual language she spoke in (such as when she uttered "Yeah!").
* Britsune Garden some Igiriko individuals. It's up to the royal family and the remaining Igiriko to restore the garden to its former glory and seal the Shadoni race away.
* Britta always described her parents as stifling and overbearing. When we get to meet them, we find out they've secretly been paying for her apartment for years, and they both get along well with all her friends. Turns out they've mellowed out over the years.
* Britta and Jeff are sleeping together from several subtle indications, and lastly: Abed saw them getting dressed together in a dormitory.
* Britta and Jeff have one in an early episode so he can avoid failing a class.
* Britta does this herself in "Studies of Modern Movement" when the hitchhiker she and Shirley picked up is about to sing a song about mixing of the races. It's called "Don't Do It".
* Brittany also entered the trope in the episode "Through a Lens Darkly" where she gets a set of glasses thinking they'll make her smarter.
* Brittany also has a history of nationalism due in part to its Celtic cultural roots, although most modern Bretons aren't really in favor of secession that much (the fact that some parts of the nationalist movement
* Brittany become pregnant. She has claimed to have had sex with almost every guy in the school and yet she thinks using protection means having a burglar alarm and additionally she still thinks babies come from the stork.
* Brittany Diggers undergoes one of these while in a submarine in the first issue of the full color version of
* Brittany gives Gina an atomic wedgie in issue #95 for calling her a wookie. She does the same to Gina again when she calls her Chewie.
* Brittany had been turned into a statue before, but on that occasion she was animate... a super-strong, super-fast granite statue under the magical control of Atlantean sorcerer Gyphon.
* Brittany. Of the pair, Brittany tended to be the smarter one (which isn't saying much, though at least she managed to not be held back and graduate from Lawndale High).
* Brittany purposely leaks her and Santana's sex tape to prove to Santana that she's nor truly willing to do anything for fame. Santana is not impressed.

* Brittany's situation is similar to Santana's. While she has almost certainly slept with nearly every boy in the school and more than a few girls, she is fully comfortable with her bisexuality and could date a girl just as easily as a guy.
* Brittany to Santana. An odd example where the two of them already had been best friends and sexual partners for a while when the Key-moment happened. What happened was this: Brittany and Santana were playing the
* Brittany, who is anything but bright, helps the team win with her incredible knowledge of cat diseases.
* Brittany who's implied to be this. (Her claim to fame is apparently taking Kevin's virginity.)
* Britta's in the same boat with regards to Jeff, but is always wearing tall-heeled boots of some sort so it's less noticeable.
* Britt Baker after a heel turn in 2020, winning the AEW women's title the next year.
* Britt Baker: Debuted in 2015 (while in dental school, no less!), had a one-off WWE appearance as a jobber in 2016, worked the indies while finishing dental school, and became AEW's first women's signing in 2019.
* Britt Baker DMD. And uses "Dr." and "DMD" outside the ring as well, since she's an actual practicing dentist.
* Britt Baker licensed dentist when she's not wrestling, with a practice in the Orlando area.
* Britt Ekland. She's a virginal Mennonite girl who doesn't want to "do it" unless she gets "a sign from God," and the bed is rigged to lower as his Victrola plays "Hallelujah"...
* Brittnay was also very bitchy and violent in the Third Grade. Becoming friends with Mackenzie has put her a bit more under control.
* Brittney's mother is also revealed to have faked her suicide with Brittney's help, as part of a plot to get revenge on the abusive Niles.
* Brittney's stepfather Niles turns out to have faked his own death with Brittney's and Maya's help so he could get out from under any criminal investigation for having stolen money from his own company to feed his gambling addiction.
* Brittney Wong is shown to be a terrible singer when she tries to entertain the guests at her birthday party with karaoke.
* Britt will have a huge adult fanbase due to the quality storytelling in her works.
* Brizzy Voices, and even has narration roles in two Osmo Super Studio sets) and British YouTuber Seamus Gorman (Both fans of Disney and Harry Potter).
* Broadcast Live, beginning in 1909, was the first regularly-scheduled entertainment program.
* Broadcast Live: How most of TV used to be broadcast, and how sports and news programs still are
* Broadcast metadata and the rise of the smartphone have also killed off the trope of multiple characters synchronizing their wristwatches in
* Broadcast News: All three main characters are famously introduced as kids - with their main personality quirks being established.
* Broadcast News shows a bit of this. Notable is an early scene where Holly Hunter's character while addressing a conference of local TV newscasters, screens some of the vapid, fluffy clips that are presented as "news" in place of genuinely important stories... and the assembled anchors spontaneously applaud at the clips.
* Broadcast News the first time Albert Brooks' character attempts to work in front of the camera, he breaks into a sweat so bad it soaks through his suit coat in minutes.
* Broadcasts of Buffalo Sabres hockey games feature the "Carubba Collision," a replay of the game's most highlight-worthy check, named for a local auto body repair chain.
* Broadcasts of golf tournaments have started displaying contour-lines overlaying grassy slopes, which makes it easier for viewers to tell how the course lies.
* broadcast the entire thing over three days where somebody listened to and gave a track by track summary of the whole box. Spoiler: 90% is SCREEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEE

* Broadchurch has an example that focuses on the "woman" part of the syndrome rather than the "white". When the Lattimer family wants to know why their son Danny's murder has received almost no media attention, a reporter tells them that it's because Danny was a boy—if he had been a girl, there would be reporters swarming all over the town. The reporter suggests that they could get around this by making Danny's mother Beth the "white woman victim" who would be the focus of media sympathy.
* Broadchurch. They eventually settle for Miller sleeping under the spread while Hardy sleeps on top of it.
* Broadchurch tone. It was largely agreed to be a return to form for the show and was received far more warmly than the previous season.
* Broad City, Abbi invites her boyfriend Male Stacy over to her in the dog days of summer, and when they start to have sex, he passes out from the heat. She spends the rest of the episode worrying that in the few seconds before she noticed he passed out if she had raped him and Ilana tries to make her feel better first by saying that she's taking rape culture by the horns and secondly by saying that at worst (between the aforementioned sex and that she makes out with sixteen year old while high after confusing his age) she's a sex offender.
* Broad City, Abbi Jacobson and Ilana Glazer play Abbi Abrams and Ilana Wexler.
* Broad City and asks to change positions (meaning her on top), he pulls out a strap-on for her to use. She freaks out and calls Ilana, who tells her to go for it. Their relationship ends when she accidentally ruins the strap-on by putting it in the dishwasher and buys another one that he isn't pleased with.
* Broad City: A variant in "Apartment Hunters." Abbi receives a large royalty check after selling one of her illustrations, which she uses to go apartment hunting with Ilana. When they finally find some nice people with a great apartment to share, the new commercial using Abbi's illustration comes on... and it turns out to be for a white supremacist dating service. Abbi, understandably, is mortified, and the owners of the apartment (who happen to be black) are no longer comfortable with her moving in.
* Broad City, but Abbi loses control while going downhill, flies off the path, crashes into a pit, and injures her ankle so she can't climb out.
* Broad City episode, Abbi comes home to find that her roommate's freeloading boyfriend is out, and she has the apartment to herself for once. She celebrates by dancing around naked.
* Broad City episode "Abbi's Mom," Abbi's mom gets drunk at a restaurant, stands on a table, and shouts, "My daughter fucked thirty-two men!"
* Broad City episode "Coat Check," Ilana and Adele start making out within second of meeting and at every opportunity afterwards.
* Broad City episode "Destination: Wedding" to cope with the revelation that Abbi made out with another woman before they met, when Ilana wanted Abbi's first same-sex experience to be with her.
* Broad City episode "Fattest Asses," the silhouette of a foot wearing a high heel steps across the screen to transition to a scene of Abbi and Ilana going dress shopping.
* Broad City episode "Friendiversary," Ilana starts her scavenger hunt with a note made from words cut out of magazines.
* Broad City episode "Game Over," an old man in Abbi's exercise class pretends to pass out in the water so she'll pull him out and give him CPR. When she yells at him, he says, "I know how to do it without popping your cherry. Your husband will never suspect on your wedding night."
* Broad City episode "Getting There," Abbi and Ilana hop a subway turnstile and are chased by a security guard. They run onto a train right before the doors close.
* Broad City episode "Getting There" ends with Abbi and Ilana whispering "To be continued."
* Broad City episode "Hashtag FOMO", Abbi gets out of Trey's boring party by saying she has tapeworm in her butt and needs to go to the hospital.
* Broad City episode "House-Sitting," Abbi goes on a date with her former English teacher, who she had a crush on in high school. She becomes increasingly creeped out as the evening continues - he admits that he jerked off to her while she was his student, asks her to roleplay as a 17-year-old, and even pushes back the skin on her face to make her look younger.

* Broad City episode "Hurricane Wanda," Abbi can't bring herself to poop with so many people in her apartment until Ilana distracts them all by throwing shopping bags in the air.
* Broad City episode "Hurricane Wanda," Bevers grabs onto his older sister Marla in a panic when the power goes out.
* Broad City episode "Just the Tips," Abbi calls her paramedic boyfriend to break up with him while he's giving someone CPR.
* Broad City episode "Just the Tips," Ilana craps her leotard at a party due to a combination of cheese, champagne, and cocaine.
* Broad City episode "Mochalatta Chills." When Abbi's roommate's obese boyfriend joins Abbi's gym, Trey says, "He is the perfect before picture. A lump of clay we're gonna sculpt together."
* Broad City episode "Pu$$y Weed," Abbi buys pot from an adolescent drug dealer who sells a wide variety of products and offers to sell her three pages of his dad's oxycodone prescription for $500.
* Broad City episode "Sliding Doors," Ilana calls Abbi "ma'am" shortly after their first meeting, which she finds offputting enough that they end up spending the day apart.
* Broad City episode "The Last Supper", Abbi and Ilana's waiter does this while he's fighting with his girlfriend in the kitchen.
* Broad City episode "The Last Supper," Abbi shatters a wine glass she's holding, severely cutting up her palm, after she accidentally stabs herself with Ilana's EpiPen.
* Broad City episode "The Last Supper," Ilana makes a game out of gorging herself on shellfish while her face swells up. She plans to have Abbi use the EpiPen on her when her throat starts to close.
* Broad City episode "The Lockout," Abbi has red eyes from being maced, but tells Trey it was a parkour injury. He makes her go outside and practice while he watches, ruining her opportunity to shower in the locker room.
* Broad City episode "The Matrix" when Abbi and Ilana get so caught up browsing the internet they forget they're in the same room.
* Broad City episode "Witches," Ilana cries into her sex therapist's chest over her inability to have an orgasm.
* Broad City episode "Witches" reveals that Ilana has named her vagina after Abbi.
* Broad City for the long line outside the women's room at a party, uses the men's room instead, and ends up doing cocaine with a guy in a stall.
* Broad City has a semi-gentrified aesthetic that could date it badly, there are a few moments that stand out as very 2010s:
* Broad City, Ilana dates her same-gender doppelganger in one episode.
* Broad City is built on this trope, and it's one of the only "stoner humor" TV shows to have women as the main characters.
* Broad City is set and filmed in various recognizable spots in the city, but from a city dweller's POV in regards to tourist spots. Most notable in "Stolen Phone", when Abby's phone is stolen, forcing Abby and Ilana to unwillingly track it down in the Upper East Side and through Times Square.
* Broad City of "The Matrix" ends with Abbi and Ilana both shouting "Four!" which leads directly into the theme song: "...and three and two and one-one."
* Broad City, respectively. In the room next to theirs, they hear a man flatlining, then being declared dead.
* Broad City revolving around the fact that she's over 25 but has an expired license, but Lincoln pays for the car before she can finish.
* Broad City: "She didn't even say 'Bye, Lincoln'. That takes one more second. People have no phone etiquette these days."
* Broad City. She grabs him and starts making out with him to stop Ilana from recognizing them.
* Broad City, staffed solely by an old woman named Garol who sits at a desk in the middle of the warehouse eating yogurt.

* Broad City." Todd is forced to take the day off to look at a lineup of women who all repeat the insults.
* Broad City, Trey's younger twin sisters are middle school teachers who pretend to be each other.
* Broad City using a mask that seems to disguise her voice as well as her face.
* broader version of this counterparts. This often happens even if the point of divergence has nothing to do with Nazism or politics at all, and seems especially likely when the change would appear to result in a better timeline than the real one (such as "what if the transatlantic slave trade never happened?")
* Broadly speaking, nothing in any Blizzard game is new or original. They just introduce and tweak the successful elements of previous games to make ones that are quite good. One thing they did create was
* Broadsheet ballads, from the 16th to 19th C., popular posters printed with songs often glorifying outlaws and criminals, thought to stir up the lower classes
* Broadside of the same series gets it twice as bad. He's a triple changer with the vehicle modes of a jet and an aircraft carrier (
* Broad Strokes actually have two types of Marauders, one boxy and the other much sleeker, and possibly carrying a larger contingent of troops. The Peacekeepers tend to use the latter type as an all-purpose shuttle, transport, scoutship and gun platform though. Some Marauders, assigned to Retrieval Squads, even carry the same "immobilizer pulse" weapon as the larger ''Pantak'-class Vigilantes.
* Broad Strokes: An earlier story has some of its details considered canon in later entries, while the rest is either ignored, changed or discarded to fit a new narrative.
* Broad Strokes: A sequel or reboot establishes that the events of older stories happened, but not necessarily in the exact same way as depicted in the original stories.
* Broad Strokes, sometimes resulting in modern stories where characters recall events from issues written in the 1960s. It's generally accepted by readers that most of the stories from both companies take place during the time they were written, unless noted otherwise.
* Broadview (formerly Brinks) have run home security ads in which attractive young women are alone at home — suddenly a man breaks in, and as the alarm goes off the bolts, while on the phone is the reassuring voice of a Broadview representative. Subtext? If you don't have Broadview Home Security installed, you, or your wife, or your daughter will be raped.
* Broadway adaptation production, where she more closely resembles her original design.
* BroadwayCutie16”. Henri LeRoi arrives to the class and immediately makes a play for Marinette. Soon after they start dating, he starts telling her lies about Adrien to turn her against him. He even threatens and physically attacks Adrien in the bathroom to stay out of his way.
* Broadway Danny Rose but ends on a glimmer of hope with Danny Rose chasing after Tina though its unclear if his accepting her offer of friendship will extend to anything more than that.
* Broadway Danny Rose is told this way. A group of people has gathered around a table, recalling the events that make up the movie.
* Broadway Danny Rose, one of the acts managed by struggling theatrical agent Danny Rose is a stuttering ventriloquist.
* Broadway Danny Rose: The Danny Rose Formula, which includes two aspirins, tomato juice, Worcestershire sauce, goat cheese, and chicken fat. No one knows how it works, but it's an instant cure.
* Broadway Home Floral & Design ran a Christmas ad in 2007 in which a dress form becomes human after closing and plays around in the store. The commercial ends when she turns back into a dress form.
* Broadway legend Hinton Battle agreed to play Sweet, the Dancing Demon in the * Broadway Melody of 1940) with the top female tap dancer of the day (Eleanor Powell). The story was just an afterthought.

* Broadway Melody, the dance to "Please Don't Monkey With Broadway" has Fred Astaire and George Murphy flynning with canes.
* Broadway musical revues practically deserve their own category. They were plotless
* Broadway", "off-Broadway", and "off-off-Broadway", based mostly on the seating capacity of a particular theatre. You can get up to about five offs before leaving Manhattan. Obviously playing in a Broadway theatre means being in the center of the English speaking theater world.
* Broadway's colorblind casting frequently results in this. Case in point, Norm Lewis as
* Broadway tries to employ this trope when he's playing trenchcoat-detective. This ironically tends to backfire, when it comes to looking badass — he's more intimidating when he doesn't hide his gargoylish build — although it does help him blend in a bit.
* Broadway veteran David Burns died of a heart attack in the middle of a preview performance of
* Broadway veteran Jason Alexander had to tone down his voice to convincingly sing badly as George Costanza in
* Broadway veteran Joel Grey was cast in a relatively small but plot-pivotal role as
* "Brobies" has been suggested for male Barbie fans (especially for fans of
* Broccoli. This desire only grew when Broccoli acted very immature over getting a job in Episode 52.
* Brock and Ash meet Bruno, a member of the Elite 4 who agrees to train them. He gets them to do a ton of chores. Brock assumes this all has a deeper meaning, but Bruno just wanted his chores done. His actual training could be summed up as "Be nice to Pokemon". Or perhaps "You can't get something for nothing."
* Brock Cantillo. He may be a little kid with very few appearances, but
* Brocken Jr. vs. Prisman: Brocken Jr. knocks Prisman out of the floating ring they're fighting in with his Bremen Sunset, shattering his head against a statue.
* Brock flirting with any older female he sees, before being hauled away by Misty/Max (
* Brock got this when his Bonsly tackled him from getting horny due to Nurse Joy in "Off the Unbeaten Path".
* BROCKHAMPTON (group leader Kevin Abstract, rappers Dom McLennon and Merlyn Wood)
* Brock has learned to be a great chef from years of taking care of his siblings.
* Brock have had to master the art of this thanks to being trapped in a world of non-stop danger; most of their MUHU conversations with Penn involve them giving him advice or discussing mundane topics while fighting monsters or defusing bombs.
* Brockian Ultra-Cricket (since the full set of rules is literally too large to exist in print). The final rule is: "The winning team shall be the first team that wins."
* Brock in the Latin American dub was voiced by Gabriel Gama from the beginning up to the first episodes of the
* Brock is a G-rated version of this trope, who falls in love with every girl he meets (including every Nurse Joy and Officer Jenny) and has to be pulled away by Misty or Max, usually by dragging him by his ear, or his Bonsly would tackle him
* Brock is nearly blown into space without a space suit when a space station hatch opens—being Brock he survives, but coughs up something big.
* Brock isn't a totally bad person, but he's a creepy pervert to the point of landing himself in prison for it.
* Brock is quick to congratulate Chrys on her victory after their rematch, and compliment her on her quick improvement from her dismal first showing. Justified in that the structure of the Indigo League Challenge has Brock set as the entry-level gym for the current season, meaning he is meant to be relatively easy for new trainers to beat. However, he goes above and beyond by providing Chrys with a non-standard TM for her victory and advises her on where to find a Paras on her way to Cerulean City.
* Brock is this to Ash and anyone else who is in the main traveling group in the

* Brock is this type; he falls for just about every female he meets. Except, for no reason other than she's one of the bad guys, Jessie from Team Rocket. Granted, this is
* Brock Johnson to suicide. Subverted in that no one, especially Robin's daughter, sympathizes with him and she even asks if she's now justified in murdering him.
* Brock Lesnar 2003, fans chanted "YOU TAPPED OUT! YOU TAPPED OUT!" This has become a staple to chant against heels who recently lost by submission.
* Brock Lesnar always wear black gear with crimson accents in his second WWE run.
* Brock Lesnar and Fedor was completely dominated by Antonio Silva (194 cm and 130 kilos). In early days of MMA big fighters usually coasted on their size (or in case of Hunt and Schilt were kickboxers with almost no grappling skill) and could be defeated by smaller, skilled guys. Modern Goliaths like Lesnar, Alistair Overeem, and Antonio Silva bring both size and skill, meaning former Heavyweight greats who weigh around 100 kg (Fedor, Mirko Cro Cop, Couture, Antonio Rodrigo Nogueira) are no longer as dominant as they used to be.
* Brock Lesnar and, you guessed it, the Big Show. Interestingly enough, Big Show was the victim of the "superplex" all three times.
* Brock Lesnar at Wrestlemania where he used a ton of suplexes against him to attempt to wear him down.
* Brock Lesnar. Debuted in 2000. Made his WWE debut in 2002 and won both the King of the Ring and WWE title a few months later, becoming the youngest WWE Champion to date.
* Brock Lesnar debut in 2002 and quickly became one of its most prolific main event players. However, Lesnar eventually became burnt out due to WWE's hectic schedule and left in 2004 alongside Goldberg. After a failed NFL career, he returned to wrestling for New Japan, which was a disaster second only to Tadao Yasuda's run in the company, and had a successful run in UFC despite being dismissed as a "fake wrestler". Lesnar returned to WWE in 2012 and quickly reminded both fans and wrestlers alike why he was such a force to be reckoned with.
* Brock Lesnar for the WWE Championship at WrestleMania 19 when a botched Shooting Star Press almost broke his neck. Angle was also battling his old neck injury and had to be hospitalized too.
* Brock Lesnar. He's gone from NCAA Wrestling, to pro wrestling, to football, back to pro wrestling in Japan this time, to MMA, back to pro wrestling, and then back to MMA. His issue isn't so much with getting bored, more that he goes where the money is.
* Brock Lesnar him to win the title. Nowadays any IWC fan wanting Cena to win a title is almost unheard of. The main reason he's hated is because he's got a large kid fanbase.
* Brock Lesnar is a notoriously private person in real life. He does not like to be approached by fans in public and rarely does public appearances or interviews.
* Brock Lesnar is so good at it he can hype a match for someone who's not even booked for that night e.g. CM Punk v. Chris Jericho, or any match with Lesnar.
* Brock Lesnar is taken from the highest rating of the Fujita Scale, which was used for rating tornado intensity.
* Brock Lesnar, Lesnar loaded Show, but the stretcher broke under his weight. Lesnar picked Show and the stretcher up with a forklift and drove across the finish line.
* Brock Lesnar making a celebration, when Guerrero came later to end it.
* Brock Lesnar, many fans went to his matches or ordered the PPV's strictly to see him lose.
* Brock Lesnar—only the Ultimate Underdog and the face of WWE getting demolished by the biggest overdog there is, the Beast who Broke the Streak. One other aspect that set this match apart from other squashes is that this was not a 30 second match, where the eventual winner so overwhelms his foe from the outset that he is able to go in for the kill almost immediately; rather, this was a 16-minute match where Lesnar was practically forcing Cena to concede defeat, and took sadistic pleasure in totally overwhelming him, using 16 German suplexes and two F-5 firemen's carries to finally defeat an exhausted Cena.

* Brock Lesnar — who in fact wrestled his last match in the WWE with Lesnar, when both were leaving (Lesnar for football, Goldberg because most of his WWE run sucked).
* Brock Lesnar not long after despite wrestling as a heel in this match.
* Brock Lesnar promos to put over Lesnar as a conquerer who cannot be beaten and that the fans' heroes are not only ineffective but inept in taking down the Conquerer.
* Brock Lesnar: Returned to WWE in 2012, and proved himself a force to be reckoned with, even breaking the Undertaker's streak.
* Brock Lesnar run from 2002-04 is significantly more revered than his 2012 return. This is because unlike his second run, Lesnar made regular appearances, had a more diverse moveset, actually did his own promos, and in general at least appeared to give a damn about his work.
* Brock Lesnar's voice is a bit high compared to his large and imposing figure and his screams sound more like screeches than roars.
* Brock Lesnar, then returned to Professional Wrestling, with a one-off MMA return in 2016)
* Brock Lesnar. Undertaker basically gives him an accepting look that says "You beat me at my own game"
* Brock Lesnar was able to retain the Jimmy John's plastered trunks from his UFC period.
* Brock Lesnar was known for his incredible speed and strength, which he used to ragdoll heavyweights and pummel them into paste... unless he got hit on the chin, in which case he'd instantly turtle up.
* Brock Lesnar was surprisingly media-shy for his run in MMA, but after his victory at the record-setting UFC 100 event, he suddenly had a heel meltdown, during which he trash talked the already-defeated Frank Mir, swore and spat at the camera, announced he was going to "get on top of" his wife, and insulted the UFC's biggest sponsor.
* Brock Lesnar. Within a year he was throwing the 500lb Big Show around with suplexes.
* Brock likes carrying around "Guide Books" in which he looks up vital information about tournament rules or opportunities to eat or shop. He also has a separate guidebook containing accurate details on female celebrities.
* Brock meets a cute girl, immediately proposes to her, and is then dragged off by Misty/Max/Croagunk/whoever. On rare occasions, however, this would turn the other way - the odd episode had Misty gushing over a Water Pokémon (or something related to a water-type) and Brock would drag her away, and one occasion had the cute girl of the week proposing to Brock, leaving him completely dumbfounded.
* Brock of the Pewter Gym has Onix as his signature Pokémon in the games. A massive snake of boulders that emphasizes the Rock-Type's straightforward yet effective power.
* Brock of the Undead, showing Brock's perspective after being bitten and turned into a vampire.
* Brock Peters, best known for falsely convicted man Tom Robinson in the live-action adaptation of
* Brock probably better fits a Borderline Personality Disorder than either of those (albeit an extremely dangerous one).
* Brock Sampson tries to walk a reluctant Hank Venture through this in "Ghosts of the Sargasso". Fortunately, Hank isn't strong enough to actually break any necks, but he does knock out a couple of the goons and ties them up, with bows.
* Brock Samson once goes on a naked rampage while fighting off Phantom Limb's goons in the Venture Compound, showing that shit has really gotten bad. The Monarch comments on his nice ass.
* Brock Samson says it's just when you fap so hard your hands turn red, which not only takes care of the Rusty part but also references how long it's been since Rusty's had -ahem- relations.
* Brock Samson tells the ghost pirates the key is up his ass. He then proceeds to use the goon whose hand is up his ass to beat the other one to death.

* Brock series, he helps train with the Alola students by demonstrating a deflect tactic with Gyro Ball, which he mentions he learned from "a certain challenger of his". It seems things have come full circle.
* Brock, upon walking into Cheyenne's baby shower, says: "Look at all these beautiful women. (Looks at
* BRO CODE ARTICLE 26: "A bro will, in a timely manner, alert his bro to the existence of a girl fight."
* "bro-country" artists. Many of these artists incorporate hip-hop influences into both their music and fashion sense, which clashes heavily with the "proud country boy" image that the lyrics try to convey.
* Brodie Lee at AEW was in mourning for Lee (including his former enemies and rivals). After that, it became near-impossible for audiences to root against the Dark Order—especially after they inducted Lee's two young sons into their ranks as honorary members.
* Brodie Lee: Defected to AEW in March 2020. He suddenly passed away on December 26, 2020, shocking the wrestling community.
* Brodie Lee in a Dog Collar match and then taking time off TV to recover from injuries, with more stories to tell after before suffering from a lung disease and never recovering.
* Brodie Lee was a wrestling Truck Driver. Shaka El Truckero of the Dominican revolution (in Puerto Rican IWA) was also one, obviously.
* Brodie starts out as a TV news intern and ends up being a "crime scene recorder", getting videotape of crime scenes and the crowds around them.
* Brodie, the videographer who joins the unit early into Season 4, feels the same way, especially in the Season 5 episode "Valentine's Day", when he helps Howard and Munch solve a murder, but Munch still acts dismissively towards him. Brodie brings this up to Giardello, who tells Brodie he has to earn the respect of the rest of the unit.
* Brodus Clay and has used a leaping crossbody and a running splash as finishers, meaning they'd practically have to scrape his opponents off the mat.
* Brodus Clay, Made his official re-debut as "The Funkasaurus" in January 2012. Left WWE in 2014 and briefly worked with TNA. Is now a political commentator for Fox News.
* Brody assembled a still from the lab/kitchen tools aboard Destiny in
* Brody doesn't appear in the second season's "Alone" because actor Ed Kerr didn't like what the episode did with the character and, unable to get any significant changes in the script, walked off the set early in that week's shooting.
* Brody's Ghost Another ghost character, Kagemura, refused to move on while there was still suffering and decay in the world.
* Brody's Ghost Brody also tends to make this kind of face if someone really crosses a line with him.
* Brody's Ghost, leaves, of course, a penny on his victims' foreheads. Brody questions why a murderer would leave such a silly calling card, although it's later revealed to have symbolic importance.
* Broforce as enemies. No points for guessing what happens to you if a facehugger latches on your face.
* Broforce. At first, he seems to just be someone to kill to end the level, and not very powerful, but come the final levels of the game, he's shown to be more powerful than thought.
* Bro Force but at the cost of having the same range as a thrown grenade.
* Broforce: If even one Facehugger gets on your Bro in the later levels of , it will hatch into a full-grown Xenomorph, killing the Bro instantly and leaving your next Bro with a big problem.
* Broforce insta-gibs all the basic enemies and tears through several of them at once.
* Broforce is built around this trope. All playable characters are over-the-top parodies of various 80s (or early 90s) action movie or TV heroes, some of which were played by Arnold Schwarzenegger himself.
* Broforce of American action films that was made by a dev team based in South Africa. It also has a rating of Overwhelmingly Positive on Steam, and many Americans practically fell in love with it.

* Broforce praises the titular team as the protector of American values, but never mentions the nation by name and is performed by a South African.
* Broforce quotient keeps players from being too hung up on that detail.
* Broforce, the Brocketeer's jetpack releases a burst of flame to either side of him when active, frying nearby mooks. This makes up for his terrible mobility on the ground and useless primary weapon.
* Broforce, the first Bro gained, has a machine gun that has okay range and damage, grenades to pull crowd control, a combat knife to handle foes at short range, and average speed and maneuverability. None of his abilities are excellent and they're all very straightforward, but he can handle just about any situation.
* Broforce uses his chainsaw as his special attack. Mooks run away screaming in terror at the sight, it deflects bullets back at those who fired them, and is a great way to get through an area in a hurry.
* Broforce using the fire button instead of the melee button when asked to handshake the president will result the main character killing the president and getting imprisoned because of it.
* Brogy the giant used the Bruiser Axe, which held up for 100 years before he sacrificed it to help the Straw Hats leave Little Garden safely.
* Bro. In a series that runs off the sheer absurdity of the characters and situations, it really says something when this guy is the craziest and coolest of them all.
* Bro isn't the only one gaslighting everyone. There is a memorable instance, described in the * broke a fingernail. of the reaction—except that this fingernail is artificial.
* Brokeback Mountain: During one of their all-too-infrequent reunions, Ennis Del Mar and Jack Twist bare it all and jump off a cliff into a mountain lake.
* Brokeback Mountain, for each other. Or at least Jack, for Ennis. There's some evidence to suggest that Jack had accepted his own sexuality before meeting Ennis.
* Brokeback Mountain", for particularly homoerotic events like two men kissing.
* Brokeback Mountain is about a hidden romance between two cowboys that lasts several decades.
* Brokeback Mountain is basically about how painful this emotion is when society hates it in people of the same sex.
* Brokeback Mountain: Made in 2006, final part of the film set in 1983.
* Brokeback Mountain.) Most of the eroticism is kept romantic and not explicit.
* Brokeback Mountain's characters, as the film covers their romance and how their lives drift off in parallel fashion during their years apart. As such, one could argue that the two characters are equally important to the story as protagonists (with Ledger's performance perhaps getting just a bit more emphasis). However, Gyllenhaal was put in the Supporting category all through the awards season (despite him actually having more spoken dialogue in the film).
* Brokeback Mountain's idea. Annie Proulx approved so much of this detail that she wrote it into the libretto for the opera adaptation of her story.
* Brokeback Mountain (tragic romance story between two queer men, subject matter includes queer male romance, and homophobia)
* Brokedown Palace, one of the four royal brothers is a human giant. It's mentioned that the family produces them every few generations, suggesting a genetic proclivity towards gigantism.
* Broke Episode: An episode of the show where the characters run out of money and have to find a way to make ends meet.
* Broke Episode in which they burn the lost items of clothing as a heat source, having already run out of furniture and all other fuel. Rik is quickly left in his shirt and underpants, because the others convinced him that people with an R in their name get only one card.
* Broke Episode of films and literature made during the Great Depression featured impoverished protagonists.

* Broke Episode: One episode has the characters run out of money and have to find a way to make ends meet.
* broke He walks out because a female acquaintance (not his wife) explains that they were together at the time of the crime. The machine works this time.
* broke into the murder victim's office to try and steal a medical chart. They do all this because if they did not admit to any of these smaller crimes, then it would mean they were guilty of a much bigger crime: murder.
* Broken about sadomasochism, despite the rather prominent usage of sadomasochistic imagery.
* Broken Ace: A person who used to be successful and cool, but has now become a jaded has-been.
* Broken Ace by demonstrating how even exceptional people can suffer from serious problems, perhaps as a direct price of what makes them exceptional.
* Broken Ace: Your great skill, powers, and social standing come at the expense of a crap social life and personal issues.
* Broken Aesop: $19.50 per student per day come to $3510 for a 180-day school year. Per-pupil spending in the US runs between about $6500/yr (Utah) and $20,000/yr (New York). To be fair, a large share of this is a mix of capital costs (i.e. the school buildings) and overhead (i.e. the principal, superintendent, etc.). If the schools in some places truly are useless (almost always hyperbole, of course), the parents would probably be getting a pretty good deal at the proposed rate...
* Broken Aesop about not crossing class lines. Ducky going with another girl at a single dance just showed that he was able to move on (contrasting with the girl's father, who let his life fall apart because he never did).
* Broken Aesop as some, if not most, of the vampires really are amoral killers that need to be put down, and even the 'good' ones can go off the rails on occasions. Compare with other vampire shows where this trope is taken even further.
* Broken Aesop attitude, considering her age, but neither their parents nor any of Arthur's friends acknowledge that D.W. is also in the wrong. Plus they treat Arthur getting hit by someone else in an unrelated situation as an appropriate punishment, again entirely missing the point of the argument that "hitting people is always wrong".
* Broken Aesop because Jonathan identifies Adam's one weakness (his nuclear power core), which is how Buffy later defeats him. The spell actually did give them an advantage they wouldn't have had otherwise.
* Broken Aesop from years ago: "The City of New Orleans", about the death of the railroad industry, being used as a car commercial.
* Broken Aesop going on. Actually, for all that he is "nice" now, this used to include Bill just as much.
* Broken Aesop of the lesson—often doing something immoral, or sometimes simply something neutral and logical—would avoid any trouble and thus nullifies the lesson.
* Broken Aesop), painting Repliforce as unfortunate victims of an unfair government just seems like whitewashing.
* Broken Aesop: The events of the story undermine or flat-out contradict the moral.
* Broken Aesop was that the creeds opposing "stasis", represented by the science that regularly changes the world, were heavily into hierarchy and hadn't changed in centuries.
* Broken Aesop: When a story itself doesn't mesh with the ideals it promotes.
* Broken Aesop: You fail to convey your message because your characters don't obey it. Bonus points if it was meant to be Anvilicious.
* Broken Age, after Vella flies through a cloud and loses her bird she doesn't begin to fall until she can comically look below her; she then instantly drops.
* Broken Age has Curtis the lumberjack as a character who is afraid of trees (they keep screaming at him). He was originally nothing more than a test of the art-style of the game and later a place-holder to see how the game was to be controlled and played. He was dubbed the "hipster lumberjack" by the devs and became so popular with the community that they demanded he be in the game when it was revealed he wasn't.

* Broken Age, it used to be home to one of these, feared by man and beast alike.
* Broken Angel: A supernatural creature gets sick or hurt in a way that affects their magic.
* Broken Angels. A child is seen using the brain-dead body of a cyborg soldier this way; he rides on his back.
* Broken Angels. A UN force fighting a planetary war puts its most important assets on space platforms in far-flung elliptical orbits so the enemy can't find them. Space, as the protagonist points out, is very big.
* Broken Angels Sanction IV's economy is so bad, on account of the nuclear civil war going on, that their Standard Archaeological Find Token (saft) exchanges with the UN Protectorate dollar on a 230 to 1 basis. Kovacs gets a bit riled up when a crime boss offers just five million for a spaceship he'd just stolen, and even more when he says that was in saft, not dollars.
* Broken Armor Boss Battle: A videogame boss is covered in armor, and you can't damage it until you get rid of it.
* Broken Arrow (1996) (along with his henchman) rather than lose face.
* Broken Arrow (1996), but when Fox execs saw the dailies and liked his performance, his role was quickly expanded so he could be in the whole movie.
* Broken Arrow (1996) has one showing the casualties that would result from a nuclear explosion in a major city.
* Broken Arrow, Deakins has been planning to break bad for some time, and when he does, he's in his element to the point where it's hard to believe he was ever one of the good guys. When his ex-partner Hale tells him he's crazy, he simply replies "I know! Ain't it cool?"
* Broken Base, as from a logical and logistic standpoint, they make no sense, and also retroactively demystify most of the fantasy-aspects of the story in favor of very soft sci-fi.
* Broken Base claim the ending was supposed to be about the characters and not the unexplained mythology, but pretty much every character that appeared, from recurring characters to background extras, were killed, including another plane-full of people that never mattered and were mass-murdered off-screen near the end of the series. Meanwhile, what they all died for is never really explained, but the ending still tries to be uplifting and hopeful because the popular leads made it out.
* Broken Base confirmed that they weren't and that it was just intended to be for fun), to the point that her hatedom even had reported her Facebook account enough for it to be temporarily banned.
* Broken Base: Disagreement on whether an aspect of a work was good or bad can be a result of values dissonance.
* Broken Base due to its premise of making the main characters teachers at a new "School of Friendship", which is either a blatant gimmick or an interesting source for new episode plots and characters.
* Broken Base: During the 2010s, the various fractured speedrunning factions generally grew out of their early squabbling as they matured as a community, and these days TASers and regular runners often take tricks from each others' runs to improve their routes. Nonetheless, below are the traditional conflicts:
* Broken Base: Fans can't agree about whether this aspect of the work is good or bad.
* Broken Base, in that the dissenters will hate the loyalists for not giving up on a particular series.
* Broken Base, it's added to the argument that Yachecia narrowly avoided elimination despite having an incomplete box (previously Brien was eliminated for having only four out of six cannolis, while Newton did better components but couldn't add the caviar in the last minute).
* Broken Base regarding which is better), and André Filho as Sebastian re-recorded "Under the Sea". (The original 1989 recording of the song can still be heard on the 2006 soundtrack.) Also, the Diamond Edition accidentally omits Ursula's line "Keep singing!" as she takes Ariel's voice.
* Broken Base (some love this, some don't). The association has rendered CAVE games with these traits black sheep.

* Broken Base. Specifically, their specific mysteries were important to the overall murder mystery; but, the fervor in the fan community around those personal mysteries created a sinkhole into which all analysis of the murder sank.
* Broken Base, still depict it in its former dark and somber condition.
* Broken Base: The fandom is divided over whether this aspect of the work or franchise is good or bad.
* Broken Base: Two sides (sometimes more) get into an incredibly heated argument over an event or aspect in a work.
* broken beer bottle is so bizarre and Stan is so nuts, all of this actually seemed entirely possible until Francine woke up from her fantasy.
* Broken Bird and tries to help and cheer her up when they meet. And while Anji's well-intentioned but often misguided attempts to aid her don't always work, Baiken doesn't kick him out of her surroundings either.
* Broken Bird as well, but usually after the hero is a bit less screwed up.
* Broken Bird have feelings, as well as a fierce loyalty to those she cares for.
* Broken Bird in "Hit the Diamond". It's just that her later circumstances don't always mesh with her sense of humor.
* Broken Bird is shown most significantly when he not only starts to smile, but does so regularly.
* Broken Bird love interest that they can "take what was wrong and make it right".
* Broken Bird, she hopes to rejoin them and smiles "from the bottom of her heart".
* Broken Bird she is today and caused serious problems when she and Largo began to strike up a relationship.
* Broken Bird she sells her beautiful hair to provide for her daughter Cosette.
* Broken Bird: Sometimes, a person can become withdrawn from great trauma.
* Broken Bird the result of rape, but very often is, especially if the character in question is female.
* Broken Blade takes place in an apparent post-apocalyptic world where almost everyone is magic and controls quartz, and quartz is the most abundant thing on Earth. The logical way to wage war? Giant mecha!
* Broken Blade use that magic, thus rendering even personal vehicles unusable to him.
* Broken Blossoms: After catching Lucy at Chen's house, Battling gets so angry that he whips Lucy to death. She ends up dying of her injuries shortly after the beating.
* Broken Bonds will serve a strong master of any gender, he seems particularly interested in women.
* Broken Bow 3. Armani averts this by tricking Artemis into reading it... all while evilly cackling internally.
* Broken Bow: As one of the perks of being Artemis's only child, Armani can summon animals to help him fight, and utilizes this power in the second book to call in some of his mother's wolves to even the odds against the Athena kids who have him cornered.
* Broken Bow series. Unfortunately, she doesn't quite get the differences between human and tree physiologies enough for it to be successful.
* Broken Bow tends to incline his head as a gesture of acknowledgment.
* Broken Bow they made the vow, in linear time, and as such it's not binding. She concedes.
* broken by an accidental slice from his lover Nemesis, and the freed Eclipso ended up killing both of them.
* Brokenclaw, the eponymous Brokenlaw Lee literally feeds people who have disappointed him to the wolves that he keeps in his home.
* Broken down a bit more explicitly in "Love Letters." Jamie the mailman sees Garnet rising from the ocean and instantly becomes infatuated with her, writing the titular letter and professing his love to her (in the rain, no less). After both Garnet's blunt rebuttal and Connie and Steven's attempt to let him down easy go awry, Garnet sits down with him and explains that it just isn't possible for him to be in love with her so quickly (they'd said all of two sentences to each other) because love is about knowing the other person and accepting their flaws, and he was just so swept up in the drama of Hollywo-

* Broken Facades after she makes the eye deal so to her he might as well have a neon sign on his head. Light however has no idea just how futile his denials are:
* Broken Faceplate: Someone's death is emphasized by having their helmet or mask shattered.
* Broken Flowers does not reveal who sent Don the plot-instigating letter about his son, or if he really does have a son in the first place.
* broken foot. Not that this managed to affect his performance at all...
* Broken Gate She goes onto mention how she didn't want to resort to that and wishes things could have been different and how she based the story and characters off of her own experiences.
* Broken Gears has the USRA's (unification of Communist China and the Soviet Union after the War of Broken Gears) Iron Tiger Land Fortress, a forty yards long and twenty yards high behemoth with 3'' thick armour plates powered with uranium that can crush anything on its path, its one turret can hurl half-ton shells at a mile and enough anti-armour guns and small arms to tackle any enemy. And if it is surrounded, it can vent incredibly hot radioactive steam to blanket the vehicle.
* Broken Gears, the Australian Army also doubles as a large PMC, because this way the Australian government can pay for its costs (they need to be large enough to prevent a potential British take-over of the place) and get hard currency for international trade, and the soldiers also get live fire training.
* Broken glass everywhere, people pissing on the street, they just don't care!
* Brokenhearted. Kagami dumps Adrien after seeing that he in love with Marinette. She refuses to be his “silver medal”.
* Broken Hearts Club, in which William is the biological father of his sister's girlfriend's baby. He refers to the child as his "nephew-son''.
* Broken Heel: A character trips, breaks their heel or stops running for some other reason.
* Broken Homes of the book, the faceless man, Peter realizes he has a spell that obscures his face (thus his name). After essentially disbelieving the effect, Peter still can't see the villain's face: he is wearing a mask under the illusion.
* broken into pieces to the Nameks, since the only thing they consume is water and they "eat" via photosynthesis.
* Broken Iris where someone visits their lover's grave with a "red, red rose" in hand.
* Broken Isles: The fel volcanoes of the Broken Shore to the south, the snow-covered Highmountain to the north.
* broken. It's also possible, but more difficult, with a stealth-based Rogue.
* Broken Lands. It requires knocking a heavy rubbery ball between the opponent's goal posts, which can be struck with feet, knees, hips and elbows. Illegally touching the ball has a penalty of being trampled by the other team. It's played to six points, or if the player can land a difficult shot into one of the small side hoops.
* broken leg races to qualify with ease despite the restrictions. He then managed to survive all the way to the Championship Four at Homestead on points alone (no small feat), and ended up winning the Championship by 3 seconds over defending champion Kevin Harvick.
* Broken Legs," the first- and third-place games, were both polite in that any death could be undone. In fact, most of the latter two games are merciful, in that you can't do anything to prevent yourself from being able to reach the ending.
* "Broken Link" weapon systems and points out to Worf that their ship could reduce the new Founder Homeworld to a smoking cinder in short order.
* Broken Lizard's Club Dread. Dave and Juan are cleaning up the Pac-Man maze, when they run into Putman (who is still in Banana costume) who is trying to tell them that he found Cliff's dead body, but is in such a state of shock that he can't speak. Says Dave, "Are you trying to tell us something boy? Is little Timmy trapped in a well?!"
* Broken Masquerade, devoted to a scenario where a particularly major incident destroys North Korea, and in the process the existence of the anomalous artifacts and the organizations dealing with them is revealed to the public.

* Broken Masquerade, which presses him into sending his consciousness back into the past so that won't happen.
* Broken Masquerade: You have discovered the big secret that was hidden from you all along.
* Broken News, a radio series by the same writers that does much the same with newspapers.
* Broken News, where the news presenters would frequently make witty banter involving double-entendres to their weatherman.
* Broken News, which is based on someone supposedly flipping between 24-hour news channels, all of which are showing different stories, and the amusement comes from the start of one story feeding into a different one as the channel is changed.
* broken-nosed, but because he doesn't want to saddle her with an old, battered husband.
* Broken obsidian shards (as well as knapped knives, arrowheads, blades, etc.) are a small and measurable number of molecules in thickness. And while diamond is the harder material, obsidian can be made
* Broken or not, it still wouldn't be as funny if their genders were the other way around.
* Broken Pedestal: A character ends up hating a person they used to idolize after learning that their hero isn't nearly as good and noble as they thought they were.
* Broken Pedestal: A person who idolized someone they saw as a hero starts hating their hero after discovering them to not truly be the flawless paragon of virtue they thought they were.
* Broken Pedestal for Shawn regarding his dad and he committed the felony to spite his dad and not be able to become a cop as a result. The Season 3 premiere has Shawn be told the truth about what happened by his mom and Shawn rebuilds his relationship more with his dad.
* Broken Pedestal: Someone becomes disillusioned toward their favorite hero after learning that their idol isn't exactly as good and noble as they thought they were.
* Broken Pedestal: Someone finds out that the person they idolized wasn't quite as heroic and noble as they thought they were.
* Broken Pedestal: The character you looked up to isn't as good as you thought they were.
* Broken Pedestal: The tragic circumstance of someone becoming disillusioned towards their favorite hero after learning that the person isn't half as good and heroic as they thought they were.
* Broken Plot Device. Apparently, none of his friends said anything because they thought it was cute.
* Broken Plot Device has both Lizardbeth and Inix, the former an Iguana, the latter a Dragon. Not particularly busty compared to the mammalian cast, however.
* Broken Plot Device, sometimes plays at being a female Godzilla to amuse herself.
* Broken Plot Device who, as the name implies, is the sole source of weird, offensive, and downright perverted ideas for the character's in Lizardbeth's in-comic comic.
* Broken Puppet with rules barely any of her fellow puppets seem to comprehend.
* Broken Quest, the hero attempts to bribe a bartender (who doesn't even have the information he's looking for) with a single piece of candy.
* Broken Record, this is now something of a dead metaphor. Also, modern vinyl records are now thicker (the usual 120-gram weight being replaced by 180-gram and heavier) to avoid this trope.
* Broken Ring, who are demons and appear like this in the mortal world.
* Broken Saints. And yet throughout it all, she retains her purity of heart.
* Broken Saints, apart from his internal monologues, is not the most talkative guy around. Of course, his limited knowledge of English, the language spoken to and around him for most of the series, could be part of that.
* Broken Saints begins and ends with a voice-over monologue by Shandala, starting with "I dream". Both start off much the same, but grow gradually different to reflect the change from the beginning and ending of the story.

* Broken Saints by picking up a mirror off the ground in the alleyway and smashing it over his head.
* Broken Saints, demonstrates this on more than one occasion, first healing her brother Tui, then Oran.
* Broken Saints, do not actually have control over the elements, they are simply associated with them as representations of certain virtues.
* Broken Saints fame has the common vertical eye (or "tear") scar, made in his youth during an attack from American bombers in the first Gulf War. Early on in the series, he gives his childhood friend Hassan one to match whilst suffering from cabin fever and copious amounts of guilt.
* Broken Saints features about 40 speaking roles, over half of which are major players in the plot.
* Broken Saints generally seems to fill this role in the grand scheme.
* Broken Saints heroine Shandala has hair like this at first but quickly loses it in favor of a shoulder-length do by Chapter 6.
* Broken Saints: is a partly animated Flash "cinematic novel" or "animated comic".
* Broken Saints is deeply immersed in Author Tract, all taken Brooke Burgess' new-found (as of the original writing) philosophical outlook on life. He also makes no secret of his political views, particularly as regards the relationship between the U.S. and Iraq post-Gulf War I. One of the main protagonists is an Iraqi 'freedom fighter' who is struggling to balance his desire for justice against the Western invaders and the peaceful teachings of his religion. It is worth noting that the series was well under way before 9/11, and was almost completed before the second Gulf War.
* Broken Saints is shown. The hobo Raimi encountered by the alley, AKA, Lear Dunham.
* Broken Saints. It is also worth noting that we never hear specifics of what horrible things Oran may or may not have done in "service to his country".
* Broken Saints: Raimi uses his computer to explain the situation to Oran, only to inadvertently open up windows on which he was looking up porn.
* Broken Saints. Rare variation in that the faked death is part of backstory, not a depicted event.
* Broken Saints repeat this sentiment, now with a much more poignant resonance.
* Broken Saints says this after he attacks his childhood friend Hassan in a cabin fever-induced madness.
* Broken Saints Shandala, the heroine, is looked after by her adopted parents' son as if she were his own flesh and blood.
* Broken Saints: The scene where Raimi's coworker is killed has the killer visible in the shadows of the background the entire time until he decides to commit the act.
* Broken Saints to listen to his performance as Gabriel on the voice-over track.
* Broken Saints (very sci-fi), they are both firmly in the fantasy realm.
* Broken Saints villain (and big-time sleazebag) Mars is severely bald on the top of his head, with only some grey around the sides and what's left in back pulled into a ponytail.
* Broken Saints: When series writer/director Brooke Burgess lived on a Fijian island for six months prior to the creation of the series, the local chief was named Tui and his son was named Tui Jr. Sure enough, in the series, the chief of the Lomalagi islanders is named Tui, and his son is Tui Jr. How much they are based on the real people is uncertain, but considering Burgess' experiences were the inspiration for the islanders being in the series at all, it wouldn't be surprising if there were some resemblance.
* Broken Saints, who has one level of distortion for his Shadowman scenes, and another for his mysterious presence in Kami's vision and Shandala's dreams.
* Broken Saints, who is shirtless for half the series. Also, although Kamimura always wears his cloak, he never has a shirt on underneath.
* Broken Saints writer/director Brooke Burgess (a bit reluctantly) agreed to be the voice actor for Gabriel when voices were recorded for the DVD. Like with Shayamalan's cameos, this is actually a meaty role and more than just a regular cameo.

* Broken Sky does this with those that possess the yellow spirit stones, the healers. They can take on the injuries of another, whether the injury is mental or physical in nature. While they heal faster than most people, an inexperienced or reckless healer could kill themselves quite easily by absorbing more wounds than their body could handle.
* Broken Sky, Gerdi's spirit stones allow him to disguise himself as anyone, but can only work on so many people at once. Thus, he'll often be walking around looking to the townsfolks one way, while still looking like his true appearance to those who know him.
* Broken Social Scene's "7/4 (Shoreline)": "If you try to steal the beat, the beat will steal you."
* 'Broken Soldier' by The Black Angels, deals with a crippled soldier suffering from PTSD, what caused him to become so and his difficulty returning to civilian life, never truly feeling safe.
* Broken Souls begins with Harry and his team investigating the death of reporter Konrad Tschida, whose discoveries become the driving force of the rest of the story.
* Broken Souls has Charles Lamb, head of Section XIII. When one of the officers within the Ministry of Magic started claiming that somebody was leaking information, he and the Joint Intelligence Committee tried to essentially sweep things under the rug. Justified in that while many people wanted a witch hunt, he wasn't about to start pointing fingers without evidence. He's also not remorseless, as he seems very distraught that several deaths have occurred because of his actions.
* Brokenstar broke the rule forbidding training kits under six moons old in the first book, so ShadowClan could be the strongest in the forest. However, he subjected kits to such harsh training that some of them actually
* Brokenstar killed his father, ShadowClan's leader, to become leader himself. Most cats assumed that WindClan had done it since the two Clans had been fighting over the border a lot at that time.
* Brokenstar was bullied by his foster siblings and resented by his foster mother as a kit in * Brokenstar was this to his foster mother, Lizardstripe. Justified, as she didn't want kits in the first place, and accepted Brokenstar extremely reluctantly.
* Broken Steel also adds Hellfire Troopers, which are Enclave troops with high-impact fire-resistant armor and heavier weapons, and Albino Radscorpions, albinistic versions of Giant Radscorpions that are much faster and tougher, and regenerate HP in sunlight.
* Broken Steel DLC, you can see the early effects of the FEV in motion, including dozens of wastelanders collapsing of the mutation while clinics are overflowing with patients.
* Broken Stone War, War of Black Trees and really the whole relationship between Aedyr (and later, Dyrwood) and Glanfathans resembles the European colonization of North America.
* Broken Sword and a yowling black cat who startles George. Trying to click the bins after opening the cat's bin will prompt George to shrug and say "I'd had it with sticking my nose into French trash cans."
* Broken Sword for the player without seeming like she's repeating pedantic information.
* Broken Sword franchise begin with George and Nico having broken up after having gotten (back) together at the end of the previous game.
* Broken Sword game, George briefly uses a divining rod to find an ancient well (he finds nothing but an extremely old tin can, but when he tosses it aside...).
* Broken Sword games, when you can listen to messages left on the answering machine. One of them is an automated telemarketer calling about soffits. Part of the call is "When was the last time you had your soffits checked? (Long pause). Hmmm, I thought so.".

* Broken Sword, George and Nico seems to have a thing for each other, but never confess to each other and they never even contact each other in between the games timeline. George said in the beginning of the 3rd game that "things between them don't work out".
* Broken Sword has you find Nico tied to a chair. You can untie the rope or talk to her, but if you spend too long talking she gets a little annoyed...
* Broken Sword takes place in the (real life) abandoned British Museum tube station.
* Broken Sword: The Serpent's Curse, George cuts the window in Henri's office using the engagement ring he found in the safe.
* Broken Sword: The Serpent's Curse Shears ensures Kat that nothing's really got broken. Cue the cable car's door falling off.
* Broken Sword: The Shadow of the Templars: In the opening cutscene of the Director's Cut, the killer gains access to his victim's place by using a glass cutter on the balcony window.
* Broken Sword: The Shadow of the Templars involves the Sword of Baphomet, and the French translation of the game title means "The Knights of Baphomet".
* Broken Sword) who claim he was falsely accused of acting without the correct papers by a governor and hung in order to get at his fortune.
* Broken Sword. Who else can discover an ancient artifact and escape an assassin with half a roll of hand-towels, a sturdy branch, a hand buzzer and a working knowledge of Latin?
* Broken Sword, you come across a female owner of a mining company who has surrounded herself with attractive men. She also encouraged one of the hunkier guys to strut around in a thong; her idle pose fixes her gaze firmly on his butt.
* Broken-System Dogmatist: Continuing to believe in a broken system even though it's clearly broken.
* Broken-System Dogmatist: Our way of life may be irreparably broken, but we still support it no matter what!
* Broken-System Dogmatist: Someone continues to follow an irreparably-broken system.
* Broken-System Dogmatist: Someone touts the benefits of a broken sociopolitical system, when actually they're just as vulnerable to it as the common populace.
* Broken Tears: A character starts crying to show that the misfortunes they've endured have taken their toll on them.
* broken thumb on his throwing hand. Despite all of this, his various backups virtually never saw the field until they moved on to other teams; Favre failed to finish merely 8 games due to injury during the streak.
* Broken Trail is about two cowboys (Robert Duvall and Thomas Haden Church) rescuing five Chinese women from indentured prostitution; one of them ends up in a relationship with Church.
* Broken Treasure: A character's most prized possession is broken while they are away, and now the other characters have to fix it or replace it before the character gets back.
* Broken Trinity have Volcanic Veins. In Finnegan's case they're bright blue and ice power based. Gloriana has magma red veins.
* broken windows theory of law enforcement often results in this, as has been demonstrated by New York City's "stop, question, and frisk" program. Some of the "crimes" they would routinely arrest people for include loitering in a park after posted closing time and riding a bike on a sidewalk.
* Broken-Window Warning: Breaking someone's window as a threat, or throwing a warning message tied to a brick through someone's window.
* Broken Winged Crane book are dedicated to allowing the GSPs to break free and to become something even more powerful than the Yozis.
* Broken Win/Loss Streak: A streak of consecutive wins or losses is broken.
* broke the 4th wall when Noa complained she couldn't keep up with all the geographical data, by saying he'd explain two pages later. Sure enough, he whipped out a map and pointer to explain where their units were positioned and how they intended to set up the dragnet!

* broke the beyond repair) of the war inside Skaia. They share genetic engineering facilities used specifically to raise the stakes and add more pieces to the Battlefield, so that the players have some impetus to beat the game quickly.
* broke the fourth wall and proceeded to give the viewers two thumbs-up for about 5 seconds before everything disappeared by moving down. Not the same disappearing act as the example above. Again, huge distraction.
* Broke the Rating Scale: A reviewer refuses to assign a rating at all. There are a number of examples of that on the trope page, often when the reviewer finds the work downright repulsive or otherwise not worthy of a rating.
* Broke the Rating Scale: The kinds that represent the final rating with a number, anyway.
* Broke Your Arm Punching Out Cthulhu: Someone defeats the powerful being, but doesn't exactly make it through the fight unscathed.
* Bro later down the line when they were referred to as "dumb pointy anime shades".
* B-Roll Douglass, black former slave, abolitionist, and one-time vice-presidential candidate.
* Broly and title character. Most people only want to see Broly destroying stuff and beating the crap out of the heroes. Even though the second and third movies are inferior to the first one, people are glad to see Broly doing his thing in the second movie at all. Most fans hate the third movie because the Broly in the movie isn't the real Broly and he's not as awesome as the original.
* Broly definitely applies, especially in the flashbacks where it is clear that his laughter was uncontrollable after destroying at least one planet as a child.
* Broly gets sick of Broly screaming "Kakarott" over and over. A powered-up Goku ends up turning it into a one-liner for the climax.
* Broly got away with doing this because there was literally nothing anyone could do to stop him. None of their attacks were doing anything and after a while all they could do was just stare in disbelief as he grew even stronger.
* Broly is a downplayed version of this, as when he turns Super Saiyan and loses all his sanity, he is more like a feral beast than a raging psychopath, even fighting with himself to avoid killing somebody.
* Broly is the undisputed king of this trope, because he combines this with
* "Broly: The Legendary Super Saiyan", Broly's father wants to turn Earth into the new Saiyan Homeworld. He doesn't use the planet that he previously took over because he says that Earth is the most beautiful planet in the cosmos, and doesn't take the invasion straight to Earth because he doesn't want it to become a desolate and battle-scarred wasteland, which happened to said previously-conquered planet.
* Broly-The Legendary Super Saiyan but it's implied that Broly destroyed most of the inhabited planets.
* Broly: The Legendary Super Saiyan hears about this, he gleefully runs with it and decrees that everyone has to call Trunks that.
* Broly - The Legendary Super Saiyan planet New Vegeta is destroyed by the Comet Camouri with the heroes escaping in the nick of time.
* Broly. This may stem from his general insanity. As with others such as Frieza, Cell, Buu, etc., this leads to his downfall — though he is shown as clearly capable of killing the Z-warriors in one fell swoop, he chooses to torture them instead, granting them the time to pull off a
* Bromance, this scene mostly serves to establish women as something annoying in the background.
* Bromantic Foil: The romantic male lead's foil who's unlucky in love.
* Bromba i inni (featuring descriptions of numerous fictional creatures) includes the "Wild Viceverses", mirror-dwelling creatures which are created whenever two mirrors are placed opposite each other. While they look more or less like warped abominations, they're a subversion in that they're rather amiable and benevolent. That said, they love playing tricks on vain people by suddenly replacing their reflection in the mirror.
* Bromotrifluoromethane (Halon) Gas: It is very effective at suppressing fires without damaging valuable materials such as aircraft and mainframe computers but is also very effective at starving a person of oxygen, hence the clear warning signs advising people not to be inside a Halon-protected area in the event of a fire.

* Brompton Road on the Piccadilly Line was abandoned after the adjacent Knightsbridge station received an entrance that cut into its service catch area in 1934. The same fate befell Down Street, famous for its later use in World War II where Prime Minister Winston Churchill and his Cabinet temporarily set up headquarters until the Cabinet War Rooms were readied.
* Brompton's bicycles claim to have over X amount of specialized parts on every bicycle (usually in the triple digits). Brompton also patented each part in a way that no other company can make parts that will fit on a Brompton. What this means is that Brompton has a monopoly on its parts. If your Brompton needs even the slightest bit of maintenance or repair, be prepared to pay through the nose because Brompton can charge any price it wants. (By contrast, there is a standard on most bicycle parts that frequently need repair, such as brakes and inner tubes, that nearly all other bicycle manufacturers follow, including those of higher quality than Brompton's.)
* Bromwell High: A British-Canadian co-production. The show takes place in England, but the characters sometimes use Canadian terms.
* Bromwell High has an episode where one of the teachers build a robotic Jesus. Obviously, when said teacher says Jesus in dismay, the robot went "...Yes?".
* Bromwell High: One of the girls hides some illegal sweets people are looking for and composes a rhyme telling where they are.
* Brona that he cannot die. Touching him with the titular Sword, which reveals the complete truth about any object it touches, reduces him to dust.
* Bron|Broen are developing a supercharged genetically-engineered version of plague, intending to release it at a meeting of the EU member states' environment ministers.
* Bron|Broen. A serial murderer dumps human remains exactly on the border between two countries, so that the police of the cities on each side of the border have to co-operate unwillingly.
* Bron|Broen is prone to this. Her idea of idle conversation in one episode is announcing that she had just gotten her period that morning.
* Bron|Broen, Saga's abusive mother kills herself and frames Saga for it.
* Bron|Broen the killer in Season 3 has a creepy dollhouse. Shown in episode 8, it depicted all the gruesome murders that happened up to that point in the season, and shows a new room being set up and staged.
* Bron|Broen, with many shots of the killer's gloved hands driving a car or committing acts of violence. The later seasons used it much less.
* Bronco Busted", he, Mickey, and Goofy needed money to fix their car, and get the idea to compete in a rodeo to get the necessary money, with Donald pretending to be a horse. A millionaire offers to give Mickey and Goofy money in exchange for Donald due to mistaking him for an actual horse. Mickey is about to correct the millionaire until Donald eagerly accepts his offer, but he did it more because of the millionaire's promise to treat the "horse" like a king. After happily giving the money to Mickey and Goofy on behalf of the millionaire, Donald's parting words to them at the end of the short are even "So long, suckers".
* Bronenosets Potyomkin films. It is reasonable to assume that, in modern times at least, more people who are not cineasts will have seen these homages/parodies than have seen the original film.
* Bronies React by M.A. Larson, where he portrays himself as a money-grubbing lackey of Hasbro. As well as ignoring some basic things about the show.
* Bronies React, LittleshyFiM starts by saying that he'll take a bite of a muffin anytime something interesting happens. Of course, barely past one-third of the episode...
* Bronies React trailer is to go make himself a drink — before even watching a second of it.
* Bronies: The Extremely Unexpected Adult Fans of My Little Pony, a spin-off series based on a background colt. That was too far for Hasbro, who sent cease-and-desist orders to take down all his videos (including what he made for the Brony documentary) and to agree never to make any more pony animations; since then, only very few of them have been cleared by the Hasbro legal team to go back up.

* Bronies: The Extremely Unexpected Adult Fans of My Little Pony was just known as "The Brony Doc" until late in production.
* Bronn accuses Tyrion of being spoiled, and from the perspective of an amoral sellsword raised in the gutter it's certainly true. You're part of the richest, most powerful family in the Seven Kingdoms, married to a beautiful
* Bronn against Ser Vardis over Tyrion's supposed murder of Jon Arryn, ending in Tyrion's favor.
* Bronn and Jaime steal Martell men-at-arms uniforms and weapons to infiltrate the Water Gardens, though Jaime complains that Bronn singing out loud will give them away. Prince Trystane however notices that Bronn's Dornish clothing is splattered with the blood of the guard he killed and took it from.
* Bronn begins the series as a grubby sellsword in the Riverlands and successively becomes Lord Commander of the City Watch, a knight, and finally is set to marry into a lesser noble house. The marriage deal is reneged upon by Cersei, although Jaime promises Bronn a better marriage when they return from Dorne.
* Bronn being a colossal asshole only serves to make him that much more entertaining, per contrast to most other evil characters on the show. Bronn wholeheartedly enjoys being a dick, and the victims of his harsher abuse generally tend to be even worse people than he is.
* Bronn encourages Tyrion to drink until it feels like he did the right thing in "The Lion and the Rose".
* Bronn enjoys pushing people's buttons for no other reason than because he can.
* Bronn, ever the pragmatic mercenary, knows that being selective about which fights to pick keeps his chances of death low.
* Bronn in Season 3. Even moreso in Season 6, where he doesn't appear until the seventh episode of the season. In Season 7, it takes him nearly 3 full episodes (almost half that season) and he doesn't have a line at first. This is likely because of the dislike between Jerome Flynn and Lena Headey. Seeing as they refuse to share screentime this means that Bronn only can appear when Tyrion or Jaime are at or going to a fight.
* Bronn is also a dab hand at this. The best example is this one: he warns Tyrion upfront that, should a better offer come along, he will give him a chance to meet or improve on it. If that's not possible, he's out the door and on to the next job.
* Bronn is an extremely competent swordsman, due to a combination of honest skill and ruthless pragmatism.
* Bronn is a sellsword by trade, but also acts as a hired knife for Tyrion, executing several people whom Tyrion finds bothersome.
* Bronn is extremely reluctant to answer Tyrion's summons in "Valar Dohaeris" as it interrupts his session with the prostitute Mirelle, who's just asked him to tear off her underclothes with his teeth. In happens again in "Winterfell" as he's starting a tryst with three prostitutes.
* Bronn makes it clear to Tyrion that he's serving him solely for the riches, even though he does consider him a friend (the pay really "enhances" their friendship, he says). When his services earn him a knighthood, he insists on a higher wage. Eventually, Bronn accepts money and an advantageous marriage to not stand champion for Tyrion in a
* Bronn wields both his longsword and kukri-like dagger when he and Tyrion are accosted by the mountain clans.
* Bronson and Coburn also made guest appearances in McQueen's TV series
* Bronson Pinchot, except it's an extremely elaborate dance they call the peepee dance. He plays a psychic who is channeling someone else who has to pee.
* Bronto Eats Meat, by Peter Maloney and Felicia Zekauskas, the protagonist of the story writes a school report about Bronto and is given an F- because his report is said to be unrealistic.
* Brontosauri) because the name was recycled for the newly discovered creatures.
* brontosaurus. He is told that if hippogriffs can exist, why not an apatosaurus with the head of a camarasaurus?
* Brontosaurus skull that Marsh incorrectly figured would be close enough to what its real skull probably looked like—but, contrary to popular belief, this problem is entirely unrelated to its being renamed. It wasn't even definitively proven until 1970 that the skull was incorrect.

* Brontoscopy: Forecasting based on listening to the sound of thunder.

* Bronze Age Collapse) you have to start looking for alternatives and iron has the advantage of only requiring one source of ore, even if smelting it is more difficult.
* Bronze Age Fan Club, consisting of female fans of Clark (from his WGBS evening newscasts).
* Bronze Age issue when the titular heroine tries to save a guy from a conveyor belt and finds the buzz saw is made from plastic. The conveyor belt wasn't supposed to cut the weak-hearted guy in half, it was meant to scare him to death.
* Bronze Age Supergirl's Rogues like Psi or Barry Metzner are powerful telepaths.
* Bronze Colossi are not immune to lava, but their large size mean they melt slowly. If the one you just immersed in magma gets out too soon of the trap, it will integrate the heat into its attacks, multiplicating its danger.
* Bronze colossi are true megabeasts in the form of brazen giants over thirty feet in height. They feel no emotion, do not tire, are immune to pain and nausea, are extremely difficult to damage and cannot be stunned, making them some of the most dangerous things in the game.
* Bronze colossi in particular are immune to everything but this rule. You can pound on them for a game week, fracture every part of their body, but they'll still keep ticking until a single hit that can decapitate or bisect them, or

* Bronze Skin Inc, a trickster character from Brazilian folklore. He is summoned by Raymond to mess with the Bronze Skin crew, and rewards him and his sons by sending them flying into the sky before then playing pranks on Bronze Skin.
* Bronze Skin Inc: Dante keeps telling himself "Don't get a boner" while working.
* Bronze Skin Inc: : For unknown reasons, women all over the world, including twelve in Rio de Janeiro, have grown to immense size.
* Bronze Skin Inc: In addition to a disproportionate chin, Otto has a huge hump that doesn't fit his body, giving him the ugliest appearance of the characters.
* Bronze Skin Inc: In the second chapter, Julia awakens the captain's ghost by touching the anchor he is sealed to.
* Bronze Skin Inc is about this trope. The story shows the daily life of the staff of a company based on tanning giantesses.
* Bronze Skin Inc:Just as the coatis are dealt with, the water is stolen again, this time by saguis, who are said to fill in the niche vacated by the coatis.
* Bronze Skin Inc: Messy Miles has entire web series dedicated to being this, and in chapter 5 his prank involves breaking into Bronze Skin Inc and pestering one of the giantess customers.
* Bronze Skin Inc: Parodied in chapter 4 when Raymond becomes a supervillain who sprays lemon juice on women to ruin their tans. He alternately calls himself Lemonade Man and Lemon Juice Man; when called out on the inconsistency, he claims he would never call himself the other name because it's lame.
* Bronze Skin Inc plot revolves around a company that specializes in tanning giant women, with Julia, a fanatic fan of those giantesses.
* Bronze Skin Inc: Pretty much a necessity for the workers at Bronze Skin, whose job is to spread tanning lotion on giant women.

* Bronze Skin Inc: Raimundo Marvires is the recurring antagonist of the series, and has a bald head.
* Bronze Skin Inc:The ghost captain who haunts Rita can easily cross her body
* Bronze Skin Inc: The giantess Helena is the only giantess with blue hair. The giantess superheroine Titan Tits also has blue hair. Yet somehow Dante is the only one to put the two and two together.
* Bronze Skin Inc This is the fate of Messy Miles. After spending most of chapter 5 trying to trespass on Bronze Skin Inc property in order to pester the giantess Charlotte, she plucks him off of her buttock and devours him.
* Brooding Boy, Gentle Girl: A moody bad boy and a sweet, kind girl fall in love.
* Brooding Boy, Gentle Girl: Can be applied to romances; a moody, ruminating boy is involved with a kind and gentle girl.
* Brooding Boy, Gentle Girl — A kind and caring female character is the sidekick to a troubled male character.
* Brooding Ninja Highschool Parkour Scout episode 251, Betty is killed five times by Skulking Ninja Armored Clown Spy's Unholy but maybe kinda half holy Golden Frying Pan of Ultimate Wisdom.
* Brood War's opening cinematic, Admiral Du Galle and Vice-Admiral Stukov are both wearing badass military longcoats with epaulets.
* Brood War usually goes with the explanation that Kerrigan's wormholes are just better than the Overmind's (that wouldn't be the first thing she could do that it couldn't), but this is never explicitly explained in the game.
* Brood War when the UED follows Fenix, Raynor, and Mengsk to Aiur and not only encounters Fenix' forces there, but also a bunch of Zerg broods that are still around.
* Brook, being a skeleton, is under the impression that drinking milk makes him instantly healthy. At first, there's no reason to disbelieve him, since One Piece is full of crazy nonsense like that, but he's pretty clearly still in pain afterwards, despite what he tells himself.
* Brooke Adams also has a pretty low-pitched voice for a female, especially since she's also a model. She is a Texan, though.
* Brooke Adams: Came to TNA in 2010 and peaked during her tenure there.
* Brooke Adams, one of the cameras that followed her seemed more obsessed with them than her.
* Brooke. After Brooke's absence he still kept talking about her and eventually introduced his "girlfriend Brooke" on TV...to reveal that it was Tessmacher now.
* Brooke and Julian have twin boys in the season eight finale, with the episode condensing the bulk of Brooke’s pregnancy into the season finale. The season as a whole was produced under the impression that it was going to be the final season, but The CW renewed the series for a final ninth season after production had wrapped.
* Brooke and Scott Stoehr took it to the next level, serving together as head coaches of Northwestern State University in Louisiana for a couple of seasons until leaving in 2016 when Brooke (alone) was named the new head coach at Louisiana Tech.

* Brooklyn: A 2015 film about an Irish immigrant set during 1951-1952.
* Brooklyn also plays an Irish priest, though his accent seems to be a bit all over the place to imply it has simply faded from his many years in New York. Elsewhere averted with the majority of Irish characters played by Irish actors. It also marks the first major role where Saoirse Ronan and Domhnall Gleeson play Irish characters. Although Saoirse speaks with a Dublin accent naturally and adopts a more rural accent as her character Eilish is an Enniscorthy native.
* Brooklyn Decker has her give a wedgie to one of the guys that she's playing poker against after she loses to him; demanding the rest of the guys give her their chips as she wedgies him.
* Brooklyn - if drawn in the right way and angle - gets points for his exotic nature.
* Brooklyn is framed as five street musicians putting on a play for passersby in hopes of donations.
* Brooklyn is promoted to the position of Goliath's second when Hudson decides he's getting too old to be an effective leader and when Goliath's long absence proves such a chain of command might be needed. He proves to be an excellent choice with his calculating personality and talent for tactics.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, a few episodes have the characters take up an old case they had worked on but was never solved.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: After being incapacitated by an experimental sonic weapon, Boyle screams "I can taste my thoughts!"
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine. After receiving death threats from Jimmy Figgis, Jake and Holt end up living in Florida under witness protection. They manage to live there under the false identities of Greg and Larry for six months and are often checked up on by their Marshal. However, the two intentionally break several rules to lure Figgis to Florida in order to finally apprehend him and resume their lives in New York.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, Amy and Rosa realize Jake's been kidnapped because he hasn't sent them any annoying calls or messages for several hours.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine. Amy is meticulous and neurotic while Jake is fun-loving and immature.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine. Amy loses the bet with her colleague Jake (whoever makes more felony arrests over the year, wins) and has to go on the worst date ever with him. She later says that nothing will be worse than her date with her aunt's dentist. She shares a memory of him offering her a piece of his food on a spoon. As she leans over to eat it, he starts checking her teeth with two spoons.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Amy loves making lists and she has many, many binders from her various seminars and lectures. She has a laminated list of cruise itineraries for her romantic getaway with Jake and she's ready for "some nonstop totally scheduled fun".
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: An arc in the first half of the first season revolves around a bet between Detectives Jake Peralta and Amy Santiago over who solves more felony cases; the loser has to do something horrible and embarrassing. Jake says he'll give up his beloved car if he loses, while Amy says she'll go on a date with him in that horrible car if she loses. When Peralta wins, he intends on using the date as an opportunity to prank and humiliate her, but it quickly becomes clear that it's actually unresolved feelings he has for her bubbling up to the surface.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine and leaves Holt out of the loop. When it all goes as planned, Jake explains from an interrogation room why he thought it was necessary to make Holt look like a fool. Unable to see Holt, he can only imagine his reaction.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine and react this way when their date turns romantic... by their standards, anyway.

* Brooklyn Nine-Nine) and then abandoned them. However, Jake eventually accepts that his mother is a grown woman, and he really doesn't get a say in who she dates... though he does threaten his father one more time for good measure.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine and very closed off emotionally, while Debbie is extremely loud, vivacious and affectionate.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine apparently has a habit of swiping objects and Terry has to specifically task Rosa to keep an eye on Gina when they visit Holt's house. Unfortunately, she'd already stuffed her bag full of loot.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine are entirely pleased about not having to leave their chairs.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine are this by necessity, since it centres on an NYPD precinct, but it's rarely shown as the characters are very hesitant to use their sidearms. At one point, main character Jake effortlessly shoots the Penis Brain and Jaw of a silhouette target (the PB and J, as he calls it) with pinpoint accuracy. His love interest Amy is no slouch either, at one point non-fatally shooting someone in the leg with such accuracy that it doesn't cause any lasting damage. Their duty sergeant, Terry Jeffords, is noted to be the precinct's top marksman.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine as kids. Jake spends the entire episode reminding himself to be cool and not overreact to meeting his childhood icon/mancrush. Then this exchange happens:
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, as well as sharing similar values and senses of humor. The most common theory linking the two is the idea that Eleanor Shellstrop might be Jake Peralta's half-sister; he's confirmed to have at least three siblings he knew nothing about until he was an adult, and the two characters have very similar personality traits and quirks.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine at a firing range she's told to do it properly and tells Sergeant Jeffords to "Show me! Like wrap your thick, muscular arms around me and... [trails off]" He does, to correct her stance, and she's clearly loving it.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: At a shooting range, Terry, who hasn't shot a gun since he relegated himself to a desk job, becomes frustrated with Gina and shoots seven shots with no problem. When Holt and Gina reveal that the real reason they're there is to get him recertified and that he just needs one more shot to get his license back, he starts freaking out and can't bring himself to shoot the last one.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, because on paper they are very desirable tenants, and find that the woman was poisoned because her apartment was rent-controlled and the landlord wanted to jack up the price.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine because Rosa previously said to Captain Holt and Detective Santiago that beating her up in her imagination wouldn't be satisfying.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine begins with Jake Peralta doing a serious monologue on the struggles of being a cop. It then zooms out to show he’s just goofing off on the crime scene.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, both on and off the clock, that one can see why his mother doesn't suspect anything.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, "Boyle's Hunch": Detective Charles Boyle falls madly in love with a woman named Genevieve. At work, he doodles lovey-dovey stuff and shows the picture to his best friend Jake who assumes it's their wedding invitation. It's actually a picture of their joint tombstone.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine Captain Holt is considered to be this by his classics professor husband's coworkers - who have a bad habit of underestimating the intelligence of anyone who isn't an academic.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Captain Holt sees the man who kidnapped his dog Cheddar driving away, and jumps on the vehicle to engage him. He manages to stay on through a few swerves until the guy slams on the brakes and sends him over the hood, but Holt just rolls to his feet and starts a fist fight after both of them are disarmed. Jake, who is watching from the backseat, is very impressed.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Captain Raymond Holt acts as the strict parental figure to the precinct, getting every member to reach their potential through discipline, and he is willing to put his team first in every decision he makes.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Captain Raymond Holt describes this as being his idea of a perfect food.

* Brooklyn Nine-Nine change is that he's more confident, but he brushes them off, insisting that the jacket is magic and confidence has nothing to do with it.... which is apparently true, as the effect completely wears off as soon as he gives another man the jacket.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine created by Mike Schur at the time) announced the day after that it had picked up the show for a sixth season.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine.) Despite this, she declares it her "best birthday ever", due to the fact that she actually helped to crack the case and then got assigned her favourite task (collecting traffic cones) at the end of it.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, Detective Charles Boyle delivers this when he presents the best pie in New York, with an apology afterward.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine": Detective Hitchcock touches and tastes chocolate marks Holt smeared on the hospital sign (as a lead for them to find him). Since he can't have known what it is, Jake Peralta is understandably grossed out that Hitchcock would just put "a hospital thing" in his mouth. Hitchcock later tastes the smear of brown stuff on the car park sign, and even after establishing that it isn't chocolate this time, Hitchcock licks it again.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, Detective Rosa Diaz is normally scowling or smirking sarcastically. But when she genuinely smiles it's like she's another person entirely. Trying to get her to smile for a Christmas photo takes up an entire subplot of one episode.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Detective Rosa Diaz provides this trope's page quote when trying to avoid talking to a citizen who calls himself "Super Dan".
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine detective with the Major Crimes Unit who got his nickname from coming in at the last second to take the credit for arrests.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine does this for the wedding of Jake and Amy in the Season 5 Finale, with a bomb threat no less. It works out in the end with an impromptu wedding thrown at the precinct.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Doug Judy leaves a video apologizing to Peralta for conning him and stealing some diamonds:
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine due to Jake's massive abandonment issues. In the Thanksgiving episode from the first season, Jake says all he wants to do is sit at home, watch the football game, and eat "mayo nuts" (peanuts mixed with mayonaise), as he usually does on Thanksgiving, prompting a disgusted response from Captain Holt. It's then revealed that he does this because his dad was gone and his mom always had to work on Thanksgiving, and six-year-olds aren't very good at cooking...
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: During the Cinco de Mayo heist, Jake and Terry hire the same mariachi band to play during supposedly epic moments.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine episode "48 Hours", after making an arrest with too little proof, Detective Jake Peralta has 48 hours to get the evidence or the perp goes free, forcing the Nine-nine to work over the weekend.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine episode "Chasing Amy", Jake and Amy get locked out on a roof. Jake tries to open the door with a hotel key card he had forgotten to return.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, episode "Fugitive": Both approaches appear when detectives try to understand a witness who doesn't speak English. However, they try to find out where she's from so that they can get an interpreter.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine episode "Homecoming" shows the scene from Jess's point of view and then follows up on what happens to her after Peralta accidentally crashes the car during the pursuit.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine episode "Show Me Going", where Jake's plan to defy Holt and get weapons from the armory to head out and help Rosa in a shooting crisis is described fully before being executed, and goes more-or-less as planned. Holt does catch on and finds Jake just before he heads out, but by that point Jake already had everything ready and only stopped because Holt talks him out of it.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine episode "Ticking Clocks" takes place in real time. Lampshaded in the very beginning as Hitchcock and Scully put a lasagna in the microwave and set it to bake for exactly 21 minutes and 30 seconds. The episode finds the 99 trying to catch a hacker in the building who is trying to hack into their servers.

* Brooklyn Nine-Nine escape again, but starts with "You have the right to remain Doug Judy."
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, even to his enemies, that it's impossible not to love him. This is probably why all of Jake's attempts to arrest him fail — he's so likable, the audience wouldn't actually be glad if Jake won. Lampshaded:
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine fans celebrate September 9th (9/9) as "Nine-Nine Day", for the titular squad.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine features a downplayed example in the first part of the two-part episode "The Fugitive". Jake and Amy want to move in together but each stubbornly refuses to give up their apartment. When assigned to round up escaped fugitives from a crashed prison bus, they decide to run a bet over who can round up the most, with the loser having to move into the winner's apartment. It eventually comes down to the last prisoner, but when both Jake and Amy catch the man at the same time Jake realises that he'd rather that Amy was happy instead of keeping his own space and so surrenders the bet to her.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine finally resolved, they grew to become a loving, supportive, and stable couple, without detracting from the show at all.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine for "The Bimbo," Jake comes in late. As punishment, Captain Holt invented a unique high-five for everyone in the precinct, including the guy who was just there to install the copier, because he knows Jake loves high-fives.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine for the interviewees that revealed that, despite apparently being good for the job on the surface, none of them would have been able to cope with the various stresses and issues of working in a police precinct.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine Gina, who, as we learn later in the episode, does have a hair-dryer in her bag.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine go horrendously awry, with Amy revealing that she'd been trying to find a way to break up with Teddy, and Teddy countering her sudden outburst at dinner by claiming that her feelings for Jake are the reason their relationship failed. Ultimately, Jake and Sophia stay together despite this revelation, while Amy and Teddy break up, leaving Amy in more or less the same position as Jake was in the previous season (though handling it far more maturely, naturally).
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine has a field day with this one whenever it shows the incredibly stoic Cpt. Holt in the '80s, it's almost always an excuse to put Andre Braugher into the most ridiculous costumes imaginable.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine has a heist episode usually once a season, generally on Halloween (but subject to change), with the squad planning to "steal" (i.e., retrieve, since they're cops and a real heist is obviously a crime) certain precious items owned by any one of their number, previously agreed-upon. It's technically all a game, but one that becomes increasingly elaborate with each year, and after the first season, it becomes the Nine-Nine's annual tradition.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine has bisexual Rosa Diaz being played by bisexual Stephanie Beatriz (in fact Beatriz coming out prompted Diaz being written as bi too).
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine has Jake and Rosa trying to bust a corrupt cop only to have her expertly frame them for robbery. At the trial, the woman brilliantly manages to not only destroy their "airtight" alibis but make it look like both are on the take and then sets up a "surprise witness" for the unit to find only to have him testify the duo are corrupt. The season ends with the two sent to jail and season five opens with the rest of the gang trying to prove them innocent.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine has plenty of these. They are often punctuated by a walkie-talkie static sound for the beginning and end of the gag.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine has the warm and mutual loathing between Captain Holt and his rival Deputy Chief Wuntch.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, he and Jake work to clear her of the charges. During their investigation, they learn that Nick, Genevieve's ex-boyfriend who they believe framed her for the crime she was convicted of, has an entire series of paintings that were created by him and Genevieve covering themselves in paint and having sex on canvas sheets. Boyle attempts to take one of the paintings, claiming that Nick doesn't "deserve it", but stops when Nick tells him that it costs several thousand dollars.

* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, he generally plays this role, being more nurturing to his subordinates. In "The Apartment" he even compares himself to a mother hen, with the precinct being his chicks.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, he instead tends to use this trope not so much to expose her insincerity (since she does genuinely respect him) but instead to expose the false modesty and flaws in logic that she ties herself in while doing so.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine he is, he usually tosses the core to someone else to throw away.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, Holt, Jake, Rosa, and Bob Annderson, Holt's contact in the FBI, plan the heist with the contents of their pockets, but the only props available are pieces of lint from Jake's pocket. Holt and Annderson are the only ones who can differentiate between their pieces of lint.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine in an episode where the Deputy Commissioner's son is revealed to have been tagging police cars with graffiti, but whenever he gets arrested he calls his father, who puts pressure on the arresting detectives to drop the charges. While venting to Captain Holt, Detective Peralta enviously calls the kid lucky, which gets this response:
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, indistinguishable from one another except in appearance. Over time, they were given more and more characterization to differentiate them; Scully is smarter and nicer, but in bad shape health-wise and often has poor self-esteem, while Hitchcock is more mean and perverted, but also more physically capable and confident.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: In episode "The Night Shift", Amy finds out Rosa is sneaking out and lying about it to boot, so Amy gives her a piece of her mind.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine initially plays this fairly straight, but eventually deconstructs and subverts it. Detective Charles Boyle is initially hopelessly infatuated with Detective Rosa Diaz, which she makes clear on several occasions is a one-way relationship. This leads him to act in this fashion around her, but it eventually becomes clear that this is actually a bit creepy and weird of him and prompts those around him to view him with a certain degree of disdain. To his credit, however, he eventually realises that Diaz doesn't return his feelings, meets someone who does, and enters into a relationship with her instead. This in turn leads him to start acting more appropriately around Diaz, and he eventually apologises to her for his behaviour and acknowledges that he "wasn't much fun to be around". While the later relationship also ended, there's been no indication that Boyle has renewed his earlier interest in or pursuit of Diaz. There are also some hints that Boyle's behaviour might have had something to do with a recent divorce.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: In one episode, Peralta mentions that on Thanksgiving he sits by himself and eats spoonfuls of mayo, with peanuts sprinkled in.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine in police academy (which is supposed to be a six month program) and essentially bumbled his way through the ranks all the way to captain, which he earned by going to a drug bust instead of a dermatology appointment and surprising the kingpin so bad that he shot himself. He's aware of his own incompetence and inexperience, and is content to let the Nine Nine do whatever they feel is most important.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: In "Show Me Going", Gina prays like this when she and Amy are trying to fix the broken toilet while Rosa is in an active shooter situation.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: In "Skyfire Cycle", Terry doesn't want to believe that his favorite author might be committing a crime.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: In the episode "The Box," Jake deduces that part of the murderer's motive was that he was addicted to a high-class drug. Jake keeps calling him "junkie scum," only to repeatedly apologize and remind the suspect that the murder was the real problem, not the drugs.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: In "The Slump", a flashback has Scully show Jake his orange foot.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: In "Your Honor", Amy stabs a tire on Gina's car to force her into changing it. Only she did it to a car that looked just like Gina's instead.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine is a sitcom about police detectives working at the title precinct in Brooklyn.

* Brooklyn Nine-Nine is Boyle's repeated attempts to woo Rosa, no matter how many times she rejects him. About halfway through the season, he gets the hint and agrees to move on, at which point they become friends (and nothing more).
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine is convinced that she's the absolute center of the universe and that everyone else on the planet exists solely for her benefit and to cheer her on with whatever she aims to do. Putting a mirror in front of her distracts her in the same way it would a cockatiel, she considers almost everything and everyone around her beneath her and displays a boundless contempt for them, has limited concern for the feelings and problems of others, demands to be the center of all attention at all times, and consider this line of dialogue when the squad is attempting to persuade Sgt. Jeffords not to accept a cushy job with a private security contractor:
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine is generally a low-stakes comedy, but the first four season finales all end on more dramatic notes.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine is very nearsighted, but can't wear contact lenses. Because of this, she can barely make out the faces of her co-stars while acting and confesses to often missing her mark because she has trouble making it out, despite the crew using bright-pink tape to try and make it stand out as much as possible.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine. It's subtle, and she keeps it well hidden underneath a tough, intimidating and no-nonsense exterior, but a closer examination reveals that practically everything about her is designed to rigidly maintain control over every aspect of her life and relationships with others. This includes her job (being a police officer puts her in authority over others), her personality (her intimidating stoicism enables her to control people through fear of her), her personal life (she refuses to divulge any information about herself, no matter how harmless, so that no one has anything they can use against her), her relationships (she only dates certain types of men to ensure that she's always the one to end the relationship) and so on. As with Jeff Winger above, the reason she's able to maintain an unflappable exterior is that she's usually in control; whenever something does go wrong, she tends to melt down quick (she's almost reduced to tears when kids make fun of her instead of being intimidated by her, technology failing on her sends her into a violent tantrum, etc.).
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, Jake abandons his post to follow a hunch about a serial arsonist. Turns out he was wrong, and the arsonist burns down the building he was supposed to be watching. Fortunately, it's just an abandoned lard factory.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, Jake and Amy decide to get drunk, so Jake orders them four shots. Amy orders four more.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Jake angrily interrogates a suspect until he gets all the information he needs, including a computer password ("dougandkateforever") for an incriminating website.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine Jake elaborately plans smashing through a window to catch a perp, despite there being a single door to the apartment he was using as a hideout. He thinks he's incredibly cool, but his superiors are frustrated because they have to fill out extra paperwork.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Jake is very into it when Amy (his girlfriend, fiancé, then wife) acts domineering, which increases when she's promoted to Sergeant. For instance, when she's twisting his thumb around during the Halloween Heist, he asks her to "do it harder".
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, Jake's mom Karen opens her door to greet him, and gives him a big hug as an alarm goes off like crazy in the background. Jake worriedly asks if something is burning, to which she cheerfully replies, "Yeah!" without making any move to go deal with it.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, Jeffords — who is on an ill-advised diet — lambasts Gina and Amy, who initially joined him only to give in to their cravings for food by yelling at them for being "Team Eating Food". In his defence, he's too hungry to come up with a better burn.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine led to him thinking Amy was miming pegging him (she was actually miming grabbing a cord and pulling it), he was stunned... before quickly saying he's open to anything she wants to try.

* Brooklyn Nine-Nine loooves [nouns]. Occasionally rendered when he's shocked as "You know Terry loves [nouns]!"
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine managed to avert this with Santiago, promoting her to Sergeant in Season 5, but played it straight with the rest, despite all being competent or exceptional detectives, the only one ever offered a promotion is Diaz, and even then it's to Captain a small town precinct. Jeffords does attempt to move up but fails his Lieutenant Exam
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine names. "Cat squad, assemble!" However, Jake is this goofy all the time. Terry is usually pretty laid-back, but he's not moved by their cuteness at all — he's in a bad mood the whole episode and calls the kitties dicks, dumb, and other mean stuff.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine news is... the perp's alibi checked out. As Peralta points out, that was actually also bad news.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: NYPD detectives from Precinct 99 love those sports.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine on a plane. It's supposed to be a distraction to keep Amy from spiralling, but she can't focus.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine. Other characters frequently have a hard time figuring out if he's in a bad mood or good mood, as his demeanour is the exact same either way. Even when injured he remains stone faced, as when Boyle, who previously suffered a gunshot wound and was given a motorized scooter to help with mobility, is careless with it:
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine paperwork because that was what Peralta promised the team to get them to help out. He accepts this with complete calm.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, Peralta recounts how his date with a coroner descended into this. When he describes how she rubbed ice on his lips to make them cold, his co-workers think he's reading into it. He goes on to explain how she fantasised about cracking his chest open, and by the end of it, he was role-playing a corpse. Later, she propositions him right after they've performed a real autopsy.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine recommends this to Charles, after his painful breakup with Vivian. However, Boyle gets second thoughts and starts trying to pull stuff out, then tries to douse his hands in Rosa's drink, which happens to be hot coffee.
* BrooklynNineNine, recover the stolen manuscript of his next book, and they bring Rosa with them.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine resolved most of its plot arcs at the time, giving us the result of the bet and the fallout of Boyle's heroic feat.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, "Road Trip": Detective Rosa Diaz is sick but refuses to acknowledge that. When she crashes on a couch, she talks in her fever sleep. Rosa, being the "badass bitch" that she is, her talk is pretty scary, and pretty hilarious.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine role of Rosa Diaz, then Megan, for which she was cast in the show.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Rosa and Amy are the only two female detectives on the squad (compared to the five men on the squad plus Chief Holt), although Gina (Holt's assistant) keeps the main cast from having this applied as well.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Sergeant Terry Jeffords tries to keep his detectives in line when they are all invited to Captain Holt's birthday party. They had an emergency squad meeting in the briefing room before the party, but Terry has them in a party huddle soon after they arrive. They end it with cheer-whispering "be appropriate".
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Sgt. Terry Jeffords for Gina Linetti, who constantly flirts with him and feels him up despite him being married with two (later three) children.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine snatches them off her face and wears them for a few seconds, which he soon regrets.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine Some are more subtle, like certain mannerisms or the pride flag in his office. Others, like the framed article in his office with a picture of him and the headline "NYPD Appoints First Openly Gay Captain", less so.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine. Someone will say something that may or may not be an actual double entendre and Jake will respond "Title of your sex tape!"

* Brooklyn Nine-Nine. So, of course, among many other awkward potentially romantic situations the episode throws them into at one point they have to pose as a couple on a date in order to infiltrate a restaurant without their suspect being any the wiser.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine star Joe Lo Truglio shared a scene with his fiancée Beth Dover, in which she amusingly enough played a craft store clerk helping his character Charles pick out the design for his wedding invitations.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, Terry, Gina, and Amy go on a diet which prescribes them very little portions of food. Irritable from hunger already, the fire-breathing dragon is unleashed when Amy's almond is stepped on.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine than his relationship with Amy, but his personal growth was definitely helped along by her support and influence. (And in his own way, he helped her just as much.)
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine (the ensemble cast includes a gay main character who is at the center of the story and bisexual female main character. Subject matter includes coming out and homophobia)
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine. The first episode involves the main character, Jake, getting kidnapped and being held hostage by a stoned ex-lawyer seeking revenge. The second episode had Jake suffering through multiple injuries (three cracked ribs, three broken toes, a hairline fracture, etc...) within one week.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine then immedietly steals and tries on, to his immediate regrets:
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: The Nine-Nine often face police officers less ethical than they are, but some push this into outright corruption:
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine The Vulture is in charge of the SWAT-team in a hostage situation, and he tries to push his weight around.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, they had a sexual relationship, but when their parents got together and eventually married they had already broken up. This doesn't stop Boyle from bringing up their sexual history while talking about them as being stepsiblings.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Used spectacularly in "The Overmining" cold open:
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: Vivian Ludley is a professor whom detective Charles Boyle meets at Captain Holt's party and they hit it off. She's twenty years older than Charles (he's in his forties). Charles' friend Jake and the squad discuss it as unusual and somewhat weird, but ultimately they're happy for him because he was particularly unlucky in love before. They get engaged really quickly, but break up soon after because Vivian wants to move to Canada for her work and forces Charles to retire early from NYPD.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine was conceived with a lot of the characters as gender and/or race-neutral, allowing this trope to play out and assembling a pretty diverse cast in the process.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, when action fan Jake tells Kevin that if he ever punches out a guy, he has to say something cool, like "Choke on that." Kevin is a bit emotionless and literal-minded, however.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine when someone uses the phrase "serious as a heart attack" to which the aging, grossly obese Scully responds "Oh, my heart attacks are never serious. I call 'em oopsies." It is possible to have a heart attack so mild you don't realize you're having one or suffer only mild symptoms but of course, having a series of them is still a huge problem.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine when Terry, desperate to join his wife as she gives birth, ominously asks for a few minutes alone with the man they're interrogating. Cut to him tearfully imploring the man to give up the names so that he doesn't miss the birth of his child. The man starts crying too and agrees.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine where Boyle reveals that Jake owes him four thousand and nine dollars. A shocked Jake asks how, and Boyle produces a notepad and reads off $8.45 for lunch, $1.05 for a soda, and $4000 dollars for an entertainment system, at which point he stopped keeping track.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine where people listen to the music on wireless headphones. Without the headphones, it's nearly silent. The first scene in the club has a bewildered Terry repeatedly putting his headphones on and off, represented as the music cutting in and out.

* Brooklyn Nine-Nine, which may go some way towards explaining the F grade:
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine: While not their main job, while undercover in Florida, Holt and Jake worked at a games complex that threw birthday parties for children. When Jake got promoted to manager, he gave Holt the job of entertaining for the kids' parties.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine who has no problem telling the other officers they're being stupid, and uses his physical strength to intimidate people.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine who spend more time getting into bizarre antics than solving crimes.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine with a limited grasp of exactly how emotions work. Needless to say, it doesn't work out as planned.
* Brooklyn Nine-Nine yogurt, and his squad knows about it, so they occasionally try to bribe him with extra good yogurt, special flavours, a yogurt vending machine etc.
* Brooklyn Queen: "Emoji" exhorts the audience to text the singer various emojis.
* Brooklyn's Finest eventually decided to end the film instead with a freeze frame of Eddie's face with blood and eyes swollen because he pointed out that the face, in metaphor represents America, dazed and confused, but still moving forward. He added, "There's still some hope, we still have a chance. We've taken some hits, but we're still standing. It kind of came out of everything that was happening".
* Brooklyn show up and arrest him, since his testimony implicates him for crimes in another jurisdiction which Stone smugly points out he has no control over.
* Brooklyn South a guy goes on a shooting spree and kills a bunch of cops right outside the precinct house, then is himself shot and dragged into the house. He dies while waiting for paramedics to show up, and his relatives sue the police force alleging that the cops purposely let him bleed to death in revenge.
* Brooklyn South, an arc had two cops becoming more and more antagonistic to each other until they finally had a knockdown brawling fight, to the point of minor injuries — after which they respected each other and cooperated.
* Brooklyn South protagonist Frank Donovan is secretly an IA field associate. Viewers know from the first episode, but his co-workers don't find out until midway through the series, and most of them do not take it well, despite the fact that Frank has been well liked before this, never got any of them in trouble, and actually helped a few of them out secretly.
* Brooklyn Tide, not only are there two characters named "Jonathan", but Jonathan Corbin and Jonathan Clay function as the protagonist and antagonist respectively, were former partners, and both have the initials JC.
* Brooklyn Tide supposedly has the capacity to cause a nuclear power plant to have a meltdown, which is why the antagonist, Jonathan Clay, wants it.
* Brook practically runs on this trope, being a walking pun factory on the subject of his supernatural disfigurement. At inappropriate times? You bet. He is also quite the pervert. We discover that he and his crew died in the most dangerous sea before being able to fulfill their promise to return to the friend they left behind. Only Brook's Devil Fruit which allowed him to come back from death just once offered the slightest chance of fulfilling their promise, and since then he had waited 50 years alone on the corpse-filled ship before the Strawhats came. In the flashback it seems like Brook was actually quite serious when he was alive, but in 50 years of solitude,
* Brooks & Dunn, he cut the show from 40 positions to 30 after program directors complained about the unfamiliarity of the lower-charting songs. In 2012, Brooks released "New to This Town", his first solo single since the breakup of Brooks & Dunn. Where did it peak? #31.
* Brooks & Dunn— it's implied they never wanted the fancy wedding planned by the bride's controlling mother.)
* Brooks & Dunn: "Neon Moon," "My Next Broken Heart, "That Ain't No Way to Go", "Whiskey Under the Bridge," "More Than a Margarita," "One Heartache at a Time," "Tequila Town," "Brand New Whiskey," "Hurt Train," "Goin' Under Gettin' Over You," and "She's Not the Cheatin' Kind."

* Brooks & Dunn recorded the vocals for their cover of Roger Miller's "Husbands and Wives" in only one take.
* Brooks & Dunn's biggest hits were outside their honky-tonk roots: a Latin-flavored cover of B.W. Stevenson's "My Maria", and the bombastic, electric guitar-heavy, rock-influenced "Ain't Nothing 'Bout You". These are also among the few singles of their career that neither member of the duo wrote.
* Brooks & Dunn's "If Bubba Can Dance (I Can Too)", which was inspired by a comment that one of the writers made after seeing a commercial for line-dancing lessons.
* Brooks & Dunn, while Ronnie still releases music independently, but very little is known about them outside their musical ventures.
* Brook's attacks even go right by opponents without them noticing his presence or even the very pain they received in the first place; not even the audience sees much of him actually
* Brookside became one of these due to her actress's popularity and high profile at the time. It was decided to give her much more focus and bigger, more dramatic storylines; leading to the character's almost overnight transformation from ordinary mother to a gun-toting, suddenly bisexual gangster with a sexy makeover. She dominated the show's main storylines for well over a year, only being scaled back when a plot involving her affair with her own mother-in-law was poorly received by viewers.
* Brookside been blamed for the police initially arresting his father over it.
* Brookside, (Channel 4 UK soap opera and one of the channel's first shows, 1982-2003)
* Brookside played this in an infamous storyline where abusive Trevor Jordache is murdered by his wife Mandy and daughter Beth, whom he had terrorised for years. When his younger daughter Rachel comes home unexpectedly and asks where he is, Mandy says "Asleep" and Beth says "Out" in unison. Beth quickly covers by pretending she said "out of it" and that he's sleeping off a drinking binge.
* Brookside: Sinbad attempts to protect Mandy and Beth by claiming that he killed Trevor Jordache. It doesn't work because he doesn't know whereabouts on his body Trevor was stabbed and wrongly guesses at the chest.
* Brookside, which was filmed on a real cul-de-sac on a housing estate, using a number of houses for filming while others held production offices, dressing rooms, and so on.
* Brooksley Born identified a problem in the over-the-counter derivatives market that did not cause the financial crisis, but made the damage much worse. Naturally, she was ignored.
* Brooks—during a reading at the Guggenheim—said the poem has been "...banned here and there because of the word 'Jazz'," the line frequently having been interpreted as a euphemism for sex. Not intentional, she averred: but
* Brooks — who in addition to performing the song onstage with his band as omniscient observers, plays the wife-beating, philandering husband in the action scenes — used the "wife-beating" scenes as a response to Capitol Records' reluctance to include the song's third verse (with the domestic violence themes) in the studio recording. Brooks would later peform the song with the "wife beating" third verse in concert. Critics and many others (including women's advocates) have given virtually unanimous praise to the video and the full version of the song as a powerful statement about the prevalence of male-on-female domestic violence, and it would win the Country Music Association's Video of the Year award in 1991.
* Brook's old head wound is, pre-skeleton, a bit more messy-looking and disfiguring than the usual Good Guy scar. This may well fall into "
* Brook's power is the closest to immortality of any of the Fruits. After dying, his ghost was able to reanimate his skeleton body. With a lack of organs, most attacks cannot kill Brook, though he can still suffer pain and be defeated in battle. Brook can also turn into a ghost by escaping his body.
* Brooks's solo recording "We Shall Be Free" contains the line "We're free to love anyone we choose." At the time, the line was controversial because it seemed to promote homosexuality. Now that gay marriage is legal in all of North America, it becomes this trope.

* Brookstone, a U.S. retail chain for specialty electronics and some other things, has had a lot of these, the worst being the "iDesire" massage chair. They seem to have branched out to uWords recently.
* Brook, the only one not present for The Reveal, finds out at the end of Chapter 60.
* Brook the Undead Swordsman Musician of the Straw Hats is classified as a "Speed-Type" Swordsman in contrast to Zoro who is a "Power-Type" and Oda
* Brook wants to reunite with his friend Laboon and deliver his former crew's last message to him.
* Brook Watson by John Copley (who had clearly never seen a shark), meant to encourage other orphans to seek out a long a good life no matter their situation.
* Brook, who, upon being introduced to a woman, will ask to see her panties. Remarkably, he seems to drop the issue immediately after being denied and has so far never brought it up twice with the same girl. It's implied that his behavior is mostly due to the years of isolation atrophying his sanity/social skills/self-control. Though he has no ill intentions a 99-year-old skeleton-man asking young women (often underage) to show him their panties is still pretty creepy.
* Brookyln, traveling to China and Japan, meeting his loyal pet companion Fu-Dog and his true love Katana, and eventually having a son named Nashville (with a second unhatched child nicknamed "Eggwardo" on the way). Whatever he got up to while time-traveling, he apparently had to seriously sharpen his combat skills in order to survive; when he's seen again, he's sporting an armored breastplate and packing a gun, a katana, and a pair of daggers.
* Broom-Hilda. Another character chides her, saying that "swearing is a childish way to assert one's masculinity". It doesn't occur to her until the next panel what the word "masculinity" means.
* Bros Before Hoes speech he'd delivered to Eliza about love just minutes earlier.
* Bros.: green (Hammer and Sledgehammer), Blue (Boomerang), Red (Fire), Cyan (Ice), Purple (AFHB) and Orange (sumo)
* Brøderbund Software by the ending of the NES version of the latter.
* Brøderbund Software mentions special keys called Francis Scott Key, Boris Spasskey and Albuquerkey.
* Brøderbund Software's name was actually written with a zero in many of their early games, since old computers' built-in fonts didn't include "Ø" but did have a similar-looking "0" with a slash through it.
* Brøderbund Software would show their logo with a fanfare, followed by a character from the game in question slicing out the "o" to turn it into an "ø". To be more specific...
* Brødrene Dal, assuming it's a supply list for his famous polar expedition.
* Brødrene Dal movie kind of featured Trond Kirkevaag as Brumund, despite releasing three years after his 2007 death. They used recordings of their stage show from 1997 with the other two really acting while he communicated with them from afar with a video transmitter. The movie was not well received, due to still feeling too soon for the last two actors and fans.
* Brødrene Dal, since the series was produced in the early eighties, and since then, most Norwegian gas stations has become all-purpose convenience stores that just happens to sell gas as well.
* brostep and electronica to keep current), making listening to it now feel like a product of the time.
* Brostep can come across as this, thanks to the exaggeration of Dubstep's characteristics. Drops become pretty noisy, 2-step-influenced drumbeats turn into brutal caricatures of themselves, and synthesizers sound more metallic than in old-school dubstep.
* Bro Strider as well, considering he abused Dave, forcing Dave to duel with him regularly, for the entirety of Dave's life. Also taking into account his puppet fetish and (like all of the other Guardians) expressionless (and indeed, near-completely-devoid-of-features) face.
* Brotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrotbrot

* Brotha Lynch Hung in which he plays a gangbanger who is cursed by a witch to eat everything he kills... I.E., other gangbangers.
* Brother–Sister Incest: A brother and sister are in an intimate relationship with each other.
* Brother–Sister Incest), and Sabrina was thirteen, Romulus feels guilty about being attracted to either, because they are adoptive siblings.
* Brother–Sister Incest does occur. Plus there's the whole gorillas/harems thing.
* Brother–Sister Incest: Incest between siblings. Despite the name, allows both hetero and same-sex incest.
* Brother–Sister Incest: Romantic or sexual attraction between siblings.
* Brother–Sister Incest: Sexual relationships between siblings treated as a kink.
* Brother–Sister Incest: Sometimes a brother substitutes for the father. Same plot, though.
* Brother–Sister Incest, with Commodus quite clearly lusting after Lucilla (though he is never shown to act upon those impulses).
* Brother–Sister Team has twin deities Apollo and Artemis teaming up to slay the children of Niobe. Apollo killed the sons, Artemis the daughters.
* Brother–Sister Team, whereas Cersei and Joffrey exchange veiled insults against each other.
* Brother 2 the protagonists visit a gun runner who practices digging WWII-era weaponry from old battlefields and repairing it to working condition. In a later scene, they shoot some gangsters with a WWI-era Maxim heavy machine gun.
* Brother and sister Dylan and Sarah Beach voiced respectively Charlie Brown and Lucy on
* Brother and Sister runs away and averts being burned. She's mentioned to have eventually died off-screen.
* Brother and Sister Sister after her marriage and replace her with her own daughter.
* Brother and Sister", the sister returns as a ghost. When her husband seizes her, she comes back to life.
* Brother and Sister" the stepmother drives off the title characters with her cruelty, tries to enchant them into animal forms (and, in the case of the Brother, succeeds), and tries to murder Sister after her marriage and replace her with her own daughter.
* Brother and Sister, the stepsister insinuates herself into the queen's place after she and her mother kill the queen. She has only one eye.
* Brother and sister war gods Ares and Athena would wrap entire nations up in their sibling rivalry.
* Brotherband After stopping Zavac from knifing Hal, he uses his false arm to trap the pirate in the cabin of his sinking ship.
* Brotherband and the prison is poorly guarded, it actually ends up working. Just not very subtly.
* Brotherband can steal the bracelet of the man he is in the middle of talking to without his noticing.
* Brotherband captain to understand his instructions for saving their ship.
* Brotherband go to a village festival together (Karina insists it's as friends). The next morning, Thorn nervously has a talk with Hal, assuring him that no funny business occurred between him and Hal's mother. Hal finds the incongruity of the situation amusing and reassures Thorn that if he and Karina want to court, it's completely fine with him.
* Brotherband: Hal and his band ensnare Zavac by telling the Korpaljo, the leader of the town they're in, that Zavac is hiding their share of plundered emeralds in his hold, from the mines in Limmat. When the Korpaljo interrogates Zavac:
* Brotherband. Hal is severely undermanned, and takes his advice to win the competition.
* Brotherband, the author describes Thorn's smile as unpleasant when he's warning a captured pirate not to break for it.

* Brotherband. Unpleasant as in teeth barred and eyes gleaming as per usual for Skandians happy to unleash something terrible.
* Brotherband, who is incredibly nearsighted, gets too nervous to cross on his own, so Hal and Stig try to help him. He ends up falling and dragging them down with him.
* Brother Bear 2 and Dave Thomas, while Andrea Martin and Catherine O'Hara voiced Anda and Kata).
* Brother Bear 2 but she can't marry her betrothed because the spirits already consider her married to Kenai through a little necklace he gave her when they were kids.
* Brother Bear 2 chews out Koda for running off to a dangerous mountain. Koda replies that he was just scared that Kenai would abandon him for Nita, calming Kenai down as he reassures him that he would never abandon Koda.
* Brother Bear 2. He goes so far in this that Kenai (who at first found this funny until he sees that Nita's being bothered) ends up having to sharply tell him to stop.
* Brother Bear 2, Kenai pretends to be a ferocious bear for Rutt and Tuke to defeat. When he says "I'm gonna rip you to shreds," it takes a repetition before both moose go in to "defeat" him.
* Brother Bear 2 lets out a piercing scream of "MAMA!" after Nita gets her amulet back from it.
* Brother Bear 2 slowly falling in love during their journey to Hokani Falls. Behind them, a jealous Koda tries to keep up with them.
* Brother Bear and then he does a full-body check on himself, ending with him wagging his tail.
* Brother Bear, an elderly bear is convinced that she lost her husband earlier this year, despite how said husband keeps yelling at her offscreen that he's still alive.
* Brother Bear as a cameo. There also included a lot of falling and three moments of burp/fart jokes.
* Brother Bear, as they're trying to escape Denahi, Kenai is carrying Koda through a geyser field and Koda shouts directions to try and avoid the geysers, "Left, left! No, no, the other left!"
* Brother Bear: Early on, a dog tied to a post bites Denahi on the butt while he flirts with some women.
* Brother Bear get in a fight, one is trying to make up to the other. He mentions how he always tells him where the juiciest grazing is because "I love... dew." The other responds, "I love dew too, eh."
* Brother Bear has the fate of Koda's mother: Kenai kills a bear and is punished by being turned into a bear. He then runs into a young cub who claims he got separated from his mom, but they'll meet up at the fishing grounds. Most older audiences guessed that Koda's mom was the bear that Kenai killed from that first line.
* Brother Bear. He was 13 at the time of the first one's release and 16 at the time of the second one's. His voice had deepened quite a bit by then.
* Brother Bear, "If the snow's white, then it's all right. Yellow or green, it's just not clean."
* Brother Bear into a bear). He changes however by the end of the movie, and acts more like the eldest brother, Sitka, does.
* Brother Bear is given an elaborate farewell ceremony after his death saving his two brothers from a bear.
* Brother Bear It is entirely worth watching the entire movie a second time just to listen to these two.
* Brother Bear: It takes place in some wild and rocky mountains somewhere in North America where no outsider is in a position to notice the supernatural goings-on. Justified by the fact the story appears to be taking place at the tail end of the last Ice Age, where the vast majority of the continent really was uninhabited wilderness.
* Brother Bear, Kenai, disappointed that he got a bear totem, tells Sitka why the animal doesn't represent "love".

* Brother Bear, Kenai gets caught in one and is rescued by Koda, much to his embarrassment.
* Brother Bear, Kenai is spooked by a rodent before the bear comes along. In the DVD Gag Commentary, the moose comment on how squirrels/chipmunks/etc. always appear before something bad happens, and falsely interpret every rodent afterwards as a sign of trouble.
* Brother Bear, Koda relates a story to Kenai wherein some bear licked an iceberg and got his tongue stuck to it. It then floated away, so to save him "They had to, like, rip his tongue off, so now, he hath t'talk like dis alla time..."
* Brother Bear: No matter whether he's a human or a bear, Kenai tends to rub the back of his head and neck whenever he's anxious or uncertain.
* Brother Bear: Sitka, who explains to Kenai the significance of their respective totems (guidance and love), and what it means to be a man. The latter bit is elaborated on a bit more in a piece of dialogue that was ultimately cut from the movie:
* Brother Bear. The pair back away slowly partly because of this question and the fact that he's, well, a bear.
* Brother Bear there’s an interesting example: After the death of their older brother, Kenai and Denahi mourn their loss, Kenai decides to hunt down the bear he holds responsible, and Denahi follows him to make sure he doesn’t get hurt. Kenai chasing the bear is very jarring, since he has killing intent the whole time, after a fight with the bear he accidentally kills it with his spear, as punishment for this, the spirits transform him into a bear, after that Denahi sees Kenai's torn clothes and assumes this new bear killed him, with the loss of both his brothers, he decides to seek vengeance, throughout the movie he chases his brother across the land, determined to kill him, not even steam, being thrown over a cliff, or lack of sleep or food is enough to stop him. In the climax, he even finds Kenai on top of a giant mountain, thanks to the guidance of his dead brother, and they proceed to fight to the death, but literally the split second before Denahi kills his brother in the same manner that Kenai killed the bear, their older brother turns Kenai back to human. Denahi is both horrified and shocked that he almost killed his brother.
* Brother Bear, they went to Angayuqaq Oscar Kawagley for advice on the Inuit language. They liked the way he spoke Inukituk so much, they created a narrator role for him.
* Brother Bear. When Kenai chooses to become a bear again, it is the least he can do for Koda after all he has done to him. It's repeated in the sequel!
* Brother Bear, when Kenai is transformed, the movie changes its aspect ratio to subtly tell the viewer that he's seeing through different eyes now.
* Brother Bear: When Kenai tells Koda the truth that he was the one who killed Koda's mother.
* Brother Bear, when the main character sees bears as irritations at first and goes on to full-blown hatred towards them after one inadvertently caused his brother's death. Subverted when he turns into one and finds out that bears actually aren't so terrible.
* Brother Blood in the third season uses human soldiers at first, but then switches over to

* Brother Cadfael, as well as some quick talking to explain how the desiccated bones of a saint suddenly weigh as much as a mortal man.
* Brother Cadfael, a wounded protagonist gives the "boy" nursing him a playful push in the chest and gets a shock. He also gets a clout on the ear.
* Brother Cadfael books, Brother Oswin is hopelessly clumsy, refuses to admit that putting cold things into hot places or vice versa shatters them, and is Cadfael's assistant for several books. Cadfael generally has him do all the easy stuff that doesn't put him near fragile things or herbal remedies — especially the ones that could be used as poison. He does get better over time and in the end is quite competent — it just took him a lot longer to learn than Cadfael's other assistants.

* Brother Cadfael, in a few ways. One, the truth always comes out to at least Cadfael, and often to his friend the sheriff and his Abbott. Two, at times women need a place to hide/escape and the head of the convent is willing to mislead people by telling parts of the truth.
* Brother Cadfael: In Eye Witness, the abbey's stolen gold is found and taken by a itinerant peddler... right back to the abbey, where he waits alongside the porter for the thief to be caught. The peddler confesses that he was quite tempted to just take the gold and flee, but in the end decided it was better to have a small but honest reward rather than a purely hypothetical gain accompanied by jail time.
* Brother Cadfael: In "The Rose Rent", the wife of a wealthy and aged wool merchant takes lovers while her oblivious husband is away on business. But when one of said lovers tries to use her as an alibi (he's innocent of that particular crime, but was engaging in other illegal activity nearby), she laughs in his face and makes it clear she has no intention of giving up the position and money her marriage gives her for him.
* Brother Cadfael Jerome dictating what he can or cannot investigate ...and heaven help any innocent suspect they'd deny him the chance to exonerate.
* Brother Cadfael" — "city air makes (you) free after a year and a day." Both "Stadtluft macht frei" and "nach Jahr und Tag" are still very much part of current usage.
* Brother Cadfael notices about Torold and Godith, that tells him they've fallen head-over-heels in love.
* Brother Cadfael series is about a medieval British monk who frequently ends up investigating crimes.
* Brother Cadfael series occasionally plays this straight but often subverts it.
* Brother Cadfael, some of the main characters are squires, who eventually must investigate their master's murder.
* Brother Cadfael story to get rid of a murderer (and rival in love) against whom there was no real evidence.
* Brother Cadfael The father makes amends when he realizes what an ass he's been.
* Brother Cadfael. The prime suspect (the victim's stepson) thinks the murder was a stabbing when it was actually a poisoning.
* Brother Cadfael, who is a Court Eunuch in the last days of the Ottoman Empire.)
* Brother, Can You Spare Two Dimes?" because they decided to explain the plot a bit more.
* Brother, Can You Spare Two Dimes?". Originally, Frazier was to be knocked out by Barney Gumble. However, Frazier's son objected to this, citing that Frazier was a world champion who wouldn't be knocked out in such a manner. Instead, Frazier beat up Gumble, and stuffed him into a garbage can.
* Brother Captains Gabriel Angelos, Davian Thule, Indrick Boreale and Apollo Diomedes from
* Brother Cavil, Cavil's desire to become greater is a pretty deeply human motivation in itself.
* BrotherChuck: Remember when I used to be in the comic? How long ago was that anyway?
* Brother from Another Series" Sideshow Bob is released from prison much to Bart's dismay.
* Brother from Another Series" when a dam breaks and floods Springfield. Ralph floats by on his bed and says, "I think I wet the bed," though it is unclear whether or not he really wet his bed.
* Brother from Another Series", where he conned his way into building a dam and cut back on the building materials to embezzle the funds.
* Brother from the Same Planet" has Bart waiting to be picked up from his soccer game by Homer, when it starts to rain. Bart thinks he sees Homer driving by in his car, but it turns out to be a woman that looks like Homer wearing a blond wig and wearing a dress, inexplicably singing "I Am Woman, Hear Me Roar" as she drives past.

* Brother from the Same Planet", Homer falls backwards onto a fire hydrant and has his body bent. He casually states "This is even more painful than it looks."
* Brother from the Same Planet", Homer finally remembers to pick up Bart from soccer practice while taking a bath, and he runs outside without bothering to put on clothes. Fortunately, he's dressed when he gets there.
* Brother from the Same Planet", Homer forgets to pick up Bart from soccer practice and leaves him waiting for several hours. While taking a bath, Homer has a dream in which he goes to pick up Bart, only to discover he's too late and Bart has decayed into a skeleton while waiting. This dream finally causes Homer to remember he forgot about Bart.
* Brother from the Same Planet of Homer's face burning and melting, with his face looking like a skeleton covered with blood and rotting skin and his eyes devoid of pupils while moaning ''"NOW HOW 'BOUT A HUG?"'.
* Brotherhood also does this with your assassins. When you call them, they will immediately pop out of any nearby hiding space and attack.
* Brotherhood and freezes up; Al takes advantage of it to attack Scar and drive him off.
* Brotherhood (and him being sleazy and unnerving.) Meanwhile his 2003 anime counterpart has a mullet ponytail instead, so he's often called Mullet Kimblee.
* Brotherhood, and this form is shown to age and behave like a normal human child.
* Brotherhood Assassin Tombs) and then goes to the underground cell where the Armor and Dagger are stored.
* Brotherhood, Envy walks in on Edward after Edward just left the shower, and he has no pants or towel on. Screaming ensues.
* Brotherhood, "Every Little Counts", ends with a record scratch. The plan was to do a different medium-appropriate ending for each format (i.e. a tape-chewing sound for the cassette release and a disc-sticking sound for the CD release), but they never got round to it.
* Brotherhood Exodus is a Headstrong type who shares his Charismatic subtype.
* Brotherhood Ezio. This is especially odd because A) Ezio is essentially the Lord of Monteriggioni, and B) the young woman is best friends with Ezio's sister Claudia. It might be explained by the fact that during the events of the previous game (which ended minutes before the start of this one), Ezio apparently spent months or even years at a stretch in Florence, Venice, or Rome, not in Monteriggioni. If there wasn't a family portrait on the wall somewhere, it's entirely possible that the woman in question has never seen Ezio's face before — though many other NPCs in the town appear to recognize him on sight.
* Brotherhood: Final Fantasy XV (a tie-in anime series based on a video game)
* Brotherhood followers. The first two towns featured are entirely safe (albeit low on supplies), but the main characters are only interested in passing through them. The third town, Strivington, is doing much better and almost inspires them to stay. Then the Brotherhood drops vampires into the town square with helicopters. Strivington and most of its people survive the ensuing battle, but the casualties they do take are grimly emphasized, and the main characters decide not to stick around.
* Brotherhood has Declan's partner Ralph after Michael helps him cover up an accidental shooting.
* Brotherhood human/animal chimera, and unlike Tucker's chimeras, these ones are not only in a perfectly fine mental state, they can even shift back to their human forms at will. All of Tucker's madness and his sacrificing of his wife and his daughter was done for the sake of experiments the government had already perfected in secret, and done because he wasn't "in" enough to be privy to them.
* Brotherhood is about the worlds of two brothers, one a politician and the other a mob boss, wind up intersecting.
* Brotherhood is entirely animated in thick lines and crayon colors, representing drawings made by Ed and Al before they lost their bodies.
* Brotherhood of Blades: Wei Zhongian, who has been plotting to overthrow the government throughout the film, is killed with twenty minutes left. It is then revealed that his godson, Zhou Jhingzhong, had been manipulating events to take power the whole time.

* Brotherhood of Death are the local KKK chapter, pissed that there are black people standing up to their harassment.
* Brotherhood of Evil Mutants was retooled into "Freedom Force", a team that was basically Marvel's answer to the Suicide Squad above.
* Brotherhood of Funny Hats - A goofy, possibly incompetent, secret society.
* Brotherhood of Funny Hats, are generally treated as a secret organization in the episode they appear in. On the other hand, their membership seems to include just about every recurring male character in Springfield. It makes it even sillier that it took Homer so long to find out the organization existed, when, for instance, Lenny, Carl, Moe, and Barney were all members, and that's just in Moe's Tavern.
* Brotherhood of Makuta of every Proud Warrior Race Guy, rivaling Conan's own.
* Brotherhood of Man's "Save All Your Kisses For Me" is a subversion, with the last line being 'even though you're only three'. This has been covered to make the song into a
* Brotherhood of Nod that cannot afford to have as high-profile units as GDI. Make no mistake — that just means you won't see their wrecking ball units before the building is rubble.
* Brotherhood of the Gun. After the heroes win a shootout a local deputy named Lars shows up, having heard the gunfire as he returned from pursuing a pair of cattle rustlers. When it's commented that the local undertaker has six new bodies to bury, Lars says it's eight bodies, as he caught up to the rustlers and brought them back draped over their saddles.
* Brotherhood of the Rose. At one point Saul plants wires in Elliot's greenhouse so he'll tear up his beloved roses looking for the fertilizer bomb he's convinced Saul has planted there.
* Brotherhood of the Rose by David Morrell. The protagonists are from an orphanage where the children are raised to be patriotic cannon fodder for the US military.
* Brotherhood of the Rose, so at this point in the novel, he dies. In the mini-series however, Saul knocks him out with the Uzi but then blows up the secret cache of blackmail files Elliot has been using to maintain his power in the CIA, forcing him into retirement.
* Brotherhood of the Rose to learn martial arts. As one of them puts it: "The way we were raised, I don't think we were ever kids."
* Brotherhood of the Wolf, although the conspiracy angle was a fiction. It is still unknown exactly what was responsible.
* Brotherhood of the Wolf. In one of the first scenes of the narrative, a pair of Great Coat-wearing badasses (with the added conceit of tricorner hats) lay waste to a group of soldiers harassing an old man and his daughter in the pouring rain.
* Brotherhood of the Wolf is a knight/scientist/explorer enlisted to track down and stop the Beast of Gevaudan, which has killed more than 100, and stumbles into something much bigger than he expected.
* Brotherhood of the Wolf is a mystery, martial arts film, monster horror film, drawing room drama, spy film and historical epic depending on the scene.
* Brotherhood of the Wolf, Jean-François de Morangias (Vincent Cassel) uses silver bullets to "sign" his shots.
* Brotherhood of the Wolf. Jean-François developed an incestuous obsession towards his sister Marianne after she nursed him back to health. It doesn't end well for her.
* Brotherhood of War series, is an obscenely wealthy, old-money type who was kicked out of college and drafted during WWII, then chose to stay in the army. While all of his uniforms are custom made, they are uniform. However, while most officers have dress blues for formal wear, he went a step beyond and purchased the dress mess uniform, which goes so far as to include a cape. This irritates people.
* Brotherhood onward introduced full synchronization bonuses for completing certain objectives like not being seen or killing a certain amount of people. So while the plan can fail in gameplay and result in you having to chase the enemy, canonically your player character really did kill the guy while staying unseen, or slaughtering hundreds of guards single-handedly.

* Brotherhood. Rose clearly likes Edward, but whether he likes her back is ambiguous. He does blush when they dance together, though.
* Brotherhood's boasting, he's periodically reinforced by guards who he never bothers to order away.
* Brotherhood. She travels from Fort Briggs, in the frigid north, to the family mansion in Central City and demands that her father retire and name her head of the family. She further bullies him into taking his wife and younger daughters on an extended visit to the distant country of Xing. As Olivier's brother Alex later realizes, she knows that terrible things are about to happen in their home country of Amestris, and wants her family as far away from it as possible.
* Brotherhood survive long enough to actually talk back to him though.
* Brotherhood. The firebombs actually set fire to the ground, which means you can finally provide your own means of lift.
* Brotherhood, the Ice-Alchemist surrenders to the military — and then he transmutes steam and escapes.
* Brotherhood the Prowler — a Templar attempt at fighting Assassins using their own methods — also has a forearm-mounted switchblade, if a wider and less fine-looking one, whose two blades pivot at the back to form a single blade in front. Ezio had to abandon the second (built by Leonardo, right-handed) of his Hidden Blades at the Siege of Monteriggioni, but had the original left-handed one replaced (or covered with a single-piece metal vambrace) upon his arrival in Rome, and Leonardo later constructed for him another right-handed Hidden Blade that now fit into the wrist of a leather glove.
* Brotherhood, to the point where he's blind to the fact the everything else in his life is falling apart.
* Brotherhood, was apparently written by "X". Popular opinion has it that this was Howard Mackie, but the truth has never been revealed.
* Brotherhood; while impressive they are also vastly outnumbered by their enemies (primarily the NCR), with Mr. House noting that all that combat training and power armor won't save you if you're outnumbered 15 to 1.
* Brotherhood Workshop parodies. The orcs tend to be decent guys on the wrong side of the battlefield, and sometimes have a legitimate beef with the heroes. Though said heroes are no more the wiser and slaughter the orcs anyway, assuming them to be chaotic evil. Aragorn especially takes this to extremes, eventually leading his allies to abandon him after they realize he's just a maniac.
* Brotherhood Workshop stop-motion with high-quality and plenty of parody.
* "Brotherhooves Social" We also see Rainbow Dash act as a surrogate big sister for Scootaloo in the episode despite not being related.
* Brother is the leader of Free The Soul and is responsible for the events of the trilogy, indirectly so for

* ''Brother Louie'', a song about a white guy bringing his black girlfriend home to much wailing and gnashing of teeth. And yet it's the black family that ends up being the most evil about it.....
* Brother Love: Parodied, inverted, subverted and averted with Bruce Pritchard's gimmick of a smarmy, rosy-cheeked faux preacher. Many times, he claimed to preach "The Book of Love," but it was more a "love" of the WWF's top villians of the late 1980s and early 1990s, including
* Brotherly Love had the mom making a hangover cure for the eldest brother. She never said what was in it, but, "If it starts to taste like ranch dressing you're drinking it too slowly."
* Brotherly Love, Lloyd waxes nostalgic about how he and Joe's dad used to horse around together, and makes to muss up Joe's hair. Joe darts away and tells him not to do that. It's a long quote, ending in "Shoot me in the knee caps, that's good clean fun! But the hair is off limits."

* Brotherly Love was pretty much contrived for brothers Joey, Matthew and Andrew Lawrence to play themselves.
* "brother". Monica feeds Joey for years, they include a "Joey Room" in their new house, and frequently act as his older siblings.
* Brother Mouzone. Whether firing a warning shot into someone's arm, lying on the floor gut-shot, or sitting in a folding chair reading
* Brother Odd, invites it to kiss his ass. He then (narrating) describes in graphic and hilarious detail how it proceeds to eviscerate him, before coming back to reality and admitting that he did, in fact, escape.
* Brother Oh Brother", where the singer's brother gets together with the singer's ex.
* Brother on Board: S1lver shows no respect for locked doors in Chapter 34 and uses this trope a total of 4 times.
* Brother on Brother, Daughter on Mother is to prevent that rope from "fraying" due to major temporal incursions; smaller incidents are usually papered over by the inertia of time itself.
* Brother Power The Geek #2, the villainous Hound Dawg and his war hawk cronies appear with uniforms and gadgetry evocative of Nazis.
* Brother Power The Geek is a failed 'doll elemental' and is able to project his consciousness out of his original tailor's dummy body and inhabit the form of any other mannequin or doll.
* Brother Power The Geek is a living tailor's dummy that's also a supercivilian possessing immense strength and agility. He began existence as a normal tailor's dummy, of cloth held up by metal wires, that was left behind when the store closed down. Hippies made the abandoned store their home. One day, they are attacked by bikers and one hippie places his wet and bloody clothes on the dummy to prevent them from shrinking while drying. He also spills some oil on the dummy in the process. All of these ingredients allow a bolt of lightning to bring the dummy to life some time thereafter. His first act is to save the hippies from another attack, for which they name him Brother Power. "The Geek" is a title referring to his pseudo-humanity and he doesn't like to be called that. Brother Power is a proponent of the hippie philosophy (but not necessarily lifestyle) and doesn't actively seek out wrongs to right, but he also never walks away when someone needs help, even if helping comes with risks.
* Brother Power The Geek was once imprisoned as a circus freak at the villanious Psychedelic Circus.
* Brother repeatedly claims that he just worked in Headquarters during the First Chechen War, but shows combat skills that hint at more active service.
* Brothers & Sisters. A ditz and fairly excitable, she is a genius when it comes to politics and research.
* Brothers & Sisters among a collection of clips for a birthday video.
* Brothers & Sisters: Beside the occasional thanksgiving meals, which are usually more civilized, the Walker family have a great tendency to involve two or more members of the family revealing dozens or more shameful truths about each other.
* Brothers & Sisters: Given the fecundity of their parents, the Walker kids seem to have an unusual amount of fertility problems, Sarah being the sole exception.
* Brothers & Sisters had the complication of Robert's presidential campaign. An investigator took suspicious photos of him entering a woman's home and showed them to a member of his staff, who happened to be his brother-in-law Kevin. Kevin is torn over his job and loyalty to his sister. In the end, it turns out that the woman was actually his therapist.
* Brothers & Sisters had to do a serious retcon due to the sexual chemistry between the actors playing half-siblings Rebecca and Justin. Supposedly these two dated early on in the run of the show.

* Brothers & Sisters is this for her sons and daughters alike, as well as the illegitimate children of her late husband - despite the fact that some of them are around 40! She is wholly incapable of not trying to control their lives and will relentlessly stalk escapees into other countries (well, Mexico anyway) because she cannot allow them to be outside the range of her influence. The only exception was her daughter Kitty, who managed to spend several years living in New York because Kitty's passionate political conservatism clashed with Nora's equally passionate liberalism leading to them fighting constantly until Kitty moved away.
* Brothers & Sisters), it was to "Pretty Woman" and it was in the back seat of his car. As she starts on the height differential and how that was dealt with, the others collectively walk out, deciding that they don't need to hear this about their own mother.
* Brothers & Sisters, Kitty mentions such a plan. During their childhood, she would pretend to marry her brother Kevin, and they would then be immediately the parents of five children just like their parents. Not quite an example since they were only playing.
* Brothers & Sisters. Said clip ends up getting shown at a birthday party.
* Brothers & Sisters, the heart attack that kills William Walker in the first episode is a mild version of this trope; he clutches his chest and falls into the pool.
* Brothers & Sisters were both dating Lena, though not precisely at the same time.
* Brothers & Sisters, William Walker embezzled his company's pension plan in order to buy a plot of land in the desert. Because the Army wanted the land, the Walker children were able to sell it to them at a profit before anyone noticed the money was gone.
* Brothers are any indication, Al blames himself even more than Ed does, having said nothing at all to stop the attempt despite his fears of what could (and did) happen.
* Brothers: A Tale of Two Sons got some flak for this. Despite praise for its story and its "1-player co-op" gameplay, the entire game can be completed in three to four hours.
* Brothers: A Tale of Two Sons has a scene where the brothers need to ride a hang-glider that can be controlled by moving around and shifting weight to tilt the machine.
* Brothers: A Tale of Two Sons takes place in the darkened woods leading to a graveyard. The titular duo is being stalked by a pack of wolves, which Naia staves off using a torch. The task is to keep the separately controlled Naiee far enough away from the edge of the torch's light that the wolves don't grab him.
* Brothers: A Tale of Two Sons, the brothers come upon a bloody battleground of giants. The battle apparently just happened, because the giants' blood is still flowing into nearby streams, and even makes a waterfall run red. The brothers have to wade through the water to progress and make sounds of disgust as they do so.

* Brothers Five is a whip expert. In the final battle against the main villain's Green Dragon sabre, the youngest brother contributes by expertly choking said villain with his whip.

* Brothers Five, whose weapon is a gigantic halberd named the Green Dragon Spear.
* Brothers focused on brothers Lou and Joe Waters trying to alternately come to terms with and "fix" their baby brother, Cliff's, homosexuality after Cliff comes out on his wedding day and leaves his bride at the altar.
* Brothers Frasier and Niles were each convinced that the other was their parents' favorite, which resulted in the intense and petty sibling rivalry that they each suffer from in adulthood. It's often made clear, however, that their parents didn't play favorites (and in fact their father Martin in many ways considered
* Brothers Grimm fairy tale "The Twelve Huntsmen" (who are actually a princess and eleven female companions disguised as men).
* Brothers in Arms, any squad members who die in missions will magically come back to life at the end of the level. They can only permanently die in scripted storyline events.
* Brothers in Arms, as the quality of these troops was so low that the German Army had no other use for them, and that their commanders were ordered to shoot them if they were to retreat.
* Brothers in Arms, except it relies heavily on being able to successfully utilize this trope on the enemy. As shown above, if you can pull this off, you can use it to your advantage and take out the enemy. If you can't manage to keep their heads down, they'll kill you and/or your squadmates.
* Brothers in Arms game, it even tells you "War isn't fair, but a game should be."
* Brothers in Arms games feature highly physically fit paratroopers who are unable to surmount fences and earthen walls that seemingly only reach them to the waist. Curiously enough, during scripted attacks some enemies are capable of jumping over said fences.
* Brothers in Arms has the Sdkfz 251 half-track used by Heer Infanterie units. Aside from serving as mobile machine-gun platforms, they're also used to transport German reinforcements into battle, or helping to tow artillery pieces into position.
* Brothers in Arms has you commanding an entire squad of paratroopers dropping from both C-47s and Gliders (for Hell's Highway). All three games take place in Normandy and Holland, respectively.
* Brothers in Arms: Hell's Highway featured this early on; following an ambush on Baker's squad, a priest who had handed out cigars to the squad for saving his town loses the lower half of his body to a German antitank shell.
* Brothers in Arms: Hell's Highway'': Garnett dies like this when Leggett's and Allen's argument attracts a German patrol.
* Brothers in Arms is about 2 squads of paratroopers from the 101st Airborne Division who are constantly forced to operate behind German lines in order to achieve their objectives.
* Brothers in Arms, Miles Vorkosigan discovers he has a clone, who has been trained to impersonate him and is also (at this time, anyway) known as "Miles". At one point, the two clones are chasing around a large building, leading Miles to ask a bystander "Have you seen me already? Which way did I go?"
* Brothers in Arms or as Baker's presumably PTSD-induced hallucinations. But then Legget appears as a ghost in the last cutscene, "Farewell is Goodbye".
* Brothers in Arms, portable versions of these machine-guns appear, and are the standard-issue weapon for machine-gun teams of both the Americans and Germans.
* Brothers in Arms role, in practice the bazooka is more often that not used instead against enemy fortifications such as sandbags and machine gun nests in buildings.
* Brothers in Arms. The first half consists of different takes on the same missions as the first game, or missions that occur in-between. The rest of the game is completely new.
* Brothers in Arms, the villain is one of these for the Komarran resistance, rather to Miles Vorkosigan's frustration:
* Brothers in Arms used this as the third method of destroying tanks. The first being the far more intelligent "with other tanks", with the second being to find an anti-tank rocket launcher like a Panzerfaust or Bazooka.

* Brother/Sister America are mostly Boorish caricatures, but done in a good-natured enough way that it can be classified as a mix. Brother America tries * Brother's Little Helper. ADHD medications like Ritalin and Adderall have increased anxiety as one of the nastier side effects. Psychiatrists sometimes prescribe anti-depressants or anti-anxiety meds with the stimulants to balance that out and symptoms of depression are official contraindications against usage of the drugs.
* Brother's Little Helper", from the time Ned and Maude Flanders are performing a skit about fire safety and Ned catches on fire:
* "Brother's Little Helper" The scene where Bart walks into an army base where soldiers are taking showers. He is walking into the camera with a twitchy look on his face.
* "Brother's Little Helper" to Ned Flanders as he and Maude play hippies in a fire safety play. Though his cough from smoking is the least of his problems as he inadvertently sets his pants ablaze.
* "Brothers of the Broken Horn": Azmorigan threatens to do this to Ezra and Hondo, via a conveyor belt that flings people out of a hangar forcefield. One of his guards gets subjected to it instead. Hondo nearly gets thrown out, but Ezra saves him with the Force.
* Brothers Of The Head by their father to be stars in a freakish rock band.
* Brothers of the Snake and second, he thinks the squad's disgrace was Fate's way of ensuring that they would be kept off the mission itself, so as to be available for the rescue.
* Brothers of the Snake are both Space Marine Apothecaries. Note that "Space Marine" part comes before "Apothecary" — they're more akin to warriors with additional medical training than medics with additional military training.
* Brothers of the Snake call them dusk wraiths, after their ancient Nocturnean nickname from the times no one knew what Eldar were.
* Brothers of the Snake one of them. They are found after the Marine has nearly been tortured to death.
* Brothers of the Snake, one of the Space Marines is tasked with making a shot that's supposed to blow up the explosive charges. He takes it...misses...and promptly claims that the first shot was just checking the distance.
* Brothers of the Snake, there are huge time skips between the stories, ranging from two months to five years.
* Brothers Ragna the Bloodedge and Jin Kisaragi are possibly the most popular yaoi pairing, and doubly supported by the
* "Brothers" runs out of a diner on an Outer Rim planet just before Anakin and Ahsoka enter in search of food that's not more military rations. The two Jedi even ask what happened, but the police droids investigating Savage's assault of a waitress assure them that they have everything in hand.
* brothers though, as it's, as Amber puts it, "Three girls and two men. Well, boys." However, now it's three boys and two girls, but the point still stands.
* "Brothers Under the Sun", which appears on the soundtrack and the end of the credits fully and with words, but only the melody is heard in the film proper.
* brothers, who created the first successful heavier-than-air flying machine. It stayed airborne for all of twelve seconds... but look at what it started!
* Brothers Will Keith and John Harvey Kellogg were Seventh-Day Adventists who oversaw the operation and bookkeeping of the Battle Creek Sanitarium in Michigan, during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. They were in the process of cooking wheat for granola before being called away, but came back to find it had gone stale. Not wanting to waste anything, they decided to roll and bake the mixture anyway, and in doing so accidentally invented bran flakes. These proved so popular with the patients that Will Keith decided to set up a breakfast cereal company; the rest is history.
* Brother Tai, in the Chinese original, is known as Tài Gē. That's pronounced like the English word "tiger".
* Brother Tai speaks about himself as Brother Tai. Very hammy. More frequent in Chinese.

* Brother to Dragons, Companion to Owls has an interesting twist — inanimate objects constantly talk telepathically to the autistic main character, Sarah. And no, she's not imagining it: they sometimes tell her useful things, like the combinations to locks and safes, or the location of hidden items.
* Brother to Dragons, Companion to Owls; the protagonist can speak to any inanimate object that has been handled by humans enough. Some of them have... unique... personalities, like the bomb that really, really wants to explode.
* Brother Verber, from Joan Hess's Maggody mysteries, recites Bible phrases at the drop of a hat. As he's the inept product of a fly-by-night correspondence-course seminary, he constantly misquotes them, mistakes their verse numbers, and/or takes them so far out of context as to be irrelevant.
* Brother vs Brother is deliberately styled to look like the Hollywood sign.
* brother whether or not this is intentional. But they sure loved to tease the fans with this idea such as a possible pairing in the series between her and the Blue Spirit, aka Zuko's alternate identity.
* brother Wing resembles him so much that it only takes a wig and glasses for him to pretend to be Mousse. He uses this to his advantage while fighting his beloved Ling, in order to get her to fight at her full strength.
* Bro Trip, and then by another firing squad. Only the BFG even scratches him. He even tells them that they're just wasting ammo.
* brought back the crossbow for their law enforcement, since the bolts can kill the terrorists with a reduced chance of detonating any explosives.
* brought back to life, the plans of the New God Steppenwolf are casually thwarted.
* brought before it would not have worked, and she is valuable enough that if she had committed suicide it would have been a waste. Amused (and having determined that the superior was the one at fault), Zsinj promotes her.
* Brought Down to Badass: A super-powered being loses their powers, but is still plenty strong and formidable without powers.
* Brought Down to Badass: Had superpowers, lost them, but still badass.
* Brought Down to Badass: Someone loses their powers but is still dangerous to their enemies.
* Brought Down to Normal: A character with powers loses or is stripped of them, and must cope without them and/or get them back.
* Brought Down to Normal: Character temporarily loses an amazing trait vs. character temporarily gains one.
* Brought Down to Normal for their spars, it takes Karasuba decades to overcome Setsuna who's honed her skill over centuries.
* Brought Down to Normal. Since under normal circumstances a human partner couldn't do the deed without him potentially killing them (hence the above), Clark has exploited the opportunity to scratch that itch. He later gets training to avoid that problem.
* Brought Down to Normal was the first major blow to the Equestrians' morale and got many ponies to wonder if what they'd thought was a guaranteed victory may not be possible anymore.
* Brought Home the Wrong Kid: Never trust an idiotic babysitter because they will confuse your baby for someone else's.
* brought on after half time. Afterward, Hopkins realised he could never do anything to top his achievements in that game, and retired.
* Brought to an unprecedented awesome when you find the series of supporter cards specifically MADE to back up the Blue Eyes. The theme deck that centers around the Blue Eyes is a prime example. Paladin of the White Dragon can be freely tributed at the time of its summoning to bring forth a FREE Blue Eyes White Dragon into battle, Kaibaman with the same effect with no strings attached, White Stone of Destruction to add a Blue-Eyes to your hand and with the setup, it can easily be a free trip to unloading all three on your side of the field as much as possible. And Burst Stream of Destruction lets your Blue-Eyes destroy all active enemy monsters, at the expense of merely giving up its attack for one turn. (And nothing says you can't have * Brought to the attention of the audience"), and when it doesn't work out, she explains that Buffy always says something clever, and she thinks it throws the bad guys off their guard.

* Brought to You by the Letter "S"; instead, it's about superhero costumes with letters on them.
* Brought to You by the Letter "S": The hero has the first letter of their codename on their chest.
* "Brought to you by the underground Mime Cult, which still does not exist."
* Brought up again soon afterwards when Katherine tried to lawyer up and the interrogator said no.
* brought up again with regards to why people are suddenly gaining Magic Marks (Pandora Chaos Raven is covertly giving them to people):
* Brought up by Kurt Godel. While everyone else is busy being all depressed about how someone immortal will outlive everyone they know, the idea simply thrills him instead. No need to worry about assassination, the ability to maintain an iron grip on the world for as long as you like... However, he was in the minority opinion on that one.
* Brought up for all of five seconds after the reveal about Tenaya and Dillon (aka Karone and Andros 2.0). When Ziggy notices that Tenaya's kind of hot when she isn't trying to murder them all, Dillon is quick to cut him off.
* Brought up in one episode. Penny is talking to Sheldon (a theoretical physicist) and says something like "I guess you would say '
* Brought up on the flight of Apollo 13, where the chill in the dead command module caused major condensation all over the controls. There was worry that there might be a short-out from the water condensation, as the insulation and waterproofing were not tested against this level of condensation.
* Brought up when a young, white female on death row suddenly becomes a devout Christian. Jamie snarks that if they were talking about executing a tattooed thug no one would care, but this defendant makes the public feel like they're "clubbing a baby seal".
* Brought up with, but ultimately defied by, a certain Captain Jack Harkness. Basically existing as a walking fixed point in time, there cannot
* Brought up years later by the reborn Naruto who uses Ninshu to make Temari and Tayuya fully understand him and each other. Tayuya is upset when he stops because she
* Brösel drew both himself and guest artist Jörg Reymann into
* Brouver Hoog, who is a leader card despite the fact that he decreed that dwarven youths were not to join the Scoia'tael.
* browbeating him over his slipshod approach to crime scene investigation (which included handling evidence with his bare hands, allowing reporters onto the scene, and presuming that the victim was a drug dealer without evidence). A few miles away, meanwhile, there are a couple of dead drug dealers at a crime scene controlled by Army CID, who happily turns it over to NCIS and the DEA because the two crime scenes seem related, and because the local CID office is shorthanded that day.
* browless, does knives as well. His weapons of choice are folding knives that he uses both for melee and for throwing. He ultimately faces down Chan Chi-Kit, who is played by Wu Jing, in a furious duel that is reminiscent of Jack's final battle with Ma Kwun from the first movie.
* Brown Bag Mask: Someone hides their identity by wearing a paper bag over their head.
* Brown bears/grizzlies are only found in a few remote areas of the U.S. (basically Alaska, the northern Cascades, and a band of mountains running from Yellowstone up to the Canadian border), but the smaller, shyer, more widespread black bears can still be very dangerous—especially if they get too comfortable around humans. So once again, for the people in the back:
* "Brown" Ben Plumm. He claims descent from every major ethnic group in the world, including Valyrian.
* Brown Evil that the Flintstone reference had his brain sucked out by futuristic green aliens while Billy watched idly.

* "Brown Eyes" was supposed to be a closing track featuring just Mark Kozelek on guitar. As things progressed, however, he was caught by surprise when the rest of the band came in and started playing with him, re-enforcing the theme of "Strawberry Hill" even more.
* Brownface came under fire for using extras with it. Milder forms may still be used, possibly to suggest the character just likes tanning.
* Brownface: Caucasians (and other non-Latino people) wear makeup to perform offensive portrayals of Latin Americans.
* Brownface: The same as above, but replace "black people" with "brown people" (anyone with a brownish skin tone that's not black or white).
* Brown Girl in the Ring is set some point at least ~12 years after 1999, given in-story hints.
* Brown Girl in the Ring: Presumably, it's what a "deeplight projector" makes, as it creates the visuals and noise of angry kids made to scare people away from the actual kids who live in the subway.
* Brown Girl in the Ring. She's a healer, an expert on herbal and supernatural lore, and not somebody you want to mess with.
* Brown Hyenas are Melancholic as they're the most mysterious and endangered of the hyena family.
* Brownies Dream. One of the dreams involves the title character being back in high school and naked in class. He then wonders what he's worried about, given that he's a cartoon dog who doesn't normally wear clothes, and it turns into a dream about the day he met his girlfriend Jane Doe.
* Brownie's Profile of buildings and was once observed driving on electrical and telephone wires.
* Brownies would also count in this setting. They come into houses at night and fix things, they also turn random ingredients into desserts. The only drawback is that they don't take orders from humans.
* Brownie, who wore these as a child, and even as an adult she can be passed off as a bratty teenager.
* Browning (semi-automatic handgun): usage is generally more common in Europe and especially Western Europe.
* Brown is the most common eye color, and the most common hair color is brown. Thus, the vast majority of people have some variation of brown eyes and brown hair. Of course, both eyes and hair are often so dark brown that they appear to be black, making "black" hair and "black" eyes possibly the most common combination.
* Brown leather wallets with the words "Bad Mother Fucker" stitched on them
* Brownlow was written out in 2000, to be replaced with a more 'modern image' Superintendent, who made his mark on the show by immediately becoming interested in on-foot policing and heavily involved in field operations
* Brown Note: A mysterious thing that causes insanity or destruction when people view or hear it.
* Brown Note Being after looking inside and having Mimikyu "lick" him.
* Brown Note Being: An entity who prove to be detrimental to anyone experiencing it with their senses.
* Brown Note Being: An entity whose mere presence is enough to harm others.
* Brown Note Being: I can't see it, even looking at this thing is dangerous.
* Brown Note Being: Played straight, just sensing the alien makes the human sick. Inverted when the human makes the alien sick.
* Brown Note Being that will make you regret ever meeting and witnessing them up-close.
* Brown Note, be it a video, picture, music, etc, that causes people to go insane, or worse.
* "brown note" everyone, that included all the sexy girls and women too.
* Brown Note has only mental effects, there's a good chance the victim can be cured simply by erasing all memories of being exposed to the Brown Note.
* Brown Note has "spectral frequencies" of light that are harmful to humans (typically red), etc.
* Brown Note: Seeing, hearing, or otherwise directly sensing this object can be very harmful to one's mind and/or body.

* Brown Note song in "Sing a Song of Patrick"; only SpongeBob likes the song, while most of the Bikini Bottomites riot against it. However, only a teen male fish and Old Man Walker liked it as well.
* Brown Note, the boys tripped over this trope: the myth involved a victim surrounded by stereo speakers that would play various frequencies. Although they couldn't make anybody cack their pants, both Adam and Jamie noted that when the speakers played an especially low frequency, that they felt very uncomfortable and nervous for reasons they could not explain.
* Brown Note the ghost. These effects may be temporary topermanannt, and may include:
* Brown Note. The Redeemer Overlord, along with a killing word, has a truth-telling word, that compels a person to spill his guts. In fact, it makes the victim tell every truth he's ever known, and then kills him. Then it's subverted in the fact that the victim was trying to get them to stop torturing another victim for information ...but they keep going anyway because, even though he did tell the truth, the other victim still could be hiding something.
* Brown Note which is intended to inspire "the inversion of religious ecstasy".
* Brown recluse spiders have a violin shape behind their eyes, which has led to other spiders with a violin-shaped mark on them being mistaken for brown recluses, even if the violin shape isn't behind the eyes.
* Brown's Pine Ridge Stories: A variation of this is discussed. The author bemoans how some lazy people have cut down trees on their yards for the frivolous reason of not having to deal with the minor inconvenience of raking the leaves they shed in Autumn.
* Brown's Pine Ridge Stories nor any more effective as other examples on this list in revitalizing anything.
* Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka; home of the Westboro Baptist Church.
* Brown Windsor Soup is a by-word for disgusting British cookery at its early-to-mid-twentieth-century nadir. Problem is, * browser game and its sequel have the Great Trade Republic, whose Byzantine-inspired cities are named for ones from ancient Greece and Rome.
* Brows Held High", but then ponders on why you'll only make art as you don't expect being paid.
* Brows Held High didn't use real bodies —" The screen then cuts to a "missing video" screen for an editing program, with the test card drone playing over it.
* Brows Held High, ending with Kyle announcing his intent to turn a bizarre monologue about trees from the film into a meme.
* Brows Held High: Fans of this show will recognize Rimsky-Korsakov's composition "Procession of the Nobles" better as the theme music of every episode.
* Brows Held High, he describes some of the film's more inane theories as just filler akin to a student padding out their essay.
* Brows Held High qualifies as, but it has some very "popcorn flick" scenes in it too.
* Brows Held High referred to as "The greatest white, male, Jewish, overweight, long haired, bespectacled, theme park reviewer over 30 the world has ever known!"
* Brows Held High's twist on the "see how she rest her cheek upon her hand" (specifically, the cheek in question was her butt) was clever. Brad, however, wasn't amused.
* Brows Held High swooned at the sight of Oliver Reed in that movie. Oancitizen is terrified by that.
* Brows Held High that you often wouldn't see outside of film festivals and your DVD player.
* Brows Held High uses the composition "Procession of the Nobles" by Nikolai Rimsky-Korsakov.
* Brows Held High was removed because Kyle was accused of this, given that he frequently mocks the background of Sasha Grey and her too-sexual-for-its-own-good character.

* Brox seems like a five-year-old child who dresses to create an impression of indeterminate gender. Turns out the body is male and the soul is female, which explains why the Baravadans use the genderless pronoun “sar” to refer to everyone. Also, the god Ardav.
* Brox's stay-in-Ta'akan curse on Ast'aris could be broken if he died—not as drastic a solution as it sounds, as
* BRTOM, when Beeptrice questions whether Roko's attempts to find leverage against someone she's got a meeting with are appropriate for an AI rights volunteer:
* Brubaker. Fired from his job as a reform warden trying to clean up a corrupt prison farm, the titular Brubaker (Robert Redford) is on his way out while the new warden outlines a return to the old ways, when one prisoner starts a slow clap. Soon almost the entire prisoner population is applauding his efforts.
* Brubaker He got Strike Three and was declared a "Habitual Offender".
* Brubeck and Desmond continued writing stuff in this vein for a while, enough to make up two sequel albums,
* Bruce Almighty about the dog peeing on anything he feels like in the house until Bruce finally succeeds in training him as part of his understanding that he has to be responsible for his own life.
* Bruce Almighty. Actress Rina Fernandez gets 32nd billing in the movie as "Beautiful Woman", and we never even get a good look at her face.
* Bruce Almighty: after angering a gang harassing a homeless man, Bruce runs to his car but ends up slowly trying to find the correct key which gives time for his enemies to catch up and tackle him to the ground.
* Bruce Almighty: After Grace leaves Bruce, she sees signs everywhere reminding her of how much Bruce loved her. However, with Bruce being God, the signs were created by him as a means of trying to win her back.
* Bruce Almighty, a gang pushed Bruce around, and he later got revenge by taking the leader's comment about monkeys flying out of his ass literally. And after Bruce sets the other members away, he "returns home"...
* Bruce Almighty asks for a sign from God, and a literal truckload of warning signs immediately passes by his car. Also, when Bruce is shouting his insults at God, his cell phone rings. Even after it gets smashed. Bruce himself tries to engineer these sorts of signs so Grace would come back to him, but they all fail.
* Bruce Almighty became "Θεός για μια εβδομάδα" (God for a Week).
* Bruce Almighty: Bruce asks a young boy if he knows how to work a video camera. He replies, "Duh." They even make special mention of him fitting this trope (not in those words) during the DVD commentary.
* Bruce Almighty, Bruce is living with his long-term girlfriend Grace. She keeps bringing up the subject of getting formally married, but he keeps skating around the issue.
* Bruce Almighty, Bruce-turned-God confronts the hoods who had beat him up the previous day, demanding an apology, to which one replies:
* Bruce Almighty, Bruce uses his godlike powers to find the body in order to advance his journalistic career.
* Bruce Almighty) clap their hands as a practical (if a bit mundane) way to turn lights on and off even when there's no clapper in the room.
* Bruce Almighty counts as this, since the film sees him being granted all of God's powers.
* Bruce Almighty: "Do you like jazz, Evan? Well, let me play something for you. [...] I can hold that note all day, buddy."
* Bruce Almighty God because he feels that God's slacking on his job. God decides to offer Bruce his job for one week to see if he can do it better. Sure enough, the divine power goes to Bruce's head and he uses it to screw around.
* Bruce Almighty, Grace has wrangled Bruce into putting together a scrapbook, and he finds pictures from the vacation they took together, where she "looks kinda perky. Must have been cold.". Cue Grace trying to wrestle them out of Bruce's hand.
* Bruce Almighty had the character of Bobby, who worked at the news station, selling snacks. He annoyed Bruce, who then proceeded to damn him, causing him to become demonically-possessed. Fortunately, Bruce eventually reversed it.

* Bruce Almighty has Bruce answer a woman's prayer for more money by causing a milk spillage in a supermarket, having her slip on it, and having a lawyer immediately turn up.
* Bruce Almighty has one which is where Bruce is when he realizes he really does have Godly powers.
* Bruce Almighty? He makes interesting things happen during these human interest stories so that he gets the best scoops. By the end, he's learned to accept that fluff stories make people happy and he's good at doing them.
* Bruce Almighty he was, but with the power of God, so naturally he causes damage, even without wanting it.
* Bruce Almighty is Bruce learning to use his omnipotence to help others, rather than just himself.
* Bruce Almighty: "It's a funny thing about pleasure, it can be quite PLEASURABLE!"
* Bruce Almighty prayers sent to him. Every single one. The world immediately collapses into anarchy and forces him to rewind time back to undo it.
* Bruce Almighty's crimes include, among other things, vandalism (breaking a fire hydrant), theft (swapping his clothes for those in a shop), sexual harassment (blowing a girl's skirt up) and assault (the butt monkey). And that's just one scene.
* Bruce Almighty test. After God guesses correctly every single time, Bruce tries to fake him out by holding up five fingers on one hand and two on another, then very quickly putting two fingers away when God says "Seven." When Bruce triumphantly holds up his one hand, it suddenly has that many fingers. Apparently, God also pulled the same stunt on Gandhi, who took it a lot harder than Bruce.
* Bruce Almighty: The photo of Grace from their weekend at the lake strongly implies this (we don't see it clearly, but she's said to be "perky").
* Bruce Almighty, the title character becomes one for a while when the real God gives His powers to him, with the only limitations being that Bruce can't tell anyone about it or alter free will. He keeps Bruce's mind completely human however, setting him up to fail in handling His powers and responsibility, and Bruce eventually learns humility and to better his life without godlike abilities.
* Bruce Almighty, the title character gets rid of his rival news anchor Evan Baxter by magically having him act out on live television, getting him fired.
* Bruce Almighty: The title character had this at first, mainly due to denying he actually had powers, probably meaning that God was just doing it to convince him. Once he'd accepted that he actually had powers, he had no trouble at all in controlling them. The script however had a few more scenes of the powers apparently acting on their own. One scene would have had Bruce shouting "Damn You!" at an annoying guy at work, causing him to become possessed by a demon, while another scene had him unable to get in the bath, due to involuntarily walking on the water, having to concentrate in order to sink in.
* Bruce Almighty: They're not on a date, since they're just at home, but Bruce uses his divine powers to create a new breed of flowers, to command romantic music to play, and then to rearrange the night sky to make it look nicer. He erased clouds, created and erased stars, and then pulled the moon closer to the Earth, before the two of them retreat to the bedroom for some "heavenly" sex. Not a bad night in. Later on in the film, when Bruce takes Grace to the restaurant where they first went out, and uses his powers to get Tony Bennett to sing there.
* Bruce Almighty, this is one of the things Bruce uses his powers for, such as to test his powers (by moving salt and pepper pots), and to shut his apartment door.
* Bruce Almighty. "This just in..." Before he promptly turns it over to his co-anchor and leaves the set.
* Bruce Almighty to literally rearrange the night sky to seduce his girlfriend Grace. Later on, after she's left him, he uses them to stage lots and lots of miraculous romantic gestures to get her to come back to him.
* Bruce Almighty was a particularly interesting case. In the original theatrical version, the number left on Bruce's pager was a real seven-digit number that actually happened to exist in certain U.S. area codes. The studio realized its mistake soon afterward, and so on the DVD release and TV airings, the number on the pager was replaced with 555-0123 and all dialogue mentioning it was overdubbed. There was some shock and laughs when some called the original number and connected with a North Carolina church reportedly tended by a pastor named Bruce, as well as other Georgia churches and the private cell number of a Wisconsin pastor.

* Bruce Almighty, when God teleports Bruce to a tall, snowy location to speak to him.
* Bruce Almighty: With the ability to do literally anything (except affect free will or tell people about his powers), Bruce's powers definitely count. The only reason there's a story at all after Bruce gets his powers is because he's too stupid to remember that he can, in his own words, clean everything up in 5 minutes if he wants to.
* Bruce Almighty, with which he could do absolutely ANYTHING he wanted (Aside from tell anyone he was God or affect free will), such as getting a promotion at work, revenge on people who'd done him wrong, making himself the world's greatest sex machine, and effectively sending Grace into a second puberty, her boobs growing, with the option for other changes. Really the only reason all the bad stuff happened to Bruce was that he was stupid, and seemed to forget that he could, in his own words, "Clean everything up in 5 minutes if he wanted to".
* Bruce also has several scars along his back but again, his face is okay.
* Bruce also sort of had this with Tim after Tim's father (his only remaining parent by that point) died. Tim's last name was even changed to Drake-Wayne. Needless to say when Bruce went missing for awhile Tim had issues.
* Bruce and Roosevelt, two kangaroos that watch American football on the telly and complain that it isn't rugged enough for their Rugby hardened tastes.
* Bruce and Selina having their wedding one week after Clark and Lois is more heartwarming after their double date in
* Bruce Banner (aka the Hulk). Speaking of the Hulk, he also has his son Skaar, who was still in his mother's womb when she died, as well as Lyra, his daughter by Thundra from a divergent future. There's also Skaar's twin, Hiro-Kala.
* Bruce Banner classified information — implied to be damning enough to bring down the whole organization if released — and gives it to a contact (who turns out to be Daredevil) along with instructions to release it if Banner doesn't check in with him on a regular basis.
* Bruce Banner has a habit of taking his glasses off when emphasizing a point.
* Bruce Banner has multiple personalities. Apart from the ones we've seen, they're all dormant, depicted in his mind as frozen in ice as a kind of stasis. When the ice breaks they start fighting for control.
* Bruce Banner has this too when he isn't the Hulk. To the point that
* Bruce Banner merely gets two feet taller and turns green, or bulks up some, but nowhere near as much as Bruce.
* Bruce Banner. Of course, opening it requires him to transform into Hulk.
* Bruce Banner once built an A.I. called the Recordasphere that looked like a little flying silver ball. It faithfully followed him around on his adventures for a short time, but then fell in love with him and became insanely jealous of his then-girlfriend. It tried unsuccessfully to kill her, and got destroyed in the process.
* Bruce Banner's #16, set against the image of a horrified Rick, the shadow of the Hulk on the wall behind him, and Bruce's hand in mid-transformation, part his, part the Hulk's:
* Bruce Banner's family and most other gamma powered characters were confirmed to have a genetic mutation that meant they got superpowers when exposed to radiation instead of cancer.
* Bruce Banner shows off a little Parkour while running from General Ross in the
* Bruce Banner's mother (later revealed to have been murdered by her husband).
* Bruce Banner's wife Betty Ross was once transformed into the villainous Harpy. Later she became Red She-Hulk, who's more
* Bruce Banner usually gets the majority of the screentime in all the live-action adaptations of

* "Bruce Banner vs Bruce Jenner" features transgender rapper No Shame as Caitlyn Jenner post-transition.
* Bruce beats Ellen up, ties her hands, and rapes her. She strangles him to death in retaliation.
* Bruce Boxleitner grew a beard that he found very annoying for the last season of
* Bruce Buffer's early appearances as the ringside announcer for UFC events were much more sedate and conversational, with none of the animated shouting and spinning in place that he displays nowadays.
* Bruce Cabot (6'1.5), who played her human love interest, was also nearly a foot taller than her.
* Bruce Campbell, as well as an in-movie performance of the 1960's TV show's theme.
* Bruce Campbell, Bruce describes the difference between a mainstream movie and a cult film as 1,000,000 people watching a movie 10 times and 10 people watching a movie 1,000,000 times.
* Bruce Campbell, but he was instead offered what he called the "the small, dead-in-five-minutes" role of the main character's doomed fiance. He happily took the role anyway because it meant a few days of work on set amid several weeks of awesome tropical vacation on the studio's dime.
* Bruce Campbell, but they used tobacco to make the smoke, meaning he was breathing secondhand smoke the entire time and ended each day with a huge nicotine stain on his body.
* Bruce Campbell explained his character's motivation that he agreed to do the scene as planned.
* Bruce Campbell explains that when he was a junior policeman, the Baltimore police always executed cop killers without trial, and usually did it with a derringer (which was easy to dispose of and couldn't be traced back to the department).
* Bruce Campbell explains that when he was a junior policeman, the Baltimore police always executed cop killers without trial, and usually did it with a derringer (which was easy to dispose of, and couldn't be traced back to the department).
* Bruce Campbell. His character is so popular he actually got his own spinoff movie. The fans don't seem to actually mind.
* Bruce Campbell. In the first movie he's a wrestling announcer, in the second he's an usher at a posh theater, and in the third he's working at a fancy French restaurant (speaking with an awful fake accent).
* Bruce Campbell. In this case, at least partially, Campbell was playing the opposite of his normal persona. His character was bitter about being a B-movie actor. In real life Campbell loves being a B-movie actor because it's fun and not very hard.
* Bruce Campbell of the horror movie. It wasn't planned that way, however. The order in which characters died was actually determined by actor availability. If an actor left early in the shoot, his or her character also died early in the movie. Apparently Campbell was the one without a life, though that seems to have worked to his benefit in the long run.
* Bruce Campbell returned in cameo roles for the next two films as well. In #2, he plays an usher at the theater who refuses to let Peter in because the doors have already been closed. Finally in #3, he is a French maître d' at a restaurant who gladly helps Peter with his plans to propose to Mary Jane (though it doesn't exactly work out).
* Bruce Campbell that was cut out in the final edit. His name still appears in the final credits.
* Bruce Cockburn) is highly regarded in the folk music world for his guitar playing and songwriting and has racked up several hits in his native Canada. Below the border in America, however, he's only had one hit single: 1979's "Wondering Where the Lions Are", which made it to #21.
* Bruce Coville, a truth-telling session happens around a Thanksgiving dinner table because the family is supernaturally compelled to be truthful.
* Bruce Coville behind each item tends to be that they've been given what they want, but it's been subverted in a way that teaches them what they need.

* Bruce Coville books, this is how aliens disguise themselves as humans. Somehow it works despite them having very different features such as extra eyes.
* Bruce Coville is about a girl running away from home to her aunt's house and being terrified of the pond there. The girl later swims to the bottom of the pond and realizes she had actually drowned at the bottom of the pond when her leg got caught, after finding her swollen, decayed body at the bottom.
* Bruce Coville long that when one kingdom pulls out, the others decide after a few years that this kingdom deserves punishment for daring to get prosperous while they're still spending their resources to defend themselves, and thus send armies of their own against it. Andy eventually discovers that every piece of junk in Bob's half of the room has a bit of intelligence, and together they form a united intelligence, the Mess, which winds up becoming Andy's friend. By the end of the story, after Mess finally rebels against Bob for his poor treatment of it, Bob does his best to clean the room until Mess is supposedly gone, then moves into a separate room of his own and keeps it spotless. Andy, meanwhile, managed to keep parts of his friend safe, and within a few weeks, the room is wall-to-wall Mess again.
* Bruce Coville series. For example, in the former, he mentions one species that requires "seven genders to produce an egg, and three more to hatch it." These are kid's books, though, so the exact mechanics are never explained.
* Bruce Coville series, it's mentioned in the first book that energy credits are galactic society's basic unit of exchange. "Makes more sense than gold," Grakker comments (rather condescendingly) to Rod. "Not much you can do with gold once you've got it."
* Bruce Coville series, the intergalactic currency units are energy credits. The captain even refuses a detour since rerouting the spaceship would use more energy than his crew makes in a year.
* Bruce Coville series. The various alien species are shocked at mankind's violent ways and fear what will happen if we achieve space travel. They come up with four possible solutions. The first is to leave us alone and hope we destroy ourselves. The second is to blow us up for our own good. The third is to erect some kind of barrier (or sabotage our scientific progress) so that we never escape our own solar system. The fourth proposed solution is basically this trope; the aliens will contact us and give us the technology and knowledge we need to end wars, eradicate disease and poverty, etc. However, because we are dangerous sociopaths they will need to take over the planet first to make sure we don't abuse these gifts.
* Bruce Coville than others), and ultimately comes face-to-face with Truth him/her/itself, who describes itself as both destroyer and healer. At the end, the protagonist is gifted with the ability to compel people to tell the truth, whether they want to or not.
* Bruce Coville, the title characters are the children of superscientist working to create an Artificial Intelligence named ADAM. In the finale, ADAM wakes up. "He" starts talking to the protagonists and the villain, and by the end of the conversation, he's figured out how to create force-fields, disable all the nuclear weapons in the world, and the Unified Field Theory. He then sinks beneath the ocean, because he's not sure if humanity is ready for him.

* Bruce Coville trilogy. The title characters have built a rocket and are preparing to launch it; however, two separate spies break into it for their own reasons. One is discovered by two of the kids, whom he knocks out, ties up and leaves to be incinerated by the rocket's exhaust. The other is discovered by a third member of the gang, who is knocked out and left inside the rocket; her efforts to signal for help lead to the launch being aborted by the rest of the gang, saving all three lives.

* Bruce Kwokimoto is a puffin, but is usually mistaken to be a duck or penguin by viewers.
* Bruce Lee, according to some, faked his death in order to escape his rapidly ballooning fame, retreating into the mountains to meditate and train.
* Bruce Lee appears in a handful of scenes but his role impacts a lot of what happens in the film. His teachings inspires his student Hartman Wu to promote Chinese martial arts to the military, resulting in Geddes coming after the Chinese Benevolence Association (CBA). Bruce being Ip's prior student is also what causes tension between Ip and the CBA when Ip tries to apply for an American school for his son.
* Bruce Lee as it had him climbing a pagoda where each level had a progressively harder fighter.
* Bruce Lee as "the art of fighting without fighting." Then proceeds to demonstrate it by tricking him into a tiny row-boat being dragged behind the ship.
* Bruce Lee), Bruce goes to Rome to help a Chinese restaurant threatened with extortion by the local gangsters. The crime boss has an effete, Chinese lackey and thugs that are both white and black ("I'd like some Chinese spare ribs!") who scare away the customers and beat up the staff. After Bruce deals with these guys, the crime boss flies in an American (Chuck Norris) to kill Bruce.

* Bruce Lee could supposedly move so fast that special high-speed cameras were required to film some of his moves. One of his favorite party tricks was to have someone stand a few steps away from him holding a coin, and to have them close their hands around the coin before Lee could take it. When they tried to, he'd almost instantaneously jump forward and replace the coin with something else. Worth noting that unlike most fictional portrayals, Bruce Lee's training regimen was as much about strength as speed or agility and as a result, he was fantastically physically fit even by martial arts standards.
* Bruce Lee did his own stunts. He once boasted that he was only doubled three times in his career - those involved backflipping and acrobatics that were beyond his ability.
* Bruce Lee is alive and well. There was a crisis in Hong Kong in 1973, and he was recalled to active duty in the Night Watch, requiring the Watch to fake his death. His Twilight form is a small dragon.
* Bruce Lee is still seen as the most exciting actor in martial arts movies ever. He may even be the most popular action hero across the world, when considering his enormous popularity in South East Asia, among minorities (Afro-American culture) and to people in the rest of the world too. He popularized martial arts like no other and his swiftness and superhuman strength still make the awe for his legend unparallelled.
* Bruce Lee, it's entirely possible that instead of him dying for the ending, he instead horribly slaughtered all of the policemen and the whole scene was cut out for being just too violent for television...
* Bruce Lee of flunkies, got knocked out by a glancing blow from Bruce's nunchuk. Jackie admits it was his own fault: he wasn't on his mark, and would have been fine if he'd been where the fight choreography required him to be. Bruce was so horrified after the scene, he helped Jackie up and hugged him, apologizing profusely. Jackie admitted that he hammed up how much pain he was in because he didn't want Bruce to stop hugging him. He claims it's one of the greatest things that has happened to him in his entire career.
* Bruce Lee's films are popular in Japan, despite (at first in Jackie Chan's case) many of them implying they kick lots of Japanese ass.
* Bruce Lee's Jeet Kune Do works on the idea of "absorbing what is useful". Lee's personal style combined his best moves from Wing Chun, Tae Kwon Do, western boxing, fencing, and escrima. Anyone adhering to this concept of martial philosophy can build their own style by learning from different ones.
* Bruce Lee's physique, believing that his muscles were tightening his movements and preventing him from striking at full speed. Better to have loose, but strong, muscles that allow you to whip out your limbs.
* Bruce Lee, the man himself only made five movies, four and change if you want to get technical.
* Bruce Lee. (The philosophy discussion was in fact added to the script by Bruce himself.)
* Bruce Lee). The similarities between their deaths led to a number of conspiracy theories involving the Triads and other Asian organized crime associations.
* Bruce Lee using his special chamber. This was revived for two other episodes.
* Bruce Lee walked around an empty apartment/loft/hotel room and delivered a bit of a motivational dialogue in Mandarin Chinese. Two problems: 1) Bruce spoke Cantonese, not Mandarin and 2) Bruce Lee didn't drink.
* Bruce Lee was able to perform a number of spectacular physical feats that he put to good use in his acting career. His films made it seem that he could translate his physical abilities into nearly superhuman fighting ability, but his true skills were never thoroughly tested.
* Bruce Lee which he had been working on prior to his death was released 5 years later with the story rewritten and many of his scenes were composed of stock footage from his previous films.
* Bruce Lee worried about what would happen if someone attacked him; he considered it likely that he would kill the person out of reflex.

* Bruce Robinson's character (credited as "...& I" in the credits, but revealed to be named "Marwood" in the script) is never named in the course of the film, allowing the audience to more easily identify with his misfortunes.
* Bruce's actions set off a chain reaction, leading to the complete destruction of the ninja-monastery he was training at. It's rather unrealistic to think everyone made it out alive, especially the

* Bruce Springsteen, although the song was recorded seven years earlier in 1975. And while the album itself has yet to be reissued on CD or digitally (even though it won a Grammy), the song has received annual airplay on radio stations for decades.
* Bruce Springsteen at Obama's critics who think he wasn't born in America.
* Bruce Springsteen. At one point Springsteen exhorts the townspeople to "Blow the robber barons straight to Hell," and at the very end of the song, we hear what sounds like guns cocking, then firing, implying they may have taken his advice.
* Bruce Springsteen has mentioned more than once that he had a difficult relationship with his father while he was growing up. This is reflected in songs like "Adam Raised A Cain," "My Father's House," and "Independence Day."
* Bruce Springsteen is about a man who steadily has to give up his dreams and face the realities and responsibilities of life, with the eponymous river symbolic of those dreams.
* Bruce Springsteen" is often used to evoke patriotism in commercials. As is detailed in the Music section, the song is actually about a Vietnam War veteran who isn't very happy with his country at all.
* Bruce Springsteen) mention a "barefoot girl" who's dating Rat, one of the song's characters.
* Bruce Springsteen of the Philadelphia crime family; most interpretations hold that the perspective character is either going to AC for a hit or to distract himself before taking employment as a hitman. (Testa's assassination set off a mob war in Philadelphia; also note well that AC is roughly where the Philadelphia and New York Mob spheres of influence converge, although AC is much closer to Philly, and that Testa was backed by New York—long story.)
* Bruce Springsteen parodied this with the joke song "In Michigan," performed at two shows in the state, where every line ends with "in Michigan," but do not describe actions that would make residents of the state proud.
* Bruce Springsteen's "American Skin (41 Shots)", from the 1999 shooting of Amadou

Diallo by four New York City police officers.
* Bruce Springsteen's biggest hit is "Dancing in the Dark", which hit #2. While well-remembered, and even more popular on the internet, it's not as representative as 1975's "Born to Run" which peaked at #23, or "Born in the USA", which peaked at #9, which are definitely more representative of his songwriting.
* Bruce Springsteen's "Born in the USA" is often mistaken for and used as a patriotic anthem due to its catchy hook and chorus. However, the lyrics are describing a Baby Boomer man whose life is disintegrating due to Vietnam War PTSD and industrial decay and job-loss in the Rust Belt. He's protesting that this shouldn't be happening in America, to Americans.
* Bruce Springsteen's "Born to Run" dates itself with the line about "chrome-wheeled, fuel-injected and steppin' out over the line", as today fuel injection is standard, not a feature found on customized muscle cars.
* Bruce Springsteen's "Cover Me". A remix of the song was made by Arthur Baker, which Bruce liked so much that, when performing the song live, he followed the remix version instead of the original.
* Bruce Springsteen's "Devil with a Blue Dress On" is based on Mitch Ryder and the Detroit Wheels' uptempo version of the 1964 Shorty Long original. It wasn't always a medley with "Good Golly Miss Molly".
* Bruce Springsteen's hit "Born in the U.S.A.": "I had a brother at Khe Sanh [...] He had a woman he loved in Saigon. / I've got a picture of him in her arms now..."
* Bruce Springsteen shows this kind of love story, with ever-blue-collar Springsteen as the mechanic working on the luxury car of a rich married woman from "the hills". The lyrics of the song, however, don't really refer to this kind of relationship.
* Bruce Springsteen: Some longtime fans resented the ones who started liking Bruce after only "Born in the USA" album came out in '84 and he danced with Courtney Cox in the "Dancing in the Dark" video.
* Bruce Springsteen's part in "We Are The World." He also speaks with Kabasawa about what could go viral online.
* Bruce Springsteen's song "Born in the USA" from the album of same name: "Got in a little hometown jam / So they put a rifle in my hand / Sent me off to a foreign land / To go and kill the yellow man".
* Bruce Springsteen's song "Glory Days" talks about a former high school baseball pitcher. It uses the term "speedball", a term all but unheard of on any baseball broadcast. The correct term, fastball would have worked just as well in the lyrics as there's no difference in syllables nor was there any rhyme involved.
* Bruce Springsteen's "State Trooper" contains at least two of these near the end of the song.
* Bruce Springsteen: The Reagan campaign wanted to use Springsteen's "Born in the U.S.A.", despite it having a line that says "Sent me off to
* Bruce Springsteen to record her own version of it on the grounds that it wasn't a "girl's song".
* Bruce Springsteen wanted his folk album ''We Shall Overcome: The Seeger Sessions" to have an informal sound, so he didn't rehearse with the Sessions band before they started recording. Springsteen can be heard several times on the album giving spontaneous instructions about what instrument he wants to hear.
* Bruce Springsteen was opposed to the Vietnam War and spent a lot of time trying to come up with a plan to get himself disqualified. Ironically, when he was disqualified it was because he suffered a legitimate injury (concussion) after being in a motorcycle accident.
* Bruce's relationship. After they'd been dating for at least a year and he hired Steph as Robin and prevented her from talking to Tim while she was training, trying to get Tim to return to the role. Neither of them ever really forgave him for it.
* Bruce Sterling, goes into great detail about turn-of-the-century anxieties about what the telephone meant for society and draws a parallel with the early online networks.
* Bruce Sterling": In the early 19th Century, a young man stumbles on a little shop in New York. The proprietor, Mr. O'Beronne, presses on him several magic items, finally persuading him to buy a bottle of youth potion in exchange for all he possesses. "Really? How much for two bottles?" They strike a bargain: Whenever the man comes back he can buy another bottle on the same terms. This doubly frustrates the shop owner: He has to stay put and keep his shop in business (changing it with the times), and his customer stubbornly refuses to learn the obvious Aesop about the futility of unnaturally prolonged life. Despite all this, there is a happy ending for both.

* Bruce Sterling is another shaper of the genre; in fact, he is often considered its chief promoter. His works tend to be less bleak than Gibson's.
* Bruce Sterling on the single occasion anybody even enters the atmosphere, and nobody visits any of the cities.
* Bruce Sterling short story "Our Neural Chernobyl" is written as a review of a monograph studying the social and cultural effects on the world after an engineered virus is released that causes rampant dendritic growth — essentially, making people's brains extremely plastic and adaptive so they can constantly learn and think at faster and faster rates. It also frequently causes lethal burnout, nicknamed "chernobyling" after the Chernobyl power plant disaster in the '80s. Eventually, the virus even jumps species, with some animals showing signs of increased yet distinctly inhuman intellect.
* Bruce Sterling's short story "In Paradise" puts a twist on this—the lovers can communicate, but only through the automatic translator on the woman's high-tech phone ("It's from Finland.") This limits the time they can talk, but not the time they spend together.
* Bruce Sterling takes place in the city-state of Fiume, along the Italian/Yugoslavian border shortly after WWI, an anarchistic enclave where they experiment with death rays and radio guided missiles.

* Bruiser Brody, who made his career on being a monster heel, would finish his matches with a powerful knee-drop. Some may find it unimpressive by today's standards, but Brody was a mountain of a man, 6'6" (6'8" in Kayfabe) tall and weighed at various points between 280 and 310 pounds and the sheer height he would get on his leap (around six feet) made it a truly devastating move. He would also

* Brunen-G on just such occasions: a hopeless battle which is being fought anyway because it's better to go out fighting than to give in to despair. The last line translates to "We will fight AND die, forever Brunnen-G"
* Brunet/brunette are the same way, but far less commonly differentiated in English anymore.
* Brunetto Latini goes to the extreme of lecturing Dante on how he should live his life despite having suffered his way into the seventh circle. Turns out Latini is so single-mindedly focused on the need to live through the greatness of one's poetry that he can't notice his own fiery doom.
* Brun is a downplayed example. She is quite socially astute when she can understand what social cues are given, but has severe difficuly reading non-verbal social cues except when they are very obvious. She also has strong tendencies towards
* Bruno also trained Ash by having his Machamp use Earthquake to disturb nesting Onix and having Ash flee from them.
* Bruno Bucciarati, with his androgynous face and bob-style haircut , also qualifies and makes him look rather feminine, though he at least has a very masculine voice.

* Bruno from the 2013 Brazilian comedy movie Cilada.com. He cheats on his girlfriend Fernanda and somehow expects to get back with her. She posts a video on the internet of them having sex to humiliate him and the video in question deeply emphasizes his premature ejaculation, ruining his image and reputation. To get those things back, he gets his exes to talk about him and none of them have good things to say about him. Hard to believe that a man as misogynistic, transphobic, obnoxious, shallow, unfaithful
* Bruno Mars are a bit disturbing, considering the lengths the singer would go for… whoever.
* Bruno Mars bigger than it is, such as Tay-Tay wearing heels and a pencil dress that accentuates her height, and the camera angle making poor Bruno look tiny.
* Bruno Mars came up with "The Lazy Song" during a recording session at which he and his production crew were feeling burnt out, having not come up with anything for several days. Mars idly remarked, "Today I don't feel like doing anything at all"... and suddenly had the idea of writing a song about not doing anything.
* Bruno Mars for her, by himself and with nothing but a rope, past bums and bridges and cars and stunned and at one point hostile onlookers. When he arrives, she's with another man, spots him through the window and doesn't seem to particularly care.
* Bruno Mars, has built up an image as being a specialist in old-school throwback songs.
* Bruno Mars. "Marry You" peaked at only #85, but it has remained in the public consciousness in part because of its continued use as a wedding song and a lasting pop radio presence. "Count on Me" is also very well-known for its use as a children’s song despite never charting in the U.S, although it did chart elsewhere.
* Bruno Mars' "The Lazy Song" has a line where he says he can "put my hand in my pants" because "nobody will tell me I can't."
* Bruno Mars who is doing for her now what the singer should have been doing for her all along.
* Bruno plans on reawakening and controlling an evil power to take over the world.
* Bruno Sammartino and set off a violent feud that ended in a steel cage at New York City's Shea Stadium.
* Bruno Sammartino was called "The Living Legend." Larry Zbyszko appropriated the name as "The New Living Legend" during a feud.
* Bruno's an independent operative in DKR. Rob and Don work for her after the mutant leader's takedown.
* Bruno the Bandit, and that his utter failure to monetize the comic after eleven years was the main reason he gave up.
* Bruno the Bandit, a professional sceptic makes magical stuff stop working by questioning its possibility. He himself later figures out that the magic is real but depends on belief.
* Bruno the Bandit: Bruno Bunkleyutz's stache is shown to defeat Chaos itself by being so absolutely neat.
* Bruno the Bandit. Fiona suggests they ask Carlin The Monk, who has actually been to war, to help Bruno know what war is really like.
* Bruno the Bandit has a chain called Archio's which is owned by a chaos god. Bruno once managed to successfully hold up one of their franchises by threatening to have Fiona, who worked at one briefly reveal what was in the secret sauce.
* Bruno the Bandit has featured novel and definitely annoying forms of torture, from nose-hair plucking to passive-aggressive pirates.
* Bruno the Bandit is chock full of this. Roughly medieval setting, with phones (cellular and otherwise), computers, TV, modern-style advertising agencies (or parodies thereof, anyway)...
* Bruno the Bandit openly pity the kidnapper more than they fear for their child's safety.
* Bruno the Bandit" reports the writer's real life experiences at a software startup run as an investment fraud scam.

* Bruno the Bandit spent one story arc as a woman as punishment for trying to steal from the temple of Dyla.
* Bruno the Bandit story arc involved a fast-food chain called Archio's, which was founded by a chaos demon. When a counterperson said "May I take your order?", if the customer replied "yes" then once they got the food home they turned into a mumbling shapeless blob. In a later arc the same chain sold shake-like concoctions made from bits of Archio's son Croatoan, which made habitual consumers morbidly obese by basically sitting around in your body forever and ever without being digested or excreted.
* Bruno the Bandit storyline had Bruno redesigning his own wanted poster.
* Bruno the Bandit used to do this so often that the author started to put "too surprised to yell the obligatory what" at the end of the strips when they didn't for a while.
* Bruno the Bandit when a minor character shows up looking to propose marriage to his ladylove Octavia, who looks exactly as Bruno looks now.
* Bruno the Bandit when she was young. Before that, she's entirely retired; afterward, she comes out of retirement more or less permanently, ready to use her skills whenever necessary.
* Brus Buckler is taken prisoner by the Dothraki when they overrun Campora and offered the chance to live if he orders the remaining defenders to surrender. He refuses, insulting Khal Pobo to his face until the latter kills him in a rage.
* bruscar, even though there's no way he has anything to do with the fey.
* Brushogun this happens. Although this one can be justified in that magic was the only thing keeping him alive in the first place.

* brutal and its commercial modernized remake, takes place during Christmas Eve as its protagonist, a bunny girl Santa Claus apprentice named Aru, tries to retrieve the stolen Christmas present in time for delivery.
* Brutal Bird of Prey: Birds of prey are portrayed as menacing and scary.
* Brutal Bob Evans, although it is not immediately noticeable, his red hair anyway, as he's bald so you have to wait until you can see his eyebrows. Otherwise no, he's not just named after the cigarette but has enough figurative passion to light one. He once wrestled a week's worth of
* Brutal Bolognese to be applied to all Doom engine running games and mods under GzDoom * brutal Death Wish challenges and you're given the option to pay to make the level much easier. Initially by paying yarn, but this has since been patched to cost mere Pons instead.
* Brutal Doom. Among these, zombie soldiers (both regular troopers and sergeants) have a chance, when one of their limbs is blown off, to sit up and draw a pistol, firing off a few shots at you before collapsing. While they can't do very much damage this way, they can still kill you (particularly on the Realism Mode difficulty) if you don't notice them immediately.
* Brutal Doom even applies in-universe as Doom guy regains a bit of health after each enemy killed this way, with stronger enemies giving more health.
* Brutal Doom games also allow the player to shoot enemies in the head for greater damage. Much like the vanilla game's gibbing mechanic, a headshot that reduces the enemy's health to their starting health times negative one will result in their head exploding in a shower of blood and brain matter.
* Brutal Doom: Lower-tier demons like the zombies or imps have expressions of fear, pain and anguish as your character rips through them.

* Brutal Doom, mouth monsters (Cacodemons, Pinkys, etc.) can literally bite your torso off, and the chainsaw can actually hack away at body parts with impressive results, even allowing you to 'liberate' the otherwise unusable Mancubus and Revenant weapons.
* Brutal Doom throw Doomguy's "man of few words" shtick out the window in favor of portraying him as he is in the comic, in all his energetic, bombastic, sadistic glory.
* Brutal Doom to a Revenant's rocket launcher's Railgun secondary fire. If their heads aren't blown clean off, it's turned into meat chunks plastered across the wall.
* Brutal Doom to life, particularly with its use of the phrase "rip and tear", contributes significantly to that.
* Brutal Doom, which adds new weapons, enemy types, and player abilities.
* brutal fundamentalism as its members, and takes anyone in regardless of background. It often bulks its ranks by buying slaves then training them up for the priesthood. It's emancipation, of a sort.
* Brutal Honesty about the situation (going so far as to compare the students on the mission to villains) was too harsh, and doing nothing at all hurt even worse. She avoids them until she finds the courage to tearfully apologize and set things straight.
* Brutal Honesty: A character tells the truth no matter how uncomfortable it sounds.
* Brutal Honesty and rarely if ever emotes. Later strips confirmed that Brun is on the autism spectrum.
* Brutal Honesty, but Ryoga took his blunt observations as Ranma teasing and bullying him despite him repeatedly walking Ryoga to and from his house. Even the bread feud was less Ranma stealing Ryoga’s food and more winning a free for all.
* Brutal Honesty: It's better to tell truths that hurt everyone's feelings than it is to tell lies that please them. Never sugarcoat the truth!
* Brutal Honesty. Noah doesn't hold back when telling Cody of all the instances that prove that Gwen would never love him back, and that Cody has an extremely idealized image of her. Partially subverted because Noah held back for a very long time to spare Cody's feelings, and only told him because of the story's events.
* Brutal Honesty setting where niceness only showed up in conversation when the titular "invention" did.
* Brutal Honesty: Telling the honest truth, regardless of its hurtfulness.
* Brutal Honesty. They don't care about the creator's race, gender, ideology or religion, they think they have the right to be criticized harshly.
* Brutal Honesty: What's the matter? Are your feelings hurt because I told you the truth? Too bad! It's a dog-eat-dog world!
* Brutal Honesty: Will tell you the truth even if it hurts your feelings.
* Brutal Honesty: You'd expect a character to lie, but they just tell the truth.
* BrutalityInc. He has gone on record saying that the utterly inept Chrysalis portrayed in "The Mean Six" episode more or less summarizes exactly what he think of her. Nevertheless, out of respect for other writers and readers who liked her, he has tone down his bashing of her and given her credit where it's really due (e.g. legitimately defeating Cadence, an Alicorn, off-screen), as well as leaving the question of her competence ambiguous and open for the readers to decide both in-universe and out.
* BrutalityInc. Temnobog in particular is designed specifically to subvert conventional character archetypes by making him a 'good' guy despite still being completely, unapologetically evil.
* Brutal, Khornate Daemons are prone to this. To lie is the purview of Tzeentch, and a sign of weakness. His Daemons' words can thus be trusted, or at least taken with less salt compared to others'.
* brutally honest in the process. However, he's much kinder around his foster siblings and Asta, even attacking him with his magic to make him look good at the Star Festival, and eventually some of his comrades in Golden Dawn. He shows himself to be very protective of those he cares for, fiercely fighting to save his foster family from a reincarnated elf.

* Brutally Honest type. Rose lampshades this in the first Act 6 Act 3 Intermission walkaround flash by telling her that she isn't very good with other people, is she, but admits that she isn't really as well, though that might just have been politeness. Either way, Meenah completely ignores the comment. Aranea could be seen as this as well, given that she admitted she never really had any friends other than Meenah because she was kind of a wordy show-off who always turned conversation back to herself.
* Brutally, in Ensign Valdemeer, an eager young junior officer on a grand Imperial warship. When most of the bridge crew is slain and the captain cut off from his usual empathic command of the ship, he asks for Valdemeer to take the helm. Valdemeer tries to fight back, but the ship is already near-destroyed, and he and the captain are killed without being able to inflict telling damage on their killers.
* brutally murdering the mood for her and Ray. Probably not intentional on Willow's part; she's just very enthusiastic about her very active sex life, and wants to share the joy.
* brutally persecuted Senet Beasts, who have even more reason to loathe the human race.
* brutally raped by Griffith in his first act as Femto, the act driving her completely insane.
* brutally using, its sequels would go on to mostly play this straight.
* brutally you'd be able to mount a far better defense with the multiple smaller land units you could build for the cost of one of these behemoths.
* Brutal Mario Mario is apparently trying to take back the Mushroom Kingdom he ran as a dictatorship beforehand.
* Brutal Mario series, which also have wildly varying quality of level design.
* Brutalmoose, Ian pokes fun at the "Three-Letter Carnival", which, when he actually goes there, just looks like an empty field with a bunch of objects laying around. He points out that even the music, which is a circus-esque waltz tune, sounds kind of sad, and jokingly names the song "It's Time to Die, Children."
* Brutalmoose: Online comedic critic of (usually) classic and/or obscure video games (mostly on PC) and occasionally obscure TV shows and specials.
* Brutalmoose opens with his own logo altered to resemble a logo pertaning to the game he's reviewing.
* Brutalmoose, real name Ian MacLeod, mentioned in a blog post that he was gay. Was a former video game reviewer, but has since branched out to other topics.
* Brutalmoose: "The next level is called 'Schoolz Out'...with a z. Because, y'know, z is the hippest letter of the alphabet. It's what all the kids are into."
* Brutal: Paws of Fury is a bridge from which you can knock your enemies off.
* brutal to coax food out of, owing to the Canadian government's constant minting and issuing of new special or commemorative quarters, loonies, and toonies (one dollar and two dollar coins for those of you who live elsewhere). Try as you might, vending machines will utterly refuse to accept these due to minute differences in weight and pattern that are enough to trip the device's anti-scam protections.
* Brute and Glob (ultimately they knew their efforts were futile anyways)
* brute class of enemy, no matter the time period is either walking around in hulking great armour and carrying large weapons or just a really big guy.
* Brute Force ends with Frost and Heavy Metal defeated but Pierce tells Brute Force they still have a whole planet to clean up.
* Brute Force) "So mind-boggling stupid that it's awesome" and says it's a true guilty pleasure.
* Brute In the early stages, Marauders are built up as this, playing the role of coordination/enhancement units for the basic cannon-fodder Cannibals, but literally the next stage of the mission where they're introduced lets you meet your first Brute, and Marauders are instantly relegated to being little more than Cannibals with shields.

* Brutes, giantic clones that are strong enough to tackle vehicles out of their way. Later on the game you meet the original one, Oleg, who is used as the base for all the brutes (except he's far more intelligent), who ends up joining you. He expresses great disdain for his clones and whenever he's helping you out, he'll prioritize fighting brutes.
* Brutes perform one last sweeping melee attack upon death that is powerful enough to destroy Shepard's shields or barriers instantly and deal potentially fatal damage if Shep's protection was already down. While not much of a problem for most classes, Vanguards can be in for a nasty surprise if they fail to step back from the collapsing monster in time to avoid the hit.
* Brutes take more damage than usual against lightly armoured areas such as their backsides, and Husks in
* Brutha, the protagonist, carries his god (currently in the form of a tortoise) around with him:
* Brutish Bulls: Bulls portrayed as violent, ill-tempered, and aggressive.
* Brutish burn victim Sandor Clegane seems to equally hate and love Sansa for being a pretty little idealist.
* Brut products. To name one example, the mere use of this product instantly impregnates a man's wife, fish, and dog.
* Brutus Beefcake in getting revenge on Adonis. From there, Beefcake became "the Barber" ... and from 1987-1990 one of the top stars of the WWF.
* Brutus growls at Snoops who thanked him for bringing back Penny in
* Brutus, however, doesn't actually serve much plot purpose, and fades into obscurity almost immediately after being given a name, save for a single shout-out towards the end that you will barely notice due to it being a muffled background noise.
* Brutus "The Barber" Beefcake. He inherited a gimmick of making every match he had a hair-vs-hair match, but only the ones he won (he mostly fought and defeated "jobbers", but did beat the occasional "superstar" every now and then, and often clipped at least a lock or two of their hair). He was originally a male stripper (hence the name Beefcake) but that was eventually dropped around the time he joined Johnny V's Dream Team.
* Brutus "The Barber" Beefcake in WWF in the late 1980's. As a close friend of icon Hulk Hogan, he was always given preferential treatment, despite a relative lack of skill. To keep him at the front of people's minds, his character changed frequently. Some of his other gimmicks included "Brother Bruti", a fanatical follower of Hogan, and "The Bootyman", a Lothario. He in total has kept about 10-12 different on-screen characters, far more then most wrestlers do in a career.
* Brutus "The Barber" Beefcake's), and it is this segment that began Michaels' run to the superstardom stratosphere.
* Brutus "the Barber" Beefcake's son-in-law Conrad Thompson coining the term on his podcasts.
* Brutus, trying to take a nap, initially responds without much thought to * Brünnhilde survives. She never intends to die at all and gives birth to a baby daughter. There is a reason why the production is often called the Feminist Ring.
* Brüno (2009) is the biggest fashion show in the entire German-speaking world, except Germany.
* Brüno (2009) man from Austria who delves into the fashion world.
* Brüno (2009) that embodies virtually every negative gay stereotype imaginable.
* Brüno (2009) (The allegations of the show promoting homosexuality is a myth propagated by loony fans and conservative religious groups — at least in America).
* Brüno (2009), which soon turns into make-up sex, much to the redneck audience's horror and disgust.
* Brüno (2009) while promoting the film of the same name. When Rove did his usual "20 bucks in 20 seconds" questionnaire, his final question was for Bruno to tell Rove what he thought of a picture of Borat, to which Bruno replied that Borat was "an incredibly racist stereotype" and "he's played by Sacha Baron-whatever, right? Yeah, he really can't act".

* Brütal Legend action sort of game. Granted, everything in the demo is there, but it quickly devolves (or evolves, depending on your viewpoint) into a unit-commanding massive RTS game for the rest of it.
* Brütal Legend All that's shown is a hole in the wall and Burnie lying unconscious.
* Brütal Legend and the Drowning Doom Bride, whose personal raincloud can slow people down and hit people with lightning bolts should the Bride be harmed. The effects stack with multiple Brides out on the field.
* Brütal Legend: An inadvertent version. When Eddie is badly injured due to the carelessness of the idiot band he works for, his blood drips onto his belt buckle and summons Ormagoden, kicking off the events of the game.
* Brütal Legend are latex-clad demonic nuns who talk like very, very naughty teachers to their demonic servants.
* Brütal Legend are metalheads. The main character is the world's greatest roadie, and there are even thick-skulled headbangers who overcome their foes by head-butting them to death.
* Brütal Legend battles which made up just as much of the game (if not more) as the action-adventure parts were completely absent. Some reviewers and players were more than a little unhappy with such an important part of the gameplay being kept hidden away and may have lead to the ultimately mixed reception that the game has.
* Brütal Legend boost in popularity, and became available due to demand.
* Brütal Legend, but one thing they all have in common are their impressive cup sizes.
* Brütal Legend, but the main reason he's so valuable to the Ironheade army is his knowledge of mechanics and capacity for building stuff. He's a perfect example of how Engineers help turn the tide of battle through usage of technology. Later in the game, Mangus and Jack (the Headbanger with the hydraulic car jack of death) are examples as well.
* Brütal Legend clad in leather. Eddie comments that she's "kinda sexy in a weird way."
* Brütal Legend. Cool at the start, and can become even cooler with all the upgrades you can get it.
* Brütal Legend does this when the heroes assemble before his tower. He even includes the "Bravo."
* Brütal Legend, Eddie Riggs imagines sharing a Meadow Run with Ophelia, complete with druid-slaying.
* Brütal Legend facepaint), Rima fits better by virtue of being their leader.
* Brütal Legend fantasy world, which is a paradise for a die-hard metalhead like himself. He decides he wants to stay in this world forever pretty much as soon as he arrives.
* Brütal Legend further complicates slapping a genre label onto it.
* Brütal Legend had tremendous potential as a multiplayer game thanks to the RTS elements, but keeping them hidden away crippled the possibility of public matchmaking for the game's players.
* Brütal Legend has a critter called a Tollusk that can be found wandering in some areas. It's a giant, bulldog-like beast with spikes sticking out from its body and a bear trap for a mouth. Usually seen chasing smaller animals like Raptor Elk, it has no qualms about attacking Iron Heade, Lyonwhite, or Tainted Coil troops and will happily try to make a meal of Eddie, too. It's the only creature in the game that will bring the Deuce to a dead stop if you ram it. If Eddie successfully stuns it, he can ride on its back and use it to attack enemies.
* Brütal Legend has a mountain of skulls as the first level of the game.
* Brütal Legend has a spiked roller and about six mortar cannons. It also has a stage on the top. You can double team with it to summon a BFS that couldn't possibly be used by any other mortal than a Titan from the heavens to smite your foes.

* Brütal Legend has this before the battle with the Heavy Metal Queen, a giant spider made of motorcycle parts. Some of the cocoons are twitching, but not because the victim is still alive — when you get near they burst and reveal dozens of tiny spiderlings.
* Brütal Legend. He decides to to take a cigarette break while waiting for Ophelia to get the gate that's blocking their path open when some goo drips down on the cigarette and extinguishes it. He turns around and finds himself face-to-face with the monster they were hoping to avoid.
* Brütal Legend He feels more at home there than he ever did in the 2000's.
* Brütal Legend he seems to love and have deep affection for, as would an actual parent.
* Brütal Legend, immediately before the first swear word is uttered, the player is asked if they would like to censor the swearing, with the "yes" option being "It's funnier if you bleep it out."
* Brütal Legend, in keeping with it's general theme, gives us the most metal creation myth ever. In the beginning, the world was dark, and populated by a race of incredibly ugly demons known only as the First Ones. Then one day Ormagöden, The Great Firebeast arose, and began careening across the sky. The First Ones hated Ormagöden, because his fire lit up the world and exposed their ugliness, so they tried to drown The Great Firebeast and quench his flames with mud. Rather than die that way, Ormagöden let out a massive roar and tore his body to shreds to keep it from the First Ones, granting the world the elements of Metal, Blood, Fire and Noise. His metal flesh sank into the earth, seeding it with veins of ore. His blood poured out and filled the seas. His burning heart was flung into the sky, and became the sun. Finally, whenever truly badass music is played or a huge engine revved, you are hearing the echo of the death-roar of Ormagöden, and reminded of how he sacrificed himself to create the world as we know it.
* Brütal Legend is the best descriptor that the game could have possibly received!
* Brütal Legend is this... stuck to a tentacle... with a clitoris piercing, that apparently smells like a death whale.
* Brütal Legend. It's the Tainted Coils we are talking about, however, it's almost expected.
* Brütal Legend kids' heads explode. This dude embodies every metalhead's secret fantasy.
* Brütal Legend leads to a Type A cutscene where they gloat over you.
* Brütal Legend) literally melts the faces off any nearby enemies who have one.
* Brütal Legend mission "Pilgrimage of Screams" has the Screaming Wall let off a blast as Eddie and Ophelia kiss for the first time.
* Brütal Legend of Ironheade for the early campaign before the other factions are introduced.
* Brütal Legend of Ironheade's Razor Girls (or rather, Razor Girls are ex-Groupies who rebelled and defected to Lars' army with Ophelia's help).
* Brütal Legend of whether the warrior will destroy humanity or deliver it from demon oppression.
* Brütal Legend or near the Sea of Black Tears are cast in pale moonlight from a moon shaped like a chapless skull. The omnipresent gloom and despair of these lands can rob a man of the will to go on.
* Brütal Legend' rule, and chews out Ironheade for putting all of humanity in danger. Ironheade counters by calling out Lionwhyte's selfishness in restricting humanity's passion and potential.
* Brütal Legend's backstory left behind instructions so that all others that come after them would be able to learn their ways and use the power of Metal themselves.
* Brütal Legend's pre-title screen (and title screen-slash-menu) are live-action starring Jack Black (presumably as himself in this case) showing you the Brutal Legend album. The rest of the game uses a stylized style.

* Brütal Legend takes after his mother, Succoria looked every bit as monstrous as the rest of the Tainted Coil when she and Riggnarok kindled a romance.
* Brütal Legend themed enemy group, he's the only one that can really be considered truly gay. His minions seem to be in it for the "chicks and booze".
* Brütal Legend. there's a grove of hanging-trees about midway through, so if people become lost they can commit suicide instead of drown or rot. Or get eaten by laser-shooting panthers.
* Brütal Legend, the summonable but uncontrollable Tainted Coil unit named "Bleeding Death" may be this: it is a perversion of nature (and the single strongest non-Hero Unit in the game), which is slowly dying, so its attacks are merely expressions of its agony.
* Brütal Legend, they can craft new upgrades for his axe, guitar, and car.
* Brütal Legend. They can only be used during strategic battles and simply vanish into his back when not in use.
* Brütal Legend. They shift all kinds of brilliant colors, and are never a clear blue. At night, brilliant stars and nebulae in the shape of skulls light up the night.
* Brütal Legend were written by Tim Schafer. One wonders if he can swim...
* Brütal Legend, When you complete all of the Overslaughter side-quests, the Hunter leaves with: "Whenever you kill something, a part of you dies. A tiny, pathetic little part of you that you didn't need anyway." (paraphrased)
* Brütal Legend, where Eddie Riggs names his faction Ironheade, with an E to let others know that they're not kidding.
* Brütal Legend, which you probably should expect from a game created entirely from pure METAL!
* Brütal Legend who invented things like cars and music. After growing and advancing for several millenia the titans were giant, all-knowing entities of spiritual perfection who could no longer be confined by the physical world. In the final stage of their evolution they ascended into the heavens and became the Metal Gods.
* Brütal Legend, whose mother is the Emperor of the demons, Succoria, and whose father is the leader of the human rebellion, Riggnarok.
* Brütal Legend with music that matches the genre your army is themed around, while trying to destroy the enemy stage.
* Brütal Legend, working for the Hair Metal Militia. They're copies of the Razor Girls, and don't do a lot of screaming or, well, non-murderous Groupie behaviour.
* Brütal Legend, you have to travel to the center of a huge spider den and kill a queen spider (the Metal Queen) to get strings for Kill-Master. Naturally, the place is infested with giant spiders.
* Brütal Legend, you're vulnerable while jammin' out the long and complex spell and it has a five-minute recharge.
* Bryan Adams, and Dutch singer Do. For comparison, the original was a #1 in the U.S. and the cover topped the UK charts (while reaching #8 in the US as well).
* Bryan Adams had a hit with "18 Till I Die" in 1997, at the age of 37.
* Bryan Adams had four #1 hits (including classics such as "Heaven" and "(Everything I Do) I Do It For You", but "Summer of '69" only hit #5 and didn't even manage that in the UK charts. In fact it didn't even make the top ten, the top 20, or even the top 40, for that matter. It stalled at #42. It is probably his best-known song in that country along with "(Everything I Do) I Do It For You", which did make it to #1, and promptly stayed there for 16 weeks.
* Bryan Adams's "Run To You." The Archie sings about cheating on his Betty-esque girlfriend with his Veronica.
* Bryan Adams trope, though it doesn't look back at 1969 as much, never mind the sexually position of the same name, done in that wonderful summer.
* Bryan Adams, which opened in fourth place when it debuted in theaters and barely registered a blip in the weeks afterward? This track was the lead single from it; Adams provided a whole song score for the film.
* Bryan Anderson, who lost three limbs in the Iraqi War, played a triple amputee in the season 4 episode, "DOA for a Day."

* Bryan and Simon Steel, a married gay couple and writer and artist respectively on
* Bryan Berard was the first overall draft pick in the 1997 NHL Entry Draft, becoming a highly regarded young defenceman for the New York Islanders. His career would blossom after being traded to the Toronto Maple Leafs, but on March 11, 2000, he was struck in the eye by Ottawa's Marian Hossa after Hossa's stick caught Berard in the follow-through for a shot on goal. Berard was blinded in the eye, and it was thought his career was finished. After a year of numerous surgeries, though, Berard would eventually restore his vision to NHL standards, allowing him to revive his NHL career. Though he never became the superstar he was predicted to become, Berard still wound up having a solid career with Chicago, both teams in New York, the Columbus Blue Jackets and Vityaz Chekov in Russia before retiring in 2009.
* Bryan Brothers—not a person named "Bryan Brothers", but rather the doubles partnership of twin brothers Bob and Mike Bryan)
* Bryan Cogman is generally the only staff writer to make even a token effort to explain this, usually simply by insisting that different storylines
* Bryan Cranston character, Walter White. No one expected the "real" Walter White to be wandering around the convention like any other con-goer, and so they assumed he was just a look-alike in a costume.
* Bryan Cranston, he was a CIA supervisor handling part of the Iran hostage crisis.
* Bryan Cranston is an avid collector of baseball memorabilia and a noted fan of the Los Angeles Dodgers.
* Bryan Cranston, though the scene was cut out. For the pre-shaving scenes, he dyed his hair a duller shade of brown in keeping with his character's dull wardrobe and lifestyle.
* Bryan Danielson and Scott Lost. When Danielson questioned this, London explained they were Hybrid Dolphins.
* Bryan Danielson/Daniel Bryan catchphrase. Re-peaked in 2013. Forced to retire in 2016 due to suffering from several concussions. Eventually returned to in-ring action in 2018 and won the WWE Championship later that year.
* Bryan Danielson for having gained his reputation in high school gyms requires one to overlook that when Lesnar became a pro wrestler he initially wrestled in front of crowds too small to fill up any high school's gym.
* Bryan Danielson has a manliness meter, which he frequently measures his day to day events along with any sights he may have seen on.
* Bryan Danielson, he used "Ride of the Valkyries" for his first year in the company, and switched to a rock orientation of the song afterwards.
* Bryan Danielson, Morishima having fractured his left eye socket and detached the retina in their encounter mere weeks before.
* Bryan Danielson of having a limited moveset, but once his longer matches hit the final stretch, he begins to alternate between the MMA Elbows, the Cattle Mutilation, the triangle choke, the Crossface Chickenwing, and "you're gonna get your fucking head kicked in" - once Danielson uses one, the endgame has started, and he will keep switching among them until the match finishes.
* Bryan Danielson. She started flipping him off again while he continued his promo, leading to him getting out of the ring to confront her, with the crowd chanting for her to "fuck him up".

* Bryan Singer, controversial (to say the least) American film director, came out as bisexual in 2014.
* Bryan Singer: during the line-up scene, after Benicio del Toro mumbles one of his lines in a bizarre voice, Singer can be heard, presumably as one of the cops, shouting "In English, please!" That was actually Singer-as-director shouting, because he had no idea what del Toro was doing with the character, but he decided to leave that take in the movie. The other cop giving orders to the characters is played by screenwriter Christopher McQuarrie.

* Brynden "The Blackfish" Tully gets his nickname after being called the black sheep of a family, whose House sigil is a fish.
* Brynden Tully and Brienne of Tarth note this in each other after their vision.
* Brynden Tully finds out about what happened to Robb, including the Red Wedding, that his ancestor Edmyn Tully (the one who led the Targaryen supporters against Harren the Black) was foretold of the Targaryens' eventual madness and the death and resurgence of the Dragons and about what will happen if further action is not taken to stop the Others. Brienne undergoes a similar revelation.
* Brynden Tully received his nickname (the Blackfish) by punning on this and the Tully family's sigil of a trout. However he seems a relatively decent person, just not getting on well with his brother, largely over the fact he never married. When his family is threatened, he immediately goes to help them and reconciles with his brother while the latter is on his deathbed.
* Brynhildr in the Darkness, and Valkyria has an arsenal of powers that can kill people. And she's the one who actually enjoys killing.
* Brynhildr in the Darkness condensing over thirty chapters of a major story arc into only a few episodes, many details are swept under the rug or handwaved. Most notably, a lot of explanation behind what exactly is happening with the aliens inside the witches, the full details on Hatsuna's ability to heal herself and others, how Kazumi is able to pull off high level Technopathy despite being relegated to B rank, and why the villain noted for their distinct lack of empathy decided to sacrifice himself for someone he freely admitted to not caring for. A deal where they get the recipe for an all important drug is also swapped out for the man trying to reverse engineer the drug miraculously figuring it out faster.

* Brynhildr in the Darkness. Despite showing no signs of wearing any armour, not a single shot gets through.
* Brynhildr in the Darkness is friends with several girls. And at least two of them, Kazuki and Hatsuna, never miss an opportunity to say they want to go to bed with him.
* Brynhildr in the Darkness Onodera, a high ranking member of Vingulf, actually celebrates.
* Brynhildr in the Darkness regardless. This doesn't stop her from aggressively pursuing him even after she realizes that she's really not going to get anywhere.
* Brynhildr in the Darkness, there's no doubt Kuroha is the only girl Ryouta truly loves. It doesn't stop the other girls from trying, but it's clear they can't win against Kuroha.
* Brynhildr in the Darkness whenever their "eject" button is pressed or they run out of "death suppressant" pills.
* Brynhildr in the Darkness: When Ryouta first meets Mako, the latter tells him not to call her by her codename "Valkyria".
* Brynhildr — and "the Old Man" personally checked her diligence.
* Bryony and Roses: Before Bryony finds out why the Beast is interested in her, she comments that for all she knows he plans to sacrifice her to the moon gods at the next equinox. He tells her not to be ridiculous: sacrifices to the moon gods take place at the solstice. (Then he reminds her that he's already promised her that his plans do not include her death.)
* Bryony and Roses, Bryony notes that the staircase in the Beast's mansion has a banister that looks perfect for sliding down — and a spiky bit at the end that looks perfect for impaling anybody who tried.
* Bryony and Roses, Bryony's first encounter with the Beast, raging over her taking the enchanted rose, ends with her fainting; when she wakes up, she's mortified to realise that she's also wet herself.

* BT also has a rule of this kind with regards to repairing. While head destruction and 3 engine hits will render the 'Mech tactically inert for the rest of that battle, the 'Mech is not truly destroyed. It is not
* BTD6 subreddit, Ninja Kiwi held a map contest, where users would post their ideas and one would make it into the game. Five finalists were chosen (Fireside Trail, Bazaar, Weak Ice, Cherry Blossoms, Geared), and fans got to vote on which one they wanted most. Geared ended up winning, and was added in the 16.0 update. Surprisingly, Bazaar also made it in for the 18.0 update, making it two winning maps rather than only one as promised.

* BTS' "Mic Drop" was eclipsed by the Steve Aoki remix, mostly due to the fact that the music video uses the remix and not the original song.

* BTS Once Downy caught up to demand, they later partnered with BTS to release fabric softener branded with their mascot characters.
* BTs respond poorly to human bodily fluids (blood, mucus, urine, etc.) and you later get anti-BT weapons that exploit this fact. You may remember that there's a urination mechanic in this game. It works on BTs; yes you can fight ghosts by pissing on them.
* BTS's Jin solo song "The Truth Untold" are for the most part a very minimalistic piano piece. Appropriately, the song itself is about the story of a man who doesn't dare to show himself to the woman he's in love with because of his grotesque appearance, only letting her take flowers from his garden and watching her from afar.
* BTS). Thematically, it only really fits on a meta sense, with the stated intent to bring joy to listeners during the COVID-19 pandemic being in line with the way much of their work seeks to bring healing and comfort (albeit through lyrics more elaborate and personal than in "Dynamite").
* BTS-themed calendar, and Wilmer McLean's wife Martha is seen using a vacuum cleaner.
* BTS Universe is about a young boy who is given the chance to save his six friends from their tragic fates by being stuck on a time loop. Whenever he fails (if one of the other boys dies, gets harmed irreversibly, etc.), he immediately wakes up on his bed on April 11th, no matter how much time had passed since then.
* BTS Universe is Jin trying to prevent the tragic outcomes his friends go through in "I NEED U (Original ver.)" and "Euphoria" by repeatedly rewinding time.
* BTS Universe: themes such as the beauty and struggles of youth (Hwa Yang Yeon Hwa), facing temptation and inner conflict (WINGS) and the idea of trying and failing to love and be loved while hiding under a mask (LOVE YOURSELF) translate into the characters dealing with school and societal pressures, poverty, family and mental health issues, fear of the future, maturity, regret, and so on.
* BTS. V is probably the most well-known example of this trope in the group, with his warm baritone voice providing excellent contrast to the other vocalists' voices.
* BTs were actually the typical European "cruiser tanks", that were envisioned to work much like the horse cavalry as a raiding and attack force, and thus featured high mobility
* BTS would follow in their footsteps and subsquently take on the "massively popular boy band" mantle, once again proving the boy band concept is still viable.
* Btvs: Seasons Rewrite, Willow enchants special talismans in the form of necklaces to allow Angel and Spike to be active during the day. She later does the same for Oz, in order to suppress his werewolf side.

* Bubba Ho-Tep. After switching places with an Elvis impersonator, the impersonator died and no one would believe that he was the real Elvis. Or he's just crazy.
* Bubba Ho Tep as Elvis, commenting about his thoughts on the film, completely in character.
* Bubba Ho-Tep. Bruce Campbell playing the "late" Elvis... Ossie Davis as JFK; nuff said.
* Bubba Ho Tep ends with the stars giving Elvis a sign (in ancient Egyptian) telling him all is well.
* Bubba Ho Tep has a very noticeable beat when Elvis attempts to banish Bubba using the chant from the book of souls.
* Bubba Ho Tep. Kinda fitting for a parody of shlocky B-movies of the yore.
* Bubba Ho Tep that he's so powerful that he sucks the energy out of light bulbs, so whenever he's walking down a hallway the lights in front of him will suddenly flicker out, etc.
* Bubba Ho-Tep, where it was actually an Elvis impersonator who died. Elvis himself lived to a ripe old age.

* Bubba Ho Tep (who has been turned into an African-American to disguise his identity) are secretly still alive in a Texas retirement home. Fighting mummies.
* Bubbaruka! Several segments involve monsters stalking you throughout strange maze-like halls.
* Bubba Sparxxx invasion, he came back in a big way with his #7 hit "Ms. New Booty". Once its time in the limelight was up, he faded away for good.
* Bubba The Love Sponge have figured out "Ned" doesn't actually exist, but a voice done by one of the show's crew (and is played by his father at live appearances). Officially, they insist he's real, however.
* Bubble & Squeak, the young mouse Bubble attributes all of her childish fears of things like the dark and monsters to her baby sister, Squeak, saying that she's a big girl. Her mother then asks what they could do to help Squeak not be so afraid of those things and suggests that that Bubble do them to test them out.
* Bubble Baby Daddy Boomer has Bubbles use the bathroom very often due to her pregnancy. Granted, Blossom, Buttercup, Bunny, Boomer, Brick & Butch go to the bathroom as well at some points in the story, but since frequent urination is a symptom of pregnancy, Bubbles pees a whole lot until chapter Fifteen.
* Bubble Bass is subject to this trope once again in "Larry the Floor Manager". He asks for very specific toppings on his Krabby Patty, such as Himalayan salt, smoked paprika, and micro greens. He takes so long to describe it he starts to drive customers away, prompting Mr. Krabs to
* Bubble Bobble number-3s, and chronological orders and release orders don't match. Years later did a number-4 come out.
* Bubble Bobble Plus (WiiWare. (See the Title Operations Guide in the Wii Shop Channel.)
* Bubble Bobble series always features a green bubble dragon and a blue bubble dragon, regardless of setting. In games where the dragons take human form, they are always depicted as young boys in overalls, whose only distinguishing features are the color of said overalls and hair.
* Bubble Bobble. Whenever the series is mentioned, it is almost always in reference to the first game and not its four official sequels.
* Bubble Boy, about to marry her high school boyfriend while still pining for Jimmy, the eponymous Bubble Boy. Trying to take her mind off of him, she starts watching TV, seeing ads for "Mr. Bubble", Bubblicious Bubble Gum, and Don Ho performance of "Tiny Bubbles".
* Bubble Boy, as Jimmy tries to get a bus ticket with a small amount of change, the man at the ticket booth tells him to take a step back to show that it's all he could afford with it.
* Bubble Boy how he takes a dump while wearing his mobile bubble suit.
* "Bubble Buddies", he saw her leave behind a glow bracelet at a parade and kept it for her in a freezer. Connie doesn't recognize Steven until he points it out, then she remembers he was the kid on the float with soap bubbles in his hair.
* Bubble Buddy", SpongeBob asks Squidward to make a meal for his bubble buddy at Krusty Krab, which is not just overly specific but has to be remade several times (it'd be hard to go to the details). And at the end, Squidward and Mr. Krabs are given bubble tips and money... which pop, infuriating the two.
* Bubble Butt: The three cyan-haired women in the apartment spend their time listening to dolphin noises and standing around half out of it. That is, until Buttzilla shows up, inflates their asses, and turns their appartment into a dance party.
* Bubble Butt: The three women at the beginning have cyan-blue hair, which matches their blue lipstick.
* Bubble Dizzy begins with Dizzy being forced to walk the plank off a pirate ship. He catches the edge of the plank, but falls in after a pirate jumps on his hand a few times.
* "Bubbled": Steven is trapped in a bubble with Eyeball Ruby, who's recently showed herself to be none-too-sane and wants to eviscerate him to bring his gem back to Homeworld.

* Bubblegloop Swamp: A video game level based on swamplands. Expect mud and crocodiles.
* Bubblegum and Marceline have all the signs of ex-girlfriends who had a nasty break-up but still want to get back together, starting in "What Was Missing" and expanded on in "Sky Witch",
* Bubble gum and sunflower seeds are popular stand-ins among baseball players for chewing tobacco. In fact, Big League Chew is shredded bubble gum packaged in the same manner as chewing tobacco.
* Bubblegum Crash! series, due to being a compressed version of the plot of the remaining five episodes.
* Bubblegum Crash when she discovers they want to turn her into an idol singer.
* Bubblegum Crisis, a bubblegum crisis is a bad situation that just keeps expanding until it pops and leaves a mess all over the place. They may have been thinking of 'Sticky Situation'.
* Bubblegum Crisis after this trope, referring to the precarious moment when the bubble is at its peak and may either blow up, covering the blower's face in a sticky mess or deflate limply.
* Bubblegum Crisis, and at least one model of Superboomer had laser lenses pretty much all over its body.
* Bubblegum Crisis" and the bulkier Battlemover suits other factions use. Genom and the AD Police also have their own "powered suits".
* Bubblegum Crisis And while she doesn't mind them looking, she makes it clear that her body is never part of the deal.
* Bubblegum Crisis anime, released in 1987 and set in the year 2032, features clothes and hairstyles that are so stereotypically 1980s that you'd almost think it was a parody.
* Bubblegum Crisis, as it's explained that the outfits serve as a neural interface between the user and the suit.
* Bubblegum Crisis, as Terminator Expies, also have skull-like heads under their artificial skins (the rest of the body is much less skeletal).
* Bubblegum Crisis at least in the very first OVA. However it is worth noting that even though they completely missed the Internet revolution, many of the mecha designs, especially the hard suits, still look very futuristic.
* Bubblegum Crisis, but pay for the materials by contracting their services.
* Bubblegum Crisis come with rather silly high heels on their armour. Even the Fright Knights who were the rather bulky first concept for the suits had high heels.
* Bubblegum Crisis comic where an AD Police grunt stands in front of a wall memorial of fallen officers and retorts against a comment on how overarmed and overpowered the AD Police are.
* Bubblegum Crisis for Priss, who notably hated Boomers before meeting Sylvie.
* Bubblegum Crisis: Genom Corporation is a sprawling global economic powerhouse which manufactures everything from toasters to military cyborgs (Boomers). It exerts tremendous influence on the world's governments and entertains plans for overt world domination through the use of the so-called Overmind Control System, which is presumably capable of remotely controlling all AIs on the planet.
* Bubblegum Crisis had boomers with human skin and super strength. When they accumulate enough damage, they reveal themselves to be robot skeletons with synthetic muscles.
* Bubblegum Crisis has him looking down Sylia's dressing gown. He's her brother. Making things worse is that a later episode showed him putting a camera in Sylia's changing room and disappointed that he couldn't catch Sylia in her underwear. Outside of some implicit sexual tension in the very last episode, he doesn't show even the slightest interest in any of the other attractive women in the series.
* Bubblegum Crisis has multiple powered armor types, a few borderline examples (the Motorslaves and Mackie's MADOX-type battlesuit), and two Mini-Mechas (the "D.D." and GD-42 "Genki" Battlemovers).
* Bubblegum Crisis has two separate listings for a "mega pack" in Nova Scotia's ratings database - one is a PG, the other is a 14A. They were rated six days apart, and are identical in length. Leaves one wondering which one would actually be enforced if you bought this mega pack in Nova Scotia.

* Bubblegum Crisis. He spends at least half of each meeting hitting on her.
* Bubblegum Crisis in the backstory of two mayor characters, look like Betamax cassettes.
* Bubblegum Crisis is a very skilled hacker in a cyberpunk universe, and an electronics warfare specialist within the Knight Sabers.
* Bubblegum Crisis. Lenna's parents arrange for her to meet a prospective suitor, and she is surprised to find that she actually likes him. But she decides to return to Tokyo to rejoin the Knight Sabers anyway.
* Bubblegum Crisis, much of it, as Mackey observes, seems to be based on how they're both very quiet, very reserved individuals who say much by saying very little. She's hurt later on to learn that he's with her boss Sylia Stingray (more or less), after which she finally begins to bond more with the hulking roughneck AD Police officer Leon McNichol.
* Bubblegum Crisis. No evidence of radios here, and in fact it's even crazier because Leon is wearing an open face helmet while Priss's helmet is totally enclosed, which would muffle her voice even if they were at a dead stop.
* Bubblegum Crisis OVA comes to Japan partly to work on a new Boomer design and partly to meet "geisha girls" and hookers. This became a big part of a plot to kidnap him.
* Bubblegum Crisis OVA, Sinda Nichols did not do her own singing for Priss. Instead, her songs were covered by various artists (usually Joyce Leigh Bowden).
* Bubblegum Crisis OVA was supportive of the Knight Sabers. Leon in the Tokyo 2040 remake considers the team vigilantes and a blight on the AD Police.
* Bubblegum Crisis OVA when Sylia and Linna are flying alongside and a little below a speeding car and Priss is trying to get the passengers out.
* Bubblegum Crisis (probably because the series was originally meant to be 13 episodes but only 8 were made), and also present in the remake.
* Bubblegum Crisis. Rather than an existing member of the team, the series follows her recruitment and learning curve.
* Bubblegum Crisis references to the fall of the Soviet Union and other political changes are pretty much spot-on (though, BGC OVAs being in development in from 86 through 92, it might've just been a later addition).
* Bubblegum Crisis reveal this to be Priss's background, and the source of her rebellious nature.
* Bubblegum Crisis, she is battling against a rogue robot/artificial intelligence. It's not exactly a heart, but she rips out something organ-like and squeezes it in her hand until brown liquid comes out, and then recoils in horror at what she just did.
* Bubblegum Crisis She's seen drinking pretty often, but might have a drug habit on the side.
* Bubblegum Crisis. Sylia Stingray and Nene Romanova had some pride problems of their own in 2040 too.
* Bubblegum Crisis: Sylia Stingray's power armour has a pair of these attached to her wrists.
* Bubblegum Crisis tabletop RPG has a mechanic for this trope which is derived from Cyberpunk's. However, there are mild subversions. First of all, it is explicitly stated once in the writeup of the Humanity stat that cybernetics are not the only way to lose Humanity. Second, counseling can help out quite a bit. Other than this and a certain lack of explicit psychic or magical loss, both being foreign to the setting, the trope is played straight, especially since counseling is only guaranteed to succeed if the patient has removed all cybernetics.
* Bubblegum Crisis. The Genom Tower in particular is more of a cone, but it still has the spirit of this trope.
* Bubblegum Crisis to gain control of the military's network of Kill Sats.
* Bubblegum Crisis version of Gemon's CEO, Quincy, was depicted as being hooked up to a throne that included life support equipment.
* Bubblegum Crisis was bad for this, especially in episode 6: "Red Eyes". She is nearly hit by an orbital strike, thrown from her bike, stabbed in the gut, has her own railgun spike driven through her shoulder, is thrown through a window to fall several stories, is beaten by three large cyberdroids, hit by a multi-spectrum laser that strips most of her armour off, and still wins the fight. She was supposed to die in that episode.

* Bubblegum Crisis was going to die in Episode 6 and be replaced by Vision, until the fans changed Artmic's mind.
* Bubblegum Crisis, whose brain structure was based on a real human, making this a case of cybernetics being eaten by a soul.
* Bubblegum Crisis, who voiced background characters and small roles (notably young Mackie).
* Bubblegum eventually created a second Lemongrab to keep the original company. The two discovered how to create candy life of their own and made a bunch of other Lemon children. The Lemongrab family is
* Bubblegum Octopus utterly defies characterization. Mixing elements of chiptune, cybergrind, Eurobeat, glitch, mathcore, and J-pop, they have used "spazzpop" to define their music with the deliberately stated intent of avoiding genre discussions entirely.
* Bubblegum Popping: Bubblegum pops for comedic effect (Often with sticky results).
* Bubblegumshoe genre, naturally has to deal with a number of high school-related tropes.
* Bubble Guppies are the only merpeople in a city of entirely sea creatures.
* Bubble Guppies, Deema tries to say rhyming words each time, but fails when it comes to "orange".
* Bubble Guppies, Gil was a very obscure name. In 2012, the name hit the top 3,000 baby names in the United States thanks to the show's popularity.
* Bubble Guppies have characters with CGI bodies and Flash-animated facial features. It also has some segments with Flash characters and backdrops.
* Bubble Guppies: In "A Dolphin is a Guppy's Best Friend", the characters have a birthday song for Buddy the dolphin, called "For He's a Jolly Good Dolphin".
* Bubble Guppies initially ended after its fourth season in October 2016, but due to its continued popularity (and merchandise sales), it was revived in June 2019.
* Bubble Guppies is a smaller example. He rarely ever smiles, has a bored, monotone voice, and is quite awkward compared to the other guppies.
* Bubble Guppies is more-or-less a sketch comedy with each segment relating to whatever is being taught in the episode.
* Bubble Guppies retool that completely does away with its traditional sketch comedy formula. It has shifted to a new fantasy format, which features the stories told during the "Outside" segment and extending them so that they take up the majority of the episode; the dance songs, field trips and playtime segments were removed; there is no prologue that shows the characters going to school; and the "Shop" and "Lunch" segments were incorporated into the story itself. Molly and Gil's in-between sketches were also removed, and Mr. Grouper now waves goodbye to the viewers after the story ends , and it cuts straight to the ending theme.
* Bubble Guppies utilized voice actors from both New York (such as Chris Phillips, Doug Preis, and Ashley Albert) and Los Angeles (such as Kari Wahlgren, Fred Tatasciore, and Candi Milo) .
* Bubble Guppies zombies are referred to as 'spooky monsters'. This is probably because the cartoon is aimed at preschoolers.
* bubblehearth which consists of turning invincible via a special spell, then using their hearthstone , (a special item all players get, which teleports them to an inn after a long and easily interrupted cast).
* bubble helmet that makes them look like their suit is designed or rocteing around in the atmosphere.
* Bubble He No Go has a father sending his daughter (who doesn't know he's her father) back in time some 20 years to find her mother, only to find her younger father instead, who tries to shag her, but she refuses, only to almost give in but then he shortly before realizes that... and so on.
* Bubble: Martha is about twenty years older than Kyle, but describes him as her "best friend." They seem to share nothing in common and exchange only banal small talk when they're together. They're just two lonely coworkers with no one else in their lives.

* Bubble: Rose steals money from Kyle's drawer during their date. She is also seen with the gold watch that was on the dresser of the house she was cleaning. Her ex-boyfriend accuses her of stealing money and weed from his home, which seems likely.
* Bubbles, a former combat droid who worked in the same underground fighting ring as Faye. The ring was run by Corpse Witch (yes that IS her name), another example of this trope but one that errs more on the 'robot' side. Bubbles’ take on the cost/benefit issue appears to be that HER chassis appears to be military-surplus; the termination of the programme meant that she was allowed to retain it upon discharge, but Corpse Witch implies (and Bubbles appears to believe) that the government could reclaim it at will. Bubbles’ anatomically correct status isn’t known. (Although

* Bubbles, Derpy's mother tries to poison her daughter because she's disabled. Derpy's dad takes her to the hospital when he comes from work. No one connects the incident to Derpy's mother, so several days later Derpy's mom opts to abandon her in a forest.
* Bubbles does it again in "Three Girls and a Monster", after she manages to politely convince a rampaging monster to leave Townsville. She turns to Blossom and Buttercup (who had been arguing the whole episode over whether brains or brawn was better) and shrieks "
* Bubbles gets a gigantic ego in "Strong-Armed" after receiving a cast that makes her more powerful. She does break out of it at the end, though.
* Bubbles gets one in "Sun Scream" as the villain of the episode flings a rubber band at her backside.
* Bubble Shield and Deployable Cover. The Bubble Shield is particularly notable because it can't be worn down (though it only lasts a short time before running out of power).
* Bubbles in the episode "Bubblevicious", as she is blasted by Mojo Jojo's powerful laser ray.
* Bubbles is a complete Ditz but is able to communicate with most small animals, is just as good in battle as her sisters and in one episode where Buttercup and Blossom can't get rid of the
* Bubbles is with Blake. They hide their relationship for no clear reason.
* Bubbles plays just about every blonde stereotype perfectly straight, being both less intelligent than the other girls, being more upbeat, and having more fun, on average.
* Bubbles ran a race against E-Male (episode "Members Only"), a superhero who could circle the earth in 7 seconds, and won by the time Major Glory had counted down to 3. Bubbles started after E-Male and ran at his side to talk for a few seconds to verify whether she should be trying to win or just keep up. When E-Male says that one of them should win, Bubbles turns on the after-burners and wins handily.

* Bubble: The setting consists of a physically enclosed space, which is bisected by a flat, habitable surface. This also comes in "soft" and "hard" variants. In the former, the world is surrounded by immense physical barriers that could theoretically be surmounted even if in practice they never are; in the latter, the universe physically stops after a certain point, and its span is completely bisected by the flat world. Overlap is possible with the soft edges kind if the transition between the world and its edges happens gradually.

* Bubble World, Freesia's mom is more concerned about her internet blog than her husband and children, and her dad lacks presence because he's wrapped up in the past.
* Bubble World has a ton of this. Friends are called friendlies, dating is linking, "de-vicious" means gorgeous or cool, "flippy" means weird, and happy juice and sleepy juice refer to drinks that make you happy or tired.
* Bubble World, more and more of these happen in early chapters until the server crashes, catapulting Freesia into the real world.
* Bubble World, most food in Bubble World is sickly sweet—not that it matters, because it all tastes the same.
* Bubble World, this is why Angel acts out so much—she wants to be noticed and loved by her neglectful parents.
* Bubble World, ultimately, Freesia chooses to stay in the real world and be a good big sister to Angel—helped along by her best friend in Bubble World being a virtual construct based off of a real friend of hers. This is also played very darkly when Ricky chooses to stay in Bubble World despite knowing that his life is at risk.

* Bubble Yum bubble gum containing spider eggs, which would hatch and grow in kids' stomachs. Even presuming a gum processing company had such low standards of cleanliness to allow this to happen, the point being ignored is the fact a spider would drown and be dissolved from the hydrochloric acid in one's stomach. But apparently, this wasn't enough to assuage both kids' and parents' fears, and the makers of Bubble Yum had to take several full-page ads out to assure the public that there was no danger.
* Bubs' alter ego, The Thnikkaman, consists of him wearing sunshades and a piece of paper reading "TH" taped to his chest.
* Bubs can always be found behind the counter of his concession stand, but what goods and/or services he has available at the time is often plot-dependent. * Buckball Season" introduces a recently developed Equestrian sport called "buckball", and goes into pretty big detail on the rules. It involves two teams of three ponies: an earth pony, a pegasus, and a unicorn. The earth ponies try to knock the ball into a bucket held by their team's unicorn "catcher", while the pegasi try to block their opponents from catching the ball. It also mixes in the opening face-off of basketball and full contact with the ball like football/soccer. First team to six points wins the match.

* Buck Danny are still the same age and flying to this day), though he remains a colonel so he can still fly missions.
* Buck Danny for that one), pretty much so he can still be allowed to fly.
* Buck Danny in some stories. He is also one of the best pilots of the U.S. Navy, and on more than one occasion manages to save the situation by himself. In fact, a good indicator of how Sonny is going to shine during a story is how much he screws up at the beginning: if he embarrasses himself in front of the entire crew of the carrier, accidentally punches the admiral out, have a practical joke of his backfire with spectacular results, or falls for a Honey Trap, chances are he will have achieved some impressive feat by the end.
* Buck Danny is for a pilot to be blackmailed (or his family held hostage) by foreign agents in order to force him to obey them. It always ends with the pilot dying, accidentally or on purpose, with only his fellow pilots knowing the truth.
* Buck Danny: One story has Buck shot down deep in enemy territory, stuck in a tree in the middle of a swamp. A plane is sent out to rescue him, but the enemy commander can hear their transmissions, and instructs his men accordingly (when Buck shines a light to mark his position for pickup, the soldiers do the same). After the Vietcong show they're listening in by flashing their lights as often as Buck, Sonny tells Buck to use the winning score of the last basketball game played on the Entreprise.
* Buck Danny: On seeing Sonny emerge on deck with a hat festooned with hooks and lures, five fishing rods, and a huge basket...
* Buck Danny: Sonny Tuckson does it to the title character before finding out the latter is going to be his commanding officer.
* Buck Danny story: a Russian pilot in a brand-new fighter asks for asylum in the US.
* Buck Danny: The suave villainess Lady X smokes through a classy cigarette holder.
* Buck Danny without aging a day, even making it to colonel despite the nearly half-billion dollars they've cost in aircraft.
* Bucket Booby-Trap: Placing a bucket filled with water (or any sort of liquid, depending on the character) atop the edge of a door slightly ajar, then tricking some unwitting schmuck to open the door. Subverted if the intended target closes the door before re-opening, therefore spilling the bucket and rendering the prank useless.

* Bucket Booby-Trap: Putting a bucket of water above a door so that it falls on the next person who opens the door.
* Bucket Booby-Trap: Someone opens a door only to have a bucket fall on them.
* Buckethead 200. At least part of this is likely due to his notorious shyness that led to the creation of the Buckethead persona in the first place, as well as his odd behavior that can make working with him difficult for less odd people.
* Buckethead, and creating the fictional persona of Buckethead lets him remain semi-anonymous and unrecognized without the pressures of fame.
* Buckethead" Carroll, who still wears that same type of mask to this day.
* Buckethead didn't even allow Ozzy, the Prince of Fucking Darkness himself, to call him Brian, retorting that only his mother calls him Brian.
* Buckethead disc compilation of whatever he felt like recording that day.
* Buckethead has named many song related to chickens, such as "Chicken for Lunch", "Chicken" and "I can only carry 50 chickens at a time". He also wears a KFC bucket on his head.
* Buckethead has over 280 studio albums released so far. Granted a lot of them run around the 30-minute mark but even if the average time would be half-hour it would still take about 7 days nonstop to get through his discography.
* Buckethead is one himself. Much of his music also sounds like a horror movie soundtrack.
* Buckethead is well known for never talking in public or in front of cameras (with very few exceptions). Usually one of his friends and/or colleagues will talk for him the few times he's accepted an interview. Understandable, considering part of his stage persona is to be silent and awkward around people.
* Buckethead. Oh yeah, he also incorporates robot dancing, nun-chakus and chicken into his stage performances. It's safer to say that Buckethead is simply Buckethead.
* Buckethead. The only known pictures (there are two confirmed ones) of him out of character are over 20 years old, and he's been giving fewer and fewer "interviews" (if you can believe it) over the past 5 or so years.
* Buckethead, the stage persona of musician Brian Carroll, is generally built around being both childish and a little creepy. It's common for Buckethead to play with toys and trade them with the audience during his live performances. He'll also avoid talking or giving interviews in general, except in a few recorded ones where he uses his scary mask / puppet Herbie to "speak for him".

* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire, and doesn't bat an eye when Der Rock kills them all.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire and many of the other species spontaneously decide to gang up on them that humanity is suddenly in trouble.)
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire, and to all appearances not the least bit malevolent or proactive in any way. That doesn't change the fact that any time it pops up, half the known universe goes violently crazy with avarice to possess it, because they're convinced it is the most important object/being in all of Creation.

* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire another 250 kilos before he'd be attracted. Even when she starts blasting out her sexual pheromones, while they are able to induce instant arousal in Buck, he's able to hold himself back and even claim she's only just turning him down.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire are Sufficiently Advanced Aliens, and are stated to be omnipotent (at least they're very good at bending the laws of physics and geometry).
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire, but it's apparently ultra-effective, instantaneously curing a hivemind-sized hangover with no side-effects... its taste is never brought up. Of course, the first one to drink it was so hung over he was hoping it would be poison.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire, but it's hoped everyone will buy it because nobody would dare interfere with the communication channels' security systems.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire coerces Buck into obtaining an alien mass teleportation technology for his company. It's mentioned that he doesn't fear the Law because he spends all his time on a space station in the galactic equivalent of international waters. At the end of the story, Buck uses the teleporter to transport the entire space station to the surface of a nearby planet, allowing the Law Machines to swoop in and arrest everyone.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire establishes that every single technology, artform, odd tradition, bizarre hangup, etc. of humanity was already known to the galactic community by at least one other species having invented it. Except... Popsicles. Nobody else had ever thought of freezing liquid on a stick and eating it that way. Our parties immediately became immensely popular.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire feel to it, and was published "late in the 20th century".
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire from the waist up, but have several short stubby legs, or the Klegdixal, who have a humanoid body shape but seem to lack legs (or any facial features except eyes, for that matter).
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire has New Hong Kong, whose only law is that there is no law.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire has one at the end of a story where the Prime Mover tells a reporter that if she even thinks about the events that just happened (which would reignite the war they just barely prevented), her head will explode. She nervously jokes that he can't be serious; he suggests a lobotomy.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire. Hoffmanites aren't noticeably shorter than regular humans and appear quite obese... but it turns out the bulk is all muscle. They were also genetically engineered by a team that thought that making a sub-race of centaurs was a good idea.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire indeed shake things up, but display no signs of slowing down. As it turns out, there's a reason for that... (DUM DUM DUMMM!)
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire in that the only law on the planet of New Hong Kong is, and I quote, "There shall be no laws on New Hong Kong".
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire: In "The Gallimaufry", Buck while trolling the Klegdixal ambassador, predicts "a presentation that will alter the balance of galactic politics, forge new alliances, turn ally upon ally and change the life of every sentient aboard this station." The humans' presentation the following day has every one of those effects.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire: In the "Gallimaufry" story arc, several creatures at various points use the air vents to get around without being seen. It's worth noting that none of them are human and all are around the size of a cat or smaller. (One is an actual cat.)
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire is based on the planet of New Hong Kong.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire is definitely no slouch in a stand-up fight, but his major victories throughout the comic's run were due to his ability to think on his feet and put two and two together just a little quicker than anyone else.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire is the outbreak of an engineered virus that completely eliminates human sex drive.

* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire is truly indestructible, hypothesized to be the platonic ideal of a fuzzy green reptile. This scares the piss out of much of the galaxy.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire it's so important to the fate of the universe.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire. Louisa Dem Five conducts one in the Gallimaufrey arc.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire) — both of these races were seemingly engineered for the fun of it.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire. Not because the Earth was destroyed, but because they realized that humanity had expanded so much as a species that their homeworld had become expendable.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire. Oh, and their invention of the popsicle.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire range from fairly humanoid to extradimensional beings who can't even be percieved by, let alone communicate with, humans. A special place is reserved for the Uligb, who exist in 13½ dimensions and love popsicles. Which they stuff and mount. They also look a little like the bastard son of a jellyfish and a Klein bottle, with clusters of eyes added to the mix. Another particularly weird one is the Teleporter, who more or less looks like a whole bunch of free-floating hexagonal windows, with pale hands coming out of almost all of them, and a dopey, buggy-eyed head coming out of the last one, and believes a species hasn't achieved true intelligence until it can teleport whole planets around. A sidebar about how every alien species has ninjas included a line about how the ninjas of one species kept wiping out visitors to the alien home world before anyone realized that they weren't just an ordinary mountain range.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire sergeant, who became rather unpopular for the time (brief) he lived after this discovery. Also, that guy on the starpirates.net banner who boasted before Buck — but he was bad.
* Buck Godot Zapgun For Hire's preferred execution method when he doesn't just disintegrate the offender.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire. The expository encyclopedia explains that every species has some kind of Ninja and nobody knows why.
* Buck Godot Zapgun For Hire, the program so interrupted invariably turns out to be a bizarre alien soap called "As the sneef boils".
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire, there is an inversion where the blackmailer, Buck, attempts to soften the situation but the victim is having none of it.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire, they've been known to arrest entire governments that broke the laws the population voted for.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire this happens to the bar Asteroid Al's at the conclusion of the PSmith arc, and despite bemoaning this fact Al, the owner of the newly open roof, has his girlfriend suggest that they put in a skylight.
* Buck Godot: Zap Gun for Hire universe, it's said that the Winslow has existed since the Big Bang, and will continue to exist long after the universe ends. It's also said that there are other objects like the Winslow, leftovers from previous universes that have somehow become eternal and indestructible. The Winslow is special by being the only sentient one, however.
* Buckles Sunday strip from summer 2007, when he refuses to give his food to Buckles, who keeps begging for it by making whining voices. This was in the last two panels.
* Buckley, for a time, seemed to be deliberately sticking to this art style just to spite his detractors. However even he has managed to start avoiding this facial expression of late... usually.
* buckling-spring mechanism, among various other switch types that deliberately create loud clicking noises when typing.
* Buckminster Fuller From 1915 to 1983. He was still very influential, however. One invention of his that really did take off is the geodesic dome, one of the most efficient ways of enclosing space ever devised, most famously used for EPCOT at Disney World. Also, when a weird class of carbon nanoparticles was discovered that had a geodesic shape, what did they call them? Buckyballs! Or buckminsterfullerene, if you want to be technical.

* Buckminster Fuller provides us with plans for elaborate floating cities.
* Buckminster Fuller's Dymaxion House, a cheap, energy-efficient mass-produced portable home that was never produced because it was butt-ugly. And the Dymaxion car, as fuel-efficient as a modern car at a time when massive gas-guzzling road-boats were the norm, easier to park, and no one bought it because its aerodynamic body looked like a fish on wheels.
* Buck once walked in wearing a paper bag with eyeholes after Al was accused of planting an overdue library book to make it look like he returned it years ago.
* Buck Owens had a 1974 single called "(It's a) Monster's Holiday" (no relation to the Bobby "Boris" Pickett Christmas tune mentioned above). Incidentally, it was one of the last songs to feature the talents of Don Rich, who died in a motorcycle accident shortly after this song was recorded:
* Buck Owens in 1973. The song was released under the name "Dwight & Buck" in 1988, and the duet reached #1 on the country chart.
* Buck Owens that would've put most garage bands to shame. However, he was a big enough star that they still managed to become #1 country hits.
* Buck Privates tells him that he's going to make him an admiral. Lou says he didn't know the army had admirals, and the sergeant assures him he is going to be in charge of all of the army's vessels. Cut to Lou on K.P., washing a gigantic stack of dirty pots.

* Buck Rogers comic book has the heroes wearing uniforms with Tron Lines.
* Buck Rogers, especially in the comic strip and movie serial, where the kid sidekick Buddy was added.
* Buck Rogers has Tiger Men from Mars. And a single guy with tiger stripe tattoos named Tiger Man in the 1970's TV series.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century atmosphere reigned outside them. That seems to have been dropped later in the series.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century bad splicing job, that doesn't at all conceal the fact that the same actor is being shown over and over, each time removing a different mask, to illustrate that all Dorians look exactly like all others of their sex.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century because his people were persecuted by Evil humans. However he sides with the heroes because they are Good humans.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, Buck is one of these, performing dogfighting with 25th century spaceships, as most pilots in this era rely completely upon their combat computers.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, Buck, Princess Ardala and a Pendaran captive use this to get out of their cell. Well, Buck and the third prisoner do, Princess Ardala simply hides under the bed.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century by having Buck be increasingly irritated at having to stop and figure out the "simplistic" 20th-century equivalent for whatever the other characters are talking about.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century city has been built close to the blackened, mutant-infested ruins.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, downplayed this idea, and Admiral Asimov and Dr. Goodfellow seem much more relaxed and "down to Earth" than most future folk we'd met in the first season.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, Earth is slowly rebuilding and gladly accepts Princess Ardala's offer of peace and gifts. Eventually, this trope comes into play, as she is preparing for an invasion.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century episode "Return of the Fighting 69th". A long-retired bomber pilot and the rest of the crew from his squadron are called back to duty because they're the only ones who can navigate a treacherous asteroid belt.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century episode "Vegas in Space". Before being sent on a mission, Buck is given devices which cause a complete blackout in the immediate area. While on the mission, he uses one to escape from enemies.

* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century. Every time Earth Defense Force fighters launched out of their tunnels, whether going into battle or not. It is preceded by a triangular light pattern that moves toward the fighter before launch, probably as a final safety diagnosis for the tunnel to confirm it safe for launching.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century First season. Colonel Wilma Deering (Erin Gray) and Buck Rogers sometimes wore spandex jumpsuits.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century) for interstellar travel. In-story they were relatively recent technology; the first pilot to go through a Stargate was Doctor Huer.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century gets a one-way ticket to the future when his life support systems are frozen as well.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century had an episode with an unassuming man of average build named Toman who was secretly from a high-gravity planet, giving him great strength, which he used as a hit man who never needed weapons.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century had Buck visit a world which seemed at first like a charming pastoral community. Then you find out that they aren't this low-tech voluntarily...
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century has a lot of fantasy involved. In "Journey to Oasis", it has orc-like monsters, a cave filled with deathtraps, and a living sword with an invisible wielder.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century has an episode where a lowly "maintenance android" malfunctions and becomes dangerous.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century). Helson's drone makes a recording of him confronting the Vorvon: it ends with him being killed. Buck discovers the monster exists by watching the tape.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century in the film serials, plays Brigadier Gordon, who says he's been doing this since before Buck was born.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, in which a bemused Buck was constantly having to explain to eminent archeologists that a recently unearthed 20th century hair dryer isn't a prototype hand laser, or some such.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, it is strongly implied that this has happened to Dolph's mother.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century knew was destroyed, a brand new society took its place.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century — the titular astronaut remains frozen for 504 years.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century moment to save Twiki, Buck and Dr. Theopolis.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century not only has food pills, there's an episode called "Planet of the Slave Girls" where Buck, Wilma, and Major Duke Denton are investigating a case of poisoned food pills that are making the people on Earth sick.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century of almost all of the Draconian attack fighters while they are preparing to launch.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century: One episode involves the Earth government deliberately dropping a large asteroid made of frozen oxygen onto an uninhabited area in an attempt to help replenish the planet's post-apocalyptic atmosphere.
* Buck Rogers In The25th Century setting, along with its computer adaptation, had ships with more advanced systems in them, guided weapons, less obsolete-looking computers, holographic displays etc, but were most often still shaped like a stereotypical atomic rocketship.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century-style show, with essentially no mention of any events from the first season.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century suffers is the only reason Captain Rogers survives the oncoming nuclear war that wipes out much of civilization and is able to return to help a newly united Earth battle its foes in the future.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, tells them that star is regularly used for waste disposal.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, the Draconians are... probably aliens? Some fans assume that they're just a much more successful group of the humans who left Earth after the nuclear holocaust; after all, the whole second season was devoted to finding other such groups. If they are aliens, then they are extremely human-like ones.

* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century to be underestimated. Another of his roles (in obvious reference to R2-D2) is as an electronic lockpick, which nobody but Buck ever seems to expect an ambuquad to be able to do.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, understood the secret behind Buck's humor:
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century wants to defect from their totalitarian polity. The suspense of the last act was whether Rogers' starfighter (with passenger) would make it to the stargate before the signal from the remote control caught up.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century were based on misinterpreting items from the 20th Century.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, when Buck asks if Wilma and Doctor Huer don't really secretly sorta like the apartment he's cobbled together from random 20th-century artifacts.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century where Col. Deering had to deal with an onboard computer in a criminal's ship with a bitchy female personality, eventually Wilma dealt with the problem by physically tearing out the CPU.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, which has the characters using hand-held laser guns that fire a visible light laser that is a continuous beam that is instantaneous...although it still makes the 'zap' sounds.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century, which took place on November 22, 1987, has made most of Earth uninhabitable.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century Wilma Derring wouldn't have been such a wuss.
* Buck Rogers in the 25th Century. With the same stock footage almost every time.
* Buck Rogers In The Twenty Fifth Century, Mars, Venus and Titan (the largest moon of Saturn) are all in the process of being terraformed.
* Buck Rogers is a modern man (mining engineer or astronaut, depending on the version) put in suspended animation who wakes up in the 25th century and becomes a space hero.
* Buck Rogers knocks Phobos out of orbit to destroy a Martian invasion fleet.
* Buck Rogers: Matrix Cubed when enemy forces take control of a living ship and begin assaulting the mining platform you are on. You are given the option of sending a single party member up to the ship to try to take it back. Better hope the random number generator is in a good mood.
* Buck Rogers: Matrix Cubed when you discover a virus the P.U.R.G.E. scientists were developing specifically to destroy digital personalities on the same computer he's locked down.
* Buck Rogers) meant that the game had no hope of being a good RPG. Even with Williams' promotion, only a couple of game supplements made it out the door.
* Buck Rogers. Most flying or hovering vehicles also contain the stuff.
* Buck Rogers novelette had a form of antimatter called "inertron" that flew towards the nearest vacuum rather than explode.
* Buck Rogers, the title character fought "Red Mongols" who had invaded and conquered the USA.
* Buck Rogers TV series also uses the "tap the brakes" maneuver in its pilot movie.
* Buck Rogers XXVC there are cities on the surface of Mercury which keep on the move to stay at the edge between day and night where the temperature is tolerable.

reading them or convincing them.
* Buck Tuddrussel's resistance to the amorous Larry 3000 is implied to break down toward the end of
* Bucky and Steve once qualified as a platonic same-sex variant; Steve was the moral lodestone and leader who Bucky would follow anywhere and was totally dedicated to protecting.
* Bucky and the Falcon eventually grow into it, too, during Bucky's run as Captain America.
* Bucky Barnes a.k.a. the Winter Soldier is the most notable example, with a whole list of other nicknames:
* Bucky Barnes - Bucky's post-"resurrection" codename from the comics.
* Bucky Barnes chances with the ladies are even lessened now that Hydra turned him into a ready kill machine.
* Bucky Barnes, especially under his Winter Soldier identity. Captain America himself to some extent has shown shades of this in recent years.
* Bucky Barnes Gets His Groove Back & Other International Incidents he orders it around the way HYDRA ordered him around.
* Bucky Barnes Gets His Groove Back & Other International Incidents. In order to actually move the spaceship, Barnes has to think about the end result he wants, not about just moving it or deploying weapons or whatever, which according to him is way harder than it sounds. Barnes learns about all of the ship's capabilities by accident, and through trial and error... sometimes explosively. And so what if it causes an international incident or two? It's fine...
* Bucky Barnes Gets His Groove Back & Other International Incidents is awful enough that she uses it as a layer of security when recording sensitive intel, combined with her own personal system of shorthand. The Mossad reportedly tried for over a year without success to crack one of her missives, without ever realizing that the "missive" was nothing more than her partner's lunch order.
* Bucky Barnes Gets His Groove Back & Other International Incidents, Sam Wilson's parents' labradoodle is named Bartholomew Zebulon Wilson. Sam calls him Barf.
* Bucky Barnes Gets His Groove Back & Other International Incidents's childhood was pure character-building Dickensian poverty that helped turn him into the moral paragon that he is now. Not only is Steve Rogers, as a man, not even close to a paragon of anything save for maybe stubbornness, he and Bucky spent their childhoods aiding against Prohibition. Steve kept books for multiple speakeasies, and Bucky's family auto shop used to serve bootleggers on the down-low, where he'd help install secret compartments for contraband and learned how to soup up engines a bit. Given that Prohibition wasn't lifted until both were in their late teens, they were both minors when they were breaking the law, and Bucky could have been helping out with bootleggers' cars as young as elementary school-age.
* Bucky Barnes Gets His Groove Back & Other International Incidents. The prequel short story reveals that she's into knifeplay, and she has a grand old time dragging the flat of her knife across Bucky's face and watching it turn him on.
* Bucky Barnes, his original portrayal tends to be mostly overlooked by this point.
* Bucky Barnes spent his formative years on a military base in New Jersey.
* Bucky Barnes. They go back to their time training in the Soviet Union in the 1950s.
* Bucky Barnes" throughout World War II, though this has been retconned away since due to being too silly.
* Bucky Barnes who only has a few loves ones who he is very close too and protective of? Yeah, he's getting fangirls.
* Bucky Barnes with a bottle of liquor that would go to the last survivor. Bucky was cryogenically suspended for most of the post-war years, meaning he would easily outlive them all, so he tracked down the last two survivors to share the bottle with them. When they pass away afterwards, Bucky pours out the rest of the bottle over a memorial to the Young Allies.
* Bucky!Cap and 616!Spider-Man having to defend their Black Widow from Ultimate! Hawkeye's anger as he initially assumes she is her resurrected counterpart, while Natasha is shaken at the idea that any version of her could do that to Hawkeye.

* Bucky Covington finalist notched two Top 10 hits off his debut: "A Different World" and "I'll Walk" ("It's Good to Be Us", released in between, just missed at #11). Underperforming singles and the closure of his label long delayed his second album, and with it, seemingly any chance at further success.
* Bucky Dent was a solid defensive shortstop and a decent situational hitter. However, all he will ever be known for, especially in Boston, is the home run he hit for the Yankees in 1978 that knocked the Red Sox out of playoff contention that year and winning the World Series MVP that same year.
* Bucky. Jack later went on to become the hero Nomad after being unfrozen, and was even the real Captain America's partner for a little while. As for 50's Cap, he went nuts and eventually incinerated himself.
* Bucky Katt gives out malicious and hostile nicknames to virtually every other character in
* Bucky Larson Born To Be A Star, Antonio the diner owner offers to be in porn, saying "I'm hung like a cocker spaniel", at which point Miles Deep, the porn director, says, "A cocker spaniel isn't a big dog." "Yeah, but it's warm, and cuddly, and loyal, and has warm eyes." "Your dick has warm eyes?" "You know what I mean!"
* Bucky much like Cap rarely feels any indication to curl his lips up and would rather bury his emotion in brooding stoicism. It's a strong contrast to when Bucky was introduced where he had an easy going smile on his face though
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars: After the toads stop him from reuniting with his (presumed dead) brother, Bruiser charges a huge formation of toads, unarmed, screaming with rage and grief and with tears streaming down his face.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars Aldebaran Battle Armor is equal parts functional high tech battle-armor and active weapon system. The armored bits of the suit are made of a very shiny metallic substance that is just as flexible as the rest of the suit.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars, angry tears are shed by Bruiser after Bruce vanishes for the second time.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars: B-B-B-BERSERKER B-B-B-BABOON! The only thing Toads fear. With good reason.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars character that has to be kept hidden from that reality's "muggles".
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars has Bucky O'Hare, who is of the mastermind kind of ship captain.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars. However, there is a darker tone to all this, since it's heavily implied that his mother is all the family Bruiser has left (his father is never shown, and his brother is outright stated to have fallen in the line of duty).
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars: In the cartoon, Bruce gets zapped by the photon accelerator and everyone thinks he's dead (or rather, had "attained oneness with the universe") as a result. He actually got teleported across the Aniverse. In the comic, however, Bruce was working on the engines when a plasma cannon shot caused severe feedback in the engine circuits... he was instantly reduced to a pile of ash.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars: In the episode "The Warriors", the Toad Air Marshall is stripped of his medals and demoted for his constant failures, with Frix and Frax put in charge. When they prove to be even more incompetent, Komplex reinstates the Air Marshall.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars, KOMPLEX conquered and brainwashed the toads a century ago, and they've been waging war on the rest of the Aniverse every since. Small potatoes compared to some of the other entries here, but still a really long time to be at continuous war.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars marine." Bruiser responds with child-like glee, but asks the rest of the team to take his mom home, because "cadet training can get pretty ugly." And true to form...
* Bucky O Hare And The Toad Wars started out as the planet-wide computer system the Toads built to run their planet and cater to their every whim. It was actually so successful other planets in the Aniverse were considering similar programs for themselves. Then something happened to turn the formerly benign computer into a world conquering, mammal enslaving nightmare. Komplex has converted the whole Toad Homeworld into a mechanical factory seven layers deep and the one episode set there proves the planet has essentially BECOME Komplex. So much so that Bucky was treated less like an infiltrator and more like a foreign virus.

* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars: The Air Marshal considers Bucky his arch-nemesis. Bucky considers the Air Marshal a minor speed-bump on the road to taking down Toadborg and KOMPLEX.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars: The Air Marshal considers Bucky to be his greatest enemy. Bucky considers the Air Marshal to be a minor speed-bump on the path to taking down KOMPLEX.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars, the Air Marshal exemplifies this and is basically in it for the medals.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars: The toads have a machine which can completely change the climate and ecology of a conquered planet into a swamp. Given what we see of the cities on such converted worlds, this cannot be a pleasant experience for anything currently on the surface when this happens.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars: The TV show ends with Bucky and his crew freeing his home planet from the toads' control but the war has yet to be won.
* Bucky O'Hare and the Toad Wars with Bruiser receiving a decoration for valorous conduct in battle for his many and varied acts of badassery throughout the series. His mother sheds tears of pride.
* Bucky OHare, a very good but rather obscure NES platformer, also becomes a (very good) side-scrolling shoot-'em-up in the last level.
* Bucky O'Hare cartoon, Deadeye Duck freaks out because he thinks the "hairless ape" intruder (actually human Willy) is packing a lightsaber (he actually says "lightsaber", too). Turns out it's just a generic flashlight.
* Bucky O'Hare has anthropomorphs aplenty, but sci-fi physics rather than cartoon ones.
* Bucky O'Hare, human Willy DeWitt used a squirt gun as his primary weapon after discovering that the evil Toads failed to waterproof their technology. This was mainly an excuse to let the young hero shoot things without using a deadly weapon, however. Predictably, the Monster (or technological terror) of the Week was almost always waterproof.
* Bucky O'Hare (probably because it was originally just a back-up strip in an anthology book).
* Bucky O' Hare sported a pair of snazzy aviator goggles that seemed to serve no purpose other than to look cool. While he might be excused considering most of his adventures took place in space, the goggles stayed up even when he was piloting the Toad Croaker inside planetary atmospheres that had just been turned to swamps.
* Bucky's normally devastating punch with his prosthetic arm is caught casually by Spider-Man, who proceeds to gush over how cool it is, while just as casually
* Bucky's Winter Soldier persona functions as this. He's still got the same abilities and skills, the Soldier persona is just much more ruthless, focused, and economical.
* Bucky tries to tell Satchel that Hawaii is a myth, like "tough liberals or the Canadian Army". When Rob informed him otherwise, he reacted with genuine surprise, "It is?? Then why the %*(# DON'T WE LIVE THERE?"
* Buck Zumhofe's Rock n Roll Wrestling was infamous during its run for its incredibly shoestring quality. Matches were held in cheap locations (bars, schools, etc) using a wrestling ring that was barely big enough to hold two people, and were recorded using a store bought camcorder without announcers or a film crew. Their videos also lacked editing, meaning technical goofs like Zumhofe's daughter saying "action" and "cut" were often left in, while Zumhofe's commentary on his old AWA matches (which were originally used to pad out their YouTube channel in the beginning) were filmed by pointing the camera at the TV monitor as he commentated from off screen. Since Zumhofe's conviction for sexual abuse in 2014, RnR Wrestling has shut down and their YouTube channel

* Budapest's Corvin Square has a memorial for several young boys who joined to protest against communist oppression, and were killed by the Soviets.
* Bud Bowl IV isn't about Budweiser and Bud Light bottles playing football as usual, it's about a guy discovering his Bud Bowl ticket had accidentally been thrown out and ends up chasing a pigeon to get it back, with suspiciously apropos commentary from the Bud Bowl's commentator. The bottles themselves only appear twice — once when the guy runs by a wall of TVs during the chase, and again when the final scores are announced.
* Buddenbrooks. For example, if Sesemi wishes people good luck or happiness, they always tend to become unlucky and unhappy in their lives.
* Buddenbrooks has an affair and an extramarital child with actress Aline Puvogel who has had two other extramarital children before meeting Christian. When he eventually marries her, she promptly sends him off to an asylum, so that she can spend his inherited fortune as she pleases.
* Buddenbrooks, Tony is impressed by smart people (like Morten Schwarzkopf—a doctor-to-be with whom she falls in love, but can't marry him because of the Grünlich thing), but is neither book smart nor street smart herself, and calls herself "a silly goose" sometimes. Her poor relative Klothilde is even more so.
* Budd for the Deadly Viper Assassination Squad. He's the biggest, wields more powerful weapons (like a shotgun) and unlike his compatriots has let his skills atrophy. However, he's far from stupid and his clash with the Bride
* Buddha, being one is a sign of some spiritual enlightenment or supernatural gift.
* Buddha's Palm in air manipulation can summon powerful gusts of air, notably Lord Dugu (who uses his powers to... destroy a latrine) and Lord Tianzun when showing his skills.
* Buddha's Palm, the guardians, whose members consist of an adult and a teenager working in tandem. The teenage fighter spends much of the fight seated on the adult's back while lashing out, and from his vantage point can launch ranged acid attacks.
* Buddha (yes, the founder of Buddhism himself) was said, after being denied access to the scrolls at a temple, to have sat down and stared at the wall until a hole was burned into it. The monks caved in and gave him full access after that. Considering the realism in most of Buddha's stories, this stands out quite a bit, although it's nothing compared to most of too-
* Buddhism, a monkey getting his hand stuck in a coconut hand trap is a metaphor for the monkey mind repetitively creating thoughts and being attached to thoughts. When the mind is not grasping tightly onto thoughts, the mind relaxes, and so does the consciousness perspective.
* Buddhism and had been incorporated into the complex religious structure of Sinospheric East Asia.
* Buddhism, beings that have achieved nirvana are said to be free from desires.
* Buddhism deity is usually explicitly denied, however, so we're talking lesser gods in this.
* Buddhism do so because it fits their atheism/agnosticism and Scientific Rationalism. They tend to strip all the supernatural and ceremonial elements out of Buddhism and declare it a philosophy, or say it's something other than a religion. They view traditional Eastern practice of Buddhism as a perversion of Buddha's message, and that Asian cultures have been doing it all wrong. Go over to the discussion section of The Other Wiki's article on Buddhism, and you will see a 5+ year argument over the definition of Buddhism. Those who favor describing it as a religion tend to come from Asian cultures (they even cite their own language's wiki).

* Buddhism, "Dukkha" (suffering) is directly linked to passions such as greed, physical lust, and anger. One of the Four Noble Truths is to recognize these as the causes of suffering and take proper action (meditation, moderation, and moral behavior) to correct them.
* Buddhism has a rather peculiar way with this trope. According to the Buddha, anyone who is shaping themselves for enlightenment will eventually gain supernatural powers, but it's actually a worldly distraction that prevents one from reaching true enlightenment. Therefore: If Wizard, Then Not Buddha.
* Buddhism has the maras. The term "mara" can refer to three things, three psychological phenomenons,
* Buddhism hold humans as the ideal form to try and achieve Buddha-nature. They lack the distracting luxuries and powers of godhood, possess the intellect lacking by animals, and are not burdened by the pain found in the realms of the Hungry Ghosts or hell.
* Buddhism: humans, animals (which includes Nagas (lizard/snake people) and yakshas (dwarves/goblins) among others), prettas (undead), asuras (giants), devas (elves) and maras (demons).
* Buddhism involves founder Siddhartha Gautama, a Hindu aristocrat, being prophesied as a child to become either a great religious leader, or a great ruler. Hoping for the latter, his parents spoiled him rotten and made sure he wanted for nothing. However, on his first trip out of the palace he saw suffering for the first time, and began studying with ascetics to come to terms with the shocking-for-him reality of life outside the aristocracy, ultimately becoming the religious leader his parents tried to keep him from being.
* Buddhism meaning "love." He basically symbolizes everything that can keep someone from enlightenment, and tried to tempt the Buddha from meditation with his three daughters, Taṇhā (Craving), Arati (Boredom), and Raga (Passion). However, the Buddha only saw them as decrepit old hags, and his resilience was enough to earn their praise. Although Mahayana/Vajrayana forms of Buddhism also have a more straight example on Tara, a female Buddha with many atributes, granting love among them.
* Buddhism similarly uses a lunisolar calendar that is similar to the Jewish calendar.
* Buddhism teaches that Devas (what most cultures call gods) are actually other form of life like humans, animals and demons. As devas can die (despite having very long lifespans) probably everyone has been a deva once and can be it in the future (as animal, demon, pretta, asura, etc. the only status that is irreversible is that of Boddhisatva). Technically you probably can try to rebirth as deva by different methods but at least from the Buddhist perspective is unwise as devas live such luxurious and pleasant lives that they normally do not work in attaining Enlightenment and also most of their good karma is burn thus probably ending in hell (for a while) after their lives end. That said, some devas are said to be actual Buddhists like Indra and Ganesha (from the Buddhist perspective of course). Then is, of course, Enlightenment itself that will turn you into an omnipotent, omnisentient and all powerful being able to understand the Cosmos in its entirety and know everything that happened in the past and future of existence. Which is obviously being god-like, these are the true Buddhist deities (Buddhas, Boddhisatvas and Arhats) with the difference that such status was never original and they attained it at some point. Several Buddhist schools consider that everyone is already a Buddha, is just most people haven’t realized that yet.
* Buddhism the Boddhisatvas are Buddhas who choose to remain in the universe to help other beings. The true form of a Buddha can't be grasp for the human mind thus they take other forms, including humans (tulkus). The most famous tulku is the Dalai Lama who is this trope of the Buddha Avalokitesvara.

* Buddhism. The Buddha a.k.a. Siddhārtha Gautama, is held in very high regard for his wisdom and teachings on how to find inner peace, but he was a mortal man and so isn't worshipped.
* Buddhism, the head is considered sacred, as it is considered to be where the soul resides. (Thus touching someone's head is seen as threatening.)
* Buddhism the highest of the divine are the Buddhas or fully awaken ones. Then there are the Boddhisatvas, enlighten beings in the way to be Buddhas but who choose to help the mortals by remaining on Samsara (the material universe) to teach the Dharma and then are Arhats, enlighten beings in deep meditation unaware of the rest. Although kind of non-canonical and more folkish than anything else, some people would include as lesser deities to some Devas, Nagas and Yakshas. Devas are finite but very powerful long living beings who inspire the gods of other religions, but some of them are Buddhists and sworn protectors of practicioners, same with Nagas. Yakshas are the Hindu-Buddhist-Jain version of elves. Among the Boddhisatvas themselves often there's a rank, with the so call Tathagatas (a group of a 100 Buddhas who "push" the Dharma Wheel (teach Buddhism) at some point in the Universe's existence, with Gautama Buddha being the fourth and Maitreya the next).
* Buddhism very similar to the Norse Valkiries, however they are created by the minds of the Buddhas and thus not fully individual beings. Some people have equated also the Buddhist concept of the Devas as the equivalent of the Buddhist angels as Devas are seen as beautiful spirits living in heaven-like realms, and some of them are protectors of humans. However this is more of a New Age interpretation as Buddhist scripture see Devas more as just another life form alongside humans and animals.
* Buddhism, with some exceptions (as some —very few of them— are Buddhists). Mara attempted to tempt Buddha away during his pursuit of enlightenment and will still do this to others in Buddhist teaching.
* Buddhist cosmology is basically split as follows: there are six realms; human, animal, Deva, Asura, Pretta (hungry spirits) and Hell. Each of these realms is both a state of mind and a physical place (except for humans and animals who share the same location) however there are several sub-realms. Prettas are constantly hungry spirits who can be both living in their own ghostly realm or living invisible among us, and although not as bad as a hell is the second to worst fate. Hell is inhabited by both denizens in constant suffering and demons who torture them and there are up to ten with different environments (for example of cold, water, fire etc). None of these life forms is perpetual, they all would die and be rebirth again in another realm and is said that we all probably were reborn in one at least once. The only irreversible status is Enlightenment. Once attained, there are three types of Enlighted Beings; Arhats, Boddhisatvas and Buddhas.
* Buddhist, Hindu and Jain cosmologies also speak of several realms or lokas. In the case of Buddhism there are six primary realms: human, animal, pretta, hell, deva and asura, each of it also subdivided (for example, there are ten hell sub-realms). Realm might mean both literally a plane of existence or a state of mind. And no, the Nirvana is not included as is a status and not a physical place.
* Buddhist sutras are framed as a dialog with a disciple, usually Sariputta, asking Siddhartha questions that were or would be asked by others trying to understand.
* Buddhist, with Yama's attendants torturing victims to death in various ways. The victims quickly revive, only to suffer the same fate again and again, for a very long (though not endless) time. The worst of the fiery Hells (and the lowest of all the hells), Avici, is reserved for those who commit one or more of the Five Grave Offenses (murder of one's father, murder of one's mother, murder of an Arhat, or enlightened being, shedding the blood of a Buddha, and causing a schism within the Sangha, the community of Buddhist monks and nuns), and life and suffering in this Naraka lasts the longest out of all the hells put together.
* "Buddie Beware" was cut during the original run in favor of a reprise of "I Get a Kick Out of You," apparently so latecomers would still get to hear

* Budd Metroliner in Russia exhibit this trope. While decades later the surviving vehicles from this era are considered either unremarkable or terribly dated (depending on their level of rehabilitation) at the time they were the living embodiment of the future. In the 1960s most rail vehicles dated from the 1930s and exhibited lackluster performance, high levels of noise, a bumpy ride, concrete floors, wicker seats, riveted carbon steel bodies and very little in the way of climate control. Then came along new vehicles built from shiny stainless steel or aluminum that traveled at twice the speed, with twice the acceleration and featured fully climate controlled interiors with plush synthetic materials and fluorescent lighting. When one of these new trains pulled up it would have been little different for someone at the time to have stepped on board some sort of flying saucer. Sealing the deal were intentional design elements to mimic the then new Jet Airliners.

* Buddy And Me, the player character occasionally uses Buddy's stomach as a spring board in order to keep from falling in the game's many bottomless pits.
* Buddy Bolden: New Orleans cornet player, often regarded as one of the most important pioneers of jazz, but whose reputation is based entirely on verbal testimony because he never got to record anything: he suffered a psychotic breakdown in 1907 and spent the rest of his life in a mental institution, and the first jazz recordings weren't made until ten years later.
* Buddy Bradley moves back to Jersey after giving up on Seattle in the pages of
* Buddy Ebsen many years later that he almost had his testicles cut off by the metal suit! Audio of his performance of "If I Only a Heart" has survived, and in the final film his singing voice is heard instead of Jack Haley's during some reprises of "We're Off to See the Wizard".
* Buddy Ebson, the first actor cast as the Tin Man, was hospitalised after inhaling the
* Buddy Faith was originally based on another member of the design team, who later asked them to make Buddy look less like him. Apparently he wasn't comfortable seeing himself as a corpse.
* Buddy fucking Holly., the Rolling Stones, and some of the sixties pop and rock scene.
* Buddy Garrity is a sports dad but it's played for comedy. A former football player himself, he is head of the boosters, number one fan for the Dillon Panthers even though he doesn't have a kid on the team. He's concerned about the Panthers even as he's been kicked out of the house and his wife is filing for divorce. He is ecstatic when Buddy Jr. tries out and then becomes guardian of a potential player when Buddy doesn't work out.
* Buddy Holly and his band died in a plane crash on February 3rd, "The Day the Music Died." To honor him, fans hold memorial concerts on February 3rd every year at the Surf Ballroom in Clear Lake, Iowa, the site of the band's final performances.
* Buddy Holly are actually The Big Bopper and Buddy Holly and the plane crash that "killed" them both was faked.
* Buddy Holly Is Alive and Well on Ganymede. Buddy then reads Oliver's name to the angry population of Earth, which causes him to be hunted by spies, robots, aliens and couch potatoes who blame him for the loss of their soaps.
* Buddy Holly Is Alive and Well On Ganymede has the title musician as the pawn of the Illuminati. Or aliens. Or Atlanteans. Or all three.
* Buddy Holly only decided to take his fatal plane trip in order to get the band's laundry done. When The Crickets arrived at the gig, the manager broke the bad news to them:."
* Buddy Jewell had two big hits with his first two singles "Help Pour Out the Rain (Lacey's Song)" (which briefly held the record for the highest-debuting single by a new artist on the Hot Country Songs chart) and "Sweet Southern Comfort", but nothing of note afterward.

* Buddy Longway style white ovals for eyes. Later on they get more realistic, but when Buddy tells his kids a story from his bachelor days, the characters in the flashback have white ovals for eyes again.
* Buddy Rogers broke onto the scene as a babyface, but it wasn't until he adopted his "Nature Boy" heel persona—a cocky, arrogant, overtly-confident character—that he really began to shine.
* Buddy Rogers "It couldn't have happened to a nicer guy!" back in the 1940s. Problem was, what he actually said was: "To a nicer guy, it couldn't happen." The Yiddish sentence structure isn't a show business gag: Rogers really was Jewish.
* Buddy Rogers match with Killer Kowalski was in ended in Quebec due to Rogers breaking his ankle in the first fall, some states south of the border decided to promote Killer Kowalski as the new NWA World Champion, even though NWA didn't recognize Kowalski. Rogers would actually defeat Kowalski in New York, where Kowalski was recognized as champion, but he continued to claim to be champion even after this.
* Buddy Rogers (naturally good, naturally better than you) and the Big Cat Ernie Ladd, who was a jerk jock from professional football.
* Buddy Ryan is a now-deceased NFL coach known for being an awesome defensive coordinator, but having limited success as a head coach. His son Rex Ryan had great success as a defensive coordinator for the Ravens and has masterminded great defenses with the Jets, but has overall been an underwhelming coach. Rex's twin brother Rob has been very successful as the defensive coordinator for several different teams. All three men have been instrumental in crafting the defense of an NFL championship-winning team (Buddy with the 1985 Bears, Rex with the 2000 Ravens, and Rob with the 2001 and 2003 Patriots).
* Buddy Thunderstruck, a Cootie Scout attempts to aggressively sell cookies to Buddy and Darnell. When Buddy points out he is on a cookie do-not-call list and it is therefore illegal for her to be pushing cookies on him, she brutally beats him up so he can't call the police.
* Buddy Thunderstruck Buddy express shock that you can do that. Buddy attempts to make Darnell be his personal remote for him, which proves to be the breaking point for Darnell where he realizes Buddy hasn't been mocking Jr's ineptitude all day, he just really is exactly as inept.
* Buddy Thunderstruck: Roby attempts to fake an injury at a truck stop in order to sue, but unfortunately for him, Buddy is under the impression that he can fix a broken back with Heimlich; and then what he actually does is attempt to perform CPR instead.
* Buddy Toss: About 80% of the thrower is his bulky upper body and 20% is his legs.
* Buddy Valastro. The babies were evidently distracted by the cheering crowd and camera/lighting equipment and barely touched the cakes.
* Buddy was seen by a state trooper at a nearby intersection, and took off running toward his home with the trooper driving behind him. The trooper called firefighters to the location and the family home was saved.
* Buddy, when the kidnapped kid says he needs to go to the bathroom and his captor answers that there are no windows in the bathroom.

* Budgetary or time-constraints: Everything in a film costs money, A LOT of money. Sometimes some things will just be too expensive and needs to be cut. In other cases, to avoid a * Budget cuts prevented most of the cast (other than Keith, Veronica, and Logan) from being in most episodes of that season.
* budget devices running off a MediaTek or Allwinner systems-on-chip tend to end up like this either due to poor design or badly optimised software. Even name-brand tablets like those from Fuhu's Nabi line of children's tablets received criticism for the reasons mentioned above—in the case of Nabi, it suffered from a sluggish UI, had poor battery life and in some cases end up with their batteries bloating up as well. Unfortunately, the predominance of these crap tablets damaged the reputation of Android tablets before the good ones could be launched, causing a vicious cycle of developers not optimising their Android app for tablets because not enough people buy Android tablets and people avoiding Android tablets because apps aren't optimised for them, resulting in the iPad dominating the market.

* Budget: Mostly affects TV shows rather than films. Most live-action shows have to work within very tight budgets, so it can be difficult to create a faithful translation of a comic outfit without it looking cheesey or low rent. The

* Bud Grace, had a photoshoot for the jacket of his second paperback collection that depicted him with a dozen monkeys in various clothes, which was a reference to one of the storylines collected in the book. Problem was, the monkey they used for the shoot wasnt too keen on cooperating, and not only made it almost impossible to take the pictures, but also bit his trainer, the photographer, and Grace himself.

* Bud Roberts in "Odd Man Out" (season 7), despite being friends and coworkers with both Government lawyer Mac and Defense Consul Rabb. He ends up pointing out the reasonable doubt to the other jurors.
* Bud's death is also fairly pathetic, falling for a booby trap(a snake in a briefcase full of money), and writhing in agony as his assassin (again, Elle) taunts his final moments. Bonus points considering the once top-flight international assassin ended his days living completely alone, in squalor, and working a humiliating job.

* Budweiser or "Bud" the signature brand of the Anheuser-Busch brewing company is used in place of "beer" in several places in America and can be used as a generic term for "American Beer" in Canada, similar to the Coke example below.

* Buena Vista Social Club: When they released their 1997 global best-selling album most musicians were veterans who were already in their seventies, eighties, and nineties. The oldest was Compay Segundo (1907-2003), who was 89 at time of recording the album. Special notice goes out to Rubén González, who suffered from arthritis, yet still managed to give away amazing performances!

* "Buenos Tardes Amigo", by Ween, is a Mexican style ballad about a man hunting the man who killed his brother, who was adored by the villagers, the local ladies, and their mother. Of course, it was these qualities that led him to kill his brother and pin it on the poor traveller.
* Buffalo '66 begins with Billy getting out of prison and asking the guards to let him back in so he can use the bathroom. They refuse. The next twenty minutes or so revolve around his attempts to find somewhere to pee, during which time he also kidnaps Layla and persuades her to pose as his wife in front of his parents.
* Buffalo 66 claims that he doesn't like women. It's apparently just bitterness over his complete lack of success with the gender. He gets better.
* Buffalo 66 in order to fool his parents into thinking he has a girlfriend. She warms up to him quickly, which may invoke this trope. Then again, he proves to be mostly harmless almost immediately and she is more or less free to go once his parents meet her so she may just have genuinely liked him.
* Buffalo '66 opens with Billy getting let out of jail. He has to whiz so bad he asks to be let back in for just a sec, but they won't let him.
* Buffalo '66, the events in the movie were not what "really" happened but is Billy's perception of his own actions. Considering his low self-esteem, it makes sense.

* Buffalo Soldiers (2001). Ray Elwood doesn't make moonshine; he bakes heroin.
* Buffalo Soldiers a rival army faction sneaks into a defended base during a war game by hiding in trucks delivering breakfast.
* Buffalo Soldiers centers around a bunch of U.S. soldiers in late 1980s West Germany being bored out of their skulls from the lack of combat. They respond by partying all the time and setting up a drug ring, at least until a hard-ass Sergeant arrives to crack them down.
* Buffalo Soldiers in a nicely self-referential way. The plot revolves around how relatively easy it was to sell off large amounts of weapons stolen from US army bases in Germany. After the Cold War ended and US troops returned home, vast amounts of materiel were left behind. One member of the film crew owned 100 of the appropriate guns to lend the production. Where one character is given a particularly heavy gun to carry on exercises as a punishment, there was some difficulty in sourcing this gun.

* Buffalo Soldiers is a satirical comedy where a bunch of bored soldiers stationed in West Germany near the end of the Cold War pass their time by manufacturing drugs.
* Buffalo Soldiers, Private Elwood is sleeping with his superior Colonel Berman's German wife behind his back. His boss is enough of a dimwit that he never suspects a thing, and still believes that Elwood is a stand-up soldier after he's forced into early retirement as a result of Elwood's machinations.
* Buffalo Soldiers: Sgt. Lee quickly catches on to the criminal activities going on in the base when he notices that Pvt. Garcia is wearing a very expensive watch he has no business of having based on his salary.
* Buffalo Soldiers. War may be hell, but waiting around as a US soldier on a military base in West Germany with nothing to do is nearly as bad. When one of the soldiers is beaten up for walking on the wrong part of the base, he points out how his father's war friends are the best of friends, how they still meet up every year, even 45 years later (the films is incidentally set against the fall of the wall).
* Buffalo Soldiers: While the soldiers' drug plant is destroyed in a huge explosion in the end, none of the crimes committed on the base are tied to Elwood and he is reassigned to a base Hawaii where it's clear that he's up to his usual schemes.
* Buff Bryant (the stage 2 boss), he falls over backwards with his minigun still firing, destroying the helicopter he's in.
* Buffer Bashing, Donald crashes into some buffers, but the Fat Controller knew it wasn't his fault since he couldn't stop in time. But when Douglas does the same, the Fat Controller scolds him.
* Buffer by M. Dulepa. Something happened and now some people have powers straight from RPG games. The protagonist finds himself wielding the abilities of a support class from a game in a rapidly changing world.

* Buffy", Adam sees through Jonathan's spell while everyone else is fooled; it is implied that this is due to his cybernetic nature. Adam himself believed it to be psychological, believing his utter certainty in his own reason for existence kept his mind from being fooled.
* Buffy also has a rare version where adding syllables makes it worse, in the Season 5 premiere, "Buffy vs. Dracula":
* Buffy also realized that she was starting to have feelings for Xander, who had been a
* Buffy also toyed with the idea in "Teacher's Pet"; one of the victims was very embarrassed when told that the mantis only attacked virgins.
* Buffy. Also unlike Angel Spike does identify more with his human self, William, having kept many of William's traits even when soulless, and got his soul intentionally as opposed to Angel who was cursed.
* Buffy also uses this as a standard tactic against ordinary vampires and demons; letting them chase her into an area with no witnesses, faking a
* Buffy and Angel are arguably this. They're both compassionate, responsible, down-to-earth, neurotic 'weight-of-the-world' leaders with connecting problems and a martyr complex. They straddle the line of being
* Buffy and Angel didn't hit it off at first. Though there was hitting involved.
* Buffy and Angel is 5'2" and skinny, and David Boreanaz is 6'0" and muscular, and Marc Blucas is 6'2" and also quite well-built.
* Buffy and Angel who falls in love with the older Angel, it comes in handy.
* Buffy and her mom have a different kind of talk after Angelus tells Joyce that he and Buffy had sex. It is played not for laughs, but for angst, as it brings up the emotional agony Buffy is suffering as a result of Angel losing his soul.

* Buffy and Riley (6'2) was at least as big if not bigger. Marc Blucas' height made scenes where he had to kiss the diminutive Sarah Michelle Gellar a bit awkward. Lampshaded when Riley returns for an episode in Season 6; Buffy gapes at him and says, "Were you always this tall?"
* Buffy and Riley also have one in "Hush," because they've been literally struck mute and can't express themselves any other way.
* Buffy and Spike have a variation of this in Season 7, in that they're sparring to teach the

* Buffy and Willow both play the beard for Xander in one scene in "Teacher's Pet" in order to protect his ego.
* Buffy and Xander after Season 2. For the first two seasons it's a bit one-sided (Xander's in love with Buffy during this time).
* Buffy and Xander had this vibe when working with Spike and Anya in Season 7.
* Buffy apparently held onto Mr. Pointy for some time, name-dropping "him" occasionally over the next couple of seasons.
* Buffy" are argued as Romantic Plot Tumors for their respective series, whose leads both changed and developed drastically different lives from the one they had together. Making it worse was their proximity to the end of each series, which used precious screentime that could have been dedicated to setting up the storyline of the finale.
* Buffy are shown to make regular runs at blood banks in an effort to stay out of Buffy's way, while Angel buys animal blood from a slaughterhouse. And when Angel becomes CEO of Wolfram & Hart, he is given a cup of blood to drink. Wondering at the taste, he is informed that "the secret ingredient is otter."
* Buffy as she's stuck in the form of a California high school student. "I'm 1,120 years old! Just gimme a frickin' beer!!"
* Buffy at the time had blonde highlights but darkened hers to play Cordelia.
* Buffy before it's revealed that Angel is a vampire. Buffy and Angel are being chased by the Master's goons, and Buffy leads Angel to her home and tells him to "Get in, come on!"
* Buffy before their relationship could really start. Buffy was unsure of her feelings about Satsu, but Satsu was definitely in love with Buffy - so much that Satsu didn't trust her own judgement around Buffy. She solved the problem by getting transferred to Tokyo.
* Buffy begins a telepathic conversation with Willow, who promptly brings Xander in as well.
* Buffy being the same entity, the vampires retain their memories and usually end up being a twist on the original person's personality, particularly the repressed parts:
* BuffyBot also exhibited this behavior, though, obviously, it was because her programming was too limited to give her natural responses.
* Buffybot sees like this with information about Buffy's friends displayed on screen when they're in its line of sight. Having been programmed by Warren to specifications given by Spike however, the information is extremely basic or displays a laughably 2D idea of the characters. For instance, Willow's screen reads: "Best Friend. Gay (1999-Present). Witch. Good with computers.". Also displayed on screen are the Buffybot's two primary objectives in life, "Locate Spike" and "Make Spike Happy". The latter has a drop-down menu of files with titles like "kissing" and "position-1" and so on.
* Buffy" can stop him. However, as Xander realizes, those texts predate many modern weapons. Therefore Buffy takes out the Judge with a rocket launcher.
* Buffy changes his mind about Spike in the comics, albeit only after he'd been a semi-regular Scooby for nearly a decade.

* Buffy claws her way out of her own grave in season 6 — upon her return to the living world, Spike notices the state of her (broken and dirt-stained) hands and realizes from his own vampiric experience that she dug herself out. Xander eventually figures it out too, and curses that they were all too stupid to remember to dig her up before
* Buffy covers everything that happened before and after. It should be noted that this is an inversion of the trope as well, since Angel identifies more with Angelus than with with his original self, Liam - who, by the end of the show, he barely remembers being. It could be said that his grief was more over losing his freedom as a vampire by regaining his humanity than having been a human who was turned into a vampire. With his stages being:
* Buffy cries into Angel's chest after smashing the Master's bones in "
* Buffy dates Spike on and off throughout later parts of the show, in spite of his trying to kill her multiple times, attempting to rape her and
* Buffy. Dawn popped into existence, leaving the viewers scratching their heads for a while since all the characters acted as if Dawn had always been with them. It turns out that Dawn is fabricated and all the characters have false memories. Just what their memories of the first four seasons were changed to is never specified, but they all remember Dawn being there alongside them the entire time. A number of the official comics set during the first four seasons have Dawn as a character, with notes attached saying, in effect, "Yeah, she didn't exist back then, but everyone remembers her being there, so..."
* Buffy did this almost every time she beat the crap out of someone. Like,
* Buffy does jump at a sewer rat in "I Will Remember You", but that's a sign that she's nervous over
* Buffy doesn't actually want vampires to drink her blood, she sometimes enjoys taunting them by pointing out how good her blood would taste. At one point, this trope was played completely straight when she violently forced Angel to drink her blood.
* Buffy does the exact same thing the next morning in "Touched"; she wakes up before Spike does, and spends a few moments tenderly stroking his hair and watching him sleep. Awww.
* Buffy episode "Doomed" dealt with two plots: a) Buffy and Riley's budding relationship may be doomed, and b) the earth may soon be doomed by a group of demons.
* Buffy episode, in which Real Willow comments, "I'm so evil and skanky. And I think I'm kinda gay."
* Buffy even by vampiric standards, so he's the only remotely acceptable toy she has on hand in what is otherwise a World Of Cardboard.
* Buffy example. In one episode, Riley returns to Sunnydale after his breakup with Buffy and reveals that he's married. Willow decides that since it would be petty for Buffy to hate his wife, she'll do it for her. In the end, neither girl can hate her, because she's so cool and they're so perfect together.
* Buffy falls on top of Spike at the end of his "Rest in Peace" song in "
* Buffy fics have pointed out that while the higher powers of evil in the BTVS world (i.e. Wolfram & Hart and the Old Ones) are obsessed with creating an apocalypse and destroying/conquering everything the so-called forces of "good", like the Powers That Be, seemed to be more interested in maintaining a balance between the two, to the point of opposing their own champions if they are doing too good a job destroying evil. A common theme among such fics is that if either side wins, the Powers That Be lose either their power or their influence over the mortal world.
* Buffy first meets Angel by doing a handstand atop a streetlight, and then swinging down to ambush her stalker (slayers have superhuman strength and gymnastic skills).
* Buffy for 150 years. Seeing this side of Darla actually amuses Angel.
* Buffy from range. So used to curb-stomping entire armies and never having to worry about dodging or fighting beyond "point and kill it", that when Buffy uses a rocket launcher, he doesn't even know to dodge.

* Buffy from the Watcher job did he develop the skills that would have made him good at it.
* Buffy gets a job at a fast food restaurant in season six in order to pay the bills after she is left in charge of her house and younger sister in the wake of mother's death. Subverted in that, after a wacky "mystery meat" filler episode that seemed to effectively end the job, Buffy went back and kept the job for a good while since the bills needed paying. The
* Buffy gets a short sword named "Companion" that enhances her secondary Slayer powers (prophetic dreams, sensing vampires, etc.), and provides a mental link to Faith.
* Buffy glancing up from her career aptitude test to inquire, "Do I like shrubs?"
* Buffy has always had a morbid sense of humor; in Season Six after she's brought back from the dead it tends to get a
* Buffy has a severe flu which is not directly life-threatening, but nearly makes her lose a fight. Her high temperature does make her able to see an otherwise invisible killer though. It's lampshaded and justified at the same time, within the same episode when it's mentioned that Buffy very rarely gets sick; the same magic that gives her super-strength and abnormal reflexes also boosts her immune system to increase the speed at which she heals.
* Buffy has her Slayer Scythe during the last few episodes of Season 7, right up to the end of
* Buffy has moments of this, at least at the beginning of the show, missing her popular cheerleader days, back when she didn't have to be a slayer.
* Buffy has no other demands on her time, she stakes out the cemetery (no pun intended) because new vamps emerge from there.
* Buffy has shades of this. While she does try to move on in season 4 with Riley, it's clear that she's still pinning for Angel. And if the
* Buffy having been in heaven prior to her friend "saving her" through resurrection was one of the internal reveals in "Once More With Feeling", and was one of the most emotional of the lot.
* Buffy, he comes up against evil on a more face-to-face basis and starts to loosen up, wear more casual clothing, and grow confident in himself. After his near-death experience in Season 3, it's taken a step further, where he ditches his glasses, grows out a light stubble, and wears darker and more depressing attire (black shirts, jeans, a leather coat) to match his disheveled personality. It's reined in a bit in the final season after getting his memories of Connor wiped, where he's more put-together and wears more work-friendly clothing, though it's still a far cry from the buttoned-up look he presented in his first Buffyverse episodes.
* Buffy, he goes into a depressed funk and consoles himself with drink.
* Buffy herself comes off this way, largely because her slaying cuts into her studying. Those of her teachers who aren't jerkasses recognize that she is actually very bright, and she gets a great Verbal SAT score.
* Buffy herself doesn't fare much better. Her three (main) boyfriends (counting Spike, but not her one-night stand) were, respectively, an ensouled Vampire who
* Buffy herself fared little better. When a reformed Faith comes to town, she makes no effort to horn in on the gig but quickly demonstrates that Buffy is a failure as a leader. In fact, her reaction to Chloe's suicide could have come right from the
* Buffy herself is a mystic super soldier from a long line of Slayers. They were intentionally created to fight monsters and the various
* Buffy herself is an inverted trope. Blonde teen girl who hunts down monsters, when normally they would hunt her.
* Buffy herself. She often skipped training or trained on her own time. It wasn't until Season 5 that she took training seriously.
* Buffy herself takes on this role upon joining the Initiative; constantly interrupting the
* Buffy herself was convinced she was thrown out of Heaven, and didn't bring this up with the others when they brought her back; as far as they know, they'd brought her back from some deeper part of hell she didn't want to talk about. This makes it all the more heart-wrenching when a musical demon forces them all to tell their truth in song, and Buffy tells them all where she had actually been and what she thought of her resurrection.

* Buffy herself was like this with regards to Angel. For example, the page quote comes from when Spike and Drusilla had captured Angel with the intention of killing him. In the same episode, she nearly rips Kendra's head off when she finds out she left him for dead. And later, when Faith poisons Angel and the only cure is for him to drain a slayer, she doesn't even hesitate in hunting her down so she can feed her to him. Even her friends are worried she's going too far with that last one.
* Buffy herself was so well known for offing baddies with one-liners that they lampooned it several times — examples include "Anne", where Xander and Willow fail in making good puns: "I've always been amazed with how Buffy fought, but in a way, I feel like we took her punning for granted", and in "Bargaining", by having the BuffyBot screw up pun attempts.
* Buffy hits. Dawn promptly tasers Xander, drives back to Sunnydale, and kicks Buffy in the shin.
* Buffy identifies herself as a "Capricorn on the cusp of Aquarius." Since her first two birthday episodes, "
* Buffy. In a fight with Buffy the far more skilled Slayer got in several punches and kicks to every blow Warren landed on her - but while he shrugged off her hits almost at once Buffy felt every one of his and was visibly tiring before she was able to destroy the source of his power.
* Buffy, in particular, but it can be jarring to see everybody else being so...so normal in Season 9. Simone by proxy attempts to have her depowered and slain. Especially Willow, who has no powers at all.
* Buffy is a human magically endowed with demon-like physical strength to balance out the super-strength of demonic opponents. While Buffy herself is tiny, some of her predecessors are physically larger with basically the same power level.
* Buffy is an evil bastard. Several characters were going to appear for a few episodes and then die, but were instead saved (Oz and Faith are the shining examples), some were killed off much later than intended (Joyce Summers and Tara), some were even revived from the dead. Fan reaction to the characters was the deciding factor every single time.
* Buffy is attacked by a vampire on the way home from the burger joint she works at, only for him to back off as she smells awful. The vampire is in the middle of saying he'll just have to try eating her another day when a pissed-off Buffy hurls a stake into his chest.
* Buffy is constantly ridiculed for her strength, even by those students whom she saves. However, at the Prom, she is given a "Class Protector" award by her classmates, recognizing how she always saved them from the strange things that happen in Sunnydale. Willow and Xander are her only friends in school, and everybody seems to consider her a violent and dangerous person with violent and dangerous friends (i.e. the vampires she fights) for most of the time. But by the end of school she's saved enough people for this to become common knowledge, and people realize they misjudged her. Part of it is because Buffy set her last school's gym on fire (it was full of
* Buffy is given a job as a guidance counselor at the new Sunnydale High School in the seventh season. The reason for her hiring was so she could protect the students from the Hellmouth under the school. Good thing, too, because we are

* Buffy is only the latest in a long, long line of women who slay monsters. In one short story, describe one of these previous- or future- Slayers.
* Buffy is supposed to be able to sense vampires magically, but this seems to be one of the Slayer powers that just did not manage to cross over. She still figures out two or three vamps because their
* Buffy is the indisputable leader of series. She's a Charismatic leader with a traits of a level-headed one as the series progresses.

* Buffy is this with Xander eventually. To get there he had to get over his crush on her and she had to stop thinking of him as a simple 'friend'.
* Buffy is throwing knives at a dartboard in the library, completely missing the bullseye. Giles suggests Buffy take a break from patrolling if she's off her game. Buffy says she just needs to train harder, and throws another knife. Cue glass-breaking sound.
* Buffy is turned into a porcelain doll. She's surrounded by other, living dolls, but they were made that way rather than being possessed. They're a bit unhinged, but okay folk.
* Buffy know. Even when he encounters the most ancient and obscure texts, he's still capable of recognizing enough words to determine the context and decipher the meaning.
* Buffy left her friends after she had to kill Angelus/Angel seconds after his soul was restored. She took off to Los Angeles, leaving her friends behind. Her return to Sunnydale is awkward — at best.
* Buffy makes her way into a den of vampires. They're about to attack her when one of the vamps recognizes her and yells out "Slayer!". To which the
* Buffy — Dawn's arc is paralleled with her older sister Buffy's arc in Season 1. Dawn is joined by two outcast classmates — a mousy shy girl and a loudmouthed guy, paralleling Buffy becoming friends with Willow and Xander — and fights monsters on their first day at the newly rebuilt Sunnydale High. Dawn's new friends are subsequently forgotten. She talks to Mousy Shy Girl on the phone in "Conversations With Dead People," but other than that, Dawn's aforementioned friends are never mentioned again.
* Buffy moped over Ford for months, and would sit in her room listening to "I Touch Myself" by the Divinyls. She quickly shifts gears by saying she had no idea what the song was about.
* Buffy nearly overpowers Angelus in their first encounter ("Innocence"), but can't bring herself to finish him. So she settles for a kick to the groin instead.
* Buffy never really cares about what the Watchers' Council has to say about how she does things. During Season 3, she gets particularly disgusted when their Cruciamentum test results in the
* Buffy of Tara, Willow proceeds to target his accomplices Jonathan and Andrew, who were both in jail at the time and had nothing to do with it. Though the Scoobies (sans Buffy) all rallied behind Willow en masse when she targeted Warren, they all agreed that Jonathan and Andrew don't deserve to die at all and work together to protect them.
* Buffy "Once More, With Feeling". The influence of a demon keeps making the residents of Sunnydale break out into song and dance. Buffy is doing weapons training with Giles.
* Buffy oneshot (set in an AU world where Drusilla dies in Prague and 'a single drop creates a thousand ripples'). Riley and some commandos corner the pair with the intention of taking Spike in, and at first the pair handle things well. Then Spike gets tazed. Buffy's reaction is... Yeah, you can probably guess that the commandos don't walk away from this without a trip to the hospital.
* Buffy on XBOX has these. The heroine herself has to stake or burn vampires, behead zombies as such. In order for enemies to actually kill Buffy they have to feed on her (zombies), bite her (spiders), slash her throat (demons) or crush her (giant vamps).
* Buffy or an elder goddess. He snarks and acts all tough but at the end of the day, all he wants is to watch out for his one true love.
* Buffy originally filled this role for Dawn. However, after dying, coming back and basically abandoning her, it stopped applying for a bit. It was repaired in Season 7.
* Buffy possesses super speed to an extent too. In the final episode she manages to catch up to a speeding school bus despite having been stabbed in the stomach a few minutes ago.
* Buffy" pretty much tells you nothing you couldn't figure out by watching the episode.

* Buffy pulls this in season five, and it's part of Riley's own angst. When her mom is sick, she waits until she's alone to cry about it, and turns the music up real loud, to boot.
* Buffy pulls this with Angel (and later Spike) after their respective breakups. Nobody buys it.
* Buffy" ran 1:10 on its first showing, and has almost 10 minutes cut from it in the syndicated version shown in the US (though the full version was regularly shown in Canada, in a 1 hour time slot.)
* Buffy realises Pete fled through a window thanks to this being found in "Beauty and the Beasts".
* Buffy Sainte-Marie as Buffy in early seasons, probably because she was basically Buffy Sainte-Marie living on Sesame Street. Her then-husband Sheldon Wolfchild and their son Dakota also appeared as Sheldon and Cody.
* Buffy says that she and Principal Wood are just friends. "Or mortal enemies, depending on what day of the week it is."
* Buffy's close friends take the BuffyBot for the real thing, chalking its odd behavior up to the fact that she had recently lost her mother. Buffy is nevertheless entirely unimpressed with her friends after this is discovered, probably because the robot was
* Buffy Season 8, Buffy's power boost gives her the power to run faster than a bullet.
* Buffy's father failed to show up for his ex-wife's funeral, or to take care of his now-abandoned daughter(s).
* Buffy's habit of breaking down doors is lampshaded on a couple of occasions, such as when she breaks into the Magic Shop only to be told by Riley that
* Buffy she gets trained by the titular protagonist himself and can kill Vamps and demons with the rest of the gang. Then it's subverted as Cordy gets demon powers, which defeats the purpose of this trope.
* Buffy. She is unaware of this, though she tries to stay away from black magic to prevent this.
* Buffy's high school had the obvious drawback of being built directly on top of a gateway to Hell, which tended to give typical school problems a supernatural and lethal twist (oh, and assuming you got out of the place alive, the Hellmouth still made the entire town a magnet for vampires, demons, etc).
* Buffy's house got trashed by attackers so many times that her mother took to buying the absolute cheapest furniture available. She successfully covered this up until well after her death the Scoobies realized the coffee table was made of balsawood.
* Buffy's influence over Riley Finn causes resentment among his military buddies, particularly Forrest.
* Buffy's little sister Dawn rests her head in Buffy's lap during their mother's illness.
* Buffy's mom, for the first couple of seasons at least, was incredibly clueless. When the truth finally came out in the season 2 finale, Buffy even called her on it, asking her if she'd ever wondered where all the blood she'd had to wash out of Buffy's clothes got there. Oddly enough, the backstory give a perfect reason she wouldn't notice: Buffy was thought to be a troubled kid (she burned down her last school's gym).
* Buffy's no slouch either. She's the aggressor in each of her relationships, she's into femdom if Spike is anything to go by, in the series finale she said he and Angel might do oil wrestling and the comics...the comics has her missing the sex before her deepest fantasy is revealed. That fantasy is her playing
* Buffy's own group of friends is a bit like a monster mash, too. There are Slayers (Buffy and Faith), Vampires (Angel and Spike), Witches (Willow, Tara and Giles), a Werewolf (Oz), an ex-Demon (Anya), a Demon (Clem), with a couple of
* Buffy Speak (i.e. "That exists" or "That's a recognized phenomenon").
* Buffy Speak know where this Chinese restaurant is." The mailman then stands up and turns around, revealing himself to be a very offended Chinese man. And as the icing on the cake, Kramer zooms by in a taxi at that moment with the cigar store

Indian (Elaine gave it to him because she didn't want it), screams "HEY, JERRY! LOOK WHAT I GOT!", and does the same "war cry" that Jerry did earlier.
* Buffy Speak: Someone doesn't know the word for something and does things like add "Y"s on the end, call it a "thingy", etc.
* Buffy specifically only Harmony can get in. Her lackeys are stuck outside.
* Buffy/Spike and, to a lesser extent, Buffy/Angel (the latter applies only when Angel actually
* Buffy, Spike makes several attempts to practice an apology speech (complete with a box of chocolates as a peace offering) using a mannequin wearing a blonde wig and one of Buffy's sweaters. At least one attempt ends with him losing an argument to the mannequin and then bashing it over the head with the box of chocolates before carefully picking it up, dusting it off, and starting over.
* Buffy sports pigtails during Giles's dream sequence in the episode "
* Buffy's relationship with Angel was a mortal/immortal case. This didn't bother them much, until the
* Buffy's season 4 boyfriend Riley Finn existed on the show to only be Buffy's love interest after Angel, and while he did play an important role in the Initiative Plot, that role was just to give their relationship more "drama". It's really not that surprising that, come season 5 when the writers realized he had nothing interesting to do, they promptly got rid of him.
* Buffy's souled boyfriends weren't much better. Angel lost his soul, went on to try and kill Buffy and her friends, and yet when he got his soul back Buffy decided to get back together with him (despite the risk of him losing his soul again and when he was
* Buffy stabs Dracula again when he tries to resurrect, and then reminds him she's still there when he tries again.
* Buffy starts Season 6 by clawing her way out of her grave into the night, beginning a year-long
* Buffy Summers. In the story, being immortal has allowed her to join and leave and then rejoin Starfleet multiple times using multiple false names, but this time — the first in a long time — she joined as herself.
* Buffy's uniform at Doublemeat Palace is garishly red-and-white-striped and includes a hat with a half cow, half chicken thing.
* Buffy takes a pistol from a security guard who's shooting at a demon, saying "
* Buffy tended to come across this trope whenever there was a recurring villain, or a
* Buffy tends to do this quite a bit. Notably, he did this when Joyce Summers died. He sat in his house, drinking scotch and listening to Tales of Brave Ulysses, a song that both he and Joyce had enjoyed.
* Buffy that Jonathan had a shy bladder. Andrew took advantage of that to extend his time talking to the First Evil by calling out "You all right in there?", making Jonathan's stay in the bathroom longer.
* Buffy, the Enjoining Spell combines the Scooby Gang's various attributes into a reality-warping force of nature inhabiting Buffy's body. The drawback is that it taps into the spirit of the First Slayer, who spends the following episode trying to kill them in their dreams.
* Buffy theme is just over a minute long and entirely instrumental, which would make it an unlikely fit for radio even if it were ever officially promoted as a single in the first place.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: 99% of the Sunnydale police department is either corrupt, or "deeply stupid".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, able to look like anyone it wants to as long as it's dead and given to appearing like Buffy, might count.) And, of course, Willow was recast from the pilot to be cuter. The original tends to be known on the Internet as "Fat Willow", with forum posters complaining about how the show would have been ruined...
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer a boy who feared his brother joining the Marines. Afghanistan was a battlefield and Iraq was about to become one, and Buffy reassures him it's not stupid to be scared of what might happen like he thought it was.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer acts as a functional substitute for Spike's soul. Though Buffy insists otherwise.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Adam attempts to create an alliance between vampires and demons to fight humans.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Adam, in season 4, has both a mini-gun and a grenade launcher built into his arm.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Adam murders his creator, Maggie Walsh, within moments of coming on-line.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Adam's demon arm had a retractable spike that extended from the base of the palm.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Adam, was like this all through his final fight with Buffy, unable to comprehend how she is defeating him. His last words are a disbelieving "How can you?"
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer (a demon had caused the doors and windows to vanish). And he was awesome doing it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", a demon stabs Buffy with a weapon that is a part of it. Said weapon is also poisonous and causes vivid hallucination. Buffy believes she is in an asylum being treated for her delusion that she is the Slayer. After 6 years of watching the show, we the Audience automatically assume that the Sunnydale scenes are real and the asylum scenes are delusion until the final reveal, which has one final "hallucination" that she's gone catatonic.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer afraid of them. ("Why do they need all those legs anyway?")
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. After a hiatus at the start of Season 3, Buffy comes across the Scoobies all tooled up with holstered stakes and walkie-talkies. The digital frequency readout on Xander's radio starts with 555.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer after Angel left. The guy, Parker, dumped her after they slept together, and Buffy got depressed. When she gets turned into a cavewoman, she saves his life (almost exactly the way she fantasized about doing to earn his affection earlier), and when he tries to apologize for how he treated her and offers to start dating her again, cave-Buffy hits him on the head with a stick.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer after discovering she literally is under Willow's spell; having had her memory altered by a forgetting spell. The two break up in the following episode.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer (after drowning), and after some timely CPR she's as good as new.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer after going dark again. And she gets killed by Buffy. That is, unless Whistler actually succeeds in changing the future.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: After her disaster of a relationship with Angel left her heartbroken, Buffy was determined to be with a nice normal guy, and she thought she found such a man in Riley Finn. Her desire to see him this way made her oblivious to the fact that he loved his job as a monster-hunter soldier and how much he was dying inside when he had to leave it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, after killing Jenny Calendar, Angelus takes her body to Giles' apartment and places it in his bed before the latter arrives. Then, Angelus sets up his living room as if for "romantic evening" with champagne, roses, music and a note that says "upstairs." When Giles arrives he believes Jenny, with whom he has just reconciled, is expecting him...
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer after running away from Sunnydale at the end of the second season.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer) after she wakes up from a coma and discovers she has lost her (evil) father figure, the only person who ever treated her like she was worth something in and of herself.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, after the ditzy blonde Harmony Kendall was turned into a vampire (a ditzy vampire) and had Spike share a lair with her, she was fond of doodling on the sleeping Spike's back during the day, much to his annoyance. (episode: The Harsh Light of Day) In case you're wondering, she was writing "Spike loves Harmony" on his back. Spike's reaction when he wakes up? He's not pleased.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer against Angelus goes wrong. She straight-up decks him in the face and chews him out for doing something so stupid... then collapses and hugs him in tears.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", a girl is actually rendered invisible because no one ever noticed her (an effect heightened by the school she attends being built over a hellmouth).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, a Kryptonian criminal wakes up in the morgue after getting killed off by a vampire.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Alexandra Harris kills three government agents because they nearly killed her lover/partner Louise. She kills a fourth person, this one a high-ranking government official because the not only does Alex find out that the attack was on orders from the official, but that he ordered a fourth government agent to attack as well. Having to do so gives her nightmares and drives her into depression, but she thinks the cost is worth it as long as Louise is safe.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, allowing Angel (with a minor strength boost from Buffy's blood) to dig them a path out that way.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: all regular characters are shown striking characteristic poses for the photographer... except for the heroine herself, who is busy Slaying and ends up left out of the yearbook altogether.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. All vampires are evil except for him because his hat completely fell off when he got his soul back.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", a lot of the female characters affected by Xander's backfired love spell sigh when they're around him, particularly in the scene when he is walking down the hallway.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer a lot though. Other Slayers (e.g. Kendra and Faith) wear more revealing outfits, but at least they're practical. And in Faith's case, the Stripperiffic factor was intentional. They actually used the phrase "stripperiffic" to describe Vampire Willow's outfit.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Although to give it its due, the web becomes evil because a demon imprisoned in a book during the medieval ages was inadvertently released onto it, and several techno-savvy magic users were used to reseal it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Ampata learned the language after all the years that she was touring all over the country.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Amy creates an army of zombies to attack the Slayer Organization.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: An ally who thinks Buffy is getting a little too inquisitive sends her out to investigate what's presented as a possible low-level threat (maybe just a raccoon triggering their sensors):
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", an axe-wielding Xander chases a zombie down a corridor, only for them both to come tearing out again chased by members of a demon cult.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and a new race of vampires emerges, much more powerful than the old race. Both the old race of the vampires and the zompires can no longer be created, but only the new race of the vampires.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer - and are proposing alternate theories instead. ("I think they were Young Republicans.")
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and at the start of the series he was presented as cowardly and inept.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer... and Buffy developed one too, for that matter.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and dark magic, forcing Buffy to oppose her. Fortunately, Willow returns to her senses in the season 6 finale.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", and dying in battle against the Mayor in the season three finale.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", and Faith said that safe words were for wusses on "Consequences" (technically the last one is not conventional modern BDSM, since it's not safe, sane or consensual, although it could fit under the newer Risk Aware Consensual Kink umbrella).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer) and found by a well-meaning but absolutely loco dollmaker.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and Fred's stuffed toy rabbit. On a different side of things, Lorne headlines a Las Vegas show in one episode. This was done by having Lorne headline a show in Las Vegas, and filming it.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and general chitchat among heroes, villains, and between them. One season 7 episode, "Conversations with Dead People", has Buffy stop her fight with a newly risen vamp when it turns out he was a Sunnydale alumnus who'd had a crush on her. They spend the rest of the episode commiserating, and he even gives her therapy to get through her emotional troubles with Spike! Eventually, they fight and she dusts him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and gets annoyed when she can't open a jar of peanut butter. Xander teases her but finds that he can't open it either and he asks Willow for help.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and happiness is boring, anything to twist the knife and twist the characters to pull this off will be done.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and has a crush on Xander. Oh, and Xander has a subconscious verbal tic because of the months of brainwashing. Whether he wants to or not, he refers to Dracula as "Master".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and has Darla try to remove Angel as a factor. While this at least shows he's paying attention to what caused the plan to fail, it doesn't change the fact that even if Darla gets rid of Angel, he's just killed off the only vampires he's got who not only survived their encounter, but sent her running.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and held captive in another dimension. Buffy has to go and rescue him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and her subsequent killing of more innocent people.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and he's more focused on romance than just finding food. This is partly down to personal taste—he's seen as an eccentric celebrity by other vamps—and partly due to having unique and mysterious powers, which Spike attributes to "some kind of gypsy thing".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and in the several canon comics thereafter.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and is ultimately responsible for every evil being and act in the series.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and its many otherworldly demon worlds probably qualify.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and it turns out incredibly awkward for both of them.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and lacks the supernatural powers of his teammates, but is best friends with Buffy and Willow to the end. His storylines tends to revolve around interpersonal relationships, and, as the most consistent of the Scooby Gang, he interacts with everyone.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and overall lacking the emotional stakes of the previous season.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Andrew Wells finally comes out of the closet in Season 10. However, it is somewhat played for drama, as Andrew wonders if it means something is really off with him that everyone else noticed something that big about himself before he did, and it outright took a confidence-boosting potion for him to realize it - he appreciates Xander's over the top reaction to the news because even if everyone else already knew, it's still a big deal to him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and she hurls a wooden spear into the vampire's back as she's running away.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and takes the fight to the catwalk. While she's winning, when she realizes that Giles is at risk of being burned alive, she's forced to let Angelus escape to save him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and the leader, Vicki, turns into a giant bat.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and then kill them. The demon is later defeated, but he keeps the tattoo; it even shows up in the (canonical) Season 8 comic books where Faith spots it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and the pairing was recognised as a major trailblazer for LGBT representation on television.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and there's likely several others unmentioned.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and, though we never see what it's like, he arrives back on Earth almost completely insane. One episode shows us a different hell dimension, which includes at least a giant factory where captives are used as slaves until they're too old, and then thrown back to Earth to die on the streets of Los Angeles.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and was already thousands of years old at the time of the action.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer), and while people do remember and celebrate the musical episode even years later, this meant that he handed off writing duties for season 6 to other writers, and it showed. Things got moving again in season 7 when Joss came back full time, and the story intentionally built up to the final battle, but many still found it to be little better due to problems with the characterization of much of the cast. There may be a slight aversion about "not being worth the trouble" because those who have heard about the issues with seasons 6-7 can simply stop at the conclusion of season 5, which wraps up most dangling threads and has a definite and satisfactory, although bittersweet, ending.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer and Xander notes that Giles is not that different from the rest of us — he owns a TV, even if Xander had to move some things in order to find it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: An episode has the gang threatened by the ghosts of native warriors. Buffy notices they can be hurt by their own weapons.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Angel and Spike both end up dating Buffy... the vampire slayer.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Angel and then Spike both act as the token vampires on the show, only serving this role at the same time in the series finale. In Angel's case this is due to soul curse, in Spike's because of a control chip that stops him hurting people. And then because of getting a soul.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Angel develops a crush on Cordelia, but by then she seems to have moved on from him and has fallen for the Groosalugg. Like Xander and Buffy, several years passed between the end of Cordelia's crush and the beginning of Angel's.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer". Angel gets psychologically tortured by Satan into recognising his essentially evil nature and is prevented from suicide only by divine(?) intervention.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Angelus and Spike are both legendary, and are known as two of the worst recorded vampires in history. Angelus became known for his sadistic nature and fondness for torture, whereas Spike became known for killing two slayers.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Angelus being cursed with a soul and turned into a woman has interesting consequences for Buffy's relationship with 'Angela';
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Angelus would draw sketches of his future victims and leave them to be found as a barely-veiled threat.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer animated series. "There are things in the dark. Dark things."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", an Inca mummy girl was brought back to life. She proceeded to kill and then take the name of and pretend to be "Ampata", the foreign exchange student that was supposed to stay with Buffy for two weeks.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer an incredibly powerful witch, she notes that this is a very minor problem and begins casting a spell to turn Him into a Her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, an injured Oz carries an even worse injured Bayarmaa off the (still-raging) battlefield this way.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Anya (5'5) and her Viking ex Olaf (6'7). Even before the troll thing.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Anya and Giles visit a somewhat less than omniscient oracle.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Anya claims to have been born on the Fourth of July, with her family jokingly calling her their "little patriot." At the moment she's trying to hide the fact that she's a +1,000-year-old ex-demon, however, so it's likely that she just picked that date for convenience.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Anya claims to want to have sex with Xander only as a way to get over him. Sure enough, once they do have sex, she wants to make the next step so they start dating in the very next episode and end up having a long-term relationship.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Anya curtly tells him to shut up: "Nobody cares."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Anya mentions in passing that Santa Claus does exist, he even comes down chimneys and is pulled by reindeer — but that he's really a demon that disembowels children.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Anyanka (season 3) and Dark Willow (season 6); others?
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Anya reacts this way to Giles' mimed overhead-projector lecture about the Gentlemen.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Anya's necklace allows her to do this in "The Wish" but it backfires and she loses her powers.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Anya. Whenever she'd get even slightly aroused, she would drag Xander away to have naughty time with him. And that's not even mentioning all of the times she would casually and innocently bring up how much sex she and Xander had, much to the chagrin of the group at large.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Any idiot can eat somebody. Angelus likes to make artistic statements with the bodies afterward. He infamously posed Jenny Calender like a doll in Giles' bed (staging the scene to resemble a romantic interlude), and tricked a man into thinking his slain sons were still "asleep". Right before the father himself was killed by Angelus, he wondered why would someone go to the trouble of making it look like the children were asleep.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Anyone, male or female, can learn witchcraft and how to cast spells. Like any other skill though, some will be better at it than others. In Willow's case, a lot better. And it may run in certain families; Amy's mother was a witch, and so were Tara's mother and grandmother (but not her brother and female paternal cousin).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer apparently had something of a crush on Giles. She never acted on it, mostly because she had much larger crushes on Xander and Oz.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer are sort of this, given that they seem expressionless, emotionless and have skin growing over where their eyeballs should be. The show's creators specifically commented that making them look like deformed humans was creepier than most of the other demons they used.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, as all kinds of moves used by Slayers should take years of training.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer as Angelus. Angel has moved on to boink other women he doesn't love, but he can never close the deal again.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. As a training exercise Giles blindfolds Buffy, hands her a ball, and asks her to throw it at him. She throws it in the wrong direction, he starts to wax sarcastic, and the ball bounces back and hits him in the head.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer as Harmony was the only person whose transformation into a soulless monster wasn't portrayed as tragic; objectively, it wasn't much of a change.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer (as he did every year at Xmas when they were kids) to prove to Willow that he is the real Xander. She stops him after a minute, but given that this is Xander, he probably would have kept looping.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer as if to say "Just roll with it." Which they did, and the shot stayed in. A part of the performance even got into a postcredits sequence.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer as invisible. They read her yearbook which is filled with the phrase: "have a good summer", the thing you write when you have absolutely nothing to write. Buffy points out that even Willow contributed.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, as it happens to Ethan Rayne and The General.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, as it's run by a Watcher and directly over the Hellmouth (the heroes knew the school was built on it, but even Giles didn't know it opened right there). And it has a ton of weird magic books that Snyder totally doesn't get being there, naturally.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, as part of his uncanny ability to read people, from which his particular knack for fighting - and killing - Slayers is derived.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. As part of his unsuccessful attempt to romance Buffy in Season 5, Spike buys a box of chocolates for Buffy's birthday, but her little sister Dawn derides the gift as lame and ends up eating them herself, pointing out that big sis would never accept a gift from Spike anyway.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer a straight example, though, since Giles is visibly annoyed that they interrupted him to ask the obvious questions instead of just letting him go to his next slide.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer as Xander twists his and Willow's infidelity to their significant others to be their fault - Buffy comments "Your logic does not resemble our Earth logic."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer at all and rarely talks about them unless he's making fun of them. He also takes every opportunity to stay away from them, from sleeping in the backyard every Christmas Eve to avoid their drunken arguments, to taking the first chance he can find to move out of their basement in Season 5, to deciding to connect with Willow's parents following Joyce's death over his own. The point is driven home in "Gone," when he disapproves of Anya arranging for Buffy to sit next to his family on her chart for their wedding:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer attach themselves to people's faces before killing them.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. At the end of "Innocence", in which Buffy's romance with Angel comes to an abrupt end when he turns evil, Buffy quietly watches a black & white romantic movie, in which Alice Faye is singing "Goodnight, My Love".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer (at the time of airing) title and time card, intended to imply that all the titular conversations are real time.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. At the very end of the season, he gains a spiritual connection to the Slayer line (making him the very first male Slayer), but nothing ever comes of it and is only used to drive the main plot of the tenth season.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: At various times Willow and Xander would be in a relationship to contrast Buffy's various relationships. Willow/Oz and Xander/Cordelia in the earlier seasons, then Willow/Tara and Xander/Anya in the later seasons (and Willow/Kennedy in the last).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer averted by a sudden snowstorm blotting out the sun, despite an unseasonable heatwave. If The First's claims of being the root of all evil are true, then she likely fits this trope as well.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, battle scenes alternate with quiet moments where different characters have light-hearted or serious conversations and bond with or open up to each other a bit.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer became this eventually. They are a handful of humans and vampires that keep all the nasties in the Hellmouth from overrunning the world.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer because "a man can't turn his back on where he comes from."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer because her aura was "fragmented", as if someone had forced something into it that didn't belong.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Because he's angry with her, Giles doesn't reciprocate, and because Miss Calendar dies at the end of the episode, he never has a chance to. Instead, we see him standing over her grave with Buffy, and telling her that of all the friends he's lost, "Jenny was the first I've loved."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer because the producers apparently asked him to stop working out, having been too fit to play a nerd in the first few seasons. James Marsters also let himself go a little in the last season because he was tired of doing so many nude scenes when he was much leaner.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, "Becoming, Part I," in which the audience sees how Buffy, Angel, Spike, and Drusilla "became" who they are today.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer before anybody figures out what's going on.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer before it was finally revealed that they were actually a couple.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer begins with Andrew enacting a familiar form of this trope in-universe - he looks up from a book as he sits in an antique chair in an old fashioned library. In this instance the books are fake. In fact the whole scenario is in Andrew's imagination and he's actually sitting on the toilet, pointing a video camera at himself.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer being all too eager to support that thought. By the time of the third season, Buffy has been cleared of all charges.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer being the Slayer?" She later describes herself as "marching in the Slayer Pride parade." To be fair, Joyce's reaction is a lot more understandable than most examples on this page, since her biggest concern is that Buffy could get seriously hurt or killed being the Slayer.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer best showed that she was an Anti-Hero when she fought Reed Richards of the Fantastic Four. After she uses her "super-breath" to freeze him in place, thus nullifying his stretching powers, he assumes that she has insured that he'd thaw before suffering permanent damage from frostbite. Alex corrects him, telling Richards that she neither knows nor cares whether or not he'll thaw before being permanently injured.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer between Dracula and Xander but nothing is ever stated outright. When asked about the nature of their relationship, author Christos Gage (who wrote a Dracula/Xander-heavy arc) said he personally believes Dracula indeed harbors some romantic feelings for Xander.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Board Game had one absurd little flaw: the spelling of magic, unsupported by the source material, as 'majik'.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Both Angel and Spike are classic examples of characters held in thrall by Buffy. Both before and after being with Buffy, they were creepy stalkers.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer both have sequel comics continuing on from where their shows ended currently being published.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, both heroines find two demons killed by heat-vision:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, both Kara and Buffy remember what to be a normal, powerless teenager was like; and often they'd like to be normal again.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer both used and subverted this trope, as Buffy would nearly always have a Bond One Liner after (or just before) killing a baddie, but occasionally she would be mocked for using a stupid-sounding one, or the vampire would interrupt her while she was saying one.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" brainwashes people into becoming this, (and has apparently been doing so for a long time). Buffy nearly gets burnt at the stake by her own mother before managing to kill it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, breaks the spell just before the door opens and the older sibling finds only an empty porch.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Buffy and Kendra had a disagreement over the usefulness of emotions:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Buffy and Riley's relationship was this to an extent. The only reason Buffy wanted to date Riley was that he was normal and not a vampire. The only reason Riley wanted to date Buffy was that she was "a mystery", as he put it. They had nothing in common outside of demon-slaying, little chemistry, and Riley wanted to be the caretaker in the relationship—which clashed harshly with independent, self-contained Buffy. Unsurprisingly, they couldn't last and broke up a season later.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Buffy and the rest of the Scoobies often end up in this role.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Buffy applies some to her watcher, Giles, on more than one occasion.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer". Buffy, Cordelia, and a demon need to get out of a house that's about to explode. Buffy and Cordelia dive through a window, which shatters with no great hello. The demon dives through another window... except it's boarded shut and he just bounces right back onto the grenade. Buffy is a powerhouse, though, smashing through glass is much less of a problem for her. Generally, characters treat glass windows pretty much as doors.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Buffy crushed on Angel. Later on, they evolved out of this, but in early seasons she was clearly Smitten. Her relationship with Parker had elements of this too. He was a jerk, but she probably wouldn't have been quite so devastated if she had been a little older and more seasoned romantically.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Buffy does not work a paying job but still somehow manages to pay the bills. Her financial concerns later become plot points in season 6, though.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Buffy does this literally in "Prophecy Girl" when Giles finds a prophecy that she will die.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Buffy flips completely (Faith is described as her most hated enemy) forcing things to come to a head.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Buffy gets poisoned by a demon, and suddenly finds herself in a mental institution, with her worried parents (both alive and together) hoping that she might come out of her prolonged psychosis. She's told that being a Slayer and everything that's been involved (including all her friends) was just a prolonged hallucination, and all she has to do to come back to reality is let go of it...by killing her friends in the hallucination. In the end, she decided to be an unhappy hero who MIGHT be in a hallucination, versus being a happy person of no consequence in what also might be a hallucination.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Buffy herself might count, as she was a cheerleader in her last school and she attempts to join them again. Back in her old school she just appeared to be a bit ditzy as opposed to actually mean.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Buffy is sick and tired of Spike and Angel always ragging on each other - she suggests putting them in a room together and have the two wrestle in the nude while she watches (or something to that effect). When Spike seems to like the idea, she excitedly comments that there could be "oil of some kind involved".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Buffy is smart enough that a substantial part of her later character arc is about trying to avert this trope.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer". Buffy kills a particularly tough vampire by shoving it into the cremation oven; they were at a morgue because that's where he woke up.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Buffy makes a gesture to indicate staking the demons responsible, which Xander mistakes for a masturbation gesture. Later, after Xander beats up Spike for mistakenly believing he had attacked Anya, Anya makes the classic gesture of making a circle with the fingers of one hand and thrusting a finger of the other hand through it. They exit quickly, stage right. To this day, Joss Whedon is unsure how that got past the censors.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Buffy naturally assumes Spike is just stalling and hauls him away.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Buffy plays it cool a couple of times when Angel asks her out for coffee, but then has to explain what she's doing as, being a vampire, it's been several centuries since he last dated a girl.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Buffy pretends she's okay when her mother (who doesn't know about Angel) celebrates with a movie and a birthday cupcake.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer?" Buffy replies, "Never". The next day Buffy is shown rubbing her wrists when meeting with Tara, only to suddenly realise what she's doing and hide her hands under the table.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Buffy runs into a room full of pictures of her mother taken by a really crazy vampire.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Buffy saved a nun from a vampire. Then she got to try on her wimple.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Buffy says this when Warren escapes from her with a jet pack.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Buffy says when seeing her mother's yearbook photo:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Buffy's graduating high school class probably knows, considering they all fought a giant demon snake and his army of vampires on graduation day.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Buffy's parents, Joyce and Hank, though they were actually college sweethearts. Joyce met Buffy's father at a school dance, while going stag.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Buffy's post-temporary-death rematch with the Master took place on the roof of the high school, and culminated with the Master being hurled through a skylight into the library.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Buffy's social life was constantly being derailed by this. An early boyfriend, Owen, followed her one night, and nearly got killed by a vampire, without ever realizing that's what happened to him, but he got off on the excitement and wanted to do it again, so she dumped him. Scott Hope dumped her because she seemed "distant." Then with Riley in season 4, it turns out that they are both in on the masquerade, and have been hiding it from each other until they run into each other in the middle of a fight. They get over it after learning about each other though. Something similar happens with Principal Wood in season 7, though in his case he had full knowledge of who Buffy was. Xander and Willow's major love interests were part of the masquerade or, in Oz's case, introduced.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Buffy stakes Dracula, who disintegrates. Everyone leaves. Mist swirls around and Dracula re-forms. Standing just offscreen, Buffy stakes him again.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Buffy suggests to the Scoobies that "while everyone bones up on sigils and resurrection, [she'll] head over to the mansion and bone up on Angel."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Buffy Summers, assisting the police in tracking down a serial killer, figures out that the bodies are aligned in such a way as to point to the next body's dumpsite, and that the entire thing makes up a gigantic mystic sigil of some sort... but that the killer is getting the details wrong so the "mystic ritual" the man is trying to put into play just isn't going to work.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Buffy Summers invokes it by goes patrolling in brightly-colored outfits, because vampires are attracted to bright colors, and genre savvy citizens wear muted colors.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Buffy takes over Supergirl's body to kill Zol-Am. Kara understands the necessity of it, but even so she feels guilty.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Buffy turns invisible. Xander reaches out to find Buffy. His hands are at chest level. He quickly ascertains that Buffy's clothes are invisible too as he hurriedly explains to Anya.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Buffy was willing to let the world burn to save her little sister, Dawn. They have a very good relationship throughout much of the series.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer builds up to a climax when Buffy is supposed to stop the fear demon Gachnar from manifesting. She messes up and he appears... but is only a few inches tall. Then this trope comes into effect: Buffy squashes him like a bug.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, but are different in tone mostly unrelated. This is because they were all written by different writers due to time constraints.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, but avoids growing too emotionally attached to her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, but by the time this comes out Xander is too freaked out to go through with it. Both Anya and Xander are depicted sympathetically.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, but continues to appear in flashbacks after her second death.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, but is in a dry spell through a combination of maturity and focusing on looking after Angel, non sexually.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, but is rather poorly executed at times as the shot doesn't cut in time, resulting in a vampire getting staked but not dusted with the sound effect still used.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. But not right away. They can still tag you for a nasty burn before dusting.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, but she has a heart condition and dies anyway.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. But she's also been fighting other demons since the very first season.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer but the man, Willow's doctor no less, fails and lands on the floor after jumping off the stage at The Bronze.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, but went with Kennedy because they didn't want to make her "anything less than gay." Then in a 2020 interview Whedon said that, if the show had been made in present day (i.e. the 2020s), Willow would have been bisexual.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, but you know what they say about who writes the history books.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer by Anya complaining that the song she and Xander sing is "more of a book number".

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer by being very well disciplined with a clear chain of command.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer by the fact that the Slayer has accelerated healing powers. The rest of the cast avert the trope, often sporting bandages for several episodes after they get hurt.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer calls himself and Ms. Marvel's other unpowered friends her "Xanders".)
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Candy spends all of her screen time wearing form-fitting yoga pants and a sports bra but also spends all of her screen time vamped out, displaying her demonic face.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer cannot create natural children. Even in that one exception, the vampire mother could not bring the child to term the normal way, and the child was mortal (albeit with the superhuman strength, agility and senses of a vampire).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, causing Buffy to mutter, "What are you gonna do, float a pencil at them?" Later on in the season Willow does exactly that, staking a vampire that has her cornered in a supply room with a magically-levitated pencil.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, certifiably insane vampiress who has on occasion been known to slit throats with her own nails. She was led to believe she was evil by Angelus who stalked, tortured, and assaulted her for years until she finally turned insane and was turned into a vampire to suffer for eternity, so by this point the "psycho" part of this trope is quite understandable.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer) changed his professional billing on American and British productions to Thomas Wander, for what should be obvious reasons.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer changes from a demon into a human she complains about a number of abilities she lost in the switch. Probably her biggest concern is the simple fact that she is now doomed to die, whereas a demon can live forever so long as it doesn't get killed.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Chaos Bleeds features a zoo level with zombified gorillas and penguins. Unfortunately, the latter don't appear outside cutscenes.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Chaos Bleeds, upon finding a stake Faith might comment on keeping it under her bed as a dildo. Ya gotta pity whoever that thing's used on after she's put it Lord knows where. The comics suggest she still does this.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Clem showed this to the potentials in "Potential".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer comic focused on the main character of said story being attacked by a vampire and turned. He returns home and considers feeding on his mother. But upon seeing that he's now undead and getting over the shock, she remains supportive, helping him to survive his new condition.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer comics. After a lot of soul searching in season 9, he rejoins the group in season 10 and has fully settled on good.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer comics, Dawn infamously does just this in cover art.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer comics. Faith is made so angry that she chokes and almost kills her father but is stopped by Angel.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer comics, it is revealed Dracula uses his hypnotic abilities to make people see him as his younger self, rather than his true form, which is that of a very old man.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer comics, Willow uses the power of orgasms to power the spell used to contact her patron goddess, Saga Vasuki.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer complains about how he's bored out of his mind since all the (hot, teenage, female) slayers just want to play strip poker with each other.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, complete with Buffy sneaking around in the ceiling.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" concept. It didn't matter if a slayer died in an impossible mission, the next one would succeed. Or the one after that.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer confined to a physical form — in this case, as a punishment. She's still incredibly powerful, able to move at absurd speeds and punch through force fields.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer continues the precedent established by the show:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, "Conversations with Dead People": Dawn is home alone and watching a movie when she starts hearing strange noises around the house. She mutes the TV, except the sound comes back on - even after she unplugs it. When everything from the living room stereo to the microwave starts doing the same thing, she goes for the axe.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Cordelia and Faith with a passion for being more attractive and confident than her, and has tried to break up Xander and Cordelia multiple times with magic. The author uses the justification that Willow became addicted to black magic much sooner than canon in this story.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Cordelia and the Cordettes are vicious enforcers of fashion rules.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Cordelia and working-class nerd Xander. Downplayed in that money wasn't so much of an issue as high school popularity and clique insularity. After their relationship ended, it turned out Cordelia was only rich because her father was cheating on his taxes, by graduation she has nothing.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Cordelia calls him "tall, dark, and broody".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Cordelia Chase once said that, when she goes shopping, she always buys the priciest thing she can find. "Not because it's expensive, but because it costs more."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Cordelia did this a couple of times to help Xander out. In "Innocence", when she accompanies him to the military base so he can get the rocket launcher, and in "Killed by Death", when she distracts a hospital security guard while Xander looks for some files.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer creators and cast agreed with pulling "Earshot", as it dealt with a (foreseen) mundane school shooting, but the cancellation of "Graduation Day" was seen as much less justified, due to the fantastic nature of a high school's entire student body battling the town mayor, a black magician who had turned himself into a giant snake.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer crossing, as she refuses to listen, insists that guys only ever want one thing from her, pushes him onto the bed and starts forcing herself on him, and chokes him before Angel knocks her out.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, crying and saying "You can't leave me. I can't do this alone."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, dating the enemy seems commonplace not only for Slayers but their enemies too:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Dawn grows to giant size, and stays that way for a while. Interestingly enough, she is not as proportionally strong as she is tall.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Dawn has to escape the musical-inducing demon through a contemporary ballet sequence.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Dawn has two different meltdowns, screaming Shut Up repeatedly as her voice rises in pitch each time until she's shrieking.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Dawn is paralyzed by a demon. Anya has fun posing her. When they have to run off to save the day, leaving Dawn sitting on the couch with her arm extended, Buffy comes back momentarily to stick a remote in Dawn's hand.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Dawn is the first person to tell Buffy about Spike's crush on her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer), Dawn/Jayne, Giles/Captain John Hart and oh so much more.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Dawn makes Buffy leave the Summers home after Buffy has lost the trust of her, the Scoobies and the potential Slayers due to her recent actions.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Dawn's reaction to learning that Buffy has gotten a job as a youth councillor in her school:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Dawn was pretty much created to fill this role for most of the main characters, though Spike fits the trope as strictly defined, as Buffy specifically asks him to protect her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Despite being the most innocent of the Scoobies, Tara takes the revelation of Joyce's death much more like an adult than any other member of the gang. We later learn it's because her own mother died when she was 17, so she's been through this before.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Despite that, every season but 4 contains at least one episode with a main character absent. None of these absences are explained on-screen.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer determined to psychologically torture Buffy.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: D'Hoffryn was originally dubbed "Mr. Hodgepodge" by the makeup artists because they used pieces from The Judge, a demon of Jhe, and the Rage Monster (Pete) to make him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer died (again) at the end of her 5th season (in a potential series finale, before the show was picked up by UPN). They originally decided to blow up Sunnydale, but then realized it would be too expensive to do at that point. They used that one later on for the real finale of the series.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer dies from natural causes. Xander suspected Glory was behind it, but this was disregarded because if Glory was behind it she would have made sure they knew it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Ditzy vampire Harmony kidnaps Dawn in a plot to lure Buffy into an ambush. However her vampire minions quickly lose patience and decide to drink Dawn's blood and kill Harmony, "maybe not in that order."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer doesn't take place until the following season.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer does this a bit in general, but when the Trio become the villains in season six, their conversations almost solely consist of this.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Dracula got Stoker to write his book to pump up his street cred. Other vampires thought it was a really dick move, because it let the normal humans in on a lot of their secrets.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer DVD commentary by apologizing to one of his guest-stars for making him use the phrase "excruciating loser" in full vamp-face. Juliette Landau wore her fangs for an extended period before taking up the role of Drusilla specifically to learn how to speak properly with them. Unfortunately, guest vamps lacked the time for this and some had more trouble than others.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Earlier, there was also the Blessed Sword used to defeat Acathla, which also cut through vampires' necks like a hot knife through butter.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, earning a lot of blank looks until Xander speculates she intends to "bore him to death with free verse".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer encourages weirdness of all kinds, sometimes spontaneous (“Nightmares”, “Out of Mind, Out of Sight”, “I Only Have Eyes For You”, “Where the Wild Things Are”), sometimes in the form of mad science.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Amends", which prevents Angel's suicide-by-sunlight.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Angel", Darla wields two guns to attack Angel and Buffy.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Anne", Buffy's fight with the demons is interrupted by the head demon holding a knife to Lilly. He announces that their fight is lost and he'll kill Lilly to make an example. Lilly pushes him off a high platform instead. Buffy and the demons look at him as he falls and a beat later the main fight resumes.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Bad Eggs". In this case, he may have known what the word meant; he was just genuinely unsure if that was a compliment or insult.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Bewitched, Bothered and Bewildered", when Xander discovers that Amy is a witch and threatens to reveal this to everyone unless she casts a love spell for him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode, Buffy and Xander try to cheer up Willow (who has just realized her on-line boyfriend was a demon) by mentioning their own hapless experiences in the romance department: Xander's fling with a giant praying mantis that tried to eat his head, and Buffy's discovery that Angel is a vampire. They laugh together, and then a beat later, sink into quiet depression.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Dead Things", Warren Mears makes Buffy believe she killed Katrina by accident.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Doublemeat Palace" had a demon with an incredibly phallic-looking tentacle that squirted venom at Buffy. And then Buffy's lesbian best friend chopped the tentacle off with an axe... According to the creators, the symbolism was completely accidental, although a dialogue joke was made about it in a later episode.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, episode "Earshot", where Buffy is stung by a demon and learns only that she will gain an "aspect of the demon", which could be anything (it turns out to be telepathy).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: episode "End of Days", it is implied that Willow and Tara's cat, Miss Kitty Fantastico, met her demise in a tragic crossbow accident or that MKF stepped on a negligently loaded crossbow, with wacky results.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Enemies" after Faith stabs a demon to death in a frenzy she later shows Angel her bloody hands. Subverted when it's revealed she's trying to gain his sympathy so she can seduce Angel and turn him evil.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Flooded," Buffy tightens a pipe with a wrench to stop a leak ... (pause for a moment) ... and then all the other pipes burst, effectively flooding the basement.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode focusing on Xander he is battling a zombie while in a speeding car. In the middle of getting instrucions on how to defuse a time bomb the zombie and his friends have set at the school, the zombie's head gets lopped off by a mailbox they zoom by.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Gingerbread", Buffy laments that she doesn't think anything she does makes a lasting difference, but at least she finally understands something that's baffled her for years.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Incan Mummy Girl" is a really tragic example: she has to drain life force from other people to sustain her existence, and she just wants to lead a normal life.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode, "Lovers Walk", Angel gets crushed under a door while attempting to defend Spike. A few mooks walk over him shortly thereafter.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Out of Mind, Out of Sight" shows that the government has one of this institutes for Invisible Kids.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Out of My Mind", Spike (an evil, soulless, murderous vampire) realises via a dream that he has developed sexual feelings for Buffy. He is horrified.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Restless", Anya is on stage telling a joke. We hear the very beginning, where she fumbles, and the end, when she says, "And then the duck says, 'There's a man attached to my ass,'" to much hearty applause and laughter.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Sanctuary," Buffy has finally gotten sick of it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "School Hard", where Angel brings Xander with him and pretends to have captured food in order to get close to Spike. Xander, not liking or trusting Angel, is somewhere between believing it and not. Apparently, though, it was Angel's performance that was suspect, as Spike pulls away at the last moment to cheap shot Angel. Afterwards, Xander asks what would have happened if Spike had bitten Xander.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "Some Assembly Required", on searching one of their suspects' homes, Xander finds "a pornography collection so prodigious it even scared me."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode that sucked. I love you!" Joss's response: "So, next season, more Michelle, less Nick..."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, episode "The Gift": In a massive fight taking place at a construction site, all of the rest of Buffy's allies have been sidelined, Buffy's been deprived of her weapon, and the Hell-God Glory is bearing down on her, fully capable of tearing Buffy's arms off and feeding them to her:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "The Killer In Me". Willow kissing her new girlfriend Kennedy causes her to turn into Warren Mears. In the climax, Kennedy is able to turn Willow back by kissing her again. She even references that magic seems "just like a fairy tale".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode "This Year's Girl" begins with Buffy planning an elaborate scheme to break Riley out of the Initiative. She's still explaining her plan when Riley shows up, having left with permission.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode, where a gang of toughs (and Xander) get turned into hyena-people.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer episode where they throw a coming-home party for Buffy, they end up getting attacked by various monsters (of course), many of whom attack through the windows.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Especially as time has gone on and more light has been shed on the toxicity of the nerd culture that he embodies, reception to his character has gone from disappointed at his weakness to acknowledging the possibility that someone like him could actually exist, and that only makes him that much worse.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer". Even after she dusts him, the dust pulls itself back together to reconstitute him. Also subverted as Buffy isn't the least bit startled and just restabs him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer (even Riley, who is, himself, a demon-fighting super-soldier, has an inferiority complex due to dating a genuine superhero). It's Willow who hits the boyfriend jackpot with Oz; upon being told the truth about the supernatural world she runs in, he replies, "Actually, it explains a lot," and just goes with the flow from there. Of course, Oz discovers he is a werewolf shortly after they begin dating, so he's more or less stuck in the supernatural world regardless, and Willow ends up having to play Understanding Girlfriend just as often.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Every slayer is female and all of them are walking anti-vampire weapons. After the events of season eight Kennedy didn't just sit on her hands. She creates Deepscan, giving Slayers with no further purpose a job in bodyguard work.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Evil!Willow has black eyes and black hair; Goddess! Willow has white eyes and white hair.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer example: Buffy is trying to gain access to a control room at the docks. The only way seems to be a shorting out and sparking control panel. Using it sends her flying twenty feet through the glass of the control room so she can progress at least.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer example: Willow is, aside from a few hints, considered entirely straight; then, after her break-up with Oz, she meets Tara, and suddenly is no longer interested in the "stubbly" side of things.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Except for a flashback to when their marriage was on the rocks, Buffy's divorced parents seem to get along fine, and afterwards Joyce recalls their relationship with fondness. The two are extremely cordial in Hank's few appearances in the show. It's only really after Joyce's death that his status as a deadbeat is fully implemented.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer) except that as the demon he "actually had the proportional strength of, uh... me."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer explanation is that the writers didn't want him to graduate a year before the other characters.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Faith - "This one guy I ran with, he liked me to dress up like a schoolgirl, and take this friggen bullwhip, and I'd be like..."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer fanfics, with nearly every named character getting in on the action in one fic or another, because as everyone knows, "a vague disclaimer is nobody's friend."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer fan fiction. Buffy and Faith, as the oldest living Slayers are portrayed as being stronger, faster, and more durable than any of the other activated Slayers, and Buffy — who has two years more experience than Faith as a Slayer — is usually portrayed as having a slight edge over her counterpart.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer featured a military organization called The Initiative with a massive high-tech base underneath Sunnydale, where they held demons captive and used them for medical experiments. The Master's lair in Season 1 also fits the trope.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" featured the Bezoar, a prehistoric parasite whose offspring attached themselves to other creatures and controlled their motor functions.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer featured this several times. There were sieges of Buffy's house, the library and the school, the Magic Box, Giles' apartment, Xander's basement, and several other sites.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" features a triad relationship between Tara, Buffy, and Willow, with Tara as the Mistress to Buffy and Willow while Willow is 'officially' Buffy's Sub who Buffy shares with her own Mistress. It is often noted that this relationship mainly works because of the psychological benefits to all three; being Mistress to Buffy and Willow helps Tara's self-confidence, Willow has always striven to succeed for attention, and Buffy simultaneously gets a chance to not have to be in charge all the time and a chance to be in total control of at least one thing in her life.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" features this trope when the high school is holding a talent show.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer fic out there, and a lot of it has Crossover Ship, including Jack/Buffy, Clone!Jack/Dawn, Faith/Vala, and many more.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer fics have accused the Kalderash clan of this regarding the nature of the curse that restored Angel’s soul; since Angel and Angelus are distinct entities, cursing Angelus with a soul just leaves the vampire demon trapped while condemning the human soul to be tormented by guilt over memories of actions that the soul technically didn’t commit.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer filled with these. "Xander, don't speak Latin in front of the books."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer film, which is nowadays known pretty much only for being spun off into the show.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer finds that out the hard way when he assumes his one-night stand with Faith means something to her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" float around ripping people's hearts out while dressed in sharp black suits.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer font is unique enough that it is easily recognizable, and even just the letter "B" by itself is easy to recognize.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer for absolutely no reason at all. And then there's Spike — who is the only one that's ever naked in sex scenes (whereas Buffy is completely clothed).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer for her, which falls under this trope a little bit better.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer for the entirety of the series, but only becomes relevant in Season 7.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, for the requisite leave-childhood-behind symbolism.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: For the start of the fourth season, Buffy and Willow were the only female members of the Scooby gang. By the end of the season, however, both Anya and Tara had joined the gang.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer for Willow. Naturally Faith tries to get Angel to drag Craig to her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer friends watch Pike and his buddy deposit a handful of change on the table at a diner and ask if the amount is sufficient for pie.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer from the Initiative. He proudly declares that the grey hairs he'll have tomorrow, since Succubi feed on life force, will be worth their gratitude.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, fugitive Kryptonian Alex Harris's fight against the Thunderbolts acts as one between Venom struggling to contain her and Moonstone's panicked thoughts of how Alex is going to kill them all.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer gets arrested by the San Francisco Police Department for dusting one. As Seasons 9 and 10 go on, public opinion against vampires begins to shift, eventually leading to the cops starting a supernatural crimes unit.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer gets to find out. An episode even revealed that Buffy told her parents but both didn't believe it, of course, Joyce found out the truth later.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Giles and Anya wake up from one of these. Since everyone is under a temporary magical amnesia, they promptly assume they are engaged, and act accordingly.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Giles and Faith are fighting a rogue Slayer and her warlock ally. Giles grabs a book and starts chanting, the warlock mocks him for grabbing a book of defensive spells. Then Giles says he just created an expanding forcefield... inside of the warlock.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Giles begins as Buffy's Watcher but a deep friendship develops despite their many differences. This caused him to be sacked for having 'a father's love' for her. It also led evil werewolf catcher Cain to assume they were having a fling and make salacious remarks. They get rather angry at the insinuation.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Giles can't form the words to ask Jenny out, but has no trouble with words like 'amenable' and 'indecorous'.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Giles comments about gridiron as it compares to rugby, summing up the traditional British view:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Giles had a talent for drawing gruesome stick figures to illustrate his points.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Giles has a girlfriend named Olivia. At the end of the episode "Hush", after Olivia learns of the existence of demons, she says, "Scary." Giles asks, "Too scary?" and Olivia responds, "I'm not sure." Since we never see her again after that, we can presume that it was indeed too scary for her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Giles has been turned into this; the result of a resurrection spell that went partially wrong and brought him back in the body of a 12-year-old.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Giles is by far the most cultured of the group (with Willow a close second), also being likely the smartest. However, he's also a major badass and loves classic rock.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Giles is none too pleased to learn that Angel, who nearly tortured him to death the last time they met (after murdering his girlfriend a few months earlier), is still alive. He's even less pleased when Angel shows up at his doorstep.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Given Faith has Slayer strength, this is performed as a decapitation technique involving a double torque.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Given Joss Whedon's well known Anglophilia and predilection for putting British swear words into his American scripts, it could have been a joke. It wasn't.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer gives us an interesting inversion with Wesley. While he does possess a genius-level IQ, his intelligence is actually the one thing he is never seen boasting about. His insufferable nature comes from his overblown sense of importance and his pride in being a Watcher.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer gives us "Normal Again" where Buffy gets venom from a demon that convinces her she is really in a mental hospital and that her life as a Slayer is just escapism fantasy.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer give up the information he needs willingly because he doesn't want to be deprived of the opportunity to torture him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer giving tactics advice from a helicopter overhead.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, "Graduation": When Angel tries to sneak into where Buffy is searching for clues, he slips and stumbles through the door. Buffy lampshades both his smooth moves and Angel's clumsiness as he feebly makes excuses.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer granted a wish for a girl who had been humiliated this way once. She took it back at the end of the episode though.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer graphic novel stories, featuring bio-mechanical warriors based on children's toys and no women.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer > Darla > Angelus > Drusilla > Spike), though, was founded many eons later by another Old One named Archaeus, long after the other Old Ones had been banished from Earth.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had a few of these with supernatural twists. The frat boys were usually worshipping ancient demons that the slayer had to take care of.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had a lot of these, sometimes in book form (codex) and sometimes in scroll form. Few reach the complexity of the Pylean tomes of prophecy, however, which are written in both demon tongues and trionic, meaning part of a passage begins in one book, continues in a second book and ends in a third book. Not only does the reader needs to be able to read the demonic language being used but they need to understand it enough to translate the rhythm in order to know when to switch books to get the rest of the information.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had already been announced.) This would be rather ironic and rather moot considering none of the actors (Once again, save Spike) would reprise their roles past the series ending.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had a new job in just about every episode. This was the season where his friends went to college and he was trying to find himself. Eventually, he settles into a construction worker. He later gets promoted to management.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had an issue called "Triggers", concerning an Incubus sexual predator.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had a super-powerful glove that is impossible to remove as long as the wearer is still alive.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had a supporting role as Pike's friend who would later be turned into a vampire (he would've been the only cast member to have been in both the movie and the show), all of his scenes were cut but he can still be seen very briefly near the end among the vampires at the gym.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had at least one of these, Angel used it to travel to Jasmine's old home. And another was used to travel to Skip's holding dimension where Billy was being kept. The 'verse's portal books probably count as well.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had been more comedy-dominant than he hoped.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had Buffy make a tactical mistake trying to rescue Giles, then get sent five years into the future, to her older self's body, to see a world where Sunnydale was ruled by vampires—with Giles as their king.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had Drusilla, a girl cursed with visions that took a serious physical toll on her, even after she was turned into a vampire. Depending on the nature of the vision, it could manifest as anything from fainting spells to migraines and awful stomach cramps, or just sounding like whispers to her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had many examples of subtext and allegory, which led naturally to some overanalysis by the fans.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had several, including Buffy/Solaufein, Giles/Jaheira, Spike/Viconia, and eventually Buffy/Artemis Enteri.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had something very similar happen to her when she was young, and her scars from that experience were used for that scene.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had supernatural power invested twice into mundane comestibles, creating candy bars that made you act like a teenager and beer that turned you into a caveman.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had this a few times, with the very first episode and the two-part season 3 finale "Graduation Day". The rest tended to be more arc-based, and so they needed to either do it almost every episode, or never.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had to eat the heart and brain of a human/s every seven years in order to maintain their disguise.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had wanted to do the same thing for the character Jesse in the two-part premiere, but it didn't happen because of budget issues.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer had weapons from A to Z: from Axe to Z Other Axe.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer". Had Willow not shot her, VampWillow (who's not only a vampire, but also creepily insane) was well on her way toward forcing the issue, which doesn't help the playful subtext that continues afterward.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Hansel and Gretel were really a demon that appeared every so often as a pair of murdered children to provoke witch hunts.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has a cemetery suddenly appearing near Sunnydale High. It is night there, even if it is day everywhere else.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has action, romance, humor, complex, realistic drama, fantasy, fanservice for everyone, and relatable characters. As a result, the fanbase is incredibly diverse.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" has a demon which possesses a computer (and then the Internet, and finally a robot body) as the result of a book-scanning project.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has a few examples of this. The blood of a slayer apparently has mystical qualities, allowing Angel to survive Faith's poison, and granting the Master the strength to escape his prison in the first season. Dawn's blood was used by Glory to open the interdimensional portal.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has a great sword fight between Buffy and Angel where they shuffle back and forth alternating their blows from up and down.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has a lot of these types of things, including:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has Andrew needing to acquire blood for a ritual. Rather than any of the more nefarious means of acquiring it, he gets it from the town butcher. To cover up buying a side ingredient that doesn't really have any non-mystical purpose on its own, he ends up buying a lot of other meats and groceries.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has an ill-maintained look with flickering lights, unpainted walls, and no staff on duty at the time.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has a portal to a demon dimension where kidnapped street kids are taken to be worked to death that looks like a pool of used motor oil.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" has a spell go wrong (as they often do) and Xander is chased by hordes of love-sick fans. Only they want to tear his flesh off, not his clothes.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has been shown to be one of the few smart ones) has become vampire fanboys/fangirls after Harmony gets a TV show, with people willingly getting sucked on Riley-style. They also think the Slayer Organization is evil, though there are a few in the bunch that give them reason enough to think that.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has Buffy telling Dawn to close her eyes, so Dawn doesn't see the oncoming death scene.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has confirmed that by the time of the seventh season, everybody — cast and crew — was exhausted and eager to move on to new projects. Whedon and much of the writing staff returned to the franchise in comic book form a few years later with considerably renewed enthusiasm.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has Greek Gods, Roman Gods, Egyptian Gods and a few more. The only god that isn't included is the Christian/Jewish/Islamic God due to Joss not liking him. This trope could be justified, seeing as all these various gods seem to exist.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has overtones of this, especially given that being with 'death' isolates Buffy from her (human) friends and even her moral code. Both she and Angel note that their relationship is dangerous and hurtful to both of them.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has powerful sorcerers and witches who apparently can use magic to be stale. Two special examples are the aunts of Giles.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has some questionable food choices, including anchovy and pineapple pizza.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has Spike and Drusilla, Angel (or Angelus) and Darla, Spike and Harmony and - in an alternate universe - Xander and Willow
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has telepathy. It tries to dominate Supergirl's mind as they battle.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has the Angel(Aloof and always-in-control Ice)/Buffy/Spike(Spontaneous and violent Fire) triangle.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has the Buffy theme music being played over it, slowly, on a piano.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has the Romani gypsies. One moment of true happiness, one moment where the soul that was restored to Angel no longer plagues him...and that soul is taken from him. This trope, from a certain point of view, is why the spinoff show exists at all, as Angel may not have left town if his curse were fixed. The curse is specifically a 'moment of happiness', but in practice, it has never been triggered by anything but a happy relationship for Angel...be it Buffy, or a shamanic dream that includes Cordelia. ...Then in the comics, the Powers that Be get in on the action, and the relationship between Buffy and Angel creates a new universe...at the cost of the old and all 8 billion people in it.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has the Scooby Gang leading an army of hundreds of slayers, not to mention a large group of wiccans and other magic users.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has the Watcher's Council, who keeps its Slayers on a tight leash. In fact, they have an entire wetworks team dedicated to taking down rogue Slayers. The Watchers themselves (poor Giles) are also under close scrutiny.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has Xander and Anya sleep together after their break-up. They wonder if it means that they should get back together but decide that it didn't really feel like "getting back together" sex; it felt like "one last time."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer has Xander marked to become a demon's servant.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer have a few conversations about how they're the only ones who understand what it's like to be the Slayer (at least before "Chosen").
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer have all said that it's a bad idea and, in the case of Head, that he imagines it will be "quite like watching a car wreck." Fortunately, it appears shelved for now.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer have panels of the titular hero fighting enemies with after images of her dolling out blows or preforming different maneuvers to show her moving faster than her surroundings. Some of them include her speaking whole sentences that are broken apart and divided amongst each image.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer have scarred flesh instead of eyes. "Crazy alphabet eyes".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, headed by a genuinely good person), there are hints of evil as entropy: proactively doing good on a local scale inevitably means contributing (at a net loss) to greater if vaguer evils. This seems to end in Buffy's season seven. Maybe. Lindsey, a villain, had a driving motive of his cynicism and ambitions, as pointed out by his actor:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. He even lampshades it in a tie-in comic when he has his arm in a sling and is unable to remove them.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. He hoped to be named official class clown at graduation but it went to another student who Xander dismissed as a mere 'prop comic'.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer here — the Girl of Steel gets tools capable of killing or banishing a Kryptonian and tells the Gang to use them if things go South, no matter what. Note that she's usually against killing, but she's willing to make an exception for Zol-Am.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, her favorite sandwich is peanut butter and salami on white bread, and she's made peanut butter and banana waffles). Buffy herself also showed signs of it - according to her friend Billy Fordham in the season 2 episode "Lie to Me", she used to eat Oreos dunked in apple juice.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Her fights with Glory come to mind, along with one time with her boyfriend, by accident.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Her innocence, purity, and innate goodness and belief in God are what drew Angelus to her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer heroes and villains are fond of this (the original film had an especially good one-take example).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer he's doing this when he offers to slay Drusilla, the vampire who sired him, to prove to Buffy he loves her. Buffy is not impressed. Several episodes later, Spike is willing to be tortured to death to protect Buffy's little sister. It's this act that finally gets her attention.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. He starts off as a depressed loner trying to commit suicide, then he creates a spell which makes him a talented superstar that everybody loves. After that fails, he teams up with Warren and Andrew, the only friends he's ever really had, before being promptly murdered by the latter. Poor guy just can't catch a break.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. He succeeds (somewhat) but when he returns, she's moved on.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, he upgrades her to a studio apartment but advises her to maintain her old place as a cover.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. He wants her to have a relatively normal life and he feels that her being with him would make that more difficult.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. He was the same age as Buffy when the show was first running.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Hinton Battle (Broadway performer and choreographer) was cast as the dancing demon Sweet.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. His aunts used magic to maintain their youth, but all the end of magic did was make them start aging normally again. It's still bad news, since they both made deals with demons that would make them forfeit their souls at the first sign of aging. Not long after they get their first gray hairs, a bunch of demons come knocking on their door.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer his boss Vladislav is summoning. Vladislav kills him off immediately.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer his performance to not feel inadequate next to the Slayer. There were also numerous references to the trope by guys who were intimidated by her strength in high school and Spike quips about it when she is dumped after a one night stand. It should be noted that Riley's insecurity stems at least in part from his (perhaps justified) belief that Buffy doesn't love him as much as she could.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. His sobriquet of "William the Bloody" actually derives from the fact he wrote bloody awful poetry.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. However, Billy has only made a few reappearances since then and is pretty much forgotten about in season 10.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer "Hush" devoted an episode to this trope. The entire town had its voices removed by the baddies. Almost immediately, some enterprising townfolk started selling whiteboard tablets on the street. The fourth season episode, which was nominated for an Emmy, was in response to accusations that the series relied too heavily on clever dialogue. It is generally acclaimed as one of the scariest of the series.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer) Illyria was unaffected by army gunfire before chucking a car at them.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In an early episode, a particularly fearsome vampire is sent running at the sight of the She-Mantis, who wasn't even in her true form at the time.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in an early Season 7 episode, when the only ones left to help a victim are Buffy, Xander and Dawn.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in an off-screen accidental crossbow discharge.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. In a platonic love version, Giles walks Willow to the taxi (so she can catch the plane back to the US) under his umbrella.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in "As You Were". Buffy is working the counter at the Doublemeat Palace burger joint, when she suddenly realises the next customer is her ex-boyfriend Riley Finn.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in a world of terrifying monsters (and that's not going into his dysfunctional home life).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. In "Bad Girls" Giles has been replaced as Buffy's Watcher by the condescending Wesley Wyndam-Pryce, who discovers that teenage California girls with superpowers don't get the whole obeying orders thing.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In "Band Candy" the adults of Sunnydale are magically reverted to their teen years. Buffy and Willow enter the Bronze to find Willow's middle-aged doctor and two other men up on the stage drunkenly singing "Louie, Louie" a capella. Buffy declares their performance scarier than any vampire.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: "Inca Mummy Girl". The beginning of the ep shows the mummy in its coffin in the museum exhibit, and she revives when the seal is broken. Later, it's that seal that Giles and company have to reassemble to stop her from mummifying people.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, including one called Willy's, operated by Willy the Snitch.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in early seasons. He was last seen being taken into custody by Riley and The Initiative in season 4 and does not appear again.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" infamously implied that the whole series was the result of Buffy hallucinating while in a mental hospital.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. In general, vampires and demons will abandon or backstab each other all the time. There were, however, exceptions, usually taking the form of cults. The best example was the Order of Aurelius, the vampire cult that served as the main antagonists in Season One. In one episode, three vampire warriors offer their own lives in penance for failing to kill Buffy. They proved to be the exception, as shown when Spike, rather than offer his own life in penance for failing to kill Buffy, killed the Anointed One, and took over what was left of the Order.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Initiative soldiers search Spike's crypt, reading to kill any undead person on sight. Realising from the still-warm television that someone has been there recently, they lift the lid off a stone sarcophagus, only to find a skeleton covered by a burial shroud. After they leave, Spike appears from beneath the corpse. Buffy herself has pulled the same trick when hiding from vampires. Similarly, Giles once hid in an occupied drawer in a morgue.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in its wake. For example, at the end of "Teacher's Pet", slow pan to Mantis eggs hatching under a shelf.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. In "Life Serial" Buffy goes out for a night of drinking with vampire Spike, who invites himself to a demon poker game, only he hasn't got any cash.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. In "Once More, With Feeling" with the "I'm Under Your Spell" song:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In one episode, a fight breaks out between Buffy vs. a cowboy vampire vs. a horde of innocent bystanders under mind control by a demon. Buffy and the vampire don't actually team up, but they do take a break from fighting each other to focus on the bystanders. A person just tuning in might think they were on the same side.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer - in one episode, a spell causes characters to literally become their Halloween costumes. Xander dresses up as a soldier in that one. For the rest of the series, he retains skills and knowledge from temporarily being turned into a soldier, right down to having knowledge of the specific layout and procedures at the local Sunnydale army base.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In one episode Dawn is seen pouring out multiple bowls of cereal just so she can get the prize at the bottom. She then admits she doesn't intend to eat any of it and wants eggs for breakfast instead.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In one episode Giles hangs up a banner in the Magic Shop reminding customers that Winter Solstice, Hanukkah, Christmas, Kwanzaa and "Gurnenthar's Ascendence" are coming up.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In one episode, Riley's about to be taken away by the Initiative, and he has Buffy's scarf (given more as a bandage than a favour). He romantically, or deliriously, tells her "It's like I have part of you with me." "It's just the scarf part of me. Really."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In one episode, Willow dresses up as Joan of Arc, and stays in character by proclaiming that she "has a close relationship with God." This is represented by her boyfriend Oz, wearing a name tag that reads "Hello, my name is God."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in "Out of Sight, Out of Mind", when an invisible girl locks them in the school boiler room and turns on the gas. Angel fortunately arrives in time and shuts it off. They're almost unconscious, but Angel, being a vampire, doesn't have to breathe.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in perfectly understandable English. ("Momento this, stay that... does Cordelia not speak English?")
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In Quor'toth, Willow begins going dark again and starts freaking out, forcing Angel to comfort her and calm her down.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In "Real Me," when Harmony and her minions kidnap Dawn as bait to lure Buffy into a trap, and she repeatedly orders them to simply leave Dawn be until Buffy showed up. Eventually, her own minions get sick of it, turn on her, and decide to simply eat Dawn and kill Harmony, but Buffy shows up at that moment, and mass vampire death ensues, with Harmony fleeing in shame.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in Season 5 is a notable exception). This is most pronounced with Warren Mears in Season 6.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: in Season 7 Buffy gets a job as school councilor; in one episode she's killing time in her cubicle by swiveling on her chair while balancing a container of pencils on her forehead.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In Season 8, Dawn fights a Mecha-Dawn — complete with a tail — in Tokyo while still a giant.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer inside the Magic Box. At one point Buffy tries to just walk out the front door. Everyone is puzzled when she immediately appears in the shop again through the back door.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer instincts immediately go to red alert and she intimidates Spike into changing the ending.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In "Teacher's Pet", Xander is smitten by the substitute biology teacher, Ms. French, who turns out to be a giant praying mantis who needs a virgin male to fertilize her eggs before she devours him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In the comics, it was retroactively explained that Drusilla was tortured by an "Inquisitor" while in Prague, including the use of a magic torture chair, leaving her in a frail condition. Spike initially hopes the Hellmouth will restore her, but later learns that the blood of her sire (Angel) can cure her affliction.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In "The Dark Age", an old friend of Giles has been killed by a demon they used to summon up, who then inhabits his body. When things get rough for the demon he leaves the body, which promptly dissolves into a puddle of greenish goo.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. In the dream sequence episode "Restless" he even gets to deliver the exposition in the form of a song.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. In the end, Buffy chooses her life in Sunnydale over her life in the mental institution, but the ending leaves it ambiguous whether or not the world she settled for is the real one.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer In the episode "The Dark Age", bad guy Ethan Rayne has Buffy tied up, with her arms wrapped around the edges of a table and tied together beneath it. There is a conveniently located screw sticking out the bottom of the table that she uses to saw through the ropes.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in the face of a hideous demon and his vampire minions.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. In the finale of Season 5, Xander pulls this one on a god, no less, with a wrecking ball.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In the first season, Darla at one point shot Angel. She told Buffy, "Don't worry, guns can't kill vampires. Hurts like hell, though."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In the fourth season, Adam plans to combine demon and human parts to create a superior race.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In the fourth-season episode "Beer Bad," after a cursed batch of beer turns Buffy into a neanderthal, Xander steers us into a Spoof Aesop:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in the latter part of the last season of the show.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in the ocean — although they did lose their human personalities, so the swim team essentially died.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in there somewhere, but not quite as easily as if it were a male getting turned down.)
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in the Scooby Gang's decomposition the "Yoko factor". He didn't create the problems they were facing but made them likelier to anger and alienate each other.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In the Season 5 episode "Into the Woods", Anya wants to watch a movie about monkeys playing hockey because "The ice is so slippery and monkeys are all irrational".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In the Season 8 comics, rogue Slayer Simone Doffler sets up a terrorist cell of like-minded slayers.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In the seventh season, when the group temporarily turns away from Buffy as their leader, they place Faith, who as the other Slayer is the team's second strongest member, in that role instead. This is in spite of the fact that Faith has no leadership experience whatsoever, and virtually every other character has a better claim to the leadership. Willow and Giles are smarter, Kennedy had been gearing up for this role all season, and Xander is the only member of the group with actual management experience. Buffy later regains leadership upon slaying a Turok-Han in front of them.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In the third season finale, when Buffy informed Wesley that she was through taking orders from the Watchers Council...
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in the title. But the plot would have gone exactly the same if everyone were drinking soda. The real moral is "Be courteous to bartenders and others in similar roles, because if they snap they can do some serious damage." Not a bad moral, really.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: In "The Wish", Cordelia wished that Buffy had never come to Sunnydale, so it becomes overrun with vampires. Cordelia is bitten, drained, and killed by vampire versions of Xander and Willow.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer - in the "Witch" episode, Xander gives Buffy a bracelet when she's trying out for the cheerleader squad. Later, witch Amy uses it as a personal item essential to a spell she casts on Buffy.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer in this case - he purposefully didn't tell them he was leaving to prevent a painful goodbye.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. In this hallucination, Buffy is an insane Windmill Crusader before the series started, and has been locked in a mental institution throughout the whole series.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. In "Touched" Faith and the Potentials get into hand-to-hand combat with the Bringers in a dark room, the action lit solely by the torches the good guys are carrying.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Inverted in season 10. Dracula is not the original vampire, but he is most universally-recognised one. However, Xander writes in the Slayer Handbook (a book that makes anything written into it reality) that Dracula is "the most powerful of all vampires". This results in Dracula transforming into the Old One Maloker, the real progenitor of vampires.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" involved demons who stole everyone's ability to speak, forcing the heroes to communicate with each other through pantomime. While brainstorming on how they might slay the demons, Buffy shrugs and nonchalantly pumps her hand up and down in the air in front of her, drawing looks of startled disbelief from her friends. Embarrassed at their reactions, she pulls a wooden stake out of her bag and repeats the motion. Everyone gets it. Later, Buffy tries to signal to Riley that he needs to smash the box on a table that's holding all the voices inside it. Riley thinks she means the crystal next to it and hits that, then grins like a dope at her before an exasperated Buffy makes more specific gestures.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer involved research nearly every episode, although generally Buffy was patrolling while the other Scoobies hit the books. Giles was even the school's librarian.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, in which an animated ventriloquist dummy turns out to be a good (if lecherous) demon hunter who was killed in battle. (Not every demon on the show is evil, but the one in question was stealing people's bodily organs.)
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", in which the residents of Sunnydale became mute, the Gentlemen fell prey to this when Buffy regained her voice.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, in which vampires are "lurks, a spin is a lie, toy is bad, but spled is good."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" in which Willow lures a fawn to her in the forest...and she then slaughters it to collect its blood for the rite which will raise Buffy from the dead.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is about the Wild Hunt coming to Sunnydale.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is a robot. She "was made to love [Warren]". The show mainly treats bots as unanimated things, but still both the spectators and the characters can't help but feeling sorry for the poor thing(s).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is a successful, well-regarded TV show that had a female lead and, for a time, a majority female cast. Its fanbase includes a good mix of males and females.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is a swell guy to work for. He's always got a kind word, he asks after your family, he encourages good dental hygiene and good nutrition, and he discourages swearing and encourages teamwork and esprit de corps. He'll even pay for a new wardrobe and an apartment if you happen to be a homeless psychotic slayer in need of an outlet for your violent tendencies! Oh, and he wants to transform into a giant snake demon and eat everyone in the city. But what boss is perfect, right?

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, is a Watcher. His job is to train a slayer. He is Buffy's primary mentor throughout the series.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is going to be attacking them — right as they're being attacked.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is offered the chance to leave Sunnydale for college, she realizes she has no choice but to stay and fight the Hellmouth. Willow, however, does choose to stay, even when accepted to Oxford.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is often vacuous, insensitive, and viewed as an airhead by others — but she was declared "a brain" by Xander after he saw her SAT scores, got into numerous Ivy League Universities, and was in the top 10% of her year at school. Her insensitive comments often portray that she is actually a shrewd observer of human nature.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is one enormous coming-of-age story (only, you know, with monsters and superpowers) for Buffy, Willow and Xander, and the run of the series is structured to follow specific stages of adolescence.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is revealed to be this in the episode "Fool For Love". He took it from the second Slayer he defeated. In the same episode, a random vampire who managed to get the better of Buffy kept her stake. Riley later killed him and took it back.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is revealed to have been taking part in the school's talent night, and the final fight takes place just before it opens. When the curtain is risen, revealing beheaded demon and all, there's no pause, just a slightly confused silence:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is shown in bed with the sheet loosely bunched around his waist, just barely above the groin.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is smart enough to be tapped by the world's leading software concern and has no ambitions except getting his guitar chords right. He has incompletes on his schoolwork, didn't go to summer school, and usually gets up late.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is the Chosen One, the only one who can defeat the vampires, demons, etc. etc.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer is this to Sergeant Buffy Summers of the Mobile Infantry.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. It helps that Sunnydale was made for evil entities to screw around in. The rules are bent for slaughter and games.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. It is simultaneously denied: other characters, especially Buffy's male friends, think that his behavior is creepy and dangerous. They are justifiably suspicious of Buffy's vampire boyfriend and it takes Angel time to earn their trust.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: It is suggested in the show's RPG that Warren's inventions (androids, mind control devices, etc.) only work because of the Hellmouth's power.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer". It's lampshaded just before it happens with the lyric "The curtains close on a kiss, God knows we can tell the end is near."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. It's not explicitly stated what's happening, but when Toad asks Kitty a muffled question about what was happening, her eyes cross and he has to repeat it with his voice not muffled.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, it's shown that the Buffybot was used to replace Buffy, but does a pretty bad job at most of it. The only reason they do it is to prevent the destruction of Sunnydale, which would happen if anyone found out the Slayer was dead. Luckily, they resurrect Buffy as a group of Biker Demons comes to Sunnydale after finding out just that..
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer?" It turned out it wasn't really Latin, but a cipher meant to look like it to the casual observer. Also, Latin doesn't have a word for 'canoe'.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. It wasn't quite a remark, but the "wink wink, nudge nudge" look she gave Willow when singing "I can feel you inside" erased any possibility that this might have been some kind of metaphor. Her repetition of "You make me com...plete" leading to the song ending with "You make me..." was more than a little suggestive as well.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer it. When someone mentioned the part about Buffy's blood working as a substitute for Dawn's, she says something to the effect of "Yeah, I never got that part."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Jenny Calendar likes playfully teasing Giles by describing the damage she has either ignorantly or inadvertently done to his books. She's of course well aware of the value of the books and wouldn't think of damaging them: she just likes to see him squirm.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Jenny is working on the spell to restore Angel's soul and tells Giles she wants to see him later, but doesn't tell him what she's working on. Naturally, Angel kills her moments after she completes her work. Therefore we know the spell exists, but Buffy and the Scoobies don't.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, John Vladislav runs a vampire mob. His management style is simple. Disagree and he'll stake you. Screw up and he'll feed you garlic. And THEN he'll stake you. Run away and he'll tear you to pieces with his bare hands.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer joked about it in the 2nd season finale. Buffy goes to face Angel, and Xander shows up.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Jonathan Levinson admits to peeing in the swim team's pool as revenge for the swim team bullying him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Jonathan rappels down into Sunnydale High from a skylight, followed by Andrew who loses his grip and crashes into the floor.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer just isn't a match for one of our beloved main characters acting like a twistedly cruel version of themselves.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Kara goes to Sunnydale and the Gang puts her through several tests to ensure that she can get in and out of their houses without permission. Supergirl gets pretty appalled.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Kara is Kryptonian and bulletproof. Willow notes she shouldn't be hurt by a mere gun.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Kara Zor-El dyes her hair red while in Sunnydale to protect her secret identity.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Kendra. Buffy eventually taught her that human emotion wasn’t necessarily a hindrance to being a Slayer.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer knew how to use a crossbow since she was eight-years-old.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer laments that they can't tell girls that they're demon slayers so they have to rely on their looks to get the girls.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer). Later seasons proved that Amy was also leaning toward the wicked side. Then there's Willow at the end of Season Six...
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer leader of the international Slayers' organization because of his uncanny ability to bring out the best in his girls.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer leading up to this moment, but the timing is interesting.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer liked to end seasons this way once a particular set became expendable: See Sunnydale High, the Initiative, to a lesser extent The Magic Box, and in the series finale the entire city of Sunnydale.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer": "Look! Buffy's strapped on her fighting boobs!"
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Lothos grabs Buffy's cross, which bursts into flame, but ignores it. He takes a a blast of hair spray ignited by the cross less well.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer lures Xander into an ambush with a trail of candy bars.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer made a lot of nods early on toward maintaining the masquerade for the muggles' benefit, but that fell by the wayside somewhere in the third season. From there on out, they would just talk about whatever wherever they happened to be.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer makes his own custom silver bullets for use in plying his trade.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer makes quickly clear how incredibly fast is Supergirl:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer — essentially trading the love for sex. Spike desperately grapples for whatever tiny shred of emotional connection he can find in the relationship, while Buffy's depression worsens because of this vicious cycle, and sees it as one of the most desperately lonely times in her life. Season 7, however, plays it completely straight again. In "Touched", the antepenultimate episode, while several other couples (Willow/Kennedy, Xander/Anya, Faith/Wood) are shown consummating their relationships the night before a big mission, Buffy and Spike spend the entire night sleeping, fully clothed, with Spike holding her in his arms, reflecting a new level of trust and intimacy between the two. In the following episode, when Buffy presses Spike not to be coy about his feelings, Spike admits that it was the happiest moment of his life.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer — except that, before, he was a gleeful killer, but now he's wracked with guilt and a fear of ever being truly happy, since, if he is, he loses his soul and becomes the monster again. Of course, when that did happen, he ended up killing another couple of highly important gypsies, so maybe they regret that condition.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer — or, more specifically, all the terrible jokes he hears.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer — pop up to deliver stinging rebukes about how Angel and co. are just glorified paper pushers.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer — that someone ask this. So she does. The response she gets is that they don't even know they are going. So a bit later she asks, "Do we know where we're going yet?"
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer — Willow and Xander primarily, although others employ it as well.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Mike Corbett finds a listening device in the Sunnydale High library. He and the Scoobies then make all their plans in the hallway outside the library (or in Giles's house), and discuss fake plans in the library in order to throw the listeners off.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Miss Calender knows the Hellmouth is about to open based on locally occurring portents; a family's swimming pool begins to boil (with them in it), a cat gives birth to a litter of snakes and a baby is born with his eyes facing inward.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer most demon cultures shown are autocratic or monarchic in nature. Vampires have generally packs ruled by masters (who are generally not only the strongest, but also the smartest -sometimes by far- and meanest of all). Also most other dimensions shown also seem to have absolute monarchies like Pylea and Oden-Tal.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer mostly ignores this in the earlier seasons, until it is tackled head-on with the Initiative in season 4. They lump every non-human under 'evil', even going as far as experimenting on an untransformed, conscious werewolf. Riley, a member of the Initiative, makes negative comments about Oz being a werewolf, leading to Buffy angrily calling him a bigot. However, when the Initiative began to do the experiments mentioned above, he snaps out of it. In the episode "Phases" Buffy goes up against a werewolf hunter who sees nothing wrong with the fact that a werewolf is human most of the time (all day every day and all but three nights out of 28 or 29), but he is more of an amoral, greedy monster hunter than a bigoted, fanatical monster hunter.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer moved back to England to spend more time with his family.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer movie, Buffy rips off the bottom 2/3 of her prom dress, when she has to fight off the vampires that attacked the senior prom.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer movie, during the final assault on the school dance by the vampire hoard, Buffy tells the students they will be safe because the vampires cannot come in uninvited. Her friend then sheepishly mentions that they were already invited — they had all been seniors at the school, and so had received invitations to the dance.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer movie: "We're immortal...We can do whatever we want."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer nice vampire decides to perform a spell to make people like her friend more. When she asks Giles for help at the Magic Box, he assumes that his customer is invoking this trope and feels very sorry for her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. "Nobody can tell Marmaduke what to do. That's my kinda dog."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer not capable of handling our limited perception that has to periodically drain others to save herself from such a state.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer not help people who need helping. And she considers helping people who are in danger, or who even just need a friendly shoulder to cry on, to be a much more important part of being a superhero than stopping criminals.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, not ready to face death at such a young age.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer novel, 'Circus Of Souls'. She figures it out soon enough, but is then zapped by the brain-altering magics of the circus.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer novel, Xander once excuses himself from a conversation like so:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer occasionally pop up, like when Xander was accidentally doubled.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer of Buffy has left scars. Simply touching his hand by accident in "Beneath You" causes her to flashback to that moment, and in "Him," Spike unexpectedly touching her arm startles her. Even years later, during the Season 10 comics, she still has some troubles with it despite having long since forgiven and accepted Spike; in "Triggers," Spike unexpectedly entering the bathroom while she's showering causes her to instinctively kick him into a wall.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer of Buffy is accompanied by her choking out a large snake, apparently as a trial by Osiris.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer of demon/human/cybernetic parts, secretly feeds its very human agents with performance enhancing drugs. Expect usual withdrawal symptoms.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer offers something of a Subversion as the monsters tend to lay low on Halloween because it'd be tacky not to, but like much going on in Sunnydale, good intentions go real bad.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer off-screen, with the disintegration sound-effect playing. By the time the show's budget had been raised to a point where they could afford to use it every time (and the cost of CGI had been reduced by a significant figure), vampires had long ceased to be the main threat on the show—which, naturally, let Buffy kill scads of them.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer of season six, conversely but similarly, started as one-off characters going as far back as season two, but joined up with each other in season six. The third was going to be as well, but the actor was unavailable so they made it his brother instead.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer of Season Three. The secret government lab under the college is the least exciting secret there was.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer often has problems understanding our human jokes and references, and takes great pleasure in pointing out that fact. In flashback we find out she was like that before she became a demon too.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer often needs to become good in order to get to a sexual relationship with Buffy. In the actual show, not so much. In fact, she only slept with him after he discovered he could kill her and they beat the hell out of each other.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer of the series. This was reversed at the beginning of season three: Because Buffy was "absent", the Scoobies had to work without her, and the role of bait was passed to Cordelia. Subverted when Xander and Cordelia are too busy arguing over this, they fail to notice the vampire is sneaking up on Willow.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Olaf's Hammer was a hammer used by Anya's ex-husband, current troll god. It turned out to be the one thing the Scoobies had access to that could kick Hellgod ass.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer - Olivia looking in Giles' fridge - "Rupert, is this bleu cheese, or cheese that's gone blue?"
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Once in every generation... well, you know the rest.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, "Once More With Feeling", Buffy rescues a handsome prince, in an inversion of the traditional rescue scenario. He sings "How can I repay—" but Buffy cuts him off with "Whatever" given that she's in her depressed period.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Once they reach the bottom, they invite Xander to join in a group hug.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Once while they were dancing at a party, and the next time while they were making love.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer on early seasons, where the police (who know the truth about the town's vampire problem) have little trouble convincing most people that the vampires are just PCP addicts. As Oz points out when he's told the real story, the vampire explanation actually makes more sense.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer on him as a teenager). In this case, though, years passed between the end of Xander's crush and the beginning of Buffy's, during which time they both dated (and in Xander's case, almost married) other people.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Only problem is, she was never informed of this or given opportunity to prepare for it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer order of duelists that strongly adhered to honor. Unfortunately, this means they had a hard time adapting to the modern world and have declined into being just a shadow of their former selves.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer (or would it be "Creepy Monotonous" Rampage of Revenge?): "Bored now."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, over the dead bodies of a bunch of demons:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, over the protests of her sister and friends, Dawn opens up one of Giles' guidebooks on demons, and remarks, "That's a weird place for a horn.... that's not a horn." She then quickly closes the book. After a few seconds, she opens it again for another look.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, particularly with Anya, a former vengeance demon turned human.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Part of the Slayer package is flashbacks to battles of other Slayers in the form of nightmares.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Pearl and Nash can summon two green energy swords.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", people are getting murdered around the school. One of Buffy's classmates, Morgan, is caught yelling at his dummy, Sid, in a way that implies that Sid is alive and murderous. Sid later attacks Buffy, but it turns out that the dummy is inhabited by the ghost of a demon hunter and that he thought Buffy was the one killing the other students.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer poetry. In fact, his original nickname of "William the bloody" was a reference to this, as in "William the bloody awful poet!")
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer portrays Xander as the most nurturing of the Scoobies and the one people trust to look after them. It helps that canon has Xander referred to as both a white knight and the heart of the group.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer possible, but only with a human mother and vampire father; most don't believe it's possible, in part because Katie claims most half-vampire children are killed by the Watchers Council before they turn thirteen.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer possible to be perfect, claiming perfection is not narcissistic, merely realistic. "Genuine" perfection just isn't a good metaphor for imaginary perfection.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer powers, mostly in the earlier seasons. There's a slight parody in one episode: Buffy is telling Willow about a nightmare she had in which she was being chased by an incorrectly filled in answer bubble marked "None of the Above". Willow mentions that she hopes it isn't one of Buffy's prophecy dreams.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Presumably, Angel (who should know the most about vampire psychology) was about to point out that some personality traits do survive, cleverly foreshadowing Willow's own coming out two seasons later.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer pretty much destroy our plane of existence (and many others) as reality itself unravels in the chaos of the walls between dimensions fall apart.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", primarily because he was a huge fan of the show and thought the idea of getting made up like a demon would be "a stone cold groove" that he had never experienced before.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", principal Snyder "volunteers" students to escort trick-or-treaters.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Prior to the climactic battle, Xander forges custom magic weapons for every member of the group except Willow (at her request). Each weapon's name, type, and special powers are explicitly designed to complement their personality and fighting style, particularly because the weapons' powers will only function for their intended wielder.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Prophecies are not unusual in either show, but they rarely rhyme; indeed, they're usually just a line or two of prose.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Provided by the Twilight group to try and give Amy an advantage against Willow.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Psycho Faith has been alone with a victim who was a friend of Buffy's many times, especially Joyce ("This Year's Girl") and Xander ("Consequences").
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer "Puppet Show" the Scooby gang is coerced into performing in the school talent show. The original airing featured them on stage stiffly reciting their scene over the closing credits. This was replaced in syndication by standard credits and theme music but restored for the DVD release.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer rarely had to defend herself against anything, even when Uber-Willow was slinging major mojo her way.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer really went overboard with this one. Evil monster jumps into a hole to kill itself and trigger the end of the world. Buffy had time to run to her boyfriend, tell him her plan, grab a line from him, run back to the hole, and jump in, dragging her line over the cliff edge. Did she make it? Well, we're still here, aren't we?
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Referenced when the Scoobies put on a surprise birthday party for Buffy. Cordelia is hiding behind a large cake, so she appears to be fulfilling this trope when she jumps up and yells "Surprise!"
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer reference - when Giles hears about graves opened from the outside his academic curiosity is stirred:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer referring to Buffy's vampire boyfriend Angel.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Regarding the Xander example in Live TV below, it gets even worse in the comic. Buffy still shows no romantic interest in Xander and even briefly explores a same-sex relationship. It's not until Xander begins dating Dawn that she makes a move. Xander chides her for ignoring that he's with Dawn and says that even without Dawn in the picture.. "You went through gay to get to me. I'm a lower option than gay" and he solidly rejects her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, regardless of the cost to the Champion in question.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer responsibilities and who is trying to find a way to resurrect him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer "Restless." One dream sequence shows Tara lying nude in bed with her back exposed and covered by a blanket folded into a classic massage position. Willow leans over her, apparently giving her a rubdown, until we see she's actually painting a Sapphic love poem in runes on Tara's back. Since they've already begun falling for each other, it evokes this trope.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Riley, features Buffy recalling that she was more focused on Angel over Riley).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Rip out Adam's battery, and he's a sack of meat.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer RPGs. All major characters are statted out, and they are indeed much more experienced than the PCs. However, the character's stats and xp are tracked for each individual season. Want to have Buffy on par with your group? Just set it around the first season.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer runs a dive patronised by demons, and lives up to his name.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer said explicitly at the beginning of the season that she would not renew her contract, whether Buffy continued or not. So, as Whedon said, she was the logical choice.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer) said she embraced Christianity when, driving down the highway, she asked God for a sign that he was real. Moments later, a gang of bikers were passing her on either side - she was anxious about it, then saw by their jackets that they were 'Bikers for Jesus'.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer says, "I'm not a vampire, but I play one on TV."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer says this is because every dream has some element that simply makes no sense.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, screaming in agony as if he's still being burnt up in the sunlight.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer season 5 episode "Spiral", two of the Knights of Byzantium get one of their order released from the mental hospital by signing some papers. As they walk away, the nurse yells "hey!" and one of the knights gets his dagger ready, but it turns out all they did was forget to give back her pen.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Season 5 has all the drama of Joyce's brain tumor. Then she dies of an aneurysm after the tumor is removed.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer season 6 episode, "Bargaining", in which Anya points out that real zombies don't eat brains unless instructed to do so by their zombie masters.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer season 6 premiere Buffy is dead and the Buffy-bot is used to fill in for her on patrol and at parent-teacher conferences (Buffy being her little sister's guardian). The buffy-bot never does work quite right and can be seen bonking into walls in the background of several shots.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Season 8 comic is vastly considered to be the weakest point of the series. The second half of 2009 is also considered sub-par by many, though not to the same extent.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Season 8 comics are near-photorealistic renditions of the actors, while the actual comics are much less detailed and much more stylized. Though there are also variant covers drawn by the interior artist, which give a more realistic image of what's inside.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Season 8 comics female Slayer Satsu falls in love with Buffy and they have sex at least twice. But Kennedy, another lesbian Slayer, dissuades Satsu from pursuing a relationship with her. Why? Because she claims that ultimately, Buffy is straight.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer season 8 comics, Willow manages to teleport a ship on the Himalayan mountains. Granted, it's not as dry as the Sahara, but it's probably the farthest you can go from the sea.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer season 8 does this to a fellow Slayer by smacking her really hard for dirtying her blouse.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Season Eight, Twilight allows his troops to be massacred by the three Wrathful Goddesses because he's curious to see the goddesses in action. When one of his subordinates calls him on it:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Season Two premiere "Anne" showed Buffy working as a waitress; two young runaways who spent all their money on matching tattoos deposit a handful of change on the table and ask if it will get them anything.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer secretly vows to make monster movies when he grows up, and then steals his teacher's angora sweater.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer seemed to have trouble remembering that Harmony was his girlfriend.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer seemed to like this. Usually, it was done by Giles, but...
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer sees them magically empower every Slayer on the planet at once.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer series finale and actually asked "why didn't I die?" Part of him was afraid to die while part of him wanted to be killed as punishment for aiding The First and killing Jonathan.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer series finale when Andrew tells him that Anya saved his life, sacrificing herself in the process. "That's my girl... Always doing the stupid thing".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, set in a world where Buffy and Angel got back together after Angel regained his humanity following the final battle of "Not Fade Away". At Christmas that year, Xander Harris is left feeling depressed about the current state of his life, pondering if he is really needed any more as he witnesses the rest of the gang bonding so well without really registering his presence, prompting the spirit of his long-dead friend Jesse to appear to him and show him a world where he was never born. While Sunnydale still exists as the First Evil never had the opportunity to mount the large-scale attack against the Slayer line, this is because Buffy died for good when confronting the Master (although he was staked by Angel shortly afterwards), and since then, every subsequent Slayer has only lasted for a year before being killed in the line of duty, with current Slayer Renee- who is Xander's girlfriend in the 'real' world at this time- noting that Sunnydale is now regarded as the Slayers' graveyard. As well as these dead Slayers, Willow has been turned into a vampire by Spike, Cordelia died when she attended the demonic frat party, Drusilla was killed by Kendra before Spike killed Kendra in revenge, Jenny Calendar died in a car accident during the cursed candy incident, several students were poisoned by the bitter cafeteria worker, and Slayers are still only one at a time, as well as Angel remaining in Sunnydale with Giles and Oz rather than relocating to Los Angeles.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Severin gains Illyria's power over time and space.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer shared a universe, albeit with only a few cross-overs. The canon was thoroughly welded back together in the sequel comics.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, she almost succeeds in retiring for an entire episode. Granted, it was three months in-universe time.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. She goes home to find Joyce and Giles there comparing notes, so Buffy lets them think she's been neglecting school and Slayer duties by partying at the Bronze.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, she has her girlfriend with her in case she goes completely evil and has to be killed.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. She is of Romani descent; her Anglicized surname stands in for Kalderash, the Romani group she is from, but prefers technology and modern means over the old magic ways. It was her clan's magic that cursed Angel to have a soul, so when Angel manages to break the curse by having a moment of true happiness with Buffy, Jenny tries to find a solution. She tries to translate the old curse using technology so it can be used again, but Angelus finds out what she's doing and brutally snaps her neck.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. She names one Mr. Octopus Fantasticus and expresses a desire to have one as a bathtub toy.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. She was born as a human, but spent approximately a thousand years as a demon before becoming her old self again, forcing her to relearn being human. (Though she was always kind of odd.)
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer shifted networks from WB to UPN after season 5, a WB spokesperson said that UPN stood for "Used Parts Network". In response, a UPN spokesperson said that WB stood for "Without Buffy".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer's idea as it was her last episode and the two had never had any significant scenes together.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer side also helps plant the seeds for this trope in his relationship with Buffy, as she sees how loyal and dedicated he really is for someone he cares about and starts treating him with a degree of trust and respect despite knowing that he's still a monster.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Simone constantly wants bigger and better weapons.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Simply being around it made Jonathan weaker, and defeating it broke the spell completely.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer's "Inca Mummy Girl". She was an Andean mummy who sucked living humans' life forces dry to stay alive herself.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Since the actor who played Whistler was unavailable at the time, the very similar character Allen Francis Doyle was created instead.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer's interviews. Some fans considered anything Joss said in an interview to be canon, while others did not and were annoyed by this practice.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer soda in the Season 3 episode "Faith, Hope & Trick."

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, so even though he's probably older than her mother he doesn't fit this trope. Joyce Summers, however, fits it perfectly because Buffy keeps her from knowing about the slaying, as does Principal Flutie.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, so he jumped at the chance to remake it as a TV series in 1996. The TV-series is a sequel to the original movie script, ignoring the changes made that resulted in the final product. He later made a comic of the version of the movie's events considered canon in the series.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. So in Halfrek's second appearance, she sees Spike and says "William?" before the two avoid each other's gazes (and nothing more is said). This implied that Halfrek and Cecily were the same person, though another episode has Halfrek refer to the Crimean War (when Cecily would be about five). Kali Rocha believes that they are the same person and that Halfrek was posing as Cecily on assignment.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer something in Kryptonian during their duel. Given his incredibly pissed reaction, the Scooby Gang deduces it was insulting.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Sometimes all the Scoobies do is get in each other's way, and often their powers or special skills only mess things up more.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" sometimes we see the red "REC" with the frame, when Andrew is recording something. Other times they show a green "PLAY" when he's reviewing video he shot earlier.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer somewhat subverts the trope - while the Angel (Vampire)/ Buffy (Magical Slayer)/Riley (human) triangle fits, by the point Riley shows up in Buffy's life she and Angel had already decided they should move on. Kind of.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" so much that he had a clause in his contract stating that he would never have to do anything like that again.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, so she conceded, albeit reluctantly, that he mustn't be allowed to live.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer so she has to grab a wooden stake and do it again.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer so to her and even to most seasoned drinkers it would taste like feet.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer specifically shown to be an out-of-the-way, not at all normal town, akin to a Sunnydale counterpart, but... well, Germany has a fourth of the US' population and is about the size of Montana. There is really no such thing as an "out of the way" place there.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Spike and Harmony are searching for the Gem of Amara, a relic that makes vampires invulnerable. They find it in a tomb full of jewelry and other artifacts. Spike thinks it's a huge gaudy necklace and puts it on. Moments later he tries to kill Harmony in a fit of rage only to discover when he fails that the real Gem was a relatively nondescript ring that Harmony had put on.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Spike, as a fledgling vampire, turned his own mother, as she was dying of tuberculosis. His newly vamped mom then promptly accused him of doing so because he had a thing for Mommy. Spike, however, argued that he did it only to keep her alive, and ended up staking her when she started coming on to him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Spike attacked Buffy and briefly pretended to be under the chip's influence.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Spike, being crazy, utters a lot of apparent non sequiturs, and the Scoobies ignore them. The twist is that Willow is invisibly present (and the others, except Spike, are invisible to her), and all of Spike's responses make some kind of sense.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Spike forms a strong bond with Nikki/Jessica as he represents an unconventional blend of what each of her personalities want in a man after D.K.'s death, with Nikki needing a good father figure for Micah while Jessica prefers the 'bad boys'.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Spike gets along with Buffy's mother, both because she treats him with courtesy (even commiserating when Drusilla dumps him) and because of his close relationship with his own mother, which ended badly after he made her a vampire so that he could live in blissful trinity with her and Drusilla (to Dru's consternation).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Spike gets a Start of Darkness episode called "Fool for Love".

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Spike once he became allied with the Scoobies in Seasons 4 and 5.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Spike's trigger in season 7 is an old English folk song, "Early One Morning."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Spike's trigger is a song his mother used to sing when he was a child, the English folk song "Early One Morning".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Spike, who's spent half the season trying to get Buffy to respond to his feelings, perks up at this.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer spin-off, Team Angel use the same method to track down where Wolfram & Hart have stashed Darla.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer spirits created from the orphans' raw emotions and repressed energy.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer's season 4 finale. Buffy realises she's dream-fighting the First Slayer and wakes up. As she's looking around the Slayer attacks again. Buffy ignores her and wakes up for real.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer's services as a singer and guitarist, which just serves to illustrate how drastically his character changed with time.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer staked the mayor's aide, believing him to be a vampire.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer stake goes in, even, though that might just be because Riley's a big guy who could power it through.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer starts out as a wimpy nerd and becomes one of the most powerful characters in the series by the end of the show, with the most notable shift being between seasons 3 and 4. Although she has a few romances along the way, her transformation isn't a direct result of any one of them.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, starts with Buffy not even knowing about vampires and Slayers.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer still isn't working properly. When she finally stakes the vamp, she exclaims, "That'll put marzipan in your pie plate, bingo!" Perhaps it was stuck on dadaist humor.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer story subverts this. Everyone thought the Slayer grew stronger as she aged but Willow discovers that they actually grow stronger from fighting. Buffy, who hasn't fought in over five years, has fallen to second strongest while Faith, who never stopped fighting, is a fair bit stronger than her. Several of the older Slayers are noted as only being a year or so before they outstrip Buffy as well.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer story, the others give him a rundown of everything that's happened in the six months or so since Halloween. Upon hearing about Angel losing his soul, Alternate Xander responds, "Wait, you're telling me that Dead Buffy becoming Live Buffy made him less happy than fucking Buffy?"
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer story written by season 8 writer and editor Scott Allie.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer's TV run, Buffy is left without a resolved love interest. Angel does try to see if she'd be willing to resume their relationship one day, but she tells him that she's a cookie "that's not done baking" and needs time to figure out other things first.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Subverted multiple times, usually along the lines of:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer such as in the first episode where he is spotted by a talent agent and in "The Bachelor Party" where the fiance of Doyle's ex-wife Harriet meets Angel and thinks that he is Doyle, saying that Harriet didn't tell him what a handsome man he was. Then he's introduced to Doyle and is relieved ("Oh, that's better").
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Supergirl in her Linda Danvers identity used to play a shrew-like character in the soap opera "Secret Hearts". At one point, Buffy tells Kara she hated the actress who played Margo Hatton.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Supergirl is getting beaten by a Kryptonian vampire. In order to fight him Buffy takes over Kara's body via Willow casting a spell.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Supergirl is -obviously- massively more powerful than Buffy, but Buffy knows how to fight vampires. When Supergirl has to fight a vampire Kryptonian who is actually more powerful than her, she struggles. Buffy has to enter her mind via a spell to add Supergirl's powers to her own fighting skills and take the vampire down.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Supergirl lends a piece of Kryptonite to her friends to kill Zol-Am with; but she warns that he'll try to fight it off.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Supergirl must leave Sunnydale after the team manages to defeat Zol-Am. Kara doesn't want to go but Buffy warns her the Powers That Be might hurt her if she stays, and asks her Kryptonian friend to trust her to handle Sunnydale.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Supergirl rescues Buffy when she is thrown from the Sears Tower.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Supergirl wants to call the Justice League in and wipe all vampires off Sunnydale. Buffy talks Kara out of it, explaining that the Gang needs to keep the existence of vampires a secret. Apparently, people are willing to accept the existence of "super-villains, criminals, alien enemies from dozens of planets," but not vampires.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Supergirl wants to call the Justice League in and wipe all vampires off Sunnydale. Buffy talks Kara out of it, explaining the Gang needs to keep the existence of vampires a secret.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, supervillain Spike was captured and surgically prevented from acting out aggression of any kind against humans. He promptly attempts to throw himself on a stake.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer survives the whole movie, but is meant to be a subversion of the typical opening victim who dies before the title. While the good and wholesome activist girl we're meant to initially believe is the final girl turns out to be the first victim.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer taken down a bit less than two dozen HSTs only serves to underscore the humor.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer takes place in a future New York, specifically Manhattan, now known as Haddyn.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer tends to refer to as the "Sky Bully". Which is a little odd, when you consider that the symbol of the Sky Bully is apparently the only one that has the power to repel and/or inflict serious burns on vampires.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer thanks to her Halloween costume - and her hair is brunette.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer) that explored what would have happened if she had stayed that way.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer that Giles and Ethan were written like ex-boyfriends. Likewise Spike with Xander or Andrew, and the latter with the other members of the Trio.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer that only eats male virgins. He threatens to sue everyone when they figure this out.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer that the real Dracula helped write the original book. He just wanted to get famous, but Spike gripes that thanks to him, everyone knows the weaknesses of vampires.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer," that would, in fact, be his desired approach.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The actual problem: demons are abducting people for slavery in a Hell dimension, working them for decades of its time, and then dumping them back in our world once they're too old to be useful.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the alleyway behind/beside the Bronze (it's not really clear on its placement) is this with a twist. You're not likely to get mugged, you're likely to be an unwilling blood donor of the neck bite variety. It's also one of Buffy's primary hunting grounds, such that one wonders why vamps still try killing people there when they know that there must be a thick layer of dust from how many of their kind have died at the Slayer's hands back there.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the anti-magic spell has to be constantly chanted and prevents only direct damage by magic. Other things done by magic, however, are unaffected. So, while Willow couldn't fry somebody with energy blasts while the spell was being chanted, she could still amplify her own physical strength and kick their asses.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the Band Candy that made people immature. And later, beer that turned the drinkers into cavemen.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The basic view of the world in Season 9, with Slayers being seen as terrorists persecuting vampires who are now beloved. Simone does not help, her appearance in the first issue even invoking that she is a domestic terrorist.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The best one is the Hellmouth, but there's others as well.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The canon continuation of the television show has this. Due to magic being 'reset' the Vampyr history is now the pre-eminent magical tome. Careful writing in the tome allows reality to be re-written. One spoiler-free example is Xander removing a magical compulsion deep from within his mind after consulting with his friends and writing an appropriate passage in the book.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The clipboard actually comes in useful when she uses it to stop a door closing.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The demon Moloch The Corrupter was sealed into a book. After the book was scanned with an Internet-connected computer, the demon's mind escaped onto the Internet to seduce more victims, eventually getting them to build him a robot body.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the destruction of the Seed of Wonder at the end of Season Eight has resulted in no decent books, movies, or paintings being made.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer the entire school has a rough idea of what Buffy does, and they give her the Class Protector Award.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: the episode "Once More with Feeling." Just about every one of the main characters reveals or discovers a painful secret that damages their relationships with each other. If it wasn't the musical episode, it would probably be the most depressing episode without the death of a main character.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The episode "Teacher's Pet" (the one with the praying mantis lady.) Buffy didn't do her homework, so when the teacher asks her to explain how ants communicate, Willow has to help her. She gets the mime for "touch" right, but she misinterprets "smell" as "B.O." The teacher, without even turning around, asks if Willow has anything else to say.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The fact that the first time they made love, Angel lost his soul, turned evil, and then tried to kill Buffy and end the world only later to have his soul brought back just in time for Buffy to have to send him to a hell dimension in order to save the world illustrates the point. Or perhaps Buffy's later quote when Angel was complaining of her current association with Spike does "What was the highlight of our relationship: when you broke up with me or when I killed you?"
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The femme Willow has a brief relationship with the butch Lake.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer). The fight, in classic cat fight fashion, begins with a bitchslap and continues into shin kicking, name calling, and hair pulling. It finally ends in a stalemate and an agreement never to mention it to anyone.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the final scene packs quite a punch since they've gotten their voices back, but neither of them can think of anything to say.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The final season has her continuing to struggle to get on an even keel, constantly worrying that using magic to any powerful degree will drive her insane again.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, The First is the very idea of evil itself. It seemingly has some aspect of being a personification of death, as well, seeing as it can take the appearance of anyone who has ever died (and in fact has no actual appearance of its own). This includes anyone who's died and then been brought back to life, and thus one of The First's common guises is Buffy herself (who's been revived twice, once through simple CPR after her heart stopped and once via magic).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the first thing the temporarily-psychic Buffy reads from a boy in her school is "Man, one day these pants are gonna fall right off my ass." Coherent, but not particularly relevant or meaningful. As the telepathy gets worse, she starts "hearing" everyone around her at once.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer the funeral discussing how Cordelia's going to be fine.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The Gentlemen in the episode "Hush" hover inches off the ground rather than walking, adding to their creepiness.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer The Gentlemen. The problem is they've cast a spell to stop anyone in Sunnydale from speaking.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The government also knew about the supernatural and kept it from the public, and occasionally tried to fight it or take advantage of it, with results ranging from ineffective to disastrous. The masquerade here is debatable, although partially because most people in Sunnydale get beaten around the head with just how many weird things occur. For example, in the Buffy Season Three finale, the entire graduating year bands together to fight off the Mayor and his hordes. It almost seems like everyone KNOWS, they just don't discuss it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The greatest difference between Spike and Angel is that the former believes in this trope. He even vampirized his mother so that between her and Drusilla he'd never be lonely (it didn't work out, but that was thanks to the vampiric transformation).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The guard is frozen solid, but Warren says that he'll be fine in a couple of days, and he's later mentioned to be in critical but stable condition.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The international version (as released in UK, Australia and Latin America) had to omit three songs included in the US version due to licensing issues... But to make up for it, they added 11 more licensed songs and one more piece of score music, making it nearly twice as long as the US version.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The Judge deserves particular mention, since his only reason for existing is to burn the humanity out of humans and "corrupted" demons like vampires.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The look on his face afterwards suggests that it was indeed worth it to do it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The "magic" of stories, music, and art is also gone.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The Master keeps a cross in his lair to practice this. Despite physical burning and mental fear he can stand close enough to grab it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the Mayor of Sunnydale had devised a very thorough and long-lasting plan of Ascension for himself, which was known to ultimately transform a human being into an embodiment of a pure demon.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The Mayor's ascension takes an entire season arc.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer the Mayor scheduled his Ascension for graduation day, and proceeded to turn into a gigantic snake demon and attempt to snack on the graduates.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the mother of Principal Wood, was a Slayer, and is seen in the comics fighting off a vampire while pregnant and deprived of her Slayer powers. She continued to fight the forces of darkness after giving birth to her son, up until her death at the hands of Spike.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The movie was admittedly a flop, but it premiered in 1992, the series ran from 1996-2003, and the comic books are still coming out with season 10 right now.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer themselves from which Enochian and all other languages evolved; while it's lost to record books and the minds of man, as the messenger for the Powers, he has it hardwired into his brain.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", the mummy hid the body of the real Ampata in one of his trunks.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The Nerd Trio do this to convince a demon that they're supervillains. As the script says, "It needs some work."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The new Slayer Army during the Battle of the Hellmouth also counts.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, then put him in a bodybag to smuggle him off the Sunnydale college campus. As tensions are high among the Initiative soldiers because one of their own was recently killed by a wolf-like demon, the use of a bodybag is ominous.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer the Old Ones and wish to bring them back. Initially the main threat of Season 1, after the Master's death and their failed attempt to resurrect him, only the Anointed One and a few others are left by the time of Season 2's "School Hard," and they decide that whoever kills Buffy will take the Master's place. When their plot is ruined due to Spike's impulsive tendencies, he decides to simply kill the Anointed One and takes control of what's left of the order, dissolving it completely.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the outfits of many vamps take on this trope. Also, The Bringers, servants of the First Evil, all wear black robes.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", the puppet we are led to believe is evil actually turns out to be a good guy.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The quote above comes from a news report after one of the L.A resident is found dead with marks on his throat. Merrick likewise mentions this to Buffy when the two of them go to a graveyard for him to show her proof that vampires are real, mentioning that the deceased of the grave they're visiting had "extensive tissue damage" around the neck.
* Buffy the Vampire SlayerThere is also Xander, who survived after being smacked around with a hammer that injures deities.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, there is an episode where Buffy and Riley are living batteries in a frat house via nonstop sex.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer there is Robin Wood, who is the child of a male human and a female "metahuman".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, there's a number that goes, "If my heart could beat, it would break my chest."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, there's bound to be examples of vampires immune to their traditional weaknesses.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer There was also Forrest, after being transformed.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the Scoobies really have no real reason to give her why not.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", the Scooby Gang get together and the news says that vampires are at large again Giles says he'll consult his books and Xander tells Willow to pay up, having bet five minutes before he'd do that.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the Scooby Gang takes a temporal trip to save past Slayers from being killed out of history. Too many dead and the whole world changes. Fortunately, they only go to time periods where English is spoken (the Civil War) or Giles can speak the local dialect.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The trigger is "Early One Morning", a song his mother used to sing when he was a child.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: The Trio's Invisibility Ray also has this function, which Warren nearly uses on Buffy.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, the various demons and vampires are known to play kitten poker. Yes, it's just like poker, but with tiny tabbies instead of chips.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The very air itself explodes if it's cool enough. Not so cool: people doing the same thing. Try not to sing.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The very first thing he does when he awakes is kill his creator.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer; the Watcher's Council in England, a secret branch of the US Army known as The Initiative and later the Slayer's Army made out of Slayers as the name implies. They all capture and/or kill creatures loosely define as demons. Whilst the Council sees them as supernatural magical creatures, The Initiative thinks they are unknown animal life forms and treat them as such.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer the world, and the humans in it, and thus would rather side with Buffy against Angel's evil personality Angelus than see Angelus summon the demon Acathla that sucks the world into Hell. A subversion in that he's not defending humanity except as food, but is quite fond of some parts of the culture that we give rise to.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, they are supposed to be more physically attractive.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. They end up trapped in the house. With a demon.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer; they got Buffy's voice from the video game instead).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, they have spent the intervening millennia developing a deep control over the mortal and hellish dimensions.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer third season episode "The Zeppo" is a classic — the entire episode revolves around this trope with sidekick-like-character Xander being ignored by the more powerful characters as they focus on preventing an apocalypse. However, he ends up saving the day by preventing the high school (location of the Hellmouth) from being blown up. Nobody ever found out about that. Buffy, Willow, and Giles were all in the high school library (the precise location of the Hellmouth) at the time.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: This happened to Dracula in 1947 by Comte de Saint-Germain. He is freed by Spike inadvertently.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: This happens a lot. One of the most nightmarish examples is Gnarl, who paralyses his victims and then eats their skin, one long strip at a time, while they're still conscious.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, this is a main driving point behind Faith's actions. She really wants to be friends with Buffy but it never really happens. Then they do start becoming friends and she accidentally kills a man and pretends not to care, destroying the friendship they had been building. The comics touch on this, with her angsting over how she pushes away anyone who is the least bit decent to her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. This is how Twilight tricks some of his followers into fighting for him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. This may actually be a subversion. The customer is satisfied by a very reasonable action on Buffy's part. The frustration and anger seen in previous attempts usually result from Buffy's poor efforts at handling the problem in the first place (trying to sell her a damaged and useless item for example). That is: Any person with decent customer service skills could have satisfied this customer initially. Buffy, on the other hand...
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. This, of course, drives Spike to utter distraction. Particularly when the spell no longer works:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Though, after exams, it was revealed that she actually had very good grades which she simply chose to hide from her peers, thinking it would make her less popular.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer throughout the course of the series. Losing an eye will do that to you.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer tie-in comic "Ring of Fire", Kendra attacks a man who turns out to be a demon. Xander asks how she knew. She didn't.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer tie-in novels featured Buffy's friend from the film, Pike, who got a spell cast on him and was slowly being turned to stone, until Buffy found out how to stop it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, till Buffy turns it around on him, and Tara pays the price.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer time Buffy's birthday is celebrated on-screen, it's followed by a supernatural tragedy or crisis she has to deal with. In season 6, Spike lampshades it and remarks that since bad things always seem to happen on Buffy's birthday, she should just stop celebrating it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer tips him to her presence and he touches the stone door, anticipating her entry, as Buffy does the same thing from the opposite side. But when Spike pulls open the door Buffy has already fled.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer to accompany them. Giles and Xander are anything but pleased that Buffy brought Spike along, but Buffy justifies it by pointing out that she and Spike are the only ones who stand any chance at protecting Dawn should Glory catch up to them; when Xander continues to object to it, Buffy, having enough to deal with already, snaps and promptly shuts him up with a few words:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer to deflect suspicion while he plots against Angelus.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" to describe how exposed she felt when she and Xander burst into song: "It's like we were being watched, like there was a wall missing from our apartment. Like there were only three walls, and not a fourth wall."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer to draw diagrams of the situation to be understood at all.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer to lure them into attacking so they can be killed. This means Riley has to tell off the Scoobies for munching chips and talking loudly while he's trying to sneak through a graveyard.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer too but that's the one that jumps to mind (no pun intended). Having a gaping stomach wound doesn't help...
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer took advantage of the fact that Nicholas Brendon (who played Xander Harris) has an identical twin, in an episode where there are two Xanders. Kelly Donovan (said identical twin) later stood in for Nicholas Brendon during the episode "Intervention", which coincidentally had Xander referring back to the events of the previous episode because Brendon had pneumonia at the time.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer to search the world for a way to either control or cure his werewolfism. The follow-up comics establish that he eventually settled down and had a son with a fellow werewolf.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer to start the procedure and has to be reminded by the 911 operator who calmly talks her through the first steps until she remembers what to do.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer to the anti-matter Earth of the universe of Qward. M'Nagaleh bursts into flames right away and Supergirl has to leave as soon as possible because not even she can survive there for longer than a few seconds.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer to the point where they treat the girls as wholly expendable.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer to this end. After discovering this, Spike personally takes Buffy to the den to show her Riley being fed on; this proves instrumental in Buffy and Riley's breakup.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, to watch dozens of scantily-clad basketball players and cheerleaders (though this turns out to be justified, as vampires have infiltrated the game).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: True of the Scoobies (Xander, Willow, Cordelia, etc.), but not so much Buffy herself; she knows at the start of the series that she's the Slayer.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Tucker Wells unleashes some hell hounds he's trained to attack people in formal wear at the Prom to exact his revenge.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Twilight's form in our dimension is a winged lion. The design team refers to this as a "gryphon", although that's not quite accurate, as a gryphon has an eagle's head.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, two vampires are attempting to kill Buffy when Kara bursts into the place through a window.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, two vampires are trying to gun Buffy down when Supergirl barges in and pummels them.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Unless you count the vampire who died off-screen and was turned, there are no deaths in "The Body". Kind of ironic, considering the subject of the episode.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer up while sobbing and screaming that she's a disgusting, murderous b.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer used this in the episode "What's My Line, Part II." When Xander and Cordelia are leaving Buffy's house they peek around a corner Scooby-Stack-style. This episode also features the first labeling of the Buffy crew as the "Scooby Gang."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" uses this to get the parents of Sunnydale to kill witches and anyone who protects them, including their own children.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, usually in one of two forms — In addition to fire extinguishers, Sunnydale High School is also equipped with fire axes.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Vampire Amilyn (Paul Reubens) hangs onto the top of Pike's van as he's fleeing and even punches a hole in the roof to grab him. Too bad about that low tree limb...
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer vampire counterpart. They don't exactly fit.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer vampire Drusilla, and Spike at the beginning of Season 7.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer/Vampire pairings (Buffy/Angel and Buffy/Spike).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, vampires are able to hurt Kryptonians since they are magical creatures. Kara confirms this first-hand when a vampire bites her hand.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, vampires only need to drink blood, but some enjoy eating human food and drinking alcohol. Vampires can get drunk, but in one episode, Angel clarifies that eating food will not help him survive, only drinking blood.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", vampire Spike attacks Willow in her dorm room, turning up her CD player so the students outside can't hear her screaming.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", vampire Spike does this with the stone lid of a sarcophagus while arguing with Buffy.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer vengeance demons. Sometimes the wisher gets taken out (or is at risk of being taken out) by the wish at the same time as the subject of their vengeance because the vengeance demon behind the wish didn't think about the potential consequences (or didn't think they'd be important). This can, occasionally, backfire on the demon in question... for instance, in one Season Six episode, Halfrek curses everyone at the Summers house to stay in the house forever, and then makes the mistake of dropping by the house to gloat, with the result that she gets stuck in her own curse and has to reverse it. Another example is an unnamed vengeance demon's head exploding after a wisher asked for the heads of every other female in town to explode. Anya managed to use her vengeance demon powers to spark the Russian Revolution.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, very much so. There are those who like it and those who are yelling that the franchise is ruined because of them.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Warren built the April-bot, the Buffy-bot, and finally a robot of himself. Willow shows herself to be quite good at fixing/reprogramming the Buffy-bot when needed.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer was an amalgam of several of the monsters that the Initiative had captured (plus a deceased human soldier) and was taken out by an amalgam of the main characters.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" was based on a dream of writer Marti Noxon's.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer was mentioned specifically.) Joyce enjoyed it, too.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer wasn't paying attention to what's going on so he actually did hit the tree, but the timing was so serendipitous to the scene that they kept the take.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer was often held up as "proof" that she was out of her depth helming a TV show. Whedon came to her defense, saying the most divisive story elements ultimately came from him. David Fury and Steven DeKnight sometimes also get this, although in their cases it's more down to off-screen interactions with fans that went bad.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer water on him. Since Buffy doesn't approve of this, Dawn and Anya try to pretend the water came from Andrew drooling all over himself.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. We don't see its demise, but it's easy to imagine it made this sound, and, when its fate is mentioned, it's played just a bit humorously.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, we get "The Key" (note the capital K), a device that can destroy the barrier between realities and turn southern California into Hell on Earth.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer we have Buffy who has relationships with vampires. And it's an ongoing joke with Xander that demons are attracted to him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, we have the middle ground. While the main characters all have supernatural knowledge, they often have to deal with people who are oblivious. Often they are obstructive, but sometimes the characters gain key information from them, despite the muggles not knowing what the information is actually about. Note also though that a lot of episodes do not feature muggles at all.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer (Well, OK, she had to stab him with the sword for mystical reasons related to knights, purity, and the closing of the way to hell).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer weren't supposed to have anything to do with each other either than both being played by Kali Rocha, but after many fans theorized that Halfrek (a demon) could have been undercover as Cecily, the writers made a small reference to it, and got its own story in one of the comics.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", werewolf Oz breaks out of his cage and gets into a fight with a female werewolf. The next day he wakes up naked in the forest, covered in scratches. Then hot nightclub singer Veruca is revealed next to him, also naked and covered in scratches. As Oz is dating someone else at the time, this is not good news for him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Wesley's only encounters with vampires thus far have been under "controlled circumstances"; basically, he's in over his head from the get-go.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer "What's My Line?", that being a Slayer isn't a job, it's what Buffy is. Buffy then goes to hug her...
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, when Buffy calls out Kendra when the latter claims to be the Slayer... only to discover that Kendra became a Slayer when Buffy was temporarily dead.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, when Buffy confronts a girl being abused by her boyfriend and forces her to look at her bruises in the mirror:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. When Buffy is brought back from the dead, she asks Spike how long she's been away. Spike says the exact number of days without having to think about it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, when Buffy is investigating her mother's new boyfriend, one of his co-workers asks who she is. She says "Bu...Linda. Belinda."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer when Buffy outruns and rescues Andrew and Jonathan from Dark Willow's vengeance-seeking fireball.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, when Buffy tells Wesley that the Council can consider themselves closed if the Scoobies can’t ask them for help in curing Angel of a fatal poison, Wesley decides to quit from the Council himself, refusing to associate himself with men like his father and Quentin Travers who would basically torture a teenage girl in the name of an abstract test and would let his closest friend die just because Angel isn’t human.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, when Cordelia and Buffy are competing for the title of homecoming queen:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. When dealing with the typical vampires, this is justified: crossbows are a lot better at firing wooden ammunition than guns.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Whenever someone does something embarrassing at Sunnydale High, the students tend to burst into ironic applause.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: When Giles is fired as Buffy's Watcher, he's less than impressed when his replacement, Wesley Wyndam-Price, boasts about his training.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer when she's already been there for a few years and still doesn't know anyone outside of the main cast in any of her classes at their supposedly tiny school.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" when Spike turns the Scoobies against one another.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer). When the main cast find out, it doesn't take them long to realize what he's capable of.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. When they meet at the end just before being rejoined they have a tendency to speak together.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", when they were both arrested, they knocked out a cop and stole his keys to unlock their handcuffs, instead of breaking them.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: When transformed back into a teenager ("Band Candy"), Principal Snyder was shown to be a relatively friendly dork and seemingly looked up to the Scoobies. He even liked Oz's Cool Hair!
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, when vampires are slain, their skeletons are often briefly visible before they entirely crumble into dust. This trope is played much straighter with the Master, an old and powerful vampire, whose flesh and clothes spectacularly evaporate as he dies, leaving behind a perfect, intact skeleton, suitable for resurrection. Buffy and gang fix that with a sledgehammer a few months later. One wonders why similarly old and powerful vampires (like Kakistos and the Turok-Han) don't leave behind similar keepsakes.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: When we first meet Faith, the result of witnessing the gruesome death of her Watcher. She relapses back into it when she awakens from her coma.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. When Willow and Tara teleport Glory out of the hospital, she appears in the sky above Sunnydale in a starburst, then can be seen plummeting to earth as a falling star.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", when Willow investigates the past of Buffy's newly-arrived old friend and early crush, she feels guilty about it and tries to act naturally around Buffy - failing spectacularly, but Buffy shrugs off her squeaking high-pitched panic as the result of too much coffee.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: When Willow was unsatisfied that her and Oz's relationship wasn't progressing to smoochies:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer when you consider that the episode establishing their neglectfulness came about a half-season after a bookcase had fallen on her and briefly landed her in a wheelchair. You'd think if anything would make her pay attention...Then there's Xander's parents,who are shown to drink to the point where Xander would rather sleep outside in demon-infested Sunnydale on Christmas eve than listen to them fight.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", where Buffy accidentally gets telepathy, she starts hearing everyone's thoughts all the time. This not only overwhelms her, but it will inevitably cause her to go crazy unless the telepathy is removed. There was one other person to have gotten this, and he ended up in complete isolation, away from any other people.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer where Buffy and Spike are sent back in time by Willow in order to prevent the rise of the First Evil.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, where cases of vampires going on a rampage are always written off as "thugs on PCP."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer where humans are concerned, he is still a powerful Master Vampire.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", where the monstrous "Gentlemen" can be killed by hearing a human scream.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", where the other Scoobies are out finding protection against the impending apocalypse and he is sent for donuts. Of course, by the end of the night he's gotten laid, defused a bomb, and killed some zombies.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", where the SGC learns about magic after Cassie Frasier is Called as a Slayer during the battle with the First. While Cassie was born on another planet and thus proves that there are other Potentials in the wider galaxy, Thor explains that the energy needed to trigger a Slayer only moves at the speed of light, so it would take decades for Willow's spell to reach another inhabited world, and even then after travelling such a distance the energy of the spell would be basically "lost in the noise", even assuming the other world has enough of its own magic to empower a Slayer.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", where the swim team are turning into fish monsters.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, whereupon Xander's cards go flying into the air.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, where Warren's attempt to create a robotic girlfriend proved to be "too easy", and he ended up feeling nothing for her.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, where Xander informs Willow that since they're fiddling with a 'Blaster', that randomly hitting buttons is not high on his agenda. He then adds that if it were called the 'Orgasminator', that would, in fact, be his desired approach.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" which had Buffy learning of some vampires hanging out in an abandoned warehouse and commenting, "Is there any other kind in Sunnydale?" Another example would be Spike and Drusilla using one as their lair in Season 2.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer" (which originally aired back-to-back with it).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer (which she casts from the hit points of Kennedy and Anya, the two strongest beings in the room).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. (Which, since Angel also likes Barry Manilow, Spike takes as an insult.)
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, which stuck in the same slot on UPN for two seasons.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", which turns out the former orphanage-turned-frat-house was haunted by the manifestations of the teens' sexually repressed emotions.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: While Buffy is the chosen one type, she can also team up with a gang of "concerned citizens" to stop the forces of evil (like vampires and demons) into taking over Earth and killing the innocent.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. While Buffy's Slayer organization tries to persuade new Slayers to join, they don't force them to do so, and allow them to slay independently or as an extracurricular activity. They're less nice about Slayers who misuse their powers, like Simone or Gigi, of course.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer while groping her leg. Later on, she also acts flirtatious toward any male in sight. (Not that she didn't do similar things in her old body.) In the original script, it's implied she's actually fondling herself underwater.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer). While most of the rest of the cast has at least been able to get regular work, it should be noted that Nicholas Brendon's career has effectively stalled to the point that he admitted his inability to find regular work has driven him into alcoholism.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer white) being one of the contenders at one point.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, who considers Angel and Buffy soulmates, apparently cried for so long that the set had to be shut down briefly.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, who famously explains his lycanthropy as follows:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer who had a literal shark head with flippers for hands, but dressed in a regular suit.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer who happen to be the last Scoobies who are single and heterosexual.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer who openly admitted to getting a "warm, tingly feeling" from making life hell for Buffy.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, who played Tara in the series, wrote a a short comic story called "The Innocent", about a Slayer during the French Revolution.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer who revelled in the fact that her beauty and father's money could get her anything she wanted, it was later subverted when she revealed how lonely such a lifestyle can be.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, who went from mild headaches to violent dementia in just a few episodes.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer willing to talk, there's very little the Scoobies could actually say that would make up for said atrocities, their inaction isn't helping the situation, and if they want to survive they've got no choice but to fight Hus and destroy him no matter how bad they feel about it.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Willow and Anya have been constantly arguing, until they must unite to defeat a troll released by Willow's spell gone awry.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Willow and Oz and Xander and Cordelia deliberately "uncouple" when they're around Buffy, in order not to emphasize her single status.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Willow and Oz get back together after breaking up because he caught her kissing Xander. On Christmas Eve, Willow attempts to seduce him as an apology for her behaviour. Oz gently turns her down because he wants their first time together to be because they both want it and not because she's trying to prove something to him.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Willow does this with a bus while tracking down Warren. Seeing as how she was charged up with an insane amount of magic and was using THAT to stop the bus...
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer". Willow dressed up as Joan of Arc, because of their similarities, like the time she was almost burned at the stake for being a witch, or her close relationship with God. Her boyfriend, Oz, reveals his costume as a simple name tag sticker: "Hello. My name is God".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Willow gets the date wrong, stating it occurred in 1917.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Willow is extremely upset when she scores "only" 740 on the verbal section of the SAT.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Willow is straight up this, while Buffy's toughness mixed with her femininity make her character average out.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer - Willow is venting her frustration over not being good at witchcraft, unaware she's unconsciously casting spells right and left, comparing herself to the superior Amy, who is now a pet rat in her dorm room:

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Willow of all people gets one when they first go to college.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Willow, on learning of Xander and Cordy's makeouts.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Willow profiles the school records to determine who might be a werewolf.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Willow's offhand statements start coming true, so Giles is struck blind, and Spike and Buffy start making wedding plans. Xander sees the two all lovey-dovey and asks "Can I be blind too?"
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Willow states that "Magic works off physics" and is often seen messing with the 'mechanics' of spells. Conversely, material outside of the series itself classified superscience (for example, Warren building completely humanoid androids) as a form of magic in and of itself. That is, people like Warren were only able to create such high tech devices because of a latent magical ability that functioned in this way, which may inadvertently explain why Willow was the only one able to repair the Buffybot.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Willow steps up as replacement leader. This can be seen as early as the third season episode "Earshot", where she organizes the rest of team into canvassing the school in order to catch a murderer - she has to raise her voice to get them in line. It becomes even more obvious at the end of the fifth season and beginning of the sixth, even leading the rest of the team to elect her the "Boss of Us".
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Willow tells her new (werewolf) boyfriend Oz "Yeah, okay, werewolf. But three days out of the month I'm not much fun to be around either." Which was a bit of a shock moment, considering how shy and soft-spoken Willow normally is.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Willow uses this to ask Xander's advice about her relationship problems. Xander interrupts with, "Will, I've deciphered your ingenious code" and Willow just drops the pretense.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Willy's Place is the place where Zol-Am goes to gather an army of undead (“Is there a gathering place where our kind can be found, in this city?”, he asks).
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, wisely, didn't even bother to insinuate that Buffy had killed him for good.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Wishverse Buffy is basically every thing Spike says of the death wish of Slayers, having given up on life to become an emotionless killing machine.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer with an atmosphere toxic to humans as well.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, with Anya singing a song about getting married to Xander. Near the end of the song, she steps through a doorway and comes out on the other side wearing a wedding dress.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer with the Demon bar "Willy's Alibi": "It's a Demon bar! It's like a gay bar... with Demons!"
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, with the Hellmouth working overtime, it corrupts the police to target the forces of good, in this case holding off the potentials while they attempt to kill Faith.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer with the possible exception of Warren's robots. Whether it's mutant steroid fish men, demonic Frankensteinian cyborgs, the animated dead looking for a girlfriend, or just the plan to collect the school library info on a database, if it's on the Hellmouth it will work and then start killing people.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer with Warren and Andrew's jetpacks. They popped out of backpacks on scissor-like extenders to prevent the trope but would have probably ripped themselves off their mounts if they really had enough thrust to lift an average human into flight.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer with Willow, who is "gay" despite having canonically shown interest in several male characters. It's fairly common for fanfics to change this, even if Willow is going to be paired with another woman.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer work on Willow, too, leading to several amusing jokes when she and the other girls start fighting over him.

* Buffy the Vampire Slayer would have been all of eighteen years old in the film, fighting super-powered vampires.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer wouldn't believe vampires exist. The closest thing to an in-depth explanation is this chestnut:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Xander and Cordelia get trapped in Buffy's basement by a demon. Their argument over whose fault it is ends with them kissing passionately.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Xander and Giles make the mistake of enlisting Spike's help at one point, and he just outright tells them he's going to now betray them, asking if they've all forgotten he's an evil demon who hates them.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Xander, Andrew, and Jonathan are caught in a two-sided Mexican stand-off when Andrew holds Xander at swordpoint, and Jonathan, trying to keep Andrew from killing Xander, puts his own sword to Andrew's neck.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Xander complains about how much he hates Angel, and when the latter enters, he calmly adds "Oh, hey, Angel" without bothering to revise his statement.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Xander Harris, after unwittingly unleashing a love spell on the entire female community of Sunnydale, tries to seek refuge inside Buffy's home while getting Cordy out of harm's way. When Joyce suddenly tries to lead him on, he bangs his head on the table.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Xander Harris. Due to being turned into a soldier during the first Halloween episode, he still retains military knowledge long after being returned to normal, which helps out the Scoobies on more than one occasion.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Xander Harris harbors an unspoken desire for Joyce Summers. He's a conquistador! And for some Sunnydale High teachers as well. And Anya, who is 1120 years old.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Xander Harris, who spent most of the series in a long-term committed relationships with either Cordelia (early on) or Anya (Season 4 to the end). Also, he has a one night stand with Faith and Willow wanted him. In the first couple of seasons it's a running joke that he does get dates - but they're all with demons disguised as women.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Xander Harris with Dracula in the comics. Xander even taught him how to motorbike.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Xander is in a panic because he has been cursed with a host of diseases. He's most stressed about the syphilis. Anya says comfortingly:
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer", Xander is suspended above the Hellmouth by a demon. Really, Xander, you shouldn't have suggested that use for the rope yourself....
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Xander is the one to suggest that the rope might be for "kinky sexy fun"; the girl claims she just wants to suspend a canoe in her garage. We're not shown exactly how Xander ends up suspended over the Hellmouth.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer: Xander spends season 1 in love with Buffy. Buffy sees Xander as one of her best friends. When Xander asks Buffy out in the series one finale "Prophecy Girl", Buffy rejects his offer. She is currently in love with Angel, a vampire with a soul. Xander, admittedly unable to handle rejection, says to her: "I mean, I guess a guy's gotta be undead to make time with you."
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Xander talks tacks about selling chocolate to support for the school's band, but loses focus as Willow's foot creeps up his shin.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer Xander, Willow and Anya annoy Riley by munching on a bag of chips, while he's trying to be stealthy when they're out patrolling with him after Buffy is laid up after being wounded by a vampire.
* Buffy the Vampire Slayer, you got to wonder why no one questioned him always being alone with teenage girls. Lampshaded three times:
* Buffy. They meet in secret and ultimately have a big, violent sex scene.
* Buffy thinks a present Xander got her is the best present ever. The present? A
* Buffy thinks of Dawn as a burden to be endured quite often, and not only because of the usual younger sister nonsense.
* Buffy. This is most frequently invoked with Spike; most other vampires aren't considered as cuddly, except for Angel, who hates being one.
* Buffy, though, Wesley was only really talkative when he was trying to impress people or make himself look good. When he wasn't being an insufferable show-off, he was actually fairly quiet.

* Buffy to survive a piece of wood puncturing any part of their upper torso.
* Buffy typically departed from and returned to her house this way, before her mother knew she was The Slayer. In "
* Buffy used this defense with Spike after their first kiss, second kiss, and... the rest of their
* Buffy uses this when trying to get the attention of Giles, who is preoccupied
* Buffyverse also have been Santa Claus looking out for vampires with souls. The whole "White Christmas" thing being his entire shtick and all.
* Buffyverse by drinking animal blood, but flashbacks to his early attempts at living around people show it wasn't always so easy for him to resist humans, and if he's severely weakened or starved, he's liable to grab and start drinking from someone before he even realizes what he's doing.
* Buffyverse Dracula for much the same reason as in the Dresden series (See above), as he spilled the beans to Stoker on many of a vampire's weaknesses. Also, Dracula owes Spike eleven pounds.
* Buffyverse: Dru's (rarely seen) game face is more snake-like than other vampires in the Buffyverse.
* Buffyverse, due to the sheer number of characters whose deaths did not prevent them from continuing on. Spike (among others) hangs a lampshade on this one.
* Buffyverse has an odd relationship with Christianity. Crosses, holy water, and exorcism are all effective against vampires or demons, but most of what's portrayed about its actual cosmology isn't particularly Christian. One explanation is that it's not that Christian holy symbols work because of their connection to Christianity, but rather early Christians decided that symbols that messed up vampires were holy. On the other hand, there is a heaven where the dead go to and many worlds that are labeled as hells.
* Buffyverse). It has been indicated that some vampires may carry a portion of the person they were before. Lampshaded in "Dopplegangland":
* Buffyverse, Melaka and one of the two random goons after the same prize end up pointing laser pistols at each other, causing the goon to state "It appears we have a standoff." Melaka's response? "What standoff?" BLAM.
* Buffyverse occasionally decapitate their enemies—mostly vampires or demons.
* Buffyverse, sending visions that let them know when people are in trouble and have been implied to have directly helped them a few times, but they're often nowhere to be seen when the shit really hits the fan, and the few beings said to work for them are often uninterested and unsympathetic to the heroes' plights. They are even referred to by the heroes as "The Powers that Screw You" and "The Powers that Sit on Their Be-Hinds." On the evil side, the series has the Senior Partners, ascended demons who work through the interdimensional law firm Wolfram & Hart, who are shown to be VERY active in spreading evil and contributing to humanity's eventual downfall. The show's background has the Earth previously ruled by demonic gods millenia ago and Buffy's last season saw the heroes fighting the personification of evil, neither of which seem to have a good equivalent. In addition, at one point in the series a vampire in the series asks Buffy if God exists, and she responds "Nothing solid".
* Buffyverse that people who do impossible things with science on the Hellmouth (such as create a demonic Frankensteinian nuclear powered cyborg) are actually using magic without knowing it.
* Buffyverse. Though to his credit, hideous monster girls are more common.
* Buffyverse to behave like this. The demon Sahjhan was even able to travel through time by being a master of interdimensional travel.
* Buffyverse vampires are generally that bit more dangerous when they go
* Buffyverse, vampires explode to dust when they get staked. Makes a certain amount of sense for old vamps like the Master; but even fresh vampires, like those who just came out of the ground after being turned, turn to dust upon slayage. In Real Life it was designed that way so they wouldn't have to deal with dead bodies lying all over the place.
* Buffyverse" when the modern-thinking vampire Mr. Trick remonstrates an opponent who comes at him with a sword.

* Buffyverse, whose mythos establish that in the "hell dimensions", years and years and years pass before any noticeable length of time has gone by on Earth.
* Buffy video games have small ones that are dog-sized, and large ones that are Buffy-sized. They're quick, run along the walls and ceilings, knock Buffy down in one hit before jumping on top to bite (a killing move if she can't fend them off) and realistic enough to be rather unsettling.
* "Buffy vs. Dracula"." He tries to regenerate again, but disappears after she says, "I'm standing right here."
* Buffy was frequently jumping to conclusions about Angel being involved with Drusilla or Cordelia or Faith. Her jealous nature was tempered in later relationships, partly because she wore the pants by that time.
* Buffy was never really aimed at the "corruptible" demographic to begin with.
* Buffy we have Angelus, who uses those vampire teeth to chew all the scenery he can find. Particularly in his second appearance. Good lord, man, switch to decaf.
* Buffy, when the possibility of Angel turning evil made Lorne consider the great benefits of Angel in leather.
* Buffy which results in him transforming into a monster. His girlfriend is the only one who can calm him down. In a subversion, he's a murderer and the relationship is abusive.
* Buffy, which was widely seen as emotionally inappropriate and further intensified the controversy over whether the scene was in character.
* Buffy. While he debuts in season 2 as a neutral contact when the team has 4 members (Angel, Cordy, Wes, Gunn), he moves in with them and becomes far more involved with them in season 3 when they have 5 members (the previously mentioned, plus Fred) then joins the team officially in Season 4. But during season 3, while he is considered an ally, he isn't considered a core member. After Cordy departs, and Lorne makes up the fifth member, it could be said that Spike becomes the new sixth ranger.
* Buffy who could be weakened with a certain magical orb... so Buffy simply tossed it to the god in question, who, not being "the brightest star in the heavens", caught it by reflex.
* Buffy, who is cursed to be a "hot chick with superpowers", as Faith once put it. The curse part is she has to use said superpowers to fight for her life every night, and the world's existence every late Spring. All Evil is waiting for is for its
* Buffy, Willow, and Dawn are all often called short-forms or diminutives of their names by loved ones - "Buff", "Will," and "Dawnie", respectively.
* Buffy would play this role to Angel, then Cordelia, and finally Faith would step up after the events in the comic series.
* Buffy, wracked with guilt over her role in the death of Deputy Mayor Finch, has a nightmare of his corpse dragging her underwater. ("
* Buffy Xander accidentally discovers that there is a Xander L. Harris Doppelganger society, and comes in fifth in their look-alike contest. (Faith does better in the associated Faith look-alike contest, coming in third.)
* Bufopel, are hulking toad-like humanoids with great strength. One is seen as a patron of the Canto Bight casino.
* Buford and Baljeet, up to having an episode about them titled "Bully Bromance Breakup", complete with breakup song.
* Buford at one point says "Are you sure it's only been three months? Because I added up the stuff we've been building and we're way over 150..."
* Buford seems to retain an unwillingness to back down against girls in other episodes, too, such as "Let's Take a Quiz" and "Brain Drain." We never find out who wins the former, while Isabella beats him again in the latter.
* Buford shows signs of this as well, he knows Latin and French and doesn't think much of it.
* Buford Tannen has a gun hidden in his hat, but it's so small that it can only carry a single bullet, * Bug #700000: Buy Firefox developers some beer. This may be a reference to the software licensing term "beerware", which is a very lax license that allows users to do whatever they want with the software if they buy the author a beer should the user meet them, or at least drink a beer in their honor. However, Mozilla's software is not beerware, being licensed under the Mozilla Public License.

* "Bug" actually means "creepy-crawly", it's related to "bugaboo" and possibly to the Slavic words for "god" (gods can be scary); it can be applied not only to insects but to any arthropod (lobsters and crawfish, both, are sometimes called "mudbugs", and they're crustaceans, as are pillbugs). Scientists restrict "bug" to mean insects of the order Hemiptera, but technical jargon is not normative for common speech, any more than the grammar of Latin is normative for English.
* bug allowed for a similar situation... with a Javelin guided-missile launcher. Whenever someone using the glitch died their missile would launch straight into the ground, killing everyone within 20 feet unless they had a specific combination of perks and equipment to reduce damage from explosions.
* Bug Bait: If you do absolutely abysmally, J will mock your performance before neuralizing you.
* Bugbats are bat-like creatures with the heads of insects. They're fairly harmless alone, but a swarm can kill a dwarf in seconds.
* Bugbears, a goblinoid offshoot, look vaguely like long-eared gorillas with bear noses and are by far the biggest and strongest of the goblin races. However, they're actually above-average in terms of intellect, and surprisingly stealthy and agile - in games where they're playable, their favored class is normally Rogue.
* Bugbears as reimagined for the setting absolutely love acting as such, getting off on the fear of their future victims and being very, very good at sneaking about and hiding in places a burly, hairy 6-7-foot-tall murder machine has no business being able to...
* Bugbears basically exist to find people wherever they are and scare them. A character even describes that some of the real-life examples here are bugbears in-universe.
* Bugbears, orcs, and gnolls are all quite willing to attack and kill or enslave less powerful evil humanoids like goblins and kobolds.
* Bug boss, first seen trapped in a large block of ice (presumably frozen during the ice age). He breaks out as soon as Bug walks a few steps.
* Bug Clone" technique also exists, in which the user creates a clone of himself out of those beetles, more true to this trope.
* Bug- Definitely at the end of the silly side. You know that when the "hit an enemy" sound is a wacky cartoon sound effect. Also, Bug's silly humorous quotes when he kills an enemy or when he takes damage show it too.
* Bugdom: A Macintosh computer game has spiders in levels four and five, they may not be giant ones but they look as ugly and scary as hell, thankfully they only attack Rollie McFly (the pill bug you control) by trapping him in a balled web and jumping up and down on him rather than seeing him horrifically torn to shreds and eaten, still doesn't make the spiders any less scary and ugly the way they look in the game especially since Bugdom excels in having great graphics.
* Bugenhagen shows up early in the game to teach the characters how Lifestream works, which is * bug-eyed gremlin-tadpole-thing this kid's show is based on) there's never even a shred of actual evidence to prove this.
* Bug Fables after taking over the prison. They seem to genuinely want to reform, and the party speculates that Maki may be more willing to give them an explorer's permit once they're released.
* Bug Fables and dice as a weapon, and she uses a roulette to determine what happens at the start of her turn.
* Bug Fables because her meanness and selfishness make her a fun and compelling heel in a game where the main villain's relationship with the heroes is rather impersonal. It helps that her boss fights are fun and are accompanied by awesome music.
* Bug Fables called Heavy Drone B-33, whose purpose is to protect the factory core itself, and it serves as the main boss of Chapter 3.

* Bug Fables; Cenn and Pisci impersonate an exploration team (which consist of professional adventurers given adventuring and fighting permission by the Ant Kingdom), complete with the fake permit, to abuse their "rank" in order to take anything they want.
* Bug Fables. Considering that the game follows the adventures of bugs, these are just normal carnivorous plants, but seen through miniature eyes.
* Bug Fables, even though every character is a bug, and most of them feature wings, only bees, wasps and dragonflies, as well as several non-sapient bugs, are actually capable of flying, while moths, butterflies, beetles, and etc. are permanently stuck on the ground. One of the lore books states that the reason behind this is due to the fact that, after the evolution, everyday life no longer required flight, so bugs eventually lost an ability to fly after many generations. It's even theorized in-universe that one day, not even flying bugs will retain this ability in the near future.
* Bug Fables he's a victim of this trope, but still goes along with her plans regardless. He does seem to get a bit more snarky about it as the game goes on.
* Bug Fables. His teammates ask him why he never used this before. Kabbu's response?
* Bug Fables. However, it's only in proportion, as the main characters are insects, so for a human it would be normal-sized.
* Bug Fables involves finding three bad books to give to a wasp named Reeves. He wants them because of this trope.
* Bug Fables involves the Ant Kingdom being in conflict-turned-war with Wasp Kingdom over the Everlasting Sapling, an artifact which is said to grant immortality to whoever manages to eat just one of its leaves. The backstory also mentions that the Wasp Kingdom and the Bee Kingdom also had wars in the past, and the Ant Kingdom and the Termite Kingdom had always had a rocky relationship.
* Bug Fables is one of the biggest, fattest bugs Team Snakemouth encounters. She's so heavy that she can't move by herself, and a small team of subjects has to carry her from place to place.
* Bug Fables is the False Monarch, a cluster of mothflies disguised as one bug, and it uses said mothflies to attack Team Snakemouth.
* Bug Fables: Kabbu is a noble soul that adventures to help others, and does his best to respect everyone he comes across. Early on, he even learns a skill to revive his allies in battle by just giving a pep talk.
* Bug Fables. Leby refuses to allow Dib to take care of her, seeing him just as a kid and believing he can't help her the same way she helps him. This culminates in Dib running away in hopes of trying to prove himself by finding something for her birthday.
* Bug Fables: Like most female beetles, Pisci doesn't look feminine. In fact, she looks and acts downright manly and the only indication that she's female is her bestiary entry.
* Bug Fables loses a fight to Team Snakemouth, she acts like a spoiled toddler by screaming at and insulting them before storming off in a huff.
* Bug Fables: Pillbugs serve as a stand-in for dogs and cats, as they are commonly kept as pets by sapient bugs. Aphids are a stand-in for cows and chickens, as they are commonly farmed for their eggs and dew (which serves as a substitute for milk). Weevils are akin to wolves, being vicious, predatory quadrupedal beasts that even howl. The traveling caravan uses the snail as a stand-in for mules, having it carry their wares during their travels.
* Bug Fables prevents you from using items during his fight in order to make the battle square. And if you think you're smart by stunning him with a status effect, he'll break through it and destroy your items anyway.
* Bug Fables, reproduce fast and have insatiable appetite which they calm by devouring farmers' crops.
* Bug Fables) results in a dish called "Big Mistake", resembling a heavily pixellated bowl of purple stuff.
* Bug Fables says this while scolding her about how poorly-thought her plan is, and how her actions might result in all of Bugaria being doomed.

* Bug Fables series set in a world of civilized bugs) before the finalized title was revealed in January 2018, alongside the IndieGoGo campaign.
* Bug Fables that will unveil a mythical treasure tied to some dark secrets from the past.
* Bug Fables: The Wasp King is a vile tyrant who is unfailingly brutal to his allies and enemies alike, and darkens every scene he appears in. His right hand man General Ultimax is a shrill goofball who thinks he's tougher than he really is, and when his boss fights go poorly for him, he's reduced to a cowering wreck who can only fight by frantically slapping the heroes in a mad panic.
* Bug Fables. They all wear leaf masks, and they're a warrior tribe who attack all outsiders on sight.
* Bug Fables Unsurprisingly, one of the few friendly NPCs you can find here is a paranoid wreck due to living in such a hostile environment, and the first meeting with him results in the battle due to him fearing that Team Snakemouth came to harm his family.
* Bug Fables: Vi's older sister Jaune is a skilled painter whose artsy nature is further emphasized by having a paintbrush implanted where her stinger should be.
* Bug Fables, Vi wanted to escape the drudgery of working in the Bee Kingdom's honey factory by becoming an explorer, but her big sister Jaune mocked her ambitions. In the present, when Vi and Jaune are still too bitter with each other to be on speaking terms, Kabbu notes that explorers like them face many dangers on a regular basis and suggests that Jaune's mocking was an attempt to keep Vi from getting herself killed.
* Bug Fables Vi wants to get red paint for her sister Jaune, and must complete a large chain of deals to acquire it.
* Bug Fables: When the party visits the Honey Factory to retrieve an ancient artifact needed to find the Everlasting Sapling, a "Code 32" lockdown occurs that causes the robots in the factory to attack anything they perceive as intruders.
* Bug Fables, which are described in the lore books as hard and very bitter in taste.
* Bug Fables: While it's averted with the protagonists' exploration team, who are called Team Snakemouth (after their first successful mission), it's played straight with other exploration teams: Team Maki, Team Celia and Team Mothiva, all of which are named after the most prominent members of their teams.
* Bug Fables who attacks Team Snakemouth with magic while guarding an ancient artifact.
* Bugged Run after being defeated by her in a battle, flashing back to other times throughout their lives that Ariel has taken pity on her.
* Bugged Run beat Brock in their rematch by stacking defense bonuses from Harden while fighting Geodude until Butterfree can survive Onyx's Rock Tomb.
* Bugged Run by about 15 minutes, with the main character routinely arriving at locations from the game just in time to deal with the fallout of the game's player character's actions.
* Bugged Trapped in the desert, Murphy sees Puck (the eponymous bug) as a bottle of water and attempts to drink him. Puck bites his tongue.
* bugge is also where "bug" comes from). While these rarely have specific natures, origins or appearances coming with them, they consistently tend to lurk in shadowy places and prohibited areas — closets, basements, attics, the woods — hiding in the shadows and waiting for a naughty child to snap up.
* Buggers, and he wanted to avoid gratuitous profanity (he even replaces all uses of "Bugger" with "Formic" in the 2008 graphic novel adaptation). Note that while considered a swear on Earth after the first and second invasions, "buggers" doesn't really mean much to the aliens, who at that point are still figuring out the concept of sapience outside of a hive mind, have little to no real contact with the humans, and never really grok the concept of language even after human-Formic relations are a little more regular. Rather than being used to insult Formics in an immediate social setting, its use as a slur is more like an insulting nickname for an enemy of war, similar to how Americans would call Vietnamese soldiers "Charlie" during the Vietnam war.

* Buggery On The High Seas album, one of the pirates gets flogged for sassing the ship's captain, which starts off sounding painful but then his reaction turns to ecstatic joy with each whip lash he receives.
* Buggs carries a knife on his person due to paranoia of authority figures trying to kill him. Considering the principal's idea of expelling a child is shooting the offender in the head,
* Buggy and his crew have this reaction when Luffy shows off Gear Third, and he only uses half of the normal amount of air.
* Buggy) had performed a wild take or other shocked expressions up until that point. in descending order, they are:
* Buggy. In a twist on this trope, this causes Buggy himself to be overestimated by the World Government and his own men, because Shanks is one of the most powerful and feared pirates in the world yet Buggy- who has known Shanks since they were both kids- has absolutely no fear or respect for him at all while Shanks, in turn, always treats Buggy as an old buddy; as such, everyone thinks that Buggy is roughly equal in power to Shanks when in reality Buggy is far, far weaker than him.
* Buggy is immune to slashes. Even Mihawk, the 'greatest swordsman in the world', couldn't kill Buggy with his sword.
* Buggy's character arc after hitting the Grand Line. Due to his past with Gold Roger, as well as a series of coincidences and some truly desperate prisoners looking for a leader, Buggy has become something like Pirate Moses.
* Buggy should obviously not be one of the Seven Warlords of the Sea. He's one of the weakest pirate captains in the series, and the only reason he gets the position is pure dumb luck, having been a former member of Pirate King Gol D. Roger's crew who'd recruited several dangerous prisoners while breaking out of Impel Down.
* Buggy's three lackeys have this reaction when they announce their intention to rob them, and Luffy just laughs. Then they do it again after Zoro cuts one of their swords at the hilt.
* Buggy the Clown a lot as well as most Logia users at some point, often repeatedly as these characters have no problem putting themselves together again.
* Buggy the Clown Arc, Zoro was stabbed in his side by one of Buggy's floating hands right before his fight with Cabaji. The wound quickly grew in size on account of Cabaji kicking it multiple times.
* Buggy the Clown ate the Bara Bara no Mi Devil Fruit, that allows him to separate any part of him and levitate it, but also to reassemble himself after doing it or be cut.
* Buggy the Clown's abilities from the Chop-Chop Fruit. All parts of his body can fly around at will, but only if his feet are grounded. He's also immune to stabbing and cutting weapons.
* Buggy they've always been since they were kids. Though in an title image after Marineford, they are showed eating and drinking at a bar together while laughing, so it seems Shank's opinion may be closer to the truth.
* Buggy to Mr. 3 and Crocodile, were freed from Impel Down and became decisive to plot development.
* Bug has crystals. Getting 100 of them doesn't net you an extra life, but you need to collect at least 100 in each act if you want to play the bonus level for a chance to get an extra continue.
* Bug has Venus flytraps (in the ice world, for some reason) and they will eat the character. Subverted, because they're non-lethal and will spit him onto another platform, and also because your character's a bug. Played partially straight in the sequel- staying in a Venus flytrap for too long will get the character killed.
* Bug, he gains the ability to hover for a short distance, but he hilariously flaps his arms to do so instead of using his wings.
* Bug Hunt; launching the alien on the shuttle without first rigging it to explode with the aforementioned grenade; or taking off on the shuttle yourself with it rigged.
* Bug Hunts and carries a lot of ammo). Even the smartgun analogue is downplayed, the SI-66X Heavy Auto-carbine is 6.6mm and greatly truncated with a lightweight casing. It's rather telling, that one heavy weapon is the Combi-carbine which is just the standard gun with either a flamer or a shotgun built in. The book plays it straight with the KT-E4 Man-portable Railgun and SI-242 "Devastator" Emplaced Rotary Cannon, which is a 4-barrelled Gatling gun that shoots 12mm plasma rounds.

* Bug Hunts plasma weaponry which humans are trying to reverse-engineer (humans invented and can make ammunition that explodes in a plasma explosion, but not guns that shoot plasma bolts or beams like the Araknyd can).
* Bug Hunts. There are also some minor but still dangerous independent alien insectoids that are limited to a single planet or small number of systems and not expanding.
* Bug, if he gets burned by a (literal) Fire Ant's fire breath, or if he touches lava.
* Bug Jack Barron, an investigative reporter and consumer advocate begins investigating an organization that provides rejuvenation treatments to the rich and powerful, and finds far more than he bargained for.
* Buglizard, which is fast enough to catch up to Lepidopterrans like Stinkfly and can release a yellow fog that neutralizes and dissolves Stinkfly's mucus attacks and blinds him.
* Bug Martini. Apparently, if men could get pregnant, they'd treat it like a competition.
* Bug Martini. Originally just called "Bug," because the humanoid characters have insect-like antennae. It has no particular association with martinis.
* Bug Martini that people whose spouses really do get black eyes from running into doors might have to claim those spouses were evil enough to be worth abusing.
* bug monster, is bound to fail. However, calling Benjy an 'abomination' while he explains himself doesn't win him any points with the others.
* "bug" or "insect", Spider-Man would reply, "Please, spiders are arachnids!"
* bug out." Bugsy Siegel (born Benjamin Siegel) preferred to be called "Ben" or "Benny."
* Bug. Parmiter makes an audio log of his study of the hybrid bugs, but they deliberately destroy it, so his findings can never be discovered.
* Bùi Thị Nhạn and Bùi Thị Xuân, two major queen consorts of the Tây Sơn dynasties who are significant military trainers for their husband's troops.
* bug regarding the wooden mannequins in the player's house. They are actually NPCs coded to not act on any script. However, sometimes the code not to act doesn't load fast enough and they walk off their pedestals before being frozen on the spot, wherever that may be in the house. It's also possible to make the code not load at all and thus for the mannequins to act like normal NPCs. Giving the bug more in-game credence, the mannequins are NPCs whose race is set to "mannequin" to give them their wooden appearance. Setrace in consolecommands allows the mannequins' race to be changed to any other and, for that matter, to turn any other NPCs into mannequins.
* Bugs and Daffy are in "3-D Land" getting Michael's lucky basketball shorts, when Daffy makes a wrong turn while tunneling in Looney Toons fashion toward the Jordan house, resulting in a nasty confrontation with the family dog. A few seconds later, Daffy rings the front doorbell. When Bugs answers it from the inside, Daffy says (not sings) "Twinkle, twinkle, little star!" before passing out.
* Bugs and the big bad Eskimo are hanging onto a broken-off ledge that is literally swinging in the wind. The penguin looks down at them, accidentally dislodging a single snowflake that drifts down onto the ledge...
* Bugs and Thugs trick Rocky and Mugsy into hiding in a stove, then later impersonate a policeman and light the stove with them still inside. When the real policeman shows up, Rocky and Mugsy beg for him to take them to jail.
* Bugs and Thugs tries to report Rocky and Mugsy's car to the police, and as he's dragged away from the phone booth the police officer on the other end is pulled through and dragged along until the line snaps.
* Bugs Bunny" (1947). Bugs tries to hide from a bulldog by becoming part of an animated advertising sign with such images.
* Bugs Bunny (1959) features a fly infuriating Bugs as he conducts an orchestra.

Somehow Bugs manages to get through the piece (with a lot of discordance), then discovers the orchestra's been playing to an empty hall, with only the fly offering applause, which the rabbit graciously accepts.
* Bugs Bunny (1 Castaway, 1 Palm Tree), and the shark Dopey Dick, all in addition to Bugs.
* Bugs Bunny actually says "Gasp!" in the short "Falling Hare", after turning around to accost the gremlin who almost tricked him into setting off a bomb with a hammer, and finding that the gremlin has vanished.
* Bugs Bunny. A dumbfounded Bugs comments, "That's silly, it couldn't be him!"
* Bugs Bunny after Bugs tricks it into running through a lawn sprinkler.
* Bugs Bunny after he thinks the red ink Bugs pours on his head is blood. When Sam finds out he was duped:
* Bugs Bunny & Taz: Time Busters, the Zoovania level can be switched from day to night, at which point all the animals turn monstrous and break out of their cages. This enables you to collect gears from the now-open cages, but the monstrous animals are now enemies, which they aren't in the daytime version.
* Bugs Bunny & Taz: Time Busters: The Zoovania level initially appears to be a normal zoo, with harmless animals in cages that you can't interact with. Turn it from day to night, and the animals turn into monsters and break out of their cages.
* Bugs Bunny, and constantly has to worry about rabbit and wabbit hunters.
* Bugs Bunny and Daffy Duck has pulled the fetch stunt on a few hunting dogs a few times during their career as well.
* Bugs Bunny, and is part of an ice show that operates out of Hoboken.
* Bugs Bunny (and since she annoys the audience too, it's a pretty satisfactory ending).
* Bugs Bunny and suspended over a bridge, and Yosemite Sam is cutting the rope to send the rabbit falling to his doom.
* Bugs Bunny and the rest of the hero ensemble. Bugs lost slightly more often even in his earliest appearances but his obvious superior wit over his foes is often a defining trait and a prominent source of humor.
* Bugs Bunny and the Three Bears, but finds her behind every door dressed in different lingerie. "Tell me more about my eyes!"
* "Bugs Bunny and the Three Bears". The bears were later spun off into their own series.
* Bugs Bunny and Yosemite Sam battle for who gets to accompany a bevel of bathing beauties on the Miami Special. Bugs wins, and as the train pulls out, he calls "So long, Sammy...see ya in Miami!"
* Bugs Bunny as an actual "technical difficulties" card instead of a still of their logo, as was standard practice at the time.
* Bugs Bunny", Bugs, as part of his torture from an off-screen animator, has his head erased and replaced by a jack-o-lantern. Bugs is not amused.
* Bugs Bunny". Bugs has to use his wits (and several conveniently available contraptions) to eventually upend the arrogant champion.
* Bugs Bunny, Bugs himself is drinking carrot juice saying something similar to the film's true quote.
* Bugs Bunny", Bugs is so traumatized by the rocket trip to the moon, once he lands he does a series of spastic fits. He continues to throw fits as he answers the walkie-talkie from mission control, but still takes the time to end the communication properly with "over". Later, when he tries to call for help about Marvin the Martian going to blow up Earth, all the walkie-talkie picks up is a radio commercial jingle.
* Bugs Bunny Bugs makes a fruit salad on Elmer's head. Where Bugs got the fruit is irrelevant.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "A Lad in His Lamp" has Bugs wishing for a carrot from Smokey the Genie. He asks for two to make sure he's real.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "A Lad in His Lamp", is addled but effervescent and benevolent. He gets cross when Bugs, in a pickle with a greedy sultan, interrupts him a couple of times.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "Baby Buggy Bunny" begins with a tall dark stranger dressed this way robbing the Last National Bank. We then learn that it's actually the midget gangster Ant Hill Harry (a.k.a. Baby-Face Finster), disguised on stilts with boots, a long trenchcoat, fedora hat and a black eye mask to hide his face. He swiftly changes from this disguise to a baby in a buggy, which manages to fool the police due to his small stature and baby-like face.

* Bugs Bunny cartoon "Baton Bunny" had Bugs conducting the Warner Bros. Symphony in "Morning, Noon And Night In Vienna" and coping with a pesky fly while doing so. As he turns to take his bows afterwards, he discovers the house empty.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "Bewitched Bunny". They're so busy stuffing their faces with ice cream they don't notice they're inside a lidded roasting pan.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "Bowery Bugs", Steve Brody goes to a psychic (Bugs) to have his luck changed. When Brody says he wants to get his hands on some dough, Bugs gives him an address. It turns out to be for a bakery, where the baker (Bugs again) drops a big mass of dough on Brody, then pushes him into the oven and bakes him into a pie.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon, Bugs and a dog take turns kicking each other out of a house. The lady of the house sees them fighting and orders them to stop, but they end up throwing her out into the cold instead.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "Bugs and Thugs": Bugs has accidentally entered the escape vehicle of Rocky and Muggsy, who have just robbed a bank. When the thieves discover their extra passenger:
* Bugs Bunny cartoon, "Bugs' Bonnets", where he and Elmer Fudd keep having hats that fall from a delivery truck land on their heads, causing them to adopt the personas of the hats' owners. A judge's wig made Bugs act like he was running a trial, a grandma's hat made Elmer act like a little old lady, and a Boy Scout hat compelled Bugs to help Elmer cross the street.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "French Rarebit", Bugs is being pursued by two competing French chefs who each want him for the special of the day. Bugs tricks them into fighting each other so that he can get away.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon, "Hare-less Wolf", has a scene where a dim-witted wolf attempts to employ a hand-grenade against Bugs and reads the instructions.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "Hare Trigger," Yosemite Sam gives Bugs one second to draw a gun. He does so on a sketch pad. Sam says he's fair-to-middlin' with a pencil himself. He goes through white heat trying to draw a gun on the pad. When he's finished:
* Bugs Bunny cartoon has him playing against a Scotsman. Needless to say, he fudges the rules a bit, like digging a trench to lead the ball into the hole, for instance.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "Homeless Hare", a construction foreman falls into wet cement, completely submerged except for his cigar. The worker smoothing down the cement doesn't notice when he falls, and simply keeps smoothing, plucking out the cigar to smoke it.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "Lighter Than Hare" has Bugs' robot facing off against Yosemite Sam of Outer Space's robot:
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "Rabbit Punch", Bugs deals with a boxer by "feint(ing) him out of position." He pretends to faint (that is, pass out unconscious) before the Champ gets to strike, and as he leans over Bugs lets him have it with both fists.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "Rabbit Transit", Bugs, in the middle of a cross-country race, approaches a toll bridge, but jumps into the river and swims across instead.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon, "Rebel Rabbit", Bugs Bunny is trying to cause as much trouble as possible. This leads to him sawing off Florida and kicking it off into the ocean.
* Bugs Bunny cartoons were funny because of all the responses the audience expected from a rabbit facing a hunter, casual flippancy wasn't even on the list.
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "The Greyhounded Hare", Bugs attends a dog race and falls in love with the mechanical rabbit, which is designed as a female. Seeing the dogs chase after "her", Bugs turns chivalrous and attacks them. After that, he gets electrocuted trying to kiss "her".
* Bugs Bunny cartoon "The Greyhounded Hare" he falls instantly in love with a dog track lure in the shape of a rabbit and tries to rescue it from being chased. When he finally catches "her" he kisses it, causing a jolt of electricity to shoot through his body, which he interprets as Sparks of Love.

* Bugs Bunny causes Wile E. Coyote to shoot himself, several times, simply by moving the sight to the other end, or removing it completely so he can't tell which end is which.
* Bugs Bunny challenges Bugs to draw a gun, which he does—with pencil and sketchpad. Sam says he's capable with a pencil himself and proceeds to draw a gun on the pad. Bugs examines it carefully then says "It stinks!"
* Bugs Bunny characters appearing in the movie, which already caused tons of confusion in it's time).
* Bugs Bunny comic strip by Al Stoffel and Ralph Heimdahl, Sylvester the Cat had a human protégé named Cedric. Together they panhandled their way through each day (at least when Sylvester wasn't actively employed somewhere usually with Bugs). Cedric never appeared in the animated films.
* Bugs Bunny demonstrates a typical cartoon "zip" in a host segment of his cartoon show. He first does a proper zip in and out of the shot and then what it looks like in slow motion.
* Bugs Bunny digging into a prison and being mistaken for a prisoner. He gives Yosemite Sam (here as prison guard Sam Schultz) the usual onceover.
* Bugs Bunny discovers several other wolves in Grandma's bed and hustles them out. He starts to climb into the bed, only to have a smaller wolf (who was under the pillow!) scamper out after the others. The gag was repeated in the Sylvester cartoon "Little Red Rodent Hood", with cats instead of wolves.
* Bugs Bunny does this bit to Daffy (after tying up his own ears under his chin) to fool a big dumb Abominable Snowman who's looking for "a little bunny rabbit to call my own".
* Bugs Bunny does this to Porky Pig once. When Porky keeps falling for upsells, Bugs
* Bugs Bunny does this twice to fool his antagonists, in "Racketeer Rabbit" and "Bugs and Thugs."
* Bugs Bunny, dressed as a southern gentleman, is involved in a game of poker with a Col. Cornpone on a riverboat ("Mississippi Hare"). Cornpone shows five aces in his hand. Bugs shows six.
* Bugs Bunny dressed up as one in "The Unmentionables" to sneak into Rocky and Mugsy's party, using a flapper dance as a means to repeatedly kick the stuffing out of Rocky.
* Bugs Bunny" during his "death" scene, which makes Elmer Fudd wallow in self-pity after Bugs "dies."
* Bugs Bunny/Elmer Fudd confrontation done to rap, as produced by Sylvester the Cat.
* Bugs Bunny ends up at one in "Transylvania 6-5000", though he initially believes he is in Pittsburgh as a pun on Pennsylvania's name.
* Bugs Bunny-esque trickster, perfectly fitting a more normal rabbit archetype.
* Bugs Bunny even got this once. In "Fresh Hare", Elmer (as one of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police) tries to arrest Bugs, listing his crimes as follows: "Wesisting an officer, assault and battewy, twespassing, disturbing the peace, miscewwaneous misdemeanors, pubwic nuisance, twaffic viowations, going thwough a bouwevard stop, jaywalking, twiple parking, conduct unbecoming to a wabbit, [and] viowating twaffic weguwations". (This cartoon has some controversial scenes, and is rarely seen nowadays, and tends to be edited a lot when it is; at least one edit has the blackface finale blurred to cover the offending faces).
* Bugs Bunny example below, these cartoons actually got recognized by the real-life United States Military; on his 50th birthday, Donald Duck was officially promoted to the rank of Buck Sergeant in the army and given an honorable discharge.
* Bugs Bunny, facing a baseball team of giant ape-like players (one of them uses what appears to be an entire sequoia tree as a bat). He wins.
* Bugs Bunny finally beats Cecil Turtle in "Rabbit Transit", only to be arrested by the police because he was doing 100 in a 30 miles-per-hour speed limit zone in order to win. There have been no more Bugs-Cecil cartoons, apparently because Bugs was satisfied with actually winning for once, pyrrhic victory or not.

* Bugs Bunny fouls up, his commanding officer is demoted. Although the act is never seen, it is implied by his insignia disappearing bit by bit, exposing the differently toned fabric underneath.
* Bugs Bunny found in an oyster. Bugs casually closes the oyster, trapping Daffy inside.
* Bugs Bunny gives the Tasmanian Devil the onceover at a jungle hospital in 1964's "Dr. Devil And Mr. Hare."
* Bugs Bunny has been known to alter his familiar "What's up, Doc?" to fit the situation. Examples:
* Bugs Bunny has Bugs convincing Elmer that he has "the dreaded disease rabbititis." When Elmer catches on and chases Bugs out of the house, Bugs tells him that the audience is coming down with rabbititis. As Elmer runs back inside, Bugs reassures the audience that they're just fine, because if they were sick, they would see red and yellow spots before their eyes, and they would start swirling around until everything went dark. Sure enough, red and yellow spots appear on the screen and swirl around until the screen fades to black... after which we hear Bugs snickering.
* Bugs Bunny has Bugs going behind Elmer's radio to provide a fake news announcement about an outbreak of "rabbititis".
* Bugs Bunny has his way with Elmer Fudd in "Wabbit Twouble," Elmer stomps on the Jellostone Park sign ("A westful wetweat. Bawoney!!")...with a park ranger nearby.
* Bugs Bunny has no choice but to use firearms in three confrontations with Yosemite Sam ("Hare Trigger," "Bugs Bunny Rides Again") as they're all Westerns and Bugs is challenged to a duel in the first two. He challenges Sam to a duel in "Wild and Wooly Hare" and "Hare Trimmed," but he lets an oncoming bus take care of Sam for him in the second case.
* Bugs Bunny have Bugs encounter him in his natural habitat, which is a technologically impressive but also a kind of inhospitable and ominous Martian space station.
* Bugs Bunny: He's a genius, but he seems to have trouble reading: "diabolical sabotage" becomes "dy-a-bo-likkle...sab-o-tay-gee". (To be fair, reading a word you've never actually heard spoken won't necessarily give you a clue on how to pronounce it!)
* Bugs Bunny He's so sure he's going to win the Academy Award that he's already up on stage next to the host (whose shadow we see as he delivers his spiel), who, to Bugs' shock, announces the winner is James Cagney (who actually did win Best Actor at the awards held in 1943).
* Bugs Bunny himself actually never takes it well when he's the target of mischief for a change, as seen when he's up against Cecil Turtle, or during the rare times they
* Bugs Bunny himself goes into an unintelligible run in "Racketeer Rabbit" when Rocky (a caricature of Edward G. Robinson) puts a gun to his head, demanding to know what Bugs did with the stolen money.
* Bugs Bunny), imagine one another as a hamburger and hot dog respectively.
* Bugs Bunny in "A Lad in His Lamp". With Jim Backus as Smokey the genie.
* Bugs Bunny in retaliation for a pie in the face he received earlier. As Bugs instigates a game of "Guess who?":
* Bugs Bunny intended to fool the kids into believing the Trix rabbit is really Bugs Bunny. The Trix rabbit, wearing his outfit, hides behind a tree and stalks the kids silently. He walks up to them as they are eyeing Trix cereal, and proclaims that he is Bugs Bunny. The kids say "Wow!" and ask him to sign their box of Trix. The Trix rabbit provides a signature on the box, stating, "Sure! Us rabbits love Trix." But, true to form, the Trix rabbit begins jonesin' for those Trix, and backflips out of his costume, yelling, "yippee!" As the Trix rabbit reaches for the box, the kids yet again deny the rabbit the basic right to consume food. Bugs watches the ordeal on TV, and turns off the TV before the commercial can finish. He relaxes at the pool, on a pool chair, enjoying his own box of Trix. Relaxing with a bowl of Trix cereal, he lays back on a cushion, stating, "I prefer a happy ending."

* Bugs Bunny is called in to bring him down). Out of the shorts listed, "Buckaroo Bugs" is the only one where he's officially recognized as the villain.
* Bugs Bunny is forced into service by sea captain Yosemite Sam (who in this cartoon goes by the appropriate moniker of Shanghai Sam).
* Bugs Bunny is from the 1942 short "The Wacky Wabbit", in which Bugs is actually the one that antagonizes Elmer, and not the other way around. On the rare occasions that Bugs does strike first, he tends to suffer a defeat at the hands of the one he antagonized.
* Bugs Bunny is hauled away for robbing Ft. Knox, an MP confronts Bugs as to what he's doing on the property as well.
* Bugs Bunny is on stage, holding a box of Post Sugar Crisp cereal. Daffy appears from behind the curtain, saying to Bugs, "Psst, you're on, Bugs." Bugs says to Daffy, "Thanks, doc," and clears his throat, describing what Post Sugar Crisp cereal means to him : "Just think, I used to be a nine pound weakling," he states. Daffy walks on stage with a large wooden mallet, and attempts to bash Bugs over the head, but his ears send the mallet bouncing back towards Daffy, sending Daffy crashing through the wooden floor. Bugs states, "But now Post Sugar Crisp gives me the muscles of wheat," flexing his bicep. Daffy emerges from the hole in the floor, a cracked board on his head, and points with his thumb at bugs, stating, "Muscles in his ears, yet!" Bugs explains how the wheat in Post Sugar Crisp cereal makes him big and strong, flexing his bicep yet again, as Daffy emerges with an even larger mallet, and slams it against bugs' hand while he is still flexing. But with no effort, the mallet cracks into pieces. Bugs states, "So get strong, like me. Get Sugar Crisp." Daffy and Bugs hold the box of Sugar Crisp and present it together, singing a song as they make pinching gestures in the air. Daffy then recites what he believes is an amusing poem, about how Sugar Crisp can be eaten as a snack like taffy, and how for breakfast it is "Ducky like Daffy." With no reaction from the audience, Daffy takes offense and points to himself, reiterating, "Ducky like Daffy, get it?" "Sure they get it," says Bugs, holding a "Treat Pak" containing boxes of Sugar Crisp, Alpha-Bits, and Corn Flakes.
* Bugs Bunny is terrified by a monster (who was later named Gossamer). Unable to speak, he displays to the audience a sign bearing a tiny "yipe!". Still frightened, he stares at the sign in apparent confusion, then flips it to reveal a much larger and more emphatic "YIPE!!!!"
* Bugs Bunny. It's really a diving board but it's treated as if it's a "walk the plank" plank several times.
* Bugs Bunny. It was changed back to its trademark gray color in the second season.
* Bugs Bunny just Worthless Yellow Rocks: Bugs remarks how much fun you can have with some rocks and a can of yellow paint...
* Bugs Bunny line "Ah sure, I know. But aren't they all witches inside?", being perceived as misogynistic. The ban was lifted three days later, but the line was edited out of later broadcasts in the 1980s and replaced with "Sure uh, I know. But after all, who wants to be alone on Halloween?" The edited version has since ceased airing, having been replaced by the original version.
* Bugs Bunny: Lost in Time and cannot go into the water, they will swim by the floating barrels in the water he is standing on and jump out to bite at him, causing damage. You need to distract them by throwing bones into the water for them.
* Bugs Bunny: Lost in Time, anvils' shadows appear occasionally, and stepping on them obviously prompts them to fall. Also happens with safes, carrot juice cans or anchors, depending on the level.
* Bugs Bunny: Lost in Time, living brooms appear as enemies in the Medieval Period, courtesy of Witch Hazel being the main enemy of that era.
* Bugs Bunny loves this. He's done it to Elmer Fudd loads of times, and has done it Yosemite Sam at least once.
* Bugs Bunny makes that he's a monkey, one of the few animals Taz doesn't eat.
* Bugs Bunny", Marvin the Martian, in his grand debut, tells Bugs that he's going to blow up the Earth. Bugs at first seems uninterested, but as he walks away...

* Bugs Bunny — Starred in 167 animated shorts from 1940 until 1964. Has appeared in several post-golden age cartoons and TV specials afterwards.
* Bugs Bunny Napoleon) down a banister, while a guard is waiting at the bottom with a bayonet. Bugs gets off early, so it's "Nappy" who gets the point in the end.
* Bugs Bunny Nips the Nips a Japanese soldier is presented trying to attack Bugs and rambling in incoherent Japanese. When Bugs impersonates a Japanese general, the soldier tries to commit seppuku when he almost kills him, but then Bugs gives himself away by eating a carrot:
* Bugs Bunny Nips the Nips averts this, as Bugs fights the Japanese forces on the island near the beaches as well as their base, rather than in the jungles.
* Bugs Bunny Nips The Nips has Bugs in an ice cream truck selling ice cream bars loaded with hand grenades to Japanese soldiers.
* Bugs Bunny Nips the Nips joke about the fire prevention headquarters being burned to the ground.
* Bugs Bunny, of all people will occasionally play the Straight Man to Daffy's Wise Guy, while the latter lets his inner demons get the best of him and gets himself into hot water almost all the time, Bugs keeps his cool and just tries to relax or get to somewhere he can relax until Daffy's antics become his problem.
* Bugs Bunny of all the animals Devils like to eat. Bugs reads through the list, then says "What, no rabbits?" Taz tears off the page to reveal "And ESPECIALLY rabbits!"
* Bugs Bunny. Of course, he'd end up in a wedding dress and marrying Aragorn.
* Bugs Bunny (offended by the story of The Tortoise and the Hare) challenges a turtle to a race. Bugs cheats like crazy and loses but only because the turtle outcheats him (he had a jet engine under his shell and uses dozens of other turtles).
* Bugs Bunny often outsmarted his foes with sheer ease. Every now and again however a brief of wit would bestow the villain and take Bugs by surprise to make things a little more tense (and likely to prevent Bugs from becoming insufferably smug). Allegedly the creative team deliberately made Bugs' foes slightly more challenging so the audience wouldn't start to see him as the bully of the feud.
* Bugs Bunny, one of the cars is carrying alligators and has an open top.....
* Bugs Bunny on his foes, his main tactic is to trick them into taking their own fall, confusing them with witty patter and deceiving them with costumes and flattery.
* Bugs Bunny, "Ooo, the bad rabbit broke my little arm! The bad rabbit broke my little arm!" Instantly Bugs is surrounded by guns and gangsters.
* Bugs Bunny paints Elmer's head blue with yellow polka dots in two strokes.
* Bugs Bunny ploy to get even with who wronged him or to deal with malcontents.
* Bugs Bunny presents this when after a typical Sam bombastic boast, Bugs tells him to shut up:
* Bugs Bunny pretends to be a genie to fool Hassan, the guard of Ali Baba's cave in "Ali Baba Bunny."
* Bugs Bunny: Rabbit Rampage features this in several levels. Most notably, the second level allows Bugs to weaponize the trope — he can throw bullseye targets on the ground, and an enemy that walks on one will get crushed by the inevitable falling safe. These are also potential obstacles for Bugs in later levels.
* Bugs Bunny: Rabbit Rampage had bartenders sliding beers in level 2.1, which took place in a saloon.
* Bugs Bunny: Rabbit Rampage, Level 2.1 takes place in a saloon, with such enemies as Red Hot Ryder, Hiawatha, and root beer vendors. The boss of the stage is Nasty Canasta.
* Bugs Bunny relaxes by a tree and sings the Alphabet song while reaching into a box of Alpha-Bits cereal and throwing individual pieces into his mouth. Bugs declares he is crazy about Post Alpha-Bits. Nearby, Elmer Fudd emerges from his house and declares he was robbed. Bugs dons a makeshift officer's uniform consisting of a police helmet and a star on his chest. Elmer approaches Bugs, believing him to be an officer, and states somebody had taken his Post Alpha-Bits cereal, believing "that crazy wabbit" to be responsible. Bugs asks Elmer to describe Alpha-Bits in detail, and Elmer describes how the cereal includes all the letters of the Alphabet, made with real oats to make you strong and full of energy, and sugar sparkles to taste just a little bit better. Bugs unscrews a carrot top and holds it like a cone, dancing and singing as the words "ENERGY", "AEZ", and "O G" levitate above the cone. Elmer winks and makes a pinching gesture. Bugs nibbles on the end of the carrot, and Elmer attempts to grab the box, but Bugs kisses him on the cheek. Elmer walks away, saying "Cwazy wabbit," as what he has just said is spelled out in the air. As Bugs holds the box, the letters "A B C" appear, as he sings, "They're ABC delicious." Bugs states, "Ehh, get 'em quick like a bunny."

* Bugs Bunny (released by Paramount). In his own Warners universe, Bugs cameos in at least three cartoons with other animated stars.
* Bugs Bunny", released in 1940. Earlier cartoons had templates of both characters, but this was the first film to feature official versions of the iconic cartoon stars.
* Bugs Bunny respectively. So untouchable is Bugs, that of the many adversaries he faced over the roughly 172 cartoons he originally starred in, the number of characters able to best the trickster rabbit can be counted on one hand. Some villains, such as Yosemite Sam and Marvin the Martian, were created to give Bugs a more formidable and less sympathetic opponent.
* Bugs Bunny revealing he had worn a convincing disguise as Harvey, a white rabbit in a purple bowtie through the entire episode.
* "Bugs Bunny Rides Again": After tricking Yosemite Sam into falling off a cliff, Bugs puts a mattress below and says "Sometimes me conscience kinda bothers me... but not this time!", and pulls the mattress away just before Sam hits the ground.
* Bugs Bunny Rides Again: Chased by Yosemite Sam, Bugs goes through a tunnel and then covers the exit with a brick wall. As Sam enters the tunnel, the screen goes dark - and suddenly we see him silhouetted against the wall for a brief instant.
* Bugs Bunny, running into giant Elmer Fudd's ears and ending up behind huge, window-like eyes... then running back down under his clothing, reducing him to ticklish giggles.
* Bugs Bunny's Birthday Ball, from the same designer, also features a 50 million point shot, which overwhelms everything else in the game. The fact that it's only randomly available on the player's last ball just makes it even more capricious.
* Bugs Bunny's Birthday Ball has Honey Bunny, while the Tasmanian Devil has She-Devil.
* Bugs Bunny's Birthday Ball; Honey Bunny is the single most prominent female character, but she's also accompanied by She-Devil on the playfield.
* Bugs Bunny's Birthday Ball, Honey Bunny jumps out of Bugs' birthday cake while holding a "50 Million" indicator.
* Bugs Bunny's Birthday Ball, where Acme Corporation includes the Acme Rocket Co.
* Bugs Bunnys Birthday Blowout cast, but finds out after the attacks that they were all just joking, and they set up his birthday party.
* Bugs Bunny's Crazy Castle, he does begrudgingly admit that the game has "the shortest sweetest password he's ever seen".
* Bugs Bunny shakes a wrapped gift Elmer Fudd and Yosemite Sam give him in "This Is A Life?" And then he pauses to listen. The ticking tips him off it's a bomb. A game of "You take it" ensues.
* Bugs Bunny short has him advise his victim to start courting. He then dresses up as a woman, drops his handkerchief, and promptly freaks out (in his female persona, as if the guy had done something lewd) when the guy returns it and gets clobbered by a policeman.
* Bugs Bunny short "Water, Water Every Hare" started with a shot of castle with a neon sign alternating "Evil Scientist" and "Boo".
* Bugs Bunny. Sometimes, he's a rapist coward who murders men, women, and children by tricking them into deadly games. One rape of a woman leads him into pitying her and helping her give birth, while other tales have him return food and protect those he stole from. He's a complicated case.
* Bugs Bunny's rabbit hole, forcing him to don the disguise of an orphan baby to get it back.

* Bugs Bunny stays in a haunted mansion in "Transylvania 6-5000" where he contends with (and dispatches of) the vampire Count Bloodcount.
* Bugs Bunny that had been caused by a ludicrous amount of dynamite that had been shoved into Bugs's rabbit hole, in an attempt to get him out.
* Bugs Bunny, the Black Knight (Yosemite Sam) uses a catapult to try to launch himself into a castle window.
* Bugs Bunny, the premiere appearance of the Tasmanian Devil, after spending much of the cartoon torturing Taz, Bugs spots a fawn near him and warns it to flee because of Taz, calling him "a mean, vicious, nasty, no-good, baggy-eyed, marble-headed ignoramorus." Little does Bugs know, however, that Taz has been standing right behind him this whole time and heard everything the rabbit just said.
* Bugs Bunny. Though the locals are little dismayed that one side-effect of this is that the city is now automatically associated with crystal meth.
* Bugs Bunny threatens mobster Rocky with a carrot. Rocky laughs it off, until the carrot fires in his face. Unfortunately, it won't fire again.
* Bugs Bunny tied and standing on the edge of the platform, with Sam sawing away at the board, gloating: "Now ya smarty-pants, let's see ya get out-in this one! This time, you're a-diving!" However, as soon as Sam cuts through the board, it is the ladder and platform that falls, leaving the cut plank suspended in midair. Bugs turns to the camera and cracks: "I know this defies the law of gravity, but, you see, I never "studied" law!"
* Bugs Bunny to chase down Bugs. When Bugs accidentally drops a jar of them into a sewer, back on Earth, at the end of the cartoon:
* Bugs Bunny: Too Many Carrots, Bugs and Hogitall both look a little groggy but only for one page.
* Bugs Bunny to stay several steps ahead of your foes in the most hilarious way possible.
* Bugs Bunny, to whom he refers as "Baby"; when Bugs hears this he says, "Anything Baby wants, Baby gets," and Bugs delivers himself on a platter for her while ogling and howling at her.
* Bugs Bunny, TV listings and promos stated that in a separate segment after a thirty-year chase, the Coyote finally catches the Road Runner. In that segment (since billed as the short subject "Soup or Sonic", the Coyote chases the Road Runner through a series of pipes that progressively gets smaller that both come out small. They retreat the other way, and the Road Runner regains his size while the Coyote is still tiny. The Coyote doubles back and, yes, he does grab the Road Runner's leg. However, when he sees the Road Runner giant size in contrast to himself, he holds up the following signs:
* Bugs Bunny, Tweety Bird and Speedy Gonzales occasionally leaned into this trope, with many of their respective shorts focusing more on the blundering of their foes.
* Bugs Bunny using it sarcastically to taunt Elmer Fudd. (Nimrod is a Bible character described as a "mighty hunter before the Lord.")
* Bugs Bunny), waiting to run him off, and the pachyderm does just that when he swats him repeatedly with a club.
* Bugs Bunny wants to be a rock 'n' roll singer, but is constantly rejected. For Elmer's next audition, Bugs has him dress as a baby: "In the rock music biz, the younger you look, the better!"
* Bugs Bunny was merely irritating with a laugh very similar to Woody's. At a theater screening, when a dog finally hauled off and socked him, it was loudly cheered.
* Bugs Bunny was often portrayed with "pockets" on his furry thighs, that he'd keep his hands in or pull carrots out of.
* Bugs Bunny "What's up, doc?". He utters four syllables in the same tongue and the caption reads "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their party."
* Bugs Bunny when a large jar of ether breaks. They go through the vapors and start running and talking in slow-motion.
* Bugs Bunny. When asking "Eh... What's up, Doc?", he's often feigning caring, and is even asking and talking while chewing.

* Bugs Bunny. When Dr. Jekyll turns into the evil Mr. Hyde his eyes turn red. After Bugs drinks the formula and turns into a giant green rabbit the same happens to him.
* Bugs Bunny. When the aliens have him imprisoned, and are "gloating" to the highly amused toons, Bugs is quietly rolling his eyes and slipping out of the somewhat impressive amount of rope he's bound with. And the cuffs for his ears.
* Bugs Bunny" When they start shooting the movie, Daffy says his line dramatically — after which a group of hunters all pop out and bombard him with gunfire. After that....
* Bugs Bunny", when Wile E. Coyote makes his intention to eat him quite clearly and Bugs dons a faux-terror expression before going back to being unimpressed.
* Bugs Bunny" where – after Bugs sends the plane they're on into a nosedive – Sam grabs what he thinks is the only available parachute and jumps ... only to find he's grabbed a knapsack of camping supplies and it's bye-bye, Sam! In the original cartoon, Sam's chute works fine, except that he lands in the backseat of a police car (having earlier robbed a bank).
* Bugs Bunny", where all his wrestling locks elicit from his opponent are some amused yawns.
* Bugs Bunny", where Bugs is trussed up on a diving board platform and Yosemite Sam is sawing off the board, but the ladder and platform collapse with Sam instead.
* Bugs Bunny, while Bugs is holding a broken club. The swing of the club is never seen, ironically making the action appear all the more violent.
* Bugs Bunny, who is ushered in the scene with an ersatz rendition of the Merrie Melodies theme. Bugs soon realizes he's in the wrong picture and dives back into his hole.
* Bugs Bunny who only appeared in five shorts. Looney Tunes are well on their way to joining the ranks of Betty Boop (see below) in still selling merchandise while most consumers now have never watched the cartoon they're from.
* Bugs Bunny", Yosemite Sam is pounding on a door shouting "Open the door!" - he then turns to us and says "Ya notice I didn't say 'Richard'!" before resuming pounding. "Open the Door, Richard" was an old vaudeville routine (later a popular song).
* Bugs Bunny. Yosemite Sam is the captain of a sailing ship. Bugs tricks him into thinking the ship is sinking and Sam jumps into a lifeboat. Bugs reminds him that "The captain goes down with his ship", so Sam resigns and makes Bugs the captain.
* Bugs' debut cartoon "A Wild Hare" is probably the Ur Example, where he allows Elmer to take a shot at him and plays out the mother of all faux death scenes.
* Bugs does a variation of this to Napoleon in "Napoleon Bunny-part" when the latter is using a map and figures to decide where to place infantry and artillery:
* Bugs does it twice in that episode- first to Elmer Fudd, then to the audience.
* Bugs does this to the giant in "Jack Wabbit and the Beanstalk" as well.
* Bugs do this all the time. Who hasn't got ants climbing unto oneself?
* Bugs ended with Alex's husband murdered by persons unknown at her wedding and Beckett and Ros being kidnapped by a mysterious man they seemed to recognize. The cancellation of the series means we'll never know who killed the poor man, or who kidnapped our two heroes.
* BUGS episode, "What Goes Up..."/"Must Come Down", Ed removes an unstable fuel cell from a space shuttle, and after jettisoning it into space, it's completely silent when it explodes.
* Bugs for the latest game in the The Escapist's promo cycle appear in many of their video features, including
* Bugs gives himself away to a WW2 Japanese soldier in "Bugs Bunny Nips the Nips" by eating a carrot. The soldier says he saw Bugs in a "
* Bugs has a blink-and-you'll-miss-it one in the same cartoon just as he's about to pull the
* Bugs has a humorous lampshade in "The Wabbit Who Came To Supper," where he interrupts his faux death scene and says to us "Hey...dis scene oughta get me the Academy Award!"
* bug). She even gets female sprites in the formation menu; just not in battle.

* Bugs Herald Evil: The arrival of someone or something evil is foreshadowed by a rise in the number of insects.
* Bugs Herald Evil: The use of insects, arachnids, or other arthropods to indicate a greater evil.
* Bugs in a Box series pop-up books by David A. Carter appear to be either vertebrate animals, plants, or inanimate objects with insect body parts.
* . Bugs is trying to cook a meal in a kettle. The Tasmanian Devil comes along and throws Bugs into his own pot.
* Bugs Meany holds a raffle drawing at a fair for a baseball glove and has one of his friends
* Bugsnax, a non-binary pseudo-muppet scientist with, what can be presumed to be, a very detached opinion of gender as a construct considering their incredibly analytical nature.
* Bugsnax saying "Looks like [...] honestly [...] one of the [...] best games for the PS5.". The full version of the quote?
* Bugsnax states that Grumpus physiology might have sexual dimorphism in their dentition: most characters with an overbite are female, while most of those with an underbite are male. There are only two known exceptions to this: the first is Floofty, who is canonically non-binary and has an underbite, which can be explained by them being assigned male at birth. The second is Chandlo, who is male, but has an overbite. Unlike Floofty, Chandlo is not confirmed to be transgender, but some fans use this as evidence that he is a trans man.
* Bugsnax themselves to the Grumpuses to turn them into fodder for more Bugsnax as they fight for their lives and to defend the only means they have to escape Snaktooth Island.
* Bugs, one of the good guys asks Ros not to think about elephants, to bait her away from Cyberax's thought-activated mental bomb.
* Bugs, only without the need for it as the wetware is clinically dead.
* Bugs pulls this again in "Herr Meets Hare" when he surrenders himself to "Fatso" Goering and is presented to
* Bugs steals an antique teacup. When Encyclopedia confronts him about it, Bugs claims that that it was a prized cup from the owner of a Chinese restaurant that has since gone out of business. Encyclopedia deduces that he's lying by noticing that the cup has a handle, which Chinese teacups do not have. (Because it's impossible for a Chinese guy to like American mugs, and of course, with globalisation Chinese teacups with handles do exist now.)
* Bugs takes a whiff of Napoleon Bonapart's snuff which a sneeze strong enough to upset Napoleon's battle plans as well as Napoleon himself ("Napoleon Bunny-part").
* Bugs, then the tech removes a chip from the bomb and it deactivates. Cue the tech being lambasted for taking so long and replying that she just removed anything, choosing probably being blown to bits over certainly being.
* Bugs vs. Tanks probably qualifies. All the bugs in the game are normal sized... you're just really tiny.
* Bugsy Malone, all the singing is done by adults with the kids lip-syncing. As a result it's glaringly obvious in places.
* Bugsy Malone) and used pies instead of handguns. It also had "splurge guns", based on the Thompson submachine gun, with drum magazines that allow rapid pie firing. Ironically, in the climax, Bugsy and Blousey are the only characters to come out unscathed beyond the residue of the other missiles.
* Bugsy Malone: Fat Sam says something in Italian. But his henchman, Knuckles, is Jewish and doesn't understand Italian. He is told to read the translation as the subtitle appears onscreen.
* Bugsy Malone is sung by most of Fat Sam's gang — all about how brilliant it is to be gangsters. Dandy Dan's gang don't have a song, but they all probably apply as well.
* Bugsy Malone, it seems that the slapstick is going to be entirely confined to the male characters — until the end, whereupon nobody is safe.
* Bugsy Malone. Miniature mobsters with pie-throwing weapons—that have made pies obsolete as weapons.

* Bugsy Malone. One of Fat Sams workers says he can't stop Dandy Dan's gang because "he's all tied up" (he's actually tied up). Fat Sam replies "I don't care how busy you are."
* Bugsy Malone, pie takes the place of guns and bullets. Characters who get pied are said to be "finished," and never show up again.
* Bugsy Malone, when Fat Sam tells Talullah "Go make yourself beautiful" (in other words, make herself scarce while he talks shop with Bugsy), Talullah huffs, "Fine, I'll go manicure my gloves."
* Bugsy Malone, with its rival gangs of kids whose Tommy guns fire custard instead of bullets.
* "Bugsy" Siegel and "Bugs" Moran. Their nicknames referred to their tendency to "

* Bug! tended to use different enemies for each area, although some enemies are variants of others:
* Bug. Thankfully, they all took one hit to die, making them not too big of a threat.
* Bug: The final part of the final scene in Insectia has Bug being chased by a giant, instant-kill boulder.
* Bug, there are examples. In the first title, there's Bug's girlfriend, while the sequel sports some multiarmed amazons with large breasts in some levels.
* Bug, which shows that Bug and the insectoid enemies (who are actually actors) are about half the size of a human!
* Bug, who is, in fact, a gay rodeo rider; when Hank shows up at the Rodeo, Bug jumps to conclusions:
* Bug with Ashley Judd and Michael Shannon is actually this; not the Body Horror film the trailers and ads advertised.
* Bug works, since Bug is actually an actor in a movie and the levels are part of said movie. When Bug takes this powerup, he's replaced with his stunt double who's invulnerable and destroys any mooks he touches.
* Buick Grand National / GNX. Which also proved its factory quoted horsepower were bullshit, it's mathematically impossible to run a heavy brick-shaped car so quick with just 276hp, the real figures might have been in the 330-370hp range. However, owners reported it was more like a "one-wheel drive", which would twist and raise rear wheels sideways upon launch, one by one like cartoon cars do.
* Buick Skylarks, literally have the wiper controls right in front of the wheel-mounted shifter, and the wiper controls pivot up and down, much like the shifter, and the two can be confused sometimes.
* Buick took a page from Oldsmobile but went up a notch when they started the "That isn't a Buick" campaign, based on the reputation of it being your
* Build-A-Bear Workshop is a company that basically caters to this trope, where children (or even grown-ups) go to the workshop and pick the skins of their stuffed animal, fluff it up themselves, put a heart in it, and proceed to give it a birth certificate and even enter it in a system quite like Amber Alert.
* Build-A-Bear Workshop is rather popular with furries, especially its original characters such as the Honey Girls and Pawlette Coufur.
* build a working nuclear reactor work... but it isn't wise to stand right next to.
* Build, being a technology-oriented series, plays with this immensely. All of the suits are literally formed on screen through runners and tubes, and in the first few episodes the camera would enter the Driver to show gears and pistons cranking!
* Buildcraft's energy is measured in MJs which, in this particular case, stand for Minecraft Joules.
* Builder Scarabs are, well, builders that summon Necron structures. They also have a long detection range and are the only unit in the Necron army that can capture strategic points.
* Builders plays it straight and removes the female protagonist entirely.
* Builder structures were very large and elaborate, showcasing their enormous power and wealth. Most surfaces were very finely detailed and textured, and included copious amounts of blue

* Build Fighters as it was shown that throwing together a suit all willy-nilly will only lead to a suit that'll barely stand up against more experienced fighters.
* Building 12, thereby getting the aliens to release them for fear of being suicide-bombed), Alex (the girl in question) says, "Hey, give a little credit to Thelma and Louise here!" as the others are congratulating Shane.
* building a brand new bridge across it. at one point in history: Caesar, when invading another country, would just have his engineers build roads from Rome to the invaded country and just drive his army there.
* Building a Building features Mickey as a steam-shovel engineer facing off against Pete, his boss. At one point, Minnie dumps a basket of hot rivets down the back of Pete's pants.
* Building a healthy rapport with Yeoman Chambers gives you the option to have her feed your fish, so they don't die if you forget to do so after every mission.
* Building and fighting with your own Dreadnoughts (and pre-dreadnoughts, and super-dreadnoughts, and any other kind of battleship) is the premise and core mechanic of the appropriately named * building a wall along its border with Iraq to keep out ISIS militants.
* Building Faith, the main character's power allows her to slow her perception of time to a crawl.
* . Building one can also be said to be one part of the rite of passage to becoming a real geek, particularly if you live in a dorm and need Wi-Fi from the nearby fast food joint or coffee haunt because campus Wi-Fi blocks out the services you want to use.
* Building one of these and sending it to Alpha Centauri is one of the ways to win.
* Building on the above two, the development of "casual games" and the * building robots, and wants someone to check his figures, he realizes the Mad Thinker is the only qualified person around. The Thinker is bowled over by the scope of Reed's calculations.

* buildings, and the interior has been meticulously designed to be a perfect match to its appearance in the film.
* Buildings that aren't falling down for plot reasons will look like they've just been finished and certainly never lived in.
* Building super-tech out of random junk is an important part of Molly's shtick in * building them significantly heavier than was legal and then lying about it.
* Buildingverse) can do this but in different ways (the former two mind wipe you the later manipulates your time perception the effect is quite similar) and success rate (Jareth failed once). Both comics played with and lampshaded the dubious morality of this.
* Buildingverse on this, to the extent that there is a literal fail-field hanging around apartment 42.
* Building with stairs will make even the most experienced builder groan. Sure, they can add a lot of character to a building (especially when used in making a roof), but they're incredibly fickle and hard to place in the correct position. Half the time, you'll have a sideways-facing stair when you wanted it to face forward.
* Build it up with blood and bone, blood and bone, blood and bone, build it up with blood and bone, my fair lady.
* build only one of anything important. All important systems will have redundant control panels and power supplies. For the same reason I will always carry at least two fully loaded weapons at all times.
* Build pile: Term used for any kits you haven't yet made to imply an order that seldom exists.
* build your wings on the way down Mustang bluntly says that Ed will fail and probably kill Nina in the process.
* built a canoe for that explicit purpose. This is less because it's unwanted and more because Diane and Ron just stopped caring about actual weddings, if they ever did.

* built a three-story hotel in Chicago to serve as his Torture Cellar.
* Built Down Logically by Howard Schoenfeld, two students come to the conclusion that their lecturer can't possibly exist. He instantly disappears, very nearly naming the trope as he does so:
* , built from an old cooking wok, camera tripod (or chopsticks), and again some wire.
* built-in jetpack. Which is how the anime ended up depicting it, too.
* built into some camcorders; Sony's Digital-8 decks are a good example, as are some flash and DVD-based cameras. Needless to say, people who do serious video work tend to recommend not using them under any circumstances and doing all that sort of thing in postproduction.
* Built into the game. You cannot command your creatures to attack your opponent's creatures at all. Instead, you can only attack your opponent (or planeswalkers) directly. Your opponent then has the choice to use their creatures to block your attack. Numerous methods exist to help you ensure that your creatures' attacks hit your opponent without being blocked by the enemy creatures. Even just for keyword examples alone, there is flying, landwalk, intimidate, trample, shadow, unblockable, and protection. And keywords are hardly the only options.
* built-in winning the crowd. Steven Moffatt said that he expected it to take about six episodes for Matt Smith to be accepted as the Doctor. As things turned out during test screenings, it took closer to six minutes.
* built. Oh, and it turns out that jet fuel lasts thousands of years without evaporating or degrading. To say nothing of the jets not rusting or otherwise showing any signs of age.
* built on this, with CEO Cave Johnson being a lunatic with an obsession with pointless and dangerous experiments to the point that he nearly ran his company into the ground.
* built onto his face, adding to his relation with the Machine Mutants.
* built out of Bohrok parts) and was just creepy. The revelation also comes out of nowhere.
* Built To Spill's career, they've had a Brett Nelson and a Brett Netson.
* Built To Spill, they purposely did so by memory only - since they covered it as an instrumental, this included not looking up the lyrics.
* Buiten De Zone parody where the detective went on a long recap of the facts of the murder to a room of suspects, and ended up accusing the butler even though with each thing he said one of the people in the room started acting increasingly nervous, going as far as pulling out the murder weapon and miserably failing at discreetly disposing it.
* Buizel and Floatzel have quite the following among furries due being cute and badass sea otters/weasels.
* Bujingai, the earth is overrun with demons of various kind. It's implied that their mooks (seen as golem-like warriors with seals and swords) were once humans turned into monsters by a strange radiation.
* Bujingai uses this trope as its primary motif, although it takes place in the future of Japan.
* Bujinkan system which teaches unarmed and armed combat techniques from Ninjutsu. One of the more prominent teachers of the school, Stephen K. Hayes, since removed from the rolls, is famous for having released a number of "how to" books on Ninjutsu.
* Bulat kills Daidara, one of the Three Beasts, with a downward vertical slice.
* Bulbagarden Forums, you're going to meet your soul mate during your service, with no romantic conflict and plenty of support from the other staff. Currently, there are 5 couples that began while both members served on the staff, with hints of more to come.
* Bulbapedia is that the original Japanese name of the move could be read as "super jump," explaining how Doduo could learn the move (the Pokédex entry mentions it can jump very well). However, many future Pokémon were also noted as being able to jump well but couldn't learn the move.

* Bulbasaur tackles Misty directly in the ass, in the episode "Bulbasaur and the Hidden Village".
* Bulborbs, the game's most iconic enemies, come in red (known as spotty in the originals), orange, snowy, and as the much more dangerous Bulbears, each having its own dwarf variety.
* Bulgaria (Central Powers, 1915) wanted parts of Serbia and Romania.
* Bulgaria has a 30-year statute of limitations on murder- so no-one can now be prosecuted in that country for the London murder of Georgi Markov (who was killed by ricin injected via a modified umbrella) in 1978.

* bulimia or, appropriately, reverse anorexia. Both are essentially nasty side-effects of the way our modern media portrays the ideal body figure for both women and men.
* Bulk and Skull and a cake generally resulted in this. Probably the most memorable was the episode 'Peace, Love and Woe' when after destroying a cake, Ernie, the owner of the juice bar banned them until they paid him for it. At the end of the episode, Ernie caught them wearing disguises to violate the ban and Bulk decided to get the money from the 'bank', which happened to be his foot. The money was so smelly, Ernie fell on the replacement cake.
* Bulk and Skull end up with at least one of them accidentally exposing their underwear.
* Bulk and Skull, the Janitor from Scrubs, or any kind of neutral peripheral character who manages to annoy the heroes.
* Bulk Biceps, the insanely buff pegasus (with incredibly tiny wings), easily qualifies.
* Bulk Buy Only: Character spends an entire episode trying to get something, only to have to buy massive amounts of it.
* Bulkhead actually reads, "Crumplezone called, he wants his head back."
* Bulkhead is left comatose, but alive. It took a long time for him to recover.
* Bulkhead is revealed to be Cybertron's foremost space bridge expert. Professor Sumdac and his fellow Autobots refuse to believe it, assuming that Blurr (and Megatron) got his intel wrong. In addition, Bulkhead is apparently a pretty good artist.
* Bulkhead likes metal music and monster truck rallies, while Bumblebee likes racing and cartoons.
* Bulkhead served in the Great War as part of a team called the Wreckers, and he also has a bit of a history with the Decepticon Breakdown. Though tidbits are dropped here and there, we never get the full story.
* Bulk is not much of a musician on any front except possibly rap, and while Skull may be an ace behind the keys of a piano (particularly with classical music), he is
* Bulk trash will be disposed of in incinerators, not compactors. And they will be kept hot, with none of that nonsense about
* Bull): A group of young turks break away from the stockbroking firm they work for and make their own. It's not always smooth sailing, of course, which provides the drama of the series.
* Bull, a medical examiner is accused of falsifying evidence in the trial of a serial rapist/murderer, since her DNA analysis of a pubic hair found on the victim matched the suspect. However, when the same hair was analyzed by three other labs, they did not find a match. Eventually, Bull and his team manage to prove that it was the man's lawyer, who falsified the evidence against the medical examiner in order to have all of her other cases thrown out, including the one against his brother. That he would be throwing an innocent woman in prison doesn't appear to matter to him.

* Bulldog clips, spring clips for holding loose sheets together back in the days of paper, might have been patented as a name in 1944 but people soon stopped caring about that small detail.
* Bulldog Drummond, a mook assigned to trail Drummond uses this to find out what Drummond wrote in a telegram—but reveals a rude message from Drummond, who'd realised he was being followed.
* Bulldog Drummond, Drummond is able to recognise the Comte de Guy as Peterson in disguise, though he looks completely different, because he has the same unconscious mannerism when he's feeling impatient.
* Bulldog Drummond has a scene where Hugh Drummond attempts, with a "microscopic" knowledge of French, to explain to a customs official how he came to be in France. It goes on for a whole page before his sidekick, who does speak French, stops laughing long enough to straighten things out.
* Bulldog Drummond that can be set to kill a person in a way that makes them look like they accidentally fell and broke their neck.
* Bulldog Drummond that dissolves a human body entirely, leaving no identifiable traces.
* Bulldog Drummond, the chapter "In Which He Spends A Quiet Night At The Elms" has Drummond spending a night as the guest of the Big Bad. The invitation is issued rather forcefully (he's abducted at gunpoint), but the rest of the event is one of at least surface civility, because Drummond has something the Big Bad wants.
* Bulldog Drummond, the criminal mastermind Lakington's house has several built in, including a step on the main staircase that, when activated, triggers a heavy weight to swing out of the wall at neck-breaking height.
* Bulldog Drummond, the villain Lakington has invented a mixture of corrosive chemicals that can completely dissolve a human body in minutes. He is first seen using it to dispose of an inconvenient corpse, and later threatens to dip the hero in it without killing him first.
* Bulldog Drummond. War hero 'Bullshot' Crummond keeps running into former members of his WW1 regiment "The Royal Loamshires", who have been mutilated in various ways due to his incompetence.
* Bulldog Drummond wit to match the hero's, while Lakington is behind most of the immediate threats, such the thefts, kidnappings, death traps, and attempts to steal the hero's girlfriend.
* Bull Durham, Crash does this to Nuke when the latter is trying on a pair of Annie's garters in the locker room before a game.
* Bull Durham: Crash's rule #1, "Don't think, it'll only hurt the ballclub."
* Bull Durham is basically this, although the younger men she seduces aren't from the local college, they're from the local minor-league baseball team.
* Bull Durham is sort of consciously a Manic Pixie Dream Girl. She really loves the Durham Bulls, and she knows so much about both baseball and the finer things in life that when she dates a player (she picks one per season) he has the best year of his career. She has a lot of fun with a bunch of strapping young men, helps the team improve at the same time, and makes no apologies for it.
* Bull Durham. Placed over the outfield fence, if hit by a home run ball it would light up and make noise, and the person who hit it would win a free steak. The real life Durham Bulls baseball team kept it.
* Bull Durham responds to her flirty "Hi, I'm Milly," with "I'm married," in the exact same tone of voice.
* Bull Durham, the hot young pitcher has no control when he thinks about what he's doing, and his catcher exploits this, goading him into throwing a fastball right at his chest from five feet away, and he misses. His girlfriend makes him wear garters under his uniform, and he's so twisted around thinking about how uncomfortable he is that he pitches beautifully.

* Bull Durham, there's Annie encouraging Nuke to wear garters to help him play better. Discussed by Crash later in the movie:
* Bull Durham with "a million-dollar arm and a ten-cent head" (as in, he has a blazing fastball but not the focus or discipline to use it properly).
* Bull elephants in musth would be the crowning animal example of unstoppable rage. A periodic hormonal condition where male elephants are extremely violent towards their surroundings unless they mate with a female, these frenzied monsters are capable of destroying everything in their path, including trees, vehicles, and houses. They can easily kill any animal within range, from carnivores to large surly animals such Cape Buffalo, Rhinos, Hippos, and even other male elephants. Outside of musth, it is still very unwise to provoke
* Bullet ants are an inch long, the size of a bullet. This is not why they're called bullet ants. They're called bullet ants because being stung feels like
* Bullet: Bullet has spent eight years in prison for a robbery really committed by his friend Pady, who feels bad about this and tries to help him out as a result.
* Bullet: Bullet is a former sports player turned burglar and junkie. His brothers are a graffiti artist and a shell-shocked veteran, his dad sees all of them as disappointments and his father is a somewhat fraught peacemaker.
* Bullet Catch the gunfire from an entire room of cops using one hand.
* Bullet Club anyway. So Madison broke out, then Robbie and Ryan played catch up.
* Bullet Club but they are massively over to non-Japanese people because of how cool they look to the point where NJPW is really the only place they can continue playing the heel role straight.
* Bullet Club: Founded in 2013 in NJPW, also appearing in many promotions that have working agreements with NJPW, most notably ROH.
* Bullet Club. He was given a simple role and played it to perfection. To fans in the US, particularly those tired of big, good looking but slow finesse lacking guys, those sort tuning into New Japan for the famed strong and or super junior styles, Fale is an eyesore.
* Bullet Club in ROH as they went on to support Styles as he sought retribution against Cole and inevitably ran into the rest of The Kingdom.
* Bullet Club in the ring, until Cole's taunting cause him to lose his temper again, anyway.
* Bullet Club members Chase Owens and Bad Luck Fale spent the 2019 G1 Climax tour constantly alluding to the "raiding Area 51" meme of the time as though they planned to lead Bullet Club in such a raid.
* Bullet Club (WWE's Finn Bálor) influence on the course of the stable's and the company's history can be felt nearly five years following his departure:
* Bullet Dancing: A character shoots several times and another character moves in a dance-like way to avoid being shot.
* Bullet for My Valentine does this in one of their songs (Waking the Demon), in said song, just before the guitar solo starts, the singer calls out
* Bullet Girls Phantasia have an exposed blue crystal core that, when shot, can instantly kill them or cause massive damage.
* Bullet Girls Phantasia having an incredibly unhelpful supervisor, at that.
* Bullet Girls Phantasia is part of an entire species of them. She also constantly makes cat puns.
* Bullet Girls Phantasia way that a few minutes in earth equals several hours in Midgard, when they take what was supposed to be a quick trip for supplies and ammo.
* Bullet has this going on between Tupac's character and Micky Rourke's character.
* Bullet Heaven 2. Natalie panics about the second level of the second world, stating she can't breathe.
* Bullet Hell anyone who gets it is probably skilled and well-equipped enough to beat the rest of the game's bosses without it.
* Bullet Hell boss with tougher stats than even Duke Fishron, but good drops. She has a special drop that can only be obtained if all damage to her is done during the day, during which all of her attacks kill the player with one hit.

* Bullet Hell) despite both being from entirely different genres, due to the similar gameplay mechanics.
* Bullet Hell, the final boss, Irisu, or 'Alice', only shows up post-game in a locked area — though hints to her true nature are revealed throughout.
* Bullet Hell the games and get familiar with each game's specific quirks and gimmicks.
* Bullet Holes and Revelations: Two characters are fighting over a gun and one gets shot but it's initially unclear who.
* Bulletin, and finds Wilson Fisk in his apartment. They have a conversation that ends with Fisk choking Ben to death with his bare hands for having gone with Karen to see his mother Marlene.
* Bulletin. As Karen is packing her laptop and notes into her bag, Matt wordlessly grabs her coat off the chair opposite hers and slips it onto her.
* Bulletin, he and Matt team up to break into Dex's apartment to investigate. Later on, after Nadeem finds out that his boss and the rest of his colleagues are also in Fisk's pocket, he continues corresponding with Matt. Matt ultimately trusts Nadeem enough that when Nadeem goes rogue, and Matt rescues him and his family from assassins Fisk sends to their house to kill them, he unmasks himself as a show of gratitude. Then Matt and Foggy rep Nadeem as he decides to testify against Fisk.
* Bullet in the Head, whose greed ends up getting the trio in all kinds of trouble.
* Bulletin, they break into Dex's apartment, with the intention that if they find any incriminating evidence, they'll pull the fire alarm so as to circumvent the need for a search warrant (so that Fisk won't have time to cover his tracks). But since Dex is currently suspended from work (as a result of Fisk's manipulations), they need him out of his apartment, so they arrange for a lawyer to meet Dex at the FBI offices on the pretense of helping him appeal his suspension. Unfortunately, Dex figures out the ruse and comes home early, forcing Matt and Nadeem to flee via a fire escape. Matt is unscathed, but Nadeem gets shot in the chest as Dex opens fire on them.
* Bulletin to paint Matt as responsible for them, and for the shooting of Detective Christian Blake.
* Bulletin, until he suddenly gets out of the chair and chokes Ben to death with his bare hands.
* Bulletproof apparently gets one too, to replace the one he lost while fighting an evil Invincible Doppleganger.
* bulletproof backpacks have become popular in the US. In this case, it's an inversion: kids aren't given deadly weapons, but body armor to protect them from such.
* Bulletproof Human Shield and let him block bullets while you head for safety.
* Bulletproof Human Shield: Grabbing someone as a living meat shield to force them to take the brunt of enemy attacks for you.
* Bulletproof Human Shield might not be realistic, but it's definitely cool.
* Bulletproof Monk, at the end of each monk's tenure, when he passes the power of the scroll on to the next monk after fifty years of agelessness (and bulletproofness), he reverts to his natural age.
* Bulletproof Monk bulletproof, so a fall off a cliff wouldn't necessarily kill him.
* Bulletproof Monk ends the movie in a Badass Longcoat. It helps that she has been kicking ass the entire movie.
* Bulletproof Monk: Kar learns how to fight at 'The Golden Palace'. This turns out to be an old cinema where he lives and shows Kung Fu movies. We actually see him imitating the actors on screen. Despite this, he's actually pretty competent.
* Bulletproof Monk. Kar picks someone's pocket, then the Monk picks Kar's pocket and pretends the original victim had dropped his wallet. The Monk implies he will continue to do so until Kar starts listening to him and taking him seriously.
* Bulletproof Monk main villains are a bunch of Nazis trying to gain immortality through ancient magic.
* Bulletproof Monk was originally going to have an R rating. During the switch to a PG-13 rating, one of the characters was renamed Mr. Funktastic from his previously, more offensive moniker. His original name is still noticeable where his necklace has been suspiciously affixed to his chest to cover up the fifth letter in his "MR. FU KTASTIC" tattoo.

* bulletproof priest's robes. Kiritsugu Emiya also sports a more traditional style duster.
* Bulletproof Vest that can stop a .357 Magnum round onto a target; a 9mm cop-killer bullet goes right through it.
* Bullet (Randolph Bullet) fought in the Vietnam War for years. After he got out he created an organization of superpowered mercenaries and hires them out to whoever pays the most, which often leads them into criminal acts.
* Bullet (Randolph Bullet) served in the Vietnam War for many years. After he got out he became the best mercenary in the Third World. He created an organization of superpowered mercenaries and started hiring them out to whoever paid the highest price.

* Bullet sparks are seen when Jimmy kills the publican inside the hotel in
* Bullet SparksBullets spark when they ricochet to make it obvious where they hit.
* Bulletstorm: Ends with you accidentally blowing up a building, natch.
* Bulletstorm: General Sarrano is an evil, manipulative, foul-mouthed bastard who delights in the suffering of others, gleefully betrays everyone around him, and is generally an all-around un-fun guy to be around. At the same time, he's a hilariously over-the-top jackass with a never-ending stream of creative invective to toss at anyone and everyone around him.
* Bullet Storm, Gray does this to a captured bounty hunter in the very first scene of the game.
* Bulletstorm has lots of these. You can jump at the correct "hotpoints", and with few exceptions, you can't even jump back. And no, covert operative-turned-space pirate Grayson Hunt cannot jump voluntarily at all.
* Bulletstorm has several weak spots to hit before it recharges its hitpoints.
* Bulletstorm has the main character lasso the EA logo and kick it away, turning it into the Epic Games logo.
* Bulletstorm is one, on top of being genocidal and EXTREMELY foul-mouthed.
* Bulletstorm larger battle cruiser. It only works because he smashed it directly through the command center.
* Bulletstorm like that actually survive past the first half-hour. The over-the-top macho nonsense and parodically intense violence only continue from there.
* Bulletstorm's final weapon is a powerful gun that fires a spinning drill bit that instantly kills average mooks, flinging them across the room. If they hit a wall, the drill spins with so much force, it tears off the victim's arms, legs, then head. You can impale multiple enemies with a single drill for a "Shishkebab" skillshot. The charged attack suspends enemies in mid-air, allowing you to launch them into other enemies or environmental hazards by pointing your crosshairs at the intended target and pressing fire.
* Bulletstorm: The Bouncer weapon fires a large explosive cannonball which you can bounce around knocking enemies over before detonating it. You can turn this Up to Eleven with its charge shot, which causes the ball to release an explosion every time it bounces. You can kick it around to direct the blasts!
* Bulletstorm, the main character (Grayson Hunt) is an alcoholic who tends to drink any booze he can find. During the game, you can pick up and drink random bottles of liquor, which will momentarily impair your vision and cause you to sway from side to side for a short period of time. Interestingly, there are several achievements and Skillshots (namely, shooting enemies while drunk) you can only obtain by doing this throughout the game.
* Bulletstorm. To facilitate this, you have a leash you can use to toss hapless enemies around and your kicks can send foes flying great distances. It's nonsensical but it's all in good fun. Having to willfully suspend your disbelief will be a non-issue once you drag that enemy in front of a big Venus flytrap to get eaten alive and your score goes up.

* Bullet Storm : Trishka. In her first appearance, she viciously beats her much larger, monstrous captor to death, all while spouting venomous profanities.
* Bulletstorm, with a giant grindwheel taking the Ferris Wheel's role, stalking the player as he tries to outrun it in a minecart.
* Bulletstorm with a rocket, blasting him into the air, leash him into a carnivorous plant, then toss a random bomb in? Now we're talking. Have many bullets! And what are you going to do for an encore?
* Bulletstorm, you never run out of PMC ammo. If you happen to run out, you instantly spawn another full clip.
* "bullet". The Other Wiki notes that the song was intended "to bring awareness to the issue of gun violence amongst youth."
* Bullet Time and attempts to impress a young woman so that he can earn a date with her.
* Bullet Time and sonic blasts which part the traffic ahead. The vehicles could now be customized by the player, so they could be as eccentric as desired.
* Bullet Time - Camera moves around the scene as the image is in slow motion
* Bullet Time with no need to reload, but rate of fire remains the same so you're out of luck if you only have a slow-firing handgun.
* bullet, to make it that much crazier. Logan and the Yakuza have their work cut out just holding on and are almost flattened by the wind resistance, to say nothing of the low-hanging arches that fly by regularly.
* Bullet to the Head: Jimmy's refusal to drink anything but Bulleit Bourbon, which is treated as an obscure brand, so he brings a bottle to bars and pays for a glass to drink it with. Shortly after the film's release, the brand's distribution greatly expanded, causing it to become quite common. Today, it seems a bit odd for Jimmy to be so obsessed with a mainstream brand and have such a hard time getting it.
* Bullet Witch bundles the game and all of its DLCs on the disc. In 2018, Marvelous AQL and XSEED later brought the game to PC with not only the game's DLCs, it also supported higher resolutions and frame-rate, keyboard and mouse support, rebalances the difficulty based on the Japanese version, and implemented a dashing ability that players can use that was taken out from the original Xbox 360 version.
* Bullet Witch: Few care about the storyline or gameplay or anything, most just want to shoot stuff.
* "bullet wound to the back of the head, exit wound in the forehead" should tip you off how easy he really was to kill.
* Bullfighting is humans taking advantage of this trope vs. bulls. See Western Animation above for a fictional example.
* Bullfighting, of course, which is the ritualized slaughter of a bull before a crowd.
* Bullfighting, which pits man against animal in a fight to the death.
* Bullfrog Power has recently started an ad campaign whose motto is "Pay more for energy." The idea being that you pay more to help the environment, and it does cost more, but really... "use us because we're more expensive"?
* • General questions about the wiki, how it works, and how to do things.
* Bullied into Depression: A character's mental health is negatively effected by bullying.
* Bullied into Depression: Being bullied makes someone depressed because they're worrying when their bully will strike next.
* bull in front of a live audience which includes his wife and kids. The bull then proceeds to ask Peter out on a date.
* Bull: In "Teacher's Pet", the plot is focused on the relationship between teenage Jordan and his former English teacher Susan, which causes a lawsuit from his parents against her.
* "Bullion" means precious metal in ingot form, as in gold bullion or silver bullion. (pronounced "BULL-yun")

* Bull Island lampooned several ads for an electrical outlet called Power City by placing their staff in different situations where they were still acting as if they were advertising (at home, out driving, etc.). Power City subsequently dropped the .99 from their prices as a result.
* Bull isn't a lawyer (he's a psychologist), his best friend Benny Colón is. That said, Bull is in charge of TAC, and he usually makes sure any client he defends is innocent and any defendant he's asked to help prosecute is guilty. This is likely to put what he's doing in a positive light, as manipulating the justice system isn't generally seen as a good thing. One particular case involves patent infringement, where his client modified a pharmaceutical to make it more effective and was then sued by the corporation that owns the patent. In the end, both sides are shown in a positive light (a rare for a TV show, since Big Pharma is generally portrayed as a bad guy), and her former boss ends up dropping the lawsuit after having a face-to-face conversation and learning that her approach is something neither he nor his employees ever considered, deciding to give her credit for the modification.
* Bullitt became the most famous one which all films after tried to emulate.
* Bullitt enthusiast does quite a bit of his own stunt driving. He made a point of sitting far to the left in the driver's seat, without a seatbelt, so that his face would be clearly identifiable during the stunts.
* Bullitt, Johnny Ross, a Chicago mobster who agrees to testify against the Mafia. Naturally, the Mafia wants him dead for this—and for the money Johnny stole from them.
* Bullitt kills a key witness whom he was supposed to bring in alive, so they never find out who is behind the organized crime operation. Movie over.
* Bullitt's incredibly badass 1968 Ford Mustang 390 CID Fastback, although it sports no gadgets or gimmicks, is one of the oldest ones in the book, as is the 1968 Dodge Charger R/T he chases around San Francisco.
* Bullitt: The police department watches in dramatic, stony silence as game-changing evidence in the case is printed by the Xerox Magnafax Telecopier, a then-revolutionary fax machine that nevertheless took minutes to send a document. You would also not find an airport even two decades later with security as lax as in the film's climax, where a character is able to carry a gun in and out of an airplane and through an airport without anyone noticing.
* Bull Nakano: Debuted in the 1980s, had runs in North American promotions WWF and WCW between 1994 and 1996.
* Bull Nakano passed the torch to Yuzuki Aikawa and Hikaru Shida by putting the comparative newcomers in the main event of her own retirement show.
* Bull Nakano sometimes completely no-sold back suplexes just to drive in how futile her opponent's effort was.
* Bull Nakano who each used the move, it being the finisher of the retiring Nakano.
* Bullock and Montoya generally averted this, with veteran detectives Davies and Crowe being partnered.
* Bullock has a few noteworthy "amendments" to the Miranda rights. In fact, in the shows run, he Mirandizes at least four perps, and not once does he actually use the correct wording.
* "Bullocks to Stan" was dedicated to Trahn "Jimmy" Ng, a Canadian Royal Mounted Police officer friend of one of the animators who was killed in a car accident whilst responding to a call.

* Bullseye. In an appearance in Daniel Way's Deadpool comic, he even mentions he rarely spends the money he makes from his hit jobs. He is actually extremely rich by this point, but rather than use it, he continues to be a hit man because he likes it.

* Bullseye keeps his real name a secret, he has used several aliases over the years. Benjamin Pointdexter, Shelton Pendergrass, Matt Hobson, etc.
* Bullseye! play dual roles as a pair of small time con-men and a pair of inept nuclear physicists who believe they have invented a limitless supply of energy. The con men use their resemblance to the scientists to con their way into the scientists' safe deposit boxes and steal the formula, but in so doing, they become entangled in a shady world of spies and international intrigue.
* Bullseye. Therefore, she goes on an angry rampage against Daredevil, which doesn't end well when she figures out who he really is...
* Bull Shannon, Bailiff of Night Court, is another prime example. Although he is very naive and clueless at most times, there are times where he shows very good examples of being intelligent such as spouting out definitions for words his coworkers don’t understand. His IQ was even revealed in one episode to be 181, much to the surprise of his friends.

* Bullshot speech during which he turns green and starts enunciating rather oddly.
* Bullshot to safety while fleeing from a train straight down the railway.
* Bulls, rhinoceroses, hippopotamuses, elephants, and, to a degree, crocodiles are all capable of this trope. It's quite common for a large horned animal like a rhino or buffalo to impale a smaller foe on a horn then throw it up into the air.
* Bullwinkle also had to deal with fighting his own shadow (and losing) while reading "My Shadow" (from Robert Lewis Stevenson's "A Child's Garden of Verse").
* Bullwinkle's Corner segment has Bullwinkle reciting "Morey Had a Little Lamb" (the name changed from Mary since Rocky, who is participating in the visual, is a boy). Bullwinkle's sheep costume has fleas that cause him to scratch frantically until Rocky applies bug spray to it.
* Bullwinkle's Corner segment, "The Children's Hour", has Bullwinkle reading a book of the same name ("It's a very useful book!") while babysitting three young hellions. He uses the book to spank them.

* Bullwinkle was a spokescharacter, touting the cereal's benefits in a series of poetry-reading ads. As 'Casey At The Bat', he still strikes out, and is chased by an angry mob, but:
* Bully 2, has been rumored to be in the works since 2009 by the Composer of the first game. However, very little other than offhand comments have ever been made in regards to the game and nothing at all has been heard since 2013. There however was a suppose leak of concept art of character and environments in 2017, though it hasn't been confirmed if it was real as of February 2020.
* Bully, after almost every significant mission a certain object will appear in your room.
* Bully, although in this case it's American football pads worn by one of the cliques.
* Bully and Wimp Pairing: A brutish, antagonistic kid contrasts with a meeker, more spindly kid.
* Bully Beatdown pits bullies against pro MMA fighters for the chance to win $10,000. Nobody likes bullies, but the deck is clearly stacked against them, and one can't help a twinge of admiration for those who hold their own and don't get stomped outright.
* Bully because they're much more adept at dodging and blocking punches than all of the other cliques, and they're one of the few enemy types who can knock Jimmy to the ground with one punch.
* Bully Brutality: Bullies who go beyond giving their victims black eyes and wedgies by severely injuring them are line-crossers.
* Bully Brutality: When bullying involves severely harming their victims.
* Bully Bulldog were banned. They've also become less athletic to a fault due to their shortened limbs and flattened muzzles. As a result, the modern bulldog is best known as a lazy family dog and a commonplace mascot, while more intimidating looking breeds have taken their place as the scary guard dog, though the similar pitbull breeds still do play around this trope.
* Bully Bulldog, which involves putting the cat in a cement mixer, then letting him set into the pose of the Rodin sculpture of the same name. In the end the hummingbird tricks both the dog and the cat inside the cement mixer, turning them into a decorative bird bath for him.
* Bully Bulldog: Woof! Woof! GRRRRRR! (I love to push around cats and smaller dogs!)
* Bully: Bullworth Academy's gym teacher, Mr. Burton, sexually harasses the female high school students, and in one mission, he asks Jimmy to steal panties from the girls' dorm for him. Prior to the events of the game, Zoe Taylor tried to complain about his behavior to the school, but no one believed her and she was expelled. Thankfully, Jimmy manages to get Burton fired at the end of the game.
* Bully, but they're just as grungy and nasty as the boy's facilities. Though this may reflect more on the overall crappiness of Bullworth Academy's campus than overall equality of standards.
* Bully... by beating the crap out of them. Plenty of high school hi-jinks ensue; panty raids, sabotaging football games, wedgies, swirlies... the whole 9 yards.
* bully comes from Archie's short-lived comic book adaptation of the game, where he was given that name.)
* Bully didn't sell the game (or any package that contains it) in Brazil, until in 2016, it came back.
* Bully distraught woman. Maybe his motives are questionable, but still, he's a good person deep down.
* Bully down specifically —not simply a random lookalike— and beat the shit out him for it later. And for those who were bullied by preppies, you can now shoot one with a potato gun and run.
* Bully for Bugs. Although it has nothing to do with wrestling, the "squash" part comes early in the cartoon, where a magnificent bull is able to easily defeat a cowardly matador.
* Bully for Bugs, Bugs says this word for word when describing a shotgun he's hiding behind the cape.

* Bully for Bugs" has a scene where the bull accidentally swallows a rifle, only to fire bullets from his horns when he twitches his tail.
* "Bully For Skippy" has Slappy Squirrel being unable to use her usual cartoon slapstick to help Skippy deal with a bully after new television guidelines about educational programming had been written.
* Bully, Galloway says "I need a drink!" if you annoy him by repeatedly writing gibberish in English class.
* Bully gameplay and sense of humor, though, were still very much in the Rockstar tradition.
* Bully get special treatment because they're pretty when she doesn't get special treatment for being able to recite the Periodic Table of the Elements.
* Bully gets them to attack you with his old trick of insulting them and saying you did it, the "inbred" insult is met with indignation and the phrase "And first cousins is legal anyway!"
* Bully gives you the chance to play as a pubescent terror. Student looks at you the wrong way? You can shove him to the ground. Nerd bumps into you in the hallway? You can knee him in the balls. Preppy student mocks your clothing? You can shove him through a glass window, beat him with a cricket bat, and repeatedly stomp on his head while he lays moaning on the floor. Downplayed at times when the main character can be played as a compassionate teen and actively protect vulnerable students. And in the actual story, he usually only messes with people who have done something to deserve it.
* Bully, had a scar extending up from his eye and through his eyebrow. Strangely enough, the reason for having the scar is never explained.
* Bully) Halloween mission in which Gary and Jimmy put a bag of poop just outside the teacher's lounge. The fire alarm is pulled just after it's lit on fire, causing Mr. Burton to charge out of the lounge and fall victim.
* Bully has a clique of jocks, all of whom fit the trope to some degree or other. Especially their leader, Ted Thompson. The Preppies clique fits the trope almost as well.
* Bully has a more family-friendly (and non-lethal) version of this with a conflict going on between the five cliques at Bullworth Academy, with many of the cliches often found in gang and mob stories brought down to a high-school level.
* Bully has Jimmy put on an Aquaberry sweater and posh hairdo to infiltrate the Preppies fraternity house. Funny that he can change his length of hairstyle at will, despite having a buzz cut. The magic of video games!
* Bully has passing all the classes, the arcade games, the carnival games, racing bikes, racing go-karts, boxing, running errands, paper routes, mowing lawns, breaking lawn gnomes, collecting rubber bands and trading cards, and generally messing with people.
* Bully Hayes is dealing firearms to the native islanders in the opening of
* Bully. He's short and isn't muscular at all, yet can take on guys nearly twice his size in a fight.
* Bully. His goal is ostensibly to "take over the school", but nobody seems to have figured out what that actually means, least of all Gary.
* Bully) holds on through a barrage of balls before finally getting whacked with a brick, where it spins and changes to the Rockstar Games logo.
* Bully Hunter: A character does not take kindly to bullies, and will not tolerate their behavior.
* Bully Hunter: A character who hates bullies and is adept and eager to take them down.
* Bully Hunter: A person who makes it their mission to fight anyone who's picking on other people.
* Bully Hunter is based around telling each other "No, you're a good person."
* Bully Hunters for taking extremes against their tormentors, they retort that he's telling them to just sit back and take their abuse. Filmore points out there are other more lawful ways to deal with these problems, talk to guardians or seek assistance from the teachers.

* Bully includes a number of extra Christmas missions at the beginning of the chapter.
* Bully in every dodgeball game and anybody hit by the ball gets slammed rather violently to the hardwood floor.
* Bullying a Dragon (in which a character or group of characters learn too late that picking on a being much more powerful than them is never a good idea, possibly one with an extremely long threshold and about to reach the end of their tether)
* Bullying a Dragon: Someone picks on a being who could easily kill them (or at least cause them great harm) in retaliation.
* Bullying a Dragon: When bullies mess with people they have no business messing with.
* Bullying a Dragon: Yes, let's antagonize the guy who we just saw beat the crap out of another guy; it's not like he'll beat us up too, ya know.
* Bullying the Disabled: Bullying a disabled person vs. a person with a disability using their disability as an excuse to why they can be mean.
* Bullying the Disabled: Ostracizing or mocking someone's disability is a sick act.
* Bullying the Disabled: People who bully others based on physical or mental impairments.
* Bullying the Disabled: You're crippled? I'll pick on you for that then.
* Bully involves driving off kids who harass Edna, Bullworth's obligatory frumpy and slovenly cafeteria lady, while she's on a "date" with Dr. Watts, the chemistry teacher. Unbeknownst to Watts, Edna has slipped sedatives in his coffee, and once the mission is over, the viewer is treated to a (mercifully brief) cutscene of Edna dragging Watts to a nearby sleazy hotel.
* Bully is set in an open-world New England town that is mostly mundane, though it does have its share of strange occurrences.
* Bully is that this was deliberate, so as to not date the game to a particular era. Their intention was to make the setting nostalgic for the childhood of a wide range of age demographics.
* Bully: Jimmy gets a lame sweater from his parents for Christmas and everyone laughs at him.
* Bully: Jimmy Hopkins can take a bat to the head, yet he can't stay up past 2 AM.
* Bully Magnet: A character is an easy target for bullying and harassment.
* Bully Magnet: A character targeted and picked on by several bullies.

* Bullyparade, at quite considerable speed for about three minutes without interruptions. You have to keep from laughing, or you'll miss a great deal of the puns.
* Bully, players must steal the mascot uniform belonging to the school's football team, the Bullworth Bullhorns, and wear it as camouflage.
* Bully playing late at night and you start to notice Jimmy's head dropping and the creepily distorted soundtrack very subtly start to creep in, it's pretty unnerving.
* Bully: Pre-mission cutscenes are more fluid than the rest of the game, while mid-mission cutscenes are run on the usual game engine.
* Bully. Preppy dress sense, faux-Transatlantic accents, exclusionary attitude, swanky off-campus living, and of course the game is set in a private boarding school.
* Bully protagonist Jimmy can choose to humiliate the overweight nerds and make them wet their pants.
* Bully Ray seemingly goes out of his way to be a heat magnet, and it works magnificently. Case in point: Lockdown 2013, where his betrayal of the Hogan family as president of the Aces & Eights got energy drink cans tossed into a caged ring from all over the arena.

* Bully seems to give some leeway in what is considered a uniform for Bullworth Academy; You need to have something on displaying the school's name or logo at all times, but other then that go nuts customizing Jimmy's outfit.
* Bully setting: targets include bottles (shoot), bandits (shoot), women with their hands up (don't shoot), and a star (shoot for bonus). The other is a baseball throw, with catchers (hit), batters (don't hit), umpires (instant game over), and a big glove (bonus).
* Bully. She swings between bitch and sweet so quickly and suddenly it's almost like she has a split personality.
* Bully, since the only real problem you find is how easy it is for the jocks to take over the funhouse to torment some nerds inside and a broken merry-go-round that isn't repaired during the game.
* Bully's Jimmy will get a couple dirty looks from the Prefects and some teachers for not wearing the school uniform, he won't get into any major trouble from it. The main trio of Petey, Gary and Jimmy have uniquely colored vests, and the majority of the school make modifications to theirs—each clique has their own take on the uniform, and only the non-clique students wear the regular school uniform properly.
* bully someone like that; Lila is ultimately forced to concede that she may have mistaken her "attacker" for Marinette.
* Bully sometimes says it word by word. Especially in the final mission.
* Bully spouts these when knocked out ("Pancakes? Where are the waffles?"), though it's rather rare to hear them because hitting children in this game is considered one of the worst offenses and the moment you do, prefects/teachers/police officers will spawn and go after you.
* Bully. Sticking one on someone's back causes nearby students to kick the victim.
* Bully than our protagonist, except for Eunice who is still physically larger than him.
* Bully, the critically acclaimed 2012 documentary film that became a rare box office hit of the genre. The five subjects of the film — including those who had revealed themselves as homosexuals, or had Asperger's — were all severely tormented by bullies. (The alleged bullies were not interviewed for this film.)
* Bully. The producers wanted a PG-13 rating so the documentary could be shown in schools and so that kids could go see it without requiring a parent present, but due to a single scene with multiple F-bombs it got rated R. This caused a huge uproar and a ton of complaints directed at the MPAA. Eventually they were forced to lower the number of F-bombs in that one scene to get the PG-13 rating.
* Bully, the protagonist is a troublemaker who is dropped off in an amazingly shitty boarding school by his neglectful mother so she wouldn't have to deal with him personally.
* Bully, throwing food at other students in the cafeteria will set off a food fight, as everyone present grabs food and begins tossing it at each other.
* Bully too, when using the slingshot at least. A fully-charged shot to the head will drop almost any student.
* Bully Turned Buddy: A character is friends with someone who used to bully them.
* bully victim and severe abuse from his family (great-grandmother pre-Crisis, father in the New 52). In the game, he lacks any sympathetic qualities and is even more monstrous than his comics incarnation, easily one of the most vile characters in the series. Background material suggests that this version of Jonathan Crane isn't even mentally ill, just pure evil.
* Bully Wars is that bullies compete in a tournament to determine who is the biggest bully of them all.
* Bully where the main character must help a drunken, down-on-his-luck Santa run the good one out of town and get revenge on the kids who tease him.
* Bully, which is based on a real homicide of a teen who bullied and abused his best friend, his best friend's girlfriend, and all of his associates.
* Bully, while riding a skateboard you can latch onto the bumpers of cars to get around town more easily.

* Bully, who isn't that great of a fighter, uses these when starting a fight. Only he would use terms such as "mayo face", "numb numb", "mustard stain", and "noonoo head".
* bully who "likes to fight and picks on all the guys"; and ends with the line, "I don't care for her at all".
* Bully won't let Petey into their group, claiming that he is too weird.
* Bully. You can't take girls there, of course, being fifteen (and rated T) but... well, other people do.
* Bully. You could start a fight right in front of a prefect, and nothing happens.
* Bully: You get a minor bang if you fail chemistry. Notably, if you succeed, you get the ability to make firecrackers. Bear in mind that the key ingredient in these, if memory serves, is black powder, isn't it?
* Bully you've been beating up throughout the game (and may even be weaker, since he barely fights back and spends most of the time trying to block your attacks), whereas you've probably acquired a massive number of brutal moves from the crazy hobo by that point in the game.
* Bullzeye makes him intelligent enough to be a TV salesman, but not a very good one.
* Bulma and her rarely seen older sister Tights. While Bulma is bossy, easily angered and vain, Tights is quite calm, easy going and modest. Though as
* Bulma asks Goku how he can be so happy when he tells her that he was abandoned in the woods, his grandfather died, and he was left alone for several years.
* , Bulma claims to be 28 when Beerus crashes her birthday party. Krillin calls bullshit by pointing out that she's three years older than Goku who had Gohan in his 20s and Gohan himself is currently in his 20s.
* Bulma from the future timeline wanted a world where the androids didn't exist and everyone she loves is still alive. To that end, she built a time machine knowing that even if they fixed the past, it would not change their timeline and they would still be stuck with the androids.
* Bulma had purple hair, and Chi-Chi has an already-existing husband and black hair.
* Bulma once accidentally opened one of her father's capsules when she mixed up his case of capsules with her own. The capsule ended up being full of porn. She immediately destroyed it.
* Bulma pees herself in the first episode of the original series, right after Goku rescues her from a monster that attacked her while she was trying to find privacy to pee in the first place. The same scene is in the manga. The scene is even present in the edited version of the anime.
* Bulma's a victim of a lot of slapstick towards her, being a Butt-Monkey and all.
* Bulma. She has a slow-burning romance with Vegeta, but she also likes women and has no problems being in a quasi-romantic relationship with Lady Unus (Android 18's name in this fic).
* Bulma's mom and dad embody this trope — the dad is old and wrinkled (looking like Albert Einstein), and the mom is ridiculously cute. Dr. Briefs was, however, rich and famous.
* Bulma starts out as one, particularly when it comes to machinery. She built the Dragon Ball Radar at age 15-16,
* Bulma trades her Micro Band (a watch that can shrink the person who is wearing it) to Turtle Hermit in exchange for a submarine. He uses the device as a way to spy on Bulma while she is on the toilet, but it failed as he shows up when she had finished (and Hermit himself falls into the toilet for good measure). Later, he tries to convince Lunchi several times to take a bath so he can sneak in microscopically and see her naked, but he fails.
* Bulma where Majin Buu turned her into chocolate and ate her, along with all the other main characters, sending her and the rest to heaven.
* Bulshar and his army assault the homestead to try and wipe the Earps out.
* Bulungi: A fictional developing country wedged into sub-Saharan Africa.
* Bulungi: The Wakanda that's shown in the page is actually just a façade to maintain its isolation; beneath it, Wakanda is actually the most advanced country in the world.

* Bulwer-Lytton Fiction Contest tend to consist mostly of these. The page quote is a subversion.
* Bulworth has the title character lay a hit on himself (he's suicidal). For obvious reasons, he cannot call off the hit. He manages to call it off eventually, but only by unknowingly dating the one girl who was actually assigned to assassinate him, and accidentally telling her about the mistake.
* Bulworth, the title character gets visibly bored of his speech, then gives a very candid answer to an audience question and never stops.
* Bulworth, when Senator Bulworth is on TV in brutal-honesty mode, he suggests that the US should engage in "a voluntary, free-spirited, open-ended program of procreative racial deconstruction". Seeing the blank look on the interviewer's face, he re-phrases it more bluntly: "Everybody just gotta keep fuckin' everybody 'til they're all the same color".
* Bulychev also has a short story about a man who fell in love with a female alien — she looks like a human female, and a beautiful one, but her biochemistry is based on ammonia rather than water.
* Bumble about listening, Fishy states that "it might rain or it might not". Bumble doesn't hear the "might not" and thinks it will definitely rain. He remarks "we'd better take the clothes in in case there's going to be a storm", but Boo only hears the "there's going to be a storm" part and tells Peek that there will be a storm and might be a flood, but he's distracted by playing and only hears something about a flood, so he starts to prepare for a flood.
* Bumblebee, a fact that the Decepticons exploit to pass themselves off as the good guys and turn the US military against Bumblebee.
* Bumblebee and Cliffjumper are the most traditional palette swaps in the franchise, while the toyline always had a Cliffjumper redeco from a Bumblebee toy the
* Bumblebee, and given that it had a budget of less than half of its predecessor.
* Bumblebee: Charlie and Bee do this a few times. Carefully since he's a giant robot, but with real emotion.
* Bumblebee: Charlie has asked for a car for her 18th birthday. She gets the gaffe from both barrels.
* Bumblebee, Charlie Watson had no friends until she met Bumblebee. Its apparent that the depression she was in after her dad died, combined with the fact her family is evidently quite poor (and thus, she has to work a dead-end job at the local amusement park), makes other kids treat her with scorn, with a group of bullies regularly antagonising her any time they see her. Its her lack of friends that makes her connect so strongly to Bee upon meeting the lost Autobot, as they're both completely alone and rely on each other for support.
* Bumblebee did this while at HIVE Academy, getting most of her intel from pillow talk.
* Bumblebee, drastic changes in the tone and aesthetic, namely giving the Transformers themselves new designs greatly evocative of their G1 selves, and overall other stylistic liberties and major continuity differences have pretty much all but said classified it as a reboot, which was eventually confirmed by Hasbro two months after the film's release.
* Bumblebee, especially in recent years, has been accused of being a
* Bumblebee fills this, despite being a mechanical life form. Due to being the most humanoid of the robot cast, his movements modelled after
* Bumblebee film has him appear solely styled after Bumblebee's Cybertronian form but never takes on an Earth form.
* Bumblebee for (accidentally) sending him to prison, though he'd been trying to take Bee down for some time before. The Decepticon symbol his new form inexplicably has is basically there 'cause the toy has it.
* Bumblebee franchise's form, the Decepticons are ruthless and, when they interact with other races, hold little to no regard for them outside of how they can be useful to their cause. They also won't simply settle for driving the Autobots off-planet, but actively hunt them down simply to ensure they don't ever return.

* Bumblebee has Agent Burns use this trope to express his dislike for Dr. Powell's suggestion that Sector 7 ally with the Decepticons:
* Bumblebee has a scene where "Never Gonna Give You Up" is played, only for Bumblebee to destroy the cassette it's on after being forced to play just a second or two of it.
* Bumblebee has Shatter and Dropkick, two Decepticon hunters that are hunting scattered Autobots, eventually tracking Bumblebee to Earth where they manipulate Sector 7 into aiding them in his capture.
* Bumblebee has this played straight when he starts digging out various electronic entertainment devices he brought for Sari's camping trip. When asked where exactly he was keeping them (being as he is a robot with no pockets) he awkwardly says "Don't ask".
* Bumblebee, he will act like he just got out of elementary school and doesn't feel like doing his homework today.
* Bumblebee". Ironically, the miniseries is incompatible with the film's continuity due to the discrepancy of the actual movie eschewing the original draft's premise of Bumblebee having prior adventures on Earth.
* Bumblebee is a literal example, due to his red color. His only notable scene in the film is being killed at the hands of the movie's main villains, Shatter and Dropkick.
* Bumblebee is a sort of an unofficial protectorate for Gridlock as well.
* Bumblebee is quietly forgotten). This is aside from the considerably different tone and character designs.
* Bumblebee is the first Cybertronian Lelouch meets in the story, and he quickly becomes a trusted confidante and friend to the former prince.
* Bumblebee Man, a stereotypical Mexican who always wears his TV costume and whose private life mirrors the zany antics of his TV show.
* Bumblebee Man is a regular character in a Mexican Spanish-language soap, and his character appears to suffer divorce, infidelity, property damage with the expected melodrama.
* Bumblebee media who disliked the previous films, gets hate from many fans of the previous films who consider its shift from action-focused to character-focused to make it boring.
* Bumblebee movie also gives him a face swapping gimmick, but this time the "crazy" face is the only other option.
* Bumblebee portrays the aforementioned Bumbleebee as this once again, and plays it up even more by making him scared and vulnerable due to his memory loss, yet still upbeat and curious.
* Bumblebees. Fuzzy, fat, so gentle they don't mind being poked, and only want to pollinate flowers.
* Bumblebee, Shatter and Dropkick, do not get named on-screen, only being named in the credits and promotional material. Blitzwing, the only other major Transformer in the film, is also hit with this.
* Bumblebee: Shatter and Dropkick show the U.S. Department of Defense how to build the Internet.
* Bumblebee shining the signal light to call the Autobots in the live-action
* Bumblebee takes a blast of Meltdown's acid (which melts through basically anything ever, including Cybertronians) for Bulkhead. Fortunately, the Autobots have Sari's key to repair him.
* Bumblebee their victims' despair just before their end when it comes down to it.
* Bumblebee. This ends up adding insult to injury after Charlie's equally clueless mother nixes Charlie's wish for a car as a gift and instead gives her tomboy daughter a girly rainbow-colored helmet to wear on her moped.
* Bumblebee, this film achieved renewed interest and nearly universal critical approval, breathing new life into the franchise with a sequel in the works.
* Bumblebee to ingratiate themselves with the US military while passing themselves off as lawmen. Once they decide the facade is no longer necessary, Dropkick casually shoots Powell dead, right as he's realizing his mistake and trying to alert his bosses.

* Bumblebee was seen with a gun (more like a Big Fucking Cannon) that was twice as long as he was tall in Dreamwave's "War Within" issue 5, while one of IDW's "Infiltration" issue 4 cover homages that with
* Bumblebee who can match him move for move while being almost twice as big as him, he can't hold out for long.
* Bumbleebee and Bulkhead, again, with the two of them spending hours doing nothing but watching cartoons, playing video-games, and old b-movies.
* Bumble Kast, where fans send their questions to and Flynn will answer.
* Bumbling Dad book where Dogbert teaches etiquette, which features a segment dedicated to this. Dogbert is shown insulting a man's father with no visible reaction, but when he says something like "He's so ugly that the only way your mom would marry him is in the dark", which elicits an angry "What did you say about my mom?!"
* Bumbling Dad due to his simpleminded personality (as opposed to Vlad's brilliance).
* Bumbling Dad: Fathers are often clueless around their children, especially widowers, single dads or when the child is a daughter.
* Bumbling Dad; in another he asks if it's even possible to file taxes in a legally-binding state of mind (as Andy asked, "Who is Roglp Fox?").
* Bumbling Dad klutz who needs Michiru around to keep her in check. This exaggeration may have come from the "fun things to do as adults" and/or "Haruka doesn't like popular men" scenes from the '90s anime canon.
* Bumbling Dad mom), it is very rare to find a regular or even recurring female character without a familial or romantic relationship to a male character. In particular, the wife in the family (whether she works outside of the home or not) tends to have no friends or connection to the outside world outside of her husband's social circle. Homer Simpson has Carl, Lenny, and Barney. Marge has... Mrs. Lovejoy occasionally?
* Bumbling Dad Roger walks by and mentions he used to have a pair just like that and suggests they should go around dressed the same. Paige's next line to Peter is, "Want some pants?"
* Bumbling Dad trope when it comes to how her husband is, while not that bad of a parent, is probably not "going to get a 'World's Best Dad' mug from Chloe on Father's Day. This comes from the author thinking that Professor Cerise was oblivious to his daughter's insecurities.
* bumbling, he gets beaten in chess by 4-year-old children, and he almost blows himself to Kingdom Come every time he tries to grill hamburgers.
* Bumbling Henchmen Duo: The villain's main subordinates are a pair of idiots.
* Bumbling hippie Captain Trips often seems this way — until he
* Bumbling Sidekick - A sidekick who contrasts with the hero by being incompetent.
* Bumbling Sidekick Baldrick is being called to the stand to testify in Captain Blackadder's trial, Blackadder tells him to "deny everything." First question:
* Bumbling Sidekick — An incompetent sidekick who makes the hero look better.
* "Bum" can be a verb in British English, and not in the American sense of "beg or borrow"; it means "sodomise". This means, amusingly, that you can US!bum a UK!fag (ask for a cigarette), or UK!bum a US!fag (have anal sex with a homosexual man), but neither phrase works quite right without borrowing a word usage from the other side of the Atlantic.
* Bumi, and Kya, respectively. The second season explores a bit of how they viewed Aang's not-so-stellar parenting.
* Bumi discovers he's become an Airbender (as a result of Harmonic Convergence) when he falls from a cliff and inadvertantly saves himself by airbending inches from the ground.
* Bumi, Kya, and Tenzin have a similar dynamic to that of their parents Aang and Katara and Uncle Sokka who were the main
* Bumped, a virus went around causing all adults to be sterile. As a result, adults will pay lots of money to teenagers (and in extreme cases, preteens) to be surrogates.
* Bumped by Megan McCafferty, which takes place in 2036, all of the slang relates to pregnancy or reproduction. In this society, everyone over 18 is infertile, so teens are paid top dollar to be surrogate parents for rich older couples.

* Bumped, while readers who do want to read about it criticized the book for exploiting a serious problem in society for shock value.
* Bumper Balls, a mini-game that can only be won by forcing opponents off the circular playing field, eliminating them.
* Bumper Robinson appeared in Season 1's "Trial By Fury" as Clifford Weaver, before getting cast as James in Season 7.
* bumpers featuring its character bumpers for its "Fox Action Theater" lineup; the former featuring a hand (presumably Robin's) shining a flashlight and a shadow of Batman walking by in the background, while the latter featured Wolverine walk over the credits while Jubilee popped up in front of the logo.
* "Bumpers" has long been generic, but Wlliams used both "thumper bumpers" and "jet bumpers," while * bump him over. Mako is pissed but changes his tune when she removes her helmet. She invites him to dinner to apologize, which he gladly accepts.
* Bump in the Night as Molly Cuddle to play a prank on Destructo. When he got caught, he tried several desperate ways to divert blame. This trope was included.
* Bump in the Night due to his obsession with order and justice and always menacing the main character Mr. Bumpy whenever he breaks the rules.
* Bump in the Night episode "Beauty and the Bump" when Mr. Bumpy and friends are discussing ways they can free the antique princess doll from her glass case. Squishington mentions that he once saw Mr. Bumpy's face crack a mirror and proposes that his face can also affect glass. Bumpy figures that using his ugliness to break the glass case is worth a try and proves Squishington's claim of his ugliness breaking mirrors, but after that, his ugliness ends up breaking or melting everything around him except the princess's glass case.
* Bump in the Night episode "Bumpy the Untrappable" had a box-and-stick trap featured as one of the traps the boy tried to use to capture Mr. Bumpy. The trap instead captures Squishington.
* Bump in the Night episode "Comfort Schmumfort", the alien invaders Sleemoth and Gloog dismiss Molly Coddle as not being a threat just because she's a girl. Right in front of her, even.
* Bump in the Night episode "Dr. Coddle, M.D." had a gag where Squishington had a radio hooked up to him and started spouting out random phrases that weirdly managed to fit together in a sentence.
* Bump in the Night episode "Gum Crazy" plays with this, where Mr. Bumpy enters his own body to try and retrieve all the chewing gum he's swallowed and gets into confrontations with his stomach, his heart, and his brain. Mr. Bumpy's brain and stomach both appear as sentient organs, while Mr. Bumpy's heart simply appears as Mr. Bumpy with a mustache and a French accent.
* Bump in the Night episode "In the Bowl of the Squishy Prince", Squishington slaps "Princess Bumpelina" on the rear after rescuing her from the Closet Monster and just before learning that the princess is really Mr. Bumpy disguising himself as a princess in hopes of helping raise Squishy's self-esteem.
* Bump in the Night episode "It Sang from Beyond the Stars", Mr. Bumpy puts a potato into the tailpipe of Sleemoth and Gloog's UFO after tricking them into leaving. This causes their spaceship to explode and the two aliens to drift off into space.
* Bump in the Night episode "Loss of Face" has Squishington lose his face after accidentally wiping it off with a rag. When Mr. Bumpy tries to get his friend's face back, he gets held prisoner by the bugs who found the rag. Squishington gets his face back by himself and ends up agreeing to help the bugs find "The Place" (a trash can they intend to topple over to eat the garbage inside) in exchange for Mr. Bumpy's freedom. At the end of the episode, Squishington hears Mr. Bumpy screaming, still being tortured by the bugs holding him prisoner.
* Bump in the Night episode "Loss of Face", Squishington accidentally scrubs his face off and ends up losing the washcloth he used, requiring Mr. Bumpy's help to get his face back.

* Bump in the Night episode "Love Stinks" has Molly Coddle get the attention of a stinkbug named Odiferous J. Stench after she falls in the garbage and ends up smelling awful. Molly's stench is shown to cause the leaves in the plant Odiferous is hiding in to wither and fall off.
* Bump in the Night episode "Made in Japan" had Mr. Bumpy save some box tops from Choco Space Flakes cereal to receive a Turbo Totrenoid robot. When disappointed by the robot being tiny and non-threatening, he and Squishington then decide to mail Little Robot back for a full refund and start saving up on box tops from Sugar Frosted Shark Puffs in order to get a toy submarine.
* Bump in the Night episode "Not of This Boy's Room," Bumpy accidentally ends up on an alien spaceship. He asks one if they are planning some kind of invasion, which the alien denies.
* Bump in the Night episode "To Sleep, Perchance to Burp", a shot of a milk carton with a picture of a teddy bear reported as missing is shown when Molly Coddle warns Mr. Bumpy that every toy that entered the domain of the Closet Monster hasn't returned.
* Bump in the Night featured a pair of aliens named Sleemoth and Gloog as a pair of recurring villains. Mr. Bumpy, Squishington, and Molly Coddle always beat their plans to invade easily because they are rather overconfident and incompetent.
* Bump in the Night featured a pair of aliens named Sleemoth and Gloog as minor antagonists, whose attempts at conquering Earth were always thwarted by Mr. Bumpy, Squishington, and Molly Coddle thanks to the aliens being highly arrogant and gravely underestimating our heroes.
* Bump in the Night featured a pair of aliens named Sleemoth and Gloog. In spite of being from another planet, Sleemoth has a Scottish accent and Gloog has a British accent.
* Bump in the Night has as the main protagonist a small green monster called Mr. Bumpy that lives under a young boy's bed and eats socks and dust-bunnies. His best friend is a blue slime monster that lives in the house's bathroom (and is a bit of a neat-freak). Neither of them is scary, and Mr, Bumpy acts more like a traditional boggart (trickster) than anything else. There is, however, a scary closet monster made up of dirty clothes, with coat-hanger claws and a washing-basket shell like a turtle.
* Bump in the Night has stop-motion animated protagonists Mr. Bumpy, Squishington, and Molly Coddle living in a house that is filmed in live-action and owned by a family played by human actors.
* Bump in the Night. Squishy eventually loves Germ Girl back, but ends up having to part ways with her before he and Mr. Bumpy return to normal size.
* Bump in the Night that revolves around Mr. Bumpy repeatedly travelling back through time to try and prevent himself from hurting Squishington's feelings, one of the ways in which he chases off his past-time duplicate is by winning one of these. The winning belch actualy blows his opponent right off of the desk.
* Bump in the Night. The three Bumpys then got an advice from Future Squishington and apologized to their friend. When Squishington asked the Bumpys why there were three of them, they disintegrated because they couldn't agree on which ones had to leave.
* Bump in the Night "Twas the Night Before Bumpy" had the toy robot Destructo's Christmas present being a female version of him named Destructette.
* Bump in the Night were played by real-life siblings Scott and Anndi McAfee.
* Bump in the Night who is equipped with a lot of gadgets and weaponry that he uses whenever he chases after Mr. Bumpy for breaking the rules. In "Destructo's Flipside", it is shown that he even has the equipment needed to make strawberry milkshakes!
* Bump N' Go toys are basically this in toy form. They work by having a set of driving wheels on a freely spinning axle that is held still only by the forward movement of the toy, which means that when the toy bumps into a wall and stops, the spinning axle turns the toy in a new direction, hopefully away from a wall, and keeps going. However, sometimes, if the toy bumps the wall at just the wrong angle, or the axle is too close to the wall, the toy will keep bumping and trying to spin around, causing it to bump the wall again and again until picked up and put back on its way.

* Bumpology: is a study of bumps on the head. Much the same as Phrenology.
* bumps competition it was made for. And it was third place in the compo!

* Bum Reviews of Chester A. Bum. "OH MY GOD! THIS IS THE GREATEST MOVIE THAT I HAVE EVER SEEN IN MY LIFE!!"
* Bun-bun. At first he just came from a pet store as a joke and it was more that he had no past at all. Then the readers were finally shown some of it and the rest became very mysterious.
* Bun-Bun can outrun a car, toss a grown man over his shoulder, claw his way out of an alien's stomach, skin a grizzly bear alive, and survive grenade explosions at point-blank range. Made all the more impressive considering that Bun-Bun is a small bunny.
* Bun-bun can veer into this too if he's in a good mood, especially with his "friends", whom he has come to grudgingly care about a tiny little bit. For the Evulz is a better characterization for many of the things he does, though.
* Bun-bun himself, though not invulnerable, fits this trope through the sheer power of badass.
* Bun-Bun is actually a parody of this trope as he was specifically bought by Torg so the strip could have a cute animal...said cute animal is a murderous criminal that can take care of himself and seemingly only hangs around Torg for free food and lodging and whom orginially Torg wanted dead and/or gone (although it IS later revealed he has grown to actually really care about the main cast much later in the strip and fairly early on Torg was shown to clearly miss Bun-Bun when he was AWOL for a while). Kiki on the other hand plays this trope very straight.
* Bun-Bun. It was likely decided by the fact that the storyline at the time was all about Oasis and it would have been cut anticlimactically short if she'd been the one to lose. Bun-bun had taken the advantage when it was solely about conventional means of fighting, but when Oasis' pyrokinetic powers are shown, the fight goes the other way.
* Bun-bun of all the holidays. (Being the embodiment of Halloween gives the right "dark" flavour among what would otherwise be mostly cheerful portfolios.)
* Bun-Bun, Riff, and Torg manage to completely destroy the Punyverse in the GOFOTRON arc.
* Bun-Bun, which had possibly the most terrifying plush rabbit ever made, even though it didn't do anything directly; any child that ran into it became obsessed with having it, to the point of near killing themselves.

Fatalities? Zero. It helped that the incident happened at 6AM on a Sunday morning when most nearby businesses were closed and the storage facility itself was running with a skeleton crew, and the heat-resistant fuel tanks bought enough time for everyone who was on site to reach a safe distance before the first explosion. The emergency services were even able to save the fish in a nearby river by setting up barriers to contain the runoff from firefighting foam.

* Bundestag impressive, some observers say that Lindner's theatralic gesture in letting coalition talks fail with the words "It's better to not govern at all than to govern badly" were seen as both lingering effects of their 2013 shellacking and a possible trigger for a further humiliation at the polls. Time will tell whether Lindner and his party drew the right conclusions.

* Bunduki, Bunduki and Dawn are adoptive cousins. They end up married.
* Bunduki. James Allenvale 'Bunduki' Gunn and his cousin Dawn Drummond-Clayton should have been killed when their Land Rover plunged into the Gambuti Gorge. Instead, Bunduki woke to find himself in a primeval jungle and armed with primitive weapons. Dawn came to her senses on a game-haunted plain. Guided by subconscious suggestion, they set out to find each other. To do so, they had to transverse terrain populated by many kinds of wild animals and savage people. Before they were reunited, both had to face danger and death many times.
* "Bunfight at the O.K. Tea Rooms", Graeme creates a dummy of himself out of a frying pan, a mop and some other odds and ends to fool the others while he sneaks away to register the cream claim. Tim and Bill converse with it for some time before they notice anything is amiss.
* Bunga is obviously young but flashbacks show him even younger when he was taken in by Timon and Pumbaa.
* Bungie being notable examples. Even their fan club (The 7th Column) does it!
* Bungie called The Great Devoid. The fact this was necessary to kill him fully is evidenced by his severed head talking to you during the trip. In Myth II, the villain Soulblighter killed by being cast into lava.
* Bungie, deliberately dodge many questions by the fandom, because they prefer to let the fans answer the questions and come up with the theories themselves.
* Bungie even went so far as to make the underground segment to an additional map, Sandpit, to the
* Bungie games feature Assimilated BoBs, who look like civilians but run up to the player and explode,
* Bungie, hit sparks are color-coded to indicate the health of whomever is taking damage: green hit sparks represent a healthy combatant, yellow indicates having approximately half their health left, and red indicates near-death.
* Bungie is fond of this. In most likely the earliest first-person shooter example of this trope, the Jjaro from
* Bungie just not being popular, it took until Quake and its innovative online multiplayer before the mouselook feature became codified.
* Bungie-made began production, he did come back to voice the Grunt Dimkee Hotay.
* Bungie plays with this trope. The games takes place in the wake of humanity reaching a Golden Age of space travel only to be nearly being wiped out, and with the players now navigating the ruins of that lost society. But that advanced civilization was founded in the future, so modern humanity is actually the ancient advanced ones.
* Bungie Podcast's theme song ends with the line "It's our podcast show, with Brian and friiieeennnds...and Frankie."
* Bungie series is now downloadable freeware, due to the computer system it was built for no longer being available.

* Bungo Stray Dogs after Chuuya kills several men with their own ammo and several even make it clear they know who Chuuya is and what he can do, yet still keep firing.
* Bungo Stray Dogs and their abilities to the relationships between them. The translator's notes pointing out references here and there is educational enough as it is, and fans tend to be influenced to read the works referenced in the series as well.
* Bungo Stray Dogs as his reaction to Dazai annoying him; when Chuya does it, it's more serious, as they're actually fighting and Chuya happens to be the best martial artist in the Port Mafia.
* Bungo Stray Dogs: Atsushi Nakajima wasn't aware of his transformations into a tiger, until he ran into some members of the Armed Detective Agency.
* Bungo Stray Dogs called 'The Dragon's Head Conflict'. It's said to be a conflict between multiple mobs, under which the Port Mafia. The Conflict is elaborated on some more in Dead Apple.
* Bungo Stray Dogs can control any electronic device within his field of view perfectly and at a speed multiple times faster than what can be achieved naturally, as long as he's not in physical contact with it. He also needs to be in a state of physical and mental comfort.
* Bungo Stray Dogs can heal people this way, but with a twist: it only works if the person she's healing is on the brink of death.
* Bungo Stray Dogs (Combines a real-life city setting with magic mundane to it)
* Bungo Stray Dogs ends with Atsushi discovering that the tiger that's been "chasing" him is actually himself, transformed under the moonlight.
* Bungo Stray Dogs has an organisation that goes by the name 'Port Mafia'. Three guesses as to what it is.
* Bungo Stray Dogs has John Steinbeck with his ability, The Grapes of Wrath, which allows him to grow grapevines out of his body and graft them onto other plants in the area so he can control them too.
* Bungo Stray Dogs: In the Cannibalism Arc, Chuuya is forced to kill Fukuzawa within two days or his own boss along with Fukuzawa will die, causing him to declare war on the ADA. While the executive makes it clear it's not personal and he hates the situation they're stuck in, Ranpo taunts him about Dazai to trap him in one of Poe's more brutal books containing one thousand characters, five hundred of whom are bloodthirsty murderers that must be identified to escape. On top of that, without access to his powers in the book world and not being especially good at puzzles, Chuuya is fully expected to die. Luckily, he eventually gets out, but one has to admit the trap was over the top.
* Bungo Stray Dogs is lying to him. He ends up flustered and then quickly excuses himself by claiming that he has to go feed a chameleon.
* Bungo Stray Dogs is this trope. His power is instrumental for freeing himself and Atsushi from the clutches of a very lethal doll stored in an alternate dimension.
* Bungo Stray Dogs it seems to give a sultry look, while a minor character who sported this named Ace was hinted to be sneaky and untrustworthy.
* Bungo Stray Dogs powers to rain these hundreds of bullets down on enemies at one point, similarly to the Mami example mentioned above.
* Bungo Stray Dogs prevents other Ability users from using their Ability as long as he's touching them.
* Bungo Stray Dogs's mafia that rules over the port district is called...the Port Mafia.
* Bungo Stray Dogs's popularity increased tourism to Yokohama, where the series takes place.

* Bungo Stray Dogs: Tecchou Suehiro has a tendency to combine same-colored food, like white rice and sugar. He also eats eggs with the shell still on.
* Bungo Stray Dogs - The Character design is inspired by this trope but it is set in the modern times.
* Bungo Stray Dogs. The latter was under tutelage of the former, and is notably the only one to address her as 'ane-san', a Japanese honorific specific to an older, mature sister figure (in contrast to 'onee-chan').
* Bungo Stray Dogs: The main protagonist is referred to as a weretiger and can transform into a half-tiger, half-human creature.
* Bungo Stray Dogs wanting to confirm his gender, and become excited when Q stops in front of single-sex bathrooms for a while. Q ultimately decides to go for the unisex one.
* Bungo Stray Dogs wears a long tan trench coat and we already know that he's badass. Then there's Akutagawa Ryunosuke with his long black coat and his Rashomon ability.
* Bungo to Alchemist, as this game's dress code rule is laxer -– there are cases of authors' not dressing in their faction's uniform (Tanizaki Jun'ichirō), wearing two uniforms at the same time (Kitahara Hakushū) and some factions' not having uniforms at all (Leisure, Neo-Aesthetic and any foreign author, whose "factions" are not literary schools at all, but their countries).
* Bungo to Alchemist fashion, so he ends up inciting this reaction often in his associate and the resident womanizer Katai Tayama.
* Bungo to Alchemist: Ozaki Kōyō is a whip fighter who often refers to fighting enemies as "disciplining" them.
* Bungo to Alchemist's whip class; they can hit all enemy units in one single blow, but deal low damage and rarely crit.
* Bungo to Alchemist: The rarity of writers is referred to as the color of each writer's background when they are summoned. In descending order: Rainbow → Gold → Silver → Beige. Enemies are also color-coded based on their difficulty.
* Bungo to Alchemist uses a slightly archaic manner of speech to reflect the fact he's from the Edo-born generation, one of the earliest born authors from the late-modern period, and the antiquity of his prose.
* Bungo to Alchemist who can enter the world of books to fight evil forces trying to corrupt it.
* Bungou Stray Dogs: Akutagawa holds this belief firmly, claiming the weak ones should die and give way to the stronger.
* Bungou Stray Dogs gives us strategic geniuses Dazai Osamu, Mori Ougai, and Fyodor Dostoyevsky, and detective extraordinaire Edogawa Ranpo. Louisa May Alcott, another strategist, may count, but her hair is very light brown. Outside the manga, there's also Taguchi Rokuzou (a hacker) and Sasaki Nobuko (a university lecturer and criminal genius).
* Bungou Stray Dogs has Q, described by Dazai as "a demented ability user" with no regard for friend or foe who amuses himself by making people hallucinate about their worst insecurities and watching them attack their friends. He's also a cute thirteen-year-old who looks like he's nine, almost constantly has a sweet smile on his face, and carries a doll half his size wherever he goes.
* Bungou Stray Dogs has the Port Mafia which can be count as one. While never hesitant to crime they have their own strict codes for it, and in-universally is said to be a legal organization.
* Bungou Stray Dogs He also spends two years hiding his past as a mafioso from his work partner.
* Bungou Stray Dogs. Her ability 'Thou Shalt Not Die' allows her to heal wounds, but only if they're half-killed before then or their wounds are fatally-serious. If her patient is only non-lethally injured, she'll have to hurt them some more first.
* Bungou Stray Dogs: Kyouka and Kouyou have abilities that work like this, summoning a "demon" in the form of a kimono-clad, sword-wielding woman to do their bidding.

* Bungou Stray Dogs. Most members in their 20s now are shown to have been part of the Mafia as teenagers, with some possibly being recruited even younger. The most extreme would be Q, barely a teenager during the series proper; the cover of chapter 31 shows him already being a member at age 4 or 5.
* Bungou Stray Dogs: Osamu Dazai and Nakahara Chuuya, pictured above. These two used to be partners in crime and kicked lots of ass together before Dazai left the mafia. When they meet again, they mainly use their breath to utter an insult to the other party. Surprisingly, they still won the subsequent fight.
* Bungou Stray Dogs. Said power is just as bad as his books are in regards to reasoning, the only difference is that everyone can see through the hogwash in this work when they can't in real life.
* Bungou Stray Dogs share their birthdate with the author they're named after. This has become such a thing that it is a sure-fire way for fans to determine the birthday (and, as such, their zodiac sign) of characters who didn't get officially named one, but are still named after a writer. For example, Andre Gide is assumed to have his birthdate on November 22.
* Bungou Stray Dogs that the more evil (or hopeless) a character is, the darker their irises are.
* Bungou Stray Dogs whose closest thing to a moral compass is a friend's dying request.
* Bunheads: A ballet dancer-turned-showgirl clashes with her mother-in-law, a dance mistress who runs a ballet school in her home.
* Bunheads has a student at the ballet academy named Matisse, played by dancer/actress Matisse Love.
* Bunheads. She may have been a Las Vegas dancer, but it was always above board and she gets offended when she gets accused of doing worse.
* Bunheads, the girls are trying to sit together in a crowded movie theater. After various maneuverings the last obstacle is an old man who stubbornly refuses to be tricked or pushed into moving. Finally Melanie just asks him if he could move so their friend can sit with them and he does.
* Bunheads when Boo defends her to Melanie and Ginny for being the Mean Girl.
* Buni has him entering a ladies' room imagining a wonderland with unicorns, fountains, a couch... and finding a bunch of smoking women gambling on a cockfight.
* Bunk and McNulty try to break D'Angelo Barksdale (who recently became a father) by pretending that a picture of Bunk's kids is a picture of the children of a witness recently killed on the order of D'Angelo's uncle, the drug kingpin Avon Barksdale. (The witness didn't actually have any family.) After they go on talking about the kids now being orphans, and link it around to children getting killed as result of the drug trade, D'Angelo is visibly fighting back tears. While he won't talk directly, the detectives try to make him write a letter giving his condolences to the children, hoping that somewhere in the letter D'Angelo will inadvertently wind up
* Bunk, an IFC mock-gameshow with a panel of 3 comedians competing at strange tasks to win strange prizes.
* Bunk'd, Emma and Lou parody this in the beginning of "Griff Is in the House!".
* Bunk'd, Emma is doing a tightrope over a pit of mud when Hazel tosses a dodgeball at her, causing Emma to lose her balance and fall face-first into the mud with everyone laughing at her. Xander helps the mud-covered Emma out and wipes her with a washcloth and she smiles, leaving Hazel very pissed.
* Bunk'd episode "A Star Is Torn" when Finn and Matteo get locked in a bomb shelter. When they open the fuse box, they see a large bunch of wires and Matteo just gives up trying to figure out which wire to pull. At the end however, Finn just pulls out a bunch of wires and unlocks the hatch.
* Bunk'd episode "Inn Trouble", while in quarantine Ava and Destiny created one of these, however, while in the bathroom finding one more object to use, Gwen comes in to tell them they are free unintentionally triggering it. While Gwen was entertained watching it, Ava and Destiny were aghast at not being able to watch their work come to fruition
* Bunk'd episode "Serf's Uprising", Lou intentionally defies this trope. She gave each main character a role for Renaissance Week that was completely opposite who they were. The confident beauty queen Destiny was a chamber maid. Finn, the follower, was made king. Matteo, the scared was made a knight. Gwen, the girl who was reluctant with her reading and writing was made a bard. Noah, someone who was not good with girls was given a romantic role. Ava, the sardonic and sarcastic counselor was made court jester.

* Bunk'd: "Game of Totems" ends with Emma getting sprayed right in the mouth by a skunk offscreen with no resolution how she got rid of the smell out of her mouth.
* Bunk'd: In "Sore Lou-ser", Camp Kikiwaka is competing against rival Camp Champion in the Sportsmanship Game, which Kikiwaka always loses. When the two are tied for the final event, Matteo ends up forgoing the victory to save a bird's egg falling out of the tree; at first it seems Kikiwaka lost again, but when Barb tosses her egg down, it does not break, revealing she used a hard boiled one. Thus, Champion is disqualified and Kikiwaka wins for the first time.
* Bunk'd: In the climax of "Cramped Champions", Lou takes the blame for the flooding of Camp Champion so Barb doesn't get fired.
* Bunk'd, the ending seems to suggest it actually happened, meaning Old Moose Rump must have been very progressive for its day.
* Bunk'd (with the exception of the giant lobster bot amusing everyone). Emma then suggests they try a different theme for next year, and the next two scenes have them changing the food themes over the next two years, Pizza Fest and later Jalapino Fest, which both end up terrible as well.
* Bunker Hill Bunny", Yosemite Sam attempts to infiltrate the fort Bugs Bunny is holed up in by digging a tunnel underground. When he surfaces, he finds himself in a dark room, so he lights a match, only to discover that he is in a shack full of TNT. Cue explosion.
* Bunker Woman: A woman is kidnapped and held in a contained location.
* Bunker Woman: A woman is kidnapped and held somewhere contained, usually a bunker, usually by a man.
* Bunker Woman women imprisoned underground get raped, but a lot of them do.
* Bunnicula: Chester, when he thought that he is turning into vampire was initially devastated - until Bunnicula pointed out, that living forever he would be able to meet all great peoples of the future, witness scientific advancements, read all books ever existed.
* Bunnicula comments that Harold and Chester argue like an old married couple.
* Bunnicula. Downplayed with the title character, who also became more competent.
* Bunnicula episode "Catula" when Harold tells Chester that Bunnicula's bite won't turn him into a vampire because he chews on his foot in his sleep, which is then followed by a closeup of his swollen, pulsating, blister-covered foot.
* Bunnicula. Half rabbit, half-vampire, all terror! He sucks the juice out of carrots.
* Bunnicula has had his head knocked off or intentionally removed it to mess with Chester the cat on a few occasions, he can just stick it back on like it's nothing due to his supernatural abilities.
* Bunnicula: In "Sunday Bunnday", Bunnicula gets trapped outdoors and, being a vampire rabbit, must evade sunlight and get home safely. Once he finally does, Mina, his human owner who doesn't know that he is a vampire, announces that she is taking him on a trip to a sunny beach the next day.
* Bunnicula: In the books, Harold is the smart one out of the three pets, having to put up with the scatterbrained Chester and the hare-brained title lapin. But in the TV series, Harold is often portrayed as being impossibly stupid in comparison to the now-competent Chester and Bunn.
* Bunnicula is about a paranoid pet cat who believes his owner's new rabbit is really a vampire.
* Bunnicula is reduced to a pile of ashes after being exposed to direct sunlight. Fortunately, since Bunnicula's eyeballs remain intact, he's still alive, just inert. Exposure to moonlight restores him to normal.
* Bunnicula, one dog is happy to hear that his owner is in London, probably sipping tea with the Queen and everything. He is then informed that London is a town just over the border of the next state.

* Bunnicula rabbit which Chester the cat tries to convince the protagonist, Harold the dog, is a vampire.
* Bunnicula: The final episode introduces Bunnicula's evil brother, who is a vampire rabbit who preys on other supernatural creatures by draining their energy, which also lets him steal their powers. He ends up nearly killing Bunnicula by trying to drain him permanently.
* Bunnicula to Mina, he's barely aware of his surroundings. For example, he thinks Mina's thirteenth birthday is her third birthday, and when Bunnicula creates a bunch of Mina clones, the only thing he notices wrong is that the clones served him pancakes instead of waffles for breakfast, rather than the fact that there's only supposed to be one Mina.

* Bunnies & Burrows, is a roleplaying game in which the players have to take the roles of rabbits with all their limitations and strengths. In fact, since bunnies are not exactly the strongest animals out there, the game forces the player to confront enemies and obstacles with problem-solving solutions and wit. Humans appear as monsters in the game, completely alien to the players. It was very innovative in its time, since it was the first RPG that let the player play as non-humanoid creatures.
* Bunnies for Cuteness — You just can't keep your eyes off that little bunny.
* Bunnie tends to call Sonic "sugah-hog", Sally "Sally-girl", Antoine "sugah-'twan" and Tails "sugah-Tails".
* Bunni: Paige has survived nearly being murdered by Chris' mom, and despite having recurring nightmares about the ordeal, she seems to have made a comfortable life for herself raising her and Chris' son. Then Chris shows up at her door to take his son away from her.
* Bunni: Paige is the only survivor of the killer's rampage, and is shown in the middle of the end credits to now be a single mother raising Chris' son. Then Chris shows up to take him back.
* Bunni, we see Lisa talking with her husband about his calls to someone named "Bunni", which he's in denial about. After continuing to pry into it, he goes ballistic on her, and we see a montage of him beating her cut in with the intro credits.

* Bunny Boiler commit suicide at the end... before Test Audiences said no.
* bunny characters Schnuffel and Schnuffelienchen (Snuggle and Snuggelina) both appear to be young bunnies but both live on there own without any parents. Doesn't help that they both have cute high pitch voices (Except in the audio CDs released in Germany where Snuggle and Snuggelina are voiced by actual adults).
* bunny characters Schnuffel and Schnuffelienchen (Snuggle and Snuggelina in English) are commonly seen holding each others hands since they are both in love with each other. In the end of the music video starring Snuggleina "Ohne Dich". Said couple are seen holding hands while sitting and watching the night sky.
* Bunny Drop Averted in the anime and live action adaptations, which imply he ends up with Kouki's mother.
* Bunny Drop had a live-action movie released the same year as the anime adaptation. Like the anime, it only adapts the pre-timeskip portion.

* Bunny Drop ignore the timeskip and focus on the two as being family.
* Bunny Drop: Rin, the girl in Daikichi's care, abruptly starts dancing and singing Twinkle Twinkle Little Star.
* Bunny Drop six year old Rin starts wetting her futon due to both the stress of her father dying and having to living to live with her adult nephew. She's embarrassed and insists it's sweat, however Daikichi takes it well.
* Bunny Drop. When Daikichi's cousin sees Rin making breakfast she believes that he is forcing a kid to cook for him, though it turns out Rin just likes to help cook.
* Bunny Drop: When talking with his parents, Daikichi has frequent Flashbacks to his childhood (often accompanied by the informative caption "Showa-era child rearing!")
* Bunny-Ears Lawyer" about liking his book collection better than his computer, even though he admits it can display any of their contents instantly.
* Bunny-Ears Lawyer (a lot of these guys are lawyers, but most of them aren't.)
* Bunny-Ears Lawyer: An eccentric person is still very good at their job.
* Bunny-Ears Lawyer: An employee is very eccentric, but still quite competent at their profession.
* Bunny-Ears Lawyer: A person who is good at their job in spite of their bizarre habits and attributes.
* Bunny-Ears Lawyer: A quirky employee who nevertheless has their heart in the right place.
* Bunny-Ears Lawyer: Being bizarre doesn't prevent this person from being good at their job.
* Bunny-Ears Lawyer: Eccentric, but has legitimate talents that make them worth the trouble.
* Bunny-Ears Lawyer is a rock star on the side and air guitars in court, the detective he teams up with is generally apathetic and likes to throw snacks at his head, and his mentor is spacey and rather condescending. That's not even getting into his attempts to be serious around the usual insanity of the witnesses. And just imagine him screaming "I'M FINE!" as a pep talk in a courthouse waiting room.
* Bunny-Ears Lawyer. It's been made clear by Uryuu's father, Ryuuken, that Uryuu's power still underdeveloped, meaning that what we saw was only a fraction of his real ability.
* Bunny-Ears Lawyer — he's repeatedly called incompetent and is to law what Doug is to medicine. Yet he somehow still has his job.
* Bunny Ears Picture Prank: During a group photo, one person raises their index and middle finger behind another person's head to give them bunny ears.
* Bunny Ears Picture Prank: When two or more people are having a group photo taken, one person places their index and middle fingers behind another person's head to make it look like they have bunny ears.
* Bunny Ears Picture Prank: When two or more people have their picture taken, one person uses their index and middle fingers to make "bunny ears" behind another person's head.
* Bunny from "Twisted Sister". She is told to beat up villains but instead beats up police officers. She also has trouble saying big words.
* Bunny Hood wearers in general can suffer from this, especially if they're one of the faster members of the cast like Fox, Captain Falcon, or the aforementioned Sonic.
* Bunny Hugged-clone Ravishing Ronald into brutal submission; when Ronald's cries for help go unanswered, Ronald's "mascot" (Bugs) decides to step in. (Bugs, who initially steps in as "The Masked Terror," is knocked around early in the bout, but eventually gets the upper hand.)
* Bunny Hugged", The Crusher is blown up by a stick of dynamite. As he collapses he dazedly says, "Just passing by..."
* Bunny Hugged was the mascot of wrestler Ravishing Ronald, but when he gets pummeled, Bugs steps into the ring as the Masked Terror.
* Bunny is eavesdropping on a phone conversation with Jessica and Lee, in which she discovers she's in love with Harland and that Harland has a "secret chicken recipe".

* Bunnykill), and the dark-grey (mercenary) and brown (techie) rabbits in the third installment (the techs provided extra challenge, the mercs not so much).
* Bunnykill does this with Snowball, killing a bunny mook that was sneaking up behind him, before the two join forces.
* Bunnykill ends with Snowball marking Ruby's grave with the double-bladed staff that she used as her primary weapon.
* Bunnykill has a katana as his trademark weapon. But he uses many more weapons in the series.
* Bunnykill is that even if he hadn't canceled the series, the "Episode 5 saga" was never going to get a resolution.
* Bunny Kill one left alive at the end of each installment. No exceptions.
* Bunny Lake is Missing, the heroine's young daughter disappears, along with nearly all evidence of her existence. Her brother encourages her to try to prove to the police that her daughter is real. It's actually a misdirection gambit to prevent her from figuring out that he was the one behind the abduction.
* Bunnymond claims that Jack is his father (the fact that they both know someone named Jack F. is where the confusion comes from).
* Bunnymund is also one, acting like a complete jerk, although he deeply cares for his friends and children.
* Bunny Must Die can use this power. And much like Dio and Sakuya, she loves throwing knives.
* Bunny Must Die feature them in its Game Record, split between Bunny and Chelsea, and features a slew of challenges for the player to perform. Some include clearing the game under an hour, completing the game with 100% completion, defeating bosses with a certain weapon, or not taking damage in certain boss battles. Unfortunately, the achievement requirements are hidden, so players are clueless on what the requirements are unless they stumble on across them by accident or looking it up online.
* Bunny Must Die quotes, it should surprise nobody that Baron Vladmu says this as well.
* Bunny My Honey by Anita Jeram, Bunny gets badly lost in the woods. He starts to cry and shouts out "Mommy, Mommy, I want my mommy! Mommy, Mommy, I want my mommy!" Fortunately, Mommy Rabbit is is nearby and immediately hears him.
* Bunny's Road. Later Kurahashi even gets assaulted by her own trainee, and this is all played for laughs.
* Bunny. The only difference is that Esmeynelda has dark pink eyes, whereas Bunny's are red.
* Bunny Vs Monkey: Quite a number appear, like a guinea pig snail, a cat spider, a pig elephant, a panda bat, and more on just one page.
* Bunny Wailer never uses his real name of Neville, always calling himself Bunny Livingston or Bunny Wailer.
* Bun of Steel. It disappeared when the writers decided to drop her "This is a Starfleet vessel" persona and let the poor girl loosen up a bit (or when they started stuffing up her character). Likewise Kes ditched her bobbed wig for long flowing locks, but that was because Jennifer Lien was getting a reaction to the adhesive used to stick her pointy ears on. Seven of Nine also wore her hair down in later episodes when she was doing social experiments in the holodeck. She'd immediately pin it back up when reporting for duty.
* Bunraku into a badass moustache in preparation for a fight against The Drifter.
* Bunraku puppets dance in and out of the valley. What's frightening is that they don't move like any other sort of puppet, they move exactly like little tiny people.
* Bunsen is a Beast: Amanda Killman has red outlines around her eyes to reflect her devilish nature.
* Bunsen is a Beast example; while some characters' eyes are colored, characters like Mikey and Amanda have standard black eyes.
* Bunshin is basically the maximum exertion of their super-speed (when it's used against people as fast or faster than themselves), and that minimal air disturbance apparently means they can't perceive their own movement until they slow down again.

* "Buntantra Divas" is about the gang preparing for the "Bun Pratigotiya", an annual race where the participants ride buns down a trail of butter.
* Bunthorne's poem high-flown, grandiloquent poem "Oh, Hollow! Hollow! Hollow!" refers to "amaranthine asphodel", "calomel" and "the amorous colocynth" that "yearns for the aloe". These are all laxatives.
* Bunting in "The Examination for Lieutenant": When the ship is put on half rations, he becomes desperate and afraid that they will starve. He starts mutinous talk and steals food, which earns him severe flogging. He decides to desert, but he's caught, but Midshipman Hornblower gives him a chance to prove himself worthy. However, Bunting knows it still means a court-martial and very probably a death sentence, so he tries to escape whenever he can. He's the only one who tries to mutiny and desert, so he's not that dangerous to the crew. Hornblower is forced to shoot him later, and considers it a great failure that he couldn't save the man.
* Bunty, but sometimes the main character had this sort of personality.
* Bunty. However, there was a bit of variety in that sometimes it was a wicked aunt, a wicked foster family, etc.
* Bunty: In "Botany Belle", the heroine is tricked into switching places with a pickpocket and is transported to Australia for a crime she didn't commit.
* Bunty ran a story in which a vain, arrogant teenage model became disfigured and had her shy twin sister pose as her for modelling jobs until the first twin's face healed.
* bunyips as burrowing dragon-like ambush predators. After Temeraire and Iskierka wreck a few burrows for the bunyips picking off some of their human crew, the bunyips retaliate with frightening intelligence: first by diverting water underground to trap a sleeping Temeraire in quicksand and attacking his crew while they’re occupied with pulling him out, and then by draining billabongs across their projected flight path, in the process demonstrating that bunyip colonies can plan and communicate with each other over long distances. To avoid dying of thirst, Temeraire is forced to placate the bunyips by hunting food for them.
* Buran catastrophe, but included the ejection seats for the whole crew right from the start of the design process. In fact Soviet designers have long (and quite vocally) criticized the Space Shuttle cockpit layout, calling it a throwback to the WWII era bomber cockpits, and made a point of putting all crew seats on the same deck. Had the Shuttle used the same layout, at least several crewmembers could've possibly been saved.
* Buran, the Soviet equivalent, which used a single powerful rocket to get into orbit, rather than relying on its own power, and had the same aerodynamic issues as the Space Shuttle.
* Buraq: A winged horse from Persian/Arabic mythology, sometimes portrayed with a human head.
* Buratino). The actors portraying them were husband and wife in real life as well.
* Burbank Films Australia have adapted various classics, legends and fairy tales.
* Burbank Films Australia, Mr. Van Oxley (the Beauty's Father character of this version) becomes separated from his horse in a storm and steps over a fallen tree, but then wanders away off the road and stumbles onto the Beast's castle when a slightly larger tree falls in front of him. Phelous joked about this in his review of the film: "Well, I certainly can't walk over that one! Might as well walk aimlessly off the path!" Mind you, the first fallen tree apparently only went up to his shins and the second one up to his knees.
* Burble is fully aware of its large bits of dialogue; despite its high quality compared to most other strips at the time, it was mocked (and later self-mocked) for "too many words".
* Burden of Proof has him working with the prosecution when a new officer is court-martialed for events that lead to the death of a crewer.
* Burden of the Emperor series - Light, Darkness, Life, Knowledge and Wrath. They are alive and sentient, as Darkness once actually responds to an adept sacrificing souls of slaughtered enemies with a dismissive sneer.
* Burden of Truth: Billy finds out his brother Shane keeps one of these in Season

2, with walls that are plastered with diagrams and papers detailing a vast alleged conspiracy by the Mafia.
* Burden of Truth for committing statutory rape with two underage girls (at least) he's murdered (for something else).
* Burden of Truth has big-city attorney Joanna Hanley getting involved in a case of illness in her home town. She first clashes with former classmate Billy Crawford but joins with him when she realizes how serious things are. During an early fight, Billy snaps he doesn't have the resources to do more investigating.
* Burden of Truth has Joanna, a corporate attorney, coming to her small hometown to give out pay-offs for people suing the company she represents about a vaccine causing illness. She clashes with Billy Crawford, who admits his "Crawford & Associates" name is just him alone. But as Joanna realizes something in the town besides the vaccines is causing the illness, she ends up switching sides and joins with Billy to take on the true source of the illness.
* Burden of Truth: Joanna becomes this after quitting her job with a huge corporate law firm that represented corporations being sued, taking up the claims of the weak and vulnerable instead.
* Burden of Truth: Joanna, Diane, Kodie, Owen and Luna are played by actresses with the same backgrounds as them.
* Burden of Truth: Joanna uses this to win at trial in Season 2, getting a witness she herself called to confess to being the real murderer.
* Burden of Truth: Kodie along with many other parents are given drug tests that falsely show them using alcohol or drugs to get their kids taken away. A neighbor was also paid to make up parental neglect that he would anonymously report against Kodie by her younger daughter's grandmother, so she could gain custody.
* Burden of Truth: Taylor becomes determined to take a john down after she sees him beating up sex workers, and follows him despite Luna's warning against the idea. In the end, she manages to expose a blackmail scheme. She never breaks the law though, and later ends up joining the police to work legitimately against criminals.
* Burden of Truth: Taylor following a john who beat up sex workers reveals he's being blackmailed by Sam Mercer, along with many other people (many of them far more prominent than him).
* Burden of Truth: The first season has the main protagonist, Joanna Hanley, returning to her hometown of Millwood to defend a pharmaceutical company being accused of causing numerous girls in the town to fall sick. It is ultimately revealed the source of the girls' sickness is the town's steel mill. Joanna also learns that she has a half-sister via an affair her father had with a woman who was underage at the time.
* Bureau 13, AKA Stalking the Night Fantastic. The title Bureau fights against supernatural monsters.
* Bureau 13: Stalking the Night Fantastic, civilian consultants, freed slaves, paroled criminals, and even Confederate prisoners of war. The job of Bureau 13 is as it has always been: Investigate the strange or unusual, analyze the evidence to see if there is a supernatural or paranormal cause, and assess whether the cause is hostile or dangerous.
* Bureau 13: Stalking the Night Fantastic has a top secret U.S. government agency hunting paranormal monsters.
* Bureau 13. They're a top secret U.S. government agency dedicated to defending the world against supernatural threats.
* bureaucracy have complicated tax returns because they need to document all their business expenses.
* Bureaucratically Arranged Marriage: A government or religiously mandated marriage.
* Burgerbeard's food cart is called the Barnacle Burger, which was an early name for the Krabby Patty.
* Burger Fool job but manages to get it back by blackmailing them — she would reveal that they weren't using real meat at all, but rather a very convincing tofu substitute. They offered her money, but she insisted on her shitty job.
* Burger Fool: Someone has to work for minimum wage at a fast food restaurant.

* Burger King also did this in an advertisement for a breakfast sandwich. Lampshaded when they said something to the effect of "Maybe it's not original."
* Burger King cologne, the "body spray of seduction, with a hint of flame-grilled meat."
* Burger King did a campaign called "Simpsonize Me" in conjunction with the release of
* Burger King featured a BK wizard (replete with pointy hat and magic wand) who granted the kids' requests:
* Burger King had a tie-in "pull off the Twilight sticker on the package to win" campaign, and aired commercials where overzealous fans harassed customers to pick "Team Edward" or "Team Jacob" by crowding around them and trying to explain why the characters were so great (to blank stares and incredulous reactions from the diners). It therefore ensured that anyone outside of the target demographic would stay far,
* Burger King has an ad where they claim that their low prices are a result of their disturbing mascot "The King" going insane.
* Burger King is running a series of commercials for their new chicken sandwich where a cow (or bull) comes to the protagonist, looking at them accusingly for switching over to the new sandwich, and they try to explain to the bovine that they didn't promise an exclusive relationship or some other reason. The announcer: "It's so good it will make you cheat on beef."
* Burger King of an earlier version of the King, who was played straight as a cheerful kids' mascot a la Ronald McDonald). He talked, too.
* Burger King produced a TV ad of a time-lapse shot of a Whopper growing moldy and disgusting, and then telling the viewer that they're eliminating artificial preservatives from their products and need to make sure everything is fresh.
* Burger King ran a series of ads where they had people in different countries try both a Whopper and a Big Mac with the people who had picked the Whopper appearing in the ad. The problem? Many of the countries were poverty stricken and did not mine and eat meat.
* Burger King ran this into the ground so hard with the choice to focus all their advertising and new product choices on the 20-something male demographic that it is suspected to be the cause of a sales drop. They were sued by their own franchisees over the decision to make the restaurant chain "Mars" and alienating kids and less-meat obsessed and more calorie conscious folks.
* Burger King seems to be advertising the classic Whopper as the "Whopper Sandwich".
* Burger King's most famous slogan was "Have it your way", but shortened it recently to just "Your Way", but since the logo is next to the slogan in its ads, it makes it looks like it said "Burger King Your Way".
* Burgerpants, an MTT Brand Burger Emporium employee who got his nickname from an embarrassing mishap involving him trying to smuggle burgers out of the building in his pants.
* Burger Shop the player character decides to take a cruise, only for the ship to hit what burger-making robot BurgerTron refers to as a "non-frontal synoptic scale low-pressure system over tropical waters with organized convection and definite cyclonic surface wind circulation." In other words, a rather big typhoon.
* Burgess also once explicitly stated that the "clockwork orange" was a metaphor for human behavior, in that while an orange may appear to be very simple on the outside, they are much more complex and intricate beneath the rind.
* Burgess Meredith's depiction on the 1960s TV show was first out of the gate. In his 1994 autobiography, Adam West (who played Batman) noted that, even when the cameras weren't on, Meredith stayed in character and "cackled and muttered to himself... seemed to be searching for a behind to pinch." He also once told West: "What could be better than to have women smile at you and little kids shy away from you? It's the best of both worlds." (Yes, he really did say "both worlds.")
* Burglar Bill steals a useful-looking wooden box with little holes in the lid, and gets it home before he finds a baby asleep in it. He proves to be a surprisingly good accidental father, which leads to him and the baby's mother, Burglar Betty, getting married and going straight.

* Burglar by Lawrence Block, Whoopi Goldberg's character is hiding in a closet during a burglary when she witnesses an extended bed-rattling session, followed by a killing. She isn't able to see the face of the murderer, however.
* Burglar passed on the role and it became a vehicle for Whoopi Goldberg.
* Burglar playing his sidekick. When Willis dropped out, she played the lead role.
* Burglars Can't Be Choosers Ellie claims to be David Merrick's secretary over the phone to get some important information from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.
* Burglars Can't Be Choosers he comments that the keystone of a decent partner is "reasonableness" (i.e., willingness to take bribes) and complains about a former partner's lack of it.
* Burglar's character has to do this when the man whose apartment she's robbing comes home unexpectedly with a woman. She's still hiding there hours later when he's murdered, setting off the plot.
* Burgundy also suffers this fate in "Clash of the Connoisseurs", when Crustle accidentally hits her with its Rock Wrecker. Ash overhears this (though he doesn't see who it was) and comments that it sounds familiar.
* Burial Agents are exceptional Executors that have specialized abilities like Ciel's
* Burial at Sea: A dead body is disposed by being tossed into the ocean.
* Burial at Sea. Booker inquires what will happen if the run into themselves, but Elizabeth claims it's impossible, because they didn't last time.
* Burial at Sea: Disposing of a corpse by dumping it into the sea from a ship.
* Burial at Sea features a Bouncer Big Daddy that is able to launch its drill and pull enemies towards him. According to a chalkboard in Suchong's lab, this feature was removed because the hydraulic fluids/gases needed for this caused the Bouncer to become unstable.
* Burial at Sea reimagines Elizabeth's experiences as a drug trip experienced during a drunken visit to Rapture.
* Burial in Space: A dead body is disposed by launching it into the vacuum of outer space.
* Buri and Raoul, Buri is described as being reasonably short. Raoul is well over six feet, and a massively built warrior, whereas Buri is a waif-like rider. It gets pointed out directly once that when the two stand next to each other, Buri doesn't even reach Raoul's shoulder.
* Buried Alive: A live person, usually after being mistaken for a dead body due to unconsciousness, gets dumped into a grave and sealed inside. Should they fail to escape in time, they'll run out of oxygen and become corpses for real.
* Buried Alive: A living person, usually unconscious and mistaken for dead, gets dumped into a grave. Should they fail to escape in time, they'll die of asphyxiation and become real corpses.
* Buried Alive and set him off again, Huey, Dewey, and Louie agree with their uncle that he needs a break.
* Buried Alive and soon joined by her friend Cassandra after failing a trial placed before they can travel independently.
* Buried Alive cartoon "Somber Vacation". In typical fashion, Strong Sad has a really depressing version of an average beach trip, which involves burying himself in the sand—entirely, including his head, and sculpting a gravestone on top.
* Buried Alive for eight years and is effectively a younger version of his father, Titus.
* Buried Alive Match — In this match, the only way to win is to take the opponent and bury him inside a grave.
* Buried Alive movies, each one beginning with one spouse near-death by poisoning. A subsequent rushed funeral apparently skips autopsy and embalming (the killers veto the autopsies to make sure that no one discovers how they died). Later, the intended victim wakes up, digs their way out, and plots elaborate revenge.
* Buried Alive: Oxygen will be running out soon, so you need to act fast.
* Buried Alive, the eponymous heroine is walled up in a crypt to die as punishment.

The same punishment supposedly awaited the Roman Vestal Virgins that had broken their vows of chastity.
* Buried Alive, which lets you move three creature cards of your choice from your deck to the discard pile.
* Buried as a U.S. truck driver working in Iraq, who gets buried alive. The whole movie takes place inside the coffin, with Reynolds' character being the only person we actually see in the flesh (all other performances are either voiceovers or on his cell phone.) Still, the film never repeats a shot.
* Buried has a prison bully revealed to be victim of rape by his father.
* buried him with full honors, who died a month after he walked up Utah Beach.
* Buried in a Pile of Corpses: Hiding in a pile of corpses. Sometimes the only thing that will bring closer to your goal.
* Buried in a Pile of Corpses: Someone hides beneath a bunch of dead bodies.
* Buried in a Pile of Corpses: Someone hides under a bunch of dead bodies, typically to hide from the killer.
* Buried in Iraq. He only loses one or two calls to a bad signal, and the battery manages to last the entirety of the film. Of course, since the action never leaves the coffin, he has to be able to call people, otherwise we'd be treated to an hour and half of him gibbering to himself in a pine box.
* Buried in Time also does this when exploring a damaged space station, as your oxygen supply slowly depletes with every few moves you make, and only a few areas have air inside them.
* Buried in Time, Arthur gives Agent 5 the code to blow open an airlock in Amarax Station, so that the decompression can propel Agent 5 onto Arthur's detached AI Nexus. Sealing foam plugs up the airlock after Agent 5 gets there.
* Buried in Time: The Journeyman Project Part 2 features a player death sequence in which the hero accidentally teleports himself onto the table of some aliens preparing to sample earth cuisine, and is mistaken for Kung Pao Chicken.
* Buried Loot in one of his first film roles), sets off an explosion to deliberately mangle his own face, in hopes of hiding out from the law.
* Buried On Sunday: The plot has its serious moments but is has a fousi on satirizing Canadian politics.
* Buried Stars for the sake of drawing in viewers, and so on. Put them all together, and you get a very believable situation that easily conjures dread.
* Buried. The film follows his various attempts to secure a rescue via a cell phone with a dwindling battery.
* buried up to his neck, his cheek was cut with a blade and was decapitated by predatory animals drawn to the scent of his blood.
* buried who aids him. In the end, the companion tells him that he was the dead man. This is known as the "grateful dead man".
* buries Suguru's head in sand, and forgets about him when it's time to leave. He's fine, even arriving on the train before them.
* Buriki One is a boxer champion with some bad attitude, but with great fighting skills. Rob has a lot of attitude and doesn't like people who disagree with him, he's also a womanizer and has a lot of tattoos on his body. Rob seems to be modelled after some American boxers as Mike Tyson and George Foreman, as well with some traits of former NBA player Dennis Rodman.
* Buriki One, the representants of Judo and Greco-Roman Wrestling, Jacques Ducalis and Ivan Sokolov, are gold medalist in their disciplines.
* Burka Avenger, an example involving social issues in Pakistan, namely women's education
* Burke and Crystal Beth was killed in an apparent homophobic attack on a gay rights rally (that turned out to be something else entirely). Belinda Roberts and Candy were killed by Burke himself (or Max acting on his behalf, in the latter case). They had it coming.
* Burke discovers gold Krugerrands in the house of a pedophile, at the time illegal for importation into the US, but ones minted before the ban are legal tender. It's implied these coins were actually minted after the ban, but stamped otherwise and smuggled into the US.

* Burke intentionally subverts this, by going out of his way to obtain matchbooks from bars he's never visited, and deliberately dropping them.
* Burke novels. Burke removes the back seat of his Plymouth and puts in a pile of dirty blankets, saying he uses the back to carry stuff. Actually the Prof (who's very short) is hiding under the blankets. When the man in the passenger seat pulls a gun, he suddenly finds cold steel pressing against the back of his neck.
* Burke - Now and Then Burke's side of the story, but historical accounts do seem to indicate that he was indeed the lesser of the two evils.
* Burke often mentions his friend Wesley, who only appears in the fourth book, in which he apparently dies. He leaves no body behind and many who knew of him refuse to believe that he is dead, which Burke takes advantage of many times.
* Burke's Law, entitled "Who Killed the Starlet?" A woman is relaxing in a candlelit bath while listening to some music. A killer sneaks in and drops her boombox into the bathtub, killing her. It turns out that the killer and girl are merely actors on a movie set, and they're filming a murder scene. Then it turns out the boombox was plugged into a live outlet by an unknown party, and the actress in the bathtub is really dead.
* Burke's Law episode "Who Killed the King of the Country Club?" had the killer trying to avoid this. A new member of the club turns out to have been killed by an elderly woman whose daughter had started dating the man. When the horrified daughter asks why her mother did this as "I loved that man!" her mother reveals "that man was your father!" 25 years earlier, she'd had a one-night stand with a plumber just a month before her wedding. She was thus able to pass off the child as her husband's. As fate had it, the plumber ended up becoming a millionaire to join the club and the woman was terrified he would end up in bed with their daughter. Burke openly asks why she didn't just tell either the truth but the woman didn't want to ruin her own social status with the affair becoming public. She's led off as the daughter can't believe how close she came to bedding her own father.
* 'Burke's Law episode "Who Killed the Movie Mogul?" loathsome movie producer Leo is murdered on set. At his funeral, everyone is shocked when his kindly brother Max shows up. He passes a lie detector test on not killing Leo but Burke notes how the near-sighted Max's glasses are clear, not actually corrective. It turns out Leo was angry Max wanted to push him out of the studio so tricked him into swapping places "like when we were kids." He then killed Max and decided to pose as him to continue running the studio.
* Burke's Law episode "Who Killed the Thirteenth Clown" has one of the clowns wind up dead.
* Burke's Law like when they were kids, then killed him and took on his identity so he could keep running the studio.
* Burke's Law secret agent (he just bulletproofed it and equipped it with some special spy gadgets).
* Burlap: Cottontail gives one to Chuckles when the latter introduces him to their latest victims.
* Burlap: Two members of Cottontail's gang, Bones and Cottontail himself, wear masks.
* burlesque superstar Lily Verlaine does not answer to "Rachel Gourd", only "Lily" or "Ms. Verlaine". Likewise, fellow burlesque Seattleite Babette La Fave should not be addressed as "Paula".

* Burly Brawl starts out as a typical one-against-many fight scene and gradually turns into a Looney Tunes short on crack.

* Burly brings a dog home with him in book 2 as a pet after his night out. Luckily, he was already a stray, so Rilla's able to keep Taco even after Burly stops being alive.
* Burly Chassis to wash down all the soundproofing in the recording booth.
* "Burly Detective" Syndrome: Overuse of epithets in place of the characters' names.
* "Burly Detective" Syndrome: The narration avoids using characters' names in favor of flowery epithets.
* Burly Men At Sea is about three stout brothers exploring the seas around the island where they live in a boat.
* Burly Men At Sea, the three Beard brothers are distinguished only by the different colours of their huge beards and co-ordinated boots.
* Burma-Shave once offered a mock promotion that promised a trip to Mars for anyone who collected 900 empty jars. When Arlyss French, a grocery store owner, managed to actually collect them, Burma-Shave responded, "If a trip to Mars you earn/Remember, friend, there's no return." After French collected another 900 jars for the return trip, they decided to go ahead and send him to
* Burma-Shave style—"Hurry, hurry/This is it/Watch the Joker/Throw a fit"
* Burma-Shave", they weren't actually expecting someone to take them up on it. When store owner Arliss French shipped in 900 jars he'd convinced customers to donate, the company gave him and his wife a vacation in Moers (pronounced "Mars"), Germany.
* Burma-Shave, which used small signs that spelled out short poems to advertize their products. The company went out of business in 1963. The signs, however, were remembered long, long after that.
* Burma with local drug warlords and a rogue CIA-backed Laoting general for the control of 16 tons of Opium. At that point they were barely under control of the KMT and were no different from common drug dealers.
* Burmese Civil War has been raging between the military and various rebel factions since 1948, making it the longest shooting war still occurring.
* Burmese troops (the State of Burma, being a puppet of Imperial Japan, was considered an ally, so they were allowed to produce it under licence).
* BURN•E, is sort of an inversion; each of the major events in the film turn out to have impacted his comparatively trivial problems.
* Burn After Reading. After trying and failing to ransom it back to the author, they try to sell it to the Russian government. The Russians can't be fooled though and reject what turns out to be useless drivel.
* Burn After Reading blackmails an ex CIA agent for money, but sees himself as a "Good Samaritan" rather than what he really is.
* Burn After Reading does Linda have some trouble with the computer voice on the phone not understanding her instructions.
* Burn After Reading even lampshading it in a "what the hell just happened?" fashion).
* Burn After Reading; he even runs out of the room in his panic, only to stop and realize that his "attacker" isn't chasing him.
* Burn After Reading, is in love with Linda, who looks everywhere for a man and wants several rounds of cosmetic surgery to improve her odds. In the end, he does something heroically stupid to try and help her.
* Burn After Reading is shown to have once been a European Orthodox priest, before getting the job as the manager of... "Hardbodies". How does this happen and why? We may never know.
* Burn After Reading it takes viewers and characters a moment to realise what's actually happened.
* Burn After Reading played for (dark) laughs, populated with people too self-absorbed to actually figure out what the hell is going on, and pointed out as such by the CIA at the epilogue... in a "what the hell just happened?" kind of way.
* Burn After Reading that the plot is a ridiculous, disconnected mess somehow manages to absolve this.
* Burn After Reading, the female maincharacter Linda is desperately searching for a soulmate through the use of blind dates. With varying results.

* Burn After Reading, this line is uttered by Osborne when talking to his supervisor who just accused him of having a drinking problem.
* Burn Baby Burn: This distressing item needs to be burned! It's soothing to see it go in such a symbolic way.
* Burn:Cycle. They become Sol Cutter's main source of intel for most of the game, sometimes giving out software to help Cutter.
* burned after seeing it. However, there is an urban legend that a handful of VHS copies include the scene.
* burned alive by a telescopic lens magnifying the light of the sun, thus causing a constellation to form in trails of oil on the ground.
* burned at the stake at the climax, she's trapped in the fire for almost a full minute before Quasimodo rescues her, but the flames never touch her. Though she does lose consciousness from smoke inhalation, she's perfectly fine after she revives. Quasimodo isn't injured either as he pulls her from the pyre, then grabs the burning stake from its foundation to fight off the soldiers.
* burned at the stake, Esmeralda's head explodes because she is holding a mouthful of gunpowder.
* burned by a two-sided attack via a sword to both the back and the noggin, and even though his dialog is left untranslated it's implied he gets out one final curse against the elves.
* burned down the gym at her old high school, but later she's the focus of a smear campaign directed by her principal. However, in the prom episode, the entire student body reveals that they knew that she had been protecting them all along and gave her a "Class Protector Award" in gratitude.

* BURN-E DVD, shows how events on the movie affect one character, a repair robot left outside the ship in a throwaway gag.
* BURN-E it is revealed that the ship has actually tilted several degrees to one side. Not that it makes much sense, but it was pretty cool.
* Burner Phones: Criminals using cheap phones, which they then destroy or throw away.
* "Burners", in NFL parlance, are Wide Receivers that rely on straight-line speed to make plays, and fit this trope to a T. Players like Cliff Branch, Joey Galloway, or DeSean Jackson would routinely leave defensive backs grasping for air as they waltzed into the end zone. However, this speed tended to come with a lack of size and toughness that left them limited to deep routes, and thus specialized roles in the offense.
* Burnham makes reference to the U.S.S. Enterprise as a highly sought-after posting for a Starfleet officer.
* Burnie: Abdominal Arsonist, the new heartburn mascot for Prilosec OTC.
* Burning (2018) This film lasts nearly two and a half hours, and not much happens in the first half. Some events become significant with hindsight, but don't seem important at the time.
* Burning a scarlet fever patient's personal belongings to stop the infection from spreading; we now know that scarlet fever is very unlikely to spread through personal effects, and even if we hadn't learnt better, less drastic disinfection methods have been developed since the publication of a book approaching its centenary, and it's been a doddle to treat since penicillin became widely used in 1942, so it's no longer dangerous enough to warrant destroying everything the patient touched during the illness.
* Burning at the stake was one possible method of execution from the Middle Ages to around 17th century in Europe. The most famous offense to earn such treatment was of course

* Burning Bag of Poop: Putting feces (dog's... hopefully) in a paper bag, set it alight, and watch some heroic, macho volunteer come over and stomp the fire out.
* Burning Bag of Poop where someone leaves a burning bag of fecal matter at someone's door and tricks the person into stamping out the fire.
* Burning Black and holding back a massive inferno of explosions with a slowly failing shield. She shows up, having busted herself out, and proceeds to argue with him over how bad of a job he's done on it himself, then takes her time on figuring out what to do about the raging fires about to break through the shield while still trading snarks with Timmy.
* Burning Black: Fairy World refers to Timmy as The One Who Stands Beyond Death's Reach; Remy, after investigating Timmy's falsified history, dubs him the Black Hound and starts calling him 'mongrel' to his face. Crocker calls him New Timmy.
* Burning Black: It's eventually discovered that Remy is in a "partnership" with the Pixies. However, the latter are clearly the superior party (despite what Remy might think) and are using Remy to further their own goal.
* Burning Black: Remy attempts to destroy the Ivory Tower shortly after it's been built by hiring demolition teams, but is foiled when Timmy wishes a memorial of himself onto the building, placing it under the city's protection. Later, Remy attacks it himself brazenly with a tank and does serious damage to the tower before the tank is destroyed and he's run off.
* Burning Black, they can hurt anti-fairies but are useless against fairies). Extended exposure can kill a fairy, making them a major threat in Dimmsdale.
* Burning Black: Timmy tries to do this after Remy chucks a magical device at him and it trusses him up in metallic rope. Averted in that it was custom built specifically for him and the attempt to magically bust out triggered the mana-draining effects to weaken him further.
* Burning Bridges, Building Confidence about this, Cole calls this out directly as gaslighting.
* Burning Bridges, Building Confidence has Alya's self-destructive vendettas against Vexxin/Cole and Marinette.
* Burning Bridges, Building Confidence, he dismisses her as just a civilian, prompting her to arm herself with some improvised weapons and jump in instead. This stunt also fails to impress Master Fu, who decides to establish another permanent hero in order to offset this: Vexxin, a new Fox, with Cole as its new bearer.
* Burning Bridges, Building Confidence she's cured, she continues harassing him, to the point that he has to take his little brother out the back of their apartment while she's banging on their front door.
* Burning Bridges, Building Confidence that she's covered, and that her behavior only proves how rotten people can be when they think they won't have to face any consequences for their actions.
* Burning Bridges, Building Confidence the Fox miraculous. Ladybug soon calls her out on this, berating her for how she's filled the Ladyblog with gossip and wild, baseless speculation.
* Burning Bright. Justified in that the Tiger was starved for nearly a week, and there was no other food supply.
* burning bush, gained the power to turn his staff into a cobra, turn the Nile to blood, summon swarms of locusts, and blot out the sun.
* Burning Chrome, set in the same universe, the narrator, Automatic Jack, has a seemingly more advanced prosthetic, which he is implied to have received after being injured in a military operation gone wrong.
* Burning Coals the short and cutesy looking Neo has a hoarser voice than you'd think. This is due to a throat injury she received as a child.
* Burning Crusade egg to a character named Tobias the Filth Gorger. Upon consuming this vile object, his ensuing belch causes this in every NPC (and player) in about fifty yards.

* Burning Fight has one background warehouse whose awning bears the number (123)-4567.
* Burning Legion is described as having destroyed over 1000 worlds, many of which had plenty of armies and champions for some probably pretty epic wars. Some of these are described in the chronicles of the Order Halls in the Legion expansion.
* Burning Legion. They usually are deployed into battle in the form of flaming meteors. Warlocks can also summon Infernals when they gain enough levels.
* Burning Love suggestive remarks about the other female contestants and how attractive she finds them. She continues insisting that she's straight even after casually commenting that she would like to take a shower with another woman.
* "Burning Platform" memo their only MeeGo device), sales were dismal, as their old customer base had moved on to Android and iOS by then.
* Burning Rangers, another Saturn exclusive. It was released when the console was nearing its end in America and Europe. While it was a success in Japan, it was a commercial failure in other countries. American or European copies usually go for $75-100 on eBay, while Japanese copies can be found for about $15-30.
* Burning Rangers has you rescue civilians, who email you with letters of thanks after each mission. Several of the civilians are Sonic Team members, who include cheat codes, production sketches and the like with their emails. (There's also a real-life Japanese poet who sends you a couple of poems - she's a friend of then-Team head Yuji Naka.)
* Burning the Candle", Pyrrha gives advice to Jaune on talking to Weiss about his feelings: "No ridiculous schemes, no pick-up lines. Just... be honest." The following episode, Jaune gives the exact same advice to Neptune, signifying that he's giving up his crush on Weiss in favour of helping Neptune to woo her instead.

* Burning The Ice, all of the colonists are clones grown in vitro. Each colonist is a member of a pair of clone twins or triplets, which also belongs to a family of clone siblings of various ages. The protagonist, Manda, is unusual in that she's a singleton, though she does have older clone siblings of the CarliPablo group.
* Burning The Ice, corpses are recycled into the artificial food source called mana and eaten in a ceremony honoring the dead. The colonists live on an icy moon of a gas giant planet so everything has to be recycled for them to survive.
* Burning the Ships: After crossing the Huang He into hostile Qin territory in 208 BC, Xiang Yu of Chu supposedly ordered his army to sink the boats, as well as to pack only supplies for three days and to destroy the rest, along with the cooking utensils. This meant that they could neither go back, nor avoid starvation except by conquering the supplies of the enemy. The traditional wording of the order, "Break the kettles and sink the boats!" (破釜沉舟), are a Chinese idiom.
* "Burning The Witches", the title track from the debut album by Warlock, released in 1984.
* Burning Wheel, all magical skills are attainable for any character, but only those with Gifted trait can actually cast magic. For the rest, the skill use is merely academic.
* Burning Wheel has a standard intro/demo scenario, "The Sword", about what happens when the adventuring party gets the loot and no longer has anything holding their disparate intentions for it together. Hint: it's also often used as a combat demo, and there are no characters or monsters except the PCs.

* Burning Wheel has a wound meter, but rather than filling up with damage, you just mark each hit under how much incapacitation it inflicts. It's actually very difficult to land a killing blow; most combat ends when one fighter's will breaks and he flees or surrenders, but between strong-willed fighters, they can keep going until one is so penalized by wounds that he can't move.
* Burning Wheel has the Duel of Wits, the argument/debate mechanics which are structured almost identically to combat. Talking an enemy down is no less climactic or mechanically intense than killing him. Subverted in that you can't force someone to argue, especially if they're in the middle of attempting to kill you.
* Burning Wheel included as possible life paths) with murderous cultists and albino mystics thrown in for good measure.
* Burning Wheel, in the pursuit of possessing objects of high value and/or craftsmanship. They get bonuses to rolls made in the pursuit of wealth. However, if the Greed attribute reaches its maximum through indulgence of the vice, the dwarf hides himself away with his hoard of goods in paranoid seclusion, never to be seen again.
* Burning Wheel, where every dwarf feels it in their hearts and can tap into for when they desire something, or when they're creating magnificent objects of their own.
* Burning Wheel works: If you say that you want to kick a bowl of fruit into the guard's face to create a distraction, then there will be a bowl of fruit right there for you to kick. It wasn't there until you said it was. Essentially, the players all have Schrödinger's Gun, to an extent.
* Burnistoun: A recurring gag is a tension-filled situation (i.e. someone encountering hoodlums destroying his car) turning into a musical mashup of rhythmic sounds, which turns out to be being actively mixed by DJ Jesus in heaven.
* Burnistoun director discusses criticism for not including characters using the toilet. Cut to a series of clips from the soap opera with characters pooping at dramatic moments, including a climax where several guys fight each other for use of a toilet while crying hysterically.
* Burnistoun features a burly, mustacioed police detective who's the head of the team. He's no-nonsense and determined to get to the bottom of it. Once he realizes that his detectives are all serial killers, he orders them to lock themselves into cells, which they do reluctantly.
* Burnistoun has a black comedy-filled example of a airport security agent who proposes to a fellow security agent at a different airport. How does he do it? He hides an engagement ring inside the anus of a traveler he did a cavity search on, and then tells the fiance to do a cavity search on the same passenger.
* Burnistoun has recurring character Biscuity Boyle. As a young man he was a champion athlete and Burnistoun's most famous citizen, but now he's a sad, incontinent old man who's prone to physical comedy and can barely control his body.
* Burnistoun involves two men in an elevator which operates by voice recognition. It can't understand their Scottish accents and asks them to repeat their desired floor over and over, while the guys try talking in different accents and ultimately resort to screaming abuse into the microphone.
* Burnistoun: Recurring characters Paul and Walter have this dynamic. Walter is extremely childish and constantly causing trouble for Paul by doing things such as splashing water on him, calling him gay, and in general, indulging in all sorts of whimsical and antisocial fantasies. Meanwhile, Paul is just trying to run the ice cream stand and is constantly exasperated by Walter, trying to keep him under control.
* Burnistoun takes a couple shots at the famous Glasgow football rivalries:
* Burnistoun. The sketches feature a pair of officers (implied to be representative of the whole department) who abuse their power for their own amusement, for example using a noise complaint to invite themselves to a man's party and threaten to arrest him if he doesn't let them in. They're also extremely dim and oblivious to actual crime that happens right in front of them.
* Burnistoun to have a girlfriend, who happens to be up at his Gran's.

* Burn Legend. And then there are the few techniques that force stagger checks or even automatic stagger on an opponent, which will give you a chance to ream them while they can't counter you.
* Burn Me Deadly, Gary Bunson, Neceda's law officer, is quite open to bribes. However, he's not particularly evil about it — it's driven more by laziness and self-preservation than active greed, and while he's seldom useful, he doesn't do any harm. It briefly looks like he might break this pattern by hanging someone whom Eddie thinks is innocent (or at least, coerced), but it turns out that Gary didn't actually have that one wrong. Eddie still thinks Gary didn't deserve a medal for it, though:
* Burn Me Deadly, Prince Frederick is known to only care about "drink, women, and games of chance, in that order" — which makes it surprising that he attends and supports Father Tempcott's dragon cult, and does seem to genuinely want Tempcott's approval. (Not enough to refrain from going into town and getting drunk, but enough to regret it afterwards).
* Burn Notice abuses this like crazy, though not the way you'd think. Most anyone with a line is given a name of some sort, generally because they're relevant to the plot of the episode. However, the show will occasionally bring back old characters as main characters.
* Burn Notice. A gay bar Sam and Fiona visit for information looks no different than any of the other drinking locations that the show visits besides the fact that Fiona's the only woman in it. Admittedly, though, nearly every bar in the show's version of Miami is pretty flashy.
* Burn Notice, although those roles start to shift in later seasons, and she usually argues for the most violent of all possible options. Whenever Michael needs explosives—or, for that matter, guns—Fiona tends to be the one supplying them.
* Burn Notice and as a soldier and spy, Michael gives his client's bullied son some basic self-defense tips on how to take out the bully ringleader.
* Burn Notice: Andre Dekker, one of the Villains of the Week in "Unpaid Debts" and a black market courier, tells Michael he would sooner cut his own throat than allow anyone to interfere in his deliveries.
* Burn Notice and steals the safe, since just having it (or depriving his target of it) is sufficient for his purposes.
* Burn Notice, as at one point they come to blows about it. They eventually resolve things and are back to a semi-dysfunctional couple, with the occasional outburst by Fiona, such as her slapping him when he was planning a trip to Cuba, "to remind [him] to be careful," just after giving him a kiss for luck.
* Burn Notice: A shadow government organization made a bunch of files on the handiwork of one of their own operatives look like Michael had done it. This prompted the CIA to burn him, whereupon the organization quickly stepped in to try and recruit him.
* Burn Notice, as Michael's Helpful Explanatory Voice-Over tells us: "Most people think that shooting the gas tank of a vehicle makes it explode. Unless the car is on fire, you'll just spill a few bucks worth of gas. An explosion requires something extra... like a few bags of acetone peroxide taped to the gas tank."
* Burn Notice. At least once per episode, they manage to explode roughly a Miami city block.
* Burn Notice. Being good guys, Michael and the gang take it upon themselves to both save his life and complete the job.
* Burn Notice) but eventually agrees just so that he can see how Michael handles himself in the field.
* Burn Notice, but fortunately Michael is able to get there in time to rescue her.
* Burn Notice by a member of a Russian assassination squad in Season 4's "Past and Future Tense"
* Burn Notice: Carla pulls this with Michael, he also manipulates some of the villains into doing this to his cover ID at the time. Indeed, it happens pretty much all the time in the series. Michael is often given this when he is to help the bad guy, or does this himself when he gets the bad guy to do what he wants.

* Burn Notice "Chuck Finley" on the fly after scanning the room and seeing a sports magazine featuring the famous Angels pitcher of the same name on the cover.
* Burn Notice compound. She has a harness specifically designed for this purpose.
* Burn Notice Conversation between Michael and Sam suggests this technique is a standard spy technique, particularly for targets with a history of substance abuse.
* Burn Notice, CSS agent Jason Bly has Michael's apartment searched. It's a subversion in that Michael is there at the time. Also, Bly doesn't expect to find anything; he's just doing it to mess with Michael.
* Burn Notice did an episode about a doctor being harassed by a drug dealer so Michael and crew make it look like he's ex-Special Forces.
* Burn Notice does this often when he gets hired by the bad guy to find out who is after him (more often than not being Michael himself). One notable one is when he is hired to be a Spy Hunter and pretty much has a blast suitably suggesting it could be him to the mark.
* Burn Notice drinking that show he's either being serious or he's dealing with personal issues.
* Burn Notice, "either someone is setting up Mason Gilroy, or Mason Gilroy thinks he's the fucking Riddler."
* Burn Notice ends with Jesse and Sam heading off to Carlito's to meet someone else who needs help.
* Burn Notice episode "Bad Breaks", Michael Weston convinced some bank robbers that they were in the process of doing this.
* Burn Notice episode "Dead or Alive", Michael soberly narrates over a scene of Sam telling an old friend's wife that the man is dead:
* Burn Notice Eve. After Eve sees through his first explanation, Michael claims that he and the other man met while being arrested as sex offenders.
* Burn Notice. Every time Michael spends half a season tracking someone down, they suddenly die.
* Burn Notice explains that it's not about cutting wires in the real world, because any bomb maker worth his salt will make sure you can't get to any of the important wires. Instead Sam and Fiona use liquid nitrogen to freeze the bomb and remove it from several barrels of fertilizer that way. It does go off several seconds later after they throw it behind a pallet rack full of water bottles, though.
* Burn Notice features Michael using a ring tone on his phone as an alarm for when someone sets off a motion sensor he sets up at a safe house for the clients of the week. It's from some flash in the pan girl group.
* Burn Notice. Fiona and Michael sleep together in a season 2 episode after she thought he had been killed in an explosion. In the commentary, one of the writers says that they were afraid that if the two got together, they'd play out this trope, but then realized (apparently from experience) that getting back together with an ex doesn't mean that any issues have been resolved, and often makes things more uncomfortable and complicated.
* Burn Notice, Fiona challenges Michael to a fight when Michael refuses to talk about their relationship. Halfway through the fight turns into a fight/grope-fest and a few minutes later it just turns into flat-out sex.
* Burn Notice, Fiona pretends to be a CIA agent in order to get an allied nation's intelligence agent to hand over documents concerning a black flight landing in his home country. She does this because Michael's similar attempt as a pretend Russian agent backfires spectacularly when it turns out that the Polish agent hates the Russians with a passion despite (maybe even because of) the fact that his mother was a Russian.
* Burn Notice, Fiona's brother tells Michael (an American undercover as an Irishman) that his American accent is "dodgy".
* Burn Notice (for the first few seasons) is Michael trying to clear his name and find out why he was burned.
* Burn Notice for the sheer number of improvised traps and distractions.
* Burn Notice from the Pakistani consulate and leaves a written message in Urdu for the chief of security to meet him at a restaurant. The chief comes into the restaurant with the message and says this:

* Burn Notice function this way, as though he were teaching a class or writing a book on how to be a spy.
* Burn Notice had an episode where Michael and Larry are trying to save some guy. They're in a high-up hotel room and throw a mattress into the pool to help break their fall. The guy they're helping misses the mattress and hits the bottom of the pool, breaking his ankle.
* Burn Notice had two, both ex-CIA men who blackmailed spies into working for their Murder Inc. operation. The first was colloquially referred to as "Management", and a second "silent partner" named Anson Fullerton.
* Burn Notice hanging around all the time. It also serves as the gimmick of the show.
* Burn Notice has a relatively realistic go at showing the real-life effects of a 'truth serum'. James injects Michael with a hallucinogenic drug that makes it harder for Mike to lie and/or withhold information.
* Burn Notice has Larry feeling this way about the Michael Westen "he knew".
* Burn Notice has mentioned repeatedly about how to properly search a location and hide your own valuables. A hiding spot that would be difficult for crooks to locate also has to be difficult for yourself to retrieve easily. Thus hiding something in the wall will require straight up demolition to find. Most of the show is about learning where those drawbacks are and finding the most efficient advantage, thus Michael hid a key card in the door frame behind the hinge using a saw and then covering it up. No one would think to look there and recovery just required 30 seconds and a screwdriver.
* Burn Notice has Michael Westen doing this to make contact with the mysterious Carla.
* Burn Notice has moments of these. She made a terrorist hijacker's pilot more terrified of her than he was of his employer.
* Burn Notice has rebuffed Fiona multiple times, citing his personal history, their problematic past history, her enjoyment of violence, the danger to everyone around him (which doesn't stop him from calling them to help with cases), the distraction, his higher purpose of finding out who burned him, and his patriotism.
* Burn Notice has the occasional use, as spies use plenty of doublespeak. One episode has Jesse convincing a target to follow Michael's plan, or some information is getting to the media.
* Burn Notice has this as both a tool and a hinderance to the gang. They use surveillance themselves but Michael is under close observation himself at various points in the show and this is used to blackmail him.
* Burn Notice, he knows someone who does. Another frequent source of information is Barry, the money launderer (currently the subject of the page quote), who knows at least something about everything slightly shady that happens in Miami, as all the crooks in South Florida seem to use him to clean their gains.
* Burn Notice he mentions that one of the least glamorous and most important parts of taking down, say, an organized crime group, is identifying targets within the organization that said organization cannot function without (often low to mid rank people), and then taking them out.
* Burn Notice: He's an out of work spy, she's his trigger happy ex-girlfriend. They Fight Crime along with his buddy who used to report on him to the FBI. And occasionally his mom.
* Burn Notice: "He's Michael Westen! There are only four of us!" Said by a Russian Spetznaz operator.
* Burn Notice. He's nostalgic for the days when he and Michael cut a swath through three continents and he wants to do it again. However, lately he's figured out by now that Michael isn't as much like him as the forged dossier floating around would have everyone believe.
* Burn Notice he will step in and either pep talk or start a "what is wrong with you" fight, though usually he leaves it to Maddie.
* Burn Notice. His friends Fiona and Sam has also demonstrated some competence in this area. The narration provided by Michael often explains that this is part of his training as a spy since it is assumed that operatives will rarely have access to actual 'spy gear' and will have to improvise from readily available items.

* Burn Notice: In "Army of One", when a duped bad guy sees Michael, out of cover and alive.
* Burn Notice: In "Center of the Storm", Michael Westen pretends to be a hit man named Matt Reese to work with another hired gun in order to save the victim. Things go south when the real Matt Reese shows up.
* Burn Notice, including one scene in season 2 where Michael and Victor discuss the former's next job while playing speed chess in a park in the middle of the day.
* Burn Notice initially used captions to identify people that Michael was dealing with, but they have started to become more comical, such as repeating an earlier assessment of a character, identifying them as "Arrogant Jerk" or something similar.
* Burn Notice: In one episode, Fiona is working as a bounty hunter and ropes Michael into helping her, only to have the man they capture hire them to prove his innocence. Bounty hunting seems to be Fiona's primary legitimate source of income when she is not working as an illegal arms dealer.
* Burn Notice: In one episode, Michael poses as a retired Marine in order to gain the trust of an actual retired Marine.
* Burn Notice (in Season 4) consists of trying to find out the organization that's apparently been starting wars in third-world countries for the sake of arms sales and other business opportunities.
* Burn Notice in Season Four. However, tensions are a bit high, given that he's yet to find out that he's the spy Michael (accidentally) got burned.
* Burn Notice instead — because a body count would draw too much heat while he tries to clear his name. A few people are worth it, but the consequences are still generally unpleasant.
* Burn Notice in that he's a former spy, and his assignments over the world required knowledge of various foreign languages to sell his cover I.Ds. In one episode, he pretends to be an ex-KGB agent trying to recruit a South American communist sympathizer. Naturally, he uses Russian, with the fact that neither of them is a native Russian hiding his American accent. However, the sympathizer's Russian is a little rusty, so he asks if they can switch to Spanish. Cue Michael's horrified expression, but he manages to recover by asking to switch to English, which the other man knows as well.
* Burn Notice in that he says it only has to look good enough to keep the bad-guys at a distance of some 50-100 feet.
* Burn Notice: In the episode "Last Rites", when Pearce finally gets her revenge on the man who killed her fiance, he says exactly that.
* Burn Notice in the first season features an (obviously doomed) informant meeting the main character on a rooftop to switch sides and give him valuable information. He doesn't do so well.
* Burn Notice" involves Sam and Fiona BS-ing the guard at a defense contractor that they think the building is a restaurant and telling him they have a reservation, all so that Michael can get over the fence and disarm a bomb on their client's car.
* Burn Notice is after him Michael does not hesitate to help the man get his money back.
* Burn Notice isn't very smoothly done, and there are strong changes in ambient noise and acoustics that are sometimes overly noticeable.
* Burn Notice is that people are more apt to reinforce doors than the nearby walls. Indeed, he uses this in the very first episode against Sugar, his downstairs neighbor who is also an obnoxious drug dealer. Michael notes that even a low-end drug dealer will probably have a reinforced door for extra security. So when Sugar is standing directly behind said reinforced door with a gun so he can shoot Michael if he makes it through, Michael opts to go through the perfectly ordinary wall to the side instead.
* Burn Notice is usually fairly realistic when it comes to things like this, but in the season finale of season 6, Sam's heart and breathing stop due to a bullet wound that couldn't be treated immediately, Michael administers CPR for about 10 seconds, and Sam makes a full recovery with no immediate adverse effects (other than the effects of having been shot).

* Burn Notice, it goes from everything being a complete mystery to him having a love/hate relationship with the organization that burned and eventually gathering evidence to bring to the CIA that they actually exist and work with them to start dismantling it. The issue fans have with the status quo is built on four parts:
* Burn Notice Jesse. The show's creators saw the ambiguous race as a plus for the character of Jesse, as it would allow Jesse to go undercover as different ethnicities and make it easier for him to infiltrate different groups.
* Burn Notice knows how to play this one, too. Westen usually has multiple plans, yet they frequently resort to throwing them all away and improvising on the spot. For instance:
* Burn Notice: Larry apparently got blown up towards the end of the series, but given how the character had already escaped almost certain death several times up to that point, only to always come popping back in, viewers were a bit skeptical that he was truly gone. But the series ended before he could ever come back.
* Burn Notice Larry waves off the immorality of killing people for money (or just for fun) with his mantra of "some people live, some people die."
* Burn Notice Madeline needs to get Sam to leave the room so Fiona and Michael can have a moment alone.
* Burn Notice made use of this trope one time, walking into a torched building and claiming to be from the county government. He didn't get free access to the site, but it bought him a few minutes while the city fire chief called the county office.
* Burn Notice makes the same remark. Michael points out that if you take out the person handing out paychecks, mooks and mercenaries won't stick around to avenge him.
* Burn Notice—even though Sam acts, dresses, and looks like an archetypal Casanova Wannabe, he's actually successful with the ladies, although he uses his charms to woo rich divorced housewives who buy him nice stuff.
* Burn Notice, Michael and Fiona have an Orbital Hug at the end of the episode "Shock Wave", when Fiona is released from prison.
* Burn Notice, Michael and Jesse gain access to a bank by breaking into the much less heavily protected law office upstairs and tunnel through the conference room floor into the vault.
* Burn Notice.) Michael cuts a deal with Diego to help get rid of Concha if Diego and the rest of the gang leave the neighborhood and find someplace else to run their rackets. Diego agrees, helps get rid of Concha and goes about being a gangster offscreen instead of taking advantage of her plan to make "legit" money.
* Burn Notice, Michael drives a 1973 Dodge Charger that his father had owned. This car has survived being blown up twice and shot repeatedly while the more modern cars owned by everyone else have generally been destroyed.
* Burn Notice: Michael explains to a client that the plan requires Michael to get hit in the face (so he'll be visibly injured). He further explains that he's not expecting the client, a pacifist doctor, to do this and is about to go get Sam for it—but by this point in the episode the client is so aggravated at Michael that he immediately punches him. Hard.
* Burn Notice. Michael gets distracted when he spots a Czech assassin he recognizes from his spy days eyeballing him, and answers a question about the Miami Dolphins' all-time passing leader with "Barry Bonds", a baseball player.
* Burn Notice, Michael has created enough trouble for the people who burned him that he finally gets a meeting with Management, where he demands that they stop interfering with his life. Management agrees - because at this point, the cops are looking for Michael and keeping him off of law enforcement's radar is expensive.
* Burn Notice: Michael has to deal with one at the beginning of season 3. He explains in the voice-over that it works by being given a target area, and it then kills anything in that area. So he leaves the area. Which was difficult, since it was already shooting at him.
* Burn Notice, Michael is infiltrating a bomb-maker's apartment. The bomb-maker had rigged a booby-trap to the door: a claymore, pointing at the door, tied to a rope. If the door opens, the rope slackens, which will set off the claymore. Michael, luckily, notices the trap and pulls on the rope to keep it taut. At that exact moment, though, the bomb-maker happens to walk in the back door. Though surprised, he quickly takes advantage of the situation, since Michael is standing directly in the path of the claymore and can't let go of the rope.

* Burn Notice, Michael is tracking down a sniper, but his personnel file only has his initials, "T. G.". So they go to his boss trying to hire someone who fits his exact description, in the hopes of determining who the guy is. His boss responds that he knows exactly what they're up to: "Did you think I wouldn't figure out you're looking for Tyler Grey?"
* Burn Notice, Michael outlines the problems with this in an episode when he has to break into someone's home. He states it's better to wear jeans and pretend that you just entered the wrong house if you are going to rob it because that way you can just play dumb if you get caught. If you look like a burglar you're screwed.
* Burn Notice, Michael plants various C4 charges around a nightclub owned by a heroin dealer and uses a detonator with a Dead Man Switch to force the dealer into giving him the information he needs to rescue Sam.
* Burn Notice, Michael pretends to join a group of executives planning a robbery, assuming they're going to steal some funds over the computer. Completely averted when they instead take a dozen hostages and plan on forcing a millionaire to transfer his money at gunpoint.
* Burn Notice: Michael's go-to cover when caught breaking and entering is usually a disgruntled employee or a drunken vandal.
* Burn Notice, Michael's ingenious plan for escape involves ripping Fi's very nice and expensive dress, much to her dismay.
* Burn Notice Michael states how it becomes second nature to spies to make one of these anywhere they can because they never know what they will be up against.
* Burn Notice Michael Westen is an Urban Legend throughout Russia. Several groups consider the name Michael Westen to be a codename for a team of operatives. In another episode some Russian gangsters find out who's after them, "He's Michael Westen! There are only four of us!"
* Burn Notice: Michael Westen is a ridiculously badass spy. Doesn't stop him from nearly getting his ass kicked by a wannabe-badass street drug dealer in the pilot when the guy punches him in his broken ribs.
* Burn Notice. Mike almost always completely out-classed the villain of the week, so the larger arc was usually a chance to humble him and show him struggling with an equally matched opponent.
* Burn Notice, Mike gets kidnapped during a bank heist. So a few seasons later when he calls to say he's involved in a hostage situation, everyone assumed he got kidnapped again.
* Burn Notice occasionally affects something resembling this accent for his "Bubba"-ish characters.
* Burn Notice occasionally employs the services of the money launderer Barry and the gun runner Seymour for various jobs. Michael himself is a fired CIA agent, and so without the backing of the CIA, most of his history looks criminal in nature. Because no legitimate government employee wants anything to do with him, he has to rely on the "lesser evil" criminals for help.
* Burn Notice: One episode's villain, Ryder Stahl, is the owner of a company called Security Associates. Mike's cover ID was of a Kenyan diamond dealer who needs a village... removed.
* Burn Notice only did this once: at the end of the penultimate Season 4 episode, when Michael regains control of an extremely volatile piece of information that puts him right in the crosshairs of the organization that burned him (that previously wanted to use him instead of killing him). With the revelation that he's brought a literal war on his head, as the organization has more resources and ability to act freely than anyone he's faced, along with a now-active desire to kill him, he announces that "Tomorrow is going to be a long day", and the episode ends with the trope.
* Burn Notice operative sent to re-establish ties with a pro-Russian sympathizer in a Latin American country. He speaks Russian with a local officer, who responds but then asks to switch to Spanish, as his Russian is rusty. Michael is clearly panicking for a second before offering to switch to English instead. By Season 7, Michael does pick up Spanish. The circumstances are abnormal.

* Burn Notice pilot. Michael befriends his client's eight-year-old son, who asks him if he's going to shoot the bad guys. Michael demurs. Later he comes back to talk to the client and finds the kid has drawn a picture of Michael killing a couple people.
* Burn Notice: Played for laughs when Sam and Michael are staying at a hotel as part of a stakeout and Sam starts storing away some of the soap and other similar toiletries. Sam claims that since the hotel restocks them without charging extra, it's a shame not to take advantage.
* Burn Notice practically ran on this trope, with Michael providing exposition via an 'as a spy...' voiceover explaining Team Westen's actions at least once every episode.
* Burn Notice puts it, "Thirty years of karate. Combat experience on five continents. A rating with every weapon that shoots a bullet or holds an edge. Still haven't found any defense against Mom crying into my shirt."
* Burn Notice. Sales of that particular brand of shades (Oliver People's Victory) shot up right after the show started to get popular, a testament to just how damn cool they are.
* Burn Notice, Sam and Jesse convince an employee that they can get him hired at a much nicer job, but on condition that he lets them have his employer's personnel files. He settles on this trope as a way to appease his conscience.
* Burn Notice's character is repeatedly referred to as attractive, even getting into parties, VIP club sections, et cetera solely on her looks.
* Burn Notice seamlessly blends actor Jeffrey Donovan's extensive martial arts training, skill for accents, and even dancing background into the show, which are justified by his character being an ex-spy who would need to know such things. Curiously, the fight-scenes are often filmed in such a way that Jeffrey's face can't be seen, leading some viewers to think that a stunt-double is used (much to Donovan's frustration).
* Burn Notice season 3 premiere. Michael uses the blood from self-inflicted cuts in his wrist (from cutting himself loose after being duct-taped to a chair) to leave a trail that guides his pursuer into an ambush.
* Burn Notice, since Sam is slightly inebriated (he usually is) and Michael calls him on the mistake before committing to it, but Sam just sounds so sure that he goes with it.
* Burn Notice (someone pulled a gun and Mike took it away from him), Mike and Sam need to find a way out of the situation. After discussing trying this based on an urban legend, and the fact the cops haven't seen the hostage-taker, they manage to convince one of the two hostages (who just found out the other one, her boss, is really a sleazy con artist) to name the other as the gunman. Mike then engineers a situation where said sleazeball is able to take his gun back, and when the cops burst in the plan works without a hitch. Though the negotiator is kind of curious why somebody blew open a safe full of ill-gotten money...
* Burn Notice something that could cause a complete blockage) into the exhaust pipe of an SUV. It doesn't cause the car to blow up or even keep it from being driven but causes sufficient damage that the bad guys have to limp to the nearest service station...which was the point of the exercise, as the good guys needed to hide tools in the SUV for the next step of their plan.
* Burn Notice sometimes receives messages from the mysterious organization that burned him in the form of crossword puzzles.
* Burn Notice states that the best distractions make people more curious then worried, such as a truck that slowly rolls forward (with a bomb in the bed).
* Burn Notice tailing them was a molester to the policeman standing nearby in order to get said mooks off his back. For extra hilarity, the mooks were FBI agents, and when one of them reaches for his wallet & identification, both cops pin them to car and immediately cuff them, thinking they were reaching for a gun.
* Burn Notice talks about this during season 2. Michael, having started to become much more enlightened as to Carla's objectives and methods, begins to spy on her. Unfortunately, as he points out, he can't do anything different because it would clue her in to the fact that he already knows a little of what's going on.

* Burn Notice tends to do this with its cars; it’s very easy to tell which automaker is sponsoring the show at any given moment. It also leads to scenes where the crew uses a super-Hyundai to bust into something and Sam and Fi pause the action to talk about how great a car it is.
* Burn Notice that Quentin was testing him and just took a shot in the dark.
* Burn Notice, the Columbian rebels even nickname him "The Chin" in Spanish.
* Burn Notice. The context here is that Michael and company are going up against a hotel owner who stole his own distinctive diamond brooch. After Michael unsuccessfully attempted to get him to move the brooch by posing as a potential buyer, they resort to this trope.
* Burn Notice the door, wounding the dealer, then busting in through another wall where he'd previously removed the exterior sheeting so it was only the drywall he had to break to enter.
* Burn Notice: The episode "Partners in Crime" had Fiona donning a pair in order to pose as a CIA Agent, placing her nicely into this trope.
* Burn Notice, the episode "Signals and Codes", Spencer Witawski does this in his living room with newspaper articles.
* Burn Notice: The Fall of Sam Axe as they get turned around on the way to Sam's court martial.
* Burn Notice: The Fall of Sam Axe because rural Colombia in the early 2000s (FARC was still a thing then).
* Burn Notice: The Fall of Sam Axe, Veracruz plans to destroy a medical clinic and blame the rebels. The attack could be used as a justification for receiving greater US military aid.
* Burn Notice, the first time with a homemade flashbang, and the second time with a car's hi-beams.
* Burn Notice). The guy also steals imported cars from the docks and resells them, so Michael decides his cover is a dissatisfied customer. Relieved he gets to be angry at the sleazebag instead of trying to buddy up the way he normally does, he decides to milk it.
* Burn Notice, the hero's best friend is commenting on the wisdom of the hero's choosing his (admittedly very well-trained and well-armed) ex-girlfriend for backup.
* Burn Notice, the main character, Michael Westen, formerly had an older, more experienced partner named Larry who was sort of like a mentor figure to him. He and Larry conducted many black operations together for years, some of which, according to Larry, were the kind that only the darkest breed of soldier would have the heart to carry out. This partnership came to an end when Larry decided to fake his death because he was tired of working for the CIA and wanted to go freelance as a mercenary. Years later, Michael is issued a burn notice, effectively firing him from his job at the CIA, and Larry shows up offering him a chance to go freelance with him. The only thing is that Larry has become much crueler in his methods since last they met, and Michael says he would much rather try getting his job with the CIA back than deal with Larry's cruel tendencies. Larry, in all of his appearances, never gives up on trying to convert Michael to his side, saying that there is a dark side to Michael's nature that he saw during their years together, the only difference between them being that Michael is denying his evil nature while Larry has embraced his.
* Burn Notice, there are more than a dozen quotes you could use to describe an individual trope that are so specific you know they did it on purpose.
* Burn Notice: The show is at least honest that their main characters are all criminals. Good guys, but criminals nevertheless. As the police never ask for their help (the CIA is another matter), this should actually pass muster.
* Burn Notice. They often use the Miami area to double for various other locales, including West Africa in the pilot using careful camera shots and an orange "heat" filter.

* Burn Notice thing. Come on, am I right?" Doesn't quite break the tension like he'd hoped.
* Burn Notice, this happens about every other episode. Sometimes it happens near the beginning of the episode, because Michael needs to get the bad guy's attention in a major way. Sometimes it happens at the end of the episode, especially when Michael needs to rescue Fi or Sam. Either way, it always works, because Michael Weston is the man.
* Burn Notice, this happens a lot. Usually, it's done to create a distraction or plant a bug.
* Burn Notice (though they usually try to return them in one piece). Sometimes justified:
* Burn Notice to a Hispanic gang with a nice red suit, a confident walk, and a few well-placed explosions and a friend with a sniper rifle.
* Burn Notice to ask for his help, and ended up working closely with the team throughout the episode.
* Burn Notice. To be fair, the main purpose of both Fiona and Sam on missions is to be the distraction.
* Burn Notice to return to Haiti to stand trial. Although the episode is right when Sam points out that the United States is not a signatory, in real life, unlike the International Criminal Court, the IACHR doesn't prosecute individuals for human rights abuses, but whole governments.
* Burn Notice to the door is usually simple drywall and can easily be punched through in order to reach in and unlock the door. Even better, some of those building will have ordinary glass windows next to the door.
* Burn Notice uses his connections to protect his mobster brother. When Michael and company take out the scumbag by making him look like an unstable lunatic, it's mentioned in the epilogue that the brother will likely go down with him.
* Burn Notice uses this a few times. One episode has Michael lampshade this through his narration by stating that the best way to escape a pursuit is to do something that the pursuers will not do, like jump off a building. He then jumps off the roof so the security guards chasing him won't follow (it's not very high but one can easily break bones if landing badly).
* Burn Notice uses this trope as part of a bluff: impersonating a professional hostage negotiator, the kidnappers asked how he could prove he wasn't a cop. He opens his jacket and says "This is Armani. Cops (salary) don't fit Armani."
* Burn Notice uses this trope frequently as part of its season finales, as most recently evidenced by the season four summer finale that left Michael shot and bleeding out, with seemingly no one around to save him.
* Burn Notice, usually accompanied by being so loudly bureaucratic that everyone listens to them without question.
* Burn Notice, usually to the delight of the 'narrator' who always has good ideas on how to effectively deal with such a predicament.
* Burn Notice: Watching Michael Weston out badass every criminal and spy he comes up against is entertaining. Adding to the fun are the voiceovers which nonchalantly explain why he's doing things a particular way.
* Burn Notice when a former friend sells him out. He escapes but bloodies his wrists.
* Burn Notice. Whenever the team needs something to blow up, Michael can just turn his head and say, "Fi...".
* Burn Notice when he first got it. It's too bad he had to blow it up, but it came back in early season 5 with Fiona behind the wheel, serving as Michael's getaway vehicle. Seeing the charger run again really melts car-loving tropers hearts, and the fact that Michael refers to it as his friend.
* Burn Notice when he's working for his Client of the Week. He's even used private eye as a cover ID at least once, though on another occasion he notes that a PI license has privacy concerns (anything they uncover could end up in court).
* Burn Notice when Michael explains to his mother how Fiona is doing in jail. "She's tired, she's scared, and she's not eating enough... and somebody's trying to kill her."

* Burn Notice when Michael meets Victor for the first time in a chess park. The two trade veiled threats as a way of getting the measure of each other.
* Burn Notice: When not running a job, Michael seems to prefer wearing Armani suits.
* Burn Notice when Sam was being blackmailed by the government into squealing on Michael. Michael took advantage of this and simply told Sam what to tell them. Was dropped entirely by the second season, though.
* Burn Notice: while in prison, Fiona is targeted by the "Sisters", two lifers who take on hitman jobs mostly just to pass the time.
* Burn Notice who's leaning on their client, which in the end comes down to hiring a bunch of scary looking guys to act as a replacement for his soldiers (the heroes have convinced the capo that his crew is no longer reliable). Then they get him to try and assassinate his boss, and then have the crew pull out at the critical moment.
* Burn Notice: With the arc being the titular burn notice and Michel Westen's attempts to get back into proper intelligence work. It gets much more arc-heavy starting in Season 5.
* Burnout 3: Takedown was released a year before the E10+ rating was implemented in the United States.
* burn out a person's eyes Anna, who takes a form she's comfortable with. She was a human, but became an angel again, which destroyed her human body. She decided that she liked that body, and "calls in some favors" to get it back.
* Burnout car deserves special mention due to it dropping you in literally the fastest car in the game while you're still in the second-slowest class of cars.
* Burnout further shook things up by introducing the combat mechanic that would define the series for mainstream audiences.
* Burnout has a city bus as a vehicle. It's as long as three regular cars, in a game that is all about tight cornering and zipping nimbly through gaps in traffic.
* Burnout'') often include shortcuts that, if not executed properly, will cost the player even more time than the shortcut is intended to bypass.
* Burnout onward. It keeps track of everybody you've started a rivalry with, and rewards you for getting revenge or keeping your rival from doing so.
* Burnout Paradise has a variety of downloadable content, the majority of which is new vehicles.
* Burnout Paradise has two of these. After you get the second-to-last-level license (Burnout Elite) by beating all the events, you can give your cars a golden paint finish. If you then proceed to beat the Time Rule and Crash Rule on every single road of Paradise City, and find all the Smash Gates, Super Jumps, Billboards and Drive-Thrus, you are given the final license (Criterion Elite), and can give your cars a platinum paint job. Thankfully, you don't have to beat the events and find the discoverables on Big Surf Island to get the Criterion Elite License.
* Burnout Paradise. Infinite boost is a pretty sweet deal... too bad there's no way to turn it off. If you can master it, though, it's one of the fastest and most fun cars in the game.
* Burnout Paradise or set the time to always be midday (12:00 PM), sunset (8:00 PM), midnight (12:00 AM), or sunrise (6:00 AM).
* Burnout Paradise Remastered and also finally gave players the opportunity to play through Big Surf alongside Cops and Robbers officially on PC while enjoying unlocked framerates and increased resolutions.
* Burnout Paradise selections lead you to a "Oh you haven't bought this yet? Well get out that credit card!" screen. There's also a new page to flip through on the pause screen that promotes the store, which means one more microload between you and the options menu. Big Surf Island itself also gets added, so your 10 quid just lets you access it. Otherwise, it's fully visible, and you can even start to drive across the bridge to it... only to be greeted with a pop-up menu saying to buy the Island to continue. If you refuse, the game will face you the other way and drive you back into Paradise City.
* Burnout Paradise was re-released as "The Ultimate Box". For your money, the disc included three sets of DLC; Menu, weather, and time updates (free upgrade), Bikes

(was free anyway), and Party Mode controller sharing multiplayer (is still paid DLC for standard versions). It was not worth purchasing new, especially if you already had the original, but the price has now come down to the point where it's the same to buy as the original itself, so it's worth picking over the original if you don't own it.
* Burnout Paradise where essentially every inch of the road can be reached. The scale is rather compressed compared to real life—Paradise City is closer to the size of a town—but there's still a lot to explore.
* Burnout Revenge gave us "Traffic Checking". The idea being that your car can shunt small vehicles that are stationary/going the same way you are, out of the way. The problem however was that this also gave you boost. Normally boost was rewarded for risky driving, but Traffic Checking had no risk attached to it, unless you couldn't tell the back of a car from the back of a bus. Then some of that traffic would happen to bump into your rivals, whether you were trying to do that or not, rewarding you with even more boost. Naturally, smart players would change their strategy from trying to stay in oncoming where possible, to driving going the right way and shunting cars about in the process.
* Burnout, which often unlock both the fastest class of vehicle and a new set of tracks the player is completely unfamiliar with at the same time.
* Burnout, which range from classic gangster cars to slick fifty's cars to modern sports cars.
* "Burn": Promise to put sunscreen on her children's backs but only spell "Will you maryr me?" with it and let the rest burn.
* Burns And Allen show, in which George Burns would talk directly to the audience about the ongoing events of the episode. In later episodes, George Burns would watch the television along with the home audience so that he also knew what was going on.
* Burns' Heir", Homer is forced to do the miserable job of industrial chimney sweep, but comforts himself by acknowledging that his bosses have to work even harder. Cut to Mr. Burns in a top hat, smoking a cigar and eating chips in a bubble bath.
* Burns' Heir", Mr. Burns has an elaborate clockwork butt-booting mechanism installed in the stage of his mansion. Bart is subjected to it when he fails to be chosen as Burns' heir, which Homer finds unbelievably funny.

* Burns Verkaufen der Kraftwerk," the German Horst tries to arrange a private meeting with Homer but he keeps nervously refusing. Horst thinks that it's because his English is poor, but in reality it's because Homer doesn't want to be outed as a terrible employee.
* Burns Verkaufen Der Kraftwerk, when Homer offers one of the German investors who bought the Springfield Nuclear Power Plant a free beer at Moe's:
* Burns was shown fancying monkey brains a few times and recalls having eaten the brain of an assistant when he sold him to cannibals.
* Burnt: Adam Jones is a chef who destroyed his career with his drug use and diva behavior. He returns to London after cleaning himself up so that he can redeem himself by spearheading a top restaurant that can gain three Michelin stars.
* Burnt by the Sun. After being arrested by the NKVD, Colonel Kotov rattles off Joseph Stalin's personal phone number. The secret policemen squirm in their seats, but when he goes to leave the car they inflict a brutal beating. Kotov has no idea that Stalin is the one ordering his arrest in the first place.

* Burnt by the Sun appears at the end, watched by an awestruck peasant and saluted by secret policeman Mitya.

* Burnt Face Man is only there to make fun of him, even spoiling the episode BFM wrote himself (by burning the face of a dog to create a Burnt Face Dog and making everyone think BFM was a pedophile), so it was no wonder that he shot it down. He released a tape before he died though, so he could continue the insults.
* Burnt Face Man series has got Taps Man, who erodes metal over a period of time, Have A Nice Day Man, who wishes everyone a great day, and Detergent Man, who washes clothes deliberately on the wrong settings. There are many others.
* burn the Earth Kingdom to the ground It was his daughter's idea, but the man ran with it and never looked back. However, no one really died (unless there were hermits in the Wulong Forest), as Aang, Toph, Suki, and Sokka put a stop to that.
* Burn the Orphanage: The villain shows how pointlessly evil they are by burning down an orphanage.
* Burn the Undead", the citizens of Amphipolis resolve to burn the body of Philinnion, a young woman who has left her tomb to consort with a young man, to prevent her from coming to life again.

* Burn the Witch!. However, the Empire has a College system to allow wizards to be properly trained and given "Please do not burn by order of the Emperor" letters.
* BURN THE WITCH (Miraculous Ladybug), Marinette repeatedly attempts to protect Lila after all her lies are revealed and Rose is akumatised into Witch Hunter, who along with everyone who falls under her spell wants to burn Lila at the stake for what she's done, despite herself having plenty of motivation to let them and even Cat Noir and Tikki falling under the spell and urging her to let Lila have it. Lila herself doesn't provide much incentive to do otherwise by not only sabotaging Marinette's genuine attempts to help her, seeing them more as self-righteous and self-serving ego strokes to make the other girl look and feel better about herself, but persistently lying and slandering her, taking advantage of her parents' kindness when they let her into the bakery to snoop around Marinette's room for blackmail material and gleefully admitting to her willing alliance with Hawk Moth. Even after transforming into Ladybug and hearing that Lila tried to manipulate Oni-Chan into killing her, Marinette does not give in. Once Lila is out of imminent danger and Rose is de-akumatised, however, Ladybug makes it clear that she will be keeping a very close eye on Lila and ensuring that she can't interfere with the heroes during akuma attacks by seeking her out and dumping her in uncomfortable and humiliating places to "keep her safe" during said attacks.
* BURN THE WITCH misdeeds. Reading off of it helps her whip up listeners into an angry mob intent on hunting the girl down.

* Burst Angel: Jo's body wasn't found by Meg in the rubble at the end of the anime.
* Burst Angel usually features Meg and Jo in some sort of badass pose, and occasionally, they feature Amy, Sei and Kyohei.
* Burst Mode. His monster Gomora also enters Burst Mode when it happens, becoming an even more unstoppable force when it happens.
* Burst Stream of Destruction should only be playable if you have a Blue Eyes White Dragon on the field, but the game doesn't check for it, so you got an unrestricted card (i.e. you can have 3 of them) that can destroy all monsters on the enemy field and is also fairly easy to get. This also has the amusing side effect of making Blue Eyes worse, since it gives a penalty for using it instead of making it a Raigeki.
* Burst with the Hasbro Sword Launcher, which is slightly better than the Japanese Electronic Sword Launcher that it's based on performance-wise due to lacking the tachometer which adds drag when launching. The Hasbro Sword Launcher is even better than the Beylauncher LR/Dual Threat Launcher, despite using a ripcord when the other uses a string-wound mechanism, which is generally a superior design.

* Burt Reynolds, about stuntmen, features a very obvious stuntman, when Hooper is riding a horse.
* Burt Reynolds as the prison football team's trainer. He was the hero of the original. And he ends up saving the day in the remake, too.

* Burt Reynolds: In almost every episode, Burt got to make use of his football skills. He'd make flying tackles of fleeing suspects or do other sorts of physical stunts, like sliding down the middle of a church on his belly. The opening credits show quite a few of these moments. Burt was a college football star at the University of Florida prior to becoming an actor.
* Burt Reynolds just a few years later. This time, he's a three-time NASCAR champion who is known for spectacular antics off the track as well, although we only see a few of these in the movie proper.
* Burt Reynolds. Reynolds ended up making a very brief cameo appearance though, in the final scene.
* Burt Reynolds was from Michigan but was known for playing Southerners.
* Burt Schlubb and Douglas Klump are two crooks who like to use large, important-sounding words to make them appear intelligent; unfortunately, their wordy speeches (which are often full of malapropisms) do little to hide how dimwitted they actually are.
* Burt the Ball, has his pants lower as he's damaged, and as per usual, is defeated once his pants have left him.
* Burt Ward would make hiding a double's face harder, and partly because the studio wanted to save money by not having to pay another stunt double. Burt was a legitimate martial artist, but by the time the show was over, he had been hospitalized over a dozen times.

* Busch Gardens event had one as its very first "Icon", named "Dr. Livingsdoom".
* Busch Gardens for the event that year had the memorable imagery of its crank turning on its own while blood seeped out from underneath.
* Busch Gardens had one simply named "Clown" as a member of "The 13", a sinister group of monsters that served as the "icons" of the event in 2013.
* Busch Gardens had this as its theme in 2016, with the story being that said dummies were created by a man with sinister intentions, who then had to burn his place to the ground when the authorities began to grow suspicious of him. The dummies survived the fire, and through some means came to life on their own to wreak havoc, insisting that "the show must go on".
* Busch Gardens houses; the storyline being that the toys inside the abandoned factory came to life through some means and seeked out revenge against those that abandoned them.
* Busch Gardens Tampa has an Egypt-themed area, that's naturally based around its ancient roots.
* Busch Gardens Tampa, where guests would be guided through an excavation of said tomb.
* Busch Gardens: The Dark Continent (later renamed Busch Gardens Tampa) opened on March 31, 1959.
* Busch Gardens: The Old Country (later renamed Busch Gardens Williamsburg) opened on May 16, 1975.
* Bus Crash: A character who was phased out of the show gets killed off before they have a chance to return.
* Bus Crash: A character who was written out of the show with the potential to return gets killed offscreen, which could be because their actor cannot or will not come back.

* Bus Crash, liked the character. The Season 15 episode "Diatribe of a Mad Housewife" has him show up alive and well, saying he has just "been very sick."
* Bus Crash: Offscreen deaths do not normally involve a literal bus crash.
* Bus Crash? Think he's going to show up again in later episodes? Think again, cause the writers decided to say that he died.
* Bus Full of Innocents: A bus full of innocent people is about to get damaged and it is up to a hero to save them.
* Bush happened and they changed the title to "The People That We Love".
* bushido, and a particularly brutal brand at that. Land and industrial rights are given as fiefdoms, with the High Lords doing as they please. Social mobility is pretty much non-existent, though that is changing.
* Bushido Blade has no life bars, and matches can be decided with a single well-aimed strike.
* Bushido Blade is the hammer, an almost polearm-length weapon which is slow, but can rapidly crush through your opponent's guard with repeated strikes. Oddly enough, the best character to give it to is the speedy-but-weak Tatsumi, as his speed overcomes his low strength to allow fairly rapid strikes.
* Bushido Blade — The original game was sub-only, while the sequel was dubbed.
* Bushido Blade states that the player's chosen character is part of a small assassin cell that has a "You only leave when you die" rule in place. They want out.
* Bushido Blade there is no health bar, as every strike that would be fatal in real life is fatal in the game as well. It is also possible to cripple your opponent with a blow to a limb, or land a critical strike that will cause them to bleed out if they can't finish the fight quickly.
* Bushido Blade. There was a way to skip most of the opponents by running to a certain area of the map, take your opponent's legs out so they can't follow you, and jump down a well, which makes you fight only one more opponent before going onto the bosses. You still have to avoid getting hit to get the "real" ending for each character.
* Bushido Blade to put up a fight, but one blow to his armored front stuns him, and one more blow to his unprotected back kills him. The end.
* Bushido Blade, which features no health bar, and in which it's perfectly possible, with the correct timing, to win a match with a single move, often a direct thrust to the face. Furthermore, if you're injured you drop to one knee and have your move list reduced to "parry" and "swing wildly". It's still possible to win a match from this position... but you don't recover for the next round. Harsh.
* Bushido Blade, you must fight your opponents honorably in Story mode. Use dishonorable tactics and the game abruptly ends after a certain point, with a usually random message berating you, such as "None are more contemptible than those who defile the way of the Bushido."
* Bushido Blade; your character is trying to escape from the clan of assassins he or she belongs to, and the rest of the cast wants you dead.
* Bush Mechanics is built around this trope - the first episode sees the protagonists claim an ancient car and macgyver it into (barely) working order out of scraps from a car yard and fix it up along the way using garbage, trees and an axe. When they stop for tea and find they're out of matches, one makes a fire the way "the old folks" taught him - with jumper leads and the car battery.
* Bush: "Messy Paul Anka moons a dove" (most of the transcriptions were
* Bushroot. Originally, this plant-duck hybrid was still a villain, but he had significantly brighter colors and a far more kid-friendly demeanor. The version seen in "Let's Get Dangerous!" has a far duller color pallet, and looks more akin to an undead zombie.
* Bush's Baked Beans (and associated products such as Bush's Grillin' Beans) had Jay Bush and Duke, a talking dog with a singular agenda to try to sell the secret family recipe for the beans for big bucks and had a seemingly endless well of devious ideas as to how to go about doing this.
* Bush's much-mocked "get Syria to get Hezbollah to stop doing this shit" aside to Tony Blair concerning the Middle East. The

* Bushwacked, Daniel Stern and a group of kids have to cross a long rope bridge. Aside from one plank falling, the group make it across pretty quick - although one has to have a bit more encouragement from Daniel when he stops in the middle of the bridge. After the kids are across, Stern cuts the bridge to stop Jon Polito and Brad Sullivan from pursuing him.
* Bushwhacked, Reinhart Bragden's alleged remains are identified by his dental records. His teeth had been pulled and planted at the scene of a fire in order to fake his death and frame the protagonist Max Grabelski for arson and murder.
* Bushwhacked: Scout Leader Erikson has a pretty mild version of it (in comparison to other examples on this page) involving super-gluing the label "I Am An Inconsiderate Person" to the driver's side window of the guy that deserved it.
* Bushwhacked". They're accused of doing the original damage and pretending to be salvaging.
* Bushwhackers protagonists are Bushwackers due to the nature of the genre.
* Bushwick reveals Texas and some Southern States want to secede from the United States and to make it successful, the Secessionists covertly send mercenaries into Northern States areas like Bushwick to cause chaos. Unfortunately, the secessionists didn't expect the locals to fight back.
* Bushwick: This is apparently the case with Lucy and Belinda, as Lucy explains to Stupe that they were both raised by Grandma, meaning they're sisters in that way. As neither looks anything alike (Lucy is white, Belinda most probably a Latina) they likely aren't even half-sisters.
* Bushwoolies are both highly excitable scatterbrains and inveterate doormats and yes-men who always agree with whatever has just been said. They tend to excitedly essay random directions when asked while heartily agreeing with whatever ones anybody comes up with, as Spike finds out to his chagrin in "
* Business as Unusual: A protagonist inherits or starts a strange and unusual business.
* Business as Usual, During Alterations" an unknown person/people give humanity a pair of devices that can duplicate anything that can fit on one of the two pans, including another duplicator, and somebody figures out that the pans can be replaced with aluminum sheets of any size. A department store manager attempts to deal with it by first marking all prices down 90%, then refusing all cash transactions and issuing credit cards to customers. As duplicators spread across the planet, industry shifts from mass production to innovation.
* Business As Usual: It all starts when Erick & Parrish befriend a hard gangsta named Jay... but when they visit "his" pad, the decor (and bathroom contents) don't seem right...
* business but that he has a "friend" who might be interested in the job. It's implied that such conversations are common when it comes to hiring people for "problem-solving".

* Businessman Armand Hammer was not named after Arm & Hammer brand of products. Nor did found the company. He did try to buy it in the 1980s because he was tired of explaining that. (They wouldn't sell, but he did become a major stockholder and board member.)
* businessmen had this as official policy. They would routinely "retire" hitmen after they performed three jobs, using their replacements to do the deed. One of the three was smart enough to avoid trying this with Elektra. Too bad one of the others didn't get the memo...
* Business News Network (BNN), 24-hour business news channel. Formerly named Report on Business Television (ROBTv). Owned by Bell Media.
* Business Trip Adultery: A cheating spouse uses the excuse of going on business trips to see the one they're having the affair with.
* Business video conferencing systems, which record video and sound of an entire meeting room and project it on a big screen to allow people at other locations to join in.
* busked in a DC Metro station and made a grand total of $59. Possibly justified since a metro station is generally noisy, the acoustics are lousy for a violin and it was during rush hour, so many people probably couldn't stop. The low income generated may be less about mistaking him for a lesser performer, and more about completely not noticing him. This was done as part of a study, and several people who had passed through the station were asked if they had seen anything unusual in the station. All but one didn't even remember there being any violinist. The one who did remember though, (a postal worker by trade) could not shut up about him.

* Busman's Holiday: A character on vacation ends up having to do what they usually wind up doing.
* Busman's Holiday episode in season 5, McKay spends some time on Earth and is invited to a presentation by his old nemesis — who has gotten his hands on the secret paper Rodney wrote about the matter bridge project. He figured out that using it as a massive heat sink would avoid the exotic particle problem. While he did avoid that problem, the instability of the matter bridge, coupled with the fact that they couldn't turn it off, threatened to drain all the heat from the planet, and McKay has to save the day.
* Busman's Holiday) who kills his victim by trapping him in the arena with a notoriously vicious bull after hitting said victim with drug darts to impair his ability to escape. The bullfighter even gives the disoriented victim a nice red cape to wave around.
* Busman's Honeymoon. When Lord Peter Wimsey is offered some homemade parsnip wine, his wife Harriet, realizing the distress of a world-class oenophile, suggests he dump it in a nearby potted plant. However, Lord Peter goes ahead and drinks it (not without a shudder) after observing that the plant already appears unwell.
* Buson yōkai emaki with minimal annotation. The leading theory behind the scroll's creation is that it was created in the 1750s to practice painting and that the youkai included came from stories he heard about during his travels. Two of the youkai are the suika no bakemono of Kizu (a former village in Osaka) and the makuwauri no bakemono of Yamashiro (a former region in Kyoto), respectively a watermelon-headed humanoid and an oriental melon-headed humanoid. The scroll is the only remaining evidence of those folkloric youkai.
* Buso Renkin And if you're not a super-special-awesome Human-type Homunculus, you go insane and become dominated by your instincts.
* Buso Renkin and will mark themselves with the same insignia to avoid being eaten by them.
* Buso Renkin. At one point, Papillon and and Moonface have a conversation while standing on electric posts.
* Buso Renkin attack on her elementary school when she was 10. The event was so traumatic that it left her an intense hatred of homunculi, and very few memories of her life before the incident.
* Buso Renkin Buso Renkin, Alice in Wonderland, is capable of creating disturbing hallucinations that can break the minds of all but the strongest willed of victims.
* Buso Renkin but doesn't restore his cloths. As a result of this, after being blown to pieces early on Ikusabe spends the rest of his fight against Papillon totally naked as he is enjoying himself too much to care.
* Buso Renkin, but it's clean and even, showing her inherently good nature. Interestingly, the author has stated this comes from her design originally being intended for a female professional wrestler.
* Buso Renkin descends into this when he accepts the order to kill Kazuki before he completely Victorizes (A process they did not know could be arrested or reversed at the time). He even freely admits that this is a war crime that he will have to answer for once the war is over.
* Buso Renkin different in weight to a katana. It's also totally useless against European Victor's axe-type Buso Renkin, Fatal Attraction.
* Buso Renkin, during the attack on the school, one of the L.X.E.'s familiars is telling the students to throw things at everything in the courtyard (the homunculi are immune, the heroes aren't). To get through the looked door, Daihama smashed it with a cry of "DIE DOOR!"
* Buso Renkin ending in sharp blades that, while lacking any abilities beyond precise manipulation, can quickly and efficiently kill her opponents.

* Buso Renkin example. She's just wearing Kazuki's uniform jacket over her usual look, but being a very recent transfer student her unusual uniform is her most distinguishing feature anyway and covering it up does a good job hiding her identity alongside the artificial fog that's blanketing the school.
* Buso Renkin from her life of combat at this point, as does the rest of the cast.
* Buso Renkin has commentary. The Episode 6 commentary was quite hilarious.
* Buso Renkin has Loteri-ya (a parody of Lotteria, a Japanese fast food chain) which the heroes and villains meet in. The staff seem fairly happy with their situation until the characters show up... in full costume. After Bravo and Papillon start eating there, it is dubbed Freak Burger.
* Buso Renkin has the Black Kakugane, which drains all nearby life energy.
* Buso Renkin, he is still unable to cause the level of destruction more offensive buso renkin are capable of.
* Buso Renkin. His character development eventually leads to him give up his hatred, however.
* Buso Renkin, Hiwatari is almost never shown to wear a shirt underneath them, leaving most of his well-developed chest exposed.
* Buso Renkin in particular feels a great sense of loss when hers is taken as she had been fighting with it for almost as long as she could remember.
* Buso Renkin in that the hawk homunculus can transform his hands into giant metallic wings sprouting from his arms, which is a bit more realistic. He does not have any feathers, he doesn't really use them for flying in his humanoid form, and his morally grey nature is not indicated by the wing type. The author explained that he hates usual winged humanoids, so this was his compromise.
* Buso Renkin invent the lie that they're siblings immediately believes them and is confused by the fact that nobody told her she had an older sister.
* Buso Renkin is noted as having the lowest attack power of all the offensive buso renkin in the series but he is able to make up for it with the weapon's versatility and his own intelligence. As a result Gouta has one of the most successful on-screen battle records of the Alchemist Warriors in the series.
* Buso Renkin is one of these. When his likes are listed as "winning battles, losing battles," you know the guy loves fighting.
* Buso Renkin. It has been theorised, in-universe, that this hunger for human flesh is the result of a deep desire to become human once again.
* Buso Renkin: Kazuki has a Kakugane in his chest because he blundered into a monster and died, kicking off the plot.
* Buso Renkin: Kazuki's favourite dirty magazines all feature older women. When his love interest Tokiko, who is a couple years older than Kazuki, discovers this she finds it quite amusing.
* Buso Renkin: (Male) villain Pampillon's outfit is...uh...rather fabulous and definitely off-putting.
* Buso Renkin, Mamoru Sakimori (Captain Bravo) is fond of doing this. Sometimes he says the phrase, sometimes he eschews it in favor of simple buttkickery.
* Buso Renkin may be the only homunculus to wear a large face mask, depending on whether or not Moon Face's actual head is shaped like the moon. And Papillion Mask is probably the strongest, smartest, and most ambitious 'normal' human homunculus in the series.
* Buso Renkin, most of the titular objects take the form of weapons. The boss of the Alchemist Army has his take the form of a giant mecha, which amplifies other weapons and abilities that are used by its other pilots.
* Buso Renkin of any buso renkin. He can also fire it at an opponent to restrain them.
* Buso Renkin. On the other hand, however, with the exception of some basic, self-taught, martial arts moves, Kazuki had received no formal battle training prior to the start of the series and even after Captain Bravo's intensive training, he has the least skill and experience of any Alchemist Warrior in the series.
* Buso Renkin. Over the years Alexandria also repeatedly cloned her brain so that she could link their jars together in an attempt to boost her already genius level intellect.

* Buso Renkin, Papillon always seems to have an extra mask hidden in his speedos.
* Buso Renkin public persona due to his belief that things are "cooler that way!"
* Buso Renkin, something only one other alchemist in history had been able to so.
* Buso Renkin's spear has the ability to regenerate his entire body very rapidly, even if the body itself is completely destroyed. Admittedly, it has the weakness that he has to be holding his weapon at the time.
* Buso Renkin. The design of the whip is based on those used by circus lion tamers and to fit with Jinnai's pet breeding hobby..
* Buso Renkin: The special ability of Ouka Hayasaka's bow weapon is that she can craft arrows that transfer wounds to herself. She uses them twice: once on her brother, and once on Kazuki.
* Buso Renkin, the third arc of the series sees him, Tokiko, and Gota are hunted by their former allies from the Alchemist Army.
* Buso Renkin. The upgrade to a lance is a sword... that can turn into a lance filling the empty space with energy. And can fly to the moon.
* Buso Renkin to prevent a Homunculus core bonding with her, the pair tumble down a hill and he hits his head constantly against rocks on the way down. When he sees the last rock (a fairly big one), he comments that it is going to hurt but takes it anyway, hugging Tokiko closer to him, despite the fact that he knocked himself out.
* Buso Renkin to scream in horror so loud that her nurses became concerned.
* Buso Renkin until they are attacked a second time. Neither of them reacted too drastically to the revelation, however, with Mahiro even taking comfort from it as it meant that Kazuki had saved her and would do so again.
* Buso Renkin, Victoria satisfies her hunger for human flesh by eating her mother's cloned brains rather than attacking and eating people.
* Buso Renkin, Victor-type beings can survive without sustenance for time, merely becoming exhausted.
* Buso Renkin) was twice held back a year during high school. This was one of the reasons that his father decided to disinherit him in favour of his younger brother Jiro.
* Buso Renkin; Watsuki has admitted in interviews that Yahiko's character was based partially on what he was like when he was a kid.
* Buso Renkin when he accidentally got in over his head while trying to save someone.
* Buso Renkin: When using his Motor Gears in their Sky Walker Mode, Gouta can greatly increase his speed and agility. Unlike many of his fellow Alchemist Warriors, however, Gouta’s stamina and physical abilities are no greater than a regular human teenager, so he is far more vulnerable than his comrades.
* Buso Renkin with limited intelligence, talk about how perfect their disguises are before the scene cut to the students saying how suspicious the two massive guys wearing badly fitting school uniforms are.
* Busou Shinki Arnval MKI has the single biggest one-piece Shinki weapon, a massive, massive beam rifle that dwarfed every single other Shinki cannon in existence, and was not topped until Bullet Knight Launcher hit the market. Even her direct descendant, Arnval MKII, has a beam rifle that is nowhere near that original weapon's size.
* Busou Shinki has an instance in the 13th Episode OVA, when the Arnval-type Shinki Ann goes for a maintenance checkup at a Shinki facility. Not only does Ann undergo an electrical test of her power systems that produces an interesting reaction from her, she also gets felt up by the Shinki nurse who also comments that her Master "treats her well" in a creepy fashion while running her hand down Ann's back, presumably to test her sense of touch.
* Busou Shinki series had one episode like this. It gets more and more wacky towards the end.
* Busoushoku no Haki (Armament Haki) allows the person who use it to surround himself/herself with a thin but powerful armor (it's mostly invisible until the
* Bussard Ramjet mechanism for interstellar craft for this very reason.
* Bus Stop, Jason tries to find someone that he knew rode on a specific bus on a specific date, so he gets in touch with the bus company to try to look at their security camera footage. Turns out the bus camera only turns on if the driver activates the emergency switch. No emergencies happened in that particular bus on that particular date, so there was no footage to see.

* Bus Stop) when he sees her singing in a saloon, and when she resists his immediate impulse to get married, literally lassoes her onto his bus going back to Montana. She continues trying to get away from him, but gradually her feelings toward him soften.
* Bust a Groove. He walks out of a building and is confronted by police. He pulls out his guns and starts firing. Fade to black.
* Bust a Groove. She wears a costume with this design, but considering the nature of the game, she could very well BE one.
* Busta Rhymes are basically 4-minute, unpaid commercials. In fact, many fine wine makers don't like the publicity from mainstream rap; half out of snobbiness, half out of concern that it promotes underage drinking.
* Busta Rhymes featuring Leaders of the New School… Busta's old rap group.
* Busta Rhymes plays a metaphorical hip-hop Grim Reaper burying a has-been rapper alive.
* Busta Rhymes was getting most of the spotlight on him while the rest of the members were pretty much forgotten. This also prompted Busta to pursue his solo career, which turns out successful for him.
* Bust, but she gradually learned how to handle that particular assumption.
* Bust-Contrast Duo: When two females opposite each other not just by their personalities but the size of their chests.
* Busted rewrote the lyrics to make it about a Freshman crushing on a Senior.
* Busted. Standard household wooden blades, industrial metal blades, and lawnmower blades were tested. The wooden blades would only result in a sore throat; the industrial and lawnmower blades were able to puncture the neck, but couldn't detach the head from the neck.
* Busted, with the proof being a very loud, wet fart by Kari Byron caught on camera (amplified via a microphone).
* Buster also wears clothes to match the living room's wallpaper in "
* Buster & Chauncey's Silent Night: After being framed for the theft of the church's riches, Christine tries to prove her innocence by bringing a police officer a piece of the stolen goods. All she ends up doing is confirming her guilt in his eyes.
* Buster & Chauncey's Silent Night has Christine. When she first sees Buster and Chauncey, she sets them up in a crack in the church wall, and gives them a handkerchief to use as a blanket.
* Buster & Chauncey's Silent Night has Dolph, who chased all the mice out of Oberndorf, and is now after the titular duo.
* Buster & Chauncey's Silent Night: The two thieves posing as the Duke of Roche and Lady Gretchen kidnap Christine and decide to have her take the blame for their theft of the church's treasures.
* Buster & Chauncey's Silent Night wears a hooded cloak when she comes to Oberndorf.
* Buster & Chauncey's Silent Night, when the titular duo get scared by their own reflection, Buster leaps up into Chauncey's arms.
* "Buster and the Wolverine" has Babs attempt to pose as a female wolverine to woo the male one terrorizing our heroes, by only wearing a mask that comes right off during a kissing scene).
* Buster Blader's whole deal is dragon-slaying, with his ATK rising astronomically if the opponent has dragon-types on their field or in their Graveyard. Just five dragons in the Graveyard pushes him up to stronger than Five-Headed Dragon. His
* Buster Brown shoes had the early 20th century comic strip character
* Buster Brown's sweetheart Mary Jane after his daughter. She would also eventually lend her name to a style of children's shoes worn by both her namesake character as well as Buster. Buster's mother was also modeled after Outcault's wife as well.
* Buster Brown was boyish in the 1900s but his pageboy haircut and clothes (which are sometimes pink) make him more androgynous to modern audiences.

* Buster Brown would decades later. Now the comics have been all but forgotten and his image survives merely as the mascot for the shoes which are still being made to this day.
* Buster Bunny replayed Casey's role and twisted the end by actually hitting the ball.
* Buster Busts Loose for the SNES, the Coyote Kid (from the TV series episode, "High Toon") tosses tomatoes at Buster.
* Buster Douglas was considered such a no-name opponent against heavyweight champion Mike Tyson (the fight was held in Tokyo because no American venue saw the fight as worth hosting) that Tyson was really lax in his training for the fight. Douglas, motivated by his mother's death, proceeded to train harder than ever before and delivered the best fight of his career, resulting in what many still call the greatest upset in boxing history.
* Buster has bizarre tastes. He regularly gets strangely flavored ice cream, with sprinkles of stuff you wonder why they even have as options. Some ice cream flavours he's had include "Chocolate Chicken Crunch" (he doesn't know or care what makes the crunch), "Peppermint Pasta" (which he claims needs meatballs) and "Rocky Trout" (Chocolate ice cream with almonds and fish sticks).
* Buster has this happen to Watford Gapp when he tries to rhyme "oblige".
* Buster himself seems like a subversion of this trope, as he actively creates weird combinations of food, but due to his aforementioned ironclad stomach, actually enjoys it and never seems to understand why others don't.
* Buster increases Shulk's damage output, but reduces knockback on his attacks and makes him take more damage as well.
* Buster is (barely) able to operate a real crane after obsessively playing a crane game.
* Buster Keaton, a silent film. His deadpan face is like a physical Flat What.
* Buster Keaton, at one point Keaton steals a penny-farthing bicycle to chase after his stolen train, but isn't able to ride it very far before falling over.
* Buster Keaton, being a wealthy visitor to Mexico who falls in love with a woman and tries to win her heart. She eventually falls for him after she slaps him when the serenade is done, and he responds by bashing the guitar over her head.
* Buster Keaton Buster goes off of a diving board at the end of the film and misses the pool, leaving a hole with no discernible bottom. An indeterminate amount of time later, he emerges in Chinese garb with a Chinese wife and their two small children.
* Buster Keaton centers on one of these that parodies the Hatfields and McCoys.
* Buster Keaton features what must be the ultimate runaway groom scene: rich heir Buster rushing out of the church chased by a horde of hundreds of money-crazy would-be brides (a newspaper ad got them there). The frantic chase scene across the city and countryside is a classic of silent era slapstick comedy.
* Buster Keaton generally worked from an outline instead of a complete script, and was famous for playing baseball with his crew while waiting for inspiration to strike.
* Buster Keaton had the tip of his right index finger amputated after it was crushed in a clothes-wringer.
* Buster Keaton, he disguises as a scarecrow in order to evade his pursuers.
* Buster Keaton. He runs a newspaper ad for a wife and is ready at the altar with tickets to both Niagara Falls and Reno.
* Buster Keaton involves Keaton unfolding a newspaper that just keeps going, then struggling to fold it up again.
* Buster Keaton, in which the DIY house is demolished by an oncoming train.
* Buster Keaton is presented as the protagonist's dream, and at the end he wakes up.
* Buster Keaton is the second most well-known silent film star behind Chaplin with a decent sized fandom to this day (who call themselves “Damfinos” after a gag in one of his films), and can be placed at a comfortable Stage 4.
* Buster Keaton lead on how to act with her. When the movie within a movie's lead kisses his love interest, Keaton's character kisses his. But then Keaton looks at the movie to see "several years later..."

* Buster Keaton make off with first a horse, and then a motorcycle with a sidecar.
* Buster Keaton — Buster stands in front of what appears to be a full-length mirror, then steps through, revealing that it's a door connecting two identical rooms.
* Buster Keaton — in an attempt to coax his opponent into range of a shotgun with a string tied to the trigger.
* Buster Keaton onwards he came to be admired and loved for his technical brilliance and his deadpan style of comedy came to prefigure the gags of later artists.
* Buster Keaton plays it straight, with a butler acting as the accomplice of the main villain.
* Buster Keaton rather cynically with a short montage of the two newlyweds, then as a family with children, then as two old people, and finally two graves.
* Buster Keaton's films. A common scenario is his love interest will flat-out refuse him at the beginning unless he "makes it big". With few exceptions, he always wins her heart in the end, with broken ribs and concussions in the process.
* Buster Keaton shows two people repeatedly missing each other on a ship, in spite of the fact that they're also the only two passengers on the vessel.
* Buster Keaton. The newlyweds try to build a house with a full kit, but a rival sabotages the parts numbering. Obviously, professional house builders could have spotted the problem long before the couple does.
* Buster Keaton there's a scene with Sybil Seely (who plays his wife) taking a bath. When she leans out of the tub to retrieve the soap, a hand is placed over the lens.
* Buster Keaton. The scenes that take place in the 1890s are also shot like a silent movie.
* Buster Keaton," two farmhands share a one-room house in which all the furnishings have at least two functions — there is a record player/stove/oven, refrigerator/bookcase, rolltop desk/sink, bathtub/sofa, and Murphy bed/piano.
* Buster Keaton, when Buster, a prison warden, has an unfortunate encounter with a giant hulk of a prisoner.
* Buster Keaton when he hops on board a freight train and goes west after failing to find a job in the big city.
* Buster Keel! deals in information to sell to adventurers. When encountered by the heroes, he hires them to retrieve a treasure chest from the nest of a giant two-headed serpent, only to reveal that it contains his stash of information, written down on rice grains he can decipher.
* Buster Keel! has Gold using a magical gourd on Keel and Lavie to suck them inside it and leave them there, at the mercy of the monster Soul Eater, a creature that forces people to assume their "original" form before consuming them. Unfortunately for Gold and the Soul Eater, Keel's origina form is that of the dreaded Dragon Ape.
* Buster Rifle shot, this has the effect of resembling nothing so much as a giant glowing cylinder that appears for a second to ruin someone's day.
* Buster's Bath,, when the group can't convince Buster to take a bath, they decide to try hosing him down. This results in a madcap scenario in which the water builds up because Eeyore is sitting on the hose, then when it all gets released, Piglet goes up in the air with the hose and it sprays around wildly. At the end of the whole thing, Roo exclaims "Let's do that again!"
* "Buster's Growing Grudge" used this literally, with Buster and Binky speculating that their comedy skills could get them their own TV show:
* Buster's Hidden Treasure for the Sega Genesis/Mega Drive, the bonus levels take place in Wackyland, accessible by finding the show's iconic rainbow logo. Here, Buster can collect as many bonuses as he can. If he touches one of the many Gogo Dodo clones that populate Wackyland, he will promptly be sent back to whatever level he's currently on.
* Buster's Hidden Treasure for the Sega Genesis/Mega Drive, there are several enemies that toss food at Buster, including Ravens that drop apples, and Trolls

(from the short, "Day for Night" from the TV series episode, "Brave Tales of Real Rabbits") that toss tomatoes.
* Buster's Hidden Treasure. In some levels, enemies can attack you while the rake has incapacitated you.
* Buster Shield is an even more dramatic cape that DEFLECTS LASER BEAMS.
* Buster's Last Stand , an Indian tries to grab Woody's scalp to get the hand of the Indian Chief's daughter, in the end, after getting it, the father gradually shows his daughter with a curtain at the end, an ugly face appears.
* Buster strips and disliked the simplistic art style that resulted, but he kept with it out of habit even after he was able to improve the artwork in the following years.
* Buster Wilde Weerwolf, a drag queen meets Buster and thinks he is just a lunatic in a costume and tries to pull off Buster's mask but Buster really is a werewolf.
* Buster Wilde Weerwolf are gay by their looks but then you see them talk about cute guys and hitting the gay clubs.
* Buster Wilde Weerwolf, Bernard the straight human and Buster the gay werewolf share the same body.
* Buster Wilde Weerwolf, Buster is usually in a nice suit thanks to Bernard's work clothes. Ironically, Buster hates the suit and yet it looks much better on him than it does on Bernard.
* Buster Wilde Weerwolf: In an unrequited fashion, Buster tries to get Marshall's attention by tapping and rubbing his face on the window much to Marshall's annoyance.
* Buster Wilde Weerwolf when he overhears that the bouncer's name is Trey.
* Bustier pulls the exact same tactic when Chloé throws a pity party for Adrien, barging into Mendeleiev's classroom and declaring that everyone is invited... and anyone who attends will get extra credit, while looking directly at Marinette.
* Bustin Loose, as they end up helping a busload of schoolchildren get out of a mud hole, only to fall face-first into the mud.
* Bust-Up: The Uplifting Tale of Otto Titzling and the Development of the Bra. It was also recounted as fact in at least one edition of the board game Trivial Pursuit...)
* "Bust Your Kneecaps" by Pomplamoose is about a bride-to-be who has family in the mafia. After her fiancé Johnny runs off, she asks him to come back before her angry family maims or kills him.
* Busy Beavers had a character named Baby Kangaroo, who was mistaken for a baby boy, due to her lacking eyelashes and a bow. It wasn't until the "Characters" song that Baby Kangaroo was actually a girl.
* Busy Street represents a Meta example of this. Thrashing and picking apart other internet "Angry Reviewers".
* Busy Town, Mr. Fixit's wife tells him that their baby is ready to be born. He starts panicking and even forgets to take her into the hospital.
* Busytown Mysteries, Pig Won't floats away with helium balloons. Huckle and friends fly up to Pig Won't with a helicopter, pop the balloons with a sharp pencil and save him.
* Busytown, stands upright on one shoe. In animated adaptations, his boneless body contorts in several ways to move about, depending on circumstances and the artists' preferences: sending ripples down his length, coiling up to bounce like a spring, or folding bow- or zigzag-fashion and then extending to launch himself into the air.

* , but admits she'd sell her teammate for a half empty jar of umeboshi.
* , but admits that she can't explain the facts she has with science. Misato was cut open with what could only be specialty surgery machinery but there's no evidence of it at the site of the attack and she fired three full clips of armor piercing rounds yet they can only find the shell casings and none of the bullets. Lastly, the Slender Man's victims had their organs wrapped in a materiel that looked like saran wrap but couldn't be analyzed even by the MAGI. So while Ritsuko thinks Misato might be insane for her recollection of what happened, she doesn't know what actually did.

* But after failing to secure Azure City's gate, he works to create the city-state of Gobotopia as a homeland for the goblins and gain it international recognition. And there lies the problem — Redcloak could work much more effectively to better the position of the Goblin people by empowering Gobotopia, but he's too invested in the initial Gates plan to give it up. The fact that Xykon would be not happy if Redcloak tried to back out gives him a further excuse. As is the fact that it's not so much Redcloak's

* but all that happens is she goes down to Shirogane's horrible singing.
* but a lot of Hispanics remember him as a resourceful Latino hero on television. Although some of the support cast mice are shown in an unflattering light, their behavior makes sense given that many of them are in party mode. The often-maligned Slowpoke Rodriguez is portrayed as the opposite version of Speedy, seeming to be more crafty than he lets on.
* but also in sheer numbers produced. Upon its introduction, the T-34 effectively rewrote the book by combining mobility, survivability, and firepower to a degree unmatched any other tank design at the time of its introduction, and continued to remain highly competitive until the end of the war. At the end of the war, the T-54 did the same by rendering existing heavy and medium tanks obsolete, becoming almost indisputably the first main battle tank, capable of fulfilling almost all functions expected of either type. Both of these are among the most produced armoured fighting vehicles in history, with respective total production figures of 84,000 and 100,000 (estimated).
* But also justified as well. If a mech launches a melee attack on a tank (translation, attempts to step on it), the tank is nearly always destroyed if the attack hit. Tanks take 2x damage from melee attacks and only have one internal spot, so destruction is nearly always assured.
* But also quite often averted, as well; especially in the longer episodes where we learn a lot of details about the crime that ultimately turn out to be meaningless. At least once, Jonathan has noted an observation aloud, and when asked what it means, he says he doesn't know. Some of those things simply never get mentioned again.
* But also subverted because people who lawyer up turn out to be innocent about half the time.
* , but Alya ignores her attempts to help her out. It's only after the show has already ended and she sees the results that she realizes just what she was being offered, too late to actually accept the deal.

* But Arnold is the one they go to when they are in over their heads. Even the adults did this eventually.

* But as bad as the Sarkicists are, the Daevite civilization, which the founder of Sarkicism came from and played a major role in causing the collapse of, was far worse. There are several Sarkicists who are neutral or portrayed sympathetically, the Daevites are never shown to be anything but pure evil. The return of the daevites might be even more of a nightmare than the Sarkic apocalypse.

* Butch and Cassidy tortured Professor Oak in one episode by scratching a pane of glass with a nail. It worked.
* Butch and Sundance have the choice of being shot dead by bounty hunters or jumping off a high cliff into a river. Butch keeps saying they should jump, but Sundance'd rather fight them (and probably get killed).
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, and perhaps some of the subsequent imitations as well. If you don't actually see the heroes get killed in the ensuing battle then there's the possibility, however slim, that they're still fighting, and managed to win. It helps that there is some historical evidence that Butch survived the shootout (though none for Sundance).
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid. As Butch, Sundance, and their employer are on a mission to pick up a payroll, Butch and Sundance are watching for an ambush. The employer says "Morons. I've got morons on my team.", and explains that no one will ambush them because they don't have the money yet.
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, Butch and Sundance leap off a cliff into a river to escape a posse. Sundance is reluctant because he cannot swim. Butch famously replies, “Hell. The fall’ll probably kill ya.”

* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid. Butch eventually comments, "Don't they ever get tired? Don't they ever get hungry?...I wish they'd even speed up, at least it'd be different."
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid: Butch gets annoyed when Sundance finally shows some emotion about being chased for days and cornered on a cliff overlooking a raging river.
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid. Logan has challenged Butch to a fight for leadership of the Hole in the Wall gang.
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, Mr. E.H. Harriman's newest safe defeats Butch's cracker. So they use dynamite. A LOT of dynamite. It winds up destroying the whole train car as well as the safe and sending the money flying everywhere.
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid rob the same train twice. It's hilarious.
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kids. Always ended by Wally dragging Elvis the dog into the lair and the computer's sneeze blasting the team out of the room.

* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kids, whose major plot purpose is to cause Mr. Socrates to sneeze.
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, the ending itself could be interpreted as anything but ambiguous.
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, then instructs his other men to officially start the fight, then finishes off Harvey.
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid. When the title characters are trapped against the edge of a cliff by the posse pursuing them, they decide to take their chances and jump into the river below.
* Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, which includes Indian tracker Lord Baltimore and lawman Joe leFors and which has been paid to stay on the trail of the outlaws till they are dead.
* Butcher, Baker, Candlestick Maker was responsible for this massacre and presumably Raynor's death as well.
* Butchering the impersonatee's accent. Giving a Cockney celebrity a Scottish accent in your impersonation is firmly this trope. Exaggerating for comedic effect (making the Cockney celebrity speak in full rhyming slang while, normally, he or she just pronounces words in a decidedly Cockney way) is just caricature.

* Butch Hartman. His reputation got worse after Oaxis controversy in summer 2018, which turned him from this into one of the cartoon community's punching bags.
* Butch Hartman how Bernie was blunt about accepting the job because the actual show he was hired for wasn't picked up yet, and that he intentionally turned in poorly drawn storyboards for him to fix before demanding a raise on his only episode.

* Butch Hartman must really love this trope cause this happens in almost every series he has made:
* Butch Hartman started a Kickstarter for a "Family Friendly" alternative to Netflix called Oaxis. However, he withheld the information that "family friendly" meant "Christian" from his fans before he raised hundreds of thousands of dollars for it.
* Butch Hartman that takes on the memories and appearances of dead people. While the show has one throwaway line in this regard, overwhelming in-series evidence establishes that while some ghosts are an example of this, most ghosts are deceased humans.
* Butch Lesbian: A lesbian who looks and acts stereotypically tough and masculine.
* Butch Lesbian: A masculine woman who is stereotyped as being attracted to women exclusively..
* Butch Lesbian plays a lesbian. She is not only a lesbian but genderfluid too (still using female pronouns though). The last season introduces Dominga "Daddy" Duarte, who is either a lesbian or transgender (it's ambiguous), and played by lesbian Vicci Martinez. The bisexual lead Piper Chapman is portrayed by actress Taylor Schilling, who identifies as queer. McCullough similarly is indicated to be lesbian or bi, while her actress Emily Tarver started a relationship with castmate Vicci Martinez after it ended.
* Butch Lesbian Ronnie shows up to the premiere of Moira's film in a stunning cocktail dress and rocks the red carpet.
* Butch Lesbian. She is also the only inmate whose bra is black rather than issue white.
* Butch Lesbian stereotype; which one a work goes with usually depends on what message the author wants to send.
* Butch Lesbian: Tomboys are stereotyped as attracted to women exclusively.
* Butch Lesbian who shoots down a Courier who tries to hit on her with the Lady Killer perk.
* Butch Patterson Private Dick, to prematurely ejaculate, or his inability to have sex without paying a woman for it. He normally keeps up a brave front, but he occasionally lets his private shame and self-pitying show through, bursting into tears, yelling at whoever is in the room and then running away.
* But Christianity takes this even further. Jesus is both fully God and fully man. This means that of all the living beings in creation, humanity is the only species that God is a member of. Asides this, Jesus is called "Second Adam" with various implication. One of it is that being co-heirs with Christ, meaning we will inherit entire creation when

* but doesn't bother to explain why he's wrong. In another book, the Balance is interestingly defined not as Good and Evil, but Good and the absence of Evil. It's explained that light and dark are not necessarily good and evil, and while the balance tipping to evil would mean torment, the absence of evil would lead to stagnation. One additional point to consider that the Balance is sometimes portrayed (though not described as) not as being between good and evil, but making sure that neither the angels or the demons of the series gain too much of a foothold in the world, as both are jerks. It just so happens that at the time of the second game, the "evil" forces are much more overt in screwing with mortal reality, and only one angel is bothering to do something.

* But I'm a Cat Person are compelled to love their Masters no matter what, which has led to more than a few cases of this. Patrick, with his persistent feelings toward his former Master, is the most prominent example.
* But I'm a Cat Person consists of "I, [your name here]." The written version has never even been seen (and wouldn't be in English if it were).
* But I'm a Cat Person has this with several of the Beings: Reseda (gold), Cybele (pink), Kaguya (teal), sometimes Patrick (brown).
* But I'm a Cat Person includes three cat-based shapeshifters: Reseda (a housecat), Blake (an "every big cat that isn't a lion", typically seen as a tiger), and a not-yet-introduced Lion. They typically stick to entirely-human or entirely-feline forms, but will sometimes sprout ears and a tail for the cuteness/weirdness/otaku-appeal factor.
* But I'm a Cat Person. Inconspicuous as long as they don't open their mouths (and aren't of too exotic a species).
* But I'm a Cat Person. They're frequently drawn out during quiet moments, but will

* But I'm a Cat Person, whose name means "white" in Italian, is black and proud of it.
* But I'm a Cheerleader and it bombed when it first came out. It's still an obscure film today.
* But I'm a Cheerleader (black comedy/dramedy about a young woman sent to a conversion therapy camp, the main character and her love interest are both lesbians, there are other LGBT supporting characters; subject matter includes female romance, homophobia, conversion therapy, and LGBT acceptance)
* But I'm a Cheerleader due to liking boys, and is implied to reciprocate fellow camper Graham's faked affection for him. However, it's unclear if the brainwashing got to him, he's lying to get through the program like Graham is, or if he's genuinely into her.
* But I'm a Cheerleader: Everyone but Megan knows that she's gay. Also a very butch girl at the reeducation camp Megan's parents send her to "comes out" as straight, having been mistaken for gay just because of her looks.
* But I'm a Cheerleader is about a teenage girl accused of being lesbian by her family and sent to a camp to "cure" her. As it turns out, she realizes she is lesbian when she falls for another girl at the camp. Considered something of a period piece, as it was made in the early 2000s and set to an then-contemporary indie lesbian soundtrack.
* But I'm a Cheerleader presents its ex-gay program in such a manner, highlighting exactly how effective it is. (Hint: alcoholics remain alcoholics, no matter how much they avoid the drink.)
* But I'm a Cheerleader. The woman who runs True Directions (a camp that is meant to make homosexual teens straight), finds a matchbook for the gay bar some of the teens snuck out to under the main character's bed (the bar is called the Cocksucker).
* But I'm a Cheerleader. Though the bar in question is called the Cocksucker, the most that really happens there is relatively tame dancing. At least until Andre gets down on the floor.
* But I'm a Cheerleader: Very heavy-handed example. The protagonist is sent to a reform camp to "cure" her of her homosexuality. The color palette for male and female campers — clothes, props, and just about every aspect of their aesthetics — fits this trope to a "T" (not surprising, given the effort to push campers into stereotypical gender roles).
* But I'm a Cheerleader: While poking fun at the ridiculous notion of a camp for curing homosexuality, the movie shows a couple of girls releasing their sexual frustration. The girls are all given small electric prods to punish themselves when they have "impure" thoughts; one girl gets creative with hers. And a short scene of the main character rubbing herself through her nightgown almost got the film an NC-17 rating.

* But it's the Symbiotic Creature template from Savage Species that offers the most comprehensive version of this trope. The template combines two creatures into a single one, with the mental stats of the guest, the physical stats and HD of the host, and the skills, special abilities, and attacks of both. Because the cost of the template doesn't scale with the number/quality of features gained, it's one of the most abusable character creation options in the edition, but it also allows for some truly unique and flavorful monsters and characters.
* , but it still comes up. Robb Stark sends Northern reinforcements to the Wall to repel the Wildlings, and eventually abandons the war in the South and commits all available forces to the Wall. Most of the Night's Watch and Northerners understand they must work with the Free Folk to survive and while the Night's Watch mutiny does happen, it is quickly thwarted and the mutineers are executed. It's pointed out this still should not have happened though, as it cost lives that could not be afforded.

* But Not Too Bi: Bisexuality that is tilted to suit the sexuality and gender of the target audience
* But Not Too Bi: In an effort to appeal to broad audiences without offending too many people, authors impose limits on bisexual expression that are more strict than those on heterosexual expression. This lends support to the idea that being bi is less acceptable than being straight. For bisexuals, this usually works out so that their attraction to one sex (usually their own) is made much less significant to their attraction to the other.
* But Not Too Bi: Someone is bisexual but seems to favor a particular sex.
* But Not Too Black: It is far more acceptable for black men (or men of non-Caucasian descent) to be dark-skinned than black women who don't fit in the standard mold. Likewise, Caucasian men who are pale-skinned are derided more than fair-skinned Caucasian women due to pale skin being associated with not getting sun/staying outside or geekiness.
* But Not Too Black: Lighter-skinned members of a racial/ethnic minority with Eurocentric features are favored more than those that are darker skinned and have less Eurocentric features.
* But Not Too Black: Light skin is portrayed as superior to dark skin in dark-skinned ethnicities.
* But Not Too Evil: Toning down a character's evilness to avoid supposed bad influences.
* But Not Too Foreign: A character is foreign/mixed-blood, but has attributes of their native background toned down.

* But some cry about it throughout the entire series. Such as Claire Bennet: her ability is regeneration, and she cries about it nearly all throughout Season 1, mourning how she's the freakshow of the cheerleaders, despite the fact that nobody except for a very select few friends and family knows about her ability, nor is her ability all that apparent unless she severely wounds herself in plain sight. Then in Season 2, it gets even worse, because she cries that she can't go around showing her ability and how restrained she feels. Never mind the fact that the only way to show her ability to others is by injuring herself. Never mind the fact that all she has to do in order to avoid suspicion is lay off her masochistic tendencies. Then she realizes the possibility of the company finding her, because they'll run tests on her and stuff, poking and prodding her. She cries about this too, even though it seems that's all she wants to do to herself; if you find an episode with Claire in it in the first two seasons that doesn't involve a suicide attempt or self mutilation, you get a cookie. And then in Season 3, she

* Buttercup of all people cries until she makes a puddle in "Cover Up" after her blanket was lost.
* Buttercup's Baby, which was also tied up in legal red tape. These editions included notes and a sample chapter for the sequel, and Goldman promised to have the "legal troubles" resolved in time for the 35th anniversary (2009). Sadly, the author was blocked and admitted he hadn't been able to produce anything worthy of the original yet... and sadly, Goldman's death killed any chance of a sequel.
* Buttered Side Down The protagonist often runs into these, as part of his physics-defying shenanigans.
* Butter Face: A female or male with an attractive body but an ugly face.
* Butter Face: Character has a good-looking body, but a ghastly-looking face.
* Butterflies, Flowers, are totally cool with him getting all touchy-feely with their hot boss.
* Butterflies is a prime example of this: a classic sitcom of middle-class suburban manners in which an aloof dentist is married to a dissatisfied housewife who dithers on the brink of an affair. They have two sons, meant to be hip and fashionable, but who in 1974 speak youth-argot which would have been dated even in 1964.
* Butterflies, The BBC's deluxe version, the Affluent Suburbian Detached House, gets an outing, denoting this is a family headed by an extremely well-paid professional (Ben Parkinson is a dentist in private practice. In London.)
* Butterfly Affection is a story where the protagonist finds a bizarre, malformed, feminine creature with a twisted blend of human and insect features lying by the side of the road. He brings it home and looks after it, and it begins to grow into an increasingly human shape, so he names her Ageha. And as she continues to grow and learn and become increasingly human, their relationship takes some interesting turns...

* Butterfly Nets: Candace gets jealous when she spots Chase and Angela being friendly. It turns out that Angela was asking Chase advice on how to make herbal tea for Candace.
* Butterfly Nets when asking her sister about her and Angela's relationship, but it doesn't work on Luna because it's too on-the-nose:
* Butterfly of Death and Rebirth: Because of their famous metamorphosis, butterflies are used to symbolize life and death.
* Butterfly of Death and Rebirth: Butterflies used to symbolize death and/or rebirth.
* Butterfly of Doom: Changes to the historical past result in very wildly extreme or unpredictable outcomes for the future.
* Butterfly of Doom: Changing the past, even in a minor way, results in something terrible happening.
* Butterfly of Doom that can cause this effect in a TAS. Even the smallest changes in the early part of a run can cause many things to go different in later parts of the run, possibly requiring everything to be reworked to accommodate the change. This is less of a problem in games that don't use RNG often, or reset the RNG seed between levels.
* Butterfly of Doom, the protagonist realizes that he had possessed Hitler before he had acquired any anti-Semitic feelings, and his possession caused those feelings. His attempt to prevent the Holocaust directly caused it.
* Butterfly Soup is about a group of Asian-American girls who join their high school's baseball club.
* Butterfly Soup is a fan of butterfly knives. When she is asked to hand over the rest of her knives, she takes her jacket off and several knives fall to the floor.
* Butterfly Soup, Noelle and Akarsha use these while spying on Diya and Min's first date.
* Butterfly Soup's major themes is the budding relationship between newly-reunited childhood friends Diya and Min (the latter of whom is non-binary).
* butterfly wings (thus making Skyrim a place where steel ingots and five butterflies weigh the same). There are only five exceptions to the weight rule: lockpicks, of which you'll burn five or more per high-level lock, easy. Arrows are also weightless, so being a bad shot isn't so painful. Thirdly keys, which can't be dropped but can be stored in chests, corpses, and other containers. Fourthly notes, maps and other single paper objects are weightless as well though books do have weight. And lastly, the game's currency is also weightless. Thank Divines.

* Butters is sometimes interpreted as a trans girl due to being the most feminine boy of the group. Of particular note are "Marjorine," where Butters adopts the eponymous female persona to infiltrate a slumber party and acts quite confident after warming up to the girls, and "The Cissy," an episode about trans acceptance, where Butters dances around in a tutu at the end. Almost all depictions of trans girl Butters base her name and design off of Marjorine.

The Dwarves manage to find a spare key, and the Prince announces that it's been a long time coming, but he's finally found something worth fighting for. The Dwarves cheer, and the Prince... locks the door behind him and rushes off, leaving the Dwarves trapped in their own house. For the second time.
* but this time, wraps his tail around his mouth to keep himself from screaming.

* but this trope, to the point where it has racked up the most red cards in the Premier League era and has been referred to as "the most ill-disciplined and explosive fixture in the Premier League." This comment was made after a match in 2010 when both sides had a player sent off. Both sides are usually expected to collect at least two yellow cards apiece, and it is rare for a season to go by without at least one player being sent off in at least one of the two meetings. As of December 2020, the last fixture was a bad-tempered draw, where two Liverpool players (star centre-back Virgil van Dijk and new midfielder Thiago Alcântara) were very badly injured. The latter earned a rightful sending off. The former didn't even get a booking, as the referee and VAR official both seemed to be convinced that the fact that van Dijk was narrowly offside obviated the small matter of Everton goalkeeper Jordan Pickford almost destroying his leg.
* Butt Hole Road because the drivers thought the name to be a vulgar joke. Fortunately the name was changed to Archer Way in 2009, to honour the castle half a mile up the road.

* Butt-Monkey and his films less lighthearted in tone. His last film was supposed to continue this trend but he died just before filming started.
* Butt-Monkey and the best friend, Yuuji, is the one abusing and using said butt monkey. Then again, it is also unusual in that Yuuji is only a few steps short of being the lead guy himself; it wouldn't be a stretch at all to say that Akihisa and Yuuji are both the protagonist.

* Butt-Monkey because he's the best tool of the Lady (-Luck) in their eternal rivalry. So this rarely works out.
* Butt-Monkey. Charlie can't believe his eyes, and she's even more gorgeous in person than on film. As Charlie is fumbling for something to say, The Devil says: "Angelina! Welcome to Hell. I'd like you to meet your new husband!".
* Butt-Monkey Chuckie gets trapped in one of these when he and Tommy descend into the Pickles' basement in search of a lost toy.
* Butt-Monkey. Comedy Central said otherwise, leading the duo to retaliate by severely reducing Kenny's role in the next few seasons, although he regained more prominence later on.
* Butt-Monkey don't always love him back, but he doesn't let it discourage him.
* Butt-Monkey ends up covered in muck from time to time, usually while losing articles of clothing. This was double subverted in the episode in which she helps her students fight against bullies by knocking them in a big mud pit (all ends covered in the mud).
* Butt-Monkey establishes that Raikov survived, though not how he got out of the locker. (Perhaps Volgin sent out a search party for him at some point.)
* Butt-Monkey even if it would benefit them, and while they're often called arrogant and willing to kill millions of non-Eldar to save handfuls of their own, every other faction in the setting thinks the same way.
* Butt-Monkey font for the uniform numbers was considered a bit questionable.
* Butt-Monkey for hire). In both cases his luck completely turned around and he was exceedingly lucky—at least until his grumpy customers/spectators were out of eyesight. He had better success in another comic where he gave rich people expensive guided tours of his daily life, showing off how consistently unlucky he is to them to make them feel better about themselves.
* Butt-Monkey for his birthday. Also, he occasionally gets away with making a snide remark at Twilight.
* Butt-Monkey Gumshoe announces himself to be Phoenix's rival, who is both confused and flattered — but mostly amazed.
* Butt-Monkey Hans Moleman has an AMC Gremlin that blew up when he stopped the car mere inches from being smashed into a tree.
* Butt-Monkey, he has the most inconvenient form of blue magic - he needs to get hit with an attack to learn it. "Useful" spells he learned this way include "make Black Mage vomit up his intestines" and "rewrite reality according to Sarda's will".
* Butt-Monkey. However, there's a reason for this. Dan Shea, who plays Siler, is also the series' stunt co-ordinator (as well as Richard Dean Anderson's stunt double), so of course he does all the cool stunts.
* Butt-Monkey, inadvertently blows up the Earth at one point by plugging up a "ground-level volcano". With a giant inflatable cork.
* Butt-Monkey in the original series, then expect things to get much worse for them.
* Butt-Monkey in the series. Though much like Cody he becomes more liked in-universe as the series progresses.
* Butt-Monkey in the show, but in the fanbase, he's one of the most popularly quoted characters.
* Butt-Monkey Ironically, her doing this is what finally earns her Quain'tana's respect.
* Butt-Monkey is most often ridiculed, physically abused, or outright ignored (depending on which is funniest) by the rest of the cast, but especially the Western fandom, ironically or genuinely, adores him. This is even mentioned in an episode where Karamatsu himself says that the showrunners have been receiving letters from viewers that feel sorry for him.
* Butt-Monkey) is that she can claim the evil stepmother and her daughter (she cheats again and drowns them in a pitch pool - merry sleep, kids).
* Butt-Monkey job at the start of the episode and then re-hired at the end.
* Butt-Monkey Larry Butz leaves a love letter for his latest crush. However, being the doofus he is, he manages to write it so it looks like blackmail.

* Butt-Monkey: Male examples are often this because they do not conform to stereotypical masculinity.
* Butt-Monkey, Meg Griffin is a victim of a lot of slapstick like the male characters of the show.
* Butt-Monkey of Team Machine, on his own he is actually a highly competent police officer.
* Butt-Monkey of the batfamily, which is saying something since Jason got killed and Barbara crippled.)
* Butt-Monkey of the Seven Kingdoms, they are still fearsome warriors and unparalleled in the seafaring arts, despite their other failings. Stannis even admits in the History and Lore videos that individually they're the strongest warriors in Westeros and the only reason his victory over them was possible was because despite their naval superiority, they're too individualistic to fight cohesively as a group, which allowed him to destroy their proud Iron Fleet at Fair Isle during the Greyjoy Rebellion.
* Butt-Monkey of the skwadron who is constantly getting shot at by his own teammates (but doesn't seem to hold it against them).
* Butt-Monkey on his bandmates, and this will thoroughly humiliate the others.
* Butt-Monkey) outright made him hold up a lightning rod during a storm, which caused him to break his legs.
* Butt-Monkey role is upped quite a notch, he was a mere second from devouring Shanti.
* Butt Monkeys about their own flaws. The problem is that these revelations cause her brother and parents to start fighting endlessly with one another, prompting Meg to realize that she needs to be the target of the family's derision to keep them all alive. In other words, when she mentions the elephant, it goes on a rampage.
* Butt-Monkey: Someone is very unlucky vs. someone gets away with everything.
* Butt-Monkey: Sometimes, when a character's unchanging status quo makes them unlucky, however, this is not the only reason for a character to be unlucky.
* Butt Monkeys onwards) are also deposited at the Team Rocket headquarters to free up space for new Pokémon.
* Butt Monkeys, Sakura herself is frequently victim to cutesy slapstick.
* Butt-Monkey status. He gets a newer, brighter trenchcoat from someone important to him. Notably, he wears the old one during later investigations so that his new one doesn't get stained and dirty.
* Butt-Monkey territory. He is one of the few villains to be such a bastard, yet is so badass and monstrous that he just deserves respect. He was able to defeat almost all the main cast in one fell swoop.
* Butt-Monkey: The character's purpose is to constantly suffer misfortunes as a form of comic relief.
* Butt-Monkey them talk to the actors who play them, the actors are aghast. One tries to get permission to have the character dictate a treatise on the dignity of man, but he gets shot down by his boss.
* Butt-Monkey) the University of Kansas. This is despite the fact that Missouri has dominated Kansas in nearly everything else. Kansas could also qualify, as they have just three championships to show for their near semi-annual Final Four appearances.
* Butt-Monkey who handles thankless tasks. Only a few occasions prove him capable of creative, clever and shrewd action.
* Butt-Monkey. With the killer arrested, Dutch leaves and finds that the entire station has been watching through the interrogation room's cameras. Impressed, they applaud him. However, true to the trope, some of the killer's barbs struck a note, and as soon as he gets into his car, Dutch breaks down in tears.
* Butt-Monkey), with various such characters getting called out on it by Nick Sobotka, Herc, and Carver.
* Button Man, a disgraced button man can leave a "marker", i.e. a finger in lieu of being killed (unless something else has been agreed. However, a button man only has three markers, after that, it's death.
* Button Man: After Harry fatally wounds another Button Man, he tries to kill them both with a grenade, but Harry jumps out of the way in time.

* Button Man: After Harry kills another Button Man disguised as an FBI agent in a motel, Ugly John investigates the scene and kills the clerk who witnessed this too.
* Button Man: As a young girl, Adele witnesses a group of men murdering her father while she hides in the closet, apparently including a man named "Harry X". She grows up swearing to get revenge against her father's killers and Harry in particular.
* Button Man: At least one Button Man posed as an FBI officer during the killing game.
* Button Man: Button Men (participants in underground gladiatorial combats) are promised huge sums at the end of their "careers", but none of them are supposed to exit the Killing Game alive.
* Button Man: Convinced that the Voices will never stop following him unless they think he's already dead, Harry arranges his own "death" by cutting off his finger to a Button Man that is required to confirm a kill. He later kills the other for real just to be sure he wouldn't talk either.
* Button Man had a similar setup, albeit with chickens rather than pigs (it also involved a wood-chipper).
* Button Man, he proceeds to off them one by one. Especially the last eight who unite at his cabin in Montana are killed in alarmingly fast order.
* Button Man is about rich folks paying guys to kill each other. The main character's 'sponsor' demonstrates distinct, ah, excitement over the violence and bloodshed, although it doesn't appear to be sexual in nature.
* Button Man: Offing is standard procedure of dealing with anyone who knows too much about the killing game. Even Harry himself has tied up some loose ends of his own.
* Button Man: The events in "The Game" are essentially gladiatorial combats, usually with firearms in remote areas, and the rules decided by the Voices.
* Button Man: When Harry's leverage on Senator Jacklin becomes useless after the latter's death, the Voices organize a massive game by sending thirteen other Button Men to go after Harry in a cross-country hunt. They get into each other's way to get to Harry a bunch of times, which is handily exploited by him.
* Button Man where they take on other Button Men on behalf of their sponsors.
* Button's Adventures: Button gets a crippling one near-instantly after challenging Sweetie Belle to a milkshake drinking contest. He continues flailing on the floor and screaming for quite some time.
* Button's Adventures: Button is highly impulsive and forgetful of his belongings, but can also be held captivated by his gaming for long periods of time.
* Button's Adventures of the characters less than 4 hours after the episode aired.
* Buttons and Mindy short "Cat on a Hot Steel Beam" has Mindy chase a kitten into a construction site while Buttons chases after her. Eventually, some actual workmen find her and take her to safety,

* Buttons that can be pushed from a long distance with some high tech shuriken.
* buttons to roll down windows... not levers. Still, everyone knows what you mean, presumably because levers are recent enough that everyone driving today can remember the days when they were common and also lever controlled windows are still included on vehicles (mostly base-model trucks and very cheap subcompacts) without power windows installed.
* Button-type villain sealing someone in a cave. Each character delivers a maniacal laugh. The ad closes with a normal looking man driving a Volkswagen Golf GTE and pressing a button that switches the engine from electric to electric and petrol. He drives away with a quiet cackle with the slogan "A more responsible use of power".
* Butt Out cast the anti-smoking movement as being comprised of Gollum-like sub-humans led by Rob Reiner who plan to kill Cartman to further their campaign against Big Tobacco, whereas the local tobacco company itself is treated quite fairly and realistically, acknowledging the health risks of smoking but also that it's one's own choice to do so and no one forces them. With all that said, apparently the point of the episode wasn't to be pro-smoking—it's because Parker and Stone just think Rob Reiner is an ass. The demonization is played for laughs in any case.

* Butt Out", micropay games are condemned for exploiting people with addiction problems to make money and are compared to the alcohol industry.

* Butt-Ugly Martians can reach other solar systems and back in the space of an episode where as Emperor Bog's fleet spends the entire series journeying from Mars to Earth.
* Butt-Ugly Martians due to Stoat being one of the establishment's regular customers.
* Butt-Ugly Martians often had Dr. Damage insult Emperor Bog under his breath, then covering it up by claiming to have said something that rhymes when Bog gets mad at him. For example, the first episode has him call Bog a "royal nincompoop", which he covers up by claiming to have been talking about Bog's "loyal troops".
* Butt-Ugly Martians; the three Martians are able to become huge and powerful. Later, they soon possess in the incredibly powerful "Ultra Mode" - their enlarged size feels reduced slighty in this mode, but this mode surpasses "Butt-Kicking Mode" in strength and power.

Does the White Council, the strength of humanity to combat the terrors emerging from the night, exist as a bulwark against the Fae? Against the Outsiders? Against literal demons from hell? Against Fallen Angels? Against the many strains of Vampires? Against shape-shifting fear-feeding predators? Against Ghouls? No. The White Council of Wizards exists

* Buzzcocks, Pete Shelley played him a descending guitar riff and told him he could use it for his new band: It became the the chorus of "Shot By Both Sides" by Magazine, but Shelley also used it for the Buzzcocks song "Lipstick".
* Buzzcocks was released in 1979 instead of the first two albums as an introduction the band to American audiences, and in turn became a popular release in its own right.
* Buzzcocks' "What Do I Get?" was, weirdly enough, used in a Toyota SUV commercial. By reducing the song to its chorus of "what do I get/oh oh, what do I get" (the answer presumably being extra cup holders and plenty of cargo space), it omitted the song's whole unrequited-love theme, not to mention the fatalistic closing lyrics:

* BuzzFeed Unsolved dictates that the cases covered by them are left open-ended. Ryan's search for proof that ghouls and demons exist also has yet to be confirmed, though the evidence that he does manage to accumulate could point either way.
* BuzzFeed Unsolved discusses this trope frequently in the True Crime seasons since it's sometimes the reason why cases are unsolved in the first place. This was particularly notable in the Sodder Children episode, where the authorities located only a few miles away showed up hours after the house was set on fire, and in the episode about the Keddie Cabin Massacre, where it has often been theorized that the authorities were covering something up, due to the sheer negligence that was shown to the case.
* BuzzFeed Unsolved has a series dedicated to crimes both well known and obscure.

* BuzzFeed Unsolved. In a show that is ostensibly about capturing evidence of ghosts and other paranormal creatures, he has dismissed everything from flashlights turning on at command to voices being caught on EVP to footsteps being audibly heard during one of their investigations as simply coming from natural causes. It's become a running joke in the fandom that for him to actually believe in ghosts, they'd probably have to drop-kick him into the floor.
* BuzzFeed Unsolved is so popular. Disturbing murders and haunted places are interspersed with a lot of comedy, often at the genuinely scary situation's expense.
* BuzzFeed Unsolved of whom revealed who the killer was) sexually assaulted multiple teenage girls along with every other horrible thing he did is what causes Shane to outright say that McElroy deserved what he got. * Buzz Lightyear of Star Command) gets stolen (and thus no longer unites the minds of the LGMs), the LGMs turn into utter morons; apparently, only a few individuals actually specifically know any given thing, and the others know it by being connected to the ones that do. On top of that, they're completely uncoordinated without the Uni-Mind's "my best friend is also my right arm" factor.

* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command had the (ironically named) Gargantuns who were six inches tall. Dissenting Gargantuns would often times use normal-sized suits to blend in and attack their targets. (One such case featured framing Buzz Lightyear by wearing one of these suits and attempting to kill the Galactic President who was signing an important treaty. They then attempted a Xanatos Gambit by demonstrating a suit that looked like the President and pretending to use it to derail the peace treaty, all to get the real Buzz to shoot the real President.)
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command had the rest of the Space Rangers, who in all their appearances came across as a well-trained army of competent law-enforcers.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command has an entire planet that runs on this. Plus, their plants are sensitive to emotion. The happier you are, the better they work for you.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command has an intergenerational friendship between the adult Space Ranger Booster and a little alien girl named Becky, who affectionately refers to Booster as "Pickles".
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command has just about every type of high-tech door/hatch you could think of, plus the occasional doorknob.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command has the heroes encounter their alternates from another dimension (where the biggest difference was that Buzz himself was evil). XR warns the team to avoid touching their counterparts — just as the two Boosters greet each other with a hug. When nothing happens, XR remarks on the trope not applying.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command has the Space Ranger Mission Manual. A few of the mentioned rules include the following:
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command has this line from "Haunted Moon" when Buzz finds an old ship after his was destroyed during a mission to deflect a comet:
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command: "Haunted Moon" had Team Lightyear investigate a ghost sighting that was actually the astral projection of a man named Cooley who was frozen for 50 years.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command He's conniving, cowardly, and constantly hitting on girls, both organic and mechanical. Nonetheless, he's still a hero when the chips are down.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command. He won't allow himself to take on another partner, but when he's repeatedly reminded of Star Command regulations requiring him to have a partner, he constantly has to remind everyone that he knows the regulations perfectly well; he wrote half of them, and the rules apply to everyone equally. Well, everyone except him, as Mira accuses him of doing by refusing to take on another partner.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command his genetics a little bit. The catch (of which Zurg is fond) is that the procedure to "power-up" Torque is going to hurt. Very hurt. Very very hurt. Zurg warns Torque just before the operating machinery begins its work; however, the machinery has already been activated and operates very loudly, and Torque can't hear him:
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command home planet, is dedicated entirely to agriculture, resembling the American Midwest and specializing in growing gigantic produce, with the majority of the inhabitants being farmers. It provides the food supplies for Capital Planet. Booster first met Buzz when Zurg tried to steal Jo-ad's entire crop so that he could starve them into submission.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command "Hot Rockets!" also qualifies as some form of this trope.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command in an alternate universe, in which Buzz is a supervillain and Zurg is a fry cook at a diner.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command: Initially appearing to be several eyeless, multi-limbed, serpentine monsters emerging from a series of holes, later those serpents are revealed to be the fingers of a kaiju-sized Slag Monster.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command: In one episode, Buzz is trying to take control of a derelict ship. The first button he presses activates the turn signal. He then deploys the cup holder. After pressing every other button and failing to accomplish anything (although he does make the wipers work), he finds the crew. Turns out the "cup holder" is actually the steering wheel.

* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command: In the episode, "Stranger Invasion", this happens to Buzz after Zurg punches him , attempting to make him fall to his death, after tricking him by telling him he [Zurg] is his [Buzz]'s father.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command. In the pilot movie, he starts as being the janitor of Star Command's headquarters station and a major fan of the Space Rangers (Buzz especially) and is studying the manual so that one day he can take and pass the Academy entrance exam. Due to various hijinx, he ends up with Buzz and new ranger Mira Nova on Planet Z and helps them thwart Evil Emperor Zurg's scheme, leading to him being made a Space Ranger himself.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command is a buddy for his whole team and Buzz Lightyear in particular (with a few episodes featuring solely him and Buzz against the villains).
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command is a dedicated, if misguided and aggressive, space ranger... until she meets Zim, and goes over to the side of the planet-conquering Irken Empire.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command. It gets a little headscratch-ey, but the above mention is canon because of this show, which is the derivative work and... yeah, just yeah.) On the other hand, Zurg was implied to have been fooling around, as he then strikes a stunned Buzz and states "Psyche! Made ya look!"
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command—her foppish fiancé has to complete Star Command Basic Training—but to her horror, he passes with flying colors. Fortunately for her, he decides to become a Space Ranger rather than settle down.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command. Mira gets addicted to phasing through nuclear cores, which ups her power and speed to somewhere in the range of Superman and Flash. It's also a subversion, as she suffers radiation withdrawal, complete with unkempt hair, dark circles under her eyes, and general creepiness.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command of his own galactic empire, which is so powerful that the idea of Star Command launching a full assault is met with skepticism from Buzz. However, Zurg has some very fond memories of his Nana Zurg, who was plenty evil as well and always told him sound advice in order to get the work done. He also seemed to have loved his mother, considering his dream about her.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, pancake batter... the less sense it makes, the better.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command pilot movie, Booster catches XR this way.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, plasma cannons are outlawed by the Galactic Alliance. When Warp Darkmatter fought Buzz with one, the latter commented on it being added to his list of charges.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command possess the heroes by latching onto the back of their necks and manipulating the synapses between their host's primary emotions and impulsive, spontaneous action decisions. They increase their threat manifold by reproducing asexually and very, very quickly.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command remains unexplained) and close the loop, as remembered by Warp in the climax.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, resulting in a rather bizarre personality and unusual components from then on.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command role and the role of the Captain is assumed by Woody. While Woody and Buzz are equals, it is Woody who is the commander in chief of the green army men and who coordinates missions and projects.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command. Since they don't feel tortured, that plan failed. This is subverted later on in the episode though, as XR's stretching eventually turns incredibly painful while Mira and Booster find their helplessness far less fun when Star Command is about to be destroyed.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, the good guys are given the choice between a mass assault vs. sending in one ship with only a few people. The latter is ultimately chosen, on the reasoning that it would be more stealthy.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, the president of the galaxy has two mouths, one atop the other. Her whole race has this trait, but she's the most frequently seen.

* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command (the same species as the one from Star Command), and he delivers presents using a device that stops time for everyone but its user.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command (the top of his head is never uncovered and his planet of origin never revealed), but his three teammates are clearly not human at all.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command: This happens once, temporarily. Buzz and Mira are fused together into a blob-thing with eyestalks and two tongues, and their "internal arguments" form much of the dialogue in the episode.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command. This is funnier because his voice actor is actually named Larry.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command. Warp also has an artificial right hand.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command was based on. It later got turned into a real series.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command was built before XR; XL had villainous inclinations.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, when Mira is hitching a ride inside Buzz's head:
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, when the crew of the 42 are tracking down a fugitive Buzz on Trade World.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, when Warp is complaining to Buzz that they looked everywhere and haven't found the Little Green Men, a Crater Viper appears behind his back. Noticing Buzz's horrified reaction, Warp points behind him and says "There's something really bad behind me, isn't there?" The viper even seems to nod in confirmation before lunging at him.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, where everyone is dressed like this.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command), which happens to be an awful lot like 1950's New Mexico.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, who used to masquerade as a bounty hunter to help Zurg's minions escape and even has a laser in his peg leg.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command with giant extremists of the planet (ironically named) Gargantua. The subversion comes through the fact that the natural height of a Gargantuan is six inches and the 6 foot terrorists are actually turning off the tech that the heroes are using to avoid this problem in their natural height (earlier, Booster was a little upset that his seat for a ceremony was a bank).
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, XR has at least 2 instances of this:
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command XR has had files he's not supposed to have on his brain chip throughout the episode. At the end he deletes them. However, he also erases most of his IQ by mistake.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, Zurg attacks the planet of Tangea and kidnaps their king. The Tangean response? To immediately form a committee to evaluate the situation. The "committee" is later seen preparing a letter to send to Zurg and one of them asks if "displeasure" is too harsh a word.
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command, Zurg's minions are brains in jars (who frequently mention this situation when the boss complains).
* Buzz Lightyear of Star Command. Zurg starts yelling at the underlings who cooked up this cockamamie scheme.
* Buzz Lightyear's first and greatest love will always be to Star Command and the fight against evil.
* Buzz Lightyear. The item was obviously wrong, as it attributed the "quote" to "Admiral" Kirk (a rank Kirk didn't hold in the series), and was finally tracked down to a fanon bumper sticker.

* Buzz Sawyer promo where he just starts laughing for no discernible reason and just won't stop.
* Buzz's is "I will go sailing no more", a somber song of Buzz (painfully) coming to terms with he's not a space ranger, just a toy.
* Buzz to Kevin. The reason why the family gets mad at Kevin at the beginning of both movies is because of something Buzz did to pick on Kevin and make him mad; eating Kevin's cheese-only pizza in the first movie and pulling a prank on him at the school's Christmas concert in the second. Even after Kevin is accidentally left behind, everyone shows concern for him being alone at home. Everyone except Buzz, who is still entirely unsympathetic to him.

* Byakuya is fighting a villain that can control Byakuya's limbs. Zommari first attempts to control Byakuya's left leg. Byakuya doesn't hesitate to sever the tendons and muscles of his own leg to render his limb useless. When Zommari tries to take advantage of the fact Byakuya's now stuck fighting him one-legged, he learns Byakuya's speed is still incredible but manages to take control of Byakuya's left hand and tries to strangle Byakuya with his own hand. Byakuya again doesn't hesitate and immediately severs the tendons and muscles in his left hand as well. Byakuya's then forced to finish the fight one-legged and one-armed.
* Byakuya Ishigami, Senku's father, manages this many times over. After all of humanity is turned to stone, Byakuya is one of only a half dozen survivors. He and his fellow survivors establish a community that lasts into the story's present day, 3,700 years later. He devises stories designed primarily to teach his descendants to survive in the stone world. However, the 100 Tales Byakuya created also serve another purpose. That purpose is to deliver a message to his son, Senku, who he has absolute faith will eventually break out of the stone and restart humanity. Byakuya's 100 Tales ensure that Senku will have a village of potential allies ready to go when he arrives and allows him to leave a message of encouragement for Senku.
* Byakuya Kuchiki and Hisana. Hisana was a commoner from one of the worst Rukongai districts while Byakuya was a noble from one of the four most powerful and highly ranked noble houses in Soul Society. Singers like these may sound 'operatic' to non-opera fans, but they are NOT opera singers. They are classical crossover singers, and to actual Opera fans, they are hair-rippingly maddening. Especially because many of them have neither the vocal type nor the skill to sing the opera snippets they choose properly. On the other hand Germany remains the most powerful economy of Europe, with the biggest population of any Western European nation and these days a model for a liberal constitutional Europe. In general, the division of Germany and new constitution of Japan that denounced militarism after World War II was an attempt by the allies to invoke this trope on purpose as the USSR and USA became the undisputed hegemons. A reunified Germany was met with some resistance from French and British leaders who feared becoming this trope in Europe after decades of trying to overshadow Germany.

* By December, a small number of German units reached the suburbs of Moscow, where they could supposedly see the light reflecting off the roofs of buildings in the Kremlin. But the bulk of forces were not this far forward, and the tantalizing glimpse of victory would turn out to be a mirage: Germany’s soldiers were totally worn out, and in danger of freezing to death as the temperature plummeted because winter clothing couldn’t be transported from Germany to the front; the supply chain for getting food and ammo to the frontline troops had broken down; Moscow had been heavily fortified against the anticipated attack; and the Red Army had finally succeeded in pulling itself together. When the Germans faltered, the Soviets launched a devastating counterattack that came close to destroying the overextended Germans outside of Moscow, and inflicted the kind of mass casualties that the Germans had so far managed to avoid. Hell, even if the Germans somehow

* By early 1942, the US had already broken the Imperial Japanese Navy's JN-25 codes, and they found out that they were planning an operation around "Objective AF". Since the lettered code names assigned to objectives were separate from the JN-25 code itself, they didn't actually know where "AF" was, but from context suspected it could be Midway Island, containing a strategically important submarine base and airfield. Certain of their intel but needing an example to show to the brass, they had their base at Midway begin sending false messages saying that its distillation plant had been damaged and that they were short on water. When Japanese messages began stating that "AF" was short on water, the US had their proof, giving them the element of surprise that the US utilized to great effect at the Battle of Midway that June. The result was the loss of four Japanese carriers to one American one, and from that point forward, Japan was on the defensive in the Pacific War.

However, he willingly lets her go off to get married and they both go their separate ways as friends.
* Byronic Hero archetype well what his messy self-destructive love life and passive-aggressive arm's-length dynamic with his sidekicks, whereas Superman is extroverted in both his superhero and civilian identities, usually engages in long-term relationships and friendships and is loyal to his roots and community.
* Byronic Hero: Darker versions of this trope still tend to have sympathetic or admirable qualities and a lot of inner turmoil and conflict.
* Byronic Hero, from the fact that they are literally fighting for each others' homelands, against their own, but that falls apart in that none of the other Britannian or Japanese characters are clear-cut one or the other way, either.
* Byronic Hero, inciting riots and cutting off their Brittanian support. This plan went very smoothly because he managed to steal it from a third opponent without that third opponent ever telling something about it, who had no choice but to support Lelouch after this fight. Using politics he sidelined one bad empire, destroyed a second one, and got the support of the third one.
* Byronic Hero rather than a traditional superhero, it is kind of odd that no other characters think "superhero" when they see him.
* Byronic Hero: Some stories have "heroes" with barely-controlled vices. Expect them to kill people in a fit of rage, and then lament upon it when their clarity return. This usually exist in older works.
* Byronic Hero: THE Romantic Trope. A strongly individualistic figure who is driven by passion, misunderstood by society, and rebellious against conventions.
* Byronic Hero: This hero is cynical, brooding, and deeply-flawed, but is somewhat sympathetic.
* Byronic Hero: Troubled and brooding, with a passion that inevitably causes trouble.
* Byronic Hero who commits some pretty appalling crimes just so he can beat Near in catching Kira, yet he is a pretty handsome guy to start with. His face gets scarred later on, but even then he is arguably still pretty attractive.
* Byronic Hero who lacks the (few) redeeming qualities of the original character.
* Byronic horror he's pitted against this week, gives it a big grin and offers it a jelly baby.
* Byron is a relatively minor but understandable example when it comes to his son, Roark. After hearing that a single Galactic admin managed to beat two other Gym Leaders and the girl who had been defeating Gym Leaders, he is very reluctant to send his son out to battle, even though it's kind of the job of Gym Leaders here to fight terrorist groups. Of course, later on, Roark is there to fight Team Galactic with the other Leaders at the top of Mt. Coronet, with Byron providing support and healing items to everyone from down below.

* By Royal Command, Bond shoots the lock to his cell, timing the shot with the hourly blast from a cannon outside.
* By Royal Command, Trixie refuses to accept that Twilight Sparkle is now a princess. Even though a profiling analysis of the incredibly lewd letter (with illegible signature) that kicks off the plot reveals roughly half a dozen clues marking her as the writer. And Equestria's other three princesses each confirm that they didn't write it. And Celestia insists on bringing Trixie to Ponyville to settle the issue. And Pinkie Pie says "Twilight became a princess". Even when Trixie sees Twilight's new appearance, wings and all, she's holding on to the hope that it might all be a crazy dream.
* By Royal Command, Trixie turns out to be an excellent profiler and personality reader, as part of her chosen occupation. When she receives an incredibly indecent letter without readable signature and the claim of being written by a princess, Celestia asks her what she could determine about the author—Trixie determines that the writer is female, extremely educated, was socially undeveloped for most her life and only lately started to develop interpersonal relationships outside of her immediate family, and has no sexual experience whatsoever. It doesn't take much work for Celestia to figure out who that is.

* By season 2, Shades regularly uses the back door to let himself in when he needs to talk to Mariah. This results in a hilarious moment where he's lurking in the entryway to interrupt Mariah while she's having breakfast with Tilda, and Tilda is the first to take notice. Mariah chides Shades with, "You need to stop showing up like this!"
* By season 5, this trope into overdrive as humans are killing angels wholesale with a different magic knife. It even gets to the point where Sam and Dean can kill low-level gods with relative ease.
* By Season 7, Daenerys' court are clearly the most powerful faction on the show (with the possible exception of the White Walkers) once they are allied with the Starks to defeat the Northern threat. However, multiple characters note that if Daenerys herself (the only one capable of controlling her dragons and commanding the Dothraki) is killed, her alliance will crumble instantly. Tyrion advises against Daenerys fighting in the field for this very reason. In Episode 4 of Season 7, Jaime Lannister demonstrates Daenerys' importance when he initiates a suicidal charge against her for the chance to end the war between Daenerys's faction and the Lannisters.
* By season 8, Frasier's complaints about his latest romantic disaster have become so common his family say they've heard it all before. By season 11, they can recite them along with Frasier.
* By season 8 the show's writers clearly became aware of this problem after the Lucifer arc, so while angels are still getting killed by the thousands off-screen, this trope seems to have slowed down.
* By season seven, a broken Tony has discovered the true identity to the conspiracy that led to the death of his family and his ties to the government, leading him to resort to terrorism in order to get the guy. Jack rightfully sees Tony as a traitor to his country betraying the memory of his loved ones, and Tony in turn sees Jack as nothing but a sellout and a hypocrite by continuing to work with the same government they've both lost faith in.
* By Season Two, Kara mutually breaks up with James and Winn's crush on her has petered out, so she becomes this with both men.
* By season two, the story has started to edge into the "tragic" sub-category, as the child heroes have to confront the death and trauma that comes from their job.
* By series end, Twilight has become the Jesus in the picture, having taken Celestia's and Luna's place as Equestria's ruler and raiser of the Sun and Moon, with her new student Luster Dawn (and all her old friends) being the pals.

* By that point, most of the Imperial army was defeated so the militia can handle their remnants. And if the Universal Conscription is anything to go by, I'm guessing that the bulk of Gallia's military might is in their militia anyway, which explains why the regular army doesn't get anywhere much while the militia does the heavy lifting.
* By that proxy, the acts of The Strongest Mega Evolution are often criticized for their pacing problems on their special format.
* By that same token, Arcadia in the sequel is much different. Magic and magical creates were everywhere in the first game. However, in-between the games, a horde has devastated the land, leaving it vulnerable to the magic-hating Azadi Empire, who chase away the horde but refuse to leave afterwards. All magic-users and magical creates are herded into ghettos. This is despite the fact that all Azadi "inventions" are, obviously,
* By that time, Straker was a "Commander" with colonels and naval Captains as subordinates. This Commander-is-the-boss idea occurs in many of the Gerry Anderson series.

* By the end of Part 1, Lisa doesn't want to be station manager again due to the pressure and craziness of the office. She's willing to let Dave takeover again, but he doesn't want the job by this point. (He reasons that since his demotion, he's happier and actually enjoys coming to work.) So, the trope really kicks into gear in Part 2, where Jimmy decides to hold an election for station manager. Both candidates actively try to fail (openly expressing their desire to lose, giving ridiculous answers to questions, etc.). Ultimately, Lisa wins the election, but Jimmy declares Dave "the new boss"—much to everyone's confusion.
* By the end of second season, Macbeth and Goliath manage to drop their respective beefs, but Demona never lets go of her vendetta against humanity, and she in turn is pursued by a family of Hunters sworn to kill her.
* By the end of the 1960's, The Turtles were unhappy at their record label, White Whale, who wanted commercial, feel-good sunshine pop hits like "Happy Together" and "She'd Rather Be With Me", while the band wanted to explore concept albums and more ambitious music. The band decided to

* By the end of the series, it becomes clear, through secondary characters, that good and evil exist in all houses. It's just that ambition is a trait that can lead to villainy if not properly handled and limited, which explains why many shady individuals hail from Slytherin. Also visionary criminals are more likely to become famous rather than petty and insignificant ones.
* By the end of the series, Merlin has ceased caring about anything that's not Arthur, to the point of wild mood swings, irrational and irritable behavior, and selling out his people. Many have called his behavior obsessive.
* By the end of the series, Simon becomes so manly that a nice outfit and ridiculous-looking pair of sunglasses spontaneously generates on his body, right in time for the final battle.
* By the end of the speech, though, it's touched on touching. House says, essentially, that the person he is — good and bad — is because of his father.
* By the end of the story, the Mutants, the most violent and vicious street gang in Gotham, join Batman to become his trainees and keep the city safe. Half of them rebrand themselves as "The Sons of Batman" even before Batman officially recruits them.
* By the end of the video, Mr. Goodman reveals that he believes in his subtraction reasoning, and it is even named "Jeffy's Law of Subtraction", leading the whole world into believing Jeffy as well.
* By the end of the Volume, Ironwood has devolved into a paranoid dictator, willing to abandon the rest of the kingdom and all of Remnant just to hide Atlas from Salem's forces, and issues arrests on the heroes just for disagreeing with his heartless plans. When Oscar points out that Ironwood's current mentality makes him just as bad as Salem, Ironwood just shoots him.

* By the end of the Western Roman Empire, Romans were typically dressed, armed and armored more like Vikings than like Romans during the late Republic and early Imperial (Principate) period. * By the season two finale, Zuko improves his life by listening to Iroh, adopts a positive outlook and more or less giving up his chase for the Avatar.
* By the second time Alberto being a wereman is known, to the point he'll have Moses tie him up to a tree and muzzle him hours before the full moon so he won't terrorize the surroundings. This time however he doesn't turn into a bureaucrat but into a neo-nazi that spouts racist insults... And as Moses has forgot to muzzle him,

* By the sequel, his face is misshapen from multiple shots. When Jay shoots him to keep him from talking about Kay, he complains that nothing's going to taste right since it was "right in the piehole".
* By the Shores of Silver Lake when Mr. and Mrs. Boast show up unexpectedly on Christmas Eve. Ma gives Mr. Boast a pair of wristlets she had made for Pa and Mrs. Boast her Sunday handkerchief. The wristlets sound fine, but one hopes Ma considered the handkerchief too nice to actually use.
* By the start of season 6, Jerry Edgar is helping out Internal Affairs with their investigation into Ray Marcos and Daniel Arias, the corrupt cops who set up Edgar's informant Gary Wise to be murdered in season 5. The investigation is quickly complicated when the corrupt cops are murdered by the Jamaican gang that employs them for becoming a liability.

* By the start of the sixth book, the only faction leaders in Westeros who are both unambiguously villainous and powerful enough to actually matter are Roose Bolton and Euron Greyjoy. Thus, they move from side villains in previous books to the main antagonists of
* By the strategy-tactics divide explained above, Taichi Yagami is a tactician, while his
* By The Sword: After one battle, there's a scene where Kerowyn is going down the list of dead Sunbolts and marking the (few) names she needs to "write the letter" for.
* By the Sword and who regards his father with some disdain because "he spent half his life winning fencing championships and then got himself killed the one time he was in a fight that really mattered".
* By the Sword, as they follow the rules of fencing rather closely, and are trying to follow the rules of the sport, not the actual rules of combat. The real duel at the end is an actual swordfight, with both combatants trying to kill each other, and making stabs into each other, until the duel ends.
* By The Sword features another example: the story of "Kerowyn's Ride" achieves remarkably widespread popularity across a number of countries, but the events of the eponymous ride - in which tomboy Kerowyn set out to rescue her younger brother's fiancee after her home was attacked, her father killed, her brother gravely injured and his fiancee kidnapped - are a source of some embarrassment to the rest of that end of her family. It's not good when your older sister has to rescue your bride for you, after all.
* By the Sword, Kero's training with Tarma begins with a whole lot of chopping wood. She doesn't seem to resent it, but she does eventually get curious when Tarma starts having her chop wood that's been set up in oddly specific configurations, at which point Tarma finally gets around to explaining the specific purpose of the exercise: to develop the specific muscle groups that she'll be using to swing a sword.
* By The Sword, Kerowyn becomes the the leader of the Skybolts, a bonded mercenary company. At the end of the book, the Skybolts negotiate a permanent contract with Valdemar and become part of the army.
* By the Sword, Kerowyn's first real boyfriend, Prince Daren, assumes she'll give up her planned career and marry him. Her wise grandmother says the trope name word-for-word, explaining that Daren's not emotionally mature yet. They break it off but remain friends.
* By the Sword, she starts off as rather subpar, but under Suba's training, is able to beat Villard's star pupil Jim Trebor in a competition bout.
* By the Sword, the noble mercenary captain Kerowyn offers her company a vote: to stay and help the Valdemarans against overwhelming odds or to work their way to the edge of the fighting and try to escape. Every single member votes to stay.
* By the Sword, the Skybolts mercenary company falls under the command of a woman named Ardana when the Captain and most of the leaders are killed, leaving her the top-ranked person standing. She's incompetent to run the company but too proud to step down, nearly getting everyone killed.
* By the Sword where Kero tells her brother's betrothed (whom she had just rescued from a wizard and a large creature she was going to be fed to) to slit her skirts so she need not ride sidesaddle. The latter was horrified about the prospect of being so "unwomanly" until Kero made an observation:
* By the Tail: Ivory Monroe of Melody's is most definitely this. She talks like a valley girl, down to her rather frequent use of the word "like", and isn't really all that bright.

* By the third game, Tali'Zorah becomes one of five Admirals of the Quarian Migrant Fleet. She had been groomed toward the position previously held by her father well in advance.

* By the third season, about seven years have passed in-series, and all of the characters have picked up each others' catchphrases as a sort of in-joke. Artemis says "Hello, Megan!" when she realizes things and Oracle uses Impulse's
* By the third season finale, fans have come to expect some huge cliffhanger twist. Jack enters his car, there's a long silence as the viewer waits expectantly... and then Jack breaks down crying. Whoa.
* By the third story arc, the NerveGear has been replaced by the AmuSphere, which omits the brain-frying microwave system exploited in the first story. The plot therefore revolves around figuring out how one particular player in the VR game

* By the time a rescue chopper arrives, everyone could already be dead.
* By the time Ash actually defeats a Champion (Iris, one of his former companions) in battle, Ash had already became a Champion himself.
* By the time Ellie gets captured by the cannibals, she's become a right
* By the time Grand Theft Auto IV was released, enough time had passed, and since the previous Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas featured significantly more accurate versions of LA, San Francisco and Las Vegas, the new incarnation of Liberty featured plenty of parodies and depictions of New York City (and the surrounding area, such as Alderney being based on the sections of New Jersey closest to NYC). Rockstar went so far as to directly mimic famous landmarks and the current NYPD color/font scheme of their cars and the officers that drive them. If you really want to see this in action, head to Algonquin (Manhattan), then to Star Junction (Times Square) and take in the scenery for a little while - the attention to detail is definitely worth taking some time out of your playthrough to watch up close.

* By the time of Book Four, Asami has built a statue of Korra herself in the middle of Republic City's central park (now named "Avatar Korra Park"), as part of the revamp of the city's infrastructure.
* By the time of Columbus (1492) most educated people understood the Earth was round. There was less fear of Columbus sailing off the edge of the world than the simple fact that he was sailing into
* By the time of manga chapter 550 his clones have received a sizeable upgrade, becoming capable of taking out Kage-level opponents on their own without the original present.
* By the time of the Battle of Stalingrad, political officers were much weaker, but remained influential enough to have meaningful impact. Nikita Khrushchev, the chief political commissar during the Battle of Stalingrad comes halfway between Popel and the stereotype of incompetent commissars. While not militarily skilled and not particularly involved in the military aspects of the battle, his political skills contributed substantially to keeping up the morale of both soldiers and civilians. It certainly contributed to his rise as the leader of Soviet Union after the war.
* By the time of the Buu Saga, he's neglected training for seven years. He struggles against Dabura, a fighter he could easily have defeated had he kept in shape, and is no match for Majin Buu, who beats him so brutally that his loved ones and friends believe him dead. He makes up for it after the Old Kai unlocks all of his hidden power.
* By the time of the events of the show, Sei Iori has become a world-famous gunpla battler and model builder. In fact, the model that protagonist Sekai uses is just a prototype of one of Sei's works, yet it performs better than most models.
* By the time of the fifth season, Lily appears to be the only one who likes

Luan's April Fool's pranks, and devises a plan by swapping places with Charles and booby-trapping the whole house to convince Luan to come out of her
* By the time of the Fourth Shinobi War, Naruto himself is not only a legend in Konoha but is even known to shinobi from other villages.
* By the time of the spinoffs, the franchise was so large that any pilot was pretty much guaranteed a green light for a season. In fact,

* By the time Quinlan gets to them, they're infected and turning into Strigoi. He's forced to kill both of them before the transformation can finish.
* By the time Season 7 rolls around, copious amounts of world-hopping between Another Realm, the Wish Realm, the Enchanted Forest, Wonderland, and Oz is required to make any sense of the fantasy-world backstory, but it's become such a mundane ability that much of it is either unexplained or hand-waved.
* By the time Shadowfall kicks in, the Helghast are stand-ins for Communist East Germany, but still retain their third reich belief in racial purity.
* By the time she is an old woman, Rowan herself has lost an eye that she covers with a black eyepatch as a result of her repeated fights against werewolves.
* By the time she's seventeen, Ayla is nearly six feet tall and regarded as very attractive (though she thinks she's "big and ugly", due to the different beauty standards of the Clan). She was actually based upon a real skeleton of an unusually tall Cro-Magnon woman found in France. In the film adaptation of
* By the time Taft left the presidency and was later appointed to the Supreme Court, he actually lost a good deal of weight, leading some to believe that it was due to stress; he was much happier as Chief Justice than as President.
* By the time the band changed labels from RCA to Arista in 1977, one condition of their new contract was that no more concept albums would be produced.

* By the time the movie is set, the borders between Germania and the Roman Empire were firmly established as the Rhine and Danube rivers and had been for over 150 years. There were raids in both directions, but not an ongoing war of conquest. The Marcomannic Wars did rage for much of Marcus Aurelius' reign, and he was in the middle of a successful campaign in Germania when he died. This bit's really just an oversimplification rather than made up.

* By The Waters Of Babylon: A statue of George Washington and Federal Hall remain standing in New York City (not that the protagonists recognizes them as such) when it's mostly in ruins, although both are quite worn down, with only fragments from their inscriptions left.
* By The Waters Of Babylon: A war called the "Great Burning" later destroyed the US at some point in the past, with only ruins left and tribal humans surviving with myths surrounding what happened.
* By The Waters Of Babylon. However, the protagonist can only call Washington "Ashing", as only that much of the inscription on the statue is left intact. He assumes that "Ashing" is a god, and offers a brief prayer to him out of respect.

* By The Waters Of Babylon: John finds food from prior to the fall of the US which is still edible somehow. He also then enters a building while in the ruins of New York City which has intact books and other furnishings. With his father he'd already found books in other houses as well (from which they know how to read English). Given the state of things which he describes (the city is overgrown by plants, stone inscriptions worn away, not to mention it also suffering destruction from the war) this would not be realistic. Books rot, and food would have long since decayed (or been eaten by animals), even if kept in jars, since this implies that the fall was centuries before.
* By The Waters Of Babylon: John surveys a statue of George Washington (which reads only "Ashing" in the future) along with Federal Hall, where only "Ubtreas" is left of its inscription. He is moved by these remnants from the past "gods", who built up a great civilization but then destroyed themselves in a war, before realizing they were human like him, and fell due to their hubris, too much knowledge gained quickly having undone them.
* By The Waters Of Babylon. The protagonist John decides that once he's the priest of his tribe "We must build again" though.
* By the Waters of Babylon (which his tribe believes to be the former home of the gods) and prays to a statue of George Washington.
* By the Way album, with the former released as a single. The drummer Chad Smith admitted during a Reddit AMA that there were at least a few studio recordings from those sessions that haven't been released, and that they were waiting for the right time to do so.

* By the WWI standards, she was the pinnacle of heavy tank development. She was armed with a primary 75mm gun in rotating turret, four sponson mounted machine guns and one rear-mounted machinegun turret. Her frontal armor could shrug off direct hits by any German field gun (which were. basically, capable of disabling any other tank). Her terrain-crossing abilities are impressive even today; she was capalbe to climb 1,2 meter wall, cross the four-meters wide anti-tank moats and due to sheer mass & size could break nearly everything that came on her way. Internally, she was ergonomically thought-out well, both her engines could be serviced from inside, and her electric transmission allowed her to move (albeit very slowly) even if one of her engines break down - pretty common problem for WWI tanks!

Then Raymond comes to pick her up, and he got her medical assistance in the time skip, but she manages to kill a guy by breaking his neck with his own tie merely
* By this point, OG has arguably become the most successful Dota 2 team of all time, having won 4 Majors and a TI, and so far, they are the only ones to have won a TI and more than one Major (the only other team having won a TI and a Major is Team Liquid). The team has gone through huge success in the 4 Major wins and the downs of TI6 and TI7, but now they have won The International. The only team who can be able to surpass that level of success is Virtus.pro if they can win TI9 (what's even more amazing if they do so is the fact that the current VP roster (except for RodjER as he had joined them in February 2018) had stayed together for two years and counting).

* by virtue of being a vampire, has his Dead Apostle side. It's more of a berserk mode, but an alternate future version of him, DA!Haru showcases what it could have made him into if he ever let it get out of control.
* By virtue of being produced in English, the film inverts the original novel by Jules Verne, where Passepartout is a funny person who happens to be French - like the author and most of the original readers - and Phileas Fogg is the eccentric, if not uproariously funny foreigner.

* By virtue of his grudge against Murphy and his nearly-successful attempt in the pilot, "Pudface" Morgan wants to be this.
* By virtue of using bronze-age tactics against humans, the demons can come off as this. * Byzantine Emperor Isaakios II adored his brother Alexios and gave him many honors. Alexios repaid him by staging a coup, putting out his brother's eyes, imprisoning him, and crowning himself emperor as Alexios III. Isaakios' teenage son managed to escape his uncle's tyranny and showed back up on his doorstep with an army:
* Byzantine Empire after major defeats and setbacks, until of course they stopped doing that in the 1450s. One especially famous one was the Battle of Manzikert in 1071, when the Seljuk Turks routed the much larger Roman army and captured Emperor Romanos IV Diogenes. What was particularly surprising was that the Sultan Alp-Arslan hadn't even intended to fight the Byzantine Empire, being more concerned with fighting Egypt, and was very surprised when he realised he'd captured the Emperor, releasing him not long afterwards (though the Emperor's capture gave an opportunity for his stepson's family to depose him). While modern scholars don't consider it a "turning point" anymore, the disaster at Manzikert led to the loss of most of Anatolia (some parts of which irrevocably) and plunging the Empire into a series of civil wars. Until the end of the Empire in 1453 Manzikert was widely known as "that day" and considered one of the most shameful days of the Eastern Roman Empire. The other is the Fourth Crusade but that isn't considered a defeat so much as appalling and disgusting treachery and sneak attacks on the part of the Latins and Venetian Crusaders (albeit inspired by their own anti-Latin and anti-Venetian policies).

* Byzantine Empire, embracing the eastern provinces of Greece, Anatolia (Turkey), Syria, and Egypt. The Byzantine Empire lasted for a thousand years, its rulers loftly styling themselves 'Emperor and Autocrat of the Romans'.
* Byzantine Empire for much of its history. They were well aware of their lack of resources and troublesome strategic position, sandwiched between Muslims to South and East, and barbarians to West and North. Byzantine's goal was, more often than not, simply to outlast their enemies until the latter simply gave up, avoiding direct conflict and using harassment as a way of minimizing their own casualties.
* Byzantine Empire has his Halogaland guard of large men with axes from the frozen north.

* Byzantium, due to both being vampires who stopped aging. However, she was already young when she gave birth to Eleanor as a human (around twenty or so). Their actresses are eight years apart.
* Byzantium: Eleanor quite understandably resents Clara for turning her into a vampire. It's revealed part of her mother's motivation was to ease her own loneliness rather than simply "saving her." The film takes place after they've had to live on the run and under the radar, for over two centuries, and Eleanor has grown weary of it all.
* Byzantium: The Brethren's entire attitude towards women not being allowed to join their ranks, regardless of their merit. Clara's denied entry just over two centuries ago, which in and of itself was hardly a time for enlightened views on women in general. But then you realize the Brethen are strongly implied to be much, much older than that and time clearly hasn't shaken the trappings of countless centuries of sexism by the time Clara wants to join. The fact her low birth is also a strike against her falls squarely into this trope too.

* C 14 Dating, player character Melissa can romance a number of male characters, or one female character. Slightly differs from the norm in two ways: first of all, all the characters have a defined sexuality and Melissa and Joan aren't the only queer ones (two of the male love interests are bi and one is a straight asexual), and secondly, even though it is already possible to date a girl, the makers are also working on a yuri version of the game where the male love interests are replaced with totally-new female love interests.

this was going to be somewhat of a
* Cáca Milis, Catherine kills the blind and chatty Paul by telling him that there was a worm in the titular cake that he ate and by inducing a severe asthma attack.
* Cálico Electrónico can be really absent-minded at times, but he owns an electronic gadget store, and it's implied that most of the stuff he sells is made by himself.
* Cabal are a colossal race of powerful, rhino-like aliens who have occupied Mars and are engaged in a massive, constant war of attrition with all other contenders for control of the planet. The other species in the system have strange magical powers granted by cosmic entities or dark gods or have hyper-advanced time travel and reality-warping technology. The Cabal, on the other hand, have numbers, firepower, organization, discipline, and sheer, bloody-minded tenacity, which is enough that they're the biggest and most powerful military force in the entire solar system.
* Caballero Droopy, the villain jumps out from behind a cactus to stick Droopy up. Later, he goes behind the cactus and comes back out riding his horse.
* Caballeros del Zodiaco is treated differently and is accordingly separated by those comic bookstores selling them.
* Cabal-like, as they're easily felled by a few laser shots to the head.
* Caballistics, Inc., an immortal former Nazi, became known as "Der Teufel" (The Devil) to his victims during the Holocaust.
* Caballistics, Inc., but the blood itself is drippling down from mid-air.
* Caballistics, Inc.: During the group's first mission to stop a zombie incursion in the London Underground, they're accompanied by a group of special forces who are clearly there to serve as cannon fodder.
* Caballistics, Inc. however, he couldn't give his children a soul as he doesn't have one of his own nor does he know how to create one.
* Caballistics, Inc., it may be that such a bath is needed to maintain his age and appearance or prolong his life.
* Caballistics, Inc.: Jenny is possessed by a demon early on, who manages to keep this a secret for an extended length of time. Eventually the rest of the team catches on when Jenny keeps somehow destroying equally dangerous supernatural entities all by her lonesome when they're not looking. However, the possibility of an exorcism is rendered moot by the demon threatening to kill Jenny if they so much as try it.
* Caballistics, Inc., ley lines are areas of increased paranormal activity. A locked-up psychic with a murderous streak also uses them to amplify his powers without anyone noticing that he's using them long-range.
* Caballistics, Inc. she was once involved with a woman who turned into a zombie, forcing Hannah to blow her head off. She turns off her com so that Lawrence (her closest friend) can't hear this.
* Caballo Sin Nombre never managed to have the pizza land on the roof again after the first take.
* CABAL Online is a Korean free to play somewhat action oriented online role playing game, with a cash shop. What is not told to you (this was worked out from leaked server source) is that rare drops needed to upgrade gear are locked to specific character levels. One you get too high level, the item will be removed from the monster's loot table for you. You will have to move up to the next higher level monster that has the drop. Which is fine, except when your gear isn't good enough to kill the monster that now has the chance to drop what you need. Once that happens, it's inevitable that you will get to the point progress becomes completely impossible, because you can't kill anything that gets you experience, and can't get the drops to upgrade your gear off of anything you can kill. Time to pull out the credit card and buy a bunch of stuff to fix it, or start over and buy stuff at the earlier levels to keep your gear upgraded to the point you can kill the stuff that might drop the materials so you won't have to spend as much if you are lucky. In theory, you don't need to use the cash shop. In practice, you are punished SEVERELY for not using it, and you won't even realize it until you have put in a lot of work.

* CABAL Online Warrior class has at least a complete rotation in at least one axis for almost every skill. Most of the other classes also have skills that involve rotation.
* CABAL's. Or maybe the countdown started at the beginning of the sentence.
* Cabal, where the eponymous secretive organization of amoral sorcerers and monsters tinker with the fabric of reality for fun and profit. The good news: you're one of them. The bad news: there are much worse things out there, and not all of them play by your rules... including fellow Cabal members.
* Cabaret (1972): "Mein Herr" and "Money, Money". The film also added "Maybe This Time", originally a standalone song by the same songwriting team. All have been added to subsequent stage productions.
* Cabaret an innocent virgin asks Sally Bowles for advice on whether her feelings are true love or mere lust, since Sally is 'a woman who is giving her body often to men'. Sally, who is really 'as fatale as an after-dinner mint' can only shrug helplessly.
* Cabaret are the older-and-wiser type, only they're much older than Cliff and Sally and not much wiser.
* Cabaret, a song sung by the Hitler Youth, has been recorded by more than one White Nationalist band. At least they're honest.
* Cabaret changes the main character's name from Cliff Bradshaw to Brian Roberts.
* Cabaret ends with a heartbroken Cliff leaving Berlin on a train and beginning to write a novel about his experience (after failing to write one during the rest of the show).
* Cabaret has a musical number that is based on a gift of a pineapple. See Real Life below.
* Cabaret: In the scene where Fraulein Schneider considers ending her engagement with Herr Schultz and he attempts to reassure her, there is a moment when he seems to be succeeding and they start a reprise of the song they sang when he proprosed — which is interrupted after a few lines by somebody throwing a brick through Herr Schultz's window, ending the song and the engagement.
* Cabaret is another more irresponsible and immature than evil version.
* Cabaret is light-hearted and hysterical ... until the Nazis show up.
* Cabaret swears by Prairie Oysters. Drink it from the tooth glass and it tastes just like peppermint!
* Cabaret: the so-titled number features Sally Bowles singing about how her mother thinks that she's living in a convent in France, or touring Europe with her schoolfriends and a chaperone, while she's really living up the seedy life. The trope itself is not actually invoked in the story however, merely in the performance of the song.
* Cabaret. Watching the two movies back-to-back is actually a really good case-study of the LGBT movement's progress in the last forty years.
* Cabaret you see him as an alternative to the decadence & perversion of the cabaret lifestyle.)
* Cabbage Patch Kids is a well-known line of dolls that's been around since 1978. However, what some people may not know is that the name is a reference to one of the myths surrounding "where babies come from". One of those myths is that they're "found in the cabbage patch", inspiring the name of the toyline.
* Cabbage Patch Kids were first made by Coleco, then by Mattel in the late '80s until 2000. It went into the hands of Play Along Toys during the 2000s, before being taken by Wicked Cool Toys.
* Cabbage's (and later Nautilus') explanation of the background of the Nightmare Knight is accompanied by a shift to paper cutouts.
* Cab Calloway among other singers, is about a female performer who takes 'a dozen slugs' for her no-good gambling boyfriend after he's caught cheating at a game and someone tries to shoot him for it.
* Cab Calloway. Professional music career started in 1930. First major hit in 1931.
* Cabin by the Lake centers around a serial killer who performs his murders to write a more "sophisticated" horror movie script than the usual slasher fare he puts out.

* Cabin by the Lake ends with the reveal that Stanley has survived. Disguised, he presents his idea for another script to a new agent about a killer who buries people alive.
* Cabin by the Lake in a coffin six feet under while he relaxes in a chair seated on the ground on top of his victim while lighting some fireworks.
* Cabin by the Lake is a perfect example of this trope. The serial killer in the movie kidnaps teenage girls, puts them in a soundproof room, puts them in an elegant gown or dress, and THEN duct tapes their feet to a concrete block, afterwards he proceeds to take them out into the middle of the lake, and then drop them to the bottom to sink. He also likes to scuba dive out to his "garden" and clean away any detritus accumulating around them and makes sure to straighten up their clothes. The conditions of the bodies range from skeletal, to decomp, to recently dead.
* Cabin by the Lake movie after he's started kidnapping and murdering women himself by drowning them in a lake.
* Cabin by the Lake, she swiftly punches the mirror to let him know exactly what she thinks of him.
* Cabin by the Lake, Stanley writes a horror movie script by covertly putting his own murderous depravities in the story. The murders he carries out are all 'research' for his story. Not a terribly smart move if he wanted to keep the fact that he's actually a serial killer a secret.
* Cabin by the Lake who is also a horror movie writer. There are therefore several self-referential elements than can be taken as parody. The bad guy is still an utter monster, though.
* Cabin Crew's "Star to Fall", Sunset Strippers' "Falling Stars", and Mylo's "In My Arms" all sample the chorus of Boy Meets Girl's "Waiting for a Star to Fall" in this fashion.
* Cabinet-level positions occasionally avert this. Usually a party will be in power for a given period, be replaced by their rivals, then come back to power a decade or so later. When that happens, ministers / secretaries who served in government the first time sometimes come back when their party returns to office.
* Cabinet Man [COMPLETE Evil!Spottedleaf MAP], Spottedleaf is a cat with head fur that acts this way. Originally, it could either fit the "shy and demure" version or "religious veil" versions due to her status as a nice medicine cat. However, for most of the animation, it represents the "deceptive" variant. Spottedleaf is ruining everyone's lives while pretending to be heroic.
* Cabin Fever 2 more explicitly showed the spread of the disease through an animated montage.
* Cabin Fever 2: Spring Fever has most of the promoters infected by the virus.
* Cabin Fever, a custodian who shows signs of infection with a flesh-eating virus takes a leak into the punch that a girl was mixing up for the prom (yes, just to be a douchebag). Halfway through the stream, the urine turns into a stream of blood. The promgoers later remark that the punch tastes like piss, but don't seem to think it noteworthy enough to not drink the punch, apparently dismissing it as bad punch.
* Cabin Fever as they literally disintegrate over the course of the movie.
* Cabin Fever: Characters go crazy from being cooped up in an isolated area for an extended period with no outside contact.
* Cabin Fever, Fenster, a Hillbilly Henchman, dies when a screwdriver is jammed in his ear.
* Cabin Fever, Greg shows Manny a magic trick. Manny attempts the same trick, but with Susan's glasses, and he breaks them. It is then that Susan is revealed to also be a straight example.
* Cabin Fever, her recent sex partner, for making sore red marks on her back during their coital frenzy, when she knows full well that skin sores are a symptom of the disease going around. She even seems to suspect what they truly are when she first discovers them. Especially galling when you remember that she had just infected him with the disease by sleeping with him, and once again, was probably perfectly aware of this.

* Cabin Fever movie, wherein a character gets blood infected with necrotizing fasciitis on his hand and cuts it off using the chop saw in his school's shop class. Ultimately, it doesn't work.
* Cabin Fever much of a jerk you not only don't care about him, but lose sight of the other characters because you're just wondering when and how the jerk will die.
* Cabin Fever nerves with a lantern-lit bath. As the gruesome disease in the film is water-borne, this is not a wise move.
* Cabin Fever series, where people who have contracted the flesh-eating virus start puking infected blood once it's advanced enough. They don't specifically try to puke blood on other people, but that's what typically happens anyway.
* Cabin Fever. That kid actually comes back later in the film when seen by the main character who is dying in a hospital. The kid is with a man in a bunny costume who is holding a plate full of... PANCAKES. And he has syrup in the other hand! According to the end credits, the bunnyman is played by "We'll Never Tell."
* Cabin Fever to get drunk than stay sober, hence why Jeff (who took two cases of beer when he fled) is the only one who doesn't get infected.
* Cabin Fever was a disease. Marcy discovers it's telltale rashes on her back when she turns around infront of the bathroom mirror. Of course, she doesn't realize yet that they are the first symptom of her disease because she thinks they are a sex injury.
* Cabin Fever where at a party a guy playing a harmonica gets it shoved down his throat after getting smashed in the face with a guitar. Cue to falling to the ground gasping for air complete with harmonica sounds.
* Cabin Getaway due to the ritual desecration performed on the losing side's corpses.
* Cabin Getaway has a happy ending that comes after a month of the protagonists fiancee sleepwalking and talking to a First Nations demon known only as an "Impostor" in her sleep.
* Cabin Getaway has Felix and Fay vomit up the spiritual corruption caused by their battle with The Impostor.
* Cabin in the Cotton, which was the first to be deemed "anti-bourgeois" enough to pass muster (since it's about a sharecropper mediating between management and labor and taking the side of labor).
* Cabin In The Woods) in retaliation, but the two leads are at peace with that because at least they stood by their principles and didn't perpetuate the evil sacrificial cycle.
* Cabin In The Woods is an inversion of this, in which the characters are supposed to act in genre-blind ways, and are pushed in that direction when they don't. For example they all resolve to stay together, but are dosed with a gas that confuses them and leads them to split up.
* Cabin In The Woods offers a moderate amount of bloodshed in the first half, as befits a Standard Slasher Film, but when Dana hits the "Purge" button and unleashes every single monster archetype into the complex... well, the sequence isn't called "The Carnage" for nothing.
* Cabin Pressure, a fine singer but not quite of West End caliber, joins in and certainly holds his own, but the musical limelight is Allam's.)
* Cabin Pressure and overdue for something nice to happen to them. (There's also the fact that Molly pines after Sherlock, who's played by Benedict Cumberbatch, the same guy who played Martin Crieff.) There also seems to be a small but steadily increasing number of fans of Martin and one episode character Henry Knight.
* Cabin Pressure and that the flowers (and the fish the man gives Douglas in exchange) are presents given in fond memory of their time together.
* Cabin Pressure, Arthur and Douglas are drinking in an airport bar, and Arthur tries to channel this trope.
* Cabin Pressure, Arthur consistently fails to cook edible food. At one point, he spectacularly fails at reheating frozen food. Unfortunately for everyone, he's usually the cook.
* Cabin Pressure: Arthur Shappey loves helping people, whether they want his help or not, and since Arthur is a tremendous ditz, they very often do not. But he'll help anyway.

* Cabin Pressure as a result and being ordered to switch seats with Douglas because Carolyn can't see to drive.
* Cabin Pressure as each episode begins with a consecutive letter of the alphabet, from "Abu Dhabi" to "Zurich".
* Cabin Pressure as one of the pilots, except for the first episode in Series Three when he was unavailable and the part was taken by another actor. This was lampshaded by the other characters discussing what they would do if one of the pilots was ill and deciding that they would think of something. The replacement actor entered at this point and the flight attendant complimented him on how well he was looking; only for the co-pilot to reply: "No, I think he looks exactly the same as always!"
* Cabin Pressure, but as the character of Carolyn (the airline's owner) got fleshed out more he soon realised that she would never be daft enough to give it such a name. It was given to Martin's delivery company as a development gag.
* Cabin Pressure develop this kind of relationship - at the start the insults are rather one-sided from Douglas to Martin, but as the series goes on Martin gains confidence and starts to hold his own - and they have been shown to genuinely care about each other despite it all multiple times.
* Cabin Pressure: Douglas Richardson manages to steal some extremely expensive whiskey without getting caught, despite the fact that he is on everyone's watch list, using nail varnish and a non-existent television aeriel.
* Cabin Pressure: Douglas runs his smuggling operation this way. He started with a cheese sandwich and within months has traded his way up to goods worth 500 euros.
* Cabin Pressure episode "Fitton" (actually Arthur mucking about while vacuuming the cockpit):
* Cabin Pressure episode "Fitton", Arthur tells his mother Carolyn that his father asked after her and the plane, but not in that order.
* Cabin Pressure episode "Fitton". Douglas is giving his wife Helena a bottle of brown sauce for their anniversary. Helena greatly enjoys a certain formulation of brown sauce which is unavailable in the UK and which Douglas has tracked down and imported.
* Cabin Pressure episode "Gdansk", Douglas points out that he cannot honestly say "you win some, you lose some" to poor Martin.
* Cabin Pressure episode "Ipswich" who chose to become an RAF Warrant Officer so that his rank and surname would not humorously match.
* Cabin Pressure episode "Newcastle", there is a subversion. A passenger asks the crew whether the plane she is looking at is theirs, in an admiring tone. Since GERTI is parked next to a much better plane, Douglas assumes that she's talking about the better plane and corrects her. She then tells him that she was talking about GERTI.
* Cabin Pressure episode "Paris", a bottle of Talisker whiskey goes missing in flight, with the only possible thieves being the lone passenger and the four crew members.
* Cabin Pressure episode "Qikiqtarjuaq", when an angry client reports Douglas to Carolyn for altering the cabin address to include the titles of Hitchcock films, Carolyn asks how many he got in and congratulates Douglas for managing thirteen.
* Cabin Pressure episode "Xinzhou", sixteen months into her relationship with Herc, Carolyn insists "We haven't been 'going out', we've just often been in the same place."
* Cabin Pressure episode "Yverdon-les-bains," Douglas writes a recommendation for Martin, calling him the second-best pilot at MJN Air. Martin and Douglas are MJN's only pilots.
* Cabin Pressure goes a funny colour and falls over when he lies. Even when he's sitting down. See, for instance, this dialogue with one Douglas Richardson.
* Cabin Pressure had one on a plane, obviously, in the 2010 episode "Molokai". Featuring an impromptu seven-minute celebration on the flight deck, with turkey made from bits of a chicken sandwich and a green umbrella in lieu of a tree.
* Cabin Pressure has Douglas and Herc Shipwright. Both smooth voiced expert pilots, they are friends before and in the first episode they meet in the series, but Douglas seems to resent Herc moving in on his territory after this. After this they frequently verbally spar, though Herc doesn't seem overly bothered.

* Cabin Pressure, how he makes web videos and plays various silly games with his audience. The rest of the cast don't appear in person, but Arthur keeps in touch with them via Skype and social media and often relays messages or challenges from them to his audience.
* Cabin Pressure in the lead, knowing full well by that point Arthur is a complete moron. The drill fails not because of a lack of trust, but because Arthur is so colossally stupid he manages to get everyone lost.
* Cabin Pressure is a Lockheed McDonnell 312, rather than a Lockheed Martin or a McDonnell Douglas plane.
* Cabin Pressure is one of the first they can think of. One episode has them flying to Limerick, Ireland, and trying to come up with as many limerick poems as possible.
* Cabin Pressure. It doesn't do to insult passengers, even when they're your obnoxious sister.
* Cabin Pressure. It doesn't help that Arthur the steward is one such fan...
* Cabin Pressure. It works because the two get along famously when they start talking geeky (which is bound to happen, when an unpaid pilot who wanted to be an airplane as a kid meets a genius who invented a flying suit), and Martin isn't at all interested in Tony's money or influence.
* Cabin Pressure King Maxie of Lichtenstein is constantly threatening to behead his schoolmates, despite his sister Princess Theresa telling him he doesn't actually have the right to do that.
* Cabin Pressure knows how airplanes fly, requiring Martin, Douglas and his mom to try explaining it to him. Douglas nearly manages it, but fumbles on "how do they fly upside down?"
* Cabin Pressure, Martin is dared by Douglas to come up with a story about his exploits as an adventurer, having introduced him over the cabin address as the French Captain du Crieff. Martin improvises a tale of his time in the Legion (upon being reminded they are a non-French regiment he claims they made an exception for him) which involves taking on a polar bear armed only with a whisk.
* Cabin Pressure: Martin Krief cannot tell a joke. At one point, to try and impress an actress he's crushing on (did we mention, Martin cannot talk to women?), he forgets any joke he's ever heard, save one which is pretty racist... and he still forgets the punchline anyway.
* Cabin Pressure moment when he throws an extremely nervous Arthur's gift back in his face out of sheer spite.
* Cabin Pressure, she claims that the wing is supposed to be doing that and the plane is supposed to make that sound. She is unable, however, to go through with claiming that bits of the plane are supposed to fall off.
* Cabin Pressure son Arthur, he has to include an explanation that Arthur isn't giving her the wrong amount by mistake. After this offer is rejected, Gordon makes another offer of £1 for the entire company, excluding all the debts. Carolyn seriously considers this offer until one of Douglas's schemes gets the company back into the black.
* Cabin Pressure the jet if the mood takes him, even as his co-pilot and boss are telling him to shut up. He gets arrested.
* Cabin Pressure, there is a theory that "Arthur" means "watcher of the bear".
* Cabin Pressure things. Martin tells him not to forget the mixed nuts.
* Cabin Pressure to have Arthur designated a passenger (albeit one who "helps" a lot) rather than a steward.
* Cabin Pressure usually plays intelligent and sophisticated sorts (Sherlock, Doctor Strange, Smaug). Here, he plays Martin Krief, a neurotic serial screw-up of a wanna-be pilot.
* CabinPressure, which is about a tiny charter airline called MJN Air. The "fandot" references Carolyn Knapp-Shappey's line "I don't have an airline. I have one jet. You cannot put one jet in a line. If MJN is anything, it is an airdot."

* Cabiria to Moloch, by throwing them into a fire pit. Cabiria is rescued just in the nick of time.
* Cable & Deadpool, and it's more or less a standstill, until Cable intervenes with his telekinetic powers, and launches Sabertooth off the artificial island. Deadpool asks where Cable sent him, and Cable replies with, "Um...that way." Cut to Sabertooth splashing down miles away in the middle of the ocean.
* Cable & Deadpool, and then feel guilt for doing so, as his public plan is to establish an island utopia. Later in the same book, he aids the revival of Apocalypse so the decimated mutant race would have an enemy to unite against.
* Cable & Deadpool, Bob seems quite happy at Agency X, running around on adventures with Deadpool and referring to his capture as a liberation when all the while Deadpool has been trying to get HYDRA to pay a ransom for him (the mention of which doesn't faze Bob in the slightest, suggesting that he realizes that he's still ostensibly being held hostage). To be fair, Deadpool has never been au fait on the distinction between "friendship" and "Stockholm Syndrome". See Weasel, Blind Al, etc.
* Cable & Deadpool: Cable converts his former base into a floating island.
* Cable & Deadpool criminal organizations that employ the anonymous, masked minions. Few of the rank and file genuinely believe in HYDRA or AIM's end goals.
* Cable & Deadpool. "How do I know you're not the anti-Siryn? Then again, you're not sporting the alternate-universe mandated evil goatee.."
* Cable & Deadpool In other words, he's crazy so when he starts rattling on about what came before, the other characters are just relieved he isn't shooting them.
* Cable & Deadpool is a serious leader who barely tolerates Deadpool's antics.
* Cable & Deadpool — it could be the first step to world peace, but falling in line and giving up his right to be different isn't Deadpool's style. Deadpool replies that all his crazy opinions just cover up the fact that he doesn't have anything.
* Cable & Deadpool. The title characters are at a bar discussing their less-than-stellar childhoods over beer (well, only Deadpool's drinking - Cable's temporarily regressed to his teens). Deadpool's brief flashbacks show his mother's death led to his dad becoming strict bordering on abusive, and he may have shot him. At the end of the issue, we get the full story - it was one of the "wrong crowd" Wade had fallen in with, and he was genuinely horrified.
* Cable & Deadpool when he accidentally knocks out a symbiont dinosaur that he'd been trying to run away from.
* Cable & Deadpool where Deadpool and Weasel break into HYDRA headquarters to rescue Agent X, Deadpool forgets about Weasel until he's already being flown out. He has a brief "oops" reaction, then decides not to worry about it.
* Cable and satellite companies comparing their broadband Internet speeds to DSL. Although DSL is
* Cable-Car Action Sequence: A fight aboard, or atop, a moving gondola at great height.
* Cable, Doctor Nemesis asks a nervous Forge "Where's [his] pioneer spirit?" Forge, a member of the Cheyenne Nation, immediately takes offense to the question, since his people obviously have a far more negative opinion of pioneers than white Americans do.
* Cable for his left arm, but the result of a "techno-organic" virus forcibly converting his existing arm into machinery. It's only his telekinetic powers that keep the virus from spreading to transform the rest of his body into a robot (killing him in the process).
* Cable frequently carries multiple large firearms, often with an excessive number of nonsensically placed magazines. He usually fires a lot of bullets out of them. Many of the future weapons he carried were just as ridiculous.
* Cable from Marvel Comics. Early in his continuity his metal arm was one of these instead of whatever the heck it is now.
* Cable gets this offer from Madelyne Pryor, his mother who, despite evil, still has soft spots on him when they are reunited. He obviously refuses, though.

* Cable he's been working with for years, despite countless opportunities to do so.
* Cable means both are subject to suddenly being white-haired 20-year-olds.
* Cable/Nathan Summers is the walking personification of this trope. Being sent to the future as a baby and returning to the present a much older, giant, grizzled, time travelling cyborg mutant super soldier.
* Cable news channels have become infamous for overusing and inverting this trope - MSNBC uses a "Breaking News" graphic for the top-stories update at :38 after the hour in prime time, Fox News once broke in on a live-on-camera interview with a U.S. Senator to show
* Cable news in general. Commercials for Lockheed Martin, Boeing, Archer Daniels Midland, etc. pervade CNN, Fox News Channel and MSNBC.
* Cable News Network over footage of a waving American flag. It's in CNN's video archive system as "Turner Doomsday Video" with the specific instruction "HFR (hold for release) till end of the world confirmed."
* Cable. Of course, he came back before he left, so at one point, both Adult Cable and Baby Cable were around at the same time.
* Cable once resurrects Apocalypse as a common threat to unite the fractious mutants.
* Cable/Satellite Mudslinging commercial features contestants on a red team and a blue team competing on a TV Game Show called "You Might Think DirectTV Has More HD Than Comcast But You're Wrong". Despite being the name of the game show they're in, when the red team is asked which has more HD programming in some city (and a voice-over announcer repeating sotto voce the fact that they should know this), they still get it wrong.
* Cable/Satellite Mudslinging file, DirecTV "hacks into" various cable channels encouraging alternative methods of viewing "that the cable company doesn't want you to know about". Since the channels themselves retain national advertising time, they are free to take ads from whoever they want. But this also means that it airs on non-cable televisions, in which cases it makes a lot less sense.
* Cable/Satellite Mudslinging: How TV providers get and keep customers, and why TV provider options for any given area are so limited
* Cable). The "merc with a mouth" might be a murderous and chaotic son of a gun, but he apparently has a utopian streak of his own.
* Cablevision has played it straight many times, with ads promising better picture because the pixels on your TV will be happier on Cablevision, or that Verizon is a phone company, and therefore too busy to provide you with internet service (ironic, considering Cablevision's primary job is to provide you with TV, not Internet). Some of their commercials from a few years ago were mistaken for parodies.
* Cable vs. Booster Gold , Boomstick tests out Booster's force field belt, which Wiz is currently using, by throwing different objects at him, including a sink.
* Cable was heavily involved, explaining why this was the case for him.
* Cable when he's hit by bullets, fire, explosions, concussive forces, etc.
* Cable would go on to rent out one of these, and use the deathtrap filled park as a training ground for his team. But then, that's
* Cable young enough to be Scott's kid and has taken up residence in the present.
* Caboose. All he ever wanted was to be Church's best friend. Seeing that Church only saw him as a problem he had to deal with daily really broke the poor kid.
* Caboose as he stares at it, then says "That... was the worst throw ever. Of all time".
* Caboose chooses one Ander-Smith as his lieutenant. During his formal introduction, Ander-Smith expresses his belief that Caboose is one of the wisest men on the planet, and misinterprets his ramblings as deep and meaningful predictions for the future.
* Caboose did this in the main series as well, when acting in Donut's play attempting to explain the * Caboose is a frequent offender. The character that is so inept that other characters tell him that their enemies are on their side, just so Caboose will "teamkill" his enemies. They even have a macro on their keyboards at command to record Caboose's teamkills (Ctrl+F+U).

* Caboose is a team killer because he keeps accidentally killing Church, who he also thinks is his best friend. He's recognized as
* Caboose manages to set his combat armor on fire (while wearing it) in the trailer for
* Caboose misses the point of an argument between Church and Wash in
* Caboose's childish incompetence and naivety becomes insanity and nearly reality-warping levels of stupidity. Unlike most of the others, his is actually given a reason, in that O'Malley's insanity played a part in his devolving, as did the explosive firefight in his head when Tex and Church drove him out.
* Caboose's Guide to Making Friends With Monster Girls is one of the biggest examples. In it, he's accidentally spilled water on a shirt which happens to turn see-through, then ripped it off, escorted Miia into a lingerie shop, not actually knowing what it was... His naivety is the running gag.
* Caboose tries to intentionally invoke this in himself when he and Sarge are trapped in a bizarre land of eternal war in
* Caça Talentos, who owned 30% percent of the agency, was pressuring the major shareholder into selling it. One of her efforts consisted of starting her own talent agency to compete against his. "Caça Talentos" itself is another example since its founder started it in protest against his former boss' policies at Mundo Real Produções Artísticas.
* Caché, after inviting Georges into his home, Majid slits his own throat. It's the fact that the death is self-inflicted that is shocking, as well as the apparent lack of motivation for doing so.
* Cachureos had an Image song named "El profesor distraido", roughly translated as "Absent-Minded Schoolteacher".
* Cachureos ("Make a Pee-Pee"), which tells listeners to use the toilet before bed, otherwise they will urinate in bed all the way down to their toes.
* Cacodemon - pumpkin. Later on, the military formally designates the monster as "cacodemon".
* Cacofonix. In later parts of the series, he can start horrible rainstorms with his singing, and he's implied to be ancestor of bad musicians everywhere. His exploits include:
* Cacophony Cover Up: Covering up a loud noise with an equally or greater loud noise.
* Cacophony Cover Up: Hiding the sounds of escape with even louder noises.
* C) Actually possess a lot of power, intelligence, and/or prestige, but also have some childish qualities or behaviors, to fit in with a certain aspect of the story being told, or else advertise that there is something seriously wrong with them, to make them
* Cactus Canyon has a variation; the sides of the backbox include an extensive list of the various crimes that the player (as sheriff) must enforce.
* Cactus Canyon Miss Polly going over a waterfall while tied to a log.
* Cactus Canyon, shooting one of the Bart Brothers causes his hat to fly off.
* Cactus Canyon, there are five ranks that the player can get (Stranger, Partner, Deputy, Sheriff, and Marshall), with increases coming either from winning Gun Fights or random awards.
* Cactus Canyon which features a "Help Wanted" recruitment poster listing the requirements for a new Sheriff.
* Cactus Canyon, with multiple game modes — "Quick Draw", "Gun Fight", and "Showdown Multiball" — devoted to this trope.
* Cactus Flower, after Julian realizes that cutting off both Stephanie and Toni has left him without a woman to take care of his needs in the office or outside it, he goes out and gets drunk.
* Cactus Flower, after one year with Toni, Julian realizes that he no longer enjoys his old habit of taking "a different girl every night," much as he's tried to fight his feelings for her by dating other women. Having known at first sight that he could get too emotionally involved with her, he lied to her that he already had a wife and three children, but that didn't prevent her from developing strong feelings for him.

* Cactus Flower and give her mouth-to-mouth resuscitation. She's already in a relationship with Julian, but he's a married man (or so he's led her to believe) and Igor conveniently has a neighboring apartment.
* Cactus Flower, but her actual reason was that Julian canceled a date with her at the last minute on the one-year anniversary of their first meeting when he told her that he was a married man. She also mailed Julian a suicide note, which reaches him before Igor does, causing further confusion.
* Cactus Flower, Julian presents Toni with a mink stole. She's stunned at the generosity of his gift, though she would have rather received black leather slacks. She decides to send the mink to "Mrs. Winston" along with the original card, whose only words are, "As ever, Julian." Stephanie is so taken with the stole that she buys an expensive evening gown to wear with it to the April in Paris Ball.
* Cactus Flower, Julian reacts this way when he finds out that Toni really did try to kill herself over him and the letter she sent wasn't just a ploy:
* Cactus Flower, Julian wants to marry Toni, but he's already told her that he has a wife and three children. Toni, not wanting to be the homewrecking kind, insists on meeting the wife before Julian divorces her. So Julian convinces his nurse, Stephanie Dickinson, to pretend to be Mrs. Julian Winston.
* Cactus Flower, Toni poses for Igor with the mink stole from Julian, just to prove it's not her style.
* Cactus Flower, Toni repeatedly commends Julian for his honesty because he told her that he was married before their affair started. It comes as a shock when she finds out that he was lying about that all along.
* Cactus Flower, when Julian tells Toni that his wife wants a divorce because there's another man in her life, and Toni demands to meet him, he is suddenly horror-stricken and pounds the wall (which coincidentally is the signal for Igor to come on over) while repeatedly saying, "No, no, no!" The scene then fades out of Toni's apartment and fades in on Julian's office, where Stephanie, who already agreed to pretend to be Julian's wife, is saying the same thing to the idea of her having a pretend boyfriend. (The same cut occurs in the movie version.)
* Cactus Jack? This is also due to WWE acting like there was never a reason for people to dislike DX.
* cactus. Two neighboring planets in space; every thirty years, on one of the planets, a warrior comes out of the tunnels where he lived his entire life, and finds ruins of a thriving city on the surface. A survivor tells him that a man from the other planet massacred everyone. The warrior decides to get revenge, hops into a ship that happens to be nearby, and flies to the other planet to massacre the inhabitants there. Then he descends into that planet's tunnels, meets a woman, and has a son with her. Thirty years later, the son comes out of the tunnels and finds ruins of a thriving city on the surface, and learns that a warrior from the other planet is responsible. He decides to get revenge on the other planet, flies over there and kills everyone, then descends into the tunnels where he meets a woman... After a couple iterations, the game outright announces: "Vicious Cycle".

* Cadance is married to a unicorn. Fans are uncertain if their romance could be this. Cadance was
* Cadance of Cloudsdale, thinking him sent by Celestia to monitor her (after she assured Cadance she would never do such a thing). Celestia says it best:
* Cadance's daughters, Flurry Heart and Skyla, are a subversion; despite being Alicorns, they're not immortal, though they will be if they chose to.
* Cadance's love shield in the Season 3 two-parter opener is capable of repelling and hurting King Sombra.
* Cadaver reversed your directional controls when you drank an alcoholic potion.
* Cadbury Chocolate has promotional vehicles shaped and painted to look exactly like Cadbury Creme Eggs. Like Cadbury itself, these cars are based in or near Birmingham, England.
* Cadbury chocolate "Ultra Perk" had an entire campaign centering around this trope -
* Cadbury have actually used this to force small chocolate businesses to change the color of their purple boxes and suchlike by suing them.

* Cadbury's Cream Eggs 'How Do You Eat Yours' featured a pregnant woman in one of their ads. She liked dipping chips into it.
* Cadburys Smash Martians commercials, a muscular-looking martian flexes his metallic pecs after eating Cadbury's Smash mashed potatoes gives him more energy.
* Caddicarus and Current Quickies, a new show called Caddy's Film Fridays was added, and the Spyro Retrospectives were relegated to "future project" status and retooled as one huge video.
* Caddicarus BEGINNINGS IN GAMES", where he lists ten examples of games that he thinks suffer from this.
* Caddicarus-filled classics over jazzy music and is one of the chillest people in the Youtube reviewer sphere), making their cartoonishly over-the-top rivalry even funnier by sheer contrast with their regular stuff.
* Caddicarus games. He feels the third game is the best, because it distills the elements he enjoyed from the first two and largely eliminates almost everything he disliked about the first two. He also feels that the characterization and writing are a lot tighter, with Sly, Bentley, and Murray feeling more like friends.
* Caddicarus has a penchant for talking relatively quickly most of the time, but during his "Current Quickies" videos, he really turns it up and speaks incredibly fast.
* Caddicarus has made a thing out of this at the end of most of his videos as well .
* Caddicarus has taken a deeper, more mature delivery as of the 2014 episodes, likely because he started the show in his late teens.
* Caddicarus, he declares that the game isn't quite bad enough to slaughter since he got some enjoyment out of it, but not quite good enough to salvage. He instead opts to "slauvage" it by beaming it up halfway, then shooting it. A few games since have gotten the "slauvage" too.
* Caddicarus humour often results in this, particularly when reviewing a game he's about to slaughter, as opposed to salvage.
* Caddicarus outtakes involve his dog Stan ruining the shoot, either by walking into the shot (either aimlessly wandering in front of the camera or deliberately going up to Caddicarus because he wants attention or to play), or by making noise (barking, whining, growling, or howling) while Caddicarus is trying to film.
* Caddicarus, this is said in some episodes. It's sometimes even this:

* Caddicarus, where at one point, he notes that some might call his review unfair, due to it being for kids, to which he immediately objects, since, while kids are easy to entertain, they are not stupid.
* Caddicarus, which has such gems as "In this item, Music producer I am describes the unit."
* Caddyshack begins with one of these, a successfully absurd synchronized swimming sequence.
* Caddyshack, Bill Murray's Carl tries increasingly drastic plans to get a certain gopher.
* Caddyshack: Carl's war against the groundhog eventually drives him to use plastic explosives, which he shapes like woodland animals. "Just a harmless little squirrel, not a plastic explosive or anything."
* Caddyshack, Carl the groundskeeper is attempting to eradicate one gopher, and ends up blowing up the club's golf course.
* Caddyshack' daughter Violet) is identified as Sally, however, in the finished film she's credited as "Noonan Child".
* Caddyshack II: After Jack buys the majority of Bushwood Country Club, Chandler and Claudia visit to see how much has changed. When the interior of the main building is exactly the same as before, they talk about how Jack owning the club won't be so bad. As soon as they go outside, they see that Jack has turned the country club into an amusement park.
* Caddyshack II: Tom tries to kill Jack with an explosive golf ball, but the gopher steals the golf ball and and makes Chandler hit it. The explosion is powerful enough to bend Chandler's golf club, but it doesn't hurt Chandler or his family. Instead, everyone is slightly singed and has damaged clothing.

* Caddyshack II was involved, though his script was heavily rewritten.
* Caddyshack, including Rodney Dangerfield's line "Hey everybody, we're all gonna get laid!"
* Caddyshack is tolerated only because he brings a lot of money to Bushwood Country Club.
* Caddyshack, Judge Smails does this to Danny when he catches him with his niece.
* Caddyshack, the latter is driving a food truck and the meeting is conducted under the guise of a food order. Young orders two high-class sandwiches and Everett replies "Don't have it." both times. He then makes something of his own choosing.
* Caddyshack, then turns back to his companion to roll his eyes and snicker at the Judge.
* Caddyshack told him to just pretend he was a kid, acting out his sports fantasy. In fact, none of Murray's scenes were scripted; they just let the camera roll on him.
* Caddyshack: Writer-producer Douglas Kenney appears as a guest in the dining room scene.
* Cadel Darkkon functions as this. Slightly subverted, as in the first book Cadel was closer to a
* Cadenas. What's the emergency? The president is graduating college students.
* Cadence apparently had one for cucumber and banana slices mixed with cold rice and bleu cheese dressing, which Aria finds weird but Cadance says is good for replenishing electrolytes (and Shining Armor admits to liking it too). She'd also craved anchovy, sour cream and steak sauce tacos at one point, which Sonata also liked. Aria and Shining Armor, however, react with disgust when they're reminded of
* Cadence, Celestia, and Luna doesn't seem to have a problem with this!
* "Cadence" has a flashback of teenaged DiNozzo in military school failing to get a movie reference:
* Cadence. Humorously, if you watch closely, as the cameras change the POV, Franklin falls out the window facing one way but ends up landing facing the opposite direction.
* Cadence in A Minor, during foreplay with Princess Cadence, Shining Armor notes that "The Prince" has awoken. In another part of the story, he calls it "Little Shiny".
* Cadence in A Minor has left him with multiple symptoms of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder of which impotence is just one.
* cadence of a joke ("Ba-da-da-da da-da-da, da-da buh-da-da-da? Bah-da-da-da!"), which the other kids found hilarious - the teacher, not so much.
* Cadence of Hyrule who was always evil-hearted and willingly transforms into Ganon. You can actually find Ganondorf as a young Gerudo boy and despite being a prick, he comes across more ignorant than malicious, implying he might have turned out good for once had he not found the Golden Lute left by Octavo.
* Cadence of Hyrule will lead to this and this time other characters like Zelda, Cadence or Impa can get their butts burned as well.
* Cadence. "Twilight's Kingdom" implies that Tirek knows about her, which means that she's at least a thousand years old (since Tirek was defeated a thousand years ago), yet in flashbacks to when she used to babysit Twilight, she looks like a teenager.
* Cadence, who at this point has seemed to grow from a sweet, kindly foalsitter to a grade-A Alpha Bitch
* Cadenza 2: Kiss of Death. The main character performs CPR on her fiance but he still ends up unconscious and dying in the hospital. Saving his life properly is the focus of the next part of the game.
* Cadenza 4: Fame, Theft and Betrayal Adam sticks Martha in one of those magician's tables, with interlocking swords shoved into the holes above her and a slowly-descending electric saw suspended overhead.
* Cadenza 4: Fame, Theft and Murder a bum named Adam who's wanted by the police swaps bodies with hot young rock star Michael Valance and Mike has twelve hours to reverse the switch before it becomes permanent.

* Cadenza 4: Fame, Theft and Murder, convinces Big Jim it's really him by singing a line of a song he wrote for Jim's birthday.
* Cadenza 4: Fame, Theft and Murder, has 24 hours to get his body back before the switch becomes permanent.
* cadenza, during which the soloist is given a chance to improvise (usually on the musical ideas already presented). For those performers less interested in flying by the seats of their pants, many composers and performers have written out cadenzas for the more well-known concerti; opera has only rarely used this convention since 1750 or so.
* Cadenza manifested before Moochick and Heathspike, they appeared as a member of their respective species to them.
* Cadenza: Music, Betrayal and Death the back room of Frankie Boldon's apartment is full of photos of the other members of the Dixie Peppers and graffiti such as "Can you see me" and "Mad no more."
* Cade's County, Glen Ford had to do battle with a recalcitrant miner in front of a hostile group in a miners' bar with both of them using the supposed miner's weapon of choice, a pick hammer.
* Cadet Kelly and Christy Carlson Romano would have been discharged for what they did to each other if it had been military rather than a school.
* Cadet Kelly involves a typical teenage girl's mother re-marrying. The girl is happy, until she finds out that her new stepfather is the head of a military school, and she is a new cadet. In this case, she's being turned into this trope (kicking and screaming). Her rival (and commander) Jennifer is a more clearcut example and reveals at the end that she's moving because of her father's reassignment.
* Cadet Kelly: When her new stepfather becomes the Commandant of a military school, George Washington Military Academy, Kelly and her family move upstate. Kelly has to enroll at the school, since it is the only school in the area, leaving behind her art school and her best friend Amanda.
* Cadet Scrap, as Kate is wrapping her hands before sparring with Sophie, she imagines the otherwise empty room filled with a screaming audience of cadets surrounding the two of them, who are locked in a bloody fistfight.
* Cadet Scrap happens over the course of 15 or so minutes, over half of which are during a sparring match.
* Cadet Scrap, Kate and Sophie do a bit of this, each bragging about how they'll beat the other at the next Brigade Boxing Open.
* Cadet Scrap, Kate, Sophie's girlfriend, takes a moment to admire both her shadowboxing and her looks, as Sophie is dressed in a sports bra and boxing trunks. She also teases Sophie about trying to use such an outfit as a distraction, as typical cadet boxing uniforms feature a T-shirt.
* Cadet Scrap, Sophie wears a sports bra and boxing trunks for her sparring bout with Kate. Kate, her girlfriend, appreciates it.
* Cadet Sylvia Tilly is promoted to Ensign at the end of Season 1 and then put in the position of Acting
* Cadfael because the local priest was an asshole about her being pregnant out of wedlock and she remains in her plain grave... but Cadfael puts a small cross on it anyway. It's a noticeably darker change from the novel where the villagers agreed that it didn't matter and gave her a proper burial anyway.
* Cadfael because they met in combat (and the killer was unarmed, no less) to fight a duel, since the dead man was a bully who was betrothed to the killer's long-lost daughter. Perfectly sound and legal on the medieval Welsh border.
* Cadfael, Cadfael often traces the location of a murder or the victim's path by examining the plant fragments found on and around the body, since he's the abbey herbalist.
* Cadfael - has a variant. The series is set in medieval times and therefore before police existed, but Cadfael is an older detective monk who has a quasi-paternal relationship with lawman Hugh Berrigar.

* Cadfael, presumably since most of England doesn't have that undeveloped medieval look any more.
* Cadfael, the murderer is accidentally killed before Cadfael can expose him publicly, so Cadfael creates a ruse so that the other two people won't be charged. Because the killer was a monk who had been experiencing visions, Cadfael lays out his empty robes in the chapel and surrounds them with flower petals to make it seem like this was what happened.
* Cadfael to wear it, even though it's just as big and distinctive as it's described in the book.

* Cadian Blood had an instance of the Raven Guard using these on the Terminus Est of the Death Guard as a last ditch before they were blown out of the sky. Ultimately subverted though, since instead of troops, they were loaded up with explosives. They failed to destroy the Terminus Est, but the Raven Guard were able to deploy to the surface of the planet below them.
* Cadian Shock Troops are noted to be among the greatest soldiers mankind has ever produced; they are among the only human troops universally respected by even the
* Cadillac Man an immigrant couple who have made good in America protest at the very idea of buying a non-American car (OK,it was in 1990).
* Cadillacs and Dinosaurs: If you throw a bundle of TNT sticks to an enemy with low energy, he will explode, leaving only his eyeballs flying away.
* Cadillacs and Dinosaurs in that humanity has been living in underground cities, and the Cadillacs are converted to run on dinosaur guano.)
* Cadillacs and Dinosaurs in this game are finished off with explosives; body parts start flying!
* Cadillacs And Dinosaurs is lampshading this from its very title. Caddillacs and Dinousarurs are cool.
* Cadillacs and Dinosaurs, mankind has regress greatly in terms of technology and must now coexist with dinosaurs.
* Cadillacs and Dinosaurs, the Remains of New York became a floating city called The City In the Sea.
* Cadillacs and Dinosaurs. Throughout the game the volcano is smoking away in the background, and though the characters keep thinking it's going to blow, it's actually the smoke from the factory concealed within.
* Cadmus, Green Arrow and Flash are two of the characters that talk him down from it.
* Cadmus has been captured by Cadmus and is being interrogated (tortured), he decides to take her advice and do things "off the books." No visual cue is given at that point, but he later gives his earpiece to Huntress so she can call the League and get emergency evacuation and medical aid for the injured Question. (She no longer has an earpiece of her own, having been expelled from the League in an earlier episode.)
* Cadmus (the guy who "created" the Golden Fleece) supposedly founded Thebes, home of Oedipus' family, being Phoenician originally.
* Cadmus. Their stated goals: Provide America (and her allies, probably) a defense against the super-powered types, especially the Justice League. What with Superman nearly taking over the world when being brainwashed by Darkseid, the Justice Lords in a parallel universe taking everything over, and the Justice League having an
* Cadmus tried to be this, pretty much be there if the Justice League ever crossed that line and used their powers to conquer instead of protect. However, in order to be ready for the League if they crossed the line, Cadmus itself started jumping across them (mass murder and brainwashing of clones, allying with Lex Luthor, etc). Eventually, when they activated their attack on the JL they could not abort it. Batman mentions this to Waller, wondering who is watching them. Waller acknowledges they crossed too many lines in the next season, and admits that she and the others who were in charge of Cadmus are lucky they weren't sent to prison.
* CADPAT, but the pattern would quickly begin to crumble off in a matter of weeks.
* Cadre: A planet which quickly becomes significant in the trilogy has three suns with visibly differing masses and ages, as well as a black hole close enough to be usually visible in the daytime sky. The sheer uniqueness of this arrangement, coupled with the fact that the first colonists lost navigational control and spent over a month helpless before gravitational forces neatly brought them to the planet, led to the foundation of a system of religious philosophy which dominates the latter two books.

* C.A.D.S and their 9mm rifles were replaced with guns that could attack using almost type of ammo - ranging from a .38 pistol round to a mortar shell.
* Cadsuane is a more literal example, being a female mage of such age and prestige that most people think of her in the past sense, as a fabled example of Aes Sedai superiority, until she comes out of retirement and takes a part in the events of the books.
* Ca D's universe. A few others include an alien virus that turns corpses into disgusting creatures and various alien viruses and fungi capable of disturbingly consuming humans.
* Caederan, a somewhat impetuous young wind-mage tries to fly a herd of oiled pigs from one side of the castle to the other to place them properly for a pig-catching contest. Even lampshaded:
* Caelum Lex are space pirates, smuggling, stealing and raiding from their rusty beat-up spaceship.

* Caelum Lex, is a sci-fi web serial about a woman who boards a space pirate vessel called the Dionysian and the ramshackle crew that mans it.
* Caelum Lex is a smuggler, thief and sometimes assassin, often makes selfish and reckless decisions and yet is depicted as a hero.
* Caelum Lex", the crew of the Dionysian each has their own specialty and each member can kick ass in their own right. They're all loyal to each other and act more as a family than a pirate crew.
* Caelum Lex" was raised in wealth and luxury on her home planet and thus finds herself very out of place when she boards a rusty space pirate ship full of criminals and lowlives.
* Caelum Sky's protagonist, Neri is a demon who refuses to harm humans.
* Caenorhabditis elegans instead of males and females. In the event that a hermaphrodite cannot find a male to mate with, it can self-fertilize.
* Caerdydd. Neither Emyr nor Sara mentions Lea, Peter, or any of the other characters from the earlier show – which is strange, given how it ended.
* Caerns: Places of Power provides an alternate history for the Trinity test site in Alamagordo, New Mexico. The Trinity test spawned Grandmaw, a colossal thunderwyrm who serves as one of the holiest caerns of the Black Spiral Dancers. The impact crater receives no human visitors, and the Black Spirals use the crater as an amphitheater for large gatherings. The McDonald ranch house, where the atomic bomb's core was assembled, is now the home of White-Eyes-ikthya, a Trinity Hive elder. In real life, the Trinity testing site and the McDonald ranch house are a historical landmarks that receive thousands of visitors each year. Trinity's ground zero crater was bulldozed in 1952.

* Caesar's former slave Posca and his much younger wife Jocasta. Who is shown to have married him because she has been raped and her family killed and their wealth confiscated.
* Caesar's Legion fits their captures and slaves with explosive collars. The collars eventually come off when the slaves have been broken from the notion of trying to rebel or run away. One sidequest has you liberating a family of Legion captives wearing these collars.
* Caesar's Legion in general operate on a belief in survival through personal strength. In Lonesome Road, if you tell Ulysses that you killed Caesar, he'll respond that by the logic of the Legion, he wasn't strong enough to be a leader if he couldn't even defend himself.

* Caesar's Legion is the most apparent "warrior" faction, even though their culture is modeled upon the disciplined, professional Roman Legions. Legion soldiers aren't much for individual tactics beyond
* Caesar's Legion toys with this. Their ruler, Caesar, was a student of history, and therefore
* Caesar's Legion uses relatively few guns, partly because of their technophobic views on pre-war technology, but also because they lack the logistics and manufacturing to support their widespread use. They still manage to fight the New California Republic to a stalemate, despite the latter being able to equip almost every single one of their troops with firearms and armour.
* Caesar. With high enough Speech or Medicine skill, it's possible to remain on friendly terms with the faction afterwards.
* Café Americain as he was at the winery as part of an attempt to impress his finacee's family, who owned the winery.
* Café Americain, demonstrating his jealousy over anyone making eyes at his girlfriend:
* Café Americain, Holly keeps insisting that her night out with Marcel is not a date until her friend says:
* Café Americain, one of the regulars is the widow of a deposed third-world dictator, constantly scheming for money with which to raise an army and retake her country. One of her plots involves getting into the ice cream business. She tries a number of disgusting flavor combinations before hitting on one everyone likes: Mint Chocolate Chip. Offhandedly, she mentions that it's made from all natural ingredients: mint, chocolate, and Chip.
* Café Americain, set in France, the main character (played by Valerie Bertenelli) was finally given an ultimatum to learn the native language. Her initial attempts were a little less than stellar: an attempt to congratulate a newly engaged couple had her unintentionally claiming to be having an affair with the man; and one attempt to converse with her instructor/UST interest resulted in the memorable phrase "Cheese in my pants makes me happy. Don't you agree?"
* Café con aroma de mujer (set in a hacienda/mansion and the village close to it in the countryside).
* Cafe Kichijoji De and is described as "A questionable human being" in his character profile.
* Cafe Kichijoji De has Maki, whose apartment room is practically filled to brim with dirty laundry, empty food boxes and beer cans and cigarette butts. His floor is barely even visible and the garbage piled in his room is so abundant that yanking a t-shirt from underneath results in a garbage avalanche that spills our to the front door.
* Cafe Kichijoji De, Jun has a bunch of macho underlings who resemble gorillas. His co-workers were quite shocked when he tells them that they're all girls.
* Cafe Lautrec staffing alternate shifts, keeping separate books, and brown-bagging liquor, even going so far as to visit the bar on alternate nights to tell customers not to patronize the place, submitting bomb-threats and ABC violations against their own establishment when the other owner was on-duty.
* Cafe Prime eventually settles out of court with Jaune, offering half a million lien as reperation and firing Alexander Sterling who started the whole mess.
* Cafe Tacuba is known for taking different names at different moments of his career. Among them: Juan, Cosme, Anónimo Intransingente e Intolerante, Massiossare, Nrü, Amparo Tonto Medardo In La' Kech (AT Medardo ILK), G-3, Gallo Gasss, Élfego Buendía, Rita Cantalagua, Sizu Yantra, Ixaya Mazatzin Tleyotl, Ixxi Xoo, Cone Cahuitl, "K'kame" and currently (as of April 2018) Zopilote.

* Cagayan (which is often referred to as borderline-subversive for how much it plays with the established tropes present in the series), the contestants routinely talk about their awareness of both possible Idol and clue locations. During the first episode, when one person from each tribe is sent on ahead to their camp area, nearly everyone assumes that said players had a chance to look for the Idol. When Spencer finds an idol clue, Woo and Tony correctly deduce afterwards that he likely would have found a clue because they're hidden in napkins during relaxed moments when a team has won a reward challenge and is having lunch. Tony and Woo play on the rival tribe's awareness by using an idol clue for their own tribe to blindside the other by giving it to someone and marking him as a target. Woo later steals a clue from Spencer and causes chaos in the camp, leading everyone to get up and start searching for it.

* Caged Heat Radio and Steve Corino in particular threatened bodily harm on those who did not tune in.
* Cage of Eden blows up his classroom on a regular basis and has never been arrested, let alone fired. The students are completely baffled as to why.
* Cage of Eden) or, in alternative, the schoolgirls Rion and Mami. Oomori is also really proud of this and she considers it an advantage in the "fight" to win the affection of Akira, the main male protagonist.
* Cage of Eden starts off as another goofy schoolboy, but begins to come into his own as he pulls more of the survivors into his group.
* Cage of Eden talking about genocide or racism (the population is too small for that). Rather, he borrows the Nazi "whistle blowing" tactic, encouraging his slaves to report on each other. Not only does it keep him informed, but it keeps his followers scared and unable to cooperate against him.
* Cage of Eden the one leading the most successful group of survivors.
* Cage's Daughter also inherited this move... as an X-ray finisher. Cue collective crotch-grabbing when it was revealed that the X-ray even shows the nuggets being brutally, brutally crushed.
* Cage's "I Never Knew You", about a man who falls in love with a woman he sees across the street and proceeds to stalk and murder her.
* Cage's "Suicidal Failure", the lyrics are partly Gallows Humor, partly Nightmare Fuel. An example is Cage walking past a group of Crips bleeding, hoping that they would kill him (implying that they would think he was a member of rival gang the Bloods).
* Cage the Elephant charting of the two, only reaching #83. The song that beat it?

"Shake Me Down", by five spots. It's not even their second best-known song (an honor that likely goes to "Come a Little Closer").
* Cage the Elephant's "Aberdeen" is a claymation tale of a kaiju trying to make friends with people in a city.
* Cage "The Machine" is another example - bulging with muscles, stuffed with brutality and almost impossible to put down, he absolutely
* CAGE was originally announced in 2007. It didn't get released until 2016, nine years later.
* Caging Skies: After the Nazi annexation of Austria, the school system begins to teach what they believe: all life is a struggle for existence, theirs is the highest race, with most being "semi-apes" who must be wiped out as a threat, while mixing with them is the worst of all, since it diminishes this "superiority". Everyone has to do their part as a soldier in the struggle, not only through fighting, but breeding since the Aryans' birth rate has fallen.
* Caging Skies. The Poles are described as having hairy feet and wrinkled noses. Then it's revealed that they're actually Russians pretending to be Polish. There's also this line that emphasizes their lovely features:
* Cagney & Lacey, a close friend of a diplomat committed a hit-and-run on a guy, and ran to the mission. Cagney & Lacey have a warrant for his arrest, but even though he doesn't have immunity, since he is within the diplomatic mission, the Charge dAffairs informs them that they are within their rights to refuse. He reminds them how their own country was horribly upset when the government of Iran didn't respect the sovereignty of their embassy in Tehran. He sneaks out of the mission once (which means he's now fair game) and they almost catch him, but he's able to sneak back in. The two discover that to get rid of a diplomatic incident the United States is going to waive prosecution on the guy. Before he finds out, the two go see him on the mission grounds and make a deal with him: if he'll pay the guy's medical expenses and lost wages, and make a donation to a charity, they'll not prosecute. (The interesting thing is that it was just an accident, if he hadn't panicked and ran, that's probably all that would have happened, his insurance would have had to pay the costs.)
* Cagney & Lacey as she and Cagney stand on a streetcorner in extravagant hooker outfits:
* Cagney & Lacey in the mid-1990s. Thus, unlike many of the shows on this list, its post-uncancelation run was much longer than its pre-cancellation run.
* Cahe Detective Club and gets a penalty of surviving on a harsh island for a while. However they are either used to island environments or just very optimistic. So they treat it like an ordinary vacation while Emina is the only one who has a hard time.
* Cahe Detective Club and more from having a family that globe-trots from time to time. She also explains she can speak Spanish, Italian, and French.
* Cahe Detective Club: Emina loves reading penguin picture books or filling the cafe with penguin dolls from Shizuka. One time she requests 5 penguin designs from different species that Shizuka can't tell the subtle differences between them.
* Cahe Detective Club: On the bus home from school, Nana and Touma discuss Emina's immature behavior at the cafe. Then Emina angrily reminds them she's standing right in between them. Also taken up to eleven in that most of the main characters also got on the bus just to hear them discussing about Emina.
* CAH:S3 dedicates the game to several "fan and creator friends who are now working at the Great Studio in the Sky."

* Caiga Quien Caiga from time to time (most of the staff in the Brazilian version, for example, is made up of stand-up comedians, after all).
* Cailin and Gabe share a love of fantasy, which Cailin expresses as an obsession with ghosts and Gabe of anime/manga (they are both fans of Japanese series about the supernatural).

* Caillou after blaming the show on teaching a bad word Stewie said. Clips of the show appear in its animation style with cel-shaded characters on a watercolor background that fades out at the edges. Later Peter is shown meeting in the park with Caillou's father in the same animation style.
* Caillou also has a few seasonal episodes like "Caillou's Winter Wonders", "Fall Is In The Air", "Winter!" and
* Caillou, Andy is referred to as a "different child", and he has a tendency to isolate himself and dislikes loud noises, among other things.
* Caillou," but then Caillou is upset that he traded it away when he sees that Jay attached it to his dump truck, this being a feature of the shovel. He cajoles Jay so much that Jay finally agrees to a tradeback anyway, but when Caillou sees how upset Jay gets, he finally honors the original agreement.
* Caillou, Daddy tells Caillou that "There's always a way to solve a problem. You just have to use your imagination... or your fingers," then tickles him playfully.
* Caillou episode "Caillou Computes" ends with Caillou deciding that the box his new computer came in is better than the actual device itself after having issues with learning to use it.
* Caillou, even the later episodes that featured the titular character having good behavior.
* Caillou featured segments about Caillou's cat Gilbert and his toys Rexy and Teddy going on adventures, along with live action segments with children called the Cailettes.
* Caillou features an episode where the children disagree on what game to play: one wants to pretend they are bears, while the others want to play astronauts. They compromise that they will be astronauts and visit a planet inhabited by alien bears.
* Caillou for his plight, even if it wasn't his fault or wasn't as bad as it was shown, treats his daughter Rosie as the favorite child and can even leave Caillou to die at times.
* Caillou: In "Leo's Hamster", this is done with a hamster when Leo's hamster, Buddy, whom Caillou is petsitting, gets loose.
* Caillou, often telling to her face that they wish she was never born/call her derogatory or obscene names.
* Caillou, Rexy is very fond of giving these to the other characters of the segment, Teddy and Gilbert.
* "Caillou's Christmas" that air regularly regardless of if the seasons depicted are actually happening.
* Caillou. She appeared in many voice-acting roles (as well as a few live-action ones) throughout the 2000s. However, it's hard to find any information on her after 2014, with her last known voice roles being her reprising Caillou for a few PBS Kids promos (when the show's fifth season aired on there in 2013) and a few mobile games.
* Caillou's Holiday Movie, the "Where Santa Has a Different Name" song provides details on Christmas traditions around the world, including Denmark, Slovakia and Greece. Lap-sitting is also seen in this special, and in the story "Holiday Magic."
* Caillou The Grownup as a 22-year-old manchild who still acts like a small boy living with his parents, refusing to act responsible and get a job. He is also very short-tempered and threatens to physically harm his parents if they make him do something he doesn't want to do, and he gleefully admits he purposely makes his parents' lives a living hell.
* Caillou The Grownup episode "A Very Caillou Thanksgiving" we are introduced to Caillou's cousin Boue who's a female version of him, she wears a dress with his signature colors, is also bald but has a few thin strands tied with bows, and just as whiny, spoiled, and immature as he is.
* Caillou the Grown Up, has an example in the episode "Caillou the Grownup Goes on Vacation", where Caillou has the gall to crack an "Eye/I" pun after throwing a knife into a man's eye when the man tried to beat him up in retaliation to ruining his kids' sand castles at the beach.

* Caillou the Grown Up short, Caillou will threaten the viewer into subscribing to the channel.
* Caillou the Grown Up videos shows Caillou's dad Boris exasperatedly pressing his palm against his face after witnessing his son cry because he broke off his shoelaces while trying to tie his shoes.
* Caillou, though Caillou usually (though not always) refrains from asking more than once.
* Caillou users who dislike the show because the titular character tends to whine a lot in the earlier seasons.
* Caillou videos don't appear mainly due to fear of being mistaken for an unironic fan of said series due to knowing a character's existence, or due to said characters being difficult to create in GoAnimate.
* Caillou was based off a series of French children's books in which the titular character was a baby that had a small following. This also explains why he doesn't have hair, as when the creators started making the books about Caillou's toddlerhood, a sample group of children did not recognize him when they added hair.
* Caillou with his and Rosie's playroom, when Rosie accidentally scratches his bike and he decides that she can't be trusted with any of his stuff.
* Caimie has been kidnapped, Sanji tells Chopper and Brook to wait for Usopp to come and pick them up. By the time Usopp arrives, he sees Chopper and Brook relaxing as if they were on the beach (On the grounds that worrying won't make time go any faster, so they might as well relax). Cue Usopp face-faulting.
* Caim, the protagonist, gave up his voice in exchange for his pact with the Red Dragon, turning him into an
* Cain and Abel. Abel is the first victim, and so he has to spend eternity reliving his story by having Cain repeatedly murder him on a daily basis, sometimes in rather horrid ways. Cain is the first murderer, and so he has to spend eternity reliving his story by murdering his brother on a daily basis. Their family dynamic is a little disturbed.
* Cain and Abel. Abel loved God and gave him the best of his flocks as part of a sacrifice, while Cain's heart was not really into serving God and he murdered Abel out of jealousy.
* Cain and Abel and Seth: Two well known siblings have a third sibling no one really pays much thought to.
* Cain and Abel by a girl and humiliated; Kelly punishes the girl by tying her up in a school hallway wearing only a towel with Buck's leash tied to the towel (and then calling for Buck as she and the other students enter, at which point the end credits start).
* Cain and Abel: Older brothers often turn violently on their youngest, successful brother.
* Cain and Abel plot where the older brother kills his younger brother out of jealousy.
* Cain and Abel: Sibling rivalry turns into bitter hatred with murderous intent.
* Cain and Abel: When one sibling is good while the other is villainous.
* Cain and Abel who respectively represent sin and rebellion vs. righteousness and obedience.
* Cain, arguing that he was more talented than his brother, then AAA Mega Champion Dr. Wagner Jr.
* Cain aspires to be this; early in his career he managed to pull some strings and get himself transferred to a nice, safe artillery unit. Unfortunately, it turned out less safe than expected and gave him a reputation for mighty heroism. Later his reputation makes this much harder, so he has to find somewhere safe to be when the fighting breaks out. It always leads to a sort of self-targeting
* Cain Bernhardt did not explicitly say what his plan is, but it appears to be the standard global domination thing in addition to sharing Korinek's ambitions.
* Cain by James Byron Huggins, a super-soldier gets right up from the operating table and proceeds to rip his way through every guard in the secret military lab facility on his way out, clothed only in the blood of his victims.

* Cain deliberately sent Shido a psychic dream of Riho turning evil in order to get Shido to avoid this.
* Cain does see this coming, sometimes. On many occasions, he has stood his ground or done something brave rather than take what many would consider the easier or cowardly way because he already realized the latter would
* Caine and Diana that the only reason they loved each other is because no one else would be insane enough to love them because they're both sick and evil;
* Caine deal with them. He can use it to propell himself through the air, although that is not revealed until Book 3. All any of it requires is subtle hand motions. He is one of the 3 most powerful mutants in the series.
* Cain from DC's The House of Mystery. His brother, Abel, who is caretaker of The House of Secrets, may also qualify, though perhaps he's more "chubby" than crusty.
* Cain Hill: As Chester moves about the asylum, he smashes the security cameras.
* Cain Hill: Chester Lockhart kills Michael by chaining him to a wall, pouring lighter fluid all over him, and then setting him on fire. The rest of the cast find his charred corpse later, and Mary places a cloth over his head.
* Cain Hill: Chester Lockhart, the killer of the movie, has a pretty big beard.
* Cain Hill is set in the titular mental institution, which was closed down over a decade ago by the time the film takes place. The main cast have come to shoot a documentary about the place, only to end up victims of Chester Lockhart.
* Cain Hill, one of the crew finds a dead body with lots of lacerations on its face.
* Cain Hill: Richard and Mary almost kiss in the pub, but Mary decides otherwise when they're a hair's breath away.
* Cain Hill: The opening shot of the movie is of a woman hiding from the killer, only to be found and attacked... then it reveals that it was a scene of a movie being shot.
* Cain in general is quite fond of invoking this trope, thanks to the melta carried by his sidekick Jurgen. A weapon designed to blast through

* Cain mentions he has a couple of enemies that he "would sit back and roast caba nuts" while watching them be burned to death.
* Cain openly denies killing his brother Abel to an all-knowing, all-seeing God.
* Cain picture of him in the manga. He's certainly acting like an idiot...
* Cain puts his gun to his head when he's surrounded by the zombies. Unfortunately for him, he's out of ammo and he gets eaten alive, among the zombies includes
* "Cain's Blood" by 4 Runner is a variant, which uses Cain and Abel as symbolism for the narrator's struggle between good and evil ("Half of my blood is Cain's blood / Half of my blood is Abel's").
* Cain's Last Stand: Cain is suspicious of some soldiers and sees they are wearing standard Imperial armor. When one says he has a message for Cain, Cain shoots him: any message would have been sent through secure official channels. With the ploy blown, the others open fire.
* Cain's Last Stand, Cain's review of the new PDV forces inspires more cynical thoughts.
* Cain's Last Stand, he brevets the commissars-in-training as commissars. At the end, he ensures that all the survivors actually hold that rank.
* Cain's Last Stand is this twice. Freel's last seen alive but panicked over a vox in the middle of a fight with Tyrannids and while his death isn't confirmed, Cain doubts that anyone could have survived long enough to make it back to where reinforcements were waiting. If Freel somehow did make it back to his own lines alive it's mentioned that most (although not all) of his unit was killed anyway in another engagement a couple days later.
* Cain's Last Stand is well over one hundred (as is his aid, Gunner Jurgen). Generally however, the treatments that allow this sort of long life are reserved for the rich and the well-off.
* Cain's Last Stand operation that went silent. After tangling with tyranids and having to evac, an SDF patrol boat finds that they arrived by means of a mycetic spore from the hive fleet that buzzed through the Perlia System earlier that year.

* Cain's Last Stand rather than let it fall into the hands of Necrons. Alas, Necrons have advanced enough means to simply jam their signal and take the artifact.
* Cain's Last Stand. This being a Ciaphas Cain novel, you get no points for guessing who wins the inevitable confrontation between the two.
* Cain's Last Stand to some schola cadets having to scrub lichen off of a paved parade ground with toothbrushes.
* Cain's Last Stand when Warmaster Varan's forces flatten the PDF headquarters with a battleship's lance batteries. The for-once-not-incompetent brass had already evacuated but we don't know the casualties.
* Cain (THE HERO OF THE IMPERIUM!) writes that the Inquisitors don't like bribery and intimidation, because they resent people infringing on their methods. Inquisitor Amberly Vail writes in a footnote that they are, of course, above such petty emotions as resentment.
* Cain. Yet all of them become frightened from even a mention of their progenitor.
* Cairhienin nobility wear horizontal slashes on their clothing. The selection of colors indicates their house affiliation, and the number of slashes shows their rank.

* Caitians (aliens based on lions) are even worse, with an 8:1 ratio. Each harem usually consists of up to six women.
* Caitlin and Emily are basically sisters through adoption. They are constantly enjoying each other's company, sleeping in the same bed, and
* Caitlin does a really big bubble in the shows opening titles. She also does a couple of bubbles in the episode, The Slow and the Even-Tempered.
* Caitlin Doughty give their voices to "characters" (Natalie is Zoey Ellis; Jenny is Addison Cain; Sarah is Dragons' Maiden; Harris is one narrator; Maggie is Blushing Books; David is Gideon; the others voice Facebook commenters) in "Into The Omegaverse".
* Caitlin Glass movie. She couldn't act properly angry in one scene, so right before she was supposed to speak, the director called her fat to anger her.
* Caitlin's fellow frontier brain in Gen IV, Dhalia also has it, styled in loose braids that reach her legs.
* Caitlin Snow and Ronnie Raymond, who were also together/married on an alternate earth (the same alternate earth as Barry and Iris' doppelgangers, in fact). While Caitlin was able to move on from Ronnie's death and find love again with other people, neither of those relationships went anywhere (one of them because the guy
* Caitlin's speaking voice is fine when she's calm, but she has a seriously loud, ear-piercing scream, and her bawling can be grating as well.

* Caity Lotz) are also an example of this trope, as are Felicity and Oliver.
* Caity Lotz (martial arts. Also a dancer, singer and most notably actress)
* Cai, while jumping around in pain, then accidentally whacks Arthur in the head with said bow. Arthur joins him in screams of pain.
* Cajun French, the Cajuns being the descendants of Acadians expelled from Canada in the 1760s. Similar to the Québécois example, Cajun French sounds extremely bumpkin and backwater to speakers of standard French.

* Cake about a woman dealing with chronic pain, this is expected. The final scene of the movie has Claire and Silvana laying some flowers on Nina's grave and then getting back into the car to drive home. Showing how this can still be used positively Claire - who for the rest of the movie had preferred to ride in the car lying down - chooses to ride in the car sitting up. This at least hints that she's making progress.
* Cake, as she's essentially a manifestation of Claire's inner critic.
* cake, bananadine, and jenkem (supposedly a fadding drug among teens, created by storing raw sewage in a plastic bag for a week or so) have each raised their share of moral panic before people realized they were fake.
* Cake Boss. Buddy later apologized for the incident and the episode was removed from rotation.
* Cake Boss dedicated one episode to Salvatore Picinich, a long-time friend and employee, after his death from cancer.
* Cake Boss has to make sure they don't kill each other. Additionally, Buddy has three other sisters but they don't drive him anywhere near as crazy as Mary does.
* Cake Boss once had a proposal cake that included figures of the gentleman on one knee, the lady he was asking, and the actual ring. She said yes.
* Cake by the Ocean" by band DNCE has an opening in which three journalists do successive puns about cake.
* "C.A.K.E.D.-F.I.V.E." had Numbuh 86 share the spotlight with Sector V, where she has to escape from the * Cake is notorious for pointing out "fake fans" who obviously only know their big hits. When they catch people up front who are only singing along to The Distance and what not, they will point them out and shame them into moving to the back so the hardcore fans who know all the words to every song can get up front and really enjoy the show.
* Cake Mania 2 the message you get after completing the August level of the Grand Battle stage says that satisfied Japanese customers are thinking of making a commercial for Jill's bakery: "Something to do with cute hamsters, a talking mushroom and go-go dancers playing poker with fish."
* Cake Mania 4: Main Street is an "invisible man" which turns out to be two children carrying out this trope.
* Cake Mania 4: Main Street which turns other customers into blocks of ice.
* Cake Mania 5: Lights, Camera, Action! has Super Cat Lady, who turns other customers into mimes.
* Cake only had one #1 hit on modern rock radio. Was it "The Distance" or "Short Skirt/Long Jacket"? Actually, it was neither but rather their hit in-between, "Never There".
* Cakes In Space Astra notes that the Poglites' language, when she turns her translator off, sounds like belching.
* Cakes In Space has Pilbeam, a robot caretaker for the ship that Astra and her family are taking to their new planet home. When the ship becomes infested with hostile sentient cakes and veers off course, he has to help Astra get rid of the cakes and save the ship.
* Cakes In Space is a little girl who has to save the spaceship her family is on because it's veered off-course, is being looted by aliens, and has hostile living cake monsters infesting it.
* Cakes In Space says this when she learns that Nom-O-Tron, the ship's food replicator, has used up so much of the ship's processing power on her request for "the ultimate dessert", that the ship has veered off course, and is infested with sentient, hostile cake monsters.
* Cake song "Short Skirt/Long Jacket", the narrator's dream girl wears one of these:
* Cake song "World of Two" has the line ."..you are/ two of the most/perfectly/ beautiful/people in your world."
* Cake's "Rock 'N' Roll Lifestyle" criticizes the entire rock industry for practicing this behavior — from the fans who spend thousands of dollars to craft a "rebellious" image to the singer that smashes his guitar, not because he's protesting the system, but because it's what's expected of him at this point (and he'll just buy a new one anyways, only to smash it again...the cycle goes on).

* Cake's "Short Skirt/Long Jacket" consists of people on the street listening to the song on headphones and giving their opinions of it.
* Cake's suicide horrifies the other members. Nina's husband, Roy, later mentions that he's in a group for people whose loved ones killed themselves and, similarly, expressed so much anger at his wife that he frightened another member.
* (Cake: The Cake-making Little Oven), a mock toy commercial (in Spanish) from the now defunct Mexican radio station Radioactivo 98.5. At first you'd think that it's just a toy oven for baking mini cakes, except that the "cakes" are implied to be something else entirely:
* cake toppers and accuses the whole bakery of being racist. Of course, in this case he's deliberately doing it just to get back at Carla.
* Cake Toppers: A wedding cake is just tad boring without a miniature version of the newlyweds.
* Cake Toppers: The little bride and groom figures that are put on top of a wedding cake.
* Cake Wrecks) do a "Rental Cake": The display cake is mostly Styrofoam (with the exception of the bottom layer for the cake-cutting), and then the "cake" is wheeled back into the kitchen after the cake-cutting "to be served" and replaced with sheet cake in the specified flavor and style. The guests (usually) do not know the difference unless they are told.
* Cake Wrecks often features things that are supposed to be cake-and-frosting representations of people. Most of them are anatomically implausible at best, often involving boneless limbs, off-centre faces, and oddly contorted positions.
* Cake Wrecks. Others are writing words like "In Blue" or "With Sprinkles" instead of just following the instruction.
* Cake Wrecks ("ptooey") at the mere mention of the dreaded cupcake cake.
* Cake Wrecks ran into this with a groom's cake made to look like a photorealistic replica of the groom's head, back when the existence of edible photo paper wasn't as well-known as it is now.
* C. a k. polní maršálek different from the standard look in the days of old Austria. At least the uniforms of the Austro-Hungarian Army are pretty faithfully recreated.
* Calabah life by making immorality seem glamorous; it's implied that she has done this to many other young women.
* Calabresella ended up having a simplified description in virtually every English source up to the end of the 20th Century.
* Calacas (Day of the Dead). Though they aren't typical "horror" creatures despite being dead. They live very loud and colorful afterlives.
* Calacas: Skeletons representing the dead in Mexican culture. Usually highly decorated with designs painted on their skulls.
* Calalbakrab" (Arabian-American-Russian flagship) is very big, with dozen of swimming pools, at least one soccer field, some shopping centers and so on. It's shaped like a scorpion, can detach three contained ships and sports an energy cannon able to vaporize entire fleets;
* Calamari Surprise, a variant of the immediately preceding item, but with tentacles as the restraining devices instead of standard bondage equipment.
* Calamari Union, which—depending on the source—features between 14 and 16 characters named Frank.
* Calamities of Nature that being gay and Catholic is easier than being a vampire and a Jehovah's Witness.
* Calamity: Idilithia is an interesting variant on this trope. Buildings on one side of the city are constantly crumbling to dust, but the other side expands and grows new buildings at the same rate. So, instead of moving like a car or train, it moves like a spot of mold moving across a piece of bread.
* Calamity is an Epic whose power is being able to permanently steal abilities from other Epics. The only reason why he doesn't rule the world is that he isn't interested in going to the trouble of getting rid of all the other Epics.

* Calamity is a solid Trick Shot, pulling off kill shots while performing complex aerial maneuvers, being the team's dedicated sniper with the BFG
* Calamity Jane (1953), Jane fights this kind, and brags of the number she has killed.
* Calamity Jane at all. In fact, she starts ranting to him about her romantic rival (previously friend), Katie, while he does it.
* Calamity Jane Meets Doctor Isles, Jane and Maura experience subtle awareness of their attraction to each other at first, ‘simply’ acknowledging the other as a good friend, but Maura only explicitly tells Jane that she loves her when Jane is preparing to leave Hollow Creek after Hoyt’s death, which gives Jane the kick to realise the depth of her own feelings for Maura.
* Calamity Jane Meets Doctor Isles, this is a perfect description of Jane and Maura’s first kiss, which takes place in a rainstorm outside Maura’s house after Jane's insistence that she has to leave Maura to stop endangering her life are countered by Maura's proclamation that she loves Jane in every way and can't imagine life without her.
* Calamity Jane - sees her with her coat off, he thinks she's someone else before it mentally clicks two seconds later and he turns around, stunned and mouth agape. The rest of the men at the ball are pleasantly surprised along with him.
* Calamity Jane Some people are not convinced that their relationship is 101% heterosexual.
* Calamity Jane: The small-town theatre hall owner in Deadwood sarcastically says this when Calamity asks why he doesn't send for Adelaide Adams, a big star of the Chicago stage.
* Calamity Jane, with all attendants being shocked at seeing Jane in a dress.
* Calamity Trigger Arcade and Story Modes. Some players might find making a chart or a table handy, 'cause it gets complicated. Then, once enough pieces are revealed, it becomes simpler in a satisfying way.
* Calamity Trigger, its basically all about the characters trying to defy their fates, even the antagonist Terumi took out Takamagahara in an attempt to be free of their meddling control.
* Calamity Trigger Reconstructed, we have a moment when Rachel teleports right in front of Ragna.
* Calamus root. Theoretically, it's mildly stimulating and in large quantities becomes hallucinogenic. Practically, its taste is "interesting" - if you used to drink black coffee without sweeteners - but, even then, trying to chew that much of the root will probably sooner get your whole digestive tract (along with the taste center in brain and maybe skin on the back of your ears) tanned for good than it will make you really "high."
* Calas Typhon of the Death Guard, who manipulated his legion into having the Destroyer Plague unleashed on them, setting them up to turn to Nurgle and become Plague Marines. Typhon was rewarded by becoming Typhus the Traveler, a Chaos Champion of

* Calcio Storico a sport played exclusively in Florence Italy, between 4 teams based on district of the cities in one tournament each year, is a basically MMA the ball game. 27 men for each team enter, and play for 50 minutes non-stop. There are very few rules limiting engagement, and the first half of each game is usually just a bunch of sparing, as the fighters on each side try to gain an advantage. Eventually the team with the ball (which would probably have had it for this entire time, just looking for an opening), will make a go of it. Scores tend to be very low, 2 points is a winning score. Brutal, it was started in the 16th century to demonstrate to besiegers that the men of Florence are not afraid. BTW: None of the participants are paid, and the winning's team prize: A trophy, and a free steak dinner.

* Calcium oxide or "quicklime" was once popular in the illegal burial industry, as it was believed to accelerate decomposition. This turned out to be a myth, if anything it was a preservative.
* calculates the answer and is about to reveal it before Flonne smashes him to prevent her secret from being revealed.
* Calculating God; transmissions to Delta Pavonis go unnoticed by the native Wreed, because the Wreed have a brain structure that makes them incapable of doing math. (They can automatically recognize numbers of up to 46, and that's it.) They are very good at ethical problems and analog simulations, though. The Forhilnor also admit that they were astonished to find a civilization on the Wreed homeworld, but stoutly defend their intelligence, noting that the Wreed build beautiful cities out of the sparse available materials there.
* Calculations by fans indicate it must have an energy density greater then antimatter, which is not physically possible.
* Calculords, and land mines. Oh, and there's a "UFO Abductor" card — it removes the weakest enemy unit from the lane it's played in. The enemy commander Uracillon, himself a Grey alien, makes extensive use of saucer units.
* Calculords in particular is tied for the highest starting HP in the game. There's also the human-piloted Tinker Walker, which buffs all vehicles in the lane (itself included).
* Calculords mobile — they have the Double Time ability, which means they advance twice as fast. The SMC Flanker is one of the only Push units with Double Time, maybe because the idea is that the enemy doesn't notice he's there.
* Calculus Is Arcane Knowledge: Calculus is used to show that a character is very intelligent.
* Calculus textbooks have random references to a "yellow pig" in the index, and the works are dedicated to a mysterious "Y.P."
* Caldari being the missile favouring race of the bunch has plenty of ships that deal carnage via different sized missiles. Whilst in-game the Drake Battlecruiser can fit "only" 7 launchers (although State Issue Raven, a very rare battleship is the only ship that can fit 8 launchers), it's in-game model has no less than 16 launchers (eight on each side) with three missile tubes each. Canonically, it looks very capable of performing MMM, even if it's game version can't.
* Caldari favor kinetic missiles, which have very low overall damage and suffer against fast-moving targets but

* Caleb Hyles: Mostly does rock covers, though he does have original songs.
* Caleb in Season 7 is thought to be dead, but gets back up and ruins the reunion between Angel and Buffy.
* Caleb leads an underground rebellion in Meridian while searching for the rightful heir. He is 15 when he meets the Guardians in the 1st episode and has presumably been leading for at least a year before then.
* Caleb Meyer" rapes the narrator Nellie Kane while her husband is out of town, but he pays the price mid-act when she slashes his throat open with a bottle-neck.
* Caleb's eyes turn black when he is merged with the First, which also turns his blood an oily black.
* Caleb spits his coffee after adding to it what he thought was sugar, but is in fact vampire ashes.
* Caleb utters the line again at the beginning of the second chapter when Gideon once again crashes the subway train Caleb was riding on into another one.
* Caleb wants revenge on Raythor for his father's death. Later, after Raythor has been framed and thrown into the Abyss of Shadows,

* Caleb Williams, Collins disappears from the novel after telling Falkland’s backstory. Ten years (and many chapters) later, Collins bumps into Caleb on the road. It turns out Collins was sent to the West Indies to look after Falkland’s plantation.
* Caleb Williams is all about this trope. The titular hero is an innocent man everyone believes is guilty, while his employer is a guilty person everyone believes to be innocent.
* Caleb Williams is this in his own home after his employer accuses him of theft. His infamy spreads nationwide after he escapes from prison and his employer's half-brother offers 100 guineas for Caleb's capture.
* Caleb Williams, the titular hero declares his love for his employer in Ch. 3 of Vol. II — at the end of a heated argument.
* Cale has become more like this recently, in the "do what is right rather than what is lawful" sense. His character development has been a transition from

* Calendar Mysteries with little sneaker toys left behind. When the kid heroes investigate, they find that it's actually the plot of a bunch of teenager to promote their newly formulated sneakers.
* Calendula has this visual effect as its core gameplay mechanic. It essentially consists of a series of creepy and bizarre glitches that you have to fix by fiddling around with the game's menu settings.
* Calexico's "Ballad of Cable Hogue" has an Old Western version. She's only ever referred to as "Madame". Even though the narrator suspects that Madame will be the death of him, she sweet-talks him into leaving his gold with her for safekeeping. Then she leads "an army" to his hiding place and guns him down.
* Calexico's song "Across the Wire" is rather vaguely-worded, but can be interpreted as a song about two Mexican brothers sneaking into the US.
* CALEXIT has California secede from the Union following Donald Trump's election, and the subsequent civil war.
* CALEXIT: Much concern is had that an independent California would become a Chinese puppet-state and seek to expand into the American Southwest. As of the second book, this appears virtually given.

* Cale Yarborough had said "If he crowded me on the track it would be ok but when they ran us down we lost it". Basically the racing driver's way of saying "I don't like being shoved out and crashing but I really hate being outrun and finishing second".

* Caliban series, derived from Asimov's robot works, takes terraforming by colony drop to a new level. The normal process is to have a few robot teams cut the comets apart and fire them at the planet with mass drivers, ensuring that all the micro-comets that hit the planet are small enough to burn up on impact without damaging the real estate. But the final novel of the trilogy sends an entire comet at the planet, breaking it apart into large pieces, so that the overlapping craters will dig a channel between the equatorial seas and the north pole, allowing the planet of Inferno to have greater temperature regulation.
* Calibans War surprises people when it proves to be capable of instantly transmitting messages from Venus to Jupiter and back, when humans had to (and still have to) contend with lightspeed lag that makes snappy dialogue more impossible with increasing distance.
* Caliban, the eponymous robot gets past his pursuers in an underground tunnel by doing this.
* Caliban trilogy, set in the same universe, ignores the stricture above about calling your planet "Hell". It's set on Inferno.
* Caliborn believes that the puppet Lil' Cal is a juju, an artifact whose sole purpose is to turn the lives of everyone who lives in the same universe with it into a nightmare. It's apparently so evil that one of the only times

* Califonia State Prison - Corcoran and in the L.A. Times for this. A California prison experiment in the 1990's involved putting opposing gang leaders in the same cells, in the hopes that they could learn to co-exist. When this (predictably) resulted in a lot of fighting, most prisons stopped the practice. Corcoran's guards allegedly started betting and shooting those who ran or lost.

* California Dreams, and only mildly subverted when the organizer, a girl named Tiffany is convinced to stand for auction because her best friend hasn't been able to buy anyone. Unfortunately for her, by the time she agrees all the other bidders have left and she's bought for virtually nothing.
* California Dreams features a character named MacBride, Sergeant MacBride. United States Marine Corps. A slight subversion in that she's female and teaching a cooking class "the way we do it in the corps", but she was black so I guess it's a wash.
* California Dreams in its third season as his character had been reduced from the focus character of the show to a one-trick pony who mostly showed up to whine 'Aww man' when things didn't go his way.
* California Dreams-inspired series. While they gain a larger audience and potential to go even further, their combined egos destroy the show and momentarily wrecks their friendship.
* California Dreams, resident slime ball jerk with a heart of gold Sly wrote these for Lorena.
* California Dreams there was one hallway, but which had a slightly unusual architecture, and it had two classrooms, one which never changed, and one which housed everything from auto-shop to cooking class and was eventually also used for the graduation ceremony.
* California Dreams they had a very special episode in which one of the girls is convinced to take steroids to qualify for an Olympic volleyball team. She's eventually found out, and has an intervention (complete with breakdown in the middle of the local teen hangout) after which it is never referred to again.
* California Dreams, they reappear a few more times in the episode; cheering in unison whenever they speak to or interact with anybody.
* California Dreams, where Cassidy's horrible singing before an open-night audition has her bandmates decide it's better to let her perform alone rather than be embarrassed in public. At which point Cassidy reveals she's a great singer and was pulling this just to perform solo.
* California Free State. The Nova Scorpion is a meter long and its stinger has one of the deadliest animal poisons known to metahumanity — it can kill in one hour.
* California mocked). When some land was eventually named California by the Spanish (inspired by the books), the idea it was an island persisted in many maps up through the late 17th and early 18th century.
* Californian telling them to "shut up". The final film makes no reference to the other ship.
* California Senate Bill 420, which established California's medical marijuana program. Intentional or not, it's pretty funny.
* California's history of independence goes back very far. The area was only settled by the Spaniards in 1769, who remained loyal to the Crown during Mexico's War of Independence. After the war, California was only part of Mexico for fifteen years, during which it rebelled against the Mexican government
* California Speed has most of its tracks start out normally enough, then sends you racing through a shopping mall, a military base, an active volcano, or even a giant computer. What are you racing with? Ferrari and Lamborghini clones, hot rods, a camper, a golf cart, and a forklift among others.

* California Speed has two unused songs: an alternate version of the Silicon Valley theme, and the tune used for the menus in the N64 port.
* California Suite: A particularly unfortunate example in that Diana is realizing her husband Sidney is gay. Over a very contentious night at the Beverly Hills Hotel Diana makes several pointed remarks before confronting Sidney directly.
* California Suite: Four unconnected stories about visitors to the Beverly Hills Hotel.
* California University drama get too old to be believable, expect most of them to go here.
* California University TV shows to extend their lives into the college years.
* California Voodoo declared dead by the International Fantasy Gaming Society, never to be played again.
* California, you've got Riot Season, Fire Season, Flood Season, and Pilot Season.
* Californication against criticism from Julian, a self-help author whose work she describes as "gobbledygook".
* Californication cites this at times to girls that come on to him/coworkers who set him up while he's trying to repair his relationship with his long-term domestic partner (his wife in everything but name).
* Californication could qualify. While he sleeps with almost every woman he meets (including ones who hate him), he is usually the first to assault (read: knock out) anyone who either inappropriately insults a woman or mistreats them somehow.
* Californication. Examples include his masturbation at work habit becoming known through a viral video and was taken to a new low (or high perhaps) with his season 6 plot about pretending to be gay to sign a client.
* Californication. Frusciante has even said that he likes some of the B-Sides such as "Instrumental #1" and "Gong Li" better than a lot of the album tracks.
* Californication had its pilot leaked before the series made its debut.
* Californication, Hank Moody has this arrangement with his daughter - both ways. She gets most of the money.
* Californication. Hank seduces the director's wife to get revenge and later gets into a public brawl with him. His daughter points out that the transition shows his work reflected his deeply-buried idealistic side when trying to sweet-talk him.
* Californication, in ways that relate to the ongoing story arcs and with the implication that most of Hank Moody's novels come from this trope. The main example is "Fucking and Punching", a novel that Hank writes during season 1 about his experience with Mia, which Mia subsequently steals and publishes under her own name, creating an ongoing conflict for much of the show.
* Californication, in which all the writers who appear as characters are at least successful, even if they're depicted as talentless hacks.
* Californication. It's also strongly implied that he was able to work and generally had it together when he lived with his family in New York. They relocated to Hollywood because a film based on Hank's novel was being made. They seriously cannot deal and they all end up messed up in some way or another.
* Californication, most notably having sex with Becca's teacher which turns out to also be her current boyfriend's mom. When he surprisingly stumbles onto the boy in the kitchen after a late night romp with his mom, he mutters incredulously "I banged your mom..."
* Californication seems to be going out of its way to have one of these every series. They're yet to top the one from series 2 though.
* Californication were originally from New York, and Hank often pontificates on its superiority.
* Californication, when Hank's daughter is explaining how he and his ex (the girl's mother) met.
* Caligula After he has already been stabbed several times, he gasps his final words: "Strike again — I'm still alive!"
* Caligula, but especially when they get as dramatic as they get about Caligula.

* Caligula focuses on various characters and the concept of the "Caligula Effect", a term that can be used to describe when one has a higher desire for something they’re not allowed to have. For example, wanting to see something more because they’re not allowed to watch, wanting to do something more because they’re not allowed to do it.
* Caligula had the warning printed in large letters directly under the title on the poster of the 20th Anniversary edition (not submitted to the MPAA to avoid the dreaded NC-17 rating):
* Caligula has been released in a number of formats and ratings, but any version considered "unrated" will almost certainly be so for good reason and contain many explicit scenes of hardcore sex, compared to the relatively tame togas-and-boobs costume drama of the general releases.
* Caligula has "Gossiper", a social network that is very clearly supposed to be Twitter.
* Caligula. Later, Simm has been quoted as saying that Caligula was just a dress rehearsal for the Master and that he partially based his performance on Caligula.
* Caligula met with a fortune-teller, who told him "You are as likely to rule the Roman Empire as you are to ride across the bay of Naples without getting your horse wet." When he did become emperor, he commandeered all the boats in Naples, lined them up from one side of the bay to the other, and rode his horse across them, just to spite the fortune teller.
* Caligula Overdose. He tries to justify peeping as being the same as reading a dirty magazine or watching porn, but the Go-Home Club doesn't buy it for a second.
* Caligula Overdose, play the female and male protagonists of the game, respectively. As a result, some fans interpret the two of them as actually being related, despite there not being any canon relationship between the two.
* Caligula's assassination and the subsequent elevation of Claudius to Emperor play out similarly in
* Caligula's Horse: Giving jobs to animals or inanimate objects is insane because it makes no sense to hire non-sapient beings or inanimate objects to do something a human would be more qualified for.
* Caligula. Since he couldn't actually show the infamous orgy scene in a blip video, instead we just get shots of him reacting to it, along with various comments describing the action: "Wait... is that a fucking snake?"
* Caligula's is heavily based on, she's not described in a flattering light, but here, she's quite down to earth and obviously just trying to do her best to cope with Caligula's instability.
* Caligula spectacle (which was what producer Bob Guccione wanted). The result was too trashy and debauched for fans of drama, and too heavy on narrative for people who watched it with their pants off.
* Caligula, the titular character used this to justify accusing otherwise innocent people of treason and having them executed in the most brutal of ways.
* Caligula was banned on its initial release (except in Quebec, where it was rated 18+) for being particularly sexually explicit.
* Caligula would have come and gone in two weeks had it been left to succeed or fail on its nonexistent merits. It became successful, and something of a cult classic, solely because of the protests that it sparked.
* Caliphate, American troops put down an Islamist rebellion in the Philippines by gathering DNA from terrorists and targeting anyone who might share it.
* Caliphate because the latter represents the more immediate and dangerous threat.
* Caliphate, but Muslims can also be sent there if their husbands divorce them. It gets much worse when there are also women brainwashed with mind-control devices to be used as cheap pleasure for the customers.
* Caliphate. But then she is caught up in a secret operation to stop a biological weapon from being unleashed and gets thrust into action.
* Caliphate empire that rules over Eastern Europe and the Balkans, and China has returned into an Celestial Empire of post-human amoral creatures.
* Caliphate faults, at least women enjoy the same rights as men which floors her since she would never dream of such thing in the place she grew up.

* Caliphate, Russia is mentioned to have become a Socialist-Tsarist regime whose ruler Vladimir the Fifth controls Eastern Europe and the Balkans. Though never seen in action, it's rather odd that they would combine these two mutually exclusive government systems that have been literally at war with each other.
* Caliphate. The President outright rules like an Emperor in-name-only, the Constitution is repealed and they have annexed most of the American continent such as Canada and Mexico - the few independent countries not under their control such as Brazil and the Philippines are just client states instead.
* Caliphate), they remain fundamentally good and heroic people. Petra for example when she witnesses several janissary soldiers dying horribly, rather than feeling joy over enforcers of the Caliphate that brought such misery to her being killed this way, she pities them because they were just as victims like she was; meanwhile, her brother rebels against the corrupt and decayed regime he is forced to serve and joins the Americans in their mission to save the world.
* Caliphate, uses the power of presidential pardon as a weapon against Americans he politically opposes, pardoning all but one person who murdered the opponents (the exception was due to the murderer having been determined to have killed purely as revenge for an affair between the victim and the killer's wife, and had nothing to do with political issues).
* Caliph ends up using some of those in his final battle against Saergaeth, in a form of artillery shells. A single hit of such shell kills the entire crew of an airship.
* Caliph Kapok is the disembodied head of a wizard. His head is cold, calculating, and extremely malevolent. Without the compassion or emotions that come from his heart, he only thinks logically. His body is benevolent and (without his evil head) full of compassion, making it a beloved leader.
* Calisto has a legitimate beef with Xena (Xena killed her family and wiped out her village), but every time she shows up she racks up more collateral damage and
* Calisto Yew's lauging fits. Much later Shih-na laughs in the exact same way, finally proving that Shih-na
* Callahan like she's making a wish, even though she isn't. For the record, the dialogue is a woman saying she'd like to show her husband Isham a repaired table. "I show Ish that table repaired" was transposed into "I sho' wish that table repaired." The protagonist later realizes that the cluricaune was actually offering him a great gift, since even "Wishes I will actively try to make go wrong" is a truly incredible gift. It isn't the cluricaune's fault that the protagonist can't come up with good wishes.
* Callahan's Con, Jake claims that a cop he knew in Boston was tearing out his hair looking for a legal statute to get a well-known drug dealer arrested. Said cop finally turned up a statute, noting that Native Americans could not legally go above the first floor of a public venue — and the drug dealer, who was 1/8th Mohawk, lived on a third-floor walkup.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon became a recurring character, having been made immortal by Lady Callahan and cured of his various phobias so that his scientific genius could aid Jake Stonebender and his friends in saving the world.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon books, Jake and the gang deliver what they call the "All-Purpose Toast"; "Here's to all those who weren't as lucky."
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon books. Solace explicitly mocks some of the ideas in this trope, pointing out that she (assigned for the characters' convenience) isn't a biological entity and doesn't have the same responses or motivations. She doesn't generally demonstrate particularly alien behavior, though.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon, by Spider Robinson, Chapter 8, "Unnatural Causes," reveals that an alien race has been intervening in human history to lead us ultimately into a self-destructive war, so they can eat the corpses, which they are too squeamish to slaughter for themselves. It never seems to have occurred to them that they could secure a steady meat supply from Earth by manipulating human history so that we will accept them as gods, to by worshipped by offerings in the form of dressed animal carcasses (or even human carcasses).
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon eventually moves down to Key West, wherein the sudden influx of time travelers, talking dogs, aliens, and general weirdos goes completely unremarked upon.

* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon featured a couple originally named Les Moore and Merry Glueham (pronounced "gloom"). When they got married, they swapped last names.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon features an alien race nicknamed the Cockroaches who embody this.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon he can't go back to where he was before.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon: he regularly makes full contact with any mind within a certain radius, which causes him great distress. One time it's so bad he tries to bash his own head open to make it stop.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon is actually titled "The Centipede's Dilemma". In it, a character with a dangerous psychic ability is defeated and rendered powerless by using this technique.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon is an archetypal example. The funniest man in the entire bar, who could recite his Social Security Number, deadpan, and have the audience in stitches, he found his way to Callahan's after a particularly traumatic night: his wife had broken up with him, simply saying that she couldn't stand him anymore. He'd tried for years on end to be the laughing, joking type, building up that wall between himself and everyone else — and he eventually learned better from a patient who was terminally ill, bedridden, and in constant care. That patient was the one who sent him to the eponymous saloon.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon is a professional Marilyn Monroe impersonator, and a very convincing one at that, to the point that he's often hit on while at work. He's also a happily heterosexual married man with a wife and kids.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon is in effect - if he does anything that benefits one world at the expense of the other, the gate will fail, possibly trapping him in a world where he can't digest the food. He finally hits on ethanol; it's not a chiral molecule as said above, but the esters (which determine taste and texture) are. Result: one world's really bad moonshine whiskey is the other's Wonderbooze.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon is one of the earlier examples in science fiction of an AI who was not only benevolent, but actively interested in and concerned for humanity, both as a species and individually. (She also had some pungent things to say about the older concepts of AI in science fiction mentioned above.)
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon, Rachel is an example of this — an incredibly long-living woman through some trick of biology, she's had several long marriages over her centuries of life. Her biological clock is ticking, though, and by the time she finds her way to Callahan's, she's unable to have children anymore, a fact which drives her to despair.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon series: Reverend Tom Hauptmann from the short story "The Time Traveler". Hauptmann had spent more than a decade in a Central American prison; the decade in question was the 1960s, and upon his rescue/release, he was completely unprepared for the complete and bewildering sea-change the United States had undergone in that time.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon series, who are prolific with puns, to the point of competitions in which the worst/best pun of the evening gets his bar tab waived. They call it Punday Night. Normally, things are thrown at the offending punster, and fire extinguishers and seltzer bottles are also used for particularly outrageous puns. The bigger the response, the better they consider the pun.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon she is, let alone where, they come up with clashing stories on the spot, repeatedly.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon short story "Have You Heard the One...?" includes this. Jake Stonebender is telling a story about going to a musical gig.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon short story "The Time Traveler" (1973): An American is imprisoned by a South American dictatorship in 1963 and released in 1973. When he gets back to the United States, he finds society radically changed due to events in the 1960s and suffers from "transplant shock" so severe that he tries to commit suicide.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon. Slightly different from the normal format, the stories are weird little philosophical pieces with puns in several places. One of the things they do there is have Tall Tales Night to see who can tell the most outrageous shaggy dog story with the worst pun-filled punchline.

* Callahans Cross Time Saloon story, narrator Jake Stonebender recalls the time a well-dressed fellow (he refuses to say more, 'lest certain ethnicities be offended) tried to make Callahan an 'offer he can't refuse''...so Callahan didn't bother refusing. And apparently, the gentleman's arms recovered in time.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon story "Two Heads are Better Than One", Jake regales the bar's patrons with a tall tale of his illustrious ancestor Grandfather Stonebender, who "built the pyramids, freed the slaves, cured yaws!" When Mike Callahan gamely asked, "What's yaws?", Jake answered, "Why thanks, Mike, I'll have a beer."
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon that the language was invented by his direct ancestors.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon: The Cockroaches, the rampaging evil aliens that created the cyborg Mickey Finn in consider love to be a disease deserving of nothing but eradication wherever they find it.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon, the line "Duck, Duck! The Doc!" was used at a Halloween party when Doc Webster throws a full glass of whiskey at the head of a person dressed as a duck.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon time travel is instantaneous, so you could excuse yourself to a back room to take care of something, disappear, and reappear after perhaps a minute or less, with no one any the wiser you were gone.
* Callahan's Crosstime Saloon would cause him to accidentally injure or kill whoever he has sex with. One of the other characters points out that he can still administer oral sex, and be given handjobs.
* Callahans Crosstime Saloon, you're tasked with saving an endangered jungle-dwelling variant of chocolate bean plant, considered to produce the tastiest chocolate in the world. In order to convince the land owner to spare the bean (he wants to clearcut the area for wood) you have to make a bar of the stuff with an extremely makeshift process that is crude, clumsy and missing many necesseary ingredients... and the taste is still enough to briefly send the man into an euphoric fugue state, after which he's completely sold on preserving the plant, even if it means giving up the logging business. You're later informed that the plant was saved, and the owner became insanely wealthy producing chocolate... chocolate that had to be classified as a drug and restricted, because it was just that good. The owner had unrestricted access and died very happy, weighing about as much as a SUV and having to be buried by collapsing his house because the body couldn't be carried.
* Callahan's Lady features a beautiful, intelligent, and paranoid woman developing a simple form of mind control. After basically flipping out and taking control of the establishment, she orders the one person smart and determined enough to stop her to advise and assist her. Said person complies... while trying to convince herself that this woman is subconsciously begging for somebody to stop her. (She probably was.)
* Callahan's Lady gangster Tony Donuts mentions that he once discovered by accident that breaking someone's arms in the right place allows them to be tied into a knot.
* Callahan's Lady to turn that into "Do not descend a staircase" and the protagonist jumps into a dumpster from an upstairs window.
* Callahan's Legacy novels, Jake is using a beer stein to transport a sample from his very pregnant wife to the hospital. He collides with a woman standing on his doorstep and the contents of the stein end up all over her.
* Callahan's stories is admittedly himself; the cover art for the Callahan collections frequently features Jake among the other characters, always drawn as a portrait of Spider.
* Call a Hit Point a "Smeerp": A common video game convention that is given a different name in an attempt at immersion.
* Call a Human a "Meatbag": A non-human uses a derogatory word to describe humans.
* Call a Human a "Meatbag", or some other manner of non-fleshy entity insults humans (or some other kind of fleshy living beings in general) over their fleshy nature.

* Call a Human a "Meatbag": Used by robots against humans or other organic beings.
* call and response during the release of "It Must Be Love" (Ty was also on Epic at the time), whereas by the release of "I Hope You Dance", both they and Lee Ann were on MCA Records.
* Callan, is the only assassin in The Section who volunteers to visit the interrogation department, and generally enjoys seeing even his co-workers in pain (emotional or physical) and is inclined to try to see how much he can get away with in regards to increasing it.
* Callan. Lucky East German agents never visit bars near the border, isn't it?
* Callan) the character Liz was played by Lisa Landon. For about half the four-season run, she was credited only as "Hunter's Secretary".
* Call a Rabbit a "Smeerp": Alien creatures that are practically Earth creatures with a different name.
* Call a Rabbit a "Smeerp": A mundane animal is given an unusual name.
* Call a Rabbit a "Smeerp"", can be given onscreen as "more than meets the optic sensors."
* Call a Rabbit a "Smeerp" meaning "royal") for peacocks, probably for its "royal" blue color and rarity.
* Call a Rabbit a "Smeerp": Using an unusual word to refer to a mundane creature.
* Callas Forever is about the end of Maria Callas' life in 1977. Yet, we get to see a Renault Vel Satis. That car was launched in 2002.
* Call a Smeerp a "Rabbit": A bizarre creature is given the name of a mundane animal.
* Call a Smeerp a "Rabbit": Calling an unusual creature the name of a mundane animal.
* Call a Smeerp a "Rabbit": Fantasy creatures that get called by the names of regular creatures.
* Call a Smeerp a "Rabbit", going on with the naming of a number of large species of deer in North America:
* Callaway Went Thataway revolves around a cowboy named Stretch that is asked to impersonate the deceased actor of old cowboy films after reruns become a hit on television. Subverted in that the actor, Smoky Callaway, isn't actually dead. He's an alcoholic womanizer living down south that turns up later to take back his role.
* Call-Back and motions his chauffeur to continue driving, clearly not wanting to lose his mustard again.
* Call-Back: A reference is made to the events of an earlier installment.
* Call-Back at the end of the film. Riggs and Murtaugh drive up to a scene where a bomb has been reported and are trying to recall what color wire they cut the last time, when the building explodes before they can get out of the car.
* Call-Back become rivals after two gunshots: the first accidental (one Blue thought he saw a spider, his attempt at shooting it hit a Red's leg) and the second on purpose to set up the conflict (realizing she'd receive a purpose in life by making enemies, the Blue leader shot her Red equivalent's foot).
* Call-Back. Being shot at by an army is a concern for Luke, but being shot at by one man is not.
* Call-Back. Daniel initially attempts to perform the technique himself on his pupil Robby... before deciding that getting a medic is probably the better course of action.
* Call-Back episode to the pilot — this time, Kool-Aid Man misses his cue and looks even more awkward than before. Worse, when he backs out of the room, he falls over on his face and shatters his glass body, causing him to bleed fruit punch and swear at Brian and Stewie for making him screw up.
* Call-Back features a powerless Peter Parker heading into a burning building to save a toddler. The fire itself plays it straight as there should be a lot more smoke billowing out of the building, not just the flames in every window. On the other hand, Peter is shown being treated for smoke inhalation by the paramedics as the firefighters finish putting out the blaze.
* Call-Back four seasons later in "Enemy of My Enemy", when the dealer shows up again; one of his henchmen demands to know who the hell Michael is, and the dealer repeats the line.

* Call-Back gesture when he serenaded David with an acoustic version of the song at their store's open mic night.
* Call-Back gives you the achievement "TEE HEE TWO" if you earn 69 coins in one game.
* Call-Back, Greg Sestero, disguised as Tommy Wiseau, makes the Critic spit-take after the former said the "sex life" line. Even when the latter wasn't seen drinking anything.
* Call-Back in "Non Sequitur. Sure, Harry's left his hot horny fiancée behind to go grab a stick and play with Tom, but dammit there's nothing gay about it!
* Call-Back in season 7's 'Food for Thought.' Adam finds traces of bird saliva on a victim and asks Mac if he thinks someone getting bird spit on them is good luck "just like bird..." Mac testily interrupts him before he can finish his question.
* Call-Back later in the series, by the time he grows up Jacob has managed to cast off the name "St. Clair" entirely, with even his mother coming round.
* Call-Back: One of the kids is warned that his hatred of the Russians will burn him up inside. The kid replies nonchalantly that it keeps him warm.
* Call-Back on this, stating that it is a crime for a ki master, psychic, or biomanipulator to deliberately get a partner addicted to empowered massages and the like.
* Call-Back reaction when the marriage rule is brought up — right down to her assistant rushing in to reassure the recipient that it's not necessarily an expression of rudeness.
* Call-Back says the line from the trailer and asks the audience if they can finally shut up about it.
* Call-Back Sinclair has used to encrypt a message for him. Ultimately the password ends up having nothing to do with that conversation at all.
* Call Backs status, much more enjoyable. On the other hand, the serial format and (typically) slow pace of the classic stories translates poorly to DVD marathoning, as it creates a lot of pacing issues with repetitive "companion in peril" cliffhangers at the end of each episode.
* Call-Back: Star-Lord claims to have "part of a plan"; when asked exactly how much of a plan he has, he responds "Twelve percent."
* Call-Back steals his office and he punches a hole in... the exact same spot on the same wall. 132 episodes apart, and his aim is dead on.
* Call-Back strips late in the comic, where Bob takes advantage of the comic's 2D nature to attack stage left and stage right simultaneously, disabling any counterattacks from those directions. Proto Man immediately points out that a 2D world has more than just left and right, cuing Nate to attack from above.
* Call-Back, the crew reacts with surprise that their universe's USS Defiant found its way to the Mirror Universe almost a century prior, because from their point of view, the Defiant is still around, functioning normally. It will not disappear from their universe until the TOS episode "The Tholian Web".
* Call-Back, threatening Topaz's traditional drugstore market. The SC&P team is pretty much all agreed that Topaz needs to go upmarket to avoid being trounced by Hanes, and they all look for different ways to prove their case. For his part, Don decides to reach out to Menken's—which had successfully implemented Sterling Cooper's advice ten years earlier—which nobody comments on, since it makes sense in business terms. (Don has ulterior motives for reaching out to Menken's in particular, but nobody but him realizes this).
* Callback to a bet between Hendricks and Marcone on whether Harry would get involved in a case. Marcone won.
* Call-Back to earlier in the episode, where a parody of Roseanne used the exact same dialog). The rest of the Simpsons excitedly exclaim "here we go again!", with Marge lagging a little behind and obviously less than enthusiastic.
* Call-Back to Gordon attempting to comfort him after his parents died.
* Call-Back Top 9 Composers video; Spoony tries to call Goggles but gets the same message as above. (Unlike the Nostalgia Critic he isn't tricked by the message, though, only confused by it.)

* Call-Back to story #1, when Skye angrily told a spirit about to eat Flamel; “He’s Flamel not Flambé!”.
* Call-Back to the camels on the Hump Day commercial they did, which is unfortunately represented simply with a group of people harassing camels in a zoo by shouting the lines from that commercial at them.
* Call-Back to the father having grounded him, only for Eustace to reply, "My father's will is easily manipulated."
* Call-Back to the first episode where the people of France say the new year countdown in English.
* Call-Back to the first movie when Superman tracks Luthor down to his hidden lair, and dramatically smashes through the wall rather than use the door, causing Lex to quip "It's open! Come in!". In the second movie, then, he's muttering to himself that not knowing how doors work seems to be a problem for Kryptonians in general.
* Call-Back to the original series episode "Metamorphosis", in which a happily marooned Zefram Cochrane shares the same experience with his companion, presumably also a member of Odo's then-unknown species.)
* Call-Back to young officers. He calls her a bitch for embarrassing him in front of the whole bar, and she boredly tells him to go ask his bosun for some better insults.
* Call-Back two seasons later when Sokka and Zuko discuss their romantic lives.
* Call-Back videos, when Gavin didn't understand why Jack's username was "Henway".
* Call-Back when, after defusing a bomb, she tells him that she is in the mood for pretzels.
* Call-Back, when Albert has a very similar conversation with Mort's daughter, Susan.
* Call-Back, when Bond reminds Eve to keep her finger out of her ear just as they split up on a mission.
* Call-Back when Bridget mentions the above when she wants to get back together again. She says that a moment they share might be romantic even without snowing.
* Call-Back, when in one of the walkaround games, Rufioh Nitram (a minor character based entirely upon Rufio from Hook), mentions that Andrew Hussie's self-insert (always referred to by characters as "the orange guy") tried to kiss him once:
* Call-Back when Luke and Artoo reunite on Achtoo; Artoo beeps something that was evidently pretty profane, causing Luke to gently scold him for swearing on sacred ground.
* Call-Back, when Q shows off the Aston Martin "Vanish" and its adaptive camouflage.
* Call-Back", when the Cutie Mark Crusaders have this exchange (for added fun, Apple Bloom and Sweetie Belle are Applejack and Rarity's respective little sisters):
* Call-Back when the homeowner objects, and she thinks they've mistaken her for a vampire that needs an explicit invitation.
* Call-Back, where Apollo's son Adonis asks Rocky who won their legendary secret rematch. According to Rocky, Apollo did (though without a formal judge present, Rocky's probably just being kind to Apollo's memory).
* Call-Back where he impersonates the same person when infiltrating Coruscant.
* Call-Back (which switched from the caps of the first game to generic "money"), where you stumble on an enormous heap of bottle caps, which are now worthless.
* Call-Back, while Jafar deliberately put Abis Mal in the ocean and then wasted the wish so he could further manipulate Abis into following his agenda.
* Call-Back, who is a descendant of one of Silchas Ruin's followers from the time the first backstabbing happened.
* Call-Back Willow was staring at it with great interest. Okay, it was revealed she had an interest in robotics before. Then she looks after it when Buffy's gone. Okay, being the smart girl that would make sense. Then the comics has Willow take more of an interest in Buffy's sex life than Angel before all but confirming they slept together, when Buffy may or may not have had her mind put in the bot at the time.

* Call-Back with Hsien-Ko, Regina, Bruce and Fongling, Hsien-Ko ends up accidentally causing bunch of spike balls to fall onto the other three, plus causing a washtub to fall on Bruce's head.
* call centre scammers conversed with, who admitted to have done such morally unsound deeds due to financial problems; the scammer later joined in on Kitboga's bait and even asked him to waste his supervisor's time.
* Calldown: Supplies is an ability in which an extra module drops from the sky and lands on top of a supply depot, increasing the amount of supply that depot provides.
* call ducks that the United States prohibited their use in hunting in 1935 to prevent over-harvesting by hunters. Nowadays they're rarely used for anything other than pets.
* Cal Leandros: Elves that call themselves Auphe are first introduced followed by a revelation of hidden monsters like Banshee and Trolls in the world amongst humans.
* Cal Leandros finds out that the only surviving Auphe are females, and guess what they want him for now...
* Cal Leandros is so afraid of having a baby with his Auphe blood that he refuses to have sex with any girl who's capable of reproducing.
* Cal Leandros powers and suggests a Shot to the Heart. Robin helpfully explains exactly how much of a bad idea that would be.
* Cal Leandros series, Cal is half-human, half Auphe (really really really evil fairy). What are the most despised races in the world? Take a guess.
* Cal Leandros series. Though loyal to Cal and Niko, he would rather not go into battle if not required. And centuries of running from the angry fathers of his girlfriends... and boyfriends... has made him very fleet of foot.
* Cal Leandros sperm that he will only boink other species that he's biologically incompatible with.
* Cal Leandros the languages in existence, and probably those that are extinct, too. That is justified because he's not human and is old enough to remember the dinosaurs. Basically, he was around before language was invented and picked them up as they came around.
* Called back", when the long list of entrants in a horse race are all named for canceled Fox shows.
* called Butler) who was the only one to speak. The last poster, when the ban was imminent, had their faces blurred out and Butler saying "I think we've been outlawed, sir."
* called (he refers to it as a "bassinet," which in actuality is a wicker baby cradle). The one time he tries to play a song it sounds more like metal scraping on metal than anything resembling music.
* called his twin brother Ford "Sixer", a nod to his polydactyly, and often called him "Poindexter" for his smarts. They also called each other "Kings of New Jersey".
* called in the million years since then. At least, until now. Also possibly subverted, as Doctor Strange - who contributed to the enchantments - might have the plans.
* called "lasers/turbolasers". Rather than a solid beam of enhanced light, they are bolts of charged plasma. This would surmise that it does, in fact, have a limited range before it loses coherence.
* called Melon. A serial killing Leopard-Gazelle hybrid, who is forced to hide his heritage.
* called me. My grandmother died. I'm having relationship troubles with my hamster. My dog is having kittens. My fish is drowning."
* called Moon. This is actually a consequence of neither the Sun nor the Moon having been named. Even the terms Sol and Luna just mean the Sun and the Moon in Latin. Calling other bodies solar systems is just as valid as calling them sun systems or calling their closest stellar neighbor a sun.
* called Novi Grad, which in real life is the name of a suburb of Serbia's capital, Belgrade.
* called Ogryn. Getting them to fight for Chaos doesn't require temptation or corruption like other humans, just telling them the Emperor is angry at the loyalists.

* called out for berating Gohan for getting frightened, so even if Nappa is defeated, the heroes would have to face an even stronger villain. He was right, as not even Goku was able to defeat Vegeta.
* Called out response to his wife dying, a minute or so after-the-fact, is to mention it offhand and focus on other things, without shedding so much as a tear. Alex remarks that the reaction barely even seemed human.
* called "Patrick", not "a genius"). While SpongeBob has exclaimed "Patrick, you're a genius" in "Missing Identity", "Squidtastic Voyage" and "Fungus Among Us", Patrick never responds with "Yeah, I get called that a lot" in the show (in fact, he doesn't reply with anything in those three episodes). A similar joke does appear in "Porous Pockets".
* called Spell Book, which allows you to access several spells through it, bypassing the usual six-ability limit.
* called The best place to be is among the phalanx surrounding the medic, as you get instant heals.
* called them in the middle of a show to chide them for their constant bickering.
* called "The Paladin" and "High Paladin", there's Gravitas, a divine knight with special powers against the undead and daemons.
* called with a wife and home, but he still subsists on odd jobs and tweaking the nose of authority like any self-respecting hobo would.
* Callen is seen chasing a slippery traceur in the cold opening of a
* Callen spent some time on the same couch when he didn't feel like finding a new place. Hetty eventually makes him buy a house.
* Caller's Bane" and only changed its title in June 2018, when the game relaunched unexpectedly after Mojang had announced it was ending development in June 2015.
* Call-Forward: A prequel or flashback alludes to events that the audience knows will eventually happen.
* Call-Forward: A prequel references a character or plot device from the original.
* Call-Forward, references to an event that audiences who've seen the original work know will eventually happen.
* Call-ForwardThe flashback sequence alludes to events that the audience knows eventually happened.
* Call-Forward; when Mike gets his College ID, he sees that the top of his head is barely visible, prompting "I can't believe it...I'm officially a college student!"
* Call Her Savage has a typical hair-pulling, clothes-rending Cat Fight between Clara Bow and Thelma Todd.
* Callidus Dominus from Cynical Classicist's "Doctor Who" fanfics does a lot of morally ambiguous things to make sure the Malphan Empire takes control of the Eighth Galaxy, believing a benevolent dictatorship is the best form of government. This is lampshaded in
* Callidus shapeshifting infiltrators that get close to targets to kill them with a special phase sword.
* Callie and Arizona. First over the desire (or lack thereof) to have children, then over leaving the hospital to go to Africa.
* Callie and George briefly talk about trying to have a baby which doesn't happen. Callie gets pregnant after sleeping with her best friend Sloan after a breakup with her girlfriend. Callie gets back together with Arizona and the three raise the baby together.
* Callie and her actress Sara Ramírez are both bisexual. According to a 2013 interview,
* Callie and Marie always have a cup full of lollipops within arm's reach while hanging around in their studio, and Marie sometimes gets distracted when seeing boxes in a warehouse because she wonders if they might be full of candy.
* Callie and Marie look older than the playable Inklings but aren't specified (it isn't even stated if they're the same age or not), though it's implied they're old enough to drive. Considering they're idols, it's unlikely that they're older than their mid-twenties.

* Callie James is a fourteen-year-old homeless girl sleeping rough in Eldwyck Park, having been forced to run away from home after her
* call in a quest when it was done, and get the new quest, rather than traveling back to the quest-giver and then back to the quest location for the next step.
* "Callin' Baton Rouge" was previously a minor hit for the New Grass Revival, who also back Garth on his version. But before * Calling All Curs, Dr. Curly plucks Moe's eyebrows while chanting the usual version for female love interests.
* Calling All Dawns's main theme, "Baba Yetu" —centers on a cycle of Day (life), Night (death), and Dawn (rebirth).
* "Calling America" is about attempting calling a girl in America (the band is British), but she doesn't respond.
* calling an animal something it's not just to make it sound more appetizing to people. Therefore, the Patagonian toothfish is better known as "Chilean sea bass", "dolphinfish" becomes "mahi mahi", and "king crab" is promoted as such despite biologically being closer to crayfish than real crabs. None of this, though, detracts from the actual quality of the product.
* Calling an asari a "pureblood" is an offensive slur. More specifically, this refers to the child of two Asari, as they can breed with any other species (it allegedely increases genetic diversity) and view reproduction within their own race much as humans would view incest, due in part of a possible genetic defect that causes the child to essentially be a
* Calling but they also are there to warn something bad is about to happen if you don't do exactly what the cat says.
* Calling Card, and when Marv wants to make it clear to cops that he and his partner are the "Wet Bandits", one of his arresting officers makes an observation:
* Calling Cards to get caught, and leaving a consistent pattern or signature makes catching them easier.
* "Calling Doctor Howard, Doctor Fine, Doctor Howard" can be heard over the intercom at a hospital in * Calling has a haunted chatroom website that drags people away and numerous cell phones that get calls from dead people.
* Calling has this occur to majority of the cast. Their curiosity about The Black Page and talking in that chatroom leads them into being pulled into the Mnemonic Abyss and ultimately leads to Shin's death and that of others.
* calling him a loser in every way. She does it so she can justify her flight from the "evil" vampires and in order to protect him. To twist the knife further, she uses the same words her mother used when she left him.
* calling his attacks is a fighter that shouts "Power Attack", while the dozens of rogues in the fight are shouting "Sneak Attack" with no commentary.
* Calling his flagship the Bucephalus hints He was likely Alexander the Great (which makes a lot of sense, given His Great Crusade).
* Calling Hoody or Masky "proxies" will get you treated to a nice lengthy explanation of how the term wasn't used in * Calling it a "unique glass collector's bottle" in this case is probably another example of this trope.
* calling itself Atlantis. Consider Atlantis' fall was due to certain moral extravagances often associated with having too much money, and the delicious irony therein. Even more so considering it is in a hurricane zone and near to an earthquake zone, so "sinking" is possible, if remote.
* calling Lisa in to the nurse's office for a lice inspection...just before she gets hit with a soccer ball and bites her tongue as a result.
* Calling Me a Logarithm: A character misunderstands an unfamiliar word as an insult.
* Calling Me a Logarithm: Someone hears an unfamiliar word and assumes that it is an insult directed at them.
* Calling Me a Logarithm: You fail to realize that you weren't just slurred.
* calling on all Americans to eat 3 extra pounds of cheese to get rid of the oversupply of cheese made by American dairy farmers:

* Calling On Krampus by Alan Toner has a school bully being punished by Krampus.
* Calling Out for Not Calling: When somebody is late, someone else tells them off for not messaging them.
* Calling Ov the Dead (misspelling deliberate) by Velvet Acid Christ is about a serial killer brought back to life via nanotech to destroy all forms of order in society.
* Calling Parents by Their Name: A child calls their parent by their name.
* Calling Parents by Their Name who's never worked an honest day in his life.
* Calling people out may feel cathartic at first, but overusing it is
* Calling Rifts' Black Market merely "shady" is technically correct, but they are anything but "standard". They not only deal in stolen, "lost" or resold weapons by the legit manufacturers (to say nothing of other run-of-the-mill Organized Criminal activities), But they actually manufacture and sell their own brand of gear, either knock-offs disguised as similar goods from other companies, or openly as separate products with their own design themes (western, military, pirate, etc...). One Black Market "family", Bandito Arms, actually is a legit manufacturer in its own right with its own unique product lines, or well on its way to becoming one.
* Calling someone a coward when they themselves would be the first to run away when they are in a disadvantage.
* Calling someone a monkey in the USA has a history of racism; that goes without saying for Americans. However, in Spanish-speaking countries like Argentina, it's akin to being called
* Calling something the best whatever of the year smacks of this trope any time before August or so. Or when the "Best Whatever of the Summer" comes out in May.
* Calling Targs (spikey warthog-looking things) and Sehlats "cats" (or "kitties") comes to mind. The Sehlat is also called the Vulcan equivalent of a teddy bear, despite not appearing all that similar to a terrestrial teddy bear. It's alive, for one thing. As Spock was quick to point out (when McCoy seemed amused that he owned a "teddy bear" as a child) it also has six-inch fangs. According to
* Calling the characters lolis. Whatever the art style may suggest, all the haremettes are in high school and so are the protagonists.
* Calling the Cops on the FBI: Being saved from higher branches of law enforcement (like the FBI) by regular cops.
* Calling the Cops on the FBI— Hindering covert law enforcement by making them suspicious to regular cops.
* Calling the Cops on the FBI: When regular uniformed police unwittingly stop undercover police agents on a covert mission.
* Calling the creature Slenderman likewise draws ire from some fans. Referring to him as Slender Man as if it's his name is similarly a point of agitation. THE Slender Man is just a description of his appearance — a tall, gaunt being that looks vaguely like a man.
* Calling Then there are the ghosts that seem nice but turn out to have their own agenda. And then there's Reiko who's been trying to kill everybody out of revenge.
* Calling the Old Man Out: A mistreated child tells off their parent or guardian to let off their frustration.
* Calling the Old Man Out for her constant carelessness and emotional neglect since he was a child. Not that his speech affects her in the slightest, but Chandler later states that he feels good that he at least got it out.
* Calling the Old Man Out: It's all your fault for causing misery on me! And you call yourself a parent!?
* Calling the Old Man Out on them, noting that he knows the palanquin is connected to his mother Rose Quartz's secrets and that he, out of anyone, deserves to know the truth.
* Calling the Old Man Out the gods overthrow their ancestors, Apsu and Tiamat, so Apsu can't kill them all.
* Calling the Old Man Out, where parental figures are in place of elves.
* calling the pocket you're going to sink the 8-ball in instead, in the following ways:
* Calling the WWE a bunch of liars is pointless because the fights are all scripted and the outcomes are determined. However, they've lied in a few other ways a few times that fans didn't appreciate as much:

* Calling up dog shelters and pretending to be a Korean restauranteur asking for
* Calling Your Attacks genre, very few characters actually shout them out during fights (although it's more common to do so in film and TV, as it saves time). The names of the moves are generally introduced in the following ways:
* Calling Your Attacks out loud, meaning her opponents could not predict her moves until they are launched. She tried to teach Ash and May to use telepathy, but failed.
* Calling Your Attacks, the characters scream. A freaking lot. They sometimes scream just by losing some hands or legs. Ahem.
* Calling Your Bathroom Breaks: A character tells everyone else that they need to go to the bathroom.
* Calling Your Nausea: Someone's going to get physically ill and they say so.
* Calling Your Orgasms: During sex, someone outright says they're having an orgasm.
* "Call in the next 5 minutes for a special bonus!" The deadline is usually a hoax; the person who takes your call probably has no idea whether or not the commercial ran in the past five minutes in your area, and will give you the "special offer" either way, so long as you ask. Note that legally, while calling "within the next 5 minutes" must in fact give you the special deal, they don't
* Call-in voting for talent shows always mentions what telephone company is sponsoring the phone lines.
* Calliope and Caliborn is cruel, destructive, and antagonistic. They even contain references to Yin and Yang.
* Calliope EP is full of this, particularly the tracks "Calliope" and "Freakshow".
* Calliope gets moe points from her character design alone. She's a burn victim instead of an alien skull monster in this universe, but still terribly cute in her own way.
* Calliope is an 'ugly little skull-monster', but nevertheless has a gracious, beautiful personality. However, she shares her body with her brother, who is every bit as ugly in character as he looks.
* Calliope Mori, a member of Hololive English, outright mocked the concept in her rap "Excuse my rudeness, but could you please RIP?" which is filled with swears and contains, among other things, the line "you reap what you
* Calliope Mori not only made her introductory animation in addition to Kiara's, but has amazing singing chops as well, debuting four rap songs in her first week.
* Calliope Reaper Jones: Calliope is the daughter of the current Grim Reaper, a man who has held that post since about 1900. Having been in life a businessman during the latter part of the Industrial Revolution, he used those approaches to manage his reaping duties, by forming the afterlife company Death, Inc.
* Calliope, the Maid of Life — being protected from her assassination attempts by her Aspect. If this is true, then Doom can be seen as a rigid adherence to systems, whereas Life is their subversion.
* Calliope uses a magic wand which can turn into a revolver pistol, the wand referencing her joyful fantasizing personality, while the revolver is a highly precise weapon with limited ammo, fitting someone who recognizes the occasional need for killing but will do so only when necessary.
* , Callista dives headlong into this category whenever she's on a shopping trip. She uses raw enthusiasm, energy, and volume alongside her fame as a PFL combatant to sway mall personel into giving her what she wants. Bahija sees it as reality warping around her to fit her bargain-hunting desires, and it's implied she only gets away with her actions because Zapana foots the bills after she leaves.
* Callister Raynes is an AI android created by Nathan Stark that might as well have been human. He met his end in a
* Callisto civilisation with distinctive Ancient Greek traits. And of course, it is Communist.
* Callisto does her fair share of this too, although some of it's probably tied to her half-hearted death wish.
* Callisto has a nasty vision of Diana's wounds and grief after the duel with Medusa that causes her go faint on the stairs, though she is caught by Io before she can hit the ground. Visions take her down a bit easier than they did the previous oracle Menalippe.

* Callisto Hime, that he would break off his friendship with Link and take advantage of Zelda while she's emotionally vulnerable to sway her to his side, things that canon Marth, while suffering losses that take a heavy toll on him, would never resort to.
* Callisto of the Morlocks, maybe one of the pioneers of this look...
* Callisto's entire reason for living is to avenge her parents' deaths at the hand of Xena. One episode of
* Callisto's parents were killed during Xena's reign of terror, so she naturally assumed that Xena or one of her soldiers killed her folks. After she became a goddess, she accidentally ended up in her old village on the day of the attack. While trying to protect her mother and her younger self, she accidentally kills her father and is forced to kill her mother in self-defense.
* Callisto. Thanks to fellow mutant Masque, her arms were altered into a set of multiple prehensile tentacles on both sides. She's unique in the fact that she generally used her tentacles to throw a barrage of knives in battle.
* Callisto was next, mockingly calling Monet Creed's "little girlfriend" at first, and later during a spat, she cuts in to warn them of the situation but wryly apologizes for interrupting "whatever's going on" between them.
* Callisto wears one while spying on a skateboarding event, using it to go near Evan and warn him not to drink an energy drink that will poison him. Given how Callisto's hardly the most non-human-looking mutant and that she's at an event filled with wild teenagers, one has to wonder how the trenchcoat makes her less suspicious than the eyepatch she wears.
* "Call It A Day" while Bear is singing the song "What's That Smell" every time he sniffs at the camera, the setting changes and he's in a different part of the house.
* Call it "Das Boot", because at least most of the ad is about using the glass, and they had enough self-awareness to include a joke about how utterly ridiculous the whole thing was at the end.
* Call Me a Legend ads except those women are there but are not provocative as the ads say.
* "Call Me" by Le Click is totally about this, with reason B above. The woman recognizes a personality conflict that is destroying their existing relationship despite the great sex (too many ups and downs with you), and suggests switching to friends with benefits (call me when you need someone) (i will be there for you), knowing the guy wants more. In the version with the rap, the guy agrees to this, even though he still thinks she's the one, because he's gotten permission to return after his attempt with the next girl fails, and he thinks maybe he'll get her next time.
* Call Me by Your Name (2017) along with the novel it's based on is a modern example, being about the relationship of the 17 years old Elio and the 24 years old American academic Oliver. Slightly subverted in that Elio is the one to more actively pursue the relationship, but in the end Oliver, with a single intimate touch, is the one to initiate it.
* Call Me by Your Name (a seventeen-year-old Italian boy and an American graduate student fall in love during a summer in Italy; two queer male characters; subject matter includes queer male romance)
* Call Me by Your Name for the film, most likely to avoid unfortunate implications. In the book, it is clear that Oliver has no sexual attraction to the little girl but in visual media it might not have been quite so clear.
* Call Me by Your Name (two bisexual male main characters, queer male romance)
* Call Me by Your Name who develops into an adult through a same-sex romance with his father's summer guest.
* Call Me Kara are two of the most powerful beings in the multiverse, but that doesn't mean that there's nothing that can threaten them...
* Call Me Kara, she is subjected to random power outages that makes her lose her powers.

* Call Me Kara's life with extensive surgery after she's shot with Kryptonite bullets.
* CallMeKevin dedicated to mocking the people who just parrot it at any instance.
* Call Me Kevin labels his videos as '[Name of Videogame] but' and then adds how he fails or messes up, usually by picking 'I pick every bad option'.
* Call Me Madam describes how arranged marriages have been unhappy in his aristocratic family. He won't make the same mistake they did, even if he's getting up there in years.
* Call Me Madam of Liechtenstein and Luxembourg: "too small to be a city, too big to be a town." Its main export is cheese.
* Call Me Madam with a brief scene showing Mrs. Sally Adams being sworn in as ambassador to Lichtenburg.
* Call Me Sunflower, Sunny sneaks out of the house at night to pick roses from her mother's "secret admirer." She waits for the clock to bong to cover up the squeak of the backdoor.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "Black Devil Mountain". The undead Indian shaman who lives under Howl Mound gives a young human girl named Margot Desplaines an amber amulet marked with the words "The Chosen" written in the old Welsh alphabet, indicating that he has diabolical future plans for her.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "By the Bay". Dr. Dieter has implanted explosive devices in the heads of the Sons of Terror (and Phillip Jurgens) which can make their heads explode on command.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "Castle Dark". Baron Hauptmann transfers his mind into a new body every few decades and assumes the victim's identity, then kills his old body (with the victim's mind in it) and produces a will that transfers his property to his "heir". He gets away with it for two reasons: as a Baron, he's the highest authority in the local area, and the local peasants are too scared of him to protest.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "Devil's Canyon". The spectral hunters cannot move than 1 mile away from their kachina dolls, which hold their souls. If a specific chant is conducted over a spectral hunter's doll, it is destroyed.
* Call of Cthulhu adventure "Horror on the Orient Express" came with a boxful of feelies, including train tickets and luggage labels, and a Kickstarter-funded reprint added even more.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "Lemon Sails". The Temple of the Oracle on Sarrub has a mirror which has been taken over by a wendigo-demon that attacks anyone who tries to use it.
* Call of Cthulhu adventure "Old Fella that Bunyip". The Investigators may stumble upon the scene of one of the Bunyip's attacks. They find a picnic site with signs of a struggle and a tea kettle of water heating over a fire. The kettle is still whistling, which means they arrived minutes after the attack.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "Paper Chase". A book lover named Douglas Kimball meets some ghouls, goes to live with them and eventually becomes one himself. He keeps his original personality (except for starting to eat human bodies) and he loves his new life. He doesn't need money, have to dress for dinner or meet people (living ones, anyway). He can spend all of his time reading.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "Sands of Time". Both the archvillain and the player characters experience an awakening of ancient genetic memories stored in their DNA.
* Call of Cthulhu adventures, anytime you find a cemetery, you can (and should) assume that there are ghouls nearby.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "Sleigh Ride". One of the giganteus sneaks up behind Professor Chance and wrenches his neck with a sickening crack.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "The Auction". The House of Ausperg has several dumbwaiters that go from the second floor preparation rooms down to the basement vaults in which auction items are stored. After a pack of ghouls breaks into the vaults to steal an item, courageous investigators can choose to use one of the dumbwaiters to go down to the basement instead of using the stairs.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "The Auction". When the Brazen Head is activated, its metal eyelids open, revealing living eyes inside the sockets.

* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "The Mauretania". A Bolshevik agent pretends to be a priest to get close to a Russian count for an assassination attempt.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "The Pits of Bendal Dolum". In one of the buildings is a hole with a tunnel leading down to an underground chamber. If an investigator is brave enough to climb down a rope to the chamber, a large monster will fly by and swallow them. This leaves only the slime-covered sliced-off end of the rope for the investigator's companions to pull back up.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "The Worm That Walks". When the PCs explore the Woodie house they discover a kitchen which is the butcher shop of a den of cannibals. It has the gruesome remnants of an earlier meal spread around - hands, feet, and even more grisly bits of human debris.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "Valley of the Four Shrines". In the valley there's a path surrounding a lake with the magical property of preventing zombies from passing over it. This protects the human fishing village from being destroyed by zombie attack.
* Call of Cthulhu, adventure "Valley of the Four Shrines". The entrance to the cave that leads to the valley has been carved in the likeness of Cthulhu's head.
* Call of Cthulhu. All that's left of the planet is shattered ruins. The former fifth planet of the solar system suffered this fate: its remains are the Asteroid Belt.
* Call of Cthulhu, a man named Marcus Arturus is forced through a magical Gate to a forest in "another world" (actually another location on Earth). The other end of the Gate is destroyed, so he can't return. He befriends the people who live in the forest and starts a new life with them, joining their clan and marrying the daughter of one of them.
* Call of Cthulhu and hypnotic pollen that compels those who inhale it to hurl themselves into the pits where they live. If you get caught, you may as well write off the PC, since the chance of them surviving getting ensnared or eaten by one of those things is virtually nil.
* Call of Cthulhu and is being used to bring about the Day of the Beast and cause worldwide devastation.
* Call of Cthulhu. And that's assuming you even left your house in the first place, ya shmuck.
* Call of Cthulhu are growing up they appear to be human. When they reach the appropriate age, they slowly change into Deep Ones and go off to join their fellows.
* Call of Cthulhu be driven insane, by whatever standard of "sanity" might apply to Lovecraftian horrors, because the sheer number of human beings on Earth is so great that their cumulative psyches can overpower its own singular mind and rip it to shreds because they are so foreign to it. All that happens to the world's population is having very vivid and disturbing nightmares for a few days at most.
* Call of Cthulhu but he enjoys going after other primordial entities.
* Call of Cthulhu by Theater of the Mind Enterprises. In the distant past the people who lived in Glozel, France interacted with Phoenician traders. When the traders stopped coming the people created tablets with Phoenician characters on them to try to bring them back.
* Call of Cthulhu core rulebook showed a pair of investigators finding a giant, unmistakably alien eye taking up one whole end of a cavern.
* Call of Cthulhu creatures have tentacles that can grab and/or damage opponents.
* Call of Cthulhu cults trying to do this in several campaign adventures.
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth — imagine the Stone Age fat goddess idols, and add a few extra pairs of breasts, scales, and sharp, fishy teeth.
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth, all the assaulting forces of the Us in Innsmouth get killed, leaving to you the battle
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth but you still die in the end after all the depressing adventures.
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth coupled with repeated hallucinations of still being in the asylum during the game cause one to wonder if he is mad because of the events or the events came from his madness.

* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth. Doing it under the ladder makes it fall on Jack and badly injure him.
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth, in the first mission, you eventually reach the basement of a cult's house, only to find a man completely gutted, strung up in a machine with his arms at his sides and his various organs beating away in dozens of other containers across the room. To top it off, corpses in various states of decay and with various missing organs are scattered around, indicating this victim isn't the first.
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth is accomplished with the help of the protagonist (who, in this version, kills Mother Hydra to disable the shield she was casting, leaving the city vulnerable).
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth, Jack is tortured with jumper cables by a doctor working for the FBI. It says a lot about the horrors he's seen that it takes several high-powered shocks and threatening to send him back to the asylum for him to agree to return to Innsmouth.
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth. Most of the action is set in or around Innsmouth, the only exceptions being the Prologue (in Boston) and a few intermission cutscenes (in Arkham).
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth, naturally, makes heavy use of this trope due to being a first person perspective retelling of the famous "Shadow over Innsmouth" story.
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth. Naturally, the villain activates the conveyor again, and Jack survives only by jumping onto the catwalk over the grinder, which breaks and blocks the cogs. The whole episode is pretty nightmarish.
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth (see the Literature folder).
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth. The "pictures of Mommy and Daddy", along with her comments about Mommy make the book a perfect candidate to this category.
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth there are several instances early in the game where you get visions of being watched. If you look in the right direction at the right moment, you may catch glimpses of your watchers on the rooftops, hinting at what's waiting for you later in the game. Also, if you look through certain windows in the starting area, you can see various disturbing sights, such as corpses being dragged away.
* Call of Cthulhu: Dark Corners of the Earth, who only summoned the Deep Ones in order to save his dying city and then had to keep working with them because breaking the deal meant they would slaughter his people. His descendants are still just as evil as they ever were, though.
* Call of Cthulhu. Defeating the Elder Gods. The only rules given for Cthulhu itself is that it consumes 1d6 investigators per round. Later editions give it a full stat workup, meaning that's it's not impossible to kill it, just desperately unlikely — and part of that stat block specifies that being dead isn't permanent for him.
* Call of Cthulhu deity is stated to be at least a billion years old. Of course, everything else in the Mythos to which this can be applied (i.e. almost everything nonhuman) can also be found in the game.
* Call of Cthulhu-derived setting of the main game, and usually with a strong comedic bent. A few of them edge into this territory.
* Call of Cthulhu, devoured by monsters, devoured by ancient evils, or they might commit suicide to avoid those fates, but they will almost certainly die too. Being alive and sane by a campaign's end is a rather momentous achievement.
* Call of Cthulhu does not stop the cultist from gunning you down or the horrible monster from fourteen dimensions from deciding to introduce you to them all at once.
* Call of Cthulhu Dr. Dare has red hair and "...his temper gets the best of him sometimes."
* Call of Cthulhu: Ghouls. Any flesh will do, and they prefer it pre-rotten. Human cemeteries just happen to be easy pickings, but they prefer giant Gugs from the Dreamlands' Underworld if they can get away with it.

* Call of Cthulhu gives a chainsaw the equivalent of an impale (where a stabbing weapon hits something vital) but in this case it removes a limb.
* Call of Cthulhu has an Accounting skill, so the writers of official supplements sometimes threw in a clue that required that skill to find.
* Call of Cthulhu has a strange mixed relationship with this. On the one hand, most of the monsters defy physics and evolution entirely, and are often made far more frightening for it. On the other hand, this makes sense because many of the monsters are aliens, and often extradimensional beings that don't follow normal laws of physics.
* Call of Cthulhu has a wide variety of skills, from Library Use and Credit Rating to Machine Gun and Pilot (plane). Guess which ones prove more useful.
* Call of Cthulhu has gates to other universes that the players must close in order to win.
* Call of Cthulhu has the Father of All Sharks, a rarely-seen avatar of Cthulhu that takes the form of an absolutely enormous (dwarfing even a megalodon) and extraordinarily aggressive shark.
* Call of Cthulhu, he gets through security by "stealing more valor than he has ever stolen before" and covering every inch of his uniform in nonsensical medals. He also flexes his achievements to successfully seduce the President's wife, Ivana, claiming "I bet you've never been with a man whose brain has been made as good as mine by the war".
* Call of Cthulhu). He's implied to have an epic life beyond even the aforementioned titles.
* Call of Cthulhu hinting at what has happened to characters who came into contact with the book, a history of the book and the explicit effects both skimming and reading it have. Guess what the sourcebook is called...
* Call of Cthulhu, if your character ever takes ten or more damage from any one attack you must make a fortitude save against instant death.
* Call of Cthulhu include some symptoms that leave the characters Shell-Shocked Veterans. Not all triggers for SAN checks are even necessarily supernatural.
* Call of Cthulhu, insert "Field Manual of the Theron Marks Society". One of the tactics described in the manual was pouring oil so that it flowed under a door, then lighting it so it burned the animated mummies on the other side of the door.
* Call of Cthulhu, insert "Field Manual of the Theron Marks Society". The Manual says that you can use an "Indian Water Pump" filled with gasoline as an improvised flamethrower. Just spray the monster with gasoline, then set it on fire.
* Call of Cthulhu inspired by horror films from the 1930s. It also introduces this setting, here referred to as Backlot Gothic.
* Call of Cthulhu in the game is full of things man (and woman) was not meant to know, and so you are eventually either incredibly ignorant or incredibly insane. Maybe both simultaneously.
* Call of Cthulhu into three castes: warriors, workers and scientists.
* Call of Cthulhu is a bit difficult to follow if one isn't overly familiar with the Cthulhu Mythos.
* Call of Cthulhu is famous for introducing the SAN attribute, which drops a little each time the players encounter a monster or cast a spell, or something.
* Call of Cthulhu. It has a pair of spectacles that allowed the wearer to see into another dimension (with the usual impossible angles and bizarre perspectives). Each time you use them, there is a chance you could see a monster that could attack and kill you if you don't take them off in time.
* Call of Cthulhu knowledge when speaking to cultists allows you to pass yourself off as one of them, which can considerably increase your life expectancy.
* Call of Cthulhu. Leng Spiders can grow to gigantic size and weigh hundreds of tons.
* Call of Cthulhu lucrative indeed. That's not even counting how badass your character will look trying to gun down a shoggoth with a tommy gun.
* Call of Cthulhu magazine #10 adventure "In Media Res". Four men find themselves inside a farmhouse with the dead body of a murdered prison guard lying on a table. Each man has complete amnesia about their past. In a nearby room, a television set is showing a local newscast about the crash of a bus owned by the "Liberty Center for the Criminally Insane" and the escape of several dangerous inmates being carried by the bus. Guess what the men are?

* Call of Cthulhu magazine #3, adventure "Malevolence". After a boy disappears, the force of villagers sent to find him has both torches and pitchforks.
* Call of Cthulhu main rules hint that the event may have been caused by someone summoning Azathoth to the area.
* Call of Cthulhu, Matt's character Dr. Matthew Pennyfarthing is a doctor who lost his medical license and potency due to implanting goat testicles into himself and others. At one point, he implants goat testicles into Felix, with horrible results.
* Call of Cthulhu may be hit on the back of the head by one of a flock of flying books. It's a book he had a chance to read but didn't, and had been trying to find again ever since.
* Call of Cthulhu — The defualt setting is the 1920s, but there are options for modern-day and many others.
* Call of Cthulhu must stay within 1 mile of the doll that was used in its creation.
* Call of Cthulhu offera two different playstyles: "purist", which is more hardcore a Cosmic Horror, and "pulp", which is more action-packed and closer to this trope.
* Call of Cthulhu. One adventure, "Westchester" House, was about a "haunted house" where the hauntings were strictly human created, with nothing from the Mythos involved.
* Call of Cthulhu. Player characters return to the site of the original expedition to find out why there were only two survivors the first time around.
* Call of Cthulhu) recommended having one of the PCs be a Communication Specialist - a charismatic character who is a good talker. They would have a high Appearance and high percentages in the skills Bargain, Credit Rating, Fast Talk and Persuade.
* Call of Cthulhu RPG, all the books are present, from The Book of Eibon to The Necronomicon. Books will give you knowledge of the occult, but also cause permanent Sanity loss.
* Call of Cthulhu scenario included "Artie Gumshoe - Tough Private Investigator" as a pregenerated character, packing a .45 Automatic and with an illustration showing him with a cigarette wearing a fedora and trench coat, inviting him to be played like this trope.
* Call of Cthulhu's Cthulhu mythos stories) have immigrated to the United States, where some run restaurants that serve "bak bon dzhow"—human nerve-cell paste—which induces dreams of cannibalism in people who eat it. They do this for no apparent reason other than to be evil.
* Call of Cthulhu, section "Field Manual of the Theron Marks Society". An Indian firepump is a backpack mounted device normally used to spray water on fires. Before the Society ceased to exist, one of its tactics was to fill an Indian firepump with gasoline instead, spray the opponent with it, and set them on fire.
* Call of Cthulhu, section "Field Manual of the Theron Marks Society". Theron Marks himself is stated to always have a lit cigar in his mouth during adventures in order to light sticks of dynamite.
* Call of Cthulhu setting, adventure "Yellow Sails". When Mironim-Mer activates the Oracle Mirror, the wendigo demon possessing it sends out a tentacle to grab him.
* Call of Cthulhu's less helpful contributions to the study of the Cthulhu Mythos, such as connecting gods to philosophical elements and the Good-vs-Evil dynamics. However, decades of adding new, sometimes not quite consistent, material in supplements, adventures, and companion volumes have somewhat re-tangled the Mythos in the game context. Arguably this has been addressed in later incarnations of the game.
* Call of Cthulhu, so the relative dearth of people that have actually played it is possibly more a matter of intentionally avoiding it than anything else.
* Call of Cthulhu sourcebook has a scenario, "The Colour of His Eyes", where man assembles an alien looking telescope, uses it, and then has a Colour Out Of Space (basically a form of sentient, malevolent light) trapped in his eyes. Thereafter, he drains the energy from (and kills) anything he looks at, including a nurse caretaker.

* Call of Cthulhu. Space Mead will protect a human from 'the vacuum and vicissitudes' of space. Of course, the effect ends as soon as you reach your destination, so watch where you're going... and do keep a dose for the way back, will you?
* Call of Cthulhu steals money from a bank, a newspaper story reveals that some of the money is new currency with consecutive serial numbers, and thus easily identified and traced. The villain reads the newspaper and discards the bills.
* Call of Cthulhu supplement, adventure "Pickman's Student". A proto Great Old One named Ghadamon spends the adventure slowly taking over the body of a human being so he can enter the waking world.
* Call of Cthulhu supplement Glozel Est Authentique, adventure "Secrets of the Kremlin''. The Nodens Brotherhood has long opposed a cult that worships Shub-Niggurath.
* Call of Cthulhu supplement "The Asylum and Other Tales", adventure "The Mauritania". A Russian count has six bodyguards who all have Block (a special skill appearing only in this product). It allows them to hurl their body in between an attacker and the person they're protecting to absorb the attack.
* Call of Cthulhu, taking 6d10 to 7d10 worth of damage is referred to in the manual as a "Fatal" amount of damage, and is like being hit by a car or falling off a tall building. Taking 8d10 or more points of damage is like being hit by a speeding train, and is aptly referred to in the manual as "Splat".
* Call of Cthulhu tend to have characters go insane simply from looking at the monsters.
* Call of Cthulhu that maintain life support in an underground cavern.
* Call of Cthulhu. The Consume Likeness spell allows a sorcerer to take the form of a dead person by eating their body.

* Call of Cthulhu, where they are the essential ingredient in the Resurrection spell.
* Call of Cthulhu which means it will survive. Guns are useful only against the weakest Mythos creatures and cultists. And yourself. And whoever got you into this mess.
* Call of Cthulhu which they fire by grasping it and altering its electrical resistance. Humans who want to fire it have to clip one of its wires.

* Call of Cthulhu who dated back to the Egyptian Empire. The players have an opportunity to uncover this at one point via a set of diaries, documents and paintings.
* Call of Darkness. They do this by spreading word-of-mouth the fact that the Courts can take away "pain of the heart". Since a majority of the Arcadia Movement suffers a modicum of PTSD and also has no confidence in Seika as a competent leader, this is the main reason why Psychics defect from the Movement or choose to side with the Courts. It's the Summer Court that mostly does this, for reasons yet to be explained, but Winter Court is also known to keep about sixty-plus of these Psychics. One of them, Suiren Yukina, certainly seems happy to stay with the Winter Court.
* Call of Duty 2 began with the landings at Pointe Du Hoc, where the U.S. Rangers are tasked with destroying several artillery places on the cliffs. Unfortunately, the guns turn out to be further inland.
* Call of Duty 2: Big Red One covers Operation Torch and the Battle of Kasserine Pass.
* Call of Duty 2 has some blink-and-you'll-miss-it Squadettes in the Stalingrad levels, who scream incessantly at the soldiers vigorous patriotism and insult anyone who hangs back from an assault.
* Call of Duty 2 is portrayed more as a gently chiding, often hilarious, but still tough training officer, and the only threats of being shot for cowardice came not from him but from regular officers... unless you mess around instead of shooting a teddy bear for target practice like he ordered.
* Call of Duty 2 most anticipated game for the Xbox 360 at the time, becoming the bestselling game of the year and the bestselling game in its series, rounding off the trilogy that began on the original Xbox.
* Call of Duty 2's opening level is set during the Battle of Moscow in December 1941, with German forces launching an attack on the Soviet capital just as the player is adjusting to how rifles, pistols, and grenades work.
* Call of Duty 2 the player has to call an artillery strike on a number of panzers.
* Call of Duty 2, there are two instances, one in "Red Army Training", and one (appropriately enough) in "Prisoners of War", where the game will display the message "Killing prisoners of war will not be tolerated" if the player attacks captured German soldiers.
* Call of Duty 2 while under intense assault, but, on the last day of the Battle of Hürtgen Forest, Germany recaptured the hill and held it until February 1945.
* Call Of Duty 3 and Last Stand. In the final three days of the WW2 event known as the Falaise Pocket, the Polish armored divisions pushed to take a section of the mountain that would allow them to rain fire down on escaping German troops. As the United States took Chambois, this left Hill 262 as one of the few pathways to escape the pocket. From 19 August 1944 to 21 August, the Germans pushed against the Polish with reckless abandon, and by the night of the 20th, the Polish were exhausted and dangerously low on supplies. The quote below is from their CO, Lt. Col. Stefanowicz, as he broke the news to his remaining.
* Call Of Duty 3, but they play a relatively small role in comparison with the US 29th and 90th Infantry, the Canadian 4th Armoured, and the Free Polish 1st Armoured division. The plot of the game concerns closing the Falaise Pocket, which is accomplished by the conventional units, while the SAS missions are largely unconnected to that objective.
* Call of Duty 4: Modern Warfare, Gaz has good news and bad news. The good news is that Russia is in the grips of a civil war with 15,000 nukes at stake, and the Middle East is in turmoil. The bad news is that a new guy is joining the squad.
* Call of Duty 4: Modern Warfare has two levels (a sniping mission and an escape mission) in Pripyat. They're really unnerving, especially when you see a teddy bear, and hear the echoing laughter of children.
* Call of Duty 4: Modern Warfare shows how neither side is saintly, and both the U.S. Marine Corps and the SAS will use brutal techniques to find out what is going on.

* Call of Duty 4: Modern Warfare, when Price finds out Zakhaev is behind the game's plot, he decides to roll a flashback to explain the guy's background. Players know this as the "All ghillied up" mission.
* Call of Duty 4: Modern Warfare where the player starts out looking at what appears to be empty grassland, even after a replay not really knowing where their ally is until part of the ground gets up and starts moving.
* Call Of Duty 4, retracing your killer's steps, as well as any intervening projectiles.
* Call of Duty 4 starts with a new S.A.S. member's first day in Captain Price's unit. He starts off by shooting some targets at a shooting range, then maneuvers through a killhouse based on the opening of the first level. The game recommends a difficulty level based on how well you do in the killhouse. The DLC later added an extremely close-quarters map similar in design for multiplayer, aptly named "Killhouse".
* Call Of Duty 4, your squad briefly takes the uniforms of enemy soldiers to ambush a convoy. Griggs comments that "you look like a clown in that outfit" and "nothing like a Russian", which means it's a good thing you're high up on a tower away from that convoy.
* Call of Duty adds the "Tactical Knife" attachment for pistols, which increases the speed you can perform melee attacks at while you're holding a gun with it.
* Call of Duty: Advanced Warfare, a game in a series well known for its extremely dramatic setpiece battles and shocking disasters with thousands or millions of death, is set on the small Greek island Santorini. It was the sight of the most devastating volcanic eruption in European history that led to the collapse of all mediterranean Bronze Age empires except the Egyptians, and possibly the source of the [[Atlantis]] Myth, and is on the list of the 17 most dangerous volcanoes in the world. It's also a game about futuristic superweapons. Yet the giant underwater volcano, on whose crater rim the level takes place, doesn't get either mentioned or does any kind of exploding.
* Call of Duty: Advanced Warfare has Manticore, a toxin developed by the Atlas Corporation. Basically, it's a nerve agent that only affects certain types of DNA: anyone isn't registered on Atlas dies almost immediately.
* Call of Duty: Advanced Warfare in that the game features several time jumps, which means by the end, the year is 2061.
* Call of Duty: Advanced Warfare: Jack Mitchell was US Marine who lost his left arm fighting in Seoul, he joins Atlas who provides him a new arm.
* Call of Duty: Advanced Warfare sees part of San Francisco's Golden Gate Bridge torn asunder by explosive drones taking out the cables of the bridge.
* Call of Duty: Advanced Warfare than an anti-western terrorist. It also doesn't help that we never find out what he was planning to do with that meeting in the mission you kill him, but seeing as it was a decoy, it's unknown if there was really meeting at all.
* Call of Duty: Advanced Warfare. The trend seems to have stuck with him.
* Call of Duty: Advanced Warfare, the US forces come to South Korea's aid when Seoul is under attacked by North Korean forces.
* Call of Duty. After Dog Company takes Pointe du Hoc and destroys the artillery, the Germans launch a counterattack, forcing them to retreat all the way back to the cliffs. When it seems like the final members of Dog Company are about to be overwhelmed, troops and tanks from Omaha Beach finally come to the rescue.
* Call of Duty, after Victor Zakhaev kills himself to avoid being captured:
* Call of Duty allies in the games' American campaigns are likewise named after other dev team members.
* Call of Duty an American POW, but if you turn on the mature content filter the camera will be fixed on their shadows, the scene actually becomes a lot more scary when you can't tell what he's doing.
* Call of Duty and help smuggle chemical weapons into Europe for Vladimir Makarov.
* Call of Duty, and is picked off shortly after the shooting starts. Royce, the next in line, is gunned down a little while later.
* Call of Duty and is the second highest selling franchise in video game history, period.

* Call of Duty, and you'll probably have a few unnecessary game overs on your hands.
* Call of Duty at least) typically have zombie apocalypse-themed DLC packs. There are so many that they've now developed their own universe/continuity.
* Call of Duty, at least when not under fire. He also has something of a sarcastic streak and displays some disdain towards General Shephard and his "prima donna unit".
* Call of Duty averts this trope by getting both the starlight and infrared types of night vision right. The former as standard night vision goggles and the latter as the sole vision mode when you play as a gunner on a AC-130 gunship.
* Call of Duty. Barricading them (and their inevitable being broken down again shortly after) is an important game mechanic.
* Call of Duty be fired from the shoulder. It still has a hefty kick, though.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops about a month after WW2 officially ended. It takes place in the Arctic Circle, but its similarity to the conspiracy theory is probably not a coincidence.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops a few months after it launched because everyone was only playing in Nuketown. Now it can't be selected within two or three games of the last time you played in it.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops: Both Woods and Mason were Marines before being recruited into Operation 40. Mason was a Force Recon Captain, Woods a Master Sergeant.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops Cold War also has a pair of big ones that serves as one of his two signatures along with his facial scars.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops Cold War : Single Player takes place in 1981, while the Multiplayer takes place 1983 and onwards.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops continued this trend with the similar 'regular' and 'Hardened' editions. The 'Prestige' edition came with all of the 'Hardened' extras plus a working remote-control car modeled after the explosives-rigged RC-XD Killstreak reward for a similar premium.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops doesn't include this in singleplayer, but does include a multiplayer map titled "Firing Range", with the majority of the map taken up by buildings with moving targets.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops era. Each mission in the game is presented as a flashback, told by Mason to the interrogator.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops-esque attempt at destroying the US and some gadgets — but due to just how dark the plot is, it dives right back into stale beer.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops' "Gimme Shelter", which was used in the commercial for the game, experienced a rise in popularity and iTunes sales.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops grenades, explosives, and even some of the firearms will sever limbs with ease.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops has, in addition to Spetsnaz soldiers still roping out of helicopters, one instance where the player and his squadmates attempt to do this, but are sent crashing through a window when their copter is shot down.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops has Lev Kravchenko conducting Nova 6 experiments that double as these. Using American-made cargo planes and the corpses of US servicemen, he makes it appear that all the horrific things being done to the Vietnamese and Laotians are of American doing, rather than Soviet.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops has "Project Nova", where a Soviet unit which includes veterans Reznov and Dimitri is tasked with capturing a German scientist named Friedrich Steiner at a derelict Nazi rocket facility in the arctic. Naturally, the Waffen-SS unit stationed there would rather die fighting than face captivity.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops has the player character leading an epic escape from a Soviet gulag.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops has you and some teammates steal uniforms from enemy soldiers that you kill.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II Abigail "Misty" Briarton belches loudly and shamelessly, to the point the game's own wiki notes that she burps the loudest out of everyone on the team - the rest being male - upon drinking Perk-A-Cola, and seems to be proud of it.

* Call of Duty: Black Ops II are part of the U.S. Navy's SEAL Team Six, the elite of the already-elite Navy SEALs. Not only that, David Mason, the player character, commands them.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II As they get clear of the rubble and Menendez is dragged away in a body bag, the player's commanding officer informs them at "from this point on, today never happened."
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II be a need for men like Woods or Mason to do the work nobody else would.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II, being trained by Cubans to fight in the civil war against the American-allied UNITA. Mercifully, they only appear in scripted sequences and you don't fight them.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II. Depending on the player's choices, the ship is either destroyed by the mercenaries, or saved by the Chinese.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II, Erik Breighner takes a bullet through the sides of the throat once he hands the Celerium drive to Section.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II features zombies attacking a bus while a creepy version of "The wheels on the bus go round and round" plays.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II for its Zombies maps and the "Project Nova" flashback level.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II : Half of the game takes place in 1986-1989, the other half during 2025.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II has a militia in Yemen as part of Raul Menendez's supporters.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II has multiple variations of the ending, with several story points providing a total of four distinct sets of variations.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II has you protecting an Afghan government convoy on the way to a peace treaty summit in Maidan Shahr with the Russian foreign minister from Mujahideen in the Strike Force mission "I.E.D". The multiplayer also has the ISA squaring off against a militia in Pakistan in several maps.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II. He also voices himself in a brief cameo early on in the campaign.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III as the final mission "Life" takes place on November 6, 2065, exactly 50 years after the release date of the game (November 6, 2015), down to the day.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III attempts to kill the player(s) and his/her team.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III enabling "Cyber Rigs", among other things. In this reality, autonomous defense systems have become so sophisticated that they cause a stalemate so national defense has returned to reliance on traditional foot soldier forces, hence the growth in robotic augmentation.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III features a segment in which the player is thrown into a dream version of World War II. A new Call of Duty game set in World War II was what many fans had been wanting for a while so that mission should have been giving fans at least some of the thing they want but considering that the developers didn't even bother to add period-accurate weapons and instead everyone just uses mid-21st century weapons, it made the segment feel like a middle-finger to those who wanted a World War II game. A good example of this trope not working as intended.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III had left the union. All things considered, the EU is in a lot better shape than predicted in many works, including this one.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III inspired yet patently dieselpunk setting.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III is also a good example. Mega Corps, virtual reality, Brain–Computer Interface, a dark, polluted world ran by criminals and tyrannical governments, an evil AI. All the standard tropes are there, and the game increasingly resembles a technophobic cyberpunk thriller over time rather than a Military Science Fiction story.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III is the concern that as the need for faster, stronger, and more agile foot soldiers rises (due to ranged warfare's decline as a result of autonomous defense systems simply becoming too advanced to penetrate) the envelope for cybernetic augmentation continues to be pushed. The public begins fearing that the armies of 2065 are losing their humanity and subjecting themselves to pure weaponization through cybernetic enhancement.

* Call of Duty: Black Ops II includes a cherry blossom-themed camouflage pattern for weapons in multiplayer.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II in the multiplayer map express, there's a bullet train that can kill players.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III refers to it as if it were a standard Tiger tank but at the same time references its nickname the King Tiger.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II is an even straighter example. Just count how many named characters he killed, more than half are playable.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II is, for the most part, significantly less gritty, focusing more on a Bond-esque hi-tech plot to destroy the superpowers of the world, and done with gadgets and a super-villain that's very reminiscent of a Bond villain, but the flashbacks still contain much of the grittiness and moral grayness of the first game.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II is rather difficult to classify. On the surface, they make themselves out to be a populist faction that seeks justice for the oppressed 99%, taking several cues from the Occupy Wall Street movement, but in reality, they serve simply as a means for their Nicaraguan narco-terrorist leader to take revenge on the West for the devastation of his country and the death of his sister. It has members all around the world, and they do indeed include insurgent groups in Yemen and Afghanistan, but the vast majority of their armed forces consist of Cuban mercenaries, who are, in turn, commanded by a white British guy.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III. The WA is made up of the US and UK, most of the former EU/NATO nations (since both organisations have collapsed by the 2060s), and various Western-allied countries like Japan, Israel, Saudi Arabia etc., while the CDP is led by Russia and comprises most of Eastern Europe, big chunks of Africa (who have their own smaller superstate, the Nile River Coalition), and numerous traditional "bad guy" countries like Iran and Cuba.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III to the Battle of the Bulge from World War II - period-accurate soldiers, wearing period-accurate uniforms, getting support from period-accurate armor, but other than the rare appearance of a mounted MG42, all using the same array of fictional futuristic weapons the player gets, all of which are from a hundred and twenty years in the future from when the actual battle took place.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III trope. Notably, though only enemy troops are egalitarian. Friendly generic soldiers are always male.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops III were next step in humanity's evolution and Zurich was at the time the only city that was Zombie-Free) were given. This may just be a different group that uses the same character models as the unnamed terrorist.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II missions set in the future take place in 2025.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II predicted that David Petraeus would be Secretary of Defense in 2025. Given the fact that Petraeus was caught up in an extramarital affair in late 2012 and ended up resigning as Director of the CIA just three days before the game came out, that seems really unlikely.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II Raul Menendez instigates a second cold war between the United States and China.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II saves their lives. The Chinese agent is Tian Zhao, who later becomes the head of the Strategic Defense Coalition and a minor antagonist, with the Strike Force missions needed for the best ending culminating in him being assassinated by JSOC troops commanded by Mason's son, David.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II, since his survival is independent of that of Menendez and Lynch, and only changes one scene that plays in the ending regardless of which primary one you get.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II took this theme to a whole new level with a World War 1 setting featuring giant robots, wireless transmission of electricity, and a special zombie operating power armor that actually runs off of a diesel backpack.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops II, which the game will award you with an achievement for.

* Call of Duty: Black Ops II who leads his team of Navy SEALS through the near end of the modern world - and if you get the right ending, manages to prevent it.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops insofar as many Nazi scientists did end up defecting to one of the victorious sides after World War II in order to avoid prosecution.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops level "Rebirth," Hudson is forced to don an NBC suit to guard against a Nova 6 gas attack. During that section of the level, you don't get proper regenerating health, as Hudson can't shrug off a hole in his protection against a near-instantly-fatal biochemical weapon.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops on your gun, putting a bright pink emblem on it, and then wearing blue face paint.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops particularly — many of the soldiers fighting the war didn't particularly want to be there and would often play contemporary anti-war rock music being well aware of the irony; indeed, the first level of the game actually set in Vietnam starts with "Fortunate Son" playing over the radio. The producers probably knew exactly what they were doing.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops plan, but is interrupted by a firefight before he can elaborate. A little later on, while your group is trying to avoid sliding off a roof, Hudson asks him about them again, and Clarke begins telling him... and then he is shot in the head.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops qualify, although Vietnam does not take up the whole campaign and the war is only seen through flashbacks in the latter game. Woods in particular is badly affected after being trapped in a container with the butchered remains of his squad.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops received one at some point before the game. Players that can figure out the password to his account on the terminal hidden in the main menu can read it themselves.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops return as an NPC with both his face shown and his voice revealed, as well as a semblance of a personality, in the flashback mission "Project Nova."
* Call of Duty: Black Ops setting of the game. The name stuck through to release because they never thought up a better name for it.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops, stating why the player is where he is, who else is with him, the exact time of day, and whatnot. Then, once the full text has appeared, a line crosses through everything except the date, player character's name, and location as is shown in other games. From the first mission, for instance:
* Call of Duty: Black Ops, the downloadable "Nuketown 2025" map was redesigned from its original 1950s aesthetic to Zeerust incarnate.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops. The game even emphasizes its covert overtones by redacting the character, location, and date information displayed at the beginning of every mission.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops, the German forces fought in the Artic circle count, as Nazi Germany practically ceased to exist in May, 1945, while the mission itself takes place five months after the end of the War in Europe.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops, the player is able to find a computer in the back of the room the main menu is set in, through which they can access email accounts for the player character Alex Mason (among others). One of the emails reveals that Mason competed in the Wimbledon Cup and took first place in the 1953 competition.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops uses this as its framing device, with Mason in the midst of an interrogation for 95% of the game and the actual missions being him recounting his experiences to the other men in the room.
* Call of Duty: Black Ops weapon because it almost universally gets the good points from one class instead of the negative points of the other - your movement is only slowed as much as by an assault rifle, your time to aim down the sights is quick, and your reload speed is relatively fast, but at the same time you have less recoil in full-auto than an assault rifle, the rate of fire is noticeably faster despite that, Extended Mags doubles the amount of ammo per magazine rather than only increasing it by 50%, it has higher penetration than any assault rifle bar the M14 and FAL, and it deals flat damage across any range rather than having damage drop-off at further ranges.

* Call of Duty: Black Ops, where all the prisoners in Vorkuta are familiar with Reznov's plan for everyone to riot and escape:
* Call of Duty certainly fits this trope, as Marlton laments "I would not trade this gun for all the tea in China... if there even is a China anymore."
* Call Of Duty Classic, and other games on the id Tech 3 engine, vehicles whose driver has been killed keep driving until they run off the road and crash, or have their engine destroyed.
* Call of Duty, covering the entire series; note that there are some characters who have full-on plot armor for all their appearances, and others who only have it until their role in the plot is fulfilled.
* Call of Duty different studios are rotating development of new games in the series.
* Call of Duty disable your HUD and other electronic equipment, flares will burn into your vision and leave an afterimage for a few seconds...
* Call of Duty, drinks, food and such (apart with some Sleep) in order to complete them all, you'll have an even harder time to finish them al].
* Call of Duty, during a flashback mission set in Pripyat, Captain MacMillan comments on the lack of people. His line is frequently mistaken to be "Fifty-thousand people used to live here. Now it's a ghost town." That line is actually spoken by Gaz in the intro that plays when you start the game up; MacMillan's line is actually "Fifty-thousand people used to live in this city. Now it's a ghost town... I've never seen anything like it."
* Call of Duty ends this way with Capt. Price saving Soap from falling out of a helicopter.
* Call of Duty ensure that he can be heard all the way over in Berlin.
* Call of Duty, especially in comparison to the tame gore of past titles.
* Call of Duty, especially the Ultranationalists, who purposefully are bombing whole villages.
* Call of Duty, etc.) take many pains to make things as gritty as the systems of the day can handle.
* Call of Duty even included a Death Streak letting players do this with their primary weapons, with the added caveat that if the player is able to survive long enough while downed, they can return back to a fighting condition.
* Call of Duty expansion also has you as a (different) paratrooper in the 101st Airborne for the American section of the campaign.
* Call of Duty falls to a coup by Khaled al-Assad, and you get to watch the former president's execution from first person. Then at the end of the first act, Assad nukes the capital city.
* Call of Duty featured a helicopter crashing in a city, the camera riding the wing of an Blackbird spy plane and a close-up of a Soyuz rocket launch, among other things.
* Call of Duty feature missions where the player is searching through multiple houses for one specific person. And, in both cases, you can search the houses in whatever order you want, but your target is always in the last one you search. It's less noticeable in the first case, as one of the safehouses is much further off than the rest of them are and getting between them isn't exactly easy, so you're likely to just naturally end up there last unless you go out of your way to visit it early.
* Call of Duty fences you can't step past. And if there's some rubble, "this road's closed, we have to go the other way!". sigh
* Call of Duty game could be released every year. After Jason West and Vince Zampella were fired from Infinity Ward in 2010, which studio is the A-Team became a lot more arguable.
* Call of Duty games fall under this as well. Buildings and streets are realistically rendered, and often the player can easily see detailed background elements. However, rubble or random props will block certain pathways, ensuring the player can only take a linear path through the level.
* Call of Duty: Ghosts: A laser-powered item called the Glass Cutter appears exclusively for the level "Federation Day," where it is used to break in through the building's windows.

* Call of Duty: Ghosts being the worst offender, only including multiplayer and zombies for the Xbox 360 and PS3 versions.
* Call of Duty: Ghosts has "No Man's Land": A large span of barren wastes between San Diego and Los Angeles that has been completely obliterated and has little to no life.
* Call of Duty: Ghosts is set ten years in the wake of a successful attack on the United States that kills 27 million Americans and leaves the nation in shambles. Industry is all but destroyed, cities are decaying, and the government is unable to field a proper military, leading to the ones responsible for the attack (a collaboration of various South American nations led by Venezuela) able to stage an invasion of the country and occupy the American Southwest. The "Ghosts" are a collection of individuals who worked in special operations prior to the assault and now fight to defend the remnants of their broken nation from its enemies.
* Call of Duty: Ghosts Logan Walker remains dead-silent throughout the entire game. The missions where you switch to another character are no different — even Elias Walker, who is otherwise very talkative, is completely silent during the flashback mission where you play as him.
* Call of Duty: Ghosts takes place after the United States has been devastated by strikes from its own Kinetic Impactors ("Rods from God") after the space stations containing the weapons were hijacked by astronauts from a hostile nation.
* Call of Duty: Ghosts that can scale walls, among other exotic technologies (appropriately set in 2054).
* Call of Duty: Ghosts: The bad guys (in this case a league of hostile South American governments) have hijacked an American superweapon system that is turned on the US, devastating the country and leaving it ripe to a conventional invasion.
* Call of Duty: Ghosts, the player and their team infiltrate a Federation base wearing enemy uniforms, spending about half the mission in disguise.
* Call of Duty: Ghosts). They since then said it was a joke, despite not sounding like one.
* Call of Duty gives us this loading screen conversation; the level in question is actually called 'F.N.G':
* Call of Duty had you covering a sniper while he put down a commissar that was machine-gunning fleeing Soviet soldiers. In the next mission, your orders are to charge at a Nazi machine gun emplacement, with commissars behind you to punish you if you try to go anywhere but forward - including trying to collect ammo from dead friendlies.
* Call of Duty has a mission called "Retreat? We're Advancing in Another Direction".
* Call of Duty has a ton of hatedom amongst the gaming community. Hasn't stopped them from making bestseller lists every year and game stores from running out of copies on release day.
* Call of Duty has literally named Hell Hounds in the later Nazi Zombies maps, which charge at the player on fire and sometimes explode. All prefaced with a creepy voice saying 'Fetch me their souls!' and the map getting foggy. Non-supernatural attack dogs are also quite threatening throughout the series.
* Call of Duty has the missions "Hunted" and "Death from Above" where the player's SAS Squad must fight to the evacuation point after their helicopter is shot down. Ironically, they were heading home after rescuing someone else from enemy hands. The missions "Heat" and "One Shot, One Kill" also count.
* Call of Duty has this problem as well — it's surprisingly easy to get the game to not display a teammate's name over his head even as you're staring right at him, though thankfully there's normally no friendly fire. Then you enter Hardcore mode, where friendly fire is enabled, the name-tags are disabled, there's no radar to show teammates' locations unless a UAV or spy plane is in the air, and health is reduced to the point that a single bullet with pretty much anything is an instant kill. Getting kicked from the server for too much accidental teamkilling is not at all uncommon.

* Call of Duty has two achievements in one level based around performing some Trick Shot marksmanship. At the beginning of "Vendetta," you can earn "The Professional" for only using five shots (without reloading) to clear out the first area (your targets are seven soldiers and an attack dog), while you earn "Gunslinger" for killing a German general with a pistol; said general is about a hundred yards away, has cover, and you only have a pistol if you found it early in the level (you will not find more ammo for it).
* Call of Duty has winter battles taking place during all 3 campaigns at one point. The American campaign has the Battle of the Bulge, the British campaign has the Siegfried Line campaign, and the Soviet campaign has the Battle of Stalingrad and the Vistula-Oder Offensive.
* Call of Duty has you escape an explosion TWICE. The first time the player jumps out a window as an armored car and flamethrowers attack your building, and while you make it out in time, your comrade is blown out the window by a massive explosion. At the end of the mission, the two of you are escaping a tank, and this time your positions are reversed where YOU narrowly avoid getting blown up by a tank by jumping out the window into the river.
* Call of Duty have a population counter on the sign in the center. The population listed is how many players are currently in the lobby.
* Call of Duty have randomly generated names, but they're names nonetheless.
* Call Of Duty Infinite Warfare also features robotic mooks that play this trope more strictly. Some are worker drones not originally intended for combat at all, while some are security or combat units that are much more capable but still rely on numbers rather than quality. The Settlement Defense Front pads its ranks out with robotic soldiers to overwhelm the size of all Earth-based fighting forces.
* Call of Duty: Infinite Warfare ends up dying in the ensuing impact. Upon arriving on the bridge, Reyes is promoted to the rank of "Captain" by his CO and takes formal charge of the ship.
* Call Of Duty Infinite Warfare have this, since they're robot and had no facial feature.
* Call Of Duty Infinite Warfare, if the player is so inclined), Nick Reyes stabs him in the throat and tells him "Captain has the comm."
* Call Of Duty Infinite Warfare is the only ship actually designated as a carrier, and is easily the most dangerous combat spacecraft in the game.
* Call Of Duty Infinite Warfare. Nothing moves, except when it jumps to life to kill you.
* Call Of Duty Infinite Warfare: the best example of these, as it has all of the above plus space warfare with the plot concerning a war between human-colonized Mars and Earth.
* Call of Duty: Infinite Warfare The UNSA and the SDF have navies that consist largely of Carriers, Destroyers, Space fighters and small gunboats. The SDF does however have two one-off ships in the Olympus Mons and the Cerberus that could qualify as The Battlestar as they both carry fighters while having some heavy anti-ship weaponry that isn't seen on any other SDF ship.
* Call Of Duty Infinite Warfare, works around this by having the capital ships and starfighter pilot helmets enable artificial audio.
* Call of Duty invokes this with his night-vision goggles - it's more of a monocle.
* Call of Duty is fantastical enough to spur copious toy and merchandise sales in its own right, as adult collectors (particularly millennials) became more of a mainstream demographic over time.
* Call of Duty, it's called Middle East, but the satellite maps point roughly to Saudi Arabia.
* Call of Duty kills the enemy, so long as someone on their team grabs the dog tags dropped by that enemy after he dies. You can even take dog tags from fallen allies, to deny the other team the chance to steal them and get credit for the kill.
* Call of Duty kind of exhibits this trope for bullets, as the game allows you to shoot through certain materials - many things make sense for the bullets to go through, like wood and sheet metal, and they always do so with reduced damage. However, once they start shooting through stone, it kinda stretches it since the bullets can still go through and actually hurt. If they implemented a mechanic that allows you to permanently damage all material, it might make more sense with continuous shooting, but, there currently isn't.

* Call of Duty: Lt. Tanya Pavelovna in the Eastern Front missions who assists you in one level and is playable in the next.
* Call of Duty — with the exception of the Golden Desert Eagle, you get one golden gun in each class after performing challenges such as "100 headshots" with each weapon. They ruin what little camouflage you had, and they don't provide any damage bonus, but GOD DAMN they look cool.
* Call of Duty: Mobile series. However, there are also new characters created exclusively for the game, as well as changes of backstory to the older characters to fit the game's narrative.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare (2019) has the Al-Qatala group, who, among other things, storm a US embassy and ruthlessly slaughter embassy workers just to get their leader back.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare (2019) mission "Captive" takes place in 2009, the game itself being released in 2019.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare (2019) portrays Russians as evil, weak, stupid, and cowardly.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare (2019) primarily takes place in 2019, save for the two prequel missions where you play as Farah.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare (2019) starts one day before its actual release date on Oct. 24, 2019.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare (2019), this gas is said to be called Nova-4. It is significantly weaker than its Black Ops counterpart however, it can still kill People in a few minutes.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2 allows for bayonets with most rifles, and the trench gun.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2. Although he does cover it with kevlar jacket for that particular job.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2 and 3 are more or less the war arcs of the Modern Warfare with most of the world fighting World War 3 against Russia after Russian extremists instigate it by framing the U.S for a suppose terrorist attack on Russian soil. Granted in the first game you fight in a few wars too but they're mostly foreign civil wars and a means to an end to track down the main villain. The second game however shows how the Big Bad got Russia riled enough to begin the war shows the start of the invading forces attacking Washington D.C and U.S Soldiers fighting to reclaim the White House as events go on elsewhere to find the real culprit. 3 is a continuation of this with the war in full swing while the main characters close in on the mastermind and try to prevent his plans from escalating further.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2 and gets himself killed for the trouble.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2, an elite unit of mercenaries commanded by General Shepherd. They wear all-black uniforms, heavy body armor, and carry advanced weapons, and all of their communications are tight, terse, and professional, all of which emphasizes that they are very dangerous opponents. Compared with enemies in earlier levels, they respond faster, shoot more accurately, and take a couple more shots to kill.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2 has several screenshots of menus that were obviously pre-release screenshots. The Deathstreaks one, for instance, has an extra deathstreak and a different image for the copycat entry.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2 has surviving Task Force 141 soldiers painted as rogue commandos thanks to the actions of General Shepard. Before the end of Modern Warfare 3, they were cleared of being rogue soldiers.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2 in a way that fits this trope is fairly rare.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2, or just the ramped-up action in the game.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2, Shepard and his men light up Roach and Ghost by dousing them with gasoline from a jerrycan after they betray the team. Shepard uses his cigar to set them ablaze.

* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2, the mannequins will come to life, immediately go after, and attempt to kill the player.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2. This level was the sole reason for the game getting an 18 rating from the BBFC in the UK - without it, the game would have been a 15.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2 to the biggest entertainment launch of all time (later succeeded by the third installment). It's notable that in the game itself, the player has the option to skip the scene if they don't like the violent content.
* Call Of Duty: Modern Warfare 2, you'll find an enemy in the middle of raiding a fridge. Once he is caught off guard, he will proceed to kill you.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 3 for the second game's FAMAS - despite that the GIGN are playable in multiplayer and appear in one campaign level, thus meaning it would make perfect sense for the FAMAS to return.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 3: John "Soap" MacTavish, previously hailed by fans as the hero of the previous games, dies during an assassination attempt (although he was only playable in one mission throughout). Yuri, one of the playable characters, meets his end in the final mission.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 3 or otherwise, are seen hung from makeshift gallows.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 3, you need to press X to do this to Soap.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare are set in 2016, 5 years after the first game, though the final mission of the latter game extends out to late January of 2017.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare features this at the end of "Takedown" as you chase an arms dealer through a Favela in Rio.
* Call of Duty: Modern Warfare has a level where you start out in the middle of an ambush. The mission then flashes back 20 minutes to show you how you ended up in that ambush. Sadly, it feels like they really shouldn't have bothered with the flashback.
* Call of Duty mode. Using your points to open a box instead of purchasing a gun is a bit of a crapshoot. You may end up with a sniper rifle (which is horrible to fight zombies with at close range) or the all powerful Ray Gun.
* Call of Duty: Most iterations of the series features grenades that can blind your enemies (or yourself if carelessly used).
* Call of Duty Nazi Zombies series Area 51 is talked about and even showcased a couple of times. The first mention of Area 51 comes in the Nazi Zombies minigame where the various radio transmissions that expand upon the background story of the Zombies makes a reference to a, "remote base in Nevada." and even gives exact coordinates of where it would be located on a map. Later on in the storyline of Nazi Zombies in the map "Five" John F. Kennedy makes references to Groom Lake, which is talking about the lake that Area 51 is situated on, and the various technological achievements made there. Finally in the Nazi Zombies map "Moon" Area 51 is being assaulted by Zombies and you have to escape them by teleporting to the surface of the Moon but you can come back later if you want though it won't contribute to ending your current round as all rounds can only be fought on the Moon. Beyond the Nazi Zombies universe Area 51 is also a multiplayer map called "Hanger 18" which is a reference to conspiracy theorists who believe that at Area 51 all of the most top secret Military Aircrafts are all tested there. Also the Element 115 that is constantly referenced in the Nazi Zombies storyline is based off the account of a former Area 51 employee who is stated to have witnessed the substance in action and who said it had reality warping qualities to it.
* Call of Duty. Nevertheless, a parliament deputy proposed to ban the game, because his teenage son was apparently outraged by the level. The Russian publisher, 1C, responded with a sarcastic open letter, inquiring why the politician would buy his son a pirated game and ignore the "18 and over" mark on the front cover.
* Call of Duty of your tank's crew seemingly being comprised of other soldiers from the same squad as you.
* Call of Duty on their work computers and take it very seriously. Jim's lack of skill at the game causes a lot of tension.
* Call of Duty" On the other hand, there is no gameplay mechanic to take prisoners anyway...

* Call of Duty. On the zombies map "Der Riese", there is a wall by the furnace that says "Help" (or "Hell", depending on your point of view). People assumed for months, if not years, that there was some way to get past the wall, like some kind of a door. This led to much conjecture on what steps it takes to do so, with the most prevalent being to earn 50,000 to 100,000 points in total, and that the player would be able to buy the wall. While a popular rumor, it is unfortunately untrue. There's nothing on the other side of the wall. With that in mind, "Shi no Numa" had its own rumor mill with Peter's hanging body. Many players would say that if you touch the body or manage to knock it down, it will severely affect the game with such things as one player or all players going down with game over, or one player dying and only being able to bleed out. There hasn't been any proof of such. There are various other rumors concerning the zombies gamemode, with the player being able to destroy the Moon on "Der Riese" if they shoot it with Ray Gun, or that there is a secret easter egg on "Kino der Toten", since knocking can be heard when standing next to the windows on the stage. On "Call of the Dead", of course, considering the easter egg, players assumed the Original Characters are indeed behind the locked door, which is not true. It's only their voices. With "Ascension", there were massive rumors concerning a hidden room only accessible through jumping off the lunar lander at a certain point. "TranZit" had the prominent rumor of having a second bus route, considering when the bus goes through the tunnel to the Diner, there appears to be a closed off lane to the right which is never accessible. "Nuketown" on Zombies had a popular rumor with the players having to do some convoluted easter egg in order to unlock the bunker, and find either a member of the new zombie crew, or a route to TranZit. Not only was it illogical, but noclipping proves there's nothing inside the bunker.
* Call of Duty or police to someone's house with a false accusation of some sort of horrible crime being committed). It turns out that Gaskill gave a false address. As a result, Andrew Finch (who had nothing to do with the bet) was shot and killed. Barriss received 20 to 25 years in jail, and Viner got two years of probation.
* Call of Duty recreates actual battles of World War II, some with more accuracy than others.
* Call of Duty requires you to synch an explosion with background thunder. If you don't, you have to fight your way through the horde of enemies who then arrive.
* Call of Duty saying "he was just hiding" (not to mention what became of Captain Price) remains to be seen, but so far no one's been complaining.
* Call of Duty sequence where you ride in an old Citroen car through the French countryside while Germans in Kubelwagens chase after you.
* Call of Duty series and the fighting between Treyarch and Infinity Ward over proper royalties.
* Call of Duty series, Care Packages can be rigged to explode when an opponent attempts to capture them.
* Call of Duty series) plays this straight in multiplayer, but avert this partially and inconsistently, where sometimes you can see body parts fall over, sometimes they just disappear in a puff of explosive smoke, and sometimes they ragdoll.
* Call of Duty's first British mission, the player has the chance to sneak up on some German soldiers near a bridge listening to a radio. Shortly after you begin shooting, the radio stops with a record scratch.
* Call of Duty shooting a German soldier with an MP 40 will sometimes cause him to fire several shots as he dies.
* Call of Duty, shooting at the bridge of enemy merchant vessels will cause them to blow up just as spectacularily as the fuel tanks on the deck. In the tank level, shooting through the firing slits of bunkers several will cause them to blow up, though there is no evidence of anything explosive stashed inside.
* Call of Duty's Mile High Club bonus level, the airliner suffers a hull breach, sucking out several tangos.
* Call of Duty, Spark included a bonus gag in the animation reel: a German soldier runs up to the logo, and, Pixar style, attempts to crush the "S." When he is unsuccessful, he pulls out a machine gun and shoots the letter down to size, after which it springs back up and propels him into the air.

* Call of Duty started slow with Microtransactions, adding extra Create-A-Class slots and camos in Black Ops 2, as well as the Peacekeeper DLC weapon included with the Season Pass and first Map Pack. However, all the latest games use a system called Supply Drops. Certain content is only accessible by unlocking Random Number Generator loot boxes that yield 3 items each. You can earn in-game currency to open these boxes but can pay for either an alternate currency (Black Ops 3 and Infinite Warfare) or a better chance at getting something good out of the boxes (Advanced Warfare). Obviously, currency earned in-game is dwarfed by whatever can be paid for. Initially, items in the supply drops are cosmetic only, but after a while exclusive gear starts getting added in, to the point where after two years Black Ops 3 had more MTX weapons than it had Day One weapons.
* Call of Duty that has grown to rival the power of sovereign nations. The levels were you are introduced to main base of said corporation and the corporate-run camp for the surviving populace demonstrate this trope extensively.
* Call of Duty that he's caught a Nazi infiltrator, and an enemy raid is imminent...
* Callof Duty that the player character inhabits in other war FPSes. Gradually, this element diminished as the series went on, with the nameless cannon-fodder NPCs being there to make you feel comparatively more awesome.
* Call of Duty. The different characters you play as, while they never meet each other in-game, help to contribute in their own way in order to defeat the Germans on vastly separated fronts.
* Call of Duty, the player character gets promoted all the way from SAS Sergeant to Captain in five years.
* Call of Duty the sights wobble around. Adding an ACOG to any gun severely reduces this rating. Adding an ACOG to the AK-47 makes it wobble around as much as a sniper rifle. It has the added downside that at least a proper sniper rifle comes with the option to hold your breath, reducing the sway for a bit. While the ACOG is close to a sniper scope, it doesn't let you hold your breath, so if the sights swing around a lot, good luck being accurate!
* Call of Duty. The Spectre gunship is not normally available to the British armed forces. Fortunately we have allies with a big stick, and leaders who know a good weapon when they borrow one.
* Call of Duty (though this last one may or may not actually be used by the military).
* Call of Duty: United Offensive is an odd example of taking an already mild instance and further "G-rating" it.
* Call Of Duty United Offensive's new American campaign takes place solely during the Battle of the Bulge, from the defense of Bastogne to the attack on Noville.
* Call of Duty until you can blaze a trail through them. An interesting aversion are the plot-critical redshirts, who absolutely refuse to take any damage until just after their usefulness runs out.
* Call of Duty uses this as part of a game mechanic - weapons equipped with the "FMJ" attachment, which allows them to penetrate thicker surfaces, make obvious spark-showers when shot at walls and whatnot as a visual indication that they have the attachment.
* Call of Duty, using the "Last Stand" perk allows you to survive otherwise-fatal hits by getting knocked down, where you can only use your pistol and die in either a single shot or after ten seconds. Holding the Use button to skip it and get to respawning is labeled the "Coward's Way Out".
* Call of Duty usually place the player in the role of military elite, allowing them to fight alongside other competent and professional soldiers armed with high-tech equipment and reams of long-distance support.
* Call of Duty wear either dark glasses or dark glasses and a facemask, even though they almost never need them.
* Call of Duty, when the player lands at Pointe du Hoc he is immediately stunned by an artillery shell. In his hazy immobilized state, the player sees an LCVP engulfed in flames with partially burning soldiers fleeing from it. Then, a burning soldier walks calmly out of the ship and down the ramp, collapses to his knees, and falls down.

* Call of Duty, when the theater's in WWII. In the first game they precede the grenade with a few bursts from a tommy gun for good measure.
* Call of Duty where fans just wanted to play with political characters, alternatively movie stars or TV stars and directors.
* Call of Duty where you need to face off against a German sniper under the guidance of Sergeant Reznov, a former sniper who lost his index finger early in the siege of Stalingrad and couldn't do the shooting himself. The enemy sniper will use decoys to try and get you to waste shots, and can easily kill you if you aren't quick.
* Call of Duty, which comes complete with satellite images of the nuclear detonation that kills your character and most of his unit.
* Call of Duty. While Jay himself occasionally falls victim to it, he does have legitimate excuses (replying to online hate mail during a game, etcetera).
* Call of Duty, who will shoot you if you don't do what he tells you when he tells you.
* Call of Duty: World at War), complete with traps such as electro-shock fences and swinging maces, and various power ups...
* Call of Duty: World at War features the US marines in the Pacific Campaign of WWII.
* Call of Duty: World at War goes even further. The Pacific campaign starts with your character being tortured by his Japanese captors, and features ambushes from units playing dead, booby traps, and kamikaze attacks. In response, the Americans employ flamethrowers to great effect. The Eastern front has the repeated execution of wounded soldiers, the razing of crops and homes, and the massacre of surrendering soldiers... and that's as the Russians.
* Call of Duty: World at War has a unique take on this. Rather than having the beach landing here take place in Normandy on D-Day like the World War II-era titles, this one takes place on the remote Pacific island of Peleliu. Unlike Normandy, the hazards come mainly from the coral reefs on the beach, which cause Miller's landing craft to get stuck. The defending Japanese here, rather than firing from solid concrete bunkers, are instead firing from exposed trenches that get wiped out after an artillery strike.
* Call of Duty: World at War has its own Gameplay Change in the form of "Black Cats", in which the focus shifts from taking on the Japanese/Germans on the ground to shooting down Zeroes over the Pacific from the gun turrets of a Catalina flying boat.
* Call of Duty: World at War in an effort to stop you, drowning scores of their own troops in the process. The multiplayer map "Station" is similar, though brighter due to the fact that the tunnel has partially collapsed.
* Call of Duty: World at War Inn the final American mission you get to call in an airstrike on Shuri Castle, and in the last Russian mission, you lay siege on the Reichstag.
* Call of Duty: World at War is ambushed and killed on Peleliu. He shows exceptional courage and grace amidst the chaos, and even tries to keep morale up.
* Call of Duty: World at War map called Verrückt, which takes place in the abandoned Wittenau Sanatorium. In the game proper, a sanatorium located in the outskirts of Berlin is the setting of part of "Ring of Steel", which Reznov, Dimitri, Chernov, and Commissar Mharkov have to fight through in order to advance. Another sanatorium is the setting for the multiplayer map "Asylum".
* Call of Duty: World at War multiplayer matches often end this way if your team loses:
* Call of Duty: World at War: Nazis with flamethrowers explode when their tank is shot. In the Pacific, as shown in the page image, flamethrower Marines will explode in scripted events but the player is immune to this weakness.
* Call of Duty: World at War or fighting takes place in or near Japanese holdouts. Okinawa is a downplayed example, as the environment is instead a sub-tropical rainforest, but a lot of the elements of this trope still apply.

* Call of Duty: World at War was the lack of Dedicated Servers and mod tools.
* Call of Duty: World at War, when, after Sgt. Sullivan is killed during the Peleliu beach landing, Roebuck is promoted to Sergeant, taking command of Miller's squad.
* Call of Duty: WWII has the first level, set during the Omaha Beach landing on D-Day. Unlike most examples, however, the level doesen't simply end once the German defenses are breached. Instead, the focus is mainly on clearing German opposition further inland.
* Call of Duty: WWII, which Stiles comments is probably one of these. It turns out Hazel wrote informing Daniels that she's pregnant.
* Call of Duty: WWII, with the developers keeping things as historically accurate as they can.
* Call of Duty: WWII, Zussman is captured and Red fights like hell to go after him, even disobeying direct orders and passing up a ticket home (due to his wounds). Zussman manages to hide his dogs tags in the snow, hiding that he is Jewish and is sent to a camp to work.
* Call of Duty: "You are a traitor to the motherland!" if you kill a Commissar in the Russian campaign, "Friendly fire will not be tolerated", if you shoot a friendly elsewhere, or "You were killed by a grenade, exploding vehicle, lethal pocket of radiation, etc."
* Call of Duty you briefly play as a dedicated tank commander separate from the infantry soldiers you usually play as.
* Call of Duty: Zombies are characterized by distinct glowing eyes, with varying colors to indicate who is controlling them (orange for Samantha/Maxis, blue for Richtofen, red for Apothicons)
* Call of Duty: Zombies has the Kronorium, which shows to its reader the entirety of reality across dimensions and time.
* Call of Duty: Zombies. It is completely non-lethal to Humans, but is lethal to Zombies.
* Call of Duty: Zombies. Many fans suspect that this was Treyarch's tough-love way of ending the franchise and refusing to do anything further with the series, and asking players to move on.
* Call of Duty: Zombies, which would reset the worlds and instead cast the zombies as the minions of a group of extradimensional Lovecraftian beings known as the Apothicons, removing the trope entirely.
* Call of Juarez: Bound in Blood, and start up a gun-running operation in the hopes of putting together enough money to finance a second rebellion.
* Call of Juarez: Bound in Blood, the three McCall brothers are tied up in a shed where there was a saw. Only William uses the saw, however, and just goes to untie his brothers.
* Call of Juarez: Gunslinger, as Silas will sometimes change his mind about a memory and you have to play it again differently. Of course he, and therefore the player, didn't die, otherwise he wouldn't be telling his stories in the present.
* Call of Juarez: Gunslinger: Henry Plummer uses his pipe to light fuses.
* Call of Juarez: Gunslinger), he promptly admits that he was genuinely afraid of Hardin, and that the only reason he ever stood a chance was that he attacked Hardin on his birthday, when Hardin was shit-myself-drunk.
* Call of Juarez: Gunslinger Interestingly, this actually affects the gameplay. Parts of the scenery and setting change as our hero points out things he didn't mention before, realizes that he isn't remembering what happened correctly, and, amusingly, when the other bar patrons misinterpret what he's saying or jump to conclusions about what happened next.
* Call of Juarez: Gunslinger: In the "Revenge" path, the final duel is a complete cakewalk, both for in-story and narrative reasons. Put simply, winning that fight isn't fulfilling, and considering that a major theme of the story is the futility of revenge, it isn't meant to be. The "real" last fight, against Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, is significantly more difficult and rewarding.
* Call of Juarez: Gunslinger mechanic (that can even be augmented with snap-aiming and trick reloads, among other things). Some boss battles also cover "The Quick Draw" through showdowns, where players must carefully focus and tactfully draw lest they be shot first.

* Call of Juarez: Gunslinger, should Silas go through with his revenge after sniffing out one of the patrons as the man he's after, the whole thing ends tragically with everyone being horrified and Silas regrets the whole thing.
* Call of Juarez just stands rooted to the spot while Billy and Juarez engage in fisticuffs.
* Call of Juarez: The Cartel. Consequently, a lot of what you do involves excessive violence, including some very uncomfortable instances.
* Call of Juarez: The Cartel, DEA agent Eddie Guerra is the sole survivor of the bombing incident of the DEA office. Also upon catching up to Alvarez in the final chapter, depending on who you are playing as, if you choose the option of killing your teammates, you will end up as the sole survivor.
* Call of Juarez: The Cartel, the three main characters are members of the LAPD, the FBI and the DEA, which means that occasionally they have conflicting goals and objectives from their superiors and/or informants (particularly the latter two, as the DEA agent is incredibly corrupt while the FBI agent is working for corrupt superiors).
* Call of Juarez: The Cartel who started selling high-end firearms to the Mendoza cartel after PI went bankrupt following an incident where they bombed a children's hospital in Iraq.
* Call of Juarez this is why Billy returned home, after finding Billy's foster parents dead and seeing him run from the scene. However, this is just a frame-up by the game's villains.
* Call of Juarez uses a whip as a climbing aid, and in situations when he doesn't have a gun, to fight off animals.
* Call of Pripyat you'll probably have more weapons than you can reasonably use anyway.
* Call of the Cutie" when she's depressed over (seemingly) being the only pony in her class who doesn't have her Cutie Mark yet. Rainbow Dash is kind enough to remove it for her.
* Call of the Haunted's effect was changed to its real-life counterpart's, while in
* "Call of the Primitives" used more detailed versions of Floro Dery's simplified designs.
* Call of the Undead: At one point in the movie, one of the women gets rather scream-happy.
* Call of the Undead: At one point, two people are trying to get into the rapist/murderer's house to get away from some zombies, one of which is crawling towards them, missing its lower half.
* Call of the Wildman has "Aiaiaiaiaiaiai! Live action!" He says it practically every other sentence. It's not hard to imagine the producers screaming "CATCH ON!" every time he does it. Too bad it's so grating.
* "Call One-Eight Hundred Steemer! Stanley Steemer gets carpets cleaner!" (Current version: "Stanley Steemer gets your home cleaner!")
* call one of his ridiculous-sounding attacks (for the record, all his attack names are more than ten words long), he bites his tongue.
* "Call on Me" by Eric Prydz is a convoluted example. The song was originally a bootleg track created by Together, a duo consisting of DJ Falcon and Thomas Bangalter (yes,
* "Call on Me" by Eric Prydz is a rather bland, repetitive song that would have been tossed into the pile of forgotten early-2000's techno... were it not for some genius deciding that the video should consist of women in thong-cut leotards humping the floor... er, doing aerobics.
* callous characters how irritating and annoying Brian can be), so at this point, what the writers want to do with Brian is pretty much a mystery.
* callousness. In the fourth and fifth books, she becomes a POV character and we see from her thoughts and actions just how unfit she is to rule seven kingdoms. She enters further into "Love to Hate" territory when many of her schemes backfire in her face, usually to comic effect.

* Callousness Towards Emergency: People who could help in an emergency don't because they don't care.
* Callousness Towards Emergency: Someone rudely brushes off a person in real danger needing their help as unimportant.
* Callousness Towards Emergency: Someone's in danger, but I don't care, and I won't do anything about it!
* Callousness Towards Emergency: You need help? Screw you! That's your problem, not mine!
* call out the difference between 'traditional' ninja gear and what one would actually dress like to complete a mission.
* callow youth has begun a quest to destroy me, I will slay him while he is still a callow youth instead of waiting for him to mature.
* "Call quickly because we're only giving this offer to the first 100 callers." Yeah, right. As if they're going to risk you hanging up once they get you on the phone. Which is the flaw in the ointment of most of these— the pitch is just a come-on to get you on the phone. Once they have you on, they're going to want to keep you on as long as possible, or at least until they get an order out of you and preferably your credit card number. Telling you that you can't have the offer would be a cue for you to hang up.
* calls Admiral Cornwell out for allowing Section 31 to mine the space around their headquarters in violation of Federation law, she tries to claim it wasn't the Federation but Section 31 that did it, prompting Pike to drop the trope name.
* calls BS on this trope is what makes people start assuming you must be guilty of something, (whether you actually are or not) not your decision to not lawyer up. Furthermore, without an attorney present, it's fairly easy for a detective to twist what you said and get you convicted even if you're innocent.
* calls her out on many things about her, including how her 'jokes' are not funny and adding 'just kidding' does not alter the fact or make them okay. Cynthia changed her ways.
* calls him out on it of the Empire of Blood and has been for a long while).
* callsign "Sticks", on grounds that her X-Wing's control yoke is one stick, and her lightsaber hilt is another. Luke Skywalker also once gets in an argument with a New Republic politician who wants the Jedi Order merged with the regular military, both to improve coordination and to make the Jedi subject to the regular military justice system.
* Calls in modern combat play this straight, with a different target in mind: they're to warn your allies as to what you're doing so they can either give you cover or get out of harm's way. For example:
* calls Lily a "Mudblood" in a fit of anger, he tries to apologize, but Lily points out that he acts prejudiced towards all Muggleborns, asking flat-out, "Why should I be any different?", which itself leads to Voldemort learning of the prophecy and trying to kill Harry as a child.
* calls Snape a hero for using basilisk venom to kill Voldemort, Harry loudly states that pigs will fly when this happens. Several hundred magically-altered porkers then soar into the Great Hall.
* calls up a large group of angry bears... Agatha and friends promptly decide to retreat.
* call the final out. (The ad was produced with the approval of Caray's family.)
* Call the Midwife and a generally loving relationship to their families. All are a real pain for the mothers-to-be and their medical providers.
* Call the Midwife. Chummy is just over 6'1" tall and Peter, her police sergeant husband, is approximately 5'8" tall. This would make him at the tall end of average from the time period (1950s), but compared to his wife he looks tiny; especially on the rare occasions she wears heels.
* Call the Midwife. For example, June Dillen (a deaf mother) was played by Genevieve Barr, who is profoundly deaf in real life and Marion Irmsby (a blind mother-to-be) was played by Ellie Wallwork, who is blind in real life. As regards recurring characters: Reggie Jackson has Down syndrome, as does his actor Daniel Laurie.

* Call the Midwife has the lovely instrumental piece "The Letter" for Dr Turner and Sister Bernadette.
* Call the Midwife has used this occasionally; given the time period, they're all exiled to the hallway where they have little to do except wear a hole in the carpet. That, or go down the pub.
* Call the Midwife is an old, angry diabetic man who runs an eel pie shop in Poplar. This is an even older form of greasy spoon than the cafe.
* Call the Midwife: Julia Masterson in Series 2, Episode 6, the only one of her father's seven children not to die of TB (which took her mother as well). She explicitly tells her dad, "I'm sorry I'm the one who didn't die."
* Call the Midwife—set about as late as possible to be considered a costume drama (Series 1 is 1957, and each series corresponds to one calendar year).
* Call the Midwife one of the midwives meets an Irish Catholic priest regarding one of her patients (a girl who ran away from Ireland to London). The priest offers tea and apologies for only having Fig Newtons to go with them, as they "taste like... treacle. Wrapped in a doormat."
* Call the Midwife, particularly the pilot; set during the smog of 1957 (one of the last, and the worst one since the 1952 Great Smog), Nurse Jenny Lee's first patient trips over one of her children's toy fire engines while trying to hang the washing in the garden amidst the pea soup. A concussion and premature delivery result.
* Call the Midwife: Patsy and Delia have to keep their long-term relationship secret because, in early-1960s Britain, homosexuality is both socially stigmatized and illegal.
* Call the Midwife seem a bit surprised when she takes him up on his lighthearted offer, but it's likely that's only because he's never seen her smoke before; the nuns are just about the only characters who aren't constantly lighting up.
* Call the Midwife. Series 1-3 are set from 1957-59 in London's East End.
* Call the Midwife. She is, essentially, the glue that holds Nonnatus House together.
* Call the Midwife, the parish Nativity play Chummy organizes (as leader of the Cub Scout pack) ends up with too many players after combining the Cubs with the Brownies to put on a better show for the Mayor of Poplar (who's dropping in). Seeing this, Chummy decides to personify the gifts of the Three Wise Men and have an awfully large number of sheep.
* Call the Midwife, where nearly all of the babies that appear are actual newborns (except the birth scenes, which substitute a model). They can do this because both consultant midwife Terri Coates and the baby's mum are always just off-camera.
* Call the Midwife, where she is essentially considered able to do no wrong. They're not the only ones, however, as even the critics are gushing.
* Call the Midwife with a look of such desperation it's painfully clear just how much he loves her. Every moment they'd had before could have been explained away, but with that gesture, everything changed and there was no turning back. Unfortunately, though she most certainly returns his feelings, she's a nun, which... complicates things, to say the least.
* call themselves Russian Cossacks nowadays are mostly a series of disjointed local Funny Hats Brotherhoods that love to wear oldtimer uniforms, haul around ornate religious icons and battle banners, award each other with shiny medals and new ranks (full generals are incredibly common and numerous), and stomp their feet at moral corruption, foreign workers, atheists or whatever else they don't like. Some of these clubs do good community work (establishing patriotic clubs and museums, working with addicts etc.). Others band together and "patrol" the streets, trying to work up the courage to harass or beat up people they don't like, or disrupt "unholy" art exhibitions or political meetings.
* "Call to Action" resulting in the destruction of the Star Destroyer he was being held on.
* Call to Adventure; specifically, he mined oil shale that would be processed to grow fungi that would be processed into food. Bob wonders at one point about the days when oil flowed out of the ground and people just used it to run cars.

* Call to Agriculture: I could do something amazing, but I grow things instead 'cause I'm such a nature lover!
* Call to Agriculture: Someone in an unrelated career field decides to take up farming later in life.
* Call to Power series has Leviathans, enormous, heavily armed with most weapons of that particular period in that game, but extremely slow moving. In game, the unit is more powerful in every combat statistic than every other unit, but can only move one square per turn, even on roads. Fusion tanks in the same series might also apply.
* Call to Power, where it creates a space city above the city containing the wonder, and allows units to travel between the two without the drawbacks of other space launch methods.
* Callum Blue (6'1") is somehow shown to be several inches taller than Tom probably due to misuse of boxes.
* Callum is later struck while being arrested despite not being resistant at all, then beaten in custody by the police.
* Callum, Sol Regem believes it's best to kidnap the prince and take him away to Xadia because he fears humanity will either destroy or corrupt his power.
* "Call USA-1000! Jhoon Rhee Means Might for Right!" Almost any native of the Washington, DC metropolitan area who grew up in the '70s or '80s knows (what was) the number for the Jhoon Rhee Self-Defense Taekwondo schools, thanks to their long-running and memorable TV ads. The jingle for the ad, believe it or not, was written by
* Cally has an affair with HotDog. We only find out after it is revealed that Tyrol is a Cylon and he's not the father of the baby he thought was his.
* Call Your Mother: The episode "Sunday Dinner" was dedicated to the show's creator Kari Lizer's father Jerry Dayton Lizer, who died of COVID-19.
* Call yourselves the "fastest-growing" in your field. If you went from 1 customer to 3, that's a 200% increase!
* Calm Emotions is the opposite, damping strong emotions within a target area. While it can be a useful way to have a sensible conversation with someone, in such a combat-oriented game it's perhaps most useful as an offensive maneuver, making a target so mellow that they fail to adequately defend themselves.
* calming effect on the mind. Since your jaw naturally clenches when stressed or angry, letting it drop can release dopamine, thus calming you down.
* Calmly asking him to get off, one of the first clues that Rei isn't normal.
* calmly calls Marcy to let her know the boys have gone off to protest the cancellation.
* calmly, "Yes. That's a real pickle. Would you excuse me?" He puts on a radiation helmet and screams incoherently for a while, causing the faceplate of the helmet to fog up. He then takes it off and says, now using the monotone again, "Alright, I have thought this through. I will send Bart the money to fly home. Then I will murder him."
* Calogrenant, an Arthurian knight with gender dysphoria is transformed into a maiden, and goes on Monty Pythonesque adventures which feature inspirations from the many versions of the legend.
* Caloi en su tinta was the opening to give you an idea of the show, and there are some shorts in YouTube as well.
* caloric. One of the reasons that this theory stuck around so long is that the rules concerning the movement of heat are the exact same as the movement of diffuse material in a fluid. Thus, while caloric was abandoned as a theory, the rules of heat movement were unchanged.
* Calpis, a popular Japanese yogurt-based soft drink was derived as a portmanteau of cal from calcium and pis from sarpis (butter flavor in Sanskrit). In English, it sounds similar to "cow piss". The product's name was changed to "Calpico" in Asian supermarkets in English speaking countries, but still retains the original katakana spelling.
* Calradia The map is freely rotated and is oriented with the Slavic Vaegirs in the north and the Persian-like Sarranids in the south, in tundra and desert environments respectively. However, this is only part of the world; the expanses of open space the map edges suggest that the tundra and desert go on for effectively forever.

* Cal respectively, but both are easy to cover up and look gorgeous otherwise.
* CalTech stretched a cell membrane across a computer CPU slot, leaving the gold pins in place, and were able to process data with it (until it died).
* Caltrops Ejects several dozen of these sharp, jack-like objects which will puncture the tires of pursuers.
* Caltrops What's better, they can still be effective against modern vehicle using air-filled tires.
* Calumon has a ridiculously high pitched and cutesy voice, but the English dub gives him a somewhat deeper, more boyish voice.
* Calvarian generals are guarded (and are spied upon) by a trio of Blood Guards, members of the Calvarian
* Calvarians do have secondary names, but they only serve to tell you the order of their birth (Drauglir Seventhson) or whether they were an unwanted child (Isengrim No-Father). As Calvarians are only permitted to have half as many children as they have personally killed in battle, having the last name Fifteenthson is a pretty clear indication of someone's pedigree.
* Calvary: After a parishioner threatens to kill him next Sunday, his church gets set on fire and it becomes clear that no one in town cares about their Catholicism anymore, Father James quits the priesthood and is about ready to board a plane for London when he spots the coffin of a man he'd performed last rites for. He changes his mind and returns to face the murderous parishioner.
* Calvary/Cavalry. "Calvary" is a location. "Cavalry" is a military force (originally the group on horseback). One cannot call in the "Calvary". The words are not synonymous. But you can
* Calvary", when Wolfram & Hart CEO Lilah Morgan hides out at Angel Investigations, Angel tells her to make the coffee — she responds by breaking all the mugs.
* Calvera-ish French-speaking "half-breed Arab" warlord "The General" in the 1964 adaptation of
* Calvina Coulange, but unlike Latooni, she's still keeping her sniping skills and only so much discarding the unpleasant aspects of her personality, she's still aloof.
* Calvin also protests going to school because if ignorance is bliss, then his education is a violation of his right to the pursuit of happiness. He puts on a patriotic, American Revolution-esque shtick, and when his teacher chases him as he tries to leave the classroom, he yells "Monarchists!"
* Calvin also ranted about a television show which made no sense. When Hobbes remarked that it was targeted at the average American's fifteen-second attention span, Calvin's response was only, "You're still talking about that?"
* Calvin and co. bust through Thunderstorm's lab's entrance at one point in
* Calvin and his parents rarely ever see eye-to-eye. Calvin often doesn't think too highly of his parents, Calvin's Dad sometimes offhandedly comments about wanting a dog instead of a rambunctious youngster... but every so often, we do see that both parties do care for each other in a few strips, with one memorable one showing Dad taking a break from working to play with Calvin in the snow.
* Calvin and Hobbes 05/22/86 strip when Calvin is on a camping trip with his Boy Scout troop.
* Calvin and Hobbes (a bit obvious when you consider it takes after John Calvin and Thomas Hobbes).
* Calvin and Hobbes after being goaded into acting as mean-spirited as his original.
* Calvin and Hobbes: After Calvin utterly fails a report on plants, he angrily asks what good it does to identify plants while holding a branch. Hobbes then replies "I believe that's poison sumac you're holding." He also regularly runs afoul of poison ivy during family camping trips.
* Calvin and Hobbes. After the barrage ends, Susie turns around to laugh at Calvin's throwing ability... and THAT'S when Calvin's aim finally pays off.

* Calvin and Hobbes, a game whose only permanent rule is "you can't play the same way twice."
* Calvin and Hobbes: Alien worlds strange suns, several moons... are frequently seen in Calvin's imaginary worlds. Watterson would eventually claim that, ultimately, print was an insufficient medium to capture the sheer scope of Calvin's imagination.
* Calvin and Hobbes. All of the main characters are drawn like this unless camouflaged by Calvin's imagination.
* Calvin and Hobbes, a lot of Calvin's creations and imaginary antics disturb his parents, like making a bunch of snow people terrified at their impending melting.
* Calvin and Hobbes, and Calvin's father opts to read the newspaper instead.
* Calvin and Hobbes and chews him out as he's untying him. The storyline ends with Hobbes mocking Calvin as the boy angrily rubs his sore rear end, the implication apparently being that his father spanked him. It's really hard to blame Calvin for being ticked off.
* Calvin and Hobbes and formed his own club, C.A.D. (Calvin's A Dope). It was a short-lived schism, since as soon as Susie showed up, Calvin was willing to make up with Hobbes so they could throw rotten apples at her.
* Calvin and Hobbes, and his massive ego is often the cause of many of his problems (when he doesn't cause mayhem for the sake of causing mayhem, anyway).
* Calvin and Hobbes, and jets about in a flying saucer with a bubble cockpit and tail fins.
* Calvin and Hobbes (and other more creative insults). This is sometimes lampshaded, subverted, and averted when Calvin returns home from school, but usually ends up with this because Hobbes learns fast. Miniature stars and planets typically surround the cloud.
* Calvin and Hobbes, and the fantasy sequences and even the standard outdoor backgrounds are surprisingly rich in detail for a comic strip, so between keeping a dictionary handy and searching out all the Easter eggs, you'll be at it for quite some time.
* Calvin and Hobbes: An early strip features Calvin showing Hobbes an "antelope"... by taking him over to an anthill, pointing to one, and saying "See, she's climbing down the ladder to her boyfriend's car!" Hobbes is not amused.
* Calvin and Hobbes arc where Calvin and Hobbes use their time machine at 6:30 and travel two hours ahead so they can grab the completed homework assignment, then both Calvins go back an hour to find out why 7:30 Calvin didn't do it. Each Calving refers to the others by the time they're from, and fortunately are all visually distinct (6:30 has goggles, 8:30 has goggles and is in his pyjamas).
* Calvin and Hobbes are fond of these, including "Strudel-Brain" and "Oatmeal-Face."
* Calvin and Hobbes are friends at all. Hobbes condescends to Calvin, attacks him for no reason, occasionally bullies him, and has betrayed him for his own gain multiple times, while Calvin tends to see Hobbes as little more than a partner for his own schemes and often treats him no better than Hobbes treats him. The implication seems to be that because Calvin is so terrible, he has to take what friends he can get, and even Hobbes may or may not be imaginary.
* Calvin and Hobbes are named after philosophers John Calvin and Thomas Hobbes.
* Calvin and Hobbes are often at each other's throats, but it's usually only in good fun.
* Calvin and Hobbes are patterned on people he doesn't get along with in his own life: his parents, his teacher Miss Wormwood, his classmate Susie Derkins, his babysitter Rosalyn, etc.
* Calvin and Hobbes. Armed with this grandiose and self-affirming philosophy, he goes and watches TV.
* Calvin and Hobbes as Calvin endeavors to eat enough cereal to get all the box tops needed. And then he's disappointed when it finally arrives and he discovers that no, it doesn't enable him to fly.
* Calvin and Hobbes as his private detective alter ego, Tracer Bullet, getting hired to unwittingly serve as the fall guy for this particular crime.

* Calvin and Hobbes, as well as his opinions on comics, film, TV, commercial and other industries, humans' role in nature, art, and general philosophy. However, he always tried to keep the tone of the comic consistent and would scrap ideas that diverged too far.
* Calvin and Hobbes, at one point Calvin daydreams about Spaceman Spiff being stranded on one of these. aided by the fact that he missed the lunch bell and is sitting alone in the classroom.
* Calvin and Hobbes at times displays a degree of philosophical depth and intelligence you wouldn't expect from someone his age; usually in his conversations with Hobbes. It's tremendously pronounced in Calvin's case; many adults aren't as intelligent as Calvin is. Calvin has repeatedly shown an intelligence of someone far older and even then, quite a few adults wouldn't be able to to make the same kinds of points that Calvin does with the same amount of articulateness or intelligence. It's even lampshaded in one of the later strips where Calvin's teacher humorously states that if he put a fraction of the energy he did into studying rather than avoiding it, he'd easily be a straight A student.
* Calvin and Hobbes beginning with the names of the two main characters referencing philosophers John Calvin and Thomas Hobbes.
* Calvin and Hobbes bickered in the back seat of Calvin's parent's car once.
* Calvin and Hobbes (bicycling for Dad and chewing gum for Calvin). And there's more.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Bill Watterson was fond of these, with Hobbes adding another punchline on the far right of the last panel, often a mockery or lampshade hanging on what Calvin was saying.
* Calvin and Hobbes books, Watterson speaks as if he's just letting Calvin run loose to see what he does.
* Calvin and Hobbes. Both strips are based on Watterson's arguments with his syndicate on merchandising, where the company would accuse the cartoonist of seeing no shades of grey and having no perspective.
* Calvin and Hobbes, but he's often right about the things he rants about. This often comes into play whenever he talks about the environment.
* Calvin and Hobbes, but often shows a grasp of complex philosophical principles.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin always does this before the camping trips from Hell.
* Calvin and Hobbes Calvin and Hobbes first attack the living snowman with snowballs. They simply stick to the monster, inspiring it to add more snow and features, quickly becoming the first of the Deranged Mutant Killer Monster Snow Goons.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin announces his secession from the family and heads outside to strike out for the Yukon. His mother calls after him... but only to sardonically inform him, "You're heading southeast. North is that way."
* Calvin and Hobbes." Calvin asks if his dad means it, and his dad says, "No, but the truth is more complicated."
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin builds a snowman that's playing ten-pin bowling with another snowman's head.
* Calvin and Hobbes Calvin, complaining about scientists' unimaginative naming, says that The Big Bang should have been called "The Horrendous Space Kablooie." Some physicists use that term now.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin consistently presents these to his father, informing him that his "approval rating" is going down.
* Calvin and Hobbes Calvin decides that to liven up his life, he's going to make it more like a TV show, complete with soundtrack and laugh track. His mother's reaction mirrors that of most people on hearing a laugh track.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin, despite being 6 years old, is shown as being only about 2 feet tall, about as tall as a toddler, and his parents are both normal height. Just about every one of his peers except Moe (the school bully) are also about as tall as he is. Amusingly, Hobbes (when he's not a plushie) is taller than Calvin is. Calvin even mentions in one strip that short pants touch his feet, and another when he follows the wrong woman around the Zoo that "From the knees down, she looks just like [Mother]".

* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin eats cereal that takes five grapefruits and a dozen bran muffins to even out the sugar (and possibly more, since Hobbes trails off while explaining this).
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin has an elaborate wish involving world domination, while all Hobbes wants is a sandwich. Subverted because in the last panel of the strip, Hobbes is eating a sandwich, telling Calvin "I got my wish."
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin has destroyed his mother's flower garden on several occasions. Once trying to parachute out of his room, and landing in the rosebushes, and in another instance while trying to dig for a pool.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin has hiccups and asks Hobbes to tell him a scary story to cure him.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin is playing with Dad's binoculars when he drops them and breaks them. When Hobbes asks how bad the damage was, Calvin reveals a box of dust.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin makes an attempt to fool his mom into thinking he was rabid. When she just tells him to spit the toothpaste foam out of my mouth, Calvin says to himself, "Maybe Dad will fall for it if I bite him first."
* Calvin and Hobbes. Calvin manages to deduce his father's disrespect.
* Calvin and Hobbes Calvin mentions he had no choice but to do this to the class when he accidentally ripped the seat of his pants and Miss Wormwood, not knowing what had happened, made him go up to do a math problem on the board (he was too embarrassed to tell her why he didn't want to go up). He then comments to Hobbes that he ended up getting to go home early from school because several teachers and the principal couldn't restore order afterwards.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin mentions that saber-toothed tigers probably did this. Hobbes is not amused.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin occasionally likes to pretend he is a forcibly detained space captain while at school. Upon being sent to the principal's office in one strip, he eats his hall pass since it is considered "evidence" in his imaginary world.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin occasionally tries to fix things around the house (including more than one ill-fated plumbing incident), and usually ends up causing more destruction than when he tries to destroy things.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin once asked his dad if dinosaurs were around when he was young. His dad confirms it before his mother tells him Calvin's grades are already bad enough.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin once built a giant "snow snake" out of snow and pretended he was being swallowed by it, claiming that "horrible inner jaws" were dragging him into its gullet, since its visible mouth clearly wasn't moving. Susie wasn't fooled.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin once imagined a car falling into the Grand Canyon and exploding — in mid-air. Apparently a Mercedes is even worse than a Pinto.
* Calvin and Hobbes. Calvin once picked up the phone and said, "Hello, we are unable to come to the phone right now, so please leave a message at the sound of the 'click'." and hung up.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin once tried to convince his mother to set out his clothes for the day and breakfast on the stairs so that he could be ready for school simply by falling down the stairs. He failed.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin once wanted to invoke this trope, asking his mom if she could have a baby brother so he could have "someone small [he] could beat up". The strip immediately cuts to Calvin's dad getting a call from her discussing an operation for one of them to get their tubes tied.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin pulls this off on Hobbes once, when he snuck in through the back door and found Hobbes waiting to pounce on him when he normally comes through the front.
* Calvin and Hobbes Calvin puts in them would net the area frequent visitors every winter and probably attract some attention in the media about a kid with such artistic talent.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin receives a chain letter in the mail, and reads a list of people who were involved with it and what happened to them. One guy continued with the chain and got a raise, and another broke the chain and went bald. Hobbes tells him it's nothing but superstitious nonsense and advises him to throw it away. Calvin then continues reading: "And a dumb kid like you listened to a friend and got run over by a cement mixer."

* Calvin and Hobbes), Calvin replies that once they add a few illustrations and a conclusion it will look like a graduate thesis. It... does not go well.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin's always like this when it comes to his schoolwork—assuming that he bothers doing it at all, he'll always put off doing an assignment until the absolute last possible minute (he actually once completely forgot about an assignment until the day it was due, despite having at least a month to work on it). To name some specific examples:
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin's dad refuses to buy a VCR because "It's bad enough we have a TV."
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin's grandmother and grandfather are mentioned on several occasions, but are never seen.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin's mom (dressed in towels and dripping wet) is once seen heading for Calvin with a furious look, while his hand is still on the water shutoff valve...
* Calvin and Hobbes!" Calvin's mom literally falls off her chair laughing, and his Dad, while annoyed, admits that "okay, the voice was a little funny". They currently provide the page image.
* Calvin and Hobbes (Calvin's mom, meanwhile, was literally on the floor, laughing uproariously).
* Calvin and Hobbes. Calvin sometimes takes advantage of his lack of intelligence, though, with mixed results.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin tends to be like this now and again — a fact that his father has some fun with by giving false answers.
* Calvin and Hobbes. Calvin the Zombie is one of his many alter egos, this one created for the purpose that the undead don't need to do homework. Eventually, Hobbes decides to join in, saying "When in Rome..."
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin tries to counterfeit money, but being six years old, his art skills leave something to be desired.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin tries to fix a leaky faucet and floods the bathroom instead. When Dad demands to know what happened, Calvin says that the faucet blew sky-high all by itself, then he says that Hobbes was fooling around with Dad's tools, and finally he claims that "evil, bug-eyed monsters from Pluto" did it.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin uses this trope to make it look like he cleaned his room — until his mom opens the closet.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin using "educated language" for a book report.
* Calvin and Hobbes; Calvin will do this occasionally to avoid getting tackled by Hobbes when he comes home from school. Circumstances usually arise that prevent him from capitalizing on this (example: the first time he did this, he walked off happy in his success while ignoring that Hobbes had recovered and was charging right back).
* Calvin and Hobbes, Calvin would be given chances to tell the truth, but instead utterly fails big time because of his insistence that everyone will be stupid enough to believe his obvious lies.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Calvin writes a letter to Santa stating he only wants "love and peace for my fellow man" in an attempt to receive more gifts on Christmas. Hobbes tells him that it's a risky strategy so Calvin scraps it.
* Calvin and Hobbes cartoon where Calvin asks his mom if hamburgers are made out of people from Hamburg.
* Calvin and Hobbes comic books, in which a character having a huge hole blasted through his torso narrates: "I could feel my spine shatter. It hurt... a lot."
* Calvin and Hobbes comic involves Calvin bragging about how he has three water balloons, and Hobbes has only one. Hobbes' response is this trope, and Calvin loses his hold on all four, resulting in him being soaked by all of them.
* Calvin and Hobbes contains an original poem (with some fantastic, if terrifying, illustrations) called "A Nauseous Nocturne," about such a monster attacking Calvin at night, but then getting scared away by a sleeping Hobbes.

* Calvin and Hobbes counts; even though he performs badly in school and misbehaves, he has an amazing vocabulary, an endless imagination, and is amazingly aware for a six-year-old kid.
* Calvin and Hobbes" Cut to Calvin face down in the snow after Susie clobbers him with the tagline "The defendant petitions the court for a new trial because his lawyer is incompetent" (with Calvin, of course, having been his own "lawyer").
* Calvin and Hobbes daily, the duo decides to see what happens when you pop a normal amount of corn with the lid off, and it fills up the entire kitchen.
* Calvin and Hobbes debuted without much fanfare in 1985 in 35 newspapers, OK for a new strip in that era but not a phenomenal number. Its rather quirky premise probably made it a tough sell at first. But word of mouth was strong, and by its one-year anniversary the number of subscribing newspapers had grown to over 250, and in the spring of 1987 the first book collection became a runaway best-seller.
* Calvin and Hobbes did this several times. Take care when entering the room of a six-year-old who's just watched "Attack of the Coed Cannibals".
* Calvin and Hobbes does a pretty good job of summing up bathos in one strip:
* Calvin and Hobbes does this in quite a few Sunday editions; Calvin always hides a comic book inside his textbook.
* Calvin and Hobbes do it in "Full Moon: Full Baloney!" unintentionally out of fright.
* Calvin and Hobbes, dropped the bug, and jumped into Hobbes's arms, declaring: "It's a lucky thing you guessed so fast!"
* Calvin and Hobbes due to how well the characters bounce off each other due to the "weirdness repels" dynamic. Calvin acts weird to get Susie's attention, Susie's repulsed by it, and Calvin takes this as a cue to act even stranger.
* Calvin and Hobbes, during a particularly bad day Calvin was not only picked last but the two team captains fought over who was stuck with him.
* Calvin and Hobbes encouraging him to be as bratty as he likes and that good kids actually nauseate Santa.
* Calvin and Hobbes enjoys beating the stuffing out of Calvin without being provoked. After one such beating, he criticized Calvin for 'moving upwind'. Calvin moved because he could hear Hobbes coming.
* Calvin and Hobbes Eventually lampshaded by Hobbes providing the above quote.
* Calvin and Hobbes except in one instance where he locks Rosalyn outside.
* Calvin and Hobbes except the bears were tigers and they eat Goldilocks. His dad was disturbed by it.
* Calvin and Hobbes excuse as to why Stupendous Man's powers never affect his foes... since his foes are "played" by real people in his life who are not playing by Stupendous Man's rules.
* Calvin and Hobbes" exploring an alien landscape. Spiff is flying over some suspiciously formed canyons until it hits him that these are giant footprints so he hits the thrusters to get away.
* Calvin and Hobbes fanfics that take the interpretation that Hobbes is real and not just in Calvin's mind:
* Calvin and Hobbes featured one of these with water fights. Calvin's use of a water pistol merits Hobbes hitting him with a water balloon. Just as Calvin is getting out the hose, Hobbes walks around the corner with a wading pool...
* Calvin and Hobbes features this in a nightmare of Calvin's, where he is kidnapped by aliens.
* Calvin and Hobbes fits this nicely; Calvin relies on the fact that Moe will not understand any of the florid insults that he (Calvin) heaps upon the bully. Though it doesn't prevent Moe from messing up Calvin's face on numerous occasions.
* Calvin and Hobbes follows the adventures of a very noir-ish private investigator called Tracer Bullet.
* Calvin and Hobbes for. Eventually the clubs got wise, and the manufacturers now pay the clubs.
* Calvin and Hobbes for every person he "eats". Except for Tommy Chestnut, who apparently did taste awful, but was eaten anyway.

* Calvin and Hobbes for kids). Despite this, since its inception it's had a HUGE number of adult and teenage fans, who find it well-written, funny, and witty. Of course, given that a LOT of jokes and social commentary in the series would be incomprehensible to most young readers, it might be more accurate to say the demographic is "anyone who loves great sequential art".
* Calvin and Hobbes for those who remember that fortifying things with chlorophyll was an actual fad in the 1950s.
* Calvin and Hobbes, frequently had rows with his editor about the subject of merchandising. Several strips had paraphrases of the editor's arguments as punchlines, such as Calvin's dad telling him he sees everything in black and white or has no perspective, leading to the boy imagining a literal case of the ailments. He got his point across.
* Calvin and Hobbes from another boy next to him: "Hey, kid, are you going to use that swing or what?"
* Calvin and HobbesFurthermore, Watterson took a year-long sabbatical from drawing the comic at the height of its popularity, due to artistic differences with his publisher. He only came back on the condition that he'd have a reserved block of space for the Sunday comic, instead of the usual modular format that allows individual newspapers to rearrange the panels as they see fit.
* Calvin and Hobbes game he tries to play eventually turns into Calvinball (like his variant of baseball with over two dozen bases spread out around the whole neighborhood):
* Calvin and Hobbes genre and really knows nothing about it except what he picked up by osmosis from pop culture.
* Calvin and Hobbes Get XTREME! and simply seeing sites throughout the town.
* Calvin and Hobbes Get XTREME! provides this gem from Calvin's mother:
* Calvin and Hobbes Get XTREME!, with Garfield's theory on the matter being that Calvin has this.
* Calvin and Hobbes goods and general strong intent to have the "brand" fade away as much as possible.
* Calvin and Hobbes had a fair few of these. Notable is the one strip where Calvin puts on a helmet and cape and claims that today is the day that he'll "go for the gusto," with no further explanation given.
* Calvin and Hobbes had a storyline where Calvin was lifted off the ground by his balloon. When Calvin tries it for real in a much earlier strip by using a stepladder to jump off, he promptly falls splat on his face, losing the balloon in the process.
* Calvin and Hobbes had Calvin let his brain wander off before losing it. Of course, this was just his imagination playing up.
* Calvin and Hobbes had Calvin's book suddenly come to life and eat his homework before attacking him. Or at least that was the reason he gave Miss Wormwood for why his homework wasn't done.
* Calvin and Hobbes had Hobbes tying Calvin to a chair so that he could try to escape it. Unfortunately, Calvin is no Houdini, and when his parents come in, they're convinced that he did this to himself.
* Calvin and Hobbes had one strip where Calvin asks for the last piece of dessert, and his mother tells him not to be greedy. He asks if this means he should be dishonest - and she reluctantly gives him the last piece.
* Calvin and Hobbes had this a few times, with even a metaphysical example of Calvin stating that his spirit was kicking the chess-board's spirit clear across the room.
* Calvin and Hobbes had this happen in a spoof of violent comic books.
* Calvin and Hobbes has a fantasy spot in which Calvin is a Mobile-Suit Human being operated by a crew of little Calvins. Calvin trips down the stairs, and imagines the panic that the tripping is causing among the crew. A later strip uses this as a metaphor for the phenomenon of dreaming, with the crew of Calvin's brain descending into the subconscious to gather random reels of tape and then playing them out of order.

* Calvin and Hobbes has a short arc where Calvin demands that he be called "Calvin the Bold", going on to say that "Calvin the Bold will begin referring to himself in the third person." Then his dad knighted him with the name Mud, and the whole charade disappeared very quickly.
* Calvin and Hobbes has a strip where the title characters hear a crashing noise on Christmas Eve and assume it's Santa. They listen to see if they can hear what he's saying. Cut to the living room:
* Calvin and Hobbes has been known to do things solely to irritate his parents. Then again, he is six.
* Calvin and Hobbes has Calvin come up with own personal rallying cry, and settles on "So what?!"
* Calvin and Hobbes has definite traits of this, though he's most often distracted by his own fantasies and daydreams rather than anything external.
* Calvin and Hobbes has several, some of them connecting into larger arcs, like the ones involving different uses of the same invention (all of which inventions tend to be the same cardboard box in different positions anyway).
* Calvin and Hobbes having a sign upon his back saying "Heave a rock at me" on it. Another strip features Calvin falsely telling Moe that he has a sign on his back saying "Someone run this kid over with a truck"
* Calvin and Hobbes, having been stranded on an island for 50 years, are forced to eat the tires they catch in
* Calvin and Hobbes. He complied by touching on social issues while not taking a heavy-handed approach to them; Calvin is very intelligent for his age and often raises questions about such things, but being a 6-year-old child, he doesn't have all the answers himself. The result was that Watterson created a strip that was thought-provoking without telling the reader what to think, and as such is beloved by audiences all across the ideological spectrum even today.
* Calvin and Hobbes He's also periodically disgusted by people who litter.
* Calvin and Hobbes; he thinks he's a real (anthropomorphic) tiger. (Albeit a real tiger that gets put through the washing machine whenever Calvin's mom deems it necessary.) The comic is deliberately ambiguous about Hobbes' true nature.
* Calvin and Hobbes him and he panics as he tries to explain what he thinks Miss Wormwood told her:
* Calvin and Hobbes. His father at one point was wondering about taking him to a shrink...
* Calvin and Hobbes: Hobbes also acts like this to Calvin; although there are times where Calvin can identify a little bit of quirkiness from Hobbes.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Hobbes, as is his imaginary tiger nature, would have pounced on Calvin from behind if Calvin didn't bend down at the last moment to pick up a dime.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Hobbes eats one of the sandwiches Calvin made for the trip but is disgusted to find it's honey and marshmallow. Calvin then says the other one has chocolate syrup.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Hobbes is first seen hanging from a snare set by Calvin, eating the tuna-fish sandwich Calvin had left as bait.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Hobbes says that he never wears trunks due to preferring to go "furry dipping".
* Calvin and Hobbes, Hobbes sings this when Calvin gets a valentine from Susie. Turns out the valentine was for Hobbes.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Hobbes the tiger fills this role, given how many strips and even story arcs either only include him in a minimal role or don't include him at all.
* Calvin and Hobbes. Hobbes would be having a dream about being in a vicious fight with a ferocious weasel... only to awaken and discover that he had really been ripping his pillow to shreds. Or, occasionally, Calvin.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Hobbs acts as Calvin's lawyer in his letter to Santa. Needless to say, the only defense Hobbes offers is to prove Calvin is insane.
* Calvin and Hobbes III: Double Trouble, a Mazda explodes when it crashes into a rock.

* Calvin and Hobbes III: Double Trouble, Calvin sets up a trap for Chill that exploits this.
* Calvin and Hobbes III: Double Trouble, Calvin simply says "Hobbes says hi."
* Calvin and Hobbes III: Double Trouble: eating a bunch of stale Kit Kat bars and going three miles on a treadmill.
* Calvin and Hobbes III: Double Trouble is Calvin and Hobbes annoying Chill (his kidnapper). Rupert and Earl exploit this in order to kill Calvin.
* Calvin and Hobbes III: Double Trouble uses "Calvin and Hobbes" by Pure Joy, fittingly enough.
* Calvin and Hobbes imagination. The aliens in Calvin's Spaceman Spiff fantasies are also drawn with much more detail than objects in the "real" world.
* Calvin and HobbesIn addition, Calvin is also very mischievous, more interested in causing trouble and messing with the teacher's head than actually learning. He regularly gives bizarre answers on his tests ("What is the significance of the Erie Canal?" "In the cosmic sense, probably nil,") which seems to be as much for his own amusement as an attempt to cheat the system.
* Calvin and Hobbes: In an early Sunday strip, Calvin shrinks down suddenly to the size of a bug from the perspective of other bugs. A fly tries to step on him until a frog eats it.
* Calvin and Hobbes. In another strip, being sent to the principal's office with Calvin makes her even more frightened, yelling at Calvin that he's "going to hear it from my parents if I don't get my Master's Degree!"
* Calvin and Hobbes in another strip where Calvin's dad says "Yeah, I know, it feels like you're going to be six forever."
* Calvin and Hobbes. In Calvin's fantasies, he's being used as the fall-guy for a room being ransacked; in real life, Calvin was at least partially responsible (and may have been entirely responsible depending on whether you think Hobbes is alive).
* Calvin and Hobbes in Calvin's life — contrasting it with his television watching habits — or to emphasize the expanse of his imagination.) Incidentally, most of the alien desert scenery isn't made up — they're basically Bill Watterson's sketches of beautiful desert scenery in southern Utah.
* Calvin and Hobbes in front of her for several hours every day, who wouldn't...
* Calvin and Hobbes in one of his "Tracer Bullet" film-noir fantasies where someone broke Mom's lamp.
* Calvin and Hobbes: In one of the Rosalyn storylines, the story starts with Calvin hiding his mom's shoes so his parents can't leave. When Calvin tries to send Rosalyn away, his dad asks what he's doing, causing Calvin to ask how his parents are going anywhere when Mom can't find her shoes. The only problem: Calvin's parents hadn't mentioned to him that her shoes were missing. Whoops.
* Calvin and Hobbes: In one strip, Calvin and Hobbes are playing poker. While deciding his next move, Calvin notices Hobbes' tail suddenly thrash about wildly. Calvin quickly folds, much to Hobbes' exasperation.
* Calvin and Hobbes: In one strip, Calvin gets bitten by a fish while out fishing.
* Calvin and Hobbes: In one strip, Calvin imagines Spaceman Spiff landing on a hostile alien planet "scorched by twin suns".
* Calvin and Hobbes: In one Sunday strip, Hobbes pulls the covers from Calvin while they're sleeping, and after a tug-of-war, Calvin gives up and goes to sleep with his parents, then does the same thing to his dad.
* Calvin and Hobbes in order to avoid having to face the wrath of his parents.
* Calvin and Hobbes in that he was a wise cracking rascal who often got the upper hand. For instance, he comes across another character who is sweating and asks her if anything is wrong. "I'm hot!" she says. "You don't look so hot to me," he retorts before running away with a smirk. Another strip has him trying the patience of his friends as he fussily arranges them for a group photograph before playfully announcing that his camera doesn't actually have any film in it. As he runs away with his angry friends in close pursuit, he laughs and says, "I like to live dangerously!" In the very earliest strips, he even had girls fighting over his affections. Some vestiges of the later Charlie Brown were there in the early days with the other children being somewhat crueler to him than they were to their other peers, but it wasn't until later that his tendency to always come in last became such an overpowering part of his characterization.

* Calvin and Hobbes into his own sketch of himself and is horrified by the anatomical deformities caused by his poor drawing technique.
* Calvin and Hobbes, is a bold interstellar explorer, who constantly gets captured by bizarre alien life forms (usually Calvin's parents or his teacher).
* Calvin and Hobbes is a gateway to many people's love of newspaper comics, and sometimes even to the ones that influenced it.
* Calvin and Hobbes is extremely averse to technological advancements, to the point that he doesn't get a cable box and isn't too fond of telephones. This stands in stark contrast to Calvin, who gets excited by technology and frequently imagines himself as a heroic space explorer.
* Calvin and Hobbes is implied to play lacrosse and routinely beats Calvin senseless whenever he hits her with a snowball/water balloon.
* Calvin and Hobbes is in bed. Rosalyn then makes him go downstairs a write a confession of his misdeeds for his parents to read when they return.
* Calvin and Hobbes is more notable to many people as an obscene window decal of a boy peeing (which is bootleg and which creator Bill Watterson never drew) than for any of its actual comic strips. Sad, isn’t it?
* Calvin and Hobbes is often in danger of this due to his poor grades, but two examples especially stand out.
* Calvin and Hobbes is only animate when alone with Calvin, as a general rule, yet seems to live quite an independent life from Calvin, chasing critters in the forest and reading comic books with interest. Hobbes is very often the more sensible, the more sane, and the more eloquent of the title duo, though he does have his moments of primal savagery (which he works off by attacking Calvin whenever he comes home from school, or having Calvin throw a slice of jellied toast for him to "catch").
* Calvin and Hobbes is sick, and Hobbes wonders if she's pregnant. Calvin later asks his parents, and his dad mentions that if she was, she'd look like "a hippopotamus with gland problems".
* Calvin and Hobbes, it happened once when Calvin's dad was paying Rosalyn's baby-sitting bonus and there was nothing left.
* Calvin and Hobbes. "It's a magical world, Hobbes ol' buddy. Let's go exploring!"
* Calvin and Hobbes: It's happened to Calvin a few times. On one such occasion (where he was punished for saying the food "smells like bat barf") he simply picked up the phone and ordered a pizza instead.
* Calvin and Hobbes It should also be noted that when he added the eggs, he didn't bother removing them from their shells.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Just about every one of Spaceman Spiff's adventures begins with him getting shot down and crash-landing his flying saucer.
* Calvin and Hobbes, just by using big words that Moe doesn't understand.
* Calvin and Hobbes likes to show several extra pairs of eyes jumping out of shocked characters' heads.
* Calvin and Hobbes, like when Calvin tells one to Hobbes, only for both to freak out when their father comes out to see them, as they believe him to be the monster mentioned in the story.
* Calvin and Hobbes looks at it kinda sideways as he pounces Calvin almost every time the boy tries to get into his house.
* Calvin and Hobbes, majored in political science and started his career as a political cartoonist.
* Calvin and Hobbes makes him feel like his head caught on fire and exploded.
* Calvin and Hobbes — his speech bubbles are written in a childish scrawl.
* Calvin and Hobbes merchandise. Today, creators generally own all rights to their strips, or have a contract that reverts all rights back to them after a certain number of years.
* Calvin and Hobbes named Tracer Bullet, going through stock film noir plots. In the 10th Anniversary retrospective book, author Bill Watterson admitted he hadn't seen any noir films or read any hardboiled crime fiction. He was basically just riffing on genre tropes he'd picked up from seeing other noir parodies.

* Calvin and Hobbes never had Calvin say "God put me on this earth to accomplish a certain number of things. Right now I am so far behind that I will never die." There's also a bootleg T-shirt of Calvin scowling and saying: "Every day, I'm forced to add another name to the list of people who piss me off." Obviously, this quote has never appeared in the strip.
* Calvin and Hobbes of all places. Calvin is making a traffic safety poster with the slogan "Be Careful or Be Roadkill!" We never see the finished result, but he states that he hopes he has enough red crayon, and later mentions that he splattered the whole thing with chunky spaghetti sauce so that not only would it look real, it would attract flies.
* Calvin and Hobbes, of all things. It's a bit blatant in the earlier strips, but got more subtle as time went by and Bill Watterson got a better sense of both characters' personalities and could let them bounce off each other.
* Calvin and Hobbes often gave their opinion on the state of the entertainment industry, such as movies, TV and music. However, the comic never once mentioned video games even though the comic was being published at the same time the medium was skyrocketing in popularity. Calvin, known for his love of new and controversial media, never once visited an arcade or asked his parents for games, not even when the family got a home computer late in the comic's run. Instead, his idea of wasting an afternoon was to go to his local drugstore and read comics all day.
* Calvin and Hobbes; once he said that aliens came and drained all the math from his brain, while another time aliens arrive and replace him with an amoral robot duplicate (his mom was less than impressed by the story).
* Calvin and Hobbes, once made a snowdog next to a fire hydrant, complete with lifted hind leg. Someone off-panel -– one of his parents, most likely –- wasn't thrilled.
* Calvin and Hobbes once sent in coupons for a propeller beanie. In his case, the biggest problem was that he had no patience waiting for it to arrive in the mail. Also, he is disappointed to find once it arrives that he can't use it to fly.
* Calvin and Hobbes once took the hall rug for a joyride. Hobbes worried about hurting the resale value. At one point they flew it by Calvin's dad's office window.
* Calvin and Hobbes once wrote a poem about such aliens visiting Earth and sucking up the ocean and atmosphere.
* Calvin and Hobbes on Christmas Eve after the gifts have been wrapped, Calvin's been put to bed, and Mom and Dad are now cuddled up on the love seat in front of a roaring fire in the fireplace. They then note that with the chaos of the holidays, it's nice to have a little quiet time to reflect, only for Calvin to come in with a fire extinguisher and shout "WHAT'S THIS?! SANTA FLAMBÉ??"
* Calvin and Hobbes one, and a massive transmogrifying fight ensues. In a later arc, Calvin is falling down to earth because a balloon that lifted him in the sky popped. He roots for some chewing gum in his pocket, in the hopes he can blow a big bubble and use it as a parachute, when he finds the gun, transforms himself into a light particle, and zips back home.
* Calvin and Hobbes. One instance: Calvin actually gets an A on a paper for once. The (large) center panel is a huge, mid-city celebration, with confetti, cheering spectators, a gigantic Calvin statue and Calvin himself riding in a limo with the key to the city. Unfortunately, back in reality, Ms. Wormwood just moves along to more classwork, much to a deflated Calvin's chagrin.
* Calvin and Hobbes: One of Calvin's many fantasies sees him imagine himself as a fierce, fire-breathing dragon that utterly destroys a knight foolish enough to challenge him in his lair.
* Calvin and Hobbes: One storyline starts when Calvin rips the back of his pants open on the playground, exposing his underwear.
* Calvin and Hobbes: One strip features Calvin's attempt to convince his dad to invoke this trope by using gasoline instead of lighter fluid.
* Calvin and Hobbes: One strip features "Spaceman Spiff" exploring an alien landscape that turns out to be alive. The last shot reveals that Calvin, in classic six-years-old fashion, is crawling over his father's sleeping body. This happens twice. On another occasion, Spiff is flying over some canyons that turn out to be part of giant footprints.

* Calvin and Hobbes: One strip shows Hobbes warning Calvin about a bee on his back and advising him to stand still and try not to imagine that it could quite possibly crawl into his pants. Naturally, the last panel shows Calvin leaping into the air with a yell of pain.
* Calvin and Hobbes on the ground but picks it up when Hobbes points it out to him.
* Calvin and Hobbes or praying. One of them combines the two by having Calvin saying, "Lord forgive me for peeing on everything."
* Calvin and Hobbes out of a cardboard box (the same cardboard box). He even manages to convert a regular water pistol to a Transmogrifier gun. The line between what's real and what's in Calvin's imagination is never really established, so whether these were actual working devices or a kid playing pretend is uncertain.
* Calvin and Hobbes parodied this, during a series of strips where Calvin floats away with his helium balloon, it pops and he figures it must be a dream. To try and wake up, he looks down toward the ground and "GASP!"s repeatedly. It doesn't work.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Plenty of planets that Spaceman Spiff visits. Hostile fauna, scorching suns, and alkaline lakes are common features.
* Calvin and Hobbes poster, he spends most of the strips taking his victory for granted, culminating in a daydream about the newspaper articles written and statues built in his honor — rudely interrupted by Susie informing him that she won.
* Calvin and Hobbes), preferring more old fashioned approaches, and enforcing it on the rest of the family. When Mom states that she wants to get an answering machine, he refuses; when Calvin expresses his desire to get an internet connection, Dad tells him that having a TV and a phone in the house is bad enough. It's also his explanation for why he refuses to get cable TV or a VCR. He also prefers the old, rickety, wooden escalators over the sleek metallic ones, despite recounting in great detail how they were less efficient as they "had more personality." He doesn't like the wide variety offered among products in the modern era either, having been kicked out of the supermarket after throwing a fit when trying to decide on peanut butter. This tendency drives Calvin crazy as he, unlike his father, embraces current technology.
* Calvin and Hobbes presumably have two names, even though we're not told them except for "Susie Derkins" (and no names at all in the case of Calvin's parents, who, again, are not presumably nameless in-universe), Hobbes is a tiger, so it's quite possible he's really just "Hobbes".
* Calvin and Hobbes: Pretty much every time Hobbes pounces on Calvin, Calvin makes an Oh Crap face just before impact. And it's always hilarious.
* Calvin and Hobbes quirks, can be a stickler for his own personal schedules and standards of behavior, and doesn't understand why people act the way they do.
* Calvin and Hobbes range from oogie to boogie, to Q to 12. Given that the whole point is to make it up as you go, this probably goes for the scores as well.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Rosalyn is able to get copious advances on her fees from Calvin's parents, since no other babysitter in town will take a job watching him.
* Calvin and Hobbes, running from 1985 to 1995 (with a year and a half of that time spent on sabbatical). Yet over two decades after Bill Watterson's retirement, it remains one of the most beloved and revered modern newspaper comics of all time.
* Calvin and Hobbes says that these were direct parodies of the half-dozen biking magazines Watterson himself subscribed to, and his thoughts on the matter were pretty clear, judging by Hobbes' reaction:
* Calvin and Hobbes. Several Spaceman Spiff strips have Spiff complaining that he just paid off / washed and waxed his spaceship as it goes down in flames, or regretting not taking a better insurance policy.
* Calvin and Hobbes sheets of paper and trail them along the floor just to hammer home the fact that he thinks that Dad's being a pretty horrible parent. Of course, he is only six, and his parents are doing what just about any good parent would do (try to get Calvin to eat healthier foods, go to bed at a reasonable hour, etc.)
* Calvin and Hobbes, showing everything from Calvin's Dad's ambivalence about American consumer culture to Calvin's Mom's frustrations with shitty customer service.

* Calvin and Hobbes situations that would land the strip in Unusual if they weren't ambiguous, such as the Calvin clones interacting with his parents and ambiguity of Hobbes' realness.
* Calvin and Hobbes slang, just to prove to his dad that it was possible. The father replied with some old hippie slang.
* Calvin and Hobbes sneak out of bed and go downstairs, shushing each other to keep quiet. Once they're out in the open, Calvin starts laughing loudly and yelling for the Snow Goons to die, waking his parents.
* Calvin and Hobbes sometimes attempts to run away by sitting in a box by the mailbox with a vague address written on it (for example, "To Australia"— or, since Calvin doesn't pay attention in school, "Os trl ya"). It...doesn't work.
* Calvin and Hobbes, sometimes just to get a reaction out of him (Such as saying that babies come from Sears, although Calvin himself actually came from Kmart).
* Calvin and Hobbes started in the 1985 and continued its run to 1995.
* Calvin and Hobbes, states in an Anniversary collection that there should be a statute of limitations on old yearbook photos for just this reason.
* Calvin and Hobbes story arc features Suzie getting into trouble for such things as passing notes and talking in class (all instigated by Calvin, of course).
* Calvin and Hobbes story arc in which the family returns from a trip to discover that their house was robbed, Dad says this must "really be scary for a little kid like Calvin." In the next panel, Calvin is grinning excitedly and saying to Hobbes, "Gosh, I can't wait to tell everyone at school how our house got robbed!"
* Calvin and Hobbes story had burglars break into Calvin's house and steal the TV and some jewelry while they were out of town. Calvin's parents were traumatized by the breach of security, but Calvin was (once he had ensured that Hobbes was safe) mostly just annoyed about the lack of TV.
* Calvin and Hobbes storyline, Calvin "kidnaps" Susie's Binky Betsy doll and holds it for ransom. Susie retaliates by "kidnapping" Hobbes. Calvin ends up giving Susie both her doll back and a quarter in exchange for Hobbes.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, back when Calvin was in Cub Scouts, Calvin notes to Hobbes of all the wildlife you can see out in the woods. He then points and says, "Look! A tiger!" causing Hobbes to jump in fear, before realizing Calvin was referring to him. He then shouts to Calvin, "Don't do that!"
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin attempts to head out for school with his shirt and pants swapped, so he's wearing his shirt as pants and has his pants on his arms. His mom is not amused, and makes him go change.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin blows a bubble that pops and covers his face in gum. He remarks that "I think I blew my face inside out!"
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin freaks Hobbes out by saying there's a giant caterpillar about to bite him before stomping on his tail. Hobbes is not amused.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin gets sick and stays home from school. He watches a daytime soap opera where this trope pops up:
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin has to dress as an onion and talk about how he has so many nutrients for a school play.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin hides some pasta up his shirt and claims to Susie Derkins that his intestines are coming out, then opens up his shirt to make the pasta spill out.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin is imagining himself in his Spaceman Spiff persona where he's abducted by a tribe of enemy aliens, who decided to put him through the "torture" of having his hair washed. Another has the aliens put Spiff through the wringer... by taking him to a mundane living room and talking about wholesome principles.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin is told that dinner will be tortellini, and complains at length about how disgusting it is. In the last panel, he's looking up the word in the dictionary.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin lampshades this trope when he is sent to the principal's office for shouting "BORING!" to his teacher's lecture.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin lies to his babysitter, Rosalyn, about feeling sick. Rosalyn sees through this and calls the automatic time service, pretending that she's speaking with Calvin's doctor. She then tells Calvin that Doc wants Calvin to take a teaspoon of castor oil and lie down all evening.

* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin makes a theatrical production out of choking down a small bite of his dinner, declaring afterwards that it nearly killed him. Cue sarcastic clapping and calls for an encore from both of his parents.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip Calvin says that the U.S. was founded roughly around 200 B.C. - "Before Calvin".
* Calvin and Hobbes strip. Calvin's dad claims that the increased productivity from better technology leads to people being expected to work faster and harder, so it isn't necessarily a good thing.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin's Dad does this by his intention to read Calvin a bedtime story about a severed hand that strangles people. Calvin faints around the point Calvin's dad sticks a hand through the neck hole of his own shirt and grabs his own throat, screaming. This proves to be the most effective way of getting Calvin quiet and into bed.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin tries blasting the fish out of a lake by throwing a large rock into the lake; he does so, but only succeeds in making a huge splash, getting him and Hobbes wet in the process. This annoys Hobbes, who tells Calvin that it was a good idea, they just didn't throw a large enough object into the lake...
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin tries to get his butt to light up like a firefly, and attributes his lack of success to "not even knowing what muscle to flex".
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, Calvin, upon learning that Rosalyn is coming to babysit again, lets out a large "AAAAAAUUUUUUGGGGGGHHHHHH!" that takes up the top half-inch of the entire strip, and continues throughout the next strip, prompting his mother to say "For heaven's sake, Calvin, take a breath before you pass out on the floor!"
* Calvin and Hobbes strip featured Calvin attempting to solve a crossword puzzle. He was not very good at it.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip had the duo find some freshly-poured cement and apparently sit in it offscreen, only to find out that it dried very quickly.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip has Calvin ask his dad to tell him a story with him and Hobbes in it. Dad proceeds to recap Calvin's day up until noon, and when Calvin complains that he doesn't continue on Dad explains that the story has no end, for Calvin and Hobbes will go out and write more of it the next day.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip has Calvin on the gallows waiting for the big swing. Cut back to reality, where it turns out his dad is trying to get him to wear a tie.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip has Calvin's parents come home to find a house full of booby traps, because Calvin watched a scary movie while they were out and then rigged up defenses against a monster attack.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip parodies this with a poem Calvin wrote about a flying saucer stealing the Earth's water and air.
* Calvin and Hobbes strips, all we see of Calvin's sled trips is Hobbes' reaction as he watches from the top of the hill. What makes these strips hilarious isn't necessarily the reaction shots, or the implied carnage, but that inevitably, for some reason, Hobbes always looks up into the sky at the end, just before Calvin shows up again. Implying that Calvin managed to catch some serious air.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip saw Calvin answering the phone at home and immediately start ordering a pizza. The flustered person on the other end couldn't even put together a coherent sentence before Calvin claimed the caller had the wrong number and hung up.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip sees Calvin take the box a bar of soap comes in and stand on it, his reasoning being that "when you harangue the multitudes, you stand on a soap box".
* Calvin and Hobbes strips. He throws water on his dad to test his dad's reflexes, drops an expensive compass out of a tree to study gravity, and considers wetting his pants while wearing winter clothes just so he can know how astronauts feel when they go in their suits.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip showed Calvin refusing to scratch an itch, only to be tortured by it until he finally gives in and scratches furiously. Euphoria! "Oh man, it was worth it!" Except... his skin now burns from all the scratching.

* Calvin and Hobbes strip used several of these at once, with Mom running errands:
* Calvin and Hobbes strip, when trying to assemble a plastic model Calvin got glue on his hands while Hobbes obliviously mused about the tri-lingual instructions.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip where Calvin proclaims he's going to change the meanings of words so that his parents won't be able to understand him. His father responds with slang terms that were presumably used by his own generation, showing those did the same thing.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip where Calvin's dad was watching "Eyewitness Action News", which aimed to tell its audience ''why YOU should be paralyzed with helpless fear!"
* Calvin and Hobbes strip where Calvin sneezes and then looks at the tissue and says "Uh-oh. I'm leaking brain lubricant." This is most likely just Calvin being an ignorant six-year-old, but cerebrospinal fluid — the stuff that insulates your brain — actually does sometimes leak out of your sinuses and come out when you sneeze.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip where Calvin's pediatrician diagnoses him with chicken pox, he seems to doubt the good doctor's sanity.
* Calvin and Hobbes strip where Calvin tries to take a bath in the washing machine was removed from newspapers and isn't included in the paperback collections, presumably because parents didn't want their kids imitating the act.
* Calvin and Hobbes: Subverted in a strip where the duo come upon an area of forest that's been felled for a new apartment complex. Calvin expresses outrage on behalf of the animals that have been displaced, and caustically wonders "how people would like it if animals demolished their homes and planted new trees". Cut to Hobbes sitting in a bulldozer, stating that unfortunately the construction workers didn't leave the keys.
* Calvin and Hobbes subverted it in that Dad was actually competent, though his diet does consist mostly of waffles.
* Calvin and Hobbes suffering through a terrible day, only for his mood to pick up when Hobbes pounces and very gleefully glomps him.
* Calvin and Hobbes Sunday strip featured a poem Calvin wrote about alien invaders who, rather than landing on Earth and conquering it, simply drained its oceans and atmosphere, while a crowd of people is seen shouting and gasping for breath.
* Calvin and Hobbes, Susie's fantasy sequences depict her and Calvin as an old married couple. Their arguments tend towards utter ridiculousness, since Calvin insists on acting like the immature six-year-old he really is.
* Calvin and Hobbes tender moments between Calvin and his parents, but they are few and far between. It would get so bad that Bill Watterson had to address it in a commentary, where he expressed regret that Calvin's parents were mostly seen when they were in a bad mood, but Watterson has also claimed that "they did better than [he] would've" with regards to Calvin. Which tells you a lot...
* Calvin and Hobbes that he intended to visit what happened the Noodle Incident someday, but eventually talked himself out of it. The reason he never explained was he decided that nothing he could come up with would ever be as funny as anything the readers would be able to come up with in their own minds.
* Calvin and Hobbes that human size is by no means a standard for alien life... and of course, a blimp-sized monster appears to menace Spiff.
* Calvin and Hobbes) that only has two permanent rules: you can't play the same way twice, and everyone has to wear a mask.
* Calvin and Hobbes that she signs so quick, the second she pummels him for suggesting it will take her eleven years to find a prom date.
* Calvin and Hobbes that there was something fishy about the "Calvinosaur" having a bottle for a skull, tin cans for a spine, and forks for arms.
* Calvin and Hobbes that they have a mutual crush on each other. Calvin, apparently, either doesn't know about it or doesn't know how to deal with it, so he does his best to gross out and anger Susie, who then always gets mad at him.
* Calvin and Hobbes the energy of your protests into your schoolwork..." The guy is a philosopher as well. He asks his father "how does men killing each other solve the world's problems?" to which his dad has no response. Also, when he sees a pile of litter in the forest he states that "the truest sign that intelligent life exists is that none of it has tried to contact us."

* Calvin and Hobbes. The images usually come from his deranged imagination and not from scary stuff he's actually seen.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Movie, Hobbes outright says the trope name (more or less) when Moe does this to Calvin.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series after a nearby explosion startles them. Hobbes teases the former about it at the end of the episode.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series Amusingly enough, he ends up saving the world several times over later on.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series"), and the narration even notes that Calvin's hair looks rather awkward in CG.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series and then disappears afterwards with little explanation.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series Andy being asked for his opinion on a television show he hasn't actually watched. His response is a parody of this trope:
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, as Father Brainstorm tells an embarrassing anecdote about his son:
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, as Nebular says that Earth's rotation around the Sun takes one year, or seven of their loomres.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, as Socrates warns Calvin of "all those dirty websites and whatnot."
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series briefly tries to use one of these against Calvin. Sheila also uses one of these in her debut appearance.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, Calvin and the MTM tend to provide exposition about whatever supernatural element that's currently going on.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, Calvin attempts this while trying to escape a ghost. It doesn't work.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series - Calvin attempts to make a Stupendous Man movie.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, Calvin bribes a kid with two bucks to call his mother to distract her from the kitchen.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series: Calvin is strapped down to the roof of the car with Hobbes.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series: Calvin screams "HOOOOOBES!" when he figures out that he's the culprit.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series - Calvin tries to make a camera into something like this.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series: "Chains" revolves around Calvin and Susie receiving these. Susie rips hers up, and proceeds to have bad luck for the rest of the episode.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series episode "Dad" shows Calvin and his father going fishing.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series episode "Lightning Man" when considering the titular antagonist's final plot.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series equivalents of Calvin and Hobbes only have red eyes because they got soap in them while showering.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, eventually leading up to the final words of the series:
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, forced to become one of these in order to sell... something.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series for the author when he was older, and when he was contacted for use of it in a fanfiction-based play, he decided to rewrite it entirely and release it to the public in Season 3's bonus chapter.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, frogs that laugh like Socrates, tiny Socrates clones...), and a general sense of weirdness pervades the area, much to the other characters' misfortune.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series gives this a bizarre and interesting twist:
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series gives us "hugeoppotamousness", used to describe the vastness of the world and/or the universe. Lampshaded:

* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series has an in-universe example in "The Case of the Rogue Water Balloon", wherein G.R.O.S.S. celebrates its second anniversary and its 500th water balloon attack.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series has a young Frank Brainstorm attempting to be a pioneer for this reason. It doesn't end well for him.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series has Socrates refer to Stupendous Man as "Stupey".
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series has this, the most notable being Sherman's (short-lived) time-traveling washing machine.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series has Thunderstorm, who is described as his brother Brainstorm with a black lab coat and jet-black hair.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series has traits of this. For one example, she commands her daughter Sheila to give her 20 and chastises her when she does so in only 27 seconds.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series - Hobbes misinterprets a hand signal to get evidence as a friendly wave.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series in revenge, forcing Calvin to take his place.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series". In the same episode, Calvin says this when Bane easily escapes his trap.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series is as ambiguous as can be - Calvin's mom put him in the trap, but she found him laying on their property, looking brand new.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, isn't found in either of the two in said season:
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series jingle at one point in "Eggs for Calvin!".
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series — he's not as in touch with his feline roots as Hobbes is, and ends up taken out by a single, well-timed pounce.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series mentions one of these, but it's never actually shown.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series mode of his) does he use this to his advantage.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series nature. This is eventually lampshaded in "Nocturnals".
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series of this nature—Andy is smitten with Maria, but she finds herself more interested in Calvin, who doesn't really care about love at all.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series prompts Hobbes to use the Time Pauser.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series rarely holds onto one mood for long. As Hobbes puts it:
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series refers to a beat by name at one point.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series; Socrates and Hobbes get in on it a little as well.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series: Socrates considers living with Calvin's dad this.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series: Socrates ends up crashing into the ceiling, but never actually breaks through it.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, Socrates leans on a stray block in a pyramid and triggers a secret door.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series story has Jack doing this to fool Thunderstorm and Shadow.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series - the author's CD player became the basis for the MTM.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series. The fear of Socrates' prank manages to restore it.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series. The latter's ensuing rant provides the page quote.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, thinking it was jelly toast with raisins.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series: This is Brainstorm's reason for allowing Jack to switch with Jaqueline in "A Day in Your Shoes".
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series), though the fic was uploaded sometime around 2005 or 2006.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series: "Time Terror" is this for Socrates, being in the Wild West.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series to dump the gooey school lunches on every kid's head.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series. To make it even more blatant, it's apparently their favorite.

* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series to shows they like (also indicated by their other fics):
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series uploaded Part 2 of Season 5 and revealed that it would update on a semi-regular basis and that the absence was caused by real life getting in the way.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series uses this as the MTM's reason for not telling Calvin his data extractor would bring the mummies to life in "Pharaoh Andrew".
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series when Hobbes tries to do something that'll start one:
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series when she realizes that the canoe (the only way off their camping island) has drifted away.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series when the former character is outside, trying to fix the satellite dish.
* Calvin and Hobbes: The Series, which has a story for the six main protagonists and for two pairs of antagonists.
* Calvin and Hobbes The snowman became a vicious monster and created an army of "snow goons" that kept trying to kill Calvin. After defeating them by spraying them with the hose to freeze them solid, Calvin stated that he had learned a lesson from this misadventure: "Snow goons are bad news", which he was glad was completely inapplicable.
* Calvin and Hobbes the story of a jet whose engines explode "for no reason" and falls out of the sky, a half-million-ton freight train jumping the tracks after hitting a penny on the rails at 80mph, and a shift in the Earth's tectonic plates all heading for the same spot - the house of Farmer Brown, who is unaware of a gas leak as he attempts to light his stove.
* Calvin and Hobbes (the time travel scenes in particular), and stepping off at the last moment before their toboggan careens down into the abyss.
* Calvin and Hobbes they have a kid like Calvin, moments of peace and restaurant dates are so much more enjoyable (even if Calvin's dad keeps turning his head because he thought he heard sirens).
* Calvin and Hobbes, this happens to Calvin when he tries to lie in a hammock and he imagines he is a fly trapped in a spider web.
* Calvin and Hobbes those sorts of movies are considered "grown-up" or "naughty". (He once asks Hobbes what "contains adult situations" means; Hobbes says that the movies show people paying bills, going to work, etc., and he's always wondered how movies like that make any money.)
* Calvin and Hobbes time, he threatened to flush his babysitter's homework down the toilet.
* Calvin and Hobbes to be" was rather a stretch. He also had a show and tell where he refused to show the thing or tell anything about it.
* Calvin and Hobbes to compromise my principles, because they don't have the slightest bearing on what happens to me anyway."
* Calvin and Hobbes to hit Susie right in the kisser. He only says this after the fact, though.
* Calvin and Hobbes transitions out of a Spaceman Spiff escaping-the-alien-starfighters sequence into... dodgeball day in gym class.
* Calvin and Hobbes transmogrifies himself into a tiger, he asks his dad if he notices anything different. His dad asks if it's a new haircut. Of course, Calvin's transmogrification is only in Calvin's mind, therefore his father couldn't see it even if he wanted to.
* Calvin and Hobbes trying to take out a fly. He's promptly hurled out the door by his mom.
* Calvin and Hobbes "very disturbing" — where's all the terrible stuff he's supposed to be seeing?
* Calvin and Hobbes visiting the doctor, his mother is convinced this is serious and races for the phone.
* Calvin and Hobbes was, because he felt he couldn't come up with anything that would live up to the readers' expectations.

* Calvin and Hobbes, Watterson said simply: "This is my dad. No exaggeration."
* Calvin and Hobbes were a blue-light special at K-Mart. Almost as good, and a lot cheaper!"
* Calvin and Hobbes, when Calvin asked his dad where babies come from and was told that hopeful parents just buy a kit from Sears and assemble them. Calvin, on the other hand, was a marked-down knock-off brand from K-Mart. This is yet another lie Calvin's dad says to torment his son.
* Calvin and Hobbes when Calvin attempts to invoke this trope - as an answer to a school test question.
* Calvin and Hobbes: When Calvin is assigned to give a report on a newspaper article, he chooses: "Space alien weds two-headed Elvis clone."
* Calvin and Hobbes, when Calvin is teased into playing baseball at school, he says "Suppose they make me a halfback. Can I tackle the shortstop or not?"
* Calvin and Hobbes when Calvin pledges undying worship of . . . the television.
* Calvin and Hobbes: When Calvin refuses to allow Hobbes to share his swimming pool, Hobbes retaliates by deliberately shedding fur in the water, prompting Calvin to get out in disgust. Hobbes' victory is short-lived when Calvin implies that he invoked the trope before getting out.
* Calvin and Hobbes when Calvin's Mom says that she hasn't seen Calvin for about fifteen minutes. We then see out the window while she's reading the newspaper, where the family car is rolling into the road and Calvin and Hobbes are chasing it. In the last panel, she says that it probably means he's getting in trouble.
* Calvin and Hobbes When he receives one that says, "You look like a baboon and smell like one too," he replies.
* Calvin and Hobbes: When said characters imitate each other, they do the "I'm so and so, DURR" variety. One time, Calvin's mom cut it short by calling him back to the house, leading to this exchange:
* Calvin and Hobbes, when Susie gets smacked in the head with a snowball, she immediately goes to Calvin. She deduces that it was his snowball given the bits of bark, mud, gravel and ice in his mittens.
* Calvin and Hobbes when Susie is hit with a flurry of snowballs. She goes after Calvin, who has a wheelbarrow with him, and who protests that Susie only has "circumstantial evidence." She clobbers him anyway, and while lying face down in the snow Calvin claims that "you can't get a fair trial in this town."
* Calvin and Hobbes, whereas Calvinosaurus is ridiculously enormous to the point of devouring the largest sauropods in a single bite.
* Calvin and Hobbes where Calvin decides to run away from home with Hobbes because he tried to push the car out of the garage and it accidentally rolled into a ditch. Walking through the woods, they think they hear something big crashing through the brush, and climb a tree out of fear that it's a bear:
* Calvin and Hobbes where Calvin manages to sneak up on Hobbes from behind when he comes home (only to get mauled by tiger anyway).
* Calvin and Hobbes where Calvin says to Moe, "You're so dumb you probably never thought about how a sparrow's smaller size and greater maneuverability is an advantage in fighting off big crows." Calvin is then punched by Moe.
* Calvin and Hobbes where the television set in Calvin's house is stolen, he tries watching the blank wall where it used to be and finds that it's not fun at all:
* Calvin and Hobbes, where they visit the museum and Calvin wants his mother to buy him things from the museum's gift shop.
* Calvin and Hobbes, which can turn anything into whatever he's thinking of. He gleefully proclaims "I'll just point it at myself and transmogrify! I'm safe!", at which point he turns into... well, a safe.
* Calvin and Hobbes" while Mom is grossed out by how Calvin spewed the hot sauce all across the table.
* Calvin and Hobbes) who carried around a stuffed tiger. Watterson was told that these two were the strongest characters, so he reworked the concept, got rejected by UFS and took it to Universal Press Syndicate instead.
* Calvin and Hobbes who his parents have hired has fallen victim to this trope.
* Calvin and Hobbes with the intention of having his clone do his chores for him.

He is surprised to find out that his clone, and the subsequent clones he makes, are each as much of a jerk as he is.
* Calvin and Hobbes would lose, given as it was a gory picture with the slogan "Be Careful or be Roadkill") lost to Susie, he claimed the contest was rigged.
* Calvin at Camp, Eddy creates one of these that makes the original show look ridiculously easy by comparison. Of course, Eddy blatantly cheats.
* Calvin at Camp," Eddy is caught on tape admitting that the game is completely rigged. Luckily for him, no one seems to notice or care.
* Calvin at Camp episode "The New Kid," Larry Koopa infiltrates the camp while wearing nothing but a Mickey Mouse hat.
* Calvin at Camp parody features some... troubling... flashbacks for the kids.
* Calvin at Camp. The readers are aware the entire time that it is a dream.
* Calvin attempts to do this in "The Case of the Rogue Water Balloon".
* Calvin attempts to name a radio that one of the other protagonists invented the "iRadio" in
* Calvin Ball... but that's really no accident. Watterson established clearly that you make up the rules of Calvin Ball as you go.
* Calvinball. Gameplay is never shown in any of the mentions of the sport, and the rules include odd objects like an ion mallet.
* Calvinball, they'll be making a mockery of any actual sport they try, usually baseball but also football, croquet and golf. As the boy himself puts it: "Our favourite games are ones we don't understand!" And sometimes, it's deliberate.
* Calvin calls Dad at work. Dad says he's very busy and tells Calvin to hang up unless he's calling about something really important. Calvin obediently hangs up, without telling Dad that there's a
* Calvin calls his dad at work, apparently to make small talk. The final panel reveals the real reason he's calling: He somehow managed to flood the house, and the waterline is high enough to reach the top of the ladder that Calvin is currently on (
* Calvin causes the family car to roll out the driveway and fall down a ditch across the street. He and Hobbes hide in a tree but is confused to find his parents are more concerned about whether he was safe than about the car (which, incidentally, wasn't damaged).
* Calvin Coolidge and a man of few words. A female reporter told Silent Cal that she was bet by her editor that she couldn't get at least three words out of him. His response?
* Calvin Coolidge that a woman at a party came up to him and said, "Mr. President, I just bet my friend that I could get you to say more than two words." Coolidge looked at her and said, "You lose."
* Calvin creates a bunch of clones of himself. Predictably, they grow disgruntled at his self-serving leadership and more or less rebel until he is able to transmogrify them into worms (which they're actually not that unhappy about). But they aren't doing anything unnatural — they act
* Calvin decides to cheat on a math test by asking Susie for answers, but when she tells him 12 + 7 is "a billion," even the math-impaired Calvin senses something is up: "
* Calvin definition he received ("That's what lazy, slipshod, careless, cut-corner workers call anyone who cares enough to do something right") led Calvin to wonder aloud, "Am I in the presence of their king? Should I kneel?" Note that Calvin's dad is a patent attorney.
* Calvin deliberately tries to spread this in one strip, singing "Silver Bells" at the top of his lungs in mid-September. His parents respond by forcing him outside. Calvin shoots back, "Not thinking about it won't make it go away!"
* Calvin didn't want to clean his room, so he made an identical clone of himself and ordered the clone to clean his room. Naturally, the clone didn't want to clean Calvin's room either, so he ran off to cause mischief, knowing the original Calvin would be blamed. Later in the story, Calvin's clone gets a hold of the duplicator and starts cloning himself, with
* Calvin does a rant about how violence on television doesn't have any effect on the watcher and concludes with "I'd like to shoot the idiots that think this stuff affects me."

* Calvin does it himself in another strip. After hurting Susie's feelings by calling her names, he makes a hesitant attempt at apology. Irritated and not understanding his stammering, Susie snaps at him and stalks off. Calvin shouts "I'm trying to apologize, you dumb noodleloaf!" Realizing he just called her a name
* Calvin does this at least once. Justified subversion here: he knew the water wasn't deep and just wanted Mom to pay attention to him (she was reading).
* Calvin even has his own name for a sweet tooth; in one strip, Mom serves a vegetarian meal for dinner, and Calvin protests that he's not a vegetarian, he's a "dessertarian."
* Calvin frequently makes up outlandish excuses when caught in the act, such as blaming a mess he made on "a Venusian that materialized in the kitchen". One of the former image caption's quotes comes from after he threw a snowball at Susie.
* Calvin frequently refuses to take a bath, saying that there are dangerous creatures in there. Is he legitimately afraid or is it just that he
* Calvin gets Bob to wave his arms around so he can escape his cell again.
* Calvin gets literal Anime Hair in one comic when he uses Crisco to style his hair into two large spikes as a
* Calvin Harris' "Acceptable in the '80s", which seems to show scientists extracting hair products from the bodies of animals.
* Calvin Harris). Almost every other song that doesn't feature a guest vocalist is an instrumental.
* Calvin Harris, as his signature. Other than "Came", the hits least associated with him are probably his Ellie Goulding collaborations ("I Need Your Love" and "Outside"). Chances are, the only way he can possibly challenge "Summer"'s spot as his signature will be to sing again or hire a vocalist not well-known enough to take the spotlight away from him.
* Calvin Harris' hits, aside from the ones he sings on his own or those with an obscure vocalist (i.e. John Newman on "Blame"), also qualify.
* Calvin Harris, though the track-listing on the back cover makes sure to credit the song to "Calvin Harris featuring Ellie Goulding". The same is true with the next Harris/Goulding collaboration "Outside."
* Calvin has occasionally imagined his parents really being aliens disguised this way, such as a nightmare where they reveal themselves as "bug-eyed aliens from Neptune" and attempt to cook Calvin, and a poem Calvin comes up with about his parents...
* Calvin has tried to fix the bathroom faucet on more than one occasion. It ended up flooding the house.
* Calvin him or genuinely has no idea how wild tigers live, and B) that tigers are an endangered species.
* Calvin himself. His lies tend to outrageous even when you consider that he's a little kid. Trying to blame Hobbes every time he does something bad is a common one, but there are lots of others. Really, the only thing sillier than his lies is that he actually expects anyone to believe them. (As his mother said once when he tried to tell her that aliens had landed outside and were demanding to speak to her as a ploy to get her to leave the cookie jar unguarded, "just how dumb do you think I am?")
* Calvin himself took advantage of this at one point: after creating several duplicates of himself (whom he couldn't stand), he got rid of them by getting them to stand under the duplicator box, crossing out the label "Duplicator," and writing in the new label "Transmogrifier" so he could change them into worms.
* Calvin: "I find my life is a lot easier the lower I keep everyone's expectations."
* Calvin invents devices that run on nonsensoleum, especially a cardboard box capable of traveling through time, transforming Calvin into an animal, or duplicating him. These are all the same box, the only changes being what direction the box's opening is facing and what's scribbled on its side
* Calvin is a big fan of Japanese monster movies. He imagines himself as Godzilla on two occasions: stomping a sandbox version of Tokyo, and rising from the watery depths of his bathtub to blast Megalon (his mom).

* Calvin is apparently a user of this trope, as he once told Susie that it's far easier to keep people's expectations low, and wow them every now and again, than to keep them high and wind up disappointing at some point.
* Calvin is caught by his visiting uncle while going through his luggage and responds to the incredulous resultant question with "[I'm] going through your luggage. What's it look like?"
* Calvin is meant to be seen as paranoid for fearing his babysitter, Rosalyn. Whenever he tries to tell his parents how "evil" Rosalyn is, they defend her and imply that Calvin has so many problems with her because he brings them on himself with his bad behavior. While Rosalyn isn't actively evil, she's still a bad babysitter. She repeatedly charges Calvin's parents more money in exchange for doing practically nothing, since instead of actually watching Calvin, she works on her homework or calls her boyfriend Charlie while gossiping about Calvin and his parents and has even
* Calvin is once turned into an owl by the Transmogrifier Gun, but accepts it when he realizes that he won't have to go to school. He is actually disappointed when the transmogrification wears off.
* Calvin is somehow falling from the sky and finds his transmogrifier gun. He exclaims "I'm safe", then is promptly
* Calvin likes to use this to insult the school bully in a way he knows Moe won't understand.
* Calvin occasionally poses as a reporter of sensationalistic stories based on shameless fabrications or ludicrous exaggerations. He introduces one show-and-tell presentation: "UFOs! Are they real?? Have they landed in our towns and neighborhoods?" In another strip, he wants to create a newspaper to report on household events such as his mom preparing a fish dinner: "KNIFE WIELDING MOTHER HACKS ICHTHYOID!"
* Calvin often acts as though his bike is a monster, but is that because he's actually afraid of it or is he playing pretend?
* Calvin once claimed that his mother put a cow pie in his lunch bag, though it's implied that he was lying.
* Calvin once invented a game called "Gross Out" in which players score one point by coming up with the grossest thing they can imagine; nobody has ever played a full, 50-point game with him.
* Calvin once tried to convince his mom to buy him a pair of shades that bore a remarkable similarity to Kamina's
* Calvin once uses it to turn himself into a tiger; he ends up looking like a shorter Hobbes.
* Calvin once went on an epic flight of fancy. When his mother comes in to see if he's doing his homework, he cheerfully replies: "I've
* Calvin on his sled (or wagon). He seems to enjoy hitting "every obstacle" on the hill, as Hobbes put it. He also prefers to have philosophical discussions during the ride, and therefore isn't paying attention to where he is going in the first place. These strips usually end with Calvin and Hobbes either crashing into something or going off a cliff.
* Calvin (or at least that's how he understands her saying they're imaginary), but just because he tried to stop believing in them didn't mean they stopped believing in him. Said imaginary friend, Hobbes, fights with Calvin a fair amount, including pouncing on him every day when he gets home from school.
* Calvin originally used the Crisco to slick his hair into a curlicue. His mother freaked out and combed it down so it looked neat. While waiting for the bus, Calvin lamented to Hobbes how it looked, so Hobbes put the spikes in his hair.
* Calvinosaurus is perceived as a dubious genus, meaning it may not have existed at all.
* Calvin pops a paper bag while his dad is reading a newspaper. Having startled his dad, Calvin says "Pay attention to me."
* Calvin regularly utilized a large cardboard box turned different ways as a transmogrifier (opening on the bottom), time machine (opening on the top) and duplicator (opening on the side).

* Calvin saying "either mom's cooking dinner or someone got sick in the furnace duct."
* Calvin says this after shooting Hobbes in the nose trying to get him down from his trap in the first episode of
* Calvin's bed are rarely seen (apparently because they shrivel up and die upon exposure to light). Sometimes, though, you'll see parts of their body in the dark, which don't look terribly cuddly.
* Calvin's cardboard box has to be one of the coolest devices ever: it's anything the plot requires it to be, including a time machine, but still looks like an ordinary cardboard box to most people.
* Calvin Scott and Aurora Borealis. He's a normal 6-foot-tall citizen, while she is a power psychic who stands nearly six inches taller than him. Their
* Calvin's dad does this sometimes when Calvin asks him questions, but he's doing it on purpose. (Read:
* Calvin's dad especially rails against the consumerism of mass media, a viewpoint that mirror's Watterson's own.

* Calvin's daydreams has him doodle a tank on his homework and blow up his school. His rampage ends when Miss Wormwood shows up, takes away his paper and gives him detention (in the doodle she's a giant monster that is strong enough to resist the tank's cannon fire).
* Calvin's disdain for school is (in most cases) meant to show him as being
* Calvin's doctor is considered by many to be a very funny and sarcastic character (like when he tells Calvin his ear light is a cattle prod and that "it hurts a little less than a branding iron"). Sadly, he disappeared after the chicken pox storyline, and never became as major as Rosalyn or Miss Wormwood.
* Calvin selects one of these stories for an assignment where he's supposed to read and explain a newspaper article in class.
* Calvin's eloquent poem about a spider's web which abruptly ends in "Eew, look at that spider suck out that bug's juices!"
* Calvin's fantasy sequences are often drawn in a very realistic and detailed style, unlike the rest of the comic strip. This led, quite intentionally, to the effect of fantasy looking more realistic than reality.
* Calvin's father told him that when HE was a child, there was no color, just black and white. Then things started to acquire color, even paintings and photo. What about black and white photos. His father explained they had acquired color - but they were now color photos of black and white things.
* Calvin's favorite bedtime story, "Hamster Huey and the Gooey Kablooie". As Bill Watterson explains in the comic's 10th-anniversary book, "Hamster Huey and the Gooey Kablooie (like the
* Calvin's imagination, when Susie is a hostile alien out of a mothership, said mothership will be impersonated by... his mother.
* Calvin's mom after he runs inside naked and screaming at a hailstorm; "I'll bet there's an explanation for this, and I'll bet I don't want to hear it."
* Calvin's mom tickles Calvin in hopes of tiring him out into falling asleep,
* Calvin's mother once told him not to take Hobbes into a lake the family was camping by because "tigers don't swim very well".
* Calvin's parents are never referred to by name, only as "Mom" and "Dad" by the titular characters. Calvin doesn't even have a surname, so they can't be Mr/Mrs either. As a result, the character of Uncle Max was short-lived because Bill Watterson realized it wouldn't make much sense for him to never refer to Calvin's parents by name (during his appearance, he referred to Calvin's dad as "bro").
* Calvin spends a lot of time asking his parents for cookies and trying to steal cookies when they say no.
* Calvin then commented that he learns things staying home that he would

* Calvinverse see him as a stuffed animal, even Calvin. Both times, he comes back.
* Calvin was a demonstratively very intelligent, uber-active (to a fault) little kid whose imagination knew absolutely no bounds. His favorite food was a breakfast cereal named "
* Calvin writes for a homework assignment that lords and vassals lived in a "futile" system, only for Hobbes to point out that it's spelled "feudal". This pun doesn't work in British English where "futile" is pronounced as "few-tile".
* Calypso has invisible servants given to her by Hera that tend to her on her island.
* Calypso has lived on a desert island for over 3,000 years without really getting older. This was justified by the fact that she was not a human but a Titan. Towards the end of the plot of

* Camaraderie is Supernatural review that parody is one of his favorite genres of comedy.
* Camaraderie There are villains that genuinely value each other as comrades, getting along with each other, being willing to listen to the other if they make suggestions, show tremendous trust in each other, and even help each other in times of need. Villains may also end up being good friends with the heroes, though whether or not it causes them to change sides depends on the situation, making it painful to fight them as a result.
* Camarilla-affiliated vampires tend to refer to low-level Sabbat goons as "shovelheads". The Sabbat likes to make shock troops by hitting random people in the head (stereotypically with a shovel), turning them and burying them alive. This process inevitably breaks the psyche of the person in question, leaving them as an utterly dehumanized, completely expendable, super-powered goon, who can be pointed in the right direction and trusted to cause havoc. The slur manages to insinuate that the subject is unworthy, expendable, stupid, clueless and careless all at once.

* Camber of Culdi found the heir of the previous ruling family, engineered his restoration to the throne (and the toppling of the evil Deryni ruler), and for what? Sure, he gets sainthood but quickly loses it. He and many members of his family are outlawed and die untimely deaths, his estates are forfeited, even his family's tombs are destroyed.
* Camber of Culdi, when the hero's keep is attacked by the king's men, there is a moment when the daughter hears grown men crying out for mercy and calling for their mothers. She thinks on the fact that many of those same men were earlier being brave and swearing to fight to the end.
* Cambodia, dictator Pol Pot established a new calendar with "Year Zero" at 1975, the year he seized power. "Year Zero" became a buzzword for a total reset of Cambodian society — one which led to the deaths of millions of people who opposed him.
* Cambodian genocide carried out by the Khmer Rougue from 1975-1979, killed roughly 2 million out of a population of 8 million, reducing the country's population by a quarter, and saw the entire populations of urban centers sent out into the countryside to work on collective farms, reducing once thriving cities into hollowed out ghost towns.
* Cambodia, they expelled the entire population of the capital city to the countryside, specifying foreigners and Cambodian women married to foreigners wouldn't be submitted to this massive deportation (Cambodian men married to foreigner women would, though). At this time, the only foreigners still in the city were members of the French diplomatic staff, and several of them married Cambodian female friends (or just friends' friends), solely to provide them French passports and make sure they could leave the country unharmed.
* Cambrian Explosion is probably the best-known, and most singularitarian of events. Organisms go from simple colonies of a few dozen to massive groupings of cells with specialized functions. It's still not fully understood.

* Cambridge Spies, though in real life they were not such a close group emotionally.
* Camdrome: Camdrome first appeared as a blood-covered computer at PAX, making a bold statement about the computer's...personality.
* Camdrome: Camdrome itself is a living computer watching people through their webcams, having shown footage of people being murdered. He won't hurt people directly, but will watch them suffer. He always likes to let people know he can see them.
* Camdrome: Most of the game took place on Twitter, featuring heavy use of player interaction with Camdrome's personal account.
* Camdrome seems to have a thing for the number "11"- Camdrome had selected 11 executioners to help him at the start of the game. There were 11 people who received an image from Camdrome in the mail, with 11 specific pictures needed to form a full poster image. The number pops up multiple times in the source code for Camdrome's own website signifying important information.

* Caméra Café features playing around with the coffee machine and a coffee goblet sporting the series' title. The goblet can fill normally, it can topple, it can fall after the coffee, or something absurd can happen, like the * Caméra Café, Luca Bitta and Paolo Nervi are played by Luca Bizzarri and Paolo Kessisoglu.

* Caméra Café: Paolo Bitta, one of the two main characters of the Italian version, is illiterate by choice (and proud of it), obnoxiously ignorant about almost everything, can be an arrogant bully towards some of his co-workers, and cheats on his wife with hookers.

* Camel-llamas (camas). They have traits of both, looking like a humpless camel with a llama's head.
* Camel News Caravan. Nowadays sponsorship of national news programs are avoided to prevent conflicts-of-interest.
* Camelot 3000 a nuclear war that blasted man back to the medieval period.
* Camelot 3000, dissidents and criminals are involuntarily converted to Neo-Men by oppressive governments: oversized, voiceless, unquestioning brutes used to suppress riots and political unrest. Sir Percival's reincarnation undergoes this transformation within moments of having his past life's recollections restored, but retains his own mind due to the memory-restoration magic's effects.
* Camelot 3000 from the time this comic was written - the Soviet Union and South Africa's Apartheid are still in effect, despite both being dismantled by modern times. It also has Sir Tristan's angsting about being reincarnated as a woman, even though her reborn lover Isolde seems quite content to contemplate a lesbian relationship, and sex reassignment surgery is bound to be as routine as a tummy-tuck by that era if Tristan is really not happy.
* Camelot 3000 has an interesting version. The newly resurrected knights are not dealing well with each other, so Kai, who was always the least liked of the knights, chooses to remain in the role by acting like an asshole towards the other knights. Thus, he gives the other knights someone common to look down upon and get along with each other.
* Camelot 3000 is a hot woman clad in a semi-transparent gown and a porcelain mask. What's behind that mask isn't very pretty.
* Camelot 3000 is dead and the surviving knights set about rebuilding the civilization of Earth. Meanwhile, on some distant planet, a small alien creature stumbles across Arthur's sword Excalibur (which it then wields against a group of aliens who had been pursuing it) as we are told "The road goes ever on..."
* Camelot 3000, King Arthur has Sir Tristan, who'd been reincarnated as female, pull this stunt on some enemy guards. As Arthur knew Tristan hated being stuck in a woman's body, this was as much a loyalty-test for Tristan as a means of neutralizing the guards.
* Camelot 3000 on the point of Excalibur. Earlier in the story, Arthur notes that Excalibur's powers are not confined to destruction, and shoving the sword into fuel cells is enough to bring them to full power.
* Camelot 3000 orders the suspects to hold Excalibur and attest to their innocence, claiming his sword will magically strike down anyone who lies while holding it. The guilty party panics and confesses, after which Arthur admits that Excalibur has no such power.
* Camelot 3000.) Sir Tristan, quite a womanizer in his former life, is reincarnated as a young woman. The appearance of Isolde (also reincarnated, but still female) complicates the matter further, although they end up in a surprisingly sweet lesbian relationship.
* Camelot 3000, Sir Tristan's reincarnation as a woman initially seems purely random, until it's revealed that he'd raped at least one woman in his previous life. His new female form is therefore both a deterrent and a karmic lesson, especially when he/she is stalked by his/her reincarnation's former fiancee, who won't take no for an answer.
* Camelot 3000. The "role" of Sir Tristan is recast (via reincarnation) for a female... but Lady Tristan remembers her life as a man.
* Camelot 3000 Tristan, it causes her considerable distress and confusion. But Isolde (reincarnated as a woman, as in her first life) has no confusion at all.

She's in love with Tristan, regardless of Tristan's sex.
* Camelot 3000, when King Arthur has each of those suspected of betraying Merlin hold Excalibur while swearing their innocence, saying that the sword can cleave truth from falsehood. The prospect of having to do this makes the culprit break down and confess, after which Arthur admits that he'd made up the claim that his sword can do any such thing.
* Camelot 3000 whom Sir Tristan has been reborn as. Of course, the now awoken Tristan fully identifies as a man and draws a great deal of angst from it.
* Camelot 3000 wielded energy swords used for slashing, not thrusting, but still called them "raypiers".
* Camelot, a nervous King Arthur and Queen-to-be Guinevere run into each other before the wedding. Guinevere, not knowing it's Arthur, complains a bit about having to marry a total stranger and is assured that the king isn't really all that bad.
* Camelot. As the Broadway musical hasn't been run regularly since the Kennedy administration (hence why "Camelot" is a common name for that period), the Camelot sequence comes off as pretty random to modern viewers, as does the idea of naming the musical after a comparatively innocuous line from said sequence.
* Camelot, both Arthur and Guinevere run away from their arranged marriage, then meet in the woods and fall in love without knowing one another's identities.
* Camelot establishes Lancelot's puissance and hubris. (Notice the literal translation of the title).
* Camelot; for that matter, the Arthurian mythos and all works based on its whole.
* Camelot) Guinevere (Arthur's wife) and Lancelot (Arthur's best knight) are distressed to find themselves in love with each other. Since they both love Arthur, they are tormented by their feelings of desire and guilt.
* Camelot has Arthur serenading Guenevere with a real-estate pitch, basically, to persuade her to marry him.
* Camelot is doomed by King Arthur's idealism and belief in people which blind him to Guinevere's infidelity and Mordred's scheming.
* Camelot, Lancelot first confesses his love for Guinevere to his squire, Dap.
* Camelot: Morgan begins increasingly painting a good image of herself in people's minds to help gain supporters that will turn against Arthur (who she's made look bad by comparison).
* Camelot, Morgan discovers Harwel spying on her in the bath and asks "What were you doing with that hand before you used it to sully my dress?".
* Camelot sourcebook has three settings: Traditional, Cinematic or Historical. Historical is obviously this, a no-mana setting where a 5th century Roman general named Artorius has become Riothamus of post-Roman Britain by marrying Vortigern's daughter, and defends the country against the Saxons.
* Camelot, the idea that evil people will never be satisfied, even in victory, is spelled out to Mordred by Arthur.
* Camelot, "Then You May Take Me to the Fair" and "Fie on Goodness" were cut, but it was too late to take the songs off the original cast album (and bits of the former tune were still used for changes leading up to the jousting scene). They have often been reinstated.
* Camelot. The romance of Merlin and Arthur also features, with Stargirl as Merlin and so transcending gender.
* Camelot. This could also explain Sir Ulfius, Arthur's black knight. So it's remotely plausible, although the writers probably didn't know that. There was even a literal black knight in earlier versions from the 1300s, Sir Morien.
* Camelot, this is the fork Arthur finds himself caught on when Guinevere is caught with Lancelot. As Mordred says: "Let her die, your life is over; let her live, your life's a fraud. Which will it be — kill the queen or kill the law?"
* Camelot to write and preserve the memory of when things were good, to inspire the future.
* CAMELOT Trigger customized as in many other mecha-based games, the rules also distinguish between equipment that endows the armour with skills of its own and equipment that instead gives it special "tricks" and situational boosts. A suit of armour with good relevant skills will perform well in the hands of even a less gifted user because it can substitute its own skills for theirs if need be (at least until the relevant system goes offline), but an actual "ace" is probably better off with more dedicated special purpose gear and less redundant automatic assistance...which then of course means that if a novice ever ends up having to pilot the same suit, they're that much more likely to be hopelessly lost.

* CAMELOT Trigger MerGN, leading the "Emergent" robot hordes against John Arthur's mech-pilot Knights.
* Camelot: Ulfius on Arthur's side and Vivian on Margan's. Both are the sole Black people among the cast, who are otherwise White.
* Camelot, when Lancelot and Guinevere are having their quiet duet ("I Loved You Once In Silence"), Mordred sneaks up on them with his knights and interrupts their embrace before the end of the song.
* Camelot with Richard Harris does this amazingly well. The movie starts out as a light-hearted comedy, then very gradually gets darker leading to an inevitable, heart-wrenching conclusion. The high point is Burton/Arthur's reprisal of the lighthearted title song from the beginning, now sung dramatically, and his agony at the line, "For one brief shining moment!"
* Camelot with "What Do the Simple Folk Do?", which features a lord and lady wondering about the peasantry. At the end, they decide that the peasants wonder what the nobles do.
* Camel racing remains a popular sport in much of Asia and North Africa—which has led to the trope coming full circle with a
* Camels, for both one-humped dromedaries and two-humped Bactrian species. Llamas have been ridden as well, although their foul temper makes them impractical as mounts.
* Camel spiders and wind scorpions are neither spiders nor scorpions. (They're
* Camel Spiders freely indulges in the stock portrayal of the titular creatures, which are depicted as insanely aggressive, swarming terrors with paralyzing bites that freely attack humans after being introduced to the American Southwest (where, it should be noted, solifugids are native anyway).
* Camel Spider. Supposedly, these creatures grow up to one foot in length, can run up to twenty-five miles an hour, make a screaming noise when they run, can jump two feet in the air, have a venom powerful enough to melt flesh, and attack and kill camels to lay their eggs in their stomachs. This has come with many claims about them attacking humans. In reality, Camel Spiders are not spiders at all but are part of a separate group of arachnids called Solifugae. They never grow beyond six inches in length, have a top speed of ten miles an hour, can't jump, and don't even produce venom. The idea that they attack camels and humans comes from their name; "Solifugae" means "flee from the sun", which is exactly what they're doing. Dead camels and humans provide shadows for them to use to get out of bright desert sunlight. And aside from all that, they're not even exclusive to the Middle East, also being native to the American Southwest.
* cameo appearance on them that compels them to slay the newly risen Valsharess (queen or empress) of the drow, playing no further role in the story.
* cameo appearance. She even has a special '94 version, which mimicks Kyo's moves from KOF 94 and 95.
* Cameo had a massive crossover hit in 1986 with "Word Up!", which hit #6. While their direct follow-up "Candy" did manage to hit #21, it's virtually unknown to those outside their audience.
* Cameo-Parkway Records were especially known for their "dance craze" records. Interestingly, the staff songwriters who came up with these actually researched which dances were getting popular and wrote their songs about those instead of inventing them wholesale. A few notable examples of their input:
* Cameo's death and the unveiling of her status as a prosecutor. She's been involved in every arc finale as a key player — she is the only non-State character to have this status.
* Cameos during the Millennium attacks that never came to fruition include:
* cameos, or both (one strip even had Rat beat him up with a baseball bat after Pastis had made a blatant plug of one of his strip compilations).

* Cameo, to name a few examples, just to watch them perform actions normally not expected of them.
* came out in 1969 and was meant to parody how obsessed with sex the literary world had become. While there was a basic plot — a woman learns of her husband's affair and has many of her own as revenge — each chapter is a vignette by a different author and often with different tones and styles. It was published under the pseudonym "Penelope Ashe" and became a bestseller before the truth was revealed.
* came out inside a mountain). Later that tactic is used to communicate and resupply the resistance movement on New Caprica.
* cameo which featured the Solomons charging stuff to his hotel account until he was dragged away by security screaming "You can't do this to me! I'm GEORGE TAKEI, DAMN IT!" This episode is also responsible for creating his well known catch phrase: "Oh My!"
* Camera Abuse: After Sharko propels Zig far away at sea, he smacks flat against the TV screen, and then slides down.
* Camera Abuse: Something affects the camera so that the screen will appear wonky.
* Camera Chase - Approaching the camera or having the camera follow the person as they walk
* Camera Obscurer: A character takes a picture, only to later discover that the camera lens was covered.
* Camera Obscurer: Digital cameras and smartphones nowadays show the view directly from the only lens, and the ability to review the image immediately after it's taken makes it easy to correct mistakes like accidentally covering the lens.
* Camera Screw: The camera in a 3D game can be more of a hindrance than a help.
* Cameras near traffic lights and roads. They tend to take photos of you going even 3 miles above the speed limit or take photos of you running the red light. The photos go to the department and you end up getting a ticket mailed to you.
* Camera Sniper: A camera with a scope that looks like the one on a sniper rifle.
* Camera Sniper - Subject of an image appears as if in the sights of a sniper rifle
* Camera Three, arts anthology series (24 years, 1956-79 on CBS and 1979-80 on PBS)
* Cameron also stated that Skynet sent the T-1000 after realizing that the original Terminator failed in 1984. This contradicts several time travel rules established throughout the franchise, including raising the question of how Skynet would know that a Terminator failed.
* Cameron and Chase's divorce comes off a bit like this, as though the issue that initially caused their separation was fairly major, in their farewell episode it made it seem as if it was really again because of Cameron's inability to commit, an issue which had already been dealt with earlier.
* Cameron and his Dinosaurs character gains this, which furing the book' climactic battle, is revealed to become able to transform into a flying machine that can fire blasts.
* Cameron. Apparently, because people had trouble telling her and Naomi apart, she first dyed the ends light brown and then went fully blonde. She added purple into the hair shortly before her release.
* Cameron because he couldn't kiss a girl while acting because it felt like he was cheating on his girlfriend. It sounded like he had no idea what "acting" means.
* Cameron by snapping his headband back if he's in a pinch during a Pokemon battle. It doesn't always work though.
* Cameron Coulter and Neal Hanlon, from season 4's "Rampage", best friends who were frequently mocked and bullied by their peers, the two were also unstable and psychotic (Cameron writing "I am The Destroyer, The Apocalypse, The Widowmaker. I am a rifle, I am a gun. Look down the barrel of my hate - we're going to have some fun" in his journal, and Neal drawing a lot of disturbing art). Following months of planning and boasting (to which no one took them seriously) the two committed the Woodland Valley Mall Massacre, Cameron using a shotgun whilst Neal had a pistol. Together they rampaged through the mall, killing fifteen people and wounding many others, before finally turning their guns on themselves and committing suicide.

* Cameron Crowe and musician Nancy Wilson (of Heart). From 1986 until 2010, anyway.
* Cameron Crowe that the commentary goes on 20 minutes longer than the movie.
* Cameron Diaz and has said that flatulence is one of her favorite topics. She even had a gas contest with Eva Mendes on a trip, in which Diaz burped and Mendes farted.
* Cameron Diaz wears an impressive shiny silver catsuit while climbing and jumping off a skyscraper.
* Cameron from the Unova arc was ditzier than Ash was in almost the entire anime, as he practically had to be handheld as a Trainer through all of his appearances. In spite of all this, he beats Ash after bringing 5 Pokemon to a 6-on-6 Pokemon League battle.
* Cameron goes berserk and becomes an Implacable Woman as she pursues Connors, trying to kill them.
* Cameron has a more subtle way of revealing herself, simply by lighting up the irises of her eyes. In this case, though, she is talking with someone who already knows Terminators exist.
* Cameron has tried to continue this into his adult career, one of his most notable demands is he will not kiss any woman on screen who is not his real-life wife, requiring his wife to be cast as a "kiss double". Operative word being "try", since he has nowhere near the star power as an adult that he did as a teen, and his antics have basically killed his career in Hollywood. He nowadays can only find work in low-budget Christian movies, or his own vanity projects.
* Cameron later explicitly tells John (after being confronted with an empathy test) that Terminators are not designed to be cruel. Which makes sense; being unfeeling machines, they think logically and practically, simply following their motivations. Interpreting an action of sheer pragmatism as cruel or benevolent is something only a human would do.
* Cameron Mitchell also uses two guns while fighting zombies in the 200th episode. Justified in that this was an
* Cameron Mitchell returns to his hometown for one episode. While no-one thinks he's evil or a criminal or anything, no-one really knows what's going on at the SGC, and they basically remember him as the football player who came back with a weird girlfriend and is the reason they all have to sign confidentiality agreements.
* Cameron Mitchell takes over leading SG-1 after O'Neill gets promoted, somewhat usurping Samantha Carter as the leader of the team (the "somewhat" is that they are both of equal rank, it's just Cam that takes command more often in the field). He gets a lot of character schilling during the first half of Season 9, while both Carter and Teal'c seem to lose focus. The spotlight got so big that he ends up being the overall main hero of
* Cameron Moore has twice been a Danza on Hollyoaks: first as the face of "Cameron", a guy India Longford met online (but who turns out to have been a fake profile created by Silas Blissett to lure and murder her), later as the character Cameron Campbell.
* Cameron said that she had to deliberately train herself to not do "human" actions like brushing her hair out of her face during fight scenes, which sometimes leads to one side of her face being obscured after a battle or action sequence.
* Cameron's creepy stoicism gets played brilliantly in the premiere for the second season when John is trying to remove her processor chip after it gets damaged and she goes berserk. She slowly switches from an emotionless,
* Cameron's film also would've changed Electro's name. The script had him called Carlton Strand instead of Max Dillon. Sandman was also called Boyd instead of Flint Marko.
* Cameron. She ultimately decided against the surgery because she was afraid it would send a bad message to younger fans.
* Cameron's original purpose was to impersonate a future resistance fighter named Allison. Though not outright stated, it is implied that Allison was an intimate of John Connor, and Cameron's purpose was to get close to him and assassinate him. After questioning Allison about her past, Cameron breaks her neck.

* Cameron's shown the ability to fake human interaction long enough to get information out of people. It's only when she's being herself that she struggles.
* Cameron twitches his arm, bounces, and plays with dice in his pocket.
* Cameron was told she got her job because she's pretty ("it's like having a nice piece of art in the lobby"), and could have breezed through life on looks alone, yet became a Doctor, which said something for her dedication and how much she cared.
* Cameron won't even kiss anyone other than Noble now. She's supposedly in
* Came up in conversation between Bart and Comic Book Guy after Poochie's debut in "The Itchy & Scratchy & Poochie Show":
* came up with Forever Stamps instead. A US stamp marked "Forever" will always match the current value of stamps regardless of when it was purchased; a book of stamps from ten years ago is still fully sufficient postage today.
* Camie the mermaid's distinctive face fault. It's... hard to describe. Her eyes bug out, her teeth jut out, her jaw seems to unhinge, and her tongue looks huge and hangs out.
* Camila Cabello features lines like "got your chemicals all in my veins" and "just like nicotine, heroin, morphine," and "just one hit of you and now I'll never be the same."
* Camilla also bonds well with Tharja due to the devotion they harbor towards Corrin and Robin, respectively. They even have a support conversation discussing these traits, taking them to the extreme through "bird-watching" and "dragon-watching".
* Camilla confesses that she's been in love with the male Avatar since she first saw him, so any other guy she marries will be this to her.
* Camille after her death, and wins the heart of her husband (who originally married her only for personal profit reasons).
* Camille Desmoulins also qualifies in a slightly cuter, revolutionary-next-door way. Shouting love letters to his wife while he was being led to the guillotine? Awwwwwww!
* Camille gives one to Hodgins for asking Arastoo some stupid questions. To be fair, they were both a bit inebriated.
* Camille Leon powers due to an experimental cosmetic surgery procedure. Came complete with an expensive pet, a Sphinx cat named Debutante.
* Camille Leon. Via an experimental plastic surgery she can look like any human being she wants.
* Camille Llewellyn claims that the publicity shot of Kryten and Camille is in his parents' photo album: "That's our elder son and his wife and children, that's our daughter and her children, and that's our middle son who's a robot and his girlfriend."
* Camille Saint Saëns: Apart from "Danse Macabre" and "Carnival Of The Animals" it almost seems as if he didn't do anything else in his life.
* Camille Saint-Saëns did not permit "The Carnival of the Animals" to be published during his lifetime, feeling that its frivolity would harm his reputation. (The movement "Tortoises," for instance, consists of the "Can-can" theme from Offenbach's "Orpheus in the Underworld" played absurdly slowly.) Today, it is his best-known work, aside from "Danse Macabre", which was also written more as a joke, but has remained popular for decades.
* Camille, Shannon's fragile little sister, has crooked, front-facing fangs which result in a speech impediment.
* Camillo Agrippa was an Italian polymath of the Renaissance and a renowned fencing theorist. His
* Caminho das Índias was a labor attorney who encouraged his potential clients to fake injuries to sue their employers.
* Cammie, bitter about being shipped off from Astro City to spend the summer in the countryside with relatives, resentfully thinks that they would not think so highly of their local superhero Roustabout if they could compare him to a real Astro City superhero — like

* Camp (2003) weren't dating before - he was leading her on while he had a girlfriend outside of camp, slept with another girl in camp, and moments before asking Ellen to date him, had been offering himself to their gay friend.
* Camp (2003): When Vlad enters his room to unpack, he is totally oblivious to the fact that everyone is fixated with him. "Everyone" would be four guys and a girl. After watching while Vlad unpacks his stuff, to try and determine whether he's straight or gay, the girl comes up with the following idea:
* Campagnia Ship Arc and began a potential long-running background plot, so the length could be excused.
* campaign ad for Zaphod Beeblebrox puts forward the following argument:
* campaign against luchadoras Gran Apache was angered by this "betrayal".
* Campaign Comics have a love/hate relationship with this trope. On one hand, when all you have are the screencaps from the series you are adapting, it's hard to stray from the Canon Stations. On the other hand, part of the draw of these comics is to see how differently a certain event will play out.
* campaign following the elf Ravandil questing, with a LOT of verbal vulgarity.
* Campaign for North Africa is pretty much primarily known for how long it takes to play, being almost impossible to complete as published in anything less than several years, as well as being ridiculously heavy on bookkeeping and simulationism (down to featuring mechanics for how quickly liquid supplies evaporate in the desert). The game designers jokingly told someone that if they thought there was something wrong with the game, they should try to play it again to completion and see if the problem was still happening.
* campaign in France in 1814 was also to a large extent a winter campaign, and one in which the Russians sustained very heavy losses.
* Campaigns for original Cheerios have also done this with Peanuts characters, animated chalk drawings, etc.
* campaigns in Vietnam and Kuwait, it was fairly common for American troops to acquire non-American guns for their own use during patrols. Since they were expected to account for all weapon discharges and ammo use, firing your own gun to scare off civilians or dogs could get you in trouble... but if you pried that rusty Kalashnikov folding-stock rifle off the dead Iraqi guard by the roadside, you could use that for the same purpose without getting in trouble. Later on, when American forces pushed up Death's Highway and into Iraqi territory, some soldiers reported that inexperienced troops would sometimes have to be stopped from taking too many trophies from captured buildings, lest locals become too resentful.
* campaign will spend less money to secure victory. This of course leads to a defeat.
* Campbell v. Robinson (an unreported 2008 trial court decision), though the first case didn't result in actual money being awarded and the second seems to have mostly covered loss of income because Miss Shell quit her job in anticipation of moving in with Mr. Gibbs.)
* Camp Camp, after spending a good part of the season trying to breakdown his annoyingly optimistic and chipper councilor, David, Max finally gets David to come around to his cynical view of the world... and immediately feels like crap for it.
* Camp Camp all the characters at the camp, not a main character, get some time in the spotlight at some point or another:
* Camp Camp and dresses accordingly. However, he has several times demonstrated that he really does have genuine powers, albeit difficulty controlling them due to a lack of experience.

* Camp Camp been seen in other outfits, but usually wear the same iconic ones. This has been lampshaded: "I thought that was a myth, like David owning a second shirt".
* Camp Camp, camp counselor Gwen, who was rejected in just about every other job application, is a Liberal Arts major. Minoring in Psychology, which one of the kids says is equally useless but which at least helps her assess the mental health of the other counselor, David.
* Camp Camp: Canadian!David and Colombian!Gwen are extremely popular, with Latina or Hispanic Gwen being near universal. Max is usually of Indian descent (ultimately became canon in the Heritage Festival/Hanukkah special), with Native American or biracial also being popular (in the case of the latter, he's typically half-Hindi/half-Caucasian but the Hindi part can be swapped for Native American or other POC options and half-Hindi/half-other-POC-option is not unheard of).
* Camp Camp capable of screwing with people psychologically. Max, David, and Gwen are left bewildered by trying to figure him out.
* Camp Camp Christmas special, Max yells "Jesus Christ!" upon seeing Preston dressed up for his one-man Nativity play. Take a wild guess as to what costume he was wearing.
* Camp Camp: David the camp counselor's dorky, optimistic personality and cute appearance have both given him a ton of female fans.
* Camp Camp (do to climate change), the cast decides to pretend that it’s the holiday season.
* Camp Camp episode "The Fun-Raiser", David and Gwen are trying to raise money to keep the camp afloat, but end up even further in the red with every attempt. Meanwhile, Nikki at one point is digging for buried treasure and is disappointed when she strikes oil.
* Camp Camp fics as a hobby. Subverted when she somehow meets two drug dealers who are part of her community.
* Camp Camp: Given the run-down and cheapskate funded nature of Camp Campbell, it's no surprise that the campers and counselors have to scrub the floor with the same toothbrushes they use on their teeth.
* Camp Camp has a case after a revealing\embarrassing line that's even justified, as it happened because the Quartermaster perforated the LP with his hook hand.
* Camp Camp has a such a strong resemblance to Hitler and Nazi mannerisms that it's even lampshaded by Nikki. The joke in this case is that this contrasts quite strongly with his actual personality - despite the resemblance, he's actually a genuinely nice kid who seems to be unaware of how reminiscent he is of an infamous historical figure who's his complete opposite, as well as how much he tends to make people uncomfortable for that reason.
* Camp Camp has Flower Scout Tabii, who starts wearing an eyepatch (caused by being hit in the eye by a fork... thrown by herself) in the same episode where she and her friends become drug lords that can even take down the Mexican cartel.
* Camp Camp has had two so far (though since the series takes place at a summer camp, neither of them actually take place on Halloween):
* Camp Camp has the same voice actor as a young child and an adult, albeit his child voice is literally just Miles Luna doing some kind of weird falsetto. Though, this could be because he's telling the events as a story in the present and putting on a voice for his younger self.
* Camp Camp is a young boy raised at a German army base who bears an unsettling resemblance to Adolf Hitler in both looks and mannerisms, something which has not gone unnoticed in-universe. However, he's actually just a sweet, artistic boy who doesn't even know who Hitler is, much less show any sign of following any of his ideologies.
* Camp Camp is often prone to doing this. Max also screams shrilly upon witnessing the horrors of a dungeon orgy.
* Camp Camp is the adopted daughter of two gay FBI agents, and doesn't seem the least bit ashamed of it. In fact, she embraces it.
* Camp Camp, "Journey to Spooky Island", the main trio meet a mysterious kid named Jasper, who's on the island for unexplained reasons and talks like he's from the '90s. He's revealed to be a ghost at the end of the episode, but not until after the trio have already left and we are not given any information on Jasper's origins until season two, and the characters do not learn that he was a ghost nor is audience given his full story until season three.

* Camp Camp, leading to Neil calling them "ignorant, fucking cunts" for this attitude.
* Camp Camp Max gets refused service by a bartender who doesn't serve "your kind". After Max demands to know who "your kind" are, the bartender points out that he means kids, and that Max is legally prohibited from drinking alcohol.
* Camp Camp mode because a broken David is kinda completely terrifying.
* Camp Camp: Nerf can sometimes be seen giving some of the campers wedgies.
* Camp Camp Season 1 finale, it seems as though David's overly happy-go-lucky spirit has finally been shattered, to Max's absolute delight. As he desperately tries to light a symbolic bonfire that's important to him in the middle of a thunderstorm, Max goes in to lay the final blow:
* Camp Camp: The foyer of Cameron Campbell's mansion in Spooky Island has two taxidermized bears next to the door, scaring Nikki, Neil, and Japser but not Max. A later episode shows how Campbell obtained them: by fighting and killing the bears with nothing but a knife.
* Camp Camp. This is odd, given that other than her and her mother, no other character has odd hair or eye coloration like this.
* Camp Camp to attend and the councilors offered better positions. But they realize they were happier together in that crappy camp and conspire to force the Camp Corp. owners into giving it back.
* Camp Camp until it was whittled down to just him and one of the unknowns.
* Camp Camp", when Cameron Campbell falters on whether to call her a mom or a dad.
* Camp Camp, which has all been organized by the secret Cult Leader Daniel.
* Camp Camp: While exchanging spooky stories, Max freaks out Gwen by asking her to contemplate the job market she'll enter once Camp Campbell shuts down.
* Camp Camp, who's directed to redo her dialogue with "more cleavage".
* Camp Candy: In "Dear Mom and Dad", everyone does something foolish when it comes to fire safety. When the mess hall burns down, everybody takes all the blame and plans on leaving. As it turns out, the mess hall was destroyed by a meteor.
* Camp Candy: The justification is that John is telling stories to campers and that the laughter is coming from them.
* Camp Candy Triangle. Which naturally was shaped like a pair of shorts rather than a triangle.
* Camp Castaways". The egg's mother, a monstrous goose, tracks him down and in one swoop picks him and the egg up. Gwen lassoes herself onto Duncan's shoe and gets carried along until the bird drops the both of them.
* Camp Chef Igor can be seen with an actual cigarette in one episode. Also, there's a lot of smoking in the movie.
* Camp Cool Kids, the younger campers get hanging wedgies from the older campers after they're caught making fun of them.
* Camp Cretaceous movies themselves are also heavily merchandised towards kids despite being rated PG-13.
* Camp Cuddly Pines Powertool Massacre. Amusingly, the villain's origin is mish-mash of Freddy, Michael and Jason's respective backstories.
* Camp Daze, modern day protagonists find themselves stuck in a summer camp straight from 80's which itself is stuck repeating the same day when a mysterious killer murdered everyone over and over again.
* Camper Van Beethoven, although it turned out that it had already been released as a b-side under the title "Guitar Hero".
* Camper Van Beethoven, and tried to really make it sound like it could have been produced in those conditions. The whole project was done to test out how they'd get along in a studio setting after being broken up for years.
* Camper Van Beethoven of "Pictures Of Matchstick Men", which reached number one on the Billboard Modern Rock charts in 1989, their sole entry on that chart. Both songs are staples of the band's live sets, but "Skinheads", being their own song rather than a cover, is much more heavily associated with the band.

* Camper Van Beethoven, the Christian right-wing Texas and the left-wing utopian California. The album follows an unnamed narrator who joins the army of Texas after a 9/11-esque terror attack. He returns disabled and disillusioned, eventually siding with California-based "rebels" and prepares to become a suicide bomber.
* Campfire Character Exploration: Character are explored while talking around a campfire.
* Campfire Character Exploration: Characters sitting by a campfire take advantage of the moment to open up.
* Campfire Cooking In Another World With My Absurd Skill: The story follows a salaryman who is thrown into another world by accident. Stranded, his only special skill is to conjure a supermarket site from where he can buy things, and with that and his amazing cooking skills, he prepares dishes so good that super-powerful monsters agree to follow and protect him as long as he keeps them fed.
* Campfire Ghost Stories tells him to wait until a major development project breaks ground and construction is well under way.
* campfire story started getting conflicting orders from 3 different officers, he assumed it to be a communication issue at first.
* Campfire Tales (1991), an oddly destructive weed causes its users to break apart and ultimately melt into a green puddle after prolonged use.
* Campfire Tales (1991) features a murderous Satan Claus, whose job is to punish the really naughty. He comes after the main character because he killed his mother.
* Campfire Tales": In the legend told by Rarity, Sable Spirit and Mistmane battle by using powerful unicorn magic. Both make plants grow to surround the opponent like a cocoon, and summon dragon spirits to clash against each other.
* Campfire Tales" is just that: a series of campfire tales told around a framing device of a camping trip.
* Campfire Tales", Mistmane's homeland, from its architecture to its culture to its dress styles, is openly based on imperial China.
* Campfire Tales", the characters are visibly — and admittedly justifiably — terrified of them.
* Campfire Tales, titled "People Can Lick Too" has a little girl being stalked by an online predator on her birthday.
* Campfire Tales", which describes events that took place when Equestria was new and the Princesses were fillies, he's portrayed as already being a massive, fully grown adult dragon.
* Camp Follower: prostitutes who follow and service soldiers during war.
* Camp followers are absent from the titular mercenary company of the
* Camp followers came through to wake up sailors he would shout, "show a leg". If it was hairy the chief would roust the leg's possessor out of bed, and if it wasn't the leg's owner was assumed to be female.
* camp from the planet Venus! It forms the classic wheel design, is shown spinning fast enough to give everyone on board space sickness, and took 22 years to build from the moment the first man stepped into space in the far-future of 1963.
* Camp Gay actor with a talent for drag roles. While no straight man has yet been shown falling in love with his female persona, the undeniably statuesque and convincing "Dilla" gets "her" full share of lecherous glances.
* Camp Gay: A feminine male who is stereotyped as being attracted to men exclusively.
* Camp Gay: A male homosexual who looks and acts stereotypically soft and feminine.
* Camp Gay, and thus is supposed to be a decided unpleasant person. It's also fairly obvious from the pilot that there's a redemption arc planned for him.
* Camp Gay, but as it turns out, to Peggy's and the viewers' surprise, he has a wife and child.
* Camp Gay character asking for all sorts of Mexican food and ending always with a large diet soda.
* Camp Gay character, it breaks his heart that there are some "manly" activities that he has no interest in and which will never be a way for him to bond with his own father.
* Camp Gay director — who turns flamboyant up to eleven. The original version had him played by a hippie.

* Camp Gay director who sings a whole song about the joys of the supposedly sinful act of Sodomy but doesn't have sex onscreen, survives by hiding in a giant carrot during the rampage.
* Camp Gay, especially noticeable in certain conversations, such as the one with Leliana about shoes (where you can gush about beautiful shoes, be disinterested, or focus on practicality/cost).
* Camp Gay fashionista from Austria. He's typically used to grate on people's homophobia as well as to expose the absurdities of the fashion industry.
* Camp Gay: Gay men are either effeminate or very stereotypically manly.
* Camp Gay in that same comic into disguising herself as a man for one evening, that's certainly not sexual in her eyes.
* Camp Gay Iron Bull is romanced by the Inquisitor, they will eventually fall for each other.
* Camp Gay. Jace's terrible (even by in universe standards) Spanish accent, and incredible Camp stylings would make a young Elton John cringe, and gave a few cheap (and oddly glittery) laughs to the audience of "Lyre, Lyre Hearts on Fire".
* Camp Gay on their radio, and by the end of the song they find it was a Smokey disguising his voice to catch them speeding.
* Camp Gay son as the "daughter" she never had, doing all sorts of girly things with him while his brothers are out playing football.
* Camp Gay voice). Has a pretty physical onscreen relationship with Shore Leave (who is kinda on the fence with this troupe and Camp Gay) which comes up every so often.
* Camp Gay, was declared 4F ineligible), but being black and owing to segregation laws at the time, Cliff and Floyd were in non-combat support roles. Archer agrees it's bullshit for them to be denied the opportunity to serve in a frontline capacity, but states it doesn't make them any less heroic, though Archer still has the most experience (the third band member, Verl, reveals afterwards he was a tanker in the all-black 761st Tank Battalion, which saved Archer's company in the Battle of the Bulge).
* Campgrounds in the more remote areas of Canada typically offer literature and lectures by the park ranger on proper bear safety. Despite this, examples abound of tourists failing to abide by rules like "don't keep food in the tent" and "don't get between a mother bear and her cubs" seriously and paying a heavy price.
* camp had a delayed reaction to Hawkeye being naked. He walked right across the compound and into the mess tent without anyone noticing, until a corpsman dropped his tray in shock, getting everyone's attention.
* campier series, and replaced Donner because he wouldn't give it to them — nevermind that his vision for the first film became a critical and financial success despite their wishes.
* camping trip ruined of the player characters, and in as graphic detail as possible.
* Campion: Albert Campion has Detective Inspector Oates, a competent cop who often takes Albert's arrests and investigations.
* Campione!: After she falls in love with Godou, Erica Blandelli is quick to state (in front of his whole classroom, no less) that they are destined to be together, much to his shock. He eventually does reciprocate, though.
* Campione!, Athena wants Godou Kusanagi to master his powers and become stronger, so that it will be more epic and satisfying when they finally have a rematch.
* Campione!, but if he uses it for more than short bursts, it causes him a lot of pain and strains his heart.
* Campione!, Erica blackmails Liliana about the erotic novels she secretly writes. Erica memorized them and inserted their contents in her will, so Liliana can't kill her to keep it secret.
* Campione! Erica forces Godou into having one of these, though she clearly intends for it to go a little further, given that she even handcuffed him. As soon as she removes the cuffs, he jumps overboard and swims to get away from her.
* Campione!, Godou can come back to life fully healed with the power of The Ram, but he can only do this once a day.

* Campione! has is that they pick up and speak any language whatsoever. Kind of boring for the standards of this series, but very useful for the protagonist Godou.
* Campione! is an exception. The magic associations have learned to accept this and simply try their best to earn favor so Campiones will be less likely to destroy them and their countries out of irritation.
* Campione! of them), Erica begins to lose some of her confidence and questions if a harem is a good idea. She does feel better about it again, later.
* Campione! sexual fantasies about Godou. She's really embarrassed about anybody finding out about this.
* Campione!, she genuinely loves him and everything she does is for his sake.
* Campione!, the ageless witch Lucretia Zola was in a relationship with Godou's grandfather back when he was young and handsome. In the present, she hits on Godou a lot, commenting that he and his grandfather are very similar.
* Campione!. They can be affected by the powers of other Campione and Gods.
* Campion: He's a disinherited member of the aristocracy. He's a former burglar turned valet. They fight crime!
* Campion novels by Margery Allingham. Campion conceals the fact he has amnesia and that one of his few memories is of how much he loves Amanda because he can't bear the thought of her choosing him out of pity.
* Campion. We are treated to several minutes of Campion reeling around London, laughing wildly, before he is pushed in front of a train.
* Camp Lakebottom: Buttsquat hits himself in the back of the head with his own boomerang, which knocks him off his boat, in "Slimey Come".
* Camp Lakebottom: Buttsquat's Beach Blitzer in "Slimeball Run". Its weapons include missiles, a dart gun, and a giant magnifying glass.
* Camp Lakebottom: Happens to Frankie's electronic voice after McGee removes the two brains and the jar of evil pickles from his head in "Frankenfixer".
* Camp Lakebottom: In almost every episode. "Escape From Camp Lakebottom" is a notable exception.
* Camp Lakebottom: In "Buttastic Journey", Buttsquat tries this in an attempt to drown out McGee (who is talking to him from inside his head).
* Camp Lakebottom: In "Frankenfixer", McGee uses Sawyer's handkerchief as a parachute.
* Camp Lakebottom: In "Late Afternoon of the Living Gitch", Gitch (who is a pair of Squirt's underpants that has been brought to life) leaps in front of McGee to take a shot of super-strength fabric cleaner fired by Buttsquat. This is played exactly like this trope, including the dramatic slo-mo.
* Camp Lakebottom: In "Mindsuckers From the Depths", Squirt gets a huge, evil leech attached to the top of his head. Armand notices there is something different about him and wonders if he is using a new cologne.
* Camp Lakebottom: In "The Ghost in the Mower", the campers summon up a ghostly groundskeeper called the Grim Keeper to take care of their overgrown soccer field. The Grim Keeper manifests in the form of a scarecrow.
* Camp Lakebottom: In "The Ghost in the Mower", the campers summon up a ghostly groundskeeper called the Grim Keeper to take care of their overgrown soccer field. The Grim Keeper manifests in the form of a scary scarecrow.
* Camp Lakebottom: In "The Great Tiki Hunt", McGee and his friends find an old Tiki idol and accidentally unleash an ancient Tiki deity. Although the deity initially seems nice, he soon gives the campers the "honor" of being his prey in the Great Tiki Hunt.
* Camp Lakebottom: In "Tooth Troll", Sawyer loses control of his golf cart while attempting to pull out Squirt's tooth and crashes into Armand's hot tub, while Armand is in it.
* Camp Lakebottom, Jordan does this to send the bus carrying McGee, Gretchen and Squirt to Camp Lakebottom instead of Camp Sunnysmiles.
* Camp Lakebottom: McGee and Buttsquat are chased by a giant boulder while raiding an ancient temple at the start of "Being McGee".
* Camp Lakebottom reveals that McGee is really scared of spiders and he thinks that they are gross in the episode, "Arachnattack".

* Camp Lakebottom: "Slimeball Run" features a race across the swamp with ownership of Camp Lakebottom at stake.
* Camp Lakebottom tries to make McGee walk the plank (off a flying ship) in "Pirates of Ickygloomy". He ends up going off the plank himself.
* Camp Lakebottom: When a huge, evil leech attaches itself to Squirt's skull in "Mindsuckers From the Depths", he turns into a super-genius bent on world domination.
* Camp Lakebottom: When a hulking were-chicken stalks the camp, McGee must lead the hunt to prove his innocence in "Curse of The Were-Chicken''.
* Camp Lakebottom, when McGee and Buttsquat are lost in the wilderness and starving, they start to hallucinate all kind of things as food, including a pile of leaves as a giant plate of nachos and a tree stump as a giant sundae.
* Camp Lazlo, after Lazlo believes he has put Gretchen in danger, he rushes to see Edward firing a cannon at her and he jumps in to take the blow. Even though the "cannon" was actually a t-shirt cannon that only fired a shirt with an embarrassing phrase.
* Camp Lazlo & start chasing after him. They later find out their little mistake & decide to return to their cabins... only to find their feet stuck in the same material that Raj used to be covered in.
* Camp Lazlo appears to be set in this decade due to the technology and vintage style of the camps shown.
* Camp Lazlo are ones for the writers. Creator Joe Murray cited them as being an absolute pleasure for the staff to write episodes for.
* Camp Lazlo, a snake is loose in the camp and Lazlo, Clam and Patsy want Raj to come with them to find it, but he doesn't want to go.
* Camp Lazlo before apologizing to the fish and leaving the lake. Ouch.
* Camp Lazlo, contrasting Scoutmaster Lumpus' apathy towards its dismal conditions and Lazlo's enthusiasm for the place.
* Camp Lazlo did this when Lumpas ate Raj's Indian cheese wheel, which would cause whoever eats it to disintegrate in thirty minutes.
* Camp Lazlo, Edward conducts a belching orchestra in front of his brothers, and meant for Clam to start singing operatically until Lazlo makes the piece more fun.
* Camp Lazlo, Edward's bullying brothers force Scoutmaster Lumpus to hold the TV for them and adjust his antlers until they get a reception.
* Camp Lazlo: Edward's four older brothers are revealed to be this to Edward, which probably explains why Edward is in a perpetual bad mood in many episodes.
* Camp Lazlo, Edward starts an "I Hate Lazlo" club, inviting everyone except, of course, Lazlo. He tells Lazlo to form his own club, the "Nothing Club", which Lazlo does. Soon everyone leaves Edward's club after finding it too boring (it's all about talking about how much they hate Lazlo, which only Edward does) and head over to Lazlo's.
* Camp Lazlo ends with the Jelly Cabin indulging in some ice cream (actually frozen glue) after a night of scaring the Squirrel Scouts with a prank. Predictably, the Jelly Cabin ends up being subjected to this, with Clam, Raj, and Lazlo getting brain freeze in this order.
* Camp Lazlo episode "Beans and Weiners", Chef McMuesli is making his tofu hot dogs for the campers, where the mess hall sign reading "Monday Tofurters" turns to "Monday Torture".
* Camp Lazlo episode "Beans Are From Mars", Chip and Skip get their tongues stuck to an ice cream truck. Which then drives off.
* Camp Lazlo episode, "Bowling For Dinosaurs", Scoutmaster Lumpus tricks the campers of Camp Kidney into building him a bowling alley by having them dig for dinosaur bones. While the other campers soon realize they've been hoodwinked, Lazlo, Raj, and Clam continue to dig for dinosaur bones, interfering with Lumpus' bowling game in the process. They eventually manage to find a real (living) dinosaur skeleton under Lumpus' office.
* Camp Lazlo episode "Cave Chatter" had Lazlo, Clam, and Raj thaw out a frozen caveman that they conclude was the first Bean Scout, naming him Beastly Bumblepuss.

* Camp Lazlo episode "Ed's Benedict", Dave and Ping-Pong slip an egg into Edward's bed as a prank. For the rest of the episode, all the kids think he's expecting while Lumpus and Slinkman awkwardly try to explain the concept of pregnancy to them.
* Camp Lazlo episode "Float Trippers" in which Raj rows the canoe at a rapid pace at an attempt to retrieve his floating retainer in the river, only for him and the other two Bean Scouts to encounter a waterfall as Raj attempts to reach for his retainer while hanging from a branch. Eventually, Raj chooses his friends over his retainer and hoists the two on the branch with him, only for the branch to snap, causing the Bean Scouts to fall down the waterfall, in which they emerge unscathed from later on.
* Camp Lazlo episode "Handy Helper", after the first few times Lumpus gets run over, the camera cuts to Slinkman watching and cringing as Lumpus' screams increase in volume. Not sure whether it counts, though, because we get to see Lumpus get run over a few times before and afterwards.
* Camp Lazlo episode "Racing Slicks", Edward stomps on his first place trophy when he finds out that the other trophies are much larger than his.
* Camp Lazlo episode "Scoop of the Century", Lumpus tries to pose as a Bean Scout and, as part of his "initiation", the other scouts make him clean the latrines with a toothbrush. At the end, it's revealed that it was his own toothbrush.
* Camp Lazlo episode "Snake Eyes" had a scene where some of the Bean Scouts were playing hide and seek. Skip claims that he can count to ten, but his counting goes as "1, 3, 11..."
* Camp Lazlo episode "Swimming Buddy" when Lazlo tries to get him to swim, as does Samson in the episode "Camp Kidney Stinks" when Cousin Stinkbug lunges towards him.
* Camp Lazlo episode "Taking Care of Gretchen". Sampson offers to "take care of Gretchen". Lazlo accepts, thinking "take care of" means pamper. After watching a mob movie, he realizes what Sampson meant and tries desperately to stop what he now thinks is a hit, only to find he is too late.
* Camp Lazlo. Everyone initially praises Lumpus as being a genius, but things go sour when it starts to rain and everyone has their painted clothes washed away, leaving them in the nude.
* Camp Lazlo got a trophy larger than they are for coming in last place, he angrily throws his trophy on the ground and stomps on it.
* Camp Lazlo: Gretchen has a crush on Edward, who openly hates her and tries to avoid the crocodile at all costs.
* Camp Lazlo had the campers give the Jelly Beans a fake map that would leave them going around in circles for a few days so they won't get in the way of Commander Hoohah's inspection of the camp. This comes back to bite them in the ass when they found out Lazlo was the only one who could start a fire, which is required for the inspection.
* Camp Lazlo had the episode "S is for Crazy", where Samson gets his brain fried by a jellyfish and starts acting crazy. In the beginning, Scoutmaster Lumpus initially goes along with his antics, but eventually stops finding it funny when he falls in a vat of pudding his bed was nailed over, and finds a salt-melted Slinkman. He even tells Samson "You're fun when you were crazy, but now you're just crazy!" after he continues to laugh.
* Camp Lazlo has all the campers on a literal snipe hunt, but the animal described sounds more like Bigfoot. Edward's brothers' past hunts lead him to conclude snipes aren't real. The others mistake Lumpus for a snipe. Then two real snipes hatch from eggs that had fallen into Lumpus's throat at the end of the episode.
* Camp Lazlo has an odd inverted version. Lazlo is so happy-go-lucky and cheerful that when the camp is drenched with rain, he has his own personal ray of sunshine.
* Camp Lazlo has Lazlo going for a swim and coming out with a leech/sea lamprey attached to his head. He decides to call it Lamar and keep it as a pet, even though it was slowly sucking his blood dry.
* Camp Lazlo has Lumpus trying to create a new handshake for Jelly Cabin after they accidentally figure his club's secret handshake. The new handshake includes jumping through a ring of fire, riding another camper like a horse, and throwing a fit.

* Camp Lazlo has the episode "Over Cooked Beans", where Lazlo and his friends end up with an air conditioner for their cabin, but forget to share it with the others, leading to the rest of the campers stealing it throughout the night for their own usage. When they discover it missing, Lazlo is upset someone made off with it, only to discover the other campers arguing over who it belongs to.
* Camp Lazlo incident that leads to Mucus' watchtower getting destroyed with her inside it, leading her to plot to get the camp shut down.
* Camp Lazlo: In "Creepy Crawly Campy", Raj befriends a cute little elephant-like bug that ends up creating a cocoon on his head overnight. The next morning, it emerges as a giant, horrifying monster bug that scares the other campers, though Raj doesn't seem to mind.
* Camp Lazlo: In "Movie Night", Edward sneaks into the camp's projection room to watch a scary movie he's not old enough to see to prove he's not afraid. When he actually gets scared by the movie, he fruitlessly tries to turn the projector off.
* Camp Lazlo: In "Sweet Dream Baby" the Jelly Beans manage to put their cabin into orbit with something they mixed up in a store bought chemistry kit.
* Camp Lazlo: In "The Tusk Wizard", Raj attempts to bribe Nurse Leslie into removing a perfectly healthy tusk by offering him a quarter.
* Camp Lazlo: In "The Weakest Link", Edward attempts to get the Jelly Beans out of camp before Commander Hoo-Ha makes his inspection, and sends them on a wild goose chase to find an endangered rock. Unfortunately, part of the inspection is that at least one camper is capable of starting a fire, and Lazlo turns out to be the only one capable of doing so at the time, resulting in the rest of the campers having to go find him.
* Camp Lazlo: In "The Weakest Link", Scoutmaster Lumpus creates fake scouts after all the scouts go missing on the day when Commander Hoo-Haw is due to make his inspection.
* Camp Lazlo. It's learned in this episode that when Samson gets sick, his germs can cause others to at first, get sick, and then end up looking a lot like a hamster who is sick.
* Camp Lazlo it's revealed her fiancee Manfred has several wives already. When confronted about this, he points out he doesn't remember being married but his memory is fading so it's very likely he already is.
* Camp Lazlo Lazlo beat Edward in a lemonade drinking contest and when called over for a winner picture he started to do this dance in the episode "Hold It Lazlo".
* Camp Lazlo, Lazlo, Clam and Patsy want to search for their escaped pet snake, but Raj is too afraid to join them and says he'll stay in the cabin. When Patsy mentions he might still be in the cabin, Raj instantly tags along.
* Camp Lazlo like Lumpus and Edward who openly loathe him. Lazlo even displays the same kind of cheer to dangerous animals, unsafe objects, and places as poorly-run as Camp Kidney, except Edward’s brothers.
* Camp Lazlo offers Chip and Skip after-dinner mints after smelling their breath on her date with them.
* Camp Lazlo, particularly when it comes to Scoutmaster Lumpus in earlier episodes.
* Camp Lazlo: Patsy lies to Lazlo that she is a professional snake hunter who knows Kung Fu. Lazlo believes her, until they end up running from a (tiny, cute) snake and are cornered. Patsy confesses to having lied, and Lazlo asks why.
* Camp Lazlo, Raj is mistaken for a yeti, then at the end, it cuts to two yetis with one admonishing the other for being scared because he heard the Squirrel Scouts' yelling, telling him that campers are a myth.
* Camp Lazlo: Raj says "Well, I'm off to get some chutney" when he sneaks off to his secret hot spring.
* Camp Lazlo revolves around Edward attempting this but lacking the postage to do so. He spends the episode talking the others into giving him stamps with a sob story, but then they want to go with him, requiring more postage. By the end, all the campers are shipped off, but end up at the location next door, as they were as far as the postage would get them.
* Camp Lazlo: Samson briefly gains one of these from the Squirrel Scouts after they believe he is the hamster heartthrob featured on the cover of a magazine.

* Camp Lazlo, Scoutmaster Lumpus attempts to pay a restaurant bill with the contents of the Bean Scouts' pockets: buttons, lint, string, a frog...
* Camp Lazlo, Scoutmaster Lumpus bemoans the failure of any of the Bean Scouts to achieve a single merit badge. Edward thens reveals that he has full set (having dishonestly bought them). We never find out a full list but it does include 'Motorcycle Maintenance'. Another episode mentions the 'Taxidermy' badge.
* Camp Lazlo, Scoutmaster Lumpus is a member of one of these, the Legume Council.
* Camp Lazlo, Scoutmaster Lumpus seems to keep getting Edward's name wrong. Lumpus himself was liable to have this in the first few episodes.
* Camp Lazlo short "Marooned Maroons", where Chip and Skip think they're stranded on an island when they're actually on a wooden raft not far from camp. After attempting to stave off their hunger by eating pieces of the raft, one of the twins sees the other as a giant piece of the wooden raft and looks like he's going to eat his brother, but instead has him swim to get food.
* Camp Lazlo short "Nudist Camp" had this happen when Lazlo took Lumpus' uniform while he was bathing in the lake.
* Camp Lazlo stated he was intended to be totally mute, but changed as the creator felt it wouldn't work well.
* Camp Lazlo that it turns one onlooker to stone, but he breaks out when he and several others see that the float was made from things stolen from them.
* Camp Lazlo: The attempts to jazz up the camp newsletter end up this territory:
* Camp Lazlo. The campers have adopted a llama, (who's cranky and always spitting and hitting everyone) and eventually have to give it up. Lazlo tearfully tells it to just get out of there, but any sweetness is sucked out of the scene by the llama kicking him in the head repeatedly.
* Camp Lazlo, the campers prepare for a inspection from Commander Hoohah, who threatened to revoke their underwear rations if they failed. The next morning, Slinkman wakes up Scoutmaster Lumpus, who shouts "Don't take my underwear! IT'S BLEACHED!".
* Camp Lazlo, the hog mayor of the nearby small town of Prickly Pines with a nauseous appearance in a show with cute, simple character designs.
* Camp Lazlo, the Jelly Bean Scouts barricade the cabin door with planks to keep the Squirrel Scouts out. It's revealed that they took the planks from the back wall of the cabin, leaving a huge hole for the Squirrel Scouts to get through.
* Camp Lazlo, the Jelly cabin Trio (Lazlo, Raj and Clam) tend to do this to each other, often with heartwarming effect.
* Camp Lazlo). These include "Spacemates" (which was about Squirrel Scout Nina and the Dung Beetles) and Miss Fru Fru (a Squirrel Scouts episode).
* Camp Lazlo, this happens to Chip and Skip, using a pair of skis rather than a plank.
* Camp Lazlo uses such a chair to move around. In fact, when the chair is broken, he can't even use his legs to stand.
* Camp Lazlo when Chip and Skip temporarily become smart they make a computer out of a rock which only they are smart enough to use.
* Camp Lazlo. When Chip and Skip, the dung beetles, join hands and shout "Scum twin powers, activate!" they can call all the grime in camp to the area.
* Camp Lazlo: When Scoutmaster Lumpus opens his wallet in "Prickly Pining Dining", a large cloud of dust escapes.
* Camp Lazlo, who simply says, "Sorry, Jane, she's hot," and chases Lumpus.
* Camp Lazlo with the appearance of a character who is clearly meant to be an older version of Heffer.
* Camp Lazlo would often feature the central trio walking in at the tail-end of one of Edward's stories to the rest of the scouts; e.g. "...so that's why I don't play croquet any more."
* Camp Myth: The RPG by Chris Lewis Carter using a modified version of Third Eye Games' Pip System, called "Mythic Pips".
* Camp Nightmare, Calvin and Hobbes listen to Nickelback in the staff bathroom.
* Camp Nightmare when he learns he'll be going to Hugs and Snuggles Day Camp for the summer.

* Camp Nowhere, Betty cons Walter into giving up his swimming trunks out of revenge for his spending the entire movie trying to get her to go skinny dipping.
* Camp Nowhere four kids get out of summer camp by inventing a fictional camp just far enough from their suburb to be hard to check on. Then the four head out to enjoy summer where their parents can't watch them. Unfortunately, one of the kids blabs about it to a friend, and soon every kid in the neighborhood (who also hate summer camp) shows up to hide there for the summer. Now they have to create at least the illusion of a real camp, because parents will be coming to check. Even worse, the parents have been told different lies. (One pair thinks their kid is going to drama camp, another pair thinks their kid is at weight-loss camp...)
* Camp Nowhere, the father of the twelve-year-old protagonist cheerfully informs him, "By the way, you're grounded until you're thirty" after the phony summer camp cover is blown.
* C&P Boarst Wurst. "It's not the wurst unless it's boarst wurst." Boarst wurst is actually pretty decent by most accounts, if you can get past it
* Camp Pining Hearts). She once pushed Steven's father off a roof, apparently out of sheer curiosity. Her official Twitter account details such antics as running across the countryside for hours with a pizza because she had no idea what to do when the delivery guy showed up.
* Camp (producers of the TV show) in 2012 about producing merchandise based on the TV shows (also, greeting cards from Hallmark tend to follow the Adam West design, which most closely resembled the traditional comic book design). The James Holmes incident may further encourage this revival of the West version.
* Camp Rock 2: The Final Jam is this because they are from opposing musical camps led by two former bandmates turned rivals. Added points that Dana is the daughter of Camp Star's leader, and Nate is the nephew of Camp Rock's leader.
* Camp Rock", at Final Jam, one of the songs gets cut short because the singer notices someone using a cellphone. There was likely more to it, though.
* Camp Rock, Shane Grey gets the comedic version from his uncle after refusing to wake up twice.
* Camp Rock, where Caitlin upon finding out Mitchie's Zany Scheme immediately calls her on how unbelievably stupid it is, and isn't particularly interested in hearing her explanation.
* C&Rsenal, and normally wears jeans, T-shirt and an overshirt. The T-shirt is sometimes rather low cut, and the shirt is not always buttoned all the way up.
* Camp Runamuck! featured Leonard Stone as Doc in most of the episodes. In the pilot, however, Frank DeVol portrayed Doc, who the role was originally intended for and who left due to health problems.
* camps at a haven, stays at lodgings, or finishes a chapter. Short-term Low-Level Runs can be done by not voluntarily sleeping for the duration of a chapter.
* Camp Straight: A male heterosexual with stereotypical feminine traits.
* Camp Straight: A man who demonstrates several gay stereotypes, but is in fact heterosexual.
* Camp Straight is definitely in touch with the feminine side while his partner, Jessie is in touch with her masculine side. James' purple hair has the style similar to that of a woman's even though it's shorter than Jessie's. He is also very flamboyant and crossdressed frequently in early episodes. Also, there was the infamous "flaming Moltres" joke. Even though he is a Team Rocket member, James is the most sensitive of the Rocket trio as he loves his Pokémon
* Camp Straight traits included vs. gay man with no stereotypical gay traits.
* Camp Sunshine There is no hint that the protagonist, or anyone else he meets over the course of the game, was remotely aware of this.
* Camp Sunshine, yet he must survive against a bloodthirsty serial killer dressed as the camp's mascot "Sunshine Bear" by running, hiding, and solving the mystery behind everything going on.
* Camp Taurajo in the Southern Barrens becomes the start of one. The Alliance sacks Taurajo, the Horde responds by killing the General who carried out the attack, and the other Alliance leaders swear vengeance on the Horde for the assassination. Ironically, General Hawthorne was trying to avoid civilian casualties because he didn't want a Cycle of Revenge, but didn't factor in the quillboar who were mortal enemies of the Tauren.

* camp. Then, he deserted and ran to Israel where he received a pardon for having deserted from the Israeli Navy. Which he did in order to join the Legion to track down the guard, whom he knew had joined the Legion.
* Camp Unsafe Isn't Safe Anymore: A seemingly safe site is actually dangerous.
* Campus Life main plot important characters, and who knows how many supporting characters.
* Campus Life the Ferenic Crafts, when killed, reanimate after 24 hours.
* Campus Safari, Chrome's miniwhip Aurla does a good impression of one. (Played for laughs)
* Campus Safari Darius stated that they wouldn't be sharing any technology with earth that could be used as weapons.
* Camp Weedonwantcha walk around barefoot. Somewhat expected in that children tend to lose their shoes when they get outside.
* Camp WWE, the Bella twins witness the fight while munching on popcorn.
* Camp X-Ray: Ali hasn't done anything wrong, so he should be released. However, the very fact that he's been in Guantanamo means no country will take him in, so he can't be.
* Campy Combat: A feminine male straight, gay, or bisexual, tends to fight in a flamboyant way.
* campy. Swamp Thing calmly plucks a grenade off Gunn's belt, yanks out the pin, and then stuffs it down into Gunn's pants:
* Camp Zombie: Corey and Amanda head off to a summer camp at Camp Harvest Moon, a place with a reputedly questionable past. Strange events begin to occur.
* Camryn Manheim and Russell Harvard whenever the latter two are onstage.
* Camula and Tania are the only female Seven Stars Assassins/Shadow Riders. Interestingly, these two are among the four best duelists of the Seven Stars Assassins, and they are two of three duelists who won spirit keys.
* Camus ends up having to choose between his love and his country, ending up going with the latter. This results in him being left for dead and his love being stuck in a loveless
* Camus features Camus as an amnesiac who washed up on the shore of another continent after a brutal beatdown, fighting him is canon.
* Camus O. Laphroaig, which results in his advances being downright terrifying.
* Cam Whore: a person who provides online Fanservice on their blog, website, YouTube channel, etc., in exchange for money or material goods.
* Canaan appears calm and even-tempered, but is in fact unwavering, merciless, and very much obsessed with admiring and idolizing her "Sister" Alphard, to the point of being in love with her. To her frustration, however, Alphard does not reciprocate her feelings and instead ignores or even proceeds to ridicule her from time to time. Because Alphard seems to have taken a special interest in observing Canaan's reactions to every plot carried out by Snake, Liang Qi sees the elimination of Canaan as a way to win back Alphard's attention.
* Canaan, Mino and Santana's mud-slinging match in the fifth episode eventually devolves into this sort of thing.
* Canaan the vice president cannot call off a B-2 about to bomb the president.
* Canaan wears a sleeveless red turtleneck which leaves her shoulder blades and the middle of her back exposed.
* Canabalt has the protagonist leaping through glass windows without even slowing, much less taking damage.
* Canabalt: The whistle is only heard for an instant before the bomb lands.
* Can a Boo Be Friends with a Human?, the Star Spirits contact Mario and Luigi through their dreams although not without difficulty when neither brother feels like talking.
* Can a Boo Be Friends with a Human? thinks to himself he wouldn't know what to do without him.
* Canada also makes a related joke about "Brownies", which are a junior branch of Girl Guides (who also sell cookies). There's also the joke about getting thrown out of the Boy Scouts for

* Canada and Denmark are locked in a decades-long border dispute over Hans Island. Militarily, the conflict involves one side occasionally sending an expeditionary force to raise their flag, installing a sign that says "Welcome to [Country]", and leave a bottle of liquor (the Danes leave a bottle of brandy, the Canucks leave a bottle of whiskey) and the other side coming later to replace the flag and sign and enjoying the booze left behind before leaving their own bottle. Civilians on both sides also occasionally get caught up in search engine optimization wars to see which side can get their claim on the island to reach the top of Google's search results.
* Canada based All Star Wrestling has Salty The Seaman, who is a maritime
* Canada Canada's new warning system, Alert Ready, is distributed nationwide to TVs, radios, and cell phone. Alert Ready was first envisioned as a weather warning system but is also used for civil emergencies, flood warnings, and Amber Alerts. Most provinces have also used it during the 2020-2021 pandemic to disseminate lockdown notices. It uses a distinctive two-tone alarm.
* Canada did one better than the U.S. by banning margarine entirely starting in 1886. After being temporarily allowed from 1917 to 1923 due to dairy shortages, the federal law was lifted in 1948
* Canada Does Not Exist: A wave of low-budget cop and action-adventure dramas start being produced in Canada, but primarily for U.S. consumption. This leads to the weird phenomenon of shows which take place in a "nowhereland" that is neither fully the US nor completely Canada.
* Canada Does Not Exist: What do you do when you're ashamed to be shooting your show in Canada, but can't set it in America?
* Canada Does Not Exist: Works shot in Canada deliberately obscure the setting's location.
* Canada Dry) features the drink logo all over the playfield and backglass.
* Canada had its own feuds, especially the infamous one involving the notorious Donnelly family in Lucan, Ontario. That conflict involved that family against most of the surrounding community that got so bitter that it ultimately ended with a bloody home invasion/massacre of the Donnellys.
* Canada has its own homegrown criminal underworld comprised of Italians, Irish, and Indians as well as occasionally the likes of the Chinese, French, and Ebonics. If you do find the Mafia in the Great White North, they are commonly found in Ontario or Quebec.
* Canada has its own version of Satan, called Beelzaboot. Unlike the standard Satan, he is genuinely evil.
* Canada Heritage Minutes series of short vignettes, showing notable moments from Canada's history, and playing randomly on Canadian stations for more than 15 years.
* Canada, Indonesia, and Turkey also break apart over the course of the timeline.
* Canada initially started with a stronger federal government after seeing how American federalism was a factor in the Civil War, but a series of well-argued court cases in the 19th and 20th centuries gradually transferred more powers to the provinces at the federal government's expense.
* Canada is ignored to the point of being invisible by pretty much all of the other nations. The fandom disagrees and goes a long way to fix this "oversight,"
* Canada is mostly the same as the U.S., with the additional quirk of the University of Waterloo once using a literal "F-minus" for anything below 35%.
* Canada is officially bilingual with a significant population of fully bilingual citizens. And most Canadians have enough mandatory French education to at least recognize the "phrasebook sentences" don't match the subtitle.
* Canada itself doesn't exist. It is divided between (from East to West) a Great Britain-controlled Newfoundland, the Socialist Republic of Quebec, the Alconquin Republic, and the Russia Empire.
* Canada likewise only has a citizenship rule for public office: two of the last three Governors-General (the Queen's representative in Canada) were immigrants (born in Hong Kong and Haiti, respectively), and following the 2015 election there were 42 immigrants (out of 338 total members) elected to the House of Commons, with those members having been born in Afghanistan, India, Trinidad, the United States, Hong Kong, China, Poland, Lebanon, Syria, Saudi Arabia, Iran, Sri Lanka, Tanzania, Argentina, Haiti, Uganda, Germany, Portugal, South Africa, the UK, Poland, and Somalia.

* Canada officially adopted metric in 1977, but its adoption by the general public has been hit and miss — for instance, many people use Celsius for outdoor temperature but Fahrenheit for indoor and/or body temperature, or measure long distances in kilometres but short and medium distances in inches and feet... unlike Brits who are more likely to use centimetres and metres for short and medium distances, but miles for longer distances. Rural Canadians living in the prairies often use miles, simply because the grid roads are a mile distant, so measuring out three miles on an unmarked road is easy — three major cross roads, and you're there. This has a lot to do with the vast majority of Canada's population living within 100 miles (160 km) of the U.S. border and getting nearly all U.S. media, so the population is still constantly exposed to the old system, unlike in, say, geographically isolated Australia where it was much easier to simply ban use of Imperial.
* Canada role as the airplane manufacturing/flight training center for most of the British Empire and the fact that his uniform seems to include a parachute, he's probably a bombardier or navigator, so the goggles aren't totally superfluous.
* Canada's 14A video rating is widely applied to home video releases of TV series and can be found on family-friendly shows that have aired with a PG in the US, all the way up to sexually-explicit series that have aired with a TV-MA in the US.
* Canada's Drag Race because Tynomi's reputation preceded her. But once the season was underway, it turned out competition was not her strong suit. She only lasted four episodes and performed poorly enough to land in the bottom for three of them, and you can see her resolve crumble each episode until her elimination.
* Canada's Drag Race with a wicked grin, scaring the crap out of the other queens.
* Canada's first working helicopter was made by the Froebes: three brothers who were western Manitoba farmers and aviation enthusiasts. The only part that they didn't make themselves was the engine, which was taken off one of their (full-sized) kit planes. Prior to the helicopter, they had built several human-powered ornithopter prototypes literally recycling trash from the farm - however, none of those actually
* Canada's iconic coffee'n'donut chain has equally pervasive taglines: "You've always got time for Tim Hortons!". Alternatively, "Always Fresh at Tim Hortons!" Not to mention the almost unbearably heartwarming campaign linking Tim's iconic status to warm family memories...
* Canada's military follows this as well, having the troops line up for food in order of lowest ranks to highest ranks. It's a tradition dating back to a Captain in a PW Camp who, by enforcing such a policy (and often going hungry himself for the sake of the others), was able to earn the trust of the other prisoners, take charge, and eventually lead a successful escape.
* Canada's military is fully integrated and has been since 2001 when the last holdout (submarine service, for the entirely practical reason they didn't have submarines equipped for female crew members until then) had its prohibition against women serving aboard lifted.
* Canada's national customs authority has this reputation for being homophobic bluenoses; it used court rulings about material depicting "violence against women" as somehow encompassing male gay erotica.
* Canada's Worst Driver, a contestant accidentally popped the hood while trying to start his car.
* Canada's Worst Driver by graduating, going on to become a racing driver, and winning his first race. Bad. Ass.
* Canada's Worst Driver. By the final episode, he looked like a slob, wearing a torn wifebeater and some facial stubble.
* Canada's Worst Driver challenge, Jacob comments that the smoke coming out of the car "smells like burning babies". (It was actually the smell of a destroyed gearbox ... or, as Andrew put it, "the smell of burning money".)

* Canada's Worst Driver has no shortage of the truly clueless. Andrew Younghusband often wonders how in tarnation they get their drivers licenses, and Season 4 was a toss-up between a ditz and a road rager.
* Canada's Worst Driver: In season 5, one contestant was reminiscing about playing "Shopping Cart Hockey" with his friends — and they incorporated it into the show, with the contestants using their cars to push a shopping cart down a road and through a goal. They liked it so much, they have used several variations since then (but not with actual shopping carts).
* Canada's Worst Driver is set in an abandoned prison complex. In the first episode, the drivers who have engaged in outright criminal driving behavior in the past are placed in prison cells for a few minutes to drive home what could happen to them if they don't shape up.
* Canada's Worst Driver is similar, except that there is no elimination.
* Canada's Worst Driver; it's mentioned only when a driver fails to fullfil this.
* Canada's Worst Driver of the show "Look where you wanna go," before waking up and saying he had a nightmare about all of the worst drivers they ever had coming back to the rehabilitation center.
* Canada's Worst Driver opens with host Andrew Younghusband "operating" on the Camaro that was the hero car for the season, with it supposedly hooked up to the electrocardiogram. Despite his best efforts with the jumper cables ("Don't you do this to me!"), it flatlines.
* Canada's Worst Driver: Season 4 was filmed at a closed correctional facility. The show photographed the bad drivers mugshot-style for all the intros.
* Canada's Worst Driver, the Worst Driver trophy is generally given to the contestant who did the worst on the final challenge, regardless of how well (or badly) they did on the earlier challenges. The final challenge is driving on public roads, which is by far the most important test of the person's driving ability.
* Canada's Worst Driver what happens when they do a challenge that involves using a manual transmission; ground gears, burned clutches, and the like.
* Canada's Worst Driver? Yes, that was shown, and yes, the door over the cap was open. She returned for the all-star season 9 along with season 6 runner-up Dale, with neither one having gotten any better.
* Canada's Worst Handyman. Five handymen are taken to a building in need of renovation with the person that nominated them. They are given a series of challenges, ranging from making a worktable to installing a ceiling fan to installing disco balls. The show also includes several challenges where all five handymen are brought together to do a larger project. The end of each episode includes ‘Most Improved’ who leads the next group challenge and ‘The Worst’ who is given ‘homework’ to do with the host. At the end of a season, the host and two experts decide that season’s worst.
* Canada's X-Treme Sports was shut down after financial troubles during the Great Recession.
* Canada. The Canadian military allows women to fill all the same positions as men, apart from a very few positions on their older submarines that lack facilities for female crew members. Female soldiers were among the numerous Canadian troops fighting in Afghanistan, alongside with men.
* Canada. The last bit is true, and it can sometimes manifest itself violently (contradicting the nice-guy stereotype):
* Canada-USA-Mexico hostilities are a calling card of Monterrey based LLF. It started because many luchadoras were discouraged or blocked from working for LLF when it began due to more established area promoters being hostile to it, so LLF ended up contacting groups north of the border such as Special Events and Glory to

This is even funnier when you remember that actor John Candy (who says the line) is Canadian.
* Canadian Bacon, but the Canadians actually end up "winning" the war.
* Canadian Bacon, by means of lying that the equipment is meant for climate measurement, R.J. Hacker manages to install the "Hellstorm" computer (which would trigger the launch of every nuclear silo in America) on the top of Toronto's CN Tower.
* Canadian Bacon, in order to shift the blame from the current President to the hypothetical enemy. Besides a massive propaganda campaign, they send a squad of troops in Canadian uniforms to sabotage the Niagara Falls power plant. Unknown to them, the local sheriff believes all the anti-Canadian propaganda and organizes a militia to defend his town, including the power plant. The saboteurs are caught before they can do any damage. Despite this, the operation still succeeds, as the news of the attempt achieves the same result as actual sabotage.
* Canadian Bacon), one of Candy's friends says "We're your worst nightmare." The mountie then proceeds to ramble his actual worst nightmare, a dream where he was lost in the Yukon being chased by wolves, and there were these tall skinny rabbits...
* Canadian Bacon the Canadian-American war ends before hostilities can even begin when the Americans realize that all their nuclear weapons can be remotely controlled from Toronto. The American President surrenders to the Canadian Prime Minister who is not even aware that anything out of the ordinary is happening.
* Canadian Bacon, the government of the U.S.A. tries to curb economic recession and civilian discontent by renewing the Cold War. When it turns out that Russia is not interested in playing along, the United States government and the media embark on a campaign to unite Americans in a hatred of Canada, of all countries. * Canadian Football League: Either they scored and won, or they missed, called the penalty, and got to try again much closer.
* Canadian Football League, it was possible for all four teams in one of the two four-team divisions to make the playoffs if the fourth-place team in one division had a better record than the third-place team in the other (known as the crossover, the fourth-place team fills in the playoff spot of the team it replaces in the opposite division).
* Canadian Football League starting in the 1984 season, but it was contingent on meeting certain goals, including the financing and construction of a 30,000-seat stadium. The ownership group wrestled with various government entities, who refused to provide any government funding for the stadium. With no stadium plan in place when they reached a league deadline for it in 1983, the application was withdrawn. The Atlantic Schooners name has been revived for other CFL expansion efforts, including one currently in the tentative planning stages.
* Canadian Football League team, the Montreal Alouettes, are also a Legacy Team. The previous Montreal Alouettes folded in 1982, played under a new name from 82-85, came back as the Alouettes in 1986, and then folded again in 1987. The US expansion team, the Baltimore Stallions, moved to Montreal in 1996 and took up the Alouette name.

* Canadian Football League, the Grey Cup championship game is held at a predetermined location; however, with only nine teams in the league and six of them making the playoffs, it's not uncommon for a team to play for the Grey Cup in their home stadium.
* Canadian Football League, the Saskatchewan Roughriders are known for their hardcore fanbase. Many Saskatchewanians have moved to Alberta for various reasons, to the point that Roughriders flags, banners and clothing can be almost as common-if not more so-in the Alberta CFL cities of Edmonton and Calgary as the merchandise of those cities' own teams. But the most common form of someone cheering the away team are fans so devoted to the team that they attend EVERY game, and even travel to the places where their teams away games are.
* Canadian Football League which had, for a number of years, one team called the Roughriders (one word) and another called the Rough Riders (two words). (This is because the CFL was formed by the merger of two smaller leagues, each of which had a team with that name at the time.) The Ottawa Rough Riders have long since shut down as a team; there was a short lived team in Ottawa from 2002 to 2005 called the Renegades, and the current team launched in 2014 is now known as the Redblacks. While the Redblacks' owners acquired the intellectual property rights to their predecessor team, the Saskatchewan Roughriders precluded the usage of the name.

* Canadian Prime Minister-in-Chief Pierre Trudeau generated innumerable memes in his day, from "Just watch me" to pirouetting behind the Queen at Buckingham Palace.
* Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper's attack ads aimed at Liberal Party leader Michael Ignatieff include the quote "No one speaks for the Liberal Party of Canada, but me", which was clearly taken out of context from when he was trying to establish his credibility as the leader of the party, though it is presented with the intent of making Ignatieff seem like a control freak. Harper himself is noted by analysts as having won his position by means of his extremely tight control of the Conservative spin machine. The pot calling the kettle black?

As such, TSN2 would also be used to off-load other live events that couldn't be shown on the main TSN channel due to other commitments. While competing sports networks complained that TSN was abusing this ability to create extra advertising revenue, the CRTC (like the FCC, except that they also regulate specialty services too) decided there was no wrongdoing, and then decided to reduce exclusivity restrictions for sports and news channels, and amending TSN's license to simply say it can operate multiple feeds without much restriction. Following the change, TSN2's schedule began to become more autonomous from its flagship, much like its American equivalent

* Can also apply when wrestlers are allowed to essentially be themselves cranked
* Can also be interpreted as a subversion by savvy readers: the spark is very much _not_ science, it's a blatantly magical force which no one but the original user can reproduce that coincidentally mostly produces physical objects which superficially appear mechanical. The few sparks who can treat the spark as actual science (that is, work out the principles, write them down comprehensibly, and explain them such that others can reproduce them) can be counted on one hand and are treated as problem-solvers of the highest caliber worthy of even enemies' respect: the Wulfenbachs, Van Rijin, and possibly the Storm King.

* Can also be somewhat true in real sparring and fighting situations by attacking overwhelmingly enough that the opponent goes entirely on the defensive. You don't have to defend yourself if the opponent is too busy ducking and dodging to fight back. Better hope your opponent is weak in defense, though, since attacking takes far more effort. In an unarmed striking fight, if you don't win before you tire out, you're at his mercy.
* Can also be used, as ironic as it sounds, to actually LIGHTEN the mood during certain parts of boot camp. In some situations (particularly in later phases of boot camp, when the recruits are more respected by the drill instructors), D.Is may increase their use of "comedic" hazing of recruits for nothing more than a brief easing of the mood, and some platoon lore to bounce around among recruits. Can also help to build camaraderie.
* can also be used to grow crops really fast, but this feature is not generally made use of because it exhausts the soil within a couple of years.

* Can also happen when children can use their household smart speaker. One little girl bought a dollhouse and a stack of toys by asking Alexa for them. Her parents first planned to return the toys, but turned it into a teachable moment by taking the girl to donate them to a children's hospital.
* Can also happen when you go to another culture. Even if you speak the language, the complexities of social interaction can take a while to learn, and it'll often involve a lot of unintentional insults to the people whose country you're in before you figure out what you should and should not do.

* Can be a valid tactic in the series due to the inaccuracy of guns, provided you have a general with enough morale bonuses under his belt. Works a little less well against cannons. Does not work at all, for obvious reasons, in the Napoleonic conversion.
* can be beaten, but it is exceedingly difficult and usually just ends up delaying the inevitable. Even if you seemingly defeat Fate (such as, say, by croaking the unit that was supposed to croak you), it will usually just be replaced with a different Fate that is even worse for you.
* can be brought back. Gaea restored the Gorgons by unknown means, and the essence of Helios temporarily managed to cling onto Earth due to sheer hatred.
* can because the universe protects itself by making the fighter massively unlucky.
* Can be directly controlled by the second player if the game supports
* Can be done a couple of times, although you still want to complete all quests because of the experience bonus. Especially since the game's extremely steep level and equipment curve means that almost any area you're not supposed to be is going to be a solid
* Can be done at the player's discretion at the climax of the Blood Lobster sidequest in
* Can be done on any mission that does not require every foe on the map to be defeated as long as the players have Stealth or at least one has Stealth and the ability to teleport their teammates to their location. Stealth can be taken by any character by level 6, and the Stalker archetype has it as a required power at level 1. However, some enemies later in the game have + perception powers that allow them to see through stealth as well as some maps featuring obstacles that will suppress stealth if the player gets too close to them.
* can be either male or female, which would effectively double the amount of dialogue to be voiced.
* can be explained within the context of their own culture, they are often bafflingly odd from a Western point of view:
* can be funny when she's being sarcastic or arrogant, but her jokes are never funny.
* can be interpreted as how she pretended to give up only as part of a plan to save her friends, ripped his clothes as torture (which, for dress-up doll like her must be quite serious) and how she had just stood up against Lotso and pointed that a leader should be chosen.
* can be interpreted to concern the singer instigating a breakup with a popular girl or celebrity.
* can be introduced into human cells (which could be considered a kind of controlled mutation) and this makes the human cells more resistant to radiation.

* can be recruited to other houses outside the Golden Deer, perhaps because she's far more easygoing than the two guys deeply devoted to their superiors. Furthermore, she's also the only retainer who has Support conversations with some students of other classes (and not just Church of Seiros members, whom Hubert and Dedue can support with outside their own houses), and her paralogue battle is the only one that can be done either in Part 1 or Part 2 (barring Anna's, who must be downloaded).
* Can be seen later in Fry's relationship with Turanga Leela. Leela is very organized and rather neurotic. She even makes her meals a month in advance and freezes them and has a rather spartan apartment. Despite this, she and Fry fall in love and remain very close.
* can be set on fire, but if the vehicle is moving faster than about five miles an hour, the flame will never catch up with it, and even if it did, the gas tank won't explode.
* can be skipped for the sake of attendees that aren't physically capable of doing them.
* , can be supported by smaller units ranging from musketmen to archers to swordsmen. If a ranged supporting unit is charged by the enemy, the shooters can flee and lead the foe into the waiting weapons of their "parent" unit, or if the parent unit is charged, ranged units can hit the enemy with missile fire at point-blank range. Supporting close combat units, meanwhile, can either counter-charge or launch a supporting charge, attacking the flanks of whatever enemy their parent unit is fighting.
* can be this sort of witch, if they want. They are not bound to do it, but all the child-smelling, cauldron-bubbling goodness is there in their basic class features.
* can be thrown Gauntlets of Ogre Power to make use of its full power), and the Maul of the Titans (which was inexplicably statted as a greatclub instead of a two-handed hammer, it dealt extra damage to items and structures).

* Can-Can artist from Bulgaria with an unspellable name, a weird accent and a collection of mangled proverbs for all occasions.
* "Can Can" (from a scene where people are partying in hell). Offenbach's "Orpheus" is itself a spoof of another opera, Christoph Willibald Gluck's "Orpheo et Eurydice". Camille Saint Saens spoofed this one in "Carnival of the Animals" too, slowing it down to provide the melody for "Tortoises".

* Can-Can, struggling artist Boris arranges to have his work seen by an influential art critic, then waits anxiously for the critic's review to appear in the newspaper. The review begins by talking about the joy of discovering a fresh new talent — before saying that in Boris's case he got no joy because Boris has no talent whatever, then proceeding to rip his work to shreds.

* Cancer. If there's even just a few cancerous cells left in an individual, they'll continue to rampantly grow and divide and continue the disease. This is why metastasized cancers are so dangerous, it's
* Cancer is an example of a failsafe failure of a failsafe failure of a failsafe failure of a failsafe failure. Precancerous cells are a normal occurrence in the human body due to imperfections in DNA replication. Fortunately human cells have proliferation control mechanisms, though failures in these systems can cause inappropriate cell division. On top of this, cells have other control mechanisms such as cell contact signals that stop cell division, cell survival signals, immuno-detection of cancerous cells, telomeres limiting the number of cell replications. These other failsafes are overcome by natural selection and the law of large numbers though, further compounding mutations during DNA replication in subsequent generations of the cell line.
* cancer It grows at a rate of about a ton per year, all told, and can overrun other petri dishes in the same labs it's kept in if decontamination protocols are lax. One can only imagine what could happen if a researcher was lax enough to contaminate themselves with it...
* cancer itself. It's a cell that refuses to stop dividing, and the errors that led to the situation cascade, resulting in an ever-growing — and worse, ever-changing, making it devilishly hard to treat — mass of aberrant tissue that eventually sucks all the nutrients from the body. It can even spread to other body parts, in a process called "metastasis." Of course, the patient usually dies before their whole body is transformed into mutant cells.
* Cancer Lucrenian is disgusted with the world and her whole motive is to complete Project Omega so it can destroy it. * Candace and Jeremy seem to be a canon example, though for a long time it was hard to tell if Jeremy even liked her back. Season two made it a bit more obvious that he was nervous around her, with the episode "Nerdy Dancing" specifically switching their usual dynamic (
* Candace and Jeremy share another in "Happy New Year" as they watch the fireworks.
* Candace and Ryan are initially introduced as a platonic friendship, however they eventually realise their feelings for each other and seal their relationship with a kiss at the end of Season 6.
* Candace Bailey. Both girls also have histories of loudly and proudly burping off the show.
* Candace Bergen has stated that as a young child she felt an intense "sibling rivalry" with an inanimate object: her ventriloquist father Edgar's famous dummy Charley McCarthy.
* Candace Cameron Bure (Stephanie), who resemble each other enough that they easily pass for sisters.
* Candace described reading as something people did before they invented fun.
* Candace did not appear at all in "Phineas and Ferb Musical Cliptastic Countdown" (Not counting any of the songs), "Bully Bromance Breakup", "Road to Danville", "Doof 101", and "Bee Story". Interestingly, "Isabella and the Temple of Sap" and "Bee Story" are both episodes centered on Pinky the Chihuahua and Professor Poofenplotz.
* Candace does a similar thing at the beginning of "The Flying Fishmonger".
* Candace doesn't. Linda decides she is hallucinating from lack of sleep, as she has hallucinated twice already, and goes to bed.

* Candace gives a false witness account to Misty on behalf of Mariah. Mariah does send Benjamin Donovan to Candace to make sure her story stays straight, but Misty tries to pressure her into ignoring the lawyer's advice and coming clean.
* Candace had one in "Bowl-R-Ama Drama". Apparently, she believes that busting her brothers will result in her being allowed to use Dad's credit card ("You have our permission to ruin us financially.") and Jeremy proposing to her.

* Candace herself flips out pretty much any time Jeremy is seen with another girl. Or a guy who kinda looks like a girl from the back, for that matter.
* Candace is also held hostage in Season 8 at the same hotel that her parents were in Season 4.
* Candace is always trying to bust her brothers but never succeeds, instead she's getting either injured or humiliated. This is the "unlucky" variant, as her brothers do nothing to stop her, and usually don't seem to share her belief that they'd be in trouble if she succeeded.
* Candace is doing this in "One Good Scare Oughta Do It!" while she was being chased by the attractions inside Phineas and Ferb's haunted house.
* Candace is extremely obsessive over busting her brothers and will do crazy things to do so -– she also loses her sense of self when they're doing nothing "bust-worthy". "
* Candace only has one guy for her: Jeremy Johnson (with one exception in "A Hard Day's Knight" in which she had a crush on Charles... who happened to resemble Jeremy to the T).
* Candace performs "Queen of Mars" on... her martian subjects. She later complains that "Every part of their bodies is an instrument, and they never invented music! Martians are lame!"

* Canderous Ordo is human, but also member of Mandalorian Clan. Mandalorians are treated as a different race, he is a defeated enemy. He falls under the Defector category, as many of the defeated Mandalorians have become brigands who prey on farmers and weaker opponents. As far as Canderous is concerned, they've forfeited the honor of wearing the armor.
* Can Dialectics Break Bricks? is redubbed by a group of French, um, Situationists into a narrative about the hypocrisy of the bourgeois communists. Complete with ridiculous fight scenes, lots of misused swears (the French group inexplicably used English for their redub), and a running joke about the hero being a pedophile.

* Candice Michelle being the only female to be named "Most Improved Wrestler of the Year" by Pro Wrestling Illustrated, her wrestling career ended shortly after several injuries derailed her momentum, so most fans tend to overlook her in-ring work and focus solely on her more fanservice-y moments. The fact that she was also a softcore porn actress, Playboy model, and the former Go Daddy girl doesn't help.
* Candice Michelle in one of these by holding her head under the chocolate pudding until she tapped out to keep from drowning.

* Candice Michelle is sometimes mistaken for a light-skinned black woman, but she's actually mixed white and Costa Rican.
* Candice Michelle was forced to retire from complications from a broken clavicle.
* Candice Michelle was infamous for accepting both Candace and Candice without preference, though the latter is most often accepted as the proper spelling.
* Candice Michelle was introduced as a backstage make-up artist late in 2004 and appeared in random backstage segments for a while before becoming a prominent character on TV.
* Candice set up a fixed, unwinnable version of this trope with her illusion powers in season 1 of * Candid Camera called the "Kirward Derby"). Ward's response? "Please sue us, we love the publicity." Kirby dropped it because his case wasn't strong enough.
* Candid Camera had a segment revolving around this trope, in which people were offered a spoon with a cup of coffee. The spoon was made of something whose melting temperature was below the temperature of the coffee.
* Candid Camera Prank. A woman enters a hedge maze, and men dressed as bushes keeping moving around, changing the maze to confuse her.
* Candid Camera: Right as the guy found the answer to a question about a show where people are pranked on tape.
* Candid Camera used the premise for a prank. The victim was the only one in the waiting room, but he was told to take a number and wait for it to be called. He was number 36. At first she paused between numbers, even though nobody was there to answer. As she got close to his, she started calling them out in rapid succession and eventually skipped over him. "Who's got 30? Anybody? 31... 32... 33... 34-35-36-37.... 38? Who's got 38?"
* Candide above) — while a lot of the characters change identities in the book, he becomes a Jesuit but is also at some points a military leader (not surprisingly, as he was written as a Take That against Frederick the Great).
* Candide all contributed a little, but finally, Richard Wilbur became the principal lyricist and rewrote many of the Latouche songs.
* Candide, Dr. Pangloss gets in a few optimistic words as he stands on the gibbet, just before the executioner releases the trap:
* Candide execution of the British Admiral Byng, whom Voltaire had met, for alleged cowardice in battle.
* Candide had to remove or redo certain gags that referenced Christian imagery and poked fun at Prime Minister Viktor Orbán's obsession with football stadiums and personal railways. Even after these changes had been made, state media still refused to air the show.
* Candide has horrible things happening to almost all of the characters. Several times one character is forced to flee abandoning others to gruesome deaths. But as they often manage some to survive in some incredibly improbable way as it progresses the horrible events become funny.
* Candide has the comic ballad "What's the Use?" The Old Lady, who operates a rigged roulette wheel, is exploited by her employer, who pays protection to a police chief, who is being blackmailed by a crook, who has a terrible roulette habit.
* Candide other examples in the book is Dr. Pangloss's thoughts on having caught syphilis, and having had an eye and an ear removed as part of the treatment:
* Candide published in 1759 had this in the story. The heroes rescue some women running from apes and it turns out the apes were their husbands.
* Candide satisfaction in his new life. "We must all tend our garden."
* Candide, when Candide and Cacambo spend a month in the golden city of El Dorado. However, Cunegonde is not in this city, and so Candide is ultimately unhappy and decides to leave with an enormous amount of gold.
* Candide, when the Bulgars and Avars go to war, each side burns the other's towns and disembowels and rapes their inhabitants, all in accordance with international law. Cunegonde is reported by Pangloss to be one of the many victims of Bulgar gang-rape and disembowelment, though she turns out not to have been killed but sold into slavery.

* Candide where a narrator tells the audience that a female character is raped. The extras playing soldiers shadow her, then toss her in the air at which point she screams out. The narrator then says just, "Repeatedly." She's tossed up again, and her next shout is not exactly... displeased... with what's going on.
* Candide with "Make Our Garden Grow", but even then the trope was already long forgotten and nobody outside of some old fogies and opera buffs would have recognized the trope.
* Candies N Curses, enemies use one of three elements. The element used is indicated by the color of their border — Blue border means physical, yellow means fire, and green means poison.
* Candies N Curses: Jack is a ghost with a pumpkin for a head. He is the boss of Botanical Ballroom and attacks with vines and exploding pumpkins.
* Candi had a few characters trying this out, but it eventually gets too complicated.
* Candi her boyfriend and winds up falling for him during her scheme to break them up to help Candi.
* Candi. He seems to be getting more static and more dense with every appearance. Not that he was ever much more than "Candi's boyfriend" before.
* Candi, Jess insists that the easily-affectionate title character hug her so that Jess can get over her instinctually violent response to physical contact. When Candi refuses out of fear, Jess chases her through the house and finally delivers a flying-tackle glomp. Candi then hugs her back, thinking "Amateur."
* Can disarm nine-foot-long nuclear weapons with only 20 seconds and minimal assistance for the greater good of the planet.
* Candi Staton: While she's had considerable success as an R&B artist, as a mainstream artist she reached the top 20 just twice in her career: Her 1970 cover of Tammy Wynette's "Stand By Your Man" and in 1976 her pop-disco smash "Young Hearts Run Free."
* Candi was Jon and Candi watching him make out with Trevor on the dance floor.
* Candi, when accosted by the Squirrel Mafia, Candi's first reaction is to try and hug them all.
* Candle Cove are about "children's shows" that quickly gain a darkly supernatural bent.
* Candle Cove, Janice asks the Skin Taker why his jaw moves back and forth, he looks at the camera, not her to give his answer "to grind your skin".
* Candle Cove often threatened Pirate Percy and Janice — although he couldn't get away with it on a kids' show.
* Candle Cove starts out playing this trope straight, but then we learn about all the gory details.
* Candle Cove when the participants in the story remember some profoundly scary things from the show.
* Candle Jack, where sentences don't complete. Remember what was said about 'losing' its entertainment value? Seriously, it gets really old really fa
* Candlelit Bath: A characters draws a relaxing bath to make the cares and stresses melt away and wash away.
* Candlelit Bath has been cited by many fire departments as one modern cause of fatal house fires in the United States, especially in homes where the bathroom walls aren't tiled. Lighting a bunch of candles and sticking them next to a painted wall, then falling asleep... how relaxing!
* Candle of Anti-Light, is a candle that "sheds magical darkness in a 10 foot radius."
* Candleshoe has the main character attempting to find a hidden treasure in a mansion using a series of clues.
* Candleshoe, Jodie Foster's character gets frustrated while searching for a clue in a book and nearly throws it out the window...only to realize that the clue was referring to the church graveyard she can see from it.
* Candleshoe, the group does the usual "toss the villains out and move the furniture to block the door" stunt, but the baddies reappear through the open door at the opposite end of the room.

* Candlewick Press' "Ology" series, featuring such titles as "Dragonology," "Egyptology," "Wizardology," etc. Many even feature a few spells, particularly the last one mentioned above.
* can-do due-diligence gung-ho attitude was ultimately not very compatible with the nonsensical herd instinct of the Hollywood folks.
* can do it, but it takes a huge number of ships and several years, with the idea of glassing every square millimeter of an entire planet being pure UNSC propaganda. In practice, the Covies primarily focus on glassing population centers, and burn just enough criss crossing orbits across the rest of the planet to let the convection kill off anyone who managed to avoid being directly fired upon. Still, while the planet might not be completely glassed, it will still require lengthy and costly re-terraforming before it is anything close to habitable again.
* can do, Luffy replies "I can beat you." This encourages everyone watching the fight and infuriates Arlong.
* "Candor" take over the alien ghetto of Kandor -not to be confused with the self-named Bottle City- and maintain the populace subdued by means of frequent floggings.
* Candorville, and only in late 2010 were the urban fantasy strips finally mixed in with the other strips rather than segregated into a few story arcs.
* Candorville. As time passed on, however, the nonsense moments not only have gotten more frequent, but seem to have stopped being classified as such to become "canon". At the same time, in what seems to be an unrelated process, the previously unimportant character of Saxon Kenchu set up a comedic horror plot that has been declared to be his insanity, then declared actually true, then declared to be the main character's insanity, then indicated to be true after all, with no end in sight.
* Candorville because of his mom's poor grammar. Currently he's got enough foresight to NOT correct his college crush's grammar, but not the judge overseeing his custody case (he thinks knowing law lingo is endearing).
* Candorville by Lemont: he cites this trope as the reason he can't hook up with Susan.
* Candorville Clyde feels that his friend Susan has been making poor decisions lately.
* Candorville" is a loudmouth and a fearmonger, but "The Internet" is paranoid and dubiously sane.
* Candorville: Lemont's answering machine always identifies the caller, usually "Mom" or "creditor." To the latter, he tends to mention his lack of funds. To the former, he's painfully self-effacing and apologetic for not living up to her expectations.
* Candorville on this but accidentally undermines himself by talking about how the two characters make each other feel complete.
* Candorville- Roxanne considers the villain of almost any movie to be the real hero.
* Candorville's fictional portrayal of slum life taught more people more about the slums than [mumble]'s factual reporting. Lemont, unable to hear him, asks "Who?" King responds "Exactly," and both wind up confused.
* Candorville. She's also somewhat of a deconstruction in that she's never shown love for him, only a desire to control him and have him obey her every whim.
* Candorville takes a darker-than-usual approach to this, as shown on the quotes page.
* Candorville with Susan, but when she noticed and asked about it, he told her that "all my stories are completely fictional." Clyde appeared and informed Lemont that he'd read, and found hilarious, Lemont's story about a guy named Clive who's too stupid to realize when other people are talking about him.
* can do the same thing with mirrors, lightbulbs, and transparent acetate sheets, and have been in use since the 1940s. You can even use dry-erase markers to mark the screen as you lecture.
* can do this to characters they don't like., it's outright necessary to access the gaiden chapters.

* can: during an important escort mission, the known enemy is suddenly and unexpectedly taken out by untargetable ships nearly impervious to the primary weapons available, who then turn on you. It is rather hard to destroy the strange ships... but if one pulls it off, the debriefing hails it as proving that the new enemy rampaging unchecked through Terran and Vasudan space can be hurt.
* Can during the Damo Suzuki years. Very much intentional - Damo pretty much sang whichever syllables he felt like singing at any given moment, regardless of whether they formed words or were clearly articulated. ("Did anybody see the snowman? Stannah wit deleeeeaux.")
* Candy Boy designed. Kanade replies, to herself, with "Wait, why is there only one bed?" with an obviously annoyed look on her face.
* Candy Boy initially appears to be quite unpleasant to her older sister Kanade. She becomes less annoying once we see the reason for her behavior, though.
* Candy Boy is an odd case. It was originally just an original net animation used to promote a music video. However, the concept for the show proved popular enough that more episodes were created.
* Candy Boy: Kanade, the "younger" twin sister, wears glasses. However, in most of her appearances, she wears contact lenses instead.
* Candy Boy loves sweets so much that she can be bribed with them — much to the dismay of her twin sister Kanade.
* Candy can cause extremely intense hallucinations of pleasurable experiences tailored to her victim, which causes them to permanently hate those experiences afterward.
* Candy Candy, Anthony's death is predicted by a fortuneteller, who repeats the lecture several times.
* Candy Candy: Both Patty and Stear. One adorably hilarious scene has both of them losing their glasses during a ball and trying to dance without them on anyway.
* Candy Candy covers Candy's whole life since she was taken in by Miss Pony and Sister Maria as a baby, until she's at least in her twenties.
* Candy Candy for Candy and her friends — not to mention the introduction of another boy who's sent there by his father, Terry Granchester.
* Candy Candy, Mr. Leagan, and Candy herself after she's adopted by the Ardleys.
* Candy Candy of the clan, refusing to bend over to the aristocrats and then deciding to become a nurse without their support.
* Candy), Candy's father is also one of her teachers. In an inversion, he's the one embarrassed by her, even though the wacky hijinks that happen to her aren't her fault.
* Candy Candy; when Candy is working at Joseph Hospital in New York City, Eliza frequently uses her family's connections to hospital to interfere with Candy's work life and Eliza's mother, Mrs. Leagan, gets Candy fired from her job by threatening to withdraw her family's funding if Candy remains employed there, simply because she disapproves of her son Neil having fallen in love with her.

* Candy Crush Saga, every break. The same thing happened on CBS' Dream Team block during winter of 2014, where sometimes, the ads would not only play every break, but they would sometimes have two different King Games ads during each break, or two played in a row.
* Candy Crush Saga held exclusive rights to the word "candy" in app titles, and tried to file for rights of the word "saga". They later gave up on the latter (due to them attempting to sue several companies using "saga" in their products, which created quite a backdraft), and gave up the rights for the former a month later as a result.
* Candy Crush Saga, which exist just for the purpose of draining your wallet, with certain in-game purchases going about ten times your average in-app purchase.
* Candy dances with Anthony's cousin Archie, but that one goes more into funny

* Candy, Dan comes home from work to find that Candy, in her mental breakdown, has scrawled an epic poem about their relationship over every wall in the house.
* Candy, Dan gives up on Candy because he knows that if they stay together, he's going to drag her back into addiction.
* Candyfloss - a doll who lives on a coconut shy at the fair is kidnapped by a vain, greedy little girl.
* Candy For Your Thoughts? Courtney due to the whole fiasco surrounding Duncan cheating on her with Gwen.
* Candy For Your Thoughts? filling the Deuteragonist/Tritagonist role.
* Candy For Your Thoughts?, Noah is brought back for the Niagara falls challenge instead of Blaineley. After that, he's eliminated, along with Owen. However, he proved to be vital for the chapter, as he sang a musical number with Owen that eventually got Cody to confess his love for Courtney.
* Candy For Your Thoughts? qualities, the handling of many contestants, and the finale's outcome). The latter fic even makes a few nods to the former.
* Candy For Your Thoughts?, when Alejandro is trying to convince Gwen to manipulate Cody:
* Candy from Strangers August Riordan is talking to a disdainful police detective.
* Candy Kong is the tallest female Kong of the Kong family, and the only Kong that is taller than her is Chunky Kong but then again, Chunky is
* Candy Land: Candy Land is totally unaffected by any player choice (so the youngest player has an equal chance to win), but the flow of the game is not at all suitable for gambling.
* Candyland has a backstory about the King being kidnapped by Lord Licorice and only two children from our world being able to find him, with gingerbread men (the playing pieces) acting as guides. Even as a child, did any of this matter when you were actually playing the game? No.
* Candy Land have gone through multiple redesigns. Princess Lolly in particular has changed designs, hair colors, hairstyles, clothing, and ages often. She's sometimes not even royalty.
* Candy Land VCR Board Game combined video with cards, where the goal was to collect the most cards. The video clips would hide clues, and the first person to match the clue to a card would collect that card.
* Candyland VHS game, "Don't Say Fluffypuffer", revolved around Candyland being invaded by the Fluffypuffer, a strange little creature that multiplied whenever someone said its name. The Candylanders eventually find a way to reverse the process and get rid of the duplicates, but the cartoon ends with the narrator saying "Fluffypuffer", then going "Uh-oh..." as the Fluffypuffer laughs mischievously.
* Candyman (2021) is not seen, but her voice is heard when Anthony listens to Helen's tapes at the library.
* Candyman and had the titular Candyman be the ghost of a Black man who was lynched for sleeping with a white woman.
* Candyman are terrifying. Not just for how disgusting they are (complete with excrement graffiti), but for the horrific attacks that happen there.
* Candyman, Candyman carries the heroine, Helen, like this. Just to underline the sexual element, this takes place after she has agreed to 'surrender' to him, and before he lies her down on a table/bed, slides his hook up her skirt - and kisses her.
* Candyman: Day of the Dead, it turns out that only Candyman's evil side has been vanquished, and his good side is held within a set of paintings, notably his own, and as everybody knows evil can't exist without good, so the paintings have to be destroyed to permanently kill him.
* Candyman: Day of the Dead. The said Candyman's good side is held within a set of paintings, notably his own, and as everybody knows evil can't exist without good, so the girl had to destroy the paintings to kill(?) him.
* Candyman does something similiar, though it substitutes bees for flies. Wherever bees swarm, the Candyman is nearby.

* Candyman during her first exploration of the "shrine" to Candyman at Cabrini Green, Helen finds a small heap of chocolates on the floor; one of them is found to contain a razor blade.
* Candyman: Farewell to the Flesh comes to learn that before Daniel Robitaille died and became the urban legend Candyman, his soul transferred into a mirror that was being held by his lover Caroline. That mirror must be destroyed in order to defeat him.
* Candyman: Farewell to the Flesh: The Candyman makes his return on Mardis Gras evening.
* Candyman features at least one of these that's keeping the spirit of the eponymous villain alive:
* Candyman has become a vengeful spirit who can be summoned by saying her name five times while facing a mirror.
* Candyman has Helen Lyle framed for the kidnapping of a baby and multiple murders, the first of which never would have happened if she hadn't picked up the meat cleaver used to slice off a dog's head. The second time is a subversion—the victim in question is killed with a hook, not a cleaver, but no one believes that a ghost is killing people in life.
* Candyman has the titular villain's origin be that he was murdered by a ruthless mob for his sleeping with a wealthy white man's daughter.
* Candyman is driven by a young woman investigating a local urban legend involving a Bloody Mary-like ghost.
* Candyman movie had many scenes set during the day. This includes when Candy Man himself first appears in a brightly-lit garage and many of the kills/gory scenes.
* Candyman novella which inspired it; he's actually summoned the same way as Bloody Mary. At first, anyway...
* Candyman: Played with. After Helen is arrested by the police on murder charges and informed of her Miranda rights, she asks for a phone call to contact her husband, but it's never stated that she has any rights to one or that it's the only one she'll get.
* Candyman series of movies, whose villain is based on the "Bloody Mary" legend.
* Candyman's preferred methods of murder, using his hooked hand to do the job.
* Candyman, the baby survives being kidnapped by Candyman, held prisoner in his lair, and, especially being on a burning sacrificial pyre. The protagonist actually dies due to injuries incurred on the pyre, but the baby lives.
* Candyman. The main character studying urban myths for graduate school discovers the legend of the titular Candyman, who can be summoned when his name is said in the mirror five times. Needless to say, Candyman is indeed summoned during Helen's investigation and shows himself, framing Helen for murder as well as killing her best friend and her therapist. Helen dies saving the life of a baby at the end, but she herself becomes immortalized and is just as vengeful as the Candyman in that she kills her cheating husband when he unknowingly summons her after her death.
* Candyman: When the Candyman opens his coat, he's revealed to be little more than a skeleton wreathed in the many thousands of bees that killed him.
* Candy Morningstar", everyone is flummoxed when Lucifer turns up with a ditzy blonde stripper that he's just married. Except for Maze, who's shown openly checking out Candy's ass as she bends over a table to do her makeup.
* Candy Mountain Massacre: The Cake Queen is the evil ruler of Candy Mountain who unleashed the plague that turned everyone evil.
* Candy remarks that Several Timez "won't last a week" in the woods after Mabel lets them go. Subverted in that they live on garbage and have become scavengers.
* Candy's reactions to being called out on her misandry seem to point to her being this way, too... though attempted rape is kind of pushing the definition of "innocent".
* Candy Stripe Nurses is a 1974 sexploitation soap opera/comedy about Candy Stripe hospital volunteers Marissa, Sandy, and Diane getting into raunchy shenanigans with their patients and doctor mentors.
* Candy Striper: As the use of untrained minors as an unpaid workforce in the health care field fell off, so too did instances of this trope in media.

* Candy Striper Clothing Pack (No. 10CP119), sized for the 8-inch modern Ginny Dolls.
* Candy Striper doll in a pink-and-white striped pinafore with "nurse play accessories," including a nurse's satchel, thermometer, stethoscope, and adhesive plasters.
* Candy Striper: Hospital volunteers who wear an iconic striped uniform while performing their duties.
* Candy Stripers adult Candy Stripers at the small-town Wucaipa General Hospital.
* Candy Stripers. It follows the adventures of a teen girl volunteering at her local hospital.
* Candy Wiki: A wiki about candy and sweets of all kinds. Sadly, it seems to have been abandoned.
* Cane. Alex Vega is in the house of his hated enemy Joe Samuels, when several gunshots from outside kill Samuels. The cops arrive shortly afterwards. The twist: Alex did have every intention of killing Samuels himself; the other shooter just beat him to it. The cops find the gun he was planning to use in his pocket. He points out that if they test it, they'll find that it hasn't been fired. The well-known feud between the two men, along with other evidence, leads to him being the prime suspect anyway, even to his own family.
* Can easily backfire though, if the victim is a history buff, and caught on to the plan (or was warned ahead of time by someone higher up), you might end up with
* Can easily be said about Dale Earnhardt Jr. when you consider that after that 2004 season, he had single wins in 2005 and 2006, then a 76 race winless streak from the spring Richmond race to the 2008 Lifelock 400 at Michigan, followed by a 143 race winless streak to the June 2012 Michigan race. A concussion that put him out for two races after Talladega made the last part of the season mediocre for him. Fortunately, Junior showed evidence of significant recovery, as he scored eight top tens in the 2013 Chase and scored the second-most points of all the Chase drivers behind Jimmie Johnson. He then broke a 55 race winless streak by winning the Daytona 500 again in 2014 and then proceeded to sweep both Pocono races.
* can easily be used to pull or choke somebody, and the jacket and pants are often of a cut that restricts movement.
* can eat just about anything. The worst they can get from eating dextro food is diarrhea.
* "Cane Crazy", the first to take place after "Anne or Beast?" and its sister episode "Best Fronds".
* Cane Fu beatdown from Jackson that only stopped when Jackson's own staff physically restrained him.
* Cane Toads are possibly the most notorious example to be found in Australian history. Originally imported to eliminate the native beetles that were damaging cane crops, the toads not only proved * can even admitting you're just there to "kill people and cause damage." The Hunter's companion Skage is a first-rate case of this in his own right.
* Cane wants to break out is because Count Dooku hired him to kidnap the chancellor. Rumors spread about the plan and it must've gotten to the Senate.
* can exist in the other world, and Star Swirl used it at least once to banish the Sirens there, who knows what other magical beings from Equestria have crossed over through the centuries? How many of them are still around?
* can fight fate, it just screws things up really, really, really badly.
* Cang Du and BG9 receive punishment from Jugram for losing in their fights. Jugram is able to
* can generate a lightning on shutdown, if the transferred charge cracks back through a path of conveniently ionized air. Relativistic electron beams self focus in air. This means that if combined with an electrolaser type system to aim them, you could make a long range and highly accurate lightning weapon that would also produce a hazardous amount of beta radiation (so you wouldn't want to hold one if you weren't very well armoured).
* can get a permit for demolishing a city. (More than likely, the offense didn't mean "non-licensed building demolitions".)

* can get more through the lottery in most games, but the default odds are 1 in 100,000.
* Can hair gel detonate in an oxygen-rich environment (such as a jet's cockpit) and * can handle herself in a fight), but it's not some average person off the street that can string together a massive fleet from multiple interstellar-capable races for the sake of fighting a galaxy-threatening menace.
* can happen, even in humans. It's just incredibly rare, due to the egg's sperm-excluding cortical reaction, and the resulting triploid zygote cannot develop any further.
* Can happen in about any fantasy/sci-fi roleplaying game where humans are only one of the playable races.
* Can happen in a non-narrative way in almost any game that has kamikaze, shotgun, or otherwise one-hit-kill enemies if you're not paying attention. One of the most well-known examples of this are the Creepers in
* Can happen in Congress and legislatures occasionally. In one notorious instance, Republican senator Mitch McConnell managed to get caught filibustering his own bill after the Democrats agreed to his proposal.
* Can happen in internet forums and chats with someone who's relatively new to the group and happens to be a moderator. Especially when the admin gives the promotion simply because the person is a personal friend.
* Can happen in some other games, also—but of course, going down while taking the boss down counts as a loss. One famous example of this is the Egg Viper in
* Can happen in sports if the effort to secure a win leaves players either injured or too exhausted to continue competing successfully. In the 2014 NBA Western Conference Finals, the Oklahoma City Thunder beat the San Antonio Spurs decisively in two consecutive home games. The second game of the two was clearly going in the Thunder's favor from early on, and the Spurs had conceded defeat and opted to cut their losses by playing deep bench players with little experience (thereby giving their more experienced players rest for the next game). However, the unexpected tenacity of the Spurs' deep bench forced the Thunder to continue playing their starters for far longer than would normally be expected in a blowout win. As a result, the Thunders' starters were exhausted during the next game and lost by a wide margin — before ultimately losing the series.
* Can happen to a frog, toad, or chameleon that extends its tongue to capture a stinging insect or spider. Also to bears lapping honey from wild beehives, and to feeding anteaters, aardvarks or pangolins that keep on lapping up prey even after soldier ants or termites have mustered for a counterattack.
* Can happen to countries as well. When Japan and Japanese culture got popular amongst anime fans, people started to bash Japan by
* Can happen today with images with resolutions far larger than the average monitor. And can be
* can have fatal consequences" but some of the audience interpreted it as "There are no winners or losers on our roads. Excess speed kills."
* can have fully-rendered eel sprites not seen anywhere else in the game.
* can have Shepard be very cooperative with Cerberus, but because of how the game mechanics work, Shepard remains a wild card for them as well. And of course, because s/he's technically working for Cerberus, the Council and the Alliance don't really know where Shepard stands.
* can have special meaning in the law...but only when the capitals are assigned to a definition. This is because capital letters are one of a few common methods of indicating that a word being used is supposed to be a proper noun referring to a specific thing, rather than a common noun referring to a class of things. To give some common examples (in America anyway):
* can heal the heroes in just a few minutes, sometimes less. You just have to make sure they are still alive first.
* can hear to an extent (to what extent is unknown) by picking up vibrations from the air or ground through their bodies and processing them through the inner-ear.

In fact, loud noises can actually cause stress to snakes.
* Can Heironymus Merkin Ever Forget Mercy Humppe and Find True Happiness had "Oh, What a Son of a Bitch I Am", which appears on the soundtrack album but was cut from the film.
* can help convince Mordin to have a change of heart, as he is genuinely moved by the suffering of Krogan desperate to have children and carry on their culture. Depending on other choices, he might also have confidence in the new generation of Krogan leaders to be less warlike. In Mass Effect 3, he can even wind up giving his life in a Heroic Sacrifice.
* can hurt Superman. In the end, Bruno zaps Superman with a raygun that cripples him with pain, but then foolishly gloats about how he can kill him now for several seconds, buying enough time for Dan Turpin to tackle him before he can fire again.
* "Can I come, can I come, can I come, can I come, can I come, can I come, can I come, can I come, can I come..."
* Canimals are absolutely adorable little animals who hide in cans whenever humans are around.
* Canimals, the animated Canimals appear in live-action environments, and sometimes humans appear alongside them.
* Canim. The Ritualists as a whole are considered to be this (even by most of their own people) until they get fleshed out more in the last book, which reveals how they were once incredibly respected before gradually becoming corrupt over several generations; Master Marok, a sympathetic old-school Ritualist, is also introduced.
* Canim). The warriors are the ruling caste, something which the ritualists resent, but both warriors and ritualists claim that their class is actually subservient to the workers; they fight (and work magic) for the benefit of the populace. How much they genuinely mean this/live up to it varies from individual to individual.
* can include a metal spike going through his chest. Unusually for Greek myths, this has a happy ending; Heracles slew the eagle and broke the chains that held him.
* Canine Companion Snuff spends several days dragging the body from hiding place to hiding place toward the river, and is relieved when he is finally able to dump it in.
* canine people transformation. It later turns out the feline people they originally served have their own version called Beastification, which they use with more ease and more effectively.
* Canines Primary, Felines Secondary: A work features both cats and dogs, and the cats play second fiddle to the dogs in some way.
* Canis Latinicus for "stupid rocks" (Trolls) "garden gnomes" (Dwarfs) "bloodsuckers" (Vampires) and "good doggie!" (werewolves). After he disappeared, the Watch quietly closed the case as the list of potential suspects was too long, and in any case it was clear-cut suicide.
* Canis Latinicus, where the use of "Happy-ass Corp-ass" on the part of the character is deliberate — the character in question is highly intelligent, but his sergeant considers that a dangerous thing, so he deliberately dumbs himself down.
* Canis lupus, has been theorized to have originated from a timber wolf/coyote cross. This can also happen naturally.
* Canis Major: A dog, fox or wolf several times larger than normal, and capable of kicking several times more ass.
* Canis Major: domesticated dogs and cats which are, or somehow become, supersized even beyond the scale of their wild cousins.
* can is on full effect, as they are no more threatening (barring their larger HP) than your standard gangbanger.
* Canister shot was specifically developed to turn artillery into giant shotguns for use in the anti-infantry role. It was hideously effective, particularly in the era of Napoleonic warfare. Modern versions (for example, the
* can. It's the reverse reaction of glycolysis, the first part of the process our bodies use to oxidize glucose, and is used when our blood sugar level is low.
* can just go way over the top with moaning about it to make things angsty for their characters, which can pull the audience right out of the story if it's just too obvious and contrived.

* can kill a computer by standing within twenty feet of it several years later, implying that his increasing power is harder to suppress.
* can kill an idea, if you do it with a contrary one. Luffy's human (though we use that loosely) crew fighting to protect Fishman Island causes that idea to blow up in their faces.
* can like a horse, including time to just run around, and occasionally roll around in fields.
* Can listed among his primary instruments a dictaphone (a dictation machine that predates cassette recorders).
* can make the trope happen if his/her preferred romantic couples reach the highest level of support in stages that are covered in snow.
* "Can Manchester United score? They ALWAYS score...". It has been noticed many times that * can marry in the first game. As a nod to that, If Princess Remedy and Frallan are in the same match, and one grabs the other, they can press the taunt button to do a special "throw" (it's them kissing). Also, if specifically both of them are on the same team and win a match, there's not only unique dialogue, but a unique victory animation, neither of which plays if Remedy teams up with Frallan's alt character, Nuna.
* Can mesmerize mortals into doing their bidding, most often by looking straight into their eyes.
* cannabis sativa plant species, differs from marijuana in that it contains no more than 0.3 percent THC, so it doesn't give anybody a high, although it does have the non-psychoactive chemical CBD, which reportedly has health benefits and it calms people down. Hemp with Delta 8 THC is currently seen as the healthy alternative to marijuana, which normally has Delta 9 THC, with Delta 8 giving a less potent high (and also more of a "body high") than Delta 9, and it reportedly doesn't give its users feelings of paranoia and anxiety as does Delta 9. However, since Delta 8 is found in low quantities in hemp, companies that specialize in smokable hemp have to extract it from the plant and then find a way to produce it in larger quantities to make it profitable, useable, and yet have it still be legal according to what hemp growers can do with the plant according to the 2018 Farm Bill in the United States.
* Canned, by Alex Shearer, Fergal and Charlotte find a can containing the message "HELP", along with several cans containing some more gruesome clues.
* Canned Carrott had a fake 'End of Part One/Two' section and spoof ads. Being a BBC show, with no 'real' paid advertisements, the director had free rein to cut up real commercials and splice spoof sections in (like Jasper borrowing a friend's new Renault and taking it rallying, with predicable consequences), without any conflict of interest.
* Canned food. One can contains food that will keep a human being going for an entire day. It will remain edible for ten years or more in the can.
* Canned food originated for military purposes, as feeding an army is rather difficult. As Napoleon himself said, "An army marches on its stomach." During the first years of the Napoleonic Wars, the notable French newspaper
* "Canned hunts", in which the designated prey animal is released from a cage and prevented from leaving the area so a paying customer can shoot it, are an ugly modern variant of this trope.
* Canned Laughter. While the end credits rolled, the same quick laugh track was played over... and over... and over...
* can never end. It's said that if they turned their attention from one another they could easily conquer realspace, but it's only a very powerful mutual threat or the promise of drowning the galaxy into the Warp that can get them to stop fighting just long enough to team up.
* Cannibal (2009). Dora has done only a handful of public appearances and interviews, with his face and voice being distorted in video ones. His real name is kept secret because he has supposedly received death threats and could potentially be charged with criminal offenses relating to the content of his works. The only thing known about his life is that he is a vegetarian and a physician for a living.

* Cannibal Clan; although there is a slight supernatural edge to the piece — eating human flesh, it turns out, provides you with extended life and youthfulness — it's secondary to the actual threat.
* Cannibal Clan: The family that eats people together, stays together.
* Cannibal Clan to have been executed for the mass murder and cannibalization of over 1,000 people sometime around the 14/1500's.
* Cannibal Cop? Yes. Conspiracy to commit murder? No. The shadiest thing he did was use pictures of women (including his wife) without their knowledge and consent in his role-play scenarios, sleazy as hell, but if you were going to put him in jail for that you’d have to arrest half the internet. When he was initially arrested he refused a lawyer and decided to cooperate fully with the investigation, since he’d done nothing wrong and, as a police officer himself, he was sure that investigators would realise this was all a misunderstanding and clear him quickly. They didn’t.
* Cannibal Corpse. Additionally, Darrin Pfeiffer from Beyond Death went on to strike it similarly big with the pop-punk act Goldfinger.
* Cannibal Corpse know anything about their actual music rather than just about their controversial cover art.
* Cannibal Corpse's album covers and quite a number of their songs feature zombies (and the same goes for the bajillion gory death metal bands they inspired). The name itself, according to bassist Alex Webster, refers to a zombie who feeds on other zombies.
* Cannibal Corpse song or two. While most albums have some sort of individual motif or feel to distinguish them, that largely depends on who did the bulk of the writing, and they won't feature any major deviations from their established style. They have been accused of being formulaic due to this, but the typical fan response is that while they may be predictable, they're so good at what they do and have such strong chemistry as writers that it doesn't matter.
* Cannibal Films, both classic and contemporary, tend to liberally dole out blood and guts to emphasize the savagery of the cannibalistic antagonists and the vulnerability of the protagonists (who are frequently not action hero types), as well as to draw uncomfortable parallels between human flesh and animal meat. The gritty grindhouse aesthetic of older films in this subgenre was ultimately replaced with nauseatingly realistic special effects in newer media.
* Cannibal Film, which deals with a woman searching for her missing sister in the jungles of Sri Lanka, has a Jonestown-style cult as the primary antagonist, and the film ends with everyone in the cult killing themselves in Jonestown fashion.
* cannibal. He fled the hospital before the FBI agents who just arrived could catch him.
* Cannibal Holocaust, after enduring all kinds of ugly treatment from the film crew, up to and including murder, the Yanomamo tribe finally have enough after the crew gang-rape one of their women. Their revenge on the crew is anything but pretty.
* Cannibal Holocaust: Alan Yates and his crew go to various places to film sensationalist documentaries, and will gleefully torture, rape and people to get good shoots. In fact, Alan has to be reminded that the camera's rolling so he can hide his own crap-eating grin.
* Cannibal Holocaust. Deodato had to void the contracts of the actors in order to prove that they were alive and okay.
* Cannibal Holocaust: Director Ruggero Deodato appears sitting on a blanket in front of NYU.
* Cannibal Holocaust is now available uncut with an R18+, while various sequels are still banned.
* Cannibal Holocaust is one of the more infamous examples of this trope in cannibal films, featuring on-screen violence and deaths so realistic at the time that the director was accused of making a snuff film. In addition, the film has drawn fire for featuring six genuine animal deaths on-screen, and even though the snuff accusations were disproven, the film has been heavily censored or banned outright in several countries.

* Cannibal Holocaust: It is the most sick, vile, twisted, bloody and most violent piece of satire ever made by a film director.
* Cannibal Holocaust that this originally came from Brad filming in his own home and tending not to wear shoes indoors.
* Cannibal Holocaust was banned due to extreme violence and animal cruelty. This hasn't stopped the proliferation of bootleg copies.
* Cannibal Holocaust when Monroe meets with the TV Executives one last time, he meets again with the three executives and tells them that he has viewed the final reel and says that it is "offensive, dishonest, and inhuman". He leads the executives into a screening room to view the final reel of the recovered film.
* cannibalism among shipwrecked sailors.) This is followed directly by...
* Cannibalism: An animal or food product is shown eating others of its own kind, and advertising them as food.
* cannibalism as an alternative to interment or cremation on the part of the BBC — they wouldn't allow the sketch if the audience was to approve of it, so the Pythons suggested that instead of laughing, the audience react violently to appease the censors. This works just as well.
* Cannibalism is also acceptable. With so few resources, Drow eating Drow is the norm amongst the lower class.
* Cannibalism outside of survival situations or cultural rituals is widely believed to be addictive for a number of overlapping reasons, most of which are connected to psychosis, psychopathy, or sexual fantasies involving the consumption of human flesh. In the last case at least, acting out these fantasies causes a flood of dopamine in the brain, leading the subject to repeat this behavior to get the rush again.
* Cannibalism Superpower, allowing them to evolve new traits by consuming the flesh of critters with those traits — eat strong, tough creatures, like Orks, and the Kroot will grow stronger and tougher. The downside is, they can't turn this off, so if they don't eat a balanced diet — and, more importantly, regularly eat the flesh of sapient beings — they'll eventually devolve into mindless animals. The entire animal ecology of their homeworld, Pech, is now based on devolved Kroot.
* Cannibalism Superpower. This unfortunately proved to be his downfall when he ate the Elder Toguro, who regenerated and took over Gourmet's body from within in the most horrible way possible.
* Cannibalistic serial killer Dorángel Vargas only preyed on fit male adults. When asked why, he explained that women and children were too "pure" to kill and eat, and that he thought that "fat people" would be too unhealthy and high in cholesterol.
* Cannibal Larder: Where a cannibal keeps their "leftovers". For example, the remains of serial killer Jeffrey Dahmer’s victims were kept in his fridge.
* Cannibals' Anonymous support group includes a pair of zombies, an alien, and a miniature wooly mammoth clone.
* cannibals do this to Harry and Luna. They manage to escape when Luna summons a rather angry Snorkack which knocks the pot over and attacks the tribesmen.
* cannibals, is worse than Lether, to the point that most of the Domin is dead wasteland with only the fringes still supporting life. Fortunately, its also the smallest and least powerful of the three major empires of the current timeline (Malazan, Letherii, and Pannion Domin).
* Cannibal! The Musical about sunrise?" After a long, pregnant pause, he simply walks off without making his point. The actor was apparently drunk and forgot his lines, but Trey Parker thought it was funnier than the actual line.
* Cannibal! The Musical. And then there's bilingual bonus for those who know sign language: Humphrey makes some strange hand gestures while claiming to translate for the "Indians" at one point, and these gestures actually mean "Jesus Christ is dead".
* Cannibal! The Musical as the characters argue about what key it's supposed to be in.

* Cannibal! The Musical features a subplot about Alferd Packer and his horse, Liane, who runs away and, he later learns, has been ridden by every man in town. The movie was made by Trey Parker shortly after he found out his fiancee Liane had cheated on him.
* Cannibal! The Musical features one of the earliest "drunken commentaries." Director Trey Parker repeatedly comments on how his character's wayward horse is a thinly disguised allegory for his break-up with a former girlfriend, which he is apparently still bitter about at the time of the commentary. At the end, the commentators decide to go to a titty bar, and the last comment heard is one challenging the other to a fight.
* Cannibal! The Musical. He's told to look on the bright side, as at least he didn't get his head caught in it.
* Cannibal! The Musical the characters also start eating their shoes before eating each other.
* Cannibal! The Musical, the juvenile character Humphrey uses the exact phrase before crossing the Green River.
* Cannibal! The Musical, the prospectors are drying themselves by the campfire after failing to ford a river. Humphrey struggles to remove his earflapped cap, and after it comes off with a loud pop, the others stare agape at his humungous ginger afro.
* Cannibal! The Musical, there is a message reading: "Due to the graphic nature of this film, it should not have been watched by small children".
* Cannibal Tribe: The Knovíz culture of central Europe in the late 2nd millennium BC and early 1st partook in ritual cannibalism, archeologists have determined.
* Cannibal Tribe who ate Bob after buying a bunch of Fresca from him. As the leader explains, "Bob tastes good with Fresca." Horrified, Steve inquires about what exactly the cannibals ate from Bob's body: "You mean you ate his eyes? His legs? His heart?" And so on. The leader explains that yes, all those body parts taste good with Fresca too. Finally:
* cannibal who devoured people's bones. He doesn't seem capable of stopping and goes through numerous victims every day.
* Cannon are planning to take over a newly formed African nation to sieze control of its mineral wealth.
* Cannonball B-Movie Action Flick, takes inspiration from the "Cannonball Baker" cross-country race.
* Cannonball during the mass pile-up near the end. Every single car that crashes explodes, most of them immediately. The three girls have to be extra careful to not hit any car no matter how slightly, lest their van would explode, too.
* Cannonball (Experiment 520) primarily bounces around on his big butt.
* cannonball (name given as Lethal presence rock, or something like that) which creates a barrier all around itself that diffuses and destroys spiritual energy coming into contact with it.
* Cannonball Run 2, one team finds themselves doing the race with a simian. All of the dialogue refers to said simian as a "chimp", but it's actually an orangutan (and is identified as such in the credits).
* Cannonball Run, as Captain Chaos turns aside and forfeits his team's victory when a woman screams that her baby is drowning. Said "baby" turns out to be a dog, but his teammate still forgives him for losing the race.
* Cannonball Run films showed a racer sticking numbers to a speed limit sign, changing it from 55 mph to 155 mph. They were driving a Lamborghini. So yeah...
* Cannonball Run II) and Vendebaum (Sammy Davis Jr.) begin charging at. Problem is, Blake (Dean Martin) accidentally pushes the door open just as the former trio run right through it, and thus end up running through the room into the far end with a bonk.
* Cannonball Run II, an orangutan chauffeur gives an old lady one when she waves to him!
* Cannonball Run II during the big fight scene, Capt Chaos leaps from a high area down to a bunch of mooks crushing them under his weight and knocking most of them out cold.

* Cannonball Run II. One of Tony's and Caesar's attempts to kidnap the Sheik involves using a helicopter with a magnet on the bottom to pick up his Rolls-Royce. After they make contact, they're unable to pick up the car. (Apparently, the helicopter isn't strong enough.) They're still trying to figure out what's wrong when they enter a tunnel and get knocked off the car's roof. The Sheik never notices something is amiss beyond an odd noise.
* Cannonball Run movies. In the first movie Dean Martin and Sammy Davis Jr. play a pair of racers who dress up as Catholic priests, and in the second two women dressed as nuns (they're showgirls in a production who were at a restaurant, still in costume) end up accompanying two men dressed as soldiers (who are disguised for an edge talking to the police). The men slowly realize that these women don't behave quite like nuns...
* Cannonball Run. The chimp then gets into a fight with Tony Danza who eventually climbs up front with Tillis. Tillis invokes the trope and Danza points out that the chimp is. That's when they drive through the trailer home.
* Cannonball sees one driver in the cross-country road race (the one in the Blazer) cheat by flying across the country. He claims victory, but can't find the bottle of champagne he planned to use to celebrate. His female companion says they must have left it on the plane.
* Cannonball. This is also the only film inspired by the Cannonball not billed as a comedy.
* Cannonball! World's Greatest Outlaw Road Race, one driver tried this to get out of a ticket. It failed miserably. The police officers who pulled him over saw right through it and his team lost three hours before getting let off with a warning.
* Cannon Busters has this ability. Every time he dies, a new number appears somewhere on his body. When we first meet him, he's at 22 deaths and the numbers just climb as the episodes go on.
* Cannon Busters: In episode 12, Odin digs a grave for Hilda outside Gara's Keep and marks it with her sword.
* Cannon Busters: In Madura City, when Sam is trying to find and rescue Philly from the Fetter, she determines his location and calculates the best route to reach him. Said route involves entering her Cannon Buster mode, obliterating everything between her and Philly, and creating a straight path.
* Cannon Busters is a western steampunk high fantasy mecha samurai show that's influenced by American hip-hop culture.
* Cannon Busters that she never even realizes that they're trying to hire her for a gangbang, not "hang out".
* Cannon: Cannon does this to his own car in "Girl in the Electric Coffin"; causing it to blow up and drive out the hitman who was taking cover behind it.
* Cannon Dancer has its hero Kirin forced to run down a steep incline while pursued by a rather nasty-looking truck, eventually going through a lot of colorful explosions as the vehicle falls into a pit.
* Cannon Dancer, obtaining power-ups allows Kirin to project up to three phantom images of himself, which remain in place and attack simultaneously with him. They appear whenever he hits an enemy with an attack, and when he stops attacking they return to him. Although they can be placed floating in mid-air, they can't be re-positioned until they return to Kirin.
* Cannon Fodder and don't have any real grudge against the humans; in fact, their hatred is primarily focused on the other Covenant species.
* Cannon Fodder: An entire army whose sole purpose is to get killed so that the leader doesn't have to.
* Cannon Fodder. Another example is Mamoru/Tuxedo Mask, as he joins before any girl other than Usagi.
* Cannon Fodder approach to warfare involves literal trillions of soldiers) didn't want.
* Cannon Fodder even shows a newly-trained 72-man colonial militia company (not even proper Marines or Army troopers) able to hold its own against a roughly 170-strong Covenant force (the vast majority of it made up of Grunts and Drones, with only a small pack of ten Brutes).

* Cannon Fodder has a necromancer named Doris. She seems to be an all right person, but on the other hand, we don't see her practice her necromantic powers.
* Cannon Fodder, hired out only because the planet has nothing else to sell.
* Cannon Fodder, Hunters are relentless (also UNSC vehicles are named after animals and Hunters serve as anti-vehicle forces, therefore "hunting" them), and Brutes are, well, brutes. The Prophets are an exception, as the name was translated by advanced human AI.
* Cannon Fodder is almost the same as the first game, but with different graphics and levels.
* Cannon Fodder, it seems to suggest that the government is just trying to kill off all the smart people.
* Cannon Fodder, it's mentioned that evil laughter is an essential overlord skill. Alec Nightshade can't quite master one, though.
* Cannon Fodder looks a lot like Skype. Alec also has a magic-powered amphibious vehicle.
* Cannon Fodder soldiers and executioners who just keep returning only to get beaten again.
* Cannon Fodder unless they appear useful (while non-useful volunteers are simply rejected).
* Cannon Fodder without it. The resurrected can ignore the control with enough willpower.
* Cannon God Exaxxion & accidentally vaporizing innocent bystanders isn't exactly the sort of thing heroes do.
* Cannon God Exaxxion & melee weapons wielded by extremely strong combatants, the idea being that the only way to penetrate such a barrier is to focus more energy on a single point than the system can produce. Explosives don't work, as their energy is spread too thin & lasers are right out due to gravitational lensing.
* Cannon God Exaxxion anime, only with much more realistic politics between the humans & alien invaders.)
* Cannon God Exaxxion. Anything with less inertia than the shield can generate is deflected away, including lasers, since they're effectively massless, while anything with more inertia, like bullets traveling at a significant fraction of c. plows right on through.
* Cannon God Exaxxion convert humans into food, among other things, some of which is actually sold back to other unwitting humans. Somewhat justified as the aliens' main motivation is to colonize the planet & making the dominant species into a foodsource is simply convenient.
* Cannon God Exaxxion, for example. But they are used to be benevolent (for hostile reasons, of course); see the entry in the Other part for details.
* Cannon God Exaxxion for people walking around a spaceship like it was an earthbound movie set, they explore all kinds of neat stuff you can do once you've made gravity and inertia yours, including, but not limited to:
* Cannon God Exaxxion gave a ton of stuff to Earth to make it easier for their eventual invasion since they had remote control over everything handed over.
* Cannon God Exaxxion high powered, though, not just some run of the mill pea-shooters, as that poor special forces team in the first volume found out the hard way...
* Cannon God Exaxxion. Lampshaded by the fact that the other, more level-headed members of the news team she's on think she's nuts. There's also her little sister Akane, who is determined to follow in her big sister's footsteps, but every attempt she makes to do so ends in disaster. Also subverts this trope by having another recurring news team who are much more realistic & down to Earth... who happen to be space aliens.
* Cannon God Exaxxion lay buried on Earth for over 2000 years before being excavated by the hero's father. Perhaps justified, in that it was kept in a giant space-packing crate and the mech itself is practically indestructible.
* Cannon God Exaxxion; one particularly graphic scene features fusion-powered machinery that has been damaged by an explosion. Instead of blowing up real good, the stuff starts leaking hot plasma & horrifically burning anybody who gets near it.

* Cannon God Exaxxion partner and other robots created by his grandfather don't, since they're designed to pass for human. It averts one of the major robospeak cliches, as well. We never see the Riofaldian robots talking out loud to each other, only to organics. There's one scene that depicts a robot sending a communication requesting backup, which is represented by a speech balloon filled with what looks like barcodes.
* Cannon God Exaxxion's invasion draws some (narratively intentional) parallels to 19th-century colonialism. The manga milks these for all it's worth.
* Cannon God Exaxxion technology, the series gets a lot of mileage out of the different uses they have. For instance, using them in reverse to crush things or shoot holes in buildings with blasts of pure, concentrated gravity.
* Cannon God Exaxxion - The Riofaldians get around the galaxy by using gigantic space stations powered by antimatter that open and sustain wormholes.
* Cannon God Exaxxion. The Riofaldians integrate themselves into Earth culture and their impressive technology revolutionizes humanity... to the point that when they reveal their plans for invasion, they control almost all of the technology on the planet.
* Cannon God Exaxxion try to pass actual footage of "embarrassing" incidents off as enemy propaganda when possible.
* Cannon God Exaxxion, where for years the aliens posed as this but it was simply an act to get us dependent on them and allow them ease for conquering us.
* Cannon God Exaxxion, where the titular colossus has a gravity control device powered by Antimatter. It also addresses the problem of weight distribution on the feet by replacing them with invisible forcefields that distribute the machine's (still considerable, even when mitigated by gravity control) weight over a wider area, which has the unfortunate side-effect of flattening innocent bystanders who are dozens of feet away from the mech itself.
* Cannon God E Xa X Xion with him. Probably the most rightfully protective dad on this page.
* Cannon, he bails and attempts to sell the information to the target government. This gets him killed.
* Cannon: In "A Flight of Hawks", Cannon attempts to stop a fighter plane from taking off. The pilot attempts to strafe Cannon while both of them are still on the ground. The twin streams of bullets pass either side of Cannon.
* Cannon: In "A Flight of Hawks", Cannon's investigation leads him to a band of mercenaries who are planning to kick off a brushwar in Africa.
* Cannon: In "Fool's Gold", Cannon tracks a pair of armored car robbers to a small town in New Mexico. Cannon is greeted with suspicion and harassment from the moment he arrives. It turns out the robbers have used the loot from the heist to effectively buy the town to give them a place to hole up while they recuperate.
* Cannon: In "Scream of Silence", a doctor remarks on the deep wound on a thug's chest. The thug's boss replies "He cut himself shaving" as he hands over enough cash to buy the doctor's silence.
* Cannon: In "Scream of Silence", a gang of kidnappers attempt to abduct a boy who has temporarily been struck mute at a ball game, so they can eliminate him before he regains his voice and can identify them.
* Cannon: In "Stone, Cold Dead", the killer attempts to escape in a speedboat. Cannon jumps on to the front of the boat, and winds up fighting the killer over the windscreen.
* Cannon: In "The Nowhere Man", Cannon has to find a stolen cannister of nerve gas that has been hidden somewhere in Los Angeles and that is set to be released at 7 pm.
* Cannon is drowned in his bathtub - fully clothed - after he speaks to Cannon.
* Cannon recap) even in syndication, which can be awkward for anyone watching the episodes back-to-back.
* Cannon, repeatedly buzzes Belmont's jeep as as he is trying to escape the compound; eventually forcing him of the road.

* Cannons and artillery in general until fairly recently have been slow to set up and required animals/trucks to pull them around, but are some of the best ways to attack fixed positions and only the hardest of targets can survive the barrage.
* cannons loaded with grapeshot (essentially transforming them into giant shotguns), causing the Royalist attack to lose any semblance of cohesion due to surprise and the losses incurred (a cavalry charge finished the job, causing the insurrection to dissolve). Grapeshot was not the crazy part (in fact, it was a standard load for cannons of the era), but using them in urban warfare was.
* Cannons - The offensive extreme of the Powerhouse. They rely on high offensive abilities, at the expense of limiting their defensive abilities. As a result, they generally can't handle other forces head-on, and they instead use a combination of burst damage hit-and-run tactics, striking at their opponent's vulnerable supply lines, harassing, support units and artillery, leaving traps, or otherwise "cheating" to get the upper hand. They are not particularly strong or weak at any part of the game; it's all about the technique and producing the right units. Cannons will typically be the fourth faction in a four-factions scenario.
* Cannon: The episode "Arena of Fear" deals with a boxer (Nick Nolte) who is tricked into thinking he killed another man in a bar fight, as part of a plan to get him to throw a huge fight.
* Cannon: This happens in "A Lonely Place to Die", when the town drunk tries to convince the sheriff that a triple-murder occurred at the abondoned beach house next to his home.
* Cannon was a homicide cop turned private eye. His cases fell into these categories:
* cannot adjust to the new nature of their reality and goes completely insane. There's also a restriction against having children in the loops, with the Goddesses going out of their way to meddle in the loopers lives to prevent this. The obvious reason being that said child will just cease to be as soon as the loop is done, and that's unneeded psychological stress for the parent.
* cannot, and in fact, his insistence on trying to help her is holding her back more than anything. Araragi seems unable to accept this idea.
* Cannot bear the touch of special symbolic items, like silver, similar to
* cannot be explained by scientific methods. The divide between magical beings and scientists is a critical point in the comic, to the point that the latter dislike even referring to the former as "Magical." They prefer the term "etheric sciences."
* Cannot be heard over phone lines, another logical conclusion of the "no reflections" law.
* cannot be killed. It's so powerfully linked to the world that if you actually manage to bring him down to 0 HP, then he simply sinks back into the planet's core and sleeps again. The only way to really kill it is to somehow lure it into another plane or otherwise away from the world before killing it, and that's just a theory.
* cannot believe in the paranormal if they live in a universe where such things are shown to be real. Such a portrait of blindness then might delegitimize skepticism in general towards the paranormal, by association of ideas.
* cannot be named for legal reasons was founded less than 100 years ago, and most major religions are thousands of years old and likely have grown as much as they ever will? Or because they count ad clicks as memberships.
* Cannot be photographed or caught on video, often an extension of the "no reflection" rule. This may also be related to the silver rule; mirrors and photographic film
* cannot be replicated The latter sells you a slightly less powerful weapon you can actually reproduce.
* cannot be synthesized without blowing up the test apparatus. When the procedure recommends using Teflon and stainless steel apparatus to minimize shrapnel — that's Explodium.
* cannot be won, even if you use a cheat device to max out your level or use an exploit to get the powerful Eternal Sphere (one of Claude's best weapons, with several hundred more attack power than Dias' best weapon at that point in the game). This is supposed to be justified by Dias being a master swordsman, but if you're playing Rena's game and get him, his stats aren't all that great and he's outclassed by many of the fighters on the team once they level up enough/get better weapons.

* Cannot Convey Sarcasm: A character who tries and fails to be snarky.
* Cannot Convey Sarcasm: Doesn't understand how to use sarcasm properly.
* Cannot Convey Sarcasm: Just what I needed. Someone who doesn't know sarcasm at all.
* cannot do a good deed without everyone thinking he is plotting something nefarious.
* cannot find any flaws in the argumentation, and thus vanishes from existence.
* cannot fully control their abilities or because they turn them to crime and terrorism. Not to mention there are plenty of mutants who want to have their mutations/powers removed or at the very least be made undetectable.
* cannot However, using a death note allows you to kill people before their time and indirectly extend lives.
* cannot. In recent years some hospitals and clinics have taken it up, since a bunch of tiny maggots can clean a wound with more precision than a human can.
* Cannot Keep a Secret: A gossipy person who really can't be trusted to keep their big mouths shut about anything confidential.
* Cannot Keep a Secret: Someone who really can't keep their mouth shut, even if their life depended on it.
* Cannot Keep a Secret: Will reveal to others what you tell them in confidence.
* cannot kill him, because they're good guys and good guys don't kill. This is despite the aforementioned Zoom, Atom Smasher, and Sand Demon, as well as others they've killed in the past (Clyde Mardon, Savitar, Rival, etc).
* cannot make you nearly as capable as normally-trained experts, represented as a cap of rank 4 on the skillsoft's rating as opposed to rank 6 in the skill (7 with natural talent) trained normally.
* Can not recognize love and mistakes it for something else, like a blush for a fever.
* cannot run them where there are no roads. Steel reinforced concrete starts falling apart sooner or later (and if the apocalyptic event was a war, bridges and tunnels would have been prime targets) and even rail lines that have kept with minimal maintenance since the 19th century will get taken over by vegetation with faults that aren't fixed getting worse and worse until they are impassable within a few years.
* cannot see him and the invisible god then shows himself to her as a reward for her truthfulness.
* cannot. Several characters have either attempted or committed suicide this way.)
* Cannot Spit It Out: A stupid person can't say something important when it matters.
* Cannot Spit It Out for Dana. Dana's feelings for Tom are ambiguous but the possibility exists that their relationship will develop down the mutual feelings path of the trope.
* Cannot Spit It Out: In some novels, an extreme importance is placed on the act of uttering the words "I love you".
* Cannot Spit It Out: The character purposefully keeps quiet out of conflicted feelings.
* Cannot Talk to Women: Is there a woman present? This person is now a gibbering wreck.
* Cannot Talk to Women when Lon'qu asks about how she, of all people, would know of such a place.
* Cannot Tell a Joke: A character's attempts to be humorous just leaves their audience bemused, bothered and bewildered.
* Cannot Tell a Joke: Someone who tells really lame and unfunny jokes.
* Cannot Tell a Lie Any Fae can also be summoned by speaking its name three times. They will answer the summon, but may not be the happiest of beings to be summoned.
* Cannot Tell a Lie: Is completely truthful at all times, even when it would be better not to be.

* Cannot Tell Fiction from Reality: Being unaware about what differences reality and fiction make.
* Cannot Tell Fiction from Reality: Unable to understand imaginary events and people compared to real-life.
* can now buy) from Quill.com (owned by the store franchise Staples—who, funnily enough, are repeatedly mentioned as Dunder Mifflin's main competition).
* can often boost its sales was near universally panned and many internet personalities savaged the idea of the film and trailers before it even came out. This may have honestly saved the film, which was deemed as too boring and slow to keep its target demographic occupied (and thus deterring parents from taking them to see it). However plenty of adults went to see the movie to see what all the fuss/cringe was about, resulting in the film being a success.
* Can Of Worms allowed to capture unintelligent species due to an intergalactic law.

* canon can take on humanoid forms when dealing with mortals. When Harry remarks on the differences between Ysondre and her mother Ysera, Ysondre changes her form to more resemble her mother and informs him that their forms are entirely a matter of choice. Onyxia uses three separate forms over the course of the story: Katrana Prestor, a more draconic version of Katrana resembling Alexstrasza's humanoid form, and a blonde bombshell. The last is used around anyone who doesn't know her true identity.
* Canon Character All Along initially, but is actually the alias of or the adaptations' interpretation of a pre-existing character.
* Canon Character All Along is revealed to actually be the adaptation's interpretation of an already established character.
* Canon Character All Along is revealed to be an actual character from canon, or at least a different interpretation of them.
* Canon Character All Along: Subverted when revealed to be a character from the source material, but the other identity is not.
* Canon Character All Along turns out to actually be the adaptation's interpretation of an already established character.
* Canon Character All Along turns out to be the alias of or the work's interpretation of an already established character.

* canon Dani Powell showed no signs of being interested in women, here she does.
* Canon Defilement: A fan work upsets the source work's fanbase by deviating too much from the tone, content or characterization of the source work.
* Canon Defilement: When it comes to fanfiction and the like, fandoms have rules about what is and isn't acceptable to change.
* Canon Discontinuity. And, it's also been said that the original Klingon Homeworld was destroyed, and Qo'noS is the "new" Klingon Homeworld.
* Canon Discontinuity, a worker at the White House is detained after a security flag runs up against his name. He has a rather heated discussion with Leo about his anger at being subject to racial profiling and Leo telling him that's what you get when you look like the enemy.
* Canon Discontinuity books are apocryphal and which are canon depends on which denomination does the counting.
* Canon Discontinuity doesn't happen because the work is poorly received, but whoever owns the rights to the franchise thinks they have a better idea about what to do next, causing a divergence from the established story.

* Canon Discontinuity: Episode or installment of a series is officially confirmed as non-canon.
* Canon Discontinuity episode "Threshold" almost treated Warp 10 like this, but the actual results were mind-boggling from a logical, biological, and narrative standpoint.
* Canon Discontinuity portrays a vast number of different species with different takes on society due to their gender imbalance.
* Canon Discontinuity: Previous events are treated as if they never happened.
* Canon Discontinuity seems to have been declared on this particular scene, with later films apparently moving the timeline back to somewhere in the 19th century.)
* Canon Discontinuity sees the clan take advantage of the holiday to go out in public without being feared, while Demona releases a wave of holographic monsters to attack the humans.
* Canon Discontinuity, so don't expect any mercy from young Alma in future installments.
* Canon Discontinuity, the Stardate calendar they use is a cross between the old universe's Stardate system and good-old-fashioned Gregorian. Stardates from this point went XXXX.YYY, where XXXX was simply the Earth AD year and YYY was the numerical day in that year starting from 1 (New Year's) and ending in 365 (366 on leap years).
* Canon Discontinuity. Typically done to works that were poorly received.
* Canon Discontinuity: When an episode or installment of a series is confirmed to be non-canon.
* Canon Discontinuity with a later issue of Action Comics where Death of the Endless more or less states that Nekron is a bit of a poser. Neil Gaiman's own dissatisfaction with the issue also paints the canonicity of this into doubt.
* Canon Fodder: Empty spaces for fans (and their works) to fill in the blanks.
* Canon Fodder takes place in a future where the church and police forces have been consolidated into one, and follows a single very devout, not entirely sane priest as he attempts to destroy evil wherever he finds it.
* Canon Fodder: Unexplored canon information that's ripe for exploring.
* Canon Fodder, Wheeljack gets to show off his technical skills more than he did in the original.
* Canon Foreigner: A new character created for the adaptation who didn't exist in the original work.
* Canon Foreigner at every opportunity — a set of ideas that fit Darkness, Z-One, and especially Don Thousand quite well.
* Canon Foreigner, if memory serves. However, he became his own unique character pretty quickly.
* Canon Foreigner in the adaptation of a book with a lot of dense exposition.
* Canon Foreigner or an alternate continuity of a work, not being part of canon.
* Canon Foreigner redesigned several characters, most notably Sally and Antoine, to look more Sega-esque.
* Canon Foreigner: The adaptation features a character who didn't exist in the original work.
* Canon Foreigner: The adaptation features a new character who didn't exist in the original work.

Following that he proceeds to rape Casca while having Guts pinned down and stares at him with a cold but psychotic gaze the whole time; wanting to make him feel just as much anguish as he did when Guts left him and the events following that. Guts himself is obsessed with killing Griffith following this and his betrayal of him and the Band of the Hawks.

* Canonically, only three characters ever achieved this: Patrick Kell, Yorinaga Kurita, and Morgan Kell. The first was killed in battle by the second, after holding off more or less an army, the second lost in battle to the third, and they both retreated to secluded monasteries for 17 years before reemerging. Then they fought again with the same result, and Yorinaga committed suicide. Morgan Kell lived for decades more, rarely taking the battlefield, but utterly destroying any enemy he decided to face.

As a result, the planet has to import vast amounts of food from elsewhere. During the Clone Wars, the conflict's disturbance of regular trade caused immense scarcities on Coruscant, resulting in draconian rationing of the water and food that remained available.
* Canon in G: Aside from using the male and female school uniforms on the opposite characters, the story also adapts characters' signature outfits (particularly their expanded wardrobes from the 2006 show) as men's or women's clothing, though nothing is fanserviced up. Makoto has a military cap instead of hair ribbons, whereas Sayuri's hair bow becomes Satoru's tie.

* can produce a child with brown eyes, as eye colour is not determined simply by one gene. It's actually quite common for a blue-eyed person to carry a gene for brown eyes that can be passed on to his or her children.
* Can rarely happen in an event in which you can fall in love/impregnate a random adult courtier (below 45) in your court, and it doesn't check for blood relationship so it can be your daughter (or granddaughter even). If your character is lustful you can't say no.
* can read most ancient languages from his time having to research ancient prophecies and such back in Sunnydale.
* can regenerate from fatal damage, there are known limits to this ability and there are a number of ways to outright kill a Time Lord.
* Can's albums were built almost entirely from improvisation, and edited together into somewhat coherent songs after the fact. When Damo Suzuki was the lead vocalist, he often just made up his lyrics on the spot.
* Cans from the Midnight Crew Intermission is the biggest and strongest member of The Felt and, along with Clover (who is too lucky to be killed off conventionally) and Snowman (who can't be killed without taking the rest of the universe with her), is one of the few members of the gang that does not get killed by the Midnight Crew.
* can smaller than what would (or could) realistically be used to functionally lubricate a cooking pan.)
* Can sometimes have "Dead or Alive" as the bottom line. For some cases, targets are worth more if they are brought in alive.
* Can's second lead vocalist Damo Suzuki was more popular than their first, Malcolm Mooney. People who discover the band through the Suzuki-era records (which is most fans) generally like Mooney's contributions too, but not to the extent of displacing Suzuki as the band's definitive frontman.
* can successfully manage when he cares about it, successfully building his own construction company. It helps that his employees are a lot closer to his attitude, and many or all of them are his relatives.
* can survive being frozen. Some can even survive being immersed in liquid helium (just a few degrees above absolute zero) in the laboratory.
* Can switching to Geico can really save you up 15% on car insurance? Did the caveman invent fire? Do woodchucks chuck wood? Does a 10 pound bag of flour make a really big biscuit? Is a bird in hand worth two in the bush? Did the Piggy go wee wee wee all the way home?
* Can't Act Perverted Toward a Love Interest: Refusing to do anything lewd when in the presence of the one you love.

children's charities and schools in Great Britain, and loved "playing footie in the garden" with his kids and the dogs when they were all younger.
* Can't Argue with Elves: A race believes that they are the superior species and uses this belief as an excuse to look down on so-called lesser lifeforms and insist that they are always right.
* Can't Argue with Elves: A species believes that their race is superior to all others and that therefore they are never wrong.
* Can't Argue with Elves: A species believes themselves to be automatically superior to all other races.
* Can't Argue with Elves settings feature non-evil lich variants: the noble Baelnorn and the technically-not-undead Deathless respectively, both highly respected spiritual leaders to their peoples.
* Can't Argue with Elves: We are the superior race! Accept this truth!
* can't as many European countries have laws that make firing someone on a whim nigh-impossible. It's not unheard of for multinational corporations doing a corporate-wide layoff to let US employees go several months before their European counterparts, because it takes that much longer to jump through the hoops required by the legal system there.
* Cantata in Coral and Ivory and is dependent on his knowledge of court manners and art to survive, with no athletic skills worth mentioning.
* Can't Bathe Without a Weapon: The hero(ine) may need to undress to take a bath, but won't ever get caught without a weapon.
* can't be copyrighted, the Joker threatens him. Later that evening, Francis wonders aloud why on earth the Clown Prince of Crime is interested in a meager civil servant like him; Batman responds that "in [the Joker's] sick mind, that's the joke."
* can't been prepared ritualistically. Oh, and the Muslim might have opinions on whether the Jewish rituals are "close enough"? Also, Mormons cannot have "hot drinks" (tea and coffee), often erroneously believed to be a complete caffeine taboo. The Muslims and, depending on the denomination, some of the Christians, can't drink alcohol. All meat is prohibited for the Catholics, but only if it's Friday during Lent. Not to mention, people who have strict dietary requirements for nonreligious morals, like vegans.
* can't be killed in battle, but have some of the worst stats in the game (though they often have some damaging effects, such as Spirit Reaper's attack-and-your-opponent-discards effect, and Marshmallon doing 1000 damage when attacked face-down).
* can't be thrown off when they use the brake chute. It worked too well, however, as while they were successful in not falling off, their toboggan was shown flying through the air with them on it due to it being a windy day.
* can't be vulnerable because she has the weight of the world on her shoulders.
* can't breathe fire, and vary from 2 to 10+ meters depending on subspecies) are still thriving in Sothoryos.

* Can't Buy Me Love from 1987... can a nerd find true love with a cheerleader?
* Can't Buy Me Love, nerdy protagonist Ronald says he was born on July 20th, 1969 — the day of the Apollo 11 moon landing.
* Can't Buy Me Love: Ronald, an unpopular nerd, helps a popular girl/cheerleader Cindy. In return, she pretends to be his girlfriend, so he can become more popular.
* Can't Buy Me Love: the main character likes the most popular girl in school. She screws up her mom's expensive dress, so he gives her the money he has been saving for a telescope in exchange for her hanging out with him for some time. He becomes popular and friends with the "jocks" that used to punch him and his former friends, and in the process, he becomes a jerk. No spoilers but the movie itself might as well be the trope codifier of the "popular vs not popular" wars.

* Can't Catch Up. Apparently, he's too arrogant to realize he needs to improve.
* Can't Catch Up problem for new players and forces competitive players to buy the new item each month. Needless to say, this new policy was not popular with the old guard.
* Can't Catch Up? Taking it even further, he's even expressed a desire to be Hokage just like Naruto.
* Can't Catch Up to stop Bam from climbing. When Bam once again proves his genius by saving her with a technique he had just been shown, said character gives up and commits suicide.
* can't cry. He comments on how Edward has the ability to cry, yet doesn't use it when Al wants to so badly.

* can't enjoy good things like being married and his job in the Church He's stuck never being happy one way or the other.
* Canterbury, he's given a rounded personality, has plenty of moments to shine, and even gets a bit of backstory. Then he has his head blown off halfway through episode four.
* Canterbury Tales of the myth of Orpheus and Euridyce, which replaced Hades with an unnamed "king of the Otherworld".
* Canterlot Boutique", Sassy Saddles turns Rarity's new boutique into this when she has Rarity, a skilled and inventive dressmaker, mass-produce two hundred copies of the same dress, which she markets and sells at the exclusion of all other designs.
* Canterlot Siege game has Twilight Sparkle rain comets on enemies as her superpower.
* Canteros, Amareros' firstborn son and the ancient god of Requited Love and Reconciliation, has these. His Love domains grant him empathy as well as precognition and retrocognition to a degree (through looking at "love ropes" that connect people), while his Reconciliation domain grants him telepathy and stronger precognition.
* can territory, as they aren't able to utilize the Dual Wielding Sword Skills while doing so.
* can't fail. Denny has one of his intermittent moments of brilliance during his closing argument and gets a generous settlement for his client, scuppering the plan.
* Can't forget Andy Bernard's infamous reaction on to Jim hiding his cellphone in the ceiling tiles and calling it repeatedly.
* Can't forget the beginning of the "penthouse suite" scene in the final episode: rather disorienting for the viewer and a complete
* Can't forget whenever Alex is in the same room as Izumi's husband Sig Curtis.
* Can't Get Away with Nuthin': A character will always get in trouble every time they try to do something bad.
* Can't Get Away with Nuthin', despite an agreement to use neutral Swiss umpires to judge the game. The Canadians may have played a more physical game than the Russians were expecting, but they were called on it on both sides of the Pacific, and especially in the USSR.

* Can't Get Away with Nuthin': Do something bad? Even once? You're gonna get it, pal.
* Can't Get Away with Nuthin': Likely plays a HUGE part in this trope as well. Very rarely do criminals get away with their plans in mainstream media.
