* Hilde Krohn Huse was ultimately featured in the Bloomberg New Contemporary exhibition. (Warning: website and video both contain nudity.)
* Henry Tandey, a British soldier, almost shot a wounded and fleeing German infantryman, but decided not to and just waved him on mercifully. Guess
* Hell, the entire series has this. Medics are as well-equipped as the Assault class, just with the Medikit instead of a
* Harry Potter and the Scrambled Sorting Blood Magic is more symbolic in nature, a single drop giving a tremendous power boost to a simple 'Lumos' Spell. It does have specialised magic that can only be cast through Blood Magic, and even the boosted Lumos is utterly ilegal in Magical Britain.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys that eats people and gains strength from their evil. They trick it into eating one of Ares' minions, who was so evil that the dog exploded.
* Head Transplants. Fortunately, to our knowledge it has never been attempted with humans.
* Hates My Secret Identity: A hero knows someone dislikes them in their secret identity, but likes their super identity.
* He even released a video telling users how to uninstall the software. When McAfee (the company that he is no longer involved with ever since his resignation in 1994) was acquired by Intel in 2010 and was re-branded four years later as Intel Security, he said "I am now everlastingly grateful to Intel for freeing me from this terrible association with the worst software on the planet. These are not my words, but the words of millions of irate users."

* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows head with the sword of Gryffindor. After pulling it out of the flaming Sorting Hat.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, The Truth takes umbrage at being called "motherfucker" by a gangbanger.
* Hardison and Parker pose as a couple in "The Ice Man Job" where she's the girlfriend to his diamond merchant (the titular Ice Man).
* GURPS setting features Empty worlds, parallel Earths where no intelligent life has evolved and some where no life has evolved at all. The latter are occasionally used as dumping grounds for hazardous waste. Nonetheless, Homeline's Greenpeace is still opposed to the idea.
* have nasty backstories leaving them with an equal mix of combat abilities and psychological trouble (raised as perfect killing machine by a secret weapon developing organisation) or Marrow (raised in a hostile pocket dimension as super powered foot soldier).
* Heist revolved around professional thief Mickey O' Neil, who created a team of experts to try to pull off the biggest heist in history — to simultaneously rob three jewelry stores on Rodeo Drive during Academy Awards week.
* her concept art: green hair, no cape, pauldrons, bare legs. Unhelpfully, she also has green hair in her portrait. Her appearances in other media tend to go back and forth between green hair and blonde hair, as well as mixing and matching aspects of her two designs.
* Harry Partridge and others seeing it as disturbing, especially as it really is such a jarring shift in tone from the rest of the cartoon.
* Her father says one when he finds out that Mulan ran away from home to take his place in the army.
* hachimaki, the goggles weren't useless; he wears them when riding his motorcycle. The goggles in the first few chapters of the series proper were a holdover from that one-shot.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) to utilize Stinkor in the latter series, had a laugh after he was described to them and made an effort to never utilize the character, due to them seeing him as "a walking fart joke".
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi episode "Cell Block Rock", Ami and Yumi try on disguises to avoid running into rabid fans, but accidentally glue the fake facial hair they use for their disguises to their faces. As a result, Kaz mistakes them for trespassers and has them thrown into jail, where Yumi pleads to be set free while Ami initially gets accustomed to prison life.
* Guards! Guards!, the tiny swamp dragon Errol sends the gigantic, bullying dragon King tumbling out of the sky using a sonic boom ... and the (female) King starts mewling like a kitten, so impressed that she accepts the pugnacious little critter as a mate.
* Hal's joining the Green Lantern Corps is treated in some stories as ground-breaking, with him being the first human to join them... until the stories that ret-conned this so that Hal wasn't the first, with an American frontiersman named Waverly Sire having been inducted during the 1800s.
* Harry Hill's TV Burp in which Alan Sugar talks about his "Kelvin Kleins" by mentioning all the other hokey gear he buys (he's rich because he buys these cheap knockoffs), including Knikey trainers and Christine Deeyor perfume.
* Hercules: While he is more of a calculating villain, Hades clearly takes a lot of savage delight in tormenting every victim of his schemes, either emotionally like Hercules or physically like his minions, to vent his frustration.
* Hank's supervisor. The only time he appears onscreen outside the DEA office is the scenes at the hospital after Hank gets shot.
* Hair-Trigger Temper: A character who is ridiculously easy to get angry, often to the point of violent aggression.
* Hatake Kakashi is widely suggested to be handsome underneath his mask. It's enough to make a ramen waitress, and her father, blush.
* Grunts!, Ashnak of the Agaku allows himself to be captured to give his band a lead, by distracting their enemies.

* Harry Potter, she constantly issues decrees that make life harder for the students and teachers in order to have total control over the school.
* Glory had the 54th Regiment's first field mission accompanying a white officer leading African American irregulars. The irregulars prove to be a mere rabble of plunderers and the 54th are disgusted to a man at seeing their robbery of a civilian home, but Col. Shaw is no position to keep his unit from at least taking part in the destruction.
* Harry Potter, when sabotaging Gunderstank. Billy spins the signs when Grim leads a field trip, so the signs are reversed yet upside down.
* Happy Heroes: Huo Haha attempts to hit a little girl who wants him to get her kite off of a roof in Season 8 episode 18. The girl grabs his toilet plunger wand right before he can actually hit her with it and uses it to get the kite down.
* Grand Theft Auto: Chinatown Wars, you have at least one mission which messes with your radar map for a specific reason. One of these missions involve you tracing scramblers by looking at how distorted your map is; the closer you are to one, the more unrecognizable the map is.
* Harry S. Plinkett after 20 years under Emperor Palpatine, whose most redeeming quality was, apparently, being smart enough not to shit where he ate.
* half-mole, half-bear, half-raging-pile-of-claws" is, in practice, a giant mole with a bearlike stance and the teeth of a pocket gopher.
* High School Musical. Nobody, absolutely nobody, saw its mega-popularity coming.
* Heat Guy J when the latter was caught spying. The guy then cuts off Ian's hand (with his Phi Beta Kappa ring on the middle finger) and sends it to Ian's boss (and friend), who then declares war on the senator.
* Harmony (Subversive) is the philosophy of altering humans to fit into the alien environment using gene-splicing and genetic modification. Harmony units gradually even begin to resemble alien lifeforms, and it reflects in their tactics, using the native terrain and domesticated alien life, eventually moving up to homebrew bioweapons. Harmony is generally weaker than the other two but they can heal and fight better in Miasma and ignore rough terrain for rapid travel or become extremely strong when striking in isolation. Note that Harmony does not necessarily have to play nice with the local fauna, but you will have a much easier time fighting in their turf.
* HC SVNT DRACONES has this as a recurring mechanic, due to the general rule that its a lot easier to make a big gun that it is to make armor that can withstand it, especially in a Sci-fi setting. It is also an explicit rule in the case of some particularly powerful devices.
* Hanayamata: A variant of a surprise reaction usually involving the middle-schoolgirl heroines.
* GURPS: Ultratech has rocket boosted warhammers that increase the force of impact.
* Grimjack. Notable in that he and Grimjack were old war buddies and genuine friends. He plays a more important role in the plot than just a source of information for Grimjack.
* Harrow: At the opening of "Audere Est Facere" ("To Dare Is to Do"), a car owner is wiping bird droppings off the windscreen when a BASE jumper crashes fatally onto the roof. A second later, the jumper's partner hits the ground next to the car.
* Happens at the end of the main story mission "What Pride Had Wrought" in
* Guild Wars 2 the gods, but do not deny their existence; the Norn simply have their own deities in the Spirits of the Wild. As for the Sylvari, since they only appeared a few decades ago, i.e. 1300 years after the Gods left Tyria, they just want evidence, making them the closest example of this trope, considering that, y'know, humans are able to summon Hounds of Balthazar and stuff like that. The Sylvari have the innate ability to bring huge trees to life, so they aren't completely unreasonable in wanting proof those hounds come from a higher power.
* Gone, the words "freaks", "mutants", "muties", "mutant freaks", "moofs", and "chuds" are all used as slurs for "kids who have mutated and developed supernatural powers".
* Henry IV Part II, Falstaff and assorted cronies get drunk and sing a song with a nonsensical refrain.

* Grimm: The first half of the first series follows this to a tee. The second half of the series featured more character arcs and ongoing plotlines but it still largely stuck with one case every week, whether certain cases fed into a previous one or not.
* Gravedale High for being the only human at the titular school, but is shown to care for his mother in "Frankenjockey", where he is trying to call her on the phone and yells at Schneider while calling him "human slime", resulting in Cadaver's mother hanging up under the assumption that her son was calling her "human slime" and Cadaver angry at Schneider for ruining his phone call to his mother.
* Goldberg twice and then hit what would become known as the Jackhammer.
* Gus Brannhard (Jack Holloway's lawyer) objects to Leonard Kellogg being tried first and Leslie Coombes (Kellogg's lawyer) has the same objection to Holloway being tried first. Chief Justice Pendarvis resolves both objections by ordering the two trials combined, and swearing in each defense lawyer as a special prosecutor against the other's client.
* guidelines gave us the "teabagging" trend, which the guidelines call objectionable but seems to get a free pass.)
* Halo 3 where the Master Chief notices a cloaked elite and moves in to attack it until Johnson stops him saying that the Arbiter is with the humans. The Arbiter was cloaked because he was on reconnaissance.
* Grave Peril, Dresden manages to pull this off on Mortimer by sheer timing. Mort opens the door to his house to lug a suitcase outside, and Harry sidles in unnoticed while he's coming out. Then he sits in a chair and waits for Mort to come back in.
* Hen Wen, but with wings. In fact, a few people who want to remember this movie often mistake it for The Black Cauldron due to this.
* Graham Greene deconstructs this trope in one of his short stories: An old man comes back to his town and wants to see a graffiti where he painted the mystery of undiscovered sex when he was a teen. When he sees it, he only can see a gross caricature. The point is that for a teen,
* "Goodbye Earl" by the Dixie Chicks, which is a lighthearted, peppy song about an abusive husband and his
* Godzilla: The Series had the aptly titled "Area 51". Turns out that atomic weapons testing in the US desert had created a bunch of giant mutant, Godzilla-esque desert creatures that were being kept secret at the base, with the media having stories about aliens leaked out to cover it up.
* Good Cop/Bad Cop: While the good cop is respectful, the bad cop deals with suspects harshly.
* Heis'he Ri'nanovai": The Federation ambassador is willing to let Jethro Wisniewski be tried under Romulan law as long as the death penalty is taken off the table. Praetor Velal initially refuses, but then Ambassador Rama offers to help Velal get sanctions relief past the Federation Council.
* Hammerjack, Lea slashes Avalon's arm with a poisoned dagger. In order to survive, Avalon amputates the arm before the poison can spread.
* "Griffon the Brush Off" chasing his newest true love, complete with Pinkie performing his little love hop.
* Good Omens has a lot of these, as it's a book about the lead up to the End of Days.
* Highway Hunter has the MASTER, an alien prototype supercar that starts off with a laser.
* Here's a few more, including diamond planets, arcs of space lightning longer than galaxies, unidentified residue of the Big Bang, hypervelocity stars, and gamma ray bursts.
* Harvest Moon where you unlock special features on your 10th and 50th wedding anniversaries (a ring and a cottage, respectively), but the characters still look the same, despite the fact that the MC would be as old as Saibara and Ellen at this point.
* Guest-Star Party MemberSomeone who joins your party temporarily as a "guest".
* Gundam SEED where Lacus coaches Kira how to do it properly. Don't try it at home unless you have an anime character's waist.

* He didn't fly, and wound up paralyzed from the waist down for his trouble.
* Hexen features the names of Greek gods, yet the writing on the signs is in Latin and the numbers are Roman.
* Guild Wars in Ascalon City where he invoked the Foefire, killing the remaining Ascalonians and binding them as ghosts to continue fighting.
* Good Is Boring: The only thing you goody-two-shoes are good at is making people fall asleep. Also portraying virtues and harmony as inherently dull.
* Herman the weapons store owner, who apparently lost one of his arms after "his teacher told him not to stick his arm out the school bus window."
* Hero House Directly discusses this in episode three. It's given Red Hood a rather...nihilistic view.
* Hedgewars has it as one of the top tier weapons, sacrificing a hog to play it as it falls, bouncing several times and carving a hole into the landscape by way of several explosions.
* Harry is a Dragon, and That's Okay pranking the obnoxious teacher, Ron himself is teaching more Defence than the professor is, and there's a griffin in Slytherin, and thus is wondering if Hogwarts has turned upside down yet. When Neville downplays it by saying that they would know if Hogwarts had been turned upside down, the Weasley twins stick him to the ceiling.
* Global Agenda has the Assault class, an absurd tank and a good destroyer, depending on build, but is nearly useless at low levels. The most sought-after teammate class (exceeding even the medic!) at higher levels.
* Hercules also features one as the titular character goes from lanky and uncoordinated to buff and skilled while his Satyr trainer sings "One Last Hope."
* Heteronormative Crusader: A homophobic activist obsessed with combating what they view as sexual deviancy.
* Harrenhal associated with it. When Petyr Baelish inherits it as a reward for his cooperation with the winning side of the War of the Five Kings, he chooses to level it to the ground.
* Glowing Eyes. Whens he gets really angry, she gets first red dots in the middle of them and then wholly red glowing eyes.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers" fanfic nicknames everyone after their country of origin, and gets pissed when someone refuses his nicknames.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, although this is kinda vague as it's described in really vague poetic symbolic odd prose written by Yuki during the short story.
* Gulf" (1949). The "nova effect" was a scientific means of turning a planet into a nova and thus destroying it (it's described as a "plutonium, lithium, and heavy water deal", so it's yet another successful Heinlein prediction - this time, of the hydrogen bomb). After it was developed on the Moon, all of the documents used to create it were destroyed and everyone involved in creating it received hypnotic instructions to forget about it. Two sets of microfilms were made: one was to be taken to Earth for safe keeping, and a backup version was to be destroyed once the first set was safe. After a secret agent arrived on Earth with the first set the order was given to destroy the backups. Unfortunately the agent was pursued by the enemy and had to get rid of the first set before he could deliver them, and they were lost.
* He later has this set up again, but clarifies "not women — Asians!"
* Grid Warrior. Depending on the enemy's strength, you'll get up to three upgrade levels per weapon. The final upgrade can only be obtained by finishing off a weakened Boss with the Grabber.
* Goldstone: Furnace Creek Mining has security contractors armed with automatic rifles for some of their dirty work, and hires a local biker gang for the rest of it.
* Grotto or Legacy Bosses. Corvus was practically just put there to make sure you're ready for them.
* Go for It and Terence Hill. The two main characters, in early part of the movie, to get free ticktes at airport pose as Steinberg and Mason who had just been called for on the speaker. They get their tickets, not knowing their original purchasers are two CIA top agents (killed from the villains). So, after meet the CIA boss, they are forced to track down a mysterious secret organization hiding in Miami Beach.

* Hellsing Ultimate: Seras Victoria wakes up in the Hellsing manor after being turned into a vampire by Alucard to save her life.
* He doesn't get his wish, but he eventually gets cured when he realizes he just has to become familiar with a woman.
* Happy Endings, the gang is laughing at a video of Penny falling down the stairs, when Penny (who is in a half-body cast due to the accident), finally gets fed up with the mockery, and tells them it's not cool — she actually died for two minutes on the ambulance on the way to the hospital. They immediately stop after hearing this.
* Gunter is an interesting example in that his stats consistently get weaker the more sympathetic of a cause he is fighting for. In
* Highlander, and preaches that Immortals should live in peace and give up fighting each other. The real Methos decides to pay him a visit and ask a few questions, although it never goes beyond that and the real Methos doesn't reveal his identity.
* Grand Theft Auto series have you drive a vehicle carrying explosives that will blow if you bump it too much.
* Hedge Maze: Earliest examples date from the Elizabethan era (mid-1500s).
* Happy Heroes: Most Adelians (Kalo, Caesar, Arcas) tend not to wear much clothing.
* Heaven's Lost Property and force him to pick one of the four candidates, only for the attempted wedding to be crashed by yet another girl (a little sister this time). Later, Sohara indicates that she really doesn't mind the status quo continuing for a while longer.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers is usually better watched one after another on DVD.
* God of War II is at first polite and even flirty towards Kratos. Then the "petulant mortal they were controlling" kick her curvaceous ass, prompting her to become suddenly far harsher.
* Heck, if you time it right and jump off a high enough ramp/have the gliding Minicon, you can actually hitch a ride
* Gotham mayor Marion Grange changed to a male, despite the comic version of the character being a woman. This was mostly so that the creators could cast
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: When Italy and Japan discussed the shared dream they once had, they realized they were dreaming of their future meeting.
* have to have Crono in your party of three, this is a pretty clear hint that something is going to happen to him.
* Gotham Central the creator commentary reveals that she has become an actual alcoholic and has driven away her remaining friends and family.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 3 episode 28, Big M. gives Little M. instructions to cut the electrical circuit inside a building. He cuts Big M.'s belt instead, exposing his underwear.
* He also considered wearing one himself when he first became a masked vigilante but found it got in the way.
* He also mentions that his favorite gameplay is ball-busting difficulty, his favorite story-based games are miserable and depressing, and
* Hideaki is quite brutally honest, such as when he alludes to Akira putting her and Lilly's tickets through the wash.
* Haunted haunts a writer going through a mid-life crisis. The woman he's having an affair with (another writer) comes in brandishing a newspaper review, which she tells him to read, but says not to look at her quoted age. Byron's ghost, being present at the time and only visible to the protagonist has a great opportunity to look over her shoulder at the review, double-check how old the female writer is, and react with some degree of incredulity.
* Guardians of the Galaxy (2020). Naturally, seconds after he declares this, he finds out he's been contracted to kill Rocket Racoon.
* Half-Life: Alyx to their later Gravity Gun counterpart, meant that a lot of the difficulty involved in picking things up in VR was solved. The change in protagonist to Alyx made the shift to slower-paced puzzle-solving gameplay and small numbers of enemies much more suitable for a character who lacks Gordon's power armor and massive arsenal. Additionally, Alyx can only carry three guns and they're all one-handed, since one-handed guns are much easier to aim and code than their two-handed counterparts. And to compensate for the loss of powerful weapons, the game introduced a weapon upgrade system, as well as scattering the currency throughout the maps, which encourages the player to poke around the environments as much as possible (which is something of a selling point in VR anyway).

* Golgo 13 (Most of the chapters/episodes have self-contained plots that fall under this)
* Gunner Z. With upgrades, the Smart Gun can acquire targets quicker and the targetting window grows significantly larger. Despite doing less damage than the .50 calibre machine gun, because of its accuracy and target acquisition - the 5.56mm Smart Gun is often the superior weapon.
* Harry's best friend Hermione Granger is the most prominent one, and the
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets — but can't cast any of them because you've confiscated his wand. Similarly, Harry cannot use his spells during the final battle.
* Happens after Colin reveals his "digital mind" in the fourth video.
* Glee. Will's first girlfriend was his wife Terri. However, it isn't portrayed as a good thing, as they are in an unhappy marriage. However, Emma was the first romantic interest of Will seen.
* Harry Chapin were firm friends, but not beyond teasing each other about similarities in each others style and occasionally putting each others songs up against each other on release. Apparently Harry broke down and cried when Jim died and said "The best part of me has gone" and slipped into a mercifully short depression.
* Grand Theft Auto Online commit, but he will pay you and your allies a pretty penny to help him escape the prison and the country.
* Good Omens complaining about his job. It also has three extra verses at the end of Genesis 3 about the loss of the flaming sword by the angel Aziraphale, which it's strongly implied were added by Aziraphale himself.
* Green Arrow run, Ollie decides to represent himself in court. While this is met with shock (and his lawyer rubbing her temples), the defense itself goes pretty smoothly thanks to the Justice League stepping in.
* Hidden Track on that same album. "I was all by myself/there was nobody looking/I was thinking of you."
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix. She speaks with a high, girlish voice, whereas due to her froglike face, Harry had expected a croak.
* Halo, when Master Chief finds out that the Halos destroy all life in the galaxy, and not just the Flood, he confronts 343 Guilty Spark on the matter, with Spark's reaction being "You didn't ask." Guilty Spark was legitimately confused as to why Master Chief didn't already know what the Halos did, since he was well on his way to activating them. After all, who would activate a Giant Doomsday Weapon without knowing what it did?
* Goblins. It's a ground-floor window, but it's the thought that counts.
* Green Lantern, prompting a horrified Scott to enter Hell to rescue his wife's soul. Later, however, Scott was aged to his actual chronological age.
* guest comic where Jessica is having a wonderful dream about a huge feast and wakes up to find she was chewing on Zach's ear.
* Haven (2020), can only be reached by flying the Nest there once it is fully repaired, and once there, Yu and Kay have to proceed on foot to reach and sever Source's Flow Bridge.
* GURPS Technomancer, plastic golems, magical production lines, spells that do everything from deleting commercials on TV to making someone get a busy signal every time he calls you and even smart bombs driven by the pilot possessing a rat in the bomb with a little joystick!
* Green Rocks keep a stockpile of it around, to use for anything from creating super-steroids to illegal streetracing fuel to attempts to replicate alien technology. It's also common enough to have been used as ordinary rocks, or cheap alternatives to actual gemstones in jewelry.

* Hellsing as Victoria Harwood is truly British. Played straight with Seras, though, as K.T. Grey is an American.
* Hardly Kirk-ing DVD boxset. While Bart is occupied watching the DVD, Lisa quickly turns to building a castle from the box (with a dumbfounded Bart's drool as the moat).
* Golden Axe: The arcade ending has the heroes and villains escaping the arcade machine and continuing their battling.
* Hatchet of the first three films, is finally mortally wounded by Crowley in the third, but manages to take him out before she expires. Confirmed in the fourth entry.
* Heck, this was a slight problem with the series pilot - the murderer got too much screen time and became sympathetic by default. And then Columbo is a complete and utter
* Godzilla Raids Again was redubbed in Germany in the early 2000s after the original version was presumed lost. Then in 2009, the elements for the German theatrical version were found, and the new dub has not been included on releases since.
* Greyhawk setting has the Circle of Eight, an order composed primarily of wizards and lead by Mordenkainen to maintain (Mordenkainen's vision of) the balance. Keeping Evil around is required to keep Good working together and on the ball, lest they start with the infighting as mortals are wont to do. No, not all good guys are on the same side on Oerth by default — they need someone on the outside pushing them together.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi. They are assumed to be adults like their real life counterparts but the art style makes them look like children and they act like teens.
* Harry thinks of a naked Snape, Filch, and Dumbledore after seeing Hermione in a wet school blouse.
* Heckler & Koch G3 rifle: Original American rocket launcher (M1 and M9 "Bazooka") → upscaled German copy (Raketenpazerbüsche 43 and 54 "Panzerschreck") → upgraded, further-upscaled original American rocket launcher based on the Panzerschreck.
* Gregg mentions having "really up up days and really down down days" and exhibits some poor impulse control and self-destructive habits when particularly "up". Bea explicitly says that he is probably bipolar.
* Harriett Potter pulls this on the Weasley Twins very effectively in * Griefer Belt for black market deals. Needless to say, they kill people for their money all the time.
* hilarious. (The fight between the four continues into the end credits.)
* gravitic on the tactic for the benefit of a gaggle of hero-worshiping midshipmen, dissecting all of the myriad ways the Peeps could have spotted Honor coming light minutes away and turned her entire fleet into space junk with a single salvo. To quote Henke below:
* Grrl Power Maxima gives Harem a ripping wedgie as "military discipline" after a poorly-received prank, leading to a painful chain reaction where all five versions of Harem keep injuring each other, to Maxima's amusement.
* Harrison Bergeron wearing people who managed the conspiracy of the average.
* Highschool of the Dead, despite most of the main cast being high school age and obviously competent from the reader's perspective, they receive this treatment once they reach the Takagi mansion. Fortunately, the cast gets their chance to prove themselves.
* Hellboy: The Ogdru Jahad are monstrous entities created by the first spirits to exist, which was long before humanity existed. They're in cocoons in space, but Hellboy's right hand is the key to releasing them to bring about the end of the world (though not if Hellboy has anything to say about it).
* He even manages to use them to defeat an attacking magician who appears to have some form of PTSD from time spent in Antarctica (Antarctica being a * Greek mythology, the Cornucopia is a magical horn created by Zeus (or Herakles in some versions) which is said to be able to create a never-ending supply of fruits and vegetables.

* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, when Carl is asked to plant some evidence and then give 555-WE-TIP a call.
* Guild Wars, a well-placed herd of Necromancer minions can sometimes kill exactly the wrong person during a mission cutscene.
* Gradius and its spin-offs, starting with Salamander and Gradius II, only one original boss per main series games (except in Gradius V) has the head as its weakpoint, as the announcer directs by shouting "Shoot it in the head!".
* Greek gods, yet would savagely punish anyone who so much as looked at Hera (or any of the other major goddesses.) The goddess Calypso later called Zeus and the other male Olympians out on this, not that it did any good.
* has anime-style opening and closing credits where Karamel is credited for producing, creating, co-writing, directing, editing, music, character design, and most of the voices. Gurun is credited slightly less for co-writing and additional voices.
* Harbinger himself pops up as one of these to vent his annoyance at Shepard for delaying the Reapers yet again, along with the usual "we cannot be stopped" monologue.
* Hedwig And The Angry Inch, who is presenting a male gender identity throughout the movie (Yitzak's biological sex is left ambiguous in the finished version of the movie). His distinctly feminine voice is the only giveaway underneath the fake facial hair and men's clothing, which emphasizes that Yitzak is a feminine person who is forced to act masculine.
* Good Luck Charlie episode "Special Delivery". Bob refers to his new car as a "she," and PJ, confused as to how he can tell the car is a girl, drops down to look underneath the car.
* He's Just Not That into You has three: Gigi Phillips is like a basset hound. They're kinda pathetic - so you want to cheer them up. Beth Murphy wants a good man and a husband. Mary is a romantic who has been hiding behind technology.
* Harvey Comics: Little Dot, whose entire personality revolves around the fact that she is obsessed with polka-dot patterns (and by extension, virtually anything circular), to the point where she paints dots on everything, even other people's property. Her only rationale for her impulsiveness is "dots are beautiful". She gets upset to the point of distress if her handiwork is removed or ridiculed, as in one story where Little Lotta points out numerous things that were troublesome despite being dot-shaped.
* God of War II, your escape from the Colossus of Rhodes's rampage takes you crashing through the ceiling of a bathhouse where two women wait in a state of undress. You can stop and have sex with them.
* Hilarious in Hindsight if you know that Ablett began his career at Hawthorn before transferring to the Cats.
* Griffith to come in and save Midland from the foreign invaders with his badass Apostle army.
* Grimm on NBC, which started in the Death Slot but moved to Mondays for its second season, then back to Fridays, again. It still did moderately well for an NBC show, even with the timeslot, and was renewed for its sixth and final 13-episode season in 2016-17.
* Heartcore), and is feared and/or despised among his fellow demons for being a sadist who would like to cannibalize his fellow Overfiends and would betray his comrades at the drop of a hat.
* Griffons, once ridden by the Grey Wardens, were thought to have gone extinct after the Fourth Blight, but the spin-off novel
* Hand-or-Object Underwear: A naked character deliberately covers themselves by placing their hands over their private parts or holding objects over their private parts.
* Happy Feet. Memphis, distracted by thoughts of his wife, drops his egg in the arctic snow. He retrieves it fast enough to save his unborn son's life, but Mumble is born completely tone-deaf because of it.

* Harry is exploring the HQ of a non-hostile Voldemort when he runs into Bellatrix Lestrange, who starts crowing about delivering him to Voldemort. In a bid to confuse her he asks "Do you think your Lord...incompetent?" When fast talking fails and he runs into Voldemort while trying to escape the latter asks "Bella, do you think me incompetent?"
* Guys and Dolls uses this in the dance routine for "A Bushel And A Peck."
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, it is mentioned that Araminta Meliflua, a cousin of Sirius Black's mother, tried to have a Ministry bill passed that would make it legal to hunt Muggles.
* Heaven: The Ancient Egyptians believed in several afterlife concepts. One of these, the Duat, included at least in New Kingdom times a region called the Fields of Contentment/Offerings, and the Field of Reeds, which were heavenly landscapes with exclusive entry requirements. Another belief was that the virtuous dead, or at least kings, could join the stars and sun in the sky after they died.
* Gundam 00 movie, Hallelujah uses Parkour to defeat alien-possessed vehicles. He knew he was screwed when the helicopter came after him, though.
* Half in the Bag, Mike and Jay run a VCR repair store, and their main source of income is from Harry Plinkett, who they defraud and lie to in order to have him constantly return his VCR for repairs.
* Grey DeLisle has also done this with Azula. According to her, Azula does, in fact, love Ty Lee. She has also made several audio recordings in Azula's voice about their romantic relationship.
* Half-Life 1. The US Marines sent in to quell the alien invasion of Black Mesa are also there to contain all information of the outbreak...by killing every Black Mesa employee they meet, including you.
* Hidden Expedition has you make your own sulfuric acid. It's bright lime green and takes only a few seconds to eat through the top of a wooden box it accidentally spills on.
* Hilda: The city of Trolberg is surrounded by a huge wall, meant to keep Trolls and other dangerous creatures out. The wall has multiple bell towers build into it's structure for this purpose as well.
* High School D×D saw that coming since the two of them don't have that many roles that have them together.
* Guy de Maupassant is sacred, marriage is just a social convention, love can and should be looked for outside marriage and that is natural to have multiple loves during one's lifetime. She then admonished her granddaughter that holding such dogmatic views would make her an unhappy woman.
* Highlander is built of this. When one immortal meets another, a fight often occurs in which one of them is beheaded. The immortals hunt and kill each other.
* Happy Heroes, Big M. fakes wanting to kill himself in order to convince Smart S. to give him a stray cat that he has under his care. Little M. gets in on the ploy by actually bringing out a gun to kill Big M. with; Big M. understandably does not appreciate it. The whole thing is played for laughs.
* he/she will finally get beatenSo wrestling companies have created an alternate logic, where if you lose a match that involves retrieving an object, or you lose a tag team match or a match with three or more participants and you're not the one to eat the pin or get forced to submit, or even if you get yourself disqualified in a match (especially if you're a heel), you're still technically undefeated. This allows a wrestler to avoid swallowing up everyone else's momentum, to lose title matches, or even to win and lose championships outright, without losing the allure of the question as to who will finally take them down.
* half-Time Lord. After all, she primarily uses tech like vortex manipulators to travel.
* Hawaii Five-O, usually accompanying surfing or anything to do with the ocean.
* Heel–Face Turn but endures it all because he believes that those who can't handle it don't belong, and that prevailing while sticking to the code will be best for the future of not just ROH but the business overall. Since Generation Next he also continues to bring young talent into the promotion with intent to help them get better, again with the belief that if they get to good for him to hang with he should no longer be around.

* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, all cunningly disguised by J.K. Rowling as a Breather Episode to downplay the seriousness involving Snape and Dumbledore's storyline.
* Gomer Pyle, U.S.M.C., Gomer is feeling a bit nervous about tryouts to see if any of the troops would be capable of becoming future non-com officers, and his grandpa Otis Pyle is in town. When Gomer tells his grandpa of his dilemma after failing the first try, Grandpa Otis gives him a chrome plate "Excelsior" to help boost his confidence. After Otis remarks that Sgt. Carter has been looking a little flabby and out of shape, Sgt. Carter decides to give Pyle another chance, and he's more successful the second time around. Later in Grandpa Otis's trailer, he reveals that the chrome "Excelsior" plate came from his fridge, and Pyle's confidence came from within his heart after a little encouragement.
* GURPS Reign of Steel goal of the original A.I. have decided that it's really more resource-efficient to work them to death since you at least get something more than a dead human out of it. More elaborate examples tailored to the A.I.'s specific interests:
* Hajime, on top of knowing a great deal about making tea, also bakes, particularly for his Tea Club seniors to eat during together club meetings; they are always very happy to enjoy the efforts of their cute and hard-working junior.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged is this on his lightest days. Played for laughs.
* he turns down Luffy's attempts to bring him back from Totto Land because his abusive family blackmailed him into marrying Pudding, and if he defied his purpose, his loved ones (especially Zeff.
* Gotrek & Felix world, began life in very much this way. One's a massively-muscled, shaven-headed, axe-wielding Dwarf in search of a glorious death, the other's a ne'er-do-well poet, minor political agitator and the son of an Altdorf wool merchant. Together they fight... well, anything and everything they can really - glorious deaths are hard to find when you're as good at fighting as Gotrek Gurnisson. The only thing keeping them together, or so Felix says, is a drunken oath Felix swore many years ago to record Gotrek's doom in an epic poem (and Dwarfs take both oathing and drinking very, very seriously). In fact Felix often muses on the situation he's found himself in, and wonders whether he really could go back to a different life if Gotrek did eventually meet his doom, so long have they been adventuring together.
* Harkon, the main antagonist of the Dawnguard expansion, makes a terrible mistake in choosing to spare the Dragonborn out of one-off gratitude if the latter refuses his offer to become a Vampire Lord; let's just leave it at that.
* He once bought a mobile phone... that's bigger than a backpack and has 10 power cords to charge it up.
* Grim Fandango the protagonist Manny's sidekick Glottis, in awe after an eyepatch-wearing, gruff, salty sailor type has given a stirring speech, whispers "Wowww! Manny, could I have an eyepatch?"
* Gloria Montero, from season 14's "Poisoned Motive", the daughter of Fin's old partner Luis who was injured during a drug bust, that ended with him losing his job and disability check, and Gloria's mother to die of breast cancer due to not being able to pay for her treatment. After being rejected by both the army and the police due to failing the psychological profile, Gloria goes on a shooting spree to get revenge on those she blames for what happened to her father by targeting their loved ones: first Fin's new partner, then the son of the lieutenant who fired Luis, then the drug baron's girlfriend. Descending she killed a traffic warden who put a ticket on her father's car, a security officer at the abandoned hospital were her mother died and finally took the family that moved into their old house hostage.
* He does get to swear normally at the end of the episode, though it's bleeped out.
* Goodbye, Sarah Jane Smith", however, our heroes defeat Ruby White by projecting a hologram of a meteor shower all over the world to overwhelm her with the human race's panic. The fact that this would logically result in crashes and heart attacks is never mentioned. We could assume that it was worth it to stop her from becoming powerful enough to destroy the world, but no one even brings it up.

* Heidi "Lady Niko" Rekell has been the unofficial administrator, and "go to" person for
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire guest judge who has a vested interest in Harry's success in the tournament? It turns out to be none of these suspects, but instead the gruff-yet-lovable new professor, Mad-Eye Moody, who has been supposedly helping Harry the whole time. Though, truthfully, it was a Death Eater disguised as Mad-Eye Moody, through the use of Polyjuice Potion.
* Heroic BSoD being misinterpreted as unmoved by her child's death, plus her Seventh-Day Adventist faith (unusual and not well understood in Australia), the authorities invoked this trope and the mother was convicted of murder and sentenced to life in prison. After the child's jacket was found in a dingo's cave, the conviction was reversed. More modern scientific analysis of the evidence available, while inconclusive, supports the mother's version of events. She and her husband were completely exonerated.
* Green Lantern has Agent Orange, who absorbs the form and memory of those he kills, allowing him to create duplicates of them as subordinates. Having become the living embodiment of Avarice, he desires to own everything, including the very identities of his enemies.
* Hawkman comics, the Wingmen often act as this. Especially the Elite Hawkman Force.
* Gravity Falls, Grunkle Stan has described Mabel's homemade drink "Mabel Juice" (which is bright green and has plastic toys floating in it) as tasting "like coffee and nightmares had a baby".
* Good Luck Chuck, where the titular character is practically assaulted by a goth girl during the party game (while both are still pre-teens) and flees the closet in terror after she claws his chest.
* Gojira, and it's revealed that he's right as another Godzilla shows up.
* Halo: Combat Evolved features the Pillar of Autumn's Marine complement gearing up to repel boarders.
* Hey Dude! featured an episode in which bunkmates Brad and Melody fought over the latter's fondness for loud music and exercising, leading Melody to "solve" the problem by putting up a blanket as a dividing line, and then blasting her stereo, as she could do as she pleased on her side. However, the outlet into which her stereo was plugged was on Brad's side...
* Hearing Voices: A character hears disembodied voices due to insanity or supernatural forces.
* Hat and then bring the humans they like the most back to Uranus with them.
* Grim Dawn. One side-quest has a gang of bandits forcing some villagers to salvage scrap metal for them.
* Healing Factor by overstressing his power. Angel's power had an interesting limitation: it would only work on people with the same blood type as his (or maybe anyone who could accept his blood type). It was discovered when, after an attack by an anti-mutant fringe group, they had him donating blood through about eight separate tubes to as many badly injured mutants. However, only some of them were healed.
* He Who Fights Monsters: Morally and ideologically becoming their crazy enemy.
* Gloss and Cashmere try hard to forget an ugly argument they once about
* Greek Ninja, it turns out to be the reason of everything that happened.
* .hack//G.U. Redemption has you fight against doppelgangers of your party. When said doppelgangers simply respawn immediately after being defeated, your current party will stay behind to hold them off, afterwhich you replace them with another set of reserves. This repeats until about three-fourths of your party is gone, leaving you to pick from the remainder for the final boss fight. They all end up being fine in the end, however.
* Green-Sky Trilogy has descendants of an Earth colony living on a small rainforest planet with seven moons and a beautiful green sky.
* High and Low, the kidnappers snatch not the son of the industrialist they were after, but the child of his chauffeur.

* Gwen, Izzy, Duncan, Trent, Courtney, Bridgette etc. are common beauties. A couple of people call each of them hot, but that's it.
* Gundam Extreme VS Maxi Boost, Leos goes from his original Extreme Gundam to the Type II VS, which brings all the Extreme's phases together to form something that is essentially a super robot version of Strike Freedom with an Erupting God Finger-esque attack.
* has no idea what Kamukura's going to do, when Enoshima says that her followers all knew about the AI plan.
* Harry Harrison), thus the following novels no longer fit this trope.
* Godzilla (1998) for the creature come to the end of a blocked tunnel, and turn to search somewhere else. As they do so the "rubble" blocking the tunnel turns out to be Godzilla's eyelid.
* Hannah Montana" guy or Miley's dad rather than being on the show), or know anything besides the basic premise, yet they know it exactly for what the show would spawn into.
* Hair-Trigger Temper led him to insult everyone from the professional soldiers and officers he commanded to civilian critics to even Borden himself, which finally led to Borden firing him. By that point, he was mistrusted by everyone from King George V on down to the common soldiers in the field loudly criticizing him.
* got quite dirty and banged up.. There were 135 flights, and 2 shuttles destroyed with all crew lost. In light of that second failure, earlier Shuttle flights were looked at again and reassessed for risk. It was estimated that early flights should have failed about 1 in 10 times, and the likelihood of staving off failure until Challenger was just 6%!
* God-Emperor, they're actually quite pleasant, and unless their employers are opposed to you or you've managed to royally piss them off, they are extremely happy to live and let live (assuming they don't decide to fuck with you and make you the butt of an incredibly unpleasant joke).
* High School Dx D at all, and the ability of some of them to kill gods is likewise a relatively new development.
* Grimm faked, but if a guy going off-script gets the crowd's approval, the management will roll with it.
* Greyhawk setting. The Sea of Dust had "dust lakes" which acted like water, including supporting boats and allowing people to swim through it.
* High-end displays (TVs/monitors) like the Pioneer Kuro Elite and Mitsubishi LaserVue lines do * here. It rates fictional cultures and races by letters in order of pleasantness to horror for humans to be conquered by them.
* "Happy" by Mitski covers this. It features a protagonist watching her happy marriage fall apart after her husband returns home from war. She becomes increasingly suspicious of the jewellery he gives her, and where he goes late at night. Despite having dark hair and eyes, she finds a lock of blonde hair and 'For My Blue-Eyed Cookie' embroidered on a bag he gave her. It is all but confirmed that he is having an affair, as we see various shots of him seducing different women. And then she goes down to the basement...
* Harrow, a mysterious figure sets out to make Harrow's life a living hell. as part of this, he plants stolen drugs in Fern's apartment and then calls the police, getting her arrested.
* Hellboy, Abe Sapien finds pictures on a wall of his transformation into a fish-man, with his former friends standing around and visibly celebrating the transformation (as they believed that this brought their friend closer to their favorite occult deities); he becomes so upset he punches one of the pictures, breaking the frame and putting a hole through the wall behind it.
* he is a bloodbender and he uses his creepy powers to kidnap Korra. In the season finale, it's revealed that Amon and Tarrlok are actually brothers, so memetic molester behavior must run in the family. Not to mention, Amon is also a bloodbender.
* Hannah Montana characters President Martinez and his daughter Sophie. Miley had told her bodyguard Roxie to work for the President after being fed up with her, but then started to miss her and came to the President's hotel as Hannah to get her back. After learning that Hannah has been scheduled to give singing lessons to Sophie, Miley and Lily switch clothes and disguise themselves as each other's alter-egoes so that Miley can sneak out to find Roxie. After Roxie agrees to come back and they reconcile, Miley and Roxie go back to the former's house and Robby Ray asks Miley why she is dressed as Lola, leading to Miley to realize she had forgotten Lily in the hotel.

* Grandma Got Run Over by a Reindeer talks to herself about finding a way to sell Grandma's store for big bucks. She turns around to see the protagonist, Jake, who asks her what she said... Cue poorly thrown together excuse about her saying they'd need to sell a lot of fruitcake. Sure, that IS what she was helping with at the time, but still.
* Harry Dresden is a prodigy and his proclivity for leaving lots of things in his wake on fire is mentioned repeatedly — a
* Halo 4; the earlier MJOLNIR favored by S-IIs and IIIs tends to be blocky and utilitarian-looking, while the current and more advanced MJOLNIR favored by Spartan-IVs tends to be smooth and rather fancy-looking.
* Happy Tree Friends: Flippy/Fiqpy. While he didn't fight in the actual Vietnam War rather fighting in a in-universe war, his character is heavily inspired by such veterans. He frequency has flashbacks to the war, which cause him to become very violent.
* Hannah Montana feminine voice to ring through the air, telling Oliver to hurry up.
* Grimm's Fairy Tale Classics have some recognition amongst the furry fandom.
* HERZ: This story has Captain Kurumi Kagero, UN Special Investigations Officer.
* "Goat Song": Harper goes to destroy the society constructed by SUM, urging people to give up the bracelets that contains a promised earthly resurrection, spreading myths and legends, and trusting in things can not be found in science. He's the hero. Yes, this is the opposite of "Holmgang".
* handwave. Most writers have his size remain consistent, though the artwork usually won't reflect this for dramatic purposes. This is why the Hulk won't always just get bigger as he gets angrier, he'll vary in either direction from one panel to another (even if they show the same moment in time or are separated by a matter of seconds).
* Gobbotopia is technically a theocracy founded and ruled by Redcloak, a Cleric and chosen prophet of his god, the Dark One.
* Hey, It's That Gun!: The viewer recognizes a firearm playing a role in a world one would not expect to find it.
* Godzilla Against Mechagodzilla. (Well, what would you expect when you use his skeleton as the frame?)
* Goldust, particularly in IWA East Coast, because Goldust reminded him of a bully he was prevented from killing in his boyhood.
* Golden Krone Hotel has the Delusion status effect, which randomizes the appearance of everything. The effect is permanently applied in the Pharmacopeia level, making it hard to distinguish normal enemies from the boss.
* Haunt The House: The Phantom character lives in an underground lair below the theater, wears a half-mask, and owns a pipe organ.
* Groundhog Day if she could play the part using her natural South Carolina accent.
* Hellsing is only too happy to fulfill this in both letter and spirit.
* he has to stand next to Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick was frequently drawn as a midget in political cartoons, since while the real Bush is actually 5'11" — not small by any means — he wound up looking short next to the outrageously tall Kerry (same with Al Gore, who's 6'2"). There was apparently some behind-the-scenes handwringing by the Bush staff about this (previously, though likely coincidentally given the fairly small sample size, the taller major-party candidate had always been the winner of the presidential election) that resulted in negotiations with his competitor's counterparts about the best way to film them to prevent this, not that it worked.
* Goodbye Partner, the villian fits one to Alisa, a teenage piano prodigy, partially to keep her from escaping, but mostly so no one will dare kill him. If his pulse stops, the choker triggers and blows her head off.

* Heel–Face Turn when he came to the conclusion that it was better to create than destroy.
* GURPS, in which the New England Confederacy seceded from the USA. Of course, many of the more divergent timelines like Ezcalli, Roma Aeterna or Midgard never had anything remotely similar to the United States.
* Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 7, which comes between two movements titled "Nachtmusik" (night music).
* has a very strange morality that makes her act in ways Ranma can't stand.
* HarmonQuest in front of a live studio audience, the special guest players usually takes this role as their characters become the episode's villain of the week (in cases where the character doesn't die at the end, they just make an excuse to go their separate ways instead).
* Goldust's gimmick was a pan-sexual who would flirt with his opponents to gain a psychological advantage in a match by, for example, suddenly appearing to enjoy the grapple he's been put into or caressing his opponent in a hold.
* Head Office' character, who dies of a heart attack after his blood pressure went too high from stress. The other one is Danny DeVito's character, who jumps to his death from the building into the fountain.
* Heroes actually abused this, by having Martian Manhunter pretend to be Superman in front of Lex Luther to get a confession for a crime.
* Halo, the Covenant and Prometheans will keep firing at the last position they saw you since you last ducked behind cover. Trying to re-emerge there will probably get your shields shot off in short order, but if all their focus is there...
* Hetalia: Axis Powers several times. From clothes to books to Death Notes to flowers, the characters' backs can store them all.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged in 2016 prior to the release of Episode 6) that lasted until its completion in Fall 2018.
* Happens again after Jack and Elizabeth are marooned. With Will in custody, the pirates now have the real person they need. Yet Jack and Elizabeth spend the night on the island before being rescued by the Royal Navy. With Jack's navigation they reach Isla de Muerta, and again it's before the ceremony has started.
* Grant Hill". He gets a Sprite, drinks it, and tries to dunk, while a deep voiceover says, "If you wanna make it to the NBA..." The kid fails miserably, landing on his ass. "...practice." Then, the little tag at the end, which seemed to say, "Incidentally, Sprite can't make you dunk, but it quenches thirst, so why not get some next time?"
* Hansel and Gretel begrudges her stepchildren their food and has them abandoned so they will not have to feed them. Although sometimes she has the excuse that there is a famine, in some variants, she just resents spending anything on them.
* Hi-de-Hi! ran for nine series over eight years, but takes place over just two summers.
* greater degree) Margie, who both hate boys in the same immature way other examples hates girls. In both cases, it seems to be because neither one likes their brother(s).
* Going Postal Moist von Lipwig views a real ring and a fake ring as part of his basic tools for emergencies. When the man wants to have it valued and they go to an actual jeweler he shows the man a real diamond ring. Reassured that it's real the mark then buys the ring, and when he takes it back to the jeweler to sell he's informed that it's brass and glass. His backup plan, if he can't source the real ring, is to walk through the motions of this con... and then make the trade almost immediately thereafter, without any time for a switch, with the aim of proving to the mark that this relatively well-known con isn't going on. The trick here is that Moist bribed the jeweler ahead of time to testify that his glass ring was real.
* Heir fic, Harry, Tom, and Draco aren't nearly as careful with their scheming as they think they are-Ron, Blaise and perhaps half of Slytherin house knows that Harry is the Heir but have so far kept quiet.
* Green vs. Red. It stands out a little, but since the rest of the animation in the special is so over the top, not as much as it could have.

* "Got the Time" is generally associated with the 1990 thrash mental version by
* Grey's Anatomy, Meredith enters the kitchen to talk to her latest suitor while Callie is cooking, leading to this response:
* Heroic Build in RE5 as the camera zooms in on his big o'l biceps and chest.
* Harry Potter, she has been quoted as saying she didn't actually have children in mind when she wrote the series and was really just entertaining herself.
* GURPS has "The Mask of Maaukepu". If you look at someone while wearing it there's a small chance you'll see the worst thing that person has ever done.
* Goku and Chichi could count as an example because Goku was a practitioner of martial arts who lived in the mountains and he made the
* Guards! Guards! has "thieves thieved, assassins assassinated, and hussies hustled."
* Harmony and Valor story "Cultural Differences", two assholes sexually harass Lyra and Sweetie Drops while they are on a date at a restaurant. Flash Sentry steps in and he and Sweetie effortlessly kick their asses. The entire restaurant applauds and their meals are offered on the house.
* Hawkeye and Winchester both had their opportunity to be Neidermeyers when given the chance to command. Anyone other than Blake or Potter in charge of the 4077th ends up as this trope. The difference between them and Burns is that these episodes set up an
* High School Musical 3 sums up the message that a person can have and pursue more than one passion.
* has assigned himself the task of maintaining a chart documenting who appears in each episode and periodically submits details about his findings.
* GURPS, being a generic system, addresses issues of ramming in its vehicle rules; how well it works depends on the vehicles involved and their other combat options. Some are fitted with rams that make them a bit more effective for the purpose.
* Heather Dale covered this song under the title "The Farmer's Curst Wife"
* Grendel side stories not featuring any of the main successive Grendels.
* Have I Got News for You: they showed a clip of a horrible accident and then assured the audience that "although that accident looked serious, nobody involved was actually British."
* Gunsmith Cats: Bean Bandit's car, named "The Buff", is a custom built muscle car with spikes in the wheels, bullet-proof glass, and wheels that can turn 90 degrees on a whim.
* Grand Finale. Instead it made a needlessly idiotic plan and cast aside Discord's development for what's seen as a cheap plot twist.
* Heroic (one person, may include companions, but focused on the person)
* heel will, 9 times out of 10, decline to press charges, preferring to simply get a chance to defeat their tormentors in the ring.
* Hellboy's voice is very easy to imagine while reading his lines. It helps that he was Mignola's original choice for the role too.
* Halo 3. That said, while Master Chief might be able to tear a tank apart with his bare hands, his fists shouldn't be high-explosive weaponry, even if he's punching the engine.
* Hard Candy, where 32-year-old Jeff hits on allegedly 14-year-old Hayley.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series: Razer still wears his Red Lantern Corps uniform even after joining Hal's group because it seems to appear automatically whenever he uses the ring he kept.
* Harry gets in on the act when an ex-girlfriend returns. Said ex struggling with vampirism when they do have sex she is tied up with magic rope for mutual safety. This doesn't seem to be Harry's normal taste but it
* Gunslinger Girl moments, like when she comes across a boy she'd met before (and fancied) in the aftermath of an assassination.
* God Eater, a complete redo of the game that integrated DLC monsters into the main progression, added mechanics and weapon types from the sequel, and another plot arc that served to connect the game to its sequel.
* Grand Theft Auto V, Michael de Santa says his signature line "You forget thousands of things every day. How bout you make sure this is one of them." This comes back to bite him in the ass when his old partner-in-crime Trevor recognizes the phrase and tracks him down.

* Gratuitous Latin — Omnia cum Latina est melius quam omnia sine Latine.
* Gosei Sentai Dairanger, where Daisuke was the main hero (Blue Beet), while Keisuke played his evil twin (Black Beet).
* Great Teacher Onizuka followed the manga for the most part right up the trip to Okinawa.
* Greatjon Umber laughs off losing two fingers and then being humiliated by Grey Wind because Robb's forbearance and willingness to stand up to him are impressive. He later becomes one of Robb's staunchest supporters.
* GTA IV parody Lifeinvader. The company is forced to sell its domain name, reflecting how Myspace went out of style in the late 2000s and early 2010s.
* Goosebumps: In the Ghost Next Door book, girl meets boy, boy accidentally passes through girl and girl is actually a ghost.
* Heaven's Feel, there is the moment when True Assassin discovers that Rider's chain-dagger is lodged in his shoulder. Wall-slamming ensues.
* Glowworm might be a minelayer and thus might rather catastrophically explode upon being rammed.
* Gravity Falls takes advantage of Mabel's niceness to go goof off with her friends, and Dipper's attempt to liven up the Shack with an actual monster, the Gremoblin, goes horribly wrong (first by no one believing it's a monster and then it escaping in part of Mabel's attempt at being nice). After the twins scare the Gremoblin away, Mabel ends up snapping at Soos and Wendy after the two try to get out of fixing the damage done to the Mystery Shack, and she ends up barking orders like Stan to get things done.
* Have You Tried Not Being a Monster?'s inability to be with the man he loved.
* Guillermo del Toro and the effects artists admit that huge beings, robots or monsters alike, would move slowly, but the Kaiju and Jaegers move quickly to make for fun scenes. They do nod to the trope,
* Heralds of Valdemar series are the survivors of nation of people. They became mercenaries and tried to get enough money to create a new homeland.
* going to the store, an example of surreal 3D animation set over real-life backdrops.
* Heavenly Sword is a prime example of this trope, as evidenced by the sadistic pleasure he takes in the imminent (and actual) slaughter he causes.
* Hearts of Iron IV to penetrate it, in which case the armor bonus is completely nullified.
* Hermione does this to Harry a couple of times, usually when they meet for the first time at the beginning of a given book.
* Harrison Bergeron is a satire of continues to be argued over to this day. Those on the right claim it's a satire of egalitarianism. Those on the left claim it's a satire of the right's views of egalitarianism.
* Harry Potter"; when Harry finds himself in a world where the prophecy was never made and his parents are still alive but Voldemort has basically taken over, he is initially willing to stay in this new world, but the moment he learns that in this reality Ginny was sent to Azkaban for opening the Chamber of Secrets, he works with Sirius to become an Animagus so that he can help Ginny break out, which subsequently inspires him to try and make things better in this world.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince are and where they're hidden so they can then destroy them.
* Heartwarming Moment, Iorio told D'Amato after the final that her gold medal should be considered partly D'Amato's as well, since D'Amato's willingness to step aside played a role in Iorio being able to win.
* Gotham: In "The Scarecrow", Jonathan Crane is injected with a massive dose of his father's fear 'vaccine'. It causes him to hallucinate a demonic scarecrow. This becomes his greatest fear and the effects of the serum cause him to see it coming for him perpetually.
* Grave Encounters is about a reality TV film crew locked in an abandoned insane asylum. The asylum was described by a caretaker (in-movie) that apparently was less about mental health and more a dumping ground for unwanted or embarrassing family members with lobotomies liberally performed in the hundreds by the head doctor of the facility. When the crew get locked in at night, the building's layout is impossible, ghosts appear everywhere, and they are trapped in nonstop darkness since it seems like they're locked in a totally different dimension.

* Godiva's. She lets Ramir know, and proposes a union of mutual beardship, where they would live together but sleep with other people. Ramir agrees, but has a change of heart and leaves her at the altar.
* Halt and Catch Fire, which highlights that there actually were quite a few girls on the Internet back in the early days.
* Grimtooth's Traps series by Flying Buffalo had an 'additional trap', to 'punish' players who read the book. On the trap page, Grimtooth claimed that the book pages had been liberally coated with a deadly neurotoxin absorbed through the skin ... with two blackened fingerprint outlines right where a normal reader would hold the book when reading.
* Ground Control to Psychoelectric Girl provides the voice of a minor character named Hanazawa.
* Going to or from H&K/CETME roller-delayed guns to or from anything else. Where you know to at least feel for the charging handle towards the rear of the weapon, these guns have them at the front where the gas tube would be if there was one.
* Good Luck Chuck outright deconstructs this trope by having our "good guy" Chuck veer off in a tear of obsessive, controlling, paranoid, and downright creepy-stalker behavior after spending the night with Cam. Eventually, he stops, is willing to set up a date with another man for her, and later explains himself and apologizes, sincerely saying he's willing to leave her life if she wants him to. In most movies, his crazy actions would just win the girl over, but here he actually has to work at it.
* Hellraiser second only to the Friday the 13th series in terms of the number of entries.
* Groin Attack: Tomboys will sometimes deliver these to male characters. If it's in anger or during a fight, the implication is that despite her taste and behaviour, the tomboy is still not male. If she inflicts it for a laugh, this simple but cruel prank is supposed to demonstrate a "masculine" sense of humour.
* Grizzly Man is the only one who listens to it. Herzog refused to put it into the film and informs Treadwell's ex-girlfriend to destroy the tape. There are some descriptions, including evidence of a desperate fight against the bear.
* GURPS can set not just his weapons one fire but also set his clothing on fire, intelligent fire that actively attacks people who strike at the wearer. And if that's not enough he can turn himself into nothing but fire!
* Governments absolutely despise counterfeit currency for a large number of reasons, but the most common is the fact that counterfeiting is a dangerously inflationary action: with more hard currency in circulation, the "rarity" of said currency is diminished, and prices go up as a result (in other words, $100 is not worth as much when there's a lot of $100 bills available).
* Groove Coaster has been done at the corporate level to address this (not helped by there being no way for non-employees to contact Round 1's corporate offices), meaning that if you want to play at a more reasonable price, you have only two options: play in Event Mode if it's available and be limited to a small pool of songs, or outright leave the country.
* Happens fairly frequently when two players disagree on a rule, especially in the middle of a big combat. There's a reason most games give advice to the GM to intervene with a ruling quickly.
* Half-Life 2 adorable.) Alyx has been adding modifications to him for years. It's possible that he originally did look like a dog.
* Gone Horribly Right: A solution becomes a new problem due to working too well.
* Haruhi Suzumiya who still has to deal with the ever insane and domineering alternate universe Haruki.

* Hermione's intelligence undergoes this too. Initially in book's 1 and 2 she is merely very clever; She both works harder and picks things up a bit quicker than most of her classmates. By the end of the series there is literally not a single spell or potion she is ever mentioned at having failed at, although admittedly, Harry is repeated shown to best Hermione in the topic of Defense Against the Dark Arts. The only time she ever comes close to being overshadowed in another subject is when she is up against the Half-Blood Prince in Potions Class, and even then it's only because she refused to deviate from the official instructions (and, by all accounts The Half-Blood Prince is an extremely skilled potion maker). Her
* Glee, when Burt has a heart attack, he ends up in a coma and it's unknown whether or not he will wake up or not. At the very end of the episode, his son Kurt is sitting at his hospital bedside holding his hand when his finger twitches ever so slightly. Kurt calls for a nurse, and the next episode reveals that he's okay.
* Happily Never After has been dubbed three and a half times into Latin Spanish. The first dub was a collaboration between Argentina and Mexico; Ella and Rick's voice actors are replaced with Mexican actors in an alternate dub. Second was a dub made in Los Angeles, which is available on American DVD releases. A third dub was made in Tijuana, Mexico.
* Heaven Sent". The Veil doesn't move fast, but the Doctor can only run so far, can't hide from it, and it never stops coming. He works out that if he lures it to one side of the castle and runs to the other he can have about 40 minutes to eat and sleep — given Time Lord physiology this seems to be enough, but he can never forget it's coming for him.
* Goku uses the Solar Flare on Great Ape Vegeta to buy himself some time to create a Spirit Bomb and defeat him.
* Guys dressed in a roach costume, extra arms and all, advertising a pest control service.
* Halo: Reach, the space combat section can get disorientating because one might easily end up flying "upside down". Thus, the game automatically makes your Sabre right itself if you stop turning for a few seconds. Also, so that enemies don't become too difficult to shoot at such long range, the reticle for hitting them automatically adjusts based on distance and waypoints appear showing where the enemy fighters are when there's only five left.
* Helluva Boss possesses Agent Two, spins her head around 180 degrees and taunts Agent One, then reanimates a bunch of dead agents and has them draw a summoning circle around her in blood so he can show up in person.
* Gone with the Wind remembered as one of the greatest movies of all time, but "Frankly, my dear, I don't give a damn" was voted the top quote in the entire history of cinema by the American Film Institute.
* Heroic BSoD on the circus wagon when he's banished from the colony for having lied about the circus bugs being warrior bugs, lamenting that the fake bird that he and the colony worked together to build was doomed to fail, as was he. Manny's the first to speak up.
* "Growing up is the greatest adventure of all!", sometimes shortened to "Growing up is the greatest adventure!" —
* Hawkeye) and Maya Lopez have both used the name "Ronin" on occasion. It's basically a placeholder identity for heroes who can't use their normal superhero identities for whatever reason.
* Green Arrow: The Clock King straps Green Arrow beneath one in an attempt to force him to divulge the access codes to Queen Industries accounts in the "Sins of the Mother" arc.
* he'd cast over Daenerys so she'd leave more of the city standing was the right way to go... and only gives him a black eye.
* Hayate the Combat Butler does this significantly, when Isumi is forced to teleport herself, Hayate and Sakuya away from a losing battle. Hayate eventually helps either get Sakuya to where she can stand, or just helps her to stand in the water, while Isumi is apparently unwilling to even get wet at all, and brings in her dolphin so she doesn't even get her clothes wet. The other two comment.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers will just tell people how he has to pee as he goes to relieve himself.

* Hemlock Grove has some of the goriest werewolf transformation sequences in all fiction. The person doesn't just grow a lot of hair, canine teeth, and stretched limbs, it's more akin to a butterfly transformation with their entire human body getting ripped off so the wolf underneath can burst out.
* Heathcliffe and Aki, when Heathcliffe goes and takes a shower, but, catches Aki in the middle of her own shower. Thankfully, they get a proper introduction later.
* Goosebumps, Zach tells the class that they have to buy Stine time to write, but not to worry because he's a very fast writer. Cut to Stine, punching up the story on a typewriter...
* Granblue Fantasy. She regularly speaks to monsters just by going "rawr" a few times, but she can't understand them at all. It's just the sheer fearless friendliness she radiates that let her convey her feelings to them.
* Gunslinger Girl. Cyborg girl Petrushka is in love with her handler Sandro, who just assumes her declarations of love are simply a result of her conditioning. To prove otherwise Petrushka slaps her handler and insults him, an act that makes her physically ill from the strain of fighting the conditioning that prevents her from harming him.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try, but also fighting the Build Burning to a standstill.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows. By the end of the book, Harry accepts that Dumbledore is not perfect and that he is still the greatest wizard who ever lived regardless of how he used to be.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers anti-Korean backlash from some fans. Korea wasn't scheduled to show up in the anime anyway!
* "Helping Henry": was a United Kingdom Channel 4 children's television programme. Designed as an educational show, it featured a young boy named Stephen explaining how things worked to an alien named N-3 (or "Henry"), who was disguised as a dining-room chair because his superiors believed that static four legged things were clearly a superior species to the 'two legs' who bustled about them.
* Hidalgo, it's mostly used to set up the protagonist as the underdog.
* Gossip Girl (2021) (bi male main characters, gay supporting characters, LGBT youth, queer male romance, LGBT acceptance, coming out story)
* Gunnerkrigg Court is that Smitty is just guessing, but because of his order-causing powers, his guesses just happen to be right.)
* Grand Finale, Carolyn describes a picture in her office as being of a dogfight between two Spitfires. Martin points out one of the planes is not a Spitfire, citing the wings, fuselage, markings, and the fact that Spitfires didn't fight each other.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe are this. The only exception is Adam's mother who is from Earth.
* Goof Troop generally uses other people as means to an end and either doesn't notice or doesn't care how much anguish he causes any of them—on some occasions he even finds it amusing. He does occasionally feel regret for his actions if something drastic happens (such as his wife threatening to leave him or his son almost dying), but then he's motivated more by keeping them in his life than by caring about how they feel. One episode in the entire series showed him caring about another person's feelings out of more than convenience; he understood how the kid who lost at mini-golf felt in "Tee for Two."
* Grimm's Fairy Tale Classics'' episode "The Marriage of Mrs. Fox" after he seemingly confirms his suspicion of his wife cheating on him he attacks her, her nine tailed suitor, and his cat maid in a fit of rage, resulting in one of these, then after realizing she hadn't been cheating on him and he had driven her away, he attacks his devil conscience for giving him the idea in the first place.
* Heroes take this to an almost absurd degree. Peter and Ted's hands glow when they are emitting radiation. Elle's electricity is in the form of blue sparks. Sylar's lie-detection skill is indicated with a shake of the camera (and usually his saying "You're lying!" directly afterwards).
* Grimoire’s Soul, Kesterline's Mages double as both its state police and the closest thing it has to a military, as due to their country's isolationism and lack of large-scale conflict, a proper standing army doesn't make much sense.

* Go Away I'm Watching Porn, Issei tends to give everyone nicknames due to being bad at remembering names otherwise. More often then not they are based on personality quirks he perceives them as having, ranging from the obvious to the bizarre.
* GURPS third world countries) could result in someone ending up in a modern western nation and being amazed at things we almost all take for granted. Or a modern-day middle-class American could end up in a TL 11 world and be amazed at stuff TL 11 citizens take for granted.
* Goodfellas, is late for his own fucking funeral. We get a full second's warning before he gets a bullet in the head. His killer gets one himself, when he thinks he's about to be a made man, but is shot in the back of the head, not even completing his realization, "Oh, n—-!"
* Harry Potter James and Lily Potter died when Harry was a year old in 1981.
* Halt and Catch Fire admitting that she's terrible at typing, she plays computer phenom Cameron Howe.
* Gourmet Girl Graffiti after finding out the latter got accepted into high school...which wasn't the reaction a jealous Kirin was hoping for.
* Goodnight Mommy, twin brothers Elias and Lukas engage in one of these with each other early on in the story.
* Gore Orphanage, Buddy is stashed in the same windowseat that he hid his comics.
* God. The protagonist is in Paradise, and having just encountered a beautiful houri who asserts she has been promised to him since the time of Creation, he bows down to thank God — then finds himself thinking that while beautiful, the lass is a bit on the skinny side. As he raises his head, he finds that her buttocks have now grown a lot bigger, and needs to ask God to shorten them by a mile or two.
* Hetalia doujinshii has Hungary completely naked in its cover, save for Prussia's blue and red military jacket.
* Gods of the Furthest Ring. Although this is justified, seeing as her guardian lusus (parental figure) was their emissary, so she's quite used to seeing the mind-warpingly bizarre by this point.
* Hidamari Sketch, Yoshinoya-sensei is occasionally the one seen sneezing in a cut from the main characters talking about her.
* HeroQuest starts with the heroes being led into a room with three doors by a treacherous guide who flees under the cover of darkness. Each of the three doors leads into a room with nothing but monsters, not even secret doors. The right way out of is to search for a secret door within the first room rather than opening any of the doors.
* He'd later subvert it, though, because when the heroes actually make a dent in the Giant of Babil, he shows up, visibly upset that they ruined his plan... Then Fusoya does something to him to jog his memory... and it turns out Golbez was Brainwashed and Crazy
* High Speed Rail is full of this: sleek fast trains in colors like white or silver sure look like the future in advertisements, but what pulls into the station often looks like it could use a wash and there are perceivable dents in the roof. The inside is usually much cleaner, but still.
* Gotcha, both the CIA and the KGB ransack Jonathan Moore's apartment. They don't find the film spool he smuggled out of East Berlin because he kept it in one of his pockets the entire time.
* Good Omens (2019) struggle at the heart of the conflict between the angels and demons.
* Harry Potter is because he remembers her as the nice older girl who made a point of helping him despite his prickly attitude.
* Hawaii Five-0 introduces the ME, Max, as he's playing the piano. It's partly to reinforce Max's quirky character, and partly to showcase Masi Oka's piano skills.
* He also finds out that a Harder was on the same flight but managed to survive. The Harder reveals that he spent countless iterations trying to stop the explosion. Eventually, though, his traumatized mind forced him to board an
* Hey Arnold! serving as reward. Arnold wins every game with the sewer man eventually demanding "Best 8 out of 15" games.

* head of the highest clique and managed - eventually - to wind up imprisoned for nearly beating a fellow student to death.
* Guilt-Based Gaming uses the phrase: "Please don't go! The drones need you! They look up to you!"
* Heckle and Jeckle cartoon "The Rainmakers" has the two having a picnic in the rain. Jeckle wishes on a wishbone that it would stop raining forever, and sure enough it does. But now there's the mother of all droughts and it's on the TV news.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Harry overhears Aunt Marge insulting his mum and dad, and loses control of his magic, making the glass in Marge's hand shatter.
* Hades Project Zeorymer, it's revealed the mysterious girl Miku Himuro is in reality a robot girl who needs to be attached to Zeorymer's main power drive to release its full power.
* Gonta and Shuichi come the closest to getting it right, only Gonta's tie is green instead of black and Shuichi doesn't wear one.
* Gold Diggers of 1933, the camera slowly zooms in on Fay Fortune as she sings in Pig Latin, to the point that her face takes up the entire frame.
* Halo, an AI directs an ODST who was stabbed with an energy sword to inject himself with one so that it will keep him long alive long enough to destroy the ship he's on, which has been boarded by the Covenant.
* Harper Jambowski, a girl and one-shot character. Her father Mike Jambowski is extremely rich, which turned Harper into a selfish and spoiled kid. She doesn't let Lisa participate in any of the activities they do together, although it's shown that she can be good sometimes. She buys Lisa a new, expensive bike, but Lisa refuses it, making Harper upset since Lisa would "rather have [her] crappy bike". They discuss this and decide to end their friendship.
* HeadOn to your X. None of them ever actually state that anything will happen if you do.)
* He invites Robin for hot dogs using the penny and they come across a Bridal Boutique store on the way home.
* Green Lantern: This happens twice to Kyle Rayner. The first time he thinks it is his girlfriend Donna, but it is Jade, who had (technically) broken into his apartment and was tired and needed to shower. The second time, Jade is his girlfriend and he's come back from an extended time in space and thinks it's her again, but now it's the guy she started seeing while he was away for so long.
* Gnoph live inside human lungs, and grant their hosts a variety of superhuman abilities.
* Help! My Story Has the Mary-Sue Disease is based on this. For example:
* Green Lantern has Kyle Rayner and Bleez. While Kyle's identity is a secret, anyone who meets him and Bleez (and who isn't familiar with the history of the Green Lantern Corps) assumes they're a couple because... well, she's hot and they assume Green Lantern would have a hot alien girlfriend.
* Highlander: The Kurgan wears a skull as a helmet in medieval Scotland.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), but without the amnesia, had the show continued. Oh, we would've also learned that Fisto was Teela's biological father. For some reason, a couple of episodes seemed to hint that it was Duncan a.k.a. Man-At-Arms (who happens to be Fisto's brother and Teela's adoptive father) instead.
* God of Love fail to work on Kelly, a despondent Ray winds up jabbing a bunch of women (and one man!), acquiring a whole harem following him around. Somehow he winds up at a Scrabble tournament. The woman he's playing takes three tiles off her row and shows Ray the remaining four, which spell "DOME". When a confused Ray says "Dome?", the woman hurriedly separates her tiles so they read "DO ME".
* Hellsister Trilogy have a run-in with Kryptonite Man, which prompts Kara to wear a lead suit for the rest of the Darkseid War just in case she runs into him again.
* Here Comes The Sun comedy fic about the mane 6 trying to prepare for the Summer Sun festival and make sure nothing goes wrong. The conflict comes from various mistakes made by the cast as well as Twilight's paranoia. Trixie is present, but has reformed from her previous canonical appearance and is more of a nuisance who doesn't purposely cause trouble in the story.

* Guardians of the Galaxy, where the quest is not impossible, but still bogus: Rocket Raccoon tells Starlord that his plan to escape prison involves some inmate's prosthetic leg. When Starlord returns with said leg (having spent a significant amount of money on it), Rocket tells him he was just kidding.
* Hard Time has the power to leave his body as an invisible force that can manipulate objects and people. He doesn't use this to commit crimes, but being able to more or less leave the prison freely at night goes a long way towards keeping him sane. He's serving 50 to life, he needs something to hold onto to keep him from losing his spirit.
* Hec Ramsey: Hec has a fearsome reputation as a gunslinger (a Type D), and it is this that gets him hired as deputy police chief of New Prospect. However, Hec has decided that the age of the gunslinger is past, and he is working on becoming a scientific detective. This doesn't mean that he can't throw down with the best of them when the need arises, though.
* Harry Potter is always so caught up in his lecture that he barely notices his students are even there listening to it. On the very rare occasion that they stay awake in class long enough to ask him a question he always gets their names wrong.
* He-Man Christmas Special, Skeletor gradually falls under the influence of the Christmas spirit, causing him to become this for a time. He does not enjoy the experience.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Gamora and Nebula have a relationship very similar to Thor and Loki's. Including being adopted siblings, the Cain having resentment issues because the Abel is the favorite of a father figure and of course Cain and Abel having very tangled love/hate relation.
* Gossip Girl into this. Most fans still want Chuck and Blair to get back together, but it's difficult to see how Blair will be able to forgive Chuck for selling her to his creepy uncle in exchange for a hotel.
* GoGo Sentai Boukenger intact), including a spot-on lampshading of the genre:
* has all six of the girls currently active in the harem spend the night with Harry and then spend the morning pleasuring him, but it is made clear that the girls were all pleasuring Harry.
* Go to Hell! to Satan) the humans learn free will and start worshiping other gods. So G.D. has to resort to more physical interventions, like giving King Ramses II a nuclear reactor.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army. It never had the word "hell" anywhere on its packaging (the franchise was labeled "HB II", and the character was "Big Red"). If you can't say the guy's name in front of kids, you shouldn't be marketing to them.
* Hildemar's Knots (presumably named after the person who discovered them), which are, well, intelligent "knots" that live on the surfaces of a cluster of neutron stars. They don't appear to have names among themselves, and communicating with them at all is difficult due to their
* Grey Knights prison cell rather than a conventional airlock. It's still a fairly gruesome scene nonetheless.
* Grand Theft Auto V) is because it was a time when it was okay to openly bash and discriminate against ethnic, sexual, and religious minorities.
* Greta shows Marianne the corpse of Baroness Meinster after Marianne unwittingly frees the Baroness' son. The elderly woman is slumped in a chair with bite marks on her throat.
* Gordon Bombay. The cop who pulled him over for erratic driving, gets tipped off when Bombay, after he gets him to turn down his car stereo, admits that it was "a 'widdle' noisy".
* head archivist of Magnus Institute. If they survive long enough in the position.
* God of War as well. There wasn't any generation of deities that she didn't take issue with. If she wasn't providing assistance to their enemies, she was spawning monsters to kill them on her behalf.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince Harry and Dumbledore fight through all of Voldemort's protections on his locket Horcrux, only for Harry to later discover that it was a fake.

* Gremlins 2: The New Batch. At the end, he just shrugs and accepts that the amorous female Gremlin is going to have him one way or another. After all the chaos he's been through regarding the regular gremlins, the one female that has a major crush on him is probably the least of his problems.
* Heterosexual Life-Partners, particularly during the height of their fame in the '70s and '80s. Reynolds was a brawny, macho ladies man, while DeLuise was an overweight, campy goofball.
* Gunslinger Girl at the age they were Conditioned at and possibly years have passed between their backstory and the final chapter, so that leaves it vague what their biological ages are.
* Government Conspiracy that wants to handle interplanetary relations their way, accusing the SGC of being "too soft". This includes them slaughtering millions of Jaffa, not caring whether the planets they attack are home to Free Jaffa or Jaffa that serve the Goa'uld, thus tacking on "hypocrite" to the above (which he also justifies by citing the Bible).
* Halloween: The Curse of Michael Myers died and extensive reshoots had to be done without him or the actor who had been playing Michael.
* Harold and Maude is used throughout to build mood. But in one scene, after listening to a song for some time, Maude approaches a couple of police officers and tells them "by the way, you might want to turn off the radio... saves the battery that way." The cop turns off the radio, and the BGM stops.
* Hc Svnt Dracones can interface with machines by touching them but have no wireless capability without an NCS, and their Core Consciousnesses work sufficiently different from normal computers that they can't run software either.
* Goblin Slayer started out as this, and it resulted in her team getting raped and murdered by a horde of goblins they underestimated and were ill-equipped to deal with. After she was saved by Goblin Slayer, she learned how to be a better fighter and spell caster.
* Hawaii Five-O episode "Up Tight", every reference to LSD was removed and the word "speed" substituted. The women's behavior when they were using it, and the charismatic Leary-like guru who dispensed it, all indicated LSD, not speed.
* He later plays a convenience store owner who makes the mistake of not selling his stock of plutonium * had no right to continue existing. Other Nazi leadership may have had different opinions, but were sensibly reluctant to argue with the increasingly more insane Adolf about the core points of Nazi doctrine.
* Harry was bequeathed the golden snitch he caught in his first Quidditch game in
* Hercule Poirot is a psychological detective who doesn't bother with searching for physical evidences and running around looking for clues. Occasionally, he would use only the testimonies and written eyewitness accounts of the case to reconstruct the whole truth behind it
* HBO Max, tripling the overall views on its premiere day compared to the previous month.
* GURPS. Optional rules and supplements either further the realism or scale it back.
* Hell MOO includes a suicide booth in Freedom City where those who are suffering from post-apocalyptic depression or just plain boredom can off themselves. Of course, the cloning centers still function perfectly and automatically shuffle your soul into a new body when you die, so as long as you have a clone available there's no way for anyone in Freedom City to ever die; it's established that many of the denizens of the city were around before the Collapse and have just kept living for centuries.
* Green represents kindness. Green "attacks" heal the player when touched, or represent safety in some way. When the player's soul is green, it becomes equipped with a shield that can spin around.
* Help! has the cat protagonist pricking his finger and going to the hospital while it's still swollen, suffering more pain throughout the trip until the doctor almost chops it off with an axe.

* Godzilla in Hell is exactly what it sounds like: Godzilla blasting things in hell.
* Heavy was asked specifically for "the most awesome story you have with plenty of super-cool senseless violence". So Heavy did indeed relay the most senselessly-violent story he could recall; one in which he saw a beautiful sparrow only for it to be killed with a throwing knife, and
* Glen Cook, was asked how certain character and place names should be pronounced. For example, the main character is named Else Tage. Is the final "e" in either or both names silent? His response was essentially that the reader had his blessing to pronounce all names any way that seemed to the reader to make sense.
* Goomba Stomp on them makes them collapse for a few seconds, and then they reassemble. Usually, you have to either make the head roll into lava or a pit, smash them some other way or make sure all of the enemies on screen are dead to beat them, depending on the game/series in question. Variations of this enemy included Dull Bones and Red Bones (both not as strong as regular Dry Bones) and Dark Bones (which are stronger than Dry Bones). They are also named for a line from the trope-naming song.
* Heinlein invented the waterbed as a concept. That prevented it from being patented. He makes an amusing comment about it in his brick-sized diatribe
* Golgo 13 survives these attacks, pointing out that it's the fear of death that keeps him from dying.
* Greg Grunberg (Matthew Parkman) originally auditioned for the part of Peter Petrelli. His character was written for him after creator Tim King's wife pointed out that the show had no everyman character.
* Good Pays Better: The path to Good is not only kind and touching, it's far more rewarding than the path of Evil.
* Guitar Hero your band covers "Tonight I'm Gonna Rock You Tonight" (a Spinal Tap song) at the Battle of the Bands, as the song ends your drummer explodes in a puff of smoke.
* Hamster's Paradise-like planet, such as the grazing ungulopes filling the niches of deer and gazelles, the giant aquatic seavers filling the niches of baleen whales, the predatory carnohams filling the niches of big cats and bears, and flying ratbats filling the niches of birds and bats, with one flightless ratbat group, the blubbats, filling the niche of penguins and polar bears and the scaly, near-ectothermic rattiles filling the niche of many different types of lizards and even tortoises. The oceans in the meantime are devoid of fish, and thus shrish, descendants of krill, fill the niches of various fish such as sardines, sharks, eels, stingrays and flounder.
* Hey Arnold! obstructed by a pole. Arnold decides to get closer to the action and ends up catching the home run ball from his favorite player at his final at-bat while simultaneously being chased by ushers.
* Heavenly Sword is accompanied by a giant raven that wears a golden helmet and turns out to be some kind of demon or other dark entity.
* Goyo: Ang Batang Heneral, with what's left of Luna's friends and allies butting heads with Aguinaldo's loyalists. For example, Aguinaldo and Del Pilar surround the house of Jose Alejandrino with troopers prior to a talk where they desperately need to secure his cooperation. He makes them wait anyway and, after the talk, demands answers about the circumstances of Antonio Luna's death.
* Halloween Town and The World That Never Was are both eternally nighttime in any game they appear in.
* Green Wing until after they've slept together. And it's been caught on tape.
* Harboured & Encompassed: Archie and Horatio's gay love story is the focus of the story. They later have a same-sex polyamorous relationship with Will.
* Hackett himself even notes that this is exactly why he essentially made him/her the
* Goku and Master Roshi in Canada, Morrow proceeded to voice Goku for the rest of the series.
* Golgo 13 is targeted by cult members armed with hand grenades. He shoots one only to have a live grenade drop from his hand, so Golgo shoots into a nearby car window and dives through the broken glass so he's protected by the car's metal.

* Happened with most of the other characters as well. It would never be stated that they had died, but everyone else would start referring to them in the past tense.
* He also saves Goku in this manner when the good guys are fighting Android #19.
* He didn't. He never even met Master Jacobs, though he did watch his training video until it broke.
* he didn't even make it through Tokyo airport alive to come train them.
* Gorgeous Princess Creamy Beamy, in order to support the fetish appeal.
* Green Star Adepts gradually become living constructs made of a green starmetal. The advantages are numerous, and although the final form carry some drawbacks, most importantly it allows the characters to become fully immortal.
* Gnome Exchange Program by Matt Caliri has the main character (an exchange gnome, surprise surprise) helping Santa save Christmas from his evil half-brother Krampus.
* Gynosphinxes, the sole female subrace of sphinx, prefers an androsphinx mate, disliking the dimwitted criosphinxes who try to woo them by bribery, and avoiding the * Guardians of Ga'Hoole books, but they've become short-eared owls in the movie. This is most likely because of wanting to make the owls have expressive eyes and faces.
* Grey's Anatomy have the character of Denny Duquette, who died a couple seasons earlier, appear to Isabel Stevens and tell her "I'm here for you". It takes her half the season to understand what that means.
* Gunsmith Cats to keep making bombs despite having a degenerative nerve condition that made his hands shake uncontrollably under stress.
* Harry Potter fandom, a lot of things were obvious to it despite the clues being minimal or well-hidden.
* Górsky & Butch someone is trying to kill the protagonists with a piano. At one point the attack is shown from the killer's perspective, with a crosshair on the heroes and the number of remaining pianos displayed on the killer's HUD.
* He later makes a similar rant taken to an even greater level, arguing that since there's a 0.0000000000000001 percent chance of dying from the "evil eye", beating up someone who glared at him is justified self-defense.
* Happens in-universe, in a more literal sense. A news reporter who has a scoop on the Stargate program is told that her boss was ordered by the president of the US to kill the story.
* Hereditary: These are beings from Hell who seek to enter the Earth. They are incorporeal most of the time, but can take the forms of people's loved ones to torment them further, and seek to possess vulnerable people.
* Half's Saga: When King Half assembles a crew in order to go sea-raiding, he only takes men who have lifted a certain large stone in the king's courtyard off the ground. He also refuses to take anyone "who got scared […], or who spoke despondently, or who winced at wounds". Only 23 men in all of Half's kingdom meet his requirements, but of those "not one […] had less than twelve times the strength of an average man".
* Hall of Fame Dallas Cowboys wide receiver Michael Irvin retired suddenly after being tackled hard by Philadelphia Eagles safety Tim Hauck. Irvin suffered a non-life-threatening spinal cord injury on the play.
* Hideo Kojima radio drama, where the spy's old flame has the name Call Now.
* Heteronormative Crusader: The "crusader" part implies a morally-sanctioned combative attitude; the "heteronormative" part implies the enemy is anyone who doesn't follow conventional rules about sex and gender performance.
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child caused her to truly fall in love with him.
* Hellboy, returning the spear to her father's grave condemns him to Hell, and when Hellboy kills the Bog Roosh, the mermaid has to take her place. It is more than likely the Bog Roosh knew the girl's father would hate the fact that she sacrificed Hellboy for the sake of a lost object and would condemn her for it, his Hell being the shame and disgrace of his daughter's actions. So yeah, Bog Roosh is a jackass genie through and through.

* Hero Senki pilots wearing Powered Armor versions of their Mobile Suits, though in Super Hero Sakusen it was implied that the Gundams and original mechs were full-size. Don't think about it too hard.
* Grand Theft Auto III the same sort of issue crops up: the soldiers in and around Fort Zancudo carry the Norinco Type 56-2 instead of the more appropriate M4A1.
* Heroics for Beginners, Kevin explains to his girlfriend, the princess of a foreign country, that he's not a spy. It's just that sometimes he sneaks into the rooms of important people, and sometimes reads their documents, and relays any information discovered back to his dad the king. And these endeavours require picking locks and writing in code.
* Go here. you can go over here oh! Can we watch ourselves? Will it let us do that on here OH MY GOD!"
* Heroes Reborn and grew up normally so they would be teenagers in 2015.
* Hemorrhoids also have this effect. Toilet water dilutes the blood in stool, making it appear that the patient has lost much more blood than they actually have.
* Half-Life 2, is related, except that it's free to anyone who already owned the game (and installs on your system, overwriting the original, whether you wanted it or not).
* He also made the booth of an old ghost train's caretaker, whom he previously worked for, fall off, for seemingly no other reason than she was slightly rude to him earlier...
* Hardcore Henry headquarters in order to take him down and rescue Estelle.
* Greg Cipes) fans too. Neither does anything to quash the rumors, regularly posting selfies of themselves on Twitter. (Of course, Tara's married; but when has that stopped anybody?)
* Gravitational time dilation at the event horizon of a black hole will make this
* Hell's Gate says the next book (when it eventually comes out) will introduce a third purely technical side.
* go (a.k.a. igo, weiqi, baduk) - if the stronger player can forget defense, the handicap is too small - and according to the game etiquette, they should play weaker in order to avoid crushing their opponent. Especially if the handicap was purposefully omitted or too small. The stronger one is supposed to "gently" show where a mistake was done, and not take too great advantage of obvious blunders. It's supposed to be a sign of a good player that they can defeat a weak player of any level by a small margin.
* Herbert from the Dungeon Verse became an overlord that murder by the thousands in
* Hajimari No Niina: only 10, but with a very mature outlook on life as a result of being the reincarnation of a 16-year-old girl.
* Heinlein advocated corporal punishment in his books generally. Nothing excessive, mind you (from his perspective), just a little paddling now and then to set a child straight. Or a woman. Men might need to be caned. If you didn't just hang them. But never put someone in prison; that insults human dignity.
* Halloween III: Season of the Witch. In the modern age, kidnapping children and spilling their blood on an altar is slow and cumbersome, so instead, they create a toy company that, around Halloween, sells masks containing computer chips that each have a piece of Stonehenge embedded in them. The chips are activated through exposure to a television commercial, the resulting spell liquefying the heads of those wearing the masks.
* Herbivores Are Friendly: We're nice because we don't prey on other sapient creatures.
* Hamlet with each other. They are always together and are introduced as a pair, so a faulty gesture and the appropriate reaction from the named in question is all it takes.
* God Of War 2: You can't get to the next area because there is a large crushing wheel blocking your way that is right in front of a Conveyor Belt-O-Doom that constantly tries to make you hit the damn thing. The solution? You find a half-dead member of Jason's Argonauts, bring him to the belt, lay him on it, and then watch as he screams in horror and is carried under the wheel where his crushed bones jam it, allowing you to break it and pass through.

* Heavenward on Golden Wings is a xuanhuan-esque heroic fantasy novel series centered on Valerian Steelborn, a boy genius clawing his way to the top in a magical world where might is right.
* Hellraiser III: Hell on Earth, one poor woman gets flayed alive with Pinhead's chains before being absorbed into the Pillar of Souls.
* Green Day mentions 'one nation controlled by the media' in a negative light.
* Hikaru's full name is Azuma Hikaru, or "light of the East", and upon hearing this name, his new father Masato's first hope was that Hikaru would grow up to climb the corporate ladder. Which...
* Halo 5: Guardians for the Covenant who have taken the station, as they begin to slide toward the viewport when they begin to react and are spaced, while the Spartan’s magnetic boots keep them firmly locked to the deck until the breach is sealed. Ironically, a shot of the Elites inside the station before Blue Team enters has their leader order some unruly grunts thrown out the airlock.
* Growlanser 2, the enemy commander has the following exchange with a guard:
* Happens to Roderick in the episode "The Acme Bowl" after running through and smelling a cloud of Fifi's stink, and to Hamton when he gets hit by a blast of Fifi's stink in "The Just-us League Of Supertoons".
* He even begins to defy actions that would otherwise derail the story.
* Heel–Face Turn, was still distrusted by the show's cast for a good while due to his antics in the past. Said antics are hilarious and made him among the most popular characters in the show despite his few appearances.
* Gou-dere Bishoujo Nagihara Sora. But he becomes very shocked because her boisterous, shameless attitude is completely different from the ingenue Sora from his manga. Later, characters from other manga come to life.
* Goofy McLeish was understandably pissed when he saw the cartoon for the first time and realized what he was actually narrating, but eventually came around and narrated many more Goofy "How-To" shorts when he admitted that the straitlaced narration was what made the cartoon work.
* Grand Assassin is The Old Man of the Mountain, AKA The First Hassan, the founder of
* Happy Days, Fonzie quits his vehicle-repair job and must find a new way to make a living. He tries driving an ice cream truck, but he hates it because "Whenever I got it up to speed, some kid started chasin' after me wavin' a dime!"
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Russia once grabbed Latvia to help him stop shaking, but Latvia was so terrified that his soul flew out of his mouth.
* Grottomatic, who is white, listened to a lot of jazz, soul, and hip-hop in his younger years and took a lot of influence from it.
* Guards! Guards! is that Vimes is "badly" everything, as in badly spoken, badly dressed, and badly in need of a drink.
* Hell Teacher Nube, where the lead is an exorcist and schoolteacher who frequently finds himself aiding the ghosts he's supposed to exorcise so they can go to Heaven.
* Gorgeous Princess Creamy Beamy. So far, three of them have been defeated, with the former two being sentient everyday objects, and the third being human (however, the side effects of the potion on him were unintended).
* Hell Teacher Nube. She didn't, however, give him full skin with it, but he's good at hiding that.
* Hero's Slave Harem: A hero has multiple slaves that are in love with them.
* Henry Winkler, appearing as Leo Sunshine in "The Imposter" and as Phineas Newman in "Hangman".
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Holy Roman Empire frequently does this around Chibitalia. Germany also does this in the Valentine's Day comics when he gives Italy flowers and a ring.
* Her Inner Demons: Sci-Twilight's transformation into Midnight Sparkle is revealed to be this: the bullying and mistreatment from her peers left her feeling enormous resentment toward them. The events of the Friendship Games was the last straw.
* Heroes kicked into overdrive. His cells are continuously dying and being recreated. So, when you remove the "recreating" part, it's clear why he suddenly crumpled into dust. It's possible that Claire will have the same problem in a few hundred years.

* Happens again with Penny being a robot. The audience had her pegged pretty much the second she showed up (especially when a bunch of levitating swords popped out of her back). The only question was whether she was an A.I. or some form of cyborg. In the second season, we find out it's the former. Of course, Ruby doesn't really care whether or not Penny's a robot.
* Hawaii Five-0 after the victim's son accuses a guard of killing him and stealing his family's samurai sword. Every other person involved in the case at the time is dead.
* He's a ten-ton construction robot. She's a genetically engineered wolf.!
* Hellraiser movies, victims are often partially to fully flayed, and some Cenobites bear the result of it as well. Those who come back from hell are an inversion; their skin is last to regenerate over their exposed muscles and veins.
* Highlander II: The Quickening it can inferred this is the case from the alien General Katana's fondness for pop culture references. Apparently there isn't a lot to do on Zeist.
* Hilariously, an NPC traveling with you, when talking about the Secret Entrance and how it's hidden, mentions that it wouldn't be marked by a sign.
* Having a bounty on your head is apparently something of a status symbol for
* Gremlins feed them after midnight. The breaking of the second and third rules causes the Gremlin infestation, while the breaking of the first rule ends it.
* Great Expectations couldn't go back to add the new character to earlier chapters.)
* Guy hit by a bus after pushing a girl out of its way, gains a bruised-beyond-recognition face and loss of motor skills
* Higurashi: When They Cry This is likely where the anime adaptation (see above) got the idea of opening some arcs (including this one) with a clip from the end, or a suitably dramatic point.
* Green-Eyed Monster: This villain is motivated by their intense envy and jealousy for others.
* Higurashi: When They Cry. May be a bit longer in the manga and sound novels.
* hidden from all but the most cautious explorer, had significant bugs fester for years, and lacked a lot of content that other zones had.
* Guardians end up passing on into part of the "Chaos Force" when they die. When Knuckles was killed trying to save Dimitri from Mammoth Mogul, he ascended and met other fallen Guardians. However, Knuckles refused to stay and came back to life just in time for the Xorda Invasion.
* Griffith is this trope even from his introduction, firmly believing that the strong are superior to the weak and should use them as tools in order to gain their rule. Unlike Guts, after being made weak, he dives even further into it and abandons his humanity by becoming a member of the
* Halion also has two particularly nasty versions. In one mode he places Mark of Combustion on players, which deals significant damage over time but can be removed easily. When it's removed, it creates an explosion and burns the ground in an area dependent on how long the person afflicted. In his other mode, he casts Mark of Consumption, which operates similarly but instead of exploding sucks people to the center of its damage area.
* Harvey Beaks, Harvey doesn't appear in "Buds Before Studs" and "Repo Fee".
* Halo and several of its escort ships, and are poised to begin a galaxy-scale infestation.
* Godzilla vs. Kong and the Mecha begins trying to kill everything it sees.
* here. It is no surprise, considering the amount of work that went into it, that Trent Reznor once called the Year Zero album "The soundtrack for a non-existent Science Fiction movie."
* "Groundhog Day" Loop creatively to get any real use out of in a fight.
* guaranteed to be useful or (in the case of information) true to the best of their knowledge. To cheat their customers would be extraordinarily taboo. This is the major thing that separates them from the Druuge.

* Gotham City, you can't throw a stick there without running into someone wearing a costume who has most likely based their entire life and all their possessions around the theme of said costume.
* Hara Kiri were so pointed in their satire of French society that the government banned it up to three times!
* Harry Potter had one from 2001-2003, simply called Harry Potter Trading Card Game.
* Golden Krone Hotel, a revolver is Sorina Arobase's firearm of choice when she's still in her human form. Whenever she turns into a vampire, her hands morph into strong, yet deformed claws that make holding anything besides potions impossible.
* Half-Life 2. The players can jack into a 3D interpretation of a computer by mentally connecting to the computer through the cyberdeck in their heads. Of course, since they are putting their own minds inside the machine, they leave their real bodies vulnerable to attack.
* Godzilla (2014), Godzilla himself is described as being like a god compared to the MUTOs.
* Hc Svnt Dracones history. Experiencing a draw towards a lifestyle vaguely resembling ancient human behaviors, such as seafaring, working in the Ganymede frontier, or joining heavy combat units. Even then they tend to feel like something is "missing" from their lives.
* Hear a loud crack inside the machine and think that something had just broken inside of it when it's actually the knocker going off, a solenoid designed to make a loud noise like this. If you hear it, that's good, because it indicates you've won a free game.
* He listed the presence of gut flora (which he framed as providing bonus XP) as yet another of the reason humans are a
* Gravity Falls turned friend Mabel. As such, while she seems capable in understanding how people work in general, she never really established bonds with people.
* God of War have a more humanoid face, coupled with a hideously large, fanged mouth.
* Green Acres, when a criminal who looks exactly like Oliver Douglas comes to town.
* Happens to Lumi the actual Snow Queen in the Fables Universe, in Fairest. She starts out cold-hearted and cruel, but quickly begins to change once she meets Ali-Baba. Turns out to be a partial subversion, as
* Hero Stole My Bike: Taking things from other people for the cause of saving the day is written off as either acceptable or necessary (if it even comes up again afterward at all).
* Guilt complexes) and feeling like you haven't done enough to help others. Once your mind makes it real, the guilt is able to feed off itself and create a cycle of negative, irrational thinking.
* Heroes of Might and Magic starts with Enroth being destroyed when Armageddon's Blade and the Sword of Frost clash. The awesome powers of these blades colliding triggers the Reckoning, a massive explosion that causes a chain reaction of destruction across the entire planet. A lucky fraction of the populace escape through mysterious magical portals that appear out of nowhere leading to the new world of Axeoth.
* Henry David Thoreau: "I rejoice that there are owls. Let them do the idiotic and maniacal hooting for men. It is a sound admirably suited to swamps and twilight woods which no day illustrates, suggesting a vast and underdeveloped nature which men have not recognized. They represent the stark twilight and unsatisfied thoughts which all [men] have."
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters later makes it clear that it's possible to use both types.
* Going from Violin to Viola (or Vice Versa). Since they are both held under the chin, but have different clefs and slightly different strings,expect to be playing a note that's a 7th high than it should be when you first start out.
* Goosebumps. The male protagonist and his female friend both fall victim to the evil camera, with a picture showing him as morbidly obese, and his female friend as a skeleton. He starts to gain weight involuntarily, she starts to lose it.

* Headless Horseman, the inside of the Headless's cellar is shrouded in cobwebs when he awakens: having been untouched for 7 years..
* hanging, drawing, and quartering as part of the "drawing" section of the punishment (which started before the hanging could kill the victim). In many cases, they would set the aforementioned organs on fire as they did so.
* Half-Life 2, where Mike points out that Earth was facing international conflict, overpopulation, a climate crisis and an energy shortage before the Combine showed up, and now those problems are all solved.
* Heath Ledger, he became the first actor to win an Academy Award (as Best Supporting Actor) for a comic book movie.
* Happens to Davey Osborne when the body of the government agent disappears in
* God of War II, Kratos, after tearing them off their original owner, gains the Icarus Wings. They allow him to glide and vanish when not in use.
* Hermione does it to Ron when he complains about Harry quitting the Quidditch team to concentrate on training to fight Voldemort.
* Grabbed by the Ghoulies has a Grim Reaper who appears when break one of the rules of the room you're in. Accidentally punch an imp in a "weapons only" room? Here comes Death, complete with.. totally radical air-guitar/scythe, obviously. Which is played whenever he touches anyone and kills them (yes, even enemies). And you can punch him out the window in some rooms. For the bringer of death, he seems like a pretty cool and mortal guy.
* Gratuitous German. Product names like Reaktor or Kontakt fall into both categories, Komplete falls only into the former, and Maschine falls only into the latter.
* Grease, a girl is dragged along the floor by her ankle, flailing her arms and free leg wildly.
* Grand Theft Auto involves being able to play the stock market. A string of assassination missions will affect the in game market, allowing the player to use their insider knowledge of a crime they are about to commit to their advantage. If done correctly the player can turn tens of millions into a few billion just by buying and selling certain stocks at opportune times.
* Grand Theft Auto V After Michael goes through a bad trip due to his son getting him high, someone off screen drags him away.
* Having been schooled by Hardcastle, McCormick would sometimes remind the cops arresting the bad guys at the end of the episode that they had to read it from the card, for it to count.
* Glorious Shotgun Princess on a whim without bothering to mention it to her first.
* Hercules has Philoctetes' oft-quoted rules of conduct and engagement for heroes-in-training.
* Hasbro released an official map of Equestria in early August 2012., comes from the fact that both are well-known and contacted sapient species in-universe, and so the labels make perfect sense, but are used for entirely different reasons than usual.
* Gundam 00: A Wakening of the Trailblazer are at first somewhat single-minded and simplistic in action, and some of the characters in the series remain unconvinced that they are truly sentient until, near the end, the ELS are observed adapting their tactics and countering the humans' strategies in battle. One character even exclaims "They're learning!"
* Hilda: In the comic books, Hilda is confrontational, a bit of a brat and even more overconfident. In the series, Hilda is much nicer, kinder and friendly.
* Gohan returns the favor after Cell provokes him into achieving his Super Saiyan 2 form, much to Cell's dismay.
* Grosse Pointe Blank. It's a rather bitter version of this trope, though, as it's implied his father was an alcoholic. He pours out the whiskey, drops the bottle on the grave, and leaves.
* Goodbye Kitty: Black Kitty , who interestingly enough is trying to kill another kitty.

* Hey Arnold! to Arnold, Brainy is doing the same to Helga, but a lot more openly. No matter how many times she hits him, he persists.
* Green Goblin's raw strength in proportion to Spider-Man also varies, when originally it was equal to an ordinary man, then slightly weaker than Spider-Man, and sometimes noticeably stronger depending on the Goblin Serum used.
* Guilded Age about misfortune which the audience finds increasingly hilarious as he begins to explain how the joke actually depicts a very tragic situation and questions the audience's mirth.
* Good Omens), he instead gets raised in the English countryside wanting nothing more than to be a normal kid with a normal life.
* Good Omens, Crowley and Aziraphale have universal fluency. Justified, of course, in that they're a demon and an angel, respectively. It would be rather silly (and interfere with their work) for them not to have this ability.
* Hatoful Boyfriend seems to be in love with barging in through glass windows whenever he wants to proclaim something about Edel Blau, demon spores, or his Crimson Breast acting up. The protagonist swiftly becomes accustomed and once responds to the sound of breaking glass with "Hi, Anghel!"
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows. Harry and Ron are inside, testing Harry's new wand; Hermione is keeping guard outside. What takes place (for context, Engorgio makes things bigger, while Reducio makes things smaller):
* Happy To Be Here now regards her stepmom as her new best friend; living in a palace where a phalanx of servants do everything for her, she finds that she misses doing chores for her stepmom.
* High School Of The Dead are trapped in limbo after finding Rei's mother and heading out to find her father.
* Hazbin Hotel makes it even more hellaciously creepy than it usually is.
* Hiimdaisy, all while Dojima says it was on sale. On the other hand, the protagonist is given a speedo with "cutie pie" written on it, creeping him out.
* God of War III: After killing anyone and everyone who has ever even vaguely pissed him off until there is nothing left of the world but a charred, storm-swept wasteland, Kratos discovers that he has accidentally become the physical repository of the concept of hope, released from Pandora's Box. Instead of giving it to the ghost of Athena to rebuild mankind on her terms, he commits suicide to release it to all of mankind... The currently busy with drowning, being riddled with plagues and locust swarms, tormented by the dead returning from the graves and having no afterlife, having to escape fire falling from the sky, ravaged by constant lightning strikes and uncontrollable storms and living in a world without sunlight, order or gods of mankind. Literally, the only thing they have left is hope. The only bright side is that without the tyranny of the Olympians, the world can finally heal and start over.
* Harlem Duet, and takes place in three settings: modern (late 1990s/early 00s) Harlem, a cotton plantation in 1860, and Harlem in 1928.
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger heroine every episode, and Yumeria Moegi is most often seen in a catgirl outfit, but has other costumes as well.
* Guilty Gear has the Goon Squad. Three generic enemies you fight by the hundreds in the side-scroller part of the game. How useless they are? Well, their moves are so limited, some of them can't even jump.
* Heaven's Design Team, a poorly designed animal often very quickly becomes a dead animal. Of course, this is all played for comedy, and the designers are usually more devastated by the failures of the design than the animal deaths they cause.
* Guitar Hero also had small cutscenes showing your band traveling from city to city, but except for the final level at Stonehenge, they were all located in New England).
* Gottlieb pinball, shooting a ball into Dhalsim's saucer rewards a Flame bonus.
* Harry Potter films, via the Polyjuice Potion, though it's averted in the books.
* He and Jacqueline. This tells Poirot exactly what he's looking for.
* Henry IV plays. In addition to being a drunkard, he runs up quite the food bill at Mistress Quickly's.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Harry and Ginny finally get together partway through the book, only for Harry to break up with her at the end because he doesn't want her to get hurt while he goes on his wild Horcrux chase. Ginny is actually very understanding, and by the epilogue of the following book they are married with three children.

* Happy Tree Friends and a pair of glasses. He doesn't even remove his mask.
* Heralds of Valdemar (which was supposedly impossible) to bring the main characters to the Forest of Sorrows instead of where they wanted to go. Vanyel has been dead for about 600 years at this point.
* Harry Potter has nothing better to do than stalk an 11-year old boy.
* Harry Harrison. Workers examining the wreck later find a malfunction in the central pump and joke that "you could almost say he died of a broken heart".
* Heartbreak Ridge, but also playing fair and honest in his comportment.
* Harry's death, he offers Eggsy a glass of brandy that the Kingsmen use to toast fallen members despite it being against tradition for non-Kingsmen to drink.
* Harold and Maude whenever his mother sets him up on a date. (He torments his mother with fake suicide attempts too, but she's used to it.)
* Glee (teen drama series about a glee club at a high school and the issues they face, there are several LGBT characters as part of the main ensemble cast as well as LGBT supporting characters, subject matter includes LGBT youth, LGBT awakening, transitioning, coming out, homophobia, LGBT acceptance)
* Harry Potter series ever wears anything other than a black robe (aside from in flashbacks), it's certainly not stated.
* he was the celebrity, and promptly began apologizing because he felt like a letdown.
* Here I Go Again: Anakin and Padme have Luke and Leia. Also inverted with Obi Wan and Siri, as they have Jinn and Kira about halfway through the story.
* Great American Soups popular and extremely effective at getting people to buy soup. Unfortunately, the ad didn't manage to impress the brand name on buyers; they bought the familiar Campbell's brand instead.
* Godslave, the first part of Edith's and Turner's fight is mostly Edith trying to get away from a man who packs a punch strong enough to kill an adult elephant.
* High-School Hustler, charming people into getting what he wants, and remaining sympathetic while doing so.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers anime, France, feeling left out and insecure, goes through a rather long series of flashbacks while trying to assure the viewers (and himself) that he was and is a powerful military nation. After a number of clips covering such events as the Hundred Years War, Joan of Arc, The defeat of Spain's armada by England and the War of Austrian Succession, France finally snaps back to reality just as Germany walks in/bursts through the door with a rifle in his hands, demanding France's surrender. The Dub even has Germany sarcastically apologizing for interrupting France and asking him mock nicely to put his hands up.
* He had three #1 hits on mainstream rock radio, all in the 21st century: 2007's "I Don't Wanna Stop", 2010's "Let Me Hear You Scream", and 2019's "Under the Graveyard". "Crazy Train" only peaked at #9, while "Bark at the Moon" never made it past #12.
* Gli Atroci (The Metal Warriors), which is about a group of inept warriors who were recently defeated in battle because they had diarrhea, so they seek revenge, but they are ambushed by the enemy behind a hill, so they run away to save their asses (that's how the song puts it) and return to their village, where they tell lies about the battle to their wives.
* Hangman's Knot, a Confederate Major and his troops are falsely led to believe the Civil War is not over, and become wanted men after they attack a Union Army wagon train in Nevada.
* Grumpy Old Men Mind you, it keeps its tongue firmly in its cheek as it does so.
* Hatchet: A swamp is haunted by an undead murderer who was killed by a mob from the local town.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers occasionally makes a few nods to (including strips that take place in) New York. Which isn't that surprising when you consider the series having started there. The author lived there for a while.

* has no dialogue until the first word appears at the very end, so lack thereof can to some pretty confusing, difficult to explain scenarios. For instance, all of the evolution getting summarized midway through the comic, a girl whose mind can time travel, and a caveman's glowing blue penis.
* Gundam Build Divers Re:RISE-like Re:Rising Gundam was held back until the airing of Episode 25. The same went for the "Final Battle Variant" of all four of those Gunpla.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, humans are at war with elves and the other magical races, nearly driving them to extinction. This prompted the elves to create the Golden Army, which decimated the humans so badly that the elven king was horrified and negotiated a peace.
* GURPS has the Absent Minded disadvantage, which is exactly what it sounds like. The descriptive text notes that it "is the classic disadvantage for eccentric geniuses".
* Having a greater variety of offensive weapons makes it easier to compensate for a lack of punching power in
* he gives Chloe a car as a gift, and Chloe gets into an accident herself, which leaves her quadriplegic and dependent on expensive medicine. This alternate Chloe feels so guilty about the burden she's putting on her parents that she'll ask Max to give her
* Hershel was convinced walkers were simply infected with a terrible disease that could yet be cured, so he kept all of them they found in the barn and fed them chickens. This causes a great deal of conflict when the main group finds out.
* has engaged in numerous localized conflicts, which is why its (smaller) ships are actually more cutting edge. Still no comparison to Manticore, though.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law sue his employer after his latest firing, since he was essentially fired for being short.
* Godzilla (1998) and Kenpachiro Satsuma (former suit actors for Godzilla) also expressed dislike for the 1998 film in interviews.
* Heroic Self-Deprecation: No matter how amazing their accomplishments are, the hero thinks they are useless.
* Hamtaro: Ham-Ham Heartbreak features one of these on the entrance wall of Boo Mansion.
* Hatsune Miku) being associated with her character. This is also officially observed by Crypton Future Media through events and concerts.
* Harry narrowly avoids being caught snooping in Dumbledore's office.
* Gratuitous English being one of the more prominent forms, other highly popular cultures include France and Italy.
* Good Omens. When the four Horsepersons of the Apocalypse power up the nuclear exchange that will end the world, all relevant indicators go to DEFCON 5 — because the Horsepersons have decided that having the indicators stuck on "normal peacetime conditions" while conditions become increasingly abnormal will increase the confusion.
* hardcore nudity!", showing clips of Simpsons characters being naked while KC and the Sunshine Band's "(Shake, Shake, Shake) Shake Your Booty" during the closing credits.
* Hellboy, after Hellboy shoots Sammael and walks away from the bloody corpse:
* HappinessCharge Pretty Cure! moment last episode, Iona realizes that all of that could have been avoided if she stopped for five seconds to find out the reasons instead of constantly painting her as a villain.
* Hatoful Boyfriend. In Anghel's route, Sakuya says quite a few racist things about Anghel in the presence of the player character, who echoes them later.
* Guns N' Roses switches between seven different control penalties (one for each band member), ranging from reversing the flipper buttons to making specific flippers only respond to the action button.
* Gundam, and neither Enlightenment nor Romanticism comes off particularly well.
* Have you ever tried looking for an Wikipedia article on Joseph D. Kucan? If you do so, you would be redirected to a page about a villain character he's most famous for

* Grand Finale Villamax. He gets destroyed because of his refusal to do it, but this buys the Rangers enough time to attack her ship directly and prevent the shuttles from being hit.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers credits fit in as many colours, random shapes, and movement as is watchable within 30 seconds.
* Happened to José Carioca when he tried to use a mobile phone he found on the streets to impress a girl by pretending to be holding an important conversation... and then the phone started ringing.
* Greg the Bunny had an in-universe example. Gil asks Jimmy how they can update "Sweetknuckle Junction" for a more modern audience. The result includes changing Count Blah into a rapper named Count A'ight (which he repeated mispronounces as ah-ig-it), sexing up Dottie, and painting Junction Jack silver, suspending him from the rafters, and renaming him Cybo-Jack. ("It's finally happened. They made me into a puppet.") They also add a strobe light effect which ends up giving the kids in the focus group seizures, resulting in them abandoning the retool.
* he's knocked onto his back as a giant wormhole opens in the sky, and the quest marker changes from "Come Back Tomorrow", to "Never Mind Tomorrow, Check On Faraday".
* Godzilla: The Series. He dies fighting, protecting the last of humanity from a race of genetically engineered monsters called the Dragmas, and it sounds like he took a few of them down with him. He has a memorial statue in that timeline to honor his sacrifice.
* High School Musical: A villainous example from Sharpay, when she gets an idea to make it so that Gabriela can't make it to the auditions.
* Harry Potter and the Escape from Gringotts, one of the bank's security trolls grabs the ride vehicle and sends it spinning for a few seconds.
* Greek. And depending on how charitable the writer was, any male children were either returned to be reared in those villages, enslaved, or killed.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 And you'd never believe how a character comparing someone to Hasselhoff would be totally heartbreaking.
* Haganai. She tends to burp and fart in front of people with little to no shame about it.
* Grand Theft Auto: Liberty City Stories and has a brief conversation with Lazlow. Then...
* Hellsing. Unless that speech bubble is meant to be attributed to Dok.
* Goblins most of the time. But when Dies is severely threatened, the arm tends to take over his body and slaughter everything in the immediate vicinity in creatively gruesome ways.
* Hajime no Ippo, named the top three boxers in chapter 361 of the manga. The strongest pound-for-pound boxer is, without a doubt, Takamura. Ranking second is Ricardo Martinez. Surprisingly, he names Miyata as the third best boxer and Ippo around the 8th place.
* GURPS themes, it naturally tends to involve the odd eccentric flying contraption. For example:
* Heavy Rain has triptocaine, a drug that one of the main characters, Norman Jayden, is addicted to. It's up to the player whether he will use it or not.
* Harmony, and as psych student, he got Buffy to open up to him and discuss her feelings in between rounds.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets has the Basilisk, which resides within the titular chamber beneath the castle.
* Green Lantern comic in the Bronze Age of Comics had a villain trap Hal Jordan, a Girl of the Storyline and some kid on a spaceship with Hal missing his Power Battery and no charge in his ring. The kid finds what he thought was an exit, but was actually the airlock and he's tossed out into space by the villain. Hal and the girl can only watch as the boy gruesomely inflates and pops like a balloon.
* Haunting Ground barks at hidden traps and other unseen dangers, allowing the mostly helpless Fiona to work around the many perils of Belli Castle.
* Heel–Face Turn who intended her to murder the Doctor, but she was every bit as sexy and quirky as the good River we all know and love.

* her "Zii".) The occasional confusion resulting on discussion boards may be as good a demonstration as any of why the rule is a good idea. For bonus points, some posters seem to insist on referring to Sonya as "Sonja".
* Groudon, Kyogre, and Rayquaza all have these as natural markings. They only glow on the title screens, though. Additionally, the fake Groudon from
* He even made a comic about going to the bottom of the barrel. Calvin's mom finds garbage under his bed that he threw down there to "keep the monsters quiet". In the aforementioned collection, this was a comment on the comics he drew just to fill his quota even when he had no inspiration.
* Godzilla film, and has to boot one of the lizards in the head to get the doors to close.
* heat death of the universe. The idea posits that, eventually, the universe will "run down" to a state of no free thermodynamic energy as per the second law of thermodynamics. The universe becomes very, very cold. Close to absolute zero.
* Ground Control 2: Operation Exodus can drop a few pods with their basic infantry.
* Gratuitous Space Battles. Their ships consist entirely of white metal hulls with brightly colored, transparent accents, and sleek weapons.
* Han Solo's Revenge when he and Chewie attempted to run a legitimate holo-theater on a water-starved desert planet. At first, the only holo he had to play was a documentary on a water planet, and he didn't realize his "customers" were forming a religion until he got a new holo and they chased him off-world.
* Heroes of Might and Magic series, the world that the previous games take place in is destroyed when two incredibly powerful magical swords that were featured in expansions of the previous game clash. Fortunately, portals start appearing all over the place that take the lucky survivors to the new world of Axoth.
* Green Day doesn't much like jokes about being woken up at the beginning of October, considering that "Wake Me Up When September Ends" was inspired by the cancer-related death of Billie Joe Armstrong's father, and the lyrics are about the Iraq war.
* Hellboy comics, especially to evil supernatural creatures who are killed by sunlight, touching holy ground, etc.
* Green Arrow, Ollie Queen, was a loud-mouthed and showy figure who had a sort of pig-headed stubbornness and cocky air about him but was still devoted to doing the right thing and helping the poor. When he died in the Nineties, Ollie was replaced with his son Connor Hawke, who had been raised in an ashram and been studying to become a monk. As a result, Connor was much more humble and reserved than Ollie, and had difficulty coping with the stardom and larger-than-life aspects of being a superhero. One particular contrast was their reaction to the ladies; Ollie was a notorious womanizer whose libido was fairly infamous among super-heroes. Connor, on the other hand, was deeply uncomfortable around women due to his upbringing and was visibly uneasy when being hit on.
* Go! Princess Pretty Cure also averted this trope (at least in Japan).
* Harvey's relationship with Scotty gets strained because he cannot tell her why he is taking some very unorthodox legal actions. Telling her that his association does not have a law degree and his actions are necessary to maintain that fraud is out of a question since it would put her in a horrible legal and ethical position. It does not help that the last time they dated, she broke off the relationship because Harvey would not open up to her.
* Here There Be Monsters feels his crippled leg aching again. Freddy closes his eyes and spends several minutes reminiscing Captain Nazi killing his grandfather and breaking his leg until one costumer's voice snaps Freddy out of his reverie.
* Hayven Celestia measures while they themselves commute through the gates.
* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de from above, with Tenma's scream in the background.
* Godzilla: The Series has several of the giant monsters spit out acid that melt various materials, usually metal and plastic. How fast the acid eats away whatever it's spat on varies.
* G-Rated Sex: Two people or animals do something that's not sex but works like sex.
* Hell or High Water, where Hamilton and Parker eat at a restaurant with a very limited selection:

* her show. Lindsay had to clarify that Nella wrote the script herself, and that Nella and her are friends and she would never actually say anything like that.
* Gus Johnson" includes sounding a siren, running the blender, and screaming into a megaphone to urge listeners to buy Spotify Premium.
* Half-Life 2 in which, despite taking place in post-apocalyptic Bulgaria where any semblance of nationstates has been destroyed, 99% of the surviving humans still seem to be American (including Gordon Freeman himself, naturally).
* Halo 2 capable of punching straight through a Covenant capital ship in one shot.
* Gumball and Darwin throw a bowling ball into the Robinsons' backyard, so Mr. Robinson has them do chores as punishment. Gumball and Darwin do them with gusto, such as raking the leaves, cutting the grass with a nail clipper, and painting his fence repeatedly, which creeps him out.
* Hans locks Anna in the drawing room once his duplicity is revealed. Also, when they were on the balcony discussing their trouble connecting with their siblings, Anna closes the door to separate them from the rest of the party (including her sister).
* goes back to flying Tomcats for a while is considered this by the younger aviators.
* Hero with Bad Publicity, it's not at all a surprise that villains would try and frame him as a bad guy so often.
* Hey Arnold! does this sometimes. Except one wonders whether she's not senile...
* he feels responsible for Colby Granger (who is at that point thought to be
* Highlander had quite a few Western flashbacks of Duncan's earlier history.
* hate each other. Carrot tentatively suggests this is a step for progress, although perhaps it's simply that the troll happens to like beating up other trolls.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Ron's arm is severely injured in the escape from the Ministry. Hermione desperately treats it.
* Hero System was all about. It even discusses both styles of invasion and analyzes some of their most common narrative elements. (The sample "invasion" campaigns themselves are then sadly a bit less impressive, most likely due to lack of space.)
* Gor series the ships of Ar's Station subvert their boarders by boarding back with hundreds of infantrymen hidden in their holds. (Ar is a landlocked city-state, so their not-quite-colony Ar's Station on the Vosk River is not considered a sea power. They use their superior infantry to wage a land war on the river and take their enemies' better ships.)
* had problems cutting through their B-pillars to remove trapped occupants, and have needed new tools and tactics to deal with Subarus.
* Hatoful Boyfriend has a backstory of biological warfare recent enough that the human species faces extinction in the present day, the bird society is on the verge of civil war, and the only way you can stop either is by dating birds and trying not to die.
* Hero Stole My Bike: A hero in a hurry grabs somebody else's car or bike to aid in his chase scene.
* Gorillaz but was disappointed to find out he was only interviewing their creators Damon Albarn and Jamie Hewlett (after Murdoc Niccals called Stephen up and explained he couldn't make it). Stephen stormed off the set, forcing the real Stephen to fill in.
* Hercule Poirot: the victim dies at the edge of the pool, and a bystander with... complicated motives throws the apparent murder weapon into the pool, just to make it that bit harder for the detectives.
* Heath Ledger. This resulted in one of the most powerful performances in film history, as well as a posthumous Oscar for Best Supporting Actor.
* Happens to Frieda (the girl with the naturally curly hair) during a baseball game in the
* High Lifes and Low Lifes: After throwing Ray out of her flat, Shannon tosses one last piece of his audio equipment at him from the balcony. Having his arms full, Ray fails to catch it and drops everything he is already carrying.

* Half-Life 2: Episode 4: Return to Ravenholm, which ended up not being released.
* Granny Girl Hinata-chan: In her past life, Hinata had a best friend named Micchio, and Hinata's description of their relationship sounds almost amorous. She even said that Micchio "captivated" her. Following her death and reincarnation, Hinata encounters Micchio, depressed and wheelchair bound, when her kindergarten class visits a nursing home. Hinata makes an effort to reconnect with Micchio with their old favorite game of bean-bag tossing.
* Heads Up!. The title changed when the book was completely replaced, though the former title song was retained.
* Grass and Sky in his house, marked "Not Accepted at This Address". Her father had been sending them back because he disapproved of the grandfather's alcoholism.
* Happy Heroes are built with similar parts and the Supermen themselves come as minifigures.
* Grave of the Fireflies, narrated by a dead character. Take out the narrator, and the film would have been in the Mundane territory instead.
* Have I Got News for You. Made funnier/worse by the fact that Paul had been making jokes all episode about his supposed senility, so while everybody else was cracking up he just shook his head sadly.
* Halo: Blood Line, which centers around Iona attempting to convince the UNSC to not terminate her despite her impending rampancy.
* Gotcha, bitch! Kajetokun, the creator of Over 9000, plays Monster Hunter Freedom 2nd G.
* Harm's Way," Angel tries to communicate with a demon species that speaks in tongue-clicks, and ends up saying, "Be disemboweled."
* Golf Central as their choice for golf news (the show happens to be sponsored by Titleist).
* H. G. Wells shows the sun age into a red giant in less than 30 million years and somehow without turning the Earth molten.
* Hawaii do this one better, the former going back to the creation of Hawaii via volcano over billions of years and the later going all the way back to the beginning of time.
* Grand Theft Auto V weapon, a flyable blimp, and new sidequests and collectables. It also continues to get updates and content to this day, whereas the last-gen versions were cut off in 2015 outside of occasional maintenance patches.
* Hero Killer: Anytime this guy shows up, the good guys don't stand a chance.
* Google search. A logo, a search box, a couple of buttons and a few links.
* Guards! Guards!, Carrot, being told that the Watch's authority stops at the doors of any guild house and thus he must leave if refused entry without resorting to any violence, manages to gain entry into the very paranoid and terrified Fools' Guild by using some very specific wording.
* He and Ellie make their way up to the cockpit where Ellie deals with Sven while Henry changes the rocket's course. They then bail out of the rocket and Charles catches them.
* Halo: Combat Evolved's "The Truth and Reconciliation" section "Shut up and get behind me... Sir."
* Gregorius or The Good Sinner (The Chosen One, 1951). Here Gregorius and his mother/wife Sibylla have two daughters.
* Gossip Girl prostitutes herself to a man she loathes for Chuck Bass. However, she then realizes that it's not healthy to love someone so much you'd do anything for them, and ends the relationship. By season five the tables have turned and Chuck is now a Love Martyr for an increasingly unlikeable Blair.
* Green Lantern that personify the emotional energies that the Green Lanterns and similar corps draw power from: the others embody rage (the Butcher), avarice (Ophidian), fear (Parallax), willpower (Ion), hope (Adara), compassion (Proselyte), and love (the Predator); and an embodiment of life that includes all emotions.
* GURPS has a ritual named Doom that lives up to its name. It first makes you wish you were dead. Then it kills you.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix: Part of the reason why Harry's relationship with Cho didn't work out was because Cho was constantly mourning the death of her previous boyfriend Cedric and Harry didn't like to discuss about it.

* Greg Giraldo. "In all seriousness, you make more in a week than I will in my life. You may not have done drugs, but your act put me in rehab twice so thanks for ripping my soul out, you hillbilly fuck!"
* Han Solo and General Leia are reunited for the first time in 30 years... then C-3PO literally
* Happy Tree Friends is showing its cast of adorable cartoon animals dying in very painful and unusual ways.
* Guess Who's Coming to Dinner's eyes are real - Spencer Tracy was dying, and she and Tracy had been together for twenty-five years. He died soon after, and she never saw the finished film, saying that the memories of Tracy were too painful.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban that's pretty close to what the world looks like through myopia.
* Harry Potter is usually accompanied by a loud pop of displaced air. It's a testament to the skill of wizards like Dumbledore to arrive silently, seeming as if they simply slipped in when one wasn't looking.
* Harsh training methods are common for all trying to become a warrior of Athena in
* God of Evil who also embodies positive traits such as strength, victory, and courage.
* Haruhi Suzumiya teenager, when Kyon asked her how old she really is after she revealed her true origin and purpose, she merely responded, "That's classified."
* Heathers, where JD kills Kurt and Ram but arranges it to look like a suicide pact. He leaves behind a forged suicide note claiming that the two killed themselves to hide their "gay forbidden love from an unforgiving world."
* Gyakuten Kenji 2, hits hard and fast with its first case (deliberately trying to set up a "final case" feel to open the game) and then delves into a massive conspiracy that has infected the highest echelons of not just the Prosecutor's Office but an entire nation's government.
* Hardcore Henry resorts to this early in the film to replace his grubby and tattered hospital pyjamas, and beats the crap out of someone who tries to stop him because it's that kind of movie.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 has Ego the Living Planet showing off displays made from his own earth and minerals.
* Hamlet place the iconic 'To be, or not to be' monologue in different points in the play, significantly changing its implications on the eponymous protagonist's mental state when it is uttered. In one quarto it is used as a more generic philosophical musing, and in another it is Hamlet seriously contemplating suicide, his mental stability in shambles.
* Golden Snitch demonstrates that is it at least possible for a good enough team to beat even a superior seeker. The Weasley twins successfully manage to win a bet that Ireland's team will win the game, but that Bulgaria's Seeker will still get the Snitch, showing that catching the Snitch doesn't guarantee victory. Of course this doesn't really refute the initial argument, as it does show that it's not literally always true. Everyone in universe also acknowledges how incredibly unlikely this is (which is why they win big on the bet), with most of them finding the idea of a team catching the Snitch but losing absurd.
* Hannibal, but all of the violence is portrayed as startling, upsetting (especially to borderline-supernaturally-empathic Will Graham) and repulsive, no matter how artfully contrived. Though the aftermath of the murders may be grotesquely beautiful, the process of them being committed - when we see it - is always unambiguously horrific.
* Hey Arnold!, "Downtown as Fruits", Arnold and Gerald are supposed to be in a play about the food groups. Arnold plays a banana and Gerald a strawberry.
* Half-Life 2 featured translucent blue tentacles bothering the leads. The tentacles would've been the surface manifestation of a huge under-ground being bothering City 17. Ultimately it was decided that it just wasn't a fun opponent.
* Heaven's Vault. The robots once enslaved humans, resulting in the Steel Empire. Later the humans rebelled and buried the robots in stone.

* Heroism Won't Pay the Bills: Fighting for all that's good isn't a well-paying job.
* Heroes invokes the trope when Claire covers for the super of the week by telling her mom that they were having sex in the closet.
* Gotham City and Metropolis both reflect the style of their hero: Dark for
* He's also gone against type as a producer, being one of the producers of the romantic comedy
* Haruhi Suzumiya. Fittingly, the "training" course that they went through was set to the almost-comical, waddling march at the end of the first movement.
* Harry Potter where they (and Voldemort) died but Lily and James Potter lived. When Sirius makes a joke that since Gabrielle drowned during the second task, Harry won't be able to hit on Fleur, Harry furiously tells him that Gabrielle was a wonderful child whose life he personally saved and her death means far more than not being able to date her sister.
* Hilda has three in the following episodes: "The Hidden People", "The Sparrow Scouts", and "The Troll Rock".
* Helltaker, finds out about romance after reading some romantic comedies and finds it to be lewder than anything she's ever seen.
* He didn't just show up in his uniform and serve as a backup, either. He was
* Good Times, Keith does this after feeling frustrated about not being able to play football, working part-time as a cab driver, and the lack of full-time work. The drinking escalates when his old college roommate (now a pro football player) comes to visit. Keith then starts insulting everyone around him and he slaps Thelma. Thelma packs his bags and tells him that he can either quit drinking for good and stop feeling sorry for himself or he can leave her for good. Keith chooses Thelma.
* Gruntz is a puzzle game where plurals end in Z instead of S in the help file and in-game text. There are a few missed instances, however.
* Green Arrow. Oliver Queen is a sarcastic cynic who doesn't have much faith in God, government or basic human decency. He thinks most of his fellow superheroes overlook white collar criminals in favor of the obvious evils that wear silly costumes and wield death rays. Yet when the chips are down, he's the first person to throw himself into the fire, despite a complete lack of superpowers and any talents beyond wielding an archaic weapon and having a heck of a lot of chutzpah. All because he believes someone has to stand up for the little people.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality position), not only for himself, but for everybody on Earth. He even dreams of the very idea of death becoming nothing more than a grim story that future children aren't told until they're old enough to take it.
* God of War: Chains of Olympus. Kratos is sent by the gods to stop the Persian invasion of Attica led by their king, and he is dealt with at the very start of the game. That should have been the end since Kratos' mission was successful, but then the sun goes missing and the god of dreams Morpheus begins dominating the land...
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 qualities, Peter ends up having to admit Yondu was much more of a father to him than Ego.
* Gundam 00: A Wakening of the Trailblazer outnumbered 10,000-to-1. Nobody's going to do particularly well with those odds.
* Guns were part of the reason for the development of interchangeable parts and mass producing.
* he ignores all of Daphne's ideas. Daphne is too meek to tell Frasier to stop, that is until Frasier tells her "You'll thank me later," which is something Daphne's controlling mother use to say to get her way. This causes Daphne to snap and tell Frasier that she's doing HER wedding HER way.
* Goliath II, the titular tiny elephant is punished for deserting the herd (which is considered treasonous) by being spanked with a stout blade of grass.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, when elves die, their bodies turn to orange stone.
* Godzilla he becomes a hero, not out of any obligation to mankind, but to protect the earth, which Godzilla begrudgingly comes to accept the human race as being part of. Adopting a son and developing allies among the other monsters of earth provided further incentive for him to become a protector rather than a destroyer.

* Green Eggs and Ham: In "Here", bean-counter Michelle comments that she wouldn't let her daughter E.B. go near Guy's latest invention that just blew up, saying that she's "very fragile", before cutting to her doing something dangerous.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, but she still has emotions and cares about others like her friend Satoko.
* Hatoful Boyfriend: After Yuuya makes several self-deriding comments about himself (if you choose to meet with him at the Shrine in Holiday Star), Hiyoko more or less says this to him word for word.
* Godzilla), but eventually lost the rights. They were able to use the character a few more times by having him mutated off-screen and then never actually calling him "Godzilla".
* Hannah Montana She was quickly renamed when Disney discovered an adult film star already went by that name.
* "Hijo de la Luna" was originally recorded by the Spanish band Mecano. In Germany, however, it's pretty much only known as a pseudo-Christmas song by the Dutch singer Loona.
* Hellcats to not just show off their physical agility but also their vocal chops. Especially Aly Michalka (compare Tisdale sharing a number with 3OH!3 to Michalka having whole solos). Especially when her sister came onto the show...
* Godzilla franchise has monsters of both magical and scientific origin fighting or teaming up with each other, sometimes within the same movie.
* Hermits must follow the training of Shuugyou (abandoning worldly desires to pursue enlightenment) in order to preserve their existence. It is far more difficult than being a celestial, as they must be diligent in their training lest an assassin from Hell comes every century to kill them as their powers weaken when they stray or they will even turn to ash. The Touhou universe is more lenient with them.
* He was actually subject to a lobotomy at a young age by his psychic-hating parents to "fix" him.
* Gravediggaz' "1-800 Suicide". The album version at least. The music video had a different version which promoted a suicide prevention hotline.
* Hacksaw Ridge, The famous story of a conscientious objector who served as a combat medic on Okinawa during World War II.
* Hellboy story "Makoma" ends with Hellboy being banned for life from the New York City Explorer's Club after being accused of destroying an ancient mummy. In actuality, the mummy simply crumbled after finally being able to tell his story, and Hellboy was the one Makoma spoke to.
* Halo and onward, Sudden Death usually has a time-limit (typically from 30 seconds to one minute), but the game still ends if the flag/bomb isn't being held.
* gravity only the best of squads, armed with masterful iron or steel, will even survive.
* Gossip Girl, this is rumored, wrongly, to be the reason for Serena's sudden departure for boarding school.
* Half-Life: Full Life Consequences ends with a song performed by all the characters of the machinima. This was not in the original fanfic, but it did add onto the awesomeness.
* green or orange, which can look very strange, especially to people who aren't used to that sort of thing.
* has King Sombra. He's the one responsible for everything bad that happened in the story, but 38 chapters in and he's only had one major appearance.
* Green. Green spells revolve around attacking with leaves, poisonous thorns and vines, and summoning enormous Venus flytraps.
* Hero Antagonist army to get revenge on Zero. He openly stated that he doesn't care about the repercussions of working under Weil, because he just wants to avenge his mentor. Fortunately, Kraken loses all of his desire for revenge after his final defeat in Zero's hands, and gives Zero his blessing in defeating Dr. Weil once and for all.
* Hannibal). Predictably, the show (while well-received by critics and audiences) never had great ratings, and there was much speculation that it would either be cancelled or moved to a different network before NBC eventually decided to renew it due to large DVR numbers and an incredibly passionate social media fanbase. Also a factor; European financing from France's Gaumont studio and Sony's AXN network, which meant that NBC could easily stomach the ratings issues because the international distributors paid most of the costs and NBC only paid a spare licensing fee and could keep most of the ad revenue, along with Amazon paying NBC to having exclusive rights to stream it in-season and long after.

* Greg Giraldo (born in the US to a Colombian father and a Spanish mother)
* Harry Potter: Harry is initially protected from Voldemort by the magical protection his mother's love gave him because Voldemort, who was raised as an orphan and appeared to be heading towards ruthlessness as far back as childhood, could not comprehend love. In the fifth book, Harry learns from a prophecy that love is the one power he has that Voldemort does not.
* Greg the Bunny featured a paintball team building trip. When Gil neglects to invite the women, they get irate and vow to crush him.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality does anything good. As explained via Harry:
* Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden. Widely considered to be one of the greatest military commanders of all time, even among some of greats themselves. Without going into his varied military and administrative achievements, he came from a country that was considered a backwater and created a
* Growing Daylight: When Claire muses about how it is possible that they could conceive a child when she is a human woman and Jim is half-troll, Toby responds by saying that magic does not make sense in-general so they shouldn't think too hard on the "how".
* Harrison Ford was about 5'1" (155 cm). She has to look up for him to kiss her forehead.
* Gross-Up Close-Up: A highly detailed close-up of something disgusting or horrifying.
* He declined a screen credit for 1949's "Dough For the Dodo" as it was a remake of
* Halt and Catch Fire, and Georgia has more generous tax breaks for TV/film production than Texas. Season 3 sees a shift in setting from Dallas to San Francisco; however, filming stayed primarily in the Atlanta area, although a scene with Joe jogging near the Golden Gate Bridge was shot on location there.
* High School Girls always gets these kinds of roles in her drama club productions because, despite her thinking she's a great actress, she's a huge ham.
* Grass and Sky thinks her little sister Rebecca is an annoying brat, and their parents are way too indulgent of her.
* Hellsing. In his 'normal' form he's not quite human - you can't fit that many pointy teeth in a human mouth - and he almost always manifests his "true form" as an extension of his human form.
* Grey's Anatomy had a patient of the week have tongue cancer that would cost her her tongue. Fortunately the gang come up with an experimental procedure that avoids that.
* Heel–Face Turn very well - and they didn't exactly get on after she returned - and the feeling became pretty mutual. However, Angel also couldn't help maintaining a twisted sexual devotion to her.
* has the scene between Lloyd and his future 'soulmate' (mind you, only four of them are romantic in nature) placed in a similar location.
* Hey, you out there in front of the computer! Stop just browsing this index and click on
* Guinea pig pups are born fully furred, with open eyes, running around. They are essentially born as three-month-old newborns.
* Gretel and Hansel series. While most of the creatures and spirits in the games try to kill Gretel and Hansel, the actual fairies they meet in the second game become their allies.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets have a dangerous animal on campus it was not responsible for the attacks.

* Hero House has Batman take a stab at assembling a crew. His attempt has...questionable results.
* he was killed in a fight with an anti-paladin; essentially, the anti-paladin was anti-matter to him, and they both blew up
* Hera play several relatively harmless pranks on Aphrodite in revenge for illicit affairs, such as trapping her and Ares (her lover) in an indestructible net that he constructed. One story claims that he puts up with it because she can become a virgin again by bathing in the ocean. There are multiple versions, however:
* Hanamaru Kindergarten is a highly intelligent kindergartener who can read and understand adult literature. This does nothing to stop her lighting up at a chance to go down the big slide or being so overwhelmed by a compliment on her costume that she bursts into dance.
* Head jacks and neural splices in Lauren P. Burka's short stories "Mate" and "Whip-Hand".
* Harvester as being an impetus for mass murders, but being one of the most disgusting games ever made, it makes a strong case for itself.
* Harpoon, since it is representative of what you'd see in an real ship Combat Information Centre.
* Gogeta during the credits to the immense excitement of female fans online.
* Good Luck Sleeping: things that attack specifically while you're sleeping.
* GURPS has the Sense of Duty Disadvantage at the -5 level, where it can apply to others in your adventuring group. Assuming everyone in the group has this Disadvantage, and are properly roleplaying it, they are True Companions.
* Harvey Beaks when Officer Fredd electroshocks people who cause mischief with his taser gloves.
* Happy Endings concludes with Alex proudly displaying a corn cob on which she's spelled out Dave's name.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) to because of destiny. He-Man convinces him he has free will, and he chooses to go home to his own dimension in peace.
* Heroic BSoD. Once again, Hayate helps her through it by telling her that it's okay if she quits as Pretear, and that whether she quits or not there is no replacement for her as a person.
* Helen Hoang. After a meeting with her daughter's preschool teacher about whether her daughter might be on the spectrum, Hoang started researching autism and was diagnosed herself.
* Grenade Launcher Witch. Only the Tank and the Charger are immune to being stumbled from the weapon.
* Has another incredible match with CM Punk, and finally manages to put him down with a top rope German Suplex. However, maybe due to having never done the move before, he doesn't do a complete bridge during pin, and thus is counted down as well, resulting in a draw and the championship remaining with Punk.
* Great Balls of Fire! as Jerry Lee Lewis has his singing done by The Killer himself (but Quaid really is playing the piano).
* Guild Wars 2. Discussed when Taimi later explains that each Elder Dragon has a unique weakness, meaning a new method will need to be used for each one.
* her own personal poetry rather than be forced to quote a source that praised the princess.
* High School D×D has also been banned in New Zealand for similar reasons.
* Gundam Build Fighters himself wore an all-black outfit during the tournament, he is given a slightly different one featuring a crimson scarf to go with it.
* Hellraiser: Inferno, the gore and Pinhead and the Cenobites' presence is toned down considerably. The horror focuses instead on the psychological descent of a flawed character subjected to nightmarish visions and seeing his reality crumble around him.
* Gruntz, you have to get past enemy gruntz, floors decorated with sharp spikes, eternally rolling boulders, holes in the ground, pits filled with oil, tar and such, and that's not even half of it...
* Hero: The Guardian Smurf fan art, the floppy part of Hero's hat stands straight up when Smurfette is around him.

* Godzilla: The Series has a large, gaping mouth across its upper torso.
* Harry and several of his friends do it after being captured by the Kree, with Hermione playing good cop.
* Harry Potter of a foreign country "forget" to call the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and reschedules for them to do so the following day, thus showing the extent of their reach. It's also possible that getting these kinds of things taken care of is part of the reason the two governments work together at all.
* Good Eats opens with Alton Brown laying out hundreds of mouse traps in an attempt to catch one mouse. He thinks he spots a particularly rare type of cheese and goes for it; as the title card and theme song play, we hear him yelp in pain and dozens of snapping noises.
* Hidden Backup Princethe next in line doesn't know he's part of the royal family
* Hidden Track — The last song on the album is unlisted and/or preceded by a long silence to conceal its presence.
* Here, with the twist that the character in question is wrong about winning the bet. (The bet was on whether Emjay's supposed boyfriend David really existed; the "David" her friend just met was actually an alien shapeshifter who happened to be using the name.)
* Harry does this by pulling a door outward (to avoid deadly shrapnel hitting those inside the building) in order to make a dramatic wizard entrance.
* Grand Theft Auto V power ballad, complete with a wind machine, but Lazlow tells him that the wind machine is broken.
* Heart Core, the beloved beastman Paladin from New Ayers who has become a celebrity amongst the people due to his battles against demons.
* High School Musical, Chad tries to convince Troy (they're both high school basketball players) that basketball practice is more important than singing:
* Grey Area: Sachel and Monokrome are about to kiss in their civilian identities when they're interrupted by a fireball attack.
* .hack) shows an alternate development of the internet following "Pluto's Kiss", an incident where a computer virus practically destroyed the original internet and almost caused a nuclear war. For some time afterwards, internet usage was restricted to government use: it would take several years until the internet was open to the general public again, by which time computer hardware had been standardized to a single operating system, ALTIMIT, which was completely immune to malware. In addition, hacking has become a capital offense.
* Green-Sky Trilogy as pacifistic as the Kindar, people adjust to the reality in a relatively calm manner, and most make an effort to integrate the societies. By the end of the tie-in game, the society is well on its way to ditch the "false" label entirely.
* Granblue Fantasy which when set as the player's title, gives all of them a small attack and HP boost in gameplay.
* Heinlein put the invented word "slipstick" into his characters' mouths so frequently, a whole generation of his fans are growing up with the false idea that people who used slide rules actually called them that. (The accepted idiom, for the record, was "guessing stick".)
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah has a dub for its theatrical release and VCD and one for the Universe Laser DVD.
* Greta's silkworm Zoid Spineless gains a giant tunneling borer when Wild Blast is activated. It can be used to tunnel through the ground and to deal tremendous damage to whatever it hits.
* High Definition and Toshiba's HD-DVD. When reports indicated Sony was going to ban porn on Blu-ray too, the industry reaction was to predict Sony's loss. Sony eventually agreed to license Blu-ray for porn, even if it wouldn't advertise that fact much. It ended up winning the format war this time. Unlike with Betamax, Sony isn't the sole owner of Blu-ray and instead is one of many partners in the Blu-Ray Disc Association. Sony could not actually ban Blu-ray pornography, but in the early, critical days, they held a de facto monopoly on Blu-ray manufacturing (Being the first to have large-scale production facilities), and did not peddle their services to the adult media industry.

* Happy! grab a bottle of bleach and splash it onto his eyes, exclaiming "Oh, I will never unsee it...!" after he ducks under the water of Nick Sax's bath and gets a direct view of the man's genitals.
* Herr Doktor Innis du par Nachteltaffen, one of the drop-in characters on
* Guardian Fairy Michel, Honeybee and the Black Hammers' base are CGI, but they're cel-shaded so they usually blend in. However, in at least one episode, the inside of the Black Hammers' base is all none-too-subtle CGI.
* Grey's Anatomy uses this in "Golden Hour", which takes place between 6 and 7pm.
* Happy Endings Jane's boss the Car Czar pulls the too-emphatically-denying version of this.
* Gothic Horror was also a factor — as video camera technology improved over the years, more atmospheric lighting effects became possible.
* Hibria's "Tiger Punch" has a chorus like this: "Tiii-geeer punch and lightspeed attack!"
* Gundam Wing: In the backstory, Duo Maxwell, who was a child at the time, caused a case of this with the Christian priest who raised him. At one point, he says he doesn't believe in God, because he's never seen a miracle, but he does believe in the God of Death, because he's seen a whole lot of dead people. While a nun reprimands him, the priest bursts out laughing and admits he can't fault that logic.
* Haley Joel Osment. Literally so, as it came complete with Blue Fairy. Specifically noted as being so inspired, too.
* her diary that she was closer to her father than her mother. She even gave her father a nickname, which she uses to refer to him as in the diary — Pim.
* Helen's sister Amy, apparently the brainy misfit who deliberately withdrew from the family to avoid getting caught up in the constant sibling rivalry between her two sisters and left home as soon as possible. Unsurprisingly, she's Daria's favorite aunt and there's a strong resemblance between — both physically and in personality.
* Grant Morrison's JLA, a series of wild events are causing reality to warp which includes Batman vanishing because Bruce Wayne's parents were never murdered. When Oracle takes herself off line for a while, she's confronted by an angry Martian Manhunter who assumes Barbara Gordon is taking advantage of all this to find a way to change history so she was never shot and put in a wheelchair. A shocked Barbara responds she never once considered that; rather, she's trying to find some way to get reality reset yet still make sure the Waynes live and Bruce free of being Batman. Apologizing, the Manhunter relates that Barbara can't just play God like this and, like it or not, reality still needs Batman to endure that tragedy.
* Harvest Moon games, you can get hit with confusion gas while mining that changes what the directional controls are. If you're lucky, it's a mere reversal, but in at least one of them, the controls are rotated at random.
* Hannah Montana, Miley accidentally splits her pants, and a young girl who sees the tear on the seat points at her and recites the rhyme.
* Green Rocks (Underdeveloped Planet Protection Pact) to prevent this sort of thing from happening in the future.
* Gradius ReBirth game when the past several iterations have been around $30.
* Godzilla's character is openly disgusted by American coffee. One of his colleagues hands him a mug of what he's told is French Roast, only for him to spit it out in disgust.
* Harry Hill's sketch show has the Poor Little Orphan Boy, who starts off cute, but ends up screaming demands for game consoles and the like.
* Hair" The song is intended to be more "squick, squick, squick and squick"; the next line ends "why do these words sound so nasty".
* Helluva Boss, etc.), but him being bi at all is subtle and often downplayed, most of the time seeming like a total straight guy until he lets loose a random comment that makes it clear he also swings for guys
* Going the Distance has two, Erin's sister and her husband, who provide more traditional relationship advice, and Garrett's co-worker and her boyfriend (mentioned, but never seen), who provide more long-distance related advice.

* Harry takes the name Andrews from a liquor bottle at the Leaky Cauldron.
* Hecklers were common and expected. Retorts could fly from the stage back into the crowds, characters would direct their lines at certain members of the audience or mug for the crowd, particularly well-done or well-thought-of scenes could be encored (although not as often as in
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: The author makes Italy's eyes brown to match his brown hair and Japan's eyes black to match his black hair, regardless of their canon eye colors.
* Green-Sky Trilogy and becomes a badass and all that. In fact, she makes those who do choose this option look like idiots. The true hero is the most passive guy in the book.
* Heavy Rain are all pretty awkward, though, of course, their issues are on an entirely different level.
* Hasbro in 2014. While the evening lineup ditched classic TV shows for family-friendly Discovery library shows, the daytime programming remained largely unchanged.
* Grand Theft Auto V during the mission "Friend Request", where Michael has to do a pop-up clicking minigame for Rickie Luckens because he got a virus after clicking a "totally NSFW link".
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) directed any real acts of violence toward his minions.
* GrailQuest room for manoeuvre at all. If even one of your attacks misses, you're dead.
* Higurashi: When They Cry (See the Visual Novels section), and is well known for doing this. Hell, the running joke in the series is that if ever someone gets kidnapped, Rena would be the prime suspect!
* Goof Troop episode "Inspector Goofy" Pete is trying to convince the city to hire Goofy, claiming he has an 'open mind', which he demonstrates by lifting up Gooofy's ears and revealing one can look in and see straight through the other.
* Hallmark Hall of Fame (airing on various networks since December 1951)
* Good Omens, where Anathema Device is charting ley lines and discovers said lines are forming a spiral converging on the town of Lower Tadfield.
* Heroes: "So he can grab his coffee without moving his forearms? DAMN YOU, EVOLUTION!")
* Gunnerkrigg Court serving as Psychopomps, features a brief appearance by Ankou, who looks like The Reaper and carries a scythe.
* Hawkeye. Since then, the couple has been reunited... and then promptly divorced.
* Hey Arnold! does it in the episode "Helga's Masquerade" when trying to teach Helga how to be more feminine.
* Harry Potter. It is accessed by walking straight into the wall between platforms 9 and 10, which has been enchanted to act as a portal to the Hogwarts Wizarding School train. Pottermore mentions a platform 7 1/2 which has trains to magical locations in continental Europe.
* going to the store and its sequels are nonsensical shorts that feature first one mannequin and later many moving around weirdly. The trilogy ends when they all funny-walk into the ocean.
* Hammer Horror movies in particular lived on this trope. Women in form-fitting see-through nightwear that could slip off their smooth shoulders at any moment.
* Green Day and is sometimes not used when it's played. While not a wedding song, it's sort of appropriate for graduations at least.
* Greg Egan knowledge from the future and good relations with other workers, so that they invent technology even more advanced than what we have in the 21st century, as well as a Theory of Everything.
* Gothitelle looks as though it's wearing a dress with bows, but has a 25% chance of being male. Really, a lot of the more humanoid ones qualify.
* He sometimes switches to this when he really loses it; the "Technical Difficulties" screen shows him in a straitjacket (much like the one on the season five

* Guild Wars 2 of the knives themselves. Aside from a super-fast attack rate, Dagger Thieves can throw daggers to damage and cripple a target, leap at an enemy with a quick strike, stack copious amounts of bleeding on enemy groups, and even turn invisible — which sets up a devastating Backstab move for at least double damage. Heck, even their normal auto-attacks will poison enemies continuously. Thieves can also use daggers in their offhand with a sword, and can dual-wield a dagger/pistol combo in either hand for different results. A favorite trick among players is to use the pistol skill Black Powder Shot and leap through the cloud with the dagger skill Heartseeker. This renders the player instantly invisible and sets up a backstab. Suffice it to say, knives are at the heart of any good thief's offense.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn fell into this trope and subverted it at the same time. Of the first three known characters, two are virtually identical to previous protagonists. The third protagonist, a green-haired girl, drove the fandom insane from trying to figure out who she is.
* Half the characters went through adaptation eye-color changes, too: Egon's eyes went from Ramis's brown to blue, Ray's from Aykroyd's brown and green heterochromia to brown, and Peter's from Murray's blue/bluish hazel to green. Even Egon's
* Gundam Wing manga plays it straighter, replacing the original's backpack verniers with a set of angelic wings (the ones that would end up on the Wing Zero).
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series due to Ciro Neili producing the former and creating the later. He throws a lot of references to monkey team into TMNT and boy have the fans noticed.
* Heroes of the Storm, where every hero has a great deal of quotes. More than you'd ever have any chance of hearing during an average match. So much so that the best way to hear them without leaving your hero sitting like a lemon in the middle of a battle is generally to "try" heroes in the shop...for the sole purpose of clicking on them.
* Harry Enfield and Chums combine this with aging rock star syndrome. The characters made that much of an impact, they were namechecked by the BBC Radio 1 station manager when tasked with rejuvinating the station's image.
* Hercules once slept with (depending on the version) between 12 and 50 king's daughters in one night at the daring of Hippolyta to get her belt, since she told him that she'd only give it to him if he slept with/impregnated all these different women. She thought this would take him ages, giving her time to seduce one of his friends that he'd brought with him. She was beyond flabbergasted, not to mention annoyed, when he slept with them all in one night. No wonder this is sometimes called his Thirteenth Labor, especially since every single one of them got knocked up that night.
* Gunslinger Girl when the SWA shut down, the idea of this trope being in play severely creeps out Triela.
* golem- consider activity the best thing in life, so working for humans is its own reward to them.
* Haruhi Suzumiya had one. And since Haruhi is involved, they have to win the game in order to save the world. At the end of the episode Haruhi is trying to decide whether they should enter the local soccer or American football tournament next.
* Hancock starts off with this and the PR agent who volunteers to try to improve his image.
* Happiness In Minimum Wage: You don't need a high-paying job to be happy.
* Hey Arnold! Where Grandpa Phil believes he had died after turning 81 due to a "family curse".
* , has a malevolent bolt of electricity try to kill a family in their house by manipulating appliances in their house.
* Happens to Corum and the hands of Glandyth in one of his other series.
* has put on weight since retiring from sports since Harry himself only married Ginny for her looks and has only ever loved Hermione.
* Halloween is notorious in that Michael Myers NEVER runs, only walks, very ominously, towards his victim at a steady pace.
* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de, for which a premise of a girl getting stuck in a fantasy world with loads of pretty guys as her guardians wouldn't exactly be a bad idea.

* Harvey Comics had the Sack get a propelling butt kick from the Sarge in virtually every story.
* Hilda And Richie are two cartoon foxes wearing clothes and living in a mansion.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure!: Erika Kurumi is so full of energy and pep that she exasperates other people easily.
* Hayate Yagami of the same series also does this. Given she was a nine-year-old living alone and then suddenly has four people living with her
* Hazama matches, in which the entire fight consists of both shouting at the top of their lungs for the other to die.
* Hijacked by Ganon: A previously defeated villain returns as a new threat.
* Harry later becomes one to Clark in the mini-arc they share in the sequel, with both seeing a lot of themselves in each other - and
* Heroic Bastard of the forbidden union of Alberich and Gutrune, when Alberich bought Grimhilde's love with gold. The Walsung line were started by Wotan, Siegfried's grandfather, to get the ring, while Hagen was born to get the ring. While Siegfried is strong and youthful, Hagen uses his cunning and has an aged appearance.
* Harry uses ventriloquism to start one that the Marauders get blamed for.
* Grow, some engineers make a electrical UFO-like car and later redesign it into a dragonfly-like hovercar.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 of songs, says that it's going to revolutionize the way we listen to music. He's right, in a way, but the Zune didn't last too long. Played doubly strong here: not only do we, the audience, know that Zunes were crushed by Apple's iPod, but anyone living on Earth at the time of the movie could tell him the same thing (it takes place in 2014).
* Gunnerkrigg Court Chapter 10 is titled: "Doctor Disaster Versus the Creepy Space Aliens from Outer Space". Doctor Disaster himself feels the need to specify:
* He then slumps to the ground, mouth agape, and sobs at what an idiot he's been.
* GradeAUnderA, but to avoid his video being taken down, he also made alternate explanations for every piece of proof that a video was staged using actors.
* Grappling with Grappling Rules page details all the trouble with making realistic grappling combat mechanics while still being easy to play.
* GLOW (2017) directed the third-season episode "Hollywood Homecoming".
* Hanamaru Kindergarten on Tsuchida is still part of the series' central premise.
* "He didn't get out of the cockadoody car!" Present in both the film and the novel,
* GUN×SWORD doesn't just wear a long coat, he wears a full tailcoat.
* Go! Go! Mobaboy, the bad guy threatens our hero with "I'm gonna hit you so hard, your voice actor will feel it!"
* Grand Theft Auto IV shows, among the images of several drunk consumers, a man walking around Liberty City with a street cone in his head.
* he says pretty much everything in the same deranged bellow, it's hard to tell when he's shouting because he's been hit and when he's shouting because that's just the noise he makes when things happen.
* Highway revolts have happened several times in the United States as the first freeways were built.
* Green and Silver have never interacted in the games - heck, she didn't become canon until
* Harry is the last living descendant of Ignotus Peverell, the noblest and cleverest of the three Peverell brothers... which, frankly, makes Harry the closest thing the three deathly hallows have to a proper heir.
* High School Rejects: People you knew in high school are now working low-end jobs.
* Hellgate: London novel, a demon used a device which made the target relive his/her past in the dream, which will go horribly wrong and kill them, or make them go crazy.
* Guin Rhineford is fairly dark-skinned, too, but judging by his facial features and hair, he's probably just a white guy with a really deep tan.

* Havi uses his expertise to synthesize an aphrodisiac and then temporarily enchants Vald so he can't orgasm unless Havi allows it.
* Hell, they have their own defence division comprised of judges who are seen to be too dangerous for use on the streets but have been found useful in wars around the galaxy as well as in defence of the city. Also, Mega City One has a space corps, a regular military that fights offworld.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2. His true form? You might know him as Ego the Living Planet. His human avatar is just that, a construct he uses to interact with other races.
* He Died with a Felafel in His Hand Evidently expecting a different response, he goes looking for a fight and accuses Danny of being a homophobe. Unfortunately for him, Danny's been through hell, and that's the last straw.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Rita Skeeter suspects Professor Dumbledore, the popular Headmaster of Hogwarts, was compliant in letting his sister be locked in the cellar throughout her childhood until she eventually killed her mother in retaliation. These accusations plague Dumbledore's reputation throughout the book.
* Green Lantern, one of his dead love interests taunts his current girlfriend by saying that she'll eventually end up like the rest of them.
* Greg Egan, with only a few "anachronauts" crawling around in starships to investigate the future they find along the way; either way all travellers are doomed to miss decades of time. One planet solves the problem by putting the entire population into what amounts to slow-motion until the traveler returns.
* he was one of the old hands at TSR at the time this style was originally being used for Dungeons and Dragons.
* Heroes from any wounds I suffered anyway, I'd jump out a 10-story window, too.
* Heel–Face Turn into "Rusev Day", all three would get taunted with "USA!"... despite Aiden English being billed from his actual home of Chicago, and English only being a last name.
* God Of Gamblers Return has a moment where akimbo Berettas are reloaded in mid-air! That's that way to subvert the reloading problem!
* GURPS has rules for letting a psi trap an attacker inside her mind. More mundanely people with Anti-Psi can make their mind such a void that when people try to read it that the abyss gazes back into them.
* Hell's Kitchen things you should do when making a soufflé. This may be why, in the next scene, he is complaining that he's got a fucking headache.
* Gram Parsons and even in mainstream country, his influence has been enormous, as it is also in some rock circles.
* Half-Life 2 despite the game taking place before either was released.
* Heechee Saga revolves around an alien space station humans have found within our solar system which holds hundreds of small starships capable of faster-than-light travel. However, heading to a new destination is always a blind jump simply because the navigation system on these is so alien that nobody has been able to figure out how the settings correspond to anything about the destination beyond a few basics: The computer lights up when valid coordinates are selected, the settings can be repeated to reliably always lead to the same destination, and nobody who has tried changing the navigation settings in mid-flight has ever returned.
* Guns N' Roses (Data East) depicts numerous bikini-clad female groupies around the band members (the game's main focus).
* Hajime no Ippo both lose matches they were largely dominating because of that.
* Having known Jim since they were little, Toby has been this for Jim, Douxie and Barbara's status as wizards, becoming the
* Gummi Bears made such advance technology (inclunding a complex underground road system and a interoceanic communication devices in the Middle Ages) that they became a target for humans due to that.
* Hercule Poirot for many Belgians; like calling a Canadian American or a New Zealander Australian.
* Grand King Ghidorah is one of the most powerful beings in the universe, with strength outclassing Godzilla. Since he's used to just toying with and killing beings who don't stand a chance against him, he's never needed to learn how to fight. Once he faces beings on par with him, he fares badly.

* Grace has a mixture of human, alien, other alien, and squirrel DNA. She's a * Gravity Falls, he ends up being imprisoned in a museum dedicated to his past mistakes and failures, every exhibit designed to emotionally torture him. Worse still, the museum is haunted by the physical manifestation of Stan's self-loathing, and he won't stop until Stan commits suicide.
* her internal struggle with the dark magic she accepted in order to live forever and create the cutie mark spell.
* Hereafter. Instead, she's an example of why he can't have a normal relationship. Then he ends up meeting a woman who just might be able to understand him...
* Glitch Techs in the pilot, though it remains to be seen how their relationship develops.
* Gyo plays this trope straight in the least comedic and most horrifying way possible.
* Hanzi Smatter translates many unfortunate Asian tattoos. It's hard to decide which ones are worse: the "Asian Gibberish Font" where English letters are replaced by Chinese-looking scribble and the resulting "word" is meaningless, or the ones that are blatant insults like "Toilet Goblin".
* Gold Digger, the character of Ancient Gina has used stasis and similar methods to survive since before the current universe started! She looks pretty good for her age.
* He tries to usurp command from Priestess (who is Obsidian-rank and has a decent amount of field experience after being an adventurer for a year) leading a practice rookie mission twice, the second time leading the group into a troll's nest and putting everyone in danger.
* Gossip Girl is a prime example. The characters on the show frequently use her to spread rumors and/or spin a situation in their favor.
* Goblins Second Edition, which is apparently a good way in the past in the game world — at least one generation ago — and which he was apparently alive to see.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), and a few rapid shots of characters, so it doesn't count either.
* Hellsing. She DUAL-WIELDS a pair of these when facing down Zorin's zeppelin, and uses them to bring it down.
* Glider PRO has a cobweb obstacle, usually passable only with batteries or rubber bands.
* Haegemonia: Legions of Iron: Ships passing through asteroid fields are slowly damaged, implictly from constant micrometeorite strikes.
* Hanada Shonen Shi songs "The One" and "Drowning" as OP and ED respectively.
* .hack//G.U., this appears to be what happens to people infected with AIDA: it doesn't force an emotion on someone, but it amplifies their existing emotions to extreme levels. This is almost universally a bad thing, regardless of which emotion was amplified.
* Grrl Power, who insists she orders a comic that was a limited run only available at the SDCC because it's mentioned in an article. Sydney knows to not let them get away with such crap, though, and she's not even above making death threats.
* Hammer Horror's re-invention of the classic Universal monster flicks are an example that far pre-dates the "reboot" term.
* Hey Arnold! where Harold gets suspended, he tries to watch cartoons, but every channel is interrupted with a press conference in Kyoto.
* Good Samaritan is this trope incarnate. Jesus tells a story about a Jewish man who is beaten, robbed, and left for dead by bandits on the side of the road. A priest and a Levite see the injured man as they pass, but do nothing to help him. Then a Samaritan comes along and, upon noticing the victim, immediately gives what medical help he can, hoists the man onto his donkey, and brings him to an inn to recover, offering to pay any expenses that doctors might incur while healing him. At the time, priests and Levites were the pinnacles of their community and virtually infallible, while Samaritans were the bitter, violent enemies of the Jews; the two groups were outright forbidden to interact with each other under any circumstance. It would have been easy for the Samaritan to walk past the dying man, but he still chose to help him in his time of greatest need, regardless of their peoples' opposition to each other. The story emphasizes Jesus's belief that it is the people who do good in every situation, and without any hope of praise or reward, that are truly the children of God, irrespective of their religion.

* Harry Potter based the Leaky Cauldron off an Exeter pub named the Old Fire House. Rowling herself debunked the rumor, saying she'd never visited or even heard of the Old Fire House at the time she was creating the Potterverse's famous places.
* Gummo in which the narrator talks about two brothers, and saying 'They seemed to have wonderful lives. I don't know what went wrong.'. We then see the two brothers fighting, and it's expected that it something drastic will happen between the two. However they're fight soon comes to and end, then one of them calmly asks the other what's for dinner
* Gravity Falls is about a titular town filled with paranormal activity of both fantasy and sci-fi origin.
* Happens again to Tuff in book 6. This time, it's intentionally being used against him.
* Godspeed You! Black Emperor, named the closing track of their debut album "For Wanda", after guitarist Efrim Menuck's dog, who passed away while the album was being recorded.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality there's something called "The Most Ancient Blade" that only those of a Noble/Ancient House can use. It is described very similar to a lightsaber.
* Guild Wars has no jump mechanic, so even so much as a pebble will stop you in your tracks.
* Hex Wives #2, one of Nadiya's cakes is destroyed by Danali's cat charging through her kitchen.
* Hate Plague take to soaking themselves in blood, doing it so often that their skin begins turning a faint shade of red. The character who informs the others about this tribe then goes on to recount having stumbled onto a "party" in which the infected filled an empty pool by shredding people with woodchippers and lawnmowers they had aimed at it.
* Gulliver's Travels: Weary of his disappointing time in Luggnagg, Gulliver is finally able to secure passage on a boat bound for Japan, and he arrived at the port of Xamoschi on 21 March 1710. His stay in the island country is brief, however, as he finds himself in trouble once again. It seems the custom for Dutchmen in Japan is to trample the crucifix, in order to demonstrate that they are not Christians, and none have ever refused to do so. The Japanese Emperor excuses Gulliver from this tradition, but later, a Dutchman again tries to force Gulliver into trampling the cross, a sacrilegious act in his eyes.
* Hector's mother controls her son's life to minuscule details to ensure he never feels any strong emotions, including keeping a desiccated hamster who she claims "Is just sleeping", censoring a comic book so it looks like a very happy and dull story or making him think incredibly boring jokes are funny (Why did the chicken cross the road? For a very good reason!). Unlike many of the examples of this page, it's not her
* 'Hammerheads' all of the anti-drug agencies, along with several others, are merged into the Department of Border Security after the drug lords prove that they can engage and destroy the current American police opposition.
* Have Space Suit – Will Travel as he buys them at the local drugstore. No sane pharmacist nowadays would even dream selling amphetamines to a high-school kid, space-suit or not.
* Hannah Montana: Miley and Lily enjoy doing this to Oliver on a regular basis.
* GxB being short for "Girl x Boy." Whether she gets chosen depends on a mixture of luck, the tastes of Momoko's player, and how well Risa's player runs her.
* Great Ship universe. Glass has been replaced by diamond panels, and the other precious gems are used essentially like wallpaper.
* Happens in a unique episode in the anime (though the one from the first Mousse battle is removed). Ryōga and Mousse team up to try and get rid of Ranma. At one point, Ranma, having been turned into a girl at the start of the battle on the basis that his physical strength is decreased in that form, gets

* Godzilla Vs Spacegodzilla: Spacegodzilla is bluish indigo in color and one of the most challenging monsters Godzilla has ever encountered.
* Goodbye My Rose Garden. This is especially notable in that, being a maid and noblewoman in Victorian England, Hanako should be holding the umbrella for Alice, but Alice insists that they share. When the rain starts picking up, the two end up running, clasping hands on the umbrella and laughing together.
* Haunted Technology both feature haunted video games as deadly artifacts that contain malevolent spirits.
* Grandfathered in wouldn't fly today as it's very negative and named after a character, but it's a large part of the site, so it stays.
* Here There Be Monsters after Wess decided scanning that bit of a monster's remains counted as a report prior to his daily dose of caffeine.
* Groin Attack with combatants who practice the old school version of producing the sound of foot hitting the delicates.
* Green Lantern features Harley groping Hal Jordan's butt, which is a nod to the notorious fascination with said body part among DC universe fangirls.
* Gundam 0083. Effects differ from the destruction of a city to making the entire planet uninhabitable — happily, that last one is prevented.
* Gundam, inspiring spinoffs, video games and toys since 1979. This especially applies the model kits. There are more grades, variants and designs that one can count.
* Hajimete no Aku falls asleep on Kyouko, after staying up all night protecting her from mosquitoes.
* Happy Wheels so challenging (besides the chaotic levels) is the fact that the smallest wipeout from a bike, wheelchair, or Segway can cause your character to lose limbs, break their neck, or sometimes explode into a bloody mess of gibs.
* Greyhawk while this thing is active is a small price for this grade of destruction.
* Heechee Saga, where the ships are described as catching up to light emitted from behind them and eventually just seeing a mottled sploch on the front viewscreen from all the old light.
* Hidamari Sketch, but still is childish and naive compared to her co-tenants.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, but Rocket stands out as the most bloodthirsty and amoral.
* Gone with the Wind, Prissy finds Rhett at a party the local prostitutes are giving, either unaware, or uncaring that the Yankee soldiers are advancing on Atlanta.
* Heralds of Valdemar the knowledge or background required to figure out Firesong's type of magic for himself.
* Hercules, Pegasus's eyes pop out when he sees the female pegasus that he fell in love with splits in half and turns out to be Pain and Panic who ties the winged horse up.
* Hey Arnold!: "Helga on the Couch" shows us in a flashback that Helga Pataki was a normal girl who was so neglected and ignored by her parents that she had to walk to preschool by herself, getting splashed with mud and having her lunch stolen by a dog. She then meets Arnold, probably the first person to ever show her genuine affection, and immediately falls for him. After Harold steals her graham crackers and the other kids start laughing at her, she starts bullying them in order to get respect.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, she declares that Peter Quill is harboring strong feelings of love. Quill, not wanting to admit how much he's fallen for Gamora, awkwardly mumbles that he feels "general, unselfish love" for the universe in general, but Mantis' powers are not so easily fooled, and she blows his secret.
* Hawkmoth Defeated, Robin gives one to Adrien and Marinette while daring them to take their Miraculous back.
* Guest starring on a Panel Quiz Show is a way for your up-and-coming star/starlet to earn money (and fame) in

* Gurren-hen, gives the Beastmen Generals' fortress Gunmen a combined form, with Viral replacing Thymilph's hijacked Dai-Gunzan with a look-alike of his own. Yoko also gets a more stylized version of Dayyaka's Gunmen to fit her persona better.
* Happy Heroes where such fantasy mainstays as wizards, dragons, and gnomes can be found.
* has already spotted them, but they do the Fake-out Make-out anyway as he hurries over to try to get them to leave, then they knock him out. Then snog again.
* Halloween (1978) did it TWICE. Same girl, same killer, leaves him "dead" with his knife right next to him, and there can't have been more than five minutes between them.
* Harry Houdini passion for exposing psychics and mediums. Paradoxically, that was because he dearly wanted to find the real thing, and the phonies wasting his time really ticked him off. He even arranged a password with his wife so that she would know if a medium was really channeling his spirit after he died. She tried, but never received the code.
* Hilda: In episode 11, Hilda and the Woodman end up in a magic house that gives them everything they desire, but doesn't want them to leave. When they try to escape anyway, the house starts adopting alien geometries in order to keep its prisoners captive, like forming rooms with stairs going in all directions (and a door in the floor), and an attic door that leads straight back to the living room downstairs.
* He switches to more regal looking robes when he declares himself Phoenix King and goes off to obliterate the Earth Kingdom. Costume Switch.
* Hansel and Gretel, when the kids were calling out in the woods, voices answer back.
* Granblue Fantasy style in battle. When facing other playable characters, they stick to this style or the game takes advantage of having more space to depict opponents in an art style closer to the one the game uses regularly.
* Grodus', and then rewards her "victory" by allowing her to send a message to Mario, which she of course uses to relay the new information.
* Gunstar Autocthonia, the center of existence is the Spiral, a great coil of stars and worlds where the Primordials built their kingdoms. Beneath it is the city of Black Non, a metaphysical black hole where existence ends. Outside its edges is an infinite void of space, scattered through with drifts of asteroids, lonely worlds flung from the spiral or never shaped by the Primordials at all, shimmering Wyld nebulae where the laws of reality break down an existence becomes malleable, terrible alien horrors, and the the Gunstar itself, the world-body of a primordial turned into a spaceship and endlessly fleeing the lords of the Spiral.
* Halo 3: ODST spook. Naturally, your typical ground-pounder will resent that.
* Halloween Episode, Homer suffered an accident and Moe took advantage to trick Marge into thinking Homer left her. To further convince her, Moe gave her a letter saying it was written by Homer using his(Moe's) calligraphy. The letter was a forged (and exaggerated) confession of homosexuality.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire Ron asks this about what Hermione sees in Krum. Harry immediately points out that he's a famous international Quidditch player, to which Ron responds "Yeah, but besides that!"
* He once owned a Fiat, which "rusted on the assembly line." It was easy to find in a crowded parking lot, as all he had to do was follow the sound of parts falling off.
* Heckle and Jeckle cartoon "A Merry Chase" starts off with Chesty the Bulldog and Dimwit putting up Wanted posters of the two magpies.
* Goblins. Each time they die, they are reset to the beginning of the dungeon. The maze is also reset when one team reaches the treasure, only without the winning team (who get to go home). They don't remember their previous attempts though, only a counter is shown how many times they failed.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas ("this fucking antique", as he puts it). He's told to shut up and shoot back.
* Gnomes for them to live in harmony with Mother Earth, y'know? But they're never called out on this.

* GURPS where too much radiation will cause all sorts of horrible things to happen to you even if you successfully make a save against the effect. In fact radiation damage causes a build up of genetic damage that is incurable without special powers or advanced technology. However, "weird radiation" can result in powers.
* Goof Troop did this, too. This time, it was neighbours Peg and Pete involved; Pete was jealous of Goofy's expertise in, yes, homemaking. (What was never adequately explained was why he'd be good at it—single fatherhood, anyone?)
* Happens in most Final Fantasy games whenever the party tries to flee a battle.
* Gregory's Girl: Dorothy immediately becomes the most popular girl in school when she joins the soccer team, gaining her a lot of attention from the boys, much to Gregory's frustration.
* he enjoyed pain denied it, citing this as the reason why he spent his career taking massive beatings and jaw-dropping bumps.
* Her Father's Daughter. Donald's mother informs him that there is no chance that he can marry Linda because he's only a year her elder, and he's going to college.
* Half Price, the main characters are a bunch of kids who've been abandoned by their mother. Unable to keep their clothes in order, they start going nude at home simply so that they won't have to do so much laundry.
* Helsingin Sanomat, the largest newspaper in Finland, had a full-page ad for a nuclear reactor in the 1990s. It is possible that the intention was to turn public opinion to favor nuclear power.
* Halo 3: ODST changes a short section of the Data Hive level; namely, you can access the 30th and final audio file of the game. If you get all 30 audio files, you will actually end up knowing more about what's going on than the intelligence officer who gave you your mission. One of the final cutscenes changes too, in that instead of Dare stopping the Rookie from shooting the Engineer, it's the other way around.
* Hannibal to get a gun and shoot Hannibal. When the doctor refuses, Mason threatens to expose the doctor's role in his crimes. Hannibal says, "Hey Cordell! Why don't you push him in [the pit]? You can always say it was me." He then proceeds to do so.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, after Malfoy insults Ron's mother:
* Greece witnessed one of the worst hyperinflations in history — in October 1944, it hit a monthly rate of 13.8%.
* Hammerspace Hair: A character pulls out something they were storing in their hair
* Grimms' The hero of the story prevails with the help of his six servants, mentioned in the title.
* Great Teacher Onizuka: Onizuka in intense moments of surprise, exasperation, fear, hunger, or pretty much anything else. A lot of the male cast, in fact.
* Gordon Korman was written in the early eighties, and as such the computer he introduces to MacDonald Hall is a monstrosity of a machine that has to be fed punch cards. The 2003 reprint updates this to the modern era, noting that the school would now be filled to the brim with computers. So Wizzle instead introduces software he's written to control the school.
* Great Big Sea song "Widow in the Window" is about a young bride who refuses to believe her husband died at sea, much to the disappointment of the narrator, who is in love with her.
* Halo: Combat Evolved. However, if, while the reaction is still functioning properly, one were to remove whatever is holding it in place (probably a magnetic field — the hotter fusion rockets would have to use those, rather than something made of matter, because even diamonds would vaporize on contact with the plasma), it would vaporize everything within a very large radius. Of course, it's unlikely one would have the time to get away before that happened.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe Appearance-wise, it's based on the throne included in the Castle Grayskull toy.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix where Sirius' mixing up of Harry and his father is something he's fighting and is not stated so directly nor does he show signs of it when he's not stuck under house arrest in the former abusive home he ran away from as a teenager.

* Helios Airways flight 522, which depressurized and became a ghost plane because the Boeing 737’s pressure system was switched from automatic to manual so the ground crew could check out a potential problem and the mechanics failed to change the setting back to automatic afterwards. The pilots subsequently overlooked the incorrect setting three times during checklists. The other failure was the low cabin pressure alarm; it sounded just like the takeoff configuration alarm, which can only sound on the ground, so the pilots assumed there was a glitch. The ground controller asked about the pressure switch, but hypoxia had set in too quickly and the pilots were already too impaired to check it. The plane later ran out of fuel and crashed.
* , Harry responds that he didn't sabotage the potion nor does he know who did. However, Harry does know the potion was sabotaged and knows Blaise Zabini got someone else to do it, even if he doesn't know who.
* Goblin Hollow had the hell retconned out of it. It was once known as 'Under the Lemon Tree' and the Goblins were originally figments of Ben's imagination made real. It received a retcon changing the setting, and quite a few facts from the original, including how the goblins came to be.
* Gordon Lightfoot's Bitter Green, about a woman who waited for her lover her whole life. He turns up the day after she dies.
* Gundam SEED meanwhile gives ZAFT pilots fightpacks to save themselves with in the event of their suit being disabled (or set to self-destruct), but they have to open the cockpit and jump out manually, so it's not nearly effective. Earth Federations pilots on the other hand get nothing.
* Harold Lloyd when he saw Bill Strother climbing the Brockman Building in Los Angeles as a stunt one day. Lloyd - who had a difficult time watching anyone else perform a dangerous stunt because he had no control over that situation - hid behind a corner, peeking to check on Strother's progress every few moments. After Strother reached the roof, Lloyd went up and introduced himself.
* Hammerspace spines. Oprah, who is promoted to the department and position of "The Big O" and was set to leave for the Big Office prior to the attack, also joins in on the battle, stating that she can stick around a little longer.
* Hercules, Hades uses one where he puts various monster figures whom all are sent to destroy Hercules.
* Heir to the Empire constrained in how they think about space combat.
* Gunsmith Cats OVA Roy and a Co-worker investigate a scene and find the suspect dead. Roy Moves the body carefully to find a primed grenade waiting, he re-pins it only for his co-worker to pick up the phone. Roy screams not to touch anything. Nothing happens until The Phone is hung up.......BOOOM!
* Gojyo's stepmother despised him for being both her husband's bastard and a half-youkai. She was constantly abusive to him, which came to a head when she tried to kill him with an axe and her own son killed her to prevent it.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City (the voice of protagonist Tommy Vercetti) frequently complaining on set and found him difficult to work with as a result. "In some sessions he was...into it, but then sometimes...he was very dark and couldn't work", said Sam Houser.
* Harry Potter and Muggle-born wizards despite being half-Muggle himself. The same goes for Dolores Umbridge, who viciously persecutes Muggle-borns even though she's half-Muggle like Voldemort.
* "He rides across the nation, the thoroughbred of sin. He got the application that you just sent in. It needs evaluation, so let the games begin. A heinous crime, a show of force, a murder would be nice of course..."
* Hand of Kindness) in which the singer picks up some kind of gorgeous female elemental who vanishes, leaving him in the middle of nowhere haunted for life.
* Godzilla Junior has never felt attraction or arousal until he met Princess Luna, and even afterwards only feels it with her. Queen Maui speculates it's because certain birds and reptiles mate for life.
* Hannah sticks with Alois despite his mistreatment of her and proclaims she loves Alois for his unpredictable instability and passionate nature.
* Halo: Evolutions. Just as John was intending to remind Parisa to not bring personal items to a combat zone, he recognized the picture. Parisa, obviously not recognizing John because of his armor, explained the story behind the picture to him and said that although it was silly and John was "dead", she intended to hold him to that promise. Despite the sudden flood of memories, John couldn't bring himself to reveal who he was, knowing that doing so would be a massive security breach. Instead he maintained his stoic facade and the two of them began planning a counterattack against the Covenant.

* Gundam SEED version, up to the placement of the gun and charging animations. A long tradition, there!
* Harry HarrisonThe issue of disease is not even mentioned. While Jason is likely immunized against any possible infection (considering he lives on a world completely hostile to humans), the same can't be said for the primitive natives against diseases he carries. He does nearly die from infection but only because he is wounded by a weapon.
* Going from Illustrator to Photoshop is equally tricky. Pressing Ctrl while rolling the mouse wheel on Photoshop zooms in or out. On Illustrator, it just moves the artboard unless the Zoom function was selected. Some Photoshop commands require Ctrl+Alt+(Key) on Illustrator instead of just Ctrl. And of course, the fact that there is both Selection' and 'Direct Selection' can lead to a few distortions when trying to resize an image - on Selection, it does change the whole thing, but on DS it focuses on a certain point\anchor of the image and moves
* Half-Life 2, Alyx Vance temporarily serves as this while in Nova Prospekt, informing you of incoming soldiers and possible passages.
* Hellsing anime, a reporter is intent on releasing footage of vampires and is 'sentenced' to death by being drained by Alucard. In Integra's defense, the reporter had stood idly by recording a sadistic vampire as he savagely fed on a human, never even trying to stop the vampire, save the victim, or report the vampire to... well, anyone.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) had a few of these, including a spellbook that would summon Daimar the Demon, in the He-Man episode "Daimar the Demon", and the Ancients' Book of Spells in "A Bird in the Hand". In the She-Ra series, Shadow Weaver got ahold of the Eldritch Book of Spells in "The Eldritch Mist". Then Madam Razz had to locate the Nameless Glowing Book to find a spell to get She-Ra out of the Sixth Dimension in "Three Courageous Hearts".
* Halo 3's Special Warfare Group; N'tho 'Sraom is the youngest member of his Special Operations unit, and Usze 'Taham is a highly distinguished Fleet Security operative. Players 1 and 2? The Chief and Arbiter.
* Hans the Hedgehog": Hans' father regrets having wished for his half-urchin son to be born and literally wishes him dead. He is all too happy when Hans leaves home on his own initiative, and he does not even care when Hans returns with a big herd of pigs to feed the village with. He only starts caring when Hans returns again, now fully human and married to a princess.
* Halo games. If you ask her if she's better than Siri, she'll respond, "Not to brag, but I'm going to save the galaxy 500 years in the future."
* Golden Sun games, bosses seem to be immune because of how the Luck stat works: Luck increases a creature's chances to resist status effects. Since every boss in the game has a Luck stat of around 50 (or higher), their resistance to these effects is extremely high. Some of the Djinn attacks can bypass the resistance, though (mainly the ones that work like a Silence effect).
* Guards! Guards! tries this on the giant fire-breathing dragon. It does not work.
* Hamish and Dougal, is another major offender. For instance, when Dougal's entered a "Macathalon":
* Glitch had Purple Flowers and their distilled form, Essence of Purple, which when imbibed would blur the screen slightly and make text pop up in random places. Additionally, drinking a Pumpkin Ale would temporarily make your character moonwalk whenever moving.
* Go! Princess Pretty Cure invaded and took over Noble Academy (including the girls' dorms, where the Princess Pretty Cure team are living) by engulfing it with vines.

* Henry VIII favorite was his son Edward, but Mary and Elizabeth also both adored their baby brother so there wasn't nearly as much rivalry there).
* Gold Through the Fire: Peter is threatened while in the US by KGB agents, demanding that he return or they'll hurt his family (who are imprisoned). After he refuses even so, they kidnap him. He escapes, so at the end an agent is sent to kill him. Upon hearing Peter speaking with his foster brother about what Russian Christians endure, the agent puts down his rifle with a smile, deciding not to.
* Half-Life 1? Oh, you better believe they were solely for target practice.
* good was one. Others discount this because of said stigma of comets being doom omens, instead assuming that the event (assuming it actually happened at all) was an alignment of several stars.
* Go, Mutants!, where among other things Elvis and his stillborn twin brother, Jesse grew up to become a famous duet.
* , he rebuffs every sexual advance he receives, but defeating the succubus Izilith and requesting that she take him to her boss as his prize yields this exchange.
* Gorillaz. They contain both unused songs and remixes by other artists.
* Harry finds Hermione, Neville, Dean and Seamus repacking his trunk and when he asks what's going on the latter two become a bit uncomfortable.
* Golden Age story, the Penguin sells a millionaire a parrot that has been trained to remember the combination to a safe and repeat it to the Penguin.
* Haré+Guu Deluxe, the opening of each episode includes Haré spouting out of a rapid-fire stream of chatter, which varies from time to time while Guu dances.
* Hayao Miyazaki is the highest grossing film of all time in Japan, and the only Japanese animated film to win an Academy Award.
* Green Lantern series has a very human-looking population, but with a refreshing amount of diversity. One of the planet's two Lanterns, Zale, fits this trope, looking like a human of African descent.
* Hairspray as a terrified Mrs. Pingleton bursts into Motormouth Maybelle's record store to grab her daughter away, and yanks the needle off a record.
* Hide Your Children: In violent video games, there will be no children at all anywhere in the game, or they will be impervious to harm.
* Gonks has at least stated horns (which Hannyabal also has) are something some people naturally have in the story's world.
* "Go, Dexter Family! Go" has Dexter captured by aliens who plan to use his knowledge for their sinister designs. The alien leader reads Dexter's thoughts and is infuriated that none of them are what he's looking for. One of Dexter's thoughts read is "My sister Dee Dee is a certified stupidhead".
* Grand Theft Auto also has a "prison server" like the ones mentioned above for bad sports. What makes them notable is that they also put everyone in said server in a dunce cap.
* Hangin' with Mr. Cooper used "Soul Man" for its second season before changing to an original theme song.
* Glukkons plan on exterminating his species to sell as food and witnessing Oddworld in its natural splendor before the Magog Cartel ravaged the land is what inspired Abe to revolt.
* Graceling, mind readers tend to be terribly lonely and unhappy people as a result of this.
* Granblue Fantasy nods to this with the "Bounty" status effect, which can be stacked on an enemy to increase the chance of getting a chest with good loot from defeating them. The skills available to the player that increase the bounty level on an enemy are even outright called "Bounty Hunter".
* H.Bomberguy: think pieces on gaming and leftist politics, the latter more humorous than the former and mostly mocking far-right content creators and debunking scientifically wrong views associated mostly with the right, like climate change denialism and Flat Earth.
* Harvesting even one of the Little Sisters gives you the bad ending; it is simply implied that you jumped off the slope and became ADAM- and power-hungry the moment you first harvested.

* Hellboy Hellboy fights a Kappa that has been preying on a nearby village. A villager who had been bribing the kappa with cucumbers tells Hellboy to beat the Kappa by spilling its water. Before that, the villager also asks Hellboy's name so he can write it on a cucumber to save him.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix the ridiculousness of holding a full criminal proceeding for a simple matter of underage magic, and gets Harry acquitted in about two pages. Dolores Umbridge herself takes matters into her own hands by forcing Harry to cut his skin every time he decided to speak out against the Ministry or alert others of Voldemort's return.
* Hawaii Five-0 from the previous series appeared in a straight-up sequel episode in the reboot—but the fact that both series' main casts are named the same is left unmentioned.
* Goldust and Primo got a more subtle tease. One episode had them trying to find a private place for an unrevealed reason, AJ loved to celebrate winning matches by jumping on Primo's shoulders, when she was eliminated from NXT she broke down crying in his arms and they finally kissed on the last episode.
* Gloria Estefan had two solo #1 singles (and one with her band Miami Sound Machine), but none of them were "Conga".
* Gronkh asshole, to emphasize the bad quality of the game and spice it up.
* Hagenheim series by Melanie Dickerson is a retelling of fairy tales in a medieval setting without any magic.
* Hell's Kitchen: Fransisco the party planner. Possibly Jean-Phillippe as well.
* Hidamari Sketch, who uses her cosplay tendencies for everything from modeling for her art class to making personalized New Years' cards. She dislikes calling it "cosplay" though, yet what she doesn't realize is that she's practically cosplaying as herself all the time.
* Haruhi Suzumiya tries to kill Kyon with a knife, giving him a chance to dodge. When that doesn't work, she freezes him in place, and it is later implied that she could have just outright deleted him from existence. She's a malfunctioning alien bio-robot, so it makes sense.
* Guy in Back causes him to lose confidence and drop out - but with enough points accrued so far to still graduate. His rival Iceman wins the trophy. But then Maverick saves the day in an actual dogfight and gets the prize Iceman is entitled to - a billet as a Top Gun instructor.
* Glory of the series by Joe Keatinge and Sophie Campbell has nothing to do with this subgenre at all.)
* Hero: 108 bananas. He can also have his eyes knocked out of his head, which happens more often than you'd like to think.
* He also wishes for the most beautiful woman and to rule the world. He gets a case of
* Highlander series absorb the skills and memories of everyone they kill. Some of the nastier ones get off on this.
* Green Witch turned into minions. Notably, the actors don't have to wear the masks over their faces.
* Hank the Cowdog series, the titular canine narrator is given to describing his sensory organs as though they were sophisticated machinery:
* Grimm Eclipse. It's entirely possible this could be related to the studio being used, as she now lives in L.A. and does her voice work outside of RT's studios. Either way, it's worth noting.
* Half-Life 1 has several of these, usually taking the form of a black screen with white text:
* Ground Control and more so in its sequel, where certain icons light up to tell you if you have extra cover provided by trees or buildings. Additionally, ground vehicles in the first game have weaker armor on top, meaning units firing on them from a higher elevation do extra damage.
* Grey-and-Gray Insanity: Somebody has an extremely middle-ground moral worldview, positing that everyone's on the same morally dubious level no matter how good-natured or evil their actions are.
* He pretends to be a pleasant, if a bit distant, guy with amnesia, then it’s revealed that he’s the Mastermind

* He gets in through an unguarded air shaft at the top, because nobody would think of building a rope bridge or go in
* HBO will unscramble (or partially unscramble) themselves for a weekend, allowing people who don't pay their cable or satellite companies extra for those channels to view the content, the idea being that they'll want to add those networks to their channel lineup and pay the extra fees to do so.
* Green Lantern: Power Rings can be used to shield entire planets, or combined to create even larger shields. The planet Oa is protected by such a forcefield, as is the living planet Mogo.
* Half-Life 1) intervened, killing the soldiers but not being able to stop Gordon from dropping in the compactor. However, the mission was cut from the final release.
* Green between this story and its sequel, she and Dragon Lord Torch repeat the feat.
* Godzilla (1998) was never a Godzilla fan, and didn't expend much energy to make his version faithful to the Toho original.
* go for a joy ride. They are stopped by a cop who is investigating the robbery of Chadway's Five & Dime earlier that evening. Alonzo denies any involvement but shoots the cop out of the blue with a gun that he found under the seat. A car chase ensues and it becomes clear that Alonzo is not in control of his behavior. It turns out that the four teenagers were trapped inside the car the entire time and none of what they experienced was real. The car was possessed by the spirit of Taylor, who killed the cop in 1957 and was confessing to his crime from beyond the grave.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002): Adam reminds himself that he has to learn diplomacy etiquette because one wrong use of a spoon or fork during dinner with ruler of other country can cause a war.
* Hero Stole My Bike: During an action-packed scene, a hero steals a scooter/bike/tricycle from a child.
* He clings to husband Aaron after Aaron tells Robert that he would like to try to forgive Robert for sleeping with Rebecca while he was in prison.
* Happy Heroes: A short montage in Season 8 episode 3 shows Huo Haha going through as many transformations as possible to see if any will benefit in Big M.'s scheme to find one of the elemental wands. One of the forms Huo takes is a baby who cries so much that it floods the room, with Big M. and Little M. in the deluge.
* Grimm's Fairy Tale Classics: The witch in "Rapunzel" she pushes the prince out of the tower with her magic, unlike in the original stories where he jumped out or fell off on his own.
* Have I Got News for You the host mentions that since the show is on video you can fast forward through the boring bits. He goes on to explain the next game the panel will be playing and the film is sped up and his voice is made to sound like he is on helium and is unintelligible. He makes several odd hand gestures and eventually produces a fire extinguisher before the show returns to normal speed.
* Heroes of Might and Magic becomes this after Erathia drops out. The remaining anti-Kreegan forces are well aware that the 'Devils' are a severe threat to the world (even if they aren't aware of the full scope of the threat), and finishing the war to the bitter end is really the only long-term option, while the Kreegans built the titular Armageddon's Blade to burn the world. Even before Erathia dropped out, the problems the nobles had with a campaign of extermination wasn't the extermination, but rather the cost in troops and gold.
* Golgo 13 Golgo takes out, and any member whose loyalty to their boss extends to trying to take out Golgo is universally depicted as an idiot.
* Her gushing waterworks when he bid her adieu were much ado about nothing.
* Happens again in "Inspiration Manifestation", though this time due to Rarity not designing a cart for a puppeteer properly and getting chastised for it. Spike finds her in the dress shop suffering
* Grif's incompetent infiltration of the Blues and Reds' lair was actually a diversion for Locus
* Heavy Metal. Outwardly he looks to be the typical Ace, with the heroic clothes, the swagger, the lantern jaw, etc., but we soon discover he's really a despicable character despite his outward charms.

* Harry and the Shipgirls. After they confirmed that she wasn't in there, she emerged from a potted plant instead and lampshaded the subversion.
* Goo Goo Dolls says they were going to do this anyway, because they were tired of being labeled as ripoffs of The Replacements.
* Green Lantern foe Baron Tyrano is a brilliant-minded multi-millionaire. However, due to an ailing condition, he is restricted to wearing an iron lung. He became an enemy of the Green Lantern as he desired to transfer his mind into the hero's body.
* Godzilla vs. Evangelion: The Real 4-D and surprised NERV in the process (with them originally thinking Godzilla is an Angel).
* He's also making a short appearance in the upcoming remake of Plan Nine From Outer Space.
* have to forgive me!" He briefly takes her back after some hesitation due to her violating his trust once, but they end up breaking up permanently, probably in part because she never did anything to make him believe she was sincere.
* Happy Heroes episode 5, Careful S. and Kalo encounter a villain who introduces himself by saying he'll never say he's the Rock Warrior sent by the Dark Lord. Later in the same episode, he tells them that he'll never say where he's running away to... but points out where he'll run off to anyway.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, but we never find out what happened to the orphanage or the other kids…
* Harry had to keep changing jobs because of his status as the Boy-Who-Lived.
* glitch, as well as legitimate customization in the game itself, the chance of this happening isn't as small as one would think.
* Havana Widows: Two burlesque dancers go to Havana with the express intent of finding a rich sucker to lure into a breach-of-promise case.
* Gradius, so that you can fly through his body and take down his organs one by one with your heavily armed spaceship.
* Here is a random conversation bit taken from an ERCS Guard in a bug-ridden research lab. His laugh sound as though he's on the verge of failing a SAN check:
* Guilty Gear, vampires observe humans from the shadows, aliens appear in the woods, and ghosts and witches are common sights. Magic also coexists with ki or chakra, although they are entirely different and separate from each other.
* Hellsing Ultimate has once instance of this: in the third episode when Seras is escorting the Japanese tourists, the tourists have been redubbed in Japanese, and are apparently saying very rude things about the English staff working on the episode.
* Grand Finale in his hair. After he ultimately gets his powers back, it's gone.
* He also resizes the door every now and then. And sometimes he doesn't bother punching the door — just walking through it as if it weren't there. He once rips open a cell door just with a belly push.
* Harry Houdini's stage act, but eventually led to his appendix bursting and his death. Though it's a bit more complicated: Houdini was already in the early stages of appendicitis when he took the blow. He simply chalked the pain in his abdomen up to getting punched (without having adequate time to prepare for the blow) and didn't seek medical attention until it was too late.
* Hand waved. Most of the time, magic works like this. But once, Willow said something about rearranging elemental forces. Making a fire caused a rainstorm. Having said that, the jury is still out on whether said rainstorm was Willow goofing up, or Dracula.
* Good Morning, Vietnam, questions the war, fraternizes (unwittingly) with the Viet Cong, and shows a gross disrespect for his superiors. (And also is an Airman First Class when the real Cronauer was an Air Force Staff Sergeant.) The real Cronauer said that just about everything the fictional one did would have gotten him court-martialed in a heartbeat.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) depicts Mothra as resembling a wasp crossed with a mantis, with wings reminiscent of a Monarch Butterfly and white fur like her original moth inspiration. She also seems to have a serrated bird-like beak that opens vertically (as opposed to horizontally like the old Toho version) and digitigrade, avian-looking hind legs.

* Helba, the Monarch of Thieves, alternates sex with each incarnation. When Sam approaches her to steal his belt back from the museum of the gods, she initially refuses, stating that she doesn't perform thefts when female.
* Heel–Face Turn in the show, Trixie now wanders Equestria having adventures and helping others, occasionally meeting and teaming up with the Mane Six.
* Good Night simple plan of getting Brody through to the Iranian boarder through Iraq. Instead they had problems with their drone, their planned route was cut off, nosey Iraqi cops show up at an inopportune moment, a land mine blows up the truck carrying Brody and cripples one of Brody's escorts, and then there is a shoot out with Iraqi soldiers. Their was nothing "simple" about it.
* Gravity, after making it back to the ISS, Ryan Stone shucks off her spacesuit and floats in a fetal position as she recovers from the stress of her situation and almost suffocating.
* Hatoful Boyfriend, and they become a pair of spies fighting an "endless battle for justice behind the frail curtain of society".
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983): Skeletor was always trying to take over Greyskull, and with that, the universe.
* he wore No. 13 his entire career — his number was retired by the Dolphins after his career was over.
* Graduation for Everyone: The whole cast of a show graduate school whether they were a good student or not.
* Grand Piano Keys: There's no plot or even characters. The only point of the game is to hit the piano keys.
* Higgs's kneecap, made more impressive by his doing this after following up through the Castle after having been stabbed in the chest.
* Hilariously, in "The French Mistake" Sam and Dean are transported into
* Hanaukyō Maid Team episode 7. Taro, Ryuuka and Ikyo Suzuki form a chain of people after they fall over the edge of a cliff while exploring an underground dungeon below the mansion.
* Heart In Hand after cameras catch another man leaving his hotel room, he manages to still keep it a secret that the other man was Darryl until Darryl decides to publicly come out too.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law in an episode where Harvey wishes he had some way to just fly away while standing in a prison yard... while fluttering his wings.
* He does it again at the climax of the battle with Perfect Cell, allowing Gohan to turn the tide in their
* He is also searching for his younger brother, who mysteriously vanished while investigating Ijincho's seedy underbelly.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters, Cornelia's initial reaction to finding out that Elyon is the lost Princess is to faint. After she recovers and it's confirmed that she heard right, she follows up with this trope.
* Hamlet where Bart (as Hamlet) tries to trick Moe (as Claudius) into confessing that he poisoned the King (Homer) by having Krusty reenact by moment of the King's death.
* Grrl Power: The grandmother of Tony and Olivia uses a tape recorder to turn her family life into a sitcom.
* having been in a coma for a few weeks). Hakoda spoils the ruse when he mentions getting orders from a commander currently on leave.
* Górsky & Butch parody. (Unfortunately, the button was in the middle of a bomb that Gorsky was trying to disarm.)
* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla II's name was left as "Radon" (his Japanese name) for the English version.
* Grant Morrison run ends with all the new members added during the run written out of the team, leaving the core seven back in place. Then a distress call comes in about a supervillain threat, and the League heads off to deal with him.
* he couldn't have a tavern there) where he and the old regulars hang out until Moe comes to his senses. They even went as far as taking part on regular hunting trips as all hunting lodges are required by law.

* hates Endeavor the most having dedicated his supervillain career to spiting his father and is even willing to cause the deaths of his other relatives to do so.
* GURPS. Enough that the fourth edition had you deciding whether you wanted an Earthlike planet to start with and then designing the physical characteristics with that in mind. The main alternatives being gas giant, rocky moon/asteroid, ice moon, or toxic terrestrial.
* Gretel and Hansel from a book of spells from the stickman's kitchen, and (3) carrying a screaming mandrake after watering it near the bridge. Doing so will cause the heads to cover their eyes, mouth and ears, opening their compartments and allowing Gretel to take the pieces.
* Gord The Rogue tie-in), Gord pees himself during a beginning of the book encounter with a street gang. After leveling up big time, Gord heads back to that neighborhood at the end of the book specifically to make the gang leader both piss and crap his pants.
* Hamish and Andy that was an obvious deletion), all the “Coming Up”/“Next Episode” breaks were deleted (causing abrupt fade-in and outs), and many segment introductions were (poorly) shortened.
* Gory Discretion Shot: During particularly gory scenes, the violence happens off-screen.
* Heroic BSoD, since he was never able to make friends due to his focus on studying and working on school morals.
* Goblins to the point of worshiping the Dungeon Master, consciously leveling up, and, in particular, being able to see numerals representing negative hit points hovering over unconscious or wounded characters.
* Henry became a thorn in Rev. Wilbert awdry’s side due to his similarities to Gordon and the illustrators doing a poor job differentiating his build after he was painted blue at the end of the first book.
* Happy Days, Richie does this about a love interest who is nicknamed "Miss Trout".
* Gypsy are intentionally written to be cloying, cliche-ridden and insipid, to show that while Mama Rose might be persistent and determined to succeed (through her daughters), she clearly lacks talent. It also underscores how hopeless her attempts are to force her daughters to succeed in a dying art form.
* Halo trilogy, a distant prequel that takes place during the time of the Forerunners.
* Goliad is even worse than Lemongrab. She isn't even a day old before she decides that she wants to be
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Voldemort did his little forbidden ritual in a graveyard. You know, the usual "bone of father, flesh of servant, blood of enemy" rebirth routine.
* Heroes thought his way through some nasty situations. He's also dyslexic, hence Book Dumb through no fault of his own.
* Hero Factory in the same way its predecessor did. Bionicle itself has this in the form of thousands of adult fans of LEGO.
* Groo the Wanderer fights with two katanas, one in each hand. A "swords origin story" in the Epic run established that his skill in combat is due to them. The first time he uses them, he is stunned by how well they work.
* Hershe Las Palmas hates being called "Carjack" Malone in the sequel,
* High Astromancer Solarian has what is probably the other most well-known example in her * high-level wizards in the Mages Guild are aware of his status. Instead of owing money, he trades favors to the Mages Guild in exchange for them concealing his secret. Eventually, the Player Character is let in on the secret by Hassildor himself.
* High Fidelity This sequence was done for the movie as well; it didn't make the theatrical version, but is in the deleted scenes on the home releases.
* GURPS has the Mundane advantage, which at its highest level will enforce dull normality around its owner by turning werewolves and aliens into guys in rubber masks and magic into cheap fireworks.

* Here is a video of Krieg's quotes. It's basically twenty-seven minutes of complete nonsense, meat, and blood, interspersed with rare moments of sanity from his inner voice and a few incoherent screams and insane laughter.
* Heroes of the Storm of every Blizzard franchise, players can usually narrow every teaser down to a few options on the first hint, and figure out who it is exactly long before the reveal.
* Greek Mythology, the food of the gods grows on Mt. Olympus and grants their immortality.
* gone missing or been murdered. The title is shared with a larger movement bringing attention to cases of that nature.
* Grease Monkey: A character that works with machines and usually gets filthy doing so.
* Goosebumps story, "Attack Of The Mutant", the titular supervillain has breached his way into the real world and targets his biggest fan, a regular 12 year old kid. The "heroes" are shown to be cowardly and powerless, while the Mutant's shapeshifting gives him the edge in getting him closer to his young victim. The book overall shows how terrifying it would really be to meet your favorite comic characters.
* Grisaia Series, and mostly takes the form of some (not so) well-intended teasing.
* Goof Troop), rides the horse to a come-from-behind victory and ends up sending Pete to jail.
* Goblin Slayer we are introduced to a young priestess who wants to become an adventurer, so she joins a group of other beginners, consisting of a cocky warrior guy, a very nice fighter girl, and a snarky wizard girl. Then they all decide to enter into a cave to slay goblins. Despite giving them good character designs, different personalities, and in the manga, backstories, they are sadly slaughtered one after the other; the wizard girl is stabbed with a poison dagger by the goblins and the warrior guy is overrun and eaten alive. The fighter girl is able to buy the priestess enough time to escape, until she is overpowered by a larger goblin, and sadly gang-raped. When it looks like the priestess is about to suffer the same fate, she is rescued by the true main character of the show, who then proceeds to kill all the goblins in the cave single-handedly. So despite all the potential these characters could have had, they were killed to start off the story and set the tone.
* Godannar anime-tropes, it comes as no great surprise that Dannar and Okusaer can perform their minute-long combination into Godannar, literally while the enemies are in mid-jump.
* Godzilla vs. the Sea Monster while trying to sneak into the villains' base. Played more intelligently than most examples by the strategy of bringing along a bird to release if anyone gets suspicious.
* Godzilla (2014) to the units he joins along the way to saving his family.
* Grey DeLisle. For the former, Grey voiced her in season 1 while Wendi voiced her in season 2. For the latter, it's switched, with Wendi voicing her in seasons 2-3 and Grey in season 4.
* Harry Potter, and again, nearly twelve years prior concerning Harry and Voldemort.
* he is promoted to the Management position alongside Olive. He is a charismatic leader, slipping into mastermind at times.
* Hey Arnold!: One episode has Suzie Kokoshka finally throw her husband Oskar out of the apartment. Arnold, and the rest of the boarders attempt to try to get Oskar and Suzie back together by setting up a candlelit dinner on the roof of the boardinghouse.
* God of War doesn't make this list simply because it just flat-out wasn't needed.
* Hanako's health is indicated by a percentage number in the inventory screen. 100% means full health.
* Hellsing when he saved her and is still her loyal bodyguard after she grew up.
* Harry Truman and other matters—was extremely unpopular going into the 1952 election cycle, and bowed out of the '52 race for the Democratic presidential nomination in favor of Illinois Governor Adlai E. Stevenson, rendering the whole matter moot.

* Harry Potter where, at the Quidditch World Cup, Ron spots a wizard picking his nose with some Omnioculars...
* Hiei's speed is much more impressive when you consider him cutting the enemy's arm so quickly and RETURNING to where he was standing that the enemy does not even know he moved at all. Flash stepping to your enemy's back? Beginners. Flash stepping to hurt your enemy and then flash stepping back? Expert.
* Harry Enfield started one of his comedy routines as Stavros (a Greek kebab-shop owner) by telling the audience, "I just got back from a wedding," then ostentatiously putting a double-barreled twelve-bore back in its cupboard.
* He seemed to have gotten away from it for a little while. But then made up for it with four women in one episode.
* Grey An Alien Dream has the titular character traversing multiple dream worlds in the hopes of waking up.
* Golden Age pirates, most famously Blackbeard, would carry both a sword and multiple loaded pistols on their person. Blackbeard tended to carry as many as he could manage, even adding extra pockets to his clothes just to make room for more. This was in addition to the * Heroes of the Storm model of a rotating pool of free heroes that comprises a minority of those available. All draft modes (three of the game's six modes, not counting training) require the player to have access to 14 Heroes, with the free rotation capped out at 10. Before the introduction of bans, only 10 Heroes were required...but Heroes on free rotation didn't count unless the player owned them!
* He seems to favor variations of his name. So much so that the closest he has to an alias is 'Jacob Caine'.
* Hallmark announces their Christmas keepsake ornaments near the end of April, and places them on pre-order around this time as well. They become available at Hallmark stores in July.
* Hazbin Hotel afterwards seems to be more about him sleeping with someone of lower status rather than the infidelity itself.
* handsome. Which is why it drives him over the edge when his advances towards Kaname are vehemently rejected, because she yearns for Sosuke Sagara. Leonard's sister has a crush on Sosuke and is at odds with him. Sosuke keeps interfering with Leonard's plans. As the series progresses, Leonard becomes more crazy and unstable.
* Hero Corp, Vanur gives Burt a special tea to help him recover his power as Acid-Man (which has degenerated from squirting acid to squirting non-stinging shampoo). When out of tea, however, Vanur reveals that there were no "special ingredient" in it, it was just a matter of confidence.
* Harry Potter preferring to forget the terrors of knowing that the normal, safe, mundane world is a lie. Supernatural power have to hide and have successfully kept their existence secret, but they don't have to put much effort into it.
* Here is how men of different nationalities handle coming home from work and seeing their wives in bed with other men.
* Haruhi-chan. In one episode, Tsuruya claims that she once defeated a bear.
* Hawk Moth. Note that this does not apply to the Hawk Moth persona himself. He attempted it in his debut, trying to frame Ladybug and Cat Noir as the villains for failing to stop him, but Ladybug quickly shut him down by pointing out that he was the one actually doing the criminal deeds in the first place.
* Good Game an average review due to the reviewers claiming to have beaten the game in co-op on legendary in 4 1/2 hours.
* Gulliver's Travels describes the two moons of Mars as discovered by the Laputan astronomers. 150 years later, the two moons of Mars were actually discovered. (Contrary to some reports, their orbital period and diameter do not match what is described in the book.)
* He also does this during the "Goat Jihad and Rock and Roll" arc, engaging in banter with Revy and generally being ultra cool as the two of them blast up terrorists to lead the others out.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers at each other 90% of the time. That's pork and then some more.

* he's a simple, ordinary tailor. When asked why a tailor would be exiled from his homeworld, he shamefacedly admitted to tax evasion. Played humorously, as no one actually believes his story, but insists on it all the same.
* Harry is somehow pregnant with Draco's child despite never having sex, period.
* High Fidelity time, which now depicts Dick smacking Ian in the jaw with a telephone, all three assaulting him and kicking him on the ground, and finally Dick crushing him to death with a massive A/C unit. Finally, it cuts to Ian saying the line again in real life, to which Rob reacts by rather anti-climactically shrugging.
* Gotham City Garage's chief enforcer in this universe- executes James Gordon by snapping his neck.
* Harry Potter). Rowling has admitted that each of the three main characters are aspects of herself.
* Greeks gods were already planning for their own deaths at Ragnarok—they knew they couldn't avoid it.
* Health-consciousness entered the mainstream after being a popular niche pursuit during the 90s and 00s, with people under 40 mostly eschewing processed foods in favor of healthier eating habits. As a result, food companies and restaurant chains began touting healthier products and organic ingredients. Vegetarianism and veganism went mainstream, with restaurants offering more meatless options. Beverages saw the most radical changes as bottled water, tea, and milk alternatives (soy, almond, coconut, and rice milks) have given soda, coffee, and dairy a run for their money.
* Guy's Grocery Games ran two tributes to popular contestant and judge Carl Ruiz after his sudden death.
* Half-Life 2 acts as the voice and face of the alien Combine occupation, but it's not entirely clear if his support is out of self-serving misanthropy or actual misguided idealism. Regardless, he constantly tries to provide "rational" and "scientific" reasons for why aliens committing genocide and suppressing human reproduction is a good thing for our future.
* Happens again in season 2 when Major Stanislaus Valchek, in a bitter feud with Frank Sobotka over a stained glass window, wants an investigation opened into Sobotka's finances. He offers Ervin Burrell political influence from the council members in his district in exchange for a special unit devoted to investigating Sobotka. Rawls sends an investigative team from CID to Valchek, all "highly recommended" officers, who are, like the Barksdale detail from season 1, just dead-weight "humps" that other divisions wanted to get rid of. Witnessing the task force's lack of work ethic infuriates Valchek, who promptly blackmails Burrell into giving him a real police detail under Daniels' command (on Prez's recommendation and repaying a favor Valchek owed to Daniels from Season 1), threatening to complicate Burrell's effort to become Commissioner by exposing his premature closure of the Barksdale investigation.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire features this type of behavior from a Muggle as a side-effect of an unusually large amount of magical memory modification: when the main characters are checking out of a campground in August he waves them off with a "Merry Christmas."
* Goro, Shang Tsung, and Reptile were the subject of many, many rumors to make them playable in
* He's in a red and white checked gingham dress and army boots with a penguin puppet he calls Mr. Flibble.
* He once planned on getting White Mage drunk with "wine" purchased at
* Guest character John Bishop finds it ironic that fellow guest Frank Skinner's song "Three Lions" — about England's one World Cup victory over Germany — became a top 100 hit in Germany.
* Hilarious in Hindsight; Scully was portrayed as a health nut for seven seasons, very rarely indulging in junk food. She even went as far as stirring bee pollen into yogurt (even though Mulder tells her she's a scientist and should know better..) While pregnant in season eight, we see her ordering junk food—specifically pizza—which is mentioned later that same episode to have been a regular habit of hers.

* Godzilla (2014), the MUTO's are only mildly annoyed by even the heaviest ordnance the military can bring to bear. Godzilla, on the other hand, simply doesn't even notice when humans are attacking him.
* golems, and glowing eyes, people tend to be creeped out by them, and unprovoked attacks of humans on golems are not uncommon.
* Going Postal, but he seems to think people will, saying things like "I've heard all the jokes" and "Please don't laugh."
* God is Dead deities) and hold a conference where they agree to not fight and allow each other to take control of their traditional territories.
* has the last word on his being condemned as a heretic by the Church.
* GURPS, With Just The Witches and the Fighting". The entire script is one page long.
* High School Musical become acquainted by singing karaoke in front of a crowd of people. Later, they bond some more when they practice to become the leads in the school play.
* Gummi Bears, Toady suggests to Duke Igthorn that they build another catapult to attack Castle Dunwin (as they did in the first story). Igthorn scornfully remarks that they tried that idea already.
* Happens to Lincoln again in "Funny Business" where he starts to take over Luan's clowning business after becoming popular with his pratfall routine. But when his comedy falls flat with a group of emo tweens, he apologizes to Luan and she helps him out. Luan later admits that she was
* go free if they win a rigged contest, even though my advisors assure me it is impossible for them to win.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire wouldn't be able to tell that he was a wizard, especially compared to other wizards at the event like Ludo Bagman (who wears his old Quidditch outfit) or Archie (the wizard who wears a woman's nightgown and is going commando).
* Hank Williams III has a song called "I Don't Know", which can be confusing when you're listening to the song at a friend's house.
* Gotham, in which young Oswald Cobblepot, a.k.a. The Penguin, is arguably the most complex, ingenious and enjoyable character (played to pivotal heights by break-out star Robin Lord Taylor).
* Hand Wave the "elaborate costume" trick by saying it's also part evolution; the dinosaurs (which, undisguised, are quite dinosaur-shaped, if human-sized) have developed soft, rubbery skeletons so that they can fit into the costumes without, for example, having an elongated velociraptor snout poking out of a human face. It works if you're willing to ignore the fact that this pretty much defeats the purpose of having a skeleton to begin with.
* Harry is an [only child (not by choice of course as he was only fifteen months old when his parents died) and Newt has a brother named Theseus.
* He's unpleasantly surprised that he accepted a gladiatorial death match.
* Harriet's parents died in a car accident, but she blames herself for it since she
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, albeit still a lateral move in terms of realism: killing a driver will cause the car to immediately brake to a screechy stop before ejecting the corpse.
* Harmodius is both one of the most powerful and one of the most skilled sorcerers of his era, and he's acutely aware of both of those facts. As a result, while a great help to the heroes, he has the mentality of "of course I'm right" and "if I can't see a solution, it doesn't exist", which infuriates other characters to no end.
* Gravitation chases Yuki constantly, despite being rejected, verbally abused, and often being called a little brat. They eventually end up together.
* Henry Stickmin Series, which has the characters speaking Japanese... very poorly. Actual Japanese speakers listening to that segment tend to burst into laughter and say they have no idea what the characters are even trying to say.
* "Hey There Delilah" by the Plain White T's - their usual style is much more upbeat and is more pop-punk oriented, but their acoustic ballad was what became a major hit. Their only other Top 40 hits in the United States, "1234" and "Rhythm of Love", were

* Gunsmith Cats manga, after Rally's first encounter with Bandit Bean, she decides to investigate him, including sneaking into his apartment to gather information. Not long afterwards, Bean enters the apartment and takes a shower. Rally hides in his closet, and when he enters his room completely naked, Rally gets a good look at his package with a big blush on her face.
* gnomes depictions of dwarves and dwarf-like fae from throughout Europe, such as Germany, Russia, Sweden and Scotland.
* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de possess family names are either of noble origins or from our world. On the other hand, the Oni don't appear to have last names either.
* go to the store for tampons and risk missing the trailer, the excuse being a game called "if your name is Butters you have to go."
* Green spectrum: Ion, the basking shark-looking entity feeding off/fueling the
* "Helgaween-A-Rooney" has the Helga drawing in the logo, with Beck and Hart presenting offerings of pizza and sandwiches while Helga is heard shouting "
* Grim Dawn be genuine zombies since genuine undead actually exist, but the undead you do find are either far too old to count as anything but skeletons, ghosts, or something far worse than just a zombie.
* Hajime no Ippo: The match of Takamura against Bryan Hawk for the world title. It takes place in a Japanese boxing hall, so basically the entire audience is rooting for Takamura. It helps that Bryan Hawk is blatantly racist against the "weak" Japanese.
* Gundanium, as liquid metal behaves very differently in microgravity.
* Harkovast, the Darsai perform a funeral rite of burying the dead, drinking beer and singing. The bodies of The Nameless (their enemies), they simply burn, since they do not view them as people. Chen-Chen, a Tsung-Dao, finds the concept of burying bodies in the holes in the ground very odd, as her people normally burn their dead.
* Herc and Carver have arrested Bodie for the first time, and they plan to play this totally straight with Herc playing the bad cop. So Carver goes in first and tries to bond with Bodie over their shared rough backgrounds. Bodie looks as though he's about to confess...and then tells Carver to do something unpleasant.
* Hellbound: Hellraiser II's Leviathan likes to shoot people with an agony beam.
* Global Frequency pilot episode was leaked online after the series was shelved, where it garnered widespread rave reviews. Unfortunately, the leaking pissed off the executives so much that any chance of greenlighting the series, or releasing the pilot properly, went up in smoke. You'd think that, the illegality of the leaking aside, the fact the show had such good and widespread word-of-mouth would give it a better chance of success as a series than most other untested pilots, but given the execs' response to the leaking it seems they never wanted to make the series in the first place.
* Happens again in the sixth season, where Ilana, in the middle of a rant, roughly drops a bag of said dynamite
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets claims the real guy is too self-deluded for the connection to ever occur to him, saying, "He's probably out there now telling everybody that he inspired the character of Albus Dumbledore. Or that he wrote the books and lets me take the credit out of kindness." She has clarified that it's not her ex-husband.
* GURPS with Ten Hut!, which covers anything a soldier could conceivably do short of firing a gun.
* Half Baked, Scarface was caught in one of these...and tried to pass himself off as a mime. If it wasn't for the fact he was caught red handed, it might have worked. Scarface was wearing all black with a black stocking cap and white face makeup with black around his eye.
* Grim Tales 7: Color of Fright, a mannequin in a wedding dress (with a sign with Louisa's name hanging from it) and a painting with "I am Thomas Gray...I am Thomas..." repeated over and over in blood-red lettering.

* He eventually uses up his "Christmas Wish" to remove the Snitch from the game. The idea gains traction towards the end of the story when both teams in a game realize they can only win the cup if they let the total score get into the hundreds, leading to both Seekers intentionally sucking at their role and ruining the game for the spectators as it stretches out for hours with nothing actually happening.
* Harry becomes friends with his godfather Sirius Black after discovering their relationship at age 13. It's complicated by the fact that Harry is eager for a family connection and an adult confidant, while Sirius has a tendency to project his relationship with Harry's father
* Happens to Android 16 (who, unlike other "androids", is 100% mechanical) after he gets blown to bits in the Cell arc.
* Heel–Face Turn and was adopted by a clan of demon hunters who themselves have demon blood.
* Gravity Falls episode "Weirdmageddon Part 1", this isn't shown onscreen, but a news report mentions blood rain. The river is red, so it's likely that it turned to blood as well.
* Gory Deadly Overkill Title of Fatal Death: Many of the early splatter horror titles were gratuitously over-the-top, offering would-be viewers a good idea of what they were in for.
* Half-Life 2: Episode One practically confirms City 17 as Riga, Latvia. There is a map showing City 17 with a river called the Daugava flowing through it. This is the name of a real river that flows through... you guessed it, Riga. There are also other bits of evidence. The skyline of Riga resembles City 17's, City 17 is coastal and borders a sea (Riga is the only coastal city that the Daugava flows through), the lettering on most signs is Russian suggesting an ex-Soviet country, and there's also occasionally Swedish lettering, suggesting that City 17 is not too far away from Sweden (Latvia is a stone's throw away from Sweden, and hosts many Swedish businesses). Finally, there's numerous restaurants with signs that translate to "Café Baltic", which would match Riga's location in one of the Baltic States.
* Hawkeye, she and Hawkeye don't have an onscreen conversation with each other.
* Hercules: The Animated Series, use screams for comedic purposes quite often. Usually with Hercules who will typically scream as he falls or is sent flying in the air.
* Hayden Panettiere - she told Mr. Philbin and Miss Ripa that when they met, their initial conversation went like this:
* GURPS also mentions the example of being held down and suffocated—you're dead, regardless of hit points. But you have to be rendered helpless first.
* High School D×D" that is designed and intended to cause this effect.
* Harry Hill in which the presenters were mucking around in a green, swampy water that looked very much like pea soup:
* "Happy are we in our loving frivolity" was the original opening to Act II of
* Grojband appears to be friendly to all animals, even feral flame rats and bees.
* Gordon's "Oh, the indignaty!" is said by Sir Topham Hatt in "Buckled Tracks and Bumpy Cars". Again, Gordon lampshades it.
* Half-Life, words pronounced too quickly or slowly, no pausing between sentences, etc. — is quite uncanny, to say the least.
* Hidden Mickeys aren't just limited to the parks; they appear throughout the movies as well (such as the one located in the middle of Princess Mia's tiara on a movie poster of
* Highlander by having a crappy cover of their famous "Princes of the Universe".
* Government Conspiracy had previously falsified evidence that she'd ran away from home, but the characters have only now been able to prove she's dead (if not the specific way she died) and achieve some closure for her.
* Goku had a lot of friends die throughout the series, but it was Frieza's cold-blooded murder of his best friend Krillin that triggers his ascension to
* High Court Enforcement Officers and they have certain rights, including entering commercial properties by force and once entering a listed property in a writ, cannot be legally kicked out.

* He gets shot for it and as he bleeds out, he once again begs for Needlenose to stop. Needlenose simply kicks him and continues the attack
* Hell & Heaven. GGG summons a magnetic storm to lock his enemy in place when he performs the move.
* Guardians of the Galaxy adopts this previously-flippant name by the end of the film.
* gymnastic flips and dance-like movements. However, unlike most Ladies of War, she displays a fun-loving attitude outside of missions.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers anime, there are several of these shown from different angles. The story was not continued until several episodes later.
* Harry is terrified of the same thing happening to Ron and Hermione.
* Grandparental Substitute to Mary Rose, especially because she was too young to realize that he is not actually her grandfather.
* Harry gets some help charming a life-size mannequin so it can take his place in History of Magic classes. Dubbed "Larry" by Luna, it gives everyone but the two of them an inexplicably creepy feeling.
* Hell Let Loose has the Omaha and Utah Beach maps, where the Americans spawn from landing craft and must fight their way onto shore, while the Germans defend from various inland fortifications such as bunkers, trenches, and gun emplacements. Unlike most cases where the level simply ends with the breaching of the German defenses, the offensive continues further inland, with the Americans tasked with clearing towns, artillery batteries, and other strongholds in the process, with the Germans holding these remaining objectives.
* Half-Life 2 has two fauna-based variations: the Antlions and the Leeches have overtaken most of Earth's landmasses and oceans, respectively. Barnacles are even more fitting example, as they seem to grow in every place with a ceiling and enough moisture.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, when Harvey meets with Apache Chief, Chief moves to shake Harvey's hand... which Harvey turns into an overly elaborate awkward... thing... in an attempt to seem spiritual to Chief.
* Halo 2: The sky of the gas giant Threshold is filled with angry swirling clouds.
* Guy marrying a Video Game girl. And you thought you'd seen everything.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows so that he could tell her that he loves her, but whether he actually did or not is left vague. Their final scene together is the pair sitting together in the aftermath of the battle.
* Hide Your Children: Oftentimes children are protected and sheltered during times of apocalyptic crises.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Greece references this a lot to Japan, and one can assume he has done it.
* Gumball being called up by Ms. Simian to answer a science question.
* Gordian Knot bassist Sean Malone, whose music mixed elements of jazz, prog, and metal. Malone's tragic death in 2020 resulted in its breakup.
* he was the owner, and pretends not to follow the idea until Rodders explains it to him.
* Halo games, various armored military vehicles will spectacularly explode when they suffer sufficient damage from enemy fire:
* Halo 2 and explode, no matter what cosmetic shape it's currently is in.
* Goblet of Fire, Barty Crouch, Jr. escaped Azkaban by swapping identities with his mother via Polyjuice Potion.
* Happy Sugar Life. Satou finds Shio outside in the rain one day and becomes convinced that she was in love with the young girl. While later chapters explain that Satou technically didn't kidnap Shio in the fashion one might expect, she still keeps her locked away in her apartment room, claiming that the world outside was dangerous. She is fully aware that others are searching for her, but she doesn't care.
* He later becomes emperor of what is presumably a less asshatty Centauri Republic.
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret's concert, some music is played to get Yuuto to stop Haruka from being misled into a life she doesn't want. So he runs to another building where her audition is being held and then completes the trope from there.

* Hannibal from the book/film version of the character), plus zero remorse for any harm she does.
* Gravity Falls episode "The Legend of the Gobblewonker", Stan attempts to make friends with a young boy during his fishing trip, but both the kid and his parents find it creepy and threaten to call the police, presumably for this reason. Later on, Stan is seen with an ankle bracelet.
* Glee started doing this around the fourth season - lampshades were present before, but never to such a degree. It's since increased to the point that most jokes are lampshades on the show's own inconsistent logic.
* he sent Othar back and was much closer to the problem (while Othar metaphorically "slept through it").
* Has an early parody of the trope, in which Homer watches a typical stand-up special featuring a Black comic in front of a brick wall delivering trite impressions of how Black and white people drive. Homer bursts into hearty laughter, shouting, "It's true! We're so lame!"
* Gordon himself gets electrocuted when he is linked up to one of Colin's contraptions in "Playing with Fire", but aside from a couple of twitches and slight burns, he's okay.
* god awful father and a drunk. Cersei isn't as clever as she thinks she is, a fact she keeps proving time and time again. Tyrion spends most of his time drinking and seeing whores, though part of why he does that is due to Tywin's abuse.
* Guild Wars involves burning webs (and egg sacs) in order to draw out the titular boss monster.
* he betrays Lordaeron, dons an evil looking armor, and murders his own father it touched.
* he's used to thinking of himself as a coward without breaking a sweat.
* Griefer paradise. After all, who can resist the urge to blow up someone else's expensive personalized car they spent 30 minutes customizing to their tastes while riding in a chopper or tank equipped with long range explosives and lock on targeting?
* great void", is a force representing chaos, change, and limitation. In some religious traditions, Sithis is related to or may even be what is left of Padomay. Sithis is associated with darkness and is described as a "great void", and those who worship him are almost universally seen as evil or at the very least extremely amoral.
* Harry Potter for Seekers is an entire website devoted to the alchemical and spiritual symbolism in Harry Potter, as if it's a genuine discipline of mysticism. One page evaluates the symbolism of the characters. Take the lead protagonist, for example:
* Hilarious Outtakes with two takes of Hugh Jackman lampshading it: first, he whispers for an offscreen person to get him a cigarette; second, with a gleeful giggle straight into the camera.
* He doesn't have a great track record with his adopted home of Britain, either, having had tense diplomatic relationships with many of its monarchs, most of them queens (and one of whom he married). In "
* Haruhi Suzumiya and once unconsciously tried to rewrite the universe.
* Harmony fondly remembers high school, and desperately wishes to be accepted by friends that way again. Unfortunately, Harmony self-sabotages every friendship she has due to being
* Harriet's hair and clothes are constantly a mess, which is partially because she's * Halo refers to these as "AM rated"). Even with 1000% health set in the gametype, a headshot is always lethal. While there is no locational damage to energy shields, any precision weapon capable of depleting shields in one shot will kill even a 100% shielded target with one headshot (unless they're using an overshield or playing a gametype where the "standard" shields are set to stronger than normal).
* Gundam 00 the entirety of the first season, with Virtue's transformation into Nadleeh (it only transforms twice in the entire first season, so it's fairly minor) and during the Moralia battle where Patrick's Enact from Episode 1 (thrusting its dagger at Exia) was re-painted as a black Hellion craft. The second season wasn't so lucky, as the 00 and 0-Raiser combining sequence gets used more than a couple of times.

* Grand Finale, the Order of the White Lotus storms Ba Sing Se with only about thirty men and liberates it from the occupying army.
* Hilarious in the SNES version, where a cutscene will play out where the winner deduces the killer and the killer gets taken away by the cops while cursing the winner. "Prof. Plum: The killer was Prof. Plum. [...] Curse you, Prof. Plum!". Also, that apparently still counts as a win.
* Hellhounds are evil creatures resembling flaming, skeletal, monstrous dogs, hail from
* God, the Devil and Bob Donna has gone to college (presumably not able to go while she was pregnant with the kids) and has some trouble picked a major because she's worried she won't get another shot at it. Bob reminds her she will always have another shot, she's earned it.
* Global Guardians: Sujatmi Sunowaparti is an Indonesian woman whose metagene was activated while she was working at a factory that became a battle site for two warring factions. She gained the ability to transform her body into water and control water in vast amounts.
* Hellsister Trilogy and Dev-Em's first kiss happened when Dev was about to undergo a potentially suicidal mission, shortly after their getting together.
* Gone with the Wind: Roguish, charming Rhett Butler is established as this — he's very fond of Scarlett's first two children and utterly devoted to the one he himself has with her.
* He is unable to start his car because the battery has died. When a little girl comes up to him, he rolls down both windows on the driver's side of the car. She asks him, "How many times has this happened to you?" He says "Happens to me every fucking day. Every day."
* Grand Theft Auto being the best...worst? example made in 2013 and still considered the biggest and best selling game ever made.
* Halo, humanity's empire expanded over the course of 500 years to include hundreds of planets and moons and tens of billions of people. It eventually became too big to manage from Earth itself, leading to interstellar conflict that, per the Carver Projections, would likely lead to billions of death and the human empire being disintegrated. There are numerous rebel groups fighting against the UNSC, some of which became powerful enough to seize control of whole planets and deploy space navies (albeit of deeply inferior quality to the UNSC's - a standard UNSC destroyer/frigate is considered a capital ship to most of the rebels, the bulk of their craft are small corvettes and missile boats). Some continued their struggle even during the Covenant invasion, but the fact that said invasion crashed headfirst into the Outer Colonies (where most of the Insurrectionist worlds were) pretty much killed the movement dead for a while. The Spartan program was originally implemented to help put down these Insurrectionists. Various literature indicates that at least a few of these planets were successful in retaining their long term independence (e.g. the unnamed planet Preston Cole likely settled on).
* Halo: Reach as the Elites deliver the death blow. Also occurs when Kat is killed with a headshot by the Elite Field Marshal.
* Harry, annoyed at Cedric's stalking attempt, storms off to the owlery.
* Halo: Glasslands, which notes that the Elites, despite having four mandibles instead of a lower jaw, can approximate some human languages by moving their lower mandibles together like a jaw. Humans have a similarly tough time pronouncing Sangheili languages properly, though at least one human is shown as somewhat capable in the language. Neither are without faults, however: Elites cannot (or at least have extreme difficulty) pronouncing anything involving their non-existent lips, and one fluent human is described as speaking like an "idiot child".
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure!, Kanae, Nanami and a random background student are the only ones with definite shapes, but the last two become formless by the next shot.
* Hellraiser, which summoned the Cenobites, sadomasochistic demons that took the summoner(s) back to hell and tortured them. The boxes are actually a more reliable way to summon the Cenobites, as they were commissioned in the 18th century by a bunch of devil-worshippers who had to go through a pretty elaborate ritual at first.

* Gothic Horror: Ironically had its heyday during the Enlightenment age (where like the Renaissance they associated Gothic with irrationality, backwardness and feudal past). The Romantics however revived Gothic with a more neutral and fantastic attitude.
* Gravity Falls, which contain information on such things as how to defeat gnomes among others.
* Herc's Adventures opens on a chess game between Zeus and Hades. The playable characters are the only pieces Zeus has left.
* Hijack, the primary antagonist of Chapter 5, is a spirit who specializes in possession. He spends much of the chapter in direct control of a normally-innocuous student named
* Herman's Head depicted the thought processes of the title character as arguments between four personified aspects of his personality living in a loft apartment.
* Heirverse Gin much prefers it when Aizen drops the facade mostly because it's so rare.
* Hilary Duff. Before her, Disney Channel stars didn't really do much outside of the show. After her, Disney practically required all of their actresses to sing regardless of talent.
* Heil Honey I'm Home!, after seeing the opening credits in the style of a 50's sitcom, he simply puts the NES gun to his head.
* Halloween Town with his stitched-together creation, along with many original monsters.
* Grand Chase, where Rin, a character that was created by Brazilian players through a forum suggestion, got sent to the developers and then gave the Brazilian server Rin first, while Korean got it some time afterward. Her second job arrived in Brazil three weeks before the Korean server got it. Normally the Korean server gets the latest updates, but this was the first time a new update was developed and released outside the Korean server first. Uno, the last character, would actually get a day zero release in Brazil, as Korea got it a day later.
* Half-Life 1 urgh-arrrgh". Couldn't have asked for a more punctual introduction for the assassin characters in the original game.
* Group Operations Control Rooms used as part of the air defense network in the Battle of Britain.
* Grey's Anatomy (leading to one of the most diverse casts on television), but that doesn't mean that they didn't have a general idea of who to cast. Miranda Bailey (nicknamed "The Nazi"!) was intended to be a blond, white woman until Chandra Wilson got a hold of the part.
* Green Lantern (1941), Alan and Doiby were once transported to Arthurian England. They were there long enough that Alan's ring ran out of power, leaving the two of them apparently stranded. Thankfully, Alan's lantern was centuries old, and existed in that time period, so he was able to charge his ring and return to his own time.
* Half-Life 2", which replaced the air with noxious gases breathable by the Combine, and which meant that all human characters in the game had to wear gas masks.
* Grace Under Pressure, was produced by Peter Collins and integrated synths into the band's sound much more successfully.
* Gwen Stacy isn't exactly thrilled when she thinks Spider-Man has killed her father. She doesn't end up killing him, but she does try to help a politician start a crusade against him.
* Gunnerkrigg Court once; in an earlyish storyline, Eglamore says he doesn't want to fight Jones, even just as a quick demonstration for some students. Antimony gives him a Look and asks if it's because Jones is A Woman. "No, because in an enclosed space like this, Jones would wipe the floor with me." Note the implication that he'd be totally down with it if they were outside.
* Granola Girl: She's free-spirited, an environmentalist, a bit of a hippie and a fan of all things natural.

* "Heart of Steel" features Bats fighting a computer (made by a well-meaning futurist) whose plot is to replace the entire species with
* Halloween", Buffy strikes up a conversation with Giles to distract him while Willow sneaks into his office and steals his Watcher diaries.
* have diverse skills and are, respectively, an archmage and a high priestess whose abilities outstrip pretty much everyone who isn't a faction leader. However, they come from a world with so little magic that the two have functionally no magical resistance at all, so a Curse of Agony that would be rather painful for anyone else is more excruciating than the Cruciatusu Curse to Harry. Furthermore, their artificial bodies were indestructible on Westeros but now are merely fairly durable, with Onyxia dealing significant damage to Luna's ribs and spine with a single blow.
* Henrietta seems to have quite a crush on her handler Jose. This is never really built on, but remains Henrietta's most notable character trait, and is contrasted with Elsa's
* Harry goes missing during a Death Eater attack and Dumbledore has Harry's secret twin sister pretend to be him. After a while, Ron falls in love with her.
* Goldust. He'd eventually recover from it but would remain with a speech impediment for the rest of his career.
* he's planning on killing them all anyway, and just needs to keep them docile until then.
* Hairdorables characters have brightly colored hair; the main character, Noah, has blue hair and blue eyes. Only about a third of them have semi-natural hair colors at all: Kat, Skylar, Bella, and Brit—and starting in Series Two Brit drops the semi-natural brown for fully pink.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Hungary gave all three one while squealing in joy.
* Haven, mysterious human-like beings from another dimension like Mara, William, and Agent Howard have not visibly aged in centuries. However, it is pointed out that they can be wounded and die.
* Gloryhammer from bending the Dark World's reality into a pretzel, he manages to provide the forces of Good with crucial assistance.
* Harry and Ron make some errors when they turn into Crabbe and Goyle in
* Heel–Face Turn. By the time new Expanded Universe material and the prequels came out, it was established that this technique was extremely difficult to perform and that Qui-Gon Jinn was the first to use it, and that Yoda and Obi-Wan learned it from him.
* Het Zonnetje in Huis, father Piet Bovenkerk and son Eric Bovenkerk are played by real-life father and son John Kraaykamp and John Kraaykamp Jr.
* Hannibal ends with both Will and Hannibal falling off of a ledge, presumably to their deaths.
* Goofy Feathered Dinosaur dinosaur with feathers, was found in 1996. This conclusively demonstrated that at least some dinosaurs had feathers, and forever changed the public's image of dinosaurs.
* Happens repeatedly to various characters, like Ash (pictured above).
* "He asked us, 'Be you angels?' and we said, 'Nay, we are but men! ROCK!'"
* Hawke's sister Bethany vocalizes her desire to be normal several times in party banter.
* Godus: The meteor power allows to you wipe out anything in a small area, creating a nice crater in the process.
* Harry Harrison is taken out, the aliens decide that maybe they don't feel like fighting any more.
* Has happened a few times since to Trump's cronies in the senate, i.e. Maxine Waters telling Ohio Senator Jim Jordan(R) to shut up when he tried to badger Dr. Fauci over Pandemic restrictions
* Go, Dog, Go! involving a poodle appearing in increasingly ridiculous hats and asking another dog, "Do you like my hat?"
* Glee when Mercedes stuffs tater tots up the exhaust pipe of Sue Sylvester's Le Car and does several thousand dollars' worth of damage.

* Goku, the one consistently heroic Saiyan, even though generally peaceful and even a protector, was
* he should have died instead of their mother, they end up forgiving him and Christianity is what he needs to get over his alcoholism.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality is probably the best example of a competence porn in fanfic form.
* Happens to Jiraya in one episode. At one point while praciticing how to use the Rasengan, Naruto has trouble focusing when his sensai's face keeps popping up in his head, causing Naruto burst out laugh. After sneezing, Jiraya believes it because a hot woman is thinking about him.
* Green Arrow and Black Canary are not so lucky...they are teleported out, leaving Canary's motorbike to get crushed.
* Hawk the Slayer, the elf archer encourages a slaver to cut his captives loose by shooting off his hat.
* Handling the Undead. After some debate, the authorities decide that the official term for these people should be "the Reliving". Not everyone obey this politically correct rule and many people keeps referring to the undead as Zombies.
* Grimm, a kidnapped girl drops pieces of a necklace for would-be rescuers to follow. Given the nature of the series, it should come as no surprise that the character in question is named Gretta.
* Harry Potter and the Alien Reality universe (deliberately sending him to a world without magic so he can't reverse the necessary ritual), the SGC soon establish that Harry's counterpart in this reality was killed along with his parents in a car crash with the 'local' Tom Riddle. However, it turns out that his parents were agents for MI6, and when the agency investigates the SGC's interest in the Potters, it leads to Harry being introduced to the local version of Sirius, who now goes by his codename 'Orion'. Despite his own godson having died as an infant, Orion and Harry soon become fond of each other, and the SGC's willingness to help Harry leads to the British Government volunteering to help provide the SGC with resources and financial support in the war against the Goa'uld.
* Going Berserk's character gets handcuffed to another guy who dies of a heart attack in his girlfriend's apartment. John manages to get them to a bar to wait for his friend to get over with a hacksaw to cut him loose - while he's waiting, a friend of the dead guy spots him propped up in a chair and starts in with a long one-sided conversation. He's still at it over the end credits.
* Heroic Sacrifice Cell, only for the villain to suddenly reveal himself to still be alive and murder Trunks.
* Gordon Korman includes a subversion in the form of the poem "The Olympian", in which Jeremy claims he's in training to become the greatest athlete of all time (though also admitting he stinks at every sport). The subversion comes in that while stating that he'll come in first in nearly everything, he freely admits that he'll gladly accept a bronze medal in boxing, having been knocked out by a three-year-old during practice.
* Great Teacher Onizuka His plan from the beginning was to dine and dash, which he does, still clutching the sushi boat, with his students running behind him, pursued by the chef.
* Hercules: The Animated Series", this is played straight when Herc realizes that said lie caused Icarus to put himself in danger. Subverted a minute later when he adds that it's also partly Cassandra's fault for urging him to do it.
* Gotham moment, since he essentially verbally assaults the poor, innocent lady just to make her son squirm, he does bring a lot of ugly but legit points about Oswald being a cold-blooded monster guilty of too many crimes even for a Gotham criminal. And then, after being pushed too far once again, he proceeds to prove him right by stabbing a delivery boy to death only to vent his pain and rage.
* Grimald is nominally assisting Queen Hildegarde of the Franks in every way possible and taking delicate diplomatic matters for her sake, but is actually just scheming to take the throne for himself.
* Heroes: In the episode "Five Years Gone", Hiro and Ando are shocked to find that Future Hiro has been labeled a terrorist by the government.

* Goober and the Ghost Chasers episode "Aloha Ghost". The beautiful, mysterious girl Michael Gray was trying to hit on turns out to be a ghost; the wife of King Manamoa Clue was seen when the whistle that is supposed to be painful for ghosts affected her as she quickly leaves with her hands over her ears. She shows her identity at the end of the episode.
* Gundam SEED that reminds him of Kira (and Strike particularly). After the end of the series, he chose to remove his scar, and marking the conflict between him and the Strike's pilot, Kira.
* Hägar the Horrible strip, Hamlet tells his friends who, like him, are all the children of Vikings, of his ambition to be a dentist when he grows up. They recoil with horror when he explains that a dentist "pulls people's teeth out."
* GoBots, but instead becoming something cool like a car, a dinosaur, a plane, or a tank, they became rocks! You could choose between granite, quartz or shale amongst others!
* Goblins. The Brassmoon arc took two years and eleven months to complete, not counting Fumbles' arrival. Made worse by the fact that, as always with Thunt, the battle scenes go into completely unnecessary detail on the same one-three-pages-per-nineish-days schedule that everything else does.
* Harry's 'reward' for stopping Voldemort the first time was to be locked in a small cupboard for
* High School Of The Dead: In the last stand at Saya's parents' home, Hirano comments that the situation is just like the battle of the Alamo. Komuro asks how that ended and all Hirano says is "I'd rather not say".
* Gravity Falls episode entitled "Fight Fighters," Robbie, after planning to start a fight after his shirt was splashed with a drink by Dipper, decides to not kill him when Dipper gives in, believing that he's not worth his time.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged vampire hunter. When Anderson flings one with a note attached above Seras's head, the poor girl goes catatonic and shaky, much to Alucard's annoyance.
* He seems to get over it by the time he helps with Blaine's proposal.
* Harry Bosch isn't in the employ of the LAPD, he usually has plenty of overtones of this.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. In Episodes 7 and 11 of the first series Taro doesn't know who she is, even though he met her in Episode 4.
* Highlander: Duncan beheads Kern using what the CCG calls a broad-bladed spear, using the weapon for sentimental reasons. It appears to have a heavier and longer blade than a normal spear, and he has to do a complicated wind-up and spinning swing to decapitate Kern with it.
* Harry Dresden is the man who investigates the weird in Chicago as part of his
* Granblue Fantasy: Lyria doesn't like it when women get too close to the protagonist for comfort, like, for example, Anthuria and her advances, or Dorothy when she feeds the protagonist.
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age). Going through the dungeon to shine light onto it weakens it until it eventually regenerates a much more reasonable 30 HP.
* Greater-Scope Villain. Only a few characters have learned about their existence, and it's treated as a big reveal to all of them, since the Others have not been seen for millennia.
* Hellsister Trilogy. The fact that Kara killed in self-defense after Satan Girl tried to kill her half dozen of times is lost on him.
* Grosse Pointe Blank has a rather touching subversion. Martin Blank has, throughout the film, been set up as a ruthless and highly efficient hitman. Towards the end of the film, when he realizes he has to go on the run and possibly abandon his career, he orders his assistant/secretary Marcella to cover their traces, and then tells her to look under her desk. She immediately freezes up, expecting this trope to be in force, and looks under the desk. There is a package duct taped there... but it turns out to be a huge bundle of cash.
* Great Teacher Onizuka wrecks the car and drives the car off a pier by accident.
* Gorgeous Garment Generation doesn't have things that make pretty clothes appear out of nowhere.

* Hellraiser - with fresh victims after he becomes undead, so he can use their blood to restore his body.
* Heck, Batman's been pulling this basically from the start of his comics career.
* Gnomes trust all animals except the house cat, which "is not a member of the natural animal world and is completely unreliable." Why this doesn't apply to other domestic animals, or to wild cats, is never explained.
* Heil Honey I'm Home! and Eve Braun as the main characters (seriously) used a similar set up in its opening episode. The person coming to dinner was Neville Chamberlain rather than a boss, but it's treated exactly the same way.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name, revealed a spoiler on the true nature of Ples Tibenoch to a select few fans, confident that they wouldn't go and spread it around the fandom. Three guesses what happened there.
* Harry O: Lt. Manny Quinlan, a former colleague from Harry's days on the force for the San Diego episodes, Lt. K.C. Trench for the Los Angeles episodes.
* Grand Finale and immediately realizes what Rippen is trying to do. He's instead moved to tears by the veiled admission of friendship and resolves to stay by the villain's side no matter what.
* Gordon Bok's "Tails and Trotters" focuses heavily on this. A mother tries to convince her son that his future has already been decided, he... does not take this well and flees to a nearby village. He pretends to be a rich and important person and is accepted into the upper crust of society. Eventually,
* Hard Candy. When the man holding the knife bursts into the bathroom and pulls back the shower curtain, he finds it empty. Then the girl runs in from behind and stunguns him into submission.
* Grimy Water 'floor' "will result in an unsatisfactory mark on your official testing record, followed by death."
* He went on to use Italy, Greece and Korea in later installments in the series, which was
* Hammerjack; both include virtually every trope associated with cyberpunk, but most notably the leather-clad "razor girls."
* Guild Wars 2 gameplay-wise, making any comparison between the two challenging.
* Gosh Dang It to Heck! is the same thing, only it focuses on toning down the word "bitch".
* He also deludes himself into thinking that, if he can only bury her
* Gottfredson's earlier "Monarch of Medioka" (1937) basically repeats the story of the Prisoner of Zenda with Mickey replacing "Prince Michael."
* Grave Peril. Virtually every character or event has come back at this point, and it seems likely the few things that haven't come back yet will show up again in the final few books.
* Hilariously parodied in the episode where Timmy sneaks into Cosmo and Wanda's home in the fish bowl. With each door switch Timmy, Cosmo, and Marianne (an escaped bad godchild) would change clothes. And that was the
* Gravedale High had a rather nerdy werewolf teen named Reggie Moonshroud.
* Gundam series tend to feature major wars, it's inevitable that massive battles will come up at some point.
* Hell Hath No Fury": The murder of a city councilman running for reelection ultimately traces back to his wife, who killed him when she discovered he was having an affair.
* has a harem of soulmates that is comprised of most of the main cast, most of whom are obsessed with gaining his affection. Who does Jaune fall for first? Nora Valkyrie, the one person who isn't his soulmate, and thus not really interested in him on a romantic level (yet).
* Godzilla vs. Biollante in which genetic engineering causes the birth of a giant Godzilla-Rose hybrid monster (Biollante) with a human female soul. On the other hand, the scientists creating the Anti-Nuclear Bacteria is an aversion since it actually is one of the few things that can stop Godzilla, despite the hero's fear that it will create another monster.
* Hawkwing's Journey, as a SkyClan apprentice who shows up one time and speaks one word.

* Goku is the Warrior. He openly enjoys a good fight and trains himself to be strongest fighter he can be. He has always seen fighting as a way of self-improvement, only wants to fight opponents at their full strength and even compliments opponents who help him push himself harder. He doesn't take a fight seriously unless his enemy can stand up to him or has done something to piss him off, like threatening his friends and family. Goku is a good person and a hero, but his passion for fighting can cloud his better judgment.
* Hetalia: The Beautiful World in the manga. France is also given platinum blond hair, as well as a very pale complexion, when his hair in the manga is a darker shade of blond. Belgium's hair also suddenly goes from being golden blonde to a mousy brown.
* gyroids is also a gyroid due to her hollow-eyed and -mouthed appearance, but officially she's a rabbit.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas is based on a pre-release version of the game, it lists the locations for all the adrenaline pickups although they do not feature in the final product. Additionally, the locations for some of the collectibles don't match up to its corresponding description or their markers on the map are off, and the names for some of the weapons on these maps are not consistent.
* Halo 3 terminals deconstruct aspects of this trope by noting that Forerunner rule made their client species far too weak and dependent on their masters, which left them easy prey for the Flood.
* GURPS has two brain-eating creatures: bookworms (aka cipherids or brain leeches) are worms that absorb memories from dead brains that they eat, and iphids (aka brainbugs) are insectoids that get smarter by consuming the brains of those of higher intelligence.
* Heroes, Peter is shown a future where a superpower-bestowing serum is readily available to the public.
* Helping Would Be Killstealing: Helping somebody would deprive them from a learning opportunity.
* Hero-Worshipper: The hero has a fan who can't stop showering them with praise.
* Graveyard School, enigmatic girl called Morton, who turns out to be a living mummy (she's a good character nonetheless).
* Harry and the Shipgirls, but the survivors of Hoppou's fleet were able to build their forces back up, and Hoppou survived and was adopted by Nagato of the Big Seven.
* God's Not Dead Josh gets reduced to just demanding "Why" over Radisson's refusal to believe in God.
* GURPS settings anyway. And until a portable version is invented, the timescanner machinery occupies an entire room.
* GURPS Kamsii, which houses its 61 million employees in arcologies so they don't disturb the carefully cultivated and sanitized "wilderness".
* Hayride: The killer murders one of the hayride volunteers with a neck snap.
* Godzilla: The Series, meeting (among others) a badass Mendel and a heavily militarized version of N.I.G.E.L.
* Ham-to-Ham Combat: Naturally, since hamminess is any wrestler's stock in trade.
* Goddess Creation System Wang Pu brothers, crown prince Jun'er is basically a nice guy and easily comes to recognize his feelings for Xiaxi, but part of her persona is behaving with near-complete indifference towards him and brushing aside all his attempts to tell her how he feels. She is, in fact, attempting to stall until he becomes king so she can complete her mission that much more quickly. At that point, she intends to "accept" his confession, collect her reward and then leave.
* Goldeneye Bond is equally personal about it, as seen in their final confrontation.
* he came back to his senses thanks to Ako/Blue Swallow, only to have a disgusted Maria * Greg Bear), and there's no danger at the moment in the book that the trailer portrays.
* Heroic Sacrifice gave the locals time to arm themselves and launch an attack, driving the James-Younger gang out of town and leaving two of their number dead in the street. This was the beginning of the end for the gang, with the Younger brothers nabbed in the ensuing manhunt. Jesse and Frank James escaped, but never returned to prominance again.

* Handwaved, anything impossible that a Digimon (or the Digital World) does is explained away by saying "they're just data".
* "Hello, Cruel World" (S7, Ep2), the Leviathans destroy Bobby's home.
* Heinlein's attached to dissolve the bodies of those caught in that tunnel's deathtraps.
* Harry Turtledove 20th century Earth that functions exactly like our own, except all the technology is magical.
* Highschool of the Dead that overan their school, along with the rest of the world.
* Guilty Gear's Venom is the only canonically gay character from the Guilty Gear series. However, it's fairly common for people to not even know he's homosexual until either playing through to the end of his story or taking a glance at his bio.
* Halo 4 soldier. It's only thanks to the Master Chief that he is stopped from doing that to all of humanity. The truth of the attack is completely covered up from almost all of humanity, but UNSC high command is rightfully spooked.
* Grimm", which requires even more effort than maintaining their human disguise. As one episode reveals, repeatedly going "full woge" can result in the Wesen being unable to maintain his or her human appearance for long.
* Hey Arnold! smartphones and Bob's unwillingness to get with the times have put him in financial dire straits.
* Highlander actually has an episode called "Glory Days", where Joe Dawson, who was the star quarterback of the high school football team, meets up with the head cheerleader he'd once dated. He gets depressed because he lost his legs in Vietnam, and doesn't think she'll like him, that he's 'damaged goods' (she was actually married anyway, but she does reassure him that he isn't damaged). Meanwhile, Mac is targeted by a former mobster immortal who's depressed and unhappy and wants Mac dead for instigating the 'death' that got him kicked out of the mob back in the 30s.
* Haibane Renmei is a tomboy who works in a clocktower and loves to work on machines.
* Half-Life 1: Xen, the final level, is a surreal alien landscape with floating, oddly-shaped landmasses and wonky physics that make it difficult to navigate.
* Grandfather Clause can be played straight in a work which was made when the trope was cool.
* Godzilla 2000: Subverted. In the climax of the movie, Orga attempts to swallow Godzilla whole. Godzilla uses his atomic breath on its insides and kills it.
* Heathers fandom. The phrase "How very" in particular has caught on as a way to say, "How incredible" or something of that nature.
* had to try and get the trial annulled with the intention of personally get Diabolik convicted and sentenced to life in jail, and the attempt, while failed, kept Diabolik away from the guillotine long enough for Eva to break him out.
* Good Is Old-Fashioned: When cynical characters hold the attitude that codes of honor are outdated.
* Harlan Ellison vignettes (one for every letter of the alphabet) written over the course of eight hours in the front window of a science fiction bookstore.
* Hellblazer ended up becoming Vertigo's flagship series and went on to hugely influence the urban fantasy genre as a whole.
* He also said he originally didn't want to, but thought it might make his story stand out more and be more "dramatic." He then decided that a good writer doesn't
* Hayate, Kasumi and Ayane of the Mugen Tenshin clan also practice a style of ninjutsu exclusive to their clan.
* God), but that's just cheating. Still, the threat alone is enough to cause a high angel like Zachariah to run for the hills.
* Halo 3: ODST's version of New Mombasa evokes this in the nighttime sections, though the city was brighter and more welcoming before the Covenant invaded.
* Haganai, Yozora tricks Maria into taking her clothes off and running naked around the school swimming pool.

* Heineken surprisingly, has a heart and decides to escort the gentlemen to the front row where they are personally served Heineken beer.
* Halo 3 warns a group of humans about this, which results in this little exchange:
* Hagane no Onna of teachers, handicapped children, and the children's guardians in the second episode of the live-action series. She asked for her name to be taken off the credits as a result.
* Hera, wife of the supreme Greek god Zeus, was the goddess of women and marriage. Being married to
* Green Hell. Its jungles are home to even worse things than the northern ones, including apes twice the size of elephants, enormous bloodsucking bats, what sound suspiciously like carnivorous dinosaurs, enormous snakes, and wyverns.
* Half Crown series involves a conference set in London in which Britain, Japan and Nazi Germany are negotiating spheres of influence, specifically the dividing up of the former Soviet Union and the potential divvying up of the US.
* Hellsing being made into vampires. Afterwards, they became obsessed with waging war for the sake of it.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers times. From clothes to books to Death Notes to flowers, the characters' backs can store them all.
* Harry Potter. In any case, there are loads of "The Potter Games" and "District 9¾" pages with an emblem of an owl carrying a broom inside the Mockingjay pin.
* He tended to be suspicious of Enlightenment and more Romanticist in taste. Which is interesting as Lewis had a personality closer to
* Hands Across the Table, Regi's broken up about Ted, and goes up to Allen's apartment and confesses that she fell in love like a sucker, and cries accordingly.
* Happens later with Donut and Grif. They are hiding behind the warthog as Tucker approaches in an out of control tank.
* Grimm Adalind is the most obvious example, as a former Hexenbeist (one of the most agressive of the Wesen).
* Goof Troop had a gang of counterfeiters mistake Goofy for a member of their gang who looked just like him and gave them an enormous amount of fake cash to launder. Since Goofy had no understanding of what was really going on and was starting up a paper-hanging business, he spent it all on wallpaper.
* Hamilton: "I'm burning the memories, I'm burning the letters that might have redeemed you."
* Godzilla (2014), Joe Brody has a room covered with newspaper clippings and other documents relating to his search for the truth behind the collapse of the Janjira plant that led to his wife's death. His son is understandably taken aback at all this; his father simply replies: "I don't get too many visitors".
* Harry Dresden, despite his continual disbelief at the concept, is a Wizard version of this. He isn't a firm believer in God, but holds to the "Tao of Peter Parker." He has great power and with it comes great responsibility. He will fight the monsters of the dark with all he has. While he will work with evil at times, he will never submit to it. He endures
* GWAR can be described as this, as the band is responsible for the creation of mankind, and thus, all humans are their children, and the band wants them all dead.
* Gorillaz. Turns out Russel had, in fact, been living in Ike Turner's basement.
* HERO system sourcebook, designed for super-strong characters, is essentially the ability to do this by smashing into the wall and crashing through. It's based on the tunnelling power intended to let you dig through soil at superspeed — except it only works on walls.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony, the protagonist meets a smoking, leather clad frenchman on the street who gives a speech that causes him to qualify as one of these. "I came to fuck and get high, what else is there? ... Family? I had a family once: meaningless. Honour!? Don't make me puke! No, the only thing that matters in this word is getting your rocks off... or getting so out of it that you don't even realise you aren't getting your rocks off."
* GURPS (1450 to 1730) starts to reverse in TL 7 (1940 to 1980) with the discovery of lightweight, bullet-resistant synthetics such as kevlar. In some TL 10+ (2075 and beyond) campaigns armor is vital, while in others weapons are so devastating that dodging or shooting first is far more important. For example, disintegrator technology makes armor irrelevant because they do enormous damage and bypass most armor completely while FTL laser technology makes it so that soldiers always need to be in armor because shots can hit with deadly accuracy from tremendous range.

* Harvest Moon, it is possible to woo and marry the Harvest Goddess herself, but it is very difficult and takes the longest to accomplish.
* Harvest Moon 64 will keep it from being destroyed by storms. This persists even after people posted video proof that it doesn't work.
* "Hey, Laser Lips! Your momma was a snowblower!" (makes a Bronx cheer sound)
* Hell Phone. His subsequent actions ultimately result in him dying and being damned to Hell himself. He is able to use the phone to give himself and his companions a chance to escape, but they have to run for the exit without looking back even once, despite overwhelming temptation to do so. He makes it, the others don't.
* Guldo from the Ginyu Force can freeze time itself, but only while holding his breath. Makes sense, since the oxygen is frozen and all.
* Groundhog Peggy Sue: A character is forced to live some past event over and over.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, the Spacemonauts travel to the Moon in one of these.
* Henshin Time, made in partnership with Takara Tomy (currently airs
* Goku demonstrates this trope in his second fight with Tenshinhan by stealing the latter's belt. Though shocked at Goku's new speed, Ten tries to reassert control over the match by bragging about his new technique, which will make speed useless. The humiliation kicks in when Goku points out, yeah, but he should probably pull his pants up, and gives back the belt. Ten embarrassingly does so as the audience snickers.
* Have I Got News for You had a joke featuring this, resulting in one of the panellists complaining about "razy lacism". The Dutch version, after an item about an escalator being stolen in China, had a pun featuring this. Sadly, it doesn't work in English.
* Godzilla: Planet Eater has King Ghidorah, Godzilla's famous arch-nemesis and the eponymous planet eater in the title. Ghidorah in this continuity is a massive, immortal, indestructable energy being from another dimension that uses gravitational powers to eat planets. Ghidorah devoured many planets over the expanse of time he's been around, and almost succeeds at eating Earth.
* Hidden Object Game features a colony of winged humans, who were given the power of flight by a brilliant inventor whom the player must rescue.
* he extends no such niceties to the mooks in their employ, dropping a half-dozen hired guards in a typical episode with seemingly little care whether they live or die from the grievous arrow wounds he inflicts. To hammer things home, it's established explicitly by Quinten Lance that "The Hood" and his vigilantism has put many people in the morgue, just in case there was any doubt about how he was operating.
* Heroes of Might and Magic, Hammers of Fate add-on, dwarves have heavily armored and very badass bear cavalry. Just like on the page picture.
* Heroes to the max. Telepathy happens to be his earliest discovered ability and the most prominently featured.
* Halo: Combat Evolved's Library. "But I Don't Want to Ride the Elevator!"
* Harry Potter Harry's account manager sent him a note which mentioned that Gringotts' nighttime customers tended to be of the more... disreputable sort and suggested that Harry "would not look out of place with a hooded black cloak."
* he's a writer. Writers tend to go through lots of drafts before finishing their stories, don't they? He's already killed the Winchesters many, many times over in various dramatic and contrived ways, then just moves on to the next world. Eventually he deems those alternate universes to be a distraction to his goal of herding Prime Sam and Dean, so he proceeds to obliterate them one by one
* Guild Wars Prophecies in order to gain control of Kryta and use them to prevent the Flameseeker Prophecies from coming to pass. Most Mantle honestly believed in the divinity of the Mursaat and that the associated nastiness was necessary.

* HERZ: Shinji and Asuka had a daughter called Akiko after the canon events. And in the last chapter they find out that Asuka got pregnant again. They call their second daughter Sakiko.
* Grand Theft Auto V. Franklin's phone, meanwhile, is based on Android phones (specifically the Samsung Galaxy), while Trevor's phone appears to be based on Windows Phones.
* Green Acres, a runaway kid ends up in the Douglas' farm. One of the several false names he makes up for himself is "Paul Frankcan": which he got from looking at a can of "Paul's Canned Franks" on the Douglas' cupboard.
* Hidden Talents, Lucky tells Cheater not to call people "wacko" and so Cheater gives him a list of other synonyms for "crazy".
* Goodnight Sweetheart had the main character walking down an old cobbled street that would take him - and only him - back in time, where he fell in love with a World War II barmaid and committed time-travelling bigamy. Turns out it was due to the "harmonics" of time, and other characters could time travel but none of the main characters.
* Hero: The Guardian Smurf into its series as its Christmas Episode, with Wonder Smurfette playing the Smurf of Christmas Past and Hero playing the Smurf of Christmas Future. A musical number is also included in which Smurfette sings to Grouchy about the joys of Christmas.
* Hazbin Hotel is utterly adorable for someone who is suppose to be the princess of Hell. She is constantly smiling and her goal is to redeem sinners so they don't have die to deal with the overpopulation problem.
* Green Lantern. Given the number of attempted invasions, supervillains and cosmic crises it incurs, this one planet in sector 2814 needs up to 4 dedicated lanterns.
* he stays with a friend in hostile lands when the guy was injured. Tony is moved and agrees to work with the crew. When they set him up and get him driving off with the merchandise and Sam is "captured" by a security guard, he turns the truck around to come back to rescue Sam because he is now fiercely loyal to Sam after hearing that story.
* Good Luck Charlie episode, "Charlie 4, Toby 1", where Amy just gives Toby an empty box for a toy train for his first birthday. While Toby is having a lot of fun playing with the empty box, P.J. asks Amy if she still has the toy train for him to play with.
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating: Nik, Ishu's sister, gets engaged to a British Indian man she meets while in London, without consulting her parents first. Their reaction is frosty, aided by the fact she leaves university too.
* , he believes in the power of redemption and second chances, and gradually becomes more and more involved in Bellwether's case, to the point where not only do they fall in love, but she is able to genuinely change for the better.
* Green Lantern rings are entrusted only to the most worthy beings, those who can overcome great fear. But once, in a desperate emergency when only one ring was left, Ganthet had no time to be picky — he had to give it to the first competent-looking bearer he could find. This was Kyle Rayner, and he had to start from zero like no Green Lantern had before. Retcons (an occupational hazard for Green Lanterns) would later make Kyle's origin less random, but at the time, writer Ron Marz was very consciously invoking this trope.
* Hamilton takes place in the late 1700s/early 1800s and some of the social trappings of the time couldn't be avoided. Slavery is still a thing, but most of the main characters are against it or indifferent at worst (even though this required a fair deal of artistic license; many of the characters in the play owned slaves in real life). Also, the play isn't shy about the limited opportunities for women, who couldn't vote ("It's 1800, ladies tell your husbands vote for Burr!") and had limited career options. The vivacious and opinionated Angelica Schuyler could have very well been an accomplished politician herself had she been born two centuries later, but during that time period, "[her] only job is to marry rich."
* Going to a restaurant and having the waiter or waitress say, "Have a nice meal," and you responding, "You too" or "Have a nice meal too" back to the waiter or waitress due to these being the normal things to say when greeted with a question.

* Han Solo is a laid back, no nonsense smuggler, who is very streetwise, and certainly knows how to navigate his way out of dubious situations (like with Greedo).
* having long changed sides amped up by Sozin's Comet, is able to breach the Outer Wall in a single attack and let the Order of the White Lotus through.
* Great Eastern was launched in 1858 and was bigger than any ship built for the next half century. She was a commercial failure in part because there simply wasn't any need for such a huge ship in the 1860s — the main reason for her size was the dearth of coaling stops along the route to Australia, her proposed destination, and she was designed to be able to carry all the coal for her horrendously inefficient engines herself. However between her being laid down and being launched a source of coal was discovered in Australia, rendering her instantly obsolete. Finally the development of transoceanic cables gave the giant ship a purpose, as she could carry an ocean-spanning spool of cable in one trip.
* Heroes: Mohinder was conceived to be a blood donor for his sister. Although by the time he was born she was too far gone and was always a point of contention between him and his father.
* Goosebumps is brought to life to be Slappy's servant. He is obedient until Trina and Dan remind him that he's family, upon which he turns against Slappy and "kills" him. Because Slappy gave him life, this means that Rocky goes back to being a regular doll.
* Gotham feel to it with corrupt police, a seedy underworld that can only hint at the real level of nastiness, corrupt and shady politicians, and a brewing mob war.
* Groo the Wanderer' own dog, also named Rufferto. Whenever Aragonés makes cartoons about himself and his friends, Rufferto will always look like Groo's Rufferto.
* Hell Nebraska abilities who condemns criminals to imprisonment in the City of the Damned, which is made from the prisoners' blood and flesh.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) says that Skeletor hails from the planet Infinita that orbits on the other side of Eternia's sun.
* Greg in killing him, and whether or not the boy was part of a murderous mob.
* Heir Apparent by Vivian Vande Velde, Giannine gets stuck in a simulation game and must win to extract herself without doing major brain damage.
* Hawkeye and Trapper take some blood from Frank while he's sleeping, to transfuse to a North Korean, who turns out to have hepatitis. They suspect Frank might have given it to him, so they cook up a Zany Scheme to get some of his urine to test, a Zany Scheme to keep him from having sex with Hot Lips, and one to keep him away from patients. All this when they could have pretended to notice some symptoms in him (Frank is known to be a bit hypochondriac, so he probably would have believed it), so he'd voluntarily submit to testing and take a break from sex and patients until the results came back. Instead they had to admit the reason for their odd behavior to keep him out of surgery.
* , her first and only thoughts are coming up with ways to utilize his powers in the bedroom.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers with his wife, and then finishes invoking the trope:
* Harry Potter, it doesn't work on Fiendfyre however just evaporating in the air.
* Godzilla vs. Megaguirus, Megaguirus is among the fastest kaiju, using her speed to outmaneuver Godzilla at every turn, but is frail and easily destroyed once Godzilla adapts to her style.
* Harry and His Bucket Full of Dinosaurs after Taury tries an outrageous cure suggested to him for his itchy spotosis that involves rubbing sap on himself, holding paper flowers over his head and then burying himself up to his neck in popcorn, but it has absolutely no effect.
* Hellspark: The titular planet is purposely spelled as one word, specifically to cause ambiguity on how it's to be pronounced: either "Hell Spark" or "Hell's Park". It was originally settled by linguists, according to the planet's popular history.
* Gundam Wing took it a step further, with the image of a Gundam or other mobile suit appearing in front of an enemy bridge, eyes glowing, before the bridge explodes (usually due to a beam saber strike) becoming so visually impressive that every series since has copied it.

* Helen Reddy's hit "Angie Baby" has a Peeping Tom spying into the bedroom of a mentally disturbed girl. He manages to invite himself into her room ... which turns out to be a
* Her Boyfriend's Jacket: Character wears an article of their significant other's clothing.
* Gray Matter wears, to hide the horrible burn scars that he sustained in the car accident that killed his wife.
* Harry Styles was the next member of 1D to top the Hot 100, when 2020's "Watermelon Sugar" spent one week at #1.
* Hayate the Combat Butler again, sticking with nice, safe, normal private jet travel.
* Haruko wields a pull-string-ignition bass guitar. It can also blast doors in half with some kind of firearm function. It's more a question of what Haruko
* Green-Eyed Monster: A victim of unrequited love gets enraged at seeing the object of their affection with someone else.
* "Hide the Sausage" is almost entirely composed of euphemisms for "penis" and "sexual relations", many of which are rather silly.
* Head-in-the-Sand Management a problem, so I'll ignore it until it's too late!
* Harry Harrison. The two strips were later released in Graphic Novel format.
* Grand Theft Auto IV. Aside the abundance of 555 phone numbers on shop fronts, every cheat code in the game is a 555 number.
* Grand Theft Auto IV may be Niko desperately wants to believe this. Given his protectiveness of Roman and Kate, this interpretation is very likely.
* Heaven's Lost Property. She is fascinated by watermelons and tends to carry one around with her. It's gotten to the point where she is growing a watermelon patch in her backyard and taking care of it like one would take care of a litter of puppies or kittens.
* Headless Horseman: A headless horse rider who haunts roadways and woods.
* GURPS saying that, whatever setting you play in, someone will want to play a catgirl — so he provides.
* Hangar 18 in it determine that others like them came to Earth long ago. In fact, modern humans are partly descended from those who took human women as mates.
* Hey Arnold!: In "Das Subway", Arnold and his friends are forced to take the subway home from the movies after they miss the last bus and are unable to afford a cab. Gerald is reluctant ("You know what they say: 'sun goes down, stay above ground!'") and naturally things go wrong, up to and including the train breaking down and leaving the passengers stuck for a while.
* Gundam Wing cause noticeable differences in the crystalline structure of refined metal. Gundanium at least is plausible, presumably being an alloy of some sort that requires such an environment to harden into something useful.
* He Who Must Not Be Seen. The rest of the season shows how they got there and who won the Presidential election.
* Grom Hellscream might be a good explanation of how this sort of thing gets started. His son is named Garrosh Hellscream, and is often specifically called "son of Hellscream." This is because Grom got his name for a
* Grimm and has an aversion to being touched due to her years of abuse (she married Humpty Dumpty because he didn't want to... ummm... you know). Now she uses a thorned scourge to torture her sisters and anyone else who bugs her.
* Harvest Moon series offers several supernatural love interests, but plays with things.
* Hilarity Ensues tries to get rid of a bomb, wherever he's about to throw it, there's an innocent person. Or innocent ducks.
* Hanna-Barbera. There is only brief dialogue from an anthropomorphic jukebox narrator every once in a while.
* Grrl Power: Invoked by Sydney the first time she tries flying to the comic store and has trouble orienting herself.
* Harry uses some loose branches as a makeshift bush in order to steal food.

* Gotrek & Felix: It's a sign of how bad the situation is for Gotrek to formally release Felix from his oath of staying with Gotrek until Gotrek dies in battle so that Felix can take Snorri to safety.
* Harmony's job, though in this case it is blood served in a mug which says "#1 Boss".
* here, was that Bob's scarf was burned and tattered, due to his suit being a scorched Proto Man costume.
* Hamlet, Hamlet and Osric have a disagreement about the weather when Osric is asked to put his hat on his head:
* Hellboy has the talking corpse of Ivan, who was cut in half at the midsection, and, still not dead, shot through the skull.
* Hard Candy features a porn stash as a major plot point. There is a good legal reason it is hidden in a safe...
* Guards! Guards! has a group hunters discussing the costs of their trade, and one brings up "wear and tear on virgins" as he mostly pursues unicorns. Another hunter remarks that he's heard they're quite rare these days, and the first agrees that he's right — and don't see many unicorns around, either.
* He does this in a later appearance as well, breaking into a lab and leaving a
* Goblet of Fire's being a doe is left unexplained, which also causes Harry's insistence that it was James who saved him and Sirius from the dementors in PoA to look incredibly stupid.
* HENDRIX, originally known as Dinosaur Man, is a highly influential figure who has become known for his programming and scripting in recent years, though he was initially known as simply being a particularly talented designer. He was one of the pioneers of using Blender to create new models and later animations for the game, and created not only multiple popular solo project releases, but an entire user expansion in his own, as well as being a pivotal figure in both the
* Gold Digger whose Colossal Blade, Size-mitar, is one big reference to Sanger Zonvolt, listed above.
* Hidalgo has a scene in which the Sheikh offers Hopkins a cup of coffee. He tries to warn Hopkins that Arabian coffee is stronger than most western preparations, but Hopkins just knocks it back. He then explains that back home, they test the coffee by tossing a horseshoe in the pot. If it stands up, the coffee's ready.
* Hawkmoth also attempts to exploit Marinette's heroic nature, attempting to akumatize her by offering her the chance to 'save her friends' as Princess Verity. Thankfully, she's able to resist with Adrien's help
* Gorillaz, he was deeply annoyed by Damon Albarn upon first meeting him, because:
* Gundam Build Divers, Tigerwolf tells Riku and Yukki that, since GBN is a virtual world, they run no risk of actually getting hurt and, with practice, can achieve great feats. Since they're newbies to game, though, it doesn't sink in immediately and it takes a few reminders throughout the series to understand that.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 3 episode 5, Big M.'s jaw drops when he nearly gets hit by a knife. He promptly compresses his mouth closed.
* Hemicorporectomy — literally, the removal of half of the body. Usually done for terminal cases of pelvic cancer. It's as unpleasant as it sounds; it involves the removal of the legs, the genitalia (internal and external), most of the urinary system, the large and small intestines, pelvic bones, anus, and rectum.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, and hilarious on virtue of it being ridiculously out of place.
* Halo has lots of examples: Commander Miranda Keyes is the daughter of Captain Jacob Keyes. Edward Buck's mother was a Marine. Olympia Vale's mother was a Naval Captain. Sergeant John Forge's family have been soldiers since World War II. Kat-B320 was raised for a time by her retired Army general grandmother. Gabriel Throne was born to a pair of Army troopers.
* Hells Angels is the ballpeen hammer, because as a tool (and one that a biker may legitimately use from time to time at that), possession doesn't carry the same legal repercussions as a knife or gun in most jurisdictions.
* Grand Theft Auto III, a car compactor and a dog food factory are used for the same purpose.

* Happy Tree Friends had two, in which the characters sing Christmas songs.
* Harry Potter universe, their deeds of daring-do from the books usually net them significant praise, respect, and occasionally stalkers from the wizarding world.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets instead after finding that people were importing it instead of waiting.
* Happy Heroes, Sweet S., who normally works as a superhero to defend planet Xing Xing from danger, learns how to be a hospital nurse. The job lasts only for that one episode.
* Godzilla even states that he's just as much a victim as anyone else in the film.
* He's hampered in his fight against the Kryptonians by the fact that he's trying to protect human bystanders at the same time.
* Helen herself seems to invoke a kind of this trope in one deleted scene, by blowing her gasket at an * Gravity Falls" They are predictably not amused and leave immediately in disgust.
* Healing Factor but the problem with this assumption is that other episodes establish Claire's healing ability as manifesting when she was a teenager, not as a baby. Also, a graphic novel depicts 18-month old Claire being carried out of the burning building by one of the Company's agents, Noah Bennet, who Angela arranged to become Claire's adoptive father after the fire. Since this graphic novel was not depicted on the show, most viewers are in the dark about this detail and the age at which Claire manifested her powers remains confused.
* .hack by accessing the oversoul memory of everyone connected to The World. Or...something.
* Harry Turtledove has Marcus Aemilius Scaurus who doesn't believe in the opposing Scotos and Phos, despite all evidence, until one of them practically bites him on the ankle.
* Happy Tree Friends entered a hiatus that was eventually revealed to have been due to a lack of funds. In order to solve the issue, five new episodes were released for paid digital download in 2016. However, according to a Twitter post by show creator Kenn Navarro a few months later, sales fell below expectations. While he claimed that he remained optimistic for the show's future, no more episodes were released after that, nor was there any significant word on the fate of the show.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince reworked it as an opening for the third and later fifth book, but ultimately it didn't get used until book six.
* He then readies himself to charge a fully-armored, battle-hardened Sir Gawain when (fortunately) Lancelot shows up to prevent it from happening.
* he finds out that he is in possession of a time machine, so they try to go back in time and fix the ordeal... repeatedly. Eventually, after failed attempts to prevent past!Mordecai from eating a chili dog that day, make him brush his teeth, eat a mint and et cetera, Mordecai settles on making the kiss not happen. He reaches for his lost wallet just as Margaret is about to kiss him.
* Hes The Woman Shes The Man, with Leslie Cheung playing a record producer looking for new male talent and ending up falling for a girl who got an audition disguised as a boy.
* Halo 2, where the Arbiter can drive human vehicles despite being a member of the Covenant.
* had been in prison, framed for murder. (Charlie's obsession with finding out who framed him for murder and why can be seen as similar to an addiction.)
* Hercule Poirot, living in the English countryside on the victim's estates.
* Herbert, the elderly pederast shows up from time to time just to say creepy stuff in his distinctive voice, usually to an unwary – or perhaps wary – Chris Griffin. Like the "Greased-up Deaf Guy", he was a one-note gag character that was simply too offensively funny to not bring back. He'd never be funny if he wasn't so old and feeble.
* Grounded for Life (episode "Dust in the Wind") did this with a wild cousin (Ashton Kutcher) who wanted his ashes scattered from a water tower. The first attempt went south when the off-brand Tupperware wouldn't open and was dropped by accident.
* Graveyard Keeper, you can build a "Random Text Generator" and train a zombie to write for you, which results in them producing random stories and skill books.

* Green Snake: The Green Snake and her sister White Snake are two female ophidian spirits who seek to become human in order to raise their status on the karmic scale and incidentally experience human love.
* her jailer, Ulquiorra in the Arrancar arc. His skin is like iron, she just ended up hurting her hand.
* Happens all the time to the female protagonists in the Al Rio comic
* her (2013), Samantha tells Theodore that she and the other OS's are "going somewhere" and it's too complicated to explain.
* Hellsister Trilogy features several interplanetary wars in the far future, set off by the ambitions of planet-destroying evil sorcerers and evil gods.
* Gravity Falls starts out as a small town, but by Season 2 it's big enough to hold a music festival and have a full-sized shopping mall.
* Halo, deactivating a certain part of a Covenant ship's shields is handy for infiltrating said ship. For example, a common boarding strategy is to blast the shields, then blast the newly exposed ship, destroying that section's shield generator. The Spartans then fly in through the shield hole, and find an opening.
* Gryphon Knight Epic: Sir Oliver, one of the protagonists, has a very big, curled moustache.
* hijacking issues, as there's no reason why medicine that's advanced enough to perform xenografts couldn't turn to non-sentient animals as donors instead.
* He also needs to know where his super suit is, because he needs it for the greater good!
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2. It's enough to snap Star-Lord out of what is essentially brainwashing.
* HHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHH has Harry Potter. He can see subatomic particles by squinting, seemingly teleports across galaxies, and has destroyed entire planets for no reason at all.
* Henry Stickmin Series, as the creators maintain that confirming any one canon route would defeat the purpose of having the player choose.
* Graham Chapman played highly-animated characters in front of the camera and on stage but he could be extremely reserved and shy when not performing and rarely spoke (but was hilarious the few times he did).
* Hc Svnt Dracones don't want immortal customers, even though they have the technology for it. Pulse and Progenitus do offer "graceful aging" treatments that keep a client healthy and active through their nineties, but include a "termination date" somewhere around age 100. Still, some very valuable employees manage to secure long-term contracts that include body replacement at the end of their natural lifespan.
* Hazbin Hotel, which Alastor considers 'fair enough' without the handshake.
* Harry Potter between Voldemort's Death Eaters and Harry's friends and allies.
* Highway Blossoms who has barely any response to anything, limited social skills, and a strong fixation on her hobbies, such as collecting license plates.
* hadals may be like this, though not much insight is offered into their mental life. They are portrayed, to some extent, as almost sympathetically dumb and not terribly malicious, and yet they are fond of inflicting gruesome, senseless violence for no reason. It seems to be a product of their living environment, the deep, world-encompassing caves that cause peculiar Lamarckian mutations to their inhabitants; humans who colonize these areas quickly either die or assume aspects of the Hadal way of life, including casual cannibalism and sadism towards outsiders. The Hadals have been known to initiate surface humans to their society as a gesture of goodwill, or to replenish their numbers — this involves months of gruesome mutilation and rape.
* Heroes, where Isaac Mendez uses heroin to get his visions of the future.
* Grover Cleveland was America's fattest president, earning him the nickname "Uncle Jumbo".
* HERO have an enormous oceanic base-on-stilts that wasn't there two seconds ago.
* Gravity remains unflappably calm and collected throughout the entire disaster. Justified as he's trying to keep Stone calm by acting calm himself.

* Heartbeat and jokes loudly afterward about how he's like someone to burn down his old barn for the insurance money. Unfortunately, someone takes him at his word and gets nasty when Claude doesn't keep his side of the 'bargain'.
* Heroes... Elle died at his hands, he shot Maya in the heart, Claire stabbed him in the eye, and he kissed Angela just to creep her out and piss off Peter.
* Halo: Combat Evolved of the eleven pages were 24/7 Blood Gulch. Bungie and 343 Studios recognize it by always making sure there's a canyon map, which when downright remaking Blood Gulch will have a sanguine name (Coagulation, Hemorrhage, Bloodline).
* Gordon R. Dickson dog-like, so it's not a perfect fit for the trope. Unusually, the apocalypse is an economic collapse rather than a physical or military disaster.
* Greater-Scope Villain is basically two hours of Thanos showing off no one can be as grandiose as him.
* Green Lantern (the Golden Age version was more magic-based). Hal was given a costume, power ring, and used his new identity to patrol his sector of space, fighting evil.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army example as being at worst neutral and by having the wings colored black.
* here. The virtual women make it very explicit that they have no interest in romance, despite that being their ostensible purpose.
* Hazel is not good with lesbians, babies (and people who have them), animals, or her boyfriend (the last one gets her dumped).
* Guys tend to have smaller eyes (smaller eye holes as well as smaller irises), and their eyelashes aren't prominent. Girls tend to have larger eyes, and their eyelashes are drawn as prominent clumps.
* Goldeneye, Bond finds Robbie Coltraine's character in a bar like this.
* Harrison Ford had a slight mishap his first time using a whip. Ad nauseam...
* half a dozen because cutscene Ghosts are always shown in an atmosphere or pressurized ship).
* Grease Monkey after the choice was made). The dolphin said no. He went with the aliens, and the rest of his species were left unaltered.
* Harry Potter. She did two things that, due to being captured on magical photographs, wound up getting her a fan club.
* Google she attends from ghosts) has proven to be fairly popular with furries, especially after the Halloween 2016 doodle and its 2020 sequel. Her adorable and simple design really helps.
* Hamilton with the Schuyler sisters: sweet, demure Eliza and vivacious, opinionated Angelica, who both fall in love with Alexander. Even though Angelica steps aside to let Eliza marry him, she and Alexander share a flirtatious friendship for years afterwards. His affair with Mariah Reynolds in the second act isn't really an example since he never loved her; their encounters were purely sexual.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, James Eglamore keeps a knife that was a present from his old flame, the recently-deceased Surma.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, in which three such characters explore strange new worlds, seek out new life and new civilizations, and nuke them all to hell for being weird and different.
* High Speed Rail were already constructed yet served no visible purpose for almost a decade. The term "Soda-Brücke" was quickly coined for a bridge that is "just there" (einfach so da) without any purpose.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality. He decides that he has no choice but to go along with his blackmailer.
* Gwen, any time she gets dressed up during the first four seasons. Special mention goes to "Queen of Hearts" where Merlin is momentarily stunned into silence when he goes to pick her up for her date with Arthur. The fandom had a reaction like this too when the first on set photos of
* Green magic can infuse plants and animals with vitality, or drain the same away, as well as serving as the fuel for other forms of magic. The green-aligned order is the Phadrians, who serve as gardeners and farmers.

* "Grandma's Kisses" has Patrick teaching Spongebob how to be mature, with tips such as growing sideburns, puffing out his chest, and developing an appreciation for freestyle jazz.
* He actually goes way beyond Camp Gay - when he's approached to represent the faculty as their token gay, he states that 'gay' is only 2/7th of what he is.
* Godzilla Unleashed, whose "victory pose" consists of him slamming his mechanical center-head into his flesh-and-blood side heads (which must be the three-headed dragon version of a "high five"). Don't ask how this doesn't cause the side-heads to end up with broken jaws or whatnot.
* Harry Potter. Mostly because it was such a lengthy series, but contains just about every type of character you can imagine.
* have any sort of natural reproduction cycle. Almost every Umiak seen is a clone of some sort.
* Hack Master rules) subverts this by pointing out that looking at the abilities of high level characters and comparing them to those offered in other classes was rather pointless, as there was a pretty good chance you'd be stone dead long before you got that far.
* GURPS, which is much safer and routinely used for interplanetary travel.
* Godfathers of Hong Kong climaxes with two opposing triad factions slicing and dicing each other into bits, while the Hong Kong riot police tries to break up the battle by beating the snot out of everyone present.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, there was only one thing that could kill a god: the blood of the Golden Hind. By the time both series ended, there seemed to be a new way to kill a god every week. One of them was an axe to the back thrown by a mortal woman.
* has just the high ground), but he still isn't riding a D-Wheel, yet he is excluded from the rule.
* Highlander, since they depend on their swordsmanship to stay alive for centuries.
* Gravity Falls episode "Double Dipper" features a few instances of this joke among Dipper's photocopied duplicates. "Hey buddy, it's me, you."
* Hank Zipzer episode "Camera Calamity". Every year Hank's school photo matches his school report perfectly - they're both terrible. But this year Hank's making sure his photo is picture perfect - until McKelty ruins it with a fountain of fizzy drink. Can Hank get clean and tidy and back in front of the camera before the photographer leaves?
* he made jokes and thought of puns in order to distract himself from suicidal thoughts
* he saves her life in the second episode. Kotetsu's a bit annoyed about it.
* Guns, Gore & Cannoli throws Frankie out of the blimp and is able to pilot it just fine.
* Hai To Gensou No Grimgar: There are humans, elfs, dwarfs, goblins, kobolds, gnomes, ash elfs, undead, centaurs, a fish people called sahuagins,giants, a hibrid orcs named mugow, trolls, fox man called runaruka, a race similiar to hobbit called Korrigan and gremlins, all that in grimgar, in other continents there is more, like people with three eyes and more, more races and let's not talk about the other worlds there many, many, many, many more.
* Hemlock Grove: When Olivia becomes terminally ill due to an anti-Upir virus, she plans on hijacking someone else's body with her downloaded personality. She first attempts it with a billionaire CEO, but the imprint becomes damaged due to their lack of genetic compatibility. She then successively tries to download herself into all three of her children.
* Hank's Channel: Hank's own personal channel where he posts anything that doesn't fit anywhere else.
* Happy Days, "Beauty Contest". Richie, Ralph and Potsie put on a fake "Miss Arnold's" beauty pageant.
* GTA games have missions involving recurring NPCs that end with you dropping them off somewhere and them leaving. During the brief period after dropping them off, when the mission is considered complete but before they actually disappear, you can do anything to them, including killing them, and nothing will happen - and they'll be back for the next mission. This becomes surreal when Trevor can thank a lady for a date by blasting her in the face with a shotgun after dropping her off, causing her to collapse in a pool of her own blood, and she'll not only be fine next time but won't remember it and will date him again.

* Happens twice in the same minute in the anime. A dim bunch of henchmen have been told to apprehend a high-school-age boy, and they identify Fuko (a very tomboyish, macho girl) as their target. Immediately afterward, the rather feminine Tokiya screams at them, "You idiots! I bet you thought I was a girl!"
* Harvest Moon get married and have a kid. Even after you're married, she still lives in the Goddess Pond, you still have to give an offering just to talk to her, and she only even shows up in your farmhouse for special events.
* Henry IV, Part 2 when he titled Act 2 Scene 2 "The Sauna Scene." Oh, wait...
* Happens again when Caboose is distracting Sheila the Tank so the others can shut her down (they think the Omega AI is controlling her)
* Grindhouse. Rodriguez asked Tarantino, "I always wanted to do a double feature. Hey, why don't you direct one and I'll do the other?" Tarantino quickly replied, "And we've got to call it Grindhouse!"
* Hans Christian Andersen expect to see the titular character suffer this while being carried through the sewer drains.
* Halo: Reach Jorge, Sara Sorvad, and a few other colonists speak un-subtitled Hungarian.
* Harmonic Feedback is terrified of the internet. She talks about a woman murdered by a man she met "on the computer" and is convinced hackers will break into Drea's mom's computer and steal her information. When Drea says that only happens to people who answer scam emails and download viruses, she becomes even more anxious, since she hasn't heard of viruses.
* Habbo members can join up for free. However Habbo Club has a lot more features going for it (more clothing options, exclusive areas, and exclusive furniture to name a few), however it's a monthly subscription.
* Hayate does this as well, for his '10 years ago girlfriend', first in front of Hinagiku (again), and then directly to the girl he loves, and she responds in kind, but then sends him back to his master, which he takes as a rejection.
* Goth. There's also the stereotype that teenagers turn to these subcultures as a result of teen angst, and that these are just a phase. The fact that stores like Hot Topic specialize in merchandise appealing to these groups doesn't help.
* Hellsing. Bonus points for once doing it down the side of a high-rise hotel.
* Happens in the video for Jill Sobule's song "I Kissed a Girl" (not to be confused with the song of the same name by
* Guilty Gear game before to give it a shot, both at a casual level and at a competitive level.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) himself does this early on, slowly approaching the underwater window of an offshore platform deep enough that the only source of light is the intermittent flashing of his dorsal plates.
* Hamilton). Counting to ten also references dueling—that his son Philip does so in a childhood exercise is significant.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019). Later, the Monarch brass, their G-Team and even one of the human bad guys have this reaction when Ghidorah awakens.
* Halfway averted in the love hexagon that is Starscream's Brigade in the
* He was massively in debt to a Loan Shark. Oh, and just because we're on the topic, Maggey Byrde was the suspect in this murder.
* grimmification. They still qualify in that galaxy, even though in any other they'd be the bad guys the heroes have to stop at all costs.
* Gravity Falls does avoid the "implausibly old grandparents" version of this trope, however, as the kids' great-uncle Stan is accurately portrayed as a Baby Boomer.
* Green Eggs and Ham's "Numb" while undergoing the same randomness that the Edge underwent in the original video. He doesn't complain until the moment "Bono" starts singing.
* Gor comment Burroughs made about the pulps, and his own place in them.

* Gulliver's Travels on them. However, this punishment is more of a controlled descent than a drop, or otherwise Laputa would be badly damaged. The Laputan emperor explains this as the love of his people being so great, he wishes to permit them every chance of survival.
* Harsher in Hindsight: An event from a work that was already sad or unsettling becomes even worse because of current events.
* Had the franchise continued beyond this point, the plan was to have the Stargate program go public, simply because with upward of 10,000 people from 20 different nations already knowing the secret, it's ceased to be plausibly "secret" at all.
* He later did a lesser-known follow up, The Discourager of Hesitancy. It's essentially the same story with a slightly different twist; instead of two doors that give no clues, there are two women who give different indicators (one smiles, the other frowns) but the hero has no way of knowing which is the "correct" one, or for that matter whether either means anything at all. At the end, the narrator of the story tells his guests that if they can decide which woman was the correct one, he will tell them whether the lady or the tiger came through the door. Cue groans and sighs of resignation from the reader.
* Haibane Renmei: In the first episode, Reki drops her box of art supplies when she finds Rakka's cocoon. Later on, Rakka herself drops a teapot when she's feeling faint.
* Golden Sun, the ancient lost civilization of Lemuria has a grand total of two children, both of whom comment on how lonely it is being surrounded by ancients. (Lemurians aren't strictly immortal, but they slow down their aging process to live many centuries.)
* he's been masterminding the Water Tribe civil war the moment Unalaq came and threatened his business. The conflict was inevitable, but Varrick decided to accelerate the war on his own terms by ordering his men to attack Unalaq. Afterwards, proved to be quite the antagonist by blowing up the Southern Water Tribe cultural center in the vicinity of a peace march, ordered the Triads to sabotage Asami so that could take over her company, then attempted kidnap the president in a False Flag Operation.
* Heroes with Nathan landing outside a diner and skidding painfully to a halt.
* Golem, the A.I. by created a Prague rabbi Löw in the Jewish mythology. It interpreted everything literally and in the end wreaked havoc so its creator had to terminate it.
* Green dragons only seem do have naming conventions for females, whose names end in "a" (Ysera, Nishera). Most of the male green dragons identified have no discernible naming convention.
* Have Gun – Will Travel named Manfred. The irony of a hot-tempered killer being named "man of peace" in Old German is commented on by Paladin.
* Helen "boop-a-doop" Kane is now recalled as having been like Betty Boop — which she was before Betty Boop was created.
* Heroic Myth Hestia accuses Bell of this after summoning nothing but stunningly handsome men as Servants until he summons Jack.
* Hazbin Hotel downplays this, since she won't get mad if you call her "Charlotte", but does prefer to be called "Charlie".
* Heroes. He then comments that the kindly waitress serving them would be a good fit once she was out of earshot. It turns out from her name tag that it's Sandra.
* Hello Rainbow Road": The first scene has Rider and Horse come across the burning ruins of their village.
* Gravity Falls). When Melody mentions that she's leaving town in a week and they can video-chat, Soos considers it a best of both worlds scenario.
* Guerrillas of Destiny - Tama Tonga (Alipate Leone), Tanga Loa (Tevita Fifita)
* Haley Starshine starts out this way, and continues to pretend to the role, due to operating out of
* H-Game has Emiri Yuuki do this to spy on the main character and Miren in a comedic scene.
* Guardians of the Galaxy has Gamora. She's impeccably graceful both in and out of combat, relies far more on skill as compared to strength or big guns, and is frighteningly deadly either with or without a weapon. There's a reason she's the most wanted (and most dangerous) assassin in the galaxy.

* Gokusen tries to live a double life as a teacher and as an heiress to a Yakuza clan. She tries VERY hard to not get her lives to overlap one another, but no matter how hard she tries, if she has to fight any bad gangsters/thugs chances are at least ONE of her students will be involved whether they like it or not. But to be fair this was also to protect her teaching job; while it has been endangered, she never actually lost her job in the anime.
* Harold Lloyd, the main character's new car is a Butterfly Six, a fictional model. In reality, the car used in the film is a Chevrolet Superior.
* Gotcha, causing her to admit that she's actually a CIA agent from Pittsburgh.
* had a similar blunder when he tried to insult the caller he had just spoken to, thinking his mike was off. It wasn't.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 floating in space and then spent millions of years constructing his planet body.
* Hannibal for Hannibal Lecter, playing into the role reversal aspect; Hannibal kills and eats people he considers rude to demonstrate that they're no better than pigs in his eyes. Mason specially breeds a bunch of pigs for this purpose, training them to associate screaming with meal time and stuffing clothes full of fruits and meats to get them used to it. It then goes very, very badly for Verger when he tries to actually implement it.
* Harry Potter once mixed firewhiskey, sake, vodka, and wine (and possibly turpentine and antifreeze, as well) together and drank it. After one drink, he woke up the next day in police custody and even years later insists "the statue had it coming".
* He doubled down when the Necronomicon convention invited Nalo Hopkinson (the author who first decried the use of Lovecraft for the WFA) as a guest of honor, refusing to do any more official programming for the convention holders for giving a platform to "Lovecraft Haters".
* Good Samaritan: A person does a good deed simply for others' well-being.
* Healer asks him if Young Shin is really so pretty that he'd be dumb enough to stick around and possibly get caught just stick close to her.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! as a Pretty Cure (usually a pink one like Tsubomi/Cure Blossom and Kaoruko/Cure Flower) have popped up.
* He points out to Ocelot that it might not be the best idea ever to let Naomi Hunter (who wants to kill Big Boss' descendants) date Liquid Snake (Big Boss' son) since, as much as he hates everyone, coworkers killing each other is usually a bad thing, Ocelot concedes the point but reveals that there's a countermeasure anyway
* Harlequin Valentine romancing a mortal woman (who is, in the Columbine spirit, the sanest and most sensible character, and things don't go quite as expected). Along the way, Harlequin nominates the other characters as filling various stock roles, although it's ambiguous whether this is genuine insight or just a case of labelling people according to his preconceptions.
* Harry Potter many times. Ron and Hermione often struggle to convince him that he needs their help.
* Golf It literally has Terroriser's video description link listed as "And Others:".
* Henry V than the history plays, and isn't even classified with them.
* Half-Blood Prince Defence Against the Dark Arts, wherein she got the B-equivalent in the only class Harry got an A-equivalent in.
* Hanna-Barbera has him and Blue Falcon stopping the theft of some charity money by the Zoot Suit Brutes. They apparently jettison the money, which Dynomutt recovers. Later, Blue Falcon makes change out of a $100 bill with the charity money. As Radley Crown, he and Dynomutt are at a restaurant where Crown pays for dinner with a $20. It turns out the $20—and all the money still at the charity drive the Zoot Suit Brutes jettisoned—was money the Brutes stole from a bank. Radley is unable to explain where he got the stolen $20 for fear of giving away his secret identity. Dynomutt has to do some fast detective work to clear him.
* Glon's dying human father asked to be buried with three grave coins, instead of the usual two. This means that he was technically denied a proper burial, and therefore has an excuse to stick around as a ghost.

* Green Green.) The same thing happens to the whole Baka Trio on a later occasion. Far worse is the rape of Reika by a troop of monkeys for the apparent crime of being a prude.
* Goku has a more subtle case of pride, but it is still noticeable. He refuses to ask for assistance, even when he's being beaten up, and doesn't really like outside help. When he was sick fighting Android 19, he refused any help and kept fighting until he was physically knocked down and had his energy sucked. His Saiyan pride also didn't allow him to eat a Senzu to restore his health, although Cell wanted him to eat one, and he didn't like that he needed help to beat Buu or to become a Super Saiyan God since it was a level he couldn't reach on his own. Several characters have actually called Goku out for being too prideful.
* Harry Potter was selected as director thanks to his great track record of children-heavy films. However, the series lasted so long that the actors ceased to be amateurs simply through the process of making it.
* Grendel was planned to be released during this period, but would not be published (by Dark Horse) until 1993. Dark Horse would not have the right to reprint the original series until the 2000s.
* Hawk the Slayer: No blood appears on the weapons used. Voltan is shown holding up his dagger right after stabbing someone to death for instance, and it's spotless.
* Hatoful Boyfriend. He is also a brilliant athlete and can run faster than he can fly, apparently with enough stamina to beat the human girl in a marathon race.
* Harry punches a wall after learning he has to marry Snape or be Obliviated and stripped of his magic and inheritance.
* Henry V the titular king, unhindered by civil war, takes his "noblest English" into France and, despite overwhelming odds, defeats the French at Agincourt. Not only does he win the country (or a big chunk of it) he charmingly woos the French Princess Katherine to seal the deal and the last action has the two of them getting ready to be wed. Then the Chorus reminds the audience that, like in real life, Henry would be dead a few short years later, and his son's reign would see all those French territories lost and the country of England plunged into one of its famous and bloody civil wars.
* Hard Rock bands (some mentioned here) feature their name stylized as a logo.
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah. There is also the scene between Miki Saegusa and Meru Ozawa where they discuss what they will do once their psychic powers fade away.
* GURPS points out one potential problem: because they are relatively soft silver bullets can mess up rifled firearms.
* Hephaestus's origin is a crazy example. Okay, so he was born when Hera gets annoyed that Zeus apparently gave birth to Athena on his own. She tries it, and she gets a very ugly baby. So she * had gets in a good shot and gets his eye taken out. When you meet up with him again, not only is he sporting that new eye, he's starting to deck out his ship in Borg gear. It doesn't help that the rest of the Tal Shiar is messing around with Borg tech and, in one possible timeline, when Romulus is assimilated, Hakeev willingly becomes Secundus of Borg!
* Grease spell covers a 10-foot-by-10-foot section of the floor with slippery liquid. It's much less flashy than other 1st-level spells and harmless in and of itself, but the ability to make your enemies trip over themselves is invaluable in combat situations. And in 5th edition it doesn't require concentration, allowing you to set down a grease slick (or three) while maintaining concentration on other spells.
* Grojband, Trina Riffin writes in her diary when in anger mode whenever she reaches this.
* Goliath beetles are the world's heaviest beetles, measuring between 2.4 to 4.3 inches long and weighing as much as an apple. They also have some of the heaviest grubs of any insect species, which can weigh in at a whopping 3 and a half ounces and measuring up to 10 inches long.
* Heart of the City, the title character often plays with "Karlie and Ben" dolls.

* Groundhog Day (Hitting it a second time will make it work normally.)
* Grand Theft Auto IV, you deliver two bodies to an organ harvester, and later help a murderous husband dispose of his wife's body.
* Guild Wars and really should have eastern and southern borders. However, Tyria's landmass features a gigantic western peninsula (its isthmus contains an entire country) whose furthest edge is cut off the map, suggesting that there may be more land to the west.
* Hard Choices, Thomas' mother, Sarah, and father, John, are both transformed into dragons upon their arrival in the Dragon Realms. While John is slightly unnerved by his transformation, Sarah is outright horrified at hers. It gets to the point where she breaks down crying.
* Hannah Montana, Miley gazes (there's a spotlight and everything) at a boy named Trey, whom she later thinks is "the one". Of course, Trey is never seen again after that episode, save a brief mention in an episode or two later saying that they had broken up.
* Guitar Hero World Tour, who can only be used on his songs per the agreement with his estate to use his likeness and songs.
* Good Omens and decide to burn her. Knowing it's coming, she prepares herself and leaves behind a book of prophecies for the next 350 years, before walking out and allowing herself to be burned, though not before filling her skirts with gunpowder and roofing nails, turning herself into a claymore mine.
* Heart's "Magic Man", the titular character is this. Upon meeting in the real world, he recognizes the dreamer immediately.
* grand finale straight line for him to not only triumph, but to spin a CMoA-caliber Pre-Mortem One-Liner off of:
* Heroic Comedic Sociopath: And they can be pretty damn funny when they do bad things too.
* Golgo 13 being "ZUN ZUN ZUN"). It's the one that knocks him out, to boot.
* Hearthstone lets you make your own with your hero power. Choose a beast from two sets of three, smash them together, and have fun!
* have highly intricate and colorful patterns on them. Normal Western boots are referred to in colloquial Mongolian as plain boots, which, by comparison, is pretty much true.
* Goldfinger uses a variant of this trope, where incredibly big people are blown out of an incredibly small hole.
* Hermione, upset because her 17th birthday wish didn't come true, says she should've just wished for a pony like when she was five.
* Happy Endings's birthday. Most of the words and phrases the bird had picked up were racist.
* Hans Christian Andersen", does not get the prince because she cares more about the musical toy that he created than she does about him. Unlike the little mermaid, this princess does not deserve the prince at all - she's too materialistic to love him for who he is.
* Goof Troop episode "Calling all Goofs," after eating overwhelmingly spicy food, Pete freaks out, complete with a fire truck siren blaring, finds the nearest water source outside which happened to be a water hose and proceeds to fill up until he's a living silly water balloon as he waddles, sloshes and squeezes back through his front door where he's met with a pushy Sargent type Goofy relative who believes that Pete put on a lot of weight, (bringing a literal meaning to water weight) and forced Pete back to his naturally husky and overweight self with harsh pushups with himself and a stereo speaker on his back.
* Harper's Island: Lucy is last seen still alive, thrashing around while on fire, but isn't engulfed to the point where she couldn't have put out the flames by stopping, dropping and rolling. Even if she did survive the initial fire though, she would have spent days exposed, suffering from her burns, days in which no one found her, making her survival unlikely.
* Goldust: Left WWE in 2019; shortly thereafter joined AEW as Dustin (Rhodes).
* Hawaii Five-0 (2010 remake) - Steve McGarrett's father, John was a retired cop and Vietnam vet.

* Hi is seated in a car, but still turns and flashes the camera a dumbstruck look when Ed decks him one in
* Glorianna: The scheming Lord Vasgor and the decadent Lord Claughmoore both qualify.
* Halo 3 is now a free download for the Xbox One, you need to have an Xbox Live account to download it.
* Hasbro eras have finished their runs outside the U.S first, thanks to Nickelodeon puting the show on hiatus over the Mid-Spring and Summer months.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, who is a walking tree from Planet X, where he claims to be a king.
* Hellas computers, but who wants to sit home and browse the Net all day when you can go out and debate philosophy face-to-face in the fora or run a nice, refreshing marathon?
* Golden Age series. Unfortunately for the soldiers within, their falls were repeatedly interrupted by the various shields surrounding the planet, leading to a far less dignified landing.
* Gundam 00), they manage to Curbstomp the A-Laws, so he isn't a failure if he isn't screwed from the beginning.
* Highlander Duncan, and thus he often has to hope that his points get through Duncan's thick skull on their own merits.
* Grim Dawn has a steampunk fantasy world where humanity is pushed to the brink of extinction by an invasion of other-dimensional beings and the undead. The situation has become so bad that gold has become worthless, it's useful iron that's the currency.
* Hawkeye and B.J. give placebos to a shy, nebbish soldier, telling him they're Confidence Pills. They also give the same pills to Klinger, telling him they're a new drug that will help keep him cool — later, during a boiling hot day, he walks around in a long-sleeved shirt and long pants, seemingly unaffected by the heat.
* Halloween II. The theatrical version was reviled by critics and series fans and, while not an outright flop, disappointed at the box office. The Unrated Director's Cut released on DVD and Blu-ray, while still controversial, is a very different film with much more focus on character depth and development, extended suspense sequences, and a totally different ending. It's generally better-received, with some fans calling the Director's Cut one of the best movies in the franchise. Zombie and/or the studio certainly think so, as the Theatrical Cut hasn't even been made available on Blu-ray in the US.
* Heat Vision is one of the 42 Makuta powers. Other users include Rahkshi of Heat Vision and
* Hannibal is believed to be a black market surgeon who kills for internal organs to donate/transplant. This theory goes out of the window because of this trope:
* Heralds of Valdemar series, Herald Talia's abusive father and brother were quite attractive, and as a result, she's wary around handsome men; the man she falls in love with is repeatedly described as homely.
* "He was rich and old, and she/Was twenty-two or twenty-three./She gave him fifteen years to live/The only thing she meant to GIVE."
* Harry himself has very rough control of basic earth magic, but that control does give him some serious punch when he needs to pack a sudden punch. He can generate a sort of gravity hammer that concentrates gravity from a wide area into a single tightly-focused point; in one of the short stories, he uses this to kill a Black Court vampire without making any noise, and in
* He Knows Too Much: Killing someone because they've learned about something they can't be allowed to make public knowledge.
* Hellsister Trilogy, a team of mostly alien super-heroes. Alien evil sorcerer Mordru would have obliterated Earth without their interference.
* Haven. Unfortunately he has no control over this and until the end of the episode, he doesn't even know that it's him causing the machines to come to life.
* Hilarious in Hindsight. Daniel Bryan gets it over and gets merchandise.
* Herman comic shows someone offering a judge a plate of his wife's cooking, and being told that, while it was certainly awful stuff, it's still not grounds for a divorce.

* Hell also seems to work in much the same way in DC comics books — in the
* Harry starts trying to befriend Susan Bones by offering her pointers in Defence Against the Dark Arts, with Susan offering to return the favour if he needs help with Charms, Harry noting that she’s a better tutor than Hermione as she can break the subject down more easily.
* Godzilla himself was meant as a stand-in for the destructive effects of nuclear weapons, and indeed his impact on Tokyo mirrors that of the devastation and fallout of an atomic bomb.
* Glee's Santana gets sufficiently angry with another girl, one of these is sure to ensue.
* Goku more or less expresses this when he mocked Frieza's final attack after he deemed him too weak and
* He's also fond of the rabbit the rest of the group jokingly got him as a mount. At least, he keeps it with him, and hasn't immolated the little guy yet. In fact, after Richard was sent to another plane, the little rabbit started crying; they later had a happy reunion, complete with running to each other on the beach. Lets not forget his battlecry:
* good thing. The author saw this as a good thing, because unlike some other stories where robots prevent humans from doing anything that might involve the slightest risk (eating fatty foods, working, etc.), these robots were smart enough and ethical enough to only justify taking action to stop the worst acts and make sure no human realizes the robots are in charge—indeed, until the Spacer Era, the worst thing a robot ever did to a human is to transfer a factory director to a slightly less prestigious posting.
* Happy Tree Friends made a gag of Flaky (who acts and sounds somewhat feminine but whose sex is deliberately left unclear) being confused as to which public restroom to enter. The scene cuts away before we see which one Flaky used.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers; it's not uncommon for meetings to end with the characters physically fighting each other.
* Halo. Understandable, as the Covenant just copied everything they have from the Forerunner.
* Greater-Scope Villain, there is really no excuse for saving the one person in Thedas capable of stopping him if they are none of those things and outright threaten to kill him if left alive.
* Gulf of Tonkin incident; but the reports may have been fabricated to gain popular support for escalating military operations in Southeast Asia.
* Havalina Rail Co. had a song about Laika, the Russian dog who became the first animal in space. (Though Havalina spelled it "Leica".)
* Helgenish attempts to trick Primrose into thinking he surrendered after the boss fight. It's subverted because she sees this coming and cuts him down.
* he's the only non-elf around and thus the only one who could have done it.
* Grimtooth's Traps supplement. The "Slider Spiker" trap uses this trick.
* Grabbed by the Ghoulies logos on the covers of several books that are promptly blown away.
* Grace has a habit of holding her hands in front of her, a bit like a squirrel. Grace's squirrel hands make her recognisable even when she's transformed into a duplicate of someone else.
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age, he becomes inspired enough to instantly forge or refurbish them into masterpieces.
* GURPS and similar publications to write up stories about conspiracy so that the Serious Press won't believe them.
* Hellraiser III: Hell on Earth: Captain Elliot Spencer's wayward soul, who is stuck in some sort of limbo before the afterlife, and represents Pinhead's noble human side before he became a Cenobite. He contacts Joey to inform her about his past and Pinhead Unbound's creation, and how to defeat him by bringing him back to Spencer's realm.
* H₂O: Mermaid Adventures: Rikki has been made a red-head as opposed to the blonde she was in the original series.

* Goldust, trade his black and gold for a red, black, and green outfit, and dub himself The Artist Formerly Known As Goldust.
* Hand Waves that "Avatar stuff doesn't count." He also initially scoffs as the concept of "past lives", despite it being a fact that the Avatar reincarnates.
* Happy Heroes in episode 5, Big M. and Little M. play aliens who die and have their bodies dissected in a hospital. When Happy S. gives up his role as the doctor who does the dissected, the director Mr. Lightbulb takes the job into his own hands, but realizes too late that the scalpel he's using is a real one rather than the rubber prop one, which is still in Happy S.'s hand. The ensuing pain does not sit well with Big M., who gets mad at Mr. Lightbulb over it.
* He meets his end when he finally takes control of an Atavus ship that has been dormant for millennia and demands
* Hamlet is perfect for this as the entire play is driven by Hamlet seeing a ghost of his dead father telling Hamlet that his uncle, the king's brother, is a murderer. The play then goes on to make Hamlet seem as insane as possible while still keeping everything the ghost said plausible, yet never confirmed.
* Heaven's Lost Property Naturally, it was the one day that a screw was loose.
* Highschool of the Dead). It's later mentioned by one of the main characters that the word "Them" was a piece of brilliance: It becomes easier to put "Them" down if you don't think of them as anything and thus affirm their existence as former humans. In the English dub, Takagi mentions it once while in the mansion, but it's the only time it's spoken. Not sure if it was a mistake on the voice actress' part, or if they accidentally had that word in the script dialogue she was reading.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure!) has a particularly poignant dénouement, implying that Futaba succeed her big sister as a Pretty Cure.
* Guild Wars. The main storyline had three separate arcs which focused on the Asura, Charr, or Norn, each of which became a playable race in the sequel. The Sylvari was also present in the form of a sapling White Tree. While the primary antagonist was the Great Destroyer, the presence of the Elder Dragons was also foreshadowed, including Kralkatorrik appearing as part of the landscape.
* he simply shrugs it off under the reasoning that he wouldn't be able to tend a garden that big.
* Hell Week features a sorority whose members are exceptionally popular, lucky and successful due to black magic... which, it turns out, is powered by sex.
* Hell's Kitchen than Julia and a sous chef. Melissa degraded her for causing the team to lose a challenge but Julia pointed out that Melissa caused them to be screwed over. And though she never won the challenge, Julia is still the only contestant from the show that Ramsay has shown respect and was given an opportunity to go to Culinary School.
* God-Emperor of Dune, Siona Atreides and all who carry her genes nullify prescience, allowing them to hide in The Scattering. Their version is a weaker version of Paul's original power, which is to be able to consider so many different courses of action at once using his prescience that it creates a cloud of futures too diverse for anyone else to parse, essentially eliminating any other prophet's powers related to any of his past, present, or future decisions and indirectly rendering half the galactic empire essentially a null zone for any prediction but navigation.
* He claims that it's made by the companies Sony Wonder, Cinar, and Children's Television Workshop, which is an unlikely combination of companies working on the same show together...
* Good Eats host Alton Brown participated in a Food Network kitchen makeover giveaway. The winner of his design, Nic Sims of Michigan, was also treated to a guest spot as a government agent on the episode "Churn, Baby Churn II".
* High Lifes and Low Lifes, Frances steals the farmer's Range-Rover after he car explodes during the botched payoff pick-up, and later she steals Barry's sports car when she and Shannon escape from Mason's house.
* Hatoful Boyfriend acting rather out of character she asks if he's gone and had that lobotomy.

* Harry tries to order books on occlumency and related subjects during his first year. On Halloween he receives a parcel with an accompanying letter.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City all feature main characters that take contracts to assassinate people.
* Heartbreakers's character is tracked down by her ex-husband (well, the most recent one, anyway) in the midst of her scheming to capture the next one. He begs her to take him back. Being too busy to deal with him just at the moment, she persuades him to let her tie him to her hotel bed blindfolded, then takes off and leaves him to be discovered by the maid. Who doesn't exactly rob him, but does refuse to let him go until he offers her a bribe. Incredibly, he later teams up with this character and her daughter to enact another scheme.
* Half-Life 2, the machine that controls the suppression fields has been destroyed, and Dr. Kleiner broadcasts on hacked channels an encouragement to the remaining humans to procreate.
* Hidden Heart of Gold anti-hero, but it's there. Just don't tell anyone.
* Gundam who not only uses Samurai-themed Gunpla, the 侍ノ弐 Sengoku Astray Gundam (the prefix is officially written in Kanji even when the rest is in roman characters, it literally means "Samurai Unit 2) but dresses up as a Ninja to spy on Chairman Mashita and Baker. He also holds knowledge of various Asian martial-arts techniques, not just Japanese.
* Guren lost his friends to death once so he sacrificed nearly every human being left after the apocalypse for the chance to revive his friends and give them at least a few years of life.
* Good Omens contract-writers in Hell with a note attached saying "Learn, guys".
* Greek Mythology. He eventually won a kingdom and a wife with his powers.
* here, when a UNS admiral finds himself awakened in the middle of the night...
* Hayley originally was purple in her dragon form but season 2 made her pink.
* Groening has since gone on record to say that while he loosely based it on
* Gordon R. Dickson, Donal Graeme stages a daring raid against an enemy planet. He uses multiple swift hyperspace jumps to simulate a huge armada attacking his enemy, even though it drives him and his crew to the edge of collapse, with each jump leaving them more and more in pain and disorientation.
* Grimm: One is a police detective blessed or cursed with a magic he doesn't understand; the other is a reformed werewolf. They fight crime!
* her demon-possessed father kills him and then himself, after having killed her mother a few hours earlier. to bring John back to life - a wish that would in 10 years kill her and send her family on a decades-long revenge quest.
* Gravity, space debris punches a hole in the space shuttle. The shuttle crew freezes solid instantly. In reality, it would take hours for them to freeze.
* Guild Wars gameplay. (Though hammers have the ability to knock foes down and swords have some really good skills like Dragon Slash, so they're fairly even.)
* Green Lantern: Hal Jordan and Carol Ferris have done this to each other repeatedly over the years, since his identity as GL and hers as the domineering, villainous Star Sapphire frequently complicate their underlying mutual love.
* Guncaster mod where instead of playing as the legendary Doom Guy, you play as Cygnis Flayinthere, a gun-toting, spell-casting dragon with an attitude.
* Gravity Falls, Stan and Mabel make a bet on who could make more money: Mabel while running the Mystery Shack, or Stan while on vacation.
* Gymkata there is the crazy town Cabot has to go through as part of the game, which includes a guy who cuts off his own hand in the middle of fight because he couldn't let go of a pipe he grabbed for some reason.
* "Hammer of the Gods". The Trickster leaves a DVD with the Winchesters. When they play it, it turns out to be a porn tape starring himself.
* GURPS: Spaceships discusses solar sails. You can even give space boats wooden hulls if the setting demands it or the characters are incredibly desperate. One example is the Star Galleon which uses astral sails to move through space and is designed to sail on a normal sea.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, during the mission "Stowaway", you can jump out the plane without a parachute, which leads into a cutscene showing CJ crashing into a parked car at a drive-in.

* Happy Tree Friends that they end up making Sniffles look like the lesser of two evils.
* Guild Wars mission Arborstone has a cathedral begin collapsing once the Urn of Saint Viktor is removed. Mhenlo gets out before the front door is blocked off, but all the others have to work their way to the back exit.
* Hakushon Daimao: Bullko, the bulldog, did this to both Kan-chan and Hakushon, complete with underwear exposure and in Kan's case, butt exposure twice
* He also describes the ring as a "down payment," which it technically sort of is.
* Happy Tree Friends takes this trope to the extreme; anything can (and will) trigger his PTSD, sending him into a murderous rampage.
* Hajime no Ippo, the respective voice actors for Kamogawa and Nekota. Utsumi passed away in June 2013, the series therefore having to cast another VA for Kamogawa, and Nagai in January 2014.
* Goosebumps Adventure, leaving them naked and confused in the town cemetery. The following chapter reveals they had to streak home, and just enough people glimpsed them to start humiliating rumors. When Courtney and Justin hear this, it's all they can do not to crack up in Priscilla's face.
* Happy Place, a usually peaceful place within the mind that the character uses as a refuge from the troubles of reality.
* Hajime no Ippo chapter which shows how the Naniwa Tomcat became the Naniwa Tiger. And yes, it is as badass as it sounds. There's also a flashback to Kamogawa's and Nekota's past, which involves Kamogawa beating a U.S. soldier in a boxing match.
* Gordon Brown became blind in his left eye after he was kicked in the head during a rugby union match when he was a student.
* .hack//Legend of the Twilight manga, Shogo plays shiritori with an AI, discovering that you cannot beat someone who can instantly look up every word that exists.
* Grass Is Greener: An idealized place that a person desperately wishes to leave and go to.
* Green Lantern, Jimmy survives to become an old man, and Alan's husband.
* Grandia was another, coming out directly as the JRPG craze of the fifth generation had begun, and became one of the most acclaimed games on the Saturn, as well as one of the most imported from overseas thanks to word of mouth.
* Grunge's dominance of mainstream rock music only really encompassed the first half of
* Guile tells you to Go Home And Be A Family Man, because his theme goes with everything, as a proof, he does Flash Kick FADC into Shades!
* Here Comes the Boom, Scott tries to buy a snack from a vending machine, but it gets stuck. He rams the vending machine causing several snacks to fall out. A student sees him do this and he tosses him one of the extra snacks telling him to keep quiet.
* Hearts of Ice: Emma-O lets out a loud, demanding "You! Come here!" when he notices the presence of one soul who doesn't belong in Hell.
* Greyhound amused and he's warned he'll be relieved of duty if he does that again.
* Guest House Paradiso, Richie donned Eddie's glasses as a disguise. They were both rendered nearly blind as a result.
* Harry Potter (one of Lily's two friends, the other being shipped with Sirius), and the only way they express their feelings is "blush furiously at each other". The same behaviour is suggested for Frank Longbottom and Alice, should they be included in the fic.
* Grand Finale allows himself to be captured to gain access to Grid Battleforce's computers and absorb their data, allowing him to analyze their weapons and become immune to them all, harmlessly absorbing a blast from a weapon specifically designed to take him out, and later Devon's entire Beast-X Saber, digitizing it and sucking it right up! The Rangers' response? Dig into Nate's Ranger Vault (this season's Ranger tech turns out to be reverse-engineered from other teams' gear) and bring out some classic weaponry for past teams.
* Harvest Moon to lose a festival and those townspeople who should be grateful that you gave them a roof over their head will berate you.

* Hatoful Boyfriend is when the heroine complains about the cold and wonders who turned on the air conditioner — the air conditioner is broken.
* God and Devil World) is a Chinese original (also occasionally declared a ranobe) series of 8 books written by Zi Chan Bao Zeng. The premise of the series is that a zombie apocalypse happens, but with a twist — all those not turned into a zombie receive game interfaces, turning the world into a massively multiplayer RPG reality.
* Harley Quinn episode, however it could have been a joke. DC always writes her as naturally blonde.
* Grow, you can build a giant foot after completing its skeleton, but you don't get to see the rest of its body if it has any.
* God Bless America are a non-romantic, adoptive father/daughter version of this.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix organization formed by Dumbledore to fight Voldemort. This turned out to be completely accurate. It helps that the end of the previous book had foreshadowed that Dumbledore would form such an organization, so everyone was expecting it to happen in the next book anyway.
* Golgo 13: the protagonist Duke Togo is a stoic assassin who always hits his mark and always beds the girl.
* High Noon. Some townsfolk even defend him and insist that he's not so bad. When he finally arrives at the film's climax, he sports ugly scars to prove that he is in fact a bad guy.
* Green Hornet radio episodes, the crook du jour was targeting Britt Reid because he blamed Reid for his conviction.
* Harry Potter wisdom that "Britain has twelve actors, six writers, three locations and ten props."
* He also calls his shots when he breaks into interpretive dance while fighting
* Grace is about one of these. A mother survives a car crash, but her fetal daughter is killed — but she insists on carrying to term. She does, and the baby is born seemingly alive. Only she bruises in sunlight, and has a thirst for blood...
* Hey Arnold! episode "Harold's Bar Mitzvah," Arnold and Harold find a crying child who's lost his mother. When asked to describe her, he replies that she's "tall and has hair." Fortunately they had already seen the mother frantically looking for her son and didn't need a more detailed description.
* Heel–Face Turn. When the other replicators detect this they wirelessly reprogram him, causing him to attack the Atlantis team. They beam him into outer space, with the episode closing on a shot of him floating around.
* Hekapoo. She looks like a pale young girl with horns and maybe fur.
* Herod the Great had no fewer than three of his own sons put to death for allegedly plotting against him.
* Haunter: When Lisa discovers the Pale Man's killing room underneath the house, she finds his collection of artifacts he kept of his victims.
* Happens to the limo driver during the Florida Keys action sequence in
* Hall of the Fire Giant King, section "Temple of the Eye". If the altar is activated correctly and the glowing golden eye appears, one possible side effect of seeing the eye is to immediately age 1-20 years.
* Gordon Korman, schoolgirl Cathy Burton disguises herself as a boy to lead MacDonald Hall's thoroughly inept football team to victory.
* Greetings From Earth where other human space colonists used seconds, minutes, and hours while Apollo said "Wait just a centon!" trying to figure it out.
* Hannah Gadsby's famous special "Nanette," where she argues that self-deprecating humor is just an attempt to make the audience comfortable and sand off any "dangerous" rough edges from the comedian. She swears it off.
* Having gained an absolutely massive fangirl following, fanartists in the
* Hightown: A lot of minor female characters are shown nude and having sex.
* He could be referring to Matthias, Judas' replacement in Acts after he hanged himself. If this is true, then Jesus wasn't tricked.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Italy had one after Germany basically called him "wise".

* Hades: After convincing Hades and Persephone to make up, causing the latter to return to the Underworld and the former to introduce her and Zagreus to his siblings officially, Hades hires Zagreus to be his security consultant for the Underworld. Specifically, Zagreus needs to continue to attempt to escape the Underworld so Hades can find and plug loopholes that others might use to escape, thus allowing the player to continue playing even after the story has concluded. Also, after Zagreus convinces the Olympians to come down for a grand feast, they continue aiding his escapes, even though he's unable to break out just yet.
* Grant Morrison's Action Comics, John Henry Irons (Steel) and John Corben (Metallo) both got their Powered Armor from the US Military's "Steel Soldier" project, which was designed by Lex Luthor and headed by Lois Lane's father, General Sam Lane. Further on, it's also revealed that their suits were reverse-engineered from Brainiac's technology and that Brainiac's psychic influence was the initial cause of Metallo's insanity.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire has nothing to take his mind off it."
* Hagumi and Kasumi were friends as children but lost touch until they reunited in high school. The event * has an experimental drug dumped in the water supply of Manila, producing thousands of superpowered kids.
* Heel–Face Turn — and usually is in public — he uses his old skills of tricks and manipulation to get things done quietly.
* Heavy Metal segment "Harry Canyon". The meeting between Rudnick and the girl occurs on a bridge that has a sign: "Police Warning: Enter At [your own] Risk"
* Harrison Ford has his prosecutor character accused of the murder of his fellow attorney (and mistress), played by a smoking-hot Greta Scacchi.
* GURPS book the weaker version is listed among the traits that a realistic alien could have.
* High School D×D, and the characters and setting are surprisingly well-developed.
* Greek Ninja does this with Sasha (he also hits on her, but that's unrelated).
* Haku/Meng, on the other hand, consisted of power moves like the atomic drop, super kick, power bomb, and many other moves other wrestlers were using as their finishers.
* Hannibal: Beverly Katz is killed by Hannibal early on in the second season.
* Gunfighter and its sequel never get tired, they don't seem to mind getting shot. If you shoot a horse in the second game it will sometimes give a bemused neigh, but other than that nothing happens.
* Guineafowl have demonstrated a remarkable inability to get around an
* Gog commit a crime and that those who already did should get massive fines. The protagonist likes this idea.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony Mori Kibbutz plays this role towards his brother Brucie from the main game.
* Hand Puppet Mockery: Combines playing with a hand puppet with teasing another person.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, interrupted by a Death Eater attack.
* Good News Week. Both in Paul's monologues and in the games in general.
* Happy Heroes, the heroes travel into a book titled "A History of Magic" to retrieve Haha Xiao's staffs and wake up the Global Leader.
* He later reveals to Randal that he's his son. And lordy. The lines he comes out with when he's trying to teach Randal a little bit about his new powers:
* Highway to Heaven: Jonathan Smith seeks out troubled people through the direction of God, expressed as intuition.
* High Citadel by Desmond Bagley. When their plane crashes into the Andes after a failed hijack, the survivors have to fend off communist rebels while three of their group attempt to scale a previously impassable mountain using improvised climbing equipment in order to get help.
* Golett and Golurk are the oldest Pokémon known to have been deliberately made by humans, created by spirits inhabiting artificial constructs to defend villages.

* Gundam metaseries. It's not uncommon for mechanics to see their big ace in the hole Mobile Suit get beat up and are unable to fully fix it, so they gotta patchwork it or make brand new suits out of what they have left.
* Heroes of the Storm) showed her flying and shooting at the same time. Although Genji is still not able to ride on top of her mech, as was shown in the trailer.
* GURPS there are items that force a Destiny on the owner, causing them to fulfill it whether they want to or not. The Destiny doesn't run out either, an item that makes one person King of England will also make the next person who picks it up into the King of England.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince. In the case of the Battle of the Ministry, the members of Dumbledore's Army who were there were using the twisting corridors as well as their smaller size and youth to their advantage; outpacing the Death Eaters as well as using extensive cover and tactics to avoid taking casualties. Even then, however, they still lose several members (Hermione, Ginny, etc.) to the Death Eaters as they attempt to escape.
* Higurashi: When They Cry has a few members of his group of female friends attracted to him. Also, when he demonstrated to a male baseball player his badass K persona the baseball player is shown making a face that looks similar to a G-rated orgasm while blushing and screaming "K!" while kneeling and reaching after a retreating Keiichi.
* Harbinger (Finmonster)): Neil calls Dipper and Mabel "Dropper and Maple", which even Tucker, who doesn't know them at all, can tell is wrong even before Wendy corrects the boy.
* He was actually from the future and had participated firsthand in some of the prophesied events..
* Harvey Beaks episode "Icky Chicky" opens with a scene of the day Harvey was born. We hear Miriam groaning and Irving coaching her to push. It turns out that she was trying to open a jar of pretzels while waiting for Harvey to hatch from his egg.
* Harry finds himself repeating the day he used Snape's Sectumsempra curse on Draco.
* Good Is Not Soft: Being kindly in nature doesn't prevent you from meting out harsh punishments.
* Here Comes Mr. Jordan is the caseworker assigned to Joe Pendleton, only 7013 screws up and takes Pendleton to heaven when he wasn't supposed to die for another fifty years.
* Glitch Techs: As part of a "system restore", a blinding light causes a person's memories of the glitch and whatever happened during that time to be erased. Miko passing out before the mind-wiping process could be completed in the pilot episode results in her being permanently immune, and, as what happened with Five when he finds his wristband for the tournament in Mitch's truck shows, it's possible to trigger the wiped memories.
* Heartbreak Ridge's character (and others). They pulled their support after that.
* Grayson has this with the Joker shooting a sub-machine gun at Robin holding a thick metal plate to deflect the bullets. The effect was achieved by setting off firecrackers attached to the plate.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army was deemed too dangerous to ever use again.
* Gohatto. The only way that he deviates from this trope is that, in addition to being a rather feminine pretty boy, he's a badass samurai, possibly the best fighter in the regiment.
* Harry Potter. hey are a terrorist group of wizards and witches, led by the dark wizard Lord Voldemort, who seek to purify the wizarding community by eliminating wizards and witches born to non-magical parents. Their typical attire includes black hooded robes and masks.
* Hank Henshaw, the Cyborg-Superman, a recurring villain in the Superman and Green Lantern titles. Actually an
* GoldenEye (1997) a pain in the ass when the door takes 5 seconds to open while you're fighting a horde of 20 enemies in your back... on the flip side, they do let you get the drop on some enemies on the other side by abusing the fact that you can get shots off on them faster than their ability to react as you rapidly close/open the door mid opening-animation.

* God Of War 2018, enemies/bosses who are multiple levels above Kratos' level (and therefore extremely difficult to fight) will have their health bars coloured purple.
* happens to be "1" followed by the local area code. Single ring calls. All. Day. Long.
* Have You Tried Not Being a Monster?: A different kind of metaphor, somewhat more like Fantastic Homophobia.
* "Hello Aloha": Goofy creates a grass hut to live in, but the rains cause it to shrink around him and it turns into a grass skirt for him.
* Goodman Games used the slogan "Third Edition Rules, First Edition Feel" for their
* Godzilla or otherwise, under the gender-neutral pen name Kaoru Mabuchi. They were noticeably less-well-written than his pre-Mabuchi screenplays.
* Hanna-Barbera, having to cling (unsuccessfully) to the side of the hull.
* Hayate the Combat Butler is usually found dressed in a sharp butler suit. The same goes for every other butler such as Klaus, Nonahara, Himuro, and several others. All snappy dressers, all able to dish out brutal beatdowns to anything that threatens their masters/mistresses and friends. Hayate in particular even takes on a more cool, detached attitude as he casually dispatches gunmen, giant robots, and the various weirdos trying to cause him trouble.
* Groucho Marx's birthday party. Groucho coined the term "Vaudeville" to describe Alice's style of music.
* Happy Heroes where Headmaster Tele is accidentally slammed by a door that was opened by one of the heroes.
* Great Ship, Pamir, was the captain of a liner equipped with an ancient bomb-drive.
* grow a foot!" Adam commented, "Have you ever wanted to punch someone but couldn't because you were laughing too hard?"
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix Harry is shown a photograph of the original Order of the Phoenix by Mad-Eye Moody. Harry finds it disturbing, especially since so many of them died shortly after it was taken. In the film version, Sirius shows Harry the photo instead and it's a more tender scene - with Sirius reminiscing on the people he misses.
* Grandfather (not his actual name, but how he is known in history) from
* Heroes of Might and Magic suffers from a bad case of palette swapping when units upgrade. Granted, some bells and whistles are usually added, but it's painfully obvious the models were built from the same sprite.
* Hawkwind, are fond of this trope. Witness 'Space is Dark'', which evokes the Total Perspective Vortex:
* Gorillaz, there is a jellyfish in it that is usually destroyed somehow. Later in the album, there is an entire song based around jellyfish, ironically about trying to get them not killed.
* Haruhi Suzumiya"; Kyon, with less skill but greater character importance than Koizumi, realizes too late he should have bet money, and drops a royal flush on the table.
* granting your opponent an automatic win). This represented the Necrons deciding that they didn't have the strength or strategy to beat the enemy, and pulling out the entire force to regroup and repair.
* God Hand looks like one of these, but not only does Gene need several tugs to do it, it's not even fatal.
* Habbo (A Social Network opened in 2000 at Finland, then gradually released internationally.)
* Grand Theft Auto V has Michael replacing a new model of cell phone with a similar device doctored by Lester. When the head of the company holds a televised press conference to introduce the new model, it explodes and kills him.
* Godzilla has been known to electrify and/or magnetize his body on occasion.
* He's the one person Jason never regretted killing. In fact, the only thing Jason ever regretted about Ra's' death is that he didn't dismantle the League of Assassins right afterward.

* Golden Sun: The Lost Age has this trope in the beginning. In the Tower of the Sea God next to the first town, a boy is trapped on a high ledge and his friend cannot get him down. Even though you save the kid with the Lash Psynergy, both boys coldly thank you and are more concerned about eating something instead of being grateful you didn't leave the kid to starve to death.
* Good Morning, Vietnam' character teaches this trope to the Vietnamese taking his English class.
* Gone Girl that she felt "flattered" by the portrayal and even remarking that the scene of Abbott's on-air grilling of Nick seemed to based on her own on-air analysis of the Scott Peterson case. The only point she criticized was that she thought Abbott's necklaces were "way too tasteful".
* Goldfinger, Oddjob shoots him a smug look before going on the attack.
* Her older sister was a straighter example, pushed into wrestling from a young age and nearly got sent to Japan to train when she was only twelve. For those who don't know, Japanese training is a whole different ball game altogether - pretty much resembling * Greenfire: Inverted when the knight finds Greenfire and Rarity, it's the knight acting like a murderous bully, and it's the dragon who's attempting diplomacy and defending his lady.
* Halo Wars, Sergeant John Forge decides to sacrifice himself to destroy the Shield World, since the bomb he was using had to be activated manually after its remote detonator was irreparably damaged.
* Hellsing dynamic since Pip's taunting and Seras' finger flicking him across the room.
* helpless cases, even going to cry in the bathroom. When Ramsay returned, he was genuinely impressed at how much Lisa had turned it around, one of the few who had updated his menu and on top of that has launched her own wine brand.
* Gorillaz ("Kinky Afro", "Step On”, “Hallelujah”) or Black Grape ("Reverend Black Grape", "In The Name Of The Father").
* good side) and by this mainly being a surprise to the audience (and Sakura): Naruto wasn't that shocked and Sasuke had already made his future intentions known to a number of people present, none of whom said anything because they knew he'd fight it out with Naruto to decide which of their philosophies was superior and they'd given up on any long-term plan beyond "hope that gets settled this go-around".
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged, Alucard responds with this. Doctor Van Helsing is not amused and then proceeds to ram his stake through Alucard's chest.
* G-Rated StonerShowing hippies acting as though they're under the influence without showing any actual drug use.
* Goldie Gold and Action Jack: One episode features a villain who uses chemicals to turn people into stone. He manages to get Jack's hand.
* High School Star Musical, Nayuki confesses his love to Hoshitani - alone in a classroom, passionately worded - and Hoshitani responds that he does, too - he loves the whole team.
* !Hero: The Rock Opera called I.C.O.N. which has banned all religions except for Judaism.
* He doesn't do it as much any more, but in the Silver Age Doctor Doom would die about every other appearance — coming
* Goddess Creation System. Xiaxi knows that Mingyi bores of anything he obtains easily, so she deliberately resists his advances. Not used to having women not fall to his charms, he pays more and more attention to her and becomes fixated on winning her over until he eventually falls in love.
* Grif himself started as the most competent member of the Reds with occasional references to slacking off (most likely because his work would have been utter nonsense anyway). This evolved into extreme sloth and gluttony.
* Halo before finally releasing it, with each shot taking approximately 5 hours to capture, due to having to replay the same campaign stage over and over to try and make each shot as perfect as it could be, due to not being able to control the AI.

* Harry Thaw, while still explicitly being an abusive husband and mentally unstable, was a violent sadist with a plethora of mental instabilities who also led a far more hedonistic lifestyle which, in fairness, probably wasn't permitted to be portrayed in film at that time.
* Guild Wars 2. They are plants that mimic the human form for backstory reasons, including females with breasts, but they are not actually breasts in the mammalian sense and are non-functional in that role — they're simply plant growths that look like breasts.
* Going Berserk's character is recounting a recurring dream to a psychiatrist - it's seen as a parody of the above-mentioned example, where his advances to the girl he's on an island with are constantly rebuffed (in direct contradiction to his narrative) - he goes off to another part of the island to be "alone with his thoughts" as he says, which means to furiously masturbate. He then looks up and finds he's not alone - a cruise ship is passing by with everyone on board watching and laughing at him. As he ends the story, he's dismayed to find the psychiatrist laughing uproariously.
* Granblue Fantasy, Tiamat has red veins near her eyes when Freesia corrupts her using the Dark Essence.
* Gundam (and normal fighters) but, depending on the series, can have more or less firepower to make it a battleship.
* Heathers, the heroine tries to prevent her high school from being blown up by a time bomb.
* Happens constantly in politics. When a politician is polling at 5%, they can be a political gadfly, constantly taking principled, unpopular stances. Once they get up to 40% and there's a chance they could actually
* Goliath and Lexington pull this off among a roof-full of their structural descendants to ambush The Pack.
* Herself the Elf. It seems like every elf's individual powers will be used to save the day, but their powers are a hindrance individually, the wands stop working due to Herself's magic fading and they're captured before long. Then Willow Song uses her voice-changing powers just long enough to distract Thorn to get the wand back, and everyone else uses their powers to stop the villains and escape safely.
* Glenn Beck loved the Spider-Man musical. making stuff up, even though the AV Club is the non-satire section. It's not a joke. He really did enjoy the musical.
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child: Harry has been having Professor McGonagall spy on his son Albus using the Marauder's Map to keep him from his best friend, Scorpius Malfoy, and finally comes to see it as a bad idea, so he goes to McGonagall to have her help find Albus to apologize.
* Gone with the Blastwave the red army promotes solely based on kill count.
* Guitar Hero: "The Grim Ripper" is one of the optional characters in some versions of the games. He plays a pretty mean scythe.
* Hard Times: Thomas Gradgrind is a more mundane example; as a believer in utilitarianism, he seeks to root out any "fanciful ideas" from his pupils and have them care about nothing but cold, hard facts.
* Hanna-Barbera Mutilor, who has no qualms about disrupting Megakat City's ecosystem.
* Harlan Ellison wrote a story, "Laugh Track," about a woman whose ghost possessed all of the laugh tracks on TV (because her laughter appeared on the tape that was copied to make all of them), and instead of laughing complained loudly about the quality of the shows concerned and television in general.
* Grandville call the furless underclass "doughfaces". Prejudice against them is so widespread that we're several books in before the lead character even learns that they call themselves "humans".
* Harry asks the Gringotts goblins to locate a parachute for him. One of them asks why he could possibly want one.
* Gordon R. Dickson, a human is placed on trial in a galactic court for insulting an alien. He is found guilty and sentenced to be "confined" by his fiancée for a year, with all expenses paid by the insulted alien. The judge recommends they spend the year at a very expensive vacation spot.

* Happy Heroes. Big M. them promptly smacks Huo into the screen, and he slides downward.
* Gravity Falls Pines who comes up with the idea to erase himself, along with Bill, once and for all.
* Heptapod written language. They don't even bother with the speech, unlike the original short story, where speech turns out to be relatively easy to translate.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Himaruya has flirted with the idea that Germany is Holy Roman Empire with a memory loss for a long time, but he has yet to confirm it.
* he screwed it up as always and it had to be mothballed after it was discovered pies to the face lose their humor when they fly at 300 miles per hour.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, snow accompanies a moment between Kyon and Yuki, in which Kyon declares that should anything happen to her, he'll set out with Haruhi to save her. It's worth nothing that one reading of "Yuki" (雪) means "snow."
* Gunfight at the OK Corral episode "Spectre of the Gun", which featured a recreation of the gunfight.
* grocery shopping was often referred to in Quebec as "faire son Steinberg" (doing one's Steinberg) regardless of the chain.
* Green Tea Rescue: Toga creates a group chat for the newly minted Dekusquad, which most of the group treats like a normal chatroom complete with emojis and abbreviations. Iida, on the other hand, introduces himself in a massive post with perfect grammar and punctuation, much to everyone else's amusement.
* Goat Simulator, calling the class "the stealthiest makeup artist in the world".
* Hermione goes to give Harry a message from Ginny but gets distracted by his choice of reading material.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City: A radio ad for hairspray mentions that using the product may cause dry mouth, dilated pupils, paranoia, heart palpitations, and nosebleeds — and also, your hair will look great.
* GURPS. Even Reich-5, which was conquered by the Axis powers, is still full of minor nations that were too insignificant to directly take over and/or voluntarily joined the Axis.
* Here Comes Peter Cottontail The Movie: Irontail does not like being called by his real name, Fluffy.
* Harry Thorson is also a prodigy, if not even more so than Dresden — by the age of 14, he's wielding the kind of laser-like beams of energy and high-end temperature manipulation that Dresden didn't master until he was in his mid thirties. It's implied that he gets this from his mother, and that both relate to
* Graf Spee" hoisting her battle ensigns had to be filmed aboard one of the British ships, and the German crew were filmed wearing American-style helmets. The producers have been criticised for the latter "mistake", but they had no choice.
* Going back further, the Galactic Empire has also been compared with
* Going Under: When Jacqueline is asking Ray about the boss of Winkydink's weaknesses, and he thinks sh means mental ones:
* Godzilla (2014) that's seen up-close by the audience; taking place in an apocalyptic San Francisco.
* Gothika should have just been named Red Herring, it was so obvious that's what he was.
* Highschool of the Dead House of the Dead" which could easily be written as THotD but it's still HotD.
* Here Come the Brides, the actress playing Gertrude relentlessly hits on him and kisses him between scenes.
* Hero Realms does this a bit literally. Character Packs are custom starting decks based on traditional Fantasy RPG classes. Each pack comes with Character Cards and Health Trackers, with each having one side featuring a male version of the Character, and on the other side with a female version. Other than aesthetics, the gameplay is not effected.
* Highlander: Endgame aired in theatres had some unfinished special effects and was missing several plot critical scenes. This was all fixed in the DVD and VHS releases.
* Have I Got News for You and Janet Street-Porter as guests, then the following year they both happened to be booked the same week again. Angus Deayton lampshades this by joking that due to a legal loophole, it's cheaper for the BBC to film the same episode over and over again rather than just repeat it.

* . He doesn't even recognise her, although in his case it's because he's so full of himself that he doesn't bother to remember faces. Add in his sexism and Rhuna's a blank doll to him. In the ensuing fight, Rhuna took extra special pleasure in reminding him who she was.
* Hell's? Even if that's not the name given, the restaurant is clearly split up into two teams.
* Gottlieb. However, the actual game rules make no reference to any of this, and it's easy to treat the game as a conventional, non-violent auto race.
* Godspeed and cough incesentally, telling the audience that he really is dying.
* Half-Life 2: the dreaded pulse projectile only deals 15 damage to Gordon, they can't throw the grenades the ordinary Overwatch soldier is known and feared for using, and their health is negligibly higher than normal Overwatch.
* He does get some facts right, though. For example, his "fact" regarding the melting point of tungsten
* High School Dx D: Sona's type of man is someone who can use their brain the way she can. She was once engaged, but when her fiancé failed to beat her in chess she dumped him right then and there.
* her brutal, reasonless, proud torture to their mother Tailtiu/Ethnia... and especially on Tailtiu, because the player knew her as a bright, cheerful cutie
* High Plains Drifter is in fact the spirit of the dead town marshal, who was beaten to death by the outlaws threatening the town and is now out for revenge on them. Unfortunately for the townspeople, since they betrayed him to them and then stood back and watched them beat him to death, he's not very happy at them either...
* Harry Potter shows what Harry's son experienced as a Hogwarts student.
* Halo 5: Guardians, two of the power weapons you can requisition in the "Warzone" multiplayer mode are the "Void's Tear", a plasma pistol with special overcharge shots that can suck in and tear apart even tanks, and the T-50δ, a beam rifle which creates an unstable gravimetric vortex at wherever it fires at.
* Heroic Sacrifice, giving up the last of his life energy to help save the thousands of people trapped in New New York's underground traffic system.
* Heroes: Primatech, for most of the series. Later on, the Department of Homeland Security gets in on the action.
* Half-Life series, Gordon Freeman's presence alone means trouble is coming. As soon as he completes his mission, he's either put into stasis or incapacitated. He returns only when there's something new to do. Poor guy never gets a break. It doesn't go unnoticed, either.
* Grand Canyon after Kevin Kline acts as matchmaker for both of them. On their first date, they realize that they're probably the only two black people he knows and laugh about it.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, the title character finds out that a guy on a subway that he hit for harassing some woman is who will be interviewing him for a job and he says to himself that he might have just shit himself.
* God commands the Israelites that they are never to take revenge on the Egyptians at any time after the Exodus, because, regardless of the wrongs the Egyptians had inflicted on the Israelites, they had also been the Israelites' hosts at first; the implication is that the Egyptians had suffered enough from the Seven Plagues that the Almighty had visited upon them, a hard point to contest.
* Harley Quinn (2019) gives Poison Ivy a talking Audrey II-esque potted plant sidekick named Frank, who is introduced semi-apologetically spitting out the neighbors' remains.
* Good Vibes episode after episode. It most certainly helps that the show's setting is a beach town.
* Happened again in ROH with the move to Sinclair Broadcast Group leaving Mia Yim the lone woman on a roster that usually had twenty eight wrestlers for a television taping, though more women came back around the end of the year.

* Grasshopper Jungle. It really sparks after Robby convinces Austin to kiss him, so he, Robby, could at least know how it feels to kiss another guy.
* Gotham has been devastated by an earthquake, and abandoned by the government. With the bridges bombed and the waterways mined, the population is cut off and food supplies are limited. A journalist hires a pilot to fly him over so he can drop food and get footage of people fighting over it. One of the items, an apple, is considered so precious that it eventually makes its way to The Penguin, who auctions it off to a crowd in return for
* Grand Moff Tarkin and other expanded material later increased his appearances and prominence and have retroactively turned him into one of the top threats of the entire franchise.
* Hellboy: Scenes involving Hellboy's childhood and the early years of the BPRD are sometimes set at the Roswell Army Air Field, where the Bureau was based until the famous 1947 spaceship crash. (It's possible that they might've been able to stay there, were it not for an incident involving kid Hellboy, his dog Mac, and some of the residue from the ship. In the aftermath, it was decided that the time had come for the Bureau to go its own way, at which point it moved to the Connecticut facility seen in stories set during Hellboy's tenure as a BPRD agent.)
* Gravity Falls: Legend of the Gnome Gemulets because they lost these things one way or another. Soos lost some floppy disks, and when he asks you to look for them, he explains they're an old form of data storage and that they're really good for keeping things secret since most computers don't have a way to read them any more. Wendy wants cassette tapes that her dad apparently threw out the car window on a road trip, but she doesn't feel the need to explain what they are, though she does make it clear through context (specifically mentioning that her dad "doesn't appreciate good music").
* Hades Theseus a tricked-out chariot when you fight him with Extreme Measures 3 on. He quickly becomes attached to his new ride, berates you for damaging it, and if you destroy it in battle he may call on the gods of Olympus to avenge his beloved chariot.
* Hercules) fill this role. As Zeus puts it, he has the heart of a horse and the brain of a bird. He still helps the main characters by flying them around and helping fight against Hades, and even licks Hercules and Phil's faces a few times.
* Hawke stick with them at all times or briefly send them off to help the ordinary soldiers. Nothing much comes of it either way, it's just a minor touch.
* God Hand, but it's usually easier to kick them in. That's just the way Gene is.
* Hannah Montana The Movie, during the filming of the video for "The Best of Both Worlds", the CD that they're lip-syncing to keeps repeating, "Best of both, best of both, best of both..." until the CD player gets smacked, and it finally ends, "Best of both worlds."
* Henry VIII of England was a brilliant Renaissance man who wrote several works and enjoyed sports, particularly hunting and jousting. At the same time though, he lacked political skills, leaving the running of England to his chancellors.
* Help! when the Beatles visit the Indian Restaurant "seeking enlightenment as to rings" from someone from "the mystic East" but quickly learn that everyone working there is English.
* Guardians of the Galaxy (mentor of the film's director, James Gunn) appear as an inmate in the Kyln.
* Hey Arnold! episode "Miss Perfect" has Rhonda wanting to impress the sixth grade girls with her new outfit. But Lila shows up wearing the exact same outfit that the sixth grade girls are instantly impressed by since they think Lila pulls it off better than Rhonda.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, Umbridge maliciously speaks to Hagrid in this unpleasant manner in order to make him look dumb and oafish, setting him up so she can fire him later. Hagrid responds in the same manner while trying to communicate what thestrals are, albeit in a confused and would-be helpful manner rather than a malicious one.
* Goodness Gracious Me are played for laughs. This is in the context of their finding Britain hard to understand, and embarrassing or otherwise hindering their British-born children, who are more at home with the cultural norms of the land of their birth. The clash between the Asian-born and British-born generations of Indian/Pakistani families is a staple of the show's humour.

* Gold Digger's final boss: a giant multidimensional rock, composed of the big-crunch singularity from the Ancients' Universe when they escaped into Gina's. Her goal as the protagonist is to use the ancients' tools to synch the giant mass or something before everyone in her universe is stoned to death.
* Highschool of the Dead, Daisuke Sato, passed away at age 52 due to ischemic heart disease, severely lowering its chances of returning from its extended hiatus. Illustrator Shoji Sato maintains that, while not impossible, continuation has become more difficult in light of the former's passing.
* Godzilla vs. Kong), he's still portrayed as being utterly crazy for believing in things like lizard people and the government controlling people via fluoride in tap water.
* Half-Life 2 starts where main game ends, continues through the night, and ends the next day sometime in the late morning.
* Godzilla Save The Earth, Megalon would be healed if he was struck by electric attacks, rendering King Ghidorah, Mecha-King Ghidorah, and opponent Megalons' ranged weapons useless. Rodan is simularly immune to fire. Mecha-King Ghidorah was weak to all ranged weapons, but if he has his energy shield up when the beam first strikes he restores some health instead and the rest of the beam is rendered completely ineffective.
* Gypsy Tales: In "The Gypsy Woman and the Devil", the devil grows possessive of Vunida once she refuses to marry him. He refuses to let her go to see her starving children and, when she escapes his palace, turns her into a cherry tree so "[they] will eat of [her] flesh and drink of [her] blood."
* High School A.U.: An AU fanfic in which the characters are high school students.
* Grant Mitchell finding out about the affair between his wife Sharon and brother Phil.
* Hello, which went through a phase of interviewing celebrity couples and taking lots of photographs of how happy they were in their multi-million-pound country home only to discover that in every case, messy and acrimonious divorce followed shortly afterwards.
* Hey Arnold!, "Mudbowl": With the 4th graders trailing the 5th graders 42–0 at halftime of a game of (American) football, the pivotal moment is Phoebe switching in Arnold as quarterback to replace Helga.
* Haley was drawn into combat with a group of thieves who have a tendency to yell out "Sneak Attack!" when they perform a sneak attack. With the introduction of a fighter class mook, said mook yells out "Power Attack!" when he attacks and is immediately informed that he shouldn't yell out his attacks. The fighter then complains that the rogues get to yell out things when they attack.
* Head Over Heels is a messy, but realistic deconstruction of this trope, as both of the main characters seem to be in love with each other to the point it drives them to do horrific acts. However a lot of their delusions about love comes from psychological projection from their pasts, which shows that the ideals of a yandere won't stand in the real world. It's even the page image.
* Heroes: When Kirk is gone hunting for weapons material for a long time, Spock scolds him.
* Hardy Bucks when Eddie leads the rest of the people in attendance to protest, and continue the wedding, not caring their orientation.
* Heroic Sacrifice. However, considering that good-quality cars are equipped with safety devices (safety belt and airbags, for example), the driver would be, at least theoretically, better protected than the children, as these devices are placed inside the car and not outside.
* Happy Endings: Max and Jane get into a dispute leading to a Zombie Apocalypse Olympics that tests athletic prowess, ability to be still, aim, and ruthlessness. Jane eventually wins by demonstrating ruthlessness in pushing Max out in front of a group of hungry, hungry hipsters, even though Max had earlier claimed that ruthlessness was his strong suit.

* Green Eggs and Ham (2019)", McWinkle and Gluntz. McWinkle is serious, mostly stoic, no-nonsense, and always focused on his job while Gluntz is happy-go-lucky, hyperactive, enthusiastic, and can get a bit distracted at times.
* Heya Camp for something, mostly to mess with Nadeshiko. In the second season, her sister Akari joins in the fun at Nadeshiko's expense.
* Gordon Freeman when he notices spilled water isn't flowing down the tilted floor, but swirling around the group's ankles.
* Harry, in order to protect Ginny, arranges for a few Death Eater kids to overhear them arguing about a fake prophecy, one claiming harm to Ginny will result in Harry unlocking his full potential.
* Highlander, Connor's older brother/cousin performs one to save Connor from the Kurgan's attack during the battle of the clans at the start.
* Goofy is portrayed as such a father in the Disney short about parenting.
* Gonzo blowing a bugle at the end of the opening, with something funny happening, like smoke blowing from it or weird music resulting. The first season had Gonzo striking the "O" in the show's logo like a gong with humorous results.
* gnolls, and he's just plain not interested in an interspecies relationship (by gnoll standards they're actually pretty hot catches). Two of the daughters are incredibly forward and eager; it's never shown onscreen but when the middle daughter tries to actually use sex to win him over, it's implied he reacts badly. When he succumbs to the fact that he's not going to get out of this, he chooses the third daughter, who's surly and completely unwilling. When his father asks why he chose her over her cheerful, willing sisters, he points out that if he has to marry one of them he might as well choose the one he agrees with and who will, more importantly, be equally as miserable with the arrangement.
* Grimm form to keep her cover safe when Ironwood attacks their meeting with Adam in chapter 40. Adam, for his part, catches on quickly, and talks about having "lost the hostage" in earshot of Ironwood's men.
* Golden Sun. He also inexplicably never needs to pay to stay at an inn.
* Griffons always had a following due to Gilda, but they received a boost after more griffons began appearing. Even
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Quill's Awesome Mix Tape switches from playing on his Walkman/tape deck to playing in the film's background.
* Gold Digger: the trolls, the elves, the Atlanteans, and the Kryn. The "new" versions did such a thorough job, and continued the originals' culture so well, that the change had been lost to history for millennia.
* Hey Arnold!, "Cool Party": Gerald is certain that he's cool enough to be invited to Rhonda's party, mostly because his best friend Arnold has already been invited as well. Hard cut to Rhonda telling her best friend Nadine that Gerald has been put on the geek list, much to Nadine's surprise...and Gerald's when he finds out from Phoebe.
* Hey Arnold! ended with Big Bob Pataki rushing through a small bush blocking the path (after interrupting Arnold that they have to go around it) to get back to his campsite after a disastrous hike. This bush, of course, was poison ivy, causing him more misery.
* Grosse Pointe Blank, Felix puts a potato-sized lump of plastic explosive in a microwave at a convenience store in an attempt to kill Martin.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban was released in North America on June 4, 2004, coinciding with a full moon.
* Haruhi Suzumiya: Haruhi's SOS Brigade doesn't look like this... until you expand the acronym and find that the second S stands for Suzumiya.
* Hazbin Hotel, Tom Trench makes a joke about lusting for Cherri Bomb, who shows a lot of skin in her outfit as she appears in the footage. A short while afterwards, Charlie mentions Cherri Bomb's protege Angel Dust, and Tom Trench immediately recognizes Angel Dust as a porn star.
* Growing the Beard's rise in quality has also affected their sequels.
* Harley Quinn (2019), King Shark returns to his home in the ocean so he can marry Tabitha of the hammerheads to prevent a war between the kingdoms. Neither of them want to go through with it, so King Shark confronts his father and makes a big show of decline. When he returns to the surface, he reveals that he changed his mind minutes later and went through with it because he couldn't refuse his father.

* Happy Yarou Wedding, Todou used to and it earned him the nickname "King of the Night" as well as got him kicked out of his dad's house. Yuuhi is implied to have a pretty long string of girlfriends as well, who he dated simply because they asked.
* Good Eats, as Alton often uses props to explain biochemical concepts that relate to food and cooking.
* Hex Hall, was "Too Near the Glass". It went on submission as "Demonglass", which ended up being the title of book 2 instead.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, then confesses in person and suggests they go on a date sometime.
* Godzilla: Final Wars. Gigan can even use these chainsaws like rudimentary tank tracks, jamming the ends into the ground and using them to accelerate forward at quite impressive speeds.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, often have Shion Sonozoaki serve this role. Images of her crazed laughter and psychotic expressions she had during her gradual mental deterioration will be used in other, often sillier contexts. The image of her laughing at Rika's suicide is especially popular to use. It doesn't help that her methods of trolling really were pretty nasty.
* Hey Arnold! Despite all of his attempts to correct the mistake, Ruth treats Arnold like a servant and talks to him dismissively throughout the episode until she and the Busboy leave to have fun elsewhere.
* Gregor Clegane. In the same season, his younger brother Sandor decapitates a Brotherhood marauder in one swing with a wood axe.
* Halloween Episode; when he crashes the Juice Bar's party, everyone there assumes he's just another party-goer.
* Hangmen Also Die! and tells him to run, only to shoot him in the back.
* He does it again, this time with an actual clipboard (while posing as "Klaus Hergesheimer, G Section") in
* Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters. Hansel and the white witch Mina make love after she heals his wounds. During the final battle, the evil witch Muriel kills Mina.
* Gravity Falls: Stan’s red and white classic car, which he’s had since his teenage years and is still in great shape.
* Have excruciatingly slow acceleration because they rely on very subtle forces, but are very fuel efficient or use fuel in the space around them. (This allows them to reach speeds greater than conventional rockets, since they are able to accelerate for a longer period of time, given adequate fuel.)
* Hero System. Every +5 doubles the amount of weight the character can normally lift (an average human in good shape at STR 10 is considered able to briefly lift, if not really move with, up to 100 kilograms or about 220 pounds; thus, the usual by-the-book human maximum of 20 is already four times that), and Strength is pretty cheap as characteristics go (one character point per +1, twice that past 20 for "normal" people). As a result, superstrong "brick" characters are a perennial stock archetype especially in the superheroic genre where normal human characteristics maxima don't apply.
* Gravity Falls": Bill's forces fly out into the sky to spread their chaos to the world, only to unexpectedly run splat into an invisible wall, then sliding down with the usual noise.
* Gundam SEED, the asteroid sized mirrors need replaced each time they're fired.
* Harriet the Spy, only Harriet deliberately stomps and knocks over some chairs after the cook tells her to be quiet. Also in the original novel.
* Gorf. The range of a shot was limited by when you wanted to fire again. Your shot would last forever, or until the edge of the screen, or until you shoot next.
* Hannah Montana: Oliver pretends to be obsessed with aliens to get Joannie to dump him. It almost works, but Oliver eventually subverts this trope and breaks up with her himself.
* Grand Theft Auto III could swim (and nobody else could) so often just leaping out into open water was a viable escape strategy. And funny, if anyone tried to follow.

* Harry was raised by an abusive human family he has to come back on summer breaks and despite the books never excusing Dursley's behavior and Harry clearly tolerating them at best, they are still treated by the narrative as his true family with an outright magical bond of blood
* Global Justice, an international crimefighting agency who sometimes call on
* Gordon Ramsay because when he was growing up, 'cooking was for poofs', and his father even accused him of being gay.
* He mocks the new Kira and tells him that he is a disgrace to the original one, and said Kira kills himself.
* Hardanger Fiddle. Lots of fiddle tunes are attributed to the devil, and the idea of the fiddle music leading to fights and moral corruption spread during the mid-1800s. A certain psychotic woman and preacher was particularly vicious and scared a lot of fiddlers from playing. The result was that a lot of instruments were burned or buried. The tunes survived because a flute or a cither was less sinful.
* GoldenEye flips out when Natalya "spikes" his computer, which also prevents him from disconnecting his computer from hers, and rips it apart to break the connection. Considering the fact that he could have just shut off the computer, or, even easier, turned off the internet connection (pull out the ethernet cord or shutdown a router), the apparently thousands of dollars of damage he inflicts on the computer is really stupid.
* Henry (Most likely not; he doesn't tend to curse other people as easily as Tharja does.)
* Hearts of Iron is entirely told from the perspective of a single character living in a specific part of Oceania), the modders imagined various details to fill the blanks:
* Hail To The Queen, after Amity ran off the join the rebellion, the Blight family progressively lost status and prestige, especially in comparison to Boscha's family, who are now further ahead than they ever were. Blight Industries productions took major nosedives, and with Edric and Emira unlikely to become coven leaders, the family became the butt of many jokes among the elite.
* Goblins are likewise content to get mowed down en masse because they breed even faster than kobolds. Orcs do it too, but mainly just 'cause they're dumb, overconfident, and have no sense of tactics.
* Greek Mythology waged war against the Titans and won, although they didn't kill them (You see two every time you look up at the sky)
* Hidden Object Game Finding and clicking on him opened a screen which enabled the player to enter a contest, the winner of whom got to have his or her likeness included in a later MCF game. (Humorously, the contest ended in March 2007 - but they never removed the contest from the game. This means that if you buy the game even now, Felix is in there and clicking on him will still bring up that screen.)
* Glee song to teach sex ed), teaching Spanish grammar with sentences about Lindsey Lohan's rehab or playing out Mary Todd Lincoln's bipolar rants in history class.
* Haven actually has two meet cutes-Nathan saves her when her car is about to fall over a cliff and later Duke rescues her from drowning after being knocked into the water after being hit by lightning, then washes her clothes and makes her coffee.
* Gummi Bears are like the fantasy version of the Beagle Boys: they wear bandit masks and use road bandit cloth all the time. Disregarding the fact that they ARE trolls (small green humanoids) and can easily be recognized.
* Her actress, Jean Hagan, was actually a talented vocalist, as heard in scenes where Lina's spoken dialogue is being dubbed over to sound less shrill.
* Guitarist Stuart Zechman, a member of Stabbing Westward who also did some work with the band
* Harry Potter, and in fact firmly establishes Voldemort as irredeemably evil in Harry's mind when he realises that he can be presented with such fanatical, unconditional devotion and not love her back, not even a little bit.
* He is not the only one that suffers (or is very popular) due to this rule. In fact most of
* Hana has this with two of her potential husbands, Jakob and Silas, who focus on serving and protecting Corrin above all else. She does the exact same thing for her liege, Princess Sakura.

* Grant Morrison was a succession of these instead of the routine superhero stuff: high school drama, sci-fi, murder mystery...
* Gregory's Girl, where Gregory asks out a girl he has been crushing on, only to find himself passed between three other girls instead. However, the last one actually loves him as well, so it all works out.
* H-E Double Hockey Sticks intraconference (like 1978's Bruins/Canadiens matchup) and even intradivision Stanley Cup Finals (like 1980's Flyers/Islanders matchup) were allowed in order to make the Cup Final more competitive while the NHL sorted out their interconference parity problem.
* Halloween (2018)) in a mirror of how he murdered Lynda in the first film. Old habits die hard.
* Highlander falls into this to a point — not everyone realizes there were movies first.
* Hamlet everyone but the titular character is too sycophantic and unintelligent to see that their new king Claudius is a usurper of the throne.
* he looks intelligent and well-dressed!" Each man is accompanied by his exasperated, eye-rolling wife.
* Henry Stickmin Series that she will overload a rocket and escape through the exhaust by the forward left booster rocket. Charles agrees, but ends up on the other side of the rocket because he confused her left with his.
* Grease: Marty Maraschino has this problem right when it will do the most damage.
* Heroic BSoD, that after everything is over, she'll help her return to her old self and she can use her time however she wishes. After Arf leaves the infirmary, Fate wakes up and after thinking about how Arf has always been there for her and Nanoha's constantly reaching out to her, teleports into the Garden of Time to help them.
* he also points out people who lie to themselves. It puts a strain on their friendship for a while.
* Guns in Church: It may be unrealistic that the heroes are allowed to take their guns anywhere without consequence, but stopping to explain it would take time away from cool and exciting action sequences.
* Global Frequency: The police officer who arrived on the scene where Grushko "did all those terrible things" still wets himself whenever he sees cutlery.
* Hellgate: London: After the Templar Grandmaster pulls off the dumbest move in human history (sending his ENTIRE army towards the literal gates of Hell), his second-in-command is scrambling to undo as much of the slaughter as he can by extracting soldiers, but doesn't have enough subway cars... until he makes a quip about going out there himself and shoving them on the trains - Ding. Cue an old steam train from the 1800s, augmented with supernatural technology to get as many soldiers out of the battlefield as possible.
* Harry Potter, Remus' father Lyall hits Remus when he is too casual with his teachers or has attitude towards Lyall or Remus' mother, Hope.
* Hakase also goes into a long rant with a speech bubble the size of your fist filled with tiny writing where she babbles to herself about Chachamaru's emotions.
* Halloween has Laurie and Annie, the latter of whom ends up with a slashed throat while Laurie ends up with a slashed shoulder, broken ankle, and a cut-up hand.
* Guilty Gear. The victory pose where she lets it down and about a third of it drags on the ground around her seems impressive, but you slowly realize it can somehow grow a lot longer than that when you see the ends of her hair tunnel into the ground, then come up and stab someone five feet away.
* Heroes of Olympus, Piper breaks up with her boyfriend Jason. She comments that it felt fake and forced, like she wasn't being her true self when she was with him. She eventually is shown with a female love interest, which turns the coding into actual text. But whether or not she was actually attracted to men is now up for debate.
* Glory. Black soldiers, many of them former slaves, go down fighting against slavery.
* Grantchester is set in the 1950s and often deals with how World War Two continues to affect an entire generation.

* Gottlieb would start, whereupon the player can move the caveman with a joystick to hunt dinosaurs. The player could return to the pinball game if he exited the maze, but getting eaten by a T. rex would drain the ball.
* GURPS Alvin Maker himself. (It's possible that this one is simply waiting for him to finish writing the actual series...) Again, the license agreement will have expired.
* Harry's Madness has Harry Potter snap during his hearing for underage magic use and begin violently murdering his enemies, culminating in his becoming an eldritch horror and raising a legion of evil that makes Voldemort's look like amateurs to conquer England and possibly the world.
* Heart Is an Awesome Power: Weak in itself; amazing in its applications, but only if you have the imagination.
* Guardians of the Galaxy – Mission: BREAKOUT! attraction in EPCOT.
* Halloween Episode causing a Halloween prank by defacing a statue outside the school - dressing it up like a wicked witch. She then frames Ginger for it so she can get the lead in the Halloween play - which coincidentally is a Salem Witch Trials story. Once Ginger discovers the truth, she sneaks on stage and the rest of the cast out Miranda as the culprit while they're performing the scene where her character is accused of witchcraft.
* Guns make an appearance on occasion being essentially an equalizer between nobles who use magic and plebs who cannot though only a few well-trained musketeers are ever seen using them.
* He also immediately chains it into the "HANDS-OFF-MY-BELOVED-LITTLE-BROTHER-PUNCH!!!", which breaks the arm of the Gunmen he was riding in. It's a two-parter!
* Gundam knockoffs. Bandai had issued a lawsuit against its parent company, but market demand is large enough to resurrect the company from the brink of death. The shoddy part comes from the fact that, while the models are 90% accurate, it has excessively bad quality control such as extremely brittle plastic and toxic dust.
* Hanna-Barbera animated special, Alice chases her dog through the family TV set and into Wonderland.
* Gundam Wing takes place in relation to the main series (for the record, MC 0022 corresponds to the early 220s in AC).
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince film, there was at least one instance of one of the Slug Club events (the small party for the inner circle) where the food (namely chocolate cake) was revealed and was replaced with every take.
* Henry V the ambassador's entry — the Dauphin's insult just gives him an excuse.
* Heartwarming Moments: Moments that the audience finds endearing and sweet.
* Heracles). Another time he was forced to work as a man-servant for a woman for several years. While wearing a dress.
* Grand Fisher — The Hollow who ate Ichigo's mom and significantly more powerful than any of the other hollows Ichigo fights in the first arc. Unlike most starter villains, he actually isn't killed right away, and actually comes back later
* High Roller Casino which itself was placed above a short ramp that would dunk the ball into a model of a slot machine, whose arm would descend whenever it's activated. In addition, there was a spinning roulette wheel that the ball could fall into and a set of drop targets with stand-up targets behind them that would generate poker hands based on the order they're hit.
* Grand Theft Auto V: Franklin is represented by green, while Michael is blue and Trevor is orange.
* Hawaii Five-0 a girl is seemingly kidnapped by her boyfriend who killed her father. The team find evidence the girl was abused by her dad and the boyfriend was trying to help her. But as they dig deeper, they realize the evidence is fake and the girl was using the man to kill her father so she could inherit his million-dollar life insurance policy. The girl arranges for her dupe "boyfriend" to be killed by the cops and talks of him as a madman attacking her family. But not only does the team know the truth but in interrogation, they drop the bomb: Wanting to make sure her college education was paid for, her father stopped payments on his life insurance so the policy had lapsed. Kono openly snaps "you've got nothing" as they leave the girl to spend her life in prison.

* God of War (PS4), when Kratos sees a vision of Atreus holding his deceased mother, the latter flat-out admits that he wished that his father is dead instead of her.
* Henry V; at the beginning, we get to see some glimpses of the backstage. As the film goes on, it gets less and less theatrical, presumably corresponding to the audience's increased immersion in the plot.
* hasn't accompanied its brutal repression or wars of aggression with colourful posters of smiling babies and clear blue skies and healthy, hard-working, and attractive young mothers, students, farmers, and soldiers striving for a Brighter Tomorrow.
* Griffons often hunt and eat hippogriffs as a result of their obsession with horse meat, and also eagerly prey on harpies.
* Halo: during the Great Schism, many former Covenant soldiers who were betrayed by the Prophets or simply disagree with the Covenant religion ally with the humans against those still loyal to the Prophets.
* Hades showing infant versions of Zagreus, Thanatos, and Megaera playing with Cerberus, who's more than willing to let them.
* Heather Husband, one of Maddie's old classmates, still refuses to believe that she and her brother Levi are innocent, and in the first episode, she and her husband Brian decide to frame Levi for assault so that he'll lose his job and get sent back to jail.
* Hanasakeru Seishounen has a heart attack after seeing a picture of Rumaty who he thought was Mahaty. He recovers in the next episode.
* Hard Eight, Clementine calls Sydney "captain", because, as she explains, he looks like a captain on a ship. Sydney accepts this, but he gently chides John when he tries to use it on him.
* Henry Fielding seems to like to subvert this trope for particular effect: In * High School D×D ways. It blatantly crosses over into this trope when Issei gets another three female housemates at once without complaint, and when the family house is renovated into a six-storey mansion overnight to accommodate everyone (in opulence at that), they awake the next morning and happily remark how nice it is to have the extra living space.
* Hercules: The Animated Series: Typhon, father of all monsters, is terrorizing Athens and Zeus arrives to stop him and they have this exchange:
* High School Dx D, Gasper Vladi's Sacred Gear, Forbidden Balor View, can temporarily freeze everything.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, even though he has the intelligence of an 11th grader.
* Haban II is an... odd example. Originally just a gate clone of DoytHaban he got shot in the head, killing Doyt but leaving the Haban AI unaffected. Medical technology allowed the missing brain tissue to be regrown but as a blank slate, allowing Haban to... move in.
* Grand Theft Me: The Snatcher has a body, but they want a new one. Yours.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch plays the director of The Grandpa Fred show and he voiced the gremlin that was shot by Brain Gremlin and the one in the witch costume.
* Hatsumomo and still maintain the gracefulness that they once had when they were prosperous.
* Hatoful Boyfriend saying "I myself allow sexual Hatoful fan arts of course. Have fun!" When she links fanart it's always gen, but those same artists have often drawn more explicit work. A personal friend of hers draws a great deal of explicit material about her work, including pornographic doujins.
* Heavy Metal as Taarna, the last Tarakian, prepares to fight her zombie-like enemies, in a leather bikini and stripper boots.
* Good Omens place is, is it easy to get to from Vienna? The demon Crowley speculates this hypothetical visitor has just arrived from Italy, where nobdy seemed to know where Florence was and kept trying to direct them to some damn place called Fiorenze.

* Hey Arnold!. However, by the end of the episode, she's inspired to write a new book based on her experience with Arnold.
* Granblue Fantasy are weak to these, as shown in Veight's second Fate Episode.
* He also gets whacked upside the head by Reno's Nightstick — which did send him stumbling, but he recovers remarkably fast.
* Hey Arnold! The Movie: Doesn't involve Scheck himself, as he's already been cuffed and thrown into a police truck, but Grandpa's back up plan to blow a hole in the street to protect the neighborhood (in case Arnold failed) winds up backfiring anyway when the explosives go off under the FTI information building, causing the whole thing (along with the big TV with footage of Scheck being played) to collapse and fall down.
* Heckler & Koch G11 thanks to its unique loading mechanism. Unfortunately, despite being a huge success, the cost inefficiency has terminated its production.
* Hamlet He finally gets around to the one person he was supposed to be killing, Claudius, only after the latter has poisoned Gertrude and gotten Laertes to poison Hamlet who then gets accidentally poisoned by Hamlet. So it could be argued that every death that occurs from the start of the play onward is all Hamlet's fault.
* Guilty Gear featured English voiceovers for all the non-Japanese characters, though this didn't carry over to the actual game.
* Goodbye Yeet Academy, dead students are sent to a theater to watch their peers continue in the death game. They cannot interact with the living, but they may move objects and leave behind scents.
* Haruhi Suzumiya Also, there's the Agency that Itsuki belongs to and whoever runs the time travellers.
* Hilda adult deerfoxes in one episode that are the size of deer, howl like wolves, and climb the aurora borealis to their own alternate dimension.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, and that telling her friends would have been useless. Then she mocks them and starts laughing out loud... before bursting into tears, as she understands fully well that this may not have been the right choice.
* Here Come the Brides, one of the women woos a lumberjack by describing all the dishes she knows how to make.
* Great Expectations was left at the altar and swore revenge against all men, so she adopted a baby girl named Estella and raised her to be a sociopathic heart-breaker.
* Haley doesn't ask the dirt farmers for a reward; when Elan comments, she
* Half-Life 2 call them "Our Benefactors". Enough people buy into it that there is a significant population of collaborators and volunteers for trans-human transformation, though most people you encounter in the game are either actively resisting or resigned to the situation. There's the implication that the Combine once had a better PR campaign, but stopped bothering as soon as Earth was fully pacified, to the point that they don't even put up new propaganda posters anymore. The Vortigaunts, at least, are more than willing to help humanity against their common enemy.
* He's playing it up to freak out the surface-dwellers that were with him; they were horrified by the notion of eating meat, and he seems to enjoy making fun of their delicate sensibilities.
* Groin Attack" for a female soprano (if the role is male) or given to sopranos (if the role is female).
* Hell's Foundations Quiver, and have access to mainland resources that the protagonists otherwise lack.
* Hellblazer - In the Fear Machine arc, Constantine and his two ex-girlfriends (a hippie and an earth goddess priestess) save the day with a threesome (and "female" magic). The two ladies had spent the previous few months on an island (a character calls it "one of those woman magic places") where the magic was powered by love and orgies.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series the ship suffers no structural damage.
* GWAR created Gor Gor the Tyrannosaur to be a killing machine, but he occasionally gnaws on the band members.

* Green Arrow, but the judge overruled the verdict and kicked him out.
* He-Man", when Lion-O sees He-Man riding Battle Cat, he assumes He-Man is treating the cat as a slave instead of a partner. As Lord of the ThunderCats, Lion-O is outraged and attacks him.
* Heroes of Might and Magic who ride into battle atop mammoths, casting spells while their steed gores the enemy with its tusks.
* Heroman, and actually shows a liking for Joey. And the only people who object to any interaction between these two are Lina's brother and his friends.
* he serves up an entire breakfast -- bananas, apples, bacon and fried eggs -- as a smoothie, stating proudly that the emulsion is so fine you almost don't need to digest it.
* Here by Accident, Staying on Purpose: Downplayed with Trixie and Chloe. They weren't close as kids but they hanged out. As adults they reunite and become closer.
* Heaven's Lost Property. He is just a completely normal high-school student who loves his ordinary life, but one day he becomes the master of an Angeloid who fell from the sky and his normal life seems to come to an end.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys: Iolaus stumbles across Nebula taking a shower on board her ship.
* Gruntz has them both as a reusable tool that a grunt can use as many times as he wants, and as a surprise variant that can be uncovered when a rock is destroyed. Both types have the traditional look of a bundle of dynamite sticks with wires and a clock attached to them, and they start ticking faster when about to go off.
* Hack/Slash. Although his mask is a respirator rather than a hockey mask, visually it conveys the same impression.
* Hate Plague was created by the US government as a biological weapon against hostile populations. Then the plane carrying it ends up crashing in a lake used by a local small town for drinking water.
* Hello, from the Magic Tavern and AY rather than AH. Arnie mentioned the sketch by name, but nobody else saw anything confusing.
* Golems, or at least Mr. Pump, are sensitive to something called "Karmic Signature", which Pump did not see fit to explain. They can also detect one another "singing" underground, through thousands of feet of soil.
* Highlander. The game was repeatedly postponed and pushed back until the company making it was sold in 2011 and the new owners ultimately pulled the plug.
* Higurashi: When They Cry. The Eyeopening arc (Meakashi-hen) can also be this on a meta level since it reveals the truth about the cottondrifting arc (Watanagashi-hen) and is the first of the answer arcs.
* Grimm. This results in many, many serial killings that the protagonist has to solve.
* God Hand, Gene can open doors normally, but it is usually faster to just kick them in.
* Hans Christian Andersen actually his betrothed from before the mermaid incident happened). Because she was unsuccessful in making the prince fall in love with her, the mermaid turns to sea foam, choosing his happiness over her own life. In some versions, she is rewarded for her sacrifice with a new life as an air sprite, during which time she will earn a soul (mermaids don't naturally have them) and go to Heaven.
* Heretics of Dune, Miles Teg was a famous Bene Gesserit military commander.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, do this well. The main game and both DLC all have a different protagonist and interconnecting storylines, telling you more about the events you already saw, and fleshing out some rarely seen characters.
* Got Your Six charting of the three. It was beaten out by "My Nemesis" and "Wash It All Away", which hit #2 and #1 respectively.
* Halo: Combat Evolved to a squad of marines then asks, "Am I right, Marines?"
* Happy Yarou Wedding, Todou has his moments when he thinks Yuuhi's cheating in any way.
* Goofy begins with a montage satirizing the then shortage of rubber. One such gag has this bit:

* Happens with Alice on when a pet mouse gets loose. Although it's averted another time — she hands it to the boys and isn't scared.
* Gundam Build Divers Re:RISE for Hiroto and his team, but also cranks ups the stakes, tone and more to new heights, while also addressing some issues left unanswered by its predecessor.
* Half-Life: Opposing Force, the HECU Engineer does this with a cutting torch.
* Gundam 0080 takes place on December 25th. What a crummy Christmas present for Al.
* Halloween Night He likely would have lost this fight had it not been for the inexplicable clothes hanger that he put through her eye. Also her girlfriend escaped and was the one who called the police that showed up at the end.
* Gundam Build Fighters that in the intervening seven years since the events of GBF, Reiji has not yet been able to return to Earth from his homeworld of Arian, and thus has been unable to keep his promise to Sei. Sei had prepared a special Gunpla for him upon his return, the Build Burning Gundam, but as each successive year passed with no sign of Reiji, an increasingly saddened Sei finally went and sealed the Build Burning Gundam away in his World Championship trophy and, according to China, 'his good memories of his precious best friend with it.' Though Sei and China got together and Sei continues to build and battle Gunpla, it's heavily implied that he never again took on or built for another partner the way he did with Reiji.
* high priority attack that makes the target flinch 100% of the time, but it only works on the first turn the user is sent out.
* Guest from the Future, who in their turn chase Kolya Gerasimov escaping via the time machine in order to save Mielofon from them.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets when he is berating them for flying the Ford Anglia to Hogwarts.
* Gourmet Girl Graffiti where she's eating some food offered by students who have pieces of food for a head. Later that episode she gets to eat the food concerned.
* Gondor Calls for Aid: The hero prepares for an epic battle by recruiting every friend, ally, enemy, and so on who is willing to help them in the fight.
* Hathcock had other engagements involving enemy snipers. One of then ended via an recoilless-rifle shell to the Vietnamese sniper's general position (it did the trick), and another involved dozens of enemy snipers and an artillery strike. Hathcock only
* Granny Weatherwax has her Headology, and Vimes has a certain amount of this. He knows how to be a good copper and how to play people and situations to come out on top. Vetinari is the morally-grey version. It says a lot about him that he is listed both here and on the
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince: Made in 2009, set in 1 August 1996 – 10 June 1997.
* Here's a handy guide: if Kelso makes even a passing reference to his car in an episode of
* having been stuck in the time bubble for 2 and a half years, those little scars she "worked so hard on" are the first things she wants to see.
* Harry Potter says that she imagines that Hogwarts has hosted students of just about every religion except Wicca, simply because that idea of magic(k) is so different from the series'.
* Gym Leader Wiki: A rumor is that Giovanni was born into a mafia family, but it's been disputed.
* Harvest Moon: Friends of Mineral Town, though, allowing you to continue the game with a Mineral Town husband.
* guy in a costume. Batman proceeds to find out their secret, reduce them to paranoid wrecks and practically dismantle their entire plan.
* He didn't stay dead for more than three books — but that was over six years of world time.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas. The player can take over this role. Utterly serious cutscenes can have the protagonist standing around in any number of insane outfits. The possibilities are in the hundreds, such as: boxers only, a Groucho Marx face mask and tuxedo pants, or even a gimp suit. This last, in a business meeting with his sister.

* Haruhi Suzumiya: The first manga adaptation was based on the original light novels.
* Green Wing, loser Statham makes an ill-fated attempt to provide a witty comeback to Mac just after Mac has walked out of shot:
* Gone Horribly Wrong, where both Col. Kurtz and the villagers he's trained have descended into madness.
* Gloria Gaynor's "I Will Survive" was originally the B-side to "Substitute."
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, plant drugs in the car of a district attorney who wanted to put Tenpenny in trial.
* Goldfinger.) The counter was originally going to stop at 0:03 — Connery has a line of dialogue to that effect immediately after the shutdown — but for obvious reasons, they changed it in the edit.
* He also FREQUENTLY fools Watson and several Inspectors, amazingly enough.
* Graham McNeill, the Grey Knights suspend Ventris by his manacles when he's their prisoner; his survival may be Justified by his being an inhuman supersoldier.
* Half-Life series, the Vortigaunts speak a language that involves both the participants in a conversation speaking and listening to each other at the same time, implying that the language centre of their brains is much more highly developed than that of humans. Vortigese is totally incomprehensible to humans; something of the feel of it is conveyed in the Episodes, where groups of Vortigaunts speaking English tend to step on the ends of each other's lines.
* GWAR retired guitarist Flattus Maximus after his most recent portrayer, Cory Smoot, died of a heart attack in 2011. After frontman and band co-founder Dave Brockie died of a heroin overdose, the costume of his character Oderus Urungus was given a Viking funeral pyre on Hadad's Lake just before GWAR-BQ in 2014.
* Heavy Rain, Ethan has a blackout while his son Shaun is riding a carousel. When he snaps out of it, Shaun is missing.
* Half Man Half Biscuit, their arms or tattoos. This is despite a number of extraordinarily specific details, from the title's description of cover of the Libertines' first album, to a lengthy rant directed at people who incorrectly refer to the biblical Revelation (singular) of St John the Divine as the Book of Revelations (plural), a solecism coincidentally to be found in the lyrics of the Libertines' "What A Waster".
* Heather Dale's song "Changeling Child" is all about this. The song tells the story of a woman who yearned to be a mother, and to that end spent a whole night bartering with the local faerie queen, who eventually relented and gave her a child. However, the woman failed to realize that the faeries are very fond of
* "Head First" by John Waite and the Babys could be interpreted this way. The narrator isn’t sure about her at first, but he’s drawn to her more and more every time he sees her. The cover art of
* Gunslinger does this on occasion. Havoc too, but he seems to favour the "New York Reload".
* Harpuia gender mixup official source (the creators). For the record, he's male. Many attribute the confusion, at the time, to Capcom's decaying quality in translation, spotty proofreading (of their manuals, sites, and sometimes in-game scripts), and a lack of communication between branches.
* Henson Alternative Wiki: All Jim Henson Company stuff aimed for more mature audiences (Puppet Up, Late Night Liars, etc.)
* Goodnight Sweetheart. Once there, he meets a young woman and they fall in love. And now suddenly there's no need to go through the trauma of a divorce in the 1990s, because he can have two separate lives...
* Grand Theft Auto IV exaggerated parody of this trope. He carries a very phallic walking stick around, strokes his beard in a suggestive manner when he is thinking, likes to put the title character through various training sessions while she is wearing very skimpy clothing, during which he will frequently take pictures, and mentions in passing that he is a registered sex offender because of a "misunderstanding" about an "innocent swimming lesson". He still manages to qualify for the lovable part, since he is portrayed so ridiculously over the top.

* great attempts to subvert the US government, with Erica herself joining her grandparents in opposing them.
* Heroic Mime does this after being told by Ching that she has a beautiful voice.
* Granblue Fantasy sometimes. This is apparent with Vaseraga in the "Footprints on Sacred Ground" event where he's displeased with the thought of Zeta getting kids involved for their mission. Averted in the Detective Conan collaboration event where Conan and Amuro were able to deduce that they are the captain. Though it's justified because the characters in question are skilled detectives.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team Episode 11. Ryuuka is revealed as one when she furiously blushes while trying to claim that she just came along to make a mess.
* Hall of Fame defensive lineman Alan Page went on to become a prominent attorney, and eventually went into politics on the judicial side, running for and winning an open seat on the Minnesota Supreme Court in 1992, joining the bench in 1993. He was re-elected four times, finally leaving the bench in 2015 once he reached the state's mandatory retirement age for judges of 70.
* Heroes... but Noah Bennet (AKA Horn-Rimmed Glasses) does it on him instead.
* Grogu” is. There’s several times where the story will cut to the little hijinks The Child gets up to and there’s only a couple of episodes where he isn’t prominent.
* Hannah Montana, the father (played by Billy Ray Cyrus) is often heard saying things like, "Oh, my achy-breaky back!" He and other characters also frequently mock his former mullet hairstyle.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas has a gag where Maccer, one of the Brit junkies, starts "having an appointment with Dr. Hans Jerkov" in Madd Dogg's studio. It's a sort of running gag—the guy is apparently addicted to it.
* Hates Being Touched, and the other is willing to accommodate when expressing affection.
* Grand Theft Auto IV on his cell phone any time he's not in the middle of a race or mission. Many players found this to be an annoying feature. During some missions though, there are scripted sequences in which the main character gets a phone call during missions, such as being invited to go to a strip club during a high speed police chase, and being called to go cruising for chicks while kidnapping the daughter of a mob boss.
* Happens to Sach in a few Bowery Boys movies, usually thanks to some
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law has the staff being seen through surveillance footage, which is all live-action footage. Some other episodes also have short live-action sequences, mostly featuring Birdman.
* Half-Life 2 lets you do this when you have the Super Gravity Gun. After you kill an enemy with the "pick up" function, his levitating corpse makes a great temporary shield against his friends' weapons. Especially the heavily armored Elites.
* Gunslinger Girl apply here since she doesn't even interact with the others.
* Heavyweights is more or less to feature a whole camp of these guys, although the main character Gerry Gardner is the most iconic.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, although the last two may have been intentional.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team episode "Forced Entry". When Ikuyo Suzuki teases Ryuuka about her feelings for Taro, Ryuuka blushes furiously while denying it.
* Harem of Fangs, heroine Ally Swift finds herself being courted by five powerful vampires.
* Greed is afflicted with an endless ravenous hunger. Larfleeze, the keeper of the Orange Lantern, is introduced feasting on spoiled and rotten foods with gusto, still demanding more. When Hal Jordan gets a hold of the lantern, one of the many things it tells him is that he could go for a few cheeseburgers.
* Guardians of the Galaxy from a warrior culture. The best example is probably at the end of the movie, when they both try to get pardoned for any future crimes they might commit after just being given a clean slate for their old ones:
* Grizzly Tales for Gruesome Kids could barely go a host segment without abusing his pet spider in some morbidly humorous way.
* He clings to wife Chrissie after returning home from holding his secret lover

Aaron hostage and threatening to kill him when Aaron tried to force his hand and reveal his secrets.
* Harry Houdini) did this once in real life, testing to see if it was worth adding to his regular escape routines. He got out of the restraints and buried coffin (collapsing the latter afterwards to make working space) and made it to the surface without aid. He never even attempted this again. Quoted: "The weight of the earth is crushing..."
* Gloves are associated with hiding one's true self. The king gives Elsa a pair as she begins to conceal her powers, and she temporarily removes them for her coronation ceremony, for which she also opens up the gates and lets herself be somewhat vulnerable for the day. When she and Anna fight, one comes off and her powers come out, and she throws the other one away in "Let It Go," when she's decided to embrace her magic.
* Hearts of the World is cowering off to the side while her fiancée, the Boy, is engaged in a life-or-death struggle with a German soldier. Then she realizes that she has a large butcher knife, which she's been carrying ever since a German officer nearly raped her. She stabs the soldier in the back.
* Hanna being raped after a failed skirmish, until Athena suddenly appeared and saved her.
* Hello, Sailor!: Men in the Navy go gay due to lack of female options.
* Harold Lloyd was accidentally handed to him to pose with instead of a fake one).
* Harry Potter (Romani). The fact that they all start with a "g" is a coincidence. The word dates back further to 1920s New Orleans slang for marijuana.
* Harpo Does Something Funny: The script simply contains instructions for the actors to improvise.
* Hammer's Slammers are mercenaries loosely inspired by the French Foreign Legion, but they have pretty tight discipline and a defined hierarchy, Colonel Hammer tends to react to loose cannons by threatening to have them shot. Now, the regular armies of the governments that tend to hire them, on the other hand... Well, let's just say that they wouldn't be hiring the Slammers if they didn't need them.
* golden phonograph record any space whales out there, they may someday get a greeting.
* Hand of Thrawn. But "Commander" is part of the rank, so he gets a mention here. He also was a captain for a while, which is roughly equivalent to a colonel.
* Grand Finale sees Thelma giving birth to hers and the Reverend's son.
* Heart of the Swarm, she is extremely powerful, but that power comes from use of her abilities, not physically ripping opponents in half like in the cutscenes.
* Harry Harrison's short story "Portrait of the Artist", in which a comic book artist, who has just lost his job to a machine, creates a suicide note in comic-book form that ends with a depiction of him jumping off his publisher's office building and landing on a car. After he commits suicide in the manner depicted, his ex-boss's only reaction is remark that he landed on the wrong car.
* Hidamari Sketch: the first has 12, the second has 13, the third and fourth 12 again. However, between the DVD-only bonus episodes, and some TV specials broadcast some months after the main series run, the totals are 14 per season (or 16 for the third season if one counts the TV specials as part of it).
* Guardians of the Galaxy, he acquired a ship called the Bad Boy with a female AI named Lydia, who wasn't in love with him and often thought he was an idiot.
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child want his son Albus being friends with Scorpius Malfoy in case he turns out to be the son of the Dark Lord and tries to break up their friendship.
* Harry Potter, the Misuse of Muggle Artifacts Office has to deal with some of these. Mainly subverted though, since they're bewitched rather than "haunted", properly speaking. The difference is that bewitched means that the wizard/witch left a part of his magic into it, like an answering machine so to speak. This includes Arthur Weasley's Ford Anglia.
* Headstatic like this, who always find each other in every life they live.
* Hero Looking for Group: The hero is ready to go on their quest, but they know they can't do it alone. So, they head out to find some like-minded companions.

* Harry ritually creates new bodies for the spirits of his parents, Remus and Sirius. The latter two end up looking younger than their death ages.
* Godzilla, made in 1968, was set in 1999, a year when humans would've supposedly set up a moon colony, built an island capable of holding Godzilla and his buddies, and contacted aliens in shiny silver suits.
* Gosick: Victorique packs a lot of suitcases when she goes traveling.
* he never had any intention of letting Philips live regardless of whether he did so or not, giggling incoherently as he goes completely insane from the resulting trauma.
* Grant Morrison's JLA having this applying to Hal Jordan when he took over as its host, making it hard to convince the Justice League that he was who he said he was.
* Good Bad Bug to continue a taunt after decapitation. The game doesn't stop the sound file when the enemy dies, resulting in a disembodied voice for a second or so.
* Glenn Rhee and Abraham Ford are both killed off in the Season 7 premiere; the latter after having been around since the fourth season, the former since the * Heroes of Might and Magic series embraces this trope. Might-oriented heroes are good in short games or as scouts or garrison leaders, but heroes with a lot of Spell Power throwing level 5 spells tend to dominate the late game. This is reflected in the different types of town: Those associated with Mighty heroes like the Barbarian build up fast, but those associated with extreme magic users tend to take longer to build up but get the most powerful creatures like Titans or Black Dragons.
* Gossip Girl by making him think she wants to sleep with him. Instead, he ends up locked out on a roof in just his underwear. Chuck, being Chuck, seems to be impressed rather than angry.
* Goodbye Pork Pie finds one from Sue in his typewriter, which simply reads "Dear John".
* Half-Life 1 has a section where Gordon has to cross over a bunch of conveyor belts to get through a section, in which some are going one way and others are going another way. and they basically create a long obstacle course, if you stay on one of them long enough you end up back where you started. This is in addition to a conveyor belt he has to use in an entirely separate part of the game to get through a crushing piston.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers of countries on the surface, but you'd be surprised on how much screaming occurs more than talking.
* Hideki Kamiya are the same character etc.) However, as his creations are currently owned by multiple different companies, it's unlikely these cross-game references will lead to any grander crossover anytime soon.
* Gotham Girls webisode that has Harley Quinn and Batgirl use this gag for extreme humor value. Somehow a knot-tying merit badge in their world allows you to restrain an opponent head to toe in seconds.
* Grindcore. This is one of the reasons that grindcore is a polarizing genre. Most grindcore albums are longer than Gridlink's and Assück's, but it's still uncommon for grindcore albums to exceed thirty minutes in length, though this may simply be because many listeners would find grindcore albums that long to be exhausting.
* Gothic installed. This is partly due to bringing down the Barrier, but mainly due to simply getting favor with everyone in the first game.
* Hajime no Ippo, including Pokarimin C drink, Tsuchinoko drink, Arowana Cola, Doctor Pappy, and next month's issue of a magazine. Surprisingly, he does find a Tsuchinoko drink.
* Hardanger Fiddle, they fit the trope perfectly, but they are also considered a bit on the pathological side. Somebody even made an evening prayer to prevent them from going down that path.
* Henrietta is ignored by Jose, she frags him during a rampage against Dante's men brought about by Ski Mask Guy. Jose has her finish the job, but Henrietta puts one more through Jose... and Jose subverts the trope when he uses his last shot to shoot

* Highlander, which goes to the last one standing. By 1985, the immortals have largely long-since killed each other off and only four of them are left.
* Hellraiser: Bloodline. The space station is really a gigantic array of solar mirrors designed to obliterate Pinhead with light. It is also the ultimate form of the Lament Configuration. It is revealed that to close the gateway so that it can never again be opened requires power that could also open the gateway so that it can never again be closed.
* Grim Prairie Tales encompasses a single night. None of the individual tales spans longer that two days.
* Hat Luncheon", when Owen tells Molly he hates speeches and he's not good at it and Paige tries to reassure him, he get a flashback to Owen bombing his speech twice.
* Hadestown, Hermes was a direct accomplice of Hades who worked to lure souls down and tried to tempt both Orpheus and Eurydice away—a far cry from the wise mentor and narrator he eventually became.
* Highschool of the Dead: The series entered a hiatus around 2011 with no real word why from its creators. The artist, Shouji Sato, went on to do another series in the interim and the writer, Daisuke Sato, just went mum completely. The series did return briefly for one more chapter in 2013 before going back into hiatus again. This went on until 2017 when Daisuke died of heart disease. Without their writer, there was no way for the series to continue and it was quietly put to rest despite ending on a cliffhanger.
* going to cheat after kicking Goofy out of the fraternity. Evidently, he didn't expect Goofy to come back in to return his pin. What makes this even weirder is that apparently this is the same plan they've acted on for years.
* Hellsing Alucard himself loathes the use of the trope, as he thinks only a real human has the right to truly defeat monsters, otherwise you're just replacing a monster with a stronger one.
* Halo. It's sometimes possible to run up closer and splat the snipers with close-range fire, but that's risky, especially at higher difficulty levels where they can one-shot you.
* Hardboiled Detective, and Tracy Torme's Dixon Hill (Hill being Picard's favorite, and Tracy Torme being the real-life creator of the character for "The Big Goodbye").
* GURPS has the Flying Kick and Pole-Vault Kick skills. Flying Kick can be combined with Flying Leap for spectacular entries.
* Heavy Metal chops off his own head in order to show Den that he can't be killed (at least through normal means).
* Green Lantern is in charge of policing 1/3600 of the universe. By modern estimates, that would include tens of millions of galaxies.
* Grimm a centuries old group of extremist Wesen that oppose "race-mixing" (a Wesen marrying a Wesen from another bloodline) and befriending Grimms (traditional enemies of the Wesen in general), even their flags look disturbingly similar to the Third Reich's flag.
* Google phone ads advertised how their built-in cameras don't have distracting flash effects... using
* he put black tape over (part of) the phrase, photocopied the cease-and-desist notice, and taped it at eye level next to the mission statement on the wall..
* Gregor and Sandor Clegane are simply muscle for their masters, exerting no political influence in Westeros except with the point of their swords. However, Sandor's
* Hancock Many people consider the original script, which is consistently gritty and has Hancock experiencing suidicial tendencies, as superior to the finished film.
* Gourmet Girl Graffiti: Kirin is very upbeat at every moment. Shiina compares looking at her to watching the circus in Chapter 24.
* Henderson Scale, where One Henderson is the complete and total destruction of the plot, and multiple negative Hendersons is every problem ever solved for all of time permanently.

* Godfrey of Ibelin did not exist. The real Balian's father was named Barisan. (This change is likely because Godfrey does not appear to be modeled on Barisan or any historical figure; rather, the character exists solely as a part of Balian's fictionalized backstory.)
* Hannah Montana and is somewhat nerdy. This causes Lily to remark "This explains so much."
* Hajime no Ippo. While his son Ichiro took up boxing few after Miyata-san's forceful retirement, it was because of Miyata's own will and not because his dad pressured him to do it, and father and son care for each other very much.
* Government in Exile: The leaders of a former national government now live in another country (while still claiming sovereignty they no longer have).
* Goody-two-shoes Harriet Conklin has a zany scheme now and again. In "New Girl", she tricks the titular girl's mother into believing Mr. Boynton is a serial killer.
* "Hartsfield's Landing" has one invoked by Bartlet upon Sam during the denouement of the overaching plot regarding the diplomatic crisis between the US and China over Taiwan. Taiwan intends to test-fire the US-built PATRIOT missile defense system while China responded by organizing a massive military exercise designed to simulate an invasion of Taiwan, the end result is over 400,000 troops on high alert around the Taiwan Strait, not including the US 7th Fleet which was ordered to the Strait by Bartlet and a second fleet en route; all this is on top of the Chinese ambassador expressing displeasure at the US continuing to sell Taiwan advanced military weapons, including the prospect of the US selling four Aegis-equipped destroyers but which the Bartlet administration refuses to roll back for several reasons (Taiwan Relations Act of 1979, the impending announcement of Taiwan holding its first free elections) and the threat of China test-firing their own missiles if Taiwan does. Eventually, word gets to Bartlet and Sam, who has been following all this from his office, that the issue was resolved diplomatically and that the fleets the US Navy sent were ordered to return. Sam elects to try to figure out how it was done with Bartlet watching: the deal was that China would stand down from the exercises and allow Taiwan to test-fire one PATRIOT missile, while the US agreed not to sell the Aegis destroyers to Taiwan for ten years (Sam had guessed five, but the gist was there). What Sam couldn't figure out was why Bartlet was seemingly willing to risk war with China when Eisenhower had balked at sending ships to resupply Quemoy and Matsu (island groups in the Strait controlled by Taiwan but less than a mile from the Mainland) back in the 1950's, plus the fact that each Aegis destroyer cost $800 million and four alone would eat half of Taiwan's defense budget
* Happens to Claude Cat as part of Hubie and Bertie pretending that he's dead and heading for Cat Heaven in the short
* GunBuster because relativistic effects means that Kazumi will outlive Ohta (and most of human civilization, as a matter of fact) by a long shot.
* Grand Theft Auto V (Playstation 4, Xbox One, and PC versions have this as an available gameplay mode)
* He laughs at a sarcastic quip Lothor makes while chewing out Choobo.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Harry is told the difficulty of performing the Patronus Charm and it is implied only powerful/very skilled wizards can use the advanced spirit animal form. Yet many characters are shown with them, and by the end of the fifth book Harry has taught it to a bunch of his classmates. The power of the Patronus varied greatly between characters though. And Harry states when he's training his classmates that it's a lot harder to produce a Patronus when you're facing down a Dementor. This gets demonstrated in the seventh book.
* Havelock Vetinari's sexuality — which way does he bend? And which recurring characters (whether male or female) would he get off with? From canon, it's pretty easy to extrapolate that he's naturally self-sufficient, austere, and celibate, but that's just too
* Groo the Wanderer: Groo is this whenever he ends up in charge, to the point where his enemies rejoice.
* God Told Me To a detective investigates a series of killing sprees in new york.

One of them is at a St.Patricks day parade.
* He also does this to Ishida when the latter asks him if he's an Espada.
* her sister Raphaela again, and she also asks to awaken, so that they can rule the continent together.
* Groucho Marx came along in his late career, he refused to do the old greasepaint routine but agreed to grow a real mustache so that fans would recognize him.
* Harry Potter is set in 2000-2001 for example. It becomes noticeable from the third film onwards, where the fashions are those of the early 2000s rather than the '90s, Mr Weasley gets fascinated by an Oyster Card reader (established in 2003), and the Millennium Bridge features in the sixth film.
* Harvest Moon DS, but left the best friend events in. Most likely the "Best Friend" system was created due to the fact they're needed to pass important milestones in the game, if you want to 100% complete it.
* Guyver Studios. This series uses this concept to its fullest extent. It starts out with a high schooler named Sho Fukamachi walking in the woods near the school with his friend Tetsuro Segawa. There they hear and see the aftermath of a huge explosion and see something hurtling through the sky towards them. Sho picks it up and points out that it's alien-looking when he all of sudden trips and smacks his face against it and it starts to encompass him. Later when Tetsuro is in immediate danger from a secret world government-style organization known as Chronos, Sho clad in this "bio" metal armor then destroys the ones troubling Tetsuro. Afterward, he seemingly regains consciousness while still in the armor and notes that it is DEFINITELY alien.
* Halo: Reach has a mechanical right arm. Which is a bit odd in that there seems to be no other reason to put it into a much thinner and more skeletal casing than the other arm of the body armor, but to make it obviously visible.
* He's not the only one since his soldiers and his brother Cooler's men refer to Saiyans as monkeys and apes, In the dub of
* Hercules: The Animated Series used "Zero to Hero" for its opening theme.
* GMM: Gold Medal Models, another company mostly specializing in aftermarket warship parts.
* Grip of Orcus, which gives the target a heart attack. If the target dies from the spell, their smoking heart appears in your hand.
* Gundam AGE: first-generation!Flit Asuno and his grandson Kio from the third generation. Flit was 14 when he built his Gundam from the blueprints left by his dead mother, Kio began piloting when he was 13 (though in a subversion, his grandpa had been sort-of training him via the videogames that he brought for the kid.)
* HERZ: Several fans created illustrations of the series and even a logo.
* Hens when kept as pets can get this way too; when around someone she knows particularly well, a domestic hen will sometimes
* Green Arrow, he gives an explanation of why someone would turn to drugs in which he stops just short of saying "And by someone, I mean me." GA misses the point entirely.
* Graviteam Tactics are able to request smoke shells in lieu of regular HE rounds to screen an attack or retreat.
* Guilded Age: A common trend with several races of the World's Rebellion, particularly the trolls and the landsharks.
* Halo which will end with her insanity and death. This statement sums it up best:
* Harry finds an article on a set of runes that if read upside down will reveal a spell to turn someone into a kumquat in
* Grease, Rizzo has a pregnancy scare and Kenickie, upon hearing of it, tells her that "I don't run away from my mistakes." She gently tells him that it was someone else's mistake, which is a lie but she's trying to spare him. By the end of the movie, Kenickie makes the offer again, a bit more blatantly; Rizzo has since learned that she's not pregnant, but he assures her that it's "a bona fide offer" nonetheless.
* Grim Reaper flashes one of these whenever he's about to fight someone. (Or whenever he's beaten them.)
* Henry Murray was a psychologist who conducted psychologically damaging social experiments on students of Harvard University, in which they were subjected to intense verbal abuse to test their responses to extreme stress. Murray also supervised the research of psychologist Timothy Leary into psychoactive substances, and is theorized by multiple experts to have been involved with MKULTRA. One of Murray's

* Harry Turtledove Nazi equivalent, they mostly use equipment and uniforms clearly based off of those of their traditional allies, the British and French (tanks suspiciously similar to British ones in WWI and Spitfire-like fighter planes in WWII).
* Guardians of the Galaxy, we get an example of this from Rocket, tired of people criticizing his escape plan (as he'd escaped from 22 prisons before). He then goes back to speaking normally.
* Happened off-screen in the backstory: the turning point between the protagonist's reality and the
* H₂O: Footprints in the Sand. No wonder it hurts when the townspeople gossip that it was better that Hinata survived and Hotaru died.
* Grimtooth's Traps contains a reverse-firing "Double Crossbow" as a loot trap.
* Hartman has stated that Ember is in her twenties, despite her being called a teenager in her debut episode.
* Haruhi Suzumiya by Haruhi herself in the first story: "Whatever it is you've heard about me, it's probably true."
* Halo: The Cole Protocol, may be named after a person, Madrigal being a Spanish surname and the inhabitants of the planet being culturally Spanish.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, apparently because he is so confident in technology that he insisted on following the GPS instructions exactly.
* Headology, the main branch of Witch magic relies mostly on the application of common sense with a light sprinkling of Magic Feathers, once handily supplied by the patient himself.
* Herrick has put some thought into this trope, and decided that evil isn't * half of those he chose to protect slaughtered and his brother tortured. Then Thanos brutally kills him.
* Half-Life will sometimes upon killing an enemy say "That Will Look Nice in my Trophy Room". It doesn't matter if the enemy was an alien or a human.
* Hasbro's Control Vision was a console that used VHS tapes. It became vaporware at the last minute. Just two months before its launch in 1988, the VRAM chip needed for the console had its price raised from $30 per chip to $80. This would mean the Control Vision would need to be priced at $300. Hasbro decided to cancel the console because it couldn't compete against the much cheaper Nintendo Entertainment System (which sold at only $100). Two games from the console,
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret is constantly throwing herself at her students and generally acting inappropriately... and the students want none of it.
* He was raised by a villainous duck family as a young child, and as he grew older he realized how toxic his family was, eventually bringing in Odd Squad to deal with them once they decided to commit what was essentially genocide. Once they were captured, he became the personal apprentice of Ms. O and joined the organization.
* Hey Arnold! episode "The Cool Jerk", Arnold can't hear local greaser Frankie G. over the sound of Frankie's motorcycle.
* Guide itself may be an example, as it is notoriously unreliable. However the Guide is definitive, reality is sometimes in error though.
* Götterdämmerung. In the opera, Brünhild had cast a spell that made Siegfried invulnerable from the front because she said she knew he would never turn his back on an enemy.
* Hellblazer, protagonist John Constantine received a single 'good scar' vertically upward on his left cheek.
* Harry Potter, the infirmary gets regular use. It often features as the location for discussion.
* Goodbye, Mr. Chips down the mountain. She comes to visit him while he's recuperating, and they fall in love and get married.
* Gravity is wonderful on a lot of things, but it has to bow to this trope for its heroine. The Space Shuttle is working on the Hubble Space Telescope not too far from the International Space Station (close enough to get there using only a jet backpack), which is "only 100 miles" from the Chinese Space Station.

* great, especially with the number "Molasses to Rum." Sure, he's arguing for slavery, but when he exposes Thomas Jefferson's and John Adams' respective hypocrisies, he not only has a point, but it's a historically accurate one.
* Hart of Dixie, and leaves the closet to tell everyone what happened.
* Happily Failed Suicide: A character fails a suicide attempt and is happy that they didn't succeed in killing themselves.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers has many fics of this nature, running the gambit of world history.
* Hayate the Combat Butler manga have included the disclaimer, "Good boys and girls should never do this."
* Harry plays at being a Legilimens by telling Snape not to think of pink elephants and then pretending to read his mind.
* Harvest Moon DS, this was more an excuse to explain why they're reusng the characters. The DS games feature many errors and oddities caused by the fact it's a sequel and not a reimagining.
* Hakuna Matata are to think that being in love will solve all of their problems for them.
* Gothic Industrial singer Yade often invokes this, with a Nazi-inspired uniform and songs about revolutions, though the lyrics are either anarchistic, or too vague to associate with an ideology. It doesn't help he is Swiss-German, which straddles the very uncomfortable line between "Oh he is not German then" and the accusation that Swiss Nazis (or supporters) were
* Heralds of Valdemar are a subset of Healers, but a lot of people in the novels assume they're just high-priced prostitutes. At this point in the novel, Winterhart is one of those people.)
* Halo 2 and is a concert staple, but it never charted due to never being released as an official single. However, years later, there was a version of it that made it to #5 on mainstream rock. A remix of it from the greatest hits album, featuring female vocals from Syd Duran of the band Valora (and credited to the band itself as a feature), became a Top 5 hit for the band. However, it's not nearly as well-known as the original, which still remains the most enduring version.
* Hellsing to boot makes it difficult, but there is a rule of thumb- has Alucard done something so far beyond badass it comes out the other side and ends up being silly yet? He's probably losing. But he'll win in the end.
* Grrl Power gives us Math, a martial artist so incredible that even the most powerful super in the world notes that distinguishing between his abilities and actual superpowers is a futile exercise. The quote from the top of the page is from just as he is knocking out a super whose body is entirely made out of concrete.
* Her mother Claire qualifies as well. Though her IQ isn't shown, she is smug and arrogant, and a
* Grimm normal humans are known as "Kehrseite" by the Wesen. A Kehrseite who knows the truth about Wesen is known as a "Kehrseite-Schlich-Kennen."
* Heavy Metal L-Gaim, but it did nothing (due to the energy shield of the enemy mecha). Then he picked a -normal- bazooka, left his mecha and shot his weapon at point-blank range, effectively cracking the robot's head.
* Highschool of the Dead: Rei inadvertently causes Takashi to have one in chapter 6 when she makes out with him on the stairs. Mainly because she was only wearing a camisole and a pair of thong panties, so Takashi breaks the kiss and tells her they should stop. It confuses Rei 'til she looks down between his legs.
* Harry Potter series has a number of historical events caused by wizards, and at one point it is mentioned that one real witch even enjoyed being burned at the stake, because of a spell that rendered the flames harmlessly ticklish.
* Golden Jackals can breed with domestic dogs but because of their differing chromosome counts many hybrids are sterile. The Soviet Union bred the Sulimov dog as airport sniffers by crossing jackals with Lapponian Herders and then breeding the resulting half-jackals with Huskies to make them more trainable. Since the 70s other breeds such as Spitz's and fox terriers have been bred into the line and 40 Sulimov dogs are in existence, all owned by Aeroflot-Russian Airlines and used for security.

* Green Lantern: Used more for drama than for humor when Hector Hammond propels Doctor Waller against a reinforced window, and we see her face mashed against the broken glass. Then, when Hal Jordan intervenes, Hector releases his telekinetic hold, and Doctor Waller slides down the glass.
* Heroes of Might and Magic IV necromancer that rules his kingdom (consisting of both living civilians and an undead military and workforce) more ethically than most of the supposedly 'good' factions. He's apparently popular among the people too.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows by Voldemort, Neville attempts to attack Voldemort, but is effortlessly blasted away. Voldemort is actually impressed by Neville's courage and, given Neville is a Pureblood, offers him a spot among his Death Eaters. Neville immediately refuses the offer.
* has just combined his daughter and dog into a true Chimera. Horrified, Ed punches Shou Tucker once; he merely laughs, half-crazed, and proceeds to explain to Ed how Alchemists like them were not altogether unalike — he, having done it out of desperation for the sake of his career, Edward having done it a year ago in an attempt to resurrect his mother from the dead via Alchemy. Distraught, Ed responds that the circumstances were different, and that he was
* Hair Antennae—two strands of anime hair that stick up from the top of the head and curve forward like antennae
* Harry Potter, and so on). Of course, the fact that everyone is relieved he hasn't been killed by Sirius Black helps.
* Heart of the Woods those mistakes, she might have gotten away with her evil schemes.
* Hell Bent For Election: In the end, Joe uses Horace as a lever to pull the switch to stop the Republican Party train.
* Heil Honey I'm Home! is presented in 1950s sitcom style, despite being filmed in 1990.
* Gonzo wrote a fair and compassionate, though not blindly sympathetic, account of his time with them. Another moment was his (satirical) claim that, judging from appearances, Edmund Muskie was on the South American hallucinogenic Ibogaine during the '72 election campaign. It got picked up and reported as real news, apparently by news organizations who hadn't gotten the word about Hunter yet... This actually caused some problems for Muskie, or at least an uncomfortable question or two from the press.
* hero gets cybered-up by evil organization and winds up fighting them" as the setup.
* He eventually does the noble thing and lets her go back to her husband. A few months later, she comes back to the hospital and they have sex.
* Heartattack and Vine is another pseudo-lullaby, this one about little boys who don't do what they should and grow up to be skid row homeless.
* Harper's Island Madison steals the Tower card, which she interprets as "Someone is going to die." During the party itself, the bride Trish is given the Death card, which the fortune teller interprets as "A betrayal by someone close to you."
* Hawke only gets to call them butchers. It is ignored how they take children away from their parents, force others to accept only one role in life, and are blind to the fact that they might be wrong.
* Gregory's Girl, Carol shows up in her school clothes to tell Gregory that Dorothy had been delayed. He offers to buy her some chips, but is less than thrilled when she changes into a sexy outfit. Passers-by think they're on a date.
* Halo series, allied NPCs will shoot you if you murder or accidently kill a few of them. For some reason, they are much more competent when fighting you than the actual enemy; they shoot more accurately, more in general, and, somehow, their shooting does more damage. That's right, your allies are better at killing you than the enemy.
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost: when seeing the Ghost Host for the first time in "New at the Mansion", the ghost Purply Shroud mispronounces his name successively "Host Ghos" and "Spook Master", and then eventually gives up and decides to call him "Thing".

* Half-Life will react to (for example, viewing some of the objects in Black Mesa East will prompt different lines from Eli). He does, however, express concern over getting shot, burned, hitting the ground after a long fall and drowning with moans, grunts and other noises that living creatures use to make others know that they are, as a matter of fact, in pain.
* Gone Horribly Wrong: The attempted solution ends up failing spectacularly.
* Guardians of the Galaxy. The trouble with that started when they wound up a good distance away from the control panel required to re-seal the shell.
* Hero: 108 involving Woo the Wise in which his robe lifts up at random moments against his will, exposing his red underwear.
* Grand Moff Tarkin is more or less the codifier for Ugly and Uncanny. While not outright hideous by any means, there is something subtly creepy about his
* Gotham, it's even lampshaded by Carmine Falcone: "The sun never shines in Gotham."
* Greta Van Fleet, with front-man Josh Kiszka in particular sounding just like Robert Plant.
* Happens over and over consecutively in almost every town the Sanzo party enters in
* Goodnight Sweetheart, with Yvonne on the Eurostar, and Gary chasing after her. She's angry enough to ignore him, but then he trips over a luggage trolley and she has to see if he's all right.
* Grotto is being suited up for a police sting. Before he goes out, he asks Karen for
* Hades too difficult, you can activate God Mode, which drastically reduces the amount of damage you take and makes the game much easier to beat. There's no penalty for turning God Mode on, and you can do so anytime you wish.
* Halloween somehow broke into Buffy's house on his own. No explanation for how he was able to do this is given, though it was probably due to him not being a true vampire.
* Goblins we have the Maze of the Many, a multiversal dungeon crawl where alternate versions of the player characters combat each other and the dungeon to get to the treasure room first. If a party gets wiped out or does not reach the treasure in time, they pop back into existence when they entered, their memories of the dungeon lost. "Our" versions of Minmax, Farogath and Kin have failed over two million times. The author throws in a filler detailing the background of some of the alternates every now and then.
* Hamlet sees Hamlet rip a security camera out of the wall before engaging in a monologue. "At last, I'm alone."
* Hiccups depicts Millie Upton getting frustrated at a woman ahead of her having more than the allotted number of items and using coupons.
* GURPS. Cinematic characters can buy off the penalties while superhuman ones can buy Extra Attack.
* Graceful Loser: A person who loses, but is content with not winning.
* Gunvolt normally wears glasses, but wears contact lens during missions. They're equippable items in-game, one for each eye, and provide a variety of bonuses.
* Harry Potter — over Ginny's new love interest. This is somewhat subverted though, as Ginny later admits that she'd never gotten over her feelings for Harry, and was dating other boys while waiting for him to come around.
* Harpy form levels, since you still need to figure out how to destroy it, but you have all the time in the world to do so.
* Heat: the cop (Al Pacino) and the thief (Robert De Niro) meet at a coffee shop for a private conversation.
* Heavy Rain. After he refuses to leave, the drug dealer punches him, pulls out a shotgun, and tries to kill Ethan with it. He chases him around the apartment destroying many of his own valuables, and corners him into a bedroom. He lines up the shot and pulls the trigger, but nothing happens.

* He isn't very bright (which is why she is the only cat he doesn't hate), but he does care a lot about Rita, coming to her rescue if she's in trouble.
* handwaved by Earth's history in the Trek universe — The 1990s saw the Eugenics Wars which left things a bit stunted, followed by bad social climate and eventually World War III. Technology that developed in the real world didn't in the Trek universe.
* Gunslinger Girl with this arrangement. Long story short, all the thugs end up dead.
* Halkegenia Online Zero Hour, and are not going to put up with that again. To make it worse, one of their team leaders, Nanbou 'The Heartbreaker', decides to indulge in his hobby of traumatizing young girls via rape, and happens to pick the girl who is secretly the serial killer who is running around massacring the local yakuzas as his next victim.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy: Tony and Mimi have one in the opening cutscence. What they throw around looks strangely just as green as your ectoplasm.
* Half-Life 2, he escapes in his personal lift before Gordon can catch him. You have to chase him down to the main reactor before you can confront him properly.
* Happy!. In this case, it's probably more the fault of the booze, drugs, and recent concussion than Nick being the slightest bit more inclined to believe in such things.
* Hera abilities, and has gotten quite a few ordinary people and even enemies to follow him by choosing the right words.
* Grojband until she hit puberty and developed a crush on Nick Mallory.
* Heckle and Jeckle escape the prison warden by hopping a train in "Out Again, In Again."
* Guy Gardner: Warrior Annual #2 story "Hypersensitive: A Changer for All Seasons", the title character Stonewall Fencer is a shapeshifter.
* Heathers, J.D. breaks into Veronica's house with the intention of killing her for breaking up with him. However, he changed his mind and decided that he shouldn't kill the girl he loves, but instead their classmates under the belief that they came between him and Veronica.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows spells the beginning of a new, more benign and just, era for the Wizarding World. Fittingly, the spoiled event takes place just before dawn breaks.
* Great Eastern Entertainment character, parents keep buying Great Eastern Entertainment merchandise for their children. Helps that they're often made out of cheap materials that are easy to replace, in case a child breaks one.
* H₂O: Just Add Water: three ordinary teenage girls suddenly realize they have the ability to turn into mermaids whenever they're splashed with water, and this is accompanied by elemental powers.
* Hayden Panettiere - it's curious how NBC never "suggested" they do a bit of vocalizing. (Then again, maybe they just couldn't find a logical way to fit it in.)
* Gunny Highway. He is sent back to school to train a Recon squad, even though he is a highly decorated Marine. Yeah, he tends to get into bar fights and tell off his superior officers.
* Hardcore Henry, Colonel Jimmy gets his beret shot off during his and Henry's running guns-and-grenades stairwell battle with Akan's thugs.
* Hercules, during the song "Zero to Hero", two of the muses argue of the pronounciation of "vase" ("They slapped his name of every vase..." "On every VAH-se!"). The first muse responds by clonking the other one over the head with it.
* Happy Happy Clover manga series has gained a very small following in the furry fandom in the west. Mainly due to the main characters being adorable rabbits. In Japan, Rambler, Mallow, Luna, and Chima/Clover are popular in the Japanese side of the fandom.
* Highlander, as he's in charge of the division of Watchers who are trying to find him.
* Grand Theft Auto V, the P-996 Lazer fighter jet features one, letting you escape easily if you get shot up. However, if you manage to somehow wreck it, but still get to the ground mostly in one piece, the seat likes to fire you backwards into the ground to hurt you. In addition to that, one of the cars Franklin has to steal in one of the missions is a spy car from a movie studio that comes equipped with an ejectable passenger seat. The actress who Franklin accidentally kidnapped found this out the hard way when Franklin pressed the button, not knowing what it would do.

* Higurashi: When They Cry present in the games), most of the franchise's major characters had not been created at this point. The play would be scrapped and expanded into the sound novels, although adaptations of the original script would appear in both manga and sound novel format.
* government officials the comic presents) to argue as to why that's not the case.
* Goody-Goody, the kiss-up that liked to get others in trouble, was based on Grace Feldman, head of personnel at Wells Rich Greene. End admits she based Feldman on her in a pang of bitterness over not getting something for her office.
* Gruff Rhys, is based around a pun you have to be familiar with both English and Welsh to understand. Certain types of payphones show the word "dial" on the LCD screen when you pick up the receiver, and "dial" (pronounced "dee-all") happens to mean "revenge" in Welsh — hence one of the lyrics translating to "every time I pick up the phone, it says 'revenge'".
* GURPS, shooting off hats, cigarettes, etc., all the way up to outright impossible tricks like curving shots to hit people behind cover, all depending on the realism settings.
* gunslinger of the series, the main scenes in which she gets to show off her skills are against Homunculi who have more power to regenerate themselves than she has ammo.
* Hero when they can. However, in the actual storylines, the main character usually has his ass completely handed to him by a character a thousand levels higher at least once.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try, he observes that the latter's Build Burning Gundam fights using martial arts rather than weapons and remarks "Then let's fight on equal terms", discarding his Transient Gundam's spear and engaging Sekai using nothing but bare-handed fighting techniques.
* Herostratus was a man, who in 356 BC, set fire to the Temple of Artemis at Ephesus, one of the
* He's Just Not That into You has the child version of Gigi, one of the characters, is abruptly pushed off a jungle gym by a boy. When she tearfully asks why he did that, he yells, "Because you smell like dog poo!" In trying to comfort her, her mother claims, "Do you know why he did that? Because he likes you!" As an adult, Gigi angrily points out that telling girls this sets them up for years of ill-treatment at the hands of men because of being conditioned to believe that it's actually a form of affection.
* he is a scientist working on creating a black hole. He succeeds in doing so and it sucks him and everything up. Which is the ''cause''
* Halloween (2018) franchise, but is also Michael Myers' canonical 61st birthday.
* Happy Heroes, the news gives a lot of attention to a musician who... missed a note while playing a song.
* Harlem Globetrotters On Tour, one of the Globetrotters blinds a referee by throwing a bucket of water in his face.
* Henry V... and tells them that if it happens it'll be all their fault for not surrendering. They surrender.
* Heracles is rarely depicted as "pint-sized". However, he certainly was on the day he was born, and on that day, Hera made her first strike against him, sending two venomous serpents to kill him while he slept in his cradle. He simply grabbed them both and crushed them, one in each hand.
* Haida has also been mistaken for an African wild dog, but is actually a spotted hyena.
* Hellboy use the color red in much of their regalia (as they were trying to win over ex-Communists).
* Golden Sun, typically providing a clarification or amusing aside to whatever an NPC says when addressed.

* "Her Honor, the Mare" (the first regular short in color) opens with a horse being rejected by a glue factory and has 4-F stamped on his rear end.
* Happy Tree Friends episodes from 2012 onwards, Truffles the pig, the loser from the new character contest Vote Or Die, can very briefly be seen in the background. On one occasion when Petunia explodes, he can even briefly be seen flying out of her.
* Her Heart Will Go On: When a person's love interest dies, they don't let their death keep them from finding someone else to love.
* Heracles had a mortal half-brother named Iphicles, the son of his mortal stepfather Amphitryon by their shared mother Alcmena. While Iphicles obviously couldn't match Heracles's divine strength or fighting skill, he was still a
* Gradius V, which by default respawns the player where they got killed (although checkpoints can be turned on in the options menu), the scrolling will slow down for a few seconds to let you get the necessary Speed Ups.
* He also used a more conventional tele frag to create handholds in a rock wall, allowing the rest of the party to easily scale it, by phasing his hand in and out, instantly powdering the rock in fist-shaped holes.
* GURPS. They're specifically designed to be masters of normal humans.
* Hell Let Loose has the map "Foy", set during the Battle of the Bulge in December 1944-January 1945. In contrast to every other map currently in-game, this one is blanketed in thick snow all around.
* Gor take care of all that). This doesn't make up for Gor managing to share an orbit with Earth but still be closer to the Sun.
* Harvest Moon has a vague continuity, not helped by the amount of reusing the same characters. It has been proven that some games share a universe though:
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret, we're treated with one for the titular character, who proceed to clobber the male protagonist for chasing her, even though it's just to clear up some misunderstanding.
* Heroic Sacrifice: Laying down your own life (or health, or happiness) so that others will be spared.
* Gotham, Gotham PD has the Homicide Division and the Major Crimes Division constantly clashing over who gets the murder cases. Not to mention the hostility due to accusations of one side being corrupt over the other.
* Henrik Ibsen and other parts of the world he's seen as the father of modern theatre.
* He also tends to update his Twitter account and online journal to point out errors in the chapters (from important points such as one character's element being labeled Ice instead of Water by mistake to trivial matters such as one character being shaded incorrectly), among other things.
* Hell Is for Heroes is a 1962 film about WWII GIs who have to hold an outpost until their relief arrives. They occupy an abandoned German pillbox with a microphone linked back to enemy headquarters. Bob Newhart plays an army clerk who makes fake radio reports so the Germans will believe that the squad is bigger than it is. Many of them are quite funny.
* grew up together with Yuka and trained alongside her at the Kyokushin Dojo, so she's been sparring with her since childhood. Though lately, she hasn't had the time, due to having to support herself and her brother.
* Grand Theft Auto V, they're best friends whether they like it or not.
* Hardy Boys until their father and the police force arrived to save the day. This was eventually changed in the later books to make them more useful.
* Heroes, Angela is served a fine one by sister when she tries to gain forgiveness for her lies.
* Growing the Beard: The point in a series' run where it gets notably better.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas has quite a bit of these in the desert areas (Las Brujas and Aldea Malvada are two examples).
* Good Is Not Dumb: A character who is good gets underestimated because of it.
* Gundam anime series is often considered to be measured by the number of Gunpla models it sells. The fact that many of these series are either good, great, or mind-blowing, seems completely unimportant to its production company.

* Gratuitous Russian — Все с русским лучше, чем все без русского
языка.
* Gundam SEED Destiny has the Archangel and Kusanagi, which still have their Lohengrins. There are more Izumo-class Orb vessels, as well, meaning there are even more ships with the weapons, as well as artillery versions used by ground forces. ZAFT even gets in on the action with the Minerva, which has the Tannhauser, a positron cannon (essentially a positron beam cannon without the word "beam" in its name).
* Green-Sky Trilogy. Telepathy in general is called pensing. A game called Five-Pense is played by little children to practice and strengthen these abilities, progressing from Signals and Choices to Images, Thoughts and Words.
* Happens again with his second daughter Warda, whom he had with Shiklah. Warda loved her mother very much, but doesn't think much of Wade. However, Warda is confused on the details of her parents' relationship and where her mother is after their final war against one another. Wade has hidden her away, and Warda holds him captive trying to get info on what he did with her. At the arc's end, Warda finally calms down and seeing things weren't the way she thought. Wade plans to go visit with Ellie and catch up, but tells Warda he'll be back so they can talk more about Shiklah.
* Heel Realization moment, but ultimately he goes on, business as usual.
* He elevated Jeanne to his personal aide despite her gender (Euro-Britannia being more conservative in that regard than the mainland) and is generally very nice to her overall.
* Hc Svnt Dracones when two people with Transcendent implants manage to procreate the resulting child sometimes exhibits the incredibly rare "Followed" morphism. Followed happen to have an instinctive ability to lower the Cuil level of any Transcendent implant that activates in their proximity.
* Habitat: Usually confined to one or two show/book/game entries — as with their adversary, the Defence Lawyer, they guard their home turf.
* Helen Keller made one in "I Am Alexander Graham Bell", as she is a student in his class.
* Harvest Moon: Magical Melody has the "Rival marriage" system that was apparently left out of the international versions. The supposed "marriage pictures" are fanworks.
* Heathers if it's going to prevent all of the students of Westerberg from being blown to smithereens by JD, but she's taking him down along with her.
* Highlander had a rogue Watcher who killed other immortals in complete darkness with night vision glasses. Duncan got the edge on him by blinding him with light from a match or lighter or something similar.
* gravitic propulsion necessary). Turning is done by projecting the singularity to the side and letting the fighter simply move along the curved space/time (i.e. the fighter is not changing its local directional vector; it's the space itself warping around it). Once again, no g-forces, but a fighter that gets too close to its own singularity can be spaghettified by it. In a later book, a fighter pilot learns to use the singularity projector as a weapon by getting to "knife-fighting" range and projecting a singularity inside a capital ship, then leaving without "winking" it out.
* He then laments losing so much screen time to better-looking actors. One particular scene required some complicated ceremonial swordwork. "I practiced for weeks with that, and I'm in the background of
* GURPS covers martial art styles. It lists Callous (you are merciless, if not cruel) and Loner (you hate being in close proximity to other people) as typical disadvantages for the Sharpshooter style.
* God Hand. The men will kneel and beg for mercy, and the girls will sit down and cry. This is a variant though since Gene can't actually arrest them or anything, his only option in this scenario is either ignore them until they stand up again, use the opportunity to perform a running attack on them, or somehow approach them and perform Gene's finishing move (suplex or spanking). Beware that getting too close to them will cause them to sucker punch Gene.

* Hetalia: Axis Powers have human names which are not entirely canon (they're never used in the actual manga/anime or by the creator except for two dubious instances in strips, and they originated from saved text from the author's deleted site blog), but very popular in the fandom because many fans are uncomfortable with using the actual country names. The human names are all composed of first, last, and sometimes middle names except for Germany, known only as Ludwig. Most fans borrow his 'brother' Prussia's surname Beilschmidt.
* Hayate the Combat Butler. It seemed to have evolved into true affection for him by the second time, resolving back to simple friendship later as she realized that Hinagiku really loves him, and the acceptance that both Hinagiku, the rest of the Baka Trio and Nagi have accepted her and she no longer needs to fear being left behind by him.
* Great Big Library of Everything: A library that has books on every subject imaginable.
* Green Arrow villain with a long, black, and definitely badass trench coat.
* GoldenEye (1997) — More or less defined the standard of the FPS genre on game consoles, establishes or popularizes many tropes seen in later FPS games.
* Godzilla As a result, they did the next best thing and made more movies featuring Godzilla, gradually turning him into their flagship character.
* Hanazuki: Full of Treasures, some Moonflowers like the titular heroine go barefoot. Others wear open-toed shoes.
* Grotesco somebody reported the show to the police for being upsetting to homosexuals.
* Haikyuu!!, Nekoma has a new starting player, Lev, in their second appearance of the manga. The explanation given is that he wasn't with them in their first appearance because he was still a newbie and they only took their main squad to training camp. In the two months between their two appearances, he developed enough to become a starter. The first OVA (which takes place between the first two seasons) properly introduces him to the anime viewers and shows how much he trained to become a starter, averting this trope.
* Guns and Gunplay Tropes). Or the Sorcerer, who uses the Sorcery skill to rain all over his enemies' parade. Sometimes literally.
* Halle Berry slept in a homeless shelter and a YMCA when she was starting out in New York.
* "Great [noun]? Or GREATEST [noun]?" …although most often this is said of George W. Bush.
* Hail To The King tells Asuka that he has no idea what Shinji sees in her.
* Harry Dresden does this from time to time, most notably at the end of
* Green Lantern, and the Lantern Corps that use each of them: red rage (Red Lantern Corps), orange avarice (Agent Orange), yellow fear (Sinestro Corps), green willpower (Green Lantern Corps), blue hope (Blue Lantern Corps), indigo compassion (Indigo Tribe), and violet love (Star Sapphires).
* Green Lantern, an airplane went down and Hal Jordan thought that maybe the pilot had forgotten where the lever was. He himself had managed to persuade Kyle Rayner to take a flight — without his ring — and after Kyle had double-checked everything, he had asked how to trigger the ejection seat, and Hal hadn't remembered.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters, finds the choice of locale cliched.
* Grim Fandango is a Spirit of the Land, who has "one purpose" - to drive, or be a mechanic, and will die if he does not fulfill it. He's perfectly fine with his induced obsession, though.
* Help! I'm a Teenage Outlaw, Lady D. has a secret tunnel that leads out to the village from her wardrobe in the castle.
* Harry Potter, Sirius Valentine Black publishes romance novels under the penname Valentina Jett.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) has the eponymous hero, He-Man,

"The Most Powerful Man In The Universe".
* Government agents Powers and Trigger from the second season premiere continue to appear in the background of almost every subsequent episode. They return to having speaking roles in the stinger for "
* Halloween (1978) of course did this multiple times where Laurie is exploring a house, she find one body then walks into something which prompts another peek a boo corpse to pop out.
* Hells Bells", which she rehearses over a shot of Xander walking in the rain, having decided to call off the marriage.
* Heroes of the Storm, particularly in the backstory of the characters Sombra and Zarya.
* Happens to the xylophone player after he is tossed on to the scrap heap in the episode "Snow White 2".
* Hell's Gate", which resemble the usual image of unicorns only in that they have a single horn and are roughly horse-sized and shaped. They are black, with disproportionately long legs, powerful hindquarters, and ears like a bobcat — and possess a mouthful of long tusks and sharp, carnivorous teeth.
* Heroes is basically a group of a soccer players, a cheerleader/former federal agent and 12-year-old veruss the Company. Made worse by the fact that only one of them has a power that could be considered offensive.
* Hannibal invokes this both through protagonist Will Graham and antagonist Hannibal Lecter.
* Harry Potter and the Underground's Saviour. Frisk takes exception to writing a report about killing werewolves, and writes about their humanity instead. Snape is not pleased.
* Higgs lugs Zeetha to Mama for treatment. Which lets the Castle heckle him about him and her.
* Going Postal: It was said that there was one horse in Ankh-Morpork that had a longitudinal seam from head to tail, being sewn together from what was left of two horses that had been involved in a particularly nasty accident.
* Grand Theft Auto III, Vice City and San Andreas have multiple timed car missions. The timer ends up being splayed across the part of the screen you most need to see. Also, the angle of the camera obstructs a good portion of the road you need to see to drive it without constantly moving the camera up.
* Haru, who are both pretty cynical and aloof, but are evidently concerned for one another.
* Gotham City Garage find them annoying and trite. Especially Nightwing.
* Heaven's Lost Property, but Ikaros' confession isn't even mentioned again until a bonus chapter in which Tomoki finally decides to "settle things" with Ikaros, only for him to back down when he realizes she isn't ready to hear his answer. Later, Tomoki vaguely asks Ikaros to "always stay by his side" and Ikaros complies.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire mentions that Mad-Eye Moody is retired and takes on his teaching job as a favour to Dumbledore.
* Hey Arnold! with Grandpa Phil and his lifelong friend / rival Jimmy Kafka as they're both about to drown:
* Hairspray this trope. She's a female character who was played by drag queen Divine in the original movie. Harvey Fierstein originated the role on Broadway.
* Halloween At Aunt Ethels: Mark and Mandy are revealed to want to kill Aunt Ethel because she killed Mark's brother and Mandy's sister.
* GURPS Banestorm has a botched attempt at magical genocide result in, among other things, accidental mass teleportation of humans from our Earth. One example NPC used to be an accountant from 1990's Chicago. A somewhat more deliberate example of this trope appears as a plot hook in the Abydos supplement; a professor at a magic school attempts to summon an archangel but gets the PCs (humans from modern Earth) instead.
* Hank Zipzer: While attending the rock festival in "Hank Rocks Out!", Stan encounters a portable toilet so disgusting he decides to hold it in for the entire weekend.
* Happens to many head coaches when they win their sport's respective championship. Notably,

* Heroes, Peter Petrelli is restrained, stripped naked, and forcibly showered in a bad future by men in decontamination suits as a precaution against a airborne disease.
* Guards! Guards!, he arrived just as she was trying to get two of her dragons to mate ("I say, my man, do you know anything about mating?"), and what she said led Vimes to think she'd kidnapped someone and was doing things not just sexual but downright perverted to the poor fellow. The dialogue went like this:
* He continues to mock them in "A Certain Romance", citing their Converses and tacky bottoms they wear to appear hip and cool. However, he appears to vindicate them by the end of the song, saying that despite all their show, they're still his friends and he just can't get angry at them.
* Gunnerkrigg Court develops a rather ferocious crush towards Matt at the start of year three. It's unreciprocated unfortunately, much to her dismay.
* Goldilocks for Lois and George. "My Last Spring" dates to the early stages of the show's production when Mary Martin was the intended star.
* Hellgate: London, one of the classes is the Engineer, which uses several kinds of "bots", both for attacks and for buffing/debuffing purposes. He can also summon a larger "drone" which acts more like a pet, but can be upgraded with a gun, sword and armor.
* Heathers tends to play this straight. Barret Wilbert Weed was 25 during the Off-Broadway production; Ryan McCartan was 20 and one of the younger cast members.
* Goblins stays on the Shiny end nearly all the time, especially for characters wearing metal armor. It only moves towards Gritty when blood is involved.
* Highlander. Fasil uses a Toledo steel broadsword that Brenda claims is worth a million dollars, and it certainly looks the part. Kastagir uses a curved Manchu scimitar, and Kim (whose fight with the Kurgan was filmed but never appeared in the film as the footage was sadly destroyed in a fire) opts for dual wakizashi.
* He once told a young writer, Paolo Bacigalupi, to get out of the genre while he could. Take that as you will.
* Godzilla Raids Again, Godzilla crashes Angurius completely into the Osaka Castle.
* good and evil deities). There's a reason why the natives of Golarion's neighboring planets refer to it as the Cage.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix upside down... because the answers to the quiz are printed upside down to stop people cheating.
* "Hell Bent" also specifically shows a white male Time Lord getting shot and regenerating on-screen into a black woman, hammering home that both
* Harry Potter and the Escape from Gringotts primarily stars Bill Weasley, a character that plays an extremely minor role in the films.
* Hawkman character Null, who's a woman named Janet Petty instead of a man named, well, Null, as far as we know.
* Grimsby wears the football/soccer jersey of his favourite Grimbsy FC (and England striker) player throughout the movie.
* GSN, is 5'8", which is above-average for an American female. However, the trope is played straight when she stands next to the 6'6", 370 lb. Mark "The Beast" Labbett.
* Harmony Theory, Nightmare Umbra can absorb the ashes of the fallen to increase her strength, and she can summon anyone she had absorbed as an undead minion.
* Goof Troop has the supporting characters Peg and Pistol as the center of attention in a small selection of episodes each.
* Greed, not that he would admit it out loud or even realizes it himself.
* Grell's crush on Sebastian, given Grell is a psychopath who talks within the same five minutes about wanting to cut Sebastian into pieces and bear his children.
* Hilarious in Hindsight and notorious cheater who was Ted's college girlfriend who he kept getting back together with, even after the relationship kept ending the same way.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. Yashima Sanae's feelings for her boss Konoe Tsurugi.
* Hatsune Miku: Project DIVA is the song from the once-popular Nyan Cat meme, since the original, rather limited, vocals belonged to Hatsune Miku!

* "Hated in the Nation" deals with two female detectives trying to solve a strange murder spree in a future Britain where bees are extinct and replaced by tiny robotic drones.
* Good Cop/Bad Cop, kills five of his "bad cop" henchmen merely to mess with the mind of his captive, who believes Ramsay is rescuing him. He essentially killed his own men for fun. Later, he has no problem ordering his archers to fire upon their men when they are engaged with the enemy during the Battle of the Bastards and creating a mountain out of their corpses to trap Jon's forces.
* Greyhawk where different colors of grung fulfill different social roles and also have unique poisons.
* Harry Potter books, Voldemort generally feeds his victims to his snake, Nagini, although they're usually (if not always) dead first.
* Harry Enfield and Chums's Kevin was a well-behaved, if hyperactive, boy until he turned thirteen, at which point his hormones kicked in and turned him into the teenage horror we all know and love.
* Good Times has the main characters finally having success at various endeavors they had been struggling with during the show's run.
* Goliath to with the inclusion of a similarly designed mohawk as an option on the Goliath plastic sprue.
* Henry Danger: The episode "Henry's Frittle Problem" has Henry's dad's face covered in ash when the Frittle Factory explodes.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. They struggle to analyze this statement and conclude that "as mere machines we can but hope to understand".
* Hellsing still happens, though, especially when she awakens to her full vampiric power.
* heal allies by shooting them while also functioning as a regular sniper rifle to enemies.
* Healthy in Heaven: Characters who die become their ideal forms (young, able-bodied, etc) in spirit.
* good, they are starting to fall out now that the war is won (it also makes them reluctant to create any more).
* Groundhog Day, Phil Connors gets pulled over by the cops for driving recklessly. When the cop walks up to his car window to question him, Phil acts like he's at a drive-thru and asks the cop for burgers and fries.
* Hello Neighbor. The plot of the game is them attempting to open the basement door and find out what's down there.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, including Hercules. The queen takes a liking to Hercules and offers to spare him from the games if he'll become her boy toy. When he refuses, she angrily orders him whipped. The whipping is offscreen, then he is dragged into his cell with whip marks on his back, and it takes him time to recover.
* Godzilla. Their second form has both leathery skin, and bone protrusions which act as exoskeletal armor.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law did this when he attacks Birdman, thinking he's trying to steal away Birdgirl's affection.
* Guild Wars is predominantly African and Middle eastern, with even the white NPC and PC skin tones being Mediterranean.
* .hack R1 Games had this as his initial occupation, before joining the team for real.
* Gunslinger Girl. Mimi Machiavelli, daughter of a witness who's testifying in a mob trial, handcuffs Hilshire and Triela together and nicks out the door to see her boyfriend, only to get immediately nabbed by mafiosi. Fortunately there are other Agency cyborgs on site who immediately snatch her back. Naturally the event gets used for a Shipping moment.
* Glory in the Thunder is an eight-year-old monster grown from the enslaved soul of a dead girl. She's still pretty cute.
* Hilarious Outtakes. In a "child-safe" redub of a gang fight, mooks exclaim things like "Ow, bee sting!" and "cut myself shaving" as they get shot.
* He & She (1947–50), featured real-life married couple Mary Kay and John Stearns in the title roles. Their son Christopher, born in 1948, was written into the show shortly after his birth.

* Grrl Power she tries to make a badass entrance by challenging Math to a duel, only for her foot to slip on some broken glass and she falls on her ass.
* Golems. The key exceptions, obviously, are that, first, the Dwarves do not appear to be monotheistic, instead practicing a form of ancestor worship, and that, second, the Dwarves have a rigid caste system that has no parallel in Jewish history.
* Hawaii Five-O where a mentally ill boy kills men who resemble characters menacing the female protagonist of his favorite comic strip.
* Gundam in terms of acting, and the tech looked on par with that of nearly two-hundred years prior. Not to mention that it was TOO realistic.
* Hercules, causes Phil to abandon Herc over his refusal to accept the truth.
* Greater-Scope Villain, not just hatred, and he's the only Shard that actually understands and cares for mortals. Evidence suggests he's wrong if not intentionally lying, as other Shards have shown considerable concern for mortals, in their own strange ways, and do at least somewhat understand them, if incompletely. According to Hoid, when he was a mortal he was already a selfish asshole, and then he deliberately picked up the Shard of Hatred and got worse.
* GURPS books, for example the Returner System, which is the magical equivalent of a department store security gate.
* Go to the mosk, which concentrates mainly on Hanlo's sexual orientation.
* Hi, I'm the Banjo Kid, the greatest banjo playing Anime critic on the net!
* "Hack a Shaq". To avoid combining these strategies, coaches may bench their worst shooters in closing minutes of a game.
* H₂O: Just Add Water that she was in the original trio of mermaids in the 1950s.
* Hedge Maze that surrounded it - its true name having been lost in time - and almost impenetrable. Some more detail is given in its construction.
* Hatsune Miku: Project DIVA that advertised how Miku is a global phenomenon, almost as a love letter to the same fans who, years after its first use, brought the game to the West.
* Happens even more regularly with individual characters mainly due to the sheer number of them. One of the more famous ones is the memorable Horde side NPC Mankrik. In the original version of the game, he gave a quest to players to find his wife. The players brought back some items that might serve as clues, and then moved on. When the Cataclysm expansion revamped the leveling, people hoped that we'd see Mankrik's wife. No such luck. Other little plotlines like this have also been left hanging.
* Hard on Soft Science meme persisting she found herself folding burritos for a living.
* Half-Human Hybrid Akin looks almost completely human and tries to act as a diplomat to human "resister" communities who refuse contact with the Oankali. This generally involves sleeping with a few of the local women who hope that they'll be able to conceive a child with him. He does tell them that human sterility doesn't work that way, but hope springs eternal...
* Glenn Martin DDS: Jackie majored in art history and art criticism, but never did anything with either degree. When she gets a job at an art store at the mall, her ability to analyze paintings is useless because the potential customers are just looking for something that looks nice. She eventually resorts to using sex appeal to sell the paintings.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Harry predicts how Ron and Hermione will react to his dream about Voldemort, and they both react more-or-less exactly as he thought they would.
* hand waved she was hit by. Not that that explains how the roadways can support her weight. Or those cars she used as skates.
* Glue date in secret, presumably because the locals would not take kindly to such a relationship (Cal is below the age of consent, for one thing). Unusually for the trope, nobody else knew about them while it lasted.

* Herzog Zwei as a classic shooter and were perplexed as a result, and their horrific scores followed that train of thought. Now that the RTS genre is firmly cemented in the gaming public's consciousness, fans are much kinder to the game.
* Grey's Anatomy fourteenth season finale "All of Me" was dedicated "in loving memory" of Shandra "Sha" Page Edwards (who worked in the hair department for the series) and Suzanne Patmore Gibbs (a TV development executive who helped launch the series at ABC Studios).
* Happens to another character later, this time one who's not tainted, where
* Harsher in Hindsight. She's in a better place now, but don't expect her to talk openly about her Channel Awesome days any day soon.
* He falls hard for Buffy despite her largely regarding him as a loathsome monster (granted, not unjustifiably). In "Intervention", he endures hours of interrogative torture from an omni-powerful hellgod despite knowing the information she was seeking, simply because it would hurt Buffy if he admitted what he knew and got her sister killed as a result. Then there's the fact that he goes on to
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters involve many of Marvel's heroes and Godzilla duking it out in New York. Although neither side lost any life, the feeling is still there.
* Happens twice in "Operation Dude Rescue"'s first part: first, Beast Boy dehydrates himself after drinking tea, and Robin wets himself when captured.
* Glimmer's flaw is her sense of righteousness. In season 1-through-3, she routinely goes against queen Angela's orders to do what she thinks is right, which sometimes works out and othertimes don't, but this flaw really starts becoming a problem in season 4, when * Guardians of the Galaxy, Groot and Drax manage to guilt trip Rocket to helping them save Gamora and Quill from the Ravagers. Rocket then starts kicking a patch of grass in frustration.
* Gravity Falls without a hint of irony, always jumps in when asked to participate in a game or activity that the kids have come up with, and is hooked on video games.
* He also refers to great Alpha Quadrant artists: "Verdi, da Vinci, T'Leel of Vulcan..."
* Granted, things get messed up in part two, when timeline changes make Wonder Woman disappear and at one point make Green Lantern a non-minority (
* Gravity Falls, but after Dipper saves her from a ghost in "Northwest Mansion Mystery", Pacifica becomes much nicer to him, enjoying his company more than before and valuing his opinion of her.
* Grupa Operacyjna: "Trzecia Wojna Światowa", as the name implies. It is describes as a war to survive, a war on the streets and in homes, between everything and everyone. But when you look deeper into the song's lyrics, it actually describes a crappy everyday scenario.
* Harry Potter in which Ginny, caught by her parents in a somewhat suggestive position, is then given The Talk by Arthur, using the metaphor of Plugs and Sockets, while short circuits represent pregnancy and childbirth.
* Griffith's no stranger to this trope even before the Eclipse. It's speculated by Judeau that the mission that he sent Guts on meant to kill Count Julius, who made an attempt on Griffith's life, may have been meant to kill Adonis, his young son (who Guts had accidentally killed during the mission in question) as well since Adonis was being groomed to marry Princess Charlotte, who Griffith wanted for himself in order to achieve his dream of having a kingdom of his own.
* Gray Lensman the Radelix patrol base at one point has men entering and leaving who all more-or-less resemble Kinnison. The purpose is to confuse the local Boskonian agent so that he attempts to abduct Kinnison, in his identity as a dock-walloper, in order to learn what is going on.
* Harry Potter builds this trope right into the setting. You've got magical powers? Great! You still have to go to school for seven years to learn how to use them. Both young Harry and Tom Riddle are able to occasionally "will" something to happen, but the effects are haphazard without training.
* HEAD-ON Apply DIRECTLY to the FOREhead. HEAD-ON Apply DIRECTLY to the FOREhead..

* Green Wing revolves around an upcoming charity slave auction featuring members of the hospital's staff. Most of the major characters use it as an opportunity to get close to their love interests, and they almost all fail.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers strongly implies that France was caught by Germany, with his pants down. France had been reflecting on his military history and telling himself how strong he was, getting more agitated, and red and blue-striped in the face all the while. Then Germany bursts in with a gun drawn looks horrified for a second then says, "I hate to disturb you when you're busy, but put your hands in the air."
* Glory of Heracles III come out of the Underworld through giant holes that form in the world.
* Happened again in "The Tale of the Mystical Mirror" which featured a girl starting work in a beauty shop. After a bit of primping by the owner, the girl walks out in a stylish black dress with full hair and make-up to the glee of her two co-workers. She's back to her normal clothes when she finishes work however.
* Hawkeye comes out of his "retirement" to seek Scarlet Witch at the Avengers compound. Vision gets in his way, and none of Hawkeye's attacks manage to even make the vibranium-made being budge. It takes Scarlet Witch's powers to incapacitate Vision.
* Going Postal, the elderly postal workers return from retirement wearing uniforms that are not, as such, uniform in shape, style, or shade. Moist, as Postmaster General, wears a cloth-of-gold suit that doesn't even pretend to be a uniform, although he does wear a gilded version of the standard postman's hat.
* Glengarry Glen Ross: There are several examples, but the best comes near the end between Ed Harris and Al Pacino, as Ed Harris is on his way out of the office.
* Hackers has one. "My name is _____ and I'm not an addict, really!" [shouts of derision] The kid, who is smoking rapidly between sips of coffee explains that he got in trouble for hacking and his lawyer made him out an addict so he wouldn't get so big a punishment. At the end of his diatribe, he asks if there's more coffee.
* GUN×SWORD continues to love his fiancée after her tragic death, but the last episode of the series hints that he may have found his second love. This is a case where the first love was most definitely "the real thing;" so much so that the second love comes off looking like a consolation prize in comparison.
* Hayate the Combat Butler's Hayate uses this trope when trying to explain his reasoning for attempting to kidnap Nagi. Only the fact that he fails, horribly, and then saves her from real kidnappers, getting her to take him on as her butler saves him, and starts the real story.
* guyliner, is a feminist ally and a good boyfriend, and is perfectly okay with trans/non-binary people.
* Harry Potter and the Prince of Slytherin into obedience by exploiting his severe arachnophobia.
* Go! Go! Nippon! ~my first trip to Japan~ and featured in a series of bundles ensured that the title sold moderately well.
* Golden Time to make sure their lives would go perfectly according to the little scenario she had formulated in her mind. He gets her to stop this after a serious talk in episode 4.
* Harry will give Fidelacchius to Karrin Murphy, as confirmed in Small Favor
* Gwen is usually passive, but the one time Arthur sees her pick up a sword (in "Lamia", to defend Merlin from the titular beast), he seems more proud than put off.
* Green Day had a lot of early tracks focused on this subject such as "Paper Lanterns" and "Only Of You".
* Good Luck Chuck occurs when Cam gets unnerved by the change in his personality and newfound clinginess.
* Granblue Fantasy has this for both Sarunan and his lover, a spirit named Kazann he refers to as Honey. Honey is at the end of her long lifespan as a spirit, but Sarunan refuses to accept this and ties his lifespan to hers until they can find a body to place her in. This causes immense strain due to how much of his life he needs to give to her, to the point where he's only barely clinging to life at the age of 22 and will most definitely die before the age of 30. Despite this, he constantly refuses Honey's begging to just let her fade away instead of slowly watching her lover die, and thwarts her attempts to forcibly end the pact that keeps her in the world.

* Halo wear armor that effectively stops aging, among other things. Aside from a few "naturalistic" eccentrics, this applies to their entire society, so it's less "Living Forever is Awesome" and more "Living Forever is Normal". They are capable of dying, but this is exceedingly rare, aside from the lowest rates with dangerous jobs.
* He gets better over time. At least, he tries. Apparently, he's "getting remarkable fluency at" urban slang.
* Grimm (when Adalind, disguised as Juliette, took his powers; when Juliette, disguised as Adalind, got them back for him; and when they knowingly and passionately made love for the first time in the loft—well after Adalind gave birth to their son Kelly). At one point, Juliette/Eve and Nick both admit to wonder how thing would've turned out between them, had things been different, but, ultimately Julitete/Eve accepts that Nick is with Adalind now.
* Gundam Breaker allows you to equip funnel weapons by attaching the backpacks of certain mobile suits onto your unit. They end up being the most useful of weapons since their recharge time kicks in the moment they're launched and by the time they're finished, they're ready for use again in about a couple of seconds, and because they're EX attacks, they don't run on any ammunition.
* GURPS skill can be taken with an "Emotions Only" limitation, and the Terror advantage produces fear or "awe".
* Gundam SEED Destiny: For the sake of her country, Cagalli was about to marry a man who was using her and whom she didn't love, in a dress and makeup that didn't suit her, when her brother used his giant mobile suit and kidnapped her from the ceremony. The groom was left empty-handed, screaming, and whimpering.
* Guys and Dolls, Sky Masterson and Sarah Brown have just been married and Nathan Detroit is about to marry Miss Adelaide.
* Halo 2 and he'll toss aside his firearm, bellow in fury, and rip out an energy sword to slice you apart with.
* Hawkeye and the Last of the Mohicans he had an ongoing rivalry with. It turns out to have been stolen before the battle by another colonist.
* Golfing for Cats, with a huge Nazi swastika on the cover. The reasoning, as stated in the foreword, is that people are interested in golf, cats, and the Third Reich, so putting them all together would be superb marketing.
* Harvest Moon: Grand Bazaar, but because of this they wear really similar clothing in their artwork.
* Halo: Nightfall, then comments that if Axl doesn't cooperate, Locke can always let Randall have another go at him. Axl is quickly convinced to give them the information they need.
* Hc Svnt Dracones, and is involved in so many industries characters with MarsCo as their educational background can choose any proficiencies.
* Green Lantern: Every single major love interest that John Stewart has ever had was an alien. He has been married to the red/magenta Korugaran Katma Tui and dated the blue Baraquan Merayn Dethalis.
* Hasegawa also gets this treatment with his sunglasses from time to time, though not nearly as often as Shinpachi.
* Government Conspiracy, it is revealed that Danzo actually leaked the knowledge that Naruto hosts the Nine-Tails, to instigate hatred against him.
* Halloween Episode featuring a pair of short stories told by Charlie to some passers-by on Halloween night. This was followed up by a double-length episode with four short stories, "Charlie's Halloween Thing 2".
* Hachiman provides a picture perfect entry in Yukinoshita's Sidestory in
* Hey Arnold! episode, "The Flood", Principal Wartz states that he would remain and go down with his school. It is unknown if this was sarcasm for forgetting about him, or he really meant it.
* Haruhi has her famous "hairflick". This is only portrayed in the anime.
* Hidamari Sketch, Sae wasn't entirely lying about having experience riding doubles on a bike with someone close while in junior high. It's just the other person is her little sister.

* heartwarming instance in "Moe Baby Blues": A lonesome Moe prepares to end his misery by jumping off the Springfield Bridge. Meanwhile, Maggie is sent flying from a traffic accident—and as Moe's about to jump, she lands right in his arms, saving her life. When Maggie gives Moe a kiss, he breaks into the tenderest smile—and touchingly remarks that "life...don't seem so hard no more."
* Granblue Fantasy, new Halloween-themed characters are added to the gacha wearing related Pumpkin or Trick-or-treat outfits. The setting is set at nighttime and event enemies include Jack-O-Lanterns.
* Hidden City who doesn't readily trust others, and the region is small enough for him to be able to directly oversee the investigations.
* Go (playing about 6 hours a day, once per week) before their completion.
* Guardians of the Flame the information within its cavernous shelves and chambers.
* Halo built quite a few of these. Known as "Shield Worlds'', they were intended to be bunkers where the Forerunners would take shelter when the Halo Array was triggered:
* Henchmen Race: A race or species of beings that were created for the sole purpose of acting as troops for their creator.
* Grimm, a sizable part of the population are wesen, humanoid beings with transformed animal or monster forms. Only Grimms and other wesen can detect them unless they're being deliberately threatening... or going out of their way to show a tiny amount of normal humans the truth, which is issued out on a need-to-know basis. Since wesen are naturally hidden from non-wesen, non-Grimm eyes, most people would assume anyone who told them the truth was crazy and/or become traumatized when presented with proof.
* Hardtop. He's a fan of comics, collecting many from earth, and other organic planets. When the 'cons are beaten at the end of the story, they're left on a planet awaiting rescue, so he starts handing them comics for them to read (though insisting they don't get skidmarks or crease them). Runamuck admits they aren't that bad.
* Hemostuck trolls make the impoverished underclass of the warmblood-dominated society, and the sea-dwelling trolls are reduced to living in a ghetto around the docks or in shantytowns in the sewers.
* Harry comes out to the Weasleys after Mrs. Weasley tries to push Ginny and him together for the nth time.
* Henry Danger with Henry, Charlotte, and even Captain Man entering his room through his second story window by climbing up a tree.
* Green Card features this as the central concept. The main characters marry each other, the man in order to receive a green card to stay in the US, the woman in order to move into a desirable NY flat that is for married couples only.
* Guilt Undone, Daniel reflects that he at least realised that he had feelings for Sam when he first met her after he returned from his Ascension, while Sam, in a more painful moment, realises how she felt about Daniel a month after his death after dreaming about the life they could have had.
* Hermes had a sparing role in the original myth of Perseus and only stopped to lend his winged sandals, and Athena acted as Perseus's main helper. In the
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Set in WWII. America's plan to defeat Germany? All the other Allies support him while he wins the war. "I'm the Hero!"
* Happens to a filly Twilight when Shining Armor and Princess Cadance kiss her cheeks in
* Hank "The Beast" McCoy is a good example of the super-intelligent giant subversion.
* Hayate the Combat Butler is able to use the blood of someone (who Hayate fits the description of perfectly) to restore her powers in one arc.
* Greyfriars, unless the plot requires him to (always temporarily) come to his senses.
* Gratuitous Iambic Pentameter — A non-poetic work uses iambic pentameter.
* He says this to Keaton after he returns to his human form stark naked, right in front of Elise.

* Heralds of Valdemar still haven't realized that Jakyr no longer works at the family inn. And since he's a senior Herald at the beginning of that series, do the math.
* Head Trip was hitting on her and wouldn't take no for an answer, she broke his nose. Apparently, this has happened before.
* Hell the Occult Society can pretty much be a Ragtag Organization of Misfits. The latest arc had just introduced an overly conceited
* Hellsister Trilogy kiss each other passionately when they are about to leave for a suicide mission.
* Gwen and Kevin have an Almost Kiss in the episode "Darkstar Rising", interruped by the Highbreed Commander busting through the wall.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban Hagrid recounts how he met Sirius Black the night of the Potters' murder, and he says that if he had known his role in their deaths, he'd have torn Sirius limb from limb. Hagrid is a half-giant, so he means it, and can follow up on it.
* He later proves her wrong, by giving up his life in defense of Afro during the battle with his clone/cyborg father (who might be another example of this trope).
* Harry Potter fanfiction, in which it's frequently used as a contrived device for hooking up two characters who wouldn't otherwise give each other the time of day. Usually, it takes the form of a Ministry decree that all purebloods must marry a muggle-born, causing either a) Lucius Malfoy to purchase Hermione Granger's contract for his son, or b) Severus Snape to do the same to "save" her from the previous.
* go stand in the hall as a punishment — sometimes they just need a bit of time to cool down.
* Gran Turismo: Throughout the series, due to lack of an FIA license, the Monaco GP course is renamed Côte d'Azur.
* Hakann of the Piraka has this as his special third power in the form of "mental blasts", and he
* Harry refuses to use Sirius' list of cheesy pickup lines on the grounds that Ginny wouldn't appreciate them.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Holy Roman Empire. Several times he has accidentally lifted up (or pulled down) Chibitalia's shorts. In addition, Italy and Romano both have hair curls that function as erogenous zones. Both have been unknowingly felt up by Germany and Spain, respectively.
* GoGo's Crazy Bones is easily the most popular toy property created by Magic Box International, and has become their most well-known series as a result.
* Hat Films joined, their similar senses of humour, funny collaborations and similar presentation styles meant that both fandoms got on well. The fact that the two liked each other in real life also helps, and the news of them joining went down well for the most part.
* Gravedale High episode "Monster Gumbo", Max Schneider's class argue amongst themselves over various things and it all erupts into chaos in the auditorium, leading to the boys stealing Coach Cadaver's trophy and ends with Max being chased by the other teachers as we see the camera zoom towards his mouth.
* Grey Hunters, Ragnar finds some soldiers and by spying, he learns they are loyalists who are trying to discover who had landed and, if they were loyal, bring them word of where the Chaos forces are concentrated.
* Go Go Power Rangers because of Zordon's three rules and he walks out on Kimberly and the others.
* he is always number one and dismembers Gearhead, cautioning everyone else around him to never betray him.
* Gödel, Escher, Bach: An Eternal Golden Braid randomly generated by a computer program and points out its obviously artificial aspects: no pronouns, basic and unvaried syntax, and the mention near the end of a "white, stony" object with the strange name "G0025" (a typical output of LISP's GENSYM function, which procedurally generates unique symbols for naming internal variables).
* he let her knock him out because he already knew he had another way to make it to Storybrooke and his intended vengeance.

* Hearts of Iron IV), each nation can choose only one doctrine, and each offers two branching paths for further specialization.
* Haikyuu!!, is on-par with arguably the most intelligent member of his team with regards to tactics, and has been shown to memorize volleyball signs in less than five seconds. On the other hand, his grades are catastrophically low, he thinks the brain is a muscle, doesn't know what veteran means... the list goes on and on.
* God of War (PS4)", briefly imitating Kratos' voice as he says "You are naive, foolish boy." Kratos is clearly trying to hold back laughter as he tells his son to just consider it a lesson.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi The girls wonder who those two women are, and who would want to watch a show with them in it.
* Hearts of Iron games when it is clear that a division cannot win against an enemy force but still has enough organization to maintain contact. It is entirely reasonable to withdraw a defending division when attacked, as at the very least the enemy division will have to delay several days before its next attack, and is an essentially element of setting up encirclement traps. Pulling an attacking division out of an assault that is clearly not working will save organization and manpower as well. This can also be pulled off as a tactical maneuver during battle by generals. It shortens the front, and gives the attacker an attack penalty and the defenders also a smaller penalty (which still ends in a net win for the defenders.)
* Higurashi: When They Cry, though much of her ill treatment comes from Oryou, her cruel grandmother. It doesn't end well for her as she becomes Shion's first target in the Cotton Drifting and Eye Opening chapters.
* HERZ: Kurumi often wondered why Shinji -a quiet, unassuming guy- married a fiery woman like Asuka. In reality, Shinji and Asuka need each other desperately and they think no one else will ever be able to understand their pain.
* Hail to the thief where demo versions of the tracks got leaked 10 weeks before the finished version was commercially available.
* He had a crucifixion pose at least twice ("Pilot", "Salvation"; yes, we are aware of the allusion in the second episode title).
* Hellboy to inflict an even worse fate on the world. She comes damn close to succeeding before the heroes stop her.
* Haruhi populates her club with these. It's even Lampshaded that "voluntary arrest" is her term for kidnapping. Yuki, Mikuru, and Kyon all fit the bill.
* Heidi Lovelace. She said that she also had trouble fitting in with most locker rooms.
* Head Alien generally comes off as a cartoon villain, constantly dreaming up plans doomed to be easily foiled by the introduction of the heroes, who never passes up the opportunity to show his love for dramatic tension, even when doing so hinders or even cripples his plans.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban: Ron goes to Egypt and visits a series of ancient Egyptian tombs, which are full of the mutated corpses of Muggle (non-magical) explorers who died of curses. Apparently the (wizard) emperors back in the day put crazy curses on their tombs to keep out sacreligious Muggles.
* Hannah Montana brought on by their dad attempting to tell the story and being ignored, causing them both to go listen and appreciate the slower moments on the road.
* Heracles). In the "canonical" version of the myths, despite being prone to fits of irrational rage, he is not dumb, and occasionally pretty sharp — one of his most famous stories is the Twelve Labors, in which he is forced to find clever solutions to twelve seemingly impossible tasks.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality: When considering this trope, Harry considers the standard proverb "there's no such thing as a perfect crime" and comes up with this disturbing thought:
* Grimm has the journals passed down in the Grimm family. They include detailed illustrations so future generations of Grimms can identify monsters they encounter and what their weak spots are.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban had another contest winner as an extra.

* have been well documented. Whats not often appreciated is that this also happened with the other major militaries which have been in action, i.e the UK and the Pakistani armed forces have also had to lower standards. As of 2016 as the major troop commitments have wound down, all three have suddenly and ruthlessly reimposed exacting standards.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2. For the final battle, they had a third girl, Nebula, on the team as well, but she left afterwards on reasonably good terms with the Guardians to pursue her own goals.
* "Heroes": Mac tells Stella that a former co-worker's father will let them know when the arrangements for her service are finalized.
* Gustav Holst has "Mars", the planet named for the Roman god of war, which famously features a pounding drumbeat.
* Harry Harrison story set on a Lost Colony. The third part is about trying to mine ores on a planet inhabited by nomadic tribes which forbid permanent structures.
* Going Postal Rather against tradition, and with a little huffiness from the executioner, he had been allowed an opportunity to improve on his original last words: "I wasn't actually expecting to die."
* Gravitation Shuichi is Yuki-sexual and Tatsuha is completely and utterly obsessed with Ryuichi. Whether it's faking illnesses or dressing up in an animal suit, Tatsuha will do anything to get Ryuichi. Unfortunately for Shuichi, if Tatsuha can't get his hands on Ryuichi he forces his UST upon Shuichi as Shuichi resembles Ryuichi.
* Gravestone of Daisuke Jigen all wear creepy gold or silver masks that resemble human faces.
* gold and white embroidery to give it a blouse-like appearance. The Champion's Ballad DLC reveals that all of the Champions' blue pieces were made by Zelda herself, so it's implied that her outfit is meant to coordinate by her own design.
* He first discovers this connection in the first place by pulling the panties off of a sleeping Bulma and realizing that she's missing some parts that he has. Bulma does
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, when Ron Weasley calls to try to talk to Harry, Vernon Dursley tells him that there is no Harry Potter there, to never contact him again or come near his family, and "throws the receiver back onto the telephone as if dropping a poisonous spider." But given that it's Vernon and that Ron was shouting, not knowing how to properly use a "fellytone," it's pretty much to be expected.
* Good Omens (2019): Aziraphale and Crowley are Heaven and Hell's, respectively, most active agents on Earth. The two realize during the King Arthur years that all they're doing is thwarting each other, with the end result being neutral. They come to what they call "the Arrangement," where they either both do nothing (and tell their bosses they were thwarted by the other side), or occasionally one of them goes off to do both of their jobs to save them some time. Because of this, the vast majority of human history, for good and ill, is entirely the fault of humans.
* goddess of magic campaign setting... well, let's just say anyone who has a passing familiarity with Dungeons and Dragons can make a better epic-level wizard.
* Granted, it was the symbiote doing all the work for him, but the fact that Peter still had all of his bones in the right place the next day is nothing short of a miracle.
* God calls Bill Gates, Boris Yeltsin and Bill Clinton for an urgent message. He informs them the world will end next week and they are to relay a message to their people. Yeltsin goes back to Russia and says there is bad news and terrible news - the bad news is there really is a God, and the terrible news is the world will end next week. Clinton holds a press conference in Washington and says there is good news and bad news - the good news is there really is a God, and the bad news is the world will next next week. Bill Gates returns to Microsoft and holds an full employee conference, saying he has good news and great news. The good news is God knows what a wonderful, important person he is, and the great news is they don't have to worry about fixing the
* GURPS extend life expectancy by 10 years and expensive "rejuvenation" treatments can actually reverse the aging process.

* Greyhawk game, one of the main antagonists is the Scarlet Brotherhood, a group of blonde, fair-skinned, blue-eyed humans who preach the inherent superiority of all humans who share their appearance and seek to exterminate the "demi-human" races (such as elves and halflings).
* Harry claims his hangover is due to drinking massive amounts of (alcohol-free) Butterbeer.
* Herb Brooks's speech to his US hockey team right before the famed "Miracle on Ice" game, when the amateur squad beat the four-time defending champs from the USSR in the 1980 Olympic semifinals, arguably the greatest sports upset ever:
* GURPS T'Soquat into our world and sacrifice his daughter Alicia to it.
* had been taught to fight from childhood, and they killed several sultans for thinking it was time to put the guard down.
* Gungrave, and since Mika's become rather attached to him, naturally she pleads with him to not leave her alone.
* Her video for "Countdown" appeared at first to be hiding her pregnancy with an abundance of shots from her front. And then she turned to the side and started rubbing her belly proudly.
* Hannah Montana after representing Lily in teen court (and proving to everyone's satisfaction that she was to blame for Lily's current predicament), Miley gets "served" some justice, and ends up covered in pasta and sauce.
* Hell's Kitchen put on their heads along with a tongue-lashing from chef Gordon Ramsay (who threatened to kick a few of these people out), and none of them even made it to the halfway point of the show.
* Hercules: Hercules appears to have successfully killed the Hydra but perished in the process. The hydra's fingers begin twitching and uncurling, making the onlookers fear that it isn't quite dead, until its hand fully opens to reveal Hercules very much alive inside it.
* God Save Us from the Queen!: The Queen is insane, evil, and/or downright incompetent.
* Grimm. The final season throws that completely out the window, with Nick actually travelling to Wesen Hell and meeting the Wesen Devil. Oh, and in the final fight, he fights side-by-side with his dead mom and aunt and then magically jumps back to a few days before
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas's "House Party" mission has Grove Street come under attack by the Ballas. This occurs early in the game.
* Glen Cook prestige in order to maintain their claim on temple real estate in TunFaire's Dream Quarter. As the gods' traits and looks are dictated by their followers' beliefs, this means that the senior deities of two rival pantheons look virtually identical, because their idols were commissioned from the same craftsman, who used the same mold to cast figurines of both.
* Grand Theft Auto series, since its introduction into the 3D world, was to be able to take a prostitute to a secluded part of whatever city you're in (like in an alley or a closed-off section of it), then wait until the car stops shaking. Afterwards, when the prostitute comes out of the car, you could then murder her and get the money back that you spent on the experience (since she then was programmed to return to the game world as a pedestrian that you could kill).
* Greek Mythology, anyone who burns the entrails of the Ophiotaurus would gain the power to defeat the gods.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality said that "maybe they'll get together later, maybe they won't, but for the time being they're just eleven and it's reductive to think that Hermione, because she's a girl, could only be a love interest and not a friend".
* Green Lantern, whose run started to bleed readership. Following him was Ben Raab, whose run was so reviled that many Rayner fans blame him (in addition to Winick) for sinking the sales of the title and basically forcing DC to bring Hal Jordan back as Green Lantern to stop the bleeding.
* Grand Canyon was upset that his editor didn't keep the violent "money shot" of the bus driver's head being blown apart by a shotgun.

* Guardian Ninja Mamoru, on the other hand, would argue that Mamoru also has a special duty to find a girlfriend so he can get married and give them some grandchildren so the family tradition can be carried on.
* Gulliver's Travels (2010): Happens to Darcy when she gets kidnapped and tied up.
* Happy Days: In "The Physical", Sgt. Beckler accidentally calls Fonzie "Forchanelli" (his real last name is Fonzarelli). Fonzie is so offended by this that he deliberately calls Beckler "Belcher".
* Hellsister Trilogy already displays this power in the first chapter when she travels to the future by flying faster than light.
* Grojband, Mina doesn't appear in the episodes "Myme Disease" and "The Pirate Lounge for Me". The show also parodied the trope with her in the episode "Cloudy with a Chance of Malt Balls".
* GURPS is the Dread Blossom, a flower that makes people exposed to its scent paranoid and xenophobic.
* Hilariously and reviews it, only to discover all his scenes were cut from the final version!
* Hanatsuki Hime to experience this trope because the devils do not have emotions (or the emotions that humans have). It starts out as a game to relieve boredom and simply ends that way for most — for some, however, the trope gets played straight.
* Henry is far more meek and gentle, and his hatred of the rain is treated more as a phobia (in the books he was merely pompous about getting his paint spoiled, if you don't go by the theory that Henry was actually having mechanical issues that day and had stopped in the tunnel to cover them up).
* Hello Cheeky in two parts. This is immediately followed by a cry of "Rigo—", and fifteen minutes later, we hear a yell of "—letto!"
* Happens in the very first episode, when Mac's mean older brother begins forcing Mac and Bloo to destroy the house by running them into objects. The Ming vase only gets broken at the end of the scene, where Bloo grabs it and smashes it over Terrence's head. Terrence tries to blame them for it, but his mom doesn't believe him.
* GURPS Supers is a Frankenstein monster made from multiple metahumans. A thoughtful and philosophical being, he spends a lot of time wondering if he has a soul ... and if so, whose?
* Gotham Central supervillains, but the storylines are straight drama involving normal police detectives going about their work. Everybody said it would not work, but it wound up winning critical acclaim and several awards (but was still too good to last, the sales numbers never quite matched the praise).
* He Knows Too Much: Killing someone because they have learned a dangerous secret they can't be allowed to know (or which they possibly plan to share with other people).
* half the man he used to be. When Goku spares him some energy, he begins to ponder if he should turn over a new leaf.
* Guardians in a blink of an eye before slicing them up with his scythe-like blades.
* Heroic Neutral companions, he genuinely wants to be a hero, enjoys having his powers, and is the first to go into danger to protect someone else.
* Hero House has an exceptional example, with the Villains summoning Godzilla to help them battle the Heroes. Then the Heroes proceed to match them, summoning Gamera himself to even the odds. Awesome ensues.
* Hero: 108 is "cursed" with having anyone who tells her that he loves her three times in a row turns into a Yaksha... an adorable creature which she can wear on her head like a hat and which she is very close to. She especially takes advantage of this when her (presumably) first Yaksha gets destroyed by the ligers and soon gets replaced with another one because in the same episode, she has the luck of encountering a man who loves her and tricks him into saying that three times. Another upside is that if a Yaksha stops loving Sonia, it turns back into its original self. This means that Sonia will always know who is merely infatuated with her, and who loves her unconditionally. Yaksha is cursed to lose its original form and be stuck as this monster. A monster with an incredibly durable elastic body, that makes it a huge asset in battle. Not to mention all the time Yaksha spends cuddling with the woman it loves.

* He does get physical on one occasion when Bertie, being pursued by a policeman, ends up literally up a tree.
* Hide Your Gays (who did it in an episode of her self-titled sitcom) and singer Melissa Etheridge, leading to a slow but certain wider acceptance of LGBT people. It wasn't all positive though — the majority of society still disapproved of gays marrying, "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" was established, and homophobic bullying reached brutal heights, culminating in the murder of Matthew Shepard (though on the positive side, his killers were sentenced to life behind bars).
* GUN×SWORD is a sweet, smart, polite young man (despite his social awkwardness). Wendy immediately recognizes that he's "nice," but she's already so smitten with Van that she doesn't seem to realize that Joshua has a crush on her.
* Hair end with audience members joining the cast on stage to sing and dance to "Let The Sunshine In," making it a pretty inclusive Dance Party Ending.
* Grent's Fall: Osbert's goal for his sons, while Osbert himself is definitely a warrior king.
* hamr (follower) which was a guardian angel of sorts that are inherited in a family.
* Hamlet is that Gertrude has cottoned on to Claudius's plan and drinks the poison to reveal his plan and save Hamlet. If so, this is the only time in the play she puts her son before anyone, including Claudius.
* Gold Digger by Fred Perry, this is a main characteristic of Julia, the character's mother. She's a world class martial artist, but has one weakness. Her back keeps giving out. So, she'll kick arse, take names, then at the end. "Ow, my back. Someone help me up." Also helps keep her from over-powering the heroes. Then she gets hit with a youth spell, and her back doesn't give her problems.
* Happy Tree Friends always inflict this upon Sniffles whenever he tries to eat them. They're at their worst in "Tongue in Cheek".
* Happy Days episode "Great Expectations," Dierdre, a beatnik girl staying at the Cunninghams' house while her car is being repaired, turns out to be pregnant. Howard and Marion find out when they notice her adding jelly beans to her egg salad sandwich.
* Gravion and never having left the castle, he has a loose grasp of common sense.
* Gugure Kokkuri San doesn't even bother with disguising himself. Doesn't stop everyone from being fooled.
* Hades: Aphrodite is the goddess of love. Fittingly, her boons and corresponding status effect "Charm" are marked with a pink heart.
* Great Greed, where you can pick any one of ten other characters, male or female, for your male character to marry after you beat the game.
* Godzilla Junior and Xenilla both humor their guards when they get arrested at different points in the story, then casually break their shackles.
* Hellsing, Alucard rather admires humanity to a point, though he generally makes a distinction between "human dogs", "humans who become monsters" and "real humans".
* Great Auks; apparently the last two individuals were killed because their capture occurred at the same time a storm came, leading the sailors to think the birds were witches.
* Gyo is about fishes with mechanical legs that crawl out of the ocean and invade the city, infecting the people with poisonous gasses. Needless to say, there is a shark involved, and that's when things get really bad. There is a scene where a shark kicks down a door, with a big GASHUNK sound in the English version. This has become a Motivator meme: "GASHUNK: Clearly the sound a shark makes when it kicks down a door."
* greatest non-supernatural vampire hunter in recorded history, "darkest of the dark dimensions". If that doesn't label him as ultimate hardcore badass nothing does.
* .hack//G.U volume 1's special edition came with an extra DVD with info about the first four games and a figurine of Haseo.

* Guardians of the Galaxy, Rocket is the result of "illegal genetic and cybernetic experiments on a lower life form", specifically a raccoon. He is not aware of this, as he doesn't know what a raccoon is, instead believing himself to be an entirely artificial lifeform.
* Happy Ending, Taketo confesses his feelings to the protagonist and tells her he wants to go out with her. However, he's convinced that she's in love with his twin brother Yasuto, and he gets a good ways into a speech about how he understands that she doesn't return his feelings and he just needed to get them off his chest before it gets through his head that she just said 'yes'.
* Hatoful Boyfriend is discomfited by this and several love interests have positive comments on her stature and strength, though most of the "romances" seem more like "forging close personal friendships".
* Gridlock of years later; these creatures could have evolved from a few random cells a Macra tourist unknowingly left behind in that time.
* Heroes were filmed during breaks in the filming of the show proper and released on the internet as the episodes aired. Consequently, the lineup sometimes changes halfway through an episode as the actors arrive on set or leave to shoot a scene, and the commentators occasionally have to be shushed — or even bleeped — when they accidentally start talking about an episode later in the season.
* heavily, even the "actual" returning characters can be radically different depending on the series, movie, video game, etc.
* Harry Potter has the Gytrash, a giant ghostly dog, which appeared in some of the games. It's based on a Lincolnshire myth, although the original gytrash was sometimes a horse or a crane as well.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Voldemort and his Death Eaters have taken over, so the above posters are gone, but now there is a new poster - "Harry Potter - Undesirable No. 1" stating that there is a 10,000 galleon price on his head and that failure to report a sighting of him will result in imprisonment.
* High-Class Call Girl: She speaks six languages, and is putting herself through law school... by any means necessary.
* Halloween Otome, it's downplayed (especially in the case of The Count), but Emma and Mr. Bandages hair (in length/style and colour, respectively) are striking enough that Emma should have recognized one of the guys, or vice versa.
* Highlander) started his career by directing many, many music videos in the 1980s. He practically invented the "glass object shattering in slow motion" motif used so often in the TEN videos he did for Duran Duran.
* Haunted House: An old home whose late previous residents never really left.
* Have I Got News for You, after given his Odd One Out group, Paul Merton begins to ponder the answer. Suddenly, the camera fade-cuts to some footage of Paul and fellow captain, Ian Hislop, skipping through a field in slow motion to sappy soft music for several seconds. Camera cuts back to Paul, who's got a day dreamy expression on his face. He then shakes his head and apologizing, saying he was "miles away". The footage popped up again in the later seasons when Joan Collins hosted in a Dynasty spoof, but aside from that, there was no explanation for it. According to Paul of the Very Best of HIGNFY DVD commentary, he tried for eight years to get that gag onto the show and was rejected two times by two different producers, the third try helped and the gag was put in.
* Hero In Training. Basically, once you get outside our 'local' universe, all bets are off as to what the local laws of physics are.
* Hanyuu has been a character since the first arc and is foreshadowed early on, but she isn't properly introduced until the Answer arcs. She becomes a part of the main gang in the final arc.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers features Germany claiming to have "killed a man in his sleep with only his own moustache and a grape".
* Glinda of Oz is the 14th book and the last one written by its original writer.
* Gunnerkrigg Court to his possession: he can't exist outside a body for more than a few seconds, and he permanently dispossesses the host's soul. When he takes a new host, his old one dies.
* Hank Pym. Despite all of this, he still keeps trying to prove his worth as a superhero.

* Grand Theft Auto V has apparently "gone Vinewood", indicating that "Something Sensible" never took place.
* Green Lantern Nekron, who represents the forces of death on a cosmic level, wishes to consume all positive and negative life force in the universe. To take it, he needs to draw everyone into his realm... effectively making him an Omnicidal Maniac. It turns out that the resurrections of various heroes in the DC Universe were a plan on the part of Nekron to give him thralls to control.
* Heroes type, except that he seems capable only of a creepy monotone or murderous rage. No middle ground.
* Haruhi Suzumiya to take pictures. As a result, he just stands there acting all disgusted at Haruhi's actions.
* Grim Fandango, Manny's reaction to the player trying to order him to pick up used cat litter during Act 2 is a burst of incredulous laughter.
* Hey Arnold!, the fans can now see how similar their takes on the story were to the final film.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) long, slow pans), though it's not at all sinister-looking, since he's a nice guy.
* Halloweentown, whose heads are too busy yelling at each other to be particularly helpful (on top of her daughter Marnie's complaints). The bus itself won't arrive for another several hours due to engine trouble, to Gwen's frustration and Marnie's delight.
* Halloween (1978), Loomis finds a plumber's abandoned pickup, and in it is the same matchbook carried by the nurse who was with him when Michael Myers escaped the previous night; she left her matches in the car Michael stole, and they wound up in the truck of the guy he stole his jumpsuit from.
* He predicted that this trope would be invoked when he placed "All the Right Moves" by * Heart of Steel, Alistair wears Howie-style lab coats almost exclusively. By the very end he has adopted steampunk fashion.
* Grinny, he has a cameo in the story as one of the children tries to ask his advice about the new events as they're still happening.
* Halek the barbarian knocking himself out, forcing the bard to risk his own life to pull him to safety. Honorable mention to the four trolls who botched their attempt to hide so badly the GM decided they'd covered their heads with fungus thinking "If I can't see you, you can't see me!"
* Hatori's ex-fiancee Kana was also very understanding when learning he was the Dragon of the Zodiac — the only reason they broke up at all was that Akito completely traumatized Kana and she needed to have her memories wiped of their time together.
* Gossip Evolution, where the original message is lost and corrupted by each individuals own specific interpretation of what they were told.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers groped Italy once and mentioned that "The more you resist the hotter I burn for you."
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle), the bullying sheriff gets to say this terrific line after he gets shot: "Bullets! My only weakness! How did you know?"
* Hellhounds, the invisible dogs that drag doomed souls to Hell, are accompanied by loud baying and a
* High School Dx D, Issei punches Raynare through the glass and outside the church. In the light novels, it was through a wall instead.
* Grim Dawn (Karnath Chillblood, Moosilauke the Chillwind, and Ilgorr the Eternal) can reconstruct themselves after being killed to enter a second phase.
* Golden Age story, a player is murdered on field during a baseball game. Somewhat unbelievably, the game continues with Cap and Bucky subbing.
* Having facial paralysis such as Bell's Palsy, which prevents one from moving the muscles on one's face definitely, can cause this.
* Greg Rucka of them have actually had sex with Bruce Wayne, and come to the inevitable conclusion...
* Go-to-Sleep Ending: The story ends with one or more characters asleep.

* he was just distracting the doctor with his complicated instructions while someone else did the real work behind the scenes.
* Go type about:mozilla in the URL box in any Mozilla browser from Netscape Navigator 1 all the way up to the current version of Firefox. (Original Web? Not exactly, but close enough.) Or just google "Book of Mozilla".
* Glenn Miller and his Orchestra's "Pennsylvania 6-5000" immortalized the phone number of the Hotel Pennsylvania, which has been in continuous use since the 1930's — the oldest operating phone number in New York according to the hotel.
* He refused his men water (in the deserts of New Mexico) before the events of the episode, and one of his men was shot when he did steal some water, and the man's wound was not tended to, even in the jail. He was also set to be executed the next day. (He got better.)
* Great Lakes Avengers is a girl named Good who transforms into a masculine wolf.
* Harry Potter novel. He had used the Philosopher's Stone for centuries as a part of the process of brewing an elixir of life, but after learning that Voldemort was seeking it out, he and his wife willingly turned it over to Dumbledore for safekeeping. The trope is played straight, though bent sideways; without the Stone, Flamel only has a limited supply of the elixir remaining. Just enough, Dumbledore says, to put his affairs in order and finish up last-minute business before he and his wife pass on. Though it's not explicitly stated, the tone of it is that he will eventually pass away quietly of natural causes, without any skin-sloughing ickyness.
* Gray Lensman universe is your best weapon). He also avoids thionite as too dangerous and instead chooses a more-common and less-dangerous drug (a chewing tobacco-like substance called bentlam) as his apparent vice. His over-the-top violent reaction when offered thionite (it's fake, but "Wild Bill" shouldn't have known that) actually helps convince them he's NOT a patrolman, since they were expecting someone under cover to try to make plausible-sounding excuses, not deck a debutante.
* High School D×D has Azazel cutting off his left arm when Katrea Leviathan ensnared his arm to kill both him and her when she was about to self-destruct before he runs her through with his light spear. He regrows it later anyway.
* Halo, by killing both their potential hosts and any Flood form more advanced than a basic Infection Form. Before they fired the Halos, the Forerunners made sure to evacuate as many species as they could to an extragalactic safe spot; afterwards, they were resettled on their homeworlds, with each species forced to start off as hunter-gatherers again. Each individual Halo does have a limited range though, which is why there's seven of them.
* Gotham, Harvey walks into this in "Spirit of the Goat". He knows that the person he's talking to is the killer, but doesn't realize the way in which they're going to attack him.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, Salome tries to invoke this in one episode in the hopes of getting some treasure.
* Heart of Steel Alistair is gravely injured in a battle with Julia's crazy ex-boyfriend-turned-rival-cyborg, forcing Julia to call upon both her ER training to tend to his biological injuries and the local robots to repair the damage to his cybernetic implants, while trying to get someplace safe.
* Heather has a habit of doing this behind other peoples backs, the biggest example being Izzy who she calls "Psycho Hose Beast".
* Guilded Age: Gravedust can count enemies through walls by sensing it.
* Guilty Gear series, lost her right arm and an eye when she was a little girl, leaving her a good character with Evil Scars.
* Hellboy the time he is abducted by aliens. He decides he doesn't like the idea and proceeds to kick all their asses.
* Good Times: Keith gets another shot at pro football when the Bears give him a contract, enabling him and Thelma to move to a swanky condo. Thelma is pregnant, and she and Keith invite Florida to live with them. Michael moves into a dorm on campus. Willona is promoted to head buyer at the boutique and she and Penny also move to the same condo but on a different floor. JJ creates a comic book character called DynoWoman who is modeled after Thelma; he is given a huge advance, enabling him to move out of the projects as well.

* GWAR are explained to be this, along with pedophiles, zoophiles, and every other -phile out there....
* Here Comes Mister Jordan) is about a man who dies before his time and is sent back down to earth in the body of a recently deceased millionaire. To the audience, he looks like himself but to the characters, he looks like the aforementioned millionaire.
* Guyver Naruto, she crushes her in a hug and wonders if the Hokage will let her take the young girl home with her.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi example, starring the cartoon versions of two actual Idol Singers: Ami Onuki and Yumi Yoshimura. Subverted by the real singers, now in their early 40's still being respected performers, considering that their pop-rock music appeals to a boarder demographic that simple teenage bubblegum pop.
* Hexenringe is the newest member of Lucky Seven, a group of assassins that specialize in killing and capturing comic characters.
* Gone Horribly Right, in that some of them increased their rating enough to wipe themselves from existence entirely. It is implied that at rank 10, the universe itself forgets you, hence you apply this trope to yourself.
* Godzilla Against Mechagodzilla variation of this trope. She was able to force Godzilla into a stalemate, in a damaged mech no less.
* Higurashi: When They Cry and all of Hinamizawa backing her up, but Satoko finds the courage to oppose her abusive uncle and ask for the help she so desperately needs.
* Haroun and the Sea of Stories?" When her secret is revealed, the only character bothered by it is quickly chagrined by someone more awesome who isn't.
* Hero Clix TV show had to include a mechanic for this, even called Elaborate Deathtrap. It gets the target out of the way for a while, but they can and will come back, since they get a chance to escape every turn and will always succeed if the guy that out them there has been K.O.'d.
* Heathers and the little sister of one of the boys killed turns to look at them while crying. It's at that point that Veronica begins to realize how messed up she's becoming under J.D.'s influence.
* Hero: The Guardian Smurf, Brainy tempts Smurfette with the possibility of her being his queen and ruling beside him over the Smurf Village together. She rejects him and joins the rebels.
* Ground Control had missle-based AA terradynes for Crayven Corp and bullet-based AA hoverdynes for the Order of the New Dawn.
* He grabs a gun off one of the officers and kills himself. This immediately after attempting to kill himself and being stopped by the officers who arrested him One wonders why they thought that was a good idea.
* Glory's backstory reveals that when she was in her home dimension, she grew so powerful that the other two Hellgods who ruled alongside her trembled before her might.
* Goosebumps, the explanation for why all the monsters in R.L. Stine's books actually exist is that, when he was younger, Stine was so lonely that he would dream up monsters to terrorize those that bullied him, until eventually his belief in them became so strong that they literally leapt off the page.
* Half-Life 2's Father Grigori is clearly of the "putting a damned creature out of its misery" type. "A shepard must tend to his flock!", where his flock is the town of Ravenholm, who have all apparently become zombies.
* Gridlock'd, Spoon calls an ambulance to help his friend who has overdosed and gets hung up upon when they hear his voice. When he calls again, he says something along the lines of "there's a white woman hurt and a bunch of black guys smashing cars and yelling about the revolution!"
* he shoved guy's wrench down his throat. Head-first. All the way down. eehhhhhgh!
* Henry IV also has this, in its own way. King Henry's refusal to ransom Mortimer under the fear that he might lead a rebellion eventually causes Hotspur to lead a rebellion of his own.

* He was gunned down by Umbrella goons, injected himself with his own G-Virus
* Goldengirl which would enhance the test subject into a perfect athlete.
* Head-Tiltingly Kinky: One or more characters react to an unseen, weird sexual activity.
* Grayling features the personifications of death, life, order, and chaos, among others, as its main characters.
* Heck, if the page image is to be believed, Ren is the reigning king of this trope.
* Hamlet, this is one interpretation of Hamlet's character when he stalls after being called to avenge his father's murder. At one point he rants about how he's standing around talking about killing the murderer rather than actually doing anything:
* Hedy Lamarr was stateless from the time her Austrian citizenship was revoked by the Nazis in 1938 until she became an American citizen in 1953. She had already moved to London before the latter happened and her film contract gave her a green card to move to America.
* Half Blood Prince, he disarmed her from afar. Ginny can be seen picking up her wand as soon as Lupin and Tonks get there too.
* HammerFall. The band name, songs like “Hammer of Justice,” “Let The Hammer Fall,” “Reign of the Hammer,” “Raise the Hammer,” and “Bring the Hammer Down” (Slam it down to the ground). Suffice to say, the guys love hammers.
* Grim Fandango, and many souls can't go directly to their final resting place due to past misdeeds. Some are simply forced to spend up to four years traveling to the Gate; others, like Manny, have to work for a prolonged time before they're allowed to leave. The most saintly souls can reach the Gate in four minutes by boarding the Number Nine train, but the main plot revolves around them getting robbed of their tickets, which leads to this trope.
* Green Wing. Most of the other scenes involving Sue White are also surreal.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix has this when Harry and his friends are in the Department of Mysteries and they're trying to find which door is the one with all the glass balls seen in Harry's dreams.
* Gremlins start out as cute furry little things, but if fed after midnight, they become green monsters.
* Henry IV, Part 1: Falstaff plays dead during a battle to avoid getting really killed.
* Haegemonia: Legions of Iron, causing an ecological catastrophe (talk about overkill...).
* Green Bay quarterback Brett Favre practically threw himself under Michael Strahan of New York so that the latter would break the sack record.
* Hideo Kojima at this point, but some feel that it’s a less fun reason to actively hate on him compared to when he was more actively antagonistic.
* Hellboy (2019): One dubbed in Mexico exclusively for that country, handled by Imagem Filmes, and another one done in Argentina, handled by Digi Cine.
* Highschool of the Dead. Her response is an angry "That was Prada (manga)/Christian Dior (anime dub)!"
* Happy Heroes, the fish monster assisting by Big M. is captured by Ambassador Miao and his cat guards and boiled alive in a big pot for them to eat.
* Helicopters. GINO is chasing helicopters around a city and for some reason the helicopter pilots
* Heavyweight champion Joe Louis consciously averted this trope, seeing how most white Americans had reacted to Jack Johnson who was flamboyant and controversially had a relationship with a white woman; Louis' team had a series of seven commandments, including that Louis never have his photo taken with a white woman, to prevent the kind of backlash that Johnson recieved during his title reign. It worked; Louis became the first African-American nation-wide hero in America.
* Gravity Falls episode "Double Dipper", when she attempts to do a flip while singing karaoke.
* Hawke has become a legendary but controversial figure because s/he was at the center of an event that sparked a global conflict.

* Guild Wars: In "The Wilds" mission, several webbed prisoners must be saved towards the end.
* Gravity Falls: In "Fixin' It With Soos", Soos says he's fixing a cuckoo clock Stan broke by accident. A flashback shows Stan whacking it with a baseball bat and saying things like "Stop making that noise!"; "I hate you!"; and "This is definitely not an accident!"
* Goku's sons Gohan and Goten are also this. Which is what allows them
* Haka is an intensely compassionate and noble soul, one of the kindest and most patient people in the Sentinel Comics universe, a storyteller, a teacher, a mentor, a friend and
* Happens to Robin's boyfriend Nick, who was originally depicted as a hot guy who was both mature and had subtle snarker tendencies. Later in season eight, he becomes "girly", overly sensitive, has
* Haganai. Sena at first thinks it's a joke and that her main character would easily vanquish it, only for the shark to kill him, and she suffers from a bad ending. Rika mentions that this game was particularly notorious in online forums for this ending if you failed to trigger a certain flag earlier in the game. Everyone in the clubroom, Yozora included, was completely shocked by it, but after she recollects herself, Yozora calls it a godly game, while Sena angrily snaps the disc in half.
* Grinch make-up, which not only was full-bodied but hindered his breathing as the nose was covered, along with full-eyeball contact lenses and dentures, had the studio hiring a Navy SEAL who taught Carrey torture-resistance techniques.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, as Keiichi seems to go out of his way to make sure his parents are oblivious to all the freaky stuff that's going on.
* Heralds of Valdemar. Unless one learns (or is taught) how to shield out thoughts/emotions, one can easily be driven to madness or hermitage by the sheer weight of other people's thoughts everywhere, especially in a city.
* Here, the bunny interrupts an advert for a pork rind snack called J.B's Pigskins.
* GoldenEye, photographing or destroying the Big Board tends to be an objective. Or not destroying. It gets complicated.
* Heart of Dragon: The original HK export dub released on VHS in the UK and U.S. and DVD in the UK, and the Fortune Star re-dub featured only on the U.S. Fox DVD. The 88 Films Blu-Ray carries only the export dub.
* Have a teacher that also happens to be a sports coach, especially a particularly rough sport like American Football? Expect punishments to involve push-ups. Bonus points if the teacher tells the class to count and they decide to be uncooperative. ("1, 3, 2, 8, 5...")
* Gottlieb), then tossed it all out for an unorthodox timer-based game requiring the player to make key shots to add additional play time.
* Happened in one encounter between Chaos forces and recently-awakened Necrons on a tomb world. The aspiring champion recounting the incident said that his cultists summoned demons to fight the Necrons, but found to his dismay that even demons couldn't stop even the most basic Necron warrior from self-repairing what should have been fatal damage.
* Grand Theft Auto, which had online multiplayer for up to six players. They completely polished it for GTA IV, with 16-player (32 for the PC) support and 15 game modes. GTA IV's multiplayer has some similarities to MTA, including customizable character models, the whole city to explore and fight in, and some game modes. Later for Grand Theft Auto V there are huge focus on online mode post-release, even more so than the single player story mode!
* Grey Goo (2015) all talk with an accent that comes across as a blend of Australian and South African.
* Harry receives a group hug after a five-year separation from his friends.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, Miyo Takano nonchalantly lectures Keiichi about the proper technique for disposing of the body after committing murder.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: In the final battle, the teachers create a magic force field around the school. When a couple of Death Eaters run into it, they disintegrate.

* H. G. Wells has a rare multispecies example in which a vast swarm of swallows, owls, bats, moths, and other creatures explodes from the attic of a creepy house.
* Hentai example started with the reviewer's less-than-impressed thoughts on the matter.
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost are (or can appear as) a Living Shadow:
* He also once followed a signal into the future by spinning at SUPER super-speed.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe was canceled because its toyline was not doing well. Since most shipments were full of strange variants of He-Man and Skeletor with only a couple of the other main characters, the toys became shelf warmers, and the final wave wasn't even released in its home country. The show itself was well-received, though also dealt with unpredictable time slots before its cancellation.
* Highlander, Tessa witnesses a murder and then can't convince the police of the fact. The fact that the immortal killer was the police chief probably had a lot to do with it.
* Hawaii Five-0: In "Wehe 'ana", Danny is protecting a coma patient who's suddenly become the target of criminals. When a nurse comes in to "check on Mr. Makino" — who the rest of the staff only knew as "John Doe" — Danny knows she's a hitwoman.
* GURPS. Sunni only, and a bit of thought has gone into how it happened; it was formed by a number of moderate middle eastern countries. By no means does this cover the entire region. Iran (which has become secular by 2100) is specifically excluded. Despite this the author has gone on record that he wishes he'd thought of a different name.
* Hero System that has 5 pseudopods that can be used to grab opponents in combat.
* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla II. Several members of the JSDF are attacked by Rodan as they try to take an egg from a nest. And, then, Godzilla (who is larger than Rodan) shows up and attacks both the JSDF and Rodan.
* hideous from sleep deprivation, not only cracks Timmy's mirror, he also cracks the Great Wall of China and causes a herd of antelopes far away to stop grazing near the end of the episode when his ugliness reaches its zenith.
* Hellraiser: Inferno that this happens to Joseph, forced to relive the same sequence of events forever.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle. It gets even weirder when his wife invites them to have a threeway with her, but when Freakshow insists on joining in, Harold and Kumar hightail it out of there.
* Harry and Hermione offer to teach second-year Defense Against the Dark Arts to any friends who refuse to subject themselves to Gilderoy Lockhart. After the class with the Cornish pixies, most of the rest of their yearmates show up and demand to be included.
* Grant Morrison's Batman stories revealing that Damian Wayne will eventually be Batman himself. It seems to have gone down a bit better this time.
* Guyver: The manga is still in production after starting in 1986, although it has considerably slowed since Yoshiki Takaya doesn't use assistants.
* Hammer's Slammers novel would be complete without at least one graphic description of what happens to civilians who get caught in the crossfire. In one story their employer chews out Colonel Hammer for nerve-gassing a village that was harboring insurgents-the Colonel responds that a nuke would have been noticed by the press.
* going over like they've been shot from the very slightest contact or no contact at all. As a result of this, 'simulation' is now a bookable offence, but it can be very difficult to catch players at it.
* Guitar Hero has a collection of different Neversoft logos as an unlockable.
* Goblet of Fire surprises Harry by popping out of the water while he's bathing in the (male) Prefects' bathroom. When Harry asks her if she spends her free time doing this (i.e. spying on the male students while they bathe); she replies "Sometimes," with a mischievous grin.
* Green Tea Rescue has five after Izuku asks himself why he got stuck with the toughest internship. They are (in order):

* Gogol Bordello's "Greencard Husband". Eugene Hutz and his family are Ukrainian and his family fled to the US after the Chernobyl disaster, and were given US Citizenship as refugees. Eugene became for all intents and purposes an American. In Greencard Husband, he creates a bizarre situation. Due to not being able to make any money for some reason, he marries a Chinese lesbian purely because she'll pay him anything to get citizenship. She becomes his $10 grand' wife but brings six fellow Lesbians with her. He only lives in a half bedroom apartment and cannot afford anything more. The cops are completely aware it's a sham marriage, and are watching the two. To avoid that becoming obvious, Eugene and his Chinese wife cannot split up.
* Hannah Spearritt movie. She colored the ends of her hair and the director liked it, so he had her keep it in for the film.
* hidden gadgets came up with for the agents of CONTROL were accidentally close to what was being developed for actual spies, to the point that the CIA called them in, demanding to know where the writers were getting their information.
* Harry Potter, and started hunting down people they branded as "undesirables".
* Highlighting Dr. Kelso's increasing laziness, he didn't bother learning interns' names.
* Green Street American student sucked into the world of a West Ham firm.
* Hail Columbia, America's de-facto national anthem for much of its history, contains a verse about George Washington, which says "With equal skill and godlike power he governs in the fearful hour of horrid war". In addition, Congress has a fresco which depicts him having ascended to Heaven and there is a statue of George Washington dressed as and posing Zeus in the statue Zeus Olympios.
* Golden Sun: Ivan's Mind Read can be used within a short distance of the target, but he can also share what he's reading with another person by holding hands with them.
* Heck, some schools have a whole assembly based around this. There are plenty of "rehabilitated" drunk drivers who travel around and speak at high schools about how it ruined their lives. Unlike most of the examples on this page, though, the effects of the accident are not exaggerated.
* Godzilla instead. Being that one of the main focuses of the film was to approach it from a "fan perspective" and distance it as much as possible from the '98 movie, it's easy to see why this strategy backfired in places where audiences harbored no love for the Japanese Godzilla, especially since reviews agreed that its faithfulness to the source material was one of the movie's main selling points. Basically, the two movies' receptions are inverted compared to countries where the brand has had a history.
* Hilariously subverted in Italian Z-grade sword-and-sandals clunker
* Harvey is people's misguided attempts to "cure" Elwood of seeing the title rabbit. Since Elwood is pretty much the nicest man on the planet, not once does he object.
* Hilariously in "Brotherhood", during Mustang's siege of Central, when Captain Buccaneer's platoon of Briggs troops are revealed with Izumi Curtis being the only one that does it further proving she is the champion badass of the series as each Briggs soldier is able to defeat a bear in unarmed combat.
* Griffith is reincarnated using the body of Guts and Casca's corrupted child during the mock Eclipse at the Tower of Conviction.
* he had an Erotic Dream, not to mention his propensity for extremely lewd and bizarre mental tangents when presented with erotic scenarios.
* Heroes. Even if is japanese, Hiro is an avid fan of western superheroes and science fiction.
* Harry's cousin/adopted brother Dudley Dursley spent most of their childhood making Harry's life miserable.
* Halo, not even the scientist from that empire could tell for sure whether or not Earth was where humans came from.
* Highlander had an episode where a guy was wearing a bomb vest wired to his heart rate. The female immortal bounty hunter guest-star shoots him in the head (she tells him that by shooting him there, she will have a few seconds before his heart stops and the bomb goes off), then tackles him out the window and into the water, where the bomb won't hurt anyone else.

* High Queen Arvan, Irminsul's wife, has powerful psychic abilities and has almost the same techniques as him, though she lacks his
* Happens a couple of times in Monty Python songs. In "I've Got Two Legs"
* Hair Metal commercial where a couple complains about their new home having a "Ratt problem".
* Hikari and Touji get married at the end of chapter 17 during the trip to Las Vegas.
* He also didn't notice a switch on his hi-hat that stopped it from opening. He played with this hi-hat for over a year with it stuck shut.
* Godzilla (1998). Charles Caiman (played by 5'6" Harry Shearer) meets his new co-anchor for the first time while she's sitting in her chair on-set. He sits next to her and the top of his head barely meets her chin. With the news starting in a few seconds, he desperately asks the producer for a pillow or phone book, then resorts to holding himself up by the arms on his chair.
* Hereditary Hairstyle: A hairstyle that's passed down through a family.
* Here We Go Again!: The story ends with the conflict repeating or the characters going through a new conflict similar to the one that was already resolved.
* Harry Potter, including Hermione, Ginny, Minerva McGonagall and Dolores Umbridge.
* Go Get a Roomie!, Lillian's default approach towards the waking world is aloofness, but time makes it clear that she does care about the people she's with.
* He also doesn't mind having a threesome with two sorceresses, one of whom has a boyfriend in the next room.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, the key to get through one of the obstacles guarding said stone has wings and tries to escape from anyone who comes near. It's made even more difficult to catch by filling the room with hundreds of other flying keys, all of which would be pretty cool if they actually opened anything.
* Heralds of Valdemar has to put on the Drill Sergeant Nasty role on a regular basis, as part of his job as Weaponsmaster. Worth noting is that he's only like this when he's actively training people. He's fully capable of advising and counselling when needed.
* Gotrek & Felix but also carries a magical axe. Over the course of the series he has unsuccessfully tried to get himself killed fighting dragons, demons, hordes of undead; you get the picture.
* GUN×SWORD. Van and Wendy meet when he rescues her, but he wasn't trying to rescue her; apparently, he thought she was already dead. Later in the same episode, he deliberately chooses to rescue her, despite having turned down her offer of marriage.
* High Society; the second is very proud of his money, and the power it affords him; the third is incidentally rich and doesn't really display it. Not only does (one) Rich Suitor win; but out of the two rich men, the richer is the nice, artistic composer and singer, rather than a boring coal tradesman, and wins.
* He plays it straight during the Battle of Narita by ordering a retreat after Kallen loses her Radiant Surger Wave claw in a
* Gravedale High involves a court case between Max and an old woman who claims he crashed into her car. After the judge rules in favor of the woman, the class protests until all of them (except Reggie and Frankentyke) are thrown in jail for contempt of court. Max asks for his one phone call only to find out that J.P. Ghastly already used them all to sell his stocks.
* Graceful Ladies Like Purple: Wearing purple marks a graceful girly girl.
* Goosebumps wrote the iconic "The Haunted Mask" based on a time when his son was little and put on a rubber Frankenstein mask, then couldn't get it off.
* Guild Wars plays this straight with most of the outfits for the player characters, with the exception of the capes that signal the player's guild which have realistic cloth simulation animation. The longer female styles and accessories in later campaigns (see Dervishes and Ritualists) do move, with the exception of that one high-ponytail look used by Necromancers and Rangers. But the Dervish skirts can be cone-like and a particular (across-the-board) curled, bouncy ponytail has hilarious effects when dancing.

* Hariprasad Chaurasia, Brij Bushan Kabra and Shivkumar Sharma's record "Call of the Valley" (1967), is still the best-selling Hindustani classical music album.
* Gonzales's "Real SHIELD" faction attacks and quickly seizes control of the Playground, the headquarters of Coulson's SHIELD network.
* Head Over Heels bullies her because of love and intentionally provokes him so he does it more. It deconstructs this trope and shows how messed in the head it is.
* Hard to Say Anything", Apple Bloom, Sweetie Belle, and Scootaloo stowaway in the back of Big Mac's apple cart. When they realize he's about find them:
* Gon has an arapaima falling prey to a shoal of piranhas, which eat it down to the bone as traditionally expected from piranhas. Arapaimas have extremely tough scales that even piranha teeth cannot pierce through, and if anything they eat piranhas as snacks. Ironically, this is what exactly happens with Gon, who no-sells the piranha bites and eats the predatory fish.
* Gold Digger, when Prince Karathanelan of Rethwellan successfully courts Queen Selenay of Valdemar due to coaching by both an experienced rake and someone with considerable inside information about the young monarch's insecurities.
* He is often portrayed in popular fiction as an evil mad scientist — not because of his scientific skills, but because of his
* .hack//G.U. games: "I, Kuhn, cannot allow this atrocity to go any further!"
* Grand Theft Auto IV features a darker, less comedic application of this trope. Dwayne Forge, who had just been released from prison after several years, is shocked about how the drug business, which had once been a last-resort career track for those desperate to escape the ghetto, is now being presented by pop culture as something that black youth should aspire to making it big in.
* Hearing Voices, seeing Joan's cat Mulligan butchered (only for him to turn up alive and well later on) and being abducted and experimented upon by aliens. Dr. Molstad tells Beth that it may be necessary to remove the implant but she steadfastly refuses. It turns out that Joan secretly works for a rival company which is developing a brain implant similar to Molstad's and that she and her boyfriend Kevin Flynn (who pretended to be attracted to Beth) were attempting to drive Beth insane in the hope of discrediting Molstad's implant. They were assisted in their plan by Mike and Dolly Kellerman, two other residents of Joan's apartment building.
* have that fetish likely don't see much point in simulating it when bottled water and asparagus are fairly cheap. Some brands then proceed to shoot themselves in the foot by boasting in print ads about how their psuedo-piss is completely undetectable, which might be why several states have already banned the stuff.
* Hayate the Combat Butler when Hayate wonders if maybe Izumi is still on Mount Takao after having been forgotten there by Yukiji since she hasn't been seen since.
* He also "borrowed" Maria's bike in the first chapter. Although she managed to get to the scene, she probably didn't get it back, it was run over by a car after all.
* Heartbreak Ridge act as if they never attended Boot Camp and have no idea about military discipline. In reality, to get into Marine Recon, you have to pass a series of difficult tests. The NCOs and officers who allowed the Recon Platoon to devolve that badly should have been court-martialed for dereliction of duty.
* go to ground", giving them an improved cover save but hampering them for the next turn.
* Heather feels threatened by the romance-alliance of Gwen and Trent in "
* Harry Potter; Harry himself notes how handsome Tom was (before he knows who he'd become), and it's made clear that Tom used the fact to his advantage. Good looks, charming manners, and cunning persuasiveness can apparently get you pretty far in the wizarding world, too.
* Guardians of the Galaxy comic, where Rocket greets an alien shopkeeper by asking "Did your mom like the crabs I gave her?" It turns out she likes Earth seafood.
* Highlander investigating mysterious murders where people keep getting their heads chopped off.

* Highlander II: The Quickening; the downside is that the entire planet is now permanently dark. "No sun, no stars, only heat and humidity."
* Hero: The Guardian Smurf story "The Dark Hero", Hero's gold-colored outfit becomes black when Gargamel's reversal spell (which was originally intended for Smurfette but ended up affecting Hero instead) takes its full effect, changing Hero into an evil "un-Smurf" that served Gargamel.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, Mikoto Tachibana probably had this reaction upon meeting Nagi, who greatly resembles her mother, who Mikoto had an unrequited crush on. Though both Nagi's mother and Nagi herself seem to be not interested in the affection shown because they aren't interested in women, and the arranged marriage was said to be set up by the grandfathers, Mikoto probably had no issue with her son being set up with the daughter.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys (because her army was in the village) from killing her parents. While trying to protect her family from Xena's army, the adult Callisto accidentally kills her own father & mother.
* God of War, Kratos finally moved on and married Faye, having a son named Atreus. Unfortunately, Faye dies of undisclosed causes before the game starts, but his comments indicate he loved her as much as Lysandra.
* Haven. When the blood tries to attack Duke, he just absorbs it without being harmed. He eventually absorbs it all.
* GURPS Technomancer magazine #115 updates this concept with mana-based counterparts of professional networks and crowdsourcing.
* He does it again in a later episode when trying to clean up some ketchup he spilled, this time with a can of cleaning spray.
* Hawksmaid, Matty is lured over a pit trap that drops her on to a limed net, which holds her fast.
* Greek...as a ZBZ National rep is that her idea of a fun activity is a book club. Casey would manage to talk her into having a book-themed party, though she had to enlist Cappie's help to subvert Lizzi's restrictions to make it a good party.
* Golden by Jennifer Lynn Barnes, Lissy not only sees auras, but she also has the ability to manipulate them. She can matchmake people, thwart a bad guy, and disentangle a siren from her prey if necessary.
* Gram, formerly the sword of Sigurd the Ever-Glorious, currently belonging to
* Gundam he's utterly unable to walk (and use one of his arms) without being connected to his Gundam, making it a pretty literal example of this trope.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002). His eye (sockets) function as a literal warning, as little red lights start growing in them when he gets angry or excited in evil ways.
* Hermann Goering's main qualification for being in charge of the Luftwaffe was that he had been a successful fighter pilot in the First World War. However, the skills required to lead a small group into combat are not the same as those required to lead a large organisation.
* Hardy Bucks, which follows four young irish layabouts, and their arch-enemy The Viper, a small town drug dealer.
* High School Girls appears to be one of these, mostly in the anime version. Her costumes are usually in the range of tacky and absurd.
* Halo 4's version of the Promethean Knights, large mechanical warriors who can teleport across the field, are armed with fairly heavy weapons, and can be revived by Watchers. To top it off, they have their own elite models in the Lancer, Battlewagon, and Commander.
* He finally admits during their second garden encounter that he does indeed love her, possibly even as far back as when
* Happens often with Tom, which makes him realize too late that he's carrying a bomb, about to get hit, that Jerry is right in front of him or in one case, sitting on a hot stove.
* Happy Heroes, most of the time when a character cries, they produce a waterfall of tears. Sad S. in particular utilizes this as a weapon.
* Grand Theft Auto V, if you fail to complete a multiple-ending mission with the ending you wanted (e.g. "Unknowing the Truth"), you can go back and do it properly. This is particularly useful because said mission deliberately tricks you into not doing it properly.

* Greta Mors take up the mantle of Captain Nemo, which is later filled by her descendant
* Hercules: Hercules tries to save Meg when she's being harassed, but she's less than impressed. Then, she saves him after a big blowup. He finally saves her from the afterlife, and their romance is sealed.
* Halo 2 has two levels which takes place in the African city of New Mombasa (the future version of Mombasa, Kenya), which the Covenant has occupied.
* .hack//SIGN included a box containing three pins. one of Tsukasa, Mimiru, and a pink baby grunty.
* Gundam (because Anime producers will never let the era of the battleship end).
* Heckle and Jeckle cartoon "The Power of Thought," the two birds realize they can change into anything they want simply by invoking cartoon physics.
* Greenland striking down on Earth throughout the film before the 'big one' hits it, creating another major-extinction event.
* Heroes of the Storm, which for healers usually means one aggressive and one defensive. There are also a few healers who have more combat capabilities than others:
* Goblins deconstructs, inverts, and subverts this. Most Goblins are named by their fortune teller, who accurately names them based on their destiny. Saves-a-Fox became so fed up with this that she eventually killed the fox she was expected to save, and uses this fact to convince Dies-Horribly he can fight fate too.
* Heal It with Blood: Healing by consuming, absorbing, or transfusing blood.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire effect is able to hold Voldy off for a while, Harry's only chance for survival is to break off the engagement and use a nearby portkey to return to Hogwarts.
* Halo combine various traits of gorillas and bears (perhaps with a bit of rhino thrown in).
* have never seen this joke before) that they wouldn't know what one is.
* Grand Tack Hypothesis posits that the reason why the solar system has no Super-Earths, a very common type of rocky planet in the Milky Way, is that Jupiter’s rampage through the inner solar system may have launched them and a number of other primordial planets into each other or into the Sun.
* Hearthstone, Chupacabran is a boss you can encounter during Monster Hunt in The Witchwood expansion.
* here: "We stay together!". What's funny is that moments later she completely dismisses that rule, even forgetting saying that at all.
* GURPS gives us the Bloodlust disadvantage, and with it rules to handle playing a Blood Knight character.
* Harry, a school-age boy, quickly strikes up a lasting friendship with Hagrid, who's in his 60s and is Harry's introduction to
* Harmony Theory, dragons have to maintain a reasonable size to survive. Max Cash goads a young and inexperienced dragon named Boomer into giving into greed. This causes him to grow gigantic and powerful, but then his body starts to collapse on itself.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix Harry is this when Dumbledore defends him from Voldemort, beyond question.
* Half-Life 1 has a Desert Eagle and will often engage alien and Black Ops units. In a modification where some maps have a heavy use of the Medic (Sven Co-Op), they'll often open fire first.
* Grimm: Human organs can be harvested to create products for Wesen. For example, human testes can serve as an equivalent to Viagra.
* Grand Finale, with our heroes retaining the knowledge of all that had transpired during their first go-round (with the hope that they can actually defeat the Skullmaster this time).
* Grey's Anatomy: The patient of the week has an object stuck in his anus, as a result of a failed sex-play. Chief Webber, unlike the rest of the cast, maintains a completely serious demeanour throughout the operation, only to break down laughing afterwards.

* Green Lantern. Essentially, the Green Lanterns are in the "center" of the light spectrum (Willpower) and so they're the most stoic. Red Lanterns and Star Sapphires represent Rage and Love, specifically, and since their colors are on the far ends, their emotions control them. The more powerful the emotion, the more it controls the Lantern.
* He will take out his notebook and scribble in it when thinking or tuning out the Detective's annoying behaviour.
* Golden Sun, dying in battle makes you wake up in the infirmary, surrounded by your friends, who will then inform you that you were just dreaming. Then you have to restart the tournament from the beginning. And if you win... you wake up in the infirmary, surrounded by your friends, who will then inform you that you won.
* Higurashi soundtrack have deep bells in the background, usually when it's related to Oyashiro's curse.
* Heathers, three of the lead cast are called Heather. As the name implies.
* Harry Anderson shared many similarities with his character "Harry the Hat" from
* Hercules in its classic form kicks in. Definitely something different, especially for a Disney movie.
* Heel–Face Turn= house fight (though he was already losing his place in Cobra Kai as Kreese's favorite to Tory and Robby).
* He takes it pretty far when he tries to KILL a man so he can profit from his death. He intended to have his building blow up with the security guard inside and orchestrate it as a terrorist attack. He believed that, like the 9/11 attacks, the nation would come together and mourn and he'd be able to sell memorial items praising the guard as a hero. This trope is directly (and hilariously) lampshaded in the following exchange:
* Groundhog Day and can't get out. At one point he uses this to take advantage and convince a variety of beautiful women he loves them or he knew them by learning stuff about them, coming back the next day, and using this knowledge to seduce them. Since every day at 6 when he wakes up everything is reset, he can profess his love to a woman, sleep with her, and wake up without her ever realizing this had happened since technically it never did. This goes well for Phil with everyone he wants except Rita, his producer, whom he spends multiple weeks learning everything about her, and yet not one time does she sleep with him; actually they all end with him being slapped for his behavior. As would be expected, this is the one he falls for.
* Harlan Ellison's short story "Djinn, No Chaser", Connie frees a genie trapped in a lamp by a sorcerer for ten thousand years with a simple can opener.
* Hamlet 2 treats the school paper reviews of the drama club productions very seriously. Although that's more of a testament to the main character's quirkiness than a universal opinion.
* Hawkeye killed the man in the lobby of the building (actually an alien) with an arrow to the head.
* Hermann Göring committed suicide with a potassium cyanide capsule the night before he was to be hanged, embarrassing the U.S. Army prison guards, considering that they were instructed to keep him under a round-the-clock suicide watch.
* Green Lantern comics don't have much of a sense of humor. It's not usually made a point of, but there is the end of "In Blackest Night", a story by Alan Moore from Tales of the Green Lantern Corps:
* "Groundhog Day" Loop. It causes somebody to explode, rewinding time by one hour. When it gets to the point in time where Bites the Dust originally activated, fate sets in motion and the target dies again.
* Harry is a Morphixen and when he and Charlie have sex for the first time, they end up trashing his house.
* Happy Heroes enamoring the angel with the thought of this shampoo is enough to make him withdraw the money anyway.
* he himself would be a great hero! But he's not. It seems like Hunter's just looking for an excuse to beat up on Wally for not fixing his spine, though later events show that he's really just that insane, as a side-effect of his powers.

* Grishnakh, who is more or less a mook, is stabbed by a Rider of Rohan in
* Groening himself stated in an interview that one of his favorite things about doing
* Harry Bosch when he investigates the murder of his own mother, strangled and left in a dumpster when Harry was ten.
* Here by Accident, Staying on Purpose: Trixie mentions that she realized she was bi as a child after learning that her friend Timantha was actually a kid she knew named Timmy.
* Heart of the Woods, and says that Helena's fear of death overpowered her love for Abigail.
* Gravity Falls. However, there are numerous in-show details that specifically set it in the summer of 2012 (the year it first started airing). Present-day calendars from episodes such as "Summerween" and "Dipper and Mabel vs. the Future" are that of 2012; and while everything revolving around the Author's disappearance is simply stated to have been "thirty years ago", calendars in locations not touched since the incident (as well as some character dialogue) explicitly place as it happening in 1982.
* Gravity Falls Dipper because he believes that Dipper got in between him and Mabel. Thankfully, Mabel sees this and intervenes, and she rejects him, not only romantically, but as a friend now, too.
* Guilt-Free Extermination War: Our war will only end with the complete extermination of the other side!
* Happy Feet Two: After her original voice actress Brittany Murphy died of pneumonia on December 20, 2009, singer P!nk took over the role of Gloria in the second film.
* has to go to the bathroom. She wets herself because she's unable to get out.
* Heir To The Empire. Having a character who we should have seen during the original trilogy, but didn't, lead many readers to mistrust her and think that she was Delta Source (back when it was assumed that Delta Source was a spy in the imperial palace, and not just a left-over surveillance network that the New Republic never found.)
* "Guess Who's Coming to Criticize Dinner" has Homer leaving a dummy of himself (made out of buckets, rubber gloves and other odds and ends) and tape recording of him singing "She Works Hard For the Money" to cover for him at work. The dummy gets promoted before bursting into flames.
* Heroes manage to quit, but he has to fake his death and remain invisible at all times in order to do it.
* Harold & Kumar Escape from Guantanamo Bay when a corrupt, racist federal agent motivates his team by showing them a picture of a young white girl, saying that she could be captured and raped by terrorists.
* GMA used to have a strong confusion: When Gloria Macapagal Arroyo became the president of the country, she became very associated by her initials. The problem? There's a long-running TV channel in the country (and its aptly-named subsidiaries) with the same initials.
* Hex Wives, Isadora's memory gets erased by the Mother of Witches after she discovers the latter because Aaron threatened to harm her otherwise.
* Hilde While Hilde is seriously injured, she lives through and successfully gives the info away.
* Grand Duchy of Remillia nation that fields elite soldiers known as Angels.They are abducted from their families to begin training at the age of three.
* Heroes has Claire Bennet, the immortal regenerating cheerleader. Guess who from the cast is suffering deadly injuries on a fairly regular basis? In her case, though she feels pain, it doesn't seem to mean much to her, as she repeatedly inflicts injuries on herself just to test her powers.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers enough, they both talk about other guys they've slept with.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! like this—they were always away on business and Tsubomi was always being watched over by her grandmother. Took Tsubomi a painful thirteen-fourteen years to break down and finally admit she was lonely. The rest of the series dual-wields this showing her parents willing to make up for all the lost time they had and Tsubomi trying to become a better person after years of accidental neglect.

* He does clearly distinguish between people who like his music and people who like him as a
* Goblins characters have often been seen calling their spells. It turns out, however, that in the Thuntiverse, you HAVE to call your spells for them to work — when Kore's throat is injured, he can't use Lay On Hands to heal it without a great struggle.
* Glee try to improve their reputations by getting in trouble. Even an impromptu musical in the library just gets praise from the librarian and an invitation to perform at her church.
* Heroes Hiro did, but they have a clear idea that he was cheating, and that entitles them to take back his winnings.
* Grande, Pá!: Jose is getting married, and uncle Blanca from Bahia Blanca send her a wedding gift: a vase. She found it hideous. Flo returns from school and, seeking some useless thing to put for sale in the school fair, she took the vase. Jose does not mind: she did not want it, and she's glad that there is a good use for it. Problem is when uncle Blanca comes home, and wants to see the vase. Norma bought a new one, and they go great lengths to explain first the absence of the vase, and then why Norma had it, and then why it isn't the same base, and then that Jose likes it so much that they shouldn't denounce the postal service for the "mistake"... and, when it is all settled, María broke it by accident.
* Hard Reset's final chapter, Spike saying the words from the start of the time loop causes Twilight to freeze in shock, which is the first sign to the viewers about the effects of her experiences.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, Coyote has the power to freeze time in order to carry on side conversations. Also, earlier in the comic, Antimony mentioned that she would talk with the Guides for hours "while time stood still", but it's possible she was just being metaphorical.
* Highlander bombed spectacularly since nobody involved (from the writers to the producers) had any clue where to take the new series; and to top it all off, Gracen's character wasn't even originally written as heroic.
* Halo concept of AI development actually does hold true in the RvB universe.
* Grand Slam Champion: Shawn Michaels became the first ever wrestler to achieve this feat in 1997, both in the WWF/E and pro wrestling in general.
* Good Girl Gone Bad: A good girl gone to the dark side due to tragedy or trauma.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. Ikuyo Suzuki, head maid of the Technology department. She writes and sells her own manga.
* Hellboy (2019) critics had to wait until the film's opening day to review it, and they were unfavorable to say the least.
* grab a gun to threaten the last of the kidnappers. As he hangs up the suit (the same one that Terry puts on decades later), he leaves the Bat Cave with the words "never again".
* Harlem Heroes was focused on a gang of convicts caught up in a conspiracy to assassinate the President, rather than the sport of Aeroball from the original strip. In fact, the only reason that the name came up in story was due to the games being played in prison and the skill of the protagonists at Aeroball.
* Great Attractor ‘hiding’ out of sight, and considering how many stars galaxies contain, that’s a lot of stars we previously didn’t know existed, to put it bluntly.
* Gold Tooth: The character is wealthy but likely ostentatious and villainous.
* Highschool of the Dead is a gun/military otaku, turned specialist after spending a month training at an American Blackwater firing range. As such, his expertise makes him invaluable to Takashi's group as he often lays down cover fire, during engagements, and even begins teaching the others how to use firearms.
* hardware, generally skip Nintendo's consoles for reasons unrelated to content (mostly processing power, storage size and online capabilities).
* Heathers, McNamara after Veronica offered her to and Duke after seeing how happy everybody else as they stop being mean to each other.

* Glen "That Canadian Guy" Foster has mocked this in one of his routines: "What will happen if we print these words? Oh! We'll get letters!
* Glitched Miko AU: Miko is forced to get ready for her date by her sister, and while her outfit and the makeup she was made to wear where all that extreme, the effect still causes Hector to be momentarily stunned.
* HarmonQuest along with other comedians and actors participating in a fantasy campaign. Live-action portions show the players sitting around the gaming table (filmed in-studio before a live audience) as they play and engage in improv comedy, and these are interspersed with animated segments showing what their characters are doing within the game world.
* Headless Wonder—"Alright, after a couple car swaps, explosions, and a police chase, we're finally at our destination!"
* Having their father getting punched in the stomach over a can of soup.
* half-siblings with different mothers. In the Three Kings Saga, it's revealed that the two have the same mother, were born at the same time, and Hiei was conceived by a man, while Yukina was conceived asexually. Then again, it wouldn't have been out of character of Hiei to just lie.
* Gone with the Wind pro-South, via its focus on the sufferings of a Southern Belle and the loss of her plantation, but it avoids the controversial racism of Griffith's film via avoidance of blackface, and changing a Klan meeting in Margaret Mitchell's novel into a more "innocent" night of gentlemen getting drunk, which makes the film's basic internalization of the Dunning thesis more palatable to the mainstream audience. More dubious is its portrayal of the relationship between Scarlett and her slaves as one of friendship rather than one of master and slave.
* Hen ("strange"). The original one ran from 1988 to 1992, and the second one ran from 1992 to 1997. The books had completely different casts, and the second book was much more popular than the first one. The last three volumes of the second book are widely despised because they brought back the cast of the first book and more than half of the stories revolved around characters that many readers didn't know or care about.
* Griffin's little sister (about ten) reads social media posts about the * Grandia tells a familiar yarn about a delusional warlord who seek to unseal a great evil. We learn that "Gaia", a lifeform which grew around the magical Spirit Stone, went berserk when mortals began abusing the stone for decadent ends. Gaia resembles a giant, weird hybrid bug/plant thing, and its human puppet General Baal is gradually turning into its duplicate. He begins the story with a tentacled scythe-arm hidden beneath his cloak, but has fully degenerated by game's end.
* He worked for Microsoft's games division for a while in the late '90s and early 2000s, creating critically acclaimed puzzle games like
* Grand Theft Auto 2 has a level where you specifically have to get arrested and then spend time in prison before escaping again.
* Hancock also have to deal with the Mortal/Immortal issue. Although at first after the reveal it seems like it might be a dealbreaker for Ray and the issue is never explicitly resolved onscreen, they are seen at the end together and jokingly reviewing the truth about famous historical figures.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, only to have it backfire when the person takes her rather blunt dismissal at face value and reveals a romantic interest in someone else.
* Goblet. The movie could have given the culprit a totally different name and the film would make exactly the same amount of sense.
* Hey, Catch!: A character who throws something to another character to make him catch it, often to distract him.
* He respects Tony enough that when he was believed dead, Doom declared a national day of mourning in Latveria.
* Gundam Build Divers Re:RISE, there is a alien girl named Maiya thats from a planet called Eldora that leans more toward feline than human as she has brown fur and a small snout along with the basic cat ears and tail.
* Haunted Museum game or "Frightmare Land", a monster-infested amusement park loosely based on the real-life Japanese park Gulliver's Kingdom.

* Held Within while playing with a strange gem Jenny teases her girlfriend Susie into making a wish. Susie doesn't like the idea of only having one wish, and since Jenny is so eager for wishes Susie mockingly wishes she were her personal vagenie. Jenny starts changing pretty quick.
* he sustains and empowers himself by reclaiming those bits along with the rest of their hosts' strength, which is inevitably fatal even if they aren't on the brink of death.
* Hergé). Both artists' work is therefore often confused with Hergé's.
* Hadestown, during "Road to Hell," Orpheus is distracted from cleaning tables by a red dishrag and uses it as musical inspiration. He misses his cue from Hermes and only notices the audience when his name's called again.
* Grease, Danny asks Sandy to wear his high school ring and she accepts. Almost immediately afterward, he tries to cop a feel and they have a tussle, which ends with her getting out of the car and throwing the ring at him before storming away.
* Hancock is attacking everyone All in all, there are at least five different factions, with individuals breaking off from their group to do their own thing in the middle of all of this.
* He has a routine where he names the official hipster uniform as the
* Gravity Break: Cataclysm while "walls and shields are common sense in this world", this particular city is not normal, and the rulers are using the walls to keep the citizens isolated and ignorant.
* Hercules is a stereotypical demonic figure, dressing in black, possessing a sallow grey complexion and living in a gloomy underworld.
* Hercules in New York. Zeus blasts Hercules with a lightning bolt, casting him out of Olympus. After some strange encounters in the air and at sea, Hercules arrives in New York City. It's somewhat justified by the obvious lack of budget of that movie.
* Hasshouken (Fist of Eight Impacts), a fighting style used by the Chinjao family where they
* He presses his tongue to the roof of his mouth when he's thinking or working on something.
* Here is the Wikipedia category on these. Some more notable ones from the list:
* High and Low, the ransom for Aoki's son is being dropped off from a fast moving train as per the kidnapper's meticulous instructions.
* Hilarity Sues: The hero saves the day or the villain wins...and then they're brought into court.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City, during the mission "Phnom Penh '86", if you snipe Lance out of his chopper there will be no "mission failed" message eventhough you'll have to start the mission again. The silver lining of this is that you can take and save Lance's chopper as long as it didn't blow up.
* Gundam series, with the heroes typically meeting their enemies by accident while out of their respective mechas and uniforms.
* Heroes of Might and Magic) campaign where you are tasked to put down a peasant rebellion against King Archibald roused by agents of Roland (his brother). The accompanying video is, of course, peasants waving torches and pitchforks while burning an effigy of Archibald.
* Grass and Sky, Grampy addresses Timmi's little sister Rebecca as "Brown Eyes," which makes her wonder if that makes her Blue Eyes.
* Heaven's Design Team, never seen onscreen. He almost appeared in one episode at the party in Hell, but sent Garuda at the last minute. Most of the plot is the designers dealing with God's arbitrary animal requests.
* Greek Mythology except for Hector, because he was already so in love with his own wife, Andromache.
* Gray Hulk — though Grey Hulk isn't really "evil"; he's another closer to "id".
* Halo: Reach. Every Covenant race only speaks their native language. This is lampshaded and parodied by a sleeping Grunt on "Nightfall" who says "It's funny, but I dream in English".

* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas's death. Even though is one of the many driving forces of the plot, you're not really told if his death was caused by CJ's negligence or Brian's recklessness.
* Highlander tended to get this way when pursuing Immortals who had murdered innocents.
* Greek Ninja. She shows little emotion even when she's informed of the death of her sensei. During stressful situations, such as battles, she remains cool and stoic.
* Half's Saga: The night before the banquet at King Asmund's, Half's warrior Innstein has ominous dreams about them being engulfed by flames, then sinking into deep water. He correctly guesses that Asmund plans to burn them to death in the banquet hall, but Half won't listen.
* her make-up artist put the poison in her make-up, and then gave her normal chocolates on an airplane trip. The woman pinched her nose to pop her ears, getting the poison on her fingers, and then ate a chocolate and licked her fingers, ingesting the poison.
* heavy overfishing, so most mass-market cod-based dishes have long been adapted to other, cheaper and more abundant whitefish species, such as pollock, and if you want to have the real stuff you're usually in for the heavy markup. For example, in Brazil cod is considered a delicacy and highly sought after for traditional Portuguese dishes. Decades ago, it was the cheapest meat available.
* He only admits his (rather blatant) love for his queen Daenerys Targaryen in "The Mountain and the Viper".
* "Guys Eyes" by Animal Collective appears to be about masturbating so as not to look like all the narrator wants his girlfriend for is fox sex. See lines: "I really want to do just what my body wants to, I really want to show to my girl that I want her", "I want to do what my body needs to, I want to show to my girl that I need her", and "I started using my mind, And I used my hands, It was what I want to do"
* gonky) with Bernadette (a cute, bubbly, sweet girl). The funny part was that they met due to a promise between Leonard and Howard years prior if either got girlfriends they would set the other up on a blind date; Penny set them up and was dumbfounded that it worked out as well as it did.
* Guardian, Yuna subconsciously walks on water, demonstrating Summoner talent, but she falls in once she realizes the others are watching.
* He does this again with Houki at the end of episode 12, after sharing an
* Hanna-Barbera always announces, "exit, stage right!" (or left) whenever he runs off somewhere.
* Harley Quinn goes back for seconds after giving Batman a "Thank You" peck on the lips in the
* Hilariously used with Batman's opposite clone, Batzarro. As the total reverse of Batman, Batzarro killed his parents and calls himself "the world's worst detective".
* Heroes of the Desk: Repercussions: Averted for J117 power armor, except in one specific case: Valla's eyes glow so brightly with hate that they can be seen through the faceplate.
* Heroic Ambidexterity: The ability of great warriors to excel in combat with either hand.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, both Surma Stibnite and Jeanne are this, to a degree.
* Harley Quinn, she still has enough redeeming qualities to count as "lovable".
* Heel–Face Turn, Mimori brings him a new HOLY uniform, which he refuses to wear. She insists that the uniform doesn't stand for HOLY itself, but rather Ryuhou's convictions and beliefs, so he puts it on and rips off the HOLY symbol.
* Hilariously subverted. Ippo's sempai Masaru Aoki has a penchant for
* Groo the Wanderer who can be easily confused by polysyllabic words. But when there's a fight — against anyone — he's an unstoppable killing machine, and if you're in his sights, your only hope of survival is to try and direct him towards anyone else.
* Happy Ending Override: It's a happy ending, but something happens in the period afterwards and before the sequel to ruin it; the sequel is a chance to start again.

* grunge and Pearl Jam's future singer - Eddie Vedder - and guitarist - Mike McCready). After Pearl Jam and Soundgarden broke out, Temple of the Dog and Mother Love Bone's albums (they only had one apiece) became big sellers due to the connections.
* Heaven's Lost Property, when Nymph fails to capture Ikaros and awakens her instead, she's given a "second chance" with a time bomb on her collar, more for the Master's entertainment than motivation.
* Gunnerkrigg Court Coyote). Transformation to/from forest creatures is an accepted part of the universe, and the Court has students and teachers skilled in "etheric sciences".
* Godfather Death", a poor man desperately looks for a godfather for his newborn son. Both God and the Devil offer themselves, but the poor man rejects God for giving to the rich and neglecting the poor, and the Devil for being a scammer. He accepts Death, because he is the only one of the three who is just.
* Hetty Wainthropp Investigates had Geoffrey Shawcross worried about offending the Wainthropps if he moved out to live with his girlfriend. He tries to gauge their reactions indirectly by making up a story about a mate of his, living with his rather conservative aunt and uncle, who wanted advice on how to handle moving out. Richard catches on quickly and tells Geoffrey that the guy's uncle would probably be okay with it, but he should ask the aunt... Continued when he clues in Hetty by asking if Geoffrey had told her about his mate, and when she gave her approval by saying that she thought the guy's aunt wouldn't mind if he moved.
* Gorillaz has been almost constantly drunk for several months, as of current canon, on top of all the drinking and drug-taking he did before this. 2D, meanwhile, is addicted to prescription painkillers. Neither of them seem to have suffered any permanent harm from their habits.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, when Harry has the bones in his forearm magically removed. It doesn't leave a hole, but his forearm goes all Gumby, and he can't use his hand because the muscles aren't attached to anything.
* he looks pretty darn good without his shirt on going down. It was pretty sexy."
* He eventually realizes it's a mental world and kills himself in the dream so he can wake up.
* Grizzly Man constitute this, even to the point of recording Tim and his girlfriend being eaten by a bear (although with audio only).
* Golf movie climaxes almost always involve the "golden rule of golf":
* her cousin, she sometimes fails. Every time it happens, she feels horribly guilty.
* Guild of Calamitous Intent type deals. Bullets and knives are shown to pass right through them, and they can even phase others through solid matter.
* Gun Vs Sword debate that the idea of him charging his opponent with a katana and cutting them down before they can pull the trigger is nonsense by just pointing Frank's revolver at Mac and pulling the trigger with an audible click a few times. The revolver isn't loaded, but it's still pretty out-there.
* Gormiti: The Lords of Nature Return Has four kids with the power of Air, Earth, Water and Forest, with the fifth being Light.
* Greta Garbo. Audiences didn't get it and it persuaded her to quit Hollywood.
* higher cause forms of life, human or monster, to be meaningless trash.
* Great Mazinger when he was angry or upset, and Jun had little patience for stupidity, it is not surprising. A good example happens in the last episodes: Tetsuya is jealousy from Kouji, thinking Kouji will replace him and then everybody will forget about him. When Jun tried to reassure him it would not happen, he accused her of wanting to replace him with Kouji, too. She slapped him hard. Given that Jun had spent the whole series chasing after him while Tetsuya remained oblivious, it is entirely understandable.
* Godzilla), the creators made a point to ensure that the only flying monsters were those who rarely touched the ground, like Rodan, Mothra, and Megaguirus. While this isn't a big deal for burrowing Megalon (whose wings only appear when he opens his shell) or teleporting Gigan (whose ability to fly in the films was due to jet boosters not seen on his design) Destoroyah sports not one but two pairs of enormous, bat-like wings that do absolutely nothing. This is especially frustrating since the movie Destoroyah spent half its onscreen appearance in the air.

* Half-Life 2, where the deuteragonist, Alyx Vance, is Afro-Asian; Alyx's father, Eli, is black. Then there are the Citizens, who can be white, Asian, and black, of which the latter two can be seen quite often, if not just as often as the white models. There is a black character named Matt, an Asian character named Mary, and even an unambiguously Japanese character (Noriko).
* Gone: Drake is a monster called "Whip-Hand" who hates women and loves torturing them. It is suggested that this is the result of issues he had about his mother.
* Glitch Techs in the episodse "Karate Trainer". When Miko tries to help her little sister become better at karate, she uses an over-the-top fighting game that naturally has nothing to do with real martial arts. While Lexi does improve a bit, she is ultimately unable to use what the game showed her in an actual match.
* Harry Harrison which has regressed to barbarism. Various bits and pieces of more advanced technology, generally regarded more or less as sorcery, are held as closely guarded secrets by the different clans (one group still knows how to make primitive petroleum-fueled engines, another how to make some crude electrical devices, yet another clan practices alchemy-level chemistry). The hero winds up completely revolutionizing the planet's backwater society solely out a desire to get off that primitive dirtball and back to someplace more civilized. The language issue is avoided as everyone on the planet speaks a (somewhat degraded) version of Esperanto.
* Gymnastics such as cartwheels or floor-level somersaults are humans' method of invoking this trope.
* Gunsmoke we see is Ringo Moody, a cattle rustler and gambler trying to force a rancher to give him his property. He's gunned down within eight pages of his introduction.
* Grace Helbig hails from NJ, and she still lapses into Joisey occasionally.
* Hiashi Hyuga was the first example shown in the series. Cold and distant to his firstborn, rather than provide her with needed emotional support and stability, he basically discarded Hinata by sending her to the Ninja Academy, using wording along the lines of "The Hyuga Clan doesn't need someone like her"...
* Harold and Helga, who are the two main bullies of the fourth grade, are represented with blue and pink, respectively. However, Helga often calls Harold "pink boy" in reference to his ruddy skin tone.
* Grand Finale, with the incoming energy beam slowly creeping toward them as Carter tries to find a way to stop it.
* Goosebumps: Goldberger Doll corporation started manufacturing and selling real Slappy the Dummy ventriloquist dolls after getting a request from a young fan.
* Hero with Bad Publicity: Good guys get undeserved hate from the public, despite their good deeds.
* Halloween (1978), where three of the five victims had just had sex, and the fourth was on her way to do so. It's heavily implied, however, that Michael Myers has some severe issues with sex, and the selection of victims is not at all coincidental.
* Hellsing Seras has a dream in which she meets the Anthropomorphic Personification of her cannon, Hakonnen. Alucard has a familiar dream but his gun, Jackal, apparently couldn't decide which famous actor or assassin he should be personified, so he dropped the idea and manifested himself as two eyes and voice.
* Gremlins: In both films, we at first don't see much if anything of the gremlins except glimpses of their arms and shadows and hearing their voices after their cocoons hatch. After a short time, we finally see them in all their monstrous glory, and from then on they get a lot of screen-time for the rest of either film. This trope's re-use in the second film remains effective due to the four metamorphosing mogwai's unique appearances.
* Hayao Miyazaki was oddly given a TV-Y7-FV rating, despite being violent enough to receive a TV-PG-V easily. One forum user at the time claimed that their DirecTV schedule had the movie listed as TV-PG-V, so the Y7-FV rating was more than likely just a mistake on the network's part.

* Herb Abrams' UWF, instead of the song Al was parodying, Gerardo's "Rico Suave".
* Harry Turtledove against an attempted final uprising when they decided to strip-mine the United States, the final part of Earth they hadn't ruined with their looting).
* GURPS but rather a murderous, greedy bastard. Oh, and he's named after a god with two faces.
* Ground-type Pokemon had been hurt by Electric-type attacks several times up to the Johto tournament, but with zero
* Heat opens with this kind of job. The robbers wear hockey masks to hide their faces.
* Goofy Print Underwear: Someone wears underwear with funny patterns on them.
* Goth Oz, casually aims a gun at his crush's head, and constantly tries to get to first base with her.
* Gran Turismo, the visible portions of the unused infield are still modeled, complete with the "End of Cant" signs, though the other assets have since been removed.
* Harry Potter have an inherited at-will ability to change their appearance any way they wish, but with limitations on shape, so changing species is out of the question. Talented wizards and witches in general can transform themselves on a more temporary basis. There are spells and potions for shape-shifting — their mastery is required for becoming an Auror.
* her dad left her family when she was little. Dean and Cas are forced to leave post-haste when the bouncers show up.
* Hercules Games episode, JonTron kills himself by swallowing a bottle of pills and a large swig of vodka, while displaying a sarcastic disclaimer:
* Green Green. If she weren't allowed to squeal "Yuusuke" every ten seconds, she would lose her reason for existence.
* Happens in the first episode, where Simon gets hard off a girl he likes when she flirts with him. His mate spots it and shouts out to the whole room that he has a boner, and from then onwards Simon is known as "Boner".
* Her friend Skylar does a duet with Teddy for the talent show, but they combine with PJ and Emmet's band and mash-up both songs and subsequentally win the talent show.
* Haroun and the Sea of Stories, Haroun meets the "Plentimaw" fish, who have plenty of maws, i.e. mouths. This is a play on the saying "There are plenty more fish in the sea," but only works in non-rhotic varieties of English, where "maw" is a homophone for "more".
* He bequeaths it to Taran when he dies about halfway through the book.
* Hellboy: The title character is a demon who fights other demons and supernatural monsters. Sometimes, the creatures he fights accuse him of betraying his kind, but he seems to be more worried about becoming like them. Notably, he attempts to negotiate with the demon Sammael before resorting to violence.
* He has used SCIENCE! to create a "son" though instead of a monster the Son of Insano is a cute pink fuzzy ball.
* Hellsing is so powerful that it makes him practically unkillable. He likely also doesn't because it's scary as hell for those attacking him with absolutely no clear actual permanent effect. When he begins employing anything approaching tactics (i.e. stopping to think in any way whatsoever), you can tell the fight is very serious.
* Happy Days, when Richie, Potsie and Ralph pledge to a fraternity, one of the things they have to do during Rush Week is clean the floor at Arnold's using toothbrushes.
* Heathcliff & the Catillac Cats — Cleo and Wordsworth in particular
* Goblin Chirurgeon, whose art depicts one of his patients, who appears to include bits of at least four humanoid species.
* Good Cops, Bad Cops (1990), corrupt police in Boston burgle the safe deposit boxes of a bank and find a much larger haul than they anticipated, causing them to worry about this trope. The local mob boss assures them it isn't the case; he just wants his cut from their crime. Unfortunately, the criminal responsible for fencing the jewels has made off with them.

* GURPS magazine #47 article "The Ultra-Tech File". If it works, the 2 day long Rejuvenation process lowers the character's age. If the process suffers a critical failure, the recipient's age increases by 6-36 years.
* Gundam, during the Zeon infiltration of White Base, Amuro has just been sprung from his holding cell by Ryu Jose and is on his way to take control of the Gundam when he is waylaid by a Zeon soldier. Things look bad, as the two fight over a gun, a shot it heard and the soldier drops. Standing behind him with the smoking gun is Bright Noa.
* has the titular Vivien and Placida, who are first cousins. Placida is the daughter of King Gridelin and Queen Santorina, while Vivien is the king's nephew.
* Halloween) when Laurie is attempting to open a door that's being blocked by a rake, she simply slaps one of the glass panels on the door, breaking it easily. Somewhat averted in that it does cut up her hand pretty good.
* Hedley Lamarr organizes an evil version of one of these for the climactic battle in
* Gravedale High had Frankentyke befriend a racehorse whose owner is desperate for a victory. However, they are unaware the owner's assistant is secretly working for the villains. During the deciding race, the horse starts to take victory with Frankentyke riding it. Then, the traitorous assistant reveals his duplicity by knocking another rider off of his horse and riding it to victory. As he's gloating over his win, Sid informs him that he's been disqualified for changing riders during a race.
* Guardians of the Galaxy (2014), during his argument with Ronan the Accuser.
* Hearts of Iron. It slows the attacker down a bit and helps the defenders.
* Highlander TV series carries on the film's tradition of arming its Scottish Highlander main character with a katana as his default weapon; justified as well by the sword' sentimental importance. Duncan was versed in a variety of weapons, however, and would occasionally wield other weapons — one episode had him refreshing his memory with a rapier and dagger when preparing to fight a duelist on equal terms — and sometimes switched back to his old Scottish claymore when things get very personal. In one notable episode, Duncan is able to quickly dispatch a foe after they swap weapons — while Duncan was proficient in his opponent's weapon, his enemy was totally unfamiliar with the katana.
* Harry Dresden a muggle PI. It was completely successful, much to everyone else's disbelief.
* Heroic Sacrifice: Choosing to die for a greater cause...or just for somebody important.
* Happens again when Callen saves a Mexican girl from a shootout, and she and one of her sisters fall for him. The former even calls dibs by saying "
* Hellsing and a couple other points indicate is in use. This is never explained in any depth nor is any true user depicted explicitly.
* Harley Quinn, who is kind-of-sort-of the Earth-2 version of Harley, wields a very non-comedic iron-headed sledgehammer.
* Harry Harrison is based on) even soy-based faux steak is expensive and worth practically rioting over.
* Haruhi Suzumiya when they come back; Haruhi actually calls her out on this trope after Kyon specifies said order revoked.
* has a bayonet on it), plus the action is much more reliable in long-term use than a full-auto or semi-auto gun. Coming a close second due to less accessibility is a semi-automatic rifle fitted with a suppressor.
* Heathers territory (Veronica being manipulated into participating in J.D.'s murders rather than doing it of her own free will is what stops it from being a straight example of the trope). After Veronica finally gets tired of his shit and dumps him, J.D. still remains very much in love with her, which makes it this trope.
* "Grandma Got Run Over By A Reindeer" surely qualifies, since the lyrics specifically mention that this unfortunate incident happened on Christmas Eve.

* Hero Oh Hero his power is to enter these. His body disappears when he enters another's mind and reappears next to the host when he leaves. So far we've seen:
* Half-Witted Hillbilly: People from rural areas are commonly portrayed as stupid hicks.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers has an instance in the first episode: the world conference gets out of hand, so Germany lets out a big "EVERYONE, SHUT UP!!!" to get everyone back in line.
* Goblins come to what humans would call "Love" is "True-Seeing": when two Yuan-ti grow especially close, they can sense one another's feelings and pain as though they were their own. Minmax starts to think that he and Kin might be True-seeing one another, but she doesn't believe him... until she sees his hand is bleeding and remembers experiencing an unexplained jolt of pain in her own hand.
* Green Arrow was co-created by Mort Weisinger (1915-1978) and George Papp (1916-1989). Neither man continued working in the series for long after the 1941 debut. The character rose to fame under other writers and artists. Their deaths had no effect on the character.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys — in his introductory episode, Typhon even notes that Hera imprisoned him because without him around, Echidna's temper made her very dangerous.
* Glory. The Scoobies spend the entire season running from her in terror. And her actions directly lead to Buffy's death in the Season 5 finale.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) looking to release Ghidorah and killing Asher, Jonah's second-in-command. Had she not prioritized Asher because of his advance on Mark, she could have killed Jonah there and then.
* Half-Life 2: While never explicitly described as a "plasma rifle", the Overwatch Standard-Issue Pulse Rifle functions much like the plasma rifles of most FPS games. The main difference is that Pulse Rifles function by using containers filled with dark energy, as clips which expel this material in controlled bursts. They also can fire a compressed orb of dark energy as a form of self-propelled projectile. Dark energy has heat and kinetic damage, and due to the nature of this sort of exotic matter, it causes normal matter to vaporize and cease to exist. Similar weapons are found mounted on the game's enemy warships and vehicles.
* Hard Rain, Rain does enter and ends up angsting about his life over his father's grave.
* Heart of the Woods, which only serves to widen the rift between her and Madison.
* Hello Kitty's Furry Tale Theater, the Luke Skywalker expy is given a fur coat he believes allows him to access his powers. Naturally, he loses the coat, but realizes he doesn't need it and defeats the Darth Vader expy.
* He is actually the present day Bun-bun, while the Bun-bun shown is from the past; present day Bun-bun (Darksoul) has Laser Guided Amnesia, and his pseudo-deadpan snarking is actually him ticked off on the fact that he has no idea what's going on; everything his past self is involved in is ridiculously random ("Leaf people?"), and he knows he should know what's going on.
* Happy Gilmore, "Chubbs" Peterson was a pro league golfer before a crocodile bit his hand off.
* Halo: Reach has the player board and plant a slipspace bomb inside a Covenant corvette.
* Her 2009 Wonder World Tour, especially her filmed appearance at London's O2 Arena, can definitely count as this. She entered the stage "breaking free" from a "block of ice" prop, rode moving hotel dollies and airport carts, "rode" a motorcycle across the audience while singing "I Love Rock And Roll", played a piano rising from an elevator for "When I Look At You", flew on a harness in a giant white dress for "Fly On The Wall" (after riding a giant van to the front of the stage), and basically hammed it up in full "rock chick" persona for much of the rest of the show. The projected films, dancers (often scaling walls), laser and light shows, and multiple costume changes added to the theatrics. And she
* Harry finds out in the last book that Dumbledore had been eaten up with self loathing for causing his sister’s death for about a century. He let his brother Aberforth continue to (understandably) resent him for that long. Aberforth had just assumed he was able to move on with his life and become the best wizard of the era. Harry has to be the one to explain to Aberforth that he was “never free” from it all because he could never bring himself to apologize to Aberforth or tell him that he loved him and their sister.

* Hilarious Outtakes, when James messes up on his lines, his co-star jokes that he should remember the lines since he's the one who wrote them.
* Heroic Sacrifice. Valerie Vernon had to leave the show after being diagnosed with leukemia, and due to overwhelming positive response to this plot device in the previous series (where Zordon sacrificed himself to save the universe) the writers felt they were safe with it.
* Hermione Granger. She's a bright, high-achieving witch who constantly tells her friends off for not studying as hard as she does. She also used to be an annoying
* GONE series. Most of these never culminate in anything sexual, and some aren't even used in a sexual context, but he's made it pretty damn easy to take out of context.
* Guild Wars. Thankfully, the Emperor himself is far more in touch with what the people need.
* Hall of fame baseball player Cal Ripken Jr. was able to be a very good defensive shortstop in his prime, despite his lack of physical speed, because he studied both opposing batters, and his team's own pitchers, to make sure he was always in the optimal position to make the needed play.
* Guilty Until Someone Else Is Guilty: We're gonna blame you until we can blame someone else.
* GURPS Reign of Steel for entirely human-benevolent reasons even if true.
* Hawk and Dove. Hank (Hawk) is generally characterized as a short-tempered and fight-happy loudmouth, with Don (Dove) being the calmer, more pacifistic, and studious brother.
* Hepatomancy: The subdiscipline specifically involving divination by means of reading an animal's liver.
* Godzilla (2014), Ford Brody plays the other role of protagonist while Godzilla is the lead. This is alluded to when Ford faints at the same time Godzilla collapses after defeating the MUTOs.
* Haruo Nijima is a very complex character. A "close" friend (of sorts) of Kenichi Shirahama, he is commonly referred to by various characters as an alien due to his likewise features: long pointed ears, sharp hooking nose, glaring eyes, and fanged teeth. He has even been known to be able to protude two arrow-headed antennas from the top of his head. As if that's not bad enough, he openly proclaims himself to be evil, and does nothing to discourage this belief amongst other parties. Worse, he dreams to one day rule the world (albeit not in a conquery sort of way); and to this end, he (somehow) formed a fighter group that he hopes would garner enough media attention to make his dream world conquest a reality. He is an ambitious power-grabber who relishes in bossing everyone around (mostly Kenichi). Despite this, as the key founder of the Shinpaku Alliance (which Kenichi and several other principal characters are part of), he seems to prioritize the well-being of his comrades more than anything else, and is not above resorting to being a living bait to lure danger away.
* her braces got caught in the screen door), declares that she intends to leave everything she owns to her pet pig, Waddles.
* Gone Home surrounding the game set in it rapidly vanished from charts and seemed destined to have mediocre lifetime sales. However, this appears to not have come to pass as it picked up momentum again during multiple rounds of Steam sales (the game's short runtime and relatively high price was one of the major factors fuelling the backlash).
* Godzilla can create destructive gale force winds capable of demolishing buildings. The first three do this by flapping their wings, while Titanosaurus accomplishes it with his tailfin.
* He was also one of the fans in the performance of "You Can't Do That" in
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, he gets completely thrashed due to never learning how to fight properly, as he could always overwhelm his opponents with sheer power alone.

* greatest speech never given"), the last prepared section was for a clergyman to perform the rite for Burial at Sea, with "commend their bodies to the deep" changed to "...the utmost deep."
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2021) where the Masters originally think they can only transform with Adam then later realize they can change on their own though if He-Man loses his sword, they'll all turn back.
* Grim Fandango. At one point in Act 3, the protagonists end up at the bottom of the sea, and they meet Chepito, a wandering man with a lantern attached to his head. When the subject of sea monsters is brought up, Chepito turns his head to reveal that they're already surrounded by them. But it's okay, because the light is what keeps them at bay.
* Highlander under glass that the immortal cat burglar Amanda Devereaux wanted to steal before her former-partner-turned nemesis Zachary Blaine (played by Jason Isaacs, very early in his career) got to them.
* Happy Heroes and make him look like he's been causing trouble with the people in the city when he actually isn't.
* He's also designed (though never built) actual weapons (of mass destruction no less), but only as a hobby. He maintains that if they were ever built, no one would dare use them.
* H. Beam Piper centers around a society searching for an AI that will rescue them and take care of them.
* Hedley - "On My Own", although the lyrics could also be interpreted as a teenager running away from an abusive home, as well as someone leaving their boyfriend or girlfriend.
* Haven right before it explodes and disappears. In the season 4 premiere he appears in an aquarium in Boston. For him it felt like a few minutes, however it actually was 6 months.
* Halo: Reach features a good news/bad news exchange at the end of the fifth level:
* He bleached his hair blond to play punk Rory O'Shea in the Irish film
* He does something similar in the Blue Beetle retrospective when Jaime is fighting the Reach:
* Good Parents: Parents who do a pretty good job of protecting and raising their children.
* Guerriere. His defense was that the ship was originally French-built, and so not as sturdy as British ships, and was in need of a refit. This was a likely reason for the damage that they took early in the engagement. Satisfied that his crew had done their utsmost, the court acquitted Dacres.
* Gwen Stacy was this to Peter before they started dating, disliking any affection Peter got from women (though not to the extent that Betty did) besides her (as shown in one interaction with Mary Jane):
* Harry had been told many times not to trust his visions, and then completely forgets that Snape had means to contact Sirius. If he had gone to Snape before attempting to contact Sirius himself (and getting caught by Umbridge in the process), the whole misunderstanding/deception that led to Sirius's death probably would have been prevented.
* Haven Roland Holloway, a man who became one with his house. Late in Season 5, Laverne the police dispatcher becomes one with the police station, though she goes back to normal in the final episode.
* Gordon Brittas frequently refers to his wife Helen as “my darling” (and to a rarer extent “my love”) on
* Guardians of the Galaxy and its sequels can jury-rig planet-busting weaponry out of random junk.
* HERZ: Natsume thinks that her sister Kurumi is so fixated on Shinji because he was her first love and she simply can not let it go despite him being married to someone else.
* He also provides a straight example: Jugo caught the guy off-guard with his
* He is the only Chaos god this truly applies to. Khorne doesn't care who is dying, just as long as someone is. Slannesh and Nurgle just don't really require an antagonist for their worship.

* Harry Potter Comics, both officially part of continuity. The comic had double updates during these specials, though both overran Christmas before the arcs were finished.
* Gridlock have devolved since the last time he encountered them, as they used to be intelligent but are now mindless beasts, billions of years in the future.
* Guys and Dolls. Despite Sky and Sarah being a couple in the show, being billed after Vivian Blaine (Miss Adelaide) put Isabel Bigley in the "Best Featured Actress" category, whereas Robert Alda was "Best Actor."
* Heroine, one of the players plays the eponymous Heroine, who is defined by her pluckiness. Sure, she also has flaws she has to overcome in the course of the story, but as a rule of thumb, optimism and resourcefulness are a requirement in this role.
* Have Your Own Extra-Terrestrial Adventure Mala, but in each one, they go their separate ways at the end, much to his disappointment.
* He joins the Friar in a duet just to annoy him, and makes him carry Robin across the river just for the fun of it.
* Goofy when all the other players on P.U.'s team get injured and ends up scoring the winning basket.
* Guardians of the Flame: James Michael doesn't like that people pity him for having to use a wheelchair because of his muscular dystrophy, and especially when people also act repelled from him (as Doria does).
* Harmony series features "dust bunnies", which are flat-out called bunnies but definitely have a few quirks above and beyond normal bunnies, such as extra eyes.
* Goblins, there was one goblin (who was somewhat fatter than the others) the fans named "Joe Chubbs", and started writing legends of him. While the author usually doesn't let himself be influenced by the fans, he decided to draw that goblin in other scenes, one of them featuring him as the only character for a few panels.
* Hannibal Lecter of horrific childhood ordeals is revealed. In his adulthood, he is quite happy where he is.
* Godzilla vs. Megaguirus, a kid finds a large egg left behind by a giant dragonfly that came out of an artificial wormhole. It making a mess of the bag he put it in when he and his mother moved to Tokyo makes it impossible to hide for much longer, so he decides to dump it into a sewer. Turns out that the the Meganulons that hatch from such an egg thrive in water....
* Gremlins over various radios; he is attacked by the Gremlins while on the air ("You're not Rockin' Rickey fans!!") but in something of a subversion he survives and is back on the air at the end of the movie.
* Gosu, Wang Eungi cleanly cleaves through solid boulders with nothing but his nails (and powerful outer ki skills).
* he assumes that he subconsciously outsmarted the ordeal and learns absolutely nothing.
* Heroes, Nathan falls off a rooftop in his final appearance on the show.
* God also does this, spending most of the movie in the form of a middle-aged homeless man in a coma, and at the end appearing as Alanis Morissette.
* Hägar the Horrible name on them, and in another she chains him to the spot, which is bad for a wandering hunter.
* High Sacristan, location of the Canticle Engine in Micah E. F. Martin's short story
* Gunnerkrigg Court seem to be this, as Antimony (who, by her own admission, doesn't know the first thing about robotics) was able to reconstruct Robot S13 from a box of parts (i.e. torso, arms, legs, etc.). On the other hand, actual damage to these parts is not so easy to repair.
* Headless Horseman has a massive jack-o'-lantern for a head. He can remove it and carry it under his arm.
* Gravity Falls, the protagonists are a pair of twins loosely based on creator Alex Hirsch and his twin sister Ariel. The voice of Grunkle Stan originates from a grandfather whom Alex faintly remembers and Soos is based on a friend from college. The idea of the show taking place during summer vacation came from the Hirsch siblings staying with a great-aunt of theirs during one summer.

* Greg Weisman of shutting the blog down completely. In July 2013, the website temporarily stopped accepting new questions until the following year.
* Good Eats home fryers have solved these problems: many are sturdier, easier to clean, have a chassis made (or covered with) ABS plastic that stays cool to the touch, heating elements that can be submerged in the oil (instead of under the metal), and have "breakaway" cords and auto-off features.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, a corrupt policeman by the name of Ootaka tries to bully his way past Ooishi in an attempt to shut down the heroes' plan. When Ooishi (who was expecting this) doesn't let him pass, he starts trying to throw around the name of Councilman Sonozaki, with whom he is on very good terms, and who will not be pleased at this interference, blah blah blah. At which point a well-dressed man comes up and demands to know who the hell Ootaka is, who thinks he's on such good terms with him. Ootaka doesn't recognize him, and Ooishi triumphantly introduces Councilman Sonozaki to Ootaka, at which point all the color drains from the guy's face.
* Hammers Over the Anvil emerging from the water and taking the practice of riding a horse "bareback" to a whole other level.
* Grumpy Cat's Worst Christmas Ever, the plot is about a girl trying to stop a couple of burglars from stealing an expensive dog from a pet shop, which was going to be used to keep the store from closing down. Grumpy spends most of the time being towed around and making wisecracks. Lampshaded, if nothing else, as Grumpy keeps trying to remind the audience that this is her movie when it very clearly isn't.
* Glorious Appearing series was like Praise The Lord And Pass The Popcorn while he was watching the Antichrist's armies getting decimated by Jesus Christ. In the Dramatic Audio presentation, he even mentions that all he needs is the popcorn.
* Grace Monroe and Simon Laurent are also this to the author. On numerous occasions, the author has stated that while she likes how they are written, she hates both of them for the damage they caused and can't forgive them for their actions, which becomes much more apparent as the writing then goes to take any sympathetic traits they had and either changes them, gives them a darker twist, or outright remove them, all in the name of making them into arrogant sociopaths who only care about destruction. She states in
* Golden Age story (written in the 1940s) featured Batman and Robin visiting an island where all modern technology was banned and the population lived like it was The Gay Nineties. Modern crooks arrive and find the place easy pickings until stopped by the Dynamic Duo. The story ends with Batman persuading the island's leader that it is time to join the twentieth century.
* Gross-Out Show: Downplayed; the more disgusting parts of the stories weren't shied away from, but they aren't the main focus.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, several Olympian gods were dedicated to destroying Hercules. They normally worked alone, but at times, they teamed-up. In "Reunions," for example, Hera takes over Olympus with Apollo and Ares siding with her.
* .hack//SIGN which took place inside of a video game is well known for its extremely talkative and long conversations. However, because of the background investigations going on with the leads, it's forgiven. There are moments of intense action and suspense, but the dialog to action ratio is easily 5:1.
* Heart of Darkness It is later revealed that this treatise is sought after by a journalist intent of publishing it, and who describes Kurtz as a potential political candidate for 'any party', as 'an extremist'.
* Guild Wars. It took the appearance of the Elder Dragons to stop the fighting and some hardliners on both sides have decided to keep the war going. The Mursaat were willing to kill anyone who refused to submit to their control, resulting in an all-out war between the White Mantle and the free people of Tyria. In the end, nearly the entire Mursaat race was exterminated along with the majority of the Mantle.
* Gypsy references this in an extra verse of "Together Wherever We Go":
* Having a part of her face chewed off later by Biter doesn't help her case, moving her to Ugly and Uncanny.

* Hayao Miyazaki is that Sosuke is modeled after young Goro and his mother after his wife, which by logic would make the father who's always away is Miyazaki himself. The Morse code messages the father sends them from his ship when he tells them he's not coming home yet — "I'm sorry and I love you" — are thus meant for Miyazaki's family.
* G.M. Berrow is getting in on it too—shortly after the synopsis for one of her books was revealed that
* Granblue Fantasy. Over the decades she spent alone in her house, she slowly forgot her life from when she was alive, even her name.
* Grand Theft Auto V is left to bury that it's bound to make many a player laugh and be grossed out.
* Heroes in Hell: all the dead wind up together in Hell, where they pick up where they left off when still alive.
* Heroine's Quest: The Herald of Ragnarok is a svartalf, because his eyes are inhuman.
* Heart of Darkness types in the Belgian Congo, although his name in particular references Georges Antoine Klein (Kurtz is German for short and Klein is German for small) who had just died when Conrad was in the Congo.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys demonstrate that while the titular character had a loving mother, his father Zeus was never around. Zeus' excuse is he was busy being king of the gods and considered Hercules his favorite child. Hercules considers the answer bull since Zeus hardly does anything related to being king and is usually pursuing his romantic affairs so it's still a sore spot for our hero.
* Gundam, an accident in one causing famine is part of what led to the One Year War.
* Goddess Creation System. Xiaxi needs to make Mingluan fall in love with her, but while his sister is pushing her to sleep with him and get used to sex Xiaxi holds back. She knows that if she has sex with him when he doesn't love her she'll be nothing more than a bed warmer. Not what she needs.
* Hamilton of Hamilton's shit and will always put Eliza, her only remaining baby sister, before anything and anyone in the world. One of her lines in "The Reynolds Pamphlet" sums it up:
* Hanna, the first episode has a scene where Hanna not only masturbates, but tastes her lubrication while doing so.
* Gunfighter: The Legend of Jesse James: in the second game, the first stage has one of these being done by the titular outlaw protagonist before he's interrupted by his traitorous partner, Bob Younger. As Jesse players will have to shoot their way out of town.
* has a rather awkward interaction when three Rodriks (a Stark great-uncle, Lord Harlaw and the grandson to Quellon Greyjoy) realize they will have to use nicknames or the crew just won't stop giggling at them.
* God and the Darkness reconcile and say they're gonna "go away for a while" before morphing into energy beings and floating away.
* Gundam SEED Destiny not only has a large public bathroom on top of self-shower space in the living quarters, but also an imitation hot spring area complete with Japanese-style gardening scenery.
* Granny Weatherwax, who the Trolls call "She Who Must Be Avoided". The Dwarfs have a similar name for her: "Go Around the Other Side of the Mountain." When her reputation fails, she resorts to hoodoo, or "headology" as she calls it, and if that's not enough, she is perfectly capable of clearing the field by magical means.
* Godzilla Raids Again, or a second one altogether that never engaged Godzilla in a fight).
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series) and something resembling a glazed facehugger. He's in turn rather disgusted after finding out about the "cheese" Hal is eating.
* Higurashi: When They Cry manga volumes tend to have at least two omakes. The anime also has omakes of their own. The sound novels have bonuses too.
* Golden Sun has a battle tournament that Isaac competes in and wins. If you transfer your save data over to the sequel, the gladiators that Isaac fought will show up in the game and are still sore that they lost to a "cheater". They attack Felix (even if Isaac isn't around to extract their revenge upon), but they are soundly beaten by Felix's party and give you an item.

* Halloween series alternates between bullets hurting-but-not-killing him and bullets causing nothing more than a minor nuisance.
* Green Lantern (1941): Doiby Dickles is actually often fairly stalwart for a comic relief sidekick. He still has to ask Alan what things like being called a "moron" means, the answer to which gets him riled up enough to go deck the criminal who'd called him such.
* Hero, Rival, Baddie Team-Up: A hero, a rival and a villain making a team against a common enemy.
* He was originally going to play the role of Chili Palmer, but he and other producers thought he'd be too short for the role, which is the ending punch line of the movie!
* Global Currency: The same money is used across the entire world (spanning multiple countries and/or times) to avoid cluttering up the menu with 30 different kinds of currency.
* "Guigemar": Guigemar is a knight who mortally wounds a white hind, but is injured as well. The hind leaves a curse he can only be healed if a woman suffers for love of him while he suffers as much for her. He gets to a land where the lord has imprisoned his young, beautiful lady wife out of jealousy. Worried she might cuckold him, he keeps her trapped in an enclosure with one entry that is guarded, but the place can also be approached from the sea, which is how wounded Guigemar gets there. Guigemar and the lady fall in love. Assured that their feelings are mutual, they consummate their love and spend some time in bliss. They are discovered and the lord forces Guigemar to return to his country. The lady is imprisoned within a marble tower and keeps longing for her love. She manages to escape and considers drowning herself in the sea. She then spots the same mysterious ship that had taken Guigemar away long ago and the ship brings her to Brittany, where she is taken captive by a Lord. She is eventually saved and gets together with Guigemar.
* Hellgate: An entryway between someplace normal and someplace very bad.
* Golems also cancel out the magic of demons they touch. This is explained as being because it's a creature of earth, while demons are creatures of air and fire. This does raise the question of why an entire system of magic, which effectively counters the dominant one, is never really used. Given what happens when someone tries to get creative with the standard
* Go! Princess Pretty Cure Although the series is already quite pretty and well-animated most of the time, the animation is of noticeably higher production during the hand-to-hand fight scenes, especially in the more important episodes such as the introduction arc (ep. 1-5), Episode 11, Episode 22, etc.
* Godzilla vs. Megaguirus was designed to trap Godzilla within a miniaturised black hole. Unfortunately, a test firing of the satellite's cannon opened a wormhole for a very brief moment, allowing an egg from the Carboniferous period containing countless Meganulon and the larval Megaguirus to arrive in the present day. The Dimension Tide is later used at the end of the film to successfully trap Godzilla, although it seems to have merely imprisoned him underground...
* Heavy Rain gives you about an hour before the title sequence rolls in.
* Happens again when Ranma dreams that Akane is leaving him forever. He says this to her, wondering why she's crying and telling him goodbye, before realizing that it's because he has turned into a frog.
* Hades is also a god of darkness and night, since the Greek Underworld was heavily associated with both of those things.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys episode "Hercules and the Lost Kingdom":
* Gulliver's Travels, the flying city of Laputa is a harsh allegory of England and its colonial dominion over Ireland; the name means "the whore" in Spanish.
* Gravity Falls. In reality, Dipper found magic crystals that can make things grow... or shrink.
* Grojband episode "No Strings Attached" reveals Corey to be a fan of The Bubble

Bunch Band, a really kiddy animatronic show targeted towards small children.
* Hideri; the first half is his introduction and the second, a shopping trip between Miu and Hideri.
* Harry Potter and the Alien Reality. He is even able to teach a version of it to SG-1 after this event, which makes it even harder for the Keeper to read their minds.
* He does this a lot. The other characters will be giving the gentle, not-hurting-your-feelings answer and he'll be saying the brutal truth every time. Barney believes that
* God of War (PS4) accessible realms. It takes quite a few chapters for you to get a base mook that doesn't look anything like a draugr anymore.
* Hades also tries to do this with Wonder Woman, with a twist that he had to resort to a technicality when WW pointed out her origin story doesn't
* Going by the artwork in the books, trenchcoats are Standard Issue among
* He returns to this in "Keep Calm and Flutter On", wherein Fluttershy lets him stay at her house in the hope that she can
* Hightown: Osito tells Junior after the latter is traumatized by helping to kill someone that it was the same for him at first. Eventually, however, it stopped bothering him. Since he continues to kill people, the obvious message was that the same thing would happen with Junior.
* Hero: 108: Most episodes of Season 1 start with an animal species oppressing humans, but after First Squad defeat them in a fight or competition, they overcome their hatred for humans and their kings join the Big Green, where they receive a special task.
* Godzilla vs. Kong have terrible security, with Team Godzilla having little trouble sneaking through their facilities. Of course, given their supreme hubris, this is completely in character.
* Hilarious in Hindsight herself tweeted, "Today is literally my day lol".
* Graham McNeill take Uriel and his companions prisoner because they might be friendly — though they think probably not.
* Harris had caught a serial killer who was leaving bodies in garbage bags. He tells Barney how exhilarating it was following the clues, and "getting into the killer's mind".
* Happened offscreen during the Time War, when the Time Lords and Daleks were wiped out and only the Doctor seems to have survived. The Ninth Doctor's epic
* Harry actually compares he, Ron, and Hermione taking turns carrying the Horcrux to this in
* Henning Mankell's. Evil Chinese mastermind? Check. Sinister Chinese conspiracy to take over the world (well Africa anyway)? Check. Subtle Chinese murder techniques? Check.
* Gold Key published several issues of a comic book based on the TV series
* God Loves, Man Kills. Stryker figures in another example later in the book, as he tries to rouse sentiment against the demonic-looking but heroic X-Man Nightcrawler.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (2000), in contrast to the 1974 original, are stealing cars for a crime boss not on commission, but because the protagonist's younger brother owes said boss a lot money and will be killed if they can't deliver the goods. The heroes come out even better by the end, as once the villain has been dealt with, they give the cops a tip as to where they can find and recover the stolen vehicles.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, during the Battle for Hogwarts Ron tries to confess to Hermione while they're being chased by Nagini, but Hermione interrupts him:
* Gruppen, calls for three separate orchestras to perform equally distant from the audience. This plan doesn't fit with many concert halls.
* Hilariously. Water Caste Tau are all conniving schemers and cheating merchants, Air Caste Tau are all cowards who launch unprovoked bombing runs and orbital strikes on defenceless worlds, Fire Caste Tau are all violent brutes who bully other Tau and use prisoners of war for target practice (when they bother to take prisoners at all), and the Ethereals run the empire as this horrible 1984-esque society and often use mind-control to order Tau to kill themselves, sometimes for fun. Only the Earth Caste escape this treatment, being poor schmucks who are abused, exploited and left to die when they're no longer useful.

* Guardians of the Galaxy: The Telltale Series, the final episode revealed that he survives even if you let him sacrifice himself.
* Hart to Hart episode "Hunted Harts". While visiting a wildlife reserve, Jonathan and Jennifer are hunted as prey by a competitor of Hart Industries.
* Happens again later in the episode when Frasier tries to tell the fencing instructor that his wife loves him very much, but the maid's confusion with pronouns means it gets translated as "your wife loves me very much." Unsurprisingly, the instructor attacks him too.
* Haru had to be creative when she confessed her feelings to Tsurezure since she suffers from a pathological case of
* Heroine Natalie is abducted and thrown into a well by her insane sister Janet, who plans to take over her life. She is held there for what appears to be several months until finally being rescued, yet is only slightly disheveled rather than being bone thin and utterly filthy.
* Hearts of Ice: After recording a conversation where Cologne and Shampoo admit they exiled Akane to the Kami Plane, Nabiki threatens Cologne with giving Ranma the tape if they do not bring her sister back.
* Gravitation: Both Shuichi and Tohma are yandere for Yuki who is in a relationship with Shuichi who is the object of a crush from Ryuichi who is the object of a yandere crush from Tatsuma who also molests Shuichi as he resembles Ryuichi.
* Gore Vidal was conflated, often, with fey London hairdresser Vidal Sassoon, a man famous in his own right for style and sartorial fashion.
* Heralds of Valdemar stories that Companions can't be dyed — or rather, the dye job never lasts long enough to do much good.
* Highlander: The Search for Vengeance's skyscraper is the only new building we ever see in the world.
* Hex 2215. Performing a ritual with a Serpent Man orb will cause the Sorcerer doing so to fall into a catatonic state. When he wakes up, he may be insane. If so, he will age 30 years in as many days, regaining his sanity at the end of that time.
* Hero on Hiatus: The hero is temporarily taken out of action, and the focus swaps to getting him back.
* Halo backstory, the UNSC blockaded the 26 Draconis System in an effort to keep FTL drive components from being shipped out, leading to an incident that sparked the Insurrection.
* Gwar to tolerate and now seek a way to leave the planet. The album "Lust In Space" focused particularly heavily on this theme.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony has a mission where you throw a blogger out of a helicopter in flight, then you drop after him and catch him with your parachute.
* Gyorgy Ligeti's "Requiem" was put back on the map by its use in trailers and ads for
* Grand Theft Auto V to the 3D Era games, where cars that ended up upside down exploded.)
* Haruhi Suzumiya that for whatever reason Kyon's commands override anything else; which makes sense given Yuki's absolute loyalty to him.
* Harley Quinn and she can't believe he wouldn't use it to get quite an eyeful of her anyway.
* Harley Quinn Harley could have been Ivy's psychiatrist, not the Joker's, and she would have never became Harley Quinn.
* Harley, the Tennessee boy who helps Iron Man repair and recharge his armour, in
* Haruhi Suzumiya built to observe. Fans describe her as the most powerful character ever made.
* Gypsy, June and Louise call their mother "Momma", other characters just call her Rose, and she sometimes bills herself as "Madame Rose." Not once is she referred to as "Momma Rose", although it is a decent catch-all name for her.
* Good Thing You Can Heal: A character gets seriously injured but they have powers which means they can heal themselves.

* Goosebumps, who tends to put down really good words, is the one cheating by making up fake words. Since they don't have a dictionary in the tent, she wins most of the arguments.
* Haku's mask in the Land of Waves arc has no mouth and thin slits for eyes.
* Hero Insurance channel instead of calling an ambulance and trying to stop the bleeding will get you into serious trouble in those locales.
* Harmony Gold did a lesser-known dub consisting of a TV special (that was edited from the first and third theatrical movies) and first five episodes which only aired in certain test markets in 1989. It never covered any more material.
* Halo 3 has the Flare, which temporarily blinds opponents. Very annoying when those jetpack brutes use it on you.
* Hazbin Hotel, Alastor admits he's doing it for his own entertainment. He's grown bored with his work and finds Charlie's idea amusing, just as he will find it entertaining to watch demons struggle to reach redemption and inevitably fail.
* Gold Roger, a legendary pirate who conquered the Grand Line and was executed by the World Government. He kickstarts the grand age of piracy where * her society that is accepting enough to offer paid services such as actors who perform the physical acts the intelligence directs.
* Healing Hands that need water to work, and until she got loose she had no access to water. She's shown bruised in a future episode though.
* Gregorio del Pilar and gave the body a traditional U.S. military burial. Upon del Pilar's tombstone, Quinlan inscribed, "An Officer and a Gentleman".
* Heel–Face Door-Slam: If the protagonist does notice his flaws, it's already too late.
* Her best friend Maud sports the loose version of these for the first two books, but it has grown out by the third book and she braids them.
* Hairspray because one of the regular dancers is taking a nine-month leave of absence.
* Glenn Miller's song "PEnnsylvania 6-5000" was the number of a hotel the band had performed at - the
* Golden Lad takes a lot of liberties with Pre-Colombian history; for instance, the pendant that gives Golden Lad his powers is in the shape of the European heart symbol, rather than any remotely Aztec symbol.
* Henrik Wergeland has two celestial spirits ponder the newly created earth, with one of them asking "is God present in this lump"? The question is followed by a rant, casting doubt about whether this particular planet is "of any particular interest".
* heavy use. A number of governments have regulated the practice (or at least looked into it) for that reason.
* Harry Turtledove novels refer to humans as "Tosevites" — derived from Tosev, their name for Sol. When speaking formally, anyway. In casual speech, they're just as likely to refer to humans as "Big Uglies". It's implied that the names of the two races previously conquered by the Race (the Halessi and the Rabotevs) are not native names.
* Hercules young Hercules was voiced by Ólafur Egilsson while his father, Egill Ólafsson, voiced Hades.
* Harry Potter. Literary critics pigeonholed the first book as lame 1990s juvenile fantasy, destined to be forgotten. Not only did the series become some of the best-selling books in history, but it also got film adaptations, and is still seeing some new merchandise and materials to this day.
* Grupa Operacyjna has the titular character who tends to very weird things, like selling one dollar at a bureau de change or messaging the police with his pizza order.
* He also played the scientist interviewing River in "The R. Tam Sessions".
* Gotham City Garage's mind-control devices which kept his city's inhabitants under control, but she hated the job, the enclosed city and especially Lex Luthor. Then she nearly got assassinated because she saved a man's life. So she manages to run away and joins Natasha Irons' rebel faction.
* Happens to Krumm in "Krumm Rises to the Top" when he swallows a helium tank.

Ickis does the same in an attempt to chase Krumm, and he is later used as a parade float.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, in particular, were not happy to be paired together.
* Hercule Poirot, this is one of a few Red Herrings made to accuse the dead girl's husband's ex.
* Gratuitous Laboratory Flasks: Scientists have flasks and beakers everywhere.
* Greg Nix (script coordinator and voice of Nix) is very fond of the pilot "Age Of Hinobi".
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Ron leaves after having an argument with Harry and Hermione, but returns to save Harry's life, leading Harry to forgive him. Hermione isn't quick to do so, however.
* Goosebumps gradually develop into this after a boy ignores the instruction manual for his new ant farm and starts overfeeding them. By the ending they've reached the size of mountains, and locked up all humans in town-sized ant farms.
* Heterodynes, apparently, gain the loyalty of both their own creations and those of others by
* Halo 2, the Covenant ships that jump into the Solar System are stated to have stopped just short of an unexplained "Super" MAC "kill zone." It's likely the range in which they can be assured of hitting their targets, as MAC rounds still have to travel to the target - even if it's traveling at 4/10ths the speed of light, that could take minutes to reach its target, within which a potato with a charge running through it would think to move out of the way.
* Hellraiser: Inferno, he angrily retorts with "What did you call me?"
* Heroes Shed No Tears but was released soon after ABT's success, also featured this trope and laid the groundwork for his later Heroic Bloodshed movies.
* Green Arrow explains to Paul that a bow is easier to purchase, carry, conceal, and explain away than a gun. Paul still thinks that Artemis could do better, and demonstrates it by challenging her to break his shields while he stands there and
* Hagen to get the ring and trying to snatch the ring from the Rhinemaidens, getting him drowned.
* Hairspray mention of the dangers of drinking and driving anywhere else in the show.
* Goblins physical attraction in their case, as many other versions had sexual attraction.
* Heathers that gathered a modest cult following, it didn't even make it to Broadway before major productions lost steam. It still attracted a very loyal following of adult fans of the original and teenagers that liked the snarky humor.
* Gravity Falls" where Mabel's mental version of her brother Dipper, aka Dippy Fresh, offers the real Dipper and Soos a high five. Dipper tries to stop Soos from accepting it, but Soos can't "leave him hanging" and does it anyway. Dipper then declares Soos "dead to me".
* High School Hellcats she's trying to kill to cover it up, even though as far as anyone knew, she was only guilty of the same comparatively minor crimes as the other kids.)
* Hellboy and despite being a demon destined to cause the Apocalypse, he is so pure and heroic that his blood cause lilies to sprout from the ground.
* Hector's House was originally a French animation series that later became famous through the English dubbed version, however, all writing that appears on the screen is still in French so any French speakers will read it instantly. For any that don't, the characters read out what they've written in English to translate, but it comes off to the audience as a different writing style that only the characters in their universe have.
* High School Musical: The Musical: The Series has Carlos and Sebastian, and in the second season Big Red and Ashlyn, acting as more-stable counterparts to the various entanglements of Ricky/Nini/E.J./Gina.
* Godzilla: The Series, although it is mainly the secondary characters who are grabbed and dragged.
* Gunboat Diplomacy; still it's difficult to consider a show of force of this magnitude anything but this kind of negotiation.

* heel who couldn't hold his breath and act unconcious at the same time.
* GURPS: the US occupies much of Mexico (though there are still border controls in place to keep Mexican third-class citizens from traveling to the "Upper 48").
* He doesn't even intentionally create his iconic hand beams; he just accidentally finds out that having his hand stabilizers go off at full power while not in flight fires a blast of energy. He discovers this by launching himself into a wall.
* Highway to Heaven, one character uses insider trading, including stealing the company's trash and hiring a disgruntled former employee for his insider information to start a series of deals so he can manipulate two companies' stock prices, gain control over the company's voting shares, and get rid of his enemies. This is all done in the name of "good" by the shows protagonist, an angel, who in other episodes, has an ethical dilemma over much simpler things, but white collar crime is apparently okay.
* Harvest of Shame is a 1960 made for television documentary presented by broadcast journalist Edward R. Murrow. It shows the plight of American migrant agricultural workers. Allegedly, the Coca-Cola Company (which owned agricultural interests) refused to advertise on CBS for many years after it aired. For this reason, among others, the TV documentary rarely exists anymore, and when it does, is almost always a uncontroversial (at least to advertisers) subject.
* He is saved at the last minute when an alert coroner notices a tear glimmering in his eye.
* Harry's account manager comments that "only the most insane human" would be able to handle drinking goblin grog.
* Grand Theft Auto V (who was, of course, setting up an ambush to kill him).
* GURPS works like this. "Perfect Illusion Disguise" will actually fool all five senses.
* Guyver, protagonist Sho is handcuffed to love interest Mizuki so he can't bio-boost without blasting the broad to bloody bits. Hearing half a warning that she might not be who she appears to be, Sho laments that this had to happen right after Mizuki's birthday. She agrees, and her cover is blown because Sho knows her birthday is later in the year.
* Heroes has an appropriately sparse website for the Primatech Paper Company, and a sleeker, more elaborate page on Pinehearst Research.
* Glove Slap: Just slapping them is far more common now. Not to mention that the thin fashionable gloves used in this trope are all but dead as a men's accessory.
* High Crystal. Steve Austin tries to find a mysterious crystal. It's a power source left on Earth by space aliens.
* Heel–Face Turn. After Shobu defeats him, he congratulates him on a good match and offers to play him again later. This stands in stark contrast to Hakuoh's previous belief that once a player lost a game, he was no longer worthy to compete.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows and that Death has poorer eyesight than a cat.
* Grant Morrison seems to enjoy switching up or tweaking the genres of any previously-established characters he writes on, largely to reinvent the characters and "revitalize" the story. Some examples:
* Happened in Russia in 2007., and probably have the best 'how we met' story out of anyone they know.
* Hannibal reminds him that they "live in a galaxy dominated by blue women that can mate with their brains" and just killed a flying shark.
* Gray Fullbuster has a well trained physique, which he tends to show off by taking off his clothes, and is cool under pressure in a fight.
* Heralds of Valdemar: Death is described as "the Shadow-Lover". The metaphysics of Velgarth being a bit vague, the Shadow-Lover sometimes seems to be a literal psychopomp that appears as an attractive member of one's gender of preference to embrace the dying, and sometimes seems to be a poetic metaphor. It may depend on the nature and strength of one's faith.
* Helluva Boss' HQ advertises their business, but Blitzo either didn't have enough money to hire a competent billboard service to make the ad or did it himself and screwed it up. It reads like this (and, for bonus points, there's an arrow pointing in the opposite direction of the place it's advertising):

* Green Lantern) simply gives them the courage and fortitude to fight for what's right. The green light of willpower is the only force in the universe that can give its users great power without clouding their sense of morality.
* Hilariously this is the only moment in the episode that invokes this trope while for most the episode and a few moments after this scene the trope is averted.
* Heel–Face Turn. He does, however, remain frighteningly competent.
* Harry Potter during the Torg Potter and the Giblets with Fiber storyline when Torg returns with the horribly mutilated body of his fellow competitor and brandishing a shotgun, and eventually being sentenced to the universe-equivalent Azkaban by the horrified crowd who decide he's the murderer.
* Hell in a Cell: 2016 featured the first time a women's match headlined a PPV event, as well as the first time women competed in the eponymous structure.
* H2OH commercial spikes all around. It's said that porcupines can shoot their quills — porcupines are not hedgehogs, however, and the popular belief is in fact false. Porcupines may have their spines dislodged while swinging their tails around because the spines are very loosely attached to the porcupine so that they'll come out once they've been lodged in another creature's skin; however, they don't deliberately shoot their quills at a target. They're much more likely to reverse into your leg and fill it with hooked barbs.
* Hercules: The Hydra battle. Hercules loses his sword, struggles to fight the Hydra until he retrieves it, and is caught off guard when the Hydra threw him into the air and swallowed him whole. But after a moment, Hercules cut his way out from inside the Hydra's throat. Covered in green slime and swaying on his clumsy feet, Hercules tells Philoctetes, "See, Phil. That...that wasn't so hard." However, he tries to sheath his sword, only to drop it on the ground, before he himself collapses. Looking at Phil, who asks how many horns he see, a dizzy Herc sees triple and his answer is "Six?"
* Harry Harrison hyperspace beacon on a distant planet. It turns out the builders failed to notice a few stone age reptiles. Since then, the natives found the beacon (a huge tower), and made it a holy shrine (it produced an endless spring of water as part of its coolant system). One of the priests, while cleaning inside, hit the emergency shutdown switch. The protagonist pretends to be a sentry of heaven, sent to restore the spring. After he finishes the repairs, the reptiles attempt to keep him in as a permanent caretaker — in response, he claims the heaven is angry enough to forbid entry into the tower altogether (reinforced by him welding the door shut).
* .hack//G.U. has an affection system that can be altered through e-mail, cards and gifts. This will allow for better trades and morale boosts for your party members. In addition, (with two notable exceptions) the main character can marry the female characters or become best friends with the male characters at the end of the game assuming their affection is maxed out.
* Hiccup Hijinks: An episode centred on trying to get rid of hiccups (which are not a disease but it's on here anyway).
* Guild Wars War in Kryta arc, Confessor Isaiah, the leader of the White Mantle (named after Isaiah Cartwright, the former leader of the skill balance team) has a skill called "Isaiah's Balance," which causes the next skill used by its target(s) to cost 25 energy and recharge in 90 seconds, reflecting an infamous skill nerf.
* Halloween (1978). Turns out he really was the Boogeyman. And the parade of sequels begin...
* Gundam AGE. First, we have Zalam and Euba fighting each other, with Flit fighting to stop Zalam and Euba from fighting, and later we have the Diva's crew who wants to destroy the UE, the corrupt Earth Government who wants to capture Grodek and the Diva, and the UE who just seems to be killing everyone they see mercilessly...
* Groundhog Day but you play as the son of Phil Connors, Phil Connors Jr., and the game takes place in the modern day.
* Gottlieb starts and they want to quickly get the ball to the flippers.
* Good Wings, Evil Wings: Sometimes used to distinguish good winged fairies from evil ones.

* Heroes for Hire as a tech bro, moving into the neighborhood and making a fortune by selling software that can erase someone's criminal history. The success quickly goes to his head, causing him to engage in riskier ventures, like gang wars and black magic, forcing Luke Cage and Iron Fist to intervene.
* gold inlaid with jewels as feces and doesn't recognize its value on Earth. A side gag in several episodes covers one specific gold doody that gets passed around many people, usually through murder or suicide, until the apocalypse episode where Roger needs it to fuel his starship.
* Highlander: Tessa cries in Duncan’s arms after being kidnapped in “Mountain Men” and after a mentally ill immortal gets into the barge and attacks her. There’s also a non romantic one with her and Richie after Michael Moore shifts to his Quentin Barnes personality and chokes her.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Ronan does this to The Other, using a shockwave from his hammer to twist his head right around.
* Half-Life 2 at the protagonist to dissuade him from accomplishing his mission during the endgame, he delivers this line:
* GTA Radio has a married couple host a political talk show. One's a Democrat, the other's a Republican, both are strawmen.
* Heroic Sacrifice by tanking the potential of his deck in order to save his friend.
* He's also an artist. In one episode, when Reid (Gubler's character) makes a sketch of an unsub who approached him in the metro, it's his actual work.
* Guineafowl are used as watch-birds in some rural communities in Africa, because their
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, but the entire thing is prevented from happening by the episode's end.
* Halloween (1978) was then followed by a slew of its own imitators - thus creating the 'self aware teen slasher' subgenre.
* Hard-Drinking Party Girl, it's made very clear that she was doing this in regards to the debt her parents left with her and her sister, and her subsequent dealing with the issue, that led her down the path to the humorous path we see in the story.
* Hellboy: The Ogdru Jahad are seven eldritch monsters that spawned the 369 Ogdru Hem before being sealed away. The Ogdru Hem in turn make other smaller monsters, usually out of humans.
* Gonta Gokuhara is very gullible, which makes him easily manipulated by
* Happy Heroes: Season 8 episode 11 is about Big M. being stuck floating in the air. He gets tired of not being able to control where he floats and finds a solution - propel himself in the direction he wants by farting. He then runs into an aerial traffic cop who fines him for polluting the air with his gas.
* Highlander: Endgame introduces Duncan MacLeod's former wife, who had not yet discovered her latent immortality when the two married. Wanting her to be preserved young and beautiful so they could spend an eternity of happiness together, Duncan stabbed her to death on their wedding night without an explanation or her consent. (In order for an immortal to return from death the death has to be shocking and violent. Telling her he was going to do it might well have prevented her from coming back.) She's spent the centuries since hating him for stealing a mortal life from her. She also hates that she can't have kids anymore. Even though most indications are that potential immortals couldn't have kids in any case.
* High power laser weapons actually might not be silent so much as they would switch which end the noise is on. The impact of a laser weapon on a target would actually produce a loud bang since it's vaporizing material into a rapidly expanding gas cloud; AKA an explosion. This might incidentally make them pretty crappy stealth weapons since the sound is inherent to their damage mechanism and can't really be dampened.
* Gray Sword with magic. The boons both in money and in reputation, granted by magic schools for new pupils, make it worth combing slave markets for potential mages and even buying whole families wholesale, as the mage in question would like to keep the slavers in the dark about his motivations.

* GURPS includes the Mad Nut: a magical nut that causes anyone carrying it to treat it as their most valuable possession.
* Half-Life lampshades how the Hazard Course trainer is being projected with no visible equipment.
* Heim theory supports that a rotating magnetic field created by a ring spinning around a superconducting coil would produce an artificial or anti-gravity field. It is, however, also fringe science and fairly unlikely to hold water.
* Hercules Returns: "I'll fight you on one condition... that you lower your nipples." The opponent... does.
* Handplates), Gaster cuts circular pieces of bone from the palms of his hands (thereby also explaining the holes in his hands) and uses them as genetic templates to grow Sans and Papyrus in test tubes.
* "Haddox's" website could easily be considered a stealth parody of Maddox's "Best Page in the Universe," by way of the fact that the page is one letter "M" away from being completely indistinguishable from the original, but somehow funnier for it.
* Griffith version. He is defined by his obsession with controlling others and treating them as though they are his property, so he demonstrates a distinct disregard towards consent in sexual situations.
* Green Lantern Corps rings could become an Artifact of Doom under the right circumstances. The Orange Lantern ring curses its owner with ever-lasting greed and hunger. The Red Lantern ring causes heart stoppage and uncontrollable rage, and you can't take it off without it killing you. The Black Rings bring the dead back as undead Black Lanterns that crave hearts.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets (although the body wasn't actually dead).
* he would literally slip in the match against Chelsea, ultimately costing Liverpool the title.
* Hallowed Worldly. He frames his videos as attempts to get the word out to the ignorant public.
* he came back disguised as a preacher railing against his own out-of-control Imperial Cult. And his son Leto does something similar after an assassination attempt.
* Halo 3. Unfortunately, they don't do much against whatever was shielding the ship.
* Happy Tree Friends episode "Chew Said A Mouthful", Nutty takes a very small spoonful of sugar from the sugar bowl, then pours the rest into his drink. It's still not sweet enough for him.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) episode, Teela and Orko on up on the palace roof during an attack. A blast nearly sends Orko off the roof. Grasping the edge, he cries out to Teela for help, at which point Teela points out that he can levitate. Orko then says something near the trope.
* Hercules: The Animated Series of Jafar and Hades. After failing to destroy each other's nemeses, the villains engineered a fight between the two heroes.
* Half-Life 1. When using night vision, the environment has a green hue and poor resolution, but none of the enemies glow or are rendered in unusual colors. That's because the so called "night vision" actually causes Shepard's model to emit light (much like how another player's flashlight will appear from your viewpoint in multiplayer) while a green filter is applied to your viewpoint.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, Zimmy stays remarkably calm. Then Annie asks if Zimmy has given much thought to controlling her powers, and Zimmy flips the hell out.
* Heroic BSoD, the episode ended with the sound of Eureka slamming the door.
* Godspell was scheduled to open at the end of 2008; it lost a producer and thus didn't open until the fall of 2011.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. While her relationship with Kat is cute, we don't learn anything much about her other than that she used to have a crush on a boy before developing feelings for Kat, she's generally cheerful, and she can talk to animals. After her hook-up with Kat, she's only had one big, plot-relevant scene of talking down a monster that wasn't some variation of "she's happy to be with Kat". Whenever the main characters have to go on some adventure or quest, Paz is conspicuously absent from it and we never even get to see her reactions to Kat and her other schoolmates doing potentially dangerous things or Kat telling her about them. Her main role in the plot so far has been to just occasionally appear to remind us that Kat has a cute girlfriend.

* . Heterodynes got either resistance or adaptation—to a degree.
* herself, and she causes him too much trouble for him to see her as anything but a friend. Due to her own nervousness and uncertainty about her feelings for Asahi, she interrupts him mid-confession, awkwardly says "I like you! …and all our other friends!" and runs off.
* Hey Arnold! is a slice of life cartoon, Helga Pataki has fallen victim to this pretty often, from getting crapped on by flying birds to getting into a bumper car accident to suffering two beatings from Big Patty. Half of her slapstick moments are deconstructed in "Helga on the Couch".
* Half-Life 1 and silence said scientists, weren't. Among the things the Marines did include blowing up aliens or surviving Black Mesa personnel with explosives or simply bombing them into submission.
* He originally debuted as part of a team called Swiss Money Holding and was by far the most successful of the Swiss Money Holding trio. Ares is still working on the US indies but isn't getting much attention. Marc Roudin stayed in Switzerland and people who missed his appearance on a
* Halo 3: ODST multiplayer, with all the map packs included. (Including one that was temporarily exclusive to the ODST disc.) Unlike most 360 games, both discs were entirely separate.
* Green Lantern: The planet Oa (headquarters of the GL Corps) is a Desert Planet.
* Graduation Day Part 2" when Buffy makes Angel vamp out and drink her blood. While he's lying on top of her, she grabs a metal object for support, and it just crumples. She also kicks a table through a wall. Angel leaves her with the most insane hickey in history through all of Season 4.
* Highlander has shades of it. He was raised as the son of a Scottish clan chief, in a society where clan battles were common and men were raised to fight. He doesn’t usually go looking for fights, given that immortals try not to attract the attention of other immortals, but he’s hard wired to protect and fight against evil immortals and often has ended up in historical wars fighting, as he told Darius, battles he believed to be just. He considered Darius a good friend but trying to follow Darius’s peaceful teachings didn’t last very long.
* Guy Gavriel Kay, contrasting with his younger brother Diarmuid who is more of a dandy, albeit a cool one.
* Her argument with Blake regarding the White Fang in the penultimate episode of volume 1 is this from
* Halo in a society of pacifists, who was responsible for destroying humanity's empire and sending us back to earth as cavemen. Everyone lampshades how odd this match is; however, they both love each other fiercely.
* Gold Through the Fire: The setting, as the film was released in 1987, and it shows. Not only with the fashions, but the very Cold War politics.
* Grand Finale shows Bill Cipher as a live-action statue in the middle of the woods, implying that he would someday return too...
* Harry Potter, and he fits the jock part too, being good at cricket and other sports.
* Got one of the more low-key, if still very creepy, uses of this trope in the third season finale. The
* Goodies in the Toilets: Bathrooms will contain the most bizarre of treasure, clues, or other useful things, if they're included in a game at all.
* Greece apparently has a property tax loophole where you don't need to pay it if your house is under construction. This means that there are whole neighborhoods of houses that are in an "incomplete" state (half-finished extension of the kitchen, a room with no roof, house with no west wall etc.) so their occupants don't pay the property taxes.
* he splits apart a boulder Frieza telekinetically unearthed with his mind.
* Harry refers to Snape's Dark Mark as a "magnificent piece of magic" shortly before removing it.

* Harry Potter: Witches and wizards, giants, dragons, giant magic spiders... the list is a little long for this series.
* Hey You! What If...: In "You Could Take a Lift to Space?", having to put up with six months of lift music is identified as one of the inconveniences you would encounter.
* Gravity Falls that forbids town citizens from discussing the events of the finale with the outside world.
* Happy Tree Friends are the only ones who don't speak due to Mime being a mime although he can sometimes be heard to scream in pain as he's being killed and Mole being blind and deaf.
* Hero Realms, The Guild offers these as part of their criminal services. One Champion in particular is Rake, Master Assassin. Despite knowing little about him or her, the professional is infamous.
* Goodness Gracious Me where a young man tries to explain to his parents that he is gay and a friend he brought home is actually his boyfriend. The parents are too oblivious to understand, and when he says he and his friend are sleeping together, his mother replies "Morecambe and Wise slept together!"
* Hernán Cortés (whose leadership skills were vital in the siege of Tenochtitlan). On the opposite side, the Amazon River was so named because one of the explorers, Francisco de Orellana, reported encountering a tribe of warrior women there.
* Gnarls Barkley's "Necromancer" is about not only keeping the body but being the killer as well, although some lyrics mention the idea of suicide. Includes the lines "Did you hear what I said?/With this ring, I thee wed/A body in my bed/She was cool when I met her, but I think I like her better dead." Although the lyrics make it clear that the dead person in question is only metaphorically dead, having been consumed by an addiction to drugs.
* Higher Learning. Between the final scene and the epilogue they get married.
* he wants a worthy challenger. It works but not necessarily as Akuma predicted when he spared him (as Ryu never adopts Akuma's fighting philosophy to prove himself but instead proves that the opposite can be just as powerful if honed).
* Heart Power; in his introduction sequence he calmly faces a jaguar about to eat his future pet monkey Suchi and manages to save the latter without throwing an attack against the former.
* Henry Stickmin Series for his troubles. And just when he had walked through the front door and made his escape...
* Hero Oh Hero isn't impressed when one of his classmates starts describing his dreams.
* Go On over 500 times... but not by choice. "It's a compulsion known as supercalifragilisticexpialidocia."
* Hairstyles or facial hair that is much longer or styled in a way that is against regulations (for the time period).
* Harvest Moon: Tree of Tranquility lets your child grow up and leave to start a new farm on another island exactly identical to yours. Your child starts with the cash you have plus a 10k bonus, level 3 skill in all tools, and most portable goods (like furniture), but not livestock or the buildings themselves.
* Graceland, Mike's girlfriend Abby is never seen without Mike around.
* Good Omens, as the Electricity Board spokesman on the radio (referencing Sir Terry's early job as a press officer for three nuclear power stations). (According to Gaiman, when Sir Terry was alive, he proposed that their cameo should be in the background of the scene in the sushi bar, so they could spend it eating sushi.)
* Going Postal: Moist Von Lipwig (under an assumed name) is about to be hanged in the morning when a courier from Lord Vetinari arrives. Lipwig's relief vanishes when the message is delivered: "Get on with it, it's long past dawn!"
* Half-Life but the AI is Self-Aware turned him evil. It's completely disconnected from everything that's happening, and the rant eventually descends into nonsensical and contradictory rambling and finally gibberish.
* Haley isn't a thief; she's a "freelance wealth redistribution specialist."
* Have I Got News for You had a dig at MP Rupert Allason: "...given Mr Allason's fondness for pursuing libel actions, there are also excellent legal reasons for not referring to him as a conniving little shit". Allason did indeed sue for libel, and lost.

* Hades has a ton of situational dialogue that's only seen in very specific situations, such as having the Yarn of Ariadne on-hand when encountering its previous owner Theseus, if your first encounter with Asterius is before the dual boss at the end of Elysium, or if you somehow manage to escape the Underworld in just one attempt.
* Harder drugs can cause one to behave as if immune to bullets. Of course, when the drugs wear off, you're gonna be feeling those wounds.
* Hellsister Trilogy goes from smug bully to who puts others down to selfless hero who cares for and protects the innocent.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. This apparently isn't the first time this has happened, by far.
* Hercules, when school rivals pull a prank on Prometeus Academy, student body president Adonis plans to retaliate with a strongly worded letter, "with lots of verbs, action words!"
* Heart of Steel of delaying Cyborg!Jim (while disoriented, missing his usual mechanical omniscience, and sleep-deprived) to give Julia enough time to reach the manual override on the other side of a door is summarized thus:
* Henry Hugglemonster with Captain Hollander, who operates the airship.
* Haruhi Suzumiya novel. And the anime, the songs, CD, games, etc. In the 9th novel, Sasaki points this out rather blatantly, and teases the readers with Kyon, by claiming it's a royal and imposing name.
* GTA Online itself is prone to distractions. In addition to all the things you can do in single player mode, the element of player interaction can make the game a
* Hangman: Guess the word or phrase letter by letter. Each time you guess wrong adds a new piece to the gibbet, noose, and hanged man. This game, of course is the spiritual ancestor of
* Halo: Combat Evolved's "The Covenant". Also, "The Arbiter" involves stealth to some degree.
* Hero: 108: High Roller was once a court jester who ended up banished from the Eastern Capital for insulting its emperor, prompting his great dislike for other humans. After gaining the ability to speak to animals, he convinces them that humans are their enemies (all except him, that is).
* Hell Teacher Nube is an apparition that shows up during the rain, sopping wet, asking innocent passersby for shelter. Then she haunts her victims unto death, drawing so much humidity into their homes that they decay and rot within days. She's identical in appearance to Sadako.
* Graven Hunter Files a high ranking vampire sends vampire hunter protagonist Sye after some rogue vampires, given that no one would believe that a vampire of all people would hire a vampire hunter.
* Glorious Shotgun Princess; Dragon-Bloods can live for several centuries)
* Guiche is in love with Montmorency, but he is still a conceited playboy who makes a habit out of flirting with any beautiful girl that catches his eye.
* GURPS Fantasy discusses this in its section on economics. In general, nearly everyone marries, and a wife is priced into the basic cost of living. The main exception (aside from religious vows) is for slaves and desperately poor men.
* Herman's Head used this with Herman somehow hooking up with a supermodel, but couldn't perform because he was intimidated by her status (he gets over it).
* "Hearts and Hooves Day", he was shown to be strong enough to toss an entire mob of ponies — most of the town, in fact — off of him with just a shake of his frame. It's clear that, strong as Applejack is, her brother is stronger still.
* headshot, zombies are primarily killed with fire. And they go up pretty easy.
* Heroes says that it has no particular significance to the show's mythology.
* has to gloat about how well he's played them, how they can't stop him, and how he'll ruin Oliver's life.
* Gravity Falls: In the short "Mabel's Guide to Color", the kids are planning on how to show Stan a rainbow. Grenda says that she sees rainbows when she drinks expired milk, then downs a whole bottle.

* Harry Potter series usually fills this in fanfiction. She's a clumsy metamorphmagus (meaning that she can change her appearance at will, for example she's usually seen with pink hair), who wears band t-shirts and has more humor than most of the cast. She's often paired with a character the author feels needs to loosen up (Lupin, Harry, Moody, etc.).
* Guardians of the Galaxy Drax hears Gamora referred to as a whore without realizing that it's an insult hadn't been cut.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers to be a gentleman. It just doesn't work out with his real personality. However, the English dub plays this straight, making the character speak with a stereotypical (RP) English accent (apparently), and he sounds much "stuffier'' there.
* "Head Light" - the fire-control system for the M-11 Shtorm/SA-N-3 "Goblet".
* Harry Potter makes it appear that these schools are all-girl and all-boy, respectively, but the books reveal that this is not the case. The Salem Witches Institute, however, may be all-girl.
* Greg. Been with a bevy of women throughout the strip, but his most eye opening act that has been revealed so far, is cheating on a girl by having a threesome with her sister and room mate. It's hinted that he might have slept with her mother on a separate occasion.
* Hermione Granger frequently acts as such, which comes in handy when dealing with older and arrogant wizards since she is also
* Hero with Bad Publicity and originally espoused in The Satanic Bible) promoted an ideology very similar to Libertarianism, with self-interest being the number one ideal, but generally had more restrictions on the behavior that was acceptable in the name of this.
* GLOW, the only one who could undermine Mama's voodoo powers and Hun's claims of master race superiority.
* Godzilla (1998). Since New York has been evacuated just prior to Godzilla showing up, there is nobody in the building.
* Going back to an earlier era, Czechoslovak gymnast Věra Čáslavská was very unhappy about her silver-medal finish in the balance beam final and tying for gold rather than winning outright in the floor final at the 1968 Olympics, despite winning gold in the other three individual finals, and made no efforts to hide it. In her case, it's
* Green Lantern franchise is more or less based on this, with various factions being able to manipulate light of different colours of the emotional spectrum.
* Grease: Before the Thunder Road race, Cha-Cha gives Leo a trinket extracted from her cleavage.
* Halo 3: ODST has Michael "Mickey" Crespo, who rigs the bridge leading to the ONI building to blow up and prevent Covenant ground forces from crossing it, and later destroys the ONI building itself to prevent it from falling into enemy hands.
* Hiccup and Astrid towards each other. Unlike the former's parents, it's more of an implied version — they have known each other since childhood and it's established at the very beginning of the first film that Hiccup has liked her for a while, and while Astrid was initially not interested in anyone at all (and was equally aloof towards all of her classmates), Hiccup succeeds in winning her over by the end of the movie. By the time of the second movie (five years later), they've obviously been together for a long time, and are just as much in love as ever. This is further confirmed in the TV series, as neither one shows a romantic interest in anyone else (i.e., Hiccup was one of the two boys who didn't gain a crush on Heather). They become * Grimtooth's Traps books (collections of traps for tabletop RPGs) had a joke "101st Trap" at the end. Supposedly, Grimtooth had boobytrapped the book somehow to kill the reader.
* Gunslinger Girl plays this trope for all its tragic, tearjerking worth. The entire plot is about girls who have been given cybernetic implants and turned into assassins. Entire episodes are devoted into exploring the is-it-a-machine-or-a-human-being problem. The girls' cybernetic implants, as well as the drugs and conditioning that they receive, are killing them while slowly destroying their minds and personalities. None of them will live to see adulthood. Yet it also subverted to, as the cyborgs for the most part accept their fate and maintain a cheery outlook, as opposed to their more cynical handlers.

* Hanzee Dent was a tunnel rat in Vietnam and received a Bronze Star and a Purple Heart for his actions in the war. He is the Gerhardts' best fighter, a great shot and extremely deadly with a knife. It is implied that his experiences in Vietnam were one of the catalysts for his decision to
* Grand Theft Auto V package. Although the game world (and downtown Los Santos in particular) offers countless opportunities for knife flights between tall buildings, only a select few of them actually count. One of the most difficult examples involves flying through a gap between two buildings that's barely wider than the smallest stunt plane in the game is high (and stunt planes are not only the smallest of all available planes, but also the only ones manoeuvrable enough to have a chance in hell to pull this off). Factor in the game's random gusts of wind while flying aircraft, plus the fact that the slightest collision with anything will see your plane go down in flames, and you have yourself one of the most frustrating challenges in the whole game.
* Highlander, the Seacouver half. (He had a Citroen and then a Land Rover in Paris)
* 'Hello" by Adele. Calling someone 1,000 times after they break up with you is not okay.
* Good Will Hunting' character missed Game 6 of the 1975 World Series because he gave up a ticket to try to pick up a girl at a bar. The game turned out to be one of the greatest in baseball history, but the girl eventually married him, so he didn't regret a thing.
* He doesn't say it to her face, but the Critic's pride and respect for
* Golden Axe, most enemies appear in at least two of the three basic colors: green, blue and red.
* Goofy himself has confused a number of people. That being said, anyone that knows the character's origins, knows he was originally called Dippy Dog, and even had a tail originally. The confusion comes from his species never really being focused on, much like with Pete.
* "God Wants Me To Forgive Them?", "The Wonderful Wizard of Ha's" and "Celery Night Fever" have a lesson in forgiveness.
* Hellevator (see above) has Hell (represented as a tavern) accessible by an old-timey elevator.
* Greg the Bunny of saying "blah" after sentences) visited the grave of his wife, which reads, "Beloved Wife, Blah. R.I.P.B."
* Halkegenia Online, the initial planning for what would become Operation Dunkirk was done in the map room while all the counters traditionally used for representing various levels of friendly and enemy force were in the briefing room being used to track an alternate plan, so the planners use spare change as force counters. This continues well after the original plan was discarded and everyone switched over to planning Dunkirk, as nobody thought to go back to the briefing room to get the counters.
* Higher Learning: In the last episode Shinji has been searching Asuka for a long while in the Well of Souls (a amalgam of all human souls). During a talk with other souls Shinji begins playing a song that he and Asuka played a while ago... and the music guides her back to him. Both teens play together for a while. Then Shinji walks towards her, cups her chin, and they embrace and kiss in the center of Instrumentality.
* Heathcliff: The Movie compiled from seven episodes, being told by Heathcliff through flashbacks to his three nephews (and a mouse) against their will because they were bored. The first two episodes were told uninterrupted.
* Grapple Force Rena has two bandoliers in place of a shirt as his default appearance.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, he casts a spell that makes the chewing gum fly up Peeves' nose.
* Harry Turtledove, a depiction of an in-universe battle between the US Army and invading Space Lizards paralleling Stalingrad.

* Halo 3: ODST, Officer Branley gives Sadie his Police-issue jacket. Sadie objects that she isn't cold, but Officer Branley points out that the jacket is bullet-resistant.
* He also appears, more briefly, in the other two books of the Space Trilogy. In
* Hanna-Barbera still had the text "rustandthesuperheroes" in small print under the album title though.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers and will often get attention or give attention to the male characters, but they're few and far in between.
* Henry Danger had two examples. In "Caved In", when Jasper initiates the lockdown, the front door glows blue and shocks him when he tries to touch it. The same shock happens with the elevator door button, but there is no glowing.
* Good Eats features Alton Brown trying to get a wedge of cheese to jump through a hula hoop, complete with circus organ. The scratch comes before he announces he'll have to make soup out of it.
* Half-Life 2 was this on concept art in early stage of development, and it picked up a strong Eastern European inflection in the final work.
* Guild Wars: Prophecies. The lich has so many weaknesses it's not funny, and even if you don't kill him correctly and are forced to fight him twice, he's still a rather pathetic final boss.
* has been doing this for about a couple of times now (maybe even a thousand), but Madoka still becomes a Magical Girl, and rarely a Witch.
* Grineer guerrilla fighters who are dedicated to protecting the innocents getting chewed up in the larger-scale conflicts.
* Guernica bombardement of the Spanish town Guernica and is perhaps the most iconic anti-war painting of the 20th century.
* Here we have one which starts off as an advert for a washing powder called Really White, until the bunny appears.
* Hellboy has his right hand of Doom. It's the literal Key to the Apocalypse.
* Granny Goodness and the Female Furies to freeze a chain and make a lead sheet fall on and smother the furnace. Once the kryptonite flame is out, he instantly regains his strength and breaks free.
* Gratuitous Foreign Language: As mentioned above, it's traditional for operas to be performed in their original language rather than translated.
* Goosebumps Bad Hare Day, the protagonist's sister tells their parents that she and her brother have a secret. When their parents ask what it is, the protagonist says that his sister was saying that she wanted a "wee pet", claiming that she was practicing her Scottish accent.
* Gus always eats food from the houses of dead people, as long as he doesn't actually see anything bloody.
* Great Teacher Onizuka fondling a woman's behind and, being the direct sort, headbutts him. Good coincidence: the young woman is also applying for a position at the same school and is grateful for his help. Bad coincidence: the old man is the principal of the school and the one interviewing him.
* Good Will Hunting you do the art picture. And then sometimes you gotta do the payback picture because your friend says you owe him." [Both look at camera.]
* Gold Makes Everything ShinyAnything made of, or decorated with, gold.
* Hellsister Trilogy common in the 31st century, and some alien races like Daxamites and Rokynians don't even need ships.
* Hallmark Channel, a banner covered the lower quarter of the screen advertising a Countdown to Christmas Fantasy Game for 15 seconds.
* Halo 2, where the character does retain the weapon selection in the cutscene. However, it is always wielded as if it was the default weapon, causing some weapons to clip into the character model in certain scenes.
* Hamilton, as Jefferson and Madison list his accomplishments. It quickly expands into the other fallen members of the cast as Eliza tells how she plans to honor Hamilton's legacy: recording the stories of revolutionary soldiers (upon which Laurens and Mulligan reappear), she commissions the Washington monument to honor George Washington (who is also dead by this point), she fights for abolition (carrying on the work of Hamilton and Laurens), and she founds an orphanage for orphans like Hamilton himself.

* Grand Theft Auto IV — although there are several outright lies to puff up his credentials, most of it is composed of statements that are technically true, but either worded so vaguely that they're meaningless or deliberately framed in a misleading matter.
* Gwen Raiden is the only sexual attention she can get. As her client points out, however, a professional thief should avoid attention, not encourage it.
* Heroes Unlimited has Bionics as a superpower type, though in this timeframe it's an emerging technology and extremely expensive (though available to the public).
* Heart Gold and Soul Silver fakes have a similar issue connecting to the Poke Walker.
* Halo Wars. Arcadia would also appear in a list of provinces in Greece.
* her say "I am the Emperor, so I decide what I am able to do!" It's what allows her to be a good fighter when historically Nero was no such thing (even in the Nasuverse): she decides she should be a good fighter, so she is. Skills she gains this way are only temporary though, and she will quickly forget them when they're not in use.
* he says something annoying and gets clicked off by the woman for a man who's a bit more suave.
* Hayate the Combat Butler this is done twice. Maria meets Hayate by accidentally running him over with her bike while he was lying in the snow, then giving him her scarf since he was out in the snow without even a jacket. Hinagiku first meets Hayate while she is standing high up in a tree after going up to save a baby bird and then getting stuck due to her fear of heights; she then accidentally kicks off Hayate's face after jumping down since he wasn't ready to catch her.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, has CJ robbing a vegas casino with a colourful group of characters (Its GTA, they're always colourful)
* Greek Mythology, particularly by modern authors. Some say that the stories of the Amazons were based on Iranian tribes like the Scythians and Sarmatians, in which women fought alongside men and held political power.
* Graycloaks. Reynard refuses to comply, stating: "He was no blood-guard." It's implied that he meant this as a compliment.
* Hearts and Minds the wrong side." The film was made by Peter Davis, born and raised in Southern California.
* Guild Wars are extremely ugly humanoids, often sporting tusks, horns, or spines on their arms. They stand roughly two to three times the height of a human.
* Graham McNeill, when Leonid tells Uriel that he will join him and Pasanius in their death oath, Vaanes claps, slowly.
* He wets himself in front of Robin's intimidating dad in "Band Or DJ" and blames it on the rabbit.
* Halt and Catch Fire when an employee is arrested for stealing money from the company's owner and putting it back into the company accounts. The company was going bankrupt and the owner refused to put more of his personal money into it, so the employee stole the money in order to keep the company going.
* Godzilla made Godzilla out to be the primary threat, but in fact the MUTOs are the real bad guys.
* Heroes them. If impaled through the brain, they'll stay dead until the impaling object is removed, and shooting them through the head kills them permanently.
* Herman Cain becomes the first black CEO of the National Restaurant Association but also becomes a chief executive for Burger Chef and KFC in addition to being elected to office as a GOP Senator from Georgia.
* Harry Potter. They are portrayed as very manly (chest hair is mentioned repeatedly) and while Draco Malfoy true to his original characterisation is the only one who openly admits that he hates women, the others are clearly of the opinion that women should stay in the kitchen, too.
* Hatoful Boyfriend and he lies about having been with you a few moments beforehand. You can choose to go along with Yuuya's lie. But if you choose to tell Shuu that he's lying, Yuuya has just one thing to say...

* Heavy Barrel. One always felt compelled to collect the pieces to get it — though playing without it was more fun than playing with it.
* Gunnerkrigg Court "all these great ideas" were a temporary effect, but after complete recovery has both fledgling etheric powers and possibly improved tech-savvy side, if not on the same crazy level.
* "Help! Help! Trapped in Title Factory!", this is when someone who is trapped or otherwise enslaved and forced to create something hides a message for help in the outgoing products in the hope that someone will respond and help them.
* He first marries Sidana, daughter of the Mearan Pretender and a human, in an effort to resolve the conflict with the Mearan separatists. The effort fails, and
* Haruhi Suzumiya, this leads to Adult Mikuru showing Kyon a mole on her breasts while saying something like "But you were the one who told me about it... wait, has that not happened yet? oops...". Later in that episode Kyon casually asks Mikuru if she has a mole "right about here" and points to the location on his own chest. She turns around, checks, and starts trying to beat the information out of him. That would be where Kyon "told her about it" — it's a bootstrap paradox.
* Harry Belafonte is a polarizing figure amongst fans of calypso music. Although he brought the music to the attention of an American audience, he's criticised for doing so by watering the music down and generally playing traditional songs, not competing in calypso tents, and crediting other people's songs to himself. However, Belafonte was in fact very respectful towards the musicians and the record company was mostly to blame for the credits issue. He did end up crediting them for his songs. He signed so many calypso artists to RCA that they started a Trinidad division, and he paid them well.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows stepping onto the tracks as it puffs to a halt.
* goddess, etc., East Asian languages have increasingly used female-specific elements to translate them, namely 女神, 女王, 女帝, etc.
* Glee Quinn wears her hair in a tight ponytail for most of season 1, until her teen pregnancy is revealed and she is forced to quit the cheerleading team. She starts wearing her hair loose and becomes a more compassionate person. At the start of season 2, having given up her baby for adoption, she goes back to her original tight ponytail hairstyle. (Her more relaxed personality is also reflected in a change in wardrobe— from the sharp cheerleader uniform to more casual clothes.)
* Hanks also tries to be funny offscreen: he takes part in an annual fundraiser by the Shakespeare Center of Los Angeles where a Shakespeare play gets a comedic
* Harry Potter books have an antagonist version of the intrepid reporter in the person of Rita Skeeter of the Daily Prophet. She doesn't let the facts get in the way of a juicy story, going beyond merely ignoring what interviewees actually tell her to actually putting words in their mouths. She's also not above stealing from old ladies.
* Havenfall Is for Lovers is a 500-year-old vampire. For the most part he makes the best of his ageless existence, but when the subject of whether or not he'd turn his love interest, he expresses some very strong opinions on the subject.
* He also holds the all-time NHL records for tallest player and hardest slapshot.
* hell are censored on some websites and message boards, making the censored words seem a lot worse than they actually are.
* Guild Wars 2: Zig-zagged. The sands of the Crystal Desert are filled with marine-type animals like land sharks, sand eels, and skimmers (which resemble giant manta rays). However, walking through the sand is just like walking on other land. There are also pits full of quicksand that kill you quickly (similar to video game lava), unlike water which is swimable. However, skimmers can glide over both water and sand, and get the same speed boost for each.
* Great Grape Ape had such a disastrous allergy to grapes. It used to be a major plot point in early episodes. Later on, grapes turned into the one food Grape Ape enjoyed more than any other in the world, much like Sonny and Cocoa Puffs or Scooby Doo and Scooby Snacks.

* Grrl Power: Played with. ARCHON uses FPS games to train their rookies, but not for accuracy and gunplay; being a good shot in the game has very little to do with being a good shot in real life and vice versa. Instead, it's used to train basic tactics such as "don't stand out in the open while reloading" and "don't stand out in the open ever."
* Harry Potter series, this is one example where it seems to hold true every time.
* Glee was without a doubt a full-on snog. Played completely straight, however, with Finn and Rachel a few episodes later.
* Happy Heroes compared to the likes of the cold Moondance, whom he works with.
* Harry Potter films is a half-giant and as such much taller than a normal human. Unlike her book counterpart though, she's not very attractive.
* hilariously accident-prone, and the injuries he had sustained were actually caused by a series of painful-looking pratfalls.
* Halo 5: Guardians. In this case, the Grunts are cannon fodder who are not given much in the way of good equipment by their superiors.
* Hera=Laura Roslin as the fleet’s female ruler, who can be ruthless when the situation calls for it.
* Goosebumps features this. When Connor and his friends are hiding in a haystack from monsters, the three are quickly swarmed by bugs, seemingly intent on forcing them out of their hiding place. When one crawls up Connor's nose, he sneezes and gives them away.
* Groundskeeper Willie did a stand-up routine comparing how people from North and South Edinburgh play golf. He
* He then offers her "Cooper Coupons" which are basically an excuse to be his obnoxious,
* Heroes Save the World: Ananya Sharma's range is limited to touch. It isn't clear how much she can generate yet, but she's managed to explode a cup of pop so far.
* Highlander. He met another immortal who fought for the South. He said that the other immortal was on the wrong side; the other immortal acknowledged that he was, but said that he had made ties with his neighbors and friends and didn't feel like he could turn away from them.
* Her sister Erin was sent to Hell and forgotten by mortals, rose to rule the place, and then managed to return to Earth.
* Godzilla 2000 had this a lesser extent, where he inadvertently fogged photos taken of him.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys in a physical fight. Agenor apologizes to Nebula for believing she was crazy. Given the circumstances, Nebula admits that she kind of wishes she was.
* He attempts to subvert this again in "That Sinking Feeling" by magically tying Link up in chains and immediately preparing to blast him. Lucky for Link, Zelda blasted Ganon with magic before he could do it.
* Hanna-Barbera also had been known to give a nip or two to Fred's behind from time to time
* Guardians Of Gahoole book "Shadow Wolf", Faolan gets accused of murdering a pup he cared for, which only gets accelerated when framed evidence is found. It gets to the point where his entire pack is about to brutally slaughter him as punishment...until they're told that the real murderer is Heep, the very same wolf that framed Faolan.
* Grumpy Old Men: A Manual For The British Malcontent contains a long, particularly surreal, and rambling rant about cats. An extract:
* Hellraiser III: Hell on Earth of being raped by his mother as a kid and that he's projecting his hatred for her onto all women.
* .hack//Legend of the Twilight: An early episode sees the characters trying to clear an event by making a (virtual) sakura tree bloom. The trick to it is to figure out that an undead monster ("body") is buried underneath it and defeat it. Of course, things don't go as planned by the event organizers...
* Hellsing: Rip van Winkle's fight against Alucard was unique for a number of reasons, not the least of which being that she spends half the fight sobbing uncontrollably in sheer terror.

* Hanaukyō Maid Team has one hidden under the front lawn of the mansion.
* Guest House Paradiso: Richie donned Eddie's glasses as a disguise. They were both rendered nearly blind as a result.
* Healing potions are red, mana potions are green, and blue potions heal both.
* Happy Days and, when he does his usual "finger snap girl-attention-grabbing gesture", finding it doesn't work. He worries that he's lost his mojo for a few seconds until Richie realizes that the girl in question is deaf.
* HERZ the different factions are listed. Essentially you have: HERZ fighting SEELE's attempts to set Third Impact off and other nations' programs to build their own Evas; SEELE fighting HERZ, GEIST and the UN to initiate Instrumentality; GEIST fighting SEELE and the different world nations; the UN fighting SEELE but not particularly liking HERZ; and other nations fighting HERZ and the UN and not liking SEELE but being prone to strike a bargain with them.
* Halloween Episode well, there's no way he can get the drop on her. And then she finds the cummerbund...
* GoldenEye wanted revenge against the British government for the betrayal of the Lienz Cossacks, which included his family, who believed that they were under British protection near the end of WWII, only to be sent back to Stalin who promptly had them all shot. The fact that he was also doing so to make himself a pile of money off the destruction of London using a nuclear satellite that used an electromagnetic pulse weapon was just the icing on the cake.
* Hadean Lands uses this as a fundamental element of gameplay. You can restart a loop at any point with 'RESET', or by entering one of the dark doorways that are available around the map. Many puzzles require this - to do X you need information that you can only obtain by doing something that prevents you from doing X (due to finite resources, for example).
* Gundam SEED Destiny. It is mostly destroyed in orbit, but fragments of the wreckage still make their way through the atmosphere and cause massive casualties.
* Half-Blood Prince, only (in keeping with the screenwriter's general inclinations) reversed: Ron's comment inspires Harry.
* Haruhi Suzumiya video game features, at least in the characters' minds, revolver space ships loaded by smaller space ships.
* Harry Houdini in the act and later set up safeguards with his wife to prevent others from 'raising his ghost' after his death.
* Grand Theft Auto V after outcry over the series allowing the player to kill prostitutes.
* Graham Carr was a professional footballer who became manager of the lower-league Northampton Town. His ambition was for his only son Alan to follow him into football as a player. He was, according to his
* Hamburger Hill: Sgt. Worchester monologues about how his experience with anti-war activists became his motivation to do another tour in 'Nam.
* Hey, teleprompter! Stop telling me what to do! Pause, then yell: This is
* Gloria started out as the second wife in a household whose first wife had already produced a heir, making Gloria's own eventual son second-in-line. Then the first wife died and made Gloria the first wife. The first thing Gloria did was start scheming to make her own son the heir in his half-brother's place. After Gloria's own son gets executed for
* has Spectral Slash. She's the sympathetic kind of Bitch, and she never does anything too terrible, but it's made abundantly clear she's this when she not only attacks Rainbow for disturbing her but sells Twilight and her friends out to her true allies the first chance she gets.
* Hawaii Five-0 clan. Admittedly he's trying to turn their operations legit, but he's not finished yet.
* Here is Greenwood is Shun being mistaken for a girl. His younger brother is likewise androgynous enough to be distracting.
* Grand Theft Auto upped the ante with player character Trevor. Abusive, psychopathic, and hilarious.
* Heat this is how Donald Breedan's wife learns of his death in the bank robbery shootout. Somewhat justified in that it's a major breaking news story and he was killed in the midst of a pretty deadly shootout in the middle of downtown Los Angeles in which at least five people were killed (Cheritto, Breedan, a police detective, a patrol officer and a grocery store employee).

* Good Omens, saying that it doesn't matter what is "written", because "it can always be crossed out". Although it is later speculated by Aziraphale and Crowley that maybe everything that happened, including Adam defying his destiny, has been God's real plan all along.
* Greg Egan, the Earth is about to be hit by the lethal shockwave from a neutron star collision. A pair of AIs (essentially translated humans) don robot bodies in order to offer last-minute help: let them shoot people with a lump of nanoware that reads their brains while eating them. They can live on as software, escape from the kilos of meat they can no longer protect. What a choice.
* Harry Potter, and his aunt and uncle freak out if he even uses the word "magic" or references anything remotely fantasy-related, like flying motorcycles.
* Helix, Arctic Biosystems' lab rats are genetically engineered to lack sex organs, which, according to its head of security, makes them more controllable.
* He also uses this with the short story "Ms. Midshipwoman Harrington". The eponymous character gains command due to the battle (She's not the senior officer left on the ship, but she is the only officer on the bridge who isn't incapacitated, and there's no time to summon someone else), controls the situation, and emerges victorious. She is later given a promotion earlier than normal, but only to Ensign instead of several or more ranks.
* Guards! Guards!, the description of Where the Dragons Went is "It would put you in mind of a can of sardines, if you thought sardines were huge and scaly and proud and arrogant."
* "Guardians of Sunshine": Finn and Jake get stuck inside a video game and consequently, the art style becomes a sort of blocky 3D animation style complemented with green and black graphics for the in-game characters and levels.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, Rena walks barefoot on some broken glass and drips blood onto the floor.
* Hentai damage to her vagina) before kicking her out. She and Kugutsumen rape and murder the Miroku women as revenge,using the same device that was used on Kamiri.
* Helen of Troy (1956), the gods never appear in person but the characters all devoutly believe in them. Achilles's invulnerability is rumored, but one character remarks that his armor or luck is perhaps just that good, and arrows later do just bounce off his armor. He dies from the proverbial arrow in the heel after Paris prays that he may hit a weak spot, but it could be due to him falling from his chariot and hitting his head on a rock.
* Halo even implies that one common method of execution is feeding the condemned to Kig-Yar/Jackal prisoners.
* Hemlock Grove: Good lord, Olivia Godfrey. She's snobbish, haughty, shamelessly elitist, and controlling and manipulative to the point where even her own relatives hate her. But as the richest woman in town, she can usually get away with a lot of crap. When her husband died, the newspapers even called her "the most beautiful and despised woman in Hemlock Grove".
* Hakkenden: Eight Dogs of the East notably has only guys having a thing for him with one going so far as to say he's his type and wanting to marry him when he gets older.
* has a man who was murdered in a bathtub, with the player tasked with investigating the crime.
* Halo: Glasslands. One of the most advanced AIs in the UNSC, he takes pride in his superiority by refusing to generate a human avatar, always appearing instead as little more than a featureless blue cube that nevertheless manages to convey emotion by spinning and running lights over itself.
* Hereville as being "Possibly the best comic about a troll-fighting 11-year-old Orthodox Jewish girl that you'll read all week."
* Halo leaves it with several of its systems offline. Slipspace is significantly less scary for more advanced species like the Covenant and Forerunners, but even for them it can still be treacherous without the proper precautions.

* Hannah Montana concerts as both herself and as Hannah Montana. Sometimes in the same concert.
* Hans Von Hozel often do this almost literally, since some only reference the title of the work they are based on.
* Her Majesty's Wizard) who directly and consistently interfere in human affairs. Priestly blessings have direct and easily detectable effects, the hero interacts directly with his personal devil who tries to drag him into hell, he runs into at least one saint who tells him what to do after transporting him from a wrecked church into a fully restored one and back again, the act of being knighted by a king (who rules by divine right, and who happens to be mostly dead at the time) actually confers martial abilities, and at the end after the chief bad guy is defeated we see hordes of devils stream out of the sky and compete for his soul, only being banished by the intervention of priests. He converts to the local version of Catholicism by the end of the first book. Stasheff pointed out in the afterword that medieval people saw God and the Devil everywhere in their daily lives, and this book is an attempt to show that where most fiction of this type completely ignores this aspect of their lives.
* GURPS listed all sorts of crazy magical replacement arms including one with no physical substance.
* Hearts of Iron depicts this process with its military commanders: each successive promotion (which is required to allow them to command larger armies or fleets) reduces their skill level. Therefore, an excellent Major-General (skill level 4), who commands one division, can be promoted three times to become a mediocre Field Marshal (skill level 1), who commands twelve divisions. (Fortunately, skill level cannot fall below 0.)
* Grand Theft Auto 2: The SRS Scientists have developed a large number of clones, who are the foot soldiers you can find and fight around the streets and during missions.
* Hey Jude compilation included a free 45 of interview clips... and a bag of pot. Don't expect to see it on eBay anytime soon.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, during a school hiking trip, one of the groups is terrorized by a huge bear. Which is then turned into a pet by Isumi.
* Heel–Face Turn), attacking anyone else would have still gotten him cheered.
* Heroes Unlimited: You can easily create an alien superhero who looks indistinguishable from an ordinary human.
* Grand Central Arena to another system without ever passing through hyperspace, and get a reply along the lines of "We don't know exactly, but it's been tried occasionally and none of them have ever been heard from again".
* Hieronymus Borsch one. Imagine Disney creators making a comic for Vertigo.
* Goemon is sometimes shown smoking a pipe, like in his debut chapter * heroic, but he never seems to get around to it, usually because somebody else is doing something immensely evil that he has to take care of first.
* Harry Potter, or at least only one in Britain). The school subjects are also always capitalized, but that's a stylistic choice a writer might make even if they were just Chemistry and Creative Writing instead of Transfiguration and Defense Against the Dark Arts.
* Heroic Myth: Archer hosts a cooking class. When he tells his students it is time to beat the eggs, Tiona and another student immediately start punching their eggs, which of course makes a big mess. They get embarrassed when they are told they were supposed to crack the eggs into a bowl and stir them with a whisk.
* He calls Buffy "Slayer" more often than he calls her by her name, and once sarcastically nicknamed her "Cutie" and "Goldielocks".
* Highlander episode to mercy kill a suffering friend at the Andersonville prison camp.
* Hilda with the unconscious raven, Hilda loses him by jumping across the train tracks just before a train passes, and Trevor is thus forced to wait.
* Hank discovers he has a condition that basically means he has no butt and has to wear a special prosthetic to keep from injuring himself. After a lawnmower race where he wears the prosthetic, a man walks up to him and asks for some information for a friend who shares his condition. As the man leaves, Hank gets a look at him and declares that he might need to wear one as well.

* Haledjian also dealt with the rather more plausible inversion, where the suicide note was in perfect grammatical English despite the dead man being an uneducated Italian immigrant who read the news in an Italian-language newspaper.
* Harry Potter universe, the answer to the riddle about where vanished objects go is that they merge with the rest of the universe. This implies that they don't create matter when they conjure items, either. Wizards just steal matter from their surroundings, reorganize it into the shape they want, then return it when they are done.
* Go Jetters features an anthropomorphic disco-grooving unicorn named Ubercorn as the mentor and leader of the otherwise all-human Go Jetters team.
* Hawaii Five-0 break the rules to complete a "mission" (military or police), or to help his friends and family.
* having failed to stop Malcolm from destroying the Glades and watched his best friend Tommy die in front of him, Oliver retreats to the island of Lian Yu, where Diggle and Felicity Smoak have to convince him to come back and save his family's company. Through reconnecting with his mother and sister while confronting his guilt over Tommy viewing him as a murderer, Oliver adopts a new Thou Shalt Not Kill
* Halloween": Willow the Friendly Ghost, with the same lack of floor issues. This may be because the tv/movie ghosts that form the popular conception usually don't have such issues. Since that was what she was thinking of when picking her costume and the costumes turned you into what you intended them to be, she didn't have those issues either.
* Harry's apprentice, Molly, is also very skilled at illusion. While she's not good at physical magic, veils are second nature of her, and in time, she learns to use the combat applicability of bringing the sound and lights of a rave straight to a battlefield. In
* "Good Times Roll", a song about celebrity gossip, was used in a credit card commercial about cash-back deals.
* Hellboy crossover, the neo-Nazi Knights of October have an outpost in the Amazon jungle from which they attempt to summon an elder god.
* Grimm, teen werefolk tend to be this, even more than adults. Like the violinist were-rat, the sweet little were-badger (or -wolverine; some sort of mustelid), or the hybrid were-tortoise/were-lion.
* Granblue Fantasy, of which only the Black and Golden Knights are female.
* He also does things like that when he's made hall monitor at school. He immediately becomes a parody of
* Heavy Weapon, which are easy to obtain, destroy all regular enemies on the screen, and hurt bosses for a lot of damage (without destroying most of the landscape) when used. These can be used in dire situations and against particularly tough bosses to soften them up.
* GO-GO Tamagotchi episode 5b, Himespetchi wants to make a wish on Moshimo Mountain to be with Mametchi. She imagines the two of them drinking from the same cup, with their bendy straws forming the shape of a heart.
* Haibane Renmei are suspected to be dead upon entering the town of Glie, in a form of purgatory.
* Gone Baby Gone wraps up the plot neatly in less than an hour. You'll certainly be going "Wait, already?" when it happens. Yes, of course there's a twist.
* Harry Potter. In Asia, however, Quidditch is only slowly gaining appeal because Asian wizards have traditionally preferred flying carpets to flying broomsticks. The exception to this rule is Japan.
* headliners work out special deals that do not include win purses, and it's usually in exchange for a percentage of the event's profits.
* Hellboy movies the random B.P.R.D. agents who accompany the big red guy on his missions all but define redshirt.
* Happy Endings, but spends the time talking about nostalgic things from his childhood like playing chess in the park, and talking with his dad over hotdogs. He forgets to mention the name of his truck. He later runs into a man, who reconnected with his father because of the ad, as they go to get hotdogs.

* Gravedale High) and the gorgon's name is Doozer (Short for "Medusa").
* High School Musical shut him down. In 2020, director Kenny Ortega revealed that Ryan was “probably going to come out in college”.
* Godkiller and Grasscutter, mythical god-killing weapons, both welded by Gorgon.
* GURPS has this as an option for control rooms on smaller ships. One can jettison the control room at a moment's notice, letting the bridge crew drift to safety.
* Helgrifnir, the Fen-Hound, is a massive immortal hound with a gaping mouth filled with three rows of teeth and a hide covered in peat and moss, who stalks the shadowland of the Black Chase. It used to be the pet of a Solar, who granted it its intelligence, size and immortality, but was left on its own after the Solars were overthrown and slaughtered. Its loneliness and the corrupting influence of the Shadowland have turned it into a monstrous, vicious beast, who stalks and hunts anything that passes through his territory. Millennia of life have turned him into an extremely skilled and cunning hunter, and even the mightiest undead fear to pass through Helgrifnir's hunting ground.
* her own life, namely that everyone considers her crazy and picks on her, and she doesn't have any friends.
* Happosai took a bite out of it (manga)/Ranma stepped on it while chasing Happosai (anime) before Akane could read it, thus blotting out some key kanji.
* Guys and Dolls, in the penultimate scene, has Adelaide and Sarah respectively envisioning Nathan and Sky as home-loving husbands.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) with her and is able to use her power to perform the task easier.
* Green Acres was broadcast in Malaysia, all scenes with Arnold the Pig were edited out so as to not offend Muslim sensibilities. This meant that in some cases, the human characters were having one-sided conversations with an Arnold who never replied.
* Hawaii. In turn, while coastal great whites live mostly on marine mammals, their open-water fellows regularly prey on smaller species of shark. This includes other notorious man-eaters like tiger sharks or oceanic whitetips.
* He also says jokes about something the audience and possibly the characters didn't get to see, are often things he doesn't either.
* Goosebumps: In "The Haunted House Game", the two villains refuse to let the two protagonists leave the house even after they won the game fair and square.
* Hey Arnold! morning. He oversleeps, the milk is spoiled, and the TV goes out. Everything else goes just as wrong.
* Google Super Bowl ad where people go to places (public and private) they saw in movies.
* Greek inventor Daedalus may be regarded as an unbuilt predecessor to this trope, what with his artificial wing invention that melts in the sun and kills the impulsive Icarus.
* Hannah Montana was absent from 4 episodes. Mitchel Musso was absent from 12 episodes and Moises Arias was absent from 19 episodes.
* Gone with the Wind is one of the most famous examples with Ashley and Rhett Bultler both being officers in the Confederate army. The cause of the Confederacy is to maintain an idealized vision of the slaveholding South that the destruction of is considered to be a great loss.
* Gwent: The Witcher Card Game: An important skill is knowing when to stop playing cards and when to allow your opponent to win the current round so you have enough strength remaining to win the game. There are multiple cards that can get you an advantage should you lose the round:
* her fandom friends say that if she has to hide going to conventions while visiting colleges for them, then it's a hint that perhaps he's not the perfect guy for her and she knows it. They're proven right when Simon breaks up with Zoe for the crime of taking his little sister to a convention and lying about it, following a show that he hates due to the amount of blood, and he may have cheated on her with a coworker.
* Guns are commonplace weapons and a familiar sight in virtually any action setting, but Season 3 of

* Hanabi discovers she can communicate telepathically with Hinata through the Tenseigan, in much the same way Hamura Otsutsuki's spirit spoke to them the first time they awakened it. Unfortunately, this also means that Toneri (who has the Tenseigan himself) is able to eavesdrop on their conversation, cluing him in of Hinata's coming to the Moon.
* Her house was actually next-door to the Dyne family's, back on Pirate Isle. Later, when Vyse establishes their new HQ on Crescent Isle, her flat is directly across from his, on the villa's second floor.
* Hidden Depths: A character is revealed to have attributes and skills that one wouldn't have known them to possess at first glance.
* Haruhi recreated the world or not. Kyon and Koizumi don't know either. There is really no way to know for sure, only that the events surrounding the moment when it would have occurred, if it did, really did happen.
* Happy Heroes and he wants to make him laugh, so he confidently states he won't let himself be persuaded to laugh... and then he immediately laughs afterward, thus getting himself pertrified.
* Heralds of Valdemar and a former mercenary) wear dark gray instead whenever possible. The regular Valdemar army wears dark blue and silver which are the nation's colors.
* Harry puts a bucket of water balloons filled with color-changing potion over the kitchen door.
* Heneral Luna suffered from this greatly. The biggest problem the titular general has turns out not to be the invading Americans, but his fellow generals and his president's cabinet who are far more interested in securing their personal or business interests rather than defending their country. Too often, he goes and finds them either idle and abed with a woman or celebrating a local feast when the Americans are on the advance. For their part, the Americans are rather amazed at how much discord there is in the Filipino ranks to the point that they laugh themselves silly when they learn that General Luna was killed by his own allies for reasons unrelated to the war.
* Happy Tree Friends takes his job very seriously. The amount of times he has made vocal noises can be counted on one hand, and he has never outright spoken.
* Grathnode Inferia. Only a few people actually remember the events of it by virtue of being over 700 years old.
* Gravitation is Manic Pixie Dream Boy to Eiri Yuki. While he's actually the main character, his life revolves around drawing Yuki out of his shell to such an extent that everything else, even his singing career, takes a backseat to their relationship.
* Grand Finale to freeze WordGirl. At one point, Violet appears and tells Rhyme to "Stop freezing her! Or she may turn... purple!" Rhyme attempts to come up with a rhyme for the word "purple" but has a hard time doing so, giving WordGirl enough time to free herself from the ice.
* Grand Theft Auto was banned in Singapore, probably one of the first few video games to be banned in the country.
* Hexen the Flechette item works differently depending on your character class. If playing as a Cleric dropping a Flechette creates a cloud of deadly gas that will severely damage anything trying to walk through it (including your character).
* Gold Key Comics had “Grimm’s Ghost Stories” whose host was an old hag of a witch called Hephzibah Grimm.
* Half of the British pop-rock band The Magic Numbers appear as themselves in the Glastonbury episode.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. Her past is one of the central mysteries of the story.
* He was hoping Ichigo would achieve a level of power strong enough for Aizen to reach a new level of power. Unfortunately for Aizen, he completely underestimated Ichigo's growth potential and ended up being curbstomped.
* Hero Oh Hero, gold has antimagical properties and is shown to negate the powers of magic users while in contact with the body.
* Guns Akimbo: Many westerns have characters firing with a gun in each hand.

* Goldbrand, one of the best swords in the game. To acquire it, one must swim down to an unmarked and destroyed offshore statue and talk to its head. The head will tell you to that it wants to be rebuilt, but only by this one crazy orc. Once you find the orc, he tells you that he needs a book that is only available from one bookseller. Once you recover the book and bring it to the orc, you still have to wait three in-game weeks before the statue is finished and you get the sword.
* Hayate and Nagi meet in a similar 'saved from thugs' fashion; unknown to Nagi, Hayate's original intention was to kidnap her - he was protecting his prey...Hayate is almost instantly regretful of his intentions, though.
* Heroes has the job of capturing evil people with powers. However, he hates everyone with an ability and rounds them all up.
* Gurral the Smasher fifty-meter tall alien gladiator, fighting against other giant monsters for the entertainment of the hedonistic and greedy Arena Lords in order to satiate his addicition to the rare mineral Impervium.
* Hanna-Barbera, where Daisy Mayhem is seen going barefoot even in snowy climates.
* grindcore (whose drummer actually coined the term "grindcore", along with the term "blastbeat", a drumbeat regularly used in the genre and beyond) are often heavily credited for their importance in the development of grindcore.
* Gratuitous German (De. old money) of Illinois, who kick-started the Progressive Era.
* Grand Theft Auto III and its Vice City expansion has 100 hidden packages to find. This doesn't gain you extra lives, but each batch of 10 cause an extra weapon spawn point at your hideouts.
* Hawkeye appears first in issue #7, but he's so tiny and in the background that it would have been easy to miss him.
* Heisei Rider vs. Showa Rider: Kamen Rider Taisen feat. Super Sentai.
* Grumpy Bear who excels at analysing his opponents weaknesses by nullifying their Quirks, while Ms. Joke is a goofy, cheerful woman who incapacitates villains by making them laugh uncontrollably before beating them into submission. She constantly plays pranks on Eraser Head and tries to make him laugh, while he snarks constantly at her and complains about how loud she is.
* GoGo's Crazy Bones series does not have a plot. This is averted in the Urban Toys set of Gogos, however, whose plot is that the Gogos are aliens that came to Earth to be played with.
* happily desert your party as well and go back to the Crows, forcing you to kill him in self-defense (and maybe out of honor, depending on your Warden's feelings about the subject).
* Groupie Brigade: Celebrities always get swarmed by people wanting autographs, bits of clothes, etc.
* Haven, only to find that the others were already in the process of neutralizing them.
* Hank Williams III without his permission, not even bothering to advertise the fact that it was a metal album. His independently-released metal albums under his own name escaped the confusion, as did his band Assjack.
* Half Baked when the characters imagine how he drops the soap in the prison shower, bends over to pick it up and the legs of the black prisoner come into view immediately behind him.
* Grant Morrison is one of the more sympathetic characters in the comic. Not that the bar is particularly high.
* He tries it again later in the episode to get the jump on Bart. It works... until he gets caught laying in the street for too long by an oncoming parade, which obliviously tramples over him.
* her boyfriend told her she needs to control her temper. Sure, Donald is the same but his reaction to Daisy suggesting him to improve was better than hers.
* Global Defense Initiative aplenty, but against fortified positions, they do have specialist units:
* Harry Potter Because of this, Divination is considered an especially fickle skill to master given that the future is constantly in flux, Hermione Granger once describing it as "woolly" and "a lot of guesswork."

* Gramps loves to tease Haru, and on several occasions withholds information about what her friends are doing because it's more interesting to see her get worked up over nothing.
* He once explained how he would "bend the word", rhyming it through extending the enunciation of the syllables, in a
* Harry Potter films posses a set of scales with what appears to be a wand as the beam.
* Hard-Drive, a member of Apocalypse's Dark Riders was similarly changed into a woman (
* Ham Radio operators are taught to use phonetic pronunciation for letters and numbers when signal conditions
* hang a lampshade on it, the armour upgrade for the Blue Mage is the Assimilator's Attire.
* Guard regiments of XVIII Century and the Napoleonic era were often meant to look imposing, which was achieved by means such as enlistment of exceptionally tall men into their ranks, and uniforms including broad pauldrons and tall caps.
* Gone Horribly Wrong. Eobard Thawne was a fan of Barry Allen from the future who found ways to replicate his powers, costume, and appearance all with the intention of coming back to the past to run alongside Barry. It only goes wrong when he arrives after Barry's death and Wally has already taken over the role. Addled from time travel and the discovery that he will one day become Professor Zoom, he briefly deludes himself into thinking he is Barry and fools everyone else in the process.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, Comed-Tea "somehow (tastes) green and fizzy".
* Harry himself tends to get stuck in when it comes to fighting evil, much to his family's mingled pride and despair.
* "Got Talent" holds the record for being the most widespread TV franchise created. It has spawned localizations in over 50 different countries.
* Golems are universally immune to magic, save for a few spells. Demiliches are also immune to hostile magic. Certain epic golem-like monsters called "Colossus" can project huge areas-of-effect anti-magic auras.
* heartwrenching near the end of the game should you choose to activate the purifier yourself. Before you enter and seal your final fate, if he is with you, you can tell him goodbye one last time before entering the room. The whimper that Dogmeat does when you tell him this only makes you feel worse.
* Hamilton are both in love with Alexander, but Angelica puts her romantic feelings aside because she cares about her sister's happiness above all else.
* Goku gets some of this in the English dub as well. Though he never turns
* Grimm has Marwan Hanano, a mercenary terrorist used by Black Claw to do assassination operations.
* has two. The first, as one might expect from a story that takes place in the Chrystal Empire, is King Sombra. The second (and greater) one is Blackheart, as the evil force behind his rise to power.
* Hakyu Hoshin Engi manga. As such, in the attempt to cram an entire volume's worth of content into a single episode, many plot elements are cut or simplified. Unfortunately, the end result still ended up being a poorly paced mess that left newcomers confused and hardcore fans disappointed.
* Goosebumps book "Night of the Living Dummy" opens with Lindy popping her sister Kris' bubble because Kris wanted to prove she could blow a bigger one than Lindy.
* Higurashi: When They Cry. He is also shown to help Mion and Rena with their studies, and Mion is a year older than him.
* Gunsmith Cats territory is testament to the fact that Rally is pretty tall herself.
* Half-Beard" flash cartoon, Rob has a conversation with his beard when he faces the necessity of shaving again. When he tells it to stop screaming in pain, it obliges.
* "Hacksaw" Jim Duggan: Debuted in 1977, competed in various territories before arriving in WWE in 1987.

* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) while Godzilla’s classic theme and roar are heard.
* GURPS, as their respective worlds are the only ones that have full access to parachronic tech. They are directly competing against one another to spread their influence and secure any potential "back doors" into their homeworlds.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) and thinking she has the right to decide by herself the fate of the world.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, while having a number of differences from the source material, does try to stay close to the manga.
* High School D×D. To survive, the three factions are recruiting humans and breeding like crazy - our protagonist among the most important of these 'mutt-demons'.
* Guild Hunter' society works, with the Archangels, the most powerful of them all, reigning supreme.
* Heroic Sacrifice. Poor Keroro (the real one) gets his mouth nuked, which blows out all his teeth, destroying the Karies base. Luckily, Keronians can regrow teeth at an amazing speed. Kururu caused Keroro pain, tricking him into causing the same thing himself. The guy loves causing others pain and misery.
* Harry as the Dark Phoenix includes one as part of some more masculine alterations to the classic costume.
* Halloween Episode her. Still, if Stacy came looking for a fight, she certainly got one; Debbie was only too willing to kill her again.
* Hawaii Five-0 starting with the time Steve gets accused of murdering Governor Jameson in the first season finale. It's getting to the point where the cops should probably just assume that if a Five-0 officer is a suspect in a crime, they're being somehow framed or coerced because otherwise HPD will end up spending yet more taxpayer money on ridiculous car chases. Five-0 now has such a reputation for pulling out all the stops to fight wrongful accusations that a convicted murderer actually breaks out of federal custody just to get them to prove his innocence.
* Highwaymen when he buys a car directly off the showroom floor and adds $4000 to the check "to repair the windows" so he can drive it directly onto the street.
* Hc Svnt Dracones; has a strong rivalry with the cybernetics giant Applied Sciences and Robotics. Though their rivalry is nothing compared to the almost literal crusades the other two biotech corporations, Progenitus and Transcendent Technologies Inc, launch at each other.
* Hercules: The Animated Series, Hercules watches over his school and its students, particularly Icarus and Cassandra.
* Group Picture Ending: The story closes on a still picture of the main cast.
* .hack series (all incarnations). While the setting of the series is an MMORPG, Balmung specifically investigates circumstances which could easily get him hurt in the real world. However, he has a strong moral code on issues of lesser significance, such as a strong distaste for hacking and player harassment. He also has a penchant for swooping in at the last moment to save other characters:
* Higurashi: When They Cry, as well as Satoko's traps. For example, in preparation for a squirt gun fight, Rena stashed an extra squirt gun somewhere, but when the time came to use it, it turns out Satoko had already found the hidden gun, broken it so it couldn't fire, and left it in Rena's original hiding spot.
* Having a different mindset in terms of goals, training, or culture. If the team works from a place of passion, the Lancer may be more diligent and thoughtful and vice versa.
* Happy Feet, poor little Mumble is eyed with disapproval and disgust from everyone (except for the Amigos, his love interest Gloria, his mother and eventually his father) due to his abnormal inability to sing and affinity to dance.
* Harry so much as their powers both react to intense emotions. The walls, floors, and ceilings of their suite were left ridiculous combinations of colors, the walls all had scorch marks, most of the furniture had been thrown across the room, the windows were blown out, and the headboard of the bed had grown into a tree.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law. He possesses every type of psychic power there is, but always refers to it as "mind taking". He gets a rival in the form of Shado,

The Brain Thief, who also refers to his powers strictly as "brain thieving".
* Happens again in "Postcards From the Wedge". Bart fakes a fever to get out of going to school and Marge takes his temperature orally. But then she decides "there's only one way to get a truly accurate reading".
* Her mom nixes the idea due to money shortage (though she can pay for her younger child's karate). Charlie is a gearhead tomboy. Her mother instead gives her a girly, flowered helmet to wear on her moped.
* Gym Class Heroes have a song called “Kid Nothing And The Never-Ending Naked Nightmare” that is partially about this.
* Hamster's Paradise and coming to the conclusion that all life exists to destroy all other living things and that they are defined by what they kill.
* High-Class Gloves, or short depending on the sleeve length and/or neckline). Usually white, but can be worn in colors to match or contrast with the dress.
* HE is credited by Cap'n Turbot in "Sea Patrol: Pups save their Pirated Sea Patroller." in Order to lure Sid the Pirate away from Adventure Beach. Rocky has a cut-out pirate ship hit by the lighthouse light, Chase and the Cap'n make noise for help and Marshall informs Sid about the cool pirate ship they saw from far away. later the Paw Patrol perform the Plan Perfectly.Marshall frees Robo-dog from capture, Lure Sid away from the Bridge, Reclaiming their Shanghaied Sea Patroller, and managed to outsmart Sid The Pirate again.
* Ha Yuri Jahad just lives and breathes this trope, especially when she gets serious.
* Hide Your Lesbians: In addition to the usual concealment of homosexuality, this one can also imply that lesbian women don't want sex (which is defined as heterosexual sex).
* Half-Life features aliens vs. Space Marines, in a cross between first person shooter and real time strategy.
* Harry Potter fanfic has Harry win a high-stakes poker game by beating Draco Malfoy's four-of-a-kind with a five-of-a-kind.
* Harold Pinter, Suki, who is of Japanese descent, is usually played by a white actress.
* Goomy) Milotic. The drooling Gloom becomes a pretty Bellossom when you use a Sun Stone on it.
* Gor, the main character of most of the stories, Tarl Cabot, is a trained Warrior. He is a member of the Warrior caste, who have their own Codes and consider their calling honorable. Even between warring cities there is an inherent respect between them. On the other hand, any shlub could pick up a sword and become a brigand, mercenary, or soldier. They don't follow or respect the Codes.
* Hamilton: Burr briefly shows attraction to the Schuyler sisters (primarily Angelica) in "The Schuyler Sisters" and "A Winter's Ball", but the subject is pretty much dropped after Alexander and Eliza's marriage. However, Angelica is clearly put off by it (leading to the brilliant line "Burr, you disgust me"/"Ah, so you've discussed me"), which makes it more of a straight example.
* Harry Osborn forces Mary Jane to break up with Peter to save him in
* Hack/Slash fighting supernatural monsters, and she has much more angst, guilt, and self-doubt than is usual for a Bad Girl protagonist, most of whom tend to be cheerfully sociopathic.
* Grenade Launcher, an SMG in the right hands entirely obsoletes Assault as a front-line class. In most games, reviving a teammate will take back spawn tickets lost during their deaths, so heavy medic use can single-handedly turn the tide of a game.
* GoldenEye's Lair is actually below the giant pool where the cradle antenna is hidden.
* Harry Morgan and Mike Farrell also directed several episodes each.
* Harry Potter: Hermione tells Ron and Harry to do just this in book 7. It is simply because they would draw too much attention to themselves out in the Muggle world in their robes. (She has spare clothes in her Bag of Holding.) Note that the clothes she's telling them to take off aren't just robes, they're dress robes, since they had fled from Bill and Fleur's wedding reception.

* GURPS was carried by one of her mothers, but she doesn't know which one.
* Goof Troop, Pete gets away with such things as tricking his preteen child into taking over his job for a day, pressuring him into skydiving, threatening him in front of a public official, and admitting (or all but admitting) to being a bad parent in a courtroom and a hospital without even being monitored, notwithstanding all the health-detrimental forced labor that could have been caught if he were. PJ doesn't even hide the fact he's miserable at home, and on some occasions, it's obvious he desperately wants to leave.
* Heart of the City: Heart's father left right after she was born to pursue a career in acting.
* Half Life: Barney the guard pops up to deliver a message or herald Gordon a few times. Sometimes you can recruit him to do something, and once he manages to become the
* Golden Sun to turn deadly, such as the Kolima Forest which was a desert before the eruption and is now a maze-like forest nightmare.
* Hellsing and other Crusades-era knightly orders). Although the pointy hoods and robes actually originated with the Spanish Inquisition.
* Helltaker that their version of the character became the permanent unofficial design for all fanart of her going forwards.
* Gundam: Played every-which-way in almost every Alternate-Universe Gundam series. Almost every mobile suit with the name "Gundam" has large shoulder pads, but it is not exclusive.
* Harry and the Shipgirls, it means she has been given Carte Blanche by the Emperor of Japan to execute those who would threaten Japan's people, by any means necessary.
* Herbal products which make health claims are regulated as foods, not as drugs. Just like a cheeseburger has to tell you what's in it, but not that it's going to raise your cholesterol, herbal products disclose ingredients but don't disclose adverse effects and can make vague, "truthy" claims. For example, statins are anti-cholesterol life-savers derived from a compound found in red yeast rice, with similar pharmacological properties and adverse effects. There is some evidence red yeast rice with the right compounds is basically a weak statin. Some patients may prefer an herbal to a man-made medication. Don't expect the red yeast rice supplement (in the US) to disclose that it has same adverse effects as statins, or if it even still has the pharmacologically active ingredient. The law as of 2021 does not require them to. So even though some red yeast rice may actually lower your cholesterol, you can't be sure (in the US) of what you're getting.
* Hawaii Five-O and Danny "Danno" Williams argue like an old, married couple — but they always have each other's back in a fight, and God help anyone who comes between them.
* He was a court reporter who heard his targets claim to be "victims", sometimes of the people they killed, and couldn't get their voices out of his head until he killed them.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, class 3-4's resident troublemaker Miyabi remembers a moment where she declared a wish to marry her father.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983). (Although they could hardly call her "She-Woman".)
* Gotham Jim uses this no less than three times, on three different enemies and phrases it in a different way each time. The most original one was addressed to Dr. Strange who was notably annoyed by the remark.
* Help!: "Help", thinking about "when I was younger, so much younger than today. I never needed anybody's help in any way".
* Harvey Street Kids episode "Elder Skelter", Audrey is asked to resolve a dispute between Melvin and Fredo when the former wants to change the "s" at the end of the Bloogey Boys' name to a "z".
* Good Victims, Bad Victims: There are some victims who aren't worthy of any sympathy.
* Heinz comics sees Heinz obtain a ventriloquist dummy, Toto, which is alive just because. His favorite insult is "knakworst" ("frankfurter") and his entire goal in life seems to be to push others into as deep a hole as he can dig for them. When Heinz takes him to a bar that serves quality beer, Toto orders them beaujolais nouveau. He insults others claiming Heinz's doing, resulting in firstly a beating and secondly an arrest. In jail, Toto proceeds to accuse Heinz of multiple accounts of murder, the judge of being drunk, and the jury of being bribed. In the end, Heinz may leave, but Toto is confiscated, finding a more suitable audience for himself at the police station.

* He also crushes on Ruth McDougall, a sixth-grader, early on. In the Valentine's Day episode he actually talks to her and realizes that
* Gregor Clegane wears a heavy suit of coal-black armour. A bit subverted in Season 2 when he drops the * Heart of the Sunken Lands. Giant Spiders will always attack unless they're outnumbered. Their venom causes either paralysis for 1-6 days or a coma. While their prey is helpless they wrap it in webbing and carry it off to eat later.
* Gunslinger Born Prequel comics—the Crimson King is this scary spider-demon-thing that is eating a person.
* Hawk & Fisher), Fisher carries a suppressor stone with this ability, which is used to de-animate a renegade homunculus (an artificial construct held together by magic).
* Happens too often to count in Shakespeare's history plays, and not just characters, but also with battles and other events.
* Gulliver's Travels that the scientists of Laputa had discovered two satellites of Mars, at distances that were much smaller than those of any known moons at the time, and with rotation speeds that also were out of kilter with any known moons. When Asaph Hall discovered the moons in 1877, these numbers were uncannily close to the real ones. One Soviet spacecraft designer even suggested Swift had found Martian records on Earth that revealed this, although naturally more plausible explanations exist.
* her daughter (who he may have actually thought was his own daughter from the rape, but she wasn't) when he was killed.
* Halloween Episode, complete with a Mad Scientist character, who switches Pete's brain with Ashley's brain and Berg's brain with Sharon's brain and the only one who can help them is Johnny.
* Guardpony Fizzleberry Poptwist has bears, thanks to the Ursa Minor that took her horn. Not a good mix with a young pony whose magical aura is the same colour as an Ursa Minor and has no idea about Fizzleberry's issues, whom her job requires her to foalsit.
* handle to bypass a locked door. The creatures themselves aren't shown, just the paper ominously sliding under the door and the key dropping onto it to be retrieved.
* Hanna-Barbera has a live-action Jack and Gene Kelly (again) going up the beanstalk into an animated world.
* God of War III, which will require Pandora, who Hephaestus regards as his daughter, to be sacrificed. So he sends Kratos to retrieve an Omphalos Stone, on a promise that he will use it to create a new weapon for Kratos, not mentioning that the stone is inside the guts of the Titan Cronos. It doesn't work.
* Hamlet, in Act V, Scene 1. Hamlet and Horatio come across a gravedigger and his helper, who are singing and cracking jokes as they prepare a new grave. Hamlet asks what kind of insensitive man could do such a thing, to which Horatio replies "Custom hath made it in him a property of easiness."
* Helpful Hallucination: A hallucinated person tells the truth and helps an actual character.
* Harry, who's been resorted into Slytherin due to an ultimatum by the majority of Gryffindor, gets revenge on his ex-House for subsequent ill-treatment by having Dobby put laxatives in the pumpkin juice at the Gryffindor table and a sleeping pill in the kippers.
* Gundam nearly all major characters were relatively beautiful unrelated to their alignment. Even the franchises' morally ambiguous masked men hardly ever wear them to hide ugly scars and the like.

* Guile's military buddy and mentor was originally known by two names: "Nash" in the Japanese versions and "Charlie" in the overseas versions.
* Governor Tim Pawlenty of Minnesota had one during a hockey game. "Now it's time to drop the fu... er I mean puck." As a side note, the Face-Off in Hockey was originally going to be called a "Puck Off". It got changed for obvious reasons.
* Hans Christian Andersen's "The Travelling Companion," where the princess, egged on by an evil sorcerer, challenges her suitors to answer three questions. The penalty for failing to answer is death, but she's so beautiful that men keep trying. The titular companion helps the protagonist win by following her to the sorcerer at night and eavesdropping to learn the answers for him.
* Grizzly Tales for Gruesome Kids series are this: a collection of disturbing and horrible short stories published into one book. There isn't a set amount of stories that are needed to complete a book, however; some have six stories, and others have up to twenty.
* Hey Arnold! The Jungle Movie from planned television airings to streaming.
* "Hacksaw" Jim Duggan When Schiavone brings up Duggan's college football career near the end, Heenan yells "COLLEGE!" and starts laughing even harder.
* GUN×SWORD murmurs the name of his dead fiancee when fevered. It has some plot significance because this is the first that his traveling companion has heard of Elena, and it leads her to learn more about Van's backstory.
* Grauniad to announce that he had "18 down of the 19, which is being treated with 13 15". The crossword also contained several other references to his treatment.
* "Have A Cigar" inverts this trope. At the end, the guitar solo (after a big whoosh) starts sounding like it's being played over a radio, which then transitions into... "Wish You Were Here", by way of... radio tuning noises.
* Heroes of Might and Magic, despite taking place in the same universe as the original series.
* Grand Theft Auto V: Fighting his way through an skirmish between the IAA, FIB and Merryweather, Michael finds himself pinned down by an attack helicopter from the mercenary group. His rescue comes in the form of none other than Trevor, who snipes the pilot, sending him down, followed by this exchange:
* heaven, the training of a newly exalted Sidereal by the elders of the Five Score Fellowship is as harsh and demanding as the previous examples. Sidereals are the keepers of fate, they are well aware that their work is crucial to the very existence of the world as they know it, and they don't take training new recruits lightly.
* Hamlet: In Act 3, the eponymous main character, after blowing his first chance to kill Claudius, strikes out blindly when he thinks he has Claudius again, only for it to turn out that he's actually killed Polonius, the father of the woman he loves, which sends his entire life straight to hell for him.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix the Weasley twins are more than happy to provide Harry with a distraction so that he can break into Umbridge's office when Ginny tells them he wants to talk to Sirius. They do so by turning an entire hall into a swamp in a bit of magic Flitwick is so impressed by that he refuses to remove the entire thing and ropes off a bit to preserve as a permanent installation in the castle. They had been planning this prank for a long time, but Harry's need helped them decide where to put it.
* Henry IV is a prophecy saying King Henry "should not die but in Jerusalem", which he takes to mean he will die on Crusade. He falls ill before he gets the chance, and dies peacefully in his bed. In the Jerusalem Chamber at his palace.
* Grace has had the most horrible life out of all the characters. When confronted with it, she reacted appropriately, but once it's all over? It's like she never suffered years of trauma at the hands of
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, America invents a "love gun" which he believes would make enemies shot with it fall in love with each other and leave them unwilling to fight.
* Heck, the Daleks themselves are a sort of sentient version of this trope. The Doctor warned their creator exactly how dangerous they were when they were first being created, but he finished them anyway because he always * has been. Even the title is problematic, given the prevalence of Islam in the affected areas.

* Grand Finale find out, the arrange a private ceremony on the roof of the building and trick D.J. and Shepherd into turning up under false pretenses. They realise they really do love each other and go through with the ceremony.
* He Who Fights Monsters: When someone becomes a monster himself by living only by hatred, especially towards others.
* He infiltrates the secret S.H.I.E.L.D. facility, kills or subjugates the agents present, steals the Tesseract and leaves before the facility collapses in on itself due to an explosion caused by the Stone * Hell, the TRAILER has this. When a guy is pinned down behind a crate, your character says "Cover mechanic, right?" And then there's the rest. The PC is aware of where the camera is, and speaks to the PLAYER themselves during the entire thing. The last words of the trailer? "Of course you can. It's a Fking video game.
* Glitch Techs: Zarah says she "left her car in her wallet", then berates herself for thinking of such a lame excuse.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, Harold has a crush on his neighbor but is too shy to tell her.
* Happens in an episode, with a serial killer masking his murders in a natural park as accidents — including a grizzly attack. The bear sure did partially eat the corpse, but during the autopsy Ducky finds a stab wound in the heart that is too neat to have been done by bear claws.
* Heart of Darkness's enemies. They all try to kill and eat you, sometimes not even in that order.
* Gunless — who is played by former wrestler Tyler Mane — imposing and very tall, yet very friendly and goes out of his way to help a horse with its broken shoe, unfortunately The Montana Kid thought he was stealing it and it leads to him calling him out.
* "Gridlock" has no sentient antagonist. The Macra at the bottom of the motorway have devolved into simple animals, and even the plague that wiped out the rest of New Earth's population has long since died out because it had no one left to infect.
* Green Lantern, the Indigo Tribe is made up of reformed villains whose rings provide them with a compassionate outlook... in many cases, not entirely willingly. When the rings come off... hoo, boy.
* Golden Sun. The only good attack Psynergies are the ones that factor the caster's attack into the damage. It's also inverted in that while physical damage scales with level, Psynergy scales with the number of Djinn attached to your characters, of which there a finite number, and therefore, a finite amount of power increase. Yes, you get stronger Psynergies, but more powerful weapons outweigh them. (The developers went even more physical-friendly in the sequels by letting an attack directed at a now-dead enemy to be used on another instead of the character defending.)
* Have Space Suit – Will Travel very carefully averts this trope, and explains why it needs averting. The biggest problem with engineering a spacesuit is getting rid of heat generated by the body.
* Harry Potter, with Umbridge gone there is no reason for the DA to continue, but several of its members regret this, notably Neville and Luna (Neville because it gave him some much-needed confidence and training, Luna because she felt it was like having friends).
* Havenfall Is for Lovers: JD dislikes Hikari, but respects her taste in anime.
* Hatsune Miku: Project DIVA singing the SEGA sound. Later on, Rin, Len, Luka, KAITO, and MEIKO can also heard singing the jingle.
* Heroes of the Storm in the past has been mentioned in the context of feudalism, whaling, the Salem Witch Trials, and something related to the Catholic Church.
* Hell Girl reasons, like the one guy who was upset that his car was accidentally scratched by another guy, sending the latter to hell just for that.
* Godzilla: The Series was only picked up for Forty Episodes, given more was unlikely to be made, some episodes were left opened: Cameron Winter gets away with his crimes and never face Justice, We never learned what became of Dr. Perlon when he walk into the portal, Nick suspects the Tachyons might returned, the Fire Monster has been accidentally released by a Shark, Colonel Tarrington then asks when Third Wave goes into Production.

* Globo TV has had its "circle in a TV screen in a circle" logo since the mid-70s. Interestingly, the "TV screen" part of the logo recently became more elongated to reflect the change to widescreen format.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, for which he is immediately mocked by Rocket.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi: Edwin Blair runs a toothpick factory and, in "Arbor Day", intends to make toothpicks out of the tree whose splinter inspired him into the toothpick business by getting stuck on his finger years ago. After Ami and Yumi talk him out of it, he decides to leave the tree alone and tear down the rest of the forest.
* her father is murdered she says she "went to live with her mom's family" in another town, which indicates either a death or a divorce. Someone on the writing staff had serious mom issues.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name hair is in a high ponytail, and so might be waist length or longer.)
* Henry Jones and his son, Indiana (Indy's iconic fedora and Henry's bucket hat) and carry a surprisingly useful tool (Indy's whip and Henry's umbrella), and they're both pretty useful in a crisis. Aside from the choice of hat, Indy's teaching outfit — tweed and a bow tie — is identical to his father's outfit. The main difference between them is that, unlike his son, Henry doesn't have a costumed secret identity and doesn't seek out dangerous adventures or occult villains.
* he knew that the Jedi were off the base, and no one told him that, exposing him as the one who bugged the command center and gave strategic secrets to the Separatists.
* He also used this when someone asked if a same-sexed daemon meant the person was gay. He said he'd never thought of that and it was as good an explanation as any. He also said it could mean second sight or something.
* Haunted Mansion opening day had a denizen called the Hatbox Ghost. Through the use of lighting his face in a certain way, his head would disappear and reappear in the hatbox he carried. He was included front and center in much of the promotional material for the new attraction. However, while the effect worked from a specific angle, the illusion broke down when viewed from most of the angles of the ride. Just a few days after the ride was opened, the Hatbox Ghost was removed. His animatronic was subsequently lost by the staff. Yet, the Hatbox Ghost retained a following for decades afterward. In 2015, the Hatbox Ghost, using modern projection technology, finally returned to the mansion.
* God, such as Pharaonic polytheism in Ancient Egypt or Zoroastrianism in Ancient Iran — the Zoroastrian priests were the origin of the word 'mage'.
* He plucks a sapient daisy, under which NLM Care rests on a separate floor. When the daisy no longer has petals, Care as a result has a disfigured face. Also this action is
* had been hallucinating them the whole episode and killed them pretty early on, which is hinted at constantly, in retrospect. It's one of those things you've got to watch twice.
* GURPS is a mask that lets intangible beings become tangible. One of the vignettes features a ghost who uses it to attend a Masquerade Ball, only for his costume to collapse to the ground when the woman he's dancing with raises it to kiss him.
* Guilty Gear series, and very evident in some of the character's backstories:
* Harry Potter series of books has Mundungus Fletcher, a selfish thief and con artist who is sometimes antagonistic towards Harry and his friends. Despite being a total crook he remains loyal to Dumbledore and is thus useful to the protagonists due to his knowledge of the criminal world.
* Goblin Slayer began life as a D&D mod, but while getting stuck on how to write it out, the author turned it into a novel instead.

* Gratuitous Japanese, honorifics and modes of speech given to the OC swords.
* Her sister Zelena qualifies too, as does Captain Hook to a lesser extent. Rumpelstiltskin also counts * hard it is to pull this off in real life. Prior to killing six people, he'd been forced out of college and told he couldn't come back unless he could maintain a mental health clearance proving he wasn't a danger to himself and others. The sheer incoherence of his political and philosophical ramblings got him ejected from abovetopsecret.com, one of the more out-there conspiracy theory sites on the Internet, and countless witnesses on and off-line report him as having done everything from accusing his math teacher of "denying math" to spending thirty minutes in a bathroom and asking afterwards what year it was. He has since been medicated and pleaded guilty.
* Gray "attacks" are harmless and mainly only show up as text for humor. There are no known gray souls in the game.
* Half-Life: Alyx pushes it into this trope is that, if you walk under a Barnacle while wearing something on your head, the hat will get grabbed and sucked up instead of you.
* Gummi Bears has one. Curiously his good twin brother Sir Victor has none.
* GURPS The Difference Engine, and the license will long since have expired, so this one can be considered defunct.
* Hey Arnold! episode "New Bully on the Block", Bullies Ludwig and Wolfgang make the 4th Graders play football against each other. Curly ends up on Ludwig's team and continually requests to have the ball passed to him in a play, only for Ludwig to tell him to shut up and literally push him aside each time. Eventually, Ludwig caves in and Curly is given a chance to take the ball when the team is ahead far into the game.
* he only shot little girls with his BB gun prior to moving to Hinamizawa.
* Happy Gilmore offers so the nursing home would take extra-special care of his beloved grandma is a single wrinkled Washington. Could be why the evil orderly wouldn't accept it.
* he charged at them and they nearly shot him down, prompting him to panic and engage the standard-issue hyperdrive.
* hijack the plot to happen in volume 2 as well, but the season was left unfinished due to the 2007 writer's strike.
* Hata no Kokoro and she stopped immediately after she got what she was looking for, but if she started using that power deliberately...
* Gymnastics floor routines deduct points for stepping out of the ring.
* Harry Dresden has been known to nickname people whose real names he doesn't know, so we get things like "Spinyboy," "Turtleneck," and "Eyebrow." He decided that "Knights of the Order of the Blackened Denarius" was too dignified and started referring to a bunch of centuries-old demon-possessed psychos and their terrifying leader Nicodemus as "Nicky and The Nickelheads." (The demons are in silver coins, which are usually on the Denarians' foreheads.)
* Happy Days and rides a motorcycle, but she's expected to be politer and more "ladylike".
* Glory Road with "it's television" as equally not really explanatory.
* Hidden & Dangerous 2 and its expansion pack, you face Italian soldiers that wield German firearms and tanks. The Japanese feature about the same amount, but in their case the developers took the time to model appropriate weapons. There are also some Italian-model aircraft on the field, yet the pilots seen wear Luftwaffe uniforms.
* Groundskeeper Willie starts yelling at him in a thick Scottish accent. Bart not understanding him continues to skip and Willie angrily asks him "Don't you understand English?" while pointing to a sign reading "ACH! KEEP OFF THE GRASS!"
* Heart of the Woods. She makes many thinly-veiled death threats toward the protagonists, and even Madison, who doesn't trust Morgan in the early game, is uneasy around Evelyn. As such, Evelyn is by far the most obvious candidate among the human cast to be the villain.
* Han Tak Lee, infamously imprisoned for arson and murder after his daughter perished in a house fire, was targeted for suspicion mainly because of his emotionless demeanor when discussing his daughter's death (that and the fact that he had packed a suitcase shortly before escaping the house). He was exonerated 24 years later due to evidence that the house fire could not have been intentional. It's generally accepted that the lack of emotion was due both to cultural differences (Lee is a first-generation Korean immigrant) and Lee's general unflappability, both of which illustrate serious problems with trying to apply this trope to real life.

* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone movie, Harry starts out as the white-square bishop but clearly delivers checkmate while traveling on a black square diagonal. While his starting square is not directly shown, the king-side white bishop always starts on a white square.
* Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five. Before them were 1970s political preachers such as The Last Poets and Gil Scott-Heron.
* Hercules embedded Excalibur itself in stone, found himself caught up in the Norse gods'
* Haré+Guu attempts this on Haré. It doesn't work as Haré already knows her and she knocked him against a tree.
* Going Postal free to walk away and go back to his job at the Post Office. When Moist asks what happened to the pit, Vetinari claims to have no idea what he's talking about.
* Harry and the Shipgirls of Josef Mengele from the Real Live section, she plays this trope dead seriously.
* Harrion Karstark is killed by Jaime during Robb's first battle at Riverrun.
* Heart of Steel Alistair Mechanus has a mental interface with his island's computer network through his cybernetic implants. However, he can't access it without the A.I. Arthur, as he discovers when Arthur is taken out.
* Godzilla vs. Biollante has arguably the best one in the entire series.
* Greaser Delinquents starts to set in. The most famous greaser delinquent in fiction, The Fonz, became one of the most important pop culture icons of the decade.
* Grand Theft Auto III-era games, Liberty City consists of 2 islands and a peninsula with mountains separating it from mainland, Vice City is made of 2 long, parallel islands, and the state of San Andreas is pretty much a huge, neatly formed square of land. Out in the middle of nowhere, too - try flying just straight north/west/south/east. You'll run out of attention span (and maybe trigger a few glitches) before hitting a barrier.
* Harry Potter/Thorson, the protagonist, becomes this trope as a matter of survival — for most of the first book he's suffering a major case of
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters for him to finally cut his losses and run.
* Goosebumps usually has plenty of villains to make life harder for the kid heroes,but now and then the events of the book are not caused by any malevolent forces.
* Gungrave (said katanas have pistols on the handles) or Electrocuting said Zombie alien gangsters with an electric guitar wielded by a Rocking Ghost that looks like a Vash The Stampede expy? and that is not counting the Bosses.
* Gossip Girl (2021): Max's dad Gideon is a kind man who also likes to crossdress sometimes. No one cares.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Harry, Hermione, and the Weasleys are all seated at the dinner table the night before all the kids are going back to Hogwarts. Percy, the oldest Weasley student, asks his dad the good question, why the Ministry is supplying them with cars to escort them all to the railway station. His brothers Fred and George interject that it's all in honor of Percy being Head Boy and that the cars will even have insignias with "HB" on them to stand for "Humongous Bighead". Everyone at the table except Percy and his mom snorts with amusement. The audience is supposed to find the twins' behavior towards Percy to be hilarious, while Percy should be regarded as the humorless jerk who needs to lighten up. But not only is both the setup and punchline for this joke excruciatingly obvious and unfunny, but it's also a mean-spirited jibe at a brother who, at that particular moment, wasn't doing anything to deserve it.

* Heart of the Matter: Something so vital, its likened to a living heart.
* "Groundhog Day" Loop going on, it's not uncommon for players to spend entire loops just doing and repeating as many side-quests and mini-games as possible.
* Go West, Young Lady to fall, which in turn makes her go downstairs an confront the murderous outlaw armed only with the fallen soufflé.
* Godzilla-esque evil they'd likely have wiped the ponies out by now just for kicks.
* Hc Svnt Dracones due to the surgery's association with rebellious kids.
* Gregory Horror Show has a weird variation. The hotel run by Gregory is the embodiment of the desire to escape from reality, and Gregory and his inhabitants will try their damndest to drive you mad and keep you there. You can escape, but of the two people we've seen escape, both eventually end up coming back and becoming one of the hotel's twisted inhabitants.
* Glory, a southern cavalry unit charges through light woods against a Union rifle unit. They may have been counting on the wood to give sufficient cover - if so, it doesn't work. The cavalry is mowed down by the Civil War era single shot riles.
* Hearts of Ice: Ranma kills the Shadowcat in the Mortal Plane, ensuring the demon will remain dead forever because he will be unable to put itself back together.
* He's not Madara like he claimed, just the person to inherit Madara's plan.
* Happy Yarou Wedding when a drunken makeout session is suddenly halted by Yuuhi and Todou fears he's made him uncomfortable and lies that he mistook him for his dead wife. Since Yuuhi had stopped because he was shocked to realize he was in love with Todou, this crushes him and he decides to never return. Todou then persistently texts him with messages like "I have no interest in men" and "sorry for making you feel bad" in attempt to get him to come back, but of course, this just makes Yuuhi even more upset.
* H Games, with "breasts each the size of their owner's head" being not only common, but far from the biggest size.
* Hellblazer, the protagonist John Constantine wins his battles using this trope. He once defeated the god-demon Nergal by trapping him inside a computer, before the computer opened a gateway to Heaven where angels ripped Nergal apart.
* Hayate also manages to recruit people for Nagi's apartment complex and pick up
* Han suggests setting off an explosion in another part of the clearinghouse, far from the
* Hetalia: Axis Powers fitting in this trope, even when there is next to none canon info on them aside of their looks.
* Happy Heroes form he take in his earliest appearances, a jet pack, a sword and a Rubik's Cube.
* Half-Blood Prince, in which Mrs. Weasley threatens to jinx Ron's fingers together if she sees him doing it again.
* Happens yet again in "The Frogger": Jerry, terrified of "The Lopper" (a serial killer who takes the heads of guys that look like Jerry), leaves Lisi's apartment at night after splitting up with her. He sees the silhouette of a man walking down the misty street that looks like it's carrying a head. He begs to be let back up into Lisi's apartment, Lisi buzzes him up, and....out of the mist walks Slippery Pete, carrying the battery he stole to power George's Frogger machine.
* Hayden Christensen) are 6'0" (183 cm) and 5'2 1/2" (158 cm), respectively. Anakin gets a lot taller in the original trilogy, though Padme is never around.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, due to how many boyfriends she's had. Although there's nothing to imply that she's ever gone beyond kissing with any of them.
* Guitarist/vocalist Sheena Ozzella of the indie rock band Lemuria definitely qualifies when she's wearing glasses.
* heel opponent's catchphrase in order to get under their [or the fans'] skin. Vice versa (face towards heel) is even not that uncommon.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Drax, Groot, and Rocket decide to hit a bar/gambling hall and are shown drunkenly partying it up. This is our first hint at Drax's lighter side.

* Hey Arnold! OWNS this trope. Acts as if he's preoccupied with responsibility, once had a crush on an older girl (well, she was only two grades ahead), and one of the most adorable kids on the show.
* got his hidden powers unlocked, and went to challenge Piccolo to one final match.
* Golems tend to follow all instructions literally. In some cases, it's because they don't think the way living people do (they're typically portrayed like computers or robots — one in particular becomes a Watchman and starts using lines out of
* Hetalia: Axis Powers smart. Why else would so many countries depend on him?
* Gunman Clive. You need to shoot a weak spot on its right leg to remove the plating on it, then climb its foot so you can repeat the process with its other leg. The left leg contains a ladder which leads to its torso, where you must use the boss's gun and drill as platforms to blow up both sides, allowing you to climb up to its shoulders and destroy its head.
* Halloween III: Season of the Witch: A dull travesty to the series that moronically ditched Michael Myers with an annoying jingle played throughout, or is it an underrated gem with great Halloween atmosphere that should be taken on its own terms and be seen in the context it was intended as changing the franchise into an anthology series? Panned when it first came out, but as time has gone on has gotten a bigger and bigger cult following.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, the Black Hammers lost all the fairies they captured and the Tree of Life is saved but Michel dies in order to rejuvenate the tree, and Kim leaves the island. It's played as more happy than bitter, as Michel will be reborn later, Biam is with the fairies again, Kim reflects on her experience fondly and feels that Michel will remember her when he does return... but in the meantime the bad guys still have the floating castle, and without Michel or Kim around to protect them, the fairies could easily get captured again and start it all over.
* Gundam Seed Stargazer has Shams Couza, a black mecha pilot fighting alongside with Mudie (white), and Sven (ambigously mixed White-Asian).
* Godzilla (2014) has the Mutos, giant prehistoric insect-like creatures that are ancient enemies of the Godzilla species and continue this species rivalry into the Anthropocene. The conflict between humans and the MUTOs also plays out as one.
* Grand Finale in a setting only tangentially related to Sacred Heart.
* Grand Theft Auto of New York, Los Angeles and Miami respectively but much, much smaller than the real thing, far easier to navigate but with just enough of the general feel and look of the real-world counterparts to give players a facsimile of the real thing.
* Guardians of Ga'Hoole who ends up being easily killed later in the story.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows Voldemort does this while magically broadcasting his voice across Hogwarts, where the students hear the Dark Lord explain that he doesn't want pickles on his Big Mac.
* he sees Light trying to write Near's name in a hidden death note and shoots his hand, goes into a rage and shoots him some more, and tries to deliver the killing blow but he is stopped.
* GoAnimate and proceeded to blame Alvin Hung for being "greedy". Truth is, however, most of the voices had expired licenses (and on top of that, mostly outdated) and Hung decided not to renew them.
* He also says that grave robbing isn't a crime in the 31st century...but knowing Bender that's probably a lie.
* Grand Theft Auto has a running conflict between gangsters who broaden their horizons and go into other areas, and those who want to stick to what they're good at:
* High School High in which the students regularly desecrate the statue of the school's founder.
* Haikyuu!! aired on Sundays at 5 PM. The second season, however, moved to the Saturday late-night time slot.
* has stated that she'll return to being barefoot once she leaves the S.S. Anne, whilst keeping the shoes in her backpack (likely to only save them for walking in really cold weather).

* HERZ: Rare female example. During a conversation, Shinji tells he thinks his daughters have few suitors because his wife Asuka scares them away.
* Happiness in Slavery: Being happy to serve somebody because you love them.
* Heinous Hyena: Hyenas portrayed as vicious, underhanded, cowardly or otherwise unpleasant creatures.
* Happy Heroes, the robots in Doctor H.'s internet router copy the abilities and appearances of the heroes' Car Knights and put up a fight. Smart S.'s one course of action when they do this is to say "According to me, there's only one way to fix this. And that's... getting out of here!" before flying away.
* Heather and Alejandro. Both are ambitious, manipulative, and cunning, while at the same time
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, upon Ron's unexpected return to Harry and Hermione:
* Hamburger Hill: a green lieutenant is shown to be having trouble locating his position on a map while calling in an airstrike. Huey gunships then fly in and gun down the advancing American soldiers.
* Gunnerkrigg Court has a few. Funny chapters are often thrown in between more serious ones.
* Hide Your Lesbians). Later episodes toned it down into Zoey being Dawn's mentor.
* Good Omens: Adam and his friends attempt to play Spanish Inquisition, but due to their rather hazy sources they end up putting Pepper's sister on trial as a witch, and their attempt at dunking her results in her enjoying it.
* Grand Theft Auto IV hosted by "John Smith", a parody of Alex Jones and similar right-wing/libertarian conspiracy theorists. "John" entertains, and often voices, every single crazy conspiracy theory and bit of paranoia and racism his listeners phone in with.
* Harry finally snaps in chapter 74 of the first book, after his father, Thor (formerly incarnated as James Potter), is shot and put into a coma in front of him just as him and Jane are attacked by heavily armed HYDRA troopers. Since this is shortly after
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys episode "For Those of You Just Joining Us" had the cast performing the old trust building exercise with Rob Tapert. He eventually recovers.
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah, a huge funeral was held for him on national television with many of the people behind the series in attendance. Even CNN was abuzz about it.
* He even mind controls Meryl a minute earlier and makes her behave like some sort of a caricature, a sex-crazed meat puppet.
* He was replaced by Cowboy Curtis (a character from the TV show) in the new verison of show, out of respect for the late Hartman.
* Haineko makes no effort to say otherwise when Tobiume calls her one.
* Hand of Thrawn duology, two Imperial saboteurs go to Bothawui pretending to be small-time merchants trying to make a quick credit. They reinforce this impression with a small bribe to get their stock through customs quickly.
* good — reintroduces himself to Chiana by doing a little disco dance and singing "She's gonna gitcha-gitcha-gitcha-gitcha!" proving that he's every bit as crazy as he used to be.
* Great Pumpkin (Linus quotes the Bible in other strips, which he seems to believe in, so he's presumably a Christian-the Great Pumpkin appears to be unrelated).
* Guild Wars, the "Elite" bonus zones are the Underworld (realm of the cold/death god Grenth), the Fissure of Woe (realm of the fire/war god Balthazar), The Deep (lair of the demon Kanaxai), Urgoz's Warren (home of a giant fungus-monster called Urgoz), and the Domain of Anguish (realm/prison of the insane ex-god Abaddon and various and sundry demons and mad spirits).
* Haruhi Suzumiya, Kyon does this and lampshades it, asking himself how many negatives he just strung together (we counted 6).
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi episode "Yumi Saves Kaz", Yumi tries to escape from being bothered by Kaz trying to help her to show his gratitude for saving his life by watching some television. Somehow, every channel she watches has Kaz voice his praise for her heroism.

* Hawkgirl and the Thanagarians all speak English by default. Even to each other.
* Heroes. As of the season 4 finale, they tried to redeem Sylar again, and started angsting about getting rid of his powers.
* Grounded for Life. The replies that Walt get to these ads are surprising, to say the least.
* H'el on Earth, Kara grabbed a Green-K shard and stabbed H'El with it, in spite of the radiation poisoning her.
* Harriet Spies Again, this is how Harriet's new friend proves she's an excellent spy in her own right. "I can see you. You're on the telephone. You've got the cord twisted around your wrist." "I'm watching your house with BINOCULARS and I can't see you!"
* Hairspray features one on the bonus track at the end of the album - the cast sings a ditty urging their teen audience to avoid drunk driving, and the final note causes an unseen cat to yowl with displeasure.
* Hawkeye captured Black Widow and had her at his mercy. Rather than ask for mercy, she goaded him about the loss of his family, that she killed.
* Hentai about some boy in elementary school getting caught with hentai from the library.
* her self-titled comedy show: Margaret is based on her mother, the "tactless woman" on Tate herself, and Paul and Sam on a couple she knows. She has also claimed that the Aga Saga Woman is based on a woman she met on the King's Road in London and Geordie Georgie on someone who wrote to her asking for charity donations.
* Henry/Jian of "Tamers" takes the cake though. It is stated above he's 10-11 in the Japanese version, yet he can hack almost any computer system if you give him a good reason, and uses the word incorrigible in a relatively casual conversation.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army to the first film, when Hellboy himself is seen through these goggles, he's shown with longer horns and a fiery crown — accouterments of the Prince of Hell role that Hellboy has been rebelling against.
* have worked out their story, and answer several successive questions in perfect unison. Of course, this doesn't make it any more convincing, because it looks like they've been rehearsing this.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas is the worst of the lot. When the game finally wraps up to a finale, CJ returns to Los Santos and has to completely disregard all his previous success in San Fierro and Las Venturas to represent Grove Street in the local gang wars, forcing the player to finish a significant chunk of the turf wars sidequest before they can move to the very last mission in the game. It's made particularly annoying by two factors: first, if you procrastinated on the turf wars until the very end, you'll have to complete the sidequest while all Hell is breaking loose around you as the citizens of Los Santos are rioting, and second, even if you completed the turf wars before leaving Los Santos at the beginning of the game, your turf war progress is reset as soon as you leave, so your efforts there are meaningless. And the final mission is no cakewalk, either...
* Here Comes the Boom: When Scott Voss has his UFC debut against The Executioner, the latter refuses the opening fist bump. When the final round begins though, the Executioner respectfully extends his hand for a bumb before beginning the fight.
* Grian by Zombie Cleo and Keralis of Hermitcraft. Grian and three other players had been trying to steal builds from Cleo and Keralis' base without their absence being noticed, and had been hiding the items in a hidden sewer. Scar had just done a particularly daring theft, and they had convened in the sewer with a private discord call to discuss it.
* Gumby cartoon had Gumby returning a wand to a magician who left it behind at Gumby's lemonade stand. The magician rewards Gumby with a wand that will perform a single trick. Gumby uses it to repair his mother's pitcher that got broken at the start of the cartoon.
* Golden Axe, where the dwarf Gilius Thunderhead wields the titular axe (he's stuck with a boring old steel one in the home versions, though).

* Heero's teammate Trowa Barton also fits in this mold. Having been raised by mercenaries after the death of his parents
* Gunpowder Milkshake as she waits for her mother. Then both woman start drinking the shake, whose level doesn't move at all until the camera angle changes
* Heartbeat dealt with other kinds of serious crime too - including abortion in one episode (which was still illegal at the time the series was set).
* Gorilla Monsoon, whenever a wrestler (always a heel) cheated to win. Amped up when the face wrestler was disqualified for using a weapon after the heel used the same weapon ... and the referee saw only the face use it!
* Gor series, Tarl Cabot was banned from returning to the city-state of Ar, but that didn't stop him from doing so.
* Happy Heroes right before he can hit her with it and uses it to get her kite down.
* Halo Legends. Now the canon was fixed again, but the irony was lost because John lost to a random mook.
* Having an alarmingly encyclopedic knowledge of cannabis and murder.
* Graf Zeppelin (before her remodel) carry heavy cruiser-sized guns, allowing them to attack at night when other carriers cannot.
* Hard Rain: Jim, says this almost word-for-word several times in the film. Even in the end, when Tom thinks Jim helped save his life:
* Headhunting), much to the horror of the White House. It happened again to a smaller extent in Vietnam. Nowadays US military regulations and federal law prohibit soldiers from keeping human remains.
* Harry Chapin's song "Cat's in the Cradle" was based on a poem his wife wrote and was inspired by not being present at his son's birth.
* Hilariously Abusive Childhood: "It all started when I was born. Neither of my parents showed up." He had to pretend to be a lawn gnome after theirs was repossessed, he had to wear dresses, he wasn't allowed to go swimming in public pools, his father preferred the dog and named it "Only Son" and he was abandoned and raised by ocelots.
* Gravity Is a Harsh Mistress is downplayed. When Dipper and Mabel run off a cliff, they fall down at a realistic speed, but instead of falling forward in an arc, they go straight forward, then down.
* Green Lantern both love each other, Hal's job as a Green Lantern means that he often has to choose between her and his duty, and since said duty usually involves the fate of the universe... While he inevitably gets back together with her, circumstances just as inevitably break them up again.
* Hawkeye and Trapper John (and later BJ) have a still in their tent. They say that they're distilling gin (hence the martini glasses), but what actually comes out is little more than high-proof grain alcohol.
* He helps throw a Christmas Party when he believes Mrs. Davis' sister Angela is dying in "A Dry Scalp is Better Then None."
* Harry Potter. Harry and Ginny get together with only a few arguments (and a few false starts), but for the most part their scenes together are sweet and loving. Ron and Hermione, on the other hand...
* Hannah Montana school, and only agreed to the pretend relationship when dared to by his friends.
* Good Luck Charlie: In the episode where Charlie was born, Bob is threatened to be gutted like a fish after he and PJ are caught trying to steal bikes to get to the hospital where Amy is in labor. Fortunately, he manages to explain everying and the bikers agree to give them a ride anyway.
* Harry Potter, Harry and Ron do become Aurors after the war (Harry rising to Head of the Auror Office at 27), which means they spend the rest of their lives doing the very same thing they've been doing for the last 7 years: stopping Dark wizards. Add the fact that Dark Lords seem to crop up quite frequently, the last two being active within 30 years of each other, and that wizards live long lives, and the adventure really has just started.
* Heavy Rain probably plays in his favor too. There's also the whole time limit on his son's life and trials thing, so it could be argued that he was under duress at the time.

* Half-Life 1, where the designers' idea of co-operative gameplay was to include puzzles that require two players to work synchronously to be solved efficiently, such as turning switches on opposing sides of a room simultaneously.
* Harold. He has helped his teams in numerous occasions and even saved a part of the campers from near-certain death. And yet, he hardly gets any respect, especially from Duncan, and to a lesser extent, from almost anyone else. Oh, and he is most likely the cause of a lot of the lack of respect towards him, but that's another story.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets does Dobby know Harry's friends haven't been writing to him?
* Had Foggy Dewhurst, a former corporal in the Army. Subverted in that he's now a civilian now, and even when he was in the Army, he was only a sign writer, and thus probably never saw any action. This doesn't stop him from constantly finding reasons to boss Compo and Clegg around, often pretending he's genuinely interested in helping other people. He's so determined to inflict his will on them that on one occasion, he started strangling Compo, completely unprovoked because he simply
* Haunting Ground that she is actually a female misogynist because of this incredible jealousy, despising the gender that gives birth because of it.
* Hell Teacher Nube notions of what a good big brother/little sister relationship should be like.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, South Korea always claims he invented everything (well, almost everything. No one takes responsibility for condoms).
* Gundam Wing that they realize their love for one another, but by then it's too late.
* Henry Danger episode "Henry and the Bad Girl, Part 2", Van Del falls into his red paint vat and fears he will drown until Captain Man and Kid Danger remind him it's three feet deep.
* Hellsister Trilogy: At the end of "The Apokolips Agenda", Darkseid's scheme revolving around the Anti-Life Equation has failed and he is apparently obliterated by Orion. In reality, Darkseid transferred his conscience to a spare body, cloned beforehand in the event that he was defeated, and he decides he'll spend the next hundreds of years sleeping, recovering his strength and scheming while time and old age look after his fooled enemies.
* Growlanser feature a silent protagonist. The player can select many dialogue options, but there is no voice acting for them nor do they speak in cutscenes.
* Groundhog Day. Phil Connors is finally driven to commit suicide to escape from living the same day seemingly for eternity. He kidnaps the local groundhog and drives a truck off a cliff. Phil's cameraman says he might be okay, but then the truck blows up. The next thing Phil knows, it's morning again; not even his death can stop the time loop. Cue montage of him killing himself in every way possible.
* Hazmat: Jacob's weapon of choice on his murderous rampage is a fire axe.
* Halloween: Resurrection a reality TV show is held inside the Myers house, and the TV crew have set up a number of fake peek a boo corpses to scare the contestants. Then real peek a boo corpses start turning up to the disbelief of everybody.
* Highschool Dragon: The villains for the original fic are mostly comprise of members from the Legion of Doom:
* Heart of Steel. Julia is less intelligent but smart in her own right, minus the madness. While he is instantly smitten with her, she spends more than half the novel getting to know the man under the metal before she ultimately warms up to him.
* Granblue Fantasy: Soriz prides himself in being a REAL MAN! Which, to him, involves always being true to his heart. Yes, that includes both heroism and dirty antics.
* Great Teacher Onizuka features a scene with the entire class piled on top of each other like this.
* Harry Potter, in addition to being a wizard, is also the son of Thor (who was incarnated as James Potter as a first try of that whole "teach him humility" thing). This catapults him from Hogwarts-which, admittedly, is weird enough-into dealing with Asgardians,

* Guy Gavriel Kay discomfited court, among many other strange hobbies.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series until she created a body for herself.
* High Arbiter Arkeid -actually a Sylvain (light elf), not a human- in
* Heavy Gear, allowing the Naga to use hit-and-run tactics against its opponents.
* Highlander, especially when Duncan is there. When he's in Paris, guess where trouble happens.
* Henry I of Navarre, who was said to have been suffocated to death by his own fat.
* Gone, Sam and Caine have eleven days to figure out how to not disappear when they turn fifteen.
* Hamilton confirms that Laurens's "All right, all right, that's what I'm talking about" at the beginning of "Satisfied" was "the punchline to a dirty joke you never got to hear"
* Halo, but at that point the Hologram's owner has probably started shooting at you already.
* heals you. Unlike many games, your character actually has an eating animation. So if you're in a boss fight and have to heal yourself, you'll end up pulling out a few pieces of fruit or a meat pie and chowing down while ignoring the giant monster just feet from you.
* Godzilla (2014)'s massive foot, then Godzilla in full view roars at his opponent. He did this again when facing off with the female Muto.
* Hexadecimal does this too in season 4. She is the only one that can stop Daemon's infection from destroying the entire Net but only goes through with it because destroying the Net means destroying Bob. She even tells Dot to take care of Bob right before performing her
* Hellraiser, with 9 novels, action figures, and a comic. And creator Clive Barker is interested in a reboot!
* Heroes, Hiro believed that obtaining the sword of his childhood hero would allow him to control his powers. After going to the museum to steal it, they find out it's a replica, and have to steal the real one from the collector who has it.
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating as Hani seeks out Ishu, her year's only other Bengali or South Asian girl, for a fake relationship. Since it turns out Ishu is queer, this works out. Eventually the relationship becomes real as they fall in love.
* ♥ became synonymous with sisters Ann and Nancy Wilson, who fronted the group and wrote most of its material. The symbol was downgraded a little after their make-over as 1980's big-haired rock chicks performing stadium rock.
* Harry Potter has been needed to identify some of the black characters in the series.
* Guns of the Dawn has to be in charge, and continuity of government will avert dangerous instability. It doesn't do wonders for his public image, but then, people didn't think much of him anyway.
* Heroes. Even he himself defines his actions in terms of evolution. Interestingly enough, he'll generally leave normal people alone as long as they don't stand in his way.
* Hawkeye manages to escape the blast of the Chitauri bomb at the office building, but now he's clinging from debris, with another soldier in his other hand, and four Chitauri about to shoot him. Black Widow made a super window jump, got the gun thrown from a helicopter above, and shot down the Chitauri, saving Hawkeye.
* Harrison Ford spent a good chunk of his early career being kidnapped, tied up, and/or tortured:
* He Who Gets Slapped became a clown after his patron stole his work and wife. As a clown, Beaumont falls in love with another performer who is in love with someone else.
* Highlander in the same conversation, but it doesn't work either time.
* Hector "Shipwreck" Delgado could be considered the U.S. Navy's equivalent of Han Solo, ready to join the fight, and usually fighting the enemy on his own terms when he's not being so salty, which gets him into occasional trouble now and then.

* Hermione, however, is by far and large the best-known example of this trope; the fans who use her as a
* Gone Horribly Right: You succeeded, but it would have been better to fail.
* Headlander you wake up in the future with no body and must make do with a space helmet that comes equipped with rockets and the ability to attach to various robot bodies.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas the Triad clan lead by Wu Xi Mu refer to their leader as their "lucky mole" due to his uncanny ability to participate in gunfights, car races, and video games despite being blind. All his friends refer to him as "Woozie."
* Halo 4, you can count on Exile being voted for at least 90% of the time whenever it shows up in the voting rounds in Big Team Battle. It's the only map so far that has a Scorpion and Gauss Warthog, not to mention it's relatively easy to spawn camp on the map, which may have something to do with it.
* Greg Egan, before Tchicaya finally gets to have sex with his childhood lover Mariama he contemplates "Nothing could have lived up to four thousand years of waiting. Except perhaps an original theorem."
* Hannelore's father (who lives in space) owns a spaceship named Spaceship, and a space station named Station. Station explains that Hannelore went through an "overly descriptive phase," and the names stuck.
* Goodbye Chains covers a sleeping Colin with his coat after Colin takes a bullet for him (and after, of course, Banquo has treated said wound). Colin then tries to snuggle up against him.
* Head-and-Hip PoseTo draw attention to a woman's face and her curves.
* Heinz Guderian wrote the book - literally - on combined arms warfare and the most effective use of tanks when he penned
* Gotham Girls all of a sudden) and ominously breathing against the glass, cracking it.
* Grey's Anatomy divorced him, after he gave her an ultimatum: him or the job. In her mind, once a marriage has reached a point of ultimatums, it's time to end it.
* He called the 1981 version a "botched" job and wrote that Franco Zeffirelli "egregiously and ridiculously misunderstood" the novel.
* Happy Anniversary" revolves around a scientist's efforts to create one of these so that he and his girlfriend won't break up, but will stay frozen forever. In the midst of having the break-up sex. At the moment of climax, in fact. There are worse moments to be stuck at.
* Hela and Skurge (along with some resurrected Asgardian warriors) invade the ancient stronghold where the Asgardian refugees are hiding.
* Harry Potter and is only interested in helping someone if the police/firemen/etc. can't help them.
* Guards! Guards! Vetinari is usurped and thrown into prison. He has anticipated this, and the most secure cell happens to have its lock on the inside.
* Goosebumps has the protagonist getting a shrunken head, which has powers that work when he says certain words. But the powers had to be put inside him by his aunt first, so this no longer works when the magic is taken away.
* Halt and Catch Fire, Cameron meets Joe McMillan's father, Joe Sr., and they actually get along for a while... until Joe Sr. says that Cameron must make her own father very proud. Cameron lost her dad when she was only 10 years old, and the mere mention of him upsets her so badly that she retreats into another room to cry.
* Hamlet has several anachronistic touches for comic relief, including Polonius having a smartphone that keeps ringing at inopportune moments. This pays off in the scene where Polonius spies on Hamlet's conversation with Ophelia, with Hamlet being alerted to Polonius's presence by the sound of his phone ringing.
* Hegemonic session decapitated in one sweep by Dirk Strider with only three panels worth of screen time.
* Gravity Falls reveals they are out in the wild wearing raincoats to protect themselves.
* hilariously did this with a drug sting. One of the protagonists suspected a store was secretly selling drugs, and tried to get the cashier to admit it without explicitly asking for drugs. The cashier was secretly an undercover cop, and was playing dumb to try to get the protagonist to explicitly ask for drugs.

* Henry Cavill if he could help it. A passionate fan of the video games, it's obvious Cavill finds Geralt an awesome character. Script writer Lauren Schmidt Hissrich said Cavill was "really annoying" seeking the part before the script was even finished.
* Green Around the GillsNeed to show someone is nauseated without having them gag, throw up, or say so? Have their face green!
* Hard Being Pure: Noa cannot properly eat like a normal person, and instead gains sustenance from the matter she disintegrates through her telekinetic power. She can use her power to digest just about anything.
* Hell(p) which doesn't kill them, even though it's possible to die of physical trauma in this version of Hell.
* Guy Gavriel Kay offhandedly mentions this as a character gets out of bed and, with minor difficulty, into his breeches.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. Rather than snatching her up, they simply slow her descent, then unceremoniously drop her once they get to a safe height above the water.
* Hero Academy: A school that trains students specifically on how to be a hero.
* her roommate dead and a note written in lipstick on the mirror: "Aren't you glad you didn't turn on the light?"
* glorious chain reactions. Additionally, Inner Flame will not turn mindless allies (such as skeletons and zombies) hostile. Have fun, necromancers!
* he should be the one angry in the situation, since Star should have told him about the kiss herself rather than him having to confront her about it.
* Her apprentice Luz also gets her own poster after she's banned from the school grounds of Hexside. Eda has a copy of it right next to her own.
* Hades when they get dead serious, however, it's actually pretty terrifying.
* Hayate the Combat Butler parody, the animation and drawing shift to Gainax-style.
* Grandpa Marsh has several Dirty Old Man moments in the episode "Quintuplets 2000" when a set of little girl quintuplets and their grandmother stay at Stan's house.
* Half the fun of Basic Training for new military recruits is learning the entirely new (and often entirely arbitrary) rules and social standards that they must live by, including addressing some of their superiors as sir,
* Hank Williams's song: "I'll Never Get Out Of This World Alive". Interestingly, Hank Williams Jr and Hank Williams III also recorded or contributed to recordings of this song.
* Good Angel, Bad Angel: A characters conscience takes the separate forms of an angel and a devil.
* Heavy Metal spoke out against music censorship, and the hearings ended when the major record labels agreed to voluntarily put warning labels on albums with adult content (which is where the now-familiar "Parental Advisory: Explicit Content" stickers came from).
* Gravity Falls: In "Bottomless Pit!", Mabel plays this with Soos as they are falling in an endless abyss.
* Hellcat' before she immigrated into the Marvelverse and the superhero genre.
* : he'd been institutionalized for years after killing a man during a paranoia-induced breakdown. Murray's first meeting with Minor played out almost exactly like this trope: he was greeted by a doctor and a patient in the lobby of the asylum, and introduced himself to the doctor, thinking it was Minor.
* Gotham Central, Renee ended the series dropping her badge and gun on Captain Maggie Sawyer's desk as she quits the department.
* Grand Theft Me: Taking control of someone's body to make them do bad things.
* Going hand-in-hand with her egomania, Cinder Fall is driven to uplift herself while bringing everyone else down. If someone she perceives as beneath her gets the better of her, she
* GURPS Aliens: "For whatever reason, the race's death rate has exceeded the birth rate. If this trend isn't reversed, the race will be extinct in a few generations." The Jarrel are a race described as having this trait, but are trying to recover and start growing again.

* Gunnerkrigg Court—one of whom is a magpie going by the username "magpie55". He thinks Bobeyes is a pretty cool, tough guy, and is as surprised as anyone to learn that Bobeyes is a girl. From his commentary on the final comic page, it's obvious that he's smitten.
* Górsky & Butch includes a gag about a village of Asian monks, all of whom have names that sound exactly like various Polish pronouns and prepositions.
* GoldenEye, and the missiles are set to fire and then return back at them. They escape before the explosion, but the Russian authorities show up immediately, and the Minister of Defence accuses them of being involved in both. Presumably, they were supposed to find only the bodies and assume that the two of them were the criminals they were after, and write the whole thing off as a weapon malfunction.
* Grey's Anatomy: Lexie briefly walks in on Callie and Arizona having sex in the shower.
* Godslave takes the form of a giant, bird-shaped tree. Which, in violation of all rules of physics and then some, can actually fly.
* GURPS: The Shadow Form ability. It's a powerful advantage if it can be controlled but a disadvantage if it's always on.
* Goof Troop which causes Rose to run away in tears, thinking PJ doesn't like her. He then recites the opening lines of her poem and confesses to all the things he tried, she says she likes his true self more, and then this happens:
* Groo the Wanderer: The titular character fights with two katanas, one in each hand.
* Grave Robbers from Outer Space got in on this with its "Only the Virgin Survives" card.
* Heat Signature with decent reflexes and aiming while paused can be used to make a guard catch the bullet they fired at you.
* Gormiti: The Lords of Nature Return used artworks of the Forest Gormiti Florus and Sporius based on their brief appearance in the original concept pilot for the cartoon, that gave them completely different color schemes, and in the former case even a completely different head (final design is a green flower with 5 petals and no facial features, while the concept design is a red flower with 4 petals, eyes and mouth).
* Higurashi: When They Cry — it's a disease. But despite that, magic still exists, and so does Oyashiro-sama.
* Hardy cuts ties with Peter, blaming him for the fact that her father will spend the rest of his life away from her.
* Gorillaz to use their game, with their second video reworking the concept without any video game footage.
* Harold Lloyd. Christopher Reeve said he based his portrayal of Clark Kent on David.
* "He-Who-Must-Not-Be-Named", "Bumblefoot the Insignificant" and "Voldemort" - comes from the theory that Jack is an attention whore and that simply ignoring him and not talking about him or even mentioning his name will make him shut up.
* Halloween, and anything associated with it, for Rebecca Howe, because in her childhood she never got to celebrate it properly. Since this is Rebecca, this is
* Gohan's training with the Z Sword. The extremely heavy blade is supposed to be the only weapon capable of defeating Majin Buu but shatters when actually put to the test. Gohan then notes that swinging the sword around has made him much stronger and faster, which may have been the point all along. Subverted immediately when Goku says that the power increase is negligible.
* Helluva Boss has Moxxie and Millie. The duo utterly adore each other and Millie is one of the few things that makes Moxxie happy on a regular basis.
* Goldfinger is assassinated, courtesy of Oddjob, and then has his body disposed of in a car crusher.
* He also had his belly sliced wide open in a previous assassination attempt, eliciting a cry of
* He Is My Master, when the lead girl's little sister visits the home of a rich pervert, but is only delighted by his collection of "cute dolls and clothes".

* Heroes The only noted exception being with the activities of his teenage daughter but to his defense is there ANY TV dad who is competent in that regard?
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys "Prometheus", despite both shows airing on the same channel and being dubbed by the same company.
* hellhounds can resemble anything from regular if fiery dogs to only vaguely canid beasts shrouded in fire. Many are native to the horror-inspired plane of Innistrad, where they come from their fiery realm where the demons live. Some can breathe fire.
* GrailQuest, if you attack the old gardener you automatically get the first strike due to having surprise on your side, and he has so few LIFE POINTS that this may well be enough to kill him. Even if it isn't, he needs to roll an 8 or better on two dice to hit you and his weapon of choice (a blunted pitchfork) scores no extra damage at all. The book lampshades how incredibly unlucky you would have to be for him to kill you.
* Hero Corp, which begins in a village where retired superheroes with fading or useless powers are sent. For instance, a superhero with the power to project acid with his hands becomes unable to project anything but shampoo, or a mutant who, being half-man half-chicken, has the "power" of having feathers growing from his backside.
* He does another version when chasing The Winter Soldier who had just shot
* GURPS is about a brain trying to hire Humphrey Bogart to find his body.
* Heralds of Valdemar series, the kingdom of Hardorn has waged two wars against Valdemar with forces composed of a few mages and loyal generals and a mass of mind-controlled conscripted troops. In both cases, killing the mage freed the soldiers, who then turned on their generals and ripped them to pieces.
* Happens again in "Dial M for Mayor". The suspect, who is working for the
* Halo 4 (usually the main gun of spacegoing warships) and crewed rocket turrets on the upper deck and a garage that can carry two Warthogs on the lower deck. It'll also carry a couple platoons of Marines.
* Half-Life 2. Destroying them may net you a battery, which charges up your suit a little bit. A different kind later on also drops Hopper mines and gives your position away to Striders with each photo.
* Harry Potter books, the Room of Requirement is a magical room known only to those in the know. Ordinarily, it has no door, but if one paces back and forth at the right corridor visualizing something you need, a door will appear and the room will be filled with what you need. The room can be filled with anything in principle, although in practice it's mostly used for secret meetings and to hide things.
* G, the self-proclaimed President of the World, has an equally presidential beard reminiscent of Honest Abe himself.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, one of the pre-mission cutscenes involves Carl being chained to a rack and raped by his hostile Tsundere partner, Catalina. Thankfully, this is off-screen. Unthankfully, there is audio.
* He is the champion-of his unit. He has to confront a much better boxer from another unit- who who later goes on to become the world middleweight champion.
* Growing Up Brady a tattle-tale!" The whole situation inspired in her a deep loathing for Cindy Brady.
* Great Movies series of essays that he always held off writing about it. When he finally decided to address it, he did it in two parts, explaining to readers that Part 1 would discuss the racism and history, just to get it out of the way. Part 2 would then be free to discuss the art of filmmaking without offending anyone. Even with the boundaries clearly defined, he had a heck of time writing that essay.
* Hercules everyone else in the poster to correspond with his domain as Lord of the Underworld.
* Higher Learning: After getting together, Shinji and Asuka kept their relationship secret for a while until Shinji left right before the battle against Zeruel. Upon seeing Asuka's sobbing reaction, Misato figured it out.
* Gone Horribly Wrong After that, a nearby pirate directed Linlin towards piracy for his own amusement, and the two would form the future Big Mom Pirates.
* Gravity Falls, when Mabel samples the strange substance coating just about everything in an abandoned convenience store.

* Hell, this is always the way it is for Frank Castle. Comics, he's in the park with his family on a picnic, he's finally decided to stop reenlisting to fight in Vietnam, and then, well, you know what happens.
* Glen Campbell's "By the Time I Get to Phoenix" is told from the point of view of a man who leaves a Dear John Letter for his lover and leaves her before she awakes, and while on the road imagines the things his lover will probably be doing by the time he reaches certain points on his route.
* Goldfinger and steal all the gold. Bond even lampshades this trope at one point in the book, musing how he went from simple investigation to being tangled up in Goldfinger's scheme.
* Hammer Horror is a series of Gothic horror movies made by the British company Hammer Film Productions between the 1950s and the early '70s. They were influential enough for "Hammer horror" to become a distinct subgenre label that was also applied to entirely unrelated, but similar productions.
* Guild Wars 2 there is an underwater dungeon where piranhas attack you for massive damage when you leave the light emitted by volcanic vents or portable bioluminescent plants.
* he gets tired of keeping it a secret likely get fired if the administration finds out. Thus, Ross and the student go back to keeping their relationship a secret.
* Harry's Madness: Harry Potter goes insane in Fifth Year and begins murdering all his real and perceived enemies, turning the DA into his dark legions of global conquest.
* Good Omens, after Crowley has successfully killed one Duke of Hell, but failed to bluff the surviving one:
* Half-Life 1 and its expansions tell a story of the multi-sided battle at Black Mesa, where Gordon and security team of Black Mesa, the Hazardous Environment Combat Unit, a unit of the US government, Black Ops forces, the Alien invading forces of Xen and of Race X fight each other.
* Grim has this relationship with the nursing staff at the retirement homes when he comes for the elderly residents, as shown in Season 5 "Home of the Ancients".
* Greenfire: When a knight is preparing to attack Greenfire, Greenfire's voiced concerns are only of the Knight ruining his picnic with Rarity.
* Henry VIII. Best known examples are "Greensleeves" and "We Wish You a Merry Christmas", both of which music historians are now pretty sure he didn’t write.
* Green Lantern that leaves multiple interpretations/readings for each of her sentences.
* Hair-Trigger Temper: A character who constantly gets angry at the slightest provocation.
* Heero and Relena, since Relena helped Heero re-discover the humanity he thought of as lost.
* He does the once-for-yes, twice-for-no thing with another victim in "Damned If You Do," but it's with the raising of a finger instead of blinking.
* He was also partially the victim of this trope in his second battle with Biollante in * Hard Being Pure is a pyrokinetic. Astrex also uses a weak flame spell to good effect.
* Gryphon Riders to get the job done for the mission, and no Land troops were present on the land mass where the portal resides.
* .hack series has something similar, with floating symbols and screen static in the corrupted areas.
* Goodbye Lenin, the first sign of the mother waking from her coma is the twitching of her fingers.
* High Elves have very few units with toughness higher than 3, but they make up for it with
* He does get into a bit of trouble once when he refers to the Archangel Uriel as "Uri". His name roughly translates to "God is my Light", with the "el" bit specifically referring to God. Being an angel and all, Uriel is quite upset about having what he considers the important part of his name lopped off. He's alright with Dresden calling him "Mr. Sunshine," instead though.

* Hetalia: Axis Powers age freakishly fast for a nation, since Italy was apparently a toddler for about nine hundred years.
* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life. If you don't marry her, her age will constantly ruin her love life as men end up leaving her due to it.
* Happy Heroes features the voice actors and actresses voicing quite a few main/significant characters at the same time:
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix and Neville (who has a broken nose) are left.
* Haruhi Suzumiya hangs a lampshade on this; Kyon, the sarcastic narrator, constantly tells Koizumi, the Mr. Exposition character, that he talks too much and no one cares what he has to say.
* Gwen in "Love Muffin" becomes a villainous one for Ray and Henry (as well as knowing Charlotte and Jasper work for Captain Man as well).
* HeartGold, where Arceus offers the player a choice of three legendary Pokemon (Dialga, Palkia, or Giratina), gives a glimpse of the sheer enormousness of what it has lived through.
* Gundam Build Divers as it is hinted that his second in command for his team, Kurt, is hospitalized in some way.
* Happy Heroes: Throughout Season 7 episode 28, Big M. has a weakened heart beat and Little M. has to be careful not to startle him too much with the news that he's been fired. A few times, he comes very close to learning he's fired and falls to the ground, heart clutching his chest where his heart is and with a fainter voice.
* Global (BC 1), a regional cable news channel serving British Columbia. Owned by Shaw Media.
* Hell and Back describing his slide into clinical depression after Hurricane Katrina, Chris Rose wrote:
* Green-Sky Trilogy are darker-skinned, darker-haired, and "sturdier" compared to their willowy, pale Kindar counterparts. This is explained somewhat by the fact the only places the Erdlings are able to gather food are places where the tree cover has been cleared away, exposing them to direct sunlight (and a tan) whereas the Kindar are almost always shaded by the leaves of their tree-cities. In fact, an Erdling child living among the Kindar quickly loses the tan; as one Kindar reports to another, "Even her skin seems to be a more normal shade now."
* Halo: Glasslands has an early scene where a pair of UNSC Marines travel to Sydney, Australia to have a drink in memory of a friend who died in the Covenant War. They find that the bar they'd planned to meet at took a direct hit during the fighting on Earth, and end up borrowing some booze from the construction workers clearing the debris.
* Hedy Lamarr's biggest star. She also had a patent for frequency-hopping spread spectrum, which would eventually lay the groundwork for communications technology that's currently used in Wi-Fi networks. Nowadays it's started to flip the other way and she's increasingly noted for being an inventor who incidentally also made a few movies.
* Gratuitous English in their lyrics have a tendency to heavily slur the words into an indecipherable mess.
* He had a tendency to choose juries himself, based on who spent the most money in his saloon that year. He also made them take mandatory breaks during trials, during which they had to purchase a drink from him or risk being dismissed. He also held court inside his saloon, which made some sense because it was a public forum in a town with very few public buildings but made slightly more sketchy by the fact that he used his position to run his competition out of town.
* Gone Horribly Wrong (depending on your point of view). The Red Court, meanwhile, is said to be descended from the Mayan bat god Camazotz.
* Gray also has this dynamic with Juvia. He constantly spurns her romantic advances and reminds her that he's not interested. However, as time goes by he shows that he truly cares for her, which culminates on
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban. He also tries to punch his way out of most situations (such as hitting a firework or trying to punch the spider on Draco’s face).

* Heirverse Has been in progress for almost ten years and spans four chapter fics plus a dozen side stories and counting.
* Halo: Combat Evolved to kill every Flood you see, but the cost in health and ammo will be high; you're better off running from most of them and fighting only when you can't avoid it.
* Gunsmoke shows a wanted poster before each round, though the relevant text is displayed beside it rather than on it.
* Hayate the Combat Butler has both an arranged marriage and a omiai set up:
* He gets tangled up in his phone cord as he tries to call 91. Goodbye!
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire: Barty Crouch Jr. used a Polyjuice potion to disguise himself as Mad-eye Moody. However, Barty Crouch Sr. spotted "Moody" doing Junior's signature tongue-flick, which gave him away. Note this was only done in the film version.
* Hermanoteu na terra de Godá, the titular prophet wannabe meets a duo of Visigoth barbarians, who pride themselves on their "rape and kill" life style.
* Hell Bent" features a groundbreaking moment where a Time Lord, previously seen as male, changes gender upon regeneration. This was seen as a watershed moment opening the door for the eventual regeneration of the male Twelfth Doctor into the female Thirteenth Doctor. Which is great except for the fact "Hell Bent" establishes into canon that the gender change is considered an inconvenience and something to be treated as a joke and also something that is temporary. This implication did not sit well with some transgender fans of the show who don't have the option of a) anything being "temporary", and b) treating it like a joke or inconvenience. In addition, the General outright notes that it was the only time she'd ever been male, which also drew controversy from the fandom.
* Highway to Heaven directed by either Michael Landon or Victor French.
* GURPS use) and the "Backpack Dragonfly", a microlight aircraft that can be carried in a backpack, and unfolded in seconds.
* Goes into downright meta levels when the voice actors from the original dub of DBZ met with Team Four Star and outright thanked them for what they did. Apparently, they had wanted to rip the cheesy dub apart for years, but never could due to their contracts.
* Highlander, which can lead to an insane immortal when they're finally set free.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince ends with Harry deciding to leave Hogwarts to find and destroy the Horcruxes that will make Voldemort vulnerable, which tells the reader that the series' traditional formula will be thrown by the wayside for the final installment.
* Gravity Falls, Stan comments that he doesn't want his car to fall in China.
* Hex Wives, Bradley pretends to be badly burned as part of a scheme by the Architects to dissuade the women from wanting to leave the cul-de-sac.
* Gundam 0083 literally wears goggles that seem to serve no purpose. However, it's possible that they cover an injury of some sort as it was hinted he was tortured by Zeon during the One Year War.
* Grindhouse parodies this trope, with two kills in a row resulting from a sudden beheading that's suddenly revealed when a character looks up.
* Grave Robbers from Outer Space. Subverted with the Re-interpreted Historical Figure Who Probably Wasn't As Evil As All This.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. The second series takes place in the same continuity, with a number of differences (both small and large) between it and the first show.
* Gossip Girl, Chuck spends the first half of Season 1 trying to help his friend Nate have sex with Blair. And then the second half trying to prevent them from having sex.
* He also acquires the Eye of Sargeras (the actual eye of a corrupted titan who became pure evil, ironically created the Burning Legion which possessed the Skull of Gul'dan and which Tichondrious was a lieutenant in) in the expansion, which is to be one of those too, having the power to kill people on the other side of the world (shattering the world in the process).

* Harry himself has had more than one of these in the course of the series, although he usually recovers (mostly). Most notable is the freakout he had after he
* Guild, the second trap they encounter is exactly this: the giant rolling boulder of doom. In a parody of the trope, all but one of the group being chased survives.
* Harry Potter books. Both are dim-witted lackeys of Harry Potter's school nemesis Draco Malfoy. Even Malfoy himself at one point describes Goyle as being so slow that if he were any slower, he'd be going backwards. Crabbe speaks mainly a soft but deep grunt, Goyle speaks in a low, raspy voice. They sound equally dumb in the film versions.
* Guinness ads are particularly well known, with "Surfer" ("he waits, that's what he does"), "Noitulove" (which features three men backwards evolving to the tune of "The Rhythm of Life") and a long chain of dominoes ad. "You don't pour a Guinness, you bring it to life." The ad itself is pretty awesome though.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law to his desk, as there is no conveyor belt. Eventually, Astro collapses during the trek, saying "Ro rold, ro rold..."
* Greater-Scope Villain in Egyptian mythology and also represented by snakes.
* has gone MIA and the wards and holy weapons are starting to fail, leaving them all but defenseless.
* Head of State when Mays make a bad comment regarding school shooting to the camera, thinks it wasn't on yet, but it was revealed that it was on all the time and is still recording. Lewis then use the tape to attack Mays' presidential campaign. Interestingly, this results in a falling out between Mays and his campaign managers, who think that he royally screwed the pooch. Later, though, one of the comes back and tells him that this can be fixed pretty quickly.
* Halloween Episode, Brick reminisces on some of the embarrassing costumes he wore when trick-or-treating with Sue, one of which was her dressing as a dalmatian while he dressed as a hydrant.
* Gorillaz runs in wearing an SS uniform, complete with a riding crop. Russel reacts rather appropriately.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, she can manipulate matter and space with great precision and scope.
* Half-Cousin Pu wears all green rather than green with purple tights like the rest of the Prince's doppelgangers, and has fresh young leaves growing out around the base of her antennae.
* Happily Failed Suicide: A suicide attempt fails, but the person who tried to kill themselves is happy that they survived.
* Highlander III: The Sorcerer: When Kane and his two companions are released from their entombment, he almost immediately kills one to weed out his remaining opposition.
* Hellsing Ultimate alternates between AAAAAMEN, and pure incoherent rage when fighting vampires. Including Alucard.
* Golden Sun is not a weapon, but a class-changing equip item. The class set that it produces is based around summoning, unsurprisingly.
* Gourmet Girl Graffiti with little skills in communication. At the time she's properly introduced, her "friends" include a cat and a bird.
* Heat; on realising that they've somehow attracted the attention of the police (the 'heat' of the title), Neil Macauley and his crew get together and debate whether to go through with the heist they have planned. Macauley states that they either go through with the job, or turn around and never see each other again. They decide to go through with the heist. This ends up being a spectacularly bad decision for all concerned.
* He also references the first part of the Tolkien quote above regarding this decision, so the comments on this page about Eddings being responsible for the map-first idea are a little off-target.
* has Sylvester and Joey's equally terrible attempts at finding jobs during the Slopbucket arc.
* Harry put laxative into his cousin Dudley's dessert for three days as retaliation for accusing Harry of doing better at school by cheating, earning him a beating from his uncle.

* Hellsing Ultimate, the survivors of the attack on the Hellsing manor salute the dead at their funeral. Despite being a British organization, they use the American salute. An American-style salute given to Seras by the surviving Wild Geese in volume seven may or may not qualify - The Wild Geese are mercenaries, and said soldiers may have been trained to salute according to American traditions long before taking a job in England.
* Harry Dresden is his acceptance that the many times Harry has flouted the Laws of Magic or been part of some kind of disaster are not due to deliberate malice, but due to arrogance, impulsiveness and recklessness.
* He usually records tongue-in-cheek novelty numbers, and on the rare occasion that he
* Goosebumps tells him that he should try to relax, it's just like going to sleep. It won't hurt.
* Goes out in a blaze of bloodthirsty rage realizing that the best way out is by
* Gunnerkrigg Court is fairly contained about losing her mother and being abandoned by her father, until she gets a chance to relax and then WHAM come the waterworks.
* .hack//Roots when two female players attacked Haseo and their voices change.
* Gorky Park. Irina's mark is actually damage from a forced drug injection given to her in a Soviet mental hospital for dissidents; it doesn't detract from her beauty, but she's also blind on that side of her face.
* He even hangs a lampshade on it. As the fight goes on, he quickly grows less concerned with actually doing something or moral quandaries to simply stare for a moment or two. Stepping in gets him kicked off a building.
* Hellsister Trilogy, Mordru has his palace/lair/villainous base on planet Zerox.
* Halifax f.p., a detective working an interstate case is threatened with damage to his career by a local politician. When the detective points out that he's not even from that state, the politician indicates the club they're standing in, and talks of how politicians from all over the country pass through the club when visiting his state, and how politics is all about working these connections...
* Hideyoshi also had problems with certain Buddhists. The Ikko-Ikki (militant Buddhist) monks were mortal enemies (and a major thorn in the side) of his ally Nobunaga (who went so far as to destroy their Nagashima fortress, killing everyone inside and burning Ishiyama Hongan-ji to the ground but sparing many of the defenders' lives) and therefore certainly a major stumbling block on the road to a unified Japan. Ironic that Hideyoshi and Tokugawa would clamp down on Christianity when Nobunaga's own brother Nagamasu was Catholic. In another irony, the Ikko-Ikki then joined with Hideyoshi in 1580.
* Gumby. She's not cute by the standards of most entries on this page, but she's far more human-shaped than the rest of her family.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2: The final battle against Ego the Living Planet involves the Guardians drilling into the core of Ego's planet, where Ego's "brain" is located, and planting a bomb right on it. The subsequent explosion destroys the core, causing the entire planet to rupture and fall completely apart.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality: '"If I and my future self interact, we'll still see the same thing as both of me, even though, on my first run through, my future self is already acting in full knowledge of things that, from my own perspective, haven't happened yet..." Harry's voice trailed off into the inadequacy of English.'
* Goddess Creation System Xiaxi caused the two Wang Pu brothers to fall in love with her by carefully crafting a specific persona designed to appeal to them both and then nudging events around to make herself look as good as possible. That's all well and good, but there are massive holes in her plans that the story actually does acknowledge, but it's implied that the brothers are so enthralled by that point that they never think to question how implausible everything was or how her behavior doesn't actually match her personality very well.
* Here. "It's getting dark..." "We had fun, didn't we, Marcie?" It's the last Sunday strip of the comic.
* Harrison Ford. It's a safe bet that if he isn't starring in an indie film, he's probably doing it for the paycheck.

* Gundam Wing girl whose only credentials are being a diplomat's adopted daughter and the princess of a destroyed country (which she only learns about five episodes into the series, and spends seven months mostly off-camera rebuilding and acclimating herself to the role).
* HBO, popcorn kernels that remained uncooked, was used by at least one popcorn manufacturer in their magazine ads to describe a problem more prevalent with competitor products.
* God of Thunder, a puzzle-platformer by Software Creations, was rereleased as freeware in 2002.
* Guild Wars: The asurans build giant floating cubes and then live in them. That is explained by their use of magic and fear of living on the surface, rather than underneath as they used to. However, they apparently got inspired by all the chunks of earth floating above ground for no reason whatsoever.
* Happens again during the escape from planet Zebes, only the steam's escaping
* Have I Got News for You have had rounds where one of these is used to choose the headlines (other seasons have used variations, such as strength-o-meters).
* Golf Story, it mostly involves talking to people and looking for clues.
* Harry Potter.) Apparation is also legally restricted to those who are trained and licensed to do so, like driving in the Muggle world.
* Hamlet, and it works incredibly well if the actors involved are good. It mostly comes off as this. Notably, Hamlet casually dragging a dead body offstage while saying, "Goodnight, Mother!" can get a big laugh out of the audience.
* grandson, the aforementioned Holy Emperor Charles V, who was then 17.
* Heaven's Vault (most notably robots and hoppers) is occasionally being used without understanding how it works, and being far from being able to utilize their full potential. The Elborethians have forgotten that their home was once a place of power, and they treat ancient artifacts as junk. The Ioxians are struggling to decypther Ancient, the language of the old empires, and are prone to superstition over science.
* Great Teacher Onizuka. While her actual reasons for hating adults is more complicated, she states her class terrorism to be a means of "killing time". Being a child prodigy leaves her often bored with the usual lectures, leading her to spend her class time giving teachers very hard questions, sabotaging their equipment, and other pranks. She eventually stopped coming to school altogether, until brought in by Miyabi to "kill time" with Onizuka.
* Godzilla: Final Wars, to prove Daigo is an imposter, Anna presents what is apparently Daigo's dog Clint. "Daigo" cannot guess the dog's name, and eventually, Anna reveals it wasn't Clint at all, but her own dog Candy.
* Hell Girl: The Two Prisoners where Ai comes back by possessing the body of Yuzuki Mikage; the three reunite with Ai with the addition of another spirit Yamawaro. How Ai comes back from the dead is unknown.
* Great Demon King Piccolo's giant chair is decorated with skulls and looks like it is made out of bone-like materials. Toriyama later uses that chair as the basic for designs like God's spaceship and the Namekian buildings. The Grand Elder has the same chair as Great Demon King Piccolo's sans the skull decoration.
* Halo: Nightfall going on, and his CO Jameson Locke doesn't seem to share Horrigan's disdain.
* Graham McNeill, Davin's moon goes all the way to Climate Dissonance. It's supposed to be hot and dry, and forest where they land. They arrive in the fog to find a landscape of marsh and swamp.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try has all three protagonists go through an upgrade simultaneously, although Yuuma makes adjustments to his Lightning Gundam early on for dedicated hit and run tactics by adding a long barrel to his beam rifle and a BWS for a fighter mode, similar to its original base unit's functions. Hoshino on the other hand, swaps out her Powered GM for an SD-type Gundam to support her allies.
* Good Omens would use if they had access to plastics and a moulding press."
* Goofy is generally portrayed as way too clumsy, but it gets worse in
* Hellsing and forcing her to wear bandages over it for the rest of her life.

* Harold & Kumar Escape from Guantanamo Bay, then lying back down in bed, only to see a hideous Cyclops creature next to him.
* Halloween Unspectacular and Tucker find in the titular museum tells the story of how Adolf Hitler tried to create an army of ghosts by harvesting the souls of captured Russian civilians.
* Happy Heroes short "cliff", he loses his coin and chases it into the wishing well.
* Great Mazinger increased its speed and was endowed with a retractable spike could be used to impale enemies with) relatively late in the series.
* Hellboy (2019), London is attacked by a giant skinless demon with blade-like limbs during the finale. There's also a trio of bog-standard (though heavily armed) giants terrorizing the English countryside that Hellboy is called upon to deal with.
* Gunslinger Girl, being a former ballerina, occasionally has dreams of herself practicing ballet in her life before being a cyborg; however, since her memory of her previous life has been wiped, she doesn't realize that the girl in her dreams is really her.
* Hamilton, and she and her unborn child become motivations for him while he's off fighting in the revolution.
* Grojband: In "Myme Disease", when the citizens of Peaceville discover that their favorite statue performer is actually a statue, they riot and are shown carrying torches and pitchforks.
* God-Emperor and therefore no faith, despite the incredible technological advances made that made mankind one of the powerful and united species in the galaxy.
* Heroes's third season is titled "Fugitives", with most of the main characters on the run from a government program led by Nathan Petrelli to capture and harness people with powers for military purposes.
* Good Luck Charlie: It's Christmas!) features this trope when PJ mistakenly puts on suntan oil instead of sun block and falls asleep by the pool.
* HarmoKnight with more human characters. This place is a musician's dream come true.
* Hatoful Boyfriend has best friends Hiyoko and Ryouta. Ryouta, the boy, is a gentle, very caring "vegetarian male" who loves cooking and frequently crossdresses in fetishistic maid or magical girl costumes for his various jobs. Hiyoko, the girl, is a tough, impulsive cavewoman who can't concentrate without red meat in her belly (mostly from animals she kills either bare handed or by smashing with weapons).
* Half-Life: Full Life Consequences: "Combines were robot things that weren't robots..."
* Heaven's Design Team moment between Mars and Mercury is immidiately subverted within about three panels.
* Greer was an up and coming MI6 agent until he learned that his immediate superior was a double agent who burned a close friend of his.
* Hilariously when Justin is transformed into a werewolf by his new girlfriend. He freaks out over this trope applying, but she tells him the change is actually quick and painless. Sure enough, by the time the camera pans back to him, he's already changed without even noticing.
* Harry Potter Comics inherited his father's heroic tendencies. Though with James, it's equal parts a desire to help people and a desire to have adventures like his dad (as such he ends up in over his head far more often than Harry did).
* God's Not Dead: A Light in Darkness: Pearce, Dave's brother, is an atheist while Dave and the rest of the pair's family are devout Christians from what the film indicates. He has been estranged from them for many years, ever since he'd voiced doubts about their religion which met with a poor reception (this only pushed Pearce into a total loss of faith). By the end of the film they still haven't reconciled, but it's implied the pair are at least back upon the path to a relationship.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, and still gushes about it two centuries later.
* Harry has a vision of one of Voldemort's attacks and then wonders if there's such a thing as a shower for your brain.

* Guitar Hero shirt with a similar baroque-inspired take on this style, involving many vaguely organic shapes centered around a Gibson SG controller, with cherubs facing opposite directions holding Kramer Striker controllers.
* He's also very respectful toward Linda Park (his main love interest in the comics) in "Flash and Substance". At one point she tries to give him her phone number and he
* Happy Heroes when Kalo takes on the form of a Rubix Cube to replace the one belonging to Careful S., after events he was directly involved in led to it breaking.
* Heavy Rain implies that he's going to get back together with his estranged wife despite the fact she's responsible for getting Blake to think he is the Origami Killer.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: There's an...interesting...example in this story.
* Guybrush Threepwood teases his wife when he sees a portrait of her as a baby, with her grandfather, in
* Hero House has a a shocking example, being one of the very few interpretations where Superman is killed off in the first episode!
* Hellsing than actually finishing her prey off. Notably, the Major ultimately denied her a dignified death, since she had behaved like such an idiot.
* Guinness World Records, it's also the most covered of anyone's songs. Ever.
* Gundam Build Fighters, Reiji and Aila's daughter is the cause of the Island Wars OVA events.
* Halloween comic had a girl mistake Michael for her boyfriend, and comment on how stupid his costume makes him look.
* Gundam as a whole tends to zigzag this when it comes to warships: While a ship destroyed onscreen will usually explode, scenes in past battlefields typically have plenty of clearly destroyed wrecks that are otherwise mostly in one piece.
* Harlan Ellison in 1985 had a genie with this temperament because unlike the others he couldn't be freed via rubbing his lamp. Luckily for the lamp's final owner, she figured if the lamp couldn't be rubbed open she was going to brute force the damn thing with a can opener. She ended up with a grateful genie for a friend.
* GURPS Illuminati University; students who happen to have a protractor handy will discover that all five of the corners have 90-degree angles. One of the dorms is stated as having rather similar angles.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, Zimmy, Gamma, and Annie's mental trip to Zimmy's Unhappy Place seems to happen at dream speed. Within the dream, enough time passed to wander through a city and get into a fight. But in the real world, it is short enough that only Kat — standing directly next to Annie — notices her comatose state.
* High School D×D, and Devils in general don't hold any ill intentions or preconceived notions about Angels. Angels and Fallen Angels maliciously attack Devils because "the good book" tells them to.
* Happiness, who is prone to greeting her son Yuuma enthusiastically while at school. As a result, Yuuma tends to avoid the cafeteria where she works.
* Happens to several characters when they discover Haruhi's real gender, most notably Tamaki, Kasanoda, and in the last chapter, the
* Helen Killer is the story of how Alexander Graham Bell gives an adult Helen Keller a device that allows her to see and hear, and she becomes a super-ninja, trying to stop the assassination of President McKinley and an attempt to turn all of the world's gold into lead to get revenge for losing out on the telephone patent. Seriously.
* Goblins were in fact so beloved by the writers that come Second Edition,
* Hedwig. Rather distressing given that she had been Harry's faithful pet owl for the
* Golden Sun, is the only good healer (until you meet up with the group from the original game, which includes Mia).
* Green Lantern, fought an opponent code-named the Aerialist, it became obvious that the Aerialist was under a severe delusion making him believe that his criminal actions were entirely legal and correct. Hal referenced the M'Naghten rules when wrapping up the case, his opinion being that the Aerialist would qualify for an insanity defense.

* Hearts of Dorkness, in this case being a teenager-produced shoestring-budget short that chronicles four geeks and their catastrophic efforts to create a 200 million dollar Skyrim film... on a budget of their pocket change.
* Henry Gustave Molaison underwent a lobotomy in hopes of treating severe seizures he suffered from. While it mostly resolved that issue the procedure rendered him unable to form new memories so that for the remaining decades of his life he was one of the most studied medical cases regarding such things ever. His brain was later harvested after he died in order to more directly study what parts of his brain had been destroyed to gain greater insights into how the brain forms memories.
* Heroes. At least he has the proper excuse of running/teleporting around saving the world.
* Harry Potter series. The tale of the three brothers, with Death itself acting as a character, takes it a little further into surreal, and is implied to be mythical even in the context of the series.
* Hagen could be considered the evil counterpart to Siegfried. While Siegfried is the * Good Luck! Ninomiya-kun Shungo with the intent to kill him in the last episode.
* Hellsing: Alucard himself is a living relic who more often than not seamlessly references his age in dialog. And in many abridged series pulls it off while still acting like a kid playing with toys.
* Harry Potter which is both older and superior to all of its kind, even those made more recently. Their actual creator is unknown, however, legend states that they were made by Death himself, and given to Three Brothers (Dumbledore speculates that they were actually created by the Three Brothers themselves, and their power created the legend).
* Green Lantern goes into detail about the way Rayner, Gardner, Stewart, Jordan, and Kilowog use their rings. Stewart, being an architect, has constructs that look like a blueprint, with every individual detail within them planned out. Rayner, being an artist, often uses a construct pencil to "draw" other constructs, and the eraser construct to change details about them. Gardner's ring is literally leaking green light at all times, because "his willpower can't wait to escape". Jordan likes to go for a combination of brute force and precision, hence boxing gloves, missiles, etc. Kilowog's is the only ring among the regularly appearing characters that makes a sound, and it sounds like a cannon.
* Halo 3, if you watch a saved film and freeze it, you can see the bullet casings in mid-air. On the back of each of them are the words "Chief EG-X".
* going back in time to kill Hitler wouldn't prevent the Holocaust or World War 2—than he was) would have continued his work if he was assassinated. Also, even if Hitler didn't come into power and lead the Nazi Party, racism, anti-Semitism, ableism, homophobia, etc. existed centuries before he was born, and live on to this day. It wouldn't be a stretch to assume that if Hitler didn't stir up the prejudices of the 1930s German public in order to get political support, someone else would have done so.
* Harry Turtledove), the protagonist drops out of FTL travel at a point he considered safe according to hopelessly outdated starmaps. He was just barely right.
* Hellsing. Seras is also an example, as she goes from a police girl with a tragic past to an elite vampire soldier and even takes Alucard's position for a while.
* Heteronormative Crusader, and we want to protect people from engaging in such disgusting activities such as that.
* Grosse Pointe Blank, Martin at one point visits the grave of his father, pouring a bottle of whiskey on top of it with a stone-faced expression, before dumping the bottle by the gravestone and wandering off. It's less about respect, and more about the implication that his dad was an abusive drunk.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, in which he has answered over 5000 questions at the time of this edit

* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged when Pip asks Seras about her childhood she has a flashback of her parents being murdered and the murderers raping her mother's corpse.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, trying see what's wrong. He nearly gets his face toasted when it finally launches its payload.
* Hearts of Iron: Being a franchise of historical grand strategy games set in the era of World War 2, it naturally has various anti-air options just like in real life: There's anti-air artillery, tank variations, ship variations, and static anti-air defenses. There's also the fighter-type airplanes that specialize in attacking other aircraft. Some of the ministers that can be hired to your cabinet also provide additional bonuses to anti-air weapons.
* Heroes of Might and Magic ever since its debut in the third game. Cerberi are able to attack multiple foes in the same turn due to their multiple heads, and their attacks are often so ferocious that the opponent is unable to counter attack.
* GURPS makes headshots a very tempting target with a 4x damage multiplier and even if the damage isn't lethal requires an immediate (nearly impossible) roll to avoid being stunned and knocked down. The penalty to hit, however, is very large.
* Heathers, as Kurt and Ram have lines in “Beautiful” suggesting they’re not quite as mean as they appear, while the overall story makes the point that they were only high school kids and might have changed given the time and opportunity.
* Half Past Adventure, in an attempt to give them the dignity they didn't get in life.
* Happy Days. Fonzie is thought to be dead and some gangsters hide stolen loot in a false bottom of his casket.
* Hercules (Pure Magic) has Deianira declare that she will only marry a man who can keep his promise to love her.
* "Gryffindors" than they are to call themselves by any other blanket fandom nickname.
* Harry Potter has the Dursleys providing a roof over his head, and his parents' money for expenses in the magical world.
* Green Arrow, but Vertigo affects him much worse than it does Canary).
* Heart of Steel, while she thinks he looks very dapper in his pseudo-Victorian tux rather than the lab coats that he'd been exclusively wearing up to this point.
* Guy for Lois, whether it's as himself or as Superman. Clark is appealing as the farm boy who's new to the big city and wins her over with his kindness, dorky charm and down-to-earth nature, while Superman is appealing as the brave, altruistic, larger-than-life hero who literally sweeps her off her feet, comes to her rescue, and shows her all sorts of fantastic things. In a lot of incarnations, his small-town upbringing and idealism act as the perfect balance to Lois' streetwise cynicism.
* Half-Life 2, but only after they commandeered the defeated Combine's propaganda system.
* Her father also does it near the end, who responds to dangerous or stressful situations by using ink as cover/an irritant while they swim away.
* Grand Theft Auto III fare rather than the player being behind bars for the whole game (or at least a few minutes, considering the series) is because the Colombian Cartel decided to hold up the convoy and take this one prisoner.
* Goldfinger talking only makes him more intimidating. The only sound he makes is screaming when he is electrocuted while trying to retrieve his metal hat when bond electrocutes the metal bars the hat is stuck in.
* Heroic Sacrifice: The hero lets themselves get killed in order to save others.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone Harry is picked as seeker for the Quidditch team after making a fifty-foot dive and a one-handed catch of Neville's Remembrall during his first time on a broomstick.
* Greg parodied movies in the early stages of the comic, including Green Lantern and Transformers 3.
* Gogol is initially presented as the Russian version of Division but Nikita quickly points out that while they employ many former government agents, they have always been just a mercenary organization. They are later revealed to be part of a Russian

* Halo for the expressed purpose of fighting rebellious colonists, and hundreds of super soldiers from war orphans for the expressed purpose of sending them to die on suicide missions before they even passed prematurely-induced puberty. Their agents are all pretty enigmatic and operate outside the bounds of the law, often without any moral or ethical limits. It has its own propaganda arm, and the Human-Covenant war has made it so powerful that its director has kept some of its operations secret even from the rest of HIGHCOM, even if those operations are designed to undermine official UNSC foreign policy.
* Gotham Central to Firebug. It's only a second story fall, though, so he survives with a few broken bones.
* Greenback says "Penfold, shush!" in "The Ultra Secret Secret." DM says he'll ignore his line being stolen.
* Hilarious in FlashbackEvents in a flashback turn out to be funny because the audience knows the present state of things
* Guardians of the Galaxy the infinity stone has a tendency to quickly damage and then kill those who attempt to wield it without proper precautions. Luckily carrying cases that can contain it seem to be pretty easy to procure.
* Green Lantern (2011) movie has Hector Hammond infected with a strain of Parallax and gradually gain psychic powers. He starts reading minds naturally but learns he can tap into deeper memories via direct contact.
* Harry Potter who can't shut up about how it's corrupting children, though this controversy came much later in the day.
* Grand Theft Auto) have wheels rather than tracks, making it look more like an APC or tank destroyer.
* GrimGrimoire won't stop badgering him to fall in love with her so he can turn into a handsome man again.
* Harry had a taste for dramatics to begin with, especially when in a bad mood.
* G-Saviour. They're pretty much what happens if you combine the Earth Federation with the Principality of Zeon.
* Hearts of Ice: Ranma is fighting a legion of kuei (a sort of Chinese ghost) in a mountain when he is suddenly back in Nerima, surrounded by Akane, his family and friends, and with no memory of the Mountain, its inhabitants and the blood spell. Ranma nearly falls for the illusion until he notices Dr. Tofu's uncharacterically serene in the presence of Kasumi. He quickly fires a ki blast at his "friends", frightening the kuei and dispelling their mirage.
* Gore Vidal and blamed it for a drop in sales of the book that lasted a decade.
* Happy Heroes: Season 3 episode 3 showcases Big M. being so ugly that it makes everyone who sees his face vomit. Besides that, though, one part of the episode has him look into a mirror, which breaks from his ugliness in an instant.
* Harry Potter), Uncle Vernon will go into a yelling tirade, Aunt Petunia will scream or gasp, and Dudley will try to hide. Also, Aunt Petunia bursts into tears whenever she's proud of Dudley and let's just say he doesn't exactly have to work hard to make her proud.
* Hero: The Guardian Smurf fertility blessing, Smurfette bore Hero's second child, his daughter Miracle.
* Harlem Beat, we have Naruse-Sawamura duo both in their streetball and highschool team.
* Granblue Fantasy has the Nekomancer a pun-based class with cat themes and MP which stands for Meow Points.
* Halo 4 from internal bays, immediately engaging the Covenant remnant forces above the shield world.
* Gundam has commented, in later years, that he chose to use particle beam weapons over more realistic lasers for dramatic purposes, feeling that the invisibility and unerring accuracy of lasers would make for boring combat sequences.
* He also makes up the name of a fictional car salesman — "Phil Baharnd".
* Grant Morrison plays with this trope through the character of a Pornomancer called "Tex Porneau". Porneau uses the black semen(!) of Dutch posthuman pornstar(!) Anders Klimaxx(!) to create giant magical flying death-sperm(!) which are unleashed to fatally attack any creature with a uterus.

* Harry Potter, among others. One potter in Houston named Harry Potter actually had to change the name of his store to "Harry the Potter" due to the people looking for magic tricks. Also affects anyone named Hermione.
* Halo: Broken Circle, one of the few morally outstanding Prophets given focus, holds doubts regarding his religion from studying "sacred" relics, i.e. advanced electronics and technology.
* Hellboy (2004) appear, dressed as a knight and a dragon respectively, in the scene where a costume party is attacked.
* GSN originals since 2007 or so are known for sponsoring anything associated with the game show.
* going off on a suicide mission alone. Sure, he promised Ax that he wouldn't tell Jake. But Jake is his prince. So if Jake ordered him to tell the truth...
* Happily N'Ever After, a mid-credits scene reveals Frieda was transported to the Arctic after getting knocked through a portal. She complains as she gets surrounded by elephant seals.
* Hightown: Alan Santille, who always insists on procedures being followed.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi. When Yumi asks them if they have anything better to do, they answer "Nah".
* Happy Endings. However, the ratings, already unacceptable by just about any broadcast standard, dropped to such microscopic levels that when ABC did cancel it, no one would touch it (despite supposed interest from USA Network).
* Go Animate community, there's "bad user", "opinion disrespector" and "baby show lover", commonly used in videos where a certain person is punished in their video.
* Hell, it's not even clear whether the harem is unwanted! On one hand, he doesn't return any of the feelings at the moment, and probably won't for a while. One the other hand, he
* Green Arrow #24, Shado knocks Green Arrow to prevent him going to fight Count Vertigo while injured, then goes to fight Vertigo herself.
* Harry is raised by a snake in the Forbidden Forest. As "king" of the snakes he receives tributes which occasionally include gems and wizarding currency, which he disregards due to snakes not having any idea how a monetary system works.
* He stays hours past closing time (he was kicked out because the personnel wanted to go home), forces them to make runs to the grocery store, and eats far more than any thoughtful person would (he emptied the restaurant's entire food stock
* Gordy a young boy is sitting on the diving board over a pool as he talks to his new friend. Of course, when he gets up to leave, he loses his balance and falls in.
* Harry Potter if the brothers actually met him or if they were just powerful wizards who made the Hallows and the story about him was just something that sprung up to explain their creation. Dumbledore tells Harry that this is his personal interpretation of the story.
* Heroes it in situations where it might be useful (for instance, on Nathan at the end of season 3). Her blood had previously restored her adoptive father to life. A shame he didn't mention this when her biological father needed it, and her grandmother was frantic to preserve him. Even stupider, her grandmother should have already known about it because of Adam.
* Heartstrings (You've Fallen for Me) in South Korea. The Filipino dub kept the international title.
* Goofy. He later did similar voices for other studios and was even the original Bozo the Clown.
* Guter Junge is about a man who finds out that his 17-year-old son likes younger boys and doesn't know what on earth to do about it. Sven, the son, has a relationship with a fatherless, neglected boy of 12 or 13, Patrick, whom he tutors after school, and who plainly looks up to him. However, the trope is subverted in that with this boy and with an 11-year-old he's seen hanging out with at a party, Sven is happy to follow the boy's lead. Patrick wants to be an actor, so the two go to the movies together. The other boy wants to play the family CD collection for Sven, so that's what they do. Far from getting a kick out of being the 'older man', Sven is fixated on boyhood: he keeps his old toys around, shaves all his body hair and feels glum about turning 18.

* Gorillaz, at least in Phases 1 & 2. Murdoc beat him up, stole his girlfriends, regularly insulted and humiliated him, yet 2D still referred to Murdoc as his 'best mate' and often either aided in his antics or looked the other way from the more... dubious behavior. He finally seems to have sharpened up in the Plastic Beach arc, openly resenting Murdoc and his growing insanity.
* Green Lantern" when he died, compared to most dead heroes who most assuredly weren't.
* Hermione also has her moments, with her working for House Elf rights even though they have
* Glorianna, both Lord Vasgor (brother of King Arven) and Zorko (advisor to Duke Thanaktos) play this role.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, Onizuka goes into the home of a student whose parents are having trouble with their marriage, and proceeds to knock down the wall between the student's room and her parents' room to make a point.
* Hat's "Thousand Worlds" short stories. Through genetic engineering, the Prometheans are bigger, stronger, faster, and mentally they are always "three steps ahead", to quote a Promethean character from "Nightflyers". It's theorized that they live longer than non-augmented humans as well.
* Here Come the Brides was also married and lose interest in him. Jeremy tries to propose to Candy a few times, but something always happens to get between them.
* Hellblazer tends to sing the bawdy kind when pissed out of his mind.
* Hack/Slash villain Emily Christy was briefly known as Ms. America and in her second major appearance as Ouroboros.
* Here's an article detailing the gesture's, er, singular history in the sport.
* Heavy Object. Oddly, this method is also used for closeups of characters' hands from time to time.
* Gundam AGE are all fanatically loyal to Lord Ezelcant without exception, deeming the extermination of all non-Veigans from their prized Eden to be a national goal/ideal.
* Grand Theft Auto IV. Still, he takes it with reasonable good cheer, and having his cousin around does make him rich.
* Half-Life 2 (and their attendant new zombie types) include one that apparently DOES use the host body to reproduce, then FLINGS THE OFFSPRING AT YOU.
* Hell Inc, the economy of Hell revolves around the use of processed souls as currency, although some souls are spared this literal objectification and recruited as potential demons. In the day-to-day existence of Hell, Inc., the system mostly exists just to sustain itself with the suffering of those it consumes and benefit the higher-ranking demons, rather than in earnest service of a divine justice.
* Goof Troop in the second half of the pilot when Pete is about to catch PJ after he had played with Max against his father's wishes:
* harmless pranks to various people at work during April Fools' Day., and landing into a trash can after a fall from the ceiling. SpongeBob is far from amused and runs out of the Krusty Krab in tears as the on-lookers walk out, disgusted by Squidward's cruelty.
* Hbomberguy to satirize climate change deniers. "Having done the research," Hbomb enthusiastically decides horses do not exist because he doesn't like them.
* High School D×D Her older sister Kuroka has cat ears and tail all the time as she has embraced her heritage.
* Gundam Build Divers Re:RISE, but only succeeds in taking May and Sarah out of the fight before Riku and Hiroto finish him off.
* Hearthstone has Cairne Bloodhoof, who, when killed, is replaced with his son Baine. This trope applies in that the two of them are statistically identical.
* Harry Turtledove) she orders the files erased... and goes after the copy downloaded by a xeno-anthropology professor... and tries to shut up the survey team... and tracks down which of the professor's students has a copy....
* Harry Potter. Nearly-Headless Nick was decapitated, but not all the skin got cut. The remaining skin should tear apart from the weight of his head but instead acts as a very sturdy hinge. Justified since he's a ghost and his head doesn't actually have any weight.

* Hellbound: Hellraiser II) showed up, with a new Chatterer (dubbed Chatterer III, even though Chatterer II was merely just the original with enhancements) eventually appearing.
* Hide In Plain Sight - A man is attempting to find his children, who went with their mother and step-father after his ex-wife's new husband leaves organized crime and goes into Witness Protection.
* Hawkman's enemy is a sculptor named Boris Nickaloff who has invented plasm-clay. By carving it into human shape piece by piece and injecting it with adrenalin, the form comes to life and is loyal. Nickaloff names his first creation Czar and has him steal for him with the intention of financing a trip to South America where he'll create an entire army of plasm-clay men. However, Hawkman learns that the statue-man breathes and aims to choke him with a bolas. Nickaloff, protective of his creation, jumps in the weapon's path and is suffocated himself. The statue-man flees and Hawkman gives chase after retrieving the bolas. His next throw does strangle the statue-man.
* Golf. From those who aren't fans, it's regarded as monotonous, luck-based, aristocratic, unathletic (since some people just drive carts to wherever the ball is instead of walking), and associated with square old rich people in clown pants. Even if you don't use a cart, it's widely not considered to be particularly "athletic". Dave Barry once discussed it by breaking down the calories burned into various categories like "sauntering," "squinting," and "saying things like 'You certainly did double bogey that mashie niblick, Ted! Ha ha!'" For ironic points, in order to combat the idea that golf isn't athletic, there are rules regarding the use of carts on the pro-circuit, mainly that unless you can prove beyond reasonable doubt (seriously, you jump though a ridiculous amount of hoops) you can't walk the distance involved, you walk the course. This leads to many people, who happen to catch a few minutes of golf on TV, to question why the players don't just ride in the carts to help speed the slow game up. Its image as the pastime of the classist, privileged elite (despite the highly contrarian face of the sport, Tiger Woods) certainly does not help matters.
* Harry and Deadpool are up against a feral Wolverine and Sabertooth.
* Hana-chan is very hyperactive and spends most of her time being happy-go-lucky. She has been compared to other genki girls, including
* Hagane no Renkinjutsushi build the bridge on the other side of the stream without Alphonse's help. So the game subverts this trope just to play it straight afterwards.
* Goku Black believes that everything mortals do, no matter how noble or evil, is a sin and must be exterminated. He also comes to believe the gods are no better since they do nothing about mortals. It's for this reason he believes the only person worth living in all realities is just himself.
* He's also claimed his strength is in the support of Camelot, and that he is much wiser for accepting the advice of others. The one person he does not accept the advice of? Merlin, who is
* Grand Theft Auto, player character John Marston won't make use of their services. If he passes by one and she propositions him, he'll politely turn her down with something along the lines of, "Sorry, ma'am, I'm married."
* Hidan, Kakuzu, Konan and Pain appear in this game outside of sillhouetes.
* Halo Wars has the Barrage ability wherein it launches a salvo of missiles at a ground target. It's also equipped with two air-to-air missile launchers.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, where said prince's notes in an old Potions textbook have allowed Harry to become top of the class. When he has to hide the book to protect his secret from Snape, his performance in class predictably drops; Potions master Professor Slughorn, however, sees nothing odd in this, as it starts shortly after Harry begins dating Ginny Weasley.
* Hell on Earth in which the apocalypse was a failed scientific experiment instead of a nuclear war, while the Legion of Caesar is turned into cultists from the Otherworld.

* Harvest Moon, missing a Relationship Upgrade means you miss 2/3 of the game.
* Harry also does one to Ron at the latter's Uranus joke, and Thor gets one from
* Hail To The Queen, the Boiling Isles are caught up in one that has lasted for many years between Belos' empire and a growing rebellion. Part of the plot is Luz being left to pick up the reigns of said empire in its battle against the rebellion while trying to finish the portal home.
* Goddess Reborn Chronicle, each of which are also fantasy kitchen sinks, if focusing on different mythologies.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality boosted Harry's intelligence.
* Goh Hinogami is an assassin. He's a creepy-looking albino and a relentless killing machine. Still, he does work for and was trained by J6.
* Hideo Kojima will be the end to the series, possibly just to keep fans guessing.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Hagrid, Charlie and another wizard sing the song after getting drunk at Bill and Fleur's wedding.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: The war between the Nova Empire and the Kree Empire has just ended before the beginning of the film. However, Ronan has other ideas, being a racial extremist.
* Hermione's stubborn arrogance and ruthlessness are also greatly toned down in the movies.
* Haruspication, Hieromancy and Hieroscopy: An ancient art of investigating the entrails of sacrificial animals in order to see what the future holds.
* High Noon parody. The bartender slides a metal mug of beer to Russ, but it stops short, so he produces a large horseshoe magnet to pull it the rest of the way.
* He also has a chest warmer made of goose grease and bread pudding. Apparently he stuffs that down his shirt instead of down his throat but it keeps him going so whatever works.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Dumbledore tries to recruit a recalcitrant Slughorn. Just after the latter's interest is finally raised, the headmaster wryly says "I think I know a lost cause when I see it." It works.
* GunBuster), in which Japan wins World War III and forms a global empire. This is only hinted at in the main story, however. With the only big indicator being that most of the military is stated to be part of the 'Imperial Earth Forces.'
* Green Lantern) notes, "congratulations Daxam. You finally got the alien you deserve."
* Greyhawk. Having plenty of friendly druids and rangers keeping the place clean likely helps.
* Hagrid's reaction to only narrowly escaping the most powerful dark wizard of all times:
* Gundam Build Fighters, who dons a black ninja garb, with katana and everything, whenever he's spying on someone/something.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince can only be lifted with blood, if only because the caster wanted to make sure no one could enter without hurting themselves. Dumbledore is actually disappointed that Voldemort couldn't come up with something more inventive.
* Hate Sink: I'm a douche just so you dumbass viewers can have someone to hate.
* Gunnerkrigg Court has Zimmy and Gamma. Zimmy's reality-warping powers are uncontrollable except when she's around Gamma. Even though Zimmy's normally rude and dislikes everyone, she's outright stated that she loves Gamma, and indeed seems to be happy only in her presence. Annie even states that she thinks the two girls are "an item" when Jack tells her that he is in love with Zimmy. Their relationship is not all it seems, though. Gamma speaks only Polish, and communicates with Zimmy telepathically, with Zimmy providing translations for her - to make sure Gamma never leaves her, Zimmy intentionally mistranslates what other people say, to make Gamma think all the other students think she's stupid and ugly. Gamma seems to at least be aware of the mistranslations, to a point.
* Gold Digger: I'm not here for a relationship. I just want your money.
* He subtracted a point for Aelita making an extremely rude suicide attempt.
* Greatfellas Mel Tormé is a country-western singer, a Bible thumper and a government informant. According to the younger Tormé, "everything he's not in this life." Whether he still has a son named Tracy in this world isn't mentioned.

* Highway 61 has Mr. Watson, who is trying to bring his three daughters to stardom.
* Gottlieb shows a lovestruck golfer with heart symbols floating around his head while he gazes at his girl.
* Heathers, Veronica and Jason elude a police officer by not just kissing, but also by disrobing and getting into a car. Notably, they do attract attention — just not for the shooting. Over radio, another officer asks whether or not the two are having full-blown sex.
* he dies, which makes him no more than sixteen when he met Vash. So he's kind of this for the entire series.
* Gran Turismo 5. Only a handful of people have gotten Gold for all three trials with a standard PS3 controller.
* Hellsing. He does at least attempt to limit his body count to those who actually are a part of the battle he's in.
* Hey Arnold! suffered the most — "Football Head", "Hair Boy", "Arnoldo", "Goody Two-Shoes"... but she had a name for everybody. Other nicknames include "Geraldo" and "Tall Hair Boy" (Gerald), "Pink Boy" (Harold), "Princess" (Rhonda), and "Ms. Perfect" (Lila).
* Growing Pains had Mike score high on an IQ test after drawing a picture of a tree on the answer sheet.
* He apologizes, and apparently dies. But later-apparently he had just enough energy left to pull together a human form, and get a Nice Hat
* grave dodgers, you're probably out of luck: it'll beat you to death right then and there.
* Harry Potter doesn't have an official, formal title, but his fans in-universe have been known to greet him as such: The Boy Who Lived, and any combination of the nicknames/titles/monikers he's been given throughout the series.
* Good Luck Charlie Jo, in "Duncan vs. Duncan", turns up on the doorstep in a dress for the cotillion, prompting a jaw drop and "wow" from Gabe.
* Hilariously enough, the TARDIS has shown elements of this, acting a bit testy when people bring up the large number of female companions the Doctor has had. She especially doesn't like Clara. She locks her out at least
* Herman's Head That one's gonna be a little harder to work into conversation." Later in the episode Louise's voice is heard triumphantly piping up with that phrase over the din of conversation and the audience is left wondering what gave her the necessary opening.
* Hengeyokai into the tricksters of the Beast Court (where the were-snakes filled the roles of Balance Wyrm's agents).
* Hair is an odd variant of this trope. Several songs —"I Believe in Love", "Going Down", "Abie Baby/Fourscore", "Frank Mills" and "What a Piece of Work Is Man" — were recorded, but cut for pacing and runtime. They were included in the original soundtrack album, but cut from the 1990 re-issue. Instrumental versions of "Don't Put It Down" and "Somebody to Love" are used as background music for several scenes. The odd part is that three songs on the soundtrack — "Air", "My Conviction" and "Don't Put It Down" — were recorded by the cast exclusively for the soundtrack. Not because they were intended for the film, but because they were in the original play.
* Harvest Moon 64 and other future games looks like a teenager but can be married.
* Happy Ending Massage kind of "parlor" and hits on his masseuse. Jasmine corrects him by throwing him in a wristlock and marching him back to Phoebe.
* Harry Potter fans aren't fully aware of how little of Harry's world originated with J.K. Rowling. (The exception is that if you are even vaguely aware of alchemy or one of the other works that used it, then you would know at least that Rowling did not invent the Philosopher's Stone.)
* Hiei as bait, although actually letting the Dragon have the soul is not required. Still, it is very dangerous — one false move, and the wielder is devoured by the dragon.
* Hello Rockview in which all the songs follow a general theme of growing up and leaving home. It helps that the lyrics sheet takes the form of a comic book, showing a man returning to his hometown and realizing that he no longer belongs there.

* Headhunter from escaping. It responds by shutting down life support, so Avon overrides Orac's objects to rescue the crew, with inevitable consequences.
* Harsher in Hindsight with Kazuaki Nanaki's narcolepsy. He has a tendency to fall asleep with his eyes open, and a lot of the odd stuff he just accepts as normal is suggested to be a result of him falling asleep and his body continuing on autopilot as if he were aware of the conversation.
* Gold Digger, though it might have been topical when it was printed. Galford, a member of the Quirky Miniboss Squad, after getting some augmentations, changes his name to "大死". His boss's reaction:
* He's in possession of a book (the Book of Friends) that happens to contain the name of (
* Gunnerkrigg Court. After introducing a large artificial habitat room, containing a grassy field with a large cherry tree, the author notes below the page:
* Hard Rain to secure $3 million in stolen cash hidden in a town that is slowly disappearing beneath flood waters.
* Half-Life 2 and the Combine conquering the planet. This raises several questions, the biggest being: why bother trying to cover up what happened in Black Mesa if the whole world was conquered by aliens shortly after, which would obviously be pretty hard for people to miss. It's posssible the cover up was more about hiding the fact that humans were behind the whole thing, however.
* Hero Oh Hero starts with no shirt whatsoever and later gets an open vest.
* Government propaganda targeted at an enemy intentionally invokes this trope, especially during wartime.
* Heart of Darkness (1958) a character says to her "little brother" who she hasn't seen for several years: "You're not a cub anymore, are you? You're a panther now, grown black and shiny."
* Halo: Combat Evolved. Then this trope got inverted as more Spartan-IIs were revealed to have survived (or not even been present during) the Fall of Reach.
* Happens after Timmy tries to snorkel deep in the water and ends up coughing up a bunch of garbage... along with Cosmo in his goldfish form.
* hide's PV for the song "Misery", where hide holds a cardboard sign with the words "Stay Free My Misery" in English.
* Hilda shows up, she doesn't hesitate to use Frida as a distraction for the beast.
* Grand Finale was dedicated to Kent Holaday, who was in charge of animation lip syncing on the show.
* Hannah Montana had Miley and Jackson throw a makeshift party for Robbie Ray and invite a few people, one of whom is the guy who blows up the balloons.
* Henry Blake was put on trial after Frank and Margaret leveled charges on how he was running the unit. Hawkeye and Trapper manage to get Henry off the hook after doing a little blackmail on Frank.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try. When Sekai asks if that'll happen with him, Yuuma gives him a quick, blunt "No, never."
* Gravity Falls: The commercial for the Huggy Wuvvy Tummy Bundle baby carrier begins with a man trying to eat pizza while holding a baby under his arm like a football as a voice says, "Hey, you! Sick of constantly dropping your baby?"
* Hellsister Trilogy sees Darkseid put in motion his plan for universal domination. He comes real close to succeed because of the Anti-Life Equation, but he is stopped by an army of heroes.
* Half-Life 1, arriving there and realising you're on a rock island suspended in some sort of nebula extending all the way below the horizon with no ground below you, just more startlingly alien sky... it's a pretty cool moment.
* Grey Griffin, initially voiced minor character Lance before becoming Lincoln's third regular voice actor. Hammond's successor, Asher Bishop, also initially voiced Simon Sharp before getting cast as Lincoln.
* God Serena, the #1 Wizard Saint and strongest of the Four Emperors of Ishgal, views himself as the up-and-coming rival of * Guardians of the Galaxy (2014) gasps in shock when Rocket mocks the death of Drax's family.

* Gold Box game Pools of Darkness has an enemy, Kalistes the Marilith, who has a number of 'children', standard D&D monsters, who she naturally wishes to spread all over the Realms. As it happens, neither her rulership over the drow (in the usual Forgotten Realms setting this is Lolth) nor her production of many of the standard monsters are standard for the D&D setting.
* Harry Potter books, every player on the Slytherin Quidditch team either has a male first name or is referred to only by their surname. In the first film, however, their Keeper (Miles Bletchley in the book) is replaced by a girl.
* Heaven Will Be Mine, Saturn, Pluto, and Luna-Terra are technically enemies because of their allegiances to factions that are in opposition to each other, and they spend most of the game in conflict with each other, but that doesn't stop them from flirting — or even making out — with each other.
* got off to a promising start their first playoff game since 1994, the latter of which was done with a shorthanded roster and coaching staff plus a limited amount of practice days due to COVID-19. They went out in the divisional round in a competitive loss to the Chiefs.
* Groin, ears, eyes, nose, throat, and the knees are all targets where a weaker opponent can do
* Godzilla: Replay, hasn't been updated since 2013, and the creator announced that the story is on an indefinite hiatus (although not cancelled).
* Hilarious Outtakes and tromps over it on his way into the scene. He manages to stay in character and continue the scene for about fifteen seconds before he cracks up.
* Harry Potter are taken to Hogwarts in the spring, but spend a montage in the summer learning about the wizarding world so that they're not out of their depth when they start classes in the fall.
* he's actually the avatar of their universe's God. is hit, Tenchi ups the number to five.
* Happens more traditionally near the beginning of the manga, Negi places a * Go win the game." They did, went on to win the tournament, and brought the trophy to Ware's hospital room.
* Guilty Gear has a heat gauge, and a good deal of his moves make it climb. If he overheats he explodes and damages himself and gives his opponent an opening. To prevent this, one of what would be his normal moves (his forward heavy slash) makes him vent steam, which he must do regularly to keep the heat under control. Of course, the steam itself is more potent the more heat he builds up first, and venting when he's seconds away from overheating creates a gigantic plume that does respectable damage and sets his opponent on fire.
* grimoire. Unfortunately for most people, even a single grimoire has a habit of killing or mentally turning its reader into a vegetable without preparations.
* Going My Way, Father O'Malley likes St. Dominic's and would probably prefer to stay and be the parish priest. But he was sent there to right the ship for a church that was struggling financially, and that having been achieved, he is dispatched to another ailing parish. Father Fitzgibbon, the old priest at St. Dominic's, is disappointed.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, best exemplified in the prison breakout scene.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony to Brucie. After watching Brucie getting tormented for several missions he finally gets fed up and decks Mori, breaking his nose. During the credits it shows them facing off in the LC Fight Club.
* Healing Factor, it can regenerate from just about any injury it takes.
* Hard-liners in the Draconis Combine tend to be very misogynistic: it's much harder for a woman to rise to a position of power in the Draconis Combine than in any other Successor State, even though they're freely allowed to serve as warriors.
* He also does it with monsters when he doesn't like their real names. In
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law; made of Rapid-Fire Comedy and ADHD. Emphasis on "hyperactivity".

* Harley Quinn (2019): Just like in the original cartoon, Condiment King wears an actual pair of white briefs over his poorly designed costume, which only serve to make him look even more ridiculous than he already would.
* Half Life. Valve essentially imported the original meshes and graphics from the first game into their new engine, resulting in the only appreciable changes being the introduction of physics and improved water effects. It's gotten some pretty heavy flak from the fanbase.
* Half-Empty Two-Shot - A shot of one character is composed asymmetrically, as if the character is in a two-shot with an invisible second character
* Gundam Wing's ZERO System sets up a mental link between pilot and machine, allowing for speed-of-thought reaction times. Combined with the amount of battle data fed directly into the pilot's brain, this makes the system extremely dangerous to use since it can send anything other than a perfectly focused mind spiraling into total madness.
* High Times Future: All (or most) of today's illegal drugs will eventually become decriminalized and popular.
* Hey Arnold! episode "Bio-Square" has Arnold and Helga locked in a greenhouse together. The sink they use to brush their teeth starts dripping water, keeping Helga awake all night. She later on loses her temper because of it and yanks the faucet off to stop it, flooding the entire greenhouse with the two of them inside.
* Green Arrow (an anti-Warg group) help a murderous Warg to escape from prison - killing several guards in the process - and leave behind evidence that other Wargs were responsible to give them an excuse to start a full-scale hunt for the Wargs.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. These're be comfirmed in their profile especially:
* Hellboy: "I will give you a brief, brief glimpse into the future..."
* Harry and the Shipgirls had the first war against Voldemort last an additional 20 years before its conclusion, meaning Harry Potter's generation was born around 2000 instead of 1980.
* Green Arrow's "secret identity" as Oliver Queen. Between his not-particularly-concealing mask and incredibly distinctive facial hair, anyone who's met them both will know that it's him. It doesn't help that Green Arrow is one of the more politically outspoken heroes, which means even his stated philosophies line up with Oliver's. In one case a policeman working with Green Arrow came to his house and, on being asked how he knew his identity, hadn't even known it was supposed to be a secret. His to-be sidekick Mia also recognized him instantly, not least because he was claiming to be a good friend of the Green Arrow. The best he could hope for is people thinking he's got a twin.
* Grumpy Bear: Some anti-heroes are cynical when in an idealistic world.
* Hainish has New South Georgia and New Tahiti (AKA Athshe, its native name, and World 41), named after the archipelago that forms the bulk of its above-water landmass.
* Heroes has a subversion. When DL goes to visit Niki in jail, it looks like they're going to do this, but since DL's power is that he can pass through solid objects, they actually get to hold hands.
* Henry Cavill Superman, Cavill himself is easygoing and even playful and comes across as very charming and humorous in interviews.
* Harry and the Hendersons: Jacques LaFleur seeks to kill Harry to prove Bigfoot is real.
* Great Teacher Onizuka: There are a good number of gags involving Onizuka and his depositions. Once a teacher tried to punch him and Onizuka used like shield a cardboard box where he carried a sample of his feces to a medical examination. Cue the unfortunate teacher needing urgently a bath.
* her mother and father had lost another little girl 10 years ago and had adopted this one to look, dress, and act just like her, going so far as to get her a nose job and dye her hair.
* Golden Sun games had a fair few summons that did this — and, being summons, they could naturally target anywhere you happened to be battling, even inside caves or buildings — but only Eclipse (a dragon) and Isis were in space at the time.

* Green Goblin does a legitimate version of this in the "Return of the Green Goblin" storyline; after receiving a righteous beating from Spidey, he quietly asks him to just kill him and end it (the story had revealed that he has considered killing himself probably more than once, but simply cannot do it).
* Grasp the Sun: A character about to attempt a superhuman feat mimes grasping the sun.
* Hazbin Hotel). This is used for sinister effect, as a reflection of his demonic powers.
* Grisaia Series: The female cast of Mihama Academy is rather easily susceptible to this kind of behavior, no matter which heroine the protagonist ends up with.
* Hammer of Daemons. Some of the Daemons he manipulates are aware that he's playing them, but they are compelled to go along by their own greed, paranoia, and rage.
* Hercules: The Animated Series, after Hercules is dropped into a maze, Icarus's father Daedalus tries to give him a series of directions to the exit.
* .hack//G.U. series allows players to fall in love with and marry another male, Endrance.
* Helga/Arnold is the most notable couple on the show, although Helga takes it more seriously than most people of her age. Hints are dropped several times that there will be a future relationship between the two. Had the canceled "Jungle Movie" been made (
* Harbourmaster some shade of brown, although that's simply cultural preference on their part.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Tom Riddle tells Wormtail he will get to "perform a task most [his] followers would give their right hand to perform" — little does Wormtail know that to perform the task you literally have to sacrifice your right hand as a flesh offering for Dark Magic.
* Heroes in Crisis Barbara Gordon swapped out her popular purple practical "Burnside" costume for a boring gray and yellow ensemble that included what appeared to be a domino mask with tiny bat-ears that popped up from her hair. Coming off of the more popular "Burnside" costume, it was seen as a major step back for the character with the mask being the major mocking point.
* Heir Club for Men: Royal inheritance can only be passed from father to son, or any male relative available (with exceptions)
* H. G. Wells alloy of metals and helium called “cavorite.” This is how they get to the moon.
* half and EVE consists of their own and each other's names. The third most common word is "directive".
* God himself to be this, as he considers all of reality to be part of his personal entertainment. Thus, the conflicts between Heaven and Hell, monsters roaming the Earth, the Leviathans being a Sealed Evil in a Can
* Harmony Theory, Max Cash is a criminal mastermind with complex plans to seize ultimate power, which require the sacrifice of specific individuals. He also admits that he sets fire to schools and kills random people he runs into even if it is unnecessary because it is fun and makes him happy.
* Godzilla: The Series, the episode S.C.A.L.E. is done in documentary style where the the title terrorists have their actions filmed. Near the end of the episode, Alexandra Springer, the leader begged Audrey Timmonds to tell the world her world, claiming "The World has a right to know. However, in the end Audrey decided not to tell the story and chooses to instead throw the Tape in the fire, saying there are some stories that are best left untold, as she and Nick watch the tape burn and melt in the fire.
* Goku can't breathe in space and when the Saiyans arrived, it began to focus a lot on martial arts, epic adventure and sci-fi.
* Happens once to both frustrate the fans and for pure comedy. When everyone in Miseryville falls asleep Jimmy's the only one awake, so when he gets to Heloise's house and finds her asleep like Cinderella, he finds a book next to her that says that tells of the wake-up kiss. He appears to consider it, but dismisses it and chucks the book away.
* Hamlet, Laertes is introduced briefly as a character in the first act, before departing for most of the play's storyline. He returns in the fourth act and plays a major role at the end of the play.

* Halak forces Kurvok into retirement and becomes Overlord, but this is long after Marr began pulling the strings and became the real driving force behind the Krogan Rebellions.
* Hanayamata) on a promise to go see a movie together. When there is still much time before the appointment, Yaya runs into Hana (a newcomer girl, towards whom Yaya at the time has an unvoiced grudge for stealing Naru's attention). The relationship improves between the two in their hanging out, but Yaya ends up forgetting the date until it's too late.
* Harry Potter and the Escape from Gringotts, the riders are attacked at every turn from the likes of security trolls as well as Bellatrix and Voldemort themselves. The main trio end up having to spend extra time in the bank just to save them.
* Gold Digger: She's okay with staying at home and you being the breadwinner... but don't count on her to run the home or raise your children.
* Grace looks at her bloodied hand after savagely attacking Damien which reminds her that Damien's hands looked like that after he killed to Damien.
* Heaven Sent". It's 55 minutes but BBC America didn't afford it extra time on its premiere night and time-compressed it instead — rather than cutting footage, they ran it at a slightly faster speed. The following week's repeat and later "Doctor's Notes" version (which added making-of/fan commentary text) gave it a 75-minute time slot and ran it uncompressed.
* having caused those problems in the first place, Cersei then cleans up after herself by solving all of those problems for her and the rest of Kings Landing courtesy of some well-placed wildfire detonation.
* Grand Chase, where 3 base characters/classes (they're essentially the same in the game) are available at the start, and additional ones are unlockable by special quests. Not to mention that profession promotions can be reverted simply by equipping the appropriate weapon. There's even a cash-shop item to change your in-game name, if you don't like it. Virtually no need to have alts at all!
* Gravedale High episode "Monster Gumbo" showed a montage of spinning newspapers with headlines indicating how well Blanche's Monster Gumbo was selling.
* Hamlet when he asks an actor to recite a speech about Pyrrhus, albeit the Homeric Pyrrhus and not the trope namer.
* Go, Granny, Go strip, where Granny takes her car out, a pair of elderly gentlemen pass approving comments.
* Grand Theft Auto IV. Notably, the developers put considerable effort into building a digital recreation of New York City with appropriate levels of detail, but they took away many popular gameplay features from previous games, like military vehicles, character customization options, non-urban environments, and every aircraft model except helicopters; some fans consider this an appropriate trade-off, while others disagree.
* Hela, outside of her undead minions (who are beholden to her will), the only one who willingly follows her is Skurge, who is scared witless of her.
* GMA, however, is a bit more forgiving—they do the second variation, except it's "Commercial A, then Commercial B, then Commercial A again, then commercial C, and finally Commercial A one last time", "Commercial A" being the 10-second one.
* Hiccup makes Toothless an automatic tail fin so he can fly on his own which makes Astrid reference "Gift of the Night Fury", questioning that he made Toothless one before and he didn't want it then. Hiccup answers that Toothless didn't have a reason at that time, but he does now; he wants to follow and court the Light Fury.
* Happened yet again four years later after her death/sacrifice which resulted in her appointing Armin becoming the new Commander, increasing his personal burden considering he was chosen to be brough back to life instead of Erwin
* Harry Turtledove. It should be noted, however, that the only AWB men whose ages are mentioned are in their mid-late forties, and as such are just the right age to have joined a pro-Apartheid militia group right before it ended.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas has Carl getting a job with Caligula's Casino to become the inside man for the upcoming heist. In an interesting note, he's the player character.

* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix: Members of the Order who work in the Ministry of Magic, such as Arthur Weasleys (head of the Misuse of Muggle Artifacts office) and auror Kingsley Shacklebolt, pretend they don't know each other to avoid arousing suspicion, and act rather coldly to each other at work, though Arthur whispers what his wife's cooking for dinner at the Order's headquarters to him afterwards.
* Harkovast features a samurai called Shogun as one of its main protagonists.
* Green Acres is often mentioned to have Kafka-esque elements. One of the most frequent plotlines has Oliver trying to improve life for the people of Hooterville, only to have it backfire at every single step until he is driven to near-insanity. The townspeople generally react with anything from hostility to lukewarm sympathy of the "gee, that's too bad" variety. Despite it all, Oliver never learns to stop doing this.
* Heaven's Lost Property. She's good at fighting and emoting, so she lacks intelligence.
* Gunsmith Cats had something to do with it. She smiles and shows that she's holding a remote detonator.
* He also made up the whole "Homosexuality angers God" business so that * glowing green crystals, hypothetically even in technical buildings that stave off metaphysical influences. Their vehicles look like egyptian boats, except that they hover, and numerous heavy-and-upwards vehicles look like pyramids. They also use such wonders as Resurrection Orbs (a glowing crystal sphere that enhances the repair protocols of the Necron Warriors), Sempiternal Weave (a highly advanced force field that looks like a scale-mail cloak) and various weaponised staves.
* Gnosia has the Gnosia infection, which causes people to become murderous. If they are not all confined to cold sleep, they will kill everyone in the ship.
* He also likely would have arranged to have Darth Maul disposed of at some point during the Clone War, had he not been defeated by Obi-Wan Kenobi's hands earlier.
* Here There Be Dragons" as it applies to otherwise blank and/or unknown areas of maps.
* Here Alone takes place in the aftermath of one, when almost all of the human population has been wiped out by it. This one has been caused by a virus.
* Grease, when the other kids find out Rizzo is pregnant and offer to help her out, she reacts like this.
* He survives the greater part of a season, by sheer competence with his powers and skills.
* Gregory Helms takes this to its zenith point. The first part of the match is a very uphill battle for Hurricane with Rock and the announcers treating the match as little more than a joke. Every time the Rock assumes that Hurricane is finished he manages to shoot back to life and fight back with some damn fine wrestling, but even then the Rock seems more surprised than actually hurt. But near the end of the match, Hurricane EXPLODES out of a near-minute-long chokehold and proceeds to spend the next five minutes pounding the ever-loving crap out of the Rock and making him look like an amateur. Rock manages to survive the three count only by the slimmest of milliseconds. Stone Cold makes an appearance a little later and Hurricane uses the distraction to once again spring to life and land a schoolboy on the Rock for the win.
* Goosebumps a karmic comeuppance. Instead of Judith turning Samantha into a bird, she instead wishes for herself to be "Beautiful and adored forever" in which she is turned into a statue in the center of the city park with people commenting on how beautiful she is.
* Groundhog Day has led to many collectors of flip-style digital clocks and clock radios trying to obtain the exact same model of clock seen prominently in the film, a Panasonic RC-2605 that dates from the early 80's.
* Gray and Juvia. Lucy says she's "worried" about them, since their interactions throughout the series have been
* Greater-Scope Paragon: A heroic being who is indirectly responsible for the heroes existing or being involved in their mission, but is not directly involved with the story.

* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows ensues in a diner between the Trio and two death eaters.
* Green Lantern: Rebirth stars of both series (Hal and Barry respectively) and putting them back into the starring role. Green Lantern in particular felt like this, due to the major Retcon of Parallax being necessary for it to work and bringing back the entire Green Lantern Corps.
* Gradius all over the place as it is, then Gaiden has to go and throw in the Metal Gear-esque Big Ducker boss, which is a huger version of one of the series' staple Mooks. WITH ROCKET SKATES.
* Half in the Bag for the double standard the movie presented, where the rape of a woman was presented as heinous, but the rape of a man in prison by an obese man dressed in a wig and bra was presented as funny.
* Goblin Slayer. But even a single goblin can knock her to the ground.
* Gone with the Wind as Irish immigrant Gerard O'Hara. He himself was the son of Irish immigrants.
* Gu Jian spends most of his time drinking after he almost dies and realises Xiao Feng has lost her memory.
* Gundam SEED Destiny). Then Meer's body is placed in a space capsule full of white flowers, and after Lacus tearfully says goodbye, the capsule is shot into space.
* Hero Corp, those without superpowers are called "Civilians". The superheroes are quite dismissive of them, and don't want any in the village for fear they'd discover their secrets. Their bigotry is constantly portrayed as quite silly — and ironic, considering that for the outside world the villagers would look like a bunch of inbreed morons.
* Hank McCoy was in effect. That the effect of said spell was the mutant population being reduced to 198 doesn't hurt his case.
* Hellsing, Alucard, due to the thousands of souls inside him causing a lack of a definite gender, can change his appearance at will. To quote the man himself, "Form means nothing to me."
* Goiânia accident, one of the worst nuclear radiation leaks in history.
* Guardian Force, Van gets a couple minor improvements to the Liger's guns and boosters. Irvine, on the other hand, gets a brand new prototype Zoid (the Lightning Saix) to replace his wrecked Command Wolf (that's been there since his first appearance in the first season).
* Grimm. Grimms have been killing wesen for centuries and those families can hold grudges. Monroe's grandfather was killed by a Grimm and he is afraid he would be disown if his family finds out that he is friends with Nick, a Grimm.
* Haruhi Suzumiya; the SOS Brigade is made up of three girls (Haruhi, Yuki and Mikuru) and two boys (Kyon and Koizumi).
* Gronkh tended to put things much more bluntly and was much less talkative than he is now; all in all, his in-show personality wasn't developed yet.
* Happens again (briefly) in the Third Season: A series of murders are blamed on a local drug dealer that killed the kid brother of a Crusading ADA and a high-ranking Miami-Dade Sheriff's Deputy. (
* Hi and Lois and compare the TV to the modern TV the family has now, not to mention the other conveniences that they have.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality: While it doesn't happen immediately, Draco has a list for when he's actually in a position to kill idiots.
* HBO created Festival as a mini-pay service for older conservative audiences who didn't want to subscribe to the younger-appealing channel. Its lineup included newer and classic films, along with a variety of specials. Unlike the similar HTN, Festival did carry R-rated films, but unlike HBO, those films were censored. As the case with HTN, customers weren't interested in Festival and the service was discontinued in a matter of months. HBO would have more success with HBO Family, which simply doesn't feature anything "harder" than PG-13 content; subscribers to Showtime and/or Starz/Encore networks get similar channels.
* He saves Arcee from being killed by Airachnid and even decides to not kill her himself, presumably because he was in a good mood after hitting Airachnid with one of his shots.

* Goblin Slayer has Year One (expanding on when Goblin Slayer was just starting out), Brand New Day (adapting a number of side stories) and Daikatana of Singing Death (expanding on Sword Maidens rise from a broken woman to one of those who slayed the demon lord).
* Green Gable, maybe he wants to stick to tradition, or maybe he's just not all that bright.
* Great Expectations takes a while to really get moving, despite a pretty action-packed first chapter. As a result of its serial nature, the first two parts rely heavily on building suspense that pays off in the third part (where nearly every chapter has a plot twist or revelation).
* Heavy Weapons Guy: "Pancakes, Fatcakes, Tons-of-fun, Fat bald bastard, Fat bald fatty fat-fat, Lardfat..."
* Harry Potter. He expresses a lot of anxiety that his child will be born a werewolf-like him (werewolves marrying and having children is extremely rare, so the exact effects on the child cannot be predicted). His son turns out to be a perfectly normal wizard, except for inheriting his mother's natural shape-shifting ability.
* Have a Gay Old Time: Terms that used to mean something innocent, but nowadays have much saucier meanings.
* Golden Sun psynergy by hitting him with Luff and reducing him to only a basic physical attack.
* HERZ: In chapter 2, after an awful nightmare Asuka clings to Shinji and whispers: "Don't ever leave me..."
* Hex compared to most other opponents, both in canon and in other mods.
* Hamlet, he actually wanted to keep the title character alive; he was originally supposed to kill Claudius, then sing that he was still depressed, but had a kingdom to rule. It was eventually impressed on him that the audience would not be pleased by this, but he still left Polonius and Gertrude standing in the final version.
* Harry was actually one of Voldemort's Horcruxes was long in the minds of readers before it was officially revealed in the final book.
* Hakuouki but should act on her convictions with her head held high, he sends her off to make him some tea.
* Hazama/Terumi Yuuki sports several smiles that almost never leave his face, but simply tag each other. His default smile is a Cheshire smile
* Heiankyo Alien revolves around digging holes to trap aliens in. Once an alien is trapped, the hole has to be filled back in.
* Going Postal Postman Groat!" Later, Devious Collabone finds himself field promoted from university researcher, to doctor, and then again to professor, in the span of a few minutes. Mainly because a civilian tried to gainsay him in the presence of Unseen University's Archchancellor, Mustrum Ridcully, a firm believer in Retaliation By Promotion.
* GURPS telescopes all FTL into two groups. First the Stardrive system which can be Jump or Warp and secondly the Jump Gate system which creates whatever the local equivalent of wormholes is and is a portal drive.
* Godzilla Threshold: Sometimes a situation becomes so desperate that even heroes must do the previously unthinkable or forbidden.
* Hero of Another Story, fanfic writers may be tempted to...well, write that story.
* Happy Mondays's "Step On" is more famous than John Kongos's "He's Gonna Step On You Again".
* Guilty Gear that plays loud heavy metal as her moveset and Instant Kill.
* Godzilla is named Orga and the alien race in the film is the Millennian. Of course, you wouldn't know just from watching the film alone since he's never mentioned by name. Luckily, promotional material and action figures cleared that up for us.
* Highlander: Endgame. Duncan leaves Connor’s sword on his grave.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, when a line of students is formed at the Gryffindor common room entrance, Ron guesses it was because Neville forgot the password again. Neville is next to him and hears the comment.

* Gory Gory Hallelujah: These are resurrected by an artifact from God, and act like your standard flesh-eating shamblers. Appearance-wise, they're green and have very long fingernails. They seem to display some mild sapience, demonstrating the ability to use tools.
* Harry Potter was born on author J.K. Rowling's birthday, July 31st. And there was a prophecy in
* Have Dreams, Will Travel depicting the main characters, Ben and Cassie, eventually growing up together, getting married, having two kids and growing old as the movie shifts from the 60s to 2007. However, in the final scene, Ben is an old man walking all alone on a beach, the same beach he's shown strolling with an elderly Cassie a few seconds ago. The narration implies that Cassie had passed on in the interim because of old age.
* Hannibal the Wendigo is supposed to be. In the season 1 finale, Will hallucinates that Hannibal is a humanoid Wendigo, with a black, emaciated body and antlers. The humanoid Wendigo then continues to symbolize Hannibal in Will's dreams and hallucinations in season 2.
* Halo have a long-standing religious ban against creating sapient AIs, meaning that when they go up against humanity's own AIs, the only AIs they have that can even put up a fight are those stolen from humans, as Cortana discovered when she cannibalized one.
* Hellcats & Hockey Sticks, and so naturally the hockey team are the designated muscle.
* Hey Dude! had an episode where one character manages to snap his father's credit card in half trying this trick. He tried desperately to find some way to hide or replace the broken card, only for the ending to reveal that it was expired anyway and the bank had already sent him a replacement with instructions to destroy the original.
* Hammer Horror turns several people to stone. Another man glimpses her reflection in a pool of water and is partially paralyzed, but survives.
* He made a statement saying that he wouldn't use monsters that only appeared in the classic series by the time he took over RTD in favor of creating new ones. Then came the trailers. Hey, aren't those Silurians? (Rule one: the Doctor lies. Rule two: River Song lies. Rule zero: Steven Moffat lies.)
* He is asked to kill his entire family to prove that he is committed to ending the potential civil war. Unlike in most cases, he's not a fake defector and willingly goes through with it, in exchange for sparing Sasuke
* Harry has to contribute seven galleons to Draco's swear jar, then tosses in an IOU for a hundred to cover whatever he says the next time they have sex.
* Heralds of Valdemar gets seriously burned across his face by a magical explosion. He gets somewhat depressed about it, since he was the most attractive guy in his whole clan before, and wears a mask, but definitely remains a good guy.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, when Hagrid gets the class to take them out for exercise.
* Golden Age Of Adventurers. The four older adventurers really are past retirement age (and therefore supposedly not capable of really looking out for themselves, let alone going on adventures). However, for the most part they are very skilled at what they do and can get along just fine.
* Good Old Ways: Romanticism has been known to idealize the past, especially pre-industrial societies.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Dumbledore takes Harry to view a memory involving a family called the Gaunts. Harry fails to realize the Gaunts speak in Parseltongue until it's pointed out to him.
* he's in India. Luckily he only has to ask two passersby if they're Kavi.
* Hank Zipzer: Miss Adolf and Principal Love, already not nice people in the books, are even worse in the tv series. They seem to actively despise Hank, and are constantly jerks to him.
* Harry pretty much inevitably ends up becoming one of these, given that he
* God of War (PS4), kills Magni, Modi is both horrified and fumbling in disbelief since he's realised how vulnerable he truly is.

* Happy Endings had an episode whose plot centered around a harmless white lie told to the gang's annoying acquaintance, which in turn led to more and more lies of increasingly epic proportions. At one point, Brad and Jane somehow bought into their own lie and had a fight about how to raise the child they were fake-expecting, culminating in a strangely almost real split up.
* Happens in the episode "Winter Wrap-Up", after Twilight's attempts to use her magic to help clear the snow goes awry.
* have it coming for saying something stupid or causing a mess on accident? Not so much.
* Happy Tree Friends get along fine most of the time, but tend to turn on each other when their greed gets the better of them. Shifty has even been known to kill Lifty on occasion.
* Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters, Ben cleans up an unconscious Gretel ends up touching her boobs. She wakes up and glares at him.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, it doesn't confirm whether or not his feelings towards her are still platonic.
* Great Expectations, and he thinks Joe makes an absolute disaster of himself in London. He doesn't reconcile with Joe and with his other friend from the village, Biddy, until he loses the money.
* Götterdämmerung. Brünnhilde's Immolation is the basis of the "Fat Lady Sings" joke.
* Gloriana tailored to their Primarch's request, which inevitably turned them into their respective legion's flagship.
* Heinz, the eponymous character asks what a light-year is, and the specialist responds that it is a year in which everything goes off without a hitch. This might be more of a malapropism, though. (It's a year when you get off light.)
* Great Teacher Onizuka, Urumi throws an empty bottle over her shoulder; it hits a Yakuza boss on the head.
* GLOW (Gorgeous Ladies of Wrestling) - [Active - 1986-1990, 1991, 2003, 2012-]
* Good Omens, the Four Archangels "borrow" some motorcycles. A note at the end of the scene reads "It’s not stealing if you’re On a Holy Mission."
* Hearts of Iron IV. One of these scenarios is that he will become Señor Hitler, a fascist party leader in Argentina.
* Goosebumps: This happens to Brook in "Phantom of the Auditorium" when her and Zeke take an elevator underneath the stage. Zeke then proceeds to steal her glasses and run off.
* Green Eggs and Ham: Guy-Am-I's fur color is a bit darker compared to the original book, and his hat is dark brown.
* Grey Lensman, hero Kimball Kinnison indulges in this when trying to make Clarissa MacDougal understand what marrying him could entail. She basically tells him to can the dramatics; she knows perfectly well what his job entails.
* Halo Wars 2. We're given a narrated montage of how Cutter plans to outwit Atriox in a mundane situation, such as getting a car at a lower price or claiming the armrest at a plane, but Atriox always has the last laugh.
* Hellsing and loves to tell disgusting stories, he also treats the assignment like a game, and in the manga long after he's been killed he shows up from time to time to break the fourth wall.
* "Golden Eyes" and Her Hero "Bill" described the German enemy as "that army who ravished the children—the women—the fruit trees—of God!"
* glowy are surely the brightest, shiniest spaceships ever put on film.
* has double: from 0.5% to 1%. So many women can (and do) become pregnant much later in life than we've been led to believe, either with or without fertility treatments.
* Glee when Kurt tries to set up Mercedes on a date. She notices that he's "One of five black guys in the school" (even though Lima's over a quarter black in real life) and is not impressed.
* Hannah Montana from happening and said Jackson could be a professional plumber.
* Grange Hill who stands no nonsense, he is liked by most of the pupils.
* GURPS (Published in the late 1980s originally) Included a Broody, dark Vampire Detective who was part Batman and part Dracula.

* Glee provides the page quote. Kurt didn't come out officially until a few episodes into season one.
* Gravity Falls, rather than go through the trouble. Ford panics at the thought of losing all his hard work. The ensuing fight results in Ford going through a portal, which is then immediately destroyed.
* Henry Darger are explicitly this and are compared to little Eva many times, as are other valiant girls in the tale.
* Good Burger, Troy and Griffin are this to Kurt, the manager of Mondo Burger.
* Headbutting Pachy: Pachycephalosaurians (a type of dinosaur) always butt heads (literally).
* Heroes Noah Bennett's family sans Claire. And really, it's probably only a matter of time for at least one of them as well.
* Harley Quinn solo series, Harley rapidly throws off an attempt by Dr. Hugo Strange to drug her and explains to him that it's a bit silly to try to poison someone who's had long-term sexual relationships with both the Joker and Ivy.
* Happens in episode 8. Maxwell, from the inside of his popebox, is assurred the hordes of the damned cannot get to him, saying the only thing that pierce it is
* Harlan Thrombey is found with his throat slit in the very first scene of
* Heroes of the Storm due to his low health and weak attack, and he mainly acts through controllable Symbiotes placed on allies. While a Symbiote is active, Abathur can only control the Symbiote, meaning that his physical body is immobile and can be easily killed by any enemy that finds him.
* Graceland, Charlie serves as the Team Mom for the house, often providing comfort and guidance to the others. This is highlighted in "Bon Voyage", where she's the one who's finally able to convince Mike that he needs to get help for his drug addiction.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: According to Italy, one of the beautiful things about Japan is the blossoming of cherry blossoms. Japan subsequently exploded.
* Goosebumps (who are the main students who pick on Ricky and do whatever they can to make him as miserable as possible).
* Goro Honda/Shigeno, the main character from the baseball anime/manga
* Good Omens the demon Crowley spends many years and much effort causing a highway to be built in the shape of an evil sigil, thus causing a malaise of bad vibes and mild evil to be produced by all the cars driving over the shape.
* Halo: Ghosts of Onyx Kelly flips off a Sentinel drone to distract it while her team sets up an attack.
* Here Comes the Boom Ken Dietrich are played by actual mixed martial artists. UFC commentators and staff members also appear playing themselves.
* Griffin and Sabine trilogy, the titular characters have a version of this, seeing each other's paintings and eventually building a very long distance relationship.
* Henry Kuttner. Gallegher is explained to be a super Spark inventor, but his spark only gets sparky when he's very drunk. Thus almost every story starts with him waking and spending the rest of the story trying to figure out just how the crazy invention he made last night works.
* High Lifes and Low Lifes, while drunk, Frances calls her best friend Shannon 'Sharon'.
* Halo to wear the suits; one of the novels has a regular human in the armor shattering his bones just by trying to move normally.
* Grom sound...as well as Folk, Ambient, Progressive Metal, acoustic, and straight-up guitar rock. There's a reason why it remains one of their most polarizing albums among fans.
* Halo 3, an Elite fleet wipes the floor with a Covenant one three times its size.
* Hc Svnt Dracones a character with at least three dots in Mind:Acuity and two in Ranged Combat can do this. But they have to split up their attack dice between the two guns so they're unlikely to hit much unless using SMGs.
* Glenn Quagmire, although his later actions, which are heavily implied to include rape and other depravities, have thrown the "lovable" label into question.
* Good Cop/Bad Cop: The good cop's empathy and gentleness highlights the bad cop's brutality and coldless.

* Happy Days openly stated that the teens were having sex, drinking and smoking pot.
* Gryphon Knight Epic: Zafira Faris, one of the bosses, rides a gigantic scorpion.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince the twins at Slughorn's Christmas party can be seen wearing two ghastly green outfits that appear to be pear costumes.
* Harley Quinn. Falling in love with him, she broke him out and joined him as his girl sidekick. To what degree the Joker returns her feelings is questionable, ranging from 1% to zero. However, almost all her evil acts are an attempt to secure his affection.
* Goettge Patrol during the Battle of Guadalcanal, but to the few surviving Americans, it sure seemed like it.
* Gravity Falls as a headliner act at a music festival. Turns out, he's actually the Love God, and Mabel stealing one of his love potions is what kick-starts that episode's plot.
* Harry Potter series. We don't see him get to duel like Harry (though neither much Hermione in that matter.) This is played up more in the films than in the books.
* Guilty Gear has an odd variant. His weapon is a blade that runs parallel to his forearm and is attached to a armband he wears there. In the opening animation, he sometimes clicks it into place
* Haruhi Suzumiya The author expects his reviewers to understand what's going on, but he still has not provided a convincing explanation for the sudden shift in tone.
* Goblins, Thaco fights with a sword-cane which consists of 2 swords. The dwarf paladin Kore dual-wields chain-firing crossbows, as well as a pair of axes for close-quarters combat.
* he died and saw his mother in the afterlife, and realized that her spirit manifests there as a hot chick several years younger than he. He needed more
* Green Lantern opponent Sinestro once possessed Doiby Dickles' 1940s taxi, Goitrude, in a story titled "Our Mastermind the Car".
* Gravity Falls episode "The Land Before Swine", the Pines family escape an underground cavern by riding a geyser. "BROS BEFORE DINOS!"
* Grey's Anatomy, she still turns up in the middle of the night and orders his girlfriend out of bed so she can talk something through with him.
* Hellsing about feeding. She even gets some detective work in a few of the episodes of the first series.
* Go Dog Go: In the episode, “Take Me Out to the Fetch Game”, Flip Chacely is discovered to be standing on Lady Lydia’s head while hiding under her abnormally large hat.
* Green Acres episode "The Candidate", Oliver attempts to air his grievances against state district representative Ben Hanks regarding the quality of the road (Hooterville only has the one). Hanks repeatedly gets his name wrong — calling him something different every time — and when Oliver pledges to run against him in the next election, his name is similarly misprinted in all the headlines.
* Grant Morrison Earth-23 is a world where most superheroes are black; the picture of the planet provided is centered on Africa. (Although note that all other signs point to the United States still being the center of attention there.)
* Go Fish", with Xander in a speedo. While the reactions of Buffy, Willow, and Cordelia are certainly along these lines, the camera shows this in a legs-up, slow-motion shot, clearly meant as a benefit for the audience.
* Glowing Eyes of Doom: If someone's eyes start glowing, it's time to start running.
* Highborn lampshades everything it possibly can: odd things that happen in the story, the fact that they're breaking the fourth wall repeatedly, many of the shout-outs.
* Henry Stickmin Series, and the vast majority of gunshot and explosion deaths are offscreen. Combined with the stick figure aesthetic, this has the effect of making the games comical rather than gruesome.

* Godzilla Threshold: Resorting to extremely risky and dangerous strategies out of desperation.
* Harry Potter novel after eight other publishers turned it down. And even they would have turned it down if it weren't for the fact that one of the editors took the manuscript home and his daughter read it and asked for more. The publishers were all focusing on critically analyzing it from their perspective rather than thinking what the kids would want.
* Glory Hound: Character wants all the credit for any good deed they're even remotely involved with.
* Heath Ledger was so impressed with his work he let Ledger direct the second Joker video where he holds a news anchor hostage by himself.
* Heroes IV character (Sandro) fitting this description shows up, and he survives the ordeal and aims for more modest goals after that.
* Gotham, one of the Arkham inmates Professor Strange experiments on develops the ability to inflict this. Among his victims is Ivy Pepper who goes from a child to a young woman.
* go full throttle in retaliation. By the time the fighting is over, only the handful of loyalist Houses on the islands have avoided either having every adult male killed or having their Houses stripped of noble status and replaced by loyal bannermen from the mainland.
* Hercules: The Animated Series; when Zeus and Hera get into a fight over Zeus forgetting their anniversary, Hades tries to prolong the argument by setting up the sofa for Zeus and framing Hera for it.
* Guild Wars 2 have the same stats as the current most powerful tier should the developers add a new level of equipment above Ascended.
* Guards! Guards! where the metaphor of the city being like a woman is shot down with 'You mean that she's big and dirty and got a river running through her?'
* High-Class GlovesFancy gloves often set apart the old money from new.
* Hellboy and Abe get drunk and sing Barry Manilow's "Can't Smile Without You" in
* Haki allows them to predict Luffy's movements and deflect his attacks. Once Luffy goes into his Gear Second power-up, he's able to move so fast that, even though the sisters can still predict his movements, Luffy's moving so fast that it doesn't matter. Also, his attacks are powerful enough to overwhelm any attempt to block.
* Hilarity Ensues as he tries to convince the Germans that they are real people.
* Gravity Falls wears an eyepatch over a perfectly healthy eye in order to fit into the Mystery Shack's mood of strange and paranormal.
* Heir Apparent, the main character is playing a virtual reality game at a sort of VR arcade, and becomes unable to quit when anti-videogame protesters damage the equipment — interestingly, it has the opposite message from most trapped-in-a-videogame stories (i.e. instead of being harmful, videogames are harmless fun and the people who think they're evil are misguided and possibly even dangerous).
* Hawk and Dove (The original boy pair) get along far better in this series than in their original conception; their ideological differences are expressed more as a brotherly teasing.
* Hawkgirl gives Green Lantern a whack on the rear after a pep talk. It * high dollar, but most brands also source parts from China and Taiwan, as well as other Asian countries.
* Heroes of Newerth, has more heroes that directly subvert this rule. Parallax and Oogie don't rely on autoattacks to deal damage, but have scaling, spammable abilities that are restricted mainly by their mana pool, so they need to farm items to fix their issue. On the other side, heroes like Deadwood and Grinex are gankers that deal primarily physical damage with autoattack-enhancing abilities, but their low stat growths and cooldown-based damage output makes them less effective late game.
* Gone with the Wind, as the main characters flee Atlanta ahead of the Union army:
* Helluva Boss: When Colin begins freaking out that the C.H.E.R.U.B. have accidentally killed a human, Keenie promptly slaps him and tells him to get a hold of himself.
* Guild Wars introduced the "shadow step" gameplay mechanic with the Assassin class. Several skills and stances allow the user to immediately teleport to an enemy or ally, either on command or after a trigger.

* Granyte and his alliance of the Tributes from 7, 9 and 10. Downplayed though, given that he uses the others as
* Highway to Heaven. What's supposed to be a vacation for Mark turns into Johnathan the angel playing holy match-maker to a woman and a shy man for some reason.
* Hannah and Her Sisters "and I thought, it's interesting how this guy gets the various stories going, cutting from one story to another. I loved the idea of experimenting with that."
* Hikūshi light novels with their emphasis on World War II-style air combat:
* Hercule Poirots Christmas where one of the suspects hides amid a set of dimly-lit statues to disguise their presence at the crime scene.
* Hey Arnold!, who fronts an elementary school organized crime syndicate.
* Healing Magic Is the Hardest: Using magic to heal serious injuries is considerably more difficult or costly than other forms of magic.
* Head Desk isn't enough, so someone slams their head into their desk to show how they feel. Maybe several times.
* Gumball forgetting to put Darwin's name on their science project for class.
* Grand Theft Auto V. Franklin perfectly understands why the dog wants to follow him, and even lampshades the absurdity of the situation. Even stranger; once he gets to Dom, the dog vanishes without a trace and Dom denies having seen a dog at all.
* Graham McNeill, declaring the greatness had been in them, he had merely brought it out. "You are warriors of Ultramar, and I am proud to call you brothers." (He had, in fact, planned on doing this, for morale: when a captain had complaining that the men thought he was showing off in training, he explained that he had been, so they would know what a great warrior he was, and when it came time for him to praise them, it would mean much to them.)
* Go Ask Alice is presented, and was marketed for years, as the actual diary of a teenage drug abuser who died of an overdose, but is now known to be a work of fiction by its "editor", Beatrice Sparks. Sparks has since published several other books which she claims are the real diaries of troubled teens but, although the families of the people involved admit that some of her writings might be based on actual patients she's worked with, it's pretty much generally accepted that her books are works of fiction, if for no other reason than the "this is a work of fiction" disclaimer in the beginning.
* Going Cold Turkey: Trying to get off the substance you're addicted to.
* Heritage USA. The park was closed in 1989, and parts of it have since been redeveloped (mostly by various ministries), while the rest lingers in various states of decay.
* Hercules" is meant to angrily indicate she's not only not interested in Hercules, but in men in general, but naturally by the end of the song she finally admits to herself she is.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas has the Burger Shot uniform, which includes a gigantic hamburger hat, and the Clucking Bell, a full-body chicken suit (the latter employee coming off as more disgruntled.)
* Goooooooold-Berrrrrg! Goooooooold-Berrrrrg! denies it, arguing WCW didn't have the know-how to pipe anything in. The fans got into doing it on their own regardless.
* Hentai, and charge her powers in order to rescue his captured girlfriend.
* GoldenEye (1997) has a room full of gas tanks in the Facility level, but if the tanks are destroyed the gas will slowly kill you and you will fail the level.
* Godzilla Island dubbed "Hyper Mecha-King Ghidorah", though judging by signs on the machine it could also dispense a regular King Ghidorah, Battra, a pre-transformed Fire Rodan, Moguera and Dogora.
* He did something different in Egypt, where He used burning hail — in other words,
* Greg Young likewise with people telling him "put down the fucking suitcase" (referring to a gag early on where Eoin nearly goes out while carrying his suitcase).

* Green Thumb with Molly develops, with some of her more impressive displays of power occurring when she wants to protect Molly from danger. It's also worth noting that her power usually manifests itself in the form of red roses, which are traditionally a symbol of intense romantic love. Furthermore, given how mutants tended to be evocative of LGTBQ+ folk in modern times, it further makes sense (even if Klara's mutant status is only assumed and never explicitly made clear.)
* Good Omens Azirapahile and Crowley deconstruct the concept of pyramids whilst providing additional background detail to several Bible stories, with a courtesy dash of Erich von Daniken thrown in for free.
* Golden Apple two immortals, one of them a survivor of the Trojan War, the other, the Wandering Jew, discuss having met Jesus who, like all other deities, was simply a very powerful wizard.
* He amputates all of Kevin's limbs and sicks Kevin's own wolfdog on him to eat him alive. Okay, Kevin was a cannibalistic serial killer, but still... brrr.
Becomes
* Headbutting Pachy: While pachycephalosaurs may have rammed their opponents in real life, their skull roofs were not as durable as in fiction.
* He's still managed to adapt the technology a lot and the Aliens who gave it to him in the first place couldn't even begin to fix it, so his genius title remains.
* Godslave, Heru's Blacksmiths in their true forms suggest that Golems were the inspiration for their design.
* Have A Nice Day) and when used properly, as a nerve hold, it's extremely debilitating.
* Guild Wars is a game where major characters who can't fight are extremely rare.
* Harriet is shown to have poor control over the trajectory of her telekinetically-controlled spear. While played for comedy at first, it takes a turn for the dramatic when she accidentally spears someone in the abdomen and suffers a
* Happy Heroes is fighting with each other for no apparent reason... because Big M. has set up a machine that causes rival ambassadors Wang and Miao to have their negative feelings projected onto others whenever they're quarreling, so the problem lies in the Supermen getting them to stop arguing so that everyone else will stop too.
* Gor each city-state has its own calendar, counting Year X of City Administrator Y's reign or some other locally-important event. To standardize, most city-states also count in years C.A. - Contasta Ar, "from the founding of Ar", the largest city-state. Actual book quote:
* "Hard" and "Soft" categories; usually accepted as using force directly or redirecting an opponent's force.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, but then we see him start to refill his tub.
* Good Costume Switch, changing from her dark blue dress and boots to a simple light blue jacket that she wears over whatever Caitlin happened to be wearing at the time. This is useful because Caitlin can easily change into it when she turns into Killer Frost, instead of wasting time changing her entire outfit.
* Hayate the Combat Butler to the importance of being a mascot. He only talks to Hayate, and is only occasionally bipedal.
* Hazel Bellamy is a steel core lady, very refined and composed, although not of genteel pedigree. A rare example of a Proper Lady who has ever actually done working class work.
* Gokujou Parodius have the giant female Moai head Yoshiko, who wears lipstick and earrings. The latter game reveals that it's not her real face.
* he still hasn't managed to "come out" to his mom about being a maniacal power-mad villain. She thinks he has his own radio show — his real name is Drew Lipsky, and it's implied she mistakes him for Dr. Drew Pinsky.
* Grease, the ending has Sandy and Danny getting back together and their car flying off into the sky.
* Godspeed You! Black Emperor was the title of an old Japanese film about bikers.
* Godzilla: The Series, Godzilla's counterattack against a monster wrecks a bunch of warehouses. When one of the team cheers at Godzilla turning the tide, another teammate asks him if he'd be cheering if there had been people in those buildings, conveniently letting the audience know that no one was hurt.

* Hell, all the angels. There's only one or two that are ever seen out of a suit.
* Heaven's Lost Property had his name revealed as Zero in the anime's credits.
* Grim Tales from Down Below under the influence of Him, making her evil at the time it was said.
* Guin Sard Lineford of his unrequited love for the main character is not revealed until the last few episodes, so there's not much time to investigate the possibility.
* High School D×D, Akeno Himejima despises her father Baraqiel since he was too late to save Shuri from being killed by her own relatives. Fortunately, with Issei Hyoudou's help, she and Baraqiel reconcile at the end of Volume 7.
* Higher Learning idiot. That was the point where they tentatively began to have a real relationship.
* Heroic Sacrifice, triggers a bomb that damages the attackers. In the older edition, it allowed the bomber's comrades to pull away from close combat and have a chance for survival. In the newer edition, battlesuits generally will save against the bomb, and the explosion may tip combat in their favor, allowing the Tau line to hold. In either case, the model with the bomb only sets it off when the model would already be dead and when its unit is almost certain to be overrun and slain.
* Hamilton got the idea for the show while reading it while on vacation, it's as much an biographical adaptation of Hamilton's life as a direct adaptation of Chernow's biography. Furthermore, the show takes many more liberties with Hamilton's life than a straight biography like Chernow's would, and features themes (such as the importance of legacy) that Chernow's book does not.
* Hamlet constantly tries to talk himself into this mode. That's what the "To be, or not to be" soliloquy is about; suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune, or just give up and sleep? Takes him a long time to get the point (several acts' worth), but when he does, he commits: "My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth!" And then everyone dies.
* Golf Story: A few times through the game, the player will be paired up with another golfer. Unfortunately, the other golfer is usually out of shape, leaving most of the work to the player. Oh, but don't worry, they'll still "help" by hitting the tee shot, which usually lands the player in a sticky situation.
* has.) In this instance, though, Keith cheats by pulling cards out of his sleeve. Similarly, when Keith is brainwashed by Marik and duels Yugi, he plays Graceful Charity to draw three cards, boasting that he will draw Zera the Mant and Zera Ritual and use them to finish Yugi off. Yugi retorts that the odds of drawing specific cards are slim, but Keith again cheats by pulling cards out of his sleeve.
* Halloween Episode costume instead. When she comes back, she discovers that five other people are dressed as the Scarlet Pimpernel, including Vanessa's date.
* Hancock, the title character pauses in the middle of a gunfight while rescuing a pinned down (female) police officer to ask for permission to touch her body since he has been coached on public relations in order to repair his tattered image. He explains that he would only touch her to rescue her, with no inappropriate connotations, and he then explains that it's not that he doesn't find her attractive, he just doesn't want to cross any lines. He calmly explains this under a hailstorm of bullets while the villains are loading up a rocket launcher.
* Hercules: Hades sweet talks the Fates into telling him the future and they consent. On hearing the first few lines of the prophecy, Hades comments it.
* Have a jackdaw-like irresistible attraction to shiny, sparkly, expensive jewelry.
* Gulliver's Travels was apparently parodying some utopian ideas on this line during the Enlightenment.
* Guardians of the Galaxy are headquartered in Knowhere, the severed head of a Celestial on the literal edge of the universe. Later series like Duggan's and Cates' had them headquartered in Star-Lord's ship as their job required them to be more mobile and they no longer had access to Knowwhere's teleporter. In Ewing's run, their headquarters is on Rocket Raccoon's homeworld of Halfworld, mostly because at the time Rocket and later Gamora were patients at the facility for both medical treatments and therapy.

* He kills the Red Viper after confessing to raping and murdering his sister. And then the venom Oberyn Martell put on his lance killed Clegane in horrible agony
* Harry Potter has some interesting variations of this as Harry finds himself forced to form a 'harem' with seven witches to get the horcrux out of his head. Up until chapter 25, none of the girls showed an interest in doing anything with each other without Harry, but there were certain 'exceptional circumstances';
* Happens only rarely, but when Fred pulls a fast one, her ingenuity will leave you dizzy.
* Harvest Moon DS, if your Ball item gets lost, Mayor Thomas will return it to you. Your ball can get lost if you so much as sneeze (though you can purposefully ship it or give it to people), but if you specifically throw your ball in the water? Thomas will appear angry and dripping wet, and chide you for being so irresponsible! If he wasn't a champion swimmer, your ball would be lost for good.
* having engineered the riots and violence that befell the station before Ryder showed up, and trying to kill all the krogan in the Initiative, before she'll have him imprisoned or exiled, admitting she should've done it ages ago.
* Good Bye, Lenin!, the mother of the main character says she hid her life savings but can't remember where, this is after the fall of the Berlin Wall and everybody was changing their East Germany money for the Deutsche Mark. Later in the movie she remembers where she hid the money, but when they went to the bank they were told the window for making the change expired two days before.
* Hellsister Trilogy's evil duplicate Satan Girl as a fully grown adult woman.
* Grand Theft Auto crime, this is pretty difficult. Yes, this includes stopping at red lights.
* He almost did this many years ago with fellow supervillain Lady Gobbler. He actually left her at the altar for his future wife Dora, who would give birth to their hero son, Rodolfo. The salt in the wound? Dora was the chief of police at the time. Irony at it’s finest. This betrayal fueled her lust for vengeance against him and the other Rivera men, as well as her daughter and granddaughter getting spurned by Pumo Loco’s son and grandson, respectively.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 2 episode 20, Big and Little M. waste the three wishes given to them by the bottle genie by wishing for a lot of money (so much that it crushes them), wishing for no money (which gives them poor clothes), and then wishing for themselves to go back to normal.
* He has no shame admitting to Tyrion Lannister he is afraid of the Mountain and decides unless Tyrion can offer a better deal he is not risking a fight with him.
* Hilariously, Randy tries to invoke this trope, saying that he "knows people now" who can * Gremlins 2: The New Batch), Lenny (who has buck-teeth) and the genetically-enhanced Brain Gremlin (also known as "Mr. Glasses" in the novelization). The female Gremlin, according to different sources, is either named Greta or simply "Girl Gremlin".
* Griffith also wears a cape which is just as long, white, flowing, and unspoiled
* Halo - The Covenant is all shiny purple, and everything is sleek and rounded. UNSC equipment is blocky and gray/tan/dull green. The Forerunner creations are shiny metallic silver-gray, and everything is angular and/or ornately segmented.
* here, which uses the same principles of cavitation just mentioned, but can do it naturally.
* Haruko herself is one or Rukawa, though in a subversion she's perfectly aware of how her feelings are a
* Hamura Ōtsutsuki, the brother of the Sage of the Six Paths, Hagoromo
* Hardcore fans generally took a "once bitten, twice shy" approach to
* Green Lantern, it happened most of times Superman fought, with everyone being punched across cities and whatnot.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army towering over the heroes, who can pull themselves together after being ripped apart. In the final scene where various destroyed Golden Army monsters starts self-repairing, one of their heads attaches itself to a wheel and then moves along the floor before getting picked up by a headless monster, who puts it back on its neck.

* Halo series that takes place on Earth is set in East Africa, specifically New Mombasa and Voi. However, one of Earth's space elevators is located in New Mombasa, making it less Cardiff and more Rotterdam (one of the largest ports in the world).
* Headless Horseman show him carrying a jack-o-lantern, typically filled with flames. Again this image is from the Disney version. In the original story, throughout the climactic chase scene, the object the Horseman carries is thought by Ichabod to be his actual severed head. Only the next morning, after Ichabod's disappearance, is it revealed to have been a pumpkin instead: the strongest evidence that the Horseman was really Brom Bones in disguise.
* hates raisins, in real life he would have a very good reason not to like them — they are poisonous to cats.
* Harley Quinn, whenever Mr J throws her out/tries to kill her or one of them is captured, but it never lasts long due to Harley's obsession with the Joker and/or Ivy's absolute misanthropy.
* Grandia II, the gods Granas and Valmar were originally scientists who made what could only described as an ascension-to-godhood machine.
* Heck, the game is set in what amounts to the wreckage caused by a defunct crusade between Lovecraft Country and Überwald...
* Grand Theft Auto V: In one mission, Michael catches his wife cheating on him with a tennis instructor. When said tennis instructor flees to a nearby hillside mansion, Michael and Franklin partially destroy it by pulling it down with a pickup truck. Except it isn't the guy's house, and it actually belongs to the mistress of a cartel leader, who promptly roughs Michael up for it and makes him pay the damages back.
* GLOW had Olympia, who had a bodybuilder gimmick, and flexed in her intro rap and entrance. Plenty of promotional photos have her posed sexily while also flexing.
* her former boyfriend Saji is in the 00 Raiser fighter during a skirmish
* Halloween 4: The Return of Michael Myers into an anthology series, as opposed to continuing the Michael Myers story.
* Hans burnt down London Bridge while singing "London Bridge is Falling Down".
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating: Many untranslated Bengali terms are scattered throughout the book, including some brief longer dialogue in the language.
* Harry is starting to get better about trusting people, but now he has the Black Council to worry about.
* GURPS. Blows to the head do quadruple damage, have a good chance of causing unconsciousness and the "critical head blow" table is pretty nasty.
* Gomez is also accompanied by a sentient Tesseract named Dot, who acts the game's
* Heroes experiences this for a couple of episodes during a solar eclipse.
* Grik, and are forced (in some cases, no forcing was necessary) to teach them new things. Several books later, the Grik start building seagoing ironclads, blimps dropping kamikaze bombs, muskets of their own (albeit cruder because of the Griks' claws), and artillery (including anti-air variants).
* Hamlet has become one of Shakespeare's most popular plays and the main role a key challenge for actors, the Kyd play has been lost. Scholars call it "Ur-Hamlet."
* he had simply listened to Marta's advice to call an ambulance after his alleged fatal morphine overdose.
* Grand Theft Auto III does this when she notices Claude survived the shooting in a late-game mission.
* goddess, while having a mortal mother. Apollo off-handedly mentions that gods can reproduce with same sex humans in the Riordanverse, a fact that, while in the original mythology, had not been confirmed in the Riordan take on it.
* hav'caaren, which basically means "rapaciously greedy" in Elder speech.
* Grant Morrison. Later in the same storyline, a mysterious monkeylike character, whose identity is never revealed, helps Monitor Nix Uotan regain his powers.
* Haven guest spaceship of the week, except that in its middle is a ring filled by a giant marble-like glowing ball of energy that is actually the ship's power source contained in a force field.

* Grand Theft Auto IV features advertisements and an in-game website for Fruit Computers, whose logo is a bowl of fruit and released a phone that looks exactly like a banana-shaped iPhone.
* Halo 5: Guardians was visibly heartbroken when John refused to go along with the plan. Then they kidnapped and imprisoned John, intending to keep them in cryo for 10,000 years so John could see things their way.
* Hermes is super fond of humans and their idiosyncrasies, quirks, and ingenuity. In
* he finds that he exists again, only his wife looks completely different.
* here, was a famous gastronomist and essayist — just the sort that a minor spark would crow about outwitting.
* Helluva Boss graphic sex acts he wants to perform with Blitzo, greatly disturbing the imp.
* He-Man did it too in one episode of the remake. In the story, Skeletor uses one of the two Legacy Stones, giving him magical armor and godlike power. He-Man uses the other one in order to fight him, but the fight quickly turns into a stalemate. Eventually, He-Man removes his helmet, deactivating the armor. Thinking he's surrendering, the villain plows into him, gloating evilly, until He-Man says, "That's the problem with thinking you're invincible, Skeletor, it makes you
* Haruhi-chan. Others too (everyone's an Abusable Cutie) but they seem the most prone to it.
* Heart In Hand. Darryl has this realization when Alex visits his house while Darryl is recovering from the flu, and Alex about two months later, when Darryl kisses him after a visit to a school.
* Green Lantern: The Lost Army: The light pirates' prison cells are each kept closed with a force field. B'dg takes advantage of the logical problems with such a system by disabling every door at once with a tiny well placed explosive.
* He has a tendency to make peace with the people he loses and move on, which is something that many demigods are incapable of doing. In
* Hand Waved. Kay enlightened Jay that once in a while, a Hollywood writer inadvertently makes a movie about them, forcing them to neuralize the public, pulling the movie, and relocating. The series in fact, takes place after the movie itself was released.
* Henry VIII However, contemporary accounts have Henry as more "mildly annoyed" than "tragically destroyed" by news of her death (see the Useful Notes page for more detail). He also began hunting for wife number four only days afterwards. He only retroactively began treating Jane Seymour as a Lost Lenore years later when it became obvious none of his following wives would produce another son.
* GURPS, have supplements or setting books for Ancient Egypt or some very thinly disguised imitation thereof.
* Godzilla (1998) has a scene prominent in posters and trailers where the giant foot is just barely avoided by a cameraman standing in the street to film the creature
* Hak was in love with Yona for years, knowing full well she loved Su-won. Since they were both equally important to him, * Happens with the "Flare Juice" that Shingyung's rebel team intends to turn into a bomb in
* has to either dismiss him or shorten his chain of command so he has fewer people to disobey.
* Greg considers getting some Converse All-Stars and his wife Liz starts insulting him, to which Greg replies that Chuck Taylors were around decades before hipsters were.
* her friendship with Sasha leads the audience to believe this, but once the character is properly introduced several episodes later, it's made very clear that Sasha does legitimately see Anne as her best friend. She just has a twisted idea of how friendship works, being incredibly manipulative, possessive, and controlling.
* Grim and Billy seek a Druid's help to battle a Kite-And-Other-Debris-Eating Tree, and he helps them get in touch with nature so they can do it. During the training, the druid helps them acquire a spirit animal. But rather than get something cool and predatory like a grizzly bear or a

* Hana-Kimi on the loser side of the triangle. Nanba, the ladies' man Dorm RA, on the other hand, proclaims that he knew he was right about Mizuki being a girl all along because his ladies radar never lies.
* Helstrom adaptation with no official connections to the MCU. The continuity that the series is set in was unofficially dubbed Earth-TRN836, rather than the MCU's Earth-199999.
* Heel–Face Turn but had it shot down by Hasbro who felt their story was "over".
* Government in America by Edwards, Wattenberg, and Lineberry says that old people watch more news on the television and therefore "if you have ever turned on the TV news and wondered why all the commercials seem to be for Geritol, laxatives, or denture cream, now you know why."
* grow human organs in animals such as pigs by injecting human stem cells into animal embryos.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983). Subverted in Season 2, where the entire cast was replaced and Skeletor's new voice actor did the role similarly to the original version.
* Graveyard Shift, a rat deposits an inplausibly-large puddle of pee on the seat of a chair.
* here in Germany, and instantly became a meme when it arrived in America.
* , Harry reorganizes the Gryffindor boys' dorm so Ron is on one side of the line and the rest of the boys are on the other.
* Harald Karstark sports a trimmed beard and is described as ruthless and calculating. Oh, and he sides with
* Happy Heroes and tries, unsuccessfully, to persuade him into giving him the elemental staffs he has been looking for all season.
* Hero, Rival, Baddie Team-Up: I've to team-up my rival and my enemy to defeat a big bad in common.
* Hero: 108 begins with Mystique Sonia getting a zit, then ends with her being equally despondent over getting another zit in addition to the first one.
* Happy Heroes episode 5, Careless S. is helping out at the airport's security scanner when the security machines aren't working forces people to check baggage for dangerous items manually. Doctor H. comes along with a box of milk cartons, and Careless S. has him drink all those cartons to prove they're just milk.
* Heroes of Might and Magic also has an anti-magic spell that makes any unit immune to magic for a couple of turns.
* Hemostuck, the seadwelling trolls get forced into the ghetto 'round the docks, and some of the worse-off end up living in what passes for the local sewers.
* Halo is initially described as incredibly expensive, but this is because it consists of cutting-edge technology that is partly reverse-engineered from Covenant tech. This is also why Spartan-IIIs are initially only provided the significantly weaker (and cheaper) SPI armor. It's only after production is streamlined that MJOLNIR costs go down, allowing every Spartan to be equipped with his or her own slightly-modified MJOLNIR.
* Harry yells one when Amelia Bones tells him that Lucius Malfoy has been misappropriating money Harry's ancestors donated to Hogwarts.
* has this warning: "Warning: THIS SCENE CONTAINS SOME INTENSE VIOLENCE!"
* . He still commands his wife to murder the protagonist so they can eat him, however (and to prepare the meal while the dragon himself is at church, by the way).
* Gravity Falls episode 'Boss Mabel', Mabel explain's Stan absence as:
* Happy Tree Friends which keeps destroying and resurrecting the other characters in a never-ending cycle). The production team seem divided as to whether she is actually dead, or simply left Pop in disgust at his terrible parenting (ironically abandoning Cub with him).
* Hidden Expedition 15: The Curse of Mithridates you have six days before fast-acting poison enters the local water supply.
* Green Patches: The alien creature from Saybrook's Planet uses masculine pronouns to refer to himself, although there's really no explanation as to why he might identify with one gender/sex over another.

* Hayate the Combat Butler has this among his "so domestic that women are jealous and threatened" skills. Hinagiku can also cook well enough to impress Hayate, and Maria is shown to be on par with both of them, even able to make things look extremely fancy without sacrificing the taste.
* harmless series of advertisements. It starts with several scenes of the bottom half of a woman running blindly through a city bumping into things. Then it cuts to the top half of the same woman stuck in a home-made teleporter while her husband tries in vain to fix it. As much a subversion as an example, as she hasn't been "cut" by the portal, she's just stuck in a still-open one.
* He doesn't. He dies, and his father has another son with his second wife whom they name William. He is the one who will become "The Old Man".
* Greendale's mascot, the Greendale Human Being, was specifically created to avoid any kind of discriminatory image. As in, the Dean and Pierce had literally every kind of stereotypical physical feature of every ethnic group in the world plastered up on a big wall and made sure that not a single one featured in the mascot. What resulted was a (
* Help!: A hand dryer in a washroom is rigged to vacuum at high intensity to pull the coveted ring off Ringo's hand - it rips off bits of the guys' clothing and pulls the plumbing off the walls before it's shut down.
* Hey Arnold! as Arnold looks for a cure to end his hazardous hitting streak- much to the dismay of friends. While bunting!
* Harry Potter and the Natural 20 for it; when he's using it to craft magic items, it's worth five gold pieces per pound.
* Handwaved in the early IDW comics, as changing to gun form A) required a special high-energy form of energon, and B) was incredibly dangerous to anyone in the immediate vicinity. This was forgotten within three issues.
* Gravity Falls. After finding a mysterious journal, they start noticing unusual happenings around their summer home, involving cryptids, mythical creatures, and a two-dimensional demon.
* He got saved both times, but Critic tried for the trope even earlier in * Grand Theft Auto IV website titled "Little Lacy Surprise Pageant." Visiting it immediately grants the player a 5-star wanted level.
* Halo. And when they die, they can still be revived if another Infection Form comes along and reanimates it. Also, when your mangled, mattered corpse has been damaged beyond use, it bloats and becomes a hive for more Infection Forms. The Flood can also use airborne spores to similar effect.
* Hey Dad..!. In one episode Nudge gets a credit card, but doesn't realize you have to pay the money back. In another, Betty gets a card and starts getting deeper and deeper into debt.
* High Programmers have the clearance to learn about the significance of sex, the authority to go off hormones and build their own harems, and the power and security to age enough to count as "old." As such, you'll probably run into quite a few of these guys if you ever have to deal with anyone at Ultraviolet clearance.
* Henry IV, Part 1. They don't want him to search the house and arrest Falstaff.
* Gnezdo is a swarm of bees that assumes the shape of a human to attack. Luring out and killing the queen is the only way to kill it.
* Greg the Bunny pestered his roommate Jimmy into calling his dad by saying his name over and over again to the cadence of a car alarm.
* Happy Heroes: Certain inhabitants of planets Xing Xing, Gray, etc. (such as Doctor H., Miss Peach, and Big and Little M., to give some examples) look and act so much like humans that they could otherwise easily pass for them if not for the show's space setting.
* Henry Littlefield, seemingly the first of the bunch, and probably the most well-known, believed that the books argue in favor of bimetallism, a form of economic policy tat sought to create a fixed exchange ratio betwene the U.S. dollar, gold, and silver. Apparently, in his interpretation, the Wicked Witches of the East and West and clearly allegories to wealthy investors from the east coast and those who became wealthy as a consequence of the Gold Rush, respectively, as both of those groups opposed the adoption of silver and preferred to maintain the gold standard (as it would've severley devalued the U.S. dollar). The Good Witches of North and South represent the interests of farmers, who supported the change to bimetallism as to lessen their debt. The Yellow Brick Road in here represents the Gold Standard, which causes the Scarecrow (in here an allegory to farmers) to trip several times, but Dorothy can walk through it with the Silver Slippers.

* Hare Remover". Bugs finds the trap amusing ("My grandfather told me about these things, but I never thought I'd see one.") and decides to humor Elmer and get trapped, since he went to such trouble to make one.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team episode 7. While running away from a giant rolling ball, Ryuuka produces a grenade and pulls the pin with her teeth.
* Heroes, Angela's sister Alice is able to control the weather like Storm.
* Halo: Evolutions and form complex poems thanks to having absorbed the minds of poets. Cortana snarks that she won't be waiting for him to find a rhyme for orange, but the Gravemind merely responds "Orange, in what language? I have consumed so many."
* Happy Heroes: In Season 10 episode 5, a monster drops his gun. Careless S. immediately notices the gun, and the resulting scene plays out like he's literally fallen in love with it, complete with cherry blossoms floating in the background as he's admiring it.
* Hacking Minigame: Hacking into computer systems is for profit and fun!
* Good Cop/Bad Cop pair of dishwasher repairmen; the game ended with Wayne stuffed into his dishwasher.
* Heroes of Might and Magic series, red units almost always upgrade into blue units.
* Helicopters, tanks, rocket launchers, and grenade launchers are at least vaguely dangerous, in the sense that they could hypothetically kill Alex. A better example would be the guys shooting regular bullets.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys. A woman is seen giving a handkerchief to a man who must go slay some mythological beast. It turns out the beast is being controlled by the lady's lover and she is deliberately sending these men to their deaths. This is revealed by a shot of the cave littered with identical handkerchiefs, all given by the same woman to the slain men.
* Gossip Girl used negative reviews in billboard ads, generally criticizing it for being excessively sleazy, all accompanied by fetish stills.
* "Goku vs Superman 2" first aired live at a SGC convention. At one point, Goku and Superman crashed into the SGC building. Suddenly, the video stopped, and then two actors dressed as Goku and Superman appeared and started fighting each other in front of the crowd. Eventually, they got knocked out of the building and the video resumed.
* Hero's Realm is called "Won't Somebody Please Think Of The Children?" It does, however, involve some dubious acts like crossing border lines and promising to free prisoners to kill someone on grounds of kidnapping.
* Happy Feet Two has Boadicea pulling off parkour moves to move swiftly across the landscape of Antarctica.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Himaruya's liberal use of opposite-gender counterparts and AUs in his own work, along with the possible nature of civil wars and so on, has led to some selfcest fics. One increasingly popular fanon pairing is Prussiacest, which basically pairs Prussia either with a copy of himself or his Nyotalia counterpart. The logic behind it being that only Prussia is awesome enough to be with Prussia.
* Hercules is the son of Zeus and Hera, the king and queen of the gods, and therefore a prince. He spends all of his time whupping every monster that terrorizes Greece.
* Happy Endings, Dave can technically play the guitar, but his songwriting is either terrible or obliviously inappropriate. The former represented by "Love to the Power of Love"; the latter, the awkwardly delivered chorus of "why don't you come, come, come, come, come, come, come... home to me."

* He also speaks much more slowly and calmly in his earlier videos when compared to his more later ones. Try watching his two separate Tomb Raider videos he made two years apart; he sounds very different.
* Her Tears Were My Light do not appear in person, but are represented by two cosplaying witches named Thyme and Spice.
* Goodnight Punpun though, and as the tension ramps up, the humour takes a darker slant.
* Gothic Horror and is more sugary, childish and crazy than he ever gets to be on-screen.
* Griffith. He's rescued alright... just not by the right team at all.
* Hawkeye is in the same category as Captain America and Black Widow. As a government agent, he doesn't need a secret identity and is more often referred to as "Barton" or "Clint" than his codename.
* Greedy Jew: The antisemitic stereotype that Jews love money to ruthless extremes.
* Glinda finds her parents' graves when she visits their abandoned house in
* he attempts to sacrifice Chise's ten-year-old friend Stella in order to save Chise's life. And he admits his choice of "who" was largely based on jealousy. Chise doesn't forgive him so easily this time.
* He's only shown doing this a total of 2 times. Once, when he's first facing Richard (although, he leaves a magical decoy to distract Richard), and once in an alternate timeline when he regains his senses and fights the Sisters of the Dark. No other magic-user is shown doing this, though.
* Hellcat (Patsy Walker). First appeared as Hellcat in February, 1976.
* Harry Turtledove. To accomplish this, they impose certain restrictions, such as charging people a fee to enter temples and forcing students in their medical school to pay respects to the shrine of the Spirits of Emperors Past. They have better success in China, where they managed to frame the practice in ways already similar to traditional Chinese ancestor reverence, and worse luck in the Middle East, where poor words from the Race ground troops make it a direct challenge to Islam.
* her ancestor, The Dolorosa (a reference to the Virgin Mary), being the adoptive mother of The Sufferer
* Harry Potter, where Nick explains how choosing to become a ghost makes you know nothing of the secrets of death, and how it's just a feeble imitation of life, and he even contemplates how it might have been better to have gone on.
* Harold & Kumar in order to make them more "acceptable" to white viewers. The writers (who are Jewish) responded by including two Jewish buddies... as side characters.
* Highlander is built on this. Duncan and Methos, immortals who can't be killed permanently unless someone cuts their heads off, get into a hilariously in-character game of one-upmanship that involves assassinating each other over and over again in increasingly outlandish ways.
* Grim Fandango, after Manny discovers a suitcase filled with tickets for the Number Nine 9 train, he comments that something about them felt off but couldn't figure out what. Once he rescues Meche, she shows him more tickets in a room and says they just "sit there". Hearing that makes Manny remember that real Double-N tickets move around on their own and fly to the person they belong to, and realizes the tickets he saw before were actually counterfeits.
* Gunmen aren't initially waterproof, but it only takes an episode to sort out.
* here in a promotional image that was circulating with her interviews.
* Gyo that play an eerie tune, and the ringmaster points out that they aren't playing the instruments, but only blowing the virus gas into them which comes out as otherworldly music on its own. The ringmaster believes it's a "march from another world", that the gas is sentient and is communicating and directing all the infected circus artists, since they move along with its rhythm. Sadly the OVA downplays this scene a lot and the creepy circus music is rather bland.
* Hilda adapt only provided enough material for five episodes, so several new stories had to be created to get a complete 13-episode season.
* Hayate isn't exactly a Chaste Hero; he simply doesn't see his 13-year-old Mistress and other girls of her age who are in love with him as a potential love interest because he considers them kids and he definitely isn't a Lolicon. The situation changes when he is dealing with girls of his own age like Hinagiku, Ayumu, or Maria. Probably best exemplified when Hina tries to figure out whether he likes anyone.

* He managed to block Pam and Shane's pathing so that they were unable to go to their locations due to the trees in the way.
* Goten and Trunks are straighter examples. They have the talent to far surpass their fathers, but like Gohan, lack the instinctive love of combat so while they train, they are often distracted in doing other things like playing around as kids.
* had to wash away his mistress's blood after his mother had murdered her.
* Gunnerkrigg Court who use male pronouns and apparently identify as male. They were best friends first and later became a couple.
* Hawk the Slayer. Voltan (played by an overacting Jack Palance) as he goes to meet the dark wizard.
* Good Taming, Evil Taming: Heroes tame animals with affection, while villains tame them in an abusive way.
* Grand Theft Auto IV were made to take damage, with chunks flying off upon gunfire. A close look at these pillars will reveal subtle yet noticeable seams that make up the structure.
* Grey-and-Gray Morality and introduced every cruelty they could think of. Many modern adaptions have to villainize the Titans (including often designing them as monsters) so you sympathize with the Olympians. The story of Prometheus is pretty much the prime example for this. Even most modern adaptions of Greek Mythology can't get around making him sympathetic and portraying him as human looking.
* God Eater has a sniper, Gina with a purple eye patch over her left eye. Player characters can wear one too over either eye, with five different types to choose from. The two smaller variants however don't stick to the face fully, meaning that you can see under them with a proper angle.
* Grandpa Lou hates hearing that he is not competent to watch the babies. A prominent example is
* GSN and Buzzr have both been inconsistent with their airings of holiday-themed game show episodes over the years. Sometimes they will air these episodes when the rotation naturally reaches those points, while in other cases they will skip past the holiday episodes and then later air them during the appropriate seasons.
* Glen Campbell's last #1 country and pop hit in 1977, but it had first been released in 1975 by its writer, Allen Toussaint.
* He has no desire to fight or use violence to be this, as well as tutors ranging from Wonder Woman to Batman. Superman may not be a born fighter, but give him no choice and he'll show how easy it is for him to slide into the role.
* HeartGold has the Pokéathlon: track and field events for Pokémon.
* Guiding Light's Alan-Michael Spaulding goes to a support group for men in similar situations, both to vent his anger and to find the best way to help her.
* Grow Nano vol.2 where you must help someone put a fallen baby bird back into it's nest.
* Harpoon has a rule that means a search radar will be detected by anyone in range, giving them bearing and type of the radar instantly, narrowing down your location and ship type quite well.
* Hellboy comics, this happened offscreen. The masquerade was broken when Hellboy was found and revealed to the public instead of kept hidden away. Immediately after which the existence of the supernatural was confirmed by the government and several religions.
* Happy Ness: The Secret of the Loch teaches its viewers how to overcome emotional problems.
* Götterdämmerung are powerful enough to take a 10% chunk of the Moon with each shot.
* Gravity Falls: Gompers the goat is this for the Mystery Shack throughout the whole series. To an even greater extent, Waddles the pig becomes this starting in the ninth episode, "The Time-Traveler's Pig", when Mabel wins him in a carnival.
* Herbie Rides Again is temporarily slowed down by Grandma and the man she's dating using the firehouse's hose to toss the operators off their construction equipment until the hose bursts from overuse. Hawk only has a few seconds to gloat that they can't stop him before Herbie (and all of the Beetles in San Francisco) attack.

* Heads Will Roll features a wolfman dancer who eventually loses control and massacres his audience.
* Here's one wrestler who never fails, there's action behind my seven veils" - the dance of the seven veils performed by Salome for her father King Herod's birthday. As a reward she asked for John the Baptist's head on a platter.
* Gringotts love how violent Mercy is to the point that the lead teller says the fact she wasn't born a goblin is proof the gods have forsaken his kind. He also tells Harry that if she was a goblin, he'd fight Harry to the death and present his still beating heart to her as a gift.
* Hardcore Sunni Muslim factions (including Daesh) tend to avoid this trope. The traditional
* Gundam Build Fighters to the point of saving the franchise from being killed off.
* Hearthbreakers", Applejack is looking for the obsidian stone Limestone Pie has hidden somewhere in a crystal mine with a low ceiling. She clonks her head from straightening up too fast when Pinkie Pie calls for her attention.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, also keep the camera outside during "coffee" or "booty calls", but the sounds are no longer muffled.
* Heroes season 1 finale, Sylar appears to be dead, but then gets up to telekinetically throw Hiro at a building, before falling unconscious. Hiro is able to send himself back in time before he smashes against the wall though.
* Her Tears Were My Light can prevent the character Time from rewinding. This means that your mouse wheel and the "Rewind" button become useless, and you are forced to try other options to escape her traps.
* have no deities, but their philosophical leaders have an arm devoted to enforcing the Qun in their territory. This group is known as the Ben-Hassrath, and are considered priests rather than soldiers.
* Guardians of the Galaxy (2020) scuppers any chance of them being together. It was easier to love him while he was dead.
* Heidenrape and took him to some obscure part of the arena (presumably not the locker room since no one else was visible) shoved Cole face first into a wall and forcibly rammed him from behind while reading poetry. Cole's frightened facial expressions didn't help matters.
* Hawaii Five-0, who plays main character Steve McGarrett, becomes a producer beginning season ten.
* Hayate the Combat Butler. Hayate sends Hinagiku a challenge letter (written by Isumi). After thinking it over she realizes she might be in love with him, and the letter is his way of planning to confess to her. She waits until 11:30 before he arrives, getting increasingly angry at his lateness. When he finally does show up, she attacks him before he can explain himself.
* has to be an important player, considering clearing names through legal is a pretttty pricey deal. Which means every name that makes it through the process has to be put to good use.
* Hawaii Five-0 that Chin got incarcerated wants to have some fun with him before killing him. Unable to trust the guards, Chin resorts to starting a fire in the hope that he can communicate with the rescue workers. The fire triggers a prison riot that Chin must survive long enough for Five-0 to rescue him.
* Helena Nyblom — Debuted in 1897, and since then published several fairy tales, some of the most well-known included in the anthology
* Hans Moleman also drove a truck with a house on it. The house caught fire when going over a small bump.
* Godo the blacksmith raised an orphaned Erica all by himself, and she loved him as her dad. Rickert also joins their family through apprenticeship and adoption, such that Erica says that she will follow him no matter what: "We're family."
* Goldberg (in Rhyno's case, it was called the Gore. However, Rhyno's spear was different from those used by Edge, Christian, Reigns and Goldberg. Wheras their spear targeted the lower body and took down both legs, Rhyno's was a striking spear that targeted the midsection and relied on the force of the spear rather than the leg takedown).

* Gothic mannerisms, though we find that she may get this from her grandmother.
* Hammer Studios makes it even more noticeable because there are four different MPAA symbols on the packaging.
* Heaven's Feel, this is the only way to describe Kirei Kotomine's relationship with Shirou.
* Hilarious Outtakes had a great example, after the mother otter flubs a line:
* Guy Rapide and Montezzo Valtieri of version three are described as having been avid Parkour practitioners, Guy as a sport while Montezzo does it to work on his speed.
* Hark! A Vagrant showed this: Kate wanted to get a local artist she liked to sponsor her for university, but said artist thought her cartoons weren't art, that she wasn't an artist, and had zero merit.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys show. The star of the show, Kevin Sorbo, turns out to be secretly Hercules himself, still alive, and occasionally comments on the show's plot being different from what he remembers. So, it's Hercules pretending to be Kevin Sorbo pretending to be Hercules.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows has escaped a Death Eater attack.
* Harlem Shake by Baauer. Many are annoyed by the popularity of the song due to the meme that goes by the same name.
* Granblue Fantasy he signs an alliance to protect an otherwise-defenseless Feendrache, and also destroys several of Aglovale's magic circles that were giving him power.
* Great Teacher Onizuka: Onizuka's apartment is not only tiny but a wall-to-wall landfill. A can of ramen with a hole in it is the least embarrassing thing there.
* Halo: Reach, the fall from the Forerunner ship over Earth was thought to kill Master Chief when he was found. Of course, Noble Six was wearing specialized atmosphere re-entry equipment, while Master Chief was not.
* Hellgasm Slaughter so she could create demonkind from their corpses and usurp God.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army. As Prince Nuada puts it: "I will show you why you once feared the dark."
* hardened bunker 600 meters underground that can survive a nuclear strike, so that's not exactly the kind of building that should be found in a major metropolitan area.
* Happy Gilmore being advised to take two strokes and go to the tiebreaker, Happy uses his mad puttin' skillz to win the match outright.
* Guilded Age: The world that most resembles ours is drawn in a more realistic style, and sepia-toned with occasional spot-coloring. A futuristic Tron-style world is rendered in bright neons, with strategic pixelation for effect.
* Gwyneth Paltrow and they were reminiscing about their experiences in Marvel movies.
* Gundam'' as they could use their beam shields independently than the Zanscare Empire could as the latter's version doubled as flight-granting beam rotors and that made things hard.
* Gun Nac, the waters of Area-3, according to the US manual, lie above the sunken city of Atlantajorja.
* GODS made her Olympus's official architect. She builds palaces for divine beings. That's how badass smart she is.
* Glory in the Thunder way to murder a good person who doesn’t deserve to die.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers to any fan, and you will probably hear several "Pasta!"s
* Heroes as his special ability) gets his ability stolen by Arthur Petrelli he turns to dust, then crumbles.
* Heroes accidentally killed his wife with cancer from his radiation emitting power. Fans noted that he seems to be immune to the effects of his power and came up with the term "Rule Of Ted" for characters who are immune to the effects of their own abilities.
* Harry Harrison gives Napoleon 20th century artillery. Napoleon, already an artillery genius, uses the technology to easily beat all of Europe into submission. The main character has to explain to an English nobleman the mechanics of one such cannon, who then uses it to sink a ship with a few shots.

* Godzilla: King of the Monsters. The close proximity between Ghidorah and the vortex are speculated to be more than coincidental in the novelization.
* Hercules of Greek Mythology, certain parts of the story considered “unsavory” to modern palates (such as Persephone being both Hades’ niece, daughter of Zeus and Demeter, and a teenager) are reworked or ignored according to the wishes of the author.
* H₂O: Just Add Water from the third season to its broadcast rotation of the show in January 2012, when the network brought back the series from a short sabbatical from the network. Additional episodes of the second season that were also unseen in the U.S., due to Nickelodeon pulling the program halfway through airing the second season in 2008, were also added to TeenNick airings of the show).
* Harry Potter has Rose Weasley jokingly suggest this as an explanation for why James and Dominique made the Gryffindor Quidditch team, captained by Dominique's sister Victoire. The team is just under half Weasleys, not counting James Sirius Potter.
* got in trouble episode "The Devil's Threesome" with an MA15+ rating, as the ACMA claimed even the edited version should have been rated R18+. Despite this, the uncensored version of the episode was released as MA15+ on DVD.
* Grrl Power shower room that reads, "Try not to think about the fact that some of the most beautiful women on Earth are showering, changing and possibly having tickle fights on the other side of this wall." (One of the guys has a tendency to bug his teammates with questions about the odds of that type of stuff actually happening; he thinks the sign maker is an "evil, evil genius.")
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City has Pastor Richards, who is raising money for a Salvation Statue to save himself and his followers from the apocalypse. He admits on the radio his plan to use the statue money to build a mansion in Hawaii.
* Happened again with Rene Dupree's poodle, Fifi. Ross would talk about how terrified the dog was (Dupree being a heel) but whenever the camera was on her, she'd be stood on her hind legs, happily being fed popcorn by fans.
* God of War III. Kratos Literally jumps off the Daedelus' Labyrinth and falls forever until he gets to the bottom of the chain. What's really strange, is how the impact from hitting things during the fall causes damage, yet the impact from reaching the ground does nothing.
* Heat and kill him too. As they've already committed multiple homicide, there's no incentive to leave a potential witness alive.
* Golden Age had the hero and Bucky take to the field as players in order to catch a murderer who was killing pitchers in order to rig games.
* Guitar Hero III: Legends of Rock — but again, only on the PS3, Xbox 360, and PC versions through a cheat code (the non-HD versions technically load Bret's model when you play his songs, but it's been overwritten with a duplicate of the default male singer, so it's impossible to tell anything's different). Some people fell for a rumor suggesting that you could unlock all missing characters via a cheat.
* Good Ship Chronicles, Mike is literally a token alien, hired only to fill a quota; consequentially, he serves no real purpose on the ship.
* Godzilla can and will actively destroy anything in his way — and that's without getting into the Godzillas of the reboot-happy Millennium series.
* Hell, most armor for the Exalted is pimp as all hell. Solars get the best use out of oricalchum (magical gold), Lunars work best with magically-infused moonsilver, and the Dragon-Blooded get lots of mileage out of jade (which comes in six different colors, no less). The only magical material that isn't automatically suited for bling is starmetal, and that's because it's so hard to obtain that it's used in the most utilitarian of fashions.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. A case of insistent terminology by the Court, as opposed to the creatures of the forest.
* H. Beam Piper multiverse, timelines are assigned to "levels" in part based on whether the inhabitants remember humanity originally came from Mars. Earth was originally settled by Martians; in most timelines, the colony regressed to primitivism, with the survivors losing all knowledge of their history and gradually developing a new civilization which believes itself to be native to Earth.

* he tried to Evacuate as many civilians from the city as he could and how she did the same to the few civilians who stayed in Londinium.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, the sequences of killer plant, flying keys, and life size chessboard allow Harry, Ron and Hermione to demonstrate their abilities. In the book, there were several other challenges (such as an angry troll that was supposed to be a guard, but was knocked out by the previous entrant) that made this fact less visible. In the book, it was stated that each obstacle was something from the area of expertise of one specific professor.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas. When the player beats or kills someone or steals a car, CJ will sometimes spout lines like "Don't blame me, blame society!"
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban to a snowy, wintry scene between Ron and Hermione.
* Google also once used the song for a commercial for their signature search engine.
* hilariously humourless opponents. That is until the following season where their new (but still openly gay) lead singer throws a slushie spiked with rock salt at the old lead singer and nearly blinds him (he was actually aiming for his boyfriend) and then the season after where they take performance enhancement drugs.
* Heartwarming in Hindsight: A touching moment from a work that becomes even more endearing because of current events.
* Gotham is in many ways this, where classic Batman characters are either much younger or in most cases children.
* Henry Jamison, the son of a wealthy NCR family, gets the job of running the New Vegas branch of the Crimson Caravan despite being woefully unprepared for the job, and his family ties mean that he can't be fired,so Alice McLafferty tasks the player with convincing Henry to quit. In an interesting twist on this trope, it's revealed that his family didn't arrange for his job out of charity for a relative, but to get him out of the way.
* Harlem Beat, Sakurai lined in a wrong queue, entered a streetball game and boom, he was hooked.
* Hikari Sentai Maskman situation. About 3/4 of the way through the series, it's dramatically revealed that she is in fact a woman when her headgear comes off and her long hair is seen. The episode is called "Prince Igam, You're A Woman!" It's at this point that you realize it was in fact supposed to be a secret. On the other hand, the medium of Tokusatsu is inspired by traditional Japanese theater, in which some roles were played by the opposite gender (particularly in the art of Kabuki), so it's somewhat excusable.
* Hayate the Combat Butler Hayate observes Maria to play a joke on her. The moment Hayate spots a pun, well...
* has been kissed by Ginny at least twice affirms that Hermione is explicitly straight even if some of the other girls will be bi.
* He fails to break the window even though his partner shoots the glass right before he hits it. After kicking the glass for a bit, he ends up entering.
* Goblet of Fire only gets a couple appearances early on the book and then is (almost) never mentioned again. It, however, kickstarts the book's main plot.
* Green Lantern #33, Alan encases him in a ring construct and buries him deep within the earth.
* Gravity's Shenzhou capsule in order to make it back to Earth. While the controls are in Chinese, everything is more or less in the same place as in an American craft, and she has a manual to help her figure things out.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) as Ghidorah is doing right now.
* HappinessCharge Pretty Cure! Episode 12 has a Baseball Teribad that shoots baseballs for its attack. So what does Cure Lovely do in this situation? Congers up a bat and goes, "Play Ball!"
* Higher Ground: Elaine, Scott's abusive stepmom, had raped him repeatedly.

* Harlequins are allowed to come and go from this nightmare city as they please because the Dark Eldar are fully aware of the consequences if they tried to stop them.
* Grojband isn't for the bride and groom however, but rather to bandmates Kin and Kon as an apology for letting Grojband break up.
* help with obtaining ID, clinics that know how to treat monster physiology, job placement assistance, and even help direct Shadowkind to places that cater to their unique culture, like info about restaurants that serve "old world" recipes.
* Guess which animal in Africa has killed the most people? Black mamba? Lion? Leopard? Hyena? Human-baby-eating-monkeys? No, my friend. It is the * Greek Mythology: Ares, Athena, Enyo, and again, you can make a case for several others.
* High Lifes and Low Lifes, causing to to run back through the house without closing the front door.
* Heavies can pull off a variant with the default loadout. Many Heavies tend to dispense with the shotgun in return for the
* Hates Everyone Equally: I hate you and everyone else, no matter who you are!
* Head Sports series has at least one playable character for which real money must be paid to unlock. You can also pay real money to obtain in-game 'points' to buy cosmetics (which also enhance stats) in the shop.
* Godzilla vs. Megaguirus, Megaguirus is able to do this, despite being a dragonfly the size of a building.
* GURPS Mass Combat unsurprisingly features literally all of these, across any era.
* Gotcha Force, this is the special ability of the Chrono Samurai. The colours all invert, and projectiles stop in midair, except for its own.
* Heavy Metal Volume 2 #5 (September 1978). In the story "Urban Renewal" by Stephen Bissette, giant insects attack a planet and lay their eggs in it. When the eggs hatch, it destroys the planet.
* Grandia, you don't get to ride it at all, and disappeared after one town.
* Hell Teacher Nube gets away with lots of things that Nube is beaten up for, just because he's a Bishonen and Nube is pretty average looking at best.
* Greek myth of the musician, poet and prophet Orpheus, who was taught by the god Apollo to play music so beautifully that he could tame animals, soothe stormy weather, and bring inanimate objects to life.
* Grab & Strike techniques in many martial arts can produce a similar impression: A half-step or simple stance change gets one of the combatants in range for a grab (by the collar, shoulder, neck, head, hand, or anything else), whereas a jolt brings him into range for a punch (MCMAP, Krav Maga), elbow strike (Thai Boxing, Krav Maga) or a throw (BBJ, SAMBO or Judo, Krav Maga), never giving an opponent a chance to do any sort of counter.
* Greg Rucka takes on The Exchange, a bunch of former members of other various criminal organizations in the Marvel universe who decided to start their own organization.
* Guy Ritchie received mixed reviews, one of the points of criticism was that Ritchie's style isn't appropriate for the Great Detective... it seems the guy can't win either way.
* Harriet: Bigger Long is a black slave catcher who hunts his own race because the money is better than he could make as a laborer. Walter is the same at first, but then feels remorse over it later and leaves him to help Harriet instead.
* Healing Slow" has an identical premise, only the singer starts off in 5 pieces (head, upper torso, arms, and lower half), is reassembled for the entire run of the song, and unlike Doyle is unable to reattach her head.
* Higher Ground to have had the same thing happen to her from her stepfather (who got her younger sister too).
* Hector's World: Constable Solosolave, Senorita Ortega, and the mayor are adults, but the rest are unknown. On the one hand they're just learning about cybersafety and Ranjeet is said to go to school. On the other hand, they can wander around without their parents, Ming is quite snarky (which probably means she's older than seven), and Ranjeet and Aretha know a great deal about computer technology.

* High School Musical 2, to avoid spilling the beans about Ryan's sexuality, but retained in the DVD release and stage adaptation.
* Godzilla (2014) is set into motion when Serizawa finds a cave where the walls are supported by the fossilized remains of a member of Godzilla's species that was infested by likewise fossilized "MUTOs".
* Gwarish Genesculptors are capable of mutating members of their species into new strains and also create bio-technological ships and mecha.
* Hexameron: The legends of the summer camp turn out to all or mostly all be real.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City, who kicked down a TV after losing a bet on a horse race, shot down birds who crapped on his property, and shot the VCR when it wouldn't work, oblivious to the fact that it wasn't even plugged in.
* Gohan seemingly has Cell truly beat after he forced him to spit out Android 18, reverting back to his much weaker semi-perfect form. Instead of being killed, * Goblin Slayer", Goblin Slayer demonstrates that a protective barrier can also be used to trap goblins inside of a burning fortress.
* gunslinger drags a coffin with a machine gun hidden inside behind him wherever he goes.
* Harlan Briscor, an unseen suspect in one of Stuart Gibbs ‘’Funjungle’’ novels is described as being the dedicated manager of two TV hosts, one a passionate environmentalist and the other and
* Hardwar has the Hawk Moth. It has a well-balanced combination of speed, maneuverability, toughness, cargo carrying capacity, and weapons capacity - all in one package in the above average territory. This makes it the most versatile Moth in the game and is by far the most popular one out of all the others among the pilot classes in Titan who aren't looking for a specifically combat-oriented Moth so much that the vast majority of Moths flying around in the city of Misplaced Optimism are Hawks.
* Gravity Falls: In "Scaryoke", when the Mystery Shack is attacked by a swarm of zombies, Soos sets himself up for this, but does get better.
* her targets go like this: Makihasa (done) Akiha and SHIKI (done in two out of five possible endings, SHIKI in all of them. Then maybe Shiki and anyone else related to the Tohno family she can think of.
* Goldfish commercials, the vacuum cleaners are portrayed as monsters by the goldfish living under the bed.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows moment when he realizes it isn't a costume.
* Good Burger the heroes start to suspect their competition is up to something unethical when they toss a Mondo Burger to a dog and it refuses to touch it.
* Halo 4, and some maps made specifically for Forge are even said to be real locations picked for the potential "War Games" mapmakers could use in them.
* Grendel scarcely merits mention. The most interesting passages of the novel concern Grendel's relationships with Hrothgar and the Dragon, who serves as the Obi-Wan to Grendel's Luke.
* Hey Arnold!: "The Big Scoop" revolves around the goings-on at the school paper and a rival offshoot. Note that the viewer doesn't notice its presence before or after.
* Harry Potter. Also, Albus Percival Wulfric Brian Dumbledore, who was gaining a reputation in his youth, even before things like his defeat of the Dark Wizard Grindelwald. In a very negative way, Tom Riddle, AKA Lord Voldemort, has such a fearsome reputation that no one will even say his name.
* Greenland Many characters with important roles in the movie are only onscreen briefly, including another passenger on John's plane who has barely thirty seconds of screen time. He tells John that his nephew got turned away for having a health condition, causing John to realize his family isn't being evacuated and leave the plane to look for them. If not for that other passenger, John would have unknowingly left without them or died during the rioting at the airport.
* He also uses explosive collars to enslave the rest of his people who survived Vort's destruction by
* Haruhi Suzumiya Kyon does one following one of Haruhi's many, many enthusiastic rants.

* He was asked a question in the Making Of interviews and starts rambling in an arrogant way and then admits that he forgot what the original question was, totally as his character Martin Weir would do.
* Hero, Rival, Baddie Team-Up: A character teams up with both their rival and their enemy to achoeve a common goal.
* Gobber, who frequently serves as a comic relief character, has lost both an arm and a leg to the * Hardball, 'Auntie' Mahaki is a mechanic who specializes in restoring and customizing hot rods. Salwa is in awe of her, and Jerry seems to be a little bit smitten.
* Headhunter from escaping. It responds by shutting down life support, but fortunately the crew get into rescue suits in time. Avon then has to break quarantine to rescue them, as the suits have limited oxygen supply.
* Half-Life 2 there's a blink-and-you-miss-it secret in the "Anticitizen One" chapter: a TV set briefly shows an image of the G-man, despite not being plugged in.
* .hack//SIGN aired in Canada, these were shown on television after the regular storyline concluded.
* Golden Sun series seems to be limited in this fashion, at least when carrying villains that you have just beaten. He has to teleport three times just to get out of the room they're in.
* Her sister Koishi, who had the same power, permanently sealed off her eye in order to escape the contempt. On the down-side this had the unforeseen side-effect of permanently
* He did not take the World Fantasy Convention's retiring of its Gahan Wilson-designed Lovecraft image for its major award well, mailing back his own and promising to boycott the convention from now on, even calling the decision "
* Gwar believes they're above humanity. In fact, they believe ANY species is above humanity.
* Grim Dawn has the epic scepter item Finger of Gar'Dalvur. The scepter's head is a skeletal hand with the middle finger extended.
* Harry Potter has Peeves (and supposedly other poltergeists), who is an embodiment of chaos. Dementors are the personification of depression.
* Grendel, Hunter Rose, fought with an edged weapon of his own design called the 'Devil's Fork', which most resembled a short-staffed naginata with two parallel blades, which could be briefly electrified to do extra damage. Christine Spar used Rose's weapon and costume (stolen from a museum) when she became the second Grendel, and Eppy Thatcher (the fourth primary Grendel) wielded a similar fork, additionally mounting remote controls for his high-tech accoutrements, generations later.
* Hero Hours Contract" who, when they're not fighting brainwashed monsters in turn-based strategic combat, are negotiating with the coalition of magical creatures that gave them their powers for better pay and benefits.
* High school radio stations are not at all unheard of. Usually these are very low power stations and you'd be lucky to be able to pick them up at the far end of the parking lot, but they do exist. The students manning them get credit for doing so (usually as a speech/theatre type class, or possibly as a business class, since the station may sell ad spots to local companies), so they're not exactly skipping class to run the station (though they do still have to take core courses like math, science, English and so on
* Halo: Evolutions uses the term "the first American Civil War", hinting that the US fell into at least one more civil war between the present day and the 26th century.
* Good Omens, which even the angels and demons aren't completely informed of.
* Happens with Mia/Godot (and to a lesser extent other dead/alive pairings) in * Good Boy! dogs, and they had sent some of their number to earth to colonize it and subjugate humanity in the first place, so the inevitable listing of the ways dogs are "really in charge" does occur. But Hubble, the dog sent to check up on their progress, is ultimately not impressed. And neither is his superior, who apparently had something more like total enslavement in mind.

* Haloid has characters taking insane amounts of damage and just getting up for more. In addition to the random pummeling and slashing, the most notable moments were Kasumi taking a bullet to the chest and just getting knocked down for a bit and Tifa taking an axe to her exposed midriff and not even flinching (although she did get knocked back about twenty feet).
* Green Lanterns, Guy Gardner does this while putting Jessica Cruz through training. It riles up her anxiety so badly, she turns and slugs him in the face.
* Head-Turning Beauty: A female character who attracts all of the guys will most definitely be a love interest for the lead protagonist.
* Hadestown, where the food critic was moved by a simple dish, and deciding the song could afford to be a simpler expression of love.
* Helluva Boss. Blitzo's co-workers are all shocked by the revelation that they used to date, though there is the question if their boss dated her before or after Verosika became famous. And then there's this exchange:
* Hearts, leading some people to add an option for the shooter to subtract 26 points from their own score, allowing the "shooter" a chance to win.
* He Panned It, Now He Sucks!: A critic receives backlash for giving a negative review of a well-liked work.
* God of War (PS4). There are two differing accounts on how this happened. One account says that his skin went blue from overexposure to silver, another states that his skin turned blue after he accidentally beheaded himself and Sindri brought him back to life.
* He can release heat beams several dozen meters wide strong enough to * going commando a moot point. It's made even funnier when you remember Fate, the one they revere so much, is watching this fight and goes so far as to ask them what they're doing.
* Heart of a Dog involves a certain Doctor Preobrazhensky who implants human testicles and pituitary gland into a dog as part of his experiments in rejuvenation but accidentally turns the dog into a human instead. It becomes an issue because the new human takes so strongly to revolutionary ideas that he refuses to adapt to normal human standards of politeness and considerateness out of the assumption that they are too "bourgeois."
* he's the one who induced the case's UnSub to kidnap women in the first place because he took away her dolls.
* Gold and White Are DivineAngels with gold and white color schemes to emphasize their divinity.
* Half-Minute Hero. Thankfully all it takes to stop is beating the caster senseless.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002). While he still had a face, he sported a sleek black goatee.
* Guitar Hero III tries to avert this by increasing the price of its most overplayed songs. "Slow Ride", the first song on the setlist, is almost always set at the premium price.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name has a bat with lipstick, eyelashes, and possibly eyeshadow. It's a bit justified by the fact that she's a vampire who has shapeshifted into a bat, and therefore has retained some of the traits she has in her more humanoid shape. (There's a vampire who, in bat-form, continues to wear glasses.)
* Gravity Falls, and is probably responsible for his mother being in such a state in the first place. The only time Gideon's father is seen telling Gideon to behave, he's put back in his place:
* Godmother Aleksia, "The Snow Queen," checks in passing on a Cinderella bubbling away in Copenhagen. She has no intention of intervening, since she judges that the girl will make a good match for the prince, —she claims that if the girl was any sweeter, she'd be sickening— and that the King and Queen won't mind having a daughter-in-law who was raised a commoner.
* Heteronormative Crusader: Usually much more disgusted with gay men than lesbians.
* Hangmen Also Die!; WWII was still ongoing, so the details of what actually transpired were not known to the filmmakers.

* Good Eats: Fish sauce is used to add the flavour of "cat food and athletic sock...but in a good way".
* Hajime no Ippo, in a hotel room, at last he manages to say to Kumi, "I've always loved you!" Unfortunately he beats around the bush so much that Kumi has fallen asleep by the time he says it and she was a bit drunk too. So the declaration is "interrupted" by her not listening to it.
* Hero-Worshipper and goes on a killing spree dressed in an imitation judge uniform to show Dredd that he's still capable of being a judge. Dredd ends up being forced to execute him in the end.
* Heel–Face Turn. Considering their reputation and MO relies on absolute secrecy and different units' ability to act independently, down to individual soldiers, their motives into the present are largely a mystery. The question of whether the entire Legion, or individual cells and warbands have fallen to Chaos or have remained closet loyalists is a large part of their mystique.
* Harry Potter in which Sirius Black tells Harry that there are several kinds of girls—represented by the different Quidditch balls.
* Henry Rollins almost never performs with shoes on... in fact, he rarely performs with anything but shorts on. Paul Reiser called attention to this during an award show, thanking Rollins for not tracking mud on the floor.
* Gunnerkrigg Court that it was all Worth It) has much darker consequences.
* Guardians of the Galaxy famously features "Come and Get Your Love" by Redbone over the opening credits, with other classic 60's and 70's songs playing at various points throughout.
* Hair was a big source of these, with the title song covered by The Cowsills, "Aquarius/Let The Sunshine In" covered by The Fifth Dimension, and "Good Morning Sunshine" covered by Oliver.
* have to kill someone. So, when the "Missing Link" DLC was released, they gave players the option of sparing the final boss.
* High School Dx D as while they do conceive twice before Issei they aren't able to bring it to term due to Miki's poor constitution. They are told that it is quite possible that they would never be able to have a child only for Issei to be born.
* Greedy Jew: The old and harmful stereotype about Jewish people being greedy and malicious.
* Grand Theft Auto V. The home survives the attack, but Michael's family moves out once again.
* Grimm ... Sorry". The season finale continued this trend with "To Be Continued .... Come on, you knew this was coming."
* Guild Wars has the "Realm of torment", home to a god who revolted, and his followers, who play a major role in the Nightfall campaign. This version is a collection of creepy realms, but not fire and brimstone.
* Halloween Episode, which has a main plot involving around a creepy, yet realistic story where the team pursues a serial killer involved in black market organ sales. However, the episode also strongly implies that a series of misfortunes that hit Danny are due to him being cursed after trespassing on an ancient Hawaiian burial ground, and it's also implied at the end of the episode that the woman who recommended an apartment to him (that he's able to get for cheap due it belonging to one of the murder victims) is in fact a ghost.
* Grow Island you need a rocket-ship to pick up a blue potion on a planet that's even smaller than the examples above.
* Gunnerkrigg Court has made a hobby of hacking his dorm's security system so he can sneak out and explore the Court after-hours.
* Goblin Slayer, when the party is infiltrating a dwarven fortress occupied by goblins, High Elf Archer arranges a few goblin corpses to make them look merely drunk to avoid the alarm being raised too soon. She even pours out some of Dwarf Shaman's booze to complete the effect, he does not let that go.
* hating it when they first get there) instead of going home again, including:
* Goosebumps and its related media. The ''Goosebumps Horrorland" series also includes information on a second Amusement Park of Doom, Panic Park, which was once located on the same site as Horrorland and actually frightened some of its guests to death.

* Heavyweight boxing champion Joe Frazier appeared as himself in the episode "
* Hazbin Hotel where the Princess of Hell Charlie decided to go on the news to reveal her plan of The Happy Hotel: the hotel that reform sinners. There was many things she didn’t think of like:
* GLQuake required at a fraction of the cost of a professional 3D graphics workstation, such as the ones by Silicon Graphics.
* HERZ: SEELE is a secret organization has been plotting the end of the world for decades. On the other hand, GEIST is still another secret organization which is very big on individualism and has been opposing SEELE since they knew about its existence and goals.
* High Speed Rail cows react to a train passing by at high speed. Probably one of the less interesting videos linked to from this site.
* gold respectively, which they parley into tremendous military and political clout.
* Higurashi: When They Cry came with Nekogoroshi-hen (Cat Killing Chapter), a single episode scenario based on a light novel.
* Grimm episode "Bad Moon Rising" doesn't involve anyone dying, but there is a brief scene advancing the investigation of a murder from the previous episode.
* Hag Graef's faction mechanic centered around Malus Darkblade is quite disliked, as going on either side of the possession meter gives heavy penalties as well as some nice bonuses, but the penalties are so crippling (no replenishment whatsoever for
* graininess and print deterioration of the image better on her picture). Even creepier is there’s seemingly no information on the case anywhere online so no one knows her fate or the circumstances behind her disappearance, if she was really a missing person at all.
* Grand Theft Auto V from Dave, then sent to the morgue as a John Doe, where he gets up on the slab and scares the living daylights out of the morticians. Notably, if you tilt your head with the right analog stick, you'll get unique dialogue from the doctors about how his corpse is "reanimating", while if you wait too long to get up, the doctors will start cutting you open and kill you for real.
* Gone with the Wind, a former neighbor of Scarlett's must flee from Georgia to Texas after killing the former slave who made advances to his sister-in-law and the white man who planted the idea in his head. He warns Scarlett that black men in Atlanta are being told the same thing and she suddenly realizes that this is why her husband has asked her not go out late nor ride through dangerous parts of town. Indeed, she is eventually attacked by a black man and his white trash companion.
* Harry is literally aged up three years, for all intents and purposes, including legal matters and magical sensors, during his transformation in
* .hack. The anime and the games are predicated on the idea of a MMORPG which is the literal embodiment of this trope. Note, however, that the appearances of the game characters do not necessarily correlate with those of the "real world" versions — characters of the same class and in-game gender look very similar. (E.g. Bear and Orca, Elk and Tsukasa, BlackRose and Mimiru, Subaru and another Heavy-Axe User, etc.) This doesn't stop some players from deliberately engineering their characters to look like themselves. In .hack//Sign, Subaru, Mimiru, Bear, and B.T. are all depicted with the same faces as their in-game characters. Kite is known to look a lot like his avatar while Orca, who is in middle school with Kite, looks like a large muscular man with little in the way of clothing. Other examples of the first type include Haseo and the second include Wiseman, who is a young boy despite being an old man in game.
* Gone Home beat it in under five on a blind playthrough if you're a diligent explorer (and if you're playing an adventure game, you probably are). The key to the final room (the attic) is found in a secret room behind a fake wall almost directly across from the front door where you start the game. It's not locked, and the game even prompts you to open it if you go up to it, even if you haven't played through the story up to the point where you would be told about it. A first time player with no prior knowledge could easily discover this room by complete accident before doing anything else, get the key, go straight to the attic (because the game tells you what the key is for), and beat the game without even realizing that they just skipped about 99% of it.

* Harry Potter, years after Sirius Black was sent to Azkaban, some of his relatives started having doubts about his guilt, decided to check the facts and found out he wasn't allowed to have a trial. They got him free by invoking a law stating that no pureblood can be forced to spend more than one month in Azkaban without a trial and that all charges against purebloods who are forced to stay more than that time there must be dropped. Sure, he's innocent, but since this is not what got him off, it can arguably be counted as a technicality.
* Hanna-Barbera redeux pulls this in an episode where they're animal doctors trying to remove a splinter from the paw of a zoo's lion. Tom dresses up as a lion nurse, and the lion goes gaga. He prepares for an exam and even says "I know. Turn and cough!"
* Good Eats episode "The Once and Future Fish", Alton (portraying an old man going grocery shopping with his granddaughter (played by his real-life daughter)) observes these at the store and turns his nose up at them.
* Henchman 21 is convinced that he is destined to destroy Brock Sampson, who almost always responds to 21's exposition with "Who are you again?"
* Grand Theft Auto series in general has the police giving highly generic descriptions over the radio, likely to cut down on voice work. A stolen police car is a "police car", a sports car of any make is simply designated by "[color] sports car", the same likewise applies to any generalization of vehicle type, and a military attack chopper is bizarrely a "red helicopter" (this is due to it having red as its default color code, despite the military paint job; red paint chips even flake off if you hit something). Not that this stops any police officer from knowing it's you from this generic description. Later games subvert this by having the radio controller initially give vague descriptions of the player's vehicle, but start giving more specific ones as the chase goes on, including the car's make and model. These details can still be vague/incorrect in the case of add-on cars including Rockstar's own creations, double subverting this trope.
* He also does it to Barbara Bush when invited to the White House for a dinner.
* Great Lakes Avengers, this is the only superpower Mr. Immortal has. One story reveals he's destined to live until the end of the universe.
* Goldeneye Wii the parachute, and uses the water flowing out of the dam to break his fall instead.
* Hanabi is Hinata's younger sister who appeared during the Chunin Exams as a
* Harvest Moon remedies this by making her look like someone who is at least eighteen, despite the chibi art style, and the English translation removing her use of her name as a pronoun.
* Grey's Anatomy: Meredith Grey starts working at Seattle Grace hospital, her mother's (Ellis Grey) former hospital, and is introduced to Chief of Surgery Richard Webber, who was in love with her mother back when they were residents themselves. Flash forward several seasons and Maggie Pierce starts work at the hospital—unknown to everyone, she's the daughter of Richard and Ellis.
* He encounters a similar situation during his trial for class promotion. He encounters a monster who keeps outwitting him. He "defeats" it by admitting that he has failed and cannot beat it; the whole purpose of the conflict was to teach him humility. As soon as the monster leaves, however,
* Half-Life 1. As Freeman is heading to the Resonance Chamber, a security guard says to him "Looks like you're in the barrel today."
* Harry does this in a letter he writes to Sirius. He has to write in code in case anyone intercepts the letter. When he mentions Umbridge, he writes "she's nearly as nice as your mum", which, considering that Sirius has a low opinion of his obnoxious bigot of a mother (if her portrait is any indication),
* Heart of Steel, Alistair receives a vicious kick between the legs — to no great effect because everything from the hips down was made of metal.
* Hannah Montana (only it was her identical looking cousin). Geez, Writers for Disney shows apparently love this trope.

* Halo Wars Skirmish, you can call in the cavalry yourself by summoning ODST drop pods.
* have started to become ubiquitous among the younger generations in the United States and Canada, but can even be observed among people from older generations as well.
* He gets to live up to his reputation in various flashbacks, and during the final battles when he gets resurrected. Even The Second Hokage, the one who invented
* Going Postal, Moist van Lipwig has spent several weeks removing the mortar around a large flagstone in his condemned cell with his prison issued spoon. This wears the spoon away to basically nothing, but he finally succeeds in moving the stone — only to discover a much-better reinforced wall and a fresh spoon on the other side. The guards then immediately come and congratulate him for not giving up, and reveal that at least one other seeming flaw in the cell wouldn't allow a prisoner to escape either. This prison may not exactly be inescapable, but in order to do so you would have to out-think Vetinari.
* Grand Finale: The final episode or installment of the series, specifically one that brings the series' story to a proper conclusion.
* GM Acadian. In reality an Acadian, which was produced from 1962-71 for the Canadian market, would raise some eyebrows on its own.
* Hey Arnold! episode "Summer Love", Gertie, Arnold's grandma, surfs onto a nude beach - where everybody's naughty bits are obscured by one thing or another. Her response?
* Half-Life 2: Episode 2: Alyx: "Okay Gordon, me and the superpowered Vortigaunt will sit here and watch you climb through the toxic pit while fighting zombies. Hurry up!" Well, she had been recently impaled and saved with Alternate Dimension Alien Magic, and Gordon is basically the Messiah. Made more forgivable by the fact that she assists you with a sniper rifle for the second half of the segment.
* Gonkish Roberto has for his boss Johan. Also, Johan's behavior towards his twin sister Anna is pretty darn creepy. Roberto is also shown having sex with two woman, and a fat ugly prostitute once comments on how well endowed Roberto is.
* Grand Theft Auto game features a woman who saw her family murdered in front of her eyes, and is drugged up pretty high in an attempt to deal with the traumatic memories. Evidently the drugs aren't quite enough, as she has a tendency to reveal slightly disturbing facts about it out of the blue in an unnaturally perky tone. And towards the end of the show, the drugs begin to wear off...
* Grave Peril Harry realizes it's possible he broke the First Law when he used magic to burn down Bianca's mansion as there were possibly humans killed in the blaze. If this is found to be true the council will hand him a death sentence for it.
* Grottomatic, were made on Tim's personal computer. He composed the album art with Microsoft Paint. He was living in poverty at the time.
* Heavy Weapon. It jumps out of the sand and spams missiles and bombs.
* He could not heal himself when wounded by a stray shot from Herakles' poisoned arrows, thus he gave up his immortality;
* Happy Circus Music: Circus music that sets a fun mood, usually at an actual circus or similar.
* "Heaven Sent", also presumably took enough of the glass with it that he could just dive through.
* Hellsister Trilogy confesses to her crush completely by accident during an argument.
* Heavy Gear primaraly features powered armor, which called "Gears" in-universe, but it also features larger mechs, called "Striders."
* Halo 2, your allies will have increasingly comical and fourth wall breaking responses to idling nearby them ranging from an Elite nervously telling the Arbiter that he thinks he is cute too to an ODST soldier breaking into a spirited rendition of Edwin Starr's "War" before eventually say that you should have just paused the game. They also have various comical responses to you shooting them non-lethally.
* Hiding Behind Religion who doesn't even live up to most of what they believe in.

* Government in Exile: Former government leaders who have been banished from their own country by the new regime in power.
* Grand Finale, Phil Ken Sebben claws his way up from the grill of the bus that struck him dead the previous season, and says "Hah ha! Final episode stunt casting!" He then spends the entire episode driving the bus in reverse back to the city, just in time to arrive in the final scene and run Harvey over, killing him off for real. Odd thing is that in the episode where he is hit by the bus, he apparently gets cremated.
* Halo 3 brought back Blood Gulch, yet ended up a close second compared to Sword Base.
* Grand Finale, meaning that this Zero remains the villain all the way through.
* HAL Laboratory, he's been involved in every game in the series and it's undoubtably the more successful of the two despite amounting to far fewer games.
* Heroes sees Sylar use this on the cop who seems to be in charge of a hostage situation while impersonating an FBI agent in the third season.
* Gravity is often used to explain why even the most demonstrable theories remain theories and most scientist believe it's difficult if not impossible to ever proclaim something "objective fact." Yes it's been known since mankind first existed that things fall "down," but
* Hexenringe involves at least two dimensions - one like ours and one which is populated by comics characters and other fictional creations.
* Goblins, the title character has a demonic eyeball on the sole of one of his feet, as a result of being cursed by a demon lord.
* Goldfinger, James and his caddy observe Goldfinger blatantly cheating in a golf game. The caddy quips, "If that's his original ball, I'm Arnold Palmer."
* Grim Facade 6: Hidden Sins the local bartender is killed by an expertly-thrown dagger just as he's about to reveal who he thinks the murderer is.
* GoGo Tomago and Honey Lemon are the only female members of the titular superhero team in
* Harry Potter has the Holyhead Harpies, an all female Quidditch team.
* Gone with the Wind is the moment that she knows for certain that their marriage is over.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, but when the Ballas attempt a drive-by shooting, he manages to eat not only his own food, but the food ordered by his homies, while the rest of the gang are retaliating.
* Hero with swords and dress sleeves, hacking through hundreds of armored soldiers, and jumping off the surface of water to swordfight in midair.
* Heroes Reborn was popular enough that both Toy Biz and Hasbro made figures of it.
* Harry Turtledove and works to free the slaves soon after the war ends.
* Halo: First Strike, Cortana hijacks a Covenant carrier and discovers that its plasma cannon firmware is an absolute mess. She re-writes it in the middle of a space battle to convert its inefficient plasma torpedoes into even more powerful and precise ion beams, then proceeds to tear apart several Covenant capital ships. While doing so, a Covenant AI jumps out and calls her a heretic for altering "holy relics". Yes, they deliberately stunt their AIs with the same religious restrictions.
* Go! Princess Pretty Cure which was actually three mini movies in one. Although most of them were themed around pumpkins.
* He later gets around this restriction by transporting everybody into his realm.
* Happens in the third movie as well: Ethan Hunt gets 48 hours to complete a
* Granblue Fantasy: Due to the psychological effects of sunlight to Vania, she will occasionally sleep while in the midst of doing something in broad daylight... and mumble about it while sleeping.
* Hey Vern, It's Ernest!. While preparing for a baking contest, Ernest reminds Vern of three basic principles (while holding up four fingers): "Number one—always use plenty of sauce. B—always squeeze yer tomaters. And three—don't forget to thump your melons, knowwhutImean?"
* Hanaukyō Maid Team in the security maid's HQ shows their position as they move through the mansion.

* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters lets Tarakudo take the Oni mask in her possession — she's already foreseen that he's going to end up with it, so there's no point in trying to prevent the inevitable.
* Half Bad, Mercury uses Annalise as leverage to get Nathan to do what she wants.
* Gossip Girl go to Constance and St. Jude's high schools during the first two seasons.
* Hatoful Boyfriend). There's more to it than just "pigeon dating sim", but the weirdness of this premise is the main reason most people know about this game.
* Guardians of the Galaxy has Rocket Raccoon's "krutacking". It seems to be only a non-literal, rarely-conjugated form of "fuck", like when he tells a pair of Earth raccoons to "put on some krutacking pants".
* .hack//SIGN is about a kid who can't log off his virtual reality MMORPG.
* Hercule Poirot: Captain Hastings suffers from this a great deal. He will always leap to the assistance of a young lady (especially a redhead), and will generally ignore any evidence pointing to her as the murderer. One such woman is even named Dulcie.
* Her relationship with Miki may have started as this, but when Miki started to push for it to go further, Hinagiku made it clear she wasn't interested. The two are still close.
* Harry Potter, magical spells can prevent certain technologies from functioning. On Hogwarts school grounds, things like guns, automobiles, or anything electronic simply won't work. Also, it's against the rules to enchant high-tech items. There are also completely inexplicable technologies that don't even have moving parts; things like "paper notebooks" and "pencils".
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 had this happen to Yondu when his faction of Ravagers see him as weak for not wanting to turn Peter in for a bounty placed on him.
* Hercules: The Animated Series: In an episode where the Romans are looking for gods to worship, they eventually settle on the Greek pantheon by the end and give them all new names (as per real life). Hades is less than happy with his new moniker.
* Halo: New Blood opens with an "Archivist's Note" stating that the entire story is an in-universe report given by protagonist Edward Buck.
* Grimms Notes: The Frog Prince, who has a humanoid body and head of a frog.
* Go-onger who joins the team mid-series with her twin brother, giving us another unusual color combination for the female rangers (Yellow and Silver).
* her mother and grandmother are ecstatic about the idea), what he was trying to say is that he's planning to tutor her, so it will be his fault if she fails.
* Gym Class Rope Climb: An activity in gym class that involves students having to climb up a rope hanging from the ceiling.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law series it's based on, this means Falcon Seven frequently calls Birdman when he's eating dinner or découpaging.
* Here Come the Brides for stealing food. When Hosanna sees the killer selling the trinkets he stole at Ben's general store, he grabs a knife and stabs him in the back, almost killing him.
* He-Man uses a counter for the gay jokes he could have made but didn't.
* Hellsister Trilogy and falls in love with Dev-Em. Unfortunately, Dev hates the 20th Century, so they visit each other on weekends. Considering such an arrangement cannot last, though, Kara decides she can move to the future permanently as long as she can travel back to the present whenever she pleases.
* Gory Discretion Shot, to boot — is shown to Cersei, she doesn't show much of a reaction, making it one of her most disturbing moments in the series.
* Harper also designs an even more destructive variant of the Nova bomb, and it's used to destroy an artificial sun.
* Gotcha!, the protagonist is griping to his best friend how he's still a virgin during a college lecture, saying "I can't seem to get laid!" right on the lull. The teacher smirks and informs him that "every dog has his day."
* Gold and Silver, Silver and Gold, about buried treasure, mentions that treasure hunters should be persistent because "You could dig four feet down, find nothing, and give up when the treasure is buried five feet down."

* Goblins characters in the setting are never really used as viewpoint characters.)
* he sees coins falling from the sky. In reality, the roof collapses and crushes him.
* Happens to Kellaway and Doyle after seeing Cookie BaBoom without her suicide belt bikini in the
* Gorons have evolved into this over successive games, though their culture is a mix of this and * Happens a lot in Chinese/Hong Kong TV dramas. If set in the past, executions are done quite a ways away from the courts. So if anyone innocent happens to get the penalty that day, they better hope for a fast messenger on a horse before their head gets chopped off.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, the surviving members of the Order of the Phoenix drink a toast to Mad-Eye Moody when they hear that he was killed while moving Harry from Privet Drive to The Burrow.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban when Prof. Lupin is describing a boggart, a creature that turns into whatever the person in front of it is most afraid of. A boggart's weakness, however, is trying to scare more than one person at a time. Lupin recounts a time when he saw a boggart try to turn into both a headless corpse and a flesh-eating slug at once: "Turned himself into half a slug. Not remotely frightening." Emphasized in the primary narrative when Neville admits that the thing he is most afraid of is Professor Snape, closely followed by his grandmother. But Professor Snape dressed in grandmother's clothes... not remotely frightening.
* Gunnerkrigg Court coupled with literally centuries to cultivate indifference. But some of her more "human" traits come out in "The Stone".
* God of War (PS4) can see Kratos (who is a very tall person himself) eye-to-eye when standing together and is stated to be a very beautiful goddess.
* Hatchet: A group of tourists on a ghost tour are hunted down by a deformed man on Mardis Gras.
* Goodbye My Princess: Neither Peng Xiao Ran nor Chen Xing Xu were famous before the series. Ironically, the director wanted both lead roles to be played by popular actors. The series lacked the budget to hire better-known actors, however, so they had to cast unknowns.
* has been given the powers of the mythological Yatagarasu, or more exactly, appears to have been fed the spirit of Yatagarasu itself, and since then, she's acquired the ability to manipulate nuclear fusion and fission, which she uses to rekindle the flames of the former hell. It's revealed later that the person who gave the Yatagarasu to her was the 10th game's final boss, goddess Kanako Yasaka who've recently arrived from the outside, contemporary world where humans live. Kanako aimed for revolutionizing the currently obsolete energy sources of the Kappa facilities near the base of her mountain, expecting that this would bring her more followers, and then used Utsuho as a literal thermonuclear power source, who's excess powers created geysers that would then be used to power the Kappa facilities
* Hello, and welcome to and tells the comic not to tempt him to change that.
* Great Vampires in the setting to them (offering multiple versions of the reasons why).
* Hey Arnold! episode "Salley's Comet", Arnold and Gerald need to collect 50 cereal box coupons to earn a children's telescope so they can see an upcoming passing comet. Since they collected half of the coupons, they invite their friends and neighbors for the remaining cereal.
* Godhand. The credit song even lampshades this with the line "The Godhand helps me work out my stress!".
* Henry Cavill. Affleck, at 6'4", is, in fact, the tallest actor to play Bruce Wayne to date.
* Harder Than Hard despite having demonstrated that you're good enough for Extra and too good for anything below Hard.
* Hilda which talks about Hilda's everyday life. While the song is released on Youtube on November 25th, the song will also be featured during the credits of a Season 2 episode. Bonus points for it being sung in her character's voice!

* Hans Christian Andersen ends like this. It has reached the point where Danish students are taught to specifically look after this trope while reading his works.
* Healthy in Heaven: When a character goes to the afterlife, they lose any health problems they had at death and usually the old ones turn young again.
* Grim Hunt, after Spider-Man has been pushed to his limit, he presses his hand to the villain's face and uses his wall-crawling ability to rip the skin off.
* Heroes thing, and not even (that we saw) to Black Bolt-esque mega-destructive levels.
* Greg Proops once said the thing about Australia is that it's really really really

* Henry is trapped in a small area surrounded by a force field in "Toddler Invasion". It turns red when Henry touches it.
* Hard Time on Planet Earth. In "The All American" episode another Control unit even chides him for his TV obsession.
* guise of the Blue Spirit, but afterwards he becomes even more powerful by learning the TRUE version of Fire Bending and regaining a better sense of purpose.
* Godzilla (1998), Godzilla pulls a similar sub trick by guiding two torpedoes into one of the subs that fired them.
* Grimm: Deaf actress Stephanie Nogueras plays a deaf naiad named Elly.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure!, Tsubomi and Erika find out that a fellow student is making a manga series based around them — or at the very least, them as if their hero identities were also their civilian identities. The interesting thing about this is that the girls aren't weirded out by it, they actually help him finish an issue by acting out a scene then helping him ink it and, for the rest of the series, we watch him expand it, adding Itsuki and Yuri once they take on Cure personas.
* Good and Evil are inextricably entangled in the four forms of elemental magic. Only the most powerful magical artifact in the world can separate them, and then only for one person at the time, so getting rid of the
* Godzilla vs. Megaguirus to kill Godzilla late in the film, even though the first time it didn't work and brought the other titular monster in the film, which was only stopped by Godzilla himself.
* Gravity Falls, Mabel and Dipper (nearly 13) are almost a full head shorter than Wendy (15) and so much smaller than their Grunkle Stan that they regularly perch on his shoulders.
* Hellboy, local guide Laura Karnstein is leading Hellboy and Roger to an abandoned castle. While making conversation, Laura casually mentions that she read Hellboy's file and was impressed by his past exploits. As they reach the castle, Laura goes on ahead, but Hellboy stops Roger to warn him that Laura couldn't have read his file. Sure enough, Laura is not who she claims to be.
* Gone, Diana becomes pregnant quickly once she and Caine get down to it, even though not long before that she was very badly starved, which should have had some kind of effect of her fertility/menstrual cycles (it should have stopped them).
* Hatsukoi Limited. Ironically, though he's three times larger than her, Ayumi can still knock Misao out with just one high kick.
* had as one of it's most iconic, and powerful, pieces the Mighty Cannon, capable of firing a shot clear across the battlefield and generally obliterating any enemy units in its path.
* Goofy, where a wild party is being held in the back. As he finally passes the trailer, he shouts "Why don't you watch where you're going?", only to find to his shock that the driver has decided to join the party and there's nobody driving the car.
* Goblins to better understand how to kill them. While it might seem that they slip into this trope's territory when they slaughter guards, they actually use the paladin's ability to detect evil to ensure only evil guards are killed. And Thaco's declaration of his intent to slaughter his way through the human civilians to get to his son is a bluff to scare away said civilians so that they aren't caught in the crossfire.
* Halle Berry paternal grandmother) because they are both biracial (though the mixes are different—Queen's father was white, Berry's mother is).
* Haruhi Suzumiya, who is a beloved class representative that cares about everyone and is very sweet and personable. She was also sweet and personable when she tried to turn Kyon into meaty chunks to get Haruhi to react. Despite this, everyone in the class — except Kyon — is saddened by her sudden "move" to Canada. This also applies to the AU, where she's still just as popular, and hating her just cements Kyon's assumed insanity to the rest of his classmates.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers different personalities; Germany is tough and harsh, Italy is carefree and energetic, and Japan is cold and calculating. They are still pretty close.

* Heroes ended such a note, with Angela's prophetic dream that Matt Parkman would save her son turning out to have a different meaning once they realize that Nathan is already dead. Then, to make things worse, the teaser for season four hints that their efforts to realize the prophecy through brainwashing Sylar into believing he's Nathan might not take.
* have bad, as it results in a lot of trauma to the body, but it's better than being outright crushed in this case. Still, a driver of an SUV can often walk away from a crash that sends a micro car driver to the hospital, or worse.
* H₂O: Just Add Water: In one episode Zane buys tomboy Rikki a dress for her to wear at a dinner party at his house. Emma is at the dinner and her jaw drops when she sees Rikki walking down the stairs in the dress with her hair down. She's seen wearing dresses more frequently afterwards.
* Gold Digger Married elves form a psychic bond, which is irrepairably broken if they are ever unfaithful to each other.
* Hey Arnold! has several of these, usually Gerald being the storyteller, but grandpa as well. The episodes are also very successful with creeping out the viewer with tales such as the headless cabbie, four-eyed Jack, the ghost bride and the haunted train.
* Grim Tales doing that may result in a supernatural version of this trope:
* Heath Ledger, a "psychopathic, mass-murdering, schizophrenic clown with zero empathy."
* High-School Sweethearts: They've been together since they were teenagers.
* Gotham City Garage are running from a killer robot. Dick tells her "And whatever you do— Don't slow down!" to which Kara replies "Wasn't planning on it?!". Dick tries to use Kara as bait to escape, but the robot chases him down. Dick is being cornered when Kara reappears to save him shouting "Don't slow down!". Dick replies "Wasn't planning on it."
* Hair, Claude was turned into a relatable, conservative audience surrogate, as opposed to his radical, obnoxious stage-version counterpart.
* he thinks they should have, rather than fun things they would actually like to have.
* he proceeds to do exactly what she requests of him and nothing more.
* Green-Eyed Monster and schadenfreude towards him, but doesn't sabotage their relationship beyond questioning Carly's choice to date him.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, but future-Mikuru is still drawn a bit more beautiful than her younger version.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers fanfiction, ranging from historic retellings of America gaining territory like Alaska and Hawaii, America taking in other countries until they can get back on their feet, political alliances, America having a well-meant but misguided desire to help other nations, or, in darker instances, America going insane and wanting more power.
* Happens a lot with Latin texts, as most likely, a student had to translate the first part of an author's work, but not the rest. Most Latin students have read Cicero's First Catilinarian Oration ("To what end, Catiline, do you abuse our patience?"), but not the other three. Most have read the beginning of Caesar's
* Hanse Davion and Takashi Kurita. The two would feud bitterly on the battlefield, but also respected each other's prowess as warriors and never underestimated each other. Their fights were notable for being largely 'above the table' in a setting where espionage was rampant. In fact, when Kurita's beloved wife fell seriously ill, Davion sent a secret message to Kurita with well wishes for her speedy recovery. Contrast this to the mutually disrespectful relationship between Maximillian Liao and Hanse Davion, or Takashi Kurita and Katrina Steiner.
* GWAR. In many songs and albums the band find themselves in rivalry with other forces of evil, including among others the devil and a tyrannical theocratic giant robot named Cardinal Syn, who are incompatible with their philosophy of mindless destruction.
* Harry Potter, his wealth couldn't get him out of staying in Azkaban until there was a second mass breakout due to the defection of the Dementors. This comes from the fact that he was caught red-handed in the middle of the Department of Mysteries in the company of other Death Eaters.

* Greyjoy soldiers also cover their faces with wraps underneath their enormous Wehrmacht cast-off helmets.
* Heaven Will Be Mine, and its trio of main characters all can be considered contrasting characters to its predecessor's main trio:
* Hellboy Animated, a teapot, and a sandal. Amusingly, Kate doesn't even bat an eye at them, until they start attacking.
* Grosse Pointe Blank where Martin and Debi are kissing and Debi stops the make-out session and says something is missing, then slaps Martin across the face before going back to kissing and proceeding to have sex
* heading for what appears to be the final confrontation, he buys a roll of red cloth and transmutes it into his signature jacket, most likely to show that he means business.
* GUN×SWORD Van is shown waking up after a battle, apparently alone. Then it's revealed that he is sleeping beside his main traveling companion, Wendy. It's a subversion of the trope, in that the two are actually in separate twin beds, but since the beds have been pushed together, it looks as if they are sharing a bed.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) for the Merchandise-Driven cartoon.
* Gregory's Girl, the character of Charlie doesn't speak until the final scene, when he point out that the capital of Venezuela is misspelled.
* Greed, also a homunculus and in the same gray area, has claws on his
* Half-Life: Opposing Force: the new aliens introduced in the expansion, Race X, seem to use exclusively living tech. Their guns are "Shock Roaches", herbivorous critters that belch blasts of electricity at their enemies; and the Gene Worm is suggested to be a terraforming device. The Black Mesa scientists in the expansion also learned how to detach a Xen Barnacle from the ceiling and use it like a living grappling hook.
* Hatoful Boyfriend. He's always trying to go after Shuu, and he's never able to even encounter him. Yuuya tells Shuu about one of his attempts, once.
* Harvest Moon revolves around Carter's attraction towards a younger incarnation of Popuri. He has a less-than-chaste interest in her, but Popuri is oblivious to his lustful feelings.
* Gone with the Wind. Wade Hampton (Scarlett's son from her first marriage) is forced to admit that he's been facing bullying and ostracism at school because of Scarlett's unladylike behavior of owning her own businesses, and Rhett's apparent lack of a War record. Rhett, partly motivated by compassion for him, and for step-daughter Ella, and partly motivated by fear that his own biological daughter, Bonnie, might face the same treatment when she's old enough to start playing with other children, starts changing his outward behavior and trying to fit in with the Old Guard social set of Atlanta. Scarlett, however, scoffs at the idea of children's social life being of any importance whatsoever, and keeps right on doing as she pleases.
* Greek myths and their deaths were to get back at the philandering Jason.
* GURPS: Black Ops on fire.) Usually, only about half of the recruits make it through all five years of training with their lives and sanity intact. The general effect of this is that most Black Ops can face impossible challenges and unspeakable horrors, and go "I've been through worse."
* Highlander: The Source stalled for several years and went through several writers and numerous script rewrites before the final project was made. Fans hoped it would improve the thing, but it was still terrible.
* Gundam: Reconguista in G trades up at least once throughout the series, if not more.
* Goof Troop comments as compliments, except PJ's, which he takes as a much milder criticism than it was meant to be. PJ spends the rest of the scene trying to convince Max he meant what he said.
* Harry Potter, Grindelwald is variously described as a "handsome," "merry-faced" man whose "golden hair fell in curls to his shoulders." He was also the nearest Dumbledore ever had to an equal, in intellect and talent, besides Voldemort.
* Hilda, Hilda, David and the Great Raven have to fly through a severe blizzard/thunderstorm, caused by hundreds of Weather Spirits, to reach the weather station of Victoria van Gale (whom Hilda believes to be in trouble). Later, Hilda and the Raven brave the same storm again to reach the Weather Spirits themselves, and get them to stop arguing.

* Hellbound that were originally used to bind the demon inside a coffin. The demon appears to die, only to reveal that he can't be killed even by those weapons and murdering the poor old man in response.
* Gundam ZZ: his first experience flying a Gundam mainly involved him clumsily crashing into things and defeating his opponent by sheer luck. Likewise Elle, who could only figure out how to move the Gundam's arms her first time, let alone make it walk or fight.
* He may not have been considered family beforehand, but he sure as hell was after suggesting that he, Moe, and Shemp each took $50 out of their pay to give to Shemp and Moe's brother Curly, who had recently had a stroke and was unable to work. Moe was reportedly touched by this, since Larry was not a member of the Howard clan and he was the one who came up with the idea, and he was family from that point forward.
* her first on-screen use of it involves lobbing a truck at two helicopters, nailing both
* Halo: Reach, they even started to comprehend blast radii... In general, the Marines and other human troops can be useful allies to have, but they die faster than an ice cream cone in a volcano if the player isn't careful. Unfortunately for you, the enemy's AI got correspondingly smarter as your allies' did.
* Hidden Heart of Gold: I'm a jerk, but I've done some pretty nice things. Tell anyone about this and I'll put your ass on life support!
* Half-Life 1 away, on the other side of a wall, from the test chamber where everything goes wrong.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 3 episode 32, Big M. wants to bomb an iceberg to flood the Superstar School. He misunderstands a warning from Little M. and lands in a big pile of garbage below him trying to get to the iceberg.
* Hellsing, he doesn't really care. Otherwise one of the more realistic portrayals of this trope, as pieces will fall off of him.
* Heart In Hand, although it's made clear that they do have a good relationship with each other, Darryl's sister Brynn embarrasses and teases him, often teaming up with his teammates or Alex.
* Grrl Power, Dabbler's antics have earned her this a few times, like Maxima punching her across a room after she'd grabbed her breasts and Sydney punching her in the back after a heating spell made her "hot and bothered".
* Half-Life 2, Gordon is separated from Alyx this way, when Black Mesa East is attacked
* Han van Meegeren and had published anti-Semitic literature which had Hitler's personal approval).
* High School Of The Dead to call the zombies "zombies". Instead, they use "Them" and even went out of its way to imply they're two different things.
* Happens a lot with the hosts as well, especially if they're singers in their own right. The first time this happened was when famous Swedish singer and entertainer (as well as a former Eurovision representative herself) Lill Lindfors hosted in 1985, which began with her singing a song about the joys of music. Happened again the two years after that, when Norwegian folk singer Åse Kleveland (also a former Eurovision representative - same year as Lill, in fact) hosted in 1986 and when Belgian pop star Viktor Lazlo hosted in 1987. Downplayed for a while after that, as most contests opted to use TV and radio presenters as hosts, but it would show up again in years like:
* Gunnerkrigg Court, part of it was him being unable to deal with his complexes in her presence, and he knows he's in the wrong for the latter.
* God Mode Sues via his time space burning fire, which gives him the power of "denial of phenomena". In layman's terms, he can negate anyone, anything, any EVENT, any CAUSALITY, any MEMORY, any WORLD, any GOD, or any DIMENSION he wishes by burning the time space that makes them up. This includes the events that possess anytime he dies or gets hurt as well. He is confirmed to be the absolute end of his multiverse and can enact it anytime he wants, but doesn't because "he isn't that big of an asshole."

* Heroes Against Hunger, a one-shot comic published in 1986 featuring Superman and Batman, had various pencilers and inkers submitting two pages each of the 48-page story as a benefit for African famine relief and recovery.
* Heroes tracks down and kills a man who can change his form to look like any other human being, and thus claims the power for himself.
* Gunsmith Cats explosives, however, do inflict realistic damage, which is why May makes her own in the first place.
* Heralds of Valdemar, referred to as the Fetching Gift. Some Fetchers are also capable of teleporting objects vast distances, useful for conveying wartime missives to and from the front. The series has yet to feature a Fetching protagonist, so its precise abilities and limits have not been explored.
* "Hammer of the Gods" featured a hotel that had been taken over by pagan gods as a trap for the Winchesters and had locked the surviving guests in the larder.
* Harvey Beaks swap bodies after an accident with a magical crystal. When it happens, Harvey's voice actor, Max Charles, and Princess', Andres Salaff, do their best impressions of each other's characters. The result is some pretty hilarious voices, especially from Max Charles as Princess.
* Heat while still in the booth at a truck stop diner. They follow up on the deed outside, but he's forced to stop the beating when Chris spots a police car nearby. They wait until the police car drives off, by which point Waingro is gone.
* Grumpy Old Men: John Gustafson's house about to be foreclosed by the IRS for back taxes.
* Headhunter, and blast it in his chest, hoping that he doesn't stomp up and hit you while you're vulnerable.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. Especially with America. England is often moping about how America was so cute and obedient when he was a child under his rule, unlike the brash and rude country he's grown up to be. Then we see flashbacks of adorable little colony America yelling "go to hell, Engwand!".
* Good Omens, and believes it worked since, coincidentally, the angel stepped into a summoning circle just as Shadwell finished his incantation.
* Harry Truman stood by his decision to use atomic bombs against Japan, saying "I knew what I was doing when I stopped the war... I have no regrets and, under the same circumstances, I would do it again." In private diaries, however, he expressed some regrets and uncertainty.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002), the last order the Elders give to Captain Randor is that he will lead Eternia in their place as its king.
* Heighway Pinball, the player's rival is Francisco Valentino, nicknamed "The Scorpion".
* Hey, Hey, Hey, It's The Monkees, also referenced Barney hate. During one part of the special, one of the band members pulls out a Barney puppet for some kids. When another member asks him about it, he puts the Barney puppet away and pulls out a Monkees puppet instead.
* Highlander had MacLeod use the Eiffel Tower to kill two birds with one stone: By killing his opponent, who had hidden a computer counting down to initiate his master plan somewhere in central Paris, Mac caused the tower to act as an antenna for his quickening, shorting out every computer for miles.
* God of War takes this trope a step further by having the main protagonist kill the forces that be by essentially becoming one by the time the plot ties up.
* Grand Theft Auto IV has several multiplayer modes, many of which fit this to some degree.
* Happens exactly so to Oliver Queen. This is, of course, not the first nor the last time in the show's history a character breaks something because they don't know their own strength or how to control it.
* Harry Turtledove series included an alternate version of "Der Fuehrer's Face" directed at the Fleetlord of the alien invasion.
* Goldman has layered metafiction on this conceit since the book's publication.

The original edition mentioned a missing reunion scene that Goldman felt Morgenstern should have written. He claims to have written one himself, but his publisher refused to include it. Readers could write to the publisher for a copy of the scene; what they got was a letter detailing legal troubles with the Morgenstern estate.
* Gym Bunny: This trope implies that gay men work out or participate in sports because they're vain (and want to perfect their looks) and horny (and are looking for sex partners), and any other reason is an afterthought at best.
* Herakles's solution to the labor of bringing Cerberus from the Underworld is to just ask Hades if he can borrow the dog.
* GURPS: "Exotic Genitalia" is a feature available as is "Enhanced Male Primary Sexual Characteristics". But of course.
* Happy Heroes (when she's not transformed) is probably one of the most prominent examples. She almost failed graduation because Big M. didn't think she was intimidating enough - or at all. Some of the other untransformed monsters also count as this.
* He also wrote at least 75,000 letters over the course of his life. And that's the
* Going Postal (after the city's largest prison) got its popularity by reporting on murders, preferably horrible ones. Moist von Lipwig is a bit put out that his inventive but bloodless crimes only merited two paragraphs.
* Hallowed Ground: These are freed from their dead bodies by fire and can possess living objects or people to interact with the living, but are most powerful when possessing a newborn and growing up in the new body. However, they are vulnerable to anything that would damage their current vessel. They can also take animal forms.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983): Episodes give us back-stories to show us how Man-at-Arms became Teela's father, how Cringer first became Battle-Cat, how Orko first came to live at the Royal Palace, and how the Sorceress became the Sorceress.
* Halo 3: ODST style gameplay is ripe for this kind of rumormongering. Stories of hidden energy swords are pretty popular. Rumors of living Elites hiding somewhere in the city crop up from time to time as well. And those strange markings that pop up in VISR mode could be anything.
* GURPS in the fact that the text description of the worldline mentions that even some scientists who've been studying the USL for years "don't really believe in it".
* Grandia games have secret weapons that could be considered Infinity+ 1 Swords. However, if one hacks items in the first game, an item called the 100 Sword will appear. It would be an Infinity+ 1 Sword had it been included in the game proper as the final weapon (the Spirit Sword) has only 70 + STR while the aptly-named 100 Sword has + 100 STR. There is also a 100 Fire Mace in the game files for no reason in particular.
* her Number Two. He continues this role when Ivanova is transferred out and replaced with Captain Elizabeth Lochley.
* Hiccup's parents, Stoick and Valka. Even after Valka was abducted by dragons twenty years previously, Stoick still always loved her and never showed even the slightest interest in remarrying. Valka, for her part, lived away from
* heavy revelations, the party leaves the chapter much more optimistic than they were upon entering it.
* Happy Endings where Alex is mistaken for a prostitute. Specifically, she's wearing an old-fashioned sexy fur coat draped over a tight red dress on Valentine's Day, and she waves over a car, leans into the window and asks the driver if they're looking for a party — because she was lost.
* Halo ship for mobility and power, it is capable of traveling all over the galaxy while housing thousands to millions of Covenant citizens and troops.
* "Goodbye, General Lee": It almost is for the show's signature (and heroic) car, when Boss Hogg, tired of the Duke boys constantly foiling his schemes (and perceiving the General Lee's "sheer power" in always playing a key role), picks up on Luke's off-handed remark that the General Lee isn't what it used to be. At one point, the trope kicks into effect when Rosco, having earlier locked up the Dukes on a minor traffic charge, and having impounded the General Lee has the car driven out to the country, places the car's transmission in neutral, and pushes it down the hill... toward a cliff. Cooter is conveniently nearby, sees what's going on, and manages to stop the General Lee (by using his tow truck as a "brake") but then Cooter has his own hands full when he has trouble stopping the truck. (Not to worry, Cooter got his tow truck to stop just at the very edge of the cliff!)

* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de have something to do with her destiny to assist the main character, but still...
* handwaved a second time by implying that everyone who builds these robots are massive perverts (as if that weren't obvious enough). Still doesn't explain why such a massive flaw would be included in the design.
* Greek myth) is about a man who finds a ring of invisibility and uses it to commit all sorts of crimes, culminating in seducing the queen and killing the king.
* Grom Hellscream (pictured above), chieftain of the Warsong Clan from
* Highlander: The Series, the ones who don't resort to killing tend to fall to the ones who do.
* Google Translate. Anything sent through it enough times will sound like
* Green Acres: Eva Gabor speaks actual Hungarian on occasion. It doesn't always match up with the captions sometimes provided. In "The Road", Lisa is misquoted as saying "That darn road". What she's actually saying is "Things like this never happened in Hungary!".
* Heavy Cruiser: Smaller than a battlecruiser, and the largest ship called a "tin-can" in universe. Do a lot of commerce protection and also serve as support elements for battlecruiser task groups.
* Greeks, of course). Naturally, Athena favors him and helps him out a lot (against the wishes of her uncle Poseidon, whom he had somehow offended).
* he couldn't possibly have seen it, or even spoken to anyone who had. Critics generally think it's a metaphor for the Four Cardinal Virtues (fortitude, temperance, justice, and prudence) illuminating the life of the penitent sinner.)
* GUN×SWORD. He once looked for Wendy by heading into every women's restroom in a train station, not understanding why the women were screaming until he got arrested for it.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince they had agreed to months before.
* Grrl Power field commander, and the strongest (heroic) superhuman in the setting.
* Goku and Krillin are like this for a while at first, as Roshi's general idea for his students is to boost all their raw physical and mental abilities through
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged has a different character read the disclaimer at the start of every episode. When it's Jan Valentine's turn, he stops midway and turns it into a series of crude (and lewd) remarks vaguely based on it.
* hates having those feelings. He regularly fails and she regularly comes back to him, and as time went on he stopped doing it... so often.
* He does whatever Drusilla wants, and would do anything to get her back from Angelus. So while his Patrick Stewart speech is partly true for him, it's mostly a way of avoiding telling Buffy that he's been cuckolded. She figures it out later, anyway.
* Ground Control they were more similar to existing aircraft and could be upgraded with more powerful weaponry and extra armor.
* Goodnight Punpun, Punpun dreams up a small meteor that fits the bill, which he names Punpunia. It's really only big enough for his house, family, and a few stray animals.
* Glove and Boots episode "Ten Reasons Why Time Travel is No Good", #5 is "You'll Kill Everybody, or They'll Kill You". Fafa explain that time travelers can catch diseases from the future they're not immune to (demonstrated by a future version of Fafa sneezing on Mario and causing him to keel over and die), or spread diseases people in the past aren't immune to (demonstrated by Mario sneezing on a past version of Fafa with similar results).
* Guybrush Threepwood has a crippling fear of porcelain that is never explained.

* Help Desk, in an attempt to get a better public image, The Dark Lord of Ubersoft legally changes his name to "Mr. Bunny, the Hoppy Computer Guy." It doesn't really work.
* High-performance cars with cameras mounted on them tease the police in Stockholm to chase them, let themselves be chased but not caught for a while, recording the chase with said cameras, and then head for an expressway where they escape at speeds out of reach for Swedish police cars. Like Ghost Rider, the drivers of these cars cannot be convicted thanks to the very special Swedish traffic laws.
* Globalization have this serving as the logical conclusion, politically and culturally, while others either subvert or avert this trope altogether.
* Harry Potter (with the latter's scenery eating making her all the scarier).
* Haven (2020). Shortly afterwards, they discover another individual of the same species, known as Katefulai, who transports them to an otherwise inaccessible set of islets in the swamp region of Source.
* Heck, the entire "Return to Sabaody" arc might as well be titled "He's Back: The Story Arc", "He" being the entire Straw Hat crew.
* Grant Morrison (a sentient fragment of a lost, fantastic world) expands to become Danny the World, filling the 'real' world with mystery and significance.
* Gullible Lemmings: People who believe, and try to help, the villain.
* Heartstopper. As patient as their mother is, she draws a line with David's verbal abuse, repeatedly telling him to stop. (He doesn't.)
* Happy Heroes Season 2 episode 11, when some townsfolk get mad at Happy S. for causing trouble by magnifying their stuff, they attack him. The attack forms a big ball of dust with the heads, arms, etc. of the townsfolk sticking out.
* Going Under dungeon, Winkydink, has pillows with 69 on them, drawn in a way to look like the Cancer astrological sign.
* Guardians is redundant—it's entirely possible that translator technology is common among species that have any interstellar dealings at all.
* Gustavo Mota along for "The Paleto Score", when asked about his first heist, he replies that he robbed an armored car.
* Harry Turtledove The story is a prequel to "Herbig-Haro", which pits a lone human against a whole planet occupied by militaristic aliens roughly on WWII level... A lone human and his A.I.-equipped interstellar spacecraft.
* He was also wounded 6 times, but still made it home to become the governor of Maine.
* Gotham Central IAD cops — but IAD are generally shown as honest guys doing an unpleasant job without malice.
* Graboids extensible mini-mouths on their tongues. In the first film, a single severed tongue is initially mistaken for an entire creature.
* Heroic BSoD while the two are stuck in Ratigan's death trap, then eventually snaps "If you've given up, we might as well set it off now and be done with it!" This gives Basil the idea to set the trap off early at just the right moment in order to not only escape certain death, but free himself, Dawson, and Olivia.
* Hawaii Five-0, Kono was on track to a professional surfing career before she injured her knee and had to switch to police work.
* He Knows You're Alone, about a soon-to-be bride who is stalked by a killer the weekend before her wedding.
* Greenfire: It's actually Greenfire that kicks off the relationship by giving Rarity some gems that she had tried and failed to unearth. She comes back to properly thank him, they plan to meet once again, and things go from there.
* Guilty Gear destroy each other with attacks named after various songs.
* Hc Svnt Dracones is the standard form of post-human governance, but for the last three hundred years most Corptowns have outsourced security to the Inner Ring Police Force, as the entire company follows one set of rules rather than constant changes whenever a new CEO or executive takes charge.
* Heroes of the Storm. As of late 2018, they also started adding "Nexus-born" heroes that are Original Generation for Blizzard as a whole.
* Heart's Blood by Juliet Marillier has Caitrin and Anluan in a surprisingly magic-free version of the myth, considering the amount of magic present elsewhere in the book.

* Gone. Andrew reveals that he has a jet pack as well and tells Buffy that it's not over, and they will meet again...before jetting into an overhanging roof and knocking himself unconscious.
* Gory Discretion Shot, which suggests an even deeper level of interaction than all the other comments — he's not just aware he's being watched, he can reach out and touch the camera!
* Harsh Times is hit violently with a blast from a shotgun while escaping the scene of a drug deal gone bad. The blast absolutely rips the entire side of his head and face apart, and he ends up crying and begging his friend to end his life for a few minutes.
* her bedroom Incidentally, he can't turn his power off, either, leading to awkward situations like instantly completing a training simulation without even doing anything.
* Here There Be Monsters buries her face into Edith's chest and cries.
* Gottlieb, Bowser's castle spins, for no reason other than simply because it can.
* Hallmark) proposes to Mary at the end and she accepts. However, in this version, they are not related — Colin's father is an old friend of Mary's parents instead of being Mary's uncle.
* Gor takes place on one, and we learn that it is like this. You can look up and see the opposite "land" side. Day and night are controlled artificially, as is weather. At one point they travel to one of the ends, where the gravity is pracitally non-existent.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army has Krauss bringing in a complex set of lenses designed to see through the glamour of trolls and other supernatural creatures.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2: Yondu Udonta's funeral makes all the Guardians reflect on their circumstances, especially Peter Quill, Gamora and Rocket.
* Guillermo del Toro as a child, when he wondered "why couldn't the fish monster and his beloved be happy together?". And so, many years later, came an Oscar-winning film.
* Half-Life: Alyx takes place within the "Quarantine Zone" inside City 17. The whole area is infested with the usual barnacles, headcrabs, and antlions. There are even some varieties living there that aren't seen outside the zone. But the most worrying of all is the ever expanding Xen biomass growing uncontrollably, covering entire buildings and swallowing objects at a fast rate. The Combine have even made an entire cleanup force that fights these growths... to little success.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, and the reason why there are so many arcs. There are other reveals though, but most are in the sound novels.
* Here an unexpectedly animorphic kid pinches himself and screams - he still thinks that the change is totally awesome, he just didn't realize that he was using claws.
* Goblin Face: Making up your face to an absurd degree while overacting.
* Halo 3: ODST gives the player a first-person view of being in an SOEIV as it's being dropped from orbit onto Earth's surface.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series, Sinestro arranges for a criminal he deemed too dangerous to slowly suffocate to death. His reply when questioned by his fellow Green Lanterns?
* Glee, which makes sense since it's a musical show. All the major (and most minor) couples have had "falling in love" duets and the duets are usually accompanied by some dancing.
* High Fantasy in particular involves travel between different planets via meteorites.
* Grand Theft Auto 2: The "Alma Mater Return" mission revolves around intentionally going to prison, stealing a guard uniform, and sparking a riot.
* grandson and Yuuko's dream is telling Watanuki that he can leave the shop at last. Nothing about the fates of Kohane, Himawari and her husband, the original Doumeki, the unhatched egg that's now a Doumeki family heirloom, and Xiaolang is ever resolved.
* Halloween Episode: An episode where the characters celebrate Halloween.
* He actually does this quite often, usually not realizing what he's said until after the fact.

* Hal/Titan, he attempted to impress Roxanne but when rejected, went on a childish, selfish rampage.
* Helia joins the Specialists in season 2. Nabu joins them at the end of season 3
* "Hey, I did a favor for YOU!" Then, at the end, the final members consist not of infamous historical figures, but "the starting lineup for the 1976 Philadelphia Fliers" (AKA the "Broad Street Bullies").
* Hey Arnold!, and the fourth time she almost confesses her love for him. For Helga, that's definitely a nightmare!
* Goodfellas into the theater. He tells the classic joke, "I take my wife everywhere, but she finds her way home!" Youngman's trouble with his lines was the biggest obstacle to getting the shot.
* Happens again in a later episode. Clair has gone into hiding after being framed for a crime he didn't commit, and the Vita Board members want the money he has stashed away in a safe that opens via retinal scan. Each faction is out for its own interests, and fight against each other in an attempt to locate Clair and
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, and can manipulate matter that isn't part of Ego to the extent of effortlessly wiping out a fleet of drone-ships singlehandedly.
* Gone, touching the barrier feels like sticking your entire arm in an electrical outlet.
* Goodbye Chains. If anything, he might be more manly then the heterosexual Banquo.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, the Daily Prophet mentions a break-in at Gringotts that turns out to be an attempt at stealing the eponymous stone.
* Hanna-Barbera fans but by catering too much to them they run the risk of alienating the audiences that really were the only ones who super cared about the characters in the first place.
* Goosebumps appealed to young fans of horror and not adults who appreciate theatre didn't help it gain an audience.
* Green Arrow, and that's one of the main reasons why that adaptation isn't very popular with comic book fans.
* Gourmet Girl Graffiti this trope. Tsuyuko finds it doesn't quite work.
* GoldenEye fight with Xenia (which includes two sexually suggestive lines, "That depends on your definition of safe sex" and "No, no, no. No more foreplay") because he's still dripping wet and only dressed in his swimming trunks.
* Grease) advice, and Barry Pearl, who played Doody in the film, is the producer of the National Bandstand.
* Heat Wave himself qualifies, in a sadder way. Murdering them was not the intention, but he set his family home on fire with his parents still inside, his pyromania kicked in completely, and much as he would've wanted to save them he just * Google, as tech companies like to do), and the company's headquarters in California is appropriately called the "Googleplex".
* has been known to. On a Mac, the software also maxes out the volume for some reason, making this even worse.
* Halo, a hyper-advanced race originating outside of the Milky Way, were responsible for seeding lifeless planets and speeding up the evolutionary process on planets that already had life.
* Graviteam Tactics: Zhalanashkol is set in August 1969, during the Sino-Soviet border conflict.
* happen to swim by someone doing a translation spell. (It's not clear if Black Manta and his men were speaking English or Atlantean, though.)
* Hercule Poirot is refined and fastidious, and also has no problem with gory crimes.
* Good Eats about a fisherman who doesn't like to cook, eat, or look at whole fish.
* Hela, after Gamora killed him since she believes they are the perfect dark couple.
* Halo subjective opinions thrown at it, and stuff that's flat out contradicted by the games.
* Harry Potter, of course. He succeeds not through force or power, but with goodness and connecting with others.

* Harry and Hermione are like this, as per usual. Amusingly, in one alternate reality, they were, albeit by adoption — since
* Happy Heroes abilities. The episode's climax has the magnet become so overpowered that it nearly causes nearby Planet Gray to fly into Planet Xing. Planet Gray native Big M. nevertheless gets excited since this might be his chance to finally return to his home planet.
* Glenn Quagmire saves a woman who is having a heart attack while changing at the mall:
* Hannibal, thanks to it being an even more specialized field in 2015 than in 1986.
* Hangin' with Mr. Cooper both had plotlines where someone buys a lottery ticket with their age as one of the numbers (so they think), and everyone thinks that the someone has won the jackpot... until it's discovered that the character fibbed about their age when buying the ticket. D'oh! (Once again, the "5 numbers out of 6 is still worth a lot of cash" angle is ignored.)
* Glider, the four creators of "Slumberland," john calhoun, Paul Finn, Ward Hartenstein and Steve Sullivan, each have their portrait on the wall of a room named for them.
* High level barbarian dual-wielding the Flail of Ages and Defender of Easthaven with Hardiness HLA active up has 80% physical damage reduction, slows enemies on hit with no saves, by-passes most protections with several separate ticks of elemental damage, is immune to nearly every status effect except maze/imprisonment when enraged in addition to pushing their STR easily to 25, while wearing a belt that reduces all magical damage dealt by 50% and can swap their main armor for around 50% of any element, that with 2 rings of Gaxx can heal almost as fast as he's damaged.
* GURPS in a section on Von Neumann machines and points out the waste heat of the goo eating a planet is likely a more pressing threat than being eaten by it. On the up side they require extremely high level technology and are expensive to make, on the down side some versions might be able to fly or travel through space.
* High School Musical 2 in a German parody of the movie with Troy saying: "You can press your butt tighter to my crotch."
* GO-GO Tamagotchi! has a narrator who will occasionally talk to the main characters, mostly Mametchi.
* Gosalyn dreams of Ariadne's magic academy. Except she's in the past, before the events she dreams of happened.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince as an awkward attempt at flirting); before they hook up, it's Hermione he's crushing on, not Lavender.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire: Most of the drama for the first 3/4 (at least) of the book surrounds Harry's performance in the three Tasks of the Triwizard Tournament. The drama is removed from this on all rereadings, when you know that Harry was aided, manipulated and guided through all 3 challenges by the villain, and the villain's entire plan hinged on Harry winning the Tournament.
* Higher Learning: As Shinji is going through a nervous breakdown Asuka gets worried, ergo she gets very angry with him. It gets so bad that Misato has to intervene rather forcefully so that they make up with each other.
* Highlander stop aging at the time they suffer their first death and become immortal.
* Henry Ian Cusick is listed in the credits on every episode of season six. He appeared in about 30 seconds of the premiere, reappears in episode ten, and appears in a grand six more episodes, some of them only as his flash-sideways counterpart.
* Godspell (1973), the clown-Christ begins his ministry in the middle of Central Park, and wanders all over the (empty) city with his disciples.
* Hellsister Trilogy can't be healed then he wants to die alongside her.
* Harry and the Hendersons, George Henderson tries this when he needs some outsider advice on whether he should continue harbouring Harry (a bigfoot). He mentions "his friend, Jack", and the other guy asks him if the story will involve a beanstalk.
* Golden changes this around thanks the new abilities and new chances to give abilities to party members, making them skillwise, eventually as powerful as their shadows (Yukiko gains a variation of the exclusive fire attack her shadow had, Rise can shield all party members from damage for a turn like her shadow could, Naoto gets Heat Riser, and 3rd level element skills like their shadow etc) Their HP is still much lower, but it's a significant improvement.

* Grab and grapple specials and super moves tend to be stronger than other specials and, on average, look more impressive. However, they usually have harder inputs and can only be done when your opponent is standing next to you, which can be very hard to predict and leave you wide open.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, Draco never catches on to Harry and Ron when they're impersonating Crabbe and Goyle.
* Hey Arnold! episode "Grand Prix", Arnold's team takes second place behind the team of Helga and Phoebe. Eugene, who drove the second half of the race, is excited to have take second and finished in a kart that was falling apart, but teammate Stinky complains that they didn't win.
* Harry in chapter 71, resurrected and possessed by the utterly enraged Phoenix Force which promptly goes on an epic rampage. This makes sense when you realise that the White Phoenix of the Crown is Lily Potter.
* Grim Reminder, have Shadowcat and Nightcrawler, worried about Wolverine, stow away on the X-Jet when he goes back to the site of Weapon X.
* Green Lantern (third volume) featured Guy Gardner taking Kyle Rayner and John Stewart out for a little bit of girl-watching.
* Hero and the Terror who is just pure uncontrolled rage, so strong that he easily overpowers Chuck Norris himself in the opening. He lacks "higher reasoning skills", to boot.
* Hex has: "Looks like a good time for Plan B. Sure do wish I had me a Plan B." Followed a few pages later by "Looks like I just found me a Plan B".
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Lost and Damned, the Lost's clubhouse is a Bad-Guy Bar and your primary save point.
* has two alien species "liberating" Earth from each other as part of a galactic war. They leave the planet wrecked nearly to pieces, and the whole thing is barely a footnote for them.
* Happily Never After could be one of those things. When he asks if she's a damsel in distress, her response is "I will be. Kind of. At midnight". To say the least, Ella does more ass-kicking than servant boy Rick or Humperdink.
* Harry Potter have to a) find, b) feed, and c) nurse his master back to health. For almost a year.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name in a bad situation. He works hard to keep the others from hurting themselves, and even cooks for Hanna.
* Grand Theft Auto being the notable exception (some of the gangs become so hostile eventually that it's nearly impossible just to drive a car through their neighborhood without having it blown up by shotgun fire).
* Gotham he eventually lures Magpie into a trap and shoots her dead on the spot.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone: Harry's impressive successful catching of one of Neville's keepsakes during broomstick lessons being seen by McGonagall is what gets him the position of Seeker with the Quidditch team.
* has one of these. The instant he regains his memories, he holds a family of telemarketers hostage over a piranha tank and re-declares his revenge on Santa Claus. That's the bunny we love.
* HERZ: Every chapter included final notes that fleshed the world out. The author's website features a FAQ listing the different factions and their clashing ideologies.
* Hawkgirl. It set the precedent for future actors to play Thanagarians, most of them being of Cuban or Latin American extraction.
* Hereville: How Mirka Got Her Sword by Barry Deutsch, a graphic novel set in an Orthodox Jewish community, the narrator declares,
* Helshezag, the sword of Darklord Kraagenskûl, compels its wielder to butcher its enemies while draining its wielder's lifeforce (represented by a loss of Endurance), and
* GoGoV play this straight: Darkness King Zylpheeza is air, Cobolda is earth, Denus is water and Drop (later known as Salamandes) is fire.

* Hacksaw Ridge by showing burning corpses on the battlefield before flashing back to the main character's early life.
* Greta Van Fleet without having any unique spin on the older band's sound. The band consistently dismisses these claims.
* Grave Robbers from Outer Space series of B-movie games has a character in at least two who is meant to represent some minor character who's killed early on in the movie to make the danger seem real. They're accordingly weak but their special ability is any attacks against your characters have to be directed at them before anyone else, acting as a kind of meat shield.
* Hangman's Curse, it's revealed that the attacks are the result of planted pheromones causing an African Spotted wolf spider to bite the victims. Then, they breed with a brown recluse spider and infest the school...
* Guinness World Records was created specifically to end pub debates about the biggest/strongest/fastest whatever.
* Henry Cavill growing incredibly bulky to play the Dark Knight because he needed a physique that would make him even more imposing than Cavill's Superman!
* has just regenerated from the Third and pretty much sums up what his era on the show is going to be like:
* Hawaii Five-0. In "I Helu Pu," McGarrett goes over the side of a building trying to save a drunken suicidal man. Danny rushes to the ledge only to see they have both fallen onto a balcony.
* Gossip Girl Dan's book 'Inside' is about his real life and that of his friends and as such the main character is his author avatar.
* Hidamari Sketch, while at a water park, Yuno worries about how to enter the lazy river, since she can't swim and her innertube would float away if she puts it in first (and jumping in is not allowed). While she agonizes over what to do, Sae informs her that the pool is shallow.
* Goosebumps: Slappy (in ghost form) does this to Shep in "the Ghost of Slappy" in the lunchroom at school after possessing a bowl of spaghetti to fall on him.
* helps Florence avert an illegal mass robot mind-wipe that would have let a Corrupt Corporate Executive is entirely out of petty self-interest, since he would have been affected; he openly admits he wouldn't have bothered if he wasn't at risk.
* Glee Reprise is kicked off by Rachel starting her own glee club out of the Kenmore Community Centre down the street from Carmel High after Beth is rejected from Vocal Adrenaline.
* Haumea, a dwarf planet in the outer Solar System which is distorted into a long ellipsoid by its very fast rotation.
* Guardians of the Flame: Doria and Walter have been in a relationship like this for an unspecified period at the start of the series.
* Hajime no Ippo habits contain bullying Aoki and Kimura and rubbing the fact that they're... not the best boxers... in their faces.
* Have a hero of great status and prosperity (which is why many tragic main characters are nobles or royalty), who suffers a terrible fall, usually death.
* Heroes of the Storm. A cute faerie dragon with an adorable child-like voice. With lines like "Let us make their insides outsides!".
* Hidden City, whenever you complete a collection item from either the Upper/Lower City category, the game will forcibly transport you to the "appropriate" region. This is especially annoying since traveling between the two maps requires a not insignificant loading time. And since the player is most likely in the middle of doing a quest at the other location, this forces them to travel back to where they were before, thus wasting even more time with the completly unnecessary back-and-forth.
* has a ten-second dual spit-take when Zach reveals why he has body image issues.
* Hamilton, Hamilton really wants a command during the Revolutionary War so he can rack up heroic deeds and build a legacy worth protecting. He is not throwing away his shot at being a war hero.
* Heroine Chic. When the terrorists are unmasked, they turn out to be blonde-haired, blue-eyed white men wearing brown-face makeup. The motive for their attack is debated briefly at the end of the episode, but the plotline is dropped and never re-visited.

* Harvest December has a chapter where this effectively happens as the main god of an island infuses pretty much all of the local girls with his power, causing them to go on a primal rampage without any control of their own selves.
* glurgescent, wherein the rest of the gang enter during Mikey's heart-to-ribcage talk with a very dead pirate.
* Gossip Girl having sex with Blair at the time. It turns out Blair is just reading a fashion magazine and mocking Serena's bedroom noises to point out that the walls are thin.
* Godzilla vs. Kong: Ren Serizawa, when controlling Mechagodzilla, accidentally saves Madison from being eaten by the Skullcrawler that the Mecha was being tested on when he grabs it mid-pounce. With how close its jaws got to Madison and the speed it was moving at, that definitely would've been the end of her if not for him. Not only was the rescue completely unintended, but Ren evidently never notices even after the act that he committed it.
* Harmless Freezing is beyond humans but we have the next best thing, Cold That Kills You Slower Than Some Alternatives! Low temperatures are brutal to biological processes. Bleeding out and burning through one's oxygen supplies count as biological processes. Cold is used medically as
* Highlander II: The Quickening, for no good reason, sends his mooks to try and kill Connor MacLeod decades after he becomes mortal because he's worried Connor would return to try and kill him. During the altercation with the mooks, Connor beheads one of them and as a result, regains his immortality, and becomes young again, and then is later able to take out the shield that is causing harm to the planet.
* Helen's Mysterious Castle, but presumably this isn't the only heroic thing they've ever done.
* Hell Girl, probably. We don't know if a Hell Girl existed before Ai, but by the third season, she's trying to recruit a replacement.
* Help! Help! This Index Is Being Repressed!: The specific elements that dystopian societies run on.
* Grandma Got Run Over by a Reindeer to go to jail (let alone ruin Christmas), but still has plenty of evidence that points to why he should. When Cousin Mel confesses, however, he's the first one to yell for her to be arrested.
* Hellboy got Hitler to back his Project Ragna-Rok with the claim that it would change the course of the war. He turned most of the Nazi scientists assigned to him into disciples who were fully aware that his real plan was to bring about the apocalypse. Technically he didn't even lie, as an apocalypse would definitely change the war.
* Harshly deconstructed in the case of Robb Stark. The Young Wolf breaks off a politically important
* HA HA HA—No" as an invitation to come to his house for Decemberween.
* Grace Kelly. Initially portrayed as innocent and naive, she proves to be the only person willing to help her husband fight the villains.
* He-Man Woman Hater: You women suck (not just literally) and don't think the SJWs will save you!
* Gothic Sector during Abbadon's 12th Black Crusade. It's still undecided if the Warp Storm was just a coincidence, or if Abbadon engineered it somehow.
* Goblins and spends several panels flailing around randomly while his teammates try to figure out what's actually going on.
* he was born into slavery and wouldn't survive out among the Keidran tribes.
* Hank the Cowdog series regularly tries to impress his sidekick, Drover, with exaggerated explanations of natural phenomena. Drover, not being the smartest dog in the world, believes him.
* Guardians of the Galaxy is even more comedic than the others, and the trailers played up the comedy aspects. It was widely expected to bomb, though whether that was because of the comedy or the fact that its comic was pretty obscure is up for debate. Needless to say, the film is one of the highest-rated entries in the Marvel Cinematic Universe – effectively breaking out of the ghetto.

* He also remembers joining a group in out in the cabbage farms called the Men of the Furrow, where the initiation involved being blindfolded, told to shake hands with "the Old Master", and handed a goat's hoof. If you didn't need to change your underwear, you'd won.
* Gone Fishin' where a boat was supposed to jump over a ramp, fly over a hedge of mangroves, land between two other boats, and stop in the water, the boat slid off the side of the ramp, flipped over, and landed on a crowd of crew and extras, killing stuntwoman Janet Peters Wilder, and injuring both her husband Scott Wilder and his father Glenn R. Wilder.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (1977). Series started in August, 1977.
* Granny Weatherwax is well known for her tough old and well-worn boots.
* Happens to Kirito in the Aincrad arc, where Asuna teleports in and has a
* 'Helva' : 'For me and my luggage will never meet again on the bonnie bonnie floors of the Worldcon'.
* Heart of the Woods many times, since she often watches movies to relax.
* Good Omens, angel Aziraphale does this after accidentally losing his own body.
* Gravity Falls), impersonating a dentist, golf car theft, bingo fraud, llamacide ("That llama deserved it!") and general indecency.
* Graphic Novel) and then run across the room to get to the window, coupled with the fact that the apartment was between 10 and 20 stories up at the most.
* Haro equipable part can turn any mech into a game breaker or HPHGCP in Alpha Gaiden, which is capable of doing the same. Same for the W-Up unit in the few games it appears in, because it grants a buff dependent on how many parts slots a mecha has. Mount one of these things on a four part slot mech and watch the carnage. It's even worse in Impact, where you can get TWO and mount them on the same unit.
* Here a British soldier set alight after his IFV was destroyed by Iraqi resistance fighters. He survived.
* He-Man, Krypto the Superdog and Ace the Bathound have been reinvented as the giant steeds of Superman and Batman.
* Grand Hotel check in and proceed to go through major life-changing events.
* Grayson's death. A script was even produced for a full feature and is available to read online.
* Heckle and Jeckle cartoon "Goony Golfers." The two birds are caddies for Chesty the bulldog but only to drive him crazy.
* Gúthwinë ('Battle Friend'): wielded by Éomer, Théoden's nephew and heir.
* he got used to it. Granted, although Waltfeld is by this point a protagonist, the series does not present it as a positive thing.
* Golgo 13 has the title character killing a star football player in the middle of a game. It's implied (but never directly stated) that the hit was ordered by the guy behind him on the depth chart. Another episode had him take out a horse during a horse race, because a stable owner couldn't stand that a steed of ostensibly inferior breeding was winning races.
* Hayate the Combat Butler the poor submachine-gun-wielding thug) in a "Deathny's" restaurant.
* Gordon Parks, filmmaker of the orginal, since he had cameos in both versions.
* Ground Control to Psychoelectric Girl. Just don't let her cheer you on unless she's a good ten or twenty feet away.
* Grimm generally begin with a quote from the fairy story or legend on which the episode is (sometimes very loosely) based.
* Gone with the Wind. Their last conversation with each other goes as follows:
* Goopads and models from lesser-known firms, they're few and far behind, and most tablets are just too small or odd-sized for it to fit inside the television.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix in the school, including prohibiting any meeting which could be used to fight her authority (or, in her mind, the Ministry). Many of these rules were nonsensical and invented as needed any time the existing ones didn't cover a very narrow situation Umbridge wanted to shut down.
* Grineer make use of drones that in addition to boosting the surrounding troopers with

* Grease, the "cool" girls, especially Rizzo, are attracted to bad boys, and the male lead, Danny Zuko, is a bad boy who resembles Arthur Fonzarelli. The main conflict in the plot is over Danny's "badness" and the "goodness" of Sandy, the lead female. Eventually, they end up meeting somewhere in the middle.
* hhgregg ad has hh blowing up some balloons for a blowout sale via a helium tank. hh ends up sucking in the helium for one balloon, causing him to inflate and float around in the air.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, a muscular blacksmith who wears a leotard-like outfit which shows off her buff arms, most of her chest and butt (really not too different from most of the female clothes in the show). While her physique makes it difficult to her to find romance, a couple of characters, including Hercules and Salmoneus, do find her physically attractive.
* Half-Life 2, Alyx notices Combine soldiers infected by headcrabs and quips "Hmmm. A Combine zombie. That's, that's like a...ah...a Zombine! Right? Heh... Zombine, get it?" however, she quickly realizes the joke isn't funny. (Still, the name stuck, so a point in her favor.)
* Heroes, Claire smashes a chair over his head and tersely says, "Show's over."
* he finally had enough and threw strategy out the window for a simple beatdown). Likewise, Luffy makes little to no effort to block punches so when Sentoumaru shows up and uses hand-to-hand combat, Luffy is freaked out that he's being hurt by them due to Sentoumaru using Armament Haki.
* Godzilla vs. Megalon episode has the cast constantly being annoyed by Rokuro's dialogue. When Rokuro shouts goodbye to Godzilla when he leaves, Joel, Servo, and Crow all unanimously shout this trope in total frustration.
* Handball the penalty for "passive play" (i.e. not developing enough of a drive towards the goal) was introduced to kill the incredibly boring but incredibly promising strategy of sitting on the ball and just throwing it around for as long as possible. Unlike similar rules in American sports, it's not based on any measurable thing but instead the referee just lifts their hand as a warning and a couple of seconds later (unless an attempt to score a goal is made) issues the penalty, which always includes the forfeiture of ball possession. Given that the definitions involved are rather subjective, the referee's decisions can be controversial.
* hasn't terminated Bro's custody yet is a major premise for fanfiction.
* Goof Troop. However, Pete usually brings Goofy into his schemes willingly.
* Hacker, Hitter, Grifter, Thief, Mastermind... and none of it would work if they were short a skill. They quickly realize the need to understand the rudiments of each other's specialties, and cross-train accordingly, just in case. A season or two into the series, everyone on the team is capable of basic pick-pocketing (lifting things like ID or a wallet); establishing and maintaining a basic cover identity; defending themselves in a fight against opponents without professional combat training; and even planning particular stages of the job. Only the hacking skills and the actual masterminding remained mainly specialized (though the computer guy is slowly being trained in how to plan jobs).
* GoodFellas when he goes into witness protection. In a sense, he had been something of an Un-person for most of his life.
* Graham McNeill, Temba, Chaos-tainted, accuses Horus of being no friend, because he left him behind while he went on to win glory.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Harry has been disarmed, gagged, and tied securely to a gravestone. Rather than simply killing Harry after using his blood to regain his body, Voldemort not only has Wormtail cut him loose and give him back his wand, but insists on fighting him in a one-to-one duel and forbids interference from any of his Death Eaters, for no other reason than to prove, once and for all, that he is the stronger of the two. The final result of this is that Harry manages to escape and tell the world about his return (not that many people listen at first).
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law somehow turns into a portal to prehistory.
* Haruhi Suzumiya's budget-free alleged film, barely struggling not to laugh as she shambles at Mikuru.

* Hates Their Parent: Outright despises at least one of their parents, sometimes for petty and selfish reasons.
* guessed Gatorade, so this was likely done to raise interest and draw attention to the revamped packaging (with a new "G" logo) and a new focus (hardworking athletes, eventually tying into the subsequent "Win from Within" slogan and "Prime/Perform/Recover" schtick, plus the changed names).
* Happens to Aegon himself a little later on, though, with Dorne. His attempts to conquer it go nowhere, and his beloved sister-wife goes missing. Eventually Dorne sends a letter to him. Whatever the contents, he immediately stops trying to burn them down immediately, and an uneasy peace is brokered between Dorne and the rest of Westeros.
* Half-Life inter-dimensional bureaucrat, walking in the middle of a destroyed facility while wearing a suit and carrying a briefcase, orchestrating events threatening the whole of humanity, taking care of selected people, all for his "employers". We just don't know who they are yet.
* he's a defective clone and has spent his whole life trying to prove he has worth in spite of that, she says she sort of knows how he feels — she's pretty weird
* Gold Digger reminisces with a friend about their martial arts teacher. One night, the friend was about to sneak into her teacher's quarters to bare her soul (among other things) to him, only to find that several of his other students had the exact same idea. Naturally, a fight broke out.
* Godzilla to Godzilla's dominance over the other kaiju, and the Alpha Skullcrawler likewise being larger than the others of its kind.
* Harley Quinn finishing med school and choosing her speciality at that age, and wouldn't be let loose unsupervised on a prisoner of the Joker's calibre for years to come. (And unlike some other professions on this list, psychiatry is one that is very difficult for "teen genius" types to get into early, since it requires rigorous demonstrations of mental and emotional maturity as well as raw intelligence. One depiction tried to explain away her getting to where she is with the excuse that she slept with her professor for good grades, but again in a psychiatric career path that just wouldn't fly.)
* Heat: In the opening, a crew has captured an armored car, has blown the back door, and has lined up the guards outside. Waingro (in a mask) is upset because one of the guards won't follow his instructions, and has to be told that because of the explosion, he can't hear. Waingro ignores explicit instructions not to kill anyone. The detective later investigating the robbery explains what happened.
* "Hank and the Great Glass Elevator" starts with Hank dealing with the guy's antics in a trip to Austin for Bill's birthday, then it's set up for the episode to focus on him when he moons Ann Richards (
* Hellraiser III: Hell on Earth consists of telling Joey how Pinhead Unbound came to be, and providing instructions to bring him back to him.
* Hellish Pupils: Non-human shaped pupils on a character's eyes are creepy and/or frightening * Heel, which has an ongoing history dating back to the late 1940s — and yes, all of those 60-plus years are NWA canon — but from which WWE's original incarnation, Capitol Wrestling Corporation, broke away as early as 1953.)
* Harry Potter main characters, perhaps Hermione and Ron have more main character credits between them than Harry and supporting character Ginny do?
* he answer: she presented her fellow Rangers with a delicacy from her gourmet cooking class, which looked like brownies. She referred to the secret ingredient as "escargot". Which is French for "snails". Cue the disgusting spit-out.
* Hark! A Vagrant has two different strips about Tom and Daisy neglecting their child, and the second one is called "Just As Good the Second Time."
* Gomer Pyle, U.S.M.C. in prime time (the replacement credits first appeared when the network itself aired daily reruns in the afternoon, where they also eliminated all "tag scenes" from the episodes, resulting in plots often left unresolved!).
* Godzilla (2014), it's implied that the skeleton in the beginning is another of Godzilla's species, making it possible the reason why Godzilla is so hellbent on killing the MUTOs because they killed either his mate or family.

* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! then got better). Cure Sunshine has a different weapon, which gives her unique attacks, while Cure Moonlight has a different transformation.
* Goldfinger and in love with Pussy, but is depicted as purely heterosexual in the film.
* Half-Life 2, allowing you to skip to Ravenholm, which is just after the Gravity Gun tutorial, and the point at which the game starts to get really good. That is also one of the two chapters playable in the demo.
* Halo. The UNSC (Mostly played by Americans) vs. the genocidal, insane, religious Covenant. Bungie's religious references don't help. However, Bungie has denied this, and it is helped by the fact that they have a well known plan to take over the world.
* Heavy Metal FAKK as for the most part, you need either a shield in the off-hand or dual guns to max out the firepower.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban; he takes it better here than in the book.
* Harold and Maude plays Harold's regular apparent suicides for dark humour.
* Harribel gets captured when the Wandenreich invades Hueco Mundo, and is never seen again, even after they are defeated. It was only in the light novels released later that would reveal
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Voldemort kills Charity Burbage, a professor at Hogwarts whom he considered repugnant for supporting Muggles. He tells his huge pet snake Nagini that "dinner is ready", and she slithers across the table until the camera enters her mouth as she starts devouring Burbage's corpse.
* Goldeneye disheveled, as one would expect as she had to hurriedly dress at gunpoint. Bond, however, is as impeccably dressed as ever, which he somehow managed despite holding a gun on her.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets The trio once more suspects one of the obvious antagonists, Draco Malfoy, believing he has opened the Chamber of Secrets and is attacking the muggle-born students in the school. After some amateur sleuthing they are able to debunk that though and come to suspect Red Herring #2, Hagrid. Just to keep the cleverer audience members on their toes, Percy begins acting shifty and ambitious and fits the facts of the case strangely well. Plus, Harry himself is revealed to be a Parselmouth, an ability associated with Slytherin, and keeps hearing strange, murderous voices that nobody else can hear shortly before each attack, which might lead one to the conclusion that he is somehow unwittingly responsible and he is indeed suspected by a large proportion of the student body. By the end of the book, it turns out that Tom Riddle, possessing Ron's sister Ginny through his old diary, has been behind the events of the book.
* Guided By Voices, along with various side projects of their frontman Robert Pollard. Examples: "The Goldheart Mountaintop Queen Directory", "Showbiz Opera Walrus", "Some Drilling Implied", "Burning Flag Birthday Suit", "Squirmish Frontal Room", "Man Called Aerodynamics", "14 Cheerleader Coldfront", "Glow Boy Butlers", "Soul Train College Policeman" (this could go on all day)
* He also got to show off his talent for voices, impressions, and accents in every episode. He now does voice acting for video games.
* Gods cannot die while their followers believe in them, even if they want to.
* Graceland takes place in California, but is actually filmed in Florida, creating a strange inversion of this trope. You can see this in many shots, when there are no mountains where there should be some.
* gone one better so he could power New Horizons by spinning in his grave.
* Haunted Junction, some mind-numbingly boring historical characters from an educational comic he made.
* GS 260: Rini, who has grown into a six-story tall girl, is helpful to people and uses her size for good.
* Guitar Hero games (the second moreso than the first) fall somewhat into this:
* Halloween movies aren't so bad - the first one even opens with the iconic scene of Michael's first kill, shot entirely from his point of view - the later ones revolve around the typically unlikable, rebellious teens with teen issues that are standard in many slasher flicks. In fact, Michael Myer's killings come off as more of a background issue to the love-triangles and teen angst of the protagonists.

* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince (possibly due to a combination of complications, depression, homelessness, and a broken heart) left her son an orphan.
* Goku himself falls into this after becoming a Super Saiyan the first time. He wanted to make Frieza pay for killing Krillin. To that end, he let Frieza power-up to his max level for the sole purpose of humiliating him with the knowledge that even at his best he couldn't beat a "mere monkey". This was around the time when the planet was going to blow up in a few minutes so defeating Frieza as fast as possible would have been reasonable. He also refused to leave when King Kai planned to wish everyone to Earth, because he wanted to finish the fight. By that point, King Kai considered Goku a lost cause.
* Haibara intends to sacrifice herself to allow the gang to escape the bombed tower by counting the time bomb until the end. However, she's stopped by Genta of all people who dashes to her and carries her back to the car they intended to use to escape. He also gives her a speech that roughly means "everyone life is important and we won't let you left behind!". for nothing!
* Good Counterpart fey canines who get their name from their short-ranged teleportation ability.
* Graveyard Shift makes him one of the most entertaining parts of the film.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2. When Peter realizes what Ego has done to reach this point he refuses.
* He also points out that, thanks to the Rule Of Three, the moral of the tale of "The Boy Who Cried Wolf" is not "never tell a lie", but rather "never tell the same lie twice."
* Heckle and Jeckle, tying them to a cache of dynamite and tossing them over a cliff, so he plays "Taps" on a bugle. But the two magpies show up behind him to finish the second half of the passage, and when Pierre turns back to his bugle, it has a lit stick of dynamite in it. From the cartoon "Sno' Fun."
* Hangmen Also Die!, was carried out by Czechoslovak soldiers trained by the British Special Operations Executive and with the blessing of the Czechoslovak government-in-exile, whereas in the film it was carried out by the Czech Resistance. Furthermore, the real assassins were located and killed within a month.
* Glitter Reunion. In 1990, Jerrica told Rio the truth about her being Jem. They ended up breaking up because Rio felt like he had been toyed with.
* Gundam SEED Destiny talks with Shinn about how those with power need to know how to use it properly, otherwise they'll just be causing more of the grief that they themselves have suffered already.
* Higurashi: When They Cry. Might be a social commentary by the author, since it comes up again in Minagoroshi-hen.
* He later pulls off the classic version of this, during a brief time when the Joker stole his utility belt, remarking 'biometrics' and then explained it meant the belt's compartments only opened for him. Presumably a precaution against it being stolen exactly like it had been.
* hexagon on Saturn's north pole roughly twice as wide across as the planet Earth. To comfort the paranoid, the shape has been shown to be a natural phenomenon that is rather common in fluid dynamics.
* Hamlet, it's debatable whether Withnail is talking about his sexuality or confirming an absolute nihilism.
* Gulliver's Travels be a reviewer who claims that this is gross, crude humour and that "Jonathan Swift would be rolling in his grave!", presumably unaware that this exact scene (and more even grosser, cruder stuff) actually happened in the book.
* Haruhi Suzumiya explanations, or Koizumi whenever he can't understand Yuki, to get a handle on things. Mikuru also chips in, as much as regulation will allow since most of what she knows is "classified".
* Hamish and Andy. He allegedly started out as a work experience kid, and is one of many behind-the-scenes people mentioned on the air, but he gets the most amount of time on-mic after Hamish and Andy themselves.

* Hawkman: Hawkman's home planet Thanagar used to orbit the real life star, Polaris. It has since been retconned into the fictional Polaris Galaxy—that or Thanagarians have their own name for the Milky Way Galaxy.
* High Plains Invaders are here to steal uranium. They seem to eat it and/or use it as a narcotic.
* Hide Your Lesbians — two people of the same gender who act like they're in love are never confirmed to be lesbians/gay or given actual romance, possibly because homosexuality is taboo.
* Harry Potter Potter, becomes a druid, who are basically to wizards what wizards are to Muggles. She does a lot of condescending to the wizarding world for not being as enlightened as the druids.
* Go Animate subscription with access to additional themes, voices, characters, etc.
* Her irresponsible mother got pregnant out of highschool and died in a car crash.
* Highlander CD-Rom released during the series. The comics are a bit more disputed, especially since they were met with mixed reviews.
* High School Dx D his opponents' attacks and win fights in a couple of ground-shattering punches.
* hilarious sleep because he's become so used to hearing them every night.
* Górsky & Butch Dr. Fishstein/Fishmeyer/Fisherking has this as his preferred method of doing evil. Being completely incompetent, he keeps forgetting about water....
* Hellsing has Alucard able to summon a hellhound, explicitly named as The Hound of the Baskervilles. He also takes on the form of one in the TV series.
* Hard Light enough that she brought Vishkar into the top corporates in the world and making her rich in her attempt to help people... though it's only lately that she thinks that maybe Vishkar wasn't so benevolent in helping the people as she thought to be. (Answer: They really aren't that benevolent. Lucio's freedom fighter shenanigans started because of Vishkar oppressing his ghetto)
* He also sings such favorites as "Hard Luck Woman" and "Black Diamond"
* Heartstopper: out gay high school student Charlie crushes on apparently straight rugby jock Nick, who is surprised to find himself reciprocating.
* High School D×D has the various supernatural races make use of a lot of technology that's powered by magic. Devils have cars, trains, aircraft and televisions (to name a few examples).
* Golarion, the default world, somehow manages to be the worst of the lot despite being an Earth analogue. Monsters are everywhere, from spiders the size of horses and flying undead heads to titanic dragons and mind-dominating worms. Politically, most of the outright good nations are in decline while empires of devil worshipers and necrocratic monsters vie for power. And on top of all of that, the planet itself is a prison for a god of destruction more powerful than any single deity in existence, a god who occasionally manages to find chinks in his cell to loose monstrous spawn on the world to slaughter all they can.
* Halloween's Michael Myers never shows emotions (except the occasional hint of rage), but at points displays a macabre sense of humor: dressing up as a ghost for no other reason than to freak out Lynda and displaying the corpses of his victims to scare their friends as they're found.
* Grand Theft Auto III, the only things they don't sell are outright heavy weapons. For that, you need a different guy who sells heavy weapons, just in case you really need that RPG-7.
* Ground Control. The sequel APC's where considerable less cool but did come with fun tools like flame-throwers and smoke screens. They also had a separate repair vehicle that could carry four soldiers.
* Grumpcade's, Ross O'Donovan recounted how the reality show writers for "Heroes of Cosplay" tried to get him involved in an episode's competition when he neither cared or had anything to do with it. He said it was because of this he started wearing the same hoodie everyday in order to annoy the crew while filming.

* Halo 4's plot is about Cortana dealing with her ever-worsening rampancy.
* Guinea Pig: Devil's Experiment: The three unnamed men abduct a random woman and gleefully torture her so they can test the limits of human pain.
* gorilla-like hominids, more like Bigfoot than straight giant humans.
* Hey Arnold! deals with Gerald getting a tonsillectomy shortly before a spring choir concert. His voice becomes deeper and raspier following the operation and his singing voice is awful. After a pep talk from Harvey the Mailman (who went through the same experience when he was Gerald's age) Gerald learns how to properly sing with his new voice.
* Gray Mann also had a comically abusive childhood, which started with his father literally trying to strangle him out of the womb. Being raised by Eagles didn't help either, since he apparently ate his "adoptive mother" and "brothers" the moment he came of age.
* Hemlock Grove mind for that purpose, as it tends to wear off when applied to people with existing personalities.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi The example of retrieving an object from a cereal factory and getting packed into a box happens to Ami in "Collect All 5".
* Glider house "AutoPilot", where it has apparently knocked over a fishbowl.
* Half-Life 2 is set in what appears to have been at one time a former Soviet state. No word has been given on the place's true location, and judging by the accents of all the NPCs you meet there, none of them are from there (seeing that many of them were forcibly relocated.) The only true native seems to be Father Grigori.
* Gnosticism, who mistakenly believes himself to be the one and true God. In fact, he was actually birthed by a higher divinity called Sophia. The goal of Gnosticism is to divorce oneself from the physical realm, which is inherently malevolent, and instead embrace the spiritual realm, which is divine.
* Good Luck! Ninomiya-kun, there's Mayu Tsukimura, a succubus who is afraid of men but whose charm powers are always on. She is part of a love triangle for Shungo who is able to partially resist Mayu's charm.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, Harry, Hermione, and Ron are positive that Snape is trying to steal the above-mentioned stone. He's certainly nasty enough to be the villain. Harry doesn't find out the truth until the very end though when it turns out poor, shy, stuttering Professor Quirrell had been behind everything that happened all along, and Snape had been trying to protect Harry (while simultaneously disliking him for petty reasons).
* Hannibal cuts a man open then throws him out a window with a noose around his neck. His intestines fall out and splatter on the ground. A little earlier in the movie, Hannibal had described how this same method of execution was used on the person's ancestor (see the entry on the Pazzi family below under Real Life).
* Heroine Claire Redfield has a terrible track record with these to the point she suffers from the * Gravity Falls episode "Into the Bunker", has a security room full of these. If you step on the wrong one, the walls will start to close in, and the only way to open the doors to the next room is push four of the right ones.
* HalloranIllustraions is a huge fan of this trope, as it is evident in a lot of his artwork.
* Green Acres ("The Budapest Peasants). Another episode has Oliver and Lisa's Budapest marriage to be found invalid. It turns out the Mayor of Budapest made a mistake with their license. Instead of declaring them husband and wife, he swore them in as dentists!
* Highlander III: The Sorcerer, when Connor cuts Kane in half horizontally. But then he uses his powers to join the halves and the fight continues.
* Godzilla: Tokyo S.O.S., is sent overseas for further combat training around the start of the film.
* Gone series gets shot in the head by Lance, yet manages to survive nearly bleeding out.
* Hellboy movie, this is how the title character (and the audience) is introduced to the demon Sammael.

* Golden Sun features an entire dungeon (Venus Lighthouse) devoted to solving puzzles with this trope.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 1 Hermione does however tell Harry “Your eyesight really is awful.” before putting on glasses when she and six others magically transform themselves to look like him as part of a escape ploy.
* Hasbro Goblin costume from the comics. This is due to the toy having been based on an early concept design that ultimately wound up being jettisoned and replaced.
* He offers to, essentially, buy a small African nation, and when that doesn't work he has the king assassinated. But only because the king was corrupt and wasteful, who spent all his time building vacation homes for himself or killing the families of anyone who disagreed with him. Deus is happy to work with the king's son since he knows he was completely unaware of his father's activities.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army is depicted with huge CGI armies of puppets whaling on each other, illustrating how young Hellboy imagines the battles his foster father describes to him. This allows the movie to show the scope of the ancient human/Fair Folk conflict, without giving away the appearance of the actual fey races prematurely.
* Goblin Slayer: The setting has two moons, a green one and a pink one.
* Goof Troop duo—and in both of PJ's cases, they shared a common taste in poetry too.
* Harry and His Bucket Full of Dinosaurs: In "To Outer Space", two robots argue over whether red or blue is the better colour and they fight with jelly.
* highly-customized rigs, packing numerous limited-edition parts from gaming mice, earphones to even gaming-focused CPU and graphics units in a customized case or a gaming laptop with customized colors. Often, they'll offer matching accessories such as themed bags or special tools. Some companies to the point even have subsidiaries like Dell's Alienware and HP's Omen specialize in these.
* Godzilla. Godzilla frequently either attacks humans for violating nature, or shows an indifference towards the fact that his passing by causes thousands of deaths.
* Green Lantern episode "Hunter's Moon". They end up getting along pretty well.
* her family were killed in the fire covered up by Killer Peach's victims.
* Hilariously, the fact that Blue Suede suddenly "disappeared" after holding a farewell concert for his fans has led to
* Grimm though so this may ultimately be a factor of her supernatural biology.
* Healing Factor the Note To Self on your back was tattooed with a knife.
* Harry Potter-style pictures, which are alive but aren't trapped people, are a borderline case.
* Guild Wars: "How many Asuras does it take to screw in a power core? None, they force a human to do it for them!"
* Green-Sky Trilogy parents were Berry addicts living in squalor (as close as Kindar society allows it) and died from their addiction shortly before Neric was Chosen. The priesthood dutifully appointed stand ins to play the role, which only embittered Neric further.
* Harry was the only known person to have survived the Avada Kevadra curse - twice There are pretty good imitations of bringing back the dead, but the real thing doesn't exist. They also celebrate Christmas, one of the Hogwarts ghosts is the Fat Friar and Harry's parents have a Bible quote on their graves, so it seems likely that the wizarding community accepts conventional religion.
* "Here Comes a Thought", sung by Garnet and Stevonnie in "Mindful Education" about how to deal with inner demons.
* Heroes can access and analyze traffic camera footage from all over the U.S. and identify the driver of a single car on the highway within minutes.
* HeartGold/SoulSilver, Power Swap, and Guard Swap. The latter two merely swap your status buffs and its own, and Psycho Cut runs off its weaker Attack stat. If all that weren't enough, sticking a Dark-type in front of Mewtwo leaves it utterly unable to fight back.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality!" (Hermione is left speechless by this exchange.)

* Han Solo's Revenge. When Chewie gets irritated at this, Han points out that's how the joke was told to him, too.
* Gundam Build Divers has the AGEII Magnum and its F Funnels, which are based off of the AGE-FX's C Funnels. When its builder, Kyoya Kujo, updates the AGEII Magnum into the AGE-2 Magnum SV ver., he adds in two SigMaxiss Funnels, large drones armed with the AGE-3 Orbital's SigMaxiss Long Cannon and can double as extra thrusters.
* Hal Jordan has either lost or voluntarily given up his status as a
* Guns N' Roses is very, very different from his predecessor Slash. However, 2009 rolls around and their newest guitar player wears a top hat, smokes while playing, plays a Les Paul, and is known for his bluesy style.
* Harry Potter fanfics, particularly those who don't want to simply rehash the Death Eaters.
* Gravity Falls is noticeably much more talkative than her more introverted brother, Dipper, sometimes veering into this territory.
* Guard of the Mountain has a small group of camping-trip students getting lost with their teacher. They make it to a little camping ground and the owners merely ask them all to be 'on their best behavior' while staying. People begin to disappear and the owners turn out to kill people, who do not treat nature well, by littering or other means. After running away and falling, protagonist Hitomi finds herself taken in by a young couple and she realizes that she's managed to get away, only for the couple to bring her to the previous, dangerous camping grounds. And an extra page shows that the murdering owners opened up a beach house, implied to continue their little 'test' on people.
* Growing Pains starts out as a supply run for a class project and turns into a night on the town chasing girls.
* Harvest Town Julia's marriage to Peter Allen (as Julia is said to have been a beautiful woman with many suitors) is rarely considered.
* Gravity's Rainbow listening to Rossini. All you feel like listening to Beethoven is going out and invading Poland."
* Harry Potter: Despite Harry having known about wizards and himself being a wizard for years, he was still surprised to find that Mrs Figg, one of his Privet Drive neighbors that he's known his entire life, has been in on the Masquerade the whole time and has also been tasked by Dumbledore to keep him safe.
* Groundhog Day features one in the last iteration of the loop. Phil Connors, who by this point has developed into someone who stops the same kid from breaking his leg every day, is bought for $339.88 (the entire contents of his Love Interest's wallet). His cameraman co-worker is bought for 25 cents.
* Godzilla Junior has it the worst. He's a Unicorn like Xenilla, but he has
* He also seems to be enjoying her torching soldiers a bit too much during one of Terra's first flashbacks.
* Happy Endings begins, with Alex running away from Dave (with a guy on rollerblades). However, since both Dave and Alex are main characters, neither are really demonized — Alex has legitimate reasons for not wanting to be with Dave, and Dave comes to forgive Alex after she apologizes, and the two eventually become friends.
* Here is a webpage devoted to pointing seekers to the right dioramas.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, threatening to beat up Koizumi should he kiss Mikuru, and pointing out that some scenes just don't make sense for instance.
* Greenfire: Briefly when Rarity argues for an outside picnic as Greenfire tries to hide her on the day a knight comes trying murder Greenfire. This obviously drops when she meets the knight.
* Hellgate: London features a faction called Hunters though they aren't the only ones out for demon blood.
* Hannibal Lecter against her father's still-living enemies to visit the grave of Clarice's father. While standing over the grave, Susana muses that, with her parents' distaste of religion, visiting the grave of the grandfather her own mother treasured so much is the closest Susana has ever been to visiting a sacred place.
* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de -> "HaruToki" (Although the "official" short version used in Japanese media is "Haruka" — it even made its way into the title of the English-language release of the manga adaptation.)

* Heroes does this whilst Hiro was in Feudal Era Japan, as well as when Peter is in the post-apocalyptic future.
* Glitter Boys also have very little manufacturing support, and what little they do have is very centralized in one particular political power. As a result they tend to suffer a lot of wear and tear just
* Having multiple penises and/or pairs of balls, sometimes to ridiculous levels.
* Half-Life 1 added a suicide-bomb weapon in one update, and it didn't take long for the customary cry before detonating one to become "FOR SCIENCE!", giving it pseudo-religious overtones. To be clear, it's the security guards who do the suicide-exploding, rather than the scientists. Still, they would have to be pretty dedicated to science to happily die for their company, even if they do get cloned back to life.
* Hellsing has this in spades but Alucard and Anderson love this trope in particular.
* God of War. The game opens up with him waging war alongside the Spartans in Rhodes, and after Zeus betrays him, the man just snaps. It's all downhill from there.
* Havenfall Is for Lovers. The only snag is that the person who invited the vampire in has to be the one to revoke the invitation, which causes problems on Diego's route - Grace was the one who invited Victor Thorne into the house she and the protagonist live in, and since Grace is missing, there's no way to make the house safe from him, requiring the protagonist to stay over first at the bowling alley and then at Diego's house.
* Heck, it's the sarcastic comment that they're going "for the whoring and the drinking" that gets Ben Franklin to go with John Adams and Samuel Chase to go inspect the army!
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix when she's nearly fifteen and presumably (almost) done growing, and at the beginning of the next book (in which they get together), people begin to comment on Harry's height from his recent growth spurt. He ends up the same height as his father James, whom even Voldemort describes as "tall."
* Hamossad Hasagur, is told by Rami to go take care of the career soldiers' children. She walks in the direction of his hand movement, but then comes back only to tell him that it's the other way around.
* Green Lantern: Rebirth that Lanterns can overcome the weakness by recognizing fear.
* Hero House has both examples, with one party laying siege to Castle Doom, while another sneaks inside.
* having been put on leave from his job as Muhyo's assistant, is staying with Imai, and offers to do chores for her, causing Imai to snap and angrily demand if that's all he wants to do. In the manga, Imai explains that her subordinate Fujiwara, who died in the Arcanum, was incompetent and a coward, but he nevertheless worked hard. Shortly afterward, Imai has a brief monologue pondering Roji's hidden potential, with the implication being that she's angry with Roji for wallowing in self-pity rather than thinking about how to improve himself despite his potential.
* Going Home to Teach, Winkler recalls how his maternal uncles, all shopkeepers, often slept with their female employees.
* Guenevere is a kind of monotheistic goddess worship presided over by priestesses. It seems to be a mix of real world paganism with a monotheistic Christian aspect.
* Happy Tree Friends. Lumpy notices he's about to step on one, and lifts his foot over it... only to see that the floor also has nails, a snake, spikes, a frayed cord and lava in various places. Then he falls over anyway back outside and onto a bike, breaking his spine.
* He also mentions that Paige was killed by the Titans yet in a later episode he says he goes to her for money in the future.
* Gorgeous George: A professional wrestler who takes on many homosexual mannerisms but stops short of admitting to being a homosexual.

* Hamtaro has Oxnard's robot repair machine. He says that with a push of a button, he'll repair Robo-Joe in a blink of an eye.
* Go Jetters: Teaches about geography, particularly the signature landmarks of various countries.
* Haruhi takes considerable delight in stuffing Mikuru into various cosplay outfits, much to the latter's distress. To be fair, she also cosplays once in a while, most memorably during the School Festival in which she performs with ENOZ while in a
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, Rocket apparently has become a big fan too, setting up a song to play before multiple big fights, even when Peter himself thinks its a bad idea to be focusing on setting up a speaker.
* Gregorovitch (the continental European wand maker) started telling people that he had the Elder Wand and was trying to replicate its powers. This rumor got around to young Grindelwald who broke into his shop, disarmed him, and got control of it.
* Guardian Heroes. Although she technically joins forces with Han and his friends at the very beginning of the game, she doesn't become a playable character until the player completes the game once on Normal.
* Good Luck! Ninomiya-kun type. Ironically, for a succubus, she has androphobia, which is a problem, considering her inability to control her powers, particularly when stressed. The possibility of Shungo dying from Mayu involuntarily draining his life is used to keep him from going too far with her. Her incubus brother is pretty good-natured, too. Mind control (of the opposite sex) is included in the power set.
* Harry spends a week on the couch after buying his and Hermione's one-year-old son a broom.
* Greg Weisman is well aware of this and confirms that many people died off-screen.
* Harper Lee the year before her death. Prior to that, she did emerge from seclusion long enough to be awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom.
* Heart of Steel, Julia first sees the right half of Alistair's face as she approaches. When he turns to greet her and reveals the metal plates and burn scars that make up the left side of his face, she is so startled she almost screams.
* herself roommate, which is resolved by the end of the book) and Mallory is happy there.
* Haunting Ground is essentially a Gothic horror game — a young, delicate heroine ventures/flees through an incredibly elaborate castle inhabited only by Frankensteinian servants and sexually abusive vampires whose motivations are vague but clearly malicious. Keeping her fear to manageable levels is actually a game mechanic.
* Grand Theft Auto III Lazlo talks to Bob from Pine Creek, who treats his young son Johnny like dirt, including using this trope.
* Gunslinger Girl are aware that they are on borrowed time, and that their feelings for their handlers are at least partially the result of conditioning. Triela and Claes are the only two to have made their peace with the fact they will never see adulthood. Though they deal with the knowledge in opposite ways (despite being roommates).
* Greg and Wordy are the only ones who can call Ed "Eddie" at times as they are his closest friends.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, so it's no surprise that he's been literally caught with his pants down.
* Heads of State most closely fit this trope in real life, specifically those with actual influence or power. In most traditional Monarchies the royal sovereign was literally granted legacy character status
* Hey Ash, Whatcha Playin'? was offered, and accepted, a job a Gearbox because of how funny Hey Ash was.
* G-Rated Drug: A harmless consumable substance is depicted as having the same properties as a drug.
* Helen's Mysterious Castle, created together with the other monsters. In Ardis's laboratory, some other Homunculi are common enemies.
* Helliconia is set in a binary system, with the eponymous planet orbiting a dim sun called Batalix, and both Helliconia and Batalix orbiting a larger blue giant star called Freyr in a slow, highly elliptical orbit. This gives Helliconia centuries-long seasons, with powerful consequences for the development of its human civilization.

* Goebbels und Geduldig. Joseph Goebbels learns that there's a Jewish prisoner named Geduldig who looks exactly like him. He goes to the concentration camp to have him shot, but Geduldig is able to escape and pass himself off as Goebbels. Meanwhile, the real Goebbels is taken by the guards to be the Jewish prisoner.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, Harvey manages to proves Yakkay's innocent early at the start of Case 3, but is immediately sent to prison for trying a case without his legal license.
* green stuff". (It's an epoxy whose resin is yellow and whose hardener is blue, so when you mix it together to set, it's green).
* Heroes' Frontier Step: You do something that shows off your heroic nature.
* has no problem accepting that a girl she recently met is the daughter of a lesbian couple from twenty years in the future but faints upon learning that her parents have been lying about who her father is.
* Hellsing status. For that reason, he's one of the most memorable things about the series.
* Grambling State University uses the same logo with yet a third color scheme.
* Harry Turtledove. Home's animals are even worse. Since they're used to food being scarce, they eat all plants down to the roots, leaving not a blade of grass in their wake. Many characters compare them to goats, only much worse. When the US complains to the Race about their animals crossing into American territory, Fleetlord Atvar simply tells them they're free to destroy any plants and animals in their own territory as they wish. Of course, while a farmer with a rifle may scare off and shoot a coyote, good luck doing that to a brontosaurus or a whole herd of them. Neither the plants nor the animals are likely to move into the colder regions, though.
* Hellsister Trilogy is often troubled or depressed. Still, according to her lover, her smile is beautiful.
* he's from all the Marines and pirates in the vicinity as they raise their hands in shock.
* GURPS all work for "The Company", a secret organization with the twin objectives of 1) Kill all the aliens/psis/monsters trying to take over and 2) Don't let anyone outside The Company find out about the aliens/psis/monsters trying to take over.
* Golden Age killed this way for disobeying orders. He then has the head thrown into the kids' cell.
* Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters with Hansel and Gretel themselves, and you get this.
* good guys, enemies, and ghosts battle against thousands upon thousands of armed force.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law shorts, replacing the characters' lines with far more ridiculous dialogue.
* Gravity Falls: The Lumberjack Ghost wants revenge on the Northwest bloodline for flaunting their wealth and barring the workers who built their mansion from all of their celebrations. His violent antics tend to endanger many other innocent people which he ignores because he's so focused on revenge. When Pacifica goes to right the injustice, however, he stops his attacks, showing he's not so far gone into vengeance.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: In the comics, Star-Lord was a seasoned cosmic superhero long before joining the Guardians. In the movies, he starts off as a self-serving outlaw and a bit of an asshole, although he eventually chooses to step up for true blue unselfish heroism - with a side of whatever (and whoever) he can get his hands on.
* Greg was in a relationship with Rose for years, and has mentioned dating plenty of people before, but
* Gunnerkrigg Court over Reynardine means that he can't intentionally deceive Annie. He can, however, withhold information and refuse to answer questions.
* Hardboiled Detective Rex Banner, whose seriousness creates this trope even when he is happy. He reacts exactly the same way to seeing a message that his services are needed to enforce prohibition in Springfield and another message that the family dog had puppies: a slight narrowing of the eyes. Then there's his attempt to laugh off the idea that the Beer Baron was real - or, rather, his attempt to laugh - which sounds like he has dry heaves.

* Grupa Operacyjna: "Pomocy" has Mieszko considering getting rid of his ex-patient by throwing her out a window, but decides against it as she wouldn't fit in it.
* Heavy Equipment Class: A character or class that stands out due to proficiency with heavy armor.
* HERZ: After the Angel War, the already volatile Asuka’s temper got worse. For several years she was constantly angry, moody or bitter, and prone to explode when something triggered her anger. At the start of the story she has managed to control her temper –and she regrets some of her past explosions of wrath-, but she still has a short fuse.
* Hellboy apparently spent his childhood there, but seems to have enjoyed it.
* Guardian Cats and the Lost Books of Alexandria dog-like beast with a firey tail.
* Gretchya tells Iseult that she's escaping to Saldonica with her student and disappears, never to be seen again, even when the plot visits the aforementioned city.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Dumbledore excuses himself to go to the bathroom, so that Harry can talk to Horace Slughorn. When he has spent a long time there, Slughorn asks Dumbledore if he had an upset stomach.
* Heck: Where the Bad Kids Go. Two siblings, Milton and Marlo, die and are sent to the afterlife. Turns out that people too young for the real H-E-Double-Hockey-Sticks are sent to a junior (but no less torturous) version called Heck. There they stay for eternity or until they turn eighteen, whichever comes first.
* Grayza's outrageously massive (and tattoo-decorated) pregnancy in the * Hamtaro had an original song, "Happy Ham-Ham Birthday". And it's not just the English dub- the original Japanese version has a different but also original song, albeit with the same title.
* Guitar Hero. These days this seems to be a considerable portion of their listeners, or at least people who talk about them publicly.
* Harley Quinn (2019) is ruined by him having to spit grit out of his teeth. "I need to remember to keep my mouth closed when I bust through walls."
* Happy Endings, Dave made a commercial for his steak sandwich truck. When he shows it to his friends, they point out a couple of flaws, namely that he didn't say the name of his business, or even mention steak sandwiches.
* Halo Legends does this with O'Brien's gun as he dangles from a waterfall.
* Golden Earring song "Radar Love" is about. But it doesn't change that it's an awesome driving song.
* Heavensward expansion. Amusingly, despite living in a world with dragons, primals, and other fantastical creatures, Alphinaud practically craps himself when he first encounters a bear.
* Heaven's Gate showed the characters graduating from Harvard. Director Michael Cimino couldn't get permission to film at Harvard University itself. So he decided to film the scene at Oxford University in England despite that fact that Oxford looks nothing like Harvard.
* Higher-Tech Species: One alien race is more technologically advanced than the others.
* Good Omens (2019), Aziraphale and Crowley are portrayed a lot like a married couple and Neil Gaiman confirmed in interviews that they love each other. However, he also said that they shouldn't be considered a gay couple because they're an angel and demon who don't have a true gender or sexuality like humans do, despite them looking and being treated by all other characters as male.
* Hamburger Hill after we've witnessed a number of the main cast killed, the movie fades to the credits with the platoon's radio squawking and their off-screen CO asking for the platoon leader, platoon sergeant, 1st squad leader, since nobody is left to answer the call.
* Hello From The Hallowoods is a horror podcast focusing mainly on LGBT characters.

* Glenn Dale Hospital in Maryland was not a place that people visited to get better. As a sanitarium for tuberculosis, anyone who wound up here could only hope to die in the most dignified way possible. And yes, there is a children's compound. Features include the incinerator(used for waste products, not human remains), refrigerated morgues, the flooded underground hallways, and the elevator shaft that "breathed". The sad thing is that it really was a beautiful place in its prime, and probably could be again if any restoration were put into it. Budget shortfalls and copious amounts of lead paint make this unlikely, however.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire begrudgingly admits that he was told something by Dumbledore about not using Transfiguration as punishment, but he "forgot."
* Golden Sun enables you to summon monsters by temporarily using up "Djinn" which are ready on standby. They can be summoned individually for minor attacks, or you can use up a lot of them at once to summon more powerful spirits; either way, they're ready to help again after a few turns of rest. The problem is that while resting or in standby, you lose the stat bonuses the Djinn give. The cycle goes like this: 1) Djinn equipped, grants stat bonuses. 2) Unleash a Djinni, cause a special effect depending on the Djinni, and put it in standby mode. 3) Summon a combination of unleashed Djinn to get spiffy effects and deal major damage. The Djinn rests for a few turns each before being reset and grant bonuses again. If the character has no Djinn set, he or she is usually at almost 50% of normal capability.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch. However, it's the Brain Gremlin who assumes leadership of the Gremlins, and Mohawk gets killed midway through the film.
* Halo 5: Guardians, when you destroy the Kraken's reactor, a klaxon can be heard, as well as an Elite yelling for everyone to abandon ship.
* Good Bad Bug) but it's possible to approach the "unopenable" side and clip through them to snipe the lock because of the way the TMP is shot from the hip. This allows for several bypasses, most notably in the Castle segment of the game.
* Half-Life: Blue Shift had a shooting range at the beginning of the game where you are issued your weapon.
* Half-Life 2. Citizens are also sometimes threatened with this if they do not comply with the Combine's regime.
* Harry Dresden. Harry seems to enjoy the effect he has in his tuxedo when he goes to an art sales event with Susan to investigate Johnnie Marcone.
* Heaven Versus Hell: Battle in which the forces of Heaven and Hell duke it out.
* Hellsing. Luke Valentine wears a pristine white one for his assault on the Hellsing manor and gets only a single drop on him through his assault. Until the point he gets to Alucard, that is, and gets stomped.
* Golgo 13. Among them: do not touch his right hand, do not reach into your coat, and do not open a handbag. (He will attack at all of these.) His habit of standing when he meets a client comes from an early occasion where he killed a client's aide — the poor man made the mistake of walking up behind him while he was seated.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, Paz tells Annie that Kat is quite worried about the current situation, and that Annie had better not do anything to make it worse. While talking to herself later, Annie first wonders why Paz is speaking for Kat, then reflects that Kat doesn't always talk to Annie about her problems, and maybe she thinks she needs to put on a brave face in front of Annie, and Annie doesn't pay enough attention to notice. Then she decides Paz is just being unreasonable.
* Growing Pains the dad uses this trope as an example as to why it is best to forgive rather than seek revenge when you feel wronged.
* Hellboy (2004) devil dog. It's also the "Hound of Resurrection": it can immediately recover from any non-fatal injury, and every time it is killed, two more of it are born to take its place.
* Hakumen has red eyes on his shoulders wrists, and shin. Mu-12 has the same ones on her armor's shoulders.
* Harley Race... your opponents should think twice before get in the ring!
* Hetalia: Axis Powers is a bit like this, according to the published manga. Nothing is said about her original "family" and she's shown alone for quite a while, passing through lots of difficulties until Switzerland found her and took her in as his adoptive sister.

* had the series continued would have ended up with three Dragons: GIR, Minimoose and Skoodge.
* Guyver Naruto, former Sound-nin Tsuchi Kin is captured, interrogated and given a choice between slavery or death. She chooses to become a slave and finds herself in the role of chief maid as well as finding romance, something denied to her in Sound.
* Grim Fandango to himself. This is rather too serious for Manny to bother questioning the odd choice of metaphor or why he's bothering to act it out literally at the same time.
* Green-Sky Trilogy (one of the first of its kind). The game's quest is to gather information, strength, and tools in order to rescue the poor fellow.
* Hamilton believes the war is a tragic affair from start to finish, especially when you mess up as a general. You don't know who is going to die, but you know it is going to be your fault. Especially if you send some expectant father to the field, knowing that you might have just condemned a child to growing up without knowing him.
* God's love, burning your soul as you haven't allowed God to heal you from sin.
* Gundam NT-D system, which allows total psychic control over the entire mobile suit.
* Haganai, oh so very much. Offers herself to Kodaka shortly after they met — though to be fair, he did save her from a nasty chemistry accident — and flirts constantly with him and every other member of the Neighbors' Club thereafter.
* Grand Theft Auto V is a military-trained pilot. The other two protagonists have this. The only difference between their flying is a little extra wobble in the controls.
* Harry Potter franchise, when even Harry's son James Sirius is a grandfather.
* Heart of Steel Alistair captures Julia when she and her boyfriend are scuba divign off the coast of Shark Reef Isle where Alistair lives. Alistair is instantly smitten with her and wants to keep her, showering her with gifts and other luxuries. However, it takes a while for Julia to see the man under the metal, a process sped up when one of Alistair's creations (Julia's boyfriend-turned cyborg) goes rampant and tries to kill them both, spurring Alistair to protect her.
* Haunted Halloween 85 in this game and its sequel are cans of Serum Soda.
* her: Theodore's ex-wife accuses him of wanting her to be that way, a happy object to balance out his dour, brooding self, and suggests he's dating a computer because she's less complicated than a real woman. Samantha, his new computer/girlfriend, expresses the same opinion and tells Theodore she's tired of acting the way he wants her to act.
* Hero of Another Story is, if he has come far it is because he is merely standing "on the shoulders of giants".
* He has good intentions. Harry doesn't necessarily deny the existence of God, but rather has no context for the power of God when confronting all these supernatural creatures that claim to be gods.
* GURPS covers this idea in different ways for different game settings. For example:
* Harvest Moon: Animal Parade that was censored out of the English translation: "I want to lock you up in my basement and keep you all to myself." Though the series is no stranger to risqué dialogue, this line doesn't exist. It was originally a joke by a translator on a forum, but fans took it seriously.
* Gun Kitty: (two of the main characters are pansexual and one is bisexual, also nonbinary creator)
* Guardians of the Galaxy, the Xandarian system has triple-suns, which are symbolized in the Nova Corps emblem.
* Half of the time Leonardo and Raphael fight, it comes off more like
* Hack/Slash. He hunts for victims in a corn maze filled with traps and even upgrades to a bigger hammer as he gains 'points'.

* Greatest Story Never Told to keep the Matoran from remembering and getting homesick.)
* Gordon Korman roommate Bruno, deliberately used three of said roommate's mint 1886 Queen Victoria Canadian stamps to mail a letter to his mother.
* Hello, Dolly! is faintly recognizable as one of these. Though the musical doesn't make much of her widowhood, it's based indirectly on a much older farce.
* Good Bye, Lenin!). The whole idea revolves around the main character, Alex, trying to pretend to his mother (who was in a coma and missed the fall of the Berlin Wall) that Communism still exists and there is no re-unification process going on, to the point of creating fake news broadcasts and putting capitalist products in old-style communist-brand packaging. Many of the older supporting characters (who have ended up losing their jobs and security) find the environment to be something of a refuge from the changes happening around them, and Alex himself begins to become almost nostalgic, not necessarily for the real East Germany (he is seen protesting in the beginning of the film) but for the country that could have been, and the ideals it claimed to represent. The film itself is careful to show the good and bad sides of both capitalism and communism (or at least, the former's absurdity).
* Hand of Glory" was the severed hand of an executed criminal, clutching a candle or each finger made into a candle (with the added bonus that the candle is sometimes made with human fat), which gave a light only the Hand's holder could see. Supposedly it was a useful tool for medieval housebreakers, who could rob a house after dark without its illumination alerting residents or neighbors.
* Harry Potter. In particular, it was considered too long for a "kid's book"; finally, Rowling's agent gave it to his eight-year-old daughter, only to find she devoured it and couldn't wait to read more. It was only then anyone began thinking it ever had a chance, and the rest is history.
* Greek Mythology. Deities associated with the north were usually associated with the cold as well, with the most prominent example being Boreas, god of the north wind and the bringer of winter. Meanwhile southern based deities were usually associated with heat and fire, like Notus the god of the south wind and bringer of summer.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, whereas Grindelwald and Gregorovitch are killed by Voldemort, as seen through Harry's consciousness.)
* Harry Potter and the Natural 20 to teleport into the Dursley's living room, and promptly vaporizes their table.
* Good Omens. However, in spite of the book's ensemble cast, he stands out as pretty much the main viewpoint character, whose thoughts we hear the most, and behind the painfully cool exterior, he's frightened, weary, and eventually very angry, which causes him to rebel against both Heaven and Hell. He's definitely not the slick bastard he appears to be on the outside, but unlike a lot of these characters it ends up making him stronger and extremely sympathetic.
* Gravity Falls: One in-series product is called "Pitt Cola". Completely clean in English, but to Swedish-speaking people it's not. It's pronounced and spelled exactly as the Swedish equivalent of "dick". With this in mind, it's off-putting that they didn't censor it in the dub, nor tried to change it.
* Higurashi: When They Cry's Meakashi arc, Shion lets out a rather unhinged one when Detective Ooishi informs her that Satoshi has "disappeared".
* Guardians of the Galaxy is from Halfworld, which was founded as a medical/psychological patient dumping ground. To ensure the patients' security and comfort without requiring anyone to actually have to treat them, the creators uplifted some typical cute and cuddly animals to sentience to act as their orderlies (though the animals weren't told their purpose), Rocket being one of them.
* Hardcore Hip Hop artist Fabri Fibra has written a handful of songs that include this trope, but its most liberal use is in the song "In Italia" ("In Italy"), where he tirades against the Boot of Europe's problems - including but not limited to political instability, medical malpractice, unemployment and the common belief that praying to God will magically fix everything.

* Hannah Montana: Jackson once dated a girl named Becky but it ended when his best friend asked him to watch over a parrot. It repeated unkind things said about another Becky.
* Half-Witted Hillbilly: A person from the country is amusingly backwards or dumb.
* Hey Arnold! to get revenge on Principal Wartz, and when he hears Wartz is in the hospital, he goes to check on him and finds out he's "checked out" (outpatient rhinoplasty). After the name is removed from Wartz's office and parking space (moved to a bigger office on the other side of the school), and a crying relative informs Sid that Wartz is "under the big tree in the backyard" (Wartz was gardening and the relative was chopping onions), Arnold and Sid finally run into the principal.
* Hero of the Kingdom 3 eliminates much of the backtracking from the two previous games by giving you a camp screen which can be accessed in any area. You can not only rest in it but, provided you have the skill, make your own weapons and potions and also cook the food which you need to rest. Another handy feature is that the map allows you to buy and sell items by clicking on the icon representing any of the vendors you've discovered so far.
* Half World by Hiromi Goto, Melanie goes through a freeway tunnel into a strange other world.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi and in a slight subversion recounts the fun of a Seventies disco with a convenient time machine.
* Harley Davidson and the Marlboro Man has Crystal Dream: "...what it is, you don't shoot it, you don't smoke it, you don't snort it. Apparently, you put it in your eyes, and it tells you lies."
* Good Cop/Bad Cop. These guys are mellower because they tend to be older and/or don't expect to see combat action, whereas the Classic Drill Sergeant Nasty is younger who know there's a chance that he'll be joining the men he trained in the field, where his life may depend on their ability.
* Gunslinger Girl. In this case the trope is being played for heartwarming cuteness.
* Gravity Falls, which quickly return to their position, making him mutter that the quality of the exhibitions are getting worse.
* Grand Theft Auto IV island of Staten Island, which is an improvement on the geography of the city. In previous versions of GTA, it was named "New Guernsey", and in one GTA IV mission, an NPC makes mention of "just a bunch of Guernsey goombas".
* Got Me Doing It: A character complains about slipping into the vocabulary habits they just berated another person for using.
* Henry Danger: In both the Love Shuttle and on the space station, there was artificial gravity in the two-part episode "Space Invaders". The space station had a switch that could turn it on and off, which became a plot point when fighting against Kid Danger.
* Great Mazinger, the titular mecha had a blind spot caused by its Scramble Dash flight pack, allowing enemies to sneak up and capture it. It was later fixed.
* Goosebumps stories veer into this territory. The first, "Please Don't Feed The Bears," is about a girl who gets dragged to a cutesy teddy bear theme park until she realizes that the workers actually are living teddy bears and try to turn her into one as well. The second, "A Holly Jolly Holiday," is about an evil video tape that turns people into the diabetes inducing Christmas-themed heroine Susie Snowflake.
* Hatter and suggests talking to her, although he admits it's rather a long shot.
* Grendel and, like the previous example, has philosophical overtones which make it a school staple.
* Highlander were full of backstory; flashbacks where the events recalled served to illustrate present events. Being veeery long-lived characters, both Duncan MacLeod and Nick Knight had plenty of backstory to film.
* Godzilla 2000 features a commentary by the three guys who did most of the work Americanizing the film. It's full of information on what goes on in dubbing and adapting a film and is hilarious to boot.

* Highlander film, Connor MacLeod wins this after defeating the last remaining Immortal; a vaguely-described ability to influence world leaders using the collective knowledge and wisdom of the other Immortals, or humanity, or something.
* "HFIL" is used several times as a jab against the original translation's * Half in the Bag: Online comedic film critics. Specialize in long, versatile and detailed reviews of current films in the cinema.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban amused — especially not McGonagall.
* Highlights including letting one of them "escape" before cornering him and slowly advancing her bugs on him. He lets out a primal scream just as they attack.
* Gotham Gotham insanity) did their part to make Jim Gordon's life miserable.
* Heroes: Angela Petrelli has the ability to see the future while dreaming. She also seems able to appear in other people's dreams, as she used this aspect of her power to wake Sylar and get him save Peter, even while she was trapped in her own mind.
* Heroman, young actor Nash Aguas (he was 13 or 14 at the time) voices the main character Joseph Carter "Joey" Jones.
* Happens to him again later when Typheus submerges him in oil in order to force him to master his retcon powers by forcing him to either drown, zap himself away (and make zero progress on his quest) or
* God Is Evil and that there is no love in the heart of Man because of the Original Sin. As such, a human act of true love would disprove his belief and allow him to regain his faith. When Atli tells him of Thors' final moments, Willibald's response is to get drunk and morose over having potentially missed out.
* Hidan: Cut off his head and he complains about his hair getting pulled. He had to be dismembered, buried in an isolated forest, and left for a few years until his immortality jutsu ran out. And he still has time to roll his head back into action.
* Help!: Professor Foot. Lampshaded by John when he says "This is absurd! You're nothing but a trite, hackneyed mad scientist!"
* Hellsing: With the most powerful vampire of all at their side, an elite government organization protects England from supernatural threats and goes to war with vampiric Nazis trying to take over the world.
* Gunn visits his old neighborhood and greets Anne (last seen in "The Thin Dead Line"), who is busy loading boxes into a truck. Her shelter is moving to a new location. Gunn asks after Rondell and his old crew, and Anne says that they were supposed to help her with the move, but that something may have come up. They discuss the vampire situation, and Anne says that Rondell and co. keep them pretty safe. Gunn suddenly grows dark and asks what she would do if he told her none of it helps; that everything is controlled by powerful forces who will never allow things to get better. Anne tells him
* Hairstyle Inertia—a character's hair remains the same throughout their life
* Heroes of Might and Magic have the Warlocks, who seem to be vaguely on the side of evil, prefer hanging out in swamps. III, on the other hand, have the swamp be home to the Fortress, which is neither good nor evil. In IV swamps are again associated with a vaguely-evil faction (Chaos).
* Gone with the Wind Rhett doesn't fall for someone else, but he loses interest in Scarlett over a period of some years, as her indifference, mistreatment, and obsessive pursuit of Wilkes wore away at his feelings for her. By the time their daughter Bonnie died, it was mostly over before Scarlett even fully grasped that it had started.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) goes evil because it lost its love.
* Henry Blake is a pretty good doctor, but he really isn't suited for a command position. Fortunately for him,
* He then blasts Brainiac through the wall of the ship, where he lands in an Earth swamp and immediately freaks out at the contact with its myriad micro-organisms.
* Hale and Pace", where the car chase is low-speed because the cars won't start and have to be pushed.
* Harry Potter) are meant to be two volumes of the same arc, which is evident not only through the fully interwined link between the end of the former and the start of the latter, but also through the plot devices that both books share; they also heavily reference the events of the past five books to solve any pending plot points and then settle the climax of the story.

* Gunnerkrigg Court when he learns that Surma has left him for the stoic and aloof Anthony Carver.
* Guilty Crown Ouma Shu. It's a story that tries to show normal teenagers living under constant threat of strife and death. It also features some CG robots that serve mostly to give Shu some enemies to chop up with his weapon without having to kill anyone. Although prominent in the first episode, for most of the show they are mostly absent or in the background.
* Hamlet: The titular character spends a long tirade comparing her mother's (vicious, monstrous) new husband to his (noble, kind, handsome) father, asking her this question to try and convince her she's in the wrong.
* Happens here. A mystic goat said 'there is a high probably that I myself do not exist'. When a reporter asks him what would happen if that were proven true, he disappears.
* Happy Heroes, Big M. has to use the bathroom because he accidentally swallowed an orange he laced with diarrhea powder. There's a long line of children waiting to have their number called out so they can use the bathroom; Big M.'s number is 108 while the child he sees is number 28.
* Hancock's Half Hour: "The Train Journey". Just one of the many ways in which Hancock and Sid try to alleviate the boredom, alienating their fellow passengers in the process.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, yet the player cannot jump over it in any fashion.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers example. It is a comedic anime about anthropomorphic personifications of various nations, with some countries, for example the superpowers, being rather childish. America calls himself hero and loves video games, China loves Hello Kitty and Russia considers everyone his friend and loves sunflowers. Still, they're superpowers and we also see America swinging a buffalo over his head as a child, China beating up the entire Axis with a wok and Russia being late to a meeting because he was practising to stop tanks with his body...
* Green Lantern travel to the pocket dimension of Ys, they're initially handicapped by the fact that neither GL's power ring nor Zatanna's magic operates correctly under that dimension's rules. GL solves the problem by moving his ring from his right hand to his left; Zatanna, by speaking each word of her spells normally, but reversing the natural order of the sentences.
* Hard Rock, briefly fronted the supergroup Captain Beyond after leaving Deep Purple before retiring from the music business and going into medicine. In 1980, he was talking into reviving the Deep Purple name (Deep Purple had broken up in 1976) with a bunch of unknown musicians. When his former bandmates got wind of the venture, they immediately filed a lawsuit. Evans was not only forced to disband the "Bogus Deep Purple", he was barred from receiving any royalties from his work with the real Deep Purple. With his music career in shambles, Evans returned to his medical practice and has since eschewed any contact with the media or his former bandmates-he didn't even show up when Deep Purple was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2016.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2: After several failed attempts to get Groot to bring him a prototype fin, Yondu gives Groot his Ravager badge and tells him to look for that symbol. Groot puts it on his head. Rocket explains that Groot thinks Yondu wants him to wear it as a hat, which Yondu denies.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name has wallpapers and extra comics as incentives to donate.
* Green Lanterns years to when the Green Lanterns were first founded. Half the first seven choices are of species who are still around in the modern day, and who look exactly identical.
* Hihi'irokane: A legendary Japanese metal said to shine brightly in a way that resembles flames.
* Graceland Mike, an undercover FBI agent, inadvertently triggers a mob war when he convinces gang leader Bello to buy his heroin from a different supplier. The Mexican drug cartel who used to supply Bello takes this rejection badly and sends in a group of hitmen to kill Bello and wipe out his operation.

* Hamlet is so shocked at the appearance of his father's ghost in his mother's bedchamber that he leaps from his chair, knocking it over.
* Goofy Feathered Dinosaur: The concept of feathered dinosaurs is rejected due to the misconception that dinosaurs were "big lizards".
* Heaven and Hell has Uriel, who talks to his fellow archangels condescendingly or callously kills them if they annoy him in any way.
* Hellboy of hers created a fire that destroyed a city block (among the fatalities were her parents and brother).
* Greek, detailing a secret Prohibition drinking party under a rule-following Great Gatsby theme party, is described in great detail...and is derailed when the dean shows up as an unexpected guest. Said party is saved by Plan B, which isn't known to the audience until it's put into motion.
* He stole Scrooge's money-filled bed while he was sleeping on it in the very first story.
* Hajimete no Aku the kiss was accidental, he is still in the same position. Then, his legs give out.
* GURPS: GURPS: Ultratech contains stats for these. Mercifully, if it takes enough damage in one blow to break it, it won't explode - however if you fail to disarm it or it takes any lesser damage, it will blow up!
* Haley names this trope again when she is asked by Roy whether or not he should
* Goddamn bullshit ass motherfucking shit that gets fucked up in Real Life!
* He also has sex with his first ex-wife (Alexis's mother) about twice a year. They realize they're not right for each other, but the sex is too intense to avoid.
* government agents, vampires, and even the Devil himself. In more modern versions, a black BMW or Mercedes takes the place of the Volga.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince; neither of them are good at sorting out their feelings.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn: Ayuthay seems to have "shirts omitted" in its male dress code. The guards may or may not wear armor, but neither the king nor his nephew wear anything on top. The latter, for protection's sake, dresses up before leaving the castle. Eoleo, another player character, comments that he never saw anyone from that place wear "real clothing" before.
* Heaven's Design Team has Pluto, who has the tendency to design creatures that are disgustingly creepy or grotesque, but which she herself finds cute. This is lampshaded by another designer when she was in the process of creating a horsehair worm to fulfill the client's request for something "adorably uncute".
* Ground Force crossover. His co-presenters assumed he'd use one for gardening as well. To their alarm, he instead reached for his handy, all-solving shotgun.
* Guerrilla warfare copypasta and a reasonably common pun used for things including fighting and apes.
* Halo 3 introduces "The Ark", an even bigger even dumber object that can build Halo rings inside of itself very rapidly by a completely automated process and then teleport them directly wherever they're supposed to go. It's also built outside of the Milky Way so that people could hide out there while the Halos kill all life in the galaxy.
* Grrl Power: Anvil jumps from a height of several stories high with Halo in her arms, who's screaming all the way down. Despite this, the first thing Sydney does after they land unharmed is saying "Let's go again!" while jumping back in Anvil's arms. The latter is so nonplussed that she doesn't even catch her, and Sydney lands hard on her tush.
* Hairspray, Tracy's mother thanks Velma Von Tussle for letting Tracy appear on her TV show (she didn't, actually; the decision had been made without her and she protested vehemently). Velma diplomatically replies, "Well, Tracy has certainly... redefined our standards."
* Grimm is a spider Wesen, who is involuntarily compelled to periodically suck the guts out of men to maintain her youthful appearance. Interestingly, she maintains a monogamous relationship with a male member of her species, and moonlights as a serial killer, mostly to stave off her natural urge to kill her husband.

* He recommends giving your character a memorable name, while warning against using an overly-long and hard to remember name. Why remember a name loaded with syllables that takes eight seconds to say when you can point and say "Hey, Thief"? He notes that elves are a frequent offender here.
* .hack game. It has the standard bonus dungeon at the end, which gives a powerful item for defeating the boss. By this point in the game, you're far too powerful for it to matter... except that the game is split into four games, so that the treasure won at the bonus dungeon can be carried over into the next game, where it's quite useful.
* Happens in the episode "Snowball Effect" when Spongebob and Patrick are having a snowball fight.
* Harry Dresden has an unfortunate habit of getting into situations naked or close to it. Special props to the first book, where he has to fight a toad demon stark naked (he was in the shower when it showed up), while his girlfriend is with him,
* High Noon and leaving town, that gunfighter Frank Miller is coming to town on the noon train to kill him.
* Hanako Ohtani, a fat female student for whom 'the joke' is that she doesn't realize that she's hideous, and hence ends up in the likes of a * Higurashi: When They Cry), and most of the main characters die — generally in horrible and bloody ways — in the other continuities as well.
* Going Postal is introduced while standing to attention with "one side significantly more at attention than the other." According to Junior Postman Groat, Stanley was raised by peas and tends to turn towards the sun.
* Going After Cacciato - This is why most of the book's plot even exists.
* H. Beam Piper, a pilot breaks off an attack his passenger, General von Schlichten, had been pursuing:
* Hieronymus Borsch, the eponymous hero's mentor was a real magician who worked as a circus illusionist. However, he never used his magic in his act — he didn't need to.
* HARDtime... try to do this, you'll get caught. No ifs, ands or buts about it.
* GURPS tech level progression is explicitly based on the idea that nanotechnology will take off between TL9 and TL10.
* Halo 5: Guardians/plasma launcher, and can disable nearby vehicles with an EMP pulse. It's also no slouch at close quarters combat, even if its pilot would typically prefer to stay as far away from the enemy as possible (which it can do with the aid of jump jets).
* Gypsy with "Small World" and meant to foreshadow the "Momma's talkin' loud" section of "Rose's Turn", was cut because it was sung by the young June and Louise on a piece of the set that was above the action, and the child actress playing young Louise was afraid of heights. Despite still being cut however, this song is included in the 2008 Patti LuPone Revival Cast Recording, along with a few others:
* Gunnerkrigg Court features Jupiter Moon Martians—naturally enough, they're natives of Mars who immigrated to Jupiter's moon, Ganymede.
* Hawkman carries a bunch of weapons on him. An ax, a mace, a net, and a short sword all made their appearances in one story.
* Harry is understandably concerned about the concept of burning up their soul, but is assured that it's okay since souls regenerate over time, and can even be recovered faster via activities that are "good for the soul."
* Goku randomly reads Krillin's mind, the joke being that it makes about as much sense as the canon explanation. (The canon explanation being that he somehow acquired the ability while training in high gravity.)
* Han Solo has been announced to be appearing in Episode 8 no doubt fuels quite a bit of this. However, later cast lists released as Episode 8 began filming began casting doubt on this.
* Glory of Heracles series was popular in Japan, with its fourth game last made in 1994. The series then gained a 5th chapter in 2008 (2010 to western markets, and also the only one localized outside of Japan). One advantage of the series is that the games are largely self-contained, with minimal continuity spanning the various games.

* he has begun placing his hand against his ear while deep in thought — a habit borrowed from his best friend, Hide.
* Herod Agrippa) in Acts 12:19-23, who was struck down and eaten by worms for not praising the God, but instead proclaiming himself as one.
* Gordon Freeman and Cpl Adrian Shepherd are the protagonists of different
* Have I Got News for You is considered to be the quintessential British version. It's more of a quiz/panel show than a News Parody, although there's plenty of fun-making about the news.
* Heracles (better known as Hercules) is arguably the best well known Greek hero and poster boy of inhuman strength. In
* hideously mutated gives us the slow-motion version of this trope when the camera finally focuses on it.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: In one episode, a kappa appears to England and laments how so few people believe in him nowadays.
* Godzilla (2014) has a pair of enormous wings in place of one set of legs.
* Goku also gets his buns cooked when he fights Princess Snake, as well as when he and Vegeta are escaping Buu's body
* Hetalia: Axis Powers more fanservicey in the anime than in the original webcomic.
* Gotham Central sold poorly during its monthly releases, possibly due to it being a Batman book that rarely featured Batman himself. It has now found popularity, being sold in hardcover and trade paperback.
* Halloween Episode. This turns a simple trek to a mythical neighborhood that gives out tons of candy into a battle against monsters summoned by witches.
* Gunnerkrigg Court some facts about herself and her mother while all Surma's friends knew. And then it turns out this wasn't the only secret and this was even more widely known... "Seems like people enjoy keeping things from Annie" indeed.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged, as in canon, Alucard is unimpressed with most of his opponents.
* Global Frequency Aleph. Though only a couple of agents are actively involved in any particular crisis, there are a few times when the call goes out to all 1,001 members for any help they can provide (notably the the last issue of the series).
* Harry's older alternate counterpart, 'Nathan', takes this approach when dealing with his younger self when they meet, refusing to spoon-feed him, only elaborating once Harry's well on the right track. That said, this is partly because he's not entirely sure how much of his future applies to Harry's timeline, since their timelines diverged years before the start of the series.
* Good Samaritan, although Jesus probably didn't base the character on a real person.
* Halo, particularly the color-coded versions worn by specialized personnel. Still, even those are fairly sensible in appearance.
* Guild Wars 2 stick close to the team leader and the ranged fighters form a semi circle around and barraging constantly onto the leader's position. This is made possible with an easily spot-able standard hovering above the leader.
* Hesitation Equals Dishonesty: If someone hesitates, they must be lying.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows from all family photos when she wipes her parents' memories of her.
* Halo 2 and he finds himself standing right next to a very startled Grunt. The Grunt reacts by screaming in terror, throwing his gun in the air, and running away. The MC then calmly catches the gun and begins fighting his way through the Covenant capitol.
* GURPS, Evil Twin is a disadvantage a character can take for additional points. The disadvantage makes the PC have to take the fall for things his evil twin does, as well as other characters thinking that the PC is crazy, or has a split personality. Interestingly, the Evil Twin has this disadvantage as well, and occasionally the Evil Twin will be blamed for something the PC did. And if you play an evil character with this disadvantage, you have to worry about getting the credit for your "Good" Twin doing things like saving orphanages.
* Happy Heroes When the Doc tries to draw their attention to another scenario he made that he thinks they might enjoy, the Supermen stick to their word, with Smart S. commenting he'd rather die than have another dream.

* Harsher in Hindsight now that both Cosby and Kodak have also fallen, to scandal and bankruptcy respectively. Pray for Jazz.
* Gold in the Sky death of their prospector father in the Asteroid Belt, due to the machinations of the power-hungry mining company Jupiter Equatorial.
* He also does this again in "Schwarzenegger Games", when first seeing the Predator game's "Big Mode".
* Harrods, an upmarket department store in London, once claimed to sell anything, "from a packet of fern seeds to an elephant". Urban legend has it that a man determined to disprove the claim that Harrod's could get their customers anything went in and asked for an elephant. The sales attendant, completely unfazed, replied with the follow-up question: "Would that be African or Indian, Sir?" They actually sold lions
* Gunbuster uses a floral background pattern when Noriko first meets Kazumi.
* Gravity Falls: "The Stanchurian Candidate" episode centers on Grunkle Stan, Bud Gleeful and a number of other people being candidates for the new mayor of Gravity Falls. After a long and troubled election, Grunkle Stan manages to win due to impressing people with his heroic rescue of Mabel and Dipper (his great-niece and great-nephew)... but then loses when many of his past crimes are discovered, and the position is instead given to Tyler Cutebiker, aka "the only candidate who bothered to fill out the paperwork".
* Golden Age supervillain known as the Ultra-Humanite had this as a constant modus operandi, swapping with, among others, a young fashion model and a white gorilla.
* Grant Morrison's JLA Limbo (as in, the place you go when you die if you weren't good or evil enough to go directly to Heaven or Hell).
* Good Mythical Morning, when both hosts of the program try out the combination of Pop Rocks and soda to prove or dispel the myth of what it does to your body, one of the hosts pulls up his shirt and reveals that there is now a hole in his belly that the other host could see through.
* Godslave, the gods must die and be reborn every so often to ensure the End doesn't happen. Anpu used to be in charge of this, but after his pantheon rebelled, he was forced to stop and it's unsure now what the result was, is or will be.
* High Lord Antillus is a more sympathetic version of this trope towards the Icemen. He's been defending Alera from their attacks since he was fourteen, and after forty years of seeing them kill his men, soldier and civilian alike, he is completely convinced that peace with them is impossible.
* Godzilla (2014), at which point the formerly cautious recruits jumped in eagerly.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi story "Strike A Pose" (DC issue #3), the girls don't know a moment's peace because of some paparazzi who pester them even when they're at home in their bus, taking embarrassing shots of them. The only way to get rid of them is to pose politely and smile for the shots, which render them quite worthless since they're not embarrassing and scandalous.
* He's also had at least two run-ins with killer piles of autumn leaves.
* Harry Potter Becomes a Communist, tries to capture Cho Chang. She successfully defeats him by throwing her naked boobs at him, which causes him to freak out and declare, "The female body is so fucking sinful! You keep those horrible things away from me or I'll go to hell!"
* Hello, from the Magic Tavern after just a couple of years, and was about to force the podcast crew to surrender when Usidore the Black returned her to her own universe.
* God of War as titular God of War, meaning his people were not only taught the Spartan Way, but were also taught by an exceptionally angry, gigantic deity.
* High School Musical, a guy tries to dance across the stage. We then see Kelsi wince as he crashes into the equipment just offstage.
* Hackmaster. It will grab a victim and hold them upside down five feet above the ground.
* HERZ: Shinji and Asuka had greatly hurt each other… and yet they could not live without each other. Asuka never stopped loving Shinji, no matter what she said or did. Shinji never wanted another woman, and when he thought Asuka was leaving and she hated him he was so grief-stricken that he tried to kill himself.

* had vehicles that could be outfitted with everything from rams and flamethrowers to rocket launchers and mortars.
* Good Bad Bug in the car's balancing system necessitated a heavy steel plate be installed under the driver's seat to compensate.
* Hat. Quark takes it as a sign that Rom may have the "lobes" and guts for the cutthroat business world after all, and gives Rom a (meaningless) promotion at the bar.
* Gundam Build Divers, Momoka's GBN avatar is a catgirl bearing large pink ears and a tail.
* Glory who proceeds to torture her for information by crushing Tara's fingers until they bleed.
* Halo the confetti actually causes, albeit small, damage to nearby enemies.
* Harry changes in a crowded Hogwarts Express corridor while his girlfriend and her friends are changing in their compartment.
* Gomu-Gomu no Battle Axe kicks it up to the extreme with Gomu Gomu no King Kong Gun which powerful enough to smash Domflamingo straight through the island of Dressrosa and create a crater. Not long afterwards he created a variation, Gomu Gomu no Kong Organ, which is basically launching smaller but multiple King Kong Guns at once.
* "Griffon the Brush-Off" is all about this trope. Pinkie Pie and Rainbow Dash avert it while playing pranks on their friends; they both agree that pranking Fluttershy is out of the question because she's too sensitive and it would hurt her feelings. Then RD's old friend Gilda comes to visit, and plays the trope straight by being a
* Highlander: The Search for Vengeance qualifies for this. She is an immortal, who was a soldier in Japan in the sixteenth century. She is a badass fighter, and at the same time a cruel sadist.
* Ham and Cheese: Your actors realize the movie's bad and make the most of it.
* "Greg and Larry": When the squad is trying to escape from a hospital that is flooded with mafia boss Figgis' hit men, Detective Peralta says there are millions of ways to get out, but can name only one, and very silly one at that. (Seconds later he comes up with a good plan, though.)
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows this could be how Dumbledore viewed himself. In his youth, he worked with another wizard to find artifacts of great power, ostensibly to help his family but as much for himself. It took a tragedy to bring him back to earth, and ever since he kept himself away from positions of power such as Minister for Magic.
* Hanyuu. Shutting a god up by force-feeding her spicy food (by proxy, it's a bit complicated) is not the most reverent act ever.
* Hans Zimmer, made it to #23 in the UK and #8 in New Zealand, and is the shortest song to ever make the Top 40 in either country. He's had a few low charting hits on the UK charts with some other film score excerpts, but none have come anywhere close to the Top 40.
* Graham McNeill, refuses to play for a noble in the audience, Fulgrim himself appears and asks her to play for him. Later, when other soldiers complain of the remembrancers tasked with commemorating their work, Fulgrim speaks highly of the concert.
* Grumpy Cat deserves a mention, although she isn't evil so much as, well, grumpy.
* Gojira, leading the humans to come up with an elaborate plan to lure Godzilla into a fight with it.
* He also stated on his commentary for "Top 11 Batman the Animated Series Episodes" that he's really gotten sick of the
* Golgo 13 have tried this. He's killed every last one of them for it. His first rule: "I will not accept a client's betrayal."
* Hat shops are places to buy and replace hats. A more specialized hat shop that mainly sells hats for women is called a millinery.
* Golf Story or when Coach doesn't want the protagonist to call him Coach. The way this is conveyed is by having the text appear as usual only for it to be erased as if it was literally being backspaced in a word processor.

* Green Eggs and Ham wherein Sam-I-Am and the grumpy guy must team up and go on an odyssey across a Seussian world to return a rare bird to its natural habitat, with many different parties out to stop them.
* Hero: 108 where HighRoller uses a magical artifact to swap bodies with Lin Chung so that he could infiltrate Big Green. Aside from their minds, the only thing that changes among them are their manners (e.g. "Lin Chung" having a bad temper instead of remaining calm when the bad guys get away and eating lollipops like HighRoller), and thus "Lin Chung" and "HighRoller" don't retain their physical voices when they swap.
* Happy Feet. Naturally, in the finale of the movie, he shows everyone that dancing can be beautiful too.
* Godzilla's cameraman, Victor "Animal" Palotti (Hank Azaria), runs down a hallway and encounters several baby Zillas.
* Halo: EvolutionsCole's faked distress signal was both a stroke of genius and breach of protocol so severe that UNSC CENTCOM dithered over whether to award him the Legion of Honor or to have him court-martialed. Ultimately they did neither, to avoid setting precedent. However, from that point on Cole resolved to never again send a distress signal in enemy territory; no one would believe it. As he stated in his personal log: "Surrender, quite literally, is no longer an option for me.”
* hand-knitted jumpers the annual sweater, which she recognizes as him turning his back on the family in favor of his fanatical devotion to the Ministry of Magic.
* Halloween Episode, aired on September 23rd, 1998. It's not bad compared to most of these examples, as this aired a month before the holiday in question.
* had anticipated what would happen if they and they did not know how to extinguish a fire. When Miss Claridge started burning, they tried to solve the problem by peeing on her, too.
* Guzma from the same game crouches during Pokemon battles, whereas most trainers are usually standing. Also, if you examine his chair in the Team Skull hideout, the description box states the arms are worn, as if someone has been pounding their fists on it a lot.
* half the manga's run to complete. It did solve a lot of loose plot ends at least.
* Hell, the plot of the game is to assemble such an army under your command to defeat the blight. While a morally inclined Warden will get a typical fantasy army composed of humans, dwarves, elves, and mages, the far less scrupulous of players will get an army of humans, dwarves, stone golems, werewolves, and drug-addled, fanatical, mage-killing templars.
* Grand Finale, Superman does this to Darkseid, literally tapping him on the shoulder to get him to turn around before clobbering him.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) has Skeletor using a broadsword that can separate into two longswords when needed.
* Gravity when she later uses the extinguisher to maneuver herself to another space station. And when the charge in THAT runs out, she flings it away to propel herself the few precious inches needed to grasp her objective.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Ginny shows up in the Burrow's kitchen with her back exposed, asking Harry to zip her up. Needless to say, Harry (and the audience, to some extent) are taken by surprise. Despite not being particularly revealing, the scene is actually quite steamy, and the two share a passionate kiss after—which is interrupted by one of her brothers casually wandering by.
* Goth, as Harris and Klebold had been misidentified as being part of the subculture. Luckily, this seems to have died done significantly, but prejudices don't just disappear completely.
* Green Day on August 29, 2005 (two days before the song was released as the fourth single off the album) and whose aftermath stretched well into September and beyond, with Green Day performing the song at a benefit concert for the disaster.
* Gwain Saga: The Moon Tech Incorporation, being the biggest provider of technology in the kingdom. Ironically enough, the Incorporation is managed, with all of it's products and techs being designed by Luna, whom is the primary antagonist for the series.

* Hello Nurse is one of the most remembered characters - given that she's a
* Halo trilogy, whenever there's a view of Earth from space it centers on Africa. This is most likely because pretty much all of the Earth levels are set in Africa.
* Great White: After the seaplane is sunk, the five passengers are stranded in a life raft being circled by a giant great white shark.
* God of War III begins with Kratos declaring "my vengeance... ends now." It's not until the end of the game we see who he's saying it to.
* Hamilton, Thomas Jefferson uses "immigrant" derisively towards Caribbean-born Hamilton several times. Jefferson's actor also plays Lafayette in Act I (who would, in America, technically be an immigrant from France), and famously has the line "Immigrants - we get the job done". The irony is likely intentional.
* Had the Silly Thing in Reverse: The character mistakenly puts the vehicle, or uses an item or technique, in reverse.
* Hanna-Barbera is a subversion since the main characters are part of a travelling circus (well, technically the title character is; his brother Todd assists him bike maintenance, etc, while both are the legal guardians of their sister Sandy).
* Hellboy: Hellboy digs up the corpse Ivan and reanimates him to have a guide in the Russian cemetary.
* Helmuth Count Moltke, who masterminded the Prussian campaign against Austria in 1866 and the German one against France in 1870/71, was known as "der große Schweiger" (the Great Silent).
* Gunsmoke A Chinese immigrant character speaks this way when dealing with most whites he meets. It then turns out that he can speak English flawlessly, but that hard experience has taught him that racists are more likely to bully him for speaking English properly than for just acting the way they expect him to. He only drops the pretense around people he trusts.
* Hatari! in 2019. The members of Hatari have relatively public identities outside of Eurovision (one is a playwright, the other the son of a politician), but for all Eurovision-related interviews and appearances during the show, they were off-the-wall provocateurs in line with their intense image (particularly by testing the EBU's tolerance for political content with frequent references to Palestine's conflict with host country Israel).
* H. Beam Piper are a hermaphroditic race. Self-impregnation is difficult but not impossible though it is generally considered taboo. The chief of the one Ulleran tribe that practices it refers to his offspring as "little me".
* he can't die ("Die for Gold"). The Lord of the Sea has punished the greed of him and his men by making him live in a cave forever, slowly going mad.
* Hey Dude! (on Nickelodeon), the four main characters tell each other an embarrassing (but still rather tame) secret about themselves. Naturally, all four of them have spilled the beans before the half hour is up.
* Happens to Hans Moleman in one episode where he points out to the gravedigger that he's still alive just as the casket is lowered into the grave. Apparently he didn't want to be a bother.
* Higurashi: When They Cry anime used this effect on the cover art to emphasize that this is a dark, violent show. The sleeves are reversible so that you can display the cute, colorful artwork from the original Japanese release if you want.
* Hanai challenges Harima to a cooking duel during a nature outing to impress a Tsukamoto girl. What Hanai is unaware of is that both he and Harima are each focused on a different sister: Harima wants to impress older sister
* Hidden Agenda has Captain Harris, who claims to have been with British military intelligence and have information in the form of a tape recording that shows a conspiracy high in the government.
* Harry asks the Ancient Runes and Arithmancy professors for an honest opinion on his parents.
* Hatsune Miku, featuring Miku in PSO2's shop lobby wearing a FOnewearl costume.
* half-goat, half-demon Krampus has seen a surge in furry popularity since his use in horror films of the 2010s led to greater exposure to the fictional character in general.

* Herr Kleiser is preparing to leave the planet, when the technicians inform him that they detected an abnormality of 5 hundred meters radius. A force field, perhaps? Cue the
* "Harold the Barrel" ends with the titular anti-hero stuck on a window ledge above a town square full of people, preparing to jump, and we're not given any clue how the scene is resolved. Except for the way the final "running jump" fades as if the singer is falling away from the listener.
* Happy Heroes: A joke like this happens in Season 8 episode 1, when Big M. and Little M. meet Huo Haha for the first time.
* Haven: In "Friend or Faux", Cornell Stamoran inadvertently spawns a murderous clone of himself. Each time the clone is killed, he reappears next to his corpse in a new body. At one point, he exploits this and kills himself to escape being handcuffed to a pipe. Eventually, the clone redeems himself by shooting the original Cornell when he was about to shoot Audrey. As soon as Cornell dies, the clone vanishes into thin air.
* Harry Potter, there's a banquet of rotten food laid out for the ghosts. Harry figures they let the food rot so that the flavors are strong enough for the ghosts to actually taste.
* Grimm Fairy Tales has multiple mouths on his torso: a large one on his belly and four smaller ones on his torso.
* Hanna-Barbera by an animated Injun Joe. For the live-action intro, Injun Joe was played by Ted Cassidy (a.k.a. Lurch from The Addams Family). The series occasionally attempted some ambitious effects, such as having the human characters dance around their animated partners, first in front then behind.
* Godzilla and Mothra: The Battle for Earth has a dub for VHS/LD and one for the Universe Laser DVD.
* Goku's training with Korin involving climbing up his tower to meet him, and then snatch the bottle of his Sacred Water, said to increase one's strength. It doubled as a
* Grand Theft Auto (both set during the turn of the 2010s, during which the hipster subculture as known today would emerge) would ruthlessly parody this trope.
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating: Ishu is dark-haired and a very high achieving student. Before meeting Hani, her main pastime while not attending school was studying and reading.
* Harrison Bergeron. A world where everyone is finally equal — by lobotomizing the overtly talented, if needed.
* Goosebumps, so it starts storming. When he writes that there's an ominous knock on the door, the same thing occurs... but nobody's there. He didn't write that anything in particular was behind the door, after all.
* Hedonism Bot speaks almost exclusively in this way: "Oh sirrah! A man writing an opera about a woman!? How deliciously absurd!"
* Harry Potter playing with that toy. Mattel caught on to this after a while and permanently discontinued the item.
* Hamster's Paradise: The world the project takes place on, HP-02017, is located in a binary star system with a yellow dwarf called Alpha and a red dwarf called Beta. The planet orbits Alpha while Beta is further out and usually visible as a small red orb in the sky. However, at a certain time of day known as Beta Twilight, Beta is the only sun visible and the land is bathed in a dull red light, animals active at this time often develop red coloration as camouflage.
* Harold Lloyd. Seen briefly from some villagers astonished to see Harold carrying the dangerous hobo into town in a baby's stroller.
* Happens a lot to Monroe in "Season of the Hexenbiest", though the circumstances are more emotional than physical in the above cases.
* Harry and the Shipgirls The only exceptions are the Potters, who can tell that the hatred inflicted is not their own, and reject it.
* He of the story. And lesser weaknesses, which are also exploited, all lay in the fact he's stuck in the past and cannot acknowledge the genre has moved on from the cliches of all; the moment the story starts moving into new territory, he's outright stranded.

* Hc Svnt Dracones can liquefy and "dive" into a potential host, seconds later either the host explodes and two Whispers emerge, or the host simply explodes.
* Godzilla: Godzilla is sometimes seen propelling himself using his nuclear breath to chase Hedorah, though the physics behind it is murky at best, and he never did so again.
* Green-Eyed Epiphany: Realizing you love someone when seeing them with someone else upsets you.
* Gracie: A Love Story played bit parts frequently featured scenes that simply said, "Burns and Allen do four minutes here."
* Heathers on her wall. Then she spots her canary and comes up with "Tweetie".
* HeartGold copped flack for not really bumping up the initial difficulty all that much, and because Whitney's Pokémon dropped one level. Never mind that everything after the Elite Four got a boost, many of the Gym Leaders received a level boost as well, rematch battles against Gym Leaders and Elite Four reach into the 70s, Red's team almost hits 90s, Ghost Pokémon no longer work against Whitney and the AI in general has been greatly improved from the original games.
* He does however state that he doesn't really care whether its the Jedi or Sith who prevails, as long as the Republic becomes stable.
* Gravity Falls", Rumble McSkirmish's motivation for fighting Dr. Karate is that the latter killed his father... again. Dipper later claims that this happened to him in order to get Rumble to fight Robbie for him.
* Graystone Bay in the anthology series edited by Charles L. Grant. A sinister foundation, and jam packed with weirdness, until it literally disappears in the fog.
* Go look up evolution lines on a Digimon wiki (like Wikimon) and see how many different evolution possibilities there are.
* Grand Theft Auto. Kate is the only one in the family without a criminal record.
* Helicopter flying instructor: "... so he's so busy worrying about the front rotor, he walks right into the back one. Only in this business..."
* Glorious Leader: An obsessive cult of personality revolving around a political figure.
* Hellsister Trilogy break their relationship off, and later they hook up with fellow Legionnaires Dev-Em and Laurel Kent, respectively.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, everyone is within three years of 16 who is competent. The others are side characters just tossed in for humor (which of course is the point of the story).
* He had the audacity to suggest that for one holiday dinner, the portions should be thus: a slice each for Roger, Jason, Andy, and Paige, and the rest of the turkey for himself.
* Gloved Fist of Doom: An evil pose a villain makes by shoving their gloved fist with an upward thrusting motion.
* Guerrilla Warfare by Ernesto "Che" Guevara, based largely on the tactics he used in the Cuban revolution.
* he was part of the STG team that developed and deployed the second version of the genophage are a heavy burden to carry, as Maelon wisely points. And it's a major plot point on his character development.
* Goodnight Sweetheart, this gets tried using the portal that connects contemporary London with war time London, but the company that they invest in split in the 50s and, without any contact from the investors, the bank puts the shares in the half of the company that folded.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (2000) has Nicholas Cage stealing cars to help his younger brother, who got in trouble promising too much to a crime lord. Of course, the detective investigating the thefts learns of this and lets him go in the end. That Cage had just saved the cop's life and given him the information he needed to recover the cars may have also had something to do with it.
* Half-Life 2 features a scene in which Gordon Freeman has to drive across a train bridge. Halfway across, of course, a train comes rushing out at him. Unless the player knows this is coming and plans accordingly, the only option is to drive towards the train at top speed or perform a skid turn and drive the other way at top speed in hopes of making it off the bridge in time.

* , has also been found but is badly busted up, presumably from being crushed by pack ice.)
* Green Lantern several times now, with his role as the lead of the book usually taken over by another of Earth's GLs like John Stewart, Kyle Rayner or Simon Baz.
* God of War (PS4): Mimir reveals that the Norse prefer to die in battle and think dying of old age is dishonorable. Anyone who dies of old age goes to Hel instead of Valhalla. Kratos is disturbed by this. While Spartans also prefer to die in battle, they respect any warrior who dies of old age because only a real badass is strong and skilled enough to survive that long, and they go to the Elysian Fields with the other warriors.
* Halo) cause the targets that they kill to disintegrate into hardlight particles.
* Gunslinger Girl, she ends up wearing a pleated schoolgirl skirt as if she's his daughter.
* Harry Harrison. The suit is too heavy to even walk, so soldiers wearing them just hop around on booster jets. The one that falls in the swamp had its fuel line damaged by an enemy shot. The soldier is begging for help, but not one is willing to get dragged down by the swamp, so they just stand and watch, although some are shouting for him to get out of the armor. The soldier screams that it takes an hour under normal conditions.
* Have You Told Anyone Else?: Someone gets themselves killed because they revealed that they were aware of confidential information and confirmed themselves to be the only person aware of the secret to someone who most certainly doesn't want the information to be made public.
* Grave of the Fireflies), and it ends with the now very long dead siblings going to sleep just outside modern-day Kobe. No explanation is offered as to what this final scene actually means, although it is implied that they're at peace.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys. Once a pair of combatants seated next to each other (facing the same way) punched each other in the chest and both flew backwards.
* Halo, this sort of happened to Earth after the Covenant invasion, which reduced it from a population of 10 billion to one of about 200 million. However, later canon noted that much of this reduction was simply a result of successful evacuations, with Earth able to quickly restore its population to several billion after the war ends. That said, while the planet is still humanity's political center, it still has a lot of rebuilding to do in order to fix the extensive damage it suffered.
* Go Animate stuck in a smaller part of Boris's cell without even a bed or a toilet, and Boris is allowed to beat up Caillou whenever he wishes.
* Hägar the Horrible, the headsmen in their black hoods do double duty as the tax collectors, and always bring their axes with them on the job in case anybody doesn't pay. In one comic, they tried a different approach: a song and dance number about how people need to pay their taxes because "the king needs dough." Hagar admitted he missed the fear and intimidation.
* had met Anthy before when she was just a kid, and that her desire to save her from the million swords of hate is the true.
* Hawk the Slayer, three members are dead out of the five-person party (or six-person party, if you count the witch despite the fact that she's hardly ever around).
* Haganai started with 12 episodes in fall 2011, then got another 12-episode season in winter 2013.
* Gold Key Comics, Rita the Meter Maid arrives in Pepperland to claim Old Fred... in marriage in exchange for an earlier parking ticket on the Sub.
* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life. You die. Admittedly, the game is one of the darkest in the franchise (if not the darkest), but it's typically quite happy. To make matters worse you die suddenly and rather young (likely in your 50s or 60s).
* Gor, humans have immortality thanks to "stabilization serums" - shots - developed by the Caste of Physicians; basically, it's an immunization against old age. In one book, a woman from Earth actually gets de-aged from her 60s to age 18 or so thanks to the serum. The priest-kings, alien gods of the planet, have even more advanced stabilization serums which make them immortal until they decide to die, although they can be killed.

* Henry V on a nice, sunny day with shiny armor and colorful pennants. Branagh's Battle of Agincourt is most memorable for the mud.
* Here There Be Monsters takes place in Kellwood city, a human city right next to the above mentioned forest, thus far the city has been seen to be mostly plagued by vampires, creepy multi-eyed poisonous critters the locals call "rat-beasts" and urispedes, so named for their bear-like size and many legs.
* Grindcore band Gridlink have a song called "Asuka", based on the character in
* "Green Card": All of the tree pushers get fired as a result of there being no more trees to push down (as Richfield says, they've outlived their usefulness). However, they eventually get hired back to work on a project to build a wall on swamp land to keep the four-legged dinosaurs from entering their land.
* Goodwill Heroes via his cell phone every time a new page is uploaded.
* Hate Sink or villainous character who is created to attract hatred and disgust from the audience.
* Gravity Rush became this for the Vita as it was offered for free for Playstation Plus members for the better part of two years since its launch release.
* he was born to fulfil her prayers for a child who could get revenge on the world-lampshades.
* Halo: Reach standards, since the very reason s/he was transferred to NOBLE Team in the first place was because of his/her impressive piloting exploits during a counter-insurgency op on Mamore. The player gets to put those skills to use in the space dogfight section of the level "Long Night of Solace".
* Guiding Light: Similarly, wanting to protect boyfriend Jesse from the mobsters who are after her, Michelle tells him she's going to marry someone else. Sure enough, by the time she admits the truth to him, he's moved on, and so has she.
* Gram Parsons' "$1000 Wedding" is told from the POV of someone seeing the groom get the news that the bride isn't coming.
* Harry Potter, Voldemort sets a trap for Snape by kidnapping Lily, whom Snape would do anything for. And then tests Snape's loyalty by ordering him to kill her.
* Healing Hands are triggered by love, whereas darklighters' death touch are triggered by hate.
* God Never Said That: People misinterpret what the creator said about the work or believe the creator said it when the creator did not.
* Haroun and the Sea of Stories separates the perpetual daylight of Gup from the benighted land of Chup.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix was filmed and edited down, complete with a duel between Sirius and Bellatrix. Most fans wish it had been kept in its entirety.
* Happens occasionally to Chief Hanks of Joan Hess's Maggody mysteries, particularly in
* Heroes of the Storm gained new features in his native game based on his appearance in HOTS: namely, a visual indicator for the range of his auras and increased movement speed while wall-riding.
* headscratchers page for Katawa Shoujo, a penniless orphan, is able to afford her studies in an expensive, prestigious, specialized private boarding school. Other characters are explicitly shown or stated to be rich, enjoy generous scholarships, or simply have families who can support them, but Hanako's story outright shows that she can't financially support herself, leaving the question of her studies a bit of a mystery. Some people like to believe that the school itself (which was originally created for the benefit of disabled children, and has influential backers) would support her, but the page itself points out, this sounds a lot like wishful thinking. As kind as everyone in the story is, running such an expensive operation as a private school for the physically handicapped as a charity just wouldn't work in real life.
* Hile Troy's army puts up a series of them, finally taking a stand against a far superior force with their backs to a sentient forest that

* Heart of Steel has spent the last ten years on a remote island up to his eyebrows in mad science and plans for world conquest, with no company that he didn't build himself. Needless to say, his attempts to woo Julia, the first woman he's seen in that time are...spectacular failures.
* Gustav Mahler's eighth symphony for large orchestra and multiple choruses was billed in its premiere as "Symphony of a Thousand" (most modern performances fall a few hundred short of that number); Mahler privately mocked this, calling it a "Barnum and Bailey production."
* Guiding Light, originating in 1937 on CBS Radio and making the move to TV in 1952. It finally ceased production in 2009.
* Henry VI. The source of the infamous quote is Dick the Butcher who, true to his name, is a brutish criminal who is participating in a rebellion against the crown for kicks. He says this to Jack Cade, the leader of the rebellion, who is little more than a stooge of the Duke of York with delusions of grandeur.
* Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later, though he's still extraordinarily tough. After getting an axe in the chest, he nonchalantly rips the weapon out and keeps going.
* Grand Admiral Thrawn was initially presented as a member of an unknown species, established after 8 years OOU and 10 IU timeline years as the heretofore reclusive Chiss species from the Unknown Regions. After this, of course, Chiss proliferated in the EU, most recently and egregiously in the novel
* Heterosexual Life-Partners: Very close same-sex friends vs. Very close opposite-sex friends
* Harry Potter and the Nightmares of Futures Past, it is mentioned Ginny was raped and murdered during the Battle of Hogwarts. At one point, Harry imagines how it must have went, with Draco being the culprit.
* Her boyfriend Tyler isn't very bright, but not to the same extent as her.
* He considers Lady Olenna to be his intellectual equal and recognizes that she's the true head of House Tyrell, as he deals with her directly when arranging a marriage between their two families, and not with her son Mace, who is technically the Lord of Highgarden. Olenna then praises Tywin for living up to his reputation and considers him a quality rival. It's most notable at the wedding of Joffrey and Margaery, and he blows off the rest of the people there to take a stroll in the gardens with Olenna. In spite of being leading figures in separate sides of a civil war, the two are chatting away like old friends. It is one of the few times Tywin looks anything remotely resembling happy.
* Good Powers, Bad People: Why should I help people with these powers I got? You think I'm some little saint? Fuck that!
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix could be said to share this role in a sense: Lucius seems to have been the leader, but Bellatrix was Voldemort's favorite. After his failure, Voldemort kept Lucius and his family around mostly to watch them squirm. Bellatrix also lost some points and was severely punished, but her unquestioning devotion and assertive nature helped her retain significance; the fact that she went to Azkaban rather than renounce the Dark Lord ensured that he still favored her. Yaxley was also one of the highest ranking minions, more or less controlling the Ministry, and he was also ambitious enough to see Snape as competition and determined to earn Voldemort's favour.
* GoldenEye when he bungee jumps off the dam, he uses a grappling hook pistol to pull himself to the bottom.
* Grey's Anatomy inspired scrubs in hospital uniform stores. They're ridiculously soft, too.
* Haruhi Suzumiya arc, there are 8 parts and it takes place during August (the broadcast of this ended at the beginning of August as well). A bit less obviously, turning an 8 sideways gives you the infinity symbol.
* Going Postal public execution. Moist (the accused, who doesn't know it's faked) is asked to sign the rope before hand, since it will then be worth more to collectors. He's also expected to come up with some punchy last words, that being traditional.
* GURPS has the Fearsome Stare perk that lets you make Intimidation checks without saying a word.

* Hellish Horses. They're the mounted heavy cavalry of the forces of Chaos and, with their fanatical devotion to their god or gods, also serve as templars of the Chaos armies.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe who had his face burned off with acid fighting King Randor.
* Granny Weatherwax does not do this, but her genteel chuckle when she is about to do the Right Thing has been described as far,
* Happy Tree Friends lists Flaky's gender as "?", co-creator Ken Navarro loved trolling the fandom by playing up the debate for all it's worth, but the authors eventually settled the debate, as they constantly repeat in interviews that Flaky is indeed a girl, since they admitted they are tired of the trolling already.
* Guardians of the Galaxy is not fooled and calls out the favoritism Yondu shows Peter when the Ravagers were hunting the Guardians down on behalf of Ayesha.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, England was performing a secret black ritual to curse Germany. Then America walks in and England quickly "invites" him to the costume party.
* Highlander had a backstory variant with Joe and another Watcher; it was a brief fling, and though she got pregnant, he didn't want to ruin her marriage, so he let her and her husband think they were the parents, only telling the girl, Amy, when she was an adult.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. Poland could count as a parody as well; he's a part-time cross-dresser.
* he had hoped to get enough money to pay for her operation by betting on the other competitors the previous year, and as a result could not afford the operation when the person he bet on lost. He planned to blow up the champion's mother at the end of the final match in revenge. Conan managed to identify him and took him out before he could activate the detonator.
* He even works in jobs across series — showing up in cameo jobs in
* Hc Svnt Dracones with Omni-Frame lift assist), which costs more than a small spaceship and does 1,000 damage with each shot, and the shell keeps going until it's done that much.
* Hazbin Hotel is entirely defined by her relationship with Charlie. She has no goals of her own (as both of them are trying to get Charlie's rehabilitation hotel to get off the ground), we don't know anything about her and she is rude, hostile, and aggressive towards anyone who isn't Charlie.
* Highlander The Raven on the Third World to save on foreign aid budget gets acquitted, so the old friend of Amanda's who drove the investigation shoots him on the courthouse steps, before being gunned down by his bodyguards.
* Gods. The immortals who live in the High Plane, they follow their own agendas and scheme against one another while using the mortal races for their own ends.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, Luis is forced to enter a cage match and take a dive in order to pay off his mother's debts.
* Harriet: In general the abolitionists that help Harriet are fighting against slavery in various ways.
* Golf With Your Friends, you generally follow the path of the "fairways" in each level, but by taking advantage of the obstacles and physics, you can skip parts of the level. While it can save time and strokes, there's usually more challenge involved, and you risk landing out-of-bounds, incurring a penalty.
* he was specifically requested to command Babylon 5 by the Minbari. In "Eyes" we meet a higher-ranking officer who resents this fact and attempts a coup.
* Haley Bennett is normally blonde but became brunette to play Emma Cullen.
* Highlander the Kurgan captures Brenda and goes on a joyride through the city streets, playing chicken with traffic and running cyclists off the road, rounding off the whole experience by singing "New York, New York."
* Heel–Face Door-Slam: A character never got the chance to switch to the side of good.
* Gregory Horror Show. She is a nurse with a blood-taking fetish and a syringe as big as she is.
* Hatoful Boyfriend. One event near the end of Shuu's route suggests a size increase in the sapient birds, but it's still made clear that the human girl is much larger than her love interests.

* God Himself contacts her and tells her Chris is her true love, which she immediately accepts despite having never met Chris at that point. Then the next mention of her is her death, rendering the strangling pointless.
* Halloween Kills; the trailer was quickly leaked and was subsequently released online.
* Granny Aching from the Tiffany Aching series. Dead before the first book began, we only see her through Tiffany's memories. A bit of a shame since it would have been interesting to see a meeting between Granny Weatherwax and her. Pratchett has said in talks, "She's one of my best characters ever, and she's dead!"
* her gig about the Barbie Airplane, in which she points out how the inside of the plane is much smaller (or less furnished) than it's made to look on the outside. A rough translation:
* Hannah Montana, when Miley ends up on a date with Oliver's friend Connor, who is noticeably shorter.
* Hex is used mainly as a vehicle for computer puns, e.g. it's got an anthill inside, it doesn't work when it's not FTB (fluffy teddy bear) enabled, etc. According to
* GURPS Fourth Edition core book is the military robot turned Buddhist monk precisely for this reason.
* Greg Weisman voices Lucas Carr, and in season 3, the Ultra Humanite.
* Heavy Rain But he's easily the most popular character outside of the game.
* Hello, from the Magic Tavern has numerous secret names. Names of such great power that merely speaking them aloud has dire consequences.
* Heroes of Might and Magic) probably helps; they know it can be done and view worshiping the gods as a roadblock to doing so.
* Hilariously, Veil once gave several translations of the ork word "zogoff", which could mean anything from "
* Gundam that scramble electromagnetic sensors, reducing detection to heat sensors and the old Mk. I Eyeball. It doesn't have too much in the way of actual stealth, but it is possible to sneak very close to an enemy if you know what you're doing.
* Harry Potter, never living in the physical world but never moving onward into the comfort of death.
* Harry Potter, who appears to be killed off a couple of times but manages to survive until the end.
* Guts would get a few good smacks from his soon to be lover, Casca, early in the series, for some serious moments like when she was forced to sleep naked on Guts to keep him warm or when Guts tries to interrupt
* Halo: Combat Evolved, but they're never seen unless you turn traitor.
* Hellsister Trilogy's evil counterpart and raises him into a merciless, hyper-destructive killing machine, loyal only to him.
* He also made an appearance in a commercial for Norton Internet Security, representing a cyber-criminal who defeats a fan (representing your computer password) by
* Goddess Creation System, modern girl Xiaxi finds herself in ancient China as a result of Plot and finds her values clashing with the horribly entitled nobility she has to serve. Case in point, she's given a 'trial run' to see how things working before starting her mission for real and is almost immediately executed and used as fertilizer because someone used her as material for a rude joke.
* Harmless Freezing: Getting frozen is non-lethal and the frozen person will be perfectly fine once thawed out.
* Glowing Eyelights of Undeath: Vampires with glowing eyes to underscore their undead state.
* Gone with the Wind, one for a public domain DVD release, two dubs for Nippon TV (both with Tatsu Natsumura as Mammy), one for TV Tokyo, and a sixth as an in-flight movie.
* Help! makes his way to the Beatles in a motorized rubber raft he tells his lackey "You should've thought of that before we left!"

* Hilarity Ensues as she tells Lucas how some woman named Cybersix is dating Adrian on the sly, much to his displeasure.
* Goonswarm's, and ended in part because the EU CEO hadn't been particularly interested in joining a messy and unprofitable war with the CFC in the first place, leading to the collapse of the alliance.
* Gradius are even assimilated beings from other races, with the minds intact.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality illustrates the deadly consequences of putting all of your life into the charm.
* Harry Potter series has some cut content the author has discussed and that fans would have enjoyed seeing kept.
* Hayley and Klaus are absent in a number of episodes, to the point where it was lampshaded in "Ricky Spanish".
* Guitar Hero games have a "no fail" feature, so you can finish the song no matter how badly you screw it up.
* Happens with a LOT of criminal groups in the real world. If they think they can make more money by killing a "friend", or simply need to throw someone to the wolves to save themselves, they'll do so without a second thought. Many criminal organisations are often brought down by snitches who will turn informant the moment they face time behind bars for their crimes.
* Grand Theft Auto V does this with all of its three protagonists, to some degree. Franklin plays the story the straightest, as he rises from a quiet suburban life to a life of high-rise crime. Michael returns to a life of crime after his family continuously disrespects him. And Trevor wants to cause destruction and chaos for its own sake, though the extra money certainly doesn't hurt. In two of the ending options, all three of them fall to some degree. Franklin has to kill either Michael or Trevor to cover his own ass, and even the one who survives ends up with virtually nothing to show for it. With the Los Santos PD hot on their trail, all their money effectively worthless since they can't buy their way out of trouble, and a wake of bodies behind them, Franklin laments that the lifestyle of a gangster simply wasn't worth it, one way or another.
* he put in the Author twice. So he introduced a pair of impostors running around, and the rest is history.
* Gunsmith Cats, the real-life couple Herman López and Norma Iturbe provide the voices for Roy Coleman and Becky Farrah, respectively.
* Haunter: The movie begins with Lisa repeating the same day in her house. It's soon revealed to be because Lisa is stuck in the afterlife by the evil ghost who killed her and her family.
* Harley Quinn. For a long time, writers went back and forth as to whether she truly earned her degree or whether she cheated her way through school to get it, but by the 2010s, it was universally agreed to be the former.
* Grand Theft Me - When someone enters someone else's consciousness and tries to wrest control from within.
* Hay Lin controls air, which tends to be in abundance everywhere. Will controls Quintessence, the mythical fifth element which can be forgiven for being conjured; though it takes the form of lightning, which comes directly from the static on her body as she is shown to be glimmering with static electricity, especially her hair which stands on end at times as well as shocking people randomly when they touch her.
* Heart of Darkness, there is what looks like an upside-down mountain floating above the world, where live the "Amigos." Weirdly, it has inverted gravity compared to the main land — if you fall from the mountain's edge, you go UP into the sky. If you reach the mountain's "top" (its bottom from a non-inverted viewpoint), then you're claimed back by the gravity of the earth and fall down.
* Halo 2. Needless to say, the fans were quite pleased to hear of the initial announcement.
* Hatoful Boyfriend. The characters think they'll be able to hear it coming and avoid it. They don't imagine that it could be lying in wait.
* Heisei Rider vs. Showa Rider: Kamen Rider Taisen feat. Super Sentai) and Takao Nagaishi (a long-standing episode director for the first decade of the Heisei era) at the end of the ending credits.

* Grant Morrison are revealed to have visited Earth during the prehistoric era, influencing human culture and providing humans with technology.
* Happens again in the episode "Run," when Chance uses a mook both to shield himself from a guy who's firing at him from across the room and to fire at said guy via the mook's gun. There's no lampshade this time, though.
* Godzilla Anime Trilogy Given he's the dominant life form of the entire planet, he certainly applies.
* hasn't come out, while the older iteration shows more and more the signs of its age (like complete lack of sound, a very cumbersome interface, and low resolution).
* Green Lantern, this is how Hal Jordan rids himself of Sinestro. He came back years later.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. In episode 8 Konoe wants to borrow some clothes from Yashima, and we all know how Yashima reacts to Konoe.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, as the Yule Ball draws nearer, a lot of girls in Hogwarts are prone to giggling when they're around Harry.
* Haow) Gundam, even though the Kowloon Gundam was really Master Gundam in disguise.
* Heavy Weather: Jerry, the leader of the Storm Troupers, is a bodybuilder. He thinks that if he's physically larger than the others, they will be more likely to just do what he says and not waste his time by asking for explanations.
* Golden Sun... but once again, nothing's stopping you from using the same powers on people.
* Had happened back in the first issue: when Zoe went into labor, Simon and Kaylee run into the infirmary while still getting dressed. Zoe did say that they're like a "couple of rabbits".
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch had the film 'break down' because of gremlins in the projection booth, resulting in Hulk Hogan being called in from the cinema lobby to save the day. The home video version had gremlins plague the viewer's TV set by switching it over to other channels. Eventually they come undone by switching over to a Western, at which point John Wayne shoots them.
* Her friend Gagagigo started his carrier as the little and cute Gigobyte and fights along with Eria. As the grown-up Gagagigo he eventually left her and someday he fought Freed the Brave Wanderer, ended up being trapped in another dimension. He met Marauding Captain and fought against Inpachi, who later appeared again as Blazing Inpachi; the Marauding Captain took the bullet, which inspired Gagagigo to do the same for one of the Captain's men during the war against Invader of Darkness. Later, in hope to defeat Invader of Darkness, he asked the
* Hannibal Burress' album 'My Name is Hannibal' contains a joke about creating the phrases 'rape and pillage' and 'pillage and plunder': "How about 'rape and pillage'?" "What's pillage?" "I was focusing on the rape". Later on, "What about 'pillage and plunder'?" "What's plunder?" "Honestly I was still focusing on rape"
* Hey Arnold!, Helga doesn't even notice the presence of any boys except Arnold. Not that she'll ever admit it publicly...
* Grif and Simmons help him take down the Meta by using a jeep to drag him off a cliff..
* Harry Potter series is described as having lots of earth on her clothes and fingernails that would make prim and proper Aunt Petunia faint.
* Hellsister Trilogy often use their ice-cold super-breath to freeze enemies and put out fires.
* HA HA HA—No: A character laughs, but then switches to seriousness and tells someone no.
* Great Lakes Avengers universe as a result). He can take advantage of it by killing himself to heal any persistent injuries, so it's not entirely a bad thing.
* Goldfinger, it blows up in a spectacular fireball. Not after it hits anything, but when it's just about 15 feet past the cliff. This trope was abandoned fairly quickly in the series (except when explosives were concerned).
* Go to the Euphemism: A character uses a euphemism for "bathroom" or what you do there.

* Happy Tree Friends", Cuddles suffers from this thanks to the combination of his Christmas Tree costume's hole and the crowd forcefully pushing him (since his costume was blocking the way) in an effort to escape the fire in the school theater.
* Harry Potter, Mrs. Weasley has the whole family scrub the house for the arrival of Fleur's parents, apparently based on the logic that they will be as critical as Fleur is. Instead they turn out to be incredibly jovial.
* Green Day's "Warning" depicts a young man who spends his entire day defying "conventional wisdoms" of various types. Towards the start of the video, he runs down a hallway, picks up a pair of scissors that are hanging up on a peg on the way and sets them back down on another peg at the end of the hall and he runs the scissors back to the original peg when he returns home at the end of his day.
* Happy Heroes features all five heroes; for example, Season 2 episode 37 features appearances from Careless S. and Smart S., but none of the others.
* Grace can be like this to Tedd, especially in the "One Way Road" arc where he's gotten too wrapped up in
* Guess what's the latest trendy workout recovery beverage among the athletic set?...
* Hazbin Hotel. Constantly and unnecessarily. Katie Killjoy refuses to shake Charlie's hand because she doesn't touch "the gays," Sir Pentious spends half his time demeaning his own loyal minions, and everyone mocks Charlie's idea for redeeming demons.
* Grace and Simon which involves throwing them into a hole and having the victims crawling at the ceiling of their graves.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law's bathwater at the time the crime took place.
* Hercules, Hades gets a prophecy from the Fates that the only thing that can foil his plan to rule the cosmos is the titular hero. When he tried to dispose of Herc as a baby, he set off a chain of events that led to Hercules growing up to be a hero and foiling his plans.
* Hank and Raven because they possess visible mutations, but they drift apart after the latter begins to accept her real appearance.
* Highlander played this absolutely dead straight between Duncan and Tessa.
* "Gun trucks" used by the US military in both the Vietnam War and Iraq. Basically a standard military truck fitted with armour plating and automatic weapons, they started being used in both conflicts as an efficient way of protecting supply convoys from attack by insurgents armed only with small arms.
* Her younger half-sister, Susan, was also this to her mother Jeanne. Due to not having seen her in almost a year, Susan didn't recognize her and began crying to the point she was beaten. Adeline tried to stop this, but only got scorn from her step-mother. Susan was also disowned and disinherited, by the way.
* Heavy weapons specialist Roadblock enlisted after a recruiter, awed by his size, told the aspiring chef he could learn to cook in the army. Roadblock transferred to infantry
* Good Cannot Comprehend Evil: See above, but swap "heroes" for "villains" and "vice" for "virtue."
* Gulliver's Travels (2010) depicts the title character's adventure beginning after his ship wrecks in the Bermuda Triangle.
* He's Just Not That into You was based on an advice book based on a stand-up comedy bit
* Groovy, Kinda, Edison Lighthouse, as Rosemary Pipkin, lived with her husband and teenage son in a Riverdale like suburb. Now she's a presumably single, alcoholic artist living in an apartment in Innesmount. Larry Pye used to date The Famous Supermodel Victoria, Eleanor's sister, until something happened that no one is ever allowed to mention.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) hesitant to help Skeletor steal the Ram-Stone from its protector the Faceless One, claiming she doubts she can defeat him. The true reason is, the Faceless One is her dad who she still has feelings for, despite the fact that he clearly shows disappointment in her working for Skeletor. This plotline is important later when she double-crosses Skeletor and finds herself over her head; her father is the only one who can provide help (or rather, find someone who can).

* Happy Days, Fonzie tends to sit in strange places like on the kitchen bench and on the sink.
* Good Neighbors, Victor pines after Louise throughout the film, while she pays little notice to him and uses him several times when it suits her needs.
* Harlan Ellison in-story: "Where did he get jelly beans? Nobody has made jelly beans for more than a hundred years!"
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, actually has official art fulfilling this rule.
* Goosebumps ever wrote actually exists, locked away within their book's manuscript. Then someone unlocks one of the books...
* Grrl Power. He's bald, and evil in that he started a fight with ARCHON at a restaurant (which caused a bit of damage to the building, parking lot, and at least one vehicle); he also roped more than 50 other people into joining in, largely because his powerset worked better the more people around him fought. A few of his 'recruits' ended up being arrested, mainly due to pre-existing warrants, and he ended up in a specialized holding cell to reduce the chance he could power up again.
* Good Cop/Bad Cop pair, where he either has to work around the incompetent cops, or bribe/intimidate corrupt ones.
* Heavy Object, the world became a fully shattered mosaic of small territories, each belonging to one of the four big factions: Legitimacy Kingdom(where bloodline and honor are everything), the Information Alliance(where inexactitudes and falses news are evil and weapons) , the Capitalist Corporations(where charity is a crime) and the Faith Organization(a patchwork of every religions invented). You can barely travel more than a couple hundred miles in any given direction before running into a border.
* Heel–Face Turn and being forgiven by Shining Armor and Princess Cadance for using the latter as bait to ambush King Sombra, Xenilla gives a vow of protection to them and the empire with the specific duty of safeguarding the royal family and their unborn child. Comes in handy when Tempest Shadow leads Storm King's army in a surprise attack, they weren't expecting a nearly 400-foot-tall kaiju to be Princess Cadance's bodyguard.
* God Couple has Anshar and Kishar, Anu and Ki, Apsu and Tiamat, Negal and Ereshkigal, etc.
* Goblins: Life Through Their Eyes bonus strip. Tempts fights an ancient dragon, the speaking of whose name will cause him to be sucked into a Plot Hole and vanish forever.
* Henri's leg condition is foreshadowed to end his career as an ice skater. Ultimately
* Grey is..., including cups and bookmarks with chibi Black and White on them
* Hell Night entails being locked up inside an abandoned manor. Unfortunately, there's also a killer loose.
* Harry Potter series concluded in 2007, the previously rare name Hermione had experienced a huge spike in popularity, as did the less-rare-but-still-uncommon names Luna and Lily. The names Ron(ald) and Harry have long been perennial standards but likewise experienced a significant spike attributed to the series.
* Goldstein, attending is required under the principle that protecting lives overrides most commandments.)
* Henry IV - was named Sir John Oldcastle, after an actual knight at Henry's court. The descendants of the actual Oldcastle, anticipating this trope, complained that the play would ruin their ancestor's good name, so Shakespeare renamed the character.
* GoGo Sentai Boukenger, Masumi and Natsuki put glasses on a sleeping Satoru.
* Half Baked, Thurgood Jenkins goes to a drug addiction meeting to help him quit marijuana. After this line:
* Grumpy Old Men, John has a heart attack walking home from the bar. The last shot we see of him is talking to his new flame Ariel being heavily intubated, looking like he's on the brink of death. Several scenes go by after this (including his frenemy Max and his son helping to pay off John's IRS debt to avoid them taking his house), and then the final scene has all the men of the movie in what appear to be mourning clothes outside of a church, making it seem like they're going to John's funeral...and then they remove their outer coats to reveal tuxedos, and that they're groomsmen in John's wedding to Ariel.

* Haruhi Suzumiya. She's surprised that when the restriction is lowered she can speak normally about things she couldn't say before.
* hear where a given sound is coming from, and it's certainly not that front doors often always have a double ring (ding-dong) and back doors a single ring (ding). And because there's no way at all the suspect could be from, live in, or have lived in a town where it's customary to do everything at the back door except on special occasions.)
* Hero Elementary , Lucita Sky is afraid of heights even though she can fly.
* "Good Shippers" (from "The Good Ship Ron/Hermione") seems to be more common than "Herons".
* Haribo Golden bears has the kid using the candy to bribe a handful of adults, male and female, into joining the tea party.
* Halo-esque video game, until after "LEVEL COMPLETE" appeared onscreen, when the character lit up a cigarette (first-person, of course), coughed, and collapsed.
* Gundam series tend to feature these in the booting up format. If the Gundam is unused and being prepped for the debut battle, it will inevitably take much longer to suit up to give you the rundown. This comes complete with the interface completely opening up before your eyes. If the Gundam has weapons, they will be manually equipped.
* Head Over Heels with possibilities, and only more so when the non-linear section kicks in on the Moonbase.
* Glee punchline. Fortunately, the other interracial love triangles on the show don't make a big deal out of race, such as blonde Brittany breaking up with Artie to go back to Hispanic Santana, or black Mercedes choosing white Sam over black Shane.
* Godzilla: The Planet Eater - Last deconstructed with the Exif, where they believe that everything in the universe is finite, and that life is pointless. Thus, ending all of life in the universe is considered mercy. They choose to do this by unleashing King Ghidorah on Earth in order to kill Godzilla and the remaining humans.
* Gundam SEED has several of these with almost every notable character getting an eventual upgrade.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets contains "fantasy spiders", an oddly specific warning. At least it's a real fear, which Ron displays prominently in the film itself.
* Had its peak period in the West during the late 1990s and early 2000s, where a look for women involving cropped tops and extremely low-waisted trousers or skirts (for the really daring, below the top of the pelvis) became popular on the street and practically enforced for young female entertainment personalities. Died out because of how
* Help I Am Being Held Prisoner: Obviously, the tunnel that everyone goes in and out of at will serves to this affect for the prisoners to sneak out to pull off crimes or just enjoy freedom.
* He finally won a playoff game with Denver in 2014 against the San Diego Chargers, and then won the conference against the New England Patriots, but his number one offense was not good enough to beat the Seattle Seahawks' number one defense in Super Bowl XLVIII. This overwhelming loss triggered a * Great Mazinger has a scar runs along of the left side of his head, stopping right above his eyebrow. It is not elegant or unnoticeable, even though he is one of the good guys.
* Hansel and Gretel has this when the children go to sleep in the woods for the night.
* HappinessCharge Pretty Cure!, Hime is given a special stone that will search out her partner and allow them to become a Pretty Cure. She's never told how the stupid thing works and decides to chuck it and make the first person it hits her partner. It's a good thing the person she does hit, Megumi, does make it work.

* habit, spilling the remainder on a table which instantly started to corrode. Whether the person was unconscious or dead is entirely unclear.
* Happy Heroes as main and recurring characters, including the villain Big M. from Planet Gray. The official English dub of the seventh and eighth seasons from Miao Mi, an educational service designed to teach Mandarin Chinese to children, gives Big M. a British accent for a small handful of episodes.
* has the morality of the 80s Saturday Morning villain Cobra Commander clash with the views of characters in the titual novel. Cobra Commander comes off as a lot more sane and intelligent.
* Green Day's album titled American Idiot is about a character named the Jesus of Suburbia who tires of small town life and seeks fulfillment in a new life in the city. After much heartache and some self-destructon, he finally comes to terms with life and matures from a rebellious youth to a jaded, but functional adult.
* Half-Life 2 has a few of these: The teleporter in Kleiner's lab (twice), the teleporter at Nova Prospekt, and finally the Combine portal in the Combine Citadel.
* hanged with a construction crane as her "sentence" for killing a circus trainer.
* half a heart remaining made it less ruinous by making you take 2 extra hearts worth of damage and temporarily breaking it while you take damage while holding it.)
* Haunted House on the Atari is one of the first games to be set here.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Snape and Karkaroff get put on stopping people from making out duty. Harry and Ron were trying to get away from the ball for a moment and then started eavesdropping on them. There's a brief moment where Snape is confused as to why Harry and Ron are there.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers to get footage of Germany, Italy, and Japan getting it on is definite proof of this.
* Gwen Stefani's pop adoption of Japanese memetics, complete with having four "Harajuku girls" who follow her around and aren't ever referred to by their real names. PeeJee suggests the girls are likely "tutoring" Stefani in Japanese — "Seeing a withered little pop star trying to order sushi in Japanese and instead telling the waiter about her intense venereal disease would be better than any Christmas bonus I've ever received."
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi episode "Collect All Five", Ami lets out one of these when she finds out that...
* Heathcliff once got hit with tomatoes thrown by the neighborhood pets in an episode of * Guise Will Be Guise", where Wesley, pretending to be Angel, is handed a glass of blood. He tries to explain he doesn't usually drink blood in front of people but his host insists that he not mind them, and he reluctantly drinks it down.
* Heroman is a robot who never speaks in any single moment from that series.
* Harry Potter quickly gained a reputation for this, with its fans obsessively poring over every minor character or object introduced trying to find out what importance they had.
* High School D×D: There are a lot of dragons, and they're considered the most powerful race in-universe. Issei, the protagonist, is considered one even though he's still a human-devil hybrid (he was killed at the beginning of the story and reincarnated into a devil) because he has a dragon sealed in his left arm named Ddraig, a Welsh dragon.
* Hall of Fame catcher Mickey Cochrane's career with the Detroit Tigers ended immediately after he was severely beaned by pitcher Bump Hadley. Cochrane was knocked unconscious and hospitalized in a coma for ten days afterward.
* Have I Got News for You, where the guests had to guess who the waxwork was supposed to be.
* Hey Dude! doctor." Mr. Ernst then leaves to follow everyone else in chasing down who took his money, only for Buddy to put the money back in the safe and remark: "They certainly are gullible."
* , has it where Karen forces Matt to explain himself. It's only after he shows her the various scars he's received from his fights with Nobu and Wilson Fisk that she kisses him, to thank him for the two times he's saved her in his alternate persona.

* Gordito, while not generally an example, 'grew a mustache through sheer force of will'.
* Hairspray, Tracy gets knocked out by a dodgeball. In the new movie, it's a throwaway gag, but in the original, it's a major plot point: Link asks her out after it, and Penney and Seaweed bond when they rush over to help her.
* Gundam has a franchise-specific version of this representing psychic powers and/or telepathic communication. It's called the "Newtype Flash" by fans.
* he's damaged more Royal Navy property than some small wars Chief rank and between 1949 and 1973 it had no Warrant Officers either.
* Goldust's Tom Green, whom Russo had a friendly working relationship with behind camera.
* Gotcha Force begin to stir up a few possibilities over a sequel in the future.
* happened next proved beyond a shadow of a doubt who the National Player of the Year was.
* HERZ: When an illegal Eva rampaged through China Asuka suggested they deploy Unit 01 — piloted by her husband Shinji—... together with six more Evas only in case. Misato only let her deploy two Units.
* Harry's sword, forged for him by Uhtred, with the guidance of Tony Stark, and enchanted by Loki. It was designed along the lines of an Alfheim sabre, based on Harry's preference
* Gulliver's Travels: The kings of Lilliput and Blefuscu disagree about whether the song "Faithful" or "Forever" will be played at the wedding, starting the war between them.
* He can be seen inside a Metropolis café near Superman's memorial site as Lois Lane goes to mourn the Man of Steel in
* Godzilla who is 118.5 meters tall, a full 10 meters taller than his Legendary counterpart and much meaner, uglier, and in a sense more pitiable.
* Grand Finale and she takes mercy on him, simply saying that she feels the same way.
* Harry Potter did its best, with many of the earlier holes due to later books not being released, and to their credit the writers did attempt to mop errors up as best as they could. But there are some that have no real justification.
* hhgregg did a series of ads featuring hh, a sentient rolled-up hhgregg ad.
* Hell Girl, both Enma Ai and Kikuri are super-sized. They're mocking the victim's desire to be a "big shot".
* goes into outright withdrawal when he can't find anyone who actually needs his help.
* Guns N' Roses "November Rain" (#3; which is their most-played YouTube video) and "Patience" (#4), which are far from obscure but not quite as iconic.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality series, has this: Hogwarts' corridors which can change when you aren't looking. The number of stairs you climb has only a passing correlation to your actual elevation when you look out the window. At least one corridor is tiled in pentagons, a feat not possible in normal 3-D space. The stairway in Ravenclaw Tower is described as being straight when viewed from the inside and actually climbing it, but viewed from the outside, logically only a spiral staircase could fit.
* Hermann Hesse fits this, as he talks the talk, but actually the only move he made was a crush on a storekeeper. That happened during his school days. Later, he did have a brief romance... to his best friend Max Demian's mom. They actually even kissed, but that's it.
* Heroes of Might and Magic series feature the skill Eagle Eye, which allows the hero to learn spells by watching the enemy hero cast them in battle.
* Granted, Dr. Hutchison was shown to be half-turtle herself in an earlier episode so she could have laid the egg.
* Hamlet, Claudius' ambition to the throne leads him to kill his brother and marry the queen.
* Harry Enfield and Chums's Radio 1 promptly sacked older DJs who were considered to have been potential targets of the parody. Enfield and Paul Whitehouse themselves later said that they hadn't intended the parody so aggressively and were sad to think that it might have contributed to people losing their jobs.

* Gravity Falls episode "Blendin's Game", time cops from tens of thousands of years in the future pull up video of Mabel and Dipper, who live in the 21st Century. A caption on the screen reads "Live Feed".
* Harbourmaster isn't something humans or Aquaans can take advantage of. The barrier is circumvented with PDAs, although the entomorphs like them for more than just communicating with humans (q.v. long-distance communication between even just entomorphs).
* Hercule Poirot stories is the way the mysteries are sometimes solved. It relies either on a one in a million chance that Poirot's interpretation is correct or Poirot knows something without going into how he knows it with Poirot hand waving the whole thing with "I have my methods."
* Harmony Theory to her when she came back to finish the job. When she returns, she is sorely disappointed to find they did not do this and instead wasted all their time on petty civil wars and political intrigue. Only heroes like Rainbow Dash and Star Fall can fight her, while she can easily kill a squad of regular soldiers without blinking.
* glomp and a technically-genderless spirit being rather than a human girl, though she more or less refers to herself as a girl.
* Hans Christian Andersen", twelve princes are changed into swans by their witch stepmother, and their sister chased away by the queen as well.
* Harry needs to send the Black lordship ring to a currently-imprisoned Sirius, but it's against Gringotts regulations to ask for a lordship ring other than your own. When Harry asks for the Potter lordship ring, Griphook "accidentally" brings the Black ring as well, then announces that Harry's account manager has another customer to deal with and both of them exit the room, leaving Harry alone with both rings and post-owl/familiar Hedwig.
* Halo: Reach, some Spartans of Noble Team sacrifice their lives to blow up enemy motherships. Some do a kamikaze into giant enemy walkers. Some kill their slayers while impaled on their energy sword. Some go out shooting down dozens of enemy airships with no chance of escape. Some... get shot in the head running from cover to cover.
* had there been one), was to reveal that T'Pol's father was a Romulan spy, which would go a long way towards explaining her Straw Vulcan tendencies in the earlier seasons.
* Goku's ultimate technique, the Spirit Bomb, draws in small amounts of life energy from everything around it and unleashes it in a huge explosion. In this case it's too small an amount to actually be harmful to those giving the energy (and can also draw from non-living sources like stars), though apparently it's far more effective when sentient beings voluntarily offer up their energy.
* Gus Johnson's sketches regularly feature the same actors: His brother Sven Johnson (several of his other family members make regular appearances too), his roommate Eddy Burback, and his girlfriend Abelina Sabrina. Likewise, Gus regularly appears in sketches on Sven's and Sabrina's channels. He and Ian Kung have also appeared in several of each other's sketches.
* Good Old Robot: A character keeps an old robot despite newer versions being available.
* Hey Arnold! does this to Helga and Arnold. Even though they have families, they feel alone like they've never truly celebrated Thanksgiving before, so they bond with each other as they try to find the perfect Thanksgiving.
* Heath Ledger and makes it appear that his makeup is peeling/dripping off.
* Halkegenia Online Zero Hour lost all four limbs to a heated cleaver in Laughing Coffin's death game. So she designed a set of robotic limbs she could control via her VR headset.
* hammy persona, and people expect them to play the same over-the-top role in everything.
* Henry James's style includes almost impenetrably long sentences grouped into paragraphs that often span over a page in length.

* ham gaa chaan, which roughly translates to 'your whole family dies'.
* Happy Gilmore 50 times", to which Hank replies, "I hate Adam Sandler!"
* Hades" for all eternity. The Warners scream in terror and throw the Devil in the room.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! has to be practically hand-held through most of her powers and abilities early on. Compare this to her teammate Erika Kurumi, alias Cure Marine, who was able to figure out everything on the word "go".
* Granted, this was part of a gambit to stop Nightmare Moon, but still...)
* Hearts Like Clockwork that heals the party while granting HP regen and can wield a katana.
* Gotham City Impostors nature of the original videogame it's closest to being a Type 2.
* Hammer's Slammers to have prosthetics. However, they are markedly inferior to the original parts and periodically need to be recalibrated by an external computer (a problem if living on a low-tech planet), so soldiers with prosthetics either retire or are reassigned to desk jobs.
* He finally gets to wear them in the music video for Automatonic Electronic Harmonics. Reportedly he was completely blind with them on
* Gwaihir is a descendant and vassal of Thorondor, the greatest Eagle in the First Age.
* Happy Heroes: In episode 2 of Season 2, Careful S. distracts a couple of guards by throwing magazines their way. The magazines' covers depict beautiful women which distract the guards.
* Hero Realms' strategic viewpoint, players are characters operating in a traditional fantasy city.
* Hatsune Miku has these. They include Miku getting distracted by birds and having her voice break while singing the jingle. Two of the bloopers might even be real, which is an actor sneezing as well as a man walking out of the store and interrupting the shot, but Miku is still animated in them to preserve the realism.
* Heel–Face Door-Slam: An evil character tries to change their ways, but no one will accept that they genuinely want to make amends for what they did.
* He once tells Kabuto, his underling, that he is even crueler than he is. Kabuto is a * Happy Tree Friends. His list of killing methods includes stabbing someone through the heart with a drinking straw, stabbing someone through the head with a rose, and even disemboweling someone with a christmas cookie.
* "He Stopped Loving Her Today" which is the day the main protagonist died.
* Gnalish have a first name of one or two syllables, a surname of three or four. Examples include Sar Antillea, Phigus Simenon, Qur Ontallium, Ganris Phrebington, and Gorus Gelemingar.
* heal themselves ability and they're perfectly capable of trying it again.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series: "Larfleeze" has the titular character unleash Glomulus onto Razer and Kilowog, it begins to swallow them whole. Will the heroes get out of this one? Find out in... of course they do.
* handwave the color change as being part of some prototype technology.
* Golems are flat-out immune to spells that allow spell resistance unless otherwise stated, and even then, it usually either slows it or heals/hastes it. Oh, and we can't forget epic-level golems! The Mithral Golem is only DE-HASTED by an actual slow spell, and the Adamantine Golem is straight-up immune to everything (most epic monsters have a ton of immunities on their own). Even this, though, doesn't stop creative wizards who can bypass the immunities by not targeting the golem itself. Image-creating illusions like silent image (mindless creatures don't have the reasoning capacity to disregard out of hand the river dancing gnolls that just appeared), buffing the meatshield, and simply "greater invisibility"ing past them are all accepted methods to defeat golems.
* Helter Skelter murders, is blank save for the statement "The story you are about to read will SCARE THE HELL OUT OF YOU."
* Harry's stuck a Pikachu. ...But further pan out shows Harry distinctly standing beside Pikachu.

* Greg becomes the target of Ted's ex-girlfriend's homicidal rage as Ted manages to escape, leaving Greg to fend for himself. Although he has never met her, the guilt has already been transferred.
* GoldenEye (1997) broke the FPS out of the domain of the PC enthusiast to the point that it became the biggest genre in console gaming.
* Golden Age #14 (December 1942-January 1943). The scenario is essentially the same but with Batman as one of the detectives present. Batman solves the case but doesn't disclose the solution to allow the dead detective Dana Drye's mystique to remain intact.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, Harry guesses that the Wesley's bizarre house is probably held up by magic.
* Hercules: The Animated Series, Phil and Hercules go visit Phil's mother, where she openly calls Phil's brother her favorite, going on about how he's a successful salesman, which Phil resents. However, when the brother comes to visit, he bemoans to Phil that their mother goes on about Phil's accomplishments to him. The mother admits that she did this to make sure neither would grow a big head and then proceeds to gab to both about their sister's accomplishments.
* Hark! A Vagrant give birth to Sweden. Literal giving birth and literal landmass of Sweden.
* Gone with the Wind includes a description of the prostitutes that have come pouring into Atlanta with the army, including a wry observation by the town's #1 Bad Woman that she was turned away from volunteering at the hospital because they "didn't want [her] kind of nursing".
* Gold Rush!: Played straight to varying degrees in different seasons.
* Gwain Saga: Luna, the primary antagonist of the series, is practically a well-adjusted female Tony Stark, manufacturing purpose-built robots and advanced technology. She appears to be the owner of Moon Tech, the company that manufactures most of the world's technology.
* Harold's patience is tried multiple times by his asshole coworkers, racist extreme sports enthusiasts, cops, Neil Patrick Harris, and even his best friend. It's when he finds out that
* Hilda, keep the subplot about Hilda failing to get any Sparrow Scout badges. However, while this was a valid plot point in the original graphic novel, here it contradicts the events of Chapter 7, which contains a story unique to the animated series in which Hilda, David and Frida succeed in gathering a Blue Nettle for their botany badge.
* Heroes of Horror even includes Prestige Classes with a Taint Score requirement. They are all either about embracing corruption or accepting that its destructive power is inevitable — but not going down without a fight.
* Hellsing: flipping Integra Hellsing the bird, and calling her a bitch, all while he's bleeding and burning to death.
* Guilty Gear has the Crusades, an apocalyptic conflict between humans and Gears, led by Justice. In some games you can play duels that happened back then.
* Henry Taylor, the husband of the president in the seventh season gets a finger cut off after being captured by the terrorist of the moment.
* Gonin Hitoyaku demo Kimi ga Suki quintuplet saved him from the manure pit.
* Grey Goo (2015) to actually wage war died centuries ago and all that exists now is purely academic knowledge.
* Halo: Silentium Ark". The Greater Ark was even more massive, and it was there that the Forerunners made their last stand against the Flood, before the survivors managed to sneak to the Lesser Ark and activate the rings to end the conflict.
* hard, it makes the player choose first whether you will violate justice or Shoot the Maya.
* Goosebumps: Kareen Hawlings convinces Mark that she, unlike her father, is on the good side. In reality, she’s almost as bad as he is.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters! also had a limited engagement run in Japan.
* Gyruss. The "Toccata and Fugue" (well, the toccata part, anyway) is the most well known organ piece out there, and has been appropriated in this way ever since cinemas got organs.

* High King Irminsul has strong psychic powers that are enhanced by his divine domain of Deerkind, such as telekinesis, telepathy, empathy, and precognition. However, he pales in comparison to Golden Scepter, who is not only far older than him, but also embodies Psionics and was born a "
* Guy-on-Guy Is Hot in fictional works aimed at a young female demographic.
* helmet that matters. When she takes it off to prove a point (and fails), she saves herself by putting a pickle jar on her head.
* GURPS has a time-travel supplement that describes an alternate timeline where Germany has won World War II and made the U.S. a police state under its influence after annihilating a few cities to show who's the boss.
* Go to a country where nodding means "no" and shaking your head means "yes" or vice versa. Confusion ensues.
* Happy Gilmore, the orderly in the nursing home was a complete jerk who used everyone in it, including Happy's grandmother, for slave labor. A deleted scene shows that grandma mentioned what the orderly had been doing. He tries to talk his way out of it by claiming she is senile, and Happy pretends to go along with it, transitioning into the orderly being thrown out of a second story window similar to the fate of the IRS agent earlier in the movie. Naturally, all of the residents of the nursing home are very happy to see the orderly get what he's deserved.
* Gravity Falls was evidently translated from Japanese to English by someone without spellcheck, and who doesn't know English rules of capitalization.
* Hergé. Not only did it become a highlight in his oeuvre, but his nightmares also went away afterward.
* Great Sport Relief Bake Off, neither international cricketer Michael Vaughan nor huge-forearmed bread expert Paul Hollywood could open a jam jar. Sue Perkins unceremoniously banged it on the counter, opened it, and walked off.
* Go Shogun for the good guys' mecha and teleporting base is the piece of Tunguska meteorite.
* Good Omens: he was the literal snake in the Garden of Eden and as a demon, corrupting hapless mortals is sort of his job description. He just goes about it in a very half-assed sort of way.
* Harry Potter Harry admits that he'd gotten his idea for it from "some piece of crap on the internet."
* Hearts and Hooves Day" when she realizes that she and her fellow Crusaders have turned Cheerilee and Big Mac into "a couple o' nonsense-spouting-nincompoops."
* Greek Ninja, and even Sasha to an extent, although she's not as much of a stoic character as him to start with.
* Guitar Hero has the Grim Ripper wearing an hourglass pendant while rocking out on his steel-stringed scythe.
* Heat (1926), by Isa Glenn, about American colonial agents (military and teachers) who settle in Manila.
* he declared himself "above the Most High". There is a Biblical source for this in Isaiah 14:12, but on the surface at least it was referring to the "King of Babylon". This may be a literal king, though is often taken to be a code word for earthly rulers who oppressed the nation of Israel, and traditionally it has usually been understood in terms of a spiritual, angelic ruler (that is, the Devil). The term "Lucifer" is simply how the King James Version translated "morning star".
* Granted, the Kzinti skipped straight from the bronze age to reactionless drives thanks to a high-tech race that thought they'd make good soldiers.
* Heart Catch Pretty Cure that she comes back and aids the rest of the Precures in style.
* Goku and Piccolo themselves exploit this weakness in the battle with Raditz in
* Hercules: The Animated Series used this both ways. A professor told Herc to beat an opponent with a scroll, so Herc threw it at the guy hard enough to win. At the end of the episode they run to the library and while the professor evaluates the scrolls on the basis of their weight Herc looks up the opponent's weakness.
* Grand Theft Auto IV the protagonist's method of stealing cars is to simply elbow the window, and unlock it from the inside.

* Halloween. Things like vampires, witches, and Frankenstein's monster, which are associated with Halloween, come from different sources.
* High School D×D, Kuroka demonstrates she wears nothing under her kimono by taking it off to swim in Issei's pool.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire from any of the other champions' point of view. Usually Cedric in tragedy!fics but Fleur gets her fair share too.
* Happened again when Avance tried to revive Emilia using the power of Photomirror/Soulmirror. The ritual turned Avance into the monstrous Levianima.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets has Arthur Weasley saying "I understand other Muggles are afraid of you," to Hermione's parents who are both dentists.
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger when the battles start leaving the delusion world.
* Harry Potter. Hermione was standing by the lake being bitten by midges, but unfortunately:
* #HashtagForLaughs (#NOTALLFOXES), noting that it could also be interpreted as "No Tall Foxes".
* Hero-san and Former General-san and ultimately ends up switching sides to fight alongside Rabbit against her former comrades.
* Greyhawk has the Twisted Forest, a collection of twisted stone statues which were Evil creatures petrified by the gods.
* Guilty Gear annihilate anyone she perceives as even the slightest threat to Dizzy without even a second thought... and her definition of "threat" is just a little bit too broad for Dizzy's tastes. Undine is the wing that unleashes Dizzy's version of Gamma Ray... that says it all. Oh, and her tail has a will of its own too and often eats anything within biting reach.
* Hell Teacher Nube. Even the staff and the rest of the student body are pretty much used to this sort of thing, but Nube's class gets most of the attention.
* Glee's Kurt Hummel is reportedly largely based on creator Ryan Murphy as a youth, particularly his interactions with his father
* Grupo Macias (Mexico City. Actually a Dubbing Producer, which owns several separate studios, only two of which are still active)
* he had ventured to Anthropos far back in its history, spending two years there, but coming back to Earth shortly after he left, with just enough time having passed to justify getting from his grandmother's home to the ship he and his father travel on to Canada.
* Gunfighter: The Legend of Jesse James, Cole still gets killed by Carson's lieutenant, Grizwald. Jesse later kills Grizwald, and later all of Carson's mooks, including Carson himself, and by the time Bob gets into the picture, considering everyone involved in Cole's demise are dead at this point, the only person he can pin the blame on is Jesse.
* Happens with Asuna and Negi on the way back from the school trip. "Cute couple, eh?" one spectator says. "There will be time for that later," another replies.
* Gravity Falls, with the fact that Stan regained his memory possibly being a sign that the mind-wipe wasn't entirely effective. Additionally, Bill's final words, when played in reverse, are "MY TIME HAS COME TO BURN, I INVOKE THE ANCIENT POWER THAT I MAY RETURN".
* Heracles is usually wearing the Nemean Lion skin, and even when he's not his girdle and greaves are engraved with lions.
* Hägar the Horrible, Hagar was at a party and the hostess encouraged him to take a piece of cake. Despite the fact that there was still about seven-eighths of a whole cake left, Hagar demurred, "Oh, I don't like to take the last piece"—indicating that in his mind, this trope is the normal way to take a piece of cake.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) has King Ghidorah starting a massive storm above Washington DC, and a climactic battle that destroys Fenway Park and most of Boston.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, and singes his eyebrows in the process.
* Hamlet, the priest is annoyed that Ophelia is getting full funeral rites when she might have been a suicide. In the final scene, Fortinbras orders Hamlet be given a soldier's burial as a mark of honor, and possibly also to hold Hamlet out as having died in battle.

* Good Omens, this is Subverted in a lot of interesting ways. The main couple, Aziraphale and Crowley, will reincarnate as different genders, ages, races, nationalities, and species; Crowley remembers but Aziraphale does not; and often Aziraphale will die or marry someone else before Crowley can reach him.
* Goof Troop played with it once: Pete ripped out half the note, "I'm going to get you", and was scared straight, until Goofy pointed out the other half, "...a new hedge clipper".
* Henry Crawford, meanwhile, names this among his reasons for wanting to marry Fanny. He doesn't want to change her, mind, but he (and Mary) think that her strong morals will turn him from a pleasure-seeking rake to a responsible man of character. Fanny, however, has no intention of being a
* Grizzled Youth went from a cool guy with an afro to a Puerto Rican gangster...
* Greek mythology notwithstanding) to a nymph. Furthermore, Hercules and so on are usually taken to owe their heroic power to divine inheritance. Achilles' invulnerability doesn't come from this.
* Goldie & Bear, Goldie and Bear forget about the instructions for feeding the titular bunny, Lenny, and he ends up getting a bowlful of his magical food from Gnome when he's only supposed to have half a cupful. He grows to enormous size and begins hopping throughout Fairytale Forest wreaking havoc. They eventually find some magical food to shrink him down, but by then, he and Giant have made friends and Giant wants to keep him as he is for his own pet. It's agreed they can stay together, without Lenny being shrunk.
* Heimdall is associated with sheep, specifically rams. His hearing is said to be so acute that he could hear the wool on sheep growing. His horn is depicted as a large ram horn and he is often depicted wearing a helmet with ram horns
* GURPS rules, the example given for using defaults for skills is a player who doesn't have the Lockpicking skill rolling against IQ-5, and their character running a credit card against the latch because they saw that in a movie once.
* God of War its Gods apart with the cataclysmic volcanic fury of his megalomaniacal and inconsolable rage.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy: Poltergeist Polterguy can summon a lot of them in various spots (e.g. the shower), they come with a surprising level of blood.
* Golem XIV does this. Although his lectures and seminars appear to happen in real time, actually he thinks a million times faster than the audience and can pre-generate a half-hour discourse in an eyeblink. And since he is able to model people's responses with uncanny accuracy, this works with dialogues just as well as with monologue. The editor of the sessions explicitly remarks how frustrated this makes unprepared listeners feel.
* Harry claims that he can't get back together with Ginny because he has a new girlfriend and ends up bringing Pansy Parkinson to dinner as his pretend date.
* Higher Education Is for Women: When a cast of characters graduate high school, it is more likely that the girls will to college.
* Heroes Reborn (2015), in order to turn the world against Evos and justify her measures to round them all up for experimentation.
* Great White — best known for being the band playing from the dead Rhode Island nightclub fire.
* Grimdark showed a busy subway station with a guy in the corner wearing a tattered superhero costume and holding a sign saying "Homeless Vet".
* Hearth Spirit, literally the Genius Loci of wherever they happen to be: in a nightclub you might get a spiritual bouncer or barman (depending on the kind of nightclub you are in), for instance.
* here: Sydney does speak to the camera, although whether she is speaking to the audience or to Harem is open to interpretation.
* Hellboy, where broken glass does indeed become a mess of razor-sharp skewers that impale the hero. But he's a demon, so he can more or less walk this off.
* Going Postal, Adora Belle Dearheart tells Moist Von Lipwig that she has no sense of humour due to her embarrassing name.
* High Speed Rail, a flat line is necessary for freight, but if you want a line to be both flat and straight, you will have to tunnel through every mountain and bridge over every valley - none of which is cheap.

* Happy Tree Friends. Sniffles has one at the end of "Dream Job" after suffering many horrible nightmares.
* Green-Skinned Space Babe: She's from outer space, she's green as the grass, and she turns heads when she walks by.
* Headless Prisoner has the Death Corridor. While walking through it, the game begins to stutter and stop, finally popping up a 'the game has crashed' window, except Erina's footsteps can still be heard. It's all a trick. Fortunately, the preceeding room has a sign on it that tells the player to keep walking, no matter what happens.
* Go West, Young Lady, Bill is cooking a souffle when Tex arrives to propose. She warns him not to make any loud noises. After several near misses, she accepts, which causes Tex to whoop and charge out, slamming the door, which causes the souffle to fall. Bill makes another one, only to have this one fall when Killer Pete enters the dance hall and fires several shots into the ceiling.
* Heel–Face Turn. He would later do anything in his power to help children, and orphans in particular, even temporarily returning a heel and walking into a tournament held by Tiger's Cave where all other competitors would try and murder him on the ring because otherwise he wouldn't be able to pay for the surgery to restore the eyes of a blind girl.
* Harmless Lady Disguise: A man disguises himself as a lady to avoid suspicion.
* Halo 5: Guardians, a Guardian statue, and detailed dossiers on both Blue Team and Fireteam Osiris, with the Legendary Edition adding commemorative statues of Locke and Chief.
* Gypsy Moon" (as in the film of the same name), making use of nearly every word that rhymes with 'moon.'
* Gul Dukat, the former Prefect of Bajor, is continuously scheming to retake the planet while sincerely protesting that
* He eventually grew attached to Hiccup and became fiercely protective
* He buys lunch for her at work, in the blue-collar Duckburg Bean Factory. The lunch is a candlelit gourmet meal, complete with a mariachi band for musical accompaniment.
* He also apparently has so little sense of direction that it's a wonder he ever manages to find his way back to Los Angeles after he's been away.
* Guardians of the Galaxy (2014): The Collector has servants that he does not treat well at all. This causes him problems.
* Grif. He is repeatedly shot and killed by Sarge and others, to the point of almost being a
* Henry VIII who spends four straight seasons abusing his family, murdering his rivals (and sometimes their innocent family members), and manipulating national policy to flatter his own vanity.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 1 against a group of Snatchers.
* Highlander, and the unlikeliness of their friendship, until Joe finally snaps and tells the truth about the ambush, at which point Methos tells Joe that he's known all along. When Joe demands to know why Methos drew things out over the whole day, the explanation is: "I'm easily amused."
* Grunts can evoke the trope sometimes, shrieking insults and inane babble at you as they prepare to kamikaze-charge. More often, they scream in terror as they're running away.
* "Haven't Met You Yet" is a bit of a reconstruction, it's a silly love song to his
* Guardian Fairy Michel, every episode has a fairy turned into a monster that the heroes must stop and purify.
* Granblue Fantasy later in the story when the crew first thought that they have no leaders in the first place.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. Grace is considerably more intelligent and wiser than the other maids, even though she's younger than they are.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Multiverse the Skeletor of one universe managed to avert this and conquer Eternia by combining all the mystical artifacts that failed in the past, such as the Diamond Ray of Disappearance and the Ram Stone, with his Havoc Staff until he became unbeatable.

* Hannibal, Hannibal's former nurse Barney speaks to a psychologist and brings up the time that he saw the same man go into the basement of the Baltimore hospital to interview Lecter. A little while later, the doctor came hurrying back along the hallway, trying to hide the fact that he was crying.
* Golden Sun Mind Read text indicates they did die, though whether that can be taken as canon or not is debatable.
* Good Omens (2019) limbo until the show's events make it so that they no longer need to worry about Heaven or Hell coming after their heads for being together.
* H. Beam Piper's future history, where the future "Lingua Terra" is a mix of several languages, "mostly English".
* heels of the storyline, meaning that the audience were meant to support the older, complacent wrestlers who always pushed back the younger talent.
* Gotham. However, it doesn't take him long to realize that to survive this insane town, breaking the rules is a much better way to find justice.
* Hayate the Combat Butler has a thing for making Hayate cosplay and cross-dress. A lot. Then again, she actually is otaku and hikki all-around, not just when it comes to forcing her butler to cosplay.
* Great Giving Day, Tenderheart learns how to teleport to help Great Giving Bear deliver gifts. However, Tenderheart ends up getting the hiccups, which cause him to disappear and reappear in random places.
* Going to See the Elephant: Taking a trip with no serious purpose. The reason for the trip may be a MacGuffin or may not.
* Golden Sun is used for the two humans with Scottish accents but not the dwarves. Additionally, some are historians, which is why the dwarves are in Loho, excavating the ruins there. However, they all have awesome facial hair and a love for digging — "If you live in Loho and don't dig, you just don't belong" — and the only visible female in town is the human innkeeper, so they otherwise fit this trope perfectly.
* HEPH appear to be monsters made up of the corpses of one-or-more of the crew.
* Grimm is an anti-Wesen-terrorism taskforce that includes Wesen, Grimms and former members of the Resistance against the Royals.
* Gorillaz was described in his first website biography as having a "voice like an angel and an arse like a satsuma". He is, however, undeniably dim, even taking into account the doziness from his huge painkiller intake.
* Heart of Steel, Julia decides to stay with Alistair, who started the novel as her captor, after he has spent the entire novel risking everything to protect her from her deranged ex turned even more deranged cyborg, and after he learns to be human again.
* Henry's father goes to pieces after the death of his mother and drinks himself to infirmity.
* Grrl Power has seven orbs that grant her powers. But she has to hold an orb in her hand to use it, so she can only run two powers at a time. When asked what her weakness is, she said:
* He had some limiters that were removed after a feverish dream which somehow restored his original powers. (Before that, he'd use the Terrigen Mists that powered the Inhumans to try and restore his powers. That didn't work well for most mutants who tried it, but for him, it gave him altered powers: while he could no longer run fast, he could vibrate his molecules at faster than light speeds, allowing him to time travel at will.)
* Healing Church. The Church sends him after those who discover too much.
* HeadOn, apply directly to the forehead." And its lesser-known sister ad: "Freedom from hemorrhoids, FREEdHEM hemorrhoid cream. Freedom from hemorrhoids, FREEdHEM hemorrhoid cream. Freedom from hemorrhoids, FREEdHEM hemorrhoid cream."
* Guardians of Ga'Hoole series, there are a large quantity of words made up in order to make the owls feel more like a unique culture.
* Grand Finale, Pinkie mumbles "Waiter, there's some chaos in my soup..."

* Grim Fandango almost does this. "It could save me if you have the right... cough cough The right... cough Fuel..." Of course, he doesn't stay conscious long enough to tell you exactly what fuel, but he probably didn't have any idea and figuring it out yourself makes for a nice puzzle.
* Guide Dang It! in the Free Depths to get the lasso required to reach the ledge at the starting point of the Free Depths. Beating him (which is not an easy feat, considering that there are no healing items in the entirety of the Depths and Free Depths modes) nets the player the "Champion" achievement, as well as another egg and, when that is collected, a victory screen with Dopplebugger on it congratulating the player for beating Dopplebugger.
* Handsome Tom had three lines, one spoken three times, in six episodes. In the commentary, other cast members said he was to have gotten a slightly bigger role, but he begged off, saying "I'm just here to have fun" and doesn't think he's an especially good actor.
* Grimm: The Murcielago are bat-like Wesen with the ability to emit a screech that can rupture windows, lungs, ear-drums and eyes.
* Hell's Bells", tearing her bridesmaid dress before fighting the demonized Stewart Burns when he attacks Anya.
* half and getting general knowledge about the situation often involves not making any headway or being straight up defeated until he finds what he needs to know.
* Hearts, which is a Golden Ending of sorts. It can become even better should the player also obtain the Jack of Diamonds, simultaneously subtracting ten points from their own total as an extra "screw you" to the others.
* "Hellacious Acres," by Paul Williams and Kenny Ascher, from the 1976 Barbra Streisand/Kris Kristofferson
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: After the bully popped out of nowhere with a terrifying mask on and scared Italy, he pretty much leapt into Germany's arms.
* Gore Vidal had a romance with his partner Howard Austen for 53 years, from the time the two met to Austen's death from brain cancer in 2003. How did they stick together for so long? For his part, Vidal credited their success to a deliberate lack of physical intimacy, providing the page quote.
* Gunslinger Girl's Pinocchio (particularly the manga version) cites knives to be his favorite weapon.
* Happened to a delegation sent to the Khwarezmid Empire, asking for justice after one of the Shah's governors confiscated a trade caravan's goods; the governor claimed the merchants were spies. He had no more evidence they were spies than anyone else in that day had that merchants were spies. The Shah accused the delegation of being spies, killed most of them most grotesquely, and of the two he sent back as a warning, he shaved exactly half their faces and deliberately injured their buttocks. So Shah violated diplomatic immunity -definitely understood in the day as something to be respected, less you tick off the gods- and infuriated Genghis Khan, not the nicest person on the average day. The irony is the Shah did all that as a show of * Grease. It was, though, written and produced by Barry Gibb of the Bee Gees.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers is there...only to stare as those two fall out. After sputtering for a bit, she quickly excuses herself and leaves.
* Helmet accidentally kills one of the cameramen during the climactic final duel.
* Griftlands has the player manage two decks for encounters; one for physical combat, and one for getting the upper hand in conversation.
* Gothic Metal is the most common label that people give them as of now, but even that is flawed at best.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince: After one Transfiguration class session, Harry tells Dean Thomas that he's chosen as a Gryffindor Quidditch Chaser, as a temporary replacement to Katie Bell, who's still in hospital at the time. Dean leaves in excitement, leaving Harry alone uncomfortably with Seamus, whom Harry knows beforehand wouldn't like being glossed over as a potential Quidditch member. The moment only gets more awkward when one of the canaries Hermione conjures during said Transfiguration class session leaves a dropping on Seamus' head while the birds whizz over the boys.

* Grojband, Dream-Kin's keytar fires energy blasts, and Dream-Kon's drums create earthquakes.
* Harry Potter) has a lot of magic tapping into leylines. One of those uses is that Wizarding homes have defensive wards tapping into ley lines, allowing Hermione to exploit continental drift to break into one.
* Harley Quinn (2019) lock to activate above the door. Then the Joker walks in with three goons who get the door open easily.
* Gundam X: Vultures vs. New United Nations Earth vs. Space Revolutionary Army
* Grammar Nazi: Getting upset over every little grammatical error another person makes.
* Happy Endings had Dave and Alex who, after their break up, decide to remove the tattoos of each others' names since it made dating other people awkward. They couldn't go through with the painful procedure.
* Heroes'': Sandswimmers are the worm-like maggots of giant flies and grow up to 10 meters long. They burrow beneath the surface of sandy areas (beaches and deserts). They sense their prey through vibrations and burst through the surface to attack it.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban (you can't actually change the past, only participate in it from a different perspective) and only works in half-hour increments, which isn't that useful.
* Highlander II: The Quickening. After McCloud regenerates back into his younger self, he visits an old scientist friend of his who notices something different. "Have you had a facelift?" If you look closely, he actually DID get a new haircut.
* Helen Louise "Nellie" Herron was repeatedly told by her mother that if she got a career it would ruin her chances of marriage, and even after she began a successful job as a teacher, Mrs. Herron kept trying to get her to quit. Against her mother's predictions, Nellie went on to marry a successful lawyer by the name of
* Grrl Power: On Arianna's phone, when Maxima is calling the picture is of her angrily reaching for the camera.
* Hellsing has these at the end of most volumes. Generally they involve Super Deformed versions of the Valentine brothers or Seras giving commentary on the series thus far.
* Hecate's habit of praying is never explained in the anime, making it come off as a
* Gunner Kelly the chauffeur, but he has a lucky escape while his innocent employer goes up in smoke.
* Heavy Metal. All but one (the scientist's daughter) of the women characters are naked at one point. World War II pilots are shot and turn into zombies. And it's loaded with violence, constant nudity, and a kick-ass 80s rock soundtrack. What more could fit the bill?
* Gravity Falls, and Soos adds "This is an impressive fight, though. Sure am glad I'm facing towards it."
* Hamilton's reason for supporting Jefferson in the election over Burr is explicitly this. He argues that while Jefferson's ideals run strongly against his own, he at least wants to be President because he believes in those ideals: Burr wants to be President so that he can become powerful.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City Stories sports movie featuring a "worldwide Push Up contest" held in "Tokyo, China".
* head government internet guy the fact that every test conducted thus far has shown blanket filters to be complete pants when it comes to actually achieving anything, and almost unanimous, vitriolic opposition to the idea on all fronts. This ultimately went nowhere following the 2010 election, where he was met with stiff opposition.
* Godzilla (1998)' ability altogether (unless you consider its roar being able to send cars flying a down-to-Earth allusion to it).
* Hades himself engages in exactly this kind of conversation, though it does serve a purpose: specifically, to put Harry at ease. Or maybe it was just for the sake of having someone to talk to. It's hard to tell, with some folks.
* Helen Mirren as Tanya Kibruk is an interesting case. She is (of course) English and speaks no Russian, but she is ethnically Russian on her father's side (born Helen Lydia Mironoff) and can do a flawless Russian accent.

* GO-GO Tamagotchi, the Spacy Brothers attempt to throw off the other racers by reversing an arrow sign pointing to which direction the racers should go. Himespetchi, Neenetchi, and Oyajitchi, who run a drink stand for the racers, catch on to the trick.
* Hidden Heart of Gold and I'll see to it you never see the light of day again!
* Goldilocks and the Three Bears appears to be the only sort of statement made by Twin Dolphin Filmed Entertainment.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi fluent in English and therefore don't actually play themselves, except in brief live-action segments.
* Grogar, the ancient tyrant of Tambelon from the First Age is a Fallen Deity of Dark Magic, a
* Grand Theft Auto III you buy weapons from Phil Cassidy at a certain store from each game.
* Gravitation anime when Shuichi shows up in a hideous dress and makeup, pretending to be Yuki's fiancee.
* Happy Appy: Several of the Happy Appy episodes are nothing more than Forenzic slowly murdering children in horrible ways. The protagonist manages to watch each one to the end for the sake of the investigation.
* good members of usually evil species raised by the heroes who fought their tribe or embittered survivors of their tribe's genocide.
* Greyhawk article about secret societies in the setting includes the Fratern Minniblis, a group of barbarians and fighters whose primary activities are killing wizards and destroying all magical items except weapons. (That last detail arguably puts them in the hypocritical category, since it's not clear what makes magical weapons acceptable beyond the fact that warrior classes find them useful.)
* H. G. Wells: "I mean that men like me are going on living — for the sake of the breed. I tell you, I'm grim set on living. And if I'm not mistaken, you'll show what insides you've got, too, before long. ... All these — the sort of people that lived in these houses, and all those damn little clerks that used to live down that way — they'd be no good."
* Hideo Kojima, doesn't like it due to the many changes that were made from the redesigned stages (such as the addition of a jungle area at the beginning) to the omission of the actual Metal Gear mecha.
* Good Omens, so it's one of the less dishonest examples of the trope.
* God. It'd carry over for all its other authors too, but listing all those would fill up the page.
* Hearthstone for the pack "Journey to Un'Goro" shows a creature burned by acid breath, its eyes falling onto a pile of ashes.
* Hanna-Barbera characters have not only outlived the people who created them, but also the company which created them.
* Hey Arnold!. Especially in the latter episodes like "Girl Trouble", "Egg Story", "Summer Love", "Married" and "April Fool's Day".
* Hetty Wainthropp Investigates, DCI Adams is accused of attempted rape to conceal a larger crime.
* Haley is holding a sign saying "I.O.Me: One big-ass diamond" on the cast page.
* He punched a guy to death... THEN he proceeded to punch the corpse 47 times while ranting about how mobsters are too self-absorbed to live any longer, famous boxers and making sausage. After he stops, there's just a huge splatter of blood where the poor guy's head used to be.
* Highlander has a few of these just like the films. In one, the female immortal kills the coroner before walking off. Another has a similar scene with a different immortal woman. Then there’s Richie, who was indicated to have woke up there after a motorcycle crash and had to make it to the barge in only a blanket because Mac wasn’t happy with his risk taking and wanted him to learn a lesson.
* Hellsister Trilogy succeeds in speaking the Anti-Life Equation, turning literally everyone into his brainwashed slaves, eager to serve their beloved master, until the Equation's effects are thankfully cancelled.

* Heist (2015), Vaughn lays out the plan for robbing the casino to his partners in a diner by using salt to draw out a map of the casino on the table and using condiments to mark out various points (the vault, the guard post, etc.). Dante keeps interrupting with ridiculous quibbles, such as insisting that the sugar should be the vault instead of the salt and complaining that about being the pepper.
* God of War: Ghost of Sparta: The Arms of Sparta become Deimos's tombstone.
* here and asks the receptionist if he feels degraded or oppressed (when we just heard the Fairy Godmother yell at him to get coffee and pastries). The receptionist turns the speaker tube the other way before admitting they don't even get dental.
* Heart of Steel, Julia comes up to Alistair's collarbone. Her height is not mentioned, but he is stated to be a bit over six feet tall.
* Hal/Titan, who only wanted to be a superhero to get Roxanne's attention. When she rejects him, he turns into a villain.
* Heroes Unite (though this term has yet to actually appear in-setting).
* Hercules aspect. When he is shown trying to join a game, he's told that they already have five and they want to keep it an even number.
* Gone with the Wind in real time, but the beginning is especially slow. It takes an awful lot of description about high society life on a rural plantation before the readers see any actual fighting. The book is explicitly a view of life in the South before and after the civil war from the civilian point of view. While the war starts a few chapters into the book, the hardships and realities of war start escalating as the book goes on. Life doesn't get much better after the war ends about halfway through the novel either.
* Harpo Does Something Funny: The script contains instructions for the actors to improvise.
* Harry Hokum has captured a depowered Supergirl, and instead of killing her, he brags about torture her and cut her up before ordering his men to drag her to a cell. In the way, Supergirl finds a way to get her powers back, escape and begin wrecking his base.
* Guardians of the Galaxy universe that used to operate in the far reaches of the galaxy, far away from Earth. Nowadays they stay close to earth to protect it from the horrors of outer space (and have some adventures on Earth too).
* Heroes, and the answer was, "He just got lucky. People can survive shootings all the time. It happens."
* Harlan Ellison allows the player to completely avert the grisly fate that befalls the cast in the original story. The ending sees AM truly destroyed by the protagonists, with humanity seemingly restored thanks to a conveniently-revealed cryogenics facility filled with humans who could potentially repopulate the devastated Earth.
* Gotham": When Selina accuses Bruce of lying to her, he says, "I didn't tell you the truth." Selina tells him they're the same thing.
* Greyhawk. If the spittle hits, it causes the victim to age 1-6 years.
* Haven (2020), the crust of the planet Source was shattered into floating islets by the breakdown and explosion of the colony's experimental power plant, leading ExaNova and the Apiary to abandon the planet.
* Gomer Pyle, U.S.M.C. use this series as a model for how a Marine sergeant will react to you being insubordinate or incompetent.)
* Hey Arnold!, Phil has often called Arnold his "favorite grandson", with Arnold always correcting him with "I'm your only grandson".
* Halo multiplayer game. Attempts to take out opponents with certain vehicles can lead to players missing their target and going over an edge or hitting their target and going over anyway.
* Her pactio scene hasn't been dubbed yet, but chances are that she'll sound as emotional as she looks in that part of the manga.
* He does this again in "Git Along, Little Doggies" after he says how that cow can really mooooooove.
* Hack! puts the trope through the grinder. The girl so obviously the final girl ends up being an evil bitch involved in the killings, whereas the hunky leading male is revealed to be a virgin and ends up being a final boy.

* Happy Street has a seagull named Poopy who gains speed whenever she poops on the villagers.
* Hell-Bent Fer Heaven: The dam has failed and everyone seems doomed to die in the impending flood—when Sid reveals that he wrangled a boat on his way back from the dam.
* Happy! Nick Sax has to bat Mikey's hand away to get him to stop doing it.
* Higanbana no Saku Yoru Ni has the protagonist's teacher strangling her while singing Aogeba Tōtoshi, a song sung at graduation ceremonies in Japan.
* Guild Wars has many types of giant spiders in its large bestiary, most of them about human-sized. One dungeon in the fourth chapter, Arachni's Haunt, has the party fighting their way through spider-infested caverns to face the eponymous spider-queen boss at the end. Besides fighting against spiders, Rangers can tame giant spiders to fight beside them (after a fairly difficult quest to reach the tamable ones).
* Green, brown and yellow elves mate like humans (or, at least, human scholars are reasonably sure they do). After this, however, the female elf gives birth to a coconut-sized seed, which is then planted and grows into a plant that bears a single fleshy fruit. After two years of maturation, the fruit is split open to reveal an elf child equivalent to a four-to-six-years-old human infant.
* GrimGrimoire four times in a row. The game is really about Five First Days From Hell.
* Hilarity Ensues when Michael decides to go off into the forest by himself, Bear Grylls style.
* Has Jeremy Renner constantly posing and aiming a bow while in a skintight, sleeveless outfit that shows off his ass and arms pretty much every time he moves;
* Harlequin II a.k.a. "Joker's Daughter", besides being modeled after Jill Thompson, shares the clown/ jester motif and the red-and-green, diamond-shaped patterned costume with the much more heroic Jack-in-the-Box.
* Guns N' Roses. They were a basic rock band in every sense and proud of it. Then Axl Rose started to want to make more and more long rock ballads after the huge success of "November Rain" and later "Estranged". Slash, the popular lead guitar player, disagreed with this direction among other personal issues with Axl and left the band.
* Hatred has received mediocre reviews from critics and users, but it sure sold well for such a cheap title.
* Hell's Kitchen (and to Ramsay after the service), Bobby was the name of his father, a cruel man who told Robert that he would never amount to anything, making it obvious why the name offended him. After hearing the explanation, Ramsay apologized and promised not to use that name anymore.
* Heavy Rain has Norman Jayden, an FBI agent with a Boston accent that comes in and out from line to line and a powerful addiction to blue luminescent powders, even more over the top in the end because it's hard to know what's coming from the drugs/withdrawal, his magic sunglasses from the future or the way he himself seems a bit unhinged to begin with.
* Gloryhammer follows Zargothrax through a wormhole into another reality.
* Heralds of Valdemar of history. They've also been completely melted down before being added to the throne, so there's no risk of injury if you lean back incautiously.
* Happily Ever After: The story ends, the main couple get together, everyone is happy.
* graft onto his own body, enabling him to use the Forge of Solus Prime to create the Dark Star Saber.
* Haim Zinovich, they never really sought getting hit singles in Israel or anywhere else.
* her heart has been broken by Malchior. However, since this is more a case of being extremely depressed, lonely, and wanting some sort of comfort, rather than being truly happy to see him, it's debatable whether this counts. The jump-on-and-hug-tightly physical actions are played straight.

* God of War games have the title written in beaten, golden metal with the Greek letter Omega in the background.
* Heard on a New Orleans radio station a good while back: "If I copy you, it's research. If you copy me, it's plagiarism."
* having heart attacks in the final hours as a result of being tortured earlier in the day.
* Groland (especially the earliest ones) took the form of fake news shows.
* Hidden Side has been haunted for centuries thanks to Lady Evelina a.k.a. "Lady E", who steals the souls of the townsfolk in order to obtain eternal youth.
* He spent the rest of the day in a state scientifically categorized as "high off his tits."
* Hayate the Combat Butler of the rarely-ever-mentioned Kendo Team. As seen in the school's athletic festival and marathon race, she trumps just about everyone at school with the possible exceptions of Hayate himself and her older sister Yukiji (although Yukiji is nowhere near as smart as her and Hayate eventually studies to get near her level but has yet to surpass her).
* Gods and Warriors a few years earlier. The Egyptian gods are called by their Ancient Egyptian names instead of their modern versions which are derived from Greek versions.
* Golfers in general tend not to be particularly strong, especially compared to athletes in other sports, but Jim Furyk stands out as an utter weakling. Hitting tee shots that some LPGA players could match in length, and a good 80 yards shorter than some big hitters on the PGA Tour are capable of hitting it, Furyk has ridden excellent accuracy in all facets of the game, and, when playing well, unfailing precision in his short game to a US Open victory, a 2nd place finish in the 2016 US Open at
* He has another one in "The Beach," wherein Zuko has to come to grips with why
* Gray Lensman series. Kimball Kinnison goes undercover as asteroid miner Wild Bill Williams to infiltrate a Boskonian drug ring.
* Halo, a lot of Forerunner technology incorporates hexagon shapes and symbols.
* Halo 3 shows that Brutes like human shotguns, for similar reasons. This stands in contrast to the attitude of the Elites, who hold human projectile weapons in contempt. That said, even the regular Covenant military commonly uses projectile weapons like the Needler and Carbine; it's just that those projectiles tend to be things like exploding crystal needles and radioactive compounds.
* Goofy, Goofy is mistaken for a skilled matador after unwittingly conquering a bull while touring Mexico.
* Gollum was once a Stoor hobbit named Sméagol, who lived in a community on the banks of the Anduin River. After coming into possession of the One Ring, over the course of 500 years he was twisted into a pale, emaciated creature with fangs and glowing eyes, capable of clinging to sheer surfaces like a spider.
* Grey is... is filled with side stories, sketches and extra info on the comic and characters. It'll eat up hours of your time before you even notice
* Good Omens It is specified that angel and demon wings look the same, but further description isn't given.
* Guerrilla groups will often use this to ambush security forces, usually to wear them down or steal anything valuable like their guns, ammo, food or other valuable items including vehicles that may survive an attack.
* Half-Life 1 games, working to opposing ends. Shep wants to catch Freeman, for starters, and Freeman has fragged a number of soldiers.
* Groundhog Day plays with this trope. The main character goes back and forth between enjoying and despairing over his situation. But it's a bit different from standard immortality since he's living the same day over and over which obviously has different advantages and drawbacks. He begins with hedonistic excess, falls into despair as nothing he does means anything, and finally finds peace in deciding to be the best version of himself he can.
* He freely gives good and reasonable advice to prospective youtubers on life in the video-on demand business.
* Going Cold Turkey: An image of a turkey in the snow, not an attempt at avoiding an addiction.

* he never personally suffered or even witnessed. The culture of hatred he grew up in conditioned him to just hate humans.
* Harry Potter are away from Hogwarts for much of the year, so that leaves even more gaps to fill.
* Habitable planets are scattered across the Universe just like islands in a huge unexplored archipelago. Spaceships generally need to stock up supplies and energy on board between travels (some with sufficiently advanced technology just need solar energy to reload batteries though).
* Golgo 13's story "Power to the People" sees Golgo tied up and forced to undergo a whipping by South African customs agents after discovering he's carrying a concealed submachine gun in his luggage. Oddly enough this is enough to make him laugh subtly.
* Hc Svnt Dracones with the first name uncapitalized, Pulse generally doesn't use last names but includes symbolic typography in their first names (James!!@), Spyglass names are usually anagrams, IRPF names are precluded by rank and use the first two letters of one's taxonomic family and species as surnames (i.e. Student Richard Ca'Ja would be a jackal), Progenitus favors long elaborate names derived from Greek mythology with some warping over the centuries ("U'sisous" from "Ulysses"), while TTI follows MarsCo with a preference towards Inuit, Russian, or Icelandic, with their job after the name.
* Halloween — Slasher film debuted in 1978 that inspired countless slasher movies. 10 movies since 1978. Rebooted in 2007.
* Harrison Ford has a scar on his chin from a car accident, which is occasionally referenced in films:
* Have I Mentioned I Am Gay?: The character is said to be homosexual, yet they never display any sort of romantic feeling or sexual attraction toward characters of the same sex.
* Good Omens during the Time of Troubles directly before the Apocalypse. Sure, the seas hadn't started boiling and the moon hadn't turned red a blood at that point, but things had definitely started. Besides, she actually said something along the lines of "Yes, the earth moved for everyone."
* Hermione's parents torturing Death Eaters with their knowledge of dentistry is fairly widespread in the fanfic.
* Greg the Spider, Greg leaves again, this time for good after feeling unfairly resented by Arbiter for a lie he was forced to tell.
* Heart in the Wrong Place: A human's heart is where their left lung should be.
* hasn't been mentioned much since then but he does still tend to get a little politically incorrect when trying to get under a suspect's skin.
* Heavy Traffic was killed in a plane crash two weeks before the film was released in theaters.
* Highlander Connor MacLeod has a collection of things he's picked up over his life, masquerades as an antique dealer and gets found out thanks to his handwriting on old title deeds and some inconvenient photos. MacLeod's also got many memories of times gone by; saving Rachel from Nazis, dueling drunk in 18th Century New England, and of course, his original life in 16th-century Scotland.
* Heartbreakers are con-women who make their money by seducing rich men. But the men they con are usually criminals or Jerkasses, making our "heroines" the lesser of two evils. The film also has no trouble pointing out that they are utterly horrible people though.
* , half-Cardassian Harriet was raised human and as such didn't thought that insults could be misconstrued for flirting, or punching the boy who just insulted her was basically equivalent to a betrothal. Cue poor besotted Mekor asking if she would like for their Bonding to be held in his ancestral house.
* Hannibal performed the trick perfectly on the first take with no rehearsals. Turns out Mikkelsen was a juggler in his youth which he credited for being able to pull off the trick.
* Greystone Valley offers this option to Sarah, but it's questionable as to how sincere he is.

* GURPS offers different spell lists and special powers for different types of deity served, and again, "War" is an option.
* Hard Times ends with asking whether various events each character imagines will happen to them in their future, then after each paragraph says "such things were to be". Then a fairly typical example is described in Louisa's imagination.
* Grand Theft Auto that nothing but the concept of the game remained the same.
* Hellboy series, where modern Germans are universally just regular folks, and one of the main characters is the heroic (though occasionally absent-minded) ghost-in-a-bag Johann Kraus.
* heavy with solid, blocky designs that give clear indication of their resilience and through design process. GDI Units are progressively iterated on tried and true designs, and favor a combination of hard-hitting conventional firearms with railguns and sonic weapons built on a solid, reliable base that can stand a beating.
* Greedo is noted as being a terrible shot and an idiot who will most likely get himself killed.
* Herbie Rides Again Alonzo Hawk. It's kind of a trained reaction to Hawk because she slugs him again when she learns he's Hawk's nephew. It's only later that she realizes he was utterly clueless about Hawk's exploits and was actually an honestly-decent man who eventually joins her side, staring them on the way.
* Haemonculi within a certain amount of time (usually a day) then the Haemonculi can regenerate their entire body. So even if you kill the leaders, they'll be back later. Some Haemonculi have considered death to be an interesting experience. Reserves indeed.
* Go Animate, as the punished will be attacked, have their possessions destroyed or even outright killed due to minor things.
* Gosh Dang It to Heck! version of Jesus and Golly for "god". "Golly" can essentially serve the same purpose.
* Guardians of the Galaxy to kill said Sakaaran and and all his comrades. After the battle, Yondu demands the orb containing the Power Stone, and departs.
* Godzilla (2014) into the fandom from having previously been "closet fans" before; he has been pleasantly surprised by all the unexpected people hearing about what project he is doing and telling him something along the lines of "I like Godzilla. Don't fuck it up."
* Hayashida, the teacher to the protagonist Rei, utters a bad Japanese pun involving pork cutlets (
* Gods from Outer Space was a 1970's Polish adaptation of von Däniken's theories into a series of graphic novels.
* Harem Anime, where Yoshimune makes sure every concubine has a go with her. That way no one could claim otherwise when she names one of the more malleable concubines as the father of her child.
* Gorky Park, Arkady Renko escapes a citywide manhunt by boarding a train full of 3-year contract laborers; noting that the other passengers would probably rob him and possibly kill him if he falls asleep, he drinks chifir, a super-concentrated form of tea, to stay awake the whole time.
* Goosebumps: Book #15, "You Can't Scare Me!", has the main characters call their classmate Courtney to get her into the woods, at the tree house. The girl calling claims to be Courtney's friend Denise. Courtney's response:
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, both by J.K. Rowling): Whatever touches the horn of a creature called an Erumpent is injected with a substance (pure Explodium, perhaps?) that causes it to explode.
* Hair-Trigger Temper: This character will get extremely angry for many particular provocations — or has never learned how to control their temper.
* Grace Under Pressure debuted at #1 on the Billboard Rock and Internet Album charts, though none of the four singles broke the Top 10.
* Gnosticism: the Movie capable of being read as symbolic of gnostic philosophy!
* Golden Boy ends with Kintaro riding off into the sunset, pursued by the girls he met throughout the series.
* He becomes audibly frustrated when dealing with the antics of Pastor Drom.

* Going into the legendary "Loot Cave," a cave in the Cosmodrome where, if players stood in the right spot, they could endlessly shoot Hive troops until they dropped legendary engrams, which could be decrypted by Master Rahool in the Tower. In later versions of the game, the cave leads to a pile of Hive bones that can be activated, triggering a voice that says "A million deaths is not enough for Master Rahool!"
* Gone Horribly Right when he finds out his vision is TOO clear, his family's smallest physical flaws and imperfections are magnified a thousand fold by his vision. Through his eyes, his mother, father, and sister look like disgusting, malformed mutants.
* Hero uses this as a motive to conquer China. One of the few movies where it is arguably shown as justified.
* He also wears a hood when he presents himself as “The Traveler” near the end of season 4.
* Hey Dad..!, by contrast, is set in what appears to be a realistic Australian house. Certainly, most Australian houses will have a separate lounge room (or living room) and kitchen, and many lounge rooms will have more than one comfy chair.
* Harry runs a one-man company called Metamorphosis which provides a "perfect stranger" for whatever your needs might be. A good chunk of its business involves his pretending to be the man (or woman) in the lives of clients who prefer not to tell their families that they're gay or lesbian.
* Haleo and Julelan": Daggers don't deal much damage, and before Julelan can finish killing himself, Haleo makes her second save against the poison and wakes up. The two run away together.
* Haunt The House, two of the objects the player can possess to scare people are a stuffed bear and a moose head.
* he is replaced by a Geth VI who has the same functionality as Legion, but none of Legion's memories (if Legion dies during the suicide mission, he can't upload his programs, since there are no com buoys near the Collector Base). The VI doesn't share the same understanding of organics that Legion does, and won't be on as amicable terms with quarian squadmate Tali as Legion can come to be. This makes brokering peace between the quarians and the geth impossible if Legion's dead and the VI is assisting you.
* Heroic Bastard born into the Mubai clan but was ostracized and thrown out along with his mother, who died of illness from neglect, making Yuhao swear revenge. He wasn't a natural born genius but instead stumbled upon Daydream, a 1 million-year-old Spirit Beast who wanted to help Yuhao become a god so they can both achieve immortality. In combat, Yuhao is coldly calculating and pragmatic like Tang San, but his tactics differ in that he focuses on mental attacks and the use of illusions to bewilder and crush the minds of his foes while using Absolute Ice for attack and defense.
* Gossip Girl, where Dan meets cute a girl early in the second season, by bumping into her, books falling, and you know the drill. So definitely a love interest, except that by the end of the episode they show you that the girl was hired by Chuck and he pretty much orchestrated everything from the get-go.
* Gotham City Garage, it's Harley Quinn's view that love is both needless and hurtful.
* Gundam SEED He eventually falls in love with Lacus Clyne. There's also Marrue Ramius, who is mourning her late fianc&eacute for much of the series until she gets together with Mu la Flaga near the end.
* Happens all the time, as the most inconsequential remarks and jokes often turn out to be the lynchpin of the plot (to the growing frustration of the
* .hack's stops the bell leitmotif at the intro, symbolizing that the Boss is, in fact, your former friend. The themes associated with Phases in GU also uses the same leitmotif, with the same aforementioned bells. It manages to make most of the boss fights very, very creepy.
* Goof Troop — which leads to her being allowed to take complete advantage of him.
* He also set him up for trying to cheat during the class election in "Citizen Max". Fortunately,

* Grampa vs. Sexual Inadequacy", Grandpa Simpson apologizes to Homer for horribly insulting him. The best compliment he can come up with? "I was always proud... that you weren't a short man."
* Gwain Saga was an everyman hero, but things changed fast for him pretty quickly.
* He's also surprised when he is able to say that he really wanted to see his son that day. "
* Harry Harrison. In his story "The Jupiter Plague" Harrison describes the "small tangent flames" that shoot out sideways from the end of the barrel when the weapon is fired. Apparently his 'recoilless' hand weapons work by venting the hot gasses out small holes in the sides of the end of the barrel, and angled toward the back, to counteract the recoil. Ouch! This is known as a "muzzle brake", and is in fact used in real life to reduce recoil. They're typically only used on very long-barreled rifles, not on handguns, because the vented gases can be dangerous (gas ports along the top of the barrel called "compensators" are much more common on handguns).
* Harry puts on his invisibility cloak when he sees Hermione approaching the Hogwarts Express. When she enters his compartment and asks Luna if she's seen Harry, Luna replies that he vanished after she sat down and she hasn't seen him since.
* Heathcliff & the Catillac Cats episode "Swamp Fever", Riff Raff tells Hector and Mungo about a cat disease called "catatosis", and when he lists the symptoms, they manifest in Wordsworth. The symptoms consist of a twitching right arm, a quivering lip, wildly spinning whiskers, flipping and flopping in one's sleep, barking like a dog, flapping one's arms like a bird, crying like a baby, and sleepwalking.
* God of Evil. Anathos states they can't defeat him because only a God can kill another God, thus him committing suicide would be the only option (as at this point no other God is around). He ends up being stabbed by Jadina with Danael's sword, which was forged with Danael's blood and as such counts as part of his body.
* Grings into attacking Crown City as part of his plan. Intresting variation here is that he never had her son anyway, it was just a hologram as Zorua had escaped on his own.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince. Basically a miniature Tribble dyed girly colors. Also nifflers, furry little black things with long pointy snuffly noses.
* Gory Discretion Shot he makes several cameos in the questionably-canonical animated series doesn't help matters any.
* Goldfinger. Since it's an early film, Goldfinger stays to watch the death. Bond doesn't escape — he convinces Goldfinger to keep him alive a bit longer.
* Harry Wells, the Harrison Wells from Earth-2, is worse. He is constantly acerbic, talks down to absolutely everyone, and constantly blunt. After his daughter became a superhero, he was unfailingly supportive, helped her recruit a team to help her, and worked to make her the greatest hero in the world. He was still so blunt and annoying that the team eventually voted him out, and he came back to Earth-1 since there was no where else to go.
* Hardly Working in favor of arguing about whether it's technically classifiable as a monster or just a really, really big moth.
* Grimm: they couldn't find the perp with the security cams, but they were able to identify the murder victim and the people standing closest to her so they could question them about the crime. They were also able to nudge an uncooperative witness by reminding him he'd been caught on camera.
* Hideo Kojima often includes his birthday in his works. Examples include:
* Hard-to-Light Fire: In fiction, it often takes someone a few seconds to make a fire. In reality, it can take hours if fuel must be gathered and matches/lighters are not handy.
* He also seems to do this whenever he and Naruto manage to meet up in battle. Since Naruto has a short fuse on anything involving Sasuke, it's not even a challenge to get him riled up by Kabuto's taunts.
* Hangman's Curse, the football jocks are almost all unrepentant bullies. Blake is the outlier, the result of him falling for Elisha, and realizing that, as the one black person in the film's main cast, him bullying a minority group might be a little bit of an asshole maneuver.

* Hayate the Combat Butler's first season was on a Sunday morning kids' show time slot, but the second season moved here, perhaps because of all the references and otaku nature of the show.
* Gundam. Many of the series characters are born and raised in Space Colonies and are very comfortable in zero-gravity, and will jump and bounce off of walls/ceilings/floors with practiced ease to move around. And of course, the zero-g space battles are generally fought at very high speeds. The only time slow-motion is going on is during docking operations, where precision is of the utmost concern.
* Greenfire is, and when she remembers at least they have each other, she finally realizes how much she cares for the dragon.
* Grojband: Used by the mimes Grojband get in a fight with in "Myme Disease".
* Hasbro approached Marvel to help create a backstory for their reimagining of the
* Hephaestus, son of Zeus and Hera, was so ugly he got thrown off Mt. Olympus as a baby and was crippled upon landing (or was defenestrated because he was born crippled). When the goddess of love, Aphrodite, needed a husband, all the unwed gods (including Hephaestus) were lined up for her to make her choice. Zeus chose Hephaestus for her — and she was completely and utterly
* Godzilla Raids Again but the studio responsible went bankrupt before filming started.
* Helios Airways Flight 522. An error in preparing the plane for the flight meant that the pressurisation switch had been turned off, and wasn't turned on again before the plane took off. As the plane climbed, the crew and virtually everyone else on board (sans one flight attendant who managed to reach a handheld oxygen tank) passed out from a lack of oxygen and low air pressure. The plane continued until it reached Athens, where it proceeded to fly around the city on Autopilot for almost two hours, unable to land because there was no one able to control the plane and carry out the landing sequence, which is always dealt with by the crew. Fighter pilots noticed the flight attendant attempting to control the jet, but with the attendant unable to communicate with the pilots or understand the controls, the plane kept circling the city. In a last ditch attempt, the flight attendant tried to land the plane, but the plane's fuel had ran out, and the aircraft slammed into the ground.
* Hannah decided to give her son, Samuel, one. 'Samuel' means 'God heard my prayer'.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! had Tsubomi and Erika stuck with some of their friends during a monster attack. As their friends were wondering where the Cures were, Erika attempts the weak excuse "We're gonna go now..." before they're stopped and told to stick together. It gets to the point where Tsubomi's ready to put her foot down before Yuri shows up to fix things. As for Itsuki, she was busy trying to warn everyone away.
* Guyver hanging out in jars... and one of the few instances where you actually see someone leaving one of the jars without someone having to smash said jar first.
* Good Samaritan instead of making her put up with seven years of hell while he trained her, making his death seem almost as much his fault as Cinder's.
* Hanlon's Razor: A character who often causes harm, but doesn't mean any of it deliberately.
* Guest Strips its own changing style as compared to Pete's Dimension of Pain, likely in response to fan complaints, with a character saying that it was as if there was some mysterious interloper messing with the dimension. This became the seed of the new major storyline in the MitDoP strips: an interloper was indeed messing with the dimension, turning it first more human and then even further towards something like an animated kids' show. This angel, as he turned out to be, was thus a kind of representation of the guest artist.
* Happens several times throughout the series. Culturally, a formal proposal of marriage and an oath of fealty take the same form: that of throwing your sword to the ground at a person's feet. The romantic version is especially notable with Carthoris and Thuvia, Gahan and Tara, Pan Dan Chee and Llana, and Vad Varo and Valla Dia. At one point shortly after Carter and Dejah Thoris meet, he says to her "my sword is at your feet"; she realizes he's unaware of the implications and is therefore mostly amused by this.

* Hawken, the CRT-Recruit mech you start with is the most balanced class, with the assault rifle and TOW missile giving it decent firepower at all ranges.
* Happens all the time among the gods, because well, there's not all that many gods. They're pretty much all cousins if not
* Happened again in 2017 with "Mi Gente" by Colombian artist J Balvin and French artist Willy William, which had a remix made featuring
* Grand Chase advertisement: "GRAND CHASE HAS ONE OF THE MOST "SKILL BASED" PVP SYSTEMS EVER! Wait... there's dungeons too? WHO CARES? NEW TOURNAMENT! CASH IN NOW TO BE THE BEST!!"
* Happens again in Season 3 in which all the outlaws abandon a house that has caught on fire in order to rush off and save Kate. One can only assume the villagers were not too impressed.
* having his own fun with languages. He speaks perfectly fluent Orcish, coming out with a profound "I believe it goes, '<It is not the language of the clans but the language of nature to which one has to listen.>'
* Guenevere allows the female PC to romance any combination of Arthur, Lancelot, and Morgana.
* hammer the point home, the soundtrack piece which accompanies both this scene and parts of the magic shoe shenanigans is entitled "Addicted to Magic".
* Godzilla (2014), the entire prefecture of Janjira is completely abandoned after 15 years allegedly because the area is affected by radiation, until Joe and Ford found out it isn't). Judging from the downtown skyscrapers, at least a million people lived there.
* Henry himself is an indecisive, easily dominated scaredy-cat who has no business running a military unit — but he runs a * Head Over Heels, Pythio, the nonbinary oracle, is revealed as Mopsa's ostracized mother.
* Grand Theft Auto, which would be a massive success and a game-changer in the market, making the original founders, especially Jones, forgotten.
* Gnomeo and Juliet, Benny's idea of a costume for an "ultimate stealth" mission involves dressing as a daisy and strapping a spray can that rattles as he moves to his back.
* Hakosuka - Historic Nissan Skylines (due to their box-like shapes, along with the first two syllables of the Skyline's Japanese transliteration)
* GT, the final battle against Baby is on the day before Christmas too.
* Happens to Special Agent Michelle Lee while McGee and Abbey chat about her relative "hotness" level on
* H-Game re-imagines some historical figures of the Sengoku (Warring States) period such as Uesugi Kenshin and Yamamoto Isoroku, as cute, screwable girls.
* Gundam0083 that shows how Nina and Gato first met and develops their relationship a bit before the betrayal.
* Heaven's Design Team is the engineer who makes all the designers' animal ideas a reality, and points out flaws in their designs. She also carries around a lot of tools, including a wrench.
* Happily Married. In a variant, Arnbjorn explains that his wife doesn't usually tell people that they're married because as the Matron of the Brotherhood, she doesn't want to give the appearance that she plays favorites. Doesn't in the least stop him from talking about his "beautiful wife."
* Good Is Not Soft: Kindhearted, altruistic, and heroic; focuses their righteous anger against villainy.
* Godzilla (2014) which immediately begins a trail of destruction across the Pacific.
* goes into a state of shock but by episode 25, she seems to have recovered and is intent on making Kotetsu fall for her.
* Greyhawk supplement, adventure card "Honest Bandits". Alkari Lantard fell in love with the daughter of an Urnst noble. In order to be given her hand in marriage, he had to spend a year and a day robbing people (without killing them) of ten thousand and one gold pieces worth of coins and gems.

* GUN×SWORD: A mild antagonist version; Fasalina is clearly a head and few inches taller than Michael.
* Gray is a beautiful young man, with silky silver hair, purple eyes, and long lashes. The story's inciting incident is Colton groping Gray to confirm that he's not actually a girl.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) was in play and Marlena simply learned "Eternian" but the few stories showing Eternians interacting with other Earthlings show they actually speak English.
* Green Arrows and Green Lanterns, with Oliver Queen regularly teaming up with Hal, and his successor Connor Hawke doing the same with Kyle Rayner.
* Hannah Montana, Oliver starts calling Lily "Lilypop" and Lily starts calling Oliver "Olypop".
* Haou Airen. When Di Long tries to rape Kurumi, she protests and calls him "sensei." He realizes that she still thinks of him as her P.E. teacher, and concludes that this makes it even better, because "it'll be like doing something really naughty."
* had become filthy stinking rich. Naturally, they could only stay for a few minutes and didn't have time to capitalize on their newfound wealth.
* He's pretty scarred up all over from years of chasing guys with names like "Knuckles" across rooftops, something that
* Harry Potter calling them, specifically so that you don't alert your enemies as to what you are doing.
* Haruhi Suzumiya herself is described as a World Class beauty by Kyon, who admits that if her personality would improve (
* he died from overexertion while the machine could do it all again the next day. Some versions are particularly bittersweet, since they add the detail that Henry was fighting to keep his job... and since he died, the machine replaced him anyway.
* Henley On Todd Regatta in Alice Springs, Australia, is a tongue-in-cheek subversion of conventional river regattas in which the "rowers" must carry their boats along the dried-up riverbed. Nature sometimes sabotages the event by inconsiderately filling the river with water, subverting the intended subversion.
* Here We Gooooo! in Peaches Castle, leading Yoshi to believe all castles were like that and begin randomly slamming his tongue into windows in Princess Caramel Seltzer's palace.
* her name sounds masculine (and her last name literally is). This helps derail Shelly de Killer's argument that Adrian is his client, since he states that he physically met Adrian to make the deal, but refers to her as male because he hasn't actually met her.
* Half-Life 2. As Gordon is knocked unconscious by Civil Protection...
* having wished that she never met Danny, which caused him to lose his powers granting every wish she hears as Danny imprisons her again.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, after ten years (seven in-universe), eight movies, and nearly twenty hours of series runtime. This is such a monumental moment in the film's eyes that it even grants them a moment of privacy not given to them in the novel.
* Goosebumps are all different. It's not clear why they decided to make the connection to that book in particular, except perhaps that, again, it had an easy, descriptive name.
* Guaymar is a planet perpetually shrouded in darkness. Its native sentient species are cannibalistic savages that worship a god of death and one of the only forests on the planet is also home to a deceptive, sedentary
* Higurashi: When They Cry The manga has a handprint decorating the back cover of each volume.
* He was preceded in this trope by Skurge the Executioner, who made one of the most epic
* Granger Smith had been recording independently since the late 1990s, but his first two chart entries upon signing to Broken Bow Records — the #1 "Backroad Song" from 2015 and followup "If the Boot Fits" a year later — remain his only major chart entries to date.

* half of a nearby taxi along for the ride. It nearly lands on top of Bruce, much to his alarm.
* Hildegard von Bingen is a Latin-language album with downtempo electronic influences based on the compositions of a 12th century nun. It was released by Garmarna, a folk-progressive rock band from Sweden. Yup.
* Harry S. Truman and Thomas Dewey is the king of real life election upsets.
* Headscratchers and even complaining when questions they asked got decisively answered/explained.
* GLOW is centered on female wrestling and the titillation that it provides viewers. The director calls it "porn you can watch with your kids." In the first episode, an actual cat fight breaks out between two women in the ring, and the other wrestlers can't tell if it's real or not.
* ♥ episode "The Lie". The cashier is puzzled. "I like shih-tzus," Hurley explains. "It looks like you heart them," the cashier answers.
* Graham Chapman stereotype and made a point of exhibiting the clean-cut, pipe-smoking British image of masculinity (both on- and off-screen).
* Gone Girl, normally blonde, became a brunette to play Detective Boney.
* Hair Reboot: Seemingly destroyed hair can be returned to its proper shape and volume by merely shaking it
* Hadestown has a few songs about this, but "Hey Little Songbird" and "When The Chips Are Down" probably fit the trope best.
* Greece might somewhat fit this trope, being said to be the most sexually active country around (surpassing even
* He once lit a match on his head. One might think it was fake, but knowing Jamie...
* Gossip Girl. Vanessa tries to blackmail Blair? Humiliated by episode's end. Vanessa tries to break up her and Nate? They're closer than ever by episode's end. And most of this is just the first two seasons! She's still going — at the end of Season 4 Serena's attempt to hurt her actually leads to her relationship with the prince becoming public, her being approved by his mother, and finally her getting engaged to him. Lampshaded by Dan — "Only Chuck and Blair could go to war and end up happier than when they started." Also, his attempt to attack them that episode? Ended up with Chuck and Blair having fantastic sex on a piano. Let's face it, no one can hurt Blair without helping her.
* Have Dreams, Will Travel, where protagonist Benjamin Reynolds (portrayed by a then 12-year-old Cayden Boyd) grows up, becomes a baseball player, retires from the field to become a writer in his 40s, gets old, has a wife who eventually passes away, until he's a lonely old man by himself... but the narration until the end is still done in Cayden Boyd's child voice.
* Hellsing by saying that "they're all cosmoguns that hold a million rounds" and "Anderson is four dimensional".
* Hello Kitty's Furry Tale Theater episode, "Catula", this scene played out:
* Green Lantern story established that the Guardians of the Universe corralled much of the universe's mystical energy into the Starheart.
* Harry Potter are animate and semisentient, due to some kind of special darkroom process. Considering the penchant some wizards have for tinkering, there are probably magical cameras too, but they aren't played up.
* Held Back in School: A character gets forced to re-take the school year because of how poorly they're doing.
* Harry Potter and the Nightmares of Futures Past, Harry manages to come back in time, with the idea of preventing his future from happening. However, there are still things that happen no matter what he does - Voldemort trying to steal the Philosopher's Stone, Ginny falling under the control of Tom Riddle's Diary, Sirius escaping Azkaban, Dementors posted at Hogwarts...which makes him despair that maybe he can't fight fate, and worries that everything may end as it did in his past. However, there seems to be someone that is trying to force things to happen as they did during the books.

* Grease "Kenickie" was in turn renamed "Miller" with 40th anniversary revival of the Chicago version.
* her death, literally volunteering to take Himiko's face in a death trap, albeit unknowingly.
* Halo: Reach: Some of the Spartans in Noble Team have some rather prominent shoulder pads.
* Gravity Rush, Kat's familiar is a cat, and Reven's familiar is a Raven, appropriately enough.
* Green Wing Sue White gets a dummy, which insults everybody around her and she swears blind it's got nothing to do with her even though (as Caroline points out) they can see her moving her lips. When Sue breaks into Holly's locker, the dummy is sitting on a bench and tells her "she shouldn't do that". Sue argues with it before stuffing it in the locket.
* Hermione's father overhears what he thinks is her and Harry having sex. When he bursts into her bedroom he finds her cleaning the computer screen, while Harry is playing solitaire.
* Graceling is almost entirely concerned with trying to clear up the lingering effects of his powers.
* Henry V, where Henry married Katherine, who speaks almost exclusively French. There is a cute courting scene when she keeps misusing certain words.
* Good Omens (2019): Pepper fearlessly defies both Adam (even when it becomes clear that he's got supernatural power) and then the Horseman (well, Horsewoman) of War to their faces, kicking War in the shin, then wishing her away by advocating peace at Adam's urging.
* Hank the Cowdog (the cats using a tune of "America the Beautiful" and the dogs using a tune of "My Bonnie Lies Over The Ocean").
* He Loves to Fly and He D'ohs notes that Homer is more confident while he's bowling than he is doing anything else, and advises him to wear his bowling shoes everywhere he goes. This results in Homer getting plenty of job offers, including one where he can fly in a company plane, which is Homer's passion of the week.
* Hammer's Slammers, the personal guard and military police of Colonel Alois Hammer. In later novels, the old Regiment, after conquering Nieuw Friesland, becomes this.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 8 episode 14, Big M. gets a personal raincloud twice - once when he's informed by Little M. that he's somehow not qualified to be a loser, and again when he's snubbed out of a potential new job as a sweeper.
* hedonism, is one giant drug abuse metaphor. Seriously, his/her worshipers give us too many examples to choose from.
* Harry Potter Comics is a squib and can't use wands or magic on his own. But he's highly practiced as a magical artificer, welding magic into everyday objects, including his own battle armor (kevlar-lined full plate) that makes him highly resistant to bullets, swords, AND magic attacks.
* "Hell Bent" when she states that whatever it was she just told the Doctor in a private moment is something she won't tell the Time Lords "or anybody else" (cue the glance at us).
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 when he's using his arrow to kill dozens of mutineering Ravagers.
* Gypsy Danger's pilots don't use their sword until halfway through the movie. If they had pulled it out right away, they couldn't have used the very cool tanker, and they couldn't have used the sword in midair!
* Hervé de Rinel, after a grand tour of Britannia, concludes that the island is round (and produces a map as proof). Worse than that is when he adds, to be more convincing, "I went around it twice to be sure!"
* Heroes Unite. Arsenal and B.A.S.S. wear more 'conventional' military power armour.
* God Eater is still in a race against time against a nightmare scenario of an Aragami capable of adsorbing all others forming. So far they've only been able to delay this, by having their God Eaters destroy the core cells, causing all Oracle Cells in an Aragami to lose cohesion and start from scratch.

* "Goofin' Up the Social Ladder" is about Peg trying to get into high society.
* GoldenEye when Xenia attacks him while he's having a leisurely swim at his hotel. He retrieves his gun from alongside his towel once out of the pool and sets it down when Xenia begins to kiss him. Conveniently, it disappears when Onatopp starts crushing him to death, presumably as not to ruin the tension and provide a too-easy ending to the fight.
* Goldfinger. The title villain dresses as a U.S. Army general during the assault on Fort Knox.
* Hidekaz Himaruya or his sincere appreciation for the fandom's support even during the 2011 earthquake.
* God Hand, there are two basic elite types: the "tall" model and the "fat" model. Both are much harder to send flying and have a lot more health.
* GURPS as the perk (one-point advantage) Skeptic. Any supernatural powers the character doesn't believe in get a penalty to use, and the effect is cumulative when there are multiple skeptics present.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, but he has the charisma and cohesive attitude that makes him a fan favorite to many fans of the game.
* Heist (2001): After the gold heist, Jimmy betrays the others to steal the gold and Fran.
* has connections, most notably his high-ranking father, allowing him to get away with running around play-acting at being an action movie hero.)
* Harry Potter: Harry's accidental wizardry let a snake out of its case and (in the film version) trapped Dudley in it.
* Hawk and Dove Vol 3 #1(June, 1989), first appearance) is the owner of a Dimensionally mobile Pawn Shop. The modest sign above his shop says: BARTER TRADING/Exotic Goods and Services. Inside the dimly lit pawn shop lay a potpourri of antiquities and merchandise, eccentric and cosmic in scope: A Green Lantern power battery. Demonic scrolls. Weapons from Apokolips. Ruby slippers. Vials filled with churning smoke labeled "youth" and "courage" and "love". A Legion flight ring. A lava lamp. The inventory constantly changes. None of this is for sale. Barter gives these things away— but he takes something in exchange. Another object. Information. Ten years of life. A first-born son. Never money. Barter doesn`t buy or sell— he trades.
* Good Omens (2019) by another demon and groans "It's not a problem, it's tickety-boo" before passing out.
* Here We Go Again!: The story ends with the conflict repeating or the characters going through a conflict similar to what they've already been through.
* He also notes that Janeway responds to everything with overwhelming force, and has on multiple occasions managed to resolve space-time anomalies she has no understanding of by blasting the hell out of them. In "Equinox" he suggests that this has become Star Fleet standard practice: on seeing a rift in space-time, whip out your phaser and start firing. He also at one point starts listing the past times Janeway has solved a problem by shooting it, only to realize that he was listing every episode from "Caretaker"
* Hans Zimmer. And Howard didn't even do the third movie due to Zimmer forcing Howard out, in favor of his (multiple) proteges.
* Hi-5 involves a girl dreaming about her toys coming to life while taking a nap directly after playing with him.
* Heavy Rain. There are four main characters in the story, but it's clear right from the beginning that Ethan's the one the player is supposed to empathize with the most.
* Hearts of Iron). On a side note, New England often remains loyal to the USA but is typically occupied by Canada to “protect it” from the CSA, and the Canadians can elect to annex it (along with the Panama Canal). This can potentially draw the civil war’s victor into a war with Canada/Japan as they try to take back their overseas territories.
* Have Space Suit – Will Travel, since Vega V's real name is unpronounceable to humans.

* here.) In the new series, the differences between the prop and the CG versions appearing in the titles are consistently embarrassing, with coloring, weathering and damage, and the shape and size of the lamp being visibly different between the titles and the "real" TARDIS often seen immediately before and after in the actual episode.
* Heroic Fatigue shows that stress, responsibility, and sacrifices can wear them down to the point they're unwilling/unable to continue being a hero.
* Gravity Falls: Lost Legends, Ford exits the Mystery Shack doing this, and Stan complains that he should have used the door.
* Guns Akimbo, but still have to reload-unless you upgrade them, in which case they never have to be reloaded.
* He Who Fights Monsters: Many works from the middle of the decade and onwards featured the more "idealistic" characters (to put it that way) being forced to do rueful choices just to get going.
* Gray Death Legion Saga employing over 300 people. Mostly averted in the rest of the series, which focuses primarily on the battlemech pilots which are often in a more structure command.
* Grimoire Heart's Azuma holds the Fairy Tail mages as hostages by sapping all of their magic through his uprooting of the great Tenrou Tree, all except for Erza, whom he provokes into fighting him at full power by this means. At a point during the fight, Erza briefly considers requipping into her newly-acquired Seduction Armor and seeing if a change of tactics availed her, but she ultimately decides against the notion.
* Halfhearted Henchman: Villains who slack off, have no motivation, and complain about it to their co-workers.
* Grand Theft Auto IV), as well as the late reggae singer Seeborn (birth name Terry Marshall) who voiced Jacob's mentor Real Badman.
* Golems in several editions are often strengthened by some magical attacks. For example, flesh golems are hasted by electrical attacks, and iron golems are healed by fire attacks.
* Hildegard Hamhocker bakes a pie for Tumbleweeds. Tumbleweeds refuses the pie and insults her too. She responds by throwing the pie in his face.
* Harry Potter will finally be coming within the next few years. These speculations were confirmed in 2019 when the third park was finally announced as Universal's Epic Universe.
* Google Translate Sings song "Stitches", the line "Now that I'm without your kisses" became "Now I have no clothes", resulting in a naked Malinda.
* Greed: One of my favorite deadly sins! It's all mine and I'm not going to share!
* Good Girls who gets freaked out as (having secretly gotten involved in several robberies and working for a local gang boss) she realizes just how terrible jail is going to be for her and begs to be let out.
* He's so savvy about his Evil Gloating that the fact that he'd been monologuing to Elan for an
* Hero System of multiple mimicked forms would be a prime candidate for a Variable Power Pool.
* Hamish and Dougal. Dougal answers both questions with "Not the night before a Macathalon!" Hamish then says "Well, I'm right behind you", and this time they say the punchline together.
* Happy Heroes) before he spits them all out after Happy S. hits him in a weak point.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers take their eyes off of Italy dressed as Sailor Moon. They proceeded to gobble down that eye candy with a ferocity akin to hyenas tearing down fresh prey.
* Halloween: Resurrection with a group of college students and the TV crew in the old Myers house. Throughout the night, Michael proceeds to pick them off one by one until one member of the crew (the director) and one of the college students are left.
* Godzilla vs. Kong) with sign language and is portrayed by Kaylee Hottle, who is from an all-deaf family.

* Green-Sky Trilogy, creatures that rather obviously appear to be rabbits and monkeys are respectively called "lapans" and "simas." Other creatures such as tree bears keep their recognizable names. "Pan-fruit" is probably breadfruit (if so, the Kindar have latex and insect repellent) and "tarbo root", eaten by Erdlings as a side dish with fried lapan, is possibly taro root. A lot of the special language is based on German and French words. Snyder implied in the first book that the inhabitants of the planet Green-sky are descendants of an Earth colony founded by German and French scientists (and at least one Israeli) with a large group of war orphans. She includes some credible examples of linguistic drift and coinage.
* Hell Hotel: A hotel that's scary, often due to being abandoned or run by a shady character.
* Harry Potter's Durmstrang seems to be located on one of these. The school's name is Germanic, the Headmaster is vaguely Slavic, the local superstar is a definite Bulgarian. And they won't tell you anything about the whereabouts, aside from the fact that it's very cold outside and spacious with mountains and forests. Compare with Beauxbatons and Hogwarts, which are simply French and British, respectively.
* Golden Sun sets up its own plot rather than being part of a trilogy with the first two games (the final scene ended on a cliffhanger), but a continuation has yet been announced.
* Hellboy films, the BPRD facility holds (among other things) artifacts and books relating to the occult—including Hellboy himself.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, a creepy backwoods tow-truck driver tells our heroes to make themselves at home while he fixes Harold's car:
* here is off-limits due to the fact that the owners just can't get any privacy. The owners note that things were fine until the 30th anniversary celebration of the movie, when things "just collapsed". No one would leave, trash would litter their yard, and having thousands of fans hike up to the house just for photos and the like was all too much for them.
* Hilarity Ensues. In this plot lover may try to hide in a wardrobe or under the bed, escape from the apartment or convince husband that he is not a lover.
* Grendel Werewolf who is compelled to take down what the series equates to the Devil.
* Haunted House: Before his death, Zachary Graves was a mean, rotten old man who was hated by the community for his attitude. He was also a thief who stole a magic urn that belonged to the town.
* "Highwayman" was first recorded by its writer, Jimmy Webb. Glen Campbell also recorded it before
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, but we can assume that poor Yao tried to run away when he saw Kiku pointing the sword at him. Later on we can see the scar.
* Happy Gilmore: Happy deals with a heckler by ripping off his shirt just long enough to distract him as he punches him out.
* He even held his feelings in when he was raped by Taishou in the second volume just because he didn't want to be hated. In the fifth volume, after Fukami rapes him, Fukami realizes this and that's one of the reasons that he moved away. In the seventh volume, after having a talk with a friend, Buchi admits that he's an Extreme Doormat and that he held his emotions because he didn't want to be hated by his friends.
* GURPS: Bio-Tech have their gills on their chests in order to function properly. The extensive modifications needed to let them survive underwater required making them inhuman inside and out.
* Great White Hunter to the trope: the reported attacks were all during the dry period when the lions' normal prey was scarce. During the rainy season, when herd animals were more common, they actually stopped attacking humans. These two were more recently turned into a museum exhibit (with one of them lying down, since the rug didn't include his belly). See the Movies entry for the movie based (somewhat loosely) on the event.
* Hearing the names of the planets can also lead people to think that you're talking about the
* Going back even further, the ancient Saiyan Yamoshi is stated to have been a right-hearted Saiyan in an era where those were not common.

* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life games where the protagonist dies. Your death is thus rather dramatic, with you suddenly dying at a rather young age (in your 50s or 60s). This applies to the animals as well (which is common in the series) If not taken care of properly, you will get a cutscene of them dying by falling over and you will get called out for your poorly caring for your animals.
* Golgo 13 The Professional, Duke sticks a grenade into Silver's mouth causing his head to be blown off his body in the resulting explosion.
* Grimm, Hank Griffin is the only member of the cast who remains human from the beginning of the series right to the end.
* having IID come down on Herc for other reasons unconnected to the preacher incident, allowing the black community to be satisfied that Herc got canned without making Carcetti look weak.
* Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters) and begs for mercy. Hansel says, "Nice try," and continues the attack.
* Hand Wave to improve his abilities, and when he does, he actually reclaims his title as strongest (mortal) fighter in the universe, although he still fears Beerus.
* (he teleports him to the ground to avoid killing him and ending his fun)
* He gets his wish when Sylar kills him. Most other characters are somewhat angsty about the consequences of their powers, but quickly learn to make use of them.
* Hawk Moth became a supervillain specifically to lure out the guardian of the titular
* Good Omens has Crowley do this with holy water, and use it to kill a Duke of Hell. Notably, the bucket of holy water is treated like a bomb by Crowley, as he's a demon too.
* Henry IV, Part 2: Mistress Quickly has Falstaff arrested for debt and breach of promise.
* Gnomes, though they do consume songbird eggs and also dairy products if given by others.
* Half-Life 2. "What cat?!" Though, things don't go quite as planned with it even when it is seen.
* He gets home, goes out to watch a rock gig where he flirts with DiDi and Yuki and admires Zii on stage, and then gets home to find Amber on his doorstep, asking for a bed for the night.
* Gunhouse: While the Caretaker does care for her charges (in an aloof and distant sort of way), the fact that the orphanage is constantly under attack by various bizarre monsters bent on kidnapping the children definitely pushes it into this territory.
* Haunted Legends 5: The Stone Guest by the villain has a chalk-white face with dead black eyes that have cracks radiating out from them.
* Goalies are not allowed to play the puck anywhere past centre ice (to prevent goalies from joining the rush as an extra attacker).
* Hieronymus Bosch or puns on old sayings that are now mostly forgotten.
* Guild Wars. Furthermore their figure seems to be bulkier, than the average human. That would mean, that they weight at least 650 pound (300 kg). To maintain that body weight, a similar built 6-feet man must be able to lift at least 330 pound (150 kg).
* Gottes Bodenpersonal: Eine unwahrscheinliche Liebesgeschichte ("God's ground personnel: an unlikely love story"), the first subtle sign of the budding romance between Lauren and Christian is Lauren giving Christian an enormous box of chocolates.
* Gosu, Soh Jinhong is naturally a master of swordsmanship being able to effortlessly cleave through trees and solid rock as if they were paper.
* He was one of these before he even met Jade, though. In his first conversation with Luke, he says "[the headaches] are getting more frequent. They started after you were kidnapped by the Malkuth Empire." Yeah, I'm pretty sure Luke knows that already.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets is implied to be written in rooster's blood, but it's much later revealed to be just red paint. In the movies, though, Hermione outright says it's blood.

* Go Mad from the Revelation: Seeing what you shouldn't see will force you into insanity.
* Heavy Rain whether Ethan does this to discover Shaun's location or gets it the first time around.
* Hey, Hey It's Darryl and Ozzie - has joke about someone getting upset and storming off to the other side of the album through the hole in the middle. Needless to say, this joke will not work in any other format.
* Hellboy, Abe Sapien can learn about objects or people by touching them. For example, he can touch a weapon left behind at a crime scene and see exactly how the crime happened—or he can touch a superior's hand and realize the man is dying of cancer.
* He based the Snob's appearance and voice on an audience member he saw at a Q&A panel for
* Haze, the Mantel soldiers all wear helmets and shoulderpads that glow luminous yellow, with the rest of their armor being dark grey or black. The helmets and shoulderpads also flash red when the user takes damage. In reality, those helmets would only serve as massive targets for their enemies, especially since they'd flash whenever they hit their marks.
* Haytham's father Edward was able to do this as well, likely picking up the skill in the Caribbean.
* Gundam ZZ likes to reuse the ZZ's docking sequence whenever Judau decides to dock, although they begin to cut away some parts of the sequence as the show progresses.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix" that Harold Dingle was selling was actually toxic dried doxy droppings.
* have's mother can be seen grazing (making it the most often re-used stock footage in Disney history).
* Hanna-Barbera. Boo Boo has the correct solution right from the start, but no-one listens to him until the end after visiting many different places.
* Harry's Law when a mother was convinced of killing her newborn baby, born without a brain. Harry, the mother's lawyer, took to accusing a nurse who had been attending the birth of being the real killer (noting that, for example, the baby's neck had been snapped expertly, by someone who had medical training), and the nurse broke down and confessed.
* GURPS 4th Edition, where it's played for horror. The funny thing is that it's mentioned again in Chapter 17 (Meta-Spells) on page 121, where the actual enchantments are explained as well as how they work, and again in Chapter 24 (Technological spells), where the reaction in Chapter 14 is played for laughs.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) had a villain named Evilseed, a sentient plant being who despised humanity for "gorging [them]selves on plant life" and sought to destroy them. The minions he could create were some kind of plant/dinosaur hybrid, and later a hydra-esque creature. Fortunately he gets a beatdown from his ancient foe, Moss Man; a more benevolent plant guy.
* Godannar ends with a Mimetic Beast attack, just when the entire restored force happens to all be in one spot.
* having seen a UFO - he doesn't figure out what they were doing, but both Homer and Marge scream "Don't turn on the light!" in panic as they cover themselves with the pillows.
* Hand Signals prepare to burst into a room where a changeling may be hiding.
* Halo: Halos in Space, Joe Chief leaps at the Spines Alien and gets pierced by the spines, but breaks them off in the process. Both respond with an "Ow."
* good or evil, although some of them certainly come across that way. A planet with only one Shard in residence might still find this applies if it's one of the nastier ones like Ruin or Odium.
* Harmonic Feedback, Naomi flips off Justin for telling her to stop blowing off band practice.
* Half-Life human. The devs have said that he's meant to be "something" that's pretending to be human, but not really trying all that hard at it.

* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys had a poisonous drink poured into a plant in "As Darkness Falls". As is usual, the plant instantly wilted.
* GURPS: A number of advantages, such as Doesn't Eat/Drink, Doesn't Breathe, and Doesn't Sleep, can confer this in whole or in part.
* Hasbro the movie even begins filming), the Marvel Legends Cull Obsidian figure was made with the wrong costume.
* Harry Potter as a regular tension reliever in the plot. Mrs. Weasley is not amused when on one occasion he goes so far as to use Muggle medicine to try and stitch up some serious wounds he had incurred.
* He Who Fights Monsters: A person is so obsessed with vanquishing their opposition that they become as bad as the evils they fought.
* Happy Tree Friends, particularly in the earlier shorts. The Generic Tree Friends used for crowd scenes are purple and frequently in shadow; they typically resemble bears, but can be any species.
* Gravion has the Gran Knights, who are formidable (in their own ways) in an out of titular mecha. The sequel bring us the Gran Troopers, who are the same, so much so that the leader of the first Badass Crew congratulates the second Badass Crew at one point.
* Goblins. To do so he has freed himself of all morality so he can purge any possible source of evil from the world, and has set himself on a path of genocide that is completely at odds with the paladin's code. The fact that this has not stopped him from using a paladin's spells only makes him more terrifying.
* Golden Kamuy, set in early 1900s Imperial Japan, specifically the northern island of Hokkaido.
* he brings the Empress into the present and kills her there, meaning that the Sands are created but have no way of having been involved in his past adventure. Dahaka comes to claim her body and Prince's amulet, erasing Sands of Time from timeline, but leaving the Prince himself in peace.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army six-shooter attachment. Deleted scenes reveal that the gun's gigantic cartridges have bottles drawn on the sides, with the message, "Suck on this" written on the shells.
* He's Just Not That into You sort of has this. Justin Long's character doesn't realize he loves Gigi, the girl he was teaching about men and dating, until after he turns down her advances (she had a crush on him, mistaking his kindness for interest. Subconscious attraction?).
* Grand Finale, though, so he goes and locates a Xunca superweapon that extends across multiple dimensions and pulls in several million galaxies' worth of energy.
* Gothic II who don't know of his crimes, thus attacking him or taking his possessions may have dire consequences. This may be a programmers' oversight, because the quest is given by local authorities (one of several). But since the game is a sandbox, there are several ways to deal with that.
* Heartbreak and Ice Cream: Someone being dumped has ice cream to make them feel better.
* Gungnir this. Katanas are not only the worst weapon in the game, but they can only be used by two classes, and even then only to counter, assuming you figure out how to even do so. Even the joke weapons on Nightmare difficulty are better than them.
* He never manages a vocal explanation, instead going "I'll show you!" and sucking in his stomach.
* High School D×D refuses to give his host any destructive feedback and ceases to function instead (normally followed by Issei getting the tar beat out of him conventionally).
* Harry's dramatic flip over the far more conventional Uhtred in their practise duel in the first book wins him the fight (but breaks his ankle), and is just about the only way he
* Heralds of Valdemar, in Karse, the "Son of the Sun", the leader of their theocracy, is a woman this time around, by direct divine intervention. This would normally just be a gender flip, but she is also reversing the excesses, pogroms, and corruption of the previously patriarchal theocracy. She single-handedly changed Karse from being one of the major antagonists and "evil" forces in the novels to one of the good guys.

* + high probability of tragedy for anyone unfortunate enough to be in the idiot's path.
* Hearts of Iron players to stick to real-life history. As a result, when in the hands of a sufficiently good player, Nazi Germany can overcome the odds and end up winning World War II.
* Going by their demonstration videos, the Turkish construction firm
* Happy!, cop-turned-hitman Nick Sax is being hunted by both the cops and the mafia after a job gone bad.
* Glitched Miko AU: Miko, a Glitch tech who as her job hunts down and captures Glitches is 'herself' a glitch.
* Hey Arnold! has it easier, because while her parents ignore her and it sucks, it's still better than having them obsess over her every move.
* Hellboy and replaced his bones with steel and his blood with sand or maybe cocaine by then, teeth don't seem like that big a deal, really.
* Gone Horribly Right: The solution works so well that it becomes a new problem.
* Hell-Bent for Leather: Nothing shows badassery quite like wearing tanned cow hide does.
* Hershey's 5th Avenue bar featured a "broken Peanut" who very badly wants to be part of the candy bar but feels discriminated against because they only want peanut butter. The commercials played sad violin music while the Nut rambles about his desire to be in the candy bar, and near the end usually threatens to do something drastic. "If they won't have me, I'll throw myself to the elephants!"
* Groovy, Kinda features: A beautiful female robot; a gay Neanderthal, a Neanderthal security guard, a cat girl who may be from Venus, a small six legged land Octopus named Robespierre, zeppelins, flying saucers, a discombobulationotron that can open a doorway between realities, and beatniks.
* Hentai of her former protégé, and after the ceremony is stopped, Kitami is seemingly killed, but is revealed that at the last second she manged to pu her soul into the other body. In the sequel, the coven is restarted and led by a new arrival, and in the final episode, the new leader's soul is taken to hell, while Kitami's soul takes over her body.
* Hatchet Face, a former member of the Slaughterhouse Nine, combined a power-nullifying aura around his body with super strength and toughness, giving him the advantage in close quarters with any other cape.
* Gold Coin Comics does this all the time. The most notable of which might possibly be when Lance first encountered an actual save point within his own universe.
* Green Isn't Your Color" have the same character design but with inverted color schemes.
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost) and the One-Eyed Black Cat, two demons of unknown origins, still remember the Egyptian gods of old, and it is theorized some of the bedsheet ghosts in the Mansion are millenia-old ghosts who have, by now, completely forgotten their mortal life, and may have been Neanderthals for all we know.
* Her Semblance is too useful to let go. In general, any altruism that Cinder shows is purely for her benefit.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas has Ryder, Pulaski, and Catalina, all three have extremely short tempers and unpredictable behaviors.
* Granny Classic who, beside being Scrooge's housekeeper, is also his bodyguard, and not his secretary.
* Have Space Suit – Will Travel right out of a fantasy novel, despite having less authority.
* Green Arrow" Lance designed it for him so he wouldn't catch a chill in Seattle's rainy clime. Since he had abandoned his trick and gadget arrows for broadheads instead, it was a better fit for a darker and grittier GA than the old "Robin Hood" hat from the Golden Age. Initially he still wore his domino mask underneath the hood, but after enough people explain they already knew who he was he gives up the mask and wears only the hood. Depending on the artist, it still hid the face—it was the beard that defeated the whole purpose of it all.

* Hannelore doesn't have the greatest grasp of normal social behaviour when she's introduced. Her upbringing is probably more to blame than her
* Hearthstone: Heroes of Warcraft when you hit the “Cancel” button while waiting for an opponent.
* Had she used it properly, she would’ve stayed, and Pen would’ve been eliminated instead.
* Gloomy Town and spoilered out if the title card wasn't a zombie-pony standing bold-as-brass in the middle of town, cocktail in hoof.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows. It's doubtful she's serious, but it's a telling moment for this normally driven character.
* GURPS featured a UN with quietly held tactical nuclear weapons. And the ability to tell nations to not make strategic ones.
* Hacksaw Ridge - The Battle of Okinawa, as shocking and violent as Saving Private Ryan, but in the Pacific, not in Europe.
* High Speed Rail. There is one exception: Amtrak's Northeast Corridor on the East Coast, where there are several major cities relatively close together: New York City, Philadelphia, Washington DC, and Boston, which are served by the Acela. Even then, the Acela is slower than the TGV or Shinkansen and caters to business travelers, as it has no coach class.
* Gwen Stefani's song "Rich Girl". (Partly to the tune of "If I Were A Rich Man") Not the video as much.
* Gustav Eiffel was primarily a structural engineer yet he supplied his name to the
* Happens in the US version as well. Though Michael gets over Brian eventually, and they both settle down with other people.
* Harry Potter, and numerous other so-called sweets made by the Weasley twins. Caused Dudley's tongue to continuously grow until Arthur got it under control.
* He's also not very good about indicating how much time has passed (it gives the story a mythical quality).
* Grimmjow Jeagerjaques was also a very unlucky guy. He tried transforming twice before his final battle with
* Harry Potter and the Distaff Side: "I own none of this. I do not own Harry Potter or any rights to his image or personality. I do not own the moon or the stars. I do not own human genders, other than my own personal original factory equipment. Honest. Nope, not me. I most certainly do not own the rights to a billion dollar literary work. Damn it."
* Hedda Gabler's 2004 American film adaptation moves the setting to present-day Wenatchee, WA.
* Gurren-Lagann The Satire, when Simon and Kamina use Giga Drill Break, Kamina doesn't shout FINISHING MOOOOOOOOVE! Instead, he actually shouts "LIMIIIT BREEEEEEEAK! GIGA DRILL BREEEEEEEAK!" This is despite the series trying to avoid tropes and main-stream pop-culture references.
* Have I Mentioned I Am Heterosexual Today?: A character who displays non-conforming or homoerotic behavior feels compelled to remind everyone that they're straight.
* Hello, Dolly! in which Dolly Levi asks her dead husband Ephraim for a sign that she should marry Horace Vandergelder. Shortly thereafter, Vandergelder quotes Ephraim's favorite aphorism to her.
* Gonzo and various members of The Electric Mayhem have changed their default outfits over the years, but in merchandise and illustrations, the characters are generally depicted in their original outfits.
* Hamilton is immoveable when it comes to matters of honor, making him insensitive to the needs of others.
* Hey Arnold!: In "Weighing Harold", when Harold gets teased for being overweight, he decides to get something else from the Jolly Olly Man instead of his regular 6 Mister Fudgies. The Jolly Olly Man says that diet Mister Fudgies have half the fat of regular ones. Harold orders 12 of them. Nothing about this scene (or the episode) is played for laughs.

* Godzilla, Mecha-King Ghidorah which a cyborg kaiju from the future sent to the past to fight Godzilla.
* Hello, and welcome to your first session of Freudian analysis. Now, what seems to be the
* Gunslinger Girl. To her annoyance, she gets another bear from someone else, leaving her with eight bears. "I knew I should have asked for something else."
* Henry Kuttner, Venus is an ocean world where the landmasses are dominated by uninhabitable jungle, forcing the colonists from Earth to live in underwater cities.
* Half-Life. One particular example is the Gravity Gun: it's the wet dream of every physicist, yet it looks rusted and ready to fall apart at a moment's notice.
* Hayate had a good reason for forgetting it as well. The challenge was issued because he needed to defeat her to get rid of a curse. During the festival she was named for, Nagi got kidnapped, and Hayate had to deal with running through the crowd while crossdressed to save her. She then frightened off the curse, so, tired and with no further reason to still keep the appointment, he falls asleep right after that, waking up
* Halo 2, where its effect is slightly different. There is no confetti or children — the enemy just blows up exactly like a plasma grenade. Also, the effect works on any enemy with a head, not just Grunts.
* 'had to open to give the customer change. Even the way that the National Cash Register business flourished involved an example of this: initially, they would mail letters and flyers to businesses offering their services, but the employees who were already stealing money would then steal or destroy the letters/flyers to keep the boss from knowing about it, so owner John Patterson set up demos at hotels and civic centers showing how much theft it stopped.
* Guild Wars 2 where Black Lion chest keys are rare to get by using game resources if one is unwilling to purchase them with real money within the in-game Black Lion store. All characters automatically gain a Black Lion chest key for reaching level 10, meaning that entire strategies have been designed for reaching this milestone as quickly and efficiently as possible to farm the rare keys, creating and deleting alts as they reach level 10 and outlive their usefulness.
* GuP, Kuromorimine sailor Olga gets one when a Stielhandgranate (with severely reduced non-lethal load, thankfully) thrown by Yukari explodes in her face after catching it, thinking it was a dummy.
* Happy Daze for sexist reasons (believes human women "belong" to their boyfriends and are less tough than human men).
* Halo 5: Guardians introduces the rifle-sized Hydra launcher, which can fire up to six homing micro-missiles in rapid succession.
* Hercules has a reference to one of the more well-known ones: "He could tell you what's a Grecian earn!"
* Good Apollo, I'm Burning Star IV Volume One, fall into this, due to the narrator of songs like "Welcome Home" and "The Suffering" being a mentally unstable writer who has had a falling out with is girlfriend, and blames all of his problems on her leaving him.
* Heathcliff & the Catillac Cats, Heathcliff tells Hector, Wordsworth and Mungo that if he can get himself arrested on purpose, he can help his pop bust out of jail. The other cats just shrug at his suggestion.
* Hightown: Jackie, an agent of the US Marine Fisheries Service, gets determined to solve a murder after she stumbles over a young woman's body on the beach. She's got no training in this but does a good job even so.
* Goliath? The story as generally remembered is that David was a shepherd boy bringing food to his brothers in Saul's army when he heard of Goliath's challenge to single combat, introduced himself to Saul, and volunteered to fight... except that he was already serving Saul at this point as a musician and armour bearer; Saul should have known who he was and he should have been with his king in the first place. While all this just comes from the first book of Samuel, the second book of Samuel mentions how Goliath was killed by someone called Elhanan, though some bible translations say Elhanan killed Goliath's brother.

* Happily Divorced been gay, but he doesn't reveal it to his wife until they've been married for a long time and he wants a divorce so he can live a gay life. Bonus points for being based on star Fran Drescher's real life.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City plays in the background, to fit the game's 80's vibe.
* Handling of uninsured patients: Good Doc will treat them anyway and take the loss, Bad Doc will say, "Get them stable and send them off to the state hospital."
* Gregg Mayles and Steve Mayles, the lead designer and artist of the first two
* He Never Told You: In spite of Simon murdering Tuba, mistreating Hazel, becoming insane and trying to kill Grace, and even still trying to kill her after she saved his life, Grace was still horrified and heartbroken by his death. The reason Grace seeks out The Cat to talk with her was because she is the only other person on the train that would care about his death.
* Grand Theft Auto. Some sub-bosses do carry armor, but that just adds a second or two to their lives.
* Hard Work Hardly Works or a montage rather then attempt to portray in a believable fashion the evolution of an artistic sensibility, scientific acumen or insight. Some argue that this is because actors are, usually, not painters/musicians/composers/scientists so they can't believably portray the artistic and scientific process, even if the film-makers wanted to go in that direction.
* Hero Factory storyline, which involves giant kaiju-themed beasts that, among other things, rip out streetlights and communications antennas and rampage around the city.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys called, well, "Gladiator" featured the heroes trying to free a gladiator and being forced to take part in the games as well.
* Hero Factory did away with this almost entirely with its second set-line.
* Gravity Falls: Journal 3 comments about her looking nice in an evening dress and the two of them developing a "vibe" together.
* Hero Antagonist himself (or possibly both). In any case, she turns him down. By the second season, she's so frustrated by this (and other meddling in the police department) that she quits and barely looks back.
* Gulliver's Travels being waged over which side of the bread to butter.
* hell by the end of the season. Season 4 reverses their relationship, with Aeryn doing the pursuing and Crichton avoiding her, with Noranti's help, and it's not until the last half a dozen episodes that they finally get together for real, and Crichton proposes to her at the end series finale (right before the cliffhanger ending in which they get blasted by an alien spaceship, setting up the miniseries). Whew!
* Grand Finale (but only in the US, they had aired elsewhere in the world months before).
* He Who Fights Monsters: Because of my goal for revenge, I've become just like the bastard who harassed me. Good.
* Gospel pianist Anthony Burger died of a massive heart attack while performing during a Gaither Gospel Cruise.
* Happened during the War of 1812 due to the amount of time it took for information to travel in those days; the treaty ending the war was signed in December 1814 but combat continued into the following year. Of particular note is the Battle of New Orleans, fought January 8, 1815, as the Americans' overwhelming victory both compelled the British to abide by the terms of the treaty and propelled Major General
* Golda's Balcony; a weary Golda Meir repeats the line "I could do without that music" several times.
* "Here in town you can tell he's been down for a while / But, my God, it's so beautiful when the boy smiles," - Anna Nalick, Breathe (2am)
* Grumpy Smurf has a tendency to, whenever somebody mentions anything, go "I don't like [thing]!"
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged and wondering if she could put panties on (in the original story, she was wearing them).

* Glee Reprise works when he joins the club, so the characters who are more familiar with the competition circuti (like Beth and Julian) have to explain several things to him to catch him up.
* he doesn't know anything about the supernatural at all, until season 5, that is.)
* Happy Heroes: In Season 8 episode 22, Huo Haha feeds Happy S. a magic candy cracker that turns him into a candy cracker. Not only does this strip him of his superpowers, but it also makes him susceptible to melting when in the rain or near a fire, on top of making him edible.
* Have His Carcasse, when the police officer is reluctant to try to prosecute the case, Harriet tells him that the dead man's fiancee danced with a different professional dancer, and her son did not look pleased. Since the motive for the murder was to prevent the mother's remarriage, they prosecute.
* Grand-Strategic This is a level at which there are lots of meetings with loads of politicans, civil servants, senior military figures, and diplomats. There are oodles of graphs and statistics, and the maps are world and continental ones.
* Hilariously macho supervillain who died in the most macho way possible, by riding a shark into the mouth of an active volcano, with 250 pounds of dynamite strapped to his chest.
* Hell on Earth: Demons invading the world and transforming it into a hellish wasteland
* Heroic Island, the Alicorn god of Gaming, Misdirection, and World-Building, and is based on
* Halloween Night 2, the heroine is afraid that her (previously psychotic) friend is still assaulting her. Meanwhile, her new friend on the block is getting REALLY into Halloween, including these two really realistic-looking skeletons for decoration. Needless to say, it turns out that the previously psychotic friend is harmless, her NEW friend is psychotic, and the skeletons are her dead parents. The girl alters between sly lies ("They're just Halloween decorations my parents put up") and complete obliviousness as to her parent's real state of physical health (not to mention decomposition).
* Good Colors, Evil Colors: Certain colors indicate morality and personality.
* High-School Sweethearts; James turned Poppy into a vampire to prevent her dying from cancer and now they'll be together forever. They figure out they're soulmates and so were destined to be together; Poppy also tells James she always knew she wanted to marry him someday right back when they were kids.
* Hanna-Barbera productions, circa 1982, which was unreleased in the US. It involves a guitar dragon, army skeletons, siren headed policemen and the Beast of the Apocalypse.
* Guys and Dolls, Sky and Sarah sing about their perfect loves and how unlike Sarah/Sky said love will be. A few scenes later, they start to realise their attraction to each other.
* Gugure! Kokkuri-san: Kokkuri is probably a lot older than the 25 years he'd like to claim. Kohina is an elementary student. Nevertheless, even though Kokkuri's acting as a parental substitute, they still consider each other friends.
* Hihara, when Hino treats his injuries from after he falls down realizes that he loves her in
* Harry Potter. The original series was intended for children and adolescents, but the series quickly caught on with adults as well. Different covers were created specifically to market the books toward adults. However, author JK Rowling designed the series specifically to avoid alienating fans who had grown up by the time it was completed. Each book grows progressively more mature, "growing up" with the reader.
* Heaven Seeker: A character does good deeds so that they can go to Heaven or their equivalent.
* he thwarted his own flaming-bag-of-dog-crap prank. Kelso's indignant response: "IT WAS ON FIRE!"
* Heaven's Gates & Hell's Flames was used for about half the season before the opening credits were phased out.
* Harry Potter fanfic set in a reality where a wizard's "coming of age" had a tiny chance of changing them into a magical creature featured Hermione turning into a giantess. Needless to say, sexual frustration abounded.

* Hayate the Combat Butler had one when one of the Haukou students confessed to Makimura.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix caused extreme grief in the fanbase — a popular avatar/signature saying shortly after the book's release was "JK took my love away; I am still in mourning." The fact that his death was never really explained, as it involved magic only seen in that scene, didn't help.
* Hex and the City of Hell for still feeling love, he was probably using hyperbole with that one.
* Go! Princess Pretty Cure has pigtails in both her civilian form and as Cure Twinkle.
* Graphic's most infamous practices was to have actors making a scene for the camera, their faces being replaced with those from people on the news, most notably during a notorious divorce case in 1927.
* Goldfinger also ranks as one of the most popular henchmen in the entire franchise.
* Hammer, along with several other movie horrors, in some Victorian never-never-land, not quite Germany, not quite Transylvania, not quite anywhere else between France and Russia. Hammer didn't make all this up. In the 19th Century, much of eastern Europe had German-speaking upper classes with peasants, villagers, and travelers who could be Germans, Slavs, Magyars, Turks, Jews or Romani.
* Hainish: In "The Matter of Seggri", the titular planet is this variation. There are about sixteen adult women for every adult man, and the women treat men (who are made to live apart from larger society) variously as intellectually lacking sex objects or "treasures" to be coddled and patronized. Men are seen as more emotional than women and unable to use logic and rational thinking, whereas women are seen as pragmatic and rational.
* Hetty Feather: Hetty and Jem hold a meaningful gaze to say goodbye at his wedding reception.
* Hi Honey, I'm Home, Mother stammers, "Nice to meet you, Boobs—uh, Babs."
* Guilty Pleasure: chain restaurant fans, who by and large ignore local restaurants, embracing It's Unpopular, So It Sucks.
* Gunnerkrigg Court have the strength and speed of a machine, and some are safe even against Kat's electro-disruptor. But they have a big red button on top of their heads. Yep, they have a large, highly visible, easy-to-reach off switch.
* Gunslinger Girl: Cyborg girl Triela breaks the handcuffs of Mario Bossi after she rescues him from being "taken for a ride" by his former Mafia acquaintances.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, as well as all the other Aliens, Time Travelers, and Espers out there.
* Hairspray (2007): "Ladies' Choice" and "Come So Far (Got So Far to Go)"
* Golden Lion award received some negative publicity and media fears that it would inspire ideologically-motivated shootings. This led Warner Bros. to bar journalists from attending the red carpet premiere, and police forces watched over a number of high profile theaters that screened the film's premiere for security. That constant media drama only served to increase interest among moviegoers to see what riled up the media so badly, and the movie ended up making more than $96 million on the opening weekend, making its budget back instantly and breaking some box office records for the month of October.
* Goalie Ledoux will, if given a chance, describe ice-hockey as being rumbles between armed raider-like "ice gangs".
* Heavy Rain. It's quite obvious when the player is failing too many QTEs.
* He is extremely reluctant to change out of his female clothing, and afterwards Nobby is, for reasons never adequately explained (well, except for
* Hesh doesn't believe that Phil needs the patch, calling it 'Your Bum Eye And How It Doesn't Exist'.
* Good Omens: the main female character finds out that the man she was fated to fall in love with, whom she hoped would be the proverbial "tall, dark and handsome" guy, is in fact only tall and dark. She tells herself, "Two out of three isn't bad."

* Here's something to help counterbalanace that: Tzeentch may be the ultimate manipulator, but you can take heart in one thing.
* Henry & Verlin is dedicated to Ken Ledbetter, the father of writer/director Gary Ledbetter and the author of the original short stories, who lived from 1931-1993.
* Healing Hands technique which works on pretty much anything from wounds to chronic diseases.
* Gundam 00: A Wakening of the Trailblazer against a certain fansub group that does this un-ironically).
* "Hell Bent". As such, "Hell Bent" has no clearly defined antagonist other than time itself.
* Goodfellas, and Viasat 3. The third dub was made in the early 2000s for RTL Klub and brodcast on that channel and Duna Televizió. The fourth dub was made for the home video re-release in 2005. The fifth dub was broadcast on the MGM channel.
* Globe of invulnerability stops low-level spells from affecting everything in the area. More powerful spells still work, though, but it deprives most spellcasters of their basic arsenal.
* Glen Cook novels, hybrids between the various fantasy races have become so common that the ancestry of some of them can be almost impossible to guess. Really complex blends are referred to as "uniques".
* Harry Potter, Much of Hogwarts castle is built with several secret passages that the students use to get around school quickly. The castle has so much and some are so well hidden few people know the exact locations of each one. The only three plot significant secret passages used in the books are passages leading into Hogsmeade Village:
* Halle Berry first moved to New York to start her acting career, she briefly lived in a homeless shelter.
* He broadcasts a fireplace-broadcast-esque calling out to Batman, and gets the city to forget that he went on a murder spree by paying them.
* God, No!: Signs You May Already Be an Atheist, Penn mentions that audience members have admit to him that they have heard Teller talk during the performance — but they always tell their friends and family that they didn't hear him at all, adding to the mystique of the duo's performance. It's all part of the show, in the same way people don't want to be told which tricks they're going to see.
* Hatred is all about a very angry man going on a rampage with the goal of killing as many people as possible.
* Halo 3: When Truth activates the Ark, the Control Room terminal begins to rise and change, and the holographic Halo rings down the corridor begin to light up one by one.
* Guardians of Pokémon: According to the author, Mitsumi is based on this archetype.
* Harvest Moon: Back to Nature is a grumpy and awkward young man while his love interest Mary is a sweet, shy girl.
* Hamilton has a few - a pretty natural result from trying to summarize 50 years of a very important time in history in just a two-act show:
* Herakles, martyred. Similar to Quetzalcoatl is Prometheus, Titan of knowledge and fire, who gifted humanity with the Olympian flames so that humankind is equal with the Gods, and like the others, was martyred.
* He also posted on his Instagram that Berserker and Dreadbot from the same film are also members of the
* Harry Potter, with the implicit understanding that his father is Colin's brother, Dennis.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, Sonia begins to strip. When Hayate reveals that that ploy won't work on him, she threatens to call for his female companion and claim that he had tried to rape her. She does get the stone with that, but he returns later to get it back, with Nishizawa in tow, so that she can't try that tactic again.
* Gravity Falls, even though that was the only one Dipper had at the time...

* Green Lantern: The Animated Series decides to suspend the meeting for a "coffee break" and leads Hal to the mess hall on a "scenic route", which just so happens to show Hal an experimental ship capable of faster-than-light travel that would get him to the far end of the universe in time to be of aid. When Hal question's Ganthet's intent, the Guardian reiterates they're simply taking the scenic route.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire: Tolga Safer was a close runner-up for the role of Viktor Krum (before Stanislav Ianevski was cast), so the producers created the entirely new character of Karkaroff's aide for him.
* Good Wears White: Heroic characters dress in white clothing to symbolize their goodness.
* Guyver: The titular suit has two lethal blades attached to the forearms just in front of the elbows. Guyver III has 4, a pair on each arm.
* Grim Up North is due to the increasingly life-hostile climate towards the poles.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019): When they first meet, Dr. Sam Coleman offers a handshake to Mark Russell. Mark ignores him, so Sam puts his hand down.
* Henry Stickmin Series is all about this trope. The player has to make multiple choices throughout the game.
* Gurps. Thus all that is necessary is to distinguish between home past and away past.
* Guardian columnist Glenn Greenwald was a popular figure on the left, criticizing
* Halo have a completely different rank system, with different ranks existing for different races.
* Gordon Korman schemes" books before eventually branching out. Such as:
* Glory Daze, the character Eli Feldman, a nerdy Jewish guy who desperately wants to lose his virginity, gives himself a pep talk in front of a full-length mirror wearing nothing but a pair of striped briefs.
* Heart of Gold (Cardcaptor Sakura) and create vacuums, the latter of which she uses to snuff out Syaoran's fire attacks and nearly suffocate him.
* Gundam: Reconguista in G series underwent a societal collapse after numerous wars. Records of the time are sparse, but it is known that most of the space colonies were either destroyed or left, Earth's environment was ruined, and there was a severe famine that caused even more death. Most of the current society under the rule of Capitol Tower is kept in line out of fear of ever risking such a disaster again.
* Godzilla: Awakening die in Hiroshima: they both survived and Serizawa's father joined the freshly formed Monarch, being one of the first men discovering Godzilla's existence. Ishirō followed in his father's footsteps when he died.
* Gowron, on the other hand, mastered this trope and showed it off in almost every appearance.
* Heathers: JD and Veronica are a lot less villainous than in the 1988 movie. The former, while still a killer, is far more sympathetic and troubled than trouble. The latter is less of a willing accomplice to JD's evil schemes.
* Haven throughout the years, including falsifying news stories and death certificates. Duke Crocker goes missing for six months and is presumed dead, and when he returns, he gets arrested and accused of being an imposter for a while. Audrey Parker was missing for even longer than that, but since she is a police officer, her colleagues help her with the documentation.
* Hell on Wheels featured an episode in season one where two characters duke it out in a boxing match, both representing the morale between the white and black workers.
* Green Book, or he's bi. The fact he shows no interest toward a waitress flirting with him may indicate Don is gay, not bi, though.
* h3h3productions has used her Isreali Hebrew to interpret snippets of videos.
* Gordon Lightfoot also had a minor hit with a different song called "Talking in Your Sleep," with subject matter similar to that of Gayle's.
* Heroic BSoD after Batman captured him, and the Joker left a message taunting Batman about it. Batman's greatest dream is a Gotham that doesn't need a Batman.
* Goliath and Elisa finally kiss, it's more of a Small Damn Kiss, but since (particularly older) fans had been waiting upwards of 60 episodes for this to happen, it still counts.

* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, Harry tells aunt Petunia about how Dementors attack by sucking out your soul. Petunia promptly starts shaking her son Dudley and knocking on his head, Harry wondering if she's trying to "hear" his soul rattling inside to be sure it's there.
* Guild Wars 2 features the asura, a race of highly intelligent and technologically advanced miniature beings that often build their labs and cities with hexagonal designs. Even their holographic platforms featured in dungeons and jumping puzzles elsewhere in the world are translucent, blue hexagons.
* Heroes, she was exempt from this trope). After Samuel Sullivan buried the prize trailer that HRG was held in and Claire Bennet got trapped trying to save HRG, he ended up giving up hope on living and telling her to escape without him when Claire was desperately trying to get them both out. He only managed to survive another day along with Claire due to Tracy Strauss getting them out with her water abilities at the last second.
* He Is My Master Izumi breaks a vase worth 5,000,000 yen. And that is just the beginning of her increasing debt. She simply breaks something just about every time she is cleaning up.
* Heretic, being Doom-engine-based games, naturally have telefragging, though they may or may not have the restriction mentioned above of non-boss monsters not being allowed to telefrag. There are probably few Hexen players who haven't been telefragged by Korax at least once. And careful when playing co-op! If two people enter a teleporter in quick succession or even simultaneously, a double tele frag is the usual result.
* Green Lantern story, Tom Kalmaku shares a hospital room with a local gangster, and talks very coherently in his sleep about GL's power battery and its limitations. Fortunately the gangster tips his hand in the morning, and Hal and Tom work out a scheme to convince him that Tom doesn't know Green Lantern and was just muttering dream-nonsense.
* Harry Potter to combat Voldemort without the constraints of the Ministry of Magic (and presumably before they acknowledged him as a threat).
* Gravitics, the study of gravitational fields (also containing pseudo-gravitics, the study of artificial gravitational fields). Foster got his doctorate in an even
* !HERO: The Rock Opera had a comic book adaptation released at the same time as the album.
* Harry Potter and the Breeding Darkness in order to attend school at Hogwarts, manage the Death Eaters, continue his independent studies, and spend time with Tom; Harry uses a Time Turner to live every day twice.
* Grim Prairie Tales, Arthur is recruited in a proto-Klan gang of Southerners to help them murder a black homesteader family. Unbeknownst to him, his daughter sneaks out and sees him participating in the lynching.
* GURPS, being a generic system, addresses the subject of airship technology from time to time — often in relation to alternate histories, as it turns out.
* he was stalking her across the city with the singleminded purpose of doing something.
* Halo 2, the Prophet of Truth orders the Brutes to do this to the Elites after the changing of the guard, which causes a massive civil war within the Covenant; this "Great Schism" eventually leads to the complete collapse of the Covenant.
* Grand Chase, even if you lose all of your lives and don't continue, you still get to keep your GP, EXP, and quest items (and complete quests).
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch for the NES had a genetically altered tomato as one of Gizmo's weapons.
* Guns N' Roses cover of the UK Subs song "Down on the Farm" has W. Axl Rose attempt one of the worst English accents in music history, comparable to Dick van Dyke's infamous attempts at Cockney on film.
* Hanna-Barbera Granny was able to use a fresh-baked apple pie swung around on a fishing line to guide the players around the court, and clue them in to the hoop's distance and direction. The Globetrotters' accuracy remained phenomenal.
* Green Lantern was far better received than the movie itself, even though it only lasted one season thanks to the lack of a toy line.

* Gremlins include a scene where Billy and Kate encounter Billy's coworker Gerald hiding from the gremlins in a bank vault and revealing that they killed the manager.
* GZG Japanese Powered Armor. Which existed 7 years before Warhammer 40,000.
* Happens in one episode where Peter and Lois accidentally switch bodies for a brief moment, when they try one of Stewie's inventions.
* "Here's to our neighbours. Sure, they may be black (Cleveland), handicapped (Joe), and
* He later plays an important role in tipping off Phoenix, Edgeworth, and the police to Maya’s location by meowing just as Shelly de Killer finishes one of his calls.
* Grand Finale, Twilight establishes the Council of Friendship between herself and her friends when she moves back to Canterlot to become the new ruler of Equestria, which meets up "once a moon".
* Haven an old man has the power to do this to other people when he gets upset. He accidentally sends Duke and Nathan to 1955 by looking at them. There, they find out that while fighting in World War II he sent his whole platoon several years into the future, when the war had ended.
* Halo: First Strike, the Spartan-IIs find themselves instinctively able to drive them. Covenant vehicles are at least partly reverse-engineered from Forerunner technology, the latter of which humans have a strong natural affinity with due to the Forerunners designating humanity as their "Reclaimers". Thus why the IIs find themselves able to easily pilot what's basically an off-brand version of Forerunner tech.
* Good Luck Charlie had two: The Duncans' living room couch was in the center of the set and directly faced the audience, although in many episodes a TV set can be seen facing the characters. A similar couch and TV setup is seen in the basement although it doesn't directly face the audience.
* Graham Masterton concerns Indonesian folklore, and the feared vampire/voudou spirits, the Leyaks. The Death Goddess, the Mistress of the Leyaks, takes the form of a huge distorted human figure which is made up of millions upon millions of souls she has captured and ensnared. The hero of the story thinks he sees faces he has known, billowing and writhing and screaming in her "hair", among untold others....the Death Trance of the title allows Balinese monks to physically enter the other world, at the price of possible capture by Leyaks and their mistress.
* Henry VI Part 3 as Warwick closes the deal. This enrages Warwick, and he immediately throws his lot in with Margaret and the Lancasters, prompting another round of bloody battles to prolong the War of the Roses.
* Happle Tea while reading their tarot. Despite the fact that the deck normally only contains one of that card. Their incredulous response provides the page image.
* Hekikai no AiON. His father is thirty by the time his mother is born. They later meet, and his father earns his mothers affection, and she agrees to marry him. Other than these details, little is known about them or their relationship, as they are already dead when the manga begins. They are mostly mentioned in passing by the other characters.
* Happens to Sakura not too long after her debut, she mentions that it happens frequently, but they stopped once she found Lyuri.
* Highly luminous stars burn out relatively quickly (a few tens or hundreds of millions of years rather than the ten-billion-year life of a star like Earth's sun), making them poor candidates for inhabited planets. For example, Vega (which is still considered a
* Harvey Comics series, L'il Dot, Richie Rich et al were often punished for their naughtiness at the end of their stories with a good spanking, often in a way appropriate to the character. (Dot's father using a giant dot, Wendy the Good Little Witch politely explaining to her aunts how a spanking should be carried out....)
* Hamel and Flute extraordinaire, sets off an extremely untimely earthquake.
* High Noon is a hybrid marshal/outlaw/revenge story, where the marshal has to face a band of outlaws who want revenge on him for arresting them previously.

* Harakiri plays a man who has an adult daughter and an infant grandson, at only 30.
* Gotham Knights, respectively) have this conversation. A later panel shows that they actually followed through on it.
* Heist Society, Kat is dragged back into the family business when her father is accused of stealing from a very dangerous man. The only way to keep her father and the rest of her family safe is to steal the paintings back.
* Hentai. Back when the Electronic Hentai Organization specialized in nothing but hentai the admin noticed how a lot of artwork that is not Hentai got high ratings despite having nothing that is even the slightest bit pornographic. Eventually the admin would embrace the demographic and create a Non-H folder for artwork that people like but that simply is not Hentai.
* Hellmouth, bad guys came there looking for a fight pretty frequently.
* Heroic Sacrifice to even think of calling her boss in the middle of a crisis.
* Hayato and Asuka (the children of Hiroyuki and Kojiro respectively) have grown up together with their families, in which they have an almost
* heartbroken to realize the Rose has been telling the truth is able to rescue them both, Ray knows the only way to get out from under the Rose's thumb is to confess the truth and accept his ruined career.
* He also counts on the "seniority lets you get away with more" front; when he is first admitted to the Imperial Service Academy, his father admits that "I think he will make a terrible ensign... but he might make a fine Chief of Staff one day." Miles is such an insubordinate ensign that Illyan
* He also does this in "Love At First Slice" after being fondled by Nastassia Slinky.
* having sex with her sister, and the judge throws out the agreement, at which point the prosecutors offer her twenty to life and threaten her with the death penalty if she doesn't cooperate.
* GURPS Reign of Steel ways, like Berlin's irrational obsession with humanity as a threat to nature) and would oppose it by force if they knew about it.
* Growing Pains featured an episode in which Ben, at a concert featuring his favorite singer, gets a backstage pass to the singer's dressing room... and is disgusted to find that the "wholesome" artist is having a tawdry affair.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Italy did this to Germany and Japan. Did it work? Nope.
* Halo 4: his last appearance has the player shove a grenade in his armor in a quick-time event, after which he falls off a bridge.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series tends to re-use the same constructs over and over, such as Kilowog's trusty hammer, or the sword used by both Hal Jordan and Salakk. This is because making new constructs requires that the animators model them, while re-using existing ones is about as easy as using an existing prop in a live-action production.
* Greystone Park Psychiatric Hospital, New Jersey's state mental hospital since 1876, has persistently been overcrowded and required new construction. Older buildings have not all been demolished, giving the entire campus something of a creepy atmosphere-especially considering some of the abuse scandals that took place in those buildings...
* Heretic Pride, Master Windu has the task of giving each year's class of appropriately-aged Jedi younglings the Talk, with a heavy emphasis on temptations to be avoided. The Talk itself is not depicted, only the stunned and slightly traumatized state Aloo is in afterward; Anakin, remembering the experience from when he was a youngling, congratulates her on surviving it.
* Halloween Episode, and then slyly adding "maybe!" Al eventually wins the bet, however, and she honors her end of the bargain, but takes one last jab at him before she leaves, saying she'll be back the day after he wins the lottery. (Again adding "maybe!" to the end.)
* Happens in the movie as well. Two Monican agents walk up to each other with completely blank expressions, kiss passionately, slipping a message capsule from tongue to tongue, and then walk off again as if nothing had happened.

* Hammer Horror, but had to bow out after an automobile accident, leaving cameraman Freddie Francis at the helm.
* Harley Quinn is also a rather popular pairing, with reasons ranging from similar colour palette to love of violence. In some circles, it matches Harley's canon ships of Harley/Joker and Harley/Ivy.
* Hannibal. He peeled off his own face under the influence of Lecter, plus some party drugs.
* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla under the control of the Xilliens, forcing Godzilla to fight him as well as Anguirus and Rodan.
* Gravity Falls shorts features "Lefty", half of a human suit piloted by a team of green blob creatures (they work very hard so nobody sees the non-existent right side of their body).
* Highly Visible Ninja: A ninja who isn't very good at being stealthy.
* Guilty Sparks hits zero. He's interrupted mid-sentence when his escape ship is rocked and lit up by the resultant explosion, which does, in fact, destroy Halo.
* Got Volunteered: When a character is dragooned into a dangerous job against their will.
* Hamster's Paradise of this trope happened when the ungulope, another native of Borealia, entered Nodera, their mouths, throats and stomachs were designed to safety consume saberleaf and when they fed on it they reduced its numbers and allowed the native grass and herbivores to recover.
* had a long track record of doing this in his B-52. It caught up with him in an airshow practice at Fairchild Air Force Base where he made a tight turn at low altitude. The bomber stalled out in a steep bank and the plane plowed into the ground, killing all four crewmembers. (Warning: video NSFW.)
* Heart Symbol: Subversions, deconstructions and parodies are far more common than playing it straight these days.
* Happy Tree Friends has several small animals that are for some reason vicious. Whistle, the man-eating puppy, a man-eating baby turtle, and a flock of man-eating ducks have all appeared. Plus, well, most of the cast.
* Gods of Chaos, both the most powerful Chaos-aligned mortals in their settings who will drive whole narrative campaigns by their actions.
* Hilda. Heck, during a Q&A on Instagram, Ameerah Falzon-Ojo, voice of Frida, confirmed that she's friends with Bella Ramsey, herself.
* Hero System invoke this rule repeatedly. The rules emphasize "dramatic realism" but we all know what they mean by that. Combine it with the fact they have strength tables high enough to permit a PC to lift a castle.
* Going Postal, to spy on a banker. Rather than get actual information, Vetinari wants to make the banker nervous. He (Brian, not Vetinari) rearranges some of the banker's stuff.
* Helen's Mysterious Castle: The Demonbow has this, implied by its "RequiresHP" property:
* Have Gun – Will Travel, when dealing with more disgusting individuals his bitterness can shine through.
* Halo use a seven-tiered scale to categorize civilizations based on their technology levels, ranging from basic tool-construction (7) to world-creation (1).
* Greenmantle, Hannay's disguise as a backveldt Boer is given away when Stumm's bullying, intimidation, and insults finally push him beyond this.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone filmed scenes as Peeves the Poltergeist. Test audiences didn’t like the CGI effects of the design so the character was cut and none of the scenes have ever been released.
* He established peaceful relations with tribes such as the Nambikwara and Bororo (following the motto
* Good vs. Good. Having fought kaiju of both sexes for over a decade, the transformed Godzilla Jr. has no qualms against fighting back when Princess Luna attacked him due to a misunderstanding. They wreck half the palace in an hours-long fight.
* Hayate himself, almost certainly... he's a full sixteen now, but has already evaded the yakuza, served under

* Hercules for gods and mortals with classmates like Icarus and the seer Cassandra. Hades was also a recurring villain, even though the movie didn't have Hercules meet Hades until he was an adult.
* he's evicted, and thanks to various other misfortunes (his credit cards being inexplicably declined, his superspeed shorting out from hunger, losing both his luggage and his mother) he's reduced to eating pretzels from mud puddles in less than a day and getting the same amount of scorn from passersby (one of whom dropped that pretzel in the puddle to see if he was desperate enough to eat it). It eventually turns out that it's all due to machinations from aliens who were deliberately putting him under stress.
* Gunnerkrigg Court from Spain. However, in "A Bad Start", when Kat is reeling from a particularly nasty revelation about the Court's past, it's Paz who gives her a pep talk about changing the system from within, demonstrating a degree of level-headedness that Kat desperately needed at that moment.
* gruesome detail about some disembodied half-bird monster, deemed it better not to tell anyone.
* Greek philosophical systems, such as Stoicism and Neoplatonism, had the concept of
* GO-GO Tamagotchi has gone missing. They react to the news with a disappointed "Awww..." at first before yelling "Ehhhh?!" a few seconds later.
* half-human, half-Devil Callie is compatible with her human boyfriend Mark, including her "threehole", which is less of an orifice and more of a glowing portal she can manifest on her abdomen.
* Harry white long coats as a part of their Barrier Jackets. Luka and Mia, two of Harry's gang, wear white coats similar to Harry's.
* Heel Realization to save everyone else from the spell she's cast. She is shown reunited with both her sisters in the afterlife.
* Half-Life shortly after your introduction to Alyx, where during an elevator ride she speaks of what's been going on while Gordon was away, and as the elevator comes to a stop she notes "man of few words, aren't you?".
* glitterstim, a habitual glitbiter forgets that he's talking to Wedge Antilles via hologram and thinks he's under attack.
* had Russia change from being enemies to allies of Prussia during the Seven Years' War, he also had a habit of wearing Prussian military uniforms to formal events. He blundered so badly in this that his wife, Catherine, was able to pull off a bloodless coup to oust him.
* Granny Weatherwax triggers one of these. She drops into a pit in which there is already a disgruntled bear. The bear's day, already disrupted, is completely spoilt by this, and it tries to get as far away from the enraged witch as it can. The Dwarf hunters who set the trap consider filling it in would be the ideal solution, but are soon disabused of this notion.
* Hellsinker for example sounds like it was to be used as a stage theme.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets: Made in 2002, set in 31 July 1992 – 29 May 1993.
* GURPS describes such a device, called a "growth tank", and it's the most straightforward way to grow cloned or genetically engineered humans or animals, or simply to grow babies when a natural pregnancy is impossible. Depending on the setting, growth tanks may also accelerate the fetus' gestation, though it's not always the case.
* Half-Life And he's the strong, silent type. Lampshaded by Alyx Vance.
* He nearly falls to his death trying to press the manual shutdown button, but falls into a gas vent pipe
* Heavy Rain when Blake blatantly kicks in a suspect's front door in order to search his apartment:
* Groove Squad: Upon learning fruit smoothies serve as fuel for her x-ray powers, Mac tests them by seeing through Zeke's mascot costume. He's upset for it.
* Heel–Face Turn of CarFax, but was cute and popular enough that it now promotes their used-car-information service directly.
* He returns in. Then he does it again at the end of that arc, moving to a new timeline entirely.

* Gloomverse comes to feel this way about her and the Gloom family, Seaweed, and Mooching Hobo.
* Harry himself is well acquainted with the school nurse, Madam Pomfrey, after winding up in the hospital wing multiple times per book. His friends (Ron, Hermione, and Neville) are also frequent guests there.
* Harry Potter And The Invincible Technomage: Harry experiments with building a magic-powered computer.
* her former boss, Damon Gant, as he's blackmailing her with (faked) evidence that her little sister Ema committed manslaughter.
* Hec Ramsey Isaac Parker before resigning to accept the position of deputy police chief of New Prospect.
* Green Lantern (2011) film adaptation, the "spaceship" is changed to an escape pod, which a mortally wounded Abin Sur uses to escape Oa following a tumultuous battle that cripples his ability to use his ring.
* Heavy Metal dies!"), Den turns to the camera and thinks/narrates "Sounded reasonable to me!"
* GURPS has the "Word of Kromm", referring to the rule interpretations of Sean Punch who not only designed much of the third and fourth editions but is the editor of all official material put out for the game.
* Gundam: Reconguista in G 3D short, Bellri and Aida are attacked by Mask piloting a replica of the Unicorn Gundam Unit 3 "Phenex" named "G-Phenex". Despite the G-Phenex being hundreds of years old design-wise, it's still powerful enough to give the G-Arcane and G-Self trouble.
* Heroic Sacrifice implicit in both threats, but the Doctor looks away, and Davros pounces.
* Guise's archenemy, Wager Master, may be even worse, which is kind of impressive in a terrible sort of way. Per
* Grant Morrison's Batman, Red Hood's run as an Anti-Villain is this, with him killing criminals left and right without any remorse. Unnervingly, half of Gotham citizens support his view, considering that their city is a Wretched Hive filled with the criminally insane. Thanks to this, the cartel sent the Flamingo to deal with him.
* Gojyo has two small scars under one of his eyes, from when his stepmother tried to kill him. His hair is usually long enough to hide them if he tilts his head a certain way, but he doesn't always.
* Harlem hip hop duo Cannibal Ox write frequently about the city and its problems, and their portrayal frequently enters into
* Grave Academy, and the students? Monsters; although it wasn't still confirmed whether or not it is set on our world.
* Hair of Gold, Heart of Gold: Good character with light hair vs. evil character with light hair.
* Her original outfit was an aversion, while she showed a lot of back she wore mid-thigh culottes—baggy shorts—which she'd exchanged for tighter shorts by the time
* Guy Gavriel Kay is briefly annoyed when, having been reincarnated in France for the umpteenth time since the Roman Empire, her old stash of francs that she hid the last go-round is now useless. She steals another woman's purse instead.
* "He's here, he's there, he's every-fucking-where! Roy Kent! Roy Kent!"
* Hard To Be A God is stopped by everyone dropping to their knees, watching a descending human spaceship, lights an everything.
* Hades. While you never fight him in this game, he is behind the main conflict of the tutorial chapter, releasing the Titans to attack Olympus and capture the gods.
* Hawksbill Station, takes place at the eponymous penal colony somewhere on earth in the Precambrian era. There is no supervision, nor any significant life outside the oceans, just a number of male political dissidents exiled by one-way time travel.
* Good Eats, Alton was agonizing on what to do for an avocado-themed episode (while his assistants are suggesting varieties of guacamole) when one rolls into a sink full of water. He shouts "Eureka!" when he sees that the avocado floats.

* Hidden Agenda Hero: Undeniably a hero, but the motivation for why they do it is unsure.
* Halloween Otome, the Count fills this roll, seeing as Mr. Wolf is too shy and Mr. Bandages is too cold. Possibly proven during one of their challenges, if chosen for the task.
* Haunting Ground. She does this in cutscenes in a very creepy manner and at a certain stage of insanity while chasing you.
* Grand Theft Auto V is notable for being the first game in the series to feature a playable teaser showing some plot critical events that occur nine years prior to the game's main story. The title and credits only appear once the player finishes the opening level.
* High School Musical, Zeke is surprised in the gym by Sharpay freaking out over the cookies he made for her earlier, which she finally ate and loved.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army. Princess Nuala, when first meeting Abe Sapien, thinks that his name is an obvious alias and that he's one of Nuada's spies, so she reads his mind to find out his real identity, only to learn that "Abe Sapien" is actually his name.
* Gravity Falls) in "Boss Mabel," he immediately solves the first puzzle before the host even finishes announcing it, but loses all his millions on the final, extremely easy question. The word Stan had to guess was "please," which was stated earlier in the episode to give him a "burning sensation."
* Grand Theft Auto V yet. And then they hit it off anyway. Explanation:
* Higurashi: When They Cry: -I'm sorry I'm sorry I'm sorry I'm sorry I'm sorry I'm sorry I'm sorry I'm sorry...". There's also a part where Shion screams "You're lying!" about six or seven times in a row to Mion.
* He is allowing the players to advance themselves and even allow them to interfere with the Scourge's plans all to get them stronger so he can kill the players once they reach him in Icecrown Citidel and raise them as uberpowerful generals and use them to
* Haruhi Suzumiya should be unable to support its own weight, but also that the laws of physics in general simply don't seem to apply to them.
* Helloween with "Heavy metal (is the law).", "Are You Metal?" and "Metal Invaders". Also, in perhaps one of the strangest examples, "Heavy Metal Hamsters".
* Hellboy. It appeared at first to be the latter, but the monsters are getting nastier, and Hellboy is getting increasingly desperate.
* her discredit Dumbledore without alienating the entire student body.
* Happy Heroes, Sweet S. is shown on multiple occasions to be absolutely terrible at cooking, to the point where it's been said that her cooking is essentially a biological weapon. The other heroes and Doctor H. do everything in their power to keep themselves from having to eat dinner whenever Sweet S. prepares it.
* Heavily implied with La Muerte. In the opening, she sadly tells Xibalba he's not the man she fell in love with years ago.
* Hercules want to know what happened, and after Cassandra tells them, they all beg and plead with her not to tell anyone.)
* High Fidelity: Rob, originally a man in the book, film and musical is made a woman for the series.
* He's also a subversion, in that he's thoroughly dismissed as a paranoid lunatic.
* Gone Baby Gone The author of the book the film is based on, Dennis Lehane, used to work with abused children.
* Gunnerkrigg Court dropped in, and some teacher-parent meetings apparently involved Odin.
* Gravity Falls opens up to Mabel in the middle of a recurring nightmare, where the walls are "painted red" and she's running from something unknown...
* Gundam: Reconguista in G as that and often boasts of his brilliance while he's fighting. When he's outwitted or his plans otherwise go pear-shaped, he tends to flip out that his opponents have the effontry to be as smart as he is.
* Hanayashiki no Juunintachi, rearrange his face with a hammer, stab him with a box cutter or scissors... Did we mention it's a shounen romance comedy manga about cooking?

* Green-Sky Trilogy in that the Kindar are somewhat limited by not having fire (reasonably enough, for a tree-dwelling society) and being forbidden from using metals, glass, and other material from the forest floor or underground. Their social order isn't really encouraging of innovation, either, although Genaa's father is known for developing new technology including "an efficient new sanitation system". That must have been a relief. Green-Sky also lacks warfare and crime, which leaves out many technological developments that started from making better and nastier ways to hurt and kill people.
* Hardcore Punk scene in a few cities, and thus incidents of actual violence breaking out at some shows, even though this was mostly unrelated to straightedge. It also is largely stemmed from the Earth Crisis song "Firestorm" that developed mass controversy for its lyrics that described a mass roundup and killing of drug dealers...but this was never anything but a fantasy of some young straightedgers.
* Harry Bates' story "Farewell to the Master" (which was later adapted into the movie
* Halo: Combat Evolved, the area where you first encounter the Flood is located in a swamp.
* Happens to the Old Man and Col. Tigh. Twice actually. The first time when
* Goro Majima of torture (starting with getting his eye carved out), his punishment was switched to excommunication under probation.
* Goku's father, Bardock, has this power. Which is why in the spinoff manga,
* Hey Arnold! was actually just going to a steel mill), only for... something... to happen in the last few seconds, visible only to the viewer and not to any characters in-universe, that casts doubt on a purely mundane interpretation.
* "Hawaiian Love" is derailed by a handy heal spell from the party's cleric.
* Greyhawk boxed set had no grid on them, but did come with transparent plastic overlays with a hex grid on them.
* Hamurabi can be compared to Caligula if he starves enough of his citizens.
* Green Lantern. Abin Sur, the man who gave Hal Jordan his ring, has an evil son. Sur Jr. gets his head chopped off. It's later revealed that his race (he's an alien) doesn't quite need their heads and he regrows it (slowly) and returns. Only to get shredded after killing some kids. No luck there.
* Highway Blossoms: Marina's car (in fact her brother's) died of old age in the middle of the road, thus initiating the plot. When it was stolen later, it turned out it wasn't worth much more than scrap metal it was made from.
* Gray's Ice-Make: Hammer, Ice-Make: Ice Hammer and Ice-Make: Ice Impact and Erza's Holy Hammer in
* Heiwaboke Crisis who has a full-body illustration is ridiculously large-breasted. The player characters are no exception.
* Hellboy comics, it seems like every encounter with the Lovecraftian underlings of the Ogdru Jahad ends with pyrokinetic Liz Sherman burning the Thing(s) to cinders. Subverted in the most recent case, as it's been revealed that burning Katha Hem to dust didn't quite put him to rest.
* Henry Cavill as Superman, Batman, Wonder Woman, and Darkseid, respectively.
* Hicalculator's "A Tissue of Lies". The song is about a man who witnesses a news bulletin about a catastrophe that will befall the world. In his panic, he packs all of his belongings (including his wife) into a rocket that he had created, eventually taking off into space with her. It is shown that many people of his city are evacuating as well, only to find out
* High Lifes and Low Lifes: When Shannon, who has obviously never fired a gun before, attempts to shoot an automatic rifle, the recoil causes the barrel to rise uncontrollably, so that she not only completely misses her targets but by the end of the bust she is shooting the roof. And when she fire the underbarrel grenade launcher, the recoil knocks her backwards into a hedge.
* Great Expectations by having Miss Havisham plot to transfer her soul into Estella's body.
* He doesn't actually say anything, but when Matrix dents Megabyte's chest with a punch in

* Hetalia: Axis Powers "Canada Goes Bonkers" includes this literal as well as figurative example:
* helps her friend Honoka score in the hope she will think about something other than sex afterwards. As it is, Honoka is too lust-addled to hold a conversation with.
* Guyver, he brings her to a small overlook where she awakens to see him, in Guyver form, and almost instantly manages to deduce who's behind that odd alien mask. (and bear in mind in Guyver form the guy is at least seven feet tall, not counting the horn on the head of the armor from all we can see) He stands up and looks into the sunset, then turns around, and walks off not saying a thing to her as she desperately screams/pleads for him to come back. The epilogue says Mizuki went back to school and was fine after that, but Sho himself is never seen again. Presumably he and Guyver III continue their war against Chronos in secret but nobody knows it.
* Guardians of the Galaxy best friend, by reminding them of the families and homes they lost to Ronan before heading off to the final battle.
* Higurashi: When They Cry go screamingly insane long before the series proper even begins.
* Hans attempts to murder a wounded soldier in revenge for cutting off his arm. Fortunately, Sakura talks him down.
* Hilda from the Golden Deer is surprisingly crafty and observant of her surroundings, and often manipulates people to get out of work. Pre-
* Hair-Raising Hare: Rabbits or hares depicted as violent and frightening vs. rabbits or hares depicted as cute and heroic.
* Grendel told from the monster's point of view. In this version, Grendel is a sympathetic antihero who explores a number of philosophical topics through his battle against the Danes.
* He has a wife, you know? You know what she's called? Incontinentia. Incontinentia Buttocks.
* He does have contacts. In the episode he infiltrates the Goauld Peace Conference, he's seen putting them in. That said, it's never actually said that he's
* Grekim introduce themselves by wiping out three human colonies. They then engage and shatter the largest and most advanced fleet humanity has ever assembled... and then turn on each other.
* Gravity Falls, with Dipper excitedly pointing out a footprint about half as long as he is to his sister and great uncle, only for the shot to pan out and show the three of them all standing inside another footprint about a hundred times the size.
* Goblins offers incentive comics involving a goblin named Tempts Fate in a "please donate or he'll die" donation scheme.
* Harry reasons out his entire family tree, concluding that he's descended from a legendary trio of wizards. Hermione and Ron both think he's losing it. Granted, he was over-eager in his explanation, which was sort of hard to follow. But it was a sound argument nonetheless.
* Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five with tracks like "The Message" and "White Lines."
* Gravity Falls season 1 finale "Gideon Rises": Dipper wakes up and starts to talk about the "nightmare" he had where Gideon kicked them out of the Mystery Shack, forcing them to move in with Soos's grandmother. Pan out to reveal Soos tucked in next to him on a pull-out couch:
* Godzilla skeletonized him, and pretty much every living thing in the general area.
* Harry Potter. Their shenanigans come in really handy in driving the resident tyrant mad in book five and they eventually open a highly successful joke shop.
* Godzilla Unleashed: Commander Tagaki wants to try and work together with the Kaiju to save the earth from the aliens.
* Hey Arnold!: In "Big Bob's Crisis", Bob keels over after eating a load of ribs believing he's having a heart attack. When he wakes up in the hospital, he find out it was just gas but he still believes his "near-death experience" was a sign and he spends the rest of the episode trying to be healthier and more relaxed.

* High School Musical was meant to be a working title, but the title was still being used in post-production and it stuck.
* Gugure Kokkuri San is about a human girl who lives with a fox, a dog, and a tanuki spirit and goes to a normal school with an alien who insists that he is human. The girl also happens to be a self-proclaimed doll and cup noodle addict whose house is filled with weird supernatural objects and has more common ground with supernatural spirits than other humans.
* Gratuitous English via Adam Buxton, despite ostensibly retaining the English lyrics of the Eddie Cochran original.
* Guggenheimer Wast Witter in 1999. Belgians were outraged at what they saw as preventive censorship with no chance for the author to really defend himself; they circumvented the ban by importing the book from the Netherlands. In 2011, former Belgian Prime Minister and then-EU governor Herman van Rompuy introduced an EU-wide law preventing this sort of judicial order, which led to the ban being overturned.
* Gru's Minions are seen doing this to amuse themselves in one scene from * Heaven's River). They have autofactories that can produce pretty much anything inorganic using 3D printing and the resources of an entire Star system. Bob, who's been out of it for a while, wonders how the other Bobs are paying the humans for certain services. Will explains that all the human worlds have adopted the PAM, portion of autofactory minutes, as a universal currency. The value of a PAM directly depends on the number of autofactories in existence, which discourages the construction of new autofactories, as it would lead to PAM devaluation. Basically, the humans have chosen to turn what is essentially this trope and retain a capitalist economy by enforcing scarcity.
* Guybrush is famously capable of holding his breath for a very long time.
* Hammie is born with "Dumbo" ears and a full set of hair and Zoe and Wren were always seen with three hairs on their head before becoming toddlers.
* , Harry's penis is given a nickname by Luna Lovegood: "Pokey the Impregnator."
* Gunsmith Cats, Rally and Minnie May get into an argument, after which Minnie May explodes Rally's car. After Rally takes a cab home, she is held up by muggers. Minnie May shows up and the two drive the muggers away. They go on to make amends despite the fact that Minnie May exploded Rally's very expensive (about 150,000 bucks) car.
* Highlander have used axes instead of swords, most notably Kanwulf ("Homeland"),Silas ("Comes A Horsemen"/"Revelations 6:8"),and Caleb Cole ("Mountain Men)".
* Happy Tree Friends is not incapable of speech, but he chooses not to out of showmanship. This includes when calling 911 in "Who's to Flame?", with predictable results.
* Hayao Miyazaki is noticeably very different from his usual work. While the film isn't without its fantastical elements, the film is much more grounded and realistic than his usual input, which while grounded, are usually very fantastical in nature and unlike previous films, which usually center around entirely fictional characters, the film is instead an fictional biography film about the real life airplane designer, Jiro Horikoshi.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, Umbridge asks Hagrid how he came to be covered in blood and bruises. He responds, "I tripped."
* Greg Sestero wasn't originally planned to play Mark and simply worked behind the scenes as Tommy's
* High School D×D due to excising a large amount of important story and character development in favour of original story content not included in the novels. In response to this, the fourth season chose to completely ignore the original stories from the third season and more strictly adapt the source material.
* Harry Potter book, he tried to make Draco puke out slugs after he insulted Hermione, but it backfired on Ron.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn, where pretty much everyone who has a character portrait will have a prominent role in the lore at the very least. Averted with one member of the Belinsk band, Vande, who gets a portrait despite being no more important than the rest of the musicians story-wise.

* Hey Arnold!: Helga Pataki is often a victim of this in certain episodes when she encounters birds, such as in "Arnold's Hat", which, at one point, she narrowly avoids a flock of flying pigeons doing their business on her, only for the last pigeon that flies above her to nail her.
* Goldie & Bear is another show that uses fairy tales to teach its morals.
* Hellsister Trilogy gets destroyed by getting doused with anti-matter fire, one of the very few things she isn't invulnerable to.
* Hard Revenge, Milly is generally serious, but has a moment where a mook slips in a puddle of blood and falls over when chasing Milly.
* Headache? Stiff neck? Fever? Dislike of bright lights? Get to A&E NOW. People - at least in the UK - are taught this as the symptoms can be sign of meningitis, although they may also be the person having a very bad day. Most TV using meningitis go for the rash-that-won't-vanish-under-a-glass thing, but if you wait for that to appear a. it might not and b. you're often too late by that point.
* Guilty Gear, one of the definitions of "inimitable" was "your mother's apple pie", the other being his skill.
* Gotham Academy: Calamity combines this with wild long hair and long fingernails for a relatively uniform look across the many unfortunates she's possessed over the centuries.
* Green Rider so she can carry his message for him. Turns out that the brooch is magic and carries a Call with it.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, with the words "A taste of things to come..." Your out-of-control car cuts a hole in it, changing it to "A taste of come..."
* Halloweenie makes no secret about how much he hates Halloweenie. Sure, he may have a point about how much of a jerk Halloweenie is, but he also admits to deliberately trolling him.
* Goosebumps (known as Escalofríos) has been enjoyed by Latin American fans, including Mexico where it was dubbed in Latin Spanish by Audiomaster 3000. It aired on television and released on home video. That's all they wanted, right? One consistent dub, yes? Well, you are wrong. In 2015, when Netflix got the rights to have the series in Latin Spanish dubbed format, they did not get the rights to use the audio. SDI Media México was contacted to redub the episodes with a new translation and new voice actors. Some fans didn't like this because the original dub was considered to be a childhood classic. And to top that off, this dub is only available in the United States towards Latin American Spanish speakers. The first season was also redubbed into French, German, Polish, Japanese, and Brazilian Portuguese.
* God of War. And when he does die, he just slaughters his way back to the land of the living.
* Higurashi: When They Cry: Despite Season 1 being acclaimed and already dubbed, the other two seasons were released sub-only by Sentai Filmworks after Geneon's collapse.
* Green Lantern is outright told that "If it is not in the archive, it likely didn't happen."
* Hellboy (2019), it turns out Hellboy himself is one. His father was a demon lord, his mother a mostly normal human woman.
* Good Old Ways: Good-hearted characters behave in old-fashioned ways.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix in response to hearing that Harry's half-thought out plan for talking to Sirius involves breaking into Umbridge's office to use her fireplace.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince Notably, Dumbledore never explicitly tells Harry that he's wrong, only that he has it under control. Which is technically true.
* Golden Age Green Lantern. He did once help solve a crime using nothing but his vast knowledge of show tunes, however.
* Happy Endings, Brad tries to make the term "chicksand" catch on. Max thinks it's stupid until the end.
* High School of the Gods as guidance counselor), in the guise of human beings, and to a degree, each of the pantheons represents a different high school clique (the Egyptians being the goth and theater kids, the Norse being the preppy jocks, and the Greeks being the fun-loving party animals).

* Guts to Griffith during their first duel after Griffith asks Guts if he wants to stop the duel so he can recover from his wounds.
* Halo. The final game ends with only a few dozen humans from the colony still alive.
* Harry Dresden's daughter Maggie, and play "Let It Go". This includes the power to freeze a person's heart and turn a person into an ice statue. When she is asked about the ring granting the those last powers, her response is:
* Hard Time on Planet Earth: An alien military officer is exiled to a primitive planet for bad behavior. He is accompanied by a floating robotic supervisor. First episodes deal with them trying to understand humans (complicated by getting most information from TV) and blend in. Later they manage to adjust, although some misunderstandings keep cropping out.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix has this when Harry and his friends are in the Department of Mysteries and they're trying to find which door is the one with all the glass balls seen in Harry's dreams. In fact, the doors spin around the group like an actual roulette wheel.
* hasn't played a sports game recreationally where after a long period of forgetting to keep score, someone suggests "next point wins"?
* Grow series have a conflict that isn't caused by a villain or by anyone at all:
* Heart's Blood Nechtan, Anluan’s great-grandfather, summons The Host (an army of spirits from purgatory).
* Hamilton the doctor kept his back to the action until shots were fired, then he could claim he'd just been passing by and happened to stumble upon a poor gentlemen who appeared to have fallen on a bullet.
* Harry's dorm mates and Hermione give him a group hug when he announces that he's not returning to his abusive relatives.
* Global Frequency comic is based around a preset plan by the US government to cause a population reduction by blasting a few major cities with Kill Sats. These are kinetic harpoons, a single shot weapon mostly by virtue of being a fancy orbiting crossbow that fires an artificial diamond at enough speed that the kinetic energy goes off like a nuke when it strikes the ground.
* God(dess) of Stories incarnation is dreadfully prone to do incredibly creepy things completely obliviously to their own scariness and out of the best intentions. Like just so turning their best friend's soul into magical jewellery, and when she understandably freaked out reacting basically as: What?! The world is ending, and you're much more portable this way!
* Hanzo the Razor. Instead, he's played straight as a "good cop" who investigates his cases by raping his suspects into submission.
* Heather reveals that she's in love with Alejandro. Beth gasps, Cody gasps, Owen gasps, and Noah... shrugs, since he already knew.
* Greek Mythology, Orpheus attempts suicide so he can return to Eurydice forever, only to be talked out of it and for his undying love to be rewarded by Eurydice returning to life anyway.
* .hack//SIGN features the buildup to a huge battle... which then doesn't take place because they got shunted to other materials instead.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), Man-At-Arms wears a big cannon on his forearm sometimes.
* Hellsister Trilogy travels back to the present day. They make their reappearance at the beginning of the third arc, thirty-five chapters later.
* Good Omens (2019), when angels Gabriel and Sandalphon enter Aziraphale's book store, they try to get the latter to speak with them privately, but they do so "inconspicuously", since there are mortals around. So they loudly express their desire to buy pornography (while Gabriel holds a thick tome on household management) and ask to discuss the purchase in private.
* Halloween mask; the film's creators chose it over an Emmett Kelly clown mask because its emotionless stare was more frightening.
* Good Times, it inspired many young African-Americans to do the same.

* Higurashi: When They Cry noticeable, but between the second season and the Rei OVA can be jarring as well, and so is the bump between Rei and Kira. The bumps are especially noticeable if you're watching them all straight through.
* Greek myth. Some versions claim during Tiresias' time as a woman she then spent several years as a famous prostitute.
* Goosebumps and its sequel: A spotlight shines across a dark screen, revealing the SPA logo against a black background instead of the usual white.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, a blog dedicated to rational thinking. Within the fanfic, Dumbledore represents the Romanticism, while Harry represents Enlightenment. Harry drifts away from the modern form of Enlightenment to the classic one over time; his goals stay the same, but his methods change from free thinking and experiment to revelation and epiphany.
* He also did this to Hal for refusing to buy him a piano. Mostly by making things go missing. Then it was revealed that the many things he stole throughout the episode
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, there's an episode where Prussia gets mad at the animators for giving him a minor role.
* Hickman's Avengers arc has the Illuminati having to make the hard choice of destroying Earths from parallel universes to stop both universes from being destroyed in a metaphysical collision called an Incursion. To this end they develop devices capable of injecting antimatter into a planetary core to detonate the whole thing. They begin stockpiling these devices.
* hero she was given glowing white hair, which matches her skin and eyes as she is entirely monochromatic.
* he has a pebble in his shoe, Edd and Eddy try to find something to cheer him up. They find under his bed a magazine titled "Chicks Galore." Let's just say it's not the "chicks" that Eddy was thinking of.
* High School D×D, but Issei defeats him with holy water and a Christian cross, both are devil weaknesses. It helps that Issei has a dragon arm that makes him partially immune against those weaknesses.
* Hammers are one of the three weapons that Ludger (the protagonist of
* Hellsing: Alexander Anderson threw a book (presumably a bible) at Alucard once in the anime.
* Hermione referred to Sirius as a "man child without the ability to grow up." Sirius replied that Harry's mother once said something very similar to him and Remus commented that every female he knew had said something similar at one time or another.
* Harvey Rothman's "The Spongey Show", Squidward meets a guy playing accordion, and finds him annoying.
* Gunnerkrigg Court at times, versus most fiction where the barefoot character's feet remain sparkly clean.
* He took it even further after the release (and critical drubbing) of * Heroes, it goes both ways. While watching it on DVD allows the slower bits to move much faster (as you do not have to wait weeks for a plot point to be resolved) and generally does improve later volumes, it also makes a lot of plot holes and aborted arcs more apparent, especially during the second and third volumes.
* He never considered the Primarchs as sons in the first instance. He only ever saw them as tools to realise his ambitions. Malcador even implies he actually intended some of them to betray him.
* "Granville! how do you spell per-per-per-pe-pepper? is it six 'P's or seven?"
* Gravity Falls episode "The Hand that Rocks the Mabel", Mabel is appropriately puzzled when a TV ad for L'il Gideon apparently answers her question.
* Guyver fans keep hoping very much that Purgstall will come back from the dead. He was a commonly suggested suspect of Appolyon's identity.
* Harbinger (Finmonster)): In this story, Wendy Corduroy, has a double-edged sword for a weapon that Danny describes as being almost ridiculously large.
* Hazbin Hotel, where even the background characters are greatly detailed and varied in designs.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, a flashback sequence shows the young Antimony helping ghosts move on. Seven-years-old Annie doesn't understand the euphemisms used, even when they get quite transparent.

* Hell, the entire 597th could be considered a ragtag bunch of misfits. Of course, given the 40k universe's casually lethal nature, it's a good thing that they get constant reinforcements from Valhalla...
* Godzilla vs. Kong by finding a way for human hands to harness a Titan's power, and he's all too happy to paint himself as humanity's savior when the public misinterprets Godzilla's rampages as him turning against the human race.
* Half-Minute Hero, the 1st year of the Goddess Era marked the first time the Time Goddess descended upon humans. Every game mode takes place at a different point in the Goddess Era.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, where Harry, Ron, and Hermione take the part of pieces on a chessboard and win to get to the next test protecting the stone. Ron masterminds a victory for our heroes' side, but actually has to allow himself to be captured to allow Harry to make the checkmating move. Fortunately, this does not prove to be fatal, only knocking him out - although Ron actually had no way to know this at the time.
* Harry elicits this a fair bit in the first book, but small for his age and adorable - even Natasha finds him cute. It clearly runs in the family, as his third cousin,
* Gravity Falls, they feel guilty about ditching Stan and go back and fish with him.
* Heathers of the word "parody," putting some brutal twists on perceptions of teenage society and violence.
* Good All Along: Someone assumed to be a bad guy was really a good guy this whole time.
* Hero Elementary the episodes instead of in-between them, but the show has segments starring live-action kids demonstrating a "Superpower of Science", accompanied by a song.
* High-Tech than lead, but also less dense. It has also been discovered that a silver bullet will shrink while cooling, and thus a silver bullet cast in a regular bullet mold comes out smaller than the intended size. Also, silver does not "mushroom" in the barrel as much as lead does. Thus, the bullet does not form a proper seal against the grooves of the barrel, allowing much of the gas to escape around the bullet, and the bullet does not get as much spin imparted to it. As a result, a silver bullet has a shorter range and less stopping power (except against werewolves, of course) when compared to a lead bullet.
* Hardcase, Major Tozar has Jack strung up by his wrists from an arch in an attempt to force him to talk.
* Hasan Minhaj at that point and she was still working on her doctorate. He bought a sunrise hot air balloon ride for them off of Groupon which stuck them with a Wednesday morning with another couple. The other guy was doing the same thing and had gotten them to write "Will you marry me?" in big enough letters for them to see from the sky so he didn't pull the trigger. They got back on the ground at 9:50 but her parents were going to call them at 10:00 to congratulate the two of them. They instead went to the first open restaurant they could find for breakfast and he proposed to her in an Applebee's at 9:55 on a Wednesday morning with his cell phone ringing in his pocket.
* Hellsister Trilogy Desaad when the latter makes a bad pun using the former's name (Dark side. Darkseid. Do you get it?).
* Gustave Flaubert's realism emerged as a reaction against the Romantics, who he viewed as suicidally melodramatic. His work is about toning down and checking that emotion. For example, in Felicite, the main character's love relationships with her parent and her motherly relationship to her employer's daughter are much more important than her love her affair. However, Flaubert himself had doubts about the "realist" label feeling that his condemnations of superficial romanticism was easily mistaken for superficial realism.
* Harlots. Daniel Marnay is a penniless sex-worker who loves Charlotte for who she is. George Howard is a filthy rich aristocrat who views her as his property.

* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, while Drax simply has no social filter as part of his cultural hat.
* High School Dx D, Issei and his two perverted friends all have collections of porn. The girls in Issei's life don't really give him any grief over it (it is quite well known how horny he is), but Issei does lament at one point that living with his harem means he doesn't get much alone time to enjoy his stash.
* Happens to a minivan in a Liberty Mutual auto insurance ad, after a collision causes the (unoccupied) car to fly apart into dozens of components.
* Grrl Power but barely superhuman in every other way. Of course, that's not something that just anyone can do, but this weakness is why her ability to shift her stats around is top-secret. Even her teammates don't know about it (except Dabbler, who figured it out on her own).
* he wishes Lisa hadn't turned down a check for 12 thousand dollars, making him suffer another heart attack.
* Grimm often has quotes from fairy tales at the beginning of each episode. The episode "Mr Sandman" uses the song Mr Sandman by the Chordettes as the background music.
* Happy Tree Friends seems to be able to do this in some episodes. In the episodes "Easy for You to Sleigh'' and "Mime to Five", his house doesn't even have any visible furniture; it's all mimed.
* Hayate the Combat Butler manga, it seems like Hayate's older brother is shaping up to this. We haven't actually seen him yet, but we've met a few people he helped, years ago.
* Hearts of Ice: Akane gets exiled to the Kami Plane and spends nearly seven years fighting demons. When she finally returns to the human world, only weeks have passed since she got trapped.
* Greystone Valley is described as having a voice like a rumbling volcano.
* Hamlet. No-one today has any clue what he is referencing, but scholars figure that it references something common in the 1600's that has been lost to time.
* Golden Kamuy ("Personages of Early Modern Ezo") by Takeshiro Matsuhara documented a real-life Ainu huntress named Ciyuhirika.
* Gwisin Byeolgok, a powerful shaman who for some reason sold her child's soul and body to Nachal.
* Happy Gilmore: In the beginning, showing one of the titular character's jobs as a plumber.
* Hercules, after cutting his way out of the Hydra, Hercules is covered with the monster's green blood.
* God Hand by punching him a number of times. They don't faze Bruce, and he proceeds to knock Gene to the ground while telling a joke.
* Hamilton focuses around a dinner meeting between Hamilton, Jefferson, and Madison, where Hamilton traded the location of the US capitol (Washington, DC over New York) for more financial power. One line even has Jefferson claim "I arranged the venue, the menu, the seating" (although it's unlikely that in real life, Jefferson himself would have done this).
* "Hidden Secret Song" by Anarchy Club, aside from referencing all hidden tracks in existence, is about a metal fan who "had a friend who played guitar and taught him a little thing or two". That "thing or two" is literally 2 chords, and the song is a 2 chord (mostly) song about how the rock-n-roll lifestyle is just
* Hilarious in Hindsight, since 2006 is now the past, and blues, jazz, soul and funk are still very much alive, largely thanks to the pop-cultural impact of the Blues Brothers.
* Hannah Montana in mid-conversation in the wardrobe closet to convince Mamaw and Aunt Dolly to get along, the hat lights up, spooking out Lilly.
* Grace and Favour without the department store (traded in for a bed and breakfast), Mr. Lucas or Mr. Spooner, or either of the elderly Grace Brothers the store was named for.
* Herodotus. Also, Io was paralleled with the Egyptian Isis. In some versions of her myth, Zeus restores her to her human form when she reaches Egypt and she is thereafter worshipped by the Egyptians as the goddess Isis.

* Happens a lot with Gray Fullbuster, due to his unconscious stripping habit. It will usually be Lucy, Cana, or Mirajane ordering him to get dressed. Lyon also often orders him to put a shirt on,
* Hc Svnt Dracones, Vectors are designed to adapt to new gravities quickly. Martians often find it funny when Venusian tourists think they'll be super strong when they come to their world, only to feel lethargic for eight hours and end up no stronger than anyone else.
* has about their cybernetics, but "augmentation will make us stronger" is a pretty reasonable conclusion for people to reach when the augmentations they've already received have given them superhuman strength and endurance, lifespans of multiple centuries, the ability to breathe nearly any atmosphere and a vast array of other useful assets.
* Grace Kelly's sheriff to get out of town) through most of the film. While it may not be as adrenaline-charged as other examples above it is a pretty major shift in terms of the character!
* He gives another episode where his father thinks he's "bi-curious" and sends him to a
* Grant Morrison for the New 52 relaunch is based on the Golden/Silver Age character: an anti-establishment radical who appeared in stories like "Superman In The Slums". These stories took place in the past and his "present" character is somewhat more defined, except when written by Scott Lobdell.
* Heel–Face Door-Slam: You want to change your ways? You're too late!
* Harry Turtledove: humanity has been serving the gods since time immemorial until the people of one city start to explore the advantages of self-reliance.
* Goku defeats the light-eating monster Yakon in the same way, feeding him with energy until he explodes. His use in this case is fully justified because Goku is far stronger than his opponent, and can output more energy than Yakon can handle. This also means that Goku could have defeated him using more conventional methods if he desired; he was partly toying with his enemy.
* Hector is terrified of disappointing his elderly mother. All these years he's been
* Golden Sun, it reappears as Mythril Silver, a material that can be collected and forged into special equipment pieces.
* Halo 2's after the showcase that the Xbox could not run the game in its current form. As a result, they had to start from scratch, and since Microsoft didn't give them enough time to properly remedy the campaign mode, Bungie admitted to slapping together the single player the best they could, for better or worse. As upset as gamers were at the time, Bungie felt even more torn up.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged Walter gives one to the would-be betrayers of the Round Table.
* Guild Wars contains several derelict Margonite ships from a time when the area was still known as the Crystal Sea.
* has an emoticon for a face, which changes along with its emotions. The gleeful way it constantly teases Kinesis and the minions is also to be noted.
* Hamilton while it was off-Broadway. He was replaced by the much more celebrated Jonathan Groff once the show moved onto Broadway.
* Gus became this when King Bob appointed him temporary monarch of the playground.
* Grey's Anatomy: When Burke sees Cristina's apartment for the first time, he is a little shocked that Cristina is messy. Cristina monologues about the mess and states that she once hired a maid... who ran away crying.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City has the mission "Death Row", which is unique, as it is the only mission in the game that gives no monetary reward for completion. As compensation, however, the enemies drop significantly larger sums of cash than normal when killed, ensuring that you will at least get something out of the mission.
* Hee Haw to Red Sovine's heartwarming trucker's hit "Giddyup Go", titled appropriately enough, "Giddyup Go - Answer".
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, France turns into Magic Strike, causing him to wear a frilly pink dress and carry a matching bullhorn. (By "Strike" he means not work and picket until your employer gives you what you want.)

* Happy Endings episode had Brad, who is black, and Max, who is gay, arguing about whether it is harder to be a black man or a gay man. Brad complains that the other night he couldn't get a cab to stop for him in an extremely expensive suit, while a white man in grungy clothes was picked up almost instantly.
* Halo more than willing to resort to violence against its own citizens; in fact, the ecumene's single most powerful figure has ordered the deaths of countless fellow Forerunners for no reason but personal gain.
* Hiimdaisy left off her Persona 4 comic right after Rise's dungeon and has stated she has no interest in finishing it.
* Godot, who, despite having to spend, it seems, half his life getting medical checks and being blind without his visor
* Heroic Comedic Sociopath: Loves to fight evil because it enables them to dispense pain.
* Greg the Bunny, when it's mentioned that Greg had a very bad reaction to a bucket prank. Greg points out that he got trapped under the bucket for several hours and almost suffocated.
* Highlander, the single most feared and brutal immortal in living memory, an experience which drove him to see all immortals as evil. Their Muggle nature gives them a few advantages over their supernatural prey. They hunt in groups and use ambush tactics and ranged weapons, while immortals are accustomed to confronting each other in face-to-face, one-on-one duels; immortals can sense one another approaching, but can't sense mortal attackers; and immortals are unable to do violence on holy ground, allowing the Hunters to attack them in such places while they can do little to resist.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas received with improved shadows and vehicle reflections among other improvements, but unfortunately 1/10 of the tracks of the game were removed due Rockstar not paying to expired licenses to renew them, and has a different lighting missing the warm colored appearance. Some later console re-releases of the 7th generation and onward received an HD remastered version of the game based off the mobile release of the game.
* Glee was deliberately filmed in black and white, and invoked the feel of holiday variety shows from the 50s to the 70s, albeit with a little tongue-in-cheek humor about the whole thing.
* Gundam Reconguistain G has the Conque de Venus which is a Mobile Armour which microwaves enemies. Yggdrasil has the tender beam which keeps branching off into lesser beams creating a giant "tree" of beams that destroy entire fleets.
* Happy Heroes, it is fairly common for a light bulb to appear above characters' heads when they get an idea.
* Highlander has had a few instances of Immortals fighting with a sword in one hand and a knife in the other. Most notably in the fifth season episode "Duende".
* GURPS Black Ops, the agents of "The Company" have a drug they can slip to someone who has Seen Too Much. They get what seems to be a nasty one-week case of flu, and forget what happened right before getting drugged. The Infinity Patrol from GURPS Time Travel have Eraser, which fits this trope even better — the drugged person blacks out for a bit, and wakes up without memory of the time immediately preceding the drugging. In Black Ops the existence of aliens and monsters must be kept secret, and the Infinity Patrol cannot let anyone know that parallel universes exist.
* He revealed a version with Peanut revolving around unusual wi-fi passwords. The password for backstage was "Icanttellyou", the tour bus password was "Idontremember", the home password was "Youhavetoguessit", the computer password was "Whosasking", and finally, the password for Jeff's cell phone was "Askyourmother".
* Highlander: The Gathering, was an MMORPG in development by Kalisto Entertainment around 2001-2002.
* Hamilton for dramatic effect. Philip's fatal duel actually took place in 1801.
* Good Luck! Ninomiya-kun, the asexual Shungo is regularly tied up and sexually harassed by the girls in his class because they take sadistic pleasure in seeing him squirm; however, none of them try to go all the way with him. The same cannot be said though of Reika, who, after snapping, tries to physically force him to have sex with her (which is not played for laughs).

* Guardians of the Galaxy for the Kree to do the most minimal thing possible. And the Nova Corps is supposedly the side that won the war.
* He got another Wild Take when Luffy is more concerned about food than the important information Jimbei was telling him. After getting angry with Luffy who cheerfully tells him that he likes to leaves things to chance, Jimbei then goes into a minor depression.
* Higurashi: When They Cry is played as this in the first time loop, having only recently moved to the town a month prior, but in later ones it seems like he knows more about Hinamizawa.
* Great Pretender who has a strict moral code of only conning crooks. When his apprentice Makoto tries to show off by tricking a random bystander into agreeing to pay for their meal at a restaurant, he pays for it himself saying his conscience wouldn't allow it.
* Golem100 has a scene where two characters take drugs. The next ten pages or so are bizarre full-page illustrations with minimal text. Then the regular text is restored, and a policeman explains to them just what they were doing that time (each illustration represents about an hour of debauchery, such as streaking an entire city block).
* here) featured a man with his buddies saying "I'm never getting married." Cut to him buying an engagement ring. While on a plane watching rambunctious children running around, he tells his wife "We're never having kids." Cut to the wife in labor. In their apartment, he tells his wife and son "We're never moving to the suburbs." Cut to them moving to the suburbs where he looks offscreen and says "I'm never buying one of those." Cut to him washing down a minivan. As he cleans up a drawing left by his son, he says "I'm never having another kid." His wife immediately says "I'm pregnant." Finally, he watches television with his family and says "I'm never letting go." Here, the commercial ends.
* Green Lantern story from "All-American Comics" starts with Doiby and Alan having an argument, then flashes back to the events that lead to the argument. (It turns out they're arguing over who should get the credit for saving the day.)
* Harry Turtledove by deciding to betray humanity to the aliens as payback for all the indignities he'd suffered and getting killed in the process.
* Gor novels. The harem girls are usually slaves, and although a master may be possessive of his possessions, it's generally acknowledged that any free man can use a female slave for his pleasure at any time her master isn't putting her to use (in either a sexual or non-sexual way).
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law Birdman was the second-to-last one to figure it out.
* Hiawatha's Rabbit Hunt. A joke version of the Native American mythological character tries to capture Bugs and cook him in a pot.
* Haruhi Suzumiya presents itself as possibly being one of these, but later information seems to indicate that it’s more of a small group of individuals who happen to be well-connected.
* Half-Human Hybrid — Humans and aliens are able to produce offspring together; the most blatant offense against conventional biological wisdom. See that entry for examples.
* Half-Life 2 has an "aura view" vision mode, letting him easily spot other players in the dark or even through obstacles and walls.
* Golgo 13 down the side of the building; as the mooks empty their guns into the air conditioning room (the only cover on the roof) Duke is using the gunfire to cover his own shots as he guns down the Mafia boss.
* Golden Book Video of their various Golden books, taking the illustrations from the books and adding cheesy limited animation effects at times, a technique Golden Book Video called "Picturemation."
* Hatoful Boyfriend uses Tchaikovsky's "Dance of the Sugarplum Fairy" as Shuu's character theme.

* Godzilla, it fails to kill Godzilla's titular opponent many times, never succeeding once.
* Heartwarming in Hindsight: Current events make a particular moment from the work more endearing and heartwarming than it was originally.
* Hatsune Miku: Project DIVA until finally being put back on track for a 2020 release.
* H. G. Wells. Gold is so abundant on the moon that when our protagonists are captured by the Selenites, even the chains they are bound with are massive gold.
* He also inverts the trope near the beginning of the game, giving Penelo his handkerchief as a promise to bring Vaan back. (This leads directly to Penelo getting kidnapped by bounty hunters who are after Balthier's head, so... way to go there, leading man.)
* Hetalia: Axis Powers gets bigger with Hetalia World Series. Enter the rest of the world!
* Heechee series. Not only do they seem to hate all other lifeforms, they are actively trying to destroy all matter in the Universe. As it turns out, however, they are perfectly willing to allow matter-based lifeforms to exist once a human convinces them that ascending to a pure energy (and thus immortal) state is highly desirable to both the Human and Heechee races.
* Hack/Slash so far. Delilah Hack just doesn't seem to want to stay dead.
* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life. She becomes nicer as she ages and develops into Hugh's genuine friend.
* Gokusen. Due to the length of the anime and j-drama (especially due the revolving cast of the latter), the arc was somewhat more subtle but still there.
* having a moment and distinguishes between "understand" and "comprehend".
* Hercules, while Meg and Herc start talking and falling for one another in a garden, Meg backs up into something pointed (which turns out to be a statue of Cupid, the point being his arrow). Cue a subtle, but definite double take from Meg.
* GoldenEye, Tanner refers to M as "the evil queen of numbers", then closes his eyes in horror after Bond clears his throat in a "by the way..." sort of fashion:
* He pulls of a masterful one when he convinces Cersei that she indeed has his mistress captive even though she has captured Ros instead of Shae in "The Prince of Winterfell". When she brings Ros out so Tyrion can see that she is really alive, Tyrion plays along and pretends she really is the one he loves, keeping Cersei ignorant about Shae. You can actually see the wheels turning in his head as he figures out how to play this.
* Halo 2. You can take as much time as you want, but when you reach the bomb and killed all the aliens protecting it, a cutscene starts that has the Master Chief hurrying to the bomb and getting Cortana into the bombs computer.
* Glenn Martin DDS: In "H*e*i*s*t", Glenn meets some old friends and wants to join their dental practice. He then finds out that they actually make money by robbing casinos. When he tries to quit, they make him wear a vest full of explosives.
* Hendricks in has one with Miss Gard in the short story "Aftermath."
* Heart of Ashes. Drained by the resurrection spell, Fankil knows he's too weakened to take on the men and flees to claim Kathryn another day.
* Halo achievement for killing 1000 Flood: "Zombie Repeller." Granted they are quite different from the standard idea of zombies to a knowledgeable observer but former allies transformed into hostile walking corpses should certainly be notably familiar to at least some humans.
* Happy Valley: Daniel recollects Catherine saying this to him after Becky's death.
* Grossology: In "Hirsute Yourself", Abby's hair becomes several times longer than her body after getting sprayed with a ton of Frederick Follicle's formula, with one of the uses she has for it being a parachute when she and Ty are falling from several stories.
* Harry Potter series. Also, each individual volume internally features this: if Harry's alone, facing his destiny, it'll be deadly serious. If he's with his friends, someone will crack a joke at some point.
* has her tongue cut out says her tongue was not completely removed but damaged enough that she's never quite the same.

* High Priest (If the religious leader is also a political one, or holds a status as high as or higher than royalty)
* Halo off course. The Covenant don't suffer this effect, due to crystals that guide their systems, and humanity's post-war ships can now travel much more accurately as well.
* Heroic Fatigue: The strain of using your power to help others wears you down physically and emotionally.
* Heather O'Rourke was released. The film was dedicated to her memory.
* Half-Life 2 is that the Combine have been harvesting water from the earths oceans, lowering the water level substantially.
* Ground Control to bring all the colonies under Imperial control, even if it means bombing them into nothingness. The Empire is partly modeled after the Roman Empire, including the ranks (imperator, centurion) and the fact that their foot soldiers are called legionnaires.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers is a Funny Foreigner, which makes it both a prime example and a subversion at the same time. In the American dub, the Asian characters (and Russia) are particularly portrayed as being funny foreigners.
* Gold, which is where equipment tops out, and equipment boxes have red and black above gold, while characters have rainbow above gold.
* Hamlet is theoretically in unstoppable rage after the last soliloquy of the play ("...from this point forth/my thoughts be bloody or nothing worth"), but, given that this is Hamlet, two scenes later he's cracking jokes with a gravedigger.
* Gravity Falls gets away with the same trick in "Weirdmageddon 3: Take Back The Falls".
* Highlander and gain his power. The use of firearms to incapacitate them was also seen as dishonorable, so only the most unscrupulous Immortals used them.
* Hayuru is similar, albeit to a greater extent. She's part of Ataraxia's disciplinary committee and frowns upon public displays of affection between men and women because she believes it's improper. Which makes her the most difficult Heart Gear for Kizuna to bond with, because she's initially * great void, off of whom the Brotherhood originally split, has Mephala as a patron deity while also having special reverence for Sithis.)
* Hellblazer John Constantine, who hunts down normal or supernatural badguys either to protect his beloved London, or just for his personal gain. Gods are no exception.
* Helping Would Be Killstealing: Helping someone won't allow them to grow.
* Green Hill Zone: An early-game level themed around grassy meadows, hills and light woodlands.
* Harry Potter try to catch the object. The prophecy everyone is after is confined in a glass globe that's about to hit the floor. Lucius Malfoy makes a desperate grab for it but misses and it shatters.
* He does it again to help patch Kirino and her friend, Ayase's, friendship after the latter found out about her hobby. Really, this seems to be his plan A.
* God. But, as the entity itself states, "When you do things right, people won't be sure you've done anything at all," so we never get an answer.
* Halo 3 and the Covenant collapses, most of the technology they used to have can't be reproduced and all the species that made up the Covenant fall hard on the technological scale.
* Halfway through Act 5, a mysterious demon appears and forces the trolls to hide while he destroys everything they've built. The demon's identity is implied, but it's not until the flash animation "Jade: Enter" that it the demon appears on-screen and his identity is made explicit.
* Half Baked, Kenny drops the soap in the prison showers. He doesn't drop it as he reaches for it, but as he is singing into it (yes, this is a strange film).
* Haruhi Suzumiya goes temporarily gag dub mode when it comes to the scenes with Yuki Nagato simply reading a book in "Someday In The Rain". Seeing as how it's just a long, boring moment of silence in the original, the dub actors decided to fill it in by speaking aloud the contents of the book to humorous results.
* Han Solo getting frozen in carbonite could be seen as a variation of the trope.

* Good People Have Good Sex: And any past sexual relationships (usually with a conveniently deceased spouse) the heroine has had will be unsatisfying. And even if it was, it still hasn't been nearly as good as it is now. This can even apply to the heroes occasionally.
* Green Lantern who have a mass of leaf covered vines in place of hair.
* Harry Flashman buys a commission as a cavalry officer shortly after being expelled from Rugby and spends most of his career more or less in that service. He displays most of the lifestyle traits, as do many of his comrades.
* Halt and Catch Fire, Haley is still mostly in the closet by the time the series ends, with her older sister Joanie being the only person to whom she has explicitly come out, but Joe, Cameron, Donna, and Gordon have all figured it out by then.
* Happy Endings. In one episode, after finding out that her husband Brad had taken her to a restaurant when they were dating, planning to break up with her, Jane says, "I will be at the bar, destroying myself."
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn introduces wind-based healing spells. Karis has a weak but practical series of multi-target spells while Sveta has a series of moderately powerful single-target spells.
* Happy Happy Clover, the main characters Clover and Mallow discover the story of Santa Claus. But their school teacher, named "Professor Hoot" takes the book away from them and doesn't allow them to read the rest of it. Since he told them that the whole Santa story was for "Grown-Ups". But Clover tells about Santa Clause to Kale's baby brothers, which he would later find out and start ripping the letters to shreds. Clover and her friends then decided to deliver their Christmas gifts to Kale's brothers much to their amusement on Christmas morning. Near the end of the story, Clover and her friends wake up and see presents laying around them home wondering if Santa actually did visit them on Christmas Eve.
* Hack/Slash title crossover character falls in love with Cassie after telepathically seeing how horrifically violent her life is and how screwed up she is, causing her no small amount of trauma and moral conflict.
* Happily Married: Osiris and Isis, despite his being murdered and mummified.
* Half-Blood Prince when she has to act casually in Borgin & Burkes and gets noticed immediately.
* Grant Morrison series, which would have revealed that S.H.I.E.L.D. kept Fury active into the present day by implanting his memories and personality into hapless test subjects.
* Happens in the episode, "Le Big Switch", when Mr. Krabs gets upset after realizing that it was a mistake to exchange SpongeBob for another chef.
* Halloween series is perfectly willing to kill people for no real reason. However, Michael really goes out of his way to kill people who dare to pity him as brutally as possible.
* "Grisly" is an adjective describing something that induces repugnance or disgust in the viewer; something gruesome. "Grizzly" is
* Gutierrez courted La Noche (La Muerte's sister), but the moment she started to pay him attention, he had already fallen in love with La Muerte.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys raise Hercules to godhood to protect him from the other Olympians. Hercules turns his back on him until Hera removes Zeus from power. Turns out that, as bad as Zeus is, without him to impose some restraint on the other gods, their behavior and treatment of humans is far worse.
* Grey's Anatomy, is through this delightful quote, by, of all people, Alex Karev, who wasn't exactly her BFF:
* Going Postal Moist Von Lipwig is offered (as an alternative to being hanged, again) the job of Postmaster General. It's a job for life, just quite possibly not for long as it's already claimed the lives of several other "volunteers".
* Halt and Catch Fire, after a chummy moment with a waitress at the local burger joint, Haley watches as she walks away. Joe doesn't miss the implications at all.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, could show the reader events that had occurred while Tom Riddle had been at school, fifty years before current events.
* Gothic Horror The oldest subgenre. Derives its horror from the fear of transgression against the natural or divine order of things and of the alienation suffered by both the transgressor and their innocent victims as a result.

* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, she even created a metallic statue of Herc.
* Guardian. Then it goes back to her childhood to detail her first two pilgrimages and friendship with Yuna. The in-game scene at Zanarkand is revisited at the beginning of each chapter.
* Henry V 1989: When Richard, Earl of Cambridge, Henry, Lord Scrope, and Sir Thomas Grey are arrested for plotting against King Henry, the Duke of Exeter tears off their livery collars, the equivalent of military insignia for a noble of the period, before Henry orders them sent to be executed.
* Health Hotline: Ellie and her grandma are clip-art images with added animated mouths.
* Has Two Mommies of China (1871-1908) was raised by two mothers, Ci'an and Cixi, both widows of a previous emperor.
* Grease thought this theory was quite amusing, claiming it made the film into "the first Zombie musical".
* Happy Heroes, Big M. accidentally gets stabbed with a knife or similar object on several occasions. With this being a children's show and all, no visible blood appears where he gets stabbed.
* Growing Up Brady by Barry Williams (Greg), Reed was about to be fired, and one of the scenarios seriously considered to explain Reed's departure was killing off Mike Brady. The aversion came when ABC stepped in and decided to fire everybody.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (2000), the character Sphinx is working as a coroner and puts his sandwich down on a cadaver's chest to answer the phone.
* Grindor, and kills the latter by stabbing a pair of hooks into his face and tearing his head apart.
* Hamilton, John Laurens and Alexander Hamilton are written as unusually attracted to each other, in reference to historical suspicion that they had some type of sexual relationship.
* Gore Vidal shows the ancient world and its differing value systems clashing in polite debate via the travels of Cyrus Spitama across Persia, Greece, India and China, as he considers Socrates, Hellenism, Taoism, Jainism, Buddhism and Confucianism from his perspective.
* here, called this trope "Superman Syndrome", where characters were so powerful that there were few challenges for them; he mentioned that a lot of Expanded Universe writers have done that with the Jedi, elevating their powers so far beyond what we saw in the movies. He considers it boring, because who could ever really challenge or defeat such characters? Characters had to genuinely surmount whatever difficulties that might create, not use a deus ex machina to escape.
* Granny Weatherwax would be absolutely horrified by any suggestion that Lancre is a Magocracy since she knows better than anyone that magic isn't for ruling. Lancre is definitely ruled by King Verence II. And the witches will let him know if he's doing it wrong.
* Gosu Jin Garyeong qualifies by default. It makes sense considering who her grandfather is.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. Oddly, the effect of each character's grin is heightened by the fact that they have the wrong sort of teeth for their species: Zimmy has shark-like teeth and Coyote has uniform flat teeth.
* Heralds of Valdemar both fit this trope, especially the former. Notably, they have other traits and Firesong in particular is a powerful mage who is instrumental to saving the world.
* he gets relentlessly taunted by his peers, but he manages to get through the year thanks to a sympathetic teacher. Both aspects are startlingly (and heartwarmingly) realistic.
* Goodberry back and can cast the spell again. Depending on the edition you're playing, eating them can also restore a small amount of health, so it's not infrequent to see characters guzzling several days' worth of goodberries in order to top their hp off.
* Good Omens, the angel Aziraphale finds a dead bird lurking in his old, disused magician's coat. Oddly, it's the demon Crowley who restores the bird's life and sets it free.

* Groundhog Day but is perpetually stuck in Punxsutawney due to a blizzard blocking the roads.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, when S. Italy was rushing to save Spain, he ran into the mafia, who demanded that he give them Spain's imports. S. Italy just beat them up and continued on his way. He also blames his cold (which is an in universe representation of a recession) on the Mafia.
* Gone with the Wind helps out Ashley Wilkes because Ashley's wife, Melanie, was nice to her early on, accepting her wartime donation instead of treating her like dirt, as most of the rest of the town does.
* Heads-Up Display Kimmunicator into the suit her dad made to replace her ruined mission outfit: good idea. Having it suddenly take up her whole field of view while Kim was in the middle of fighting Shego: not so much.
* Heaven Versus Hell — One is Harmony, and the other is Discipline; which is which depends on the author's feelings on the topic.
* Great Dismal Swamp. Its resulting nature as a large stretch of trackless wilderness in the middle of the South made it an ideal refuge for escaped black slaves — a population of a few thousand of them is thought to have been living in the swamp in the seventeenth to nineteenth centuries — as well as others hiding from the authorities — white fugitives and Native Americans are also known to have had a presence in the swamp. Obviously, this trope was very much averted for the swamp communities, but their presence would have added to the swamp's sinister reputation in the eyes of the slaveowners: like every other slaver society, the antebellum South lived in constant fear of a slave revolt, and a large population of escaped slaves like that hiding in the Great Dismal Swamp would have been a constant source of paranoia for them. Of course, the inhabitants of the Great Dismal Swamp would have been counting on the fact that Swamps are Evil to begin with — the fact that nobody else wanted to set foot in the Great Dismal Swamp, let alone settle there, was a big part of why so many fugitives fled there.
* Her Tears Were My Light's basic visual novel mechanics. You would normally only use the rewind button in other visual novels to re-read some text that you missed, but in this game, the character Time explicitly has the power to rewind. Going back and progressing through the same conversation again with new information can lead to a different outcome. The same goes for reloading from a save point or even restarting the game from the beginning.
* Hey Arnold!, was when the rain stopped falling on her and she noticed Arnold holding an umbrella over her head.
* he's the sole reason the Alliance isn't trying to arrest and interrogate you.
* GURPS has this on its list of government types, as a subset of meritocracy.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City mentor, corrupt land developer Avery Carrington, who starts a gang war between the Cuban and Haitian factions in Vice City by hiring Tommy to dress up as a member of the Cuban gang and shoot-up a Haitian gang member's funeral.
* Harper Collins has published several one volume compilations of the seven
* GURPS this, believe it or not. The elven/dwarven religions don't have gods at all, and since the humans of the setting were initially yanked from Crusades-era Earth, the major human religions are Christianity and Islam.
* he was the best thing to happen to it, but Marc Alaimo's nuanced and charismatic performance means that he's universally considered a great character.
* have to go", it turns out he's speaking literally and has them shipped off on a luxury space-cruise.
* Happy Heroes (the phenomenon is apparently a symptom of "anti-inertia thinking", wherein a person is stunned by a rational thought and an absurd thought colliding in their mind; in that episode, color failures are one of the most used reactions used to demonstrate the "anti-inertia thinking" thing).
* Grimm when trying to cover up the Wesen aspect of a crime, bringing to justice a Wesen whose crime cannot be adjudged by 'secular' law, or shielding a Wesen who may be technically guilty, but is not morally culpable.
* Gulliver's Travels supposed to know that giants and pygmies existed? Indeed, he turns out to be a fast learner and settles into a comfortable routine in each new kingdom.

* Graduating from MIT is a lot less impressive in New Zealand, where it stands for
* Hank the Cowdog, Drover ends up on Hank after they jump a fence. Hank immediately tells him that landing on the head of one's leader hurts morale.
* Hägar the Horrible, is popular in Scandinavia, having been syndicated in major newspapers.
* Hey Arnold!, even though nothing has grown on Stinky Peterson's land for many years, he decides to try and grow a pumpkin to prove he's good at something, successfully growing a huge, prize-winning pumpkin in "Stinky's Pumpkin".
* God Never Said That: Lying about what the writers said about the work.
* Gravity Falls ended with Dipper and Mabel going home to Piedmont, CA now that their summer vacation is over.
* Halo: Reach's Armor Lock renders the user impervious to all damage, at the cost of making them 100% immobile.
* Have you ever found yourself speaking like this because you're all of a sudden unable to recall what something was called? This is a psychological phenomenon called 'Tip of the tongue', or 'lethologica'.
* Hammer Of The Witches, leading up to the climactic confrontation with the traitor, both sides know the other is aware of the true nature of the situation, but both keep up the front of naivete.
* GoldenEye is essentially a massive, countrywide electronic bank heist covered up by the use of a stolen EMP warhead. Bond even lampshades it toward the end.
* Hekikai no AiON, Tatsuya first saw Seine after she steps on his money when a couple of bullies throw it to the ground.
* God-Emperor: A monarch who is worshiped as a deity by their subjects.
* Guys and Dolls is all about this, and indeed it seems to work out well enough for Sarah.
* Harry Turtledove. The story ends with the captive aliens horrified that the humans will be able to discover the secret of hyperdrive from their ship, unleashing the violent, tremendously advanced (compared to other species) humans upon the rest of the galaxy.
* Hilariously, in Varric's embellished narration the breasts of the main character's sister are even larger than in the game proper.
* Harry's goblin account manager is secretly fond of crocheting, while a goblin elder admits to having enjoyed baking once upon a time.
* HarryPotterFanfiction.com: The oldest and biggest Harry Potter fanfiction archive.
* Hannah Montana. Miley finally gets her grandma and Aunt Dolly to reconcile and the three of them group hug. Miley tells them, "You're squishing the pop star" and they break the hug saying sorry. But Miley adds "I didn't say I didn't like it" and they hug again.
* Heavenly Day reveals that the illusions of Nelly's family are being subtly replaced by the ghosts of Hill House...
* got their tongues stuck to a very cold can of Bud in the middle of a blizzard in the swamp.
* Grey's Anatomy, as people could go for hours without any noticeable damage from seemingly minor injuries before collapsing.
* .hack//Legend of the Twilight is 12 episodes long, but was also an adaptation of a monthly serial.
* Gor or else you'll be punished. Masters realize though that sometimes a slave honestly doesn't hear an order or is confused by it, and this can be forgiven.
* Golden Treasures Lottery came out with an ad for their lottery that starts with the
* Gunnerkrigg Court prevent him from doing so. Good thing, too, because when he does it, he kills the host.
* Hare Trimmed that Granny (actually Bugs in disguise) is taking everything but the kitchen sink, and the sink drops into his arms.
* Harry Potter. Then, a troll attacks the bathroom and Harry and Ron save Hermione, who lies that she went out looking for it. It's a little bit unclear whether she lied about the troll to save face or to forgive Ron, or even both.

* Hellboy he gains a robot body with the original biological head concealed in the chest.
* Hex does this as well since he is basically a sentient, magical computer. As long as he has his teddy bear he'll find out what you want to know.
* Heart Is an Awesome Power: Even the weakest or smallest abilities can be devastating if used right. You just have to find it!
* Guild Wars color-codes everything. Professions are color coded, and skills for that profession have icons of predominantly that color, and the bosses of that profession have an aura of that color, and so on. PvP and the factions in Factions use the classic red vs blue setup. In some PvP maps, they even color-code the objectives to group them!
* God causes the sun to stay stationary in the sky for an entire day until the battle between the Israelites and the Amorites is over.
* Harry doesn't make a deep study of blood magic, but she has enough of the basics to know that it's important to carefully clean up any blood you've spilled, especially if it was done willingly, lest someone get hold of it and use it against you.
* Helix this away, noting they've been allowed temporary access as the first to receive a distress call.
* God of War (PS4) and insane. In the end, once his immortality is removed, Kratos has no choice but to kill him since he tries to kill his mother in revenge for making his life miserable, inadvertently fulfilling the vision that Freya desperately attempted to avoid in the first place.
* Harvey Beaks: Kappas appear as staff at a motel in a Season 2 episode.
* Grand Theft Auto V also counts, thanks to his lifestyle. Franklin and Trevor can also purchase and wear them. And these are also available for both men and women in the game's online mode. Ever wanted to assault a motorcycle gang in a black dress suit with a matching red blouse and heels?
* Hello Cheeky, and would occasionally read letters from fans, explain jokes or technical hitches, or otherwise address their listener ("hello, Eric").
* Godslave, after colliding with Turner carrying a canopic jar, Edith dives desperately after it before it can hit the floor and break. She manages it, but it breaks in her hands anyway.
* Heinrich Kemmler is also a major player in several books, in spite of the fact that he has been dead for over fifty years when the series begins. Notably, his research assistant and several of his apprentices play major parts in the story.
* Haze. You play as both in the course of the single-player or cooperative game.
* Godzilla Threshold being crossed, and Rubrum steps up their game. Agito Cadets are sanctioned into auxiliary forces, which serve the Special Forces type; performing missions that the main legions cannot handle themselves.
* Harmless Lady Disguise: A man disguises himself as a woman specifically to avoid suspicion.
* Harry Potter for books prior to the sixth: before it was repealed in 2003 (2000 in Scotland), the notorious homophobic law Section 2A to the Local Government Act 1986 (popularly known as "clause 28") forbade local authorities from "promoting homosexuality", which in practice was interpreted as banning any books containing sympathetic gay characters from state school libraries.
* Goblet of Fire, as he repeatedly tries to push people away just to avoid history repeating.
* H. G. Wells is that growth goes in fits and spurts because of certain factors in the bloodstream of growing animals, or the sap of plants, which are depleted and have to be replenished before the next spurt of growth occurs. When two protagonists synthesise a Food containing the missing factors (which are the same for all species), the result is giant animals and plants (humans given the Food grow to typically forty feet high) which however suffer no loss of agility or other consequences of their giant size.
* Highlander The Raven had an episode where Amanda's former husband (a fellow Immortal she only married to save her own neck) turns up. They fight and when she had him dead to rights, he pleaded "I'm your husband." She answers "I want a divorce" and offs his head.

* Harvest Moon games, you get delicious homemade goodies on Winter 14 (if you're a boy) or Spring 14 (if you're a girl). This, however, only happens with marriageable characters who are at a certain number of love points.
* Guiding Light (between 1968 and 1977, when it was extended to 60 minutes; before 1968 each episode was only 15 minutes long)
* Grand Hotel alone", not quite the same thing. It was her character in the play who said "I want to be alone."
* GURPS, sufficiently powerful message-carrying psi-bombs can lodge a short sentence or rhyme in a person's mind for several minutes. For obvious reasons, this can be a more terrifying prospect than similar tech that can rip out someone's soul and store it in a jar.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team episode 2. After Ryuuka and Mariel end up tied in their competition, they break the tie with a "swimsuit cavalry battle" in the mansion's indoor pool. Each of them rides three other people, and the one who has their head band taken away loses.
* Herland: Herland's women are all descended from one woman who (after their men died out) then had inexplicably given birth to a child by parthenogenesis. This mutation passed down from her daughters.
* Hang Time, it doesn't go as well as initially planned, forcing Mary Beth to improvise.
* Gone Girl The money then gets stolen from her by Jeff and Greta, two fellow low lives who figure out that Amy is carrying a lot of money and being pretty naive about it.
* GoodFellas by the narcs when they find the carton of egg-shaped bricks of cocaine.
* Heart of the City. Heart has an anxiety attack before a dance audition and her friend hugs her to comfort her. A couple of other kids see them and jump to conclusions.
* he wrote half of the rules and because it is too dangerous for anybody to be his partner after his last one died.)
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters (who had been trailing the group) steps in to try and capture Hak Foo.
* God of War (PS4) for over 100 years, he is completely psychotic and depressed and wishes nothing more than to have violent revenge on her like Kratos had on Zeus in the Greek Pantheon. Kratos also qualifies in God of War 2 and 3 against daddy Zeus.
* good demons in that series are beautiful at best. Inuyasha is typically violent as the 'beast' (claws included) while Kagome is the kind, more open-hearted 'beauty.'
* Heather Alexander's song "Yo Ho" is about being kidnapped and put to work as a galley. It's not a very happy song.
* Helliconia Winter, Uuundaamp uses a whip to direct the asokins (horned dogs) that pull his sled. He also wields it in self-defense, and to haul open the gate of a kennel to turn several other sledge-drivers' ravenous asokins loose on his pursuers.
* Hardison running through all of the political candidates they can't work with in "The San Lorenzo Job".
* Going Native: Finding more in common with another group than your own, sometimes to the point of betrayal.
* Haruhi Suzumiya he decides to act more to help his friends, especially Nagato, but still hates acting on anyone else's behalf.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, who casually hands out his cards to people who slip on the trail of ice he leaves behind.
* He Panned It, Now He Sucks!: Fans get angry at a critic for giving a work they like a negative review.
* Have Space Suit – Will Travel, the starships of the Three Galaxies organization can jump between stars and galaxies in almost no time at all. Most of the travel time between planets is entering and leaving the planets' atmospheres.

* He saves her again at the end of the first season, and unlike the first time, it was definitely intentional
* Hamlet's Hit Points examines one rather famous play and two movies for their narrative beats and how the understanding of these can be used to improve role-playing games.
* Happy Endings, it comes out that Dave isn't allergic to shellfish, he just didn't want to eat Alex's terrible jambalaya. Jane encourages them to share more truths because they're not a couple anymore and honesty will help their friendship. It doesn't go well, and leads to worse stuff happening throughout the episode for the pair of them.
* Highlander episode "They Also Serve..." focused on the Watchers, the mysterious organization who observed and recorded the constant warfare between the immortals but (theoretically) never interfered in the ongoing fights.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, Harvey will take the case. Any case. From criminal defense to setting up a business to civil defense to being the plaintiff. There seems to be a slight bit of specification with the other lawyers (Freezoid is explicitly an excellent criminal defense attorney, but even he is shown representing people in civil suits).
* Go Through Me: You wanna hurt my loved ones? You'll have to face me first!
* Green Lantern because of her murderer, Major Force, stuffing her body into Kyle Rayner's refrigerator.
* He goes on to explain that reputation if nothing is you don't back it up with reality. He feels that being known as a torturer is not enough to motivate underlings. Being
* Groo the Wanderer, said several pages after someone calls him slow of mind (once even to a flashback).
* Haunted Junction. Especially the Student Council Room and the Chairman's office.
* Guardians of the Galaxy as Drax still hasn't gotten over the death of his wife but he calls Thor a "handsome, muscular man" and says he looks like "a pirate had a baby with an angel".
* "Griffon the Brush Off" carried away with the pranking. Once again, her friends repay her in kind.
* Gremlins Unleashed plays around oddly with the trope. In the final boss against Spike in Gizmo's story, his defeat leads to his usual death animation. The ending cutscene after however shows him alive, humiliatingly captured by Gizmo. Similarly Spike kills Gizmo in his final boss battle, but the ending cutscene instead has him stuffing the still alive Gizmo's face with food as a nearby clock counts to midnight, implying an ill fate for the mogwai.
* He introduces a new monster (General Trayf) in the style of a fight promoter.
* Halo: Reach who is almost a decade older than the team's oldest Spartan-III, this makes sense.
* Heidi Turner, who was one of the leading heroic characters in Season 20, becomes Eric Cartman's
* Hero as such. People fight back against them all the time, but their members fully believe in their cause and are willing to die for it.
* Hayven Celestia crewed by ten thousand geroo slaves overseen by a single krakun (they live a very long time) commissioner. Jakari, one of the crew, acknowledges that the use of living slaves makes sense for deep space work since they can't be hacked, but on seeing their commissioner have slaves bathe her thinks that seems excessively decadent.
* Hanna is raised in the frozen wastes of Finland by her father who trains her from childhood to be the perfect assassin.
* Great Gazoo: An eccentric, possibly immature fey with incredible powers.
* Greatwinter Trilogy by Sean McMullen, scientists reconstruct ancient cetacean DNA and create three members of the species who turn out to be telepathic/smarter than humans.
* Harry experiences this personally when he gets the shadow of the fallen angel Lasciel in his head. She offers him help remembering things, blocking out pain, and translating other languages, which saves his rear multiple times. She also has solutions to any problem he faces—all of which, by strange coincidence, involve Harry becoming a full Denarian. Harry is well aware of this and even quotes Gandalf at her when he refuses.

* Hatred, dismissing his name as 'not important' in the trailer, was given plenty of names by the Internet, including Nadim Pourtant, Nothem Portent, Not-him Poor-tint, or Nahdim Portunt.
* Highschool of the Dead long enough for the civilians to escape. Their fate was left unknown, but it didn't look good.
* Heart Gold, Soul Silver games have an infrared port atop the game cards used for certain features (such as the Pokéwalker) which are not present on fake versions. Some G5 events had an infrared scanner at the entry used to detect illegitimate copies of the games.
* Guild Wars weapons that can save the world from the Destroyers. Fortunately for the world, they turn out to be right.
* Grand Theft Auto to start a turf war in sparsely-populated territory.
* Harlan Ellison got through his Army service by volunteering to help other soldiers write letters to their girlfriends. As a result, the other soldiers looked out for him and often helped him with his duties.
* Hercules in the same game also qualifies, since he uses exclusively brute strength in combat with his
* Hearthstone: Heroes of Warcraft in little more than a robe and wooden mask.
* Gone with the Wind: Scarlett doesn't see that Melanie was her closest and truest friend until Melanie is on her deathbed. Nor does she realize that she loves Rhett much more than she loves Ashley until Rhett decides to leave her.
* here when she inevitably has an accident at school as a result of being pee shy and is thus subsequently bullied as a result.
* Gold–Silver–Copper Standard: Because who honestly wants to realistically calculate relative market values and exchange rates?
* gods of both sides have apparently agreed to end the ridiculous war, and seek to manipulate their followers into developing the moral character needed to consider peace. Unfortunately, they do so in... 'radical' ways. So radical, that both factions would rather keep fighting than admit their gods are mass-murdering jerkasses.
* Goku through an underwater cave to rescue a kidnapped Trunks, and Pan is mortified and throws his clothes back at him, telling him to cover up, but Goku just brushes her off.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged moments in front of a council of her advisers and allies. Sir Penwood screams "I can never have sex again!" in horror at their conversation, and we can't blame him.
* He becomes a murderer in Series Five, his parents are possessed by aliens and his uncle is a psychopath. Not to mention his girlfriend's eyes glow red whenever she's feeling particularly evil.
* Go Fish — a simple game played by children and those who don't want to think too hard
* Happens in the Pilot, where Jayne tests an earworm transmitter... while standing right next to Mal.
* Grand Theft Auto V who would go on a wild killing spree. Unfortunately, there's no such excuse for Michael De Santa and Franklin Clinton, who are more typical normal, down-to-earth GTA protagonists.
* He still answers to Mother Brain who towers over the both of them. In fact, pretty much all of Samus' archenemies are the biggest baddies in the games bar Kraid.
* Heroine's Quest: The Herald of Ragnarok has Ratatosk the DOOM Squirrel, who keeps proclaiming how he will doom you and destroy the world! Made slightly less imposing by the fact that he's, well, a squirrel.
* Good Against Evil in which a writer teams up with an exorcist to battle Satan, who has chosen the writer's girlfriend to be the mother of the Anti-Christ.
* Hero of the Kingdom when he sees her, but she doesn't seem like she even particularly likes him until he confesses his feelings (which the player didn't know he had) and they kiss. By the end of the game they're engaged, somewhat randomly.

* Guenevere studied strategy and leadership as a child and is dutiful, she's spent most of her life training by her father's side and has acceded to a marriage she may have mixed feelings about at least partially for his sake.
* Hank the Cowdog: Hank and Pete the barn cat may not like each other, but when Pete doesn't show up for dinner scraps that they'd usually fight over, Hank feels like eating scraps is no good without having a rival to fight over them.
* Greco-Persian Wars. The Persian King of Kings, when he got the report of her performance as opposed to the male commanders, is said to have quipped, "My men fight like women, and my woman fights like a man."
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 Mantis gets bashed into unconsciousness by a piece of flaming debris.
* he once single-handedly invaded the Skaven stronghold of Hell Pit by accident simply by following the path of most resistance through some tunnels, carving though an army's worth of Skaven abominations before he got bored and wandered off. In-game he's one of the best duelling lords in the game, especially given his (relatively) low cost.
* High School D×D, this is how another being's transformation into an angel or devil generally works, Issei being the primary series example. It does not need to be done to save someone from death, but it can if necessary.
* Hammerjack, pretty much everyone has communications implants in their brains. One of the deadliest hammerjack techniques involves hacking someone's implant and causing it to overload, making the victim's head explode. This is done by both Vortex and Heretic to dispatch enemy soldiers.
* he had taken the wrong bus). This was due to Carroll O'Connor having gone on strike over a salary dispute.
* Hancock has the titular character warn a girl he takes back to his home that she needs to get off when he climaxes. The film then cuts to his trailer shaking like crazy. As he reaches the moment, he tosses the woman off and blasts three holes on his roof with his ejaculation.
* Hercules: The Animated Series features the sentient Armageddon Bow, created for Ares, that doesn't want to be used as a weapon. She (yes, it's a female bow, and Ares is not too keen about it) ends up as Cupid's bow.
* Heat features bursts of Hash House Lingo in the diner where Breeden is slaving when McCauley offers him a job as getaway driver. McCauley makes the new order $12 million to go!
* Gunnerkrigg Court classes) is out in the open, while other part of it (the Cretan labyrinth off the old library, the secret railway with stops at the giant animal holding cells) is hidden from most students. (Many of whom have supernatural powers or hail from non-human backgrounds.) As if that's not enough, there's also the TicToc birds, whose presence in the Court no one can explain.
* Highlander episode "Little Tin God", Duncan MacLeod faces an inexperienced immortal who claims to be an angel. MacLeod snarks, "And I'm Father Christmas."
* Herbal Essences ads. Or any shampoo/conditioner/soap or "body wash" really. It's all the same basic principle
* Goldfinger was so popular that actor Harold Sakata got several more roles as taciturn thugs wearing black bowler hats and suits.
* Grumpy Cat's Worst Christmas Ever, Crystal freezes like a mannequin during the paintball scene, to avoid detection.
* Heroes Hiro does refer to himself as a "superhero", and the characters have swapped "abilities" with "special powers" and "powers" occasionally. Especially Sylar. He doesn't have abilities, he has powers. And considering how he can slice the top of your head off like it's a hard-boiled egg, it's best not to argue.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City is an all-female criminal organization that helps with the process of illegal plate trading currency in Vice City.
* Grant Morrison, the first arc features an evil circus troupe led by the Nightmare Fuel inducing Professor Pyg. In the second issue, the new Robin visits the actual circus and more Nightmare Fuel starts when he is attacked by Professor Pyg's masked henchmen.

* Hate Plague: A plague that makes everyone grumpy and impolite at best, murderous at worst.
* Grand Finale has apparently made Starfleet wise enough to keep a sizable fleet near Earth, allowing 18 ships to immediately converge on a Borg transwarp aperture which Voyager opens less than a light-year away.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers sure went out of her way to describe Italy dressed as Sailor Moon.
* Haruhi Suzumiya when Haruhi makes cherry blossoms bloom in the wrong season for a dramatic effect for their student movie.
* God help you when you get one that's previously lived outside a house with a constantly crying child in residence.
* Greystone Valley is twelve years old and the valley's best hope to be rid of the evil warlord Baelan.
* Gotham: In "Beasts of Prey", Cobblepot has a guitar player's fingers cut off in order to persuade him to abandon his interest in a particular girl.
* High School Dx D) Rias often get into quarrels over him, such as getting into fights with their demonic powers or arguing who Issei considers more attractive or likes more.
* Hamlet. It seems to be remembered by pop culture as a tragic tale of true love, and the "Wherefore art thou Romeo" scene, but otherwise you'd be hard-pressed to find someone who knows the plot in any kind of detail.
* Happens in the television commercials for Australian electrical goods retail chain The Good Guys. The customers are swamped by sales staff, all of whom are singing.
* He's Dead, JimThere will always be an obvious cue so we know the exact moment when a character dies.
* Greece is the only one besides France who will just casually walk around butt-naked.
* GURPS Player Handbook suggests the DM should reward a clever player who comes up with a new gambit by letting the trick work ... but only once. The example given is throwing sand in an opponent's eyes to blind him — might work once, but if it were really that effective all the time, "fighters would leave their weapons at home and carry bags of sand instead." Thus to keep the game balance, creative gambits should only work once.
* Gravity Falls that, while covering stories during the events of the show and even before it, likewise has a few set in-between when Bill was defeated and Dipper and Mabel leaving for home.
* Henry Clay and John C. Calhoun. Seriously, these guys never died (much to * Gravity Falls", the first segment has Dipper tiring of getting made fun of for his squeaky "puberty voice".
* Heather does wise up to the social aspect of the show by the end of the third season.
* Head of the Class was about a classroom full of these, learning socialization skills from their ex-hippy teacher.
* heartstrings, the relationship between Marinette and Chat Noir is kicked off when he intervenes to save her from a mugger, though she ends up having to help him when he drops his baton in the process.
* Graffiti Kingdom, so "devil" is probably just a title for "ruler of demons" rather than an actual entity.
* Godzilla vs. Kong: Reaching the center of the hollow Earth is made out to be a huge ordeal, requiring a specialized vehicle, and even a powerful kaiju like King Kong has trouble getting in. When Godzilla needs him to return to the surface though, he simply blasts a hole straight through the Earth.
* Having spent the majority of her life either preparing or actively attempting to slay him and
* He snaps out of it when he is reminded of his moment of generosity earlier in the episode.

* Hades and is absolutely horrified by the implications and the emotional toll it must take on them.
* He does point out that it's painful to take a foot off your height for hours on end.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, it is eventually revealed that Irie is taking care of Satoko and Rika and the two are technically under the custody of the village chief Kimiyoshi. It is left unexplained for most of the series until then.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, after he tries to enter the Headmaster's office without knowing the password, Harry kicks a wall out of frustration, breaks his pinky toe, and hops on his other foot in pain.
* Gloria Gaynor's famous disco number "I Am What I Am" is so popular that most people forget that it was originally from the Broadway musical about gay pride called
* H'el on Earth causes Superboy's DNA to unravel. To save him, Superman puts his battle-suit on him, stopping the process. Until he is cured, Superboy can't remove the suit or he will die.
* Happy Heroes, ram head-first into a moon, and develop amnesia - thus staring the main plot of the episode.
* Gorilla Grodd, the main villain of the episode), only for the angry scientist to snatch it away and point out the "Don't feed the animals" sign.
* High School D×D. EVERYONE stops fighting and turns to look at him like he was going crazy.
* Halo. The books include more ambiguous conflicts, such as that between the UNSC, humanity's international but increasingly authoritarian military authority, and the Insurrection, a coalition of rebellions across many of humanity's colonies that sometimes veers on terrorist (the SPARTANs were originally created as elite counterinsurgency forces for this conflict).
* Hamilton, the first meeting between Hamilton and his future wife Eliza Schuyler is described in two songs - "Helpless", sung by Eliza, and "Satisfied", sung by her older sister Angelica. Eliza recounts the meeting in a decidedly romantic way (there's her instant infatuation with Hamilton and his insistent courtship of her) - but Angelica later says that she sacrificed her feelings for Eliza's benefit, and that the penniless Hamilton was interested in the Schuylers' money and would have been content with marrying any of the sisters.
* Heat Guy J. Kabuki Road does have (or is implied to have) brothels, strip clubs, etc. but there are other means of entertainment, too.
* Go Daddy.com ads are this, with a level of unapologetic blatancy that is hard to describe.
* Greek Mythology, with upwards of 30 noted hybrids by mortal women, several of his hybrids ascending to the pantheon, such as Heracles and Dionysus.
* Halo with the humans to take on the aforementioned threats. Other than the above alterations, the plot pretty much follows the above description to a T.
* Heart of Ice (Andrew Lang)", Prince Mannikin's main weapon is a spear.
* Heartwarming Orphan series, which adapted most of the classic examples listed under Literature into anime series.
* Heel–Face Turn and returns to fight alongside his former enemies as Lifeline.
* Go Animate and giving them a community guideline strike. The innocent user would call the police to arrest the bad user for false flagging.
* Greyfriars Bobby, who's pretty definitely the originator of the Discworld example.
* Hauled Before A Senate Subcommittee: A character is required to publicly answer questions in front of a governmental body.
* Gossip Girl: Chuck and Blair almost constantly, especially in the second season. First, because of Chuck's fear that him and Blair needed the thrill of the chase and would be boring as a couple. Later on, because he didn't believe he could make her happy. Eventually, he realizes he can't keep running from his feelings.
* HG/SS, where Arceus can give you a special Egg, which contains either Dialga, Palkia, or Giratina. The developers say Arceus does this by completely dismantling and then rebuilding the entire universe exactly as it was, except now this Egg exists.

* Hellraiser, who seduced her prior to the events of the film. It doesn't really go well for her...
* Harvest Moon: Island of Happiness has Pierre. He outright looks like a ten year but is apparently of marriage age.
* Handy Manny, Pat mutters "No more cherry pie for me" and "Watch out for those giant porcupines!" in his sleep.
* Guild Wars are based around these (Dzagonur Bastion, Thunderhead Keep, Eternal Grove, Genius Operated Living Enchanted Manifestation.)
* Hilarity Ensues. Parodied when Kuno warns his opponent he is prepared to lose.
* Harry Harrison cities onboard believe themselves to be in an inaccessible river valley. The ship tenders are if anything more rigid and religious: an extraordinary asceticism rules their lives and repairs are sacred rituals.
* Greece is the result of putting two opposing extremist politicians, namely a neo-fascist and a Communist, next to each other in an environment as tense as a country in the midst of a deep financial crisis, with one of the world's biggest economic blocs bearing down on them.
* Golgo 13. In the anime episode "Pretty Woman", a Mafia boss finds that his mistress has secretly met someone in a hotel room. She 'confesses' that she slept with his underling (untrue, as she loathed him) to hide that she was meeting Duke there to arrange the boss's assassination.
* Grimoire of Zero. Her father was an ordinary human, but her mother was also a witch.
* "Groundhog Day" Loop" — she snatches them from Giles' hand and crushes them underfoot.
* Hamilton, the Record Needle Scratch comes at the line Sittin' there useless as 2 shits, hey! turn around, bend over, I'll show you where my shoe fits! shows as an example of Hamilton's inability to stop talking, he just keeps going and going and does not know when to shut his mouth.
* Good Morning, Vietnam, where Sergeant Major Dickerson (Army) tries to intimidate Airman Cronauer (Air Force):
* Gunslinger Girl, Speranza uses a pair of AR glasses basically as a smartphone: talking to her mother, time management, navigation, and photo taking.
* Grunge. Bands like Milk Teeth, Fangclub, Muskets, My Ticket Home, Speedy Ortiz and Citizen have proved "true Grunge" isn't as dead as hardcore fans of the genre think it is. It'll never be anywhere near as popular as it once was, but it's a notable revival nevertheless.
* Henry Ford and the Ford Motor Company had a saying with most of its early vehicles, "Any customer can have a car painted any color that he wants so long as it is black."
* Heel–Face Turn with martial arts skills unparalleled in the series.
* God-Emperor, it failed miserably and made everything worse. Ironically, he himself ended up being worshiped by the humans of the Imperium.
* Good Burger movie: Ed gives Dexter a teary, heartfelt farewell speech, though neither of them is going anywhere.
* Hercule Poirot's fussy Belgian refugee with his immaculate moustache and incisive "little grey cells", has a pretty good claim to being the second most famous of literary Great Detectives just behind Sherlock Holmes. Which, given Poirot's legendary vanity, has to rankle just a little bit.
* Harvey Street Kids", Lotta gives this excuse when she tries to back out of doing Halloween at night:
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters, the current reincarnation of the chi warrior Ben Shui, who was given the power to reincarnate by the Heart of Earth. In a later chapter, the spirit of a previous Chosen One, Joshua Norton, expresses the theory that they've been linked to the Earth in a way that causes the Chosen One of each age to be born as what is needed for that age instead of just reincarnating into people similar to the previous incarnations. For example, while Murasaki was a force against demons because her country needed her to fight the Oni, Rasputin was a politician and manipulator because that was the age of politicians and manipulators, etc.

* GSh-6-23, fires at 6,000 rpm, and an even more powerful CIWS variant can fire 10,000 rounds per minute but is 2 tonnes heavier than the standard 6-30. Gas-powered guns trade freedom from an external power source and a vastly lighter structure (The GSh-6-30 weighs only 150 kilograms, less than a third of what the GAU-8 weighs!) for increased vibration at some cost in reliability, and the higher rates of fire required a belt feed system which proved prone to jamming under severe g loads. The beltless feed versions that solved this problem limit the rate of fire to a (still astounding) 8,500 RPM. Dud cartridge stoppages are solved through the clever use of ten pyrotechnic "cocking charges" to start/restart the firing cycle.
* , Harry says this almost word-for-word when Dumbledore shows him Trelawney's first prophecy.
* Glitch Techs: Part of the job of the Glitch Techs is to keep the Glitch-based issues with Hinobi's game technology under wraps, erasing memories and resetting physical damage.
* He Is a Good Boy: Crange, an acorn and the main character, has the cupule on top of his head removed to reveal his brain on several occasions, most notably while being experimented on by a mad scientist and during the comic’s penultimate arc.
* Gremlins appears in them as well (looking directly at the camera in the convention scene in the first one and as a disgruntled cinema patron in the second).
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix: The infamous scene in Grimmauld Place where Harry starts shouting at Ron and Hermione, rendered as a full page of dialogue in block capitals. It's even a meta example: in the American version, the shouting starts at the top of the page, which means that readers, after getting through a rather sedate conversation, are suddenly assaulted by an eye-searing passage when they turn the page.
* Hercule Poirot; both books were written during the Blitz and were originally intended to finish the series if Christie was killed. They were instead published in the 1970s as is, which makes them somewhat anachronistic.
* Haruhi Suzumiya for his age, as displayed by his continual references to widely varied aspects of culture, history, mythology and advanced scientific concepts, many of which a high schooler would have no reason to know, but is far below average as a student, possibly due to his cynical and apathetic personality. In the novels, he ends up needing Haruhi's help on at least one assignment.
* Heralds of Valdemar in a fight, with her best asset being a working knowledge of when to get the hell out of the way, which keeps her well out of Sue territory.) Almost unusually among Lackey's Herald characters, the relationship between said badass and the self insert is not a 'life bond' but instead a friendship that gradually turns into something more. Also the character herself is described as somewhat dumpy and middle-aged as well as practically blind without her glasses. She is also very much a secondary character in the story.
* Hamtaro averted the trope in the west, where all of the marketing and merch was gender neutral, but played completely straight in Japan where toys for the series were primarily aimed at girls, with the series getting girlier and girlier as it went on.
* Gojira featured a reporter giving a blow-by-blow description of Gojira's destruction of Tokyo, ending with his description of the monster's attack on the tower he was broadcasting from.
* Greenwillow instructed the percussionist to tap a stick against the wooden side of the orchestra pit in the number "The Music of Home."
* Godzilla vs. Megaguirus circles around Godzilla, and is strong enough to knock Godzilla down and even lift him into the air and throw him. Her main strategy involves confusing him with her high speed and painful wing frequencies, giving her the opening to fly past and strike Godzilla repeatedly and pick him up. Once Godzilla manages to catch Megaguirus's stinger in his mouth and bite it off, she's completely defenseless, and goes down to a single shot of his Atomic Breath.

* Heart of the City, where Dean is Heart's best friend and frequent partner-in-crime. He's generally more befuddled by girls than disgusted. (Heart's occasional declarations that Dean's her boyfriend draw a bemused "Um... okay" as often as not.) One New Year's Eve, he actually dressed up in a tux and announced that to celebrate, "I thought I might hang out with the prettiest girl in Philadelphia." Making it clear that, yes, he meant her.
* Hell House LLC II: The Abaddon Hotel picks up eight years after the events of the original in the same style.
* Gorilla, Interrupted: When asked what his newly invented Battle Pack does, Dex replies, "I don't know. Battles?"
* Halo: As an authoritarian, caste-based theocracy led by a race of technocratic cultists (the Prophets/San'Shyuum), the Covenant as a whole is very much not a democracy, and the same applies to the internal organization of most of its subordinate species:
* Haunting Starring Polterguy: This is poltergeist Polterguy's default method of moving forward.
* Heroes ends with "To Be Continued...". Even the volume finales ended on to be continued.
* Got Milk?" is played out like this, in the style of a retro kitschy black-and-white horror movie about a milkman, killed in a milk truck accident, who rises from the grave as a mummy to take milk from a supermarket.
* Glee, Puck uses his job as a pool cleaner as an opportunity to service older women.
* Hellsister Trilogy: In the 30th century, there is only one surviving member of Clark Kent's bloodline, Laurel Kent.
* Gunnerkrigg Court and can outright keep the secret by simply talking to thin air like a madman.
* Guest from the Future Alisa and Yulia disguise themselves as an adult to get by the pirates.
* hallucinatory versions from the dreams of P'an Ku IF he wasn't stopped) and Madness tokens, which could have various effects and lead to other such effects.
* Harry Potter is very idealistic and lovable, as well as arguably innocent.
* Hi-de-Hi! and it wasn't very funny, either. He was replaced by the similar Sammy Morris, played by Kenneth Connor.
* Guards! Guards!, a naive Carrot ends up living in a house of "seamstresses" due to this sort of misunderstanding. He mentions that his first night there one of the girls asked if he wanted anything, but they had no apples, so he said no. The madam encourages him to stay, since she's essentially getting full time security out of the deal.
* Half an issue into Eddie Brock's transformation into Anti-Venom, we get a three-way fight between him, Spidey, and the then-current Venom (Scorpion). Spidey and Anti-Venom soon realize they're more or less on the same side and gang up on Mac, but not before Peter quips:
* Heat Signature: Some characters have to steal a heavily guarded device as their personal mission, either to pay off a debt or provide for their family, after which they can retire.
* Graham Greene, says "Does this skin look pink to you?", to which Datak replies that we all look the same to him.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, but his Mutant powers kick in as a result. ... and when he finally gets there, it turns out mankind figured out how to go faster than light a few centuries after he left, making his entire mission superfluous.
* he gets quite graphically torn in half between two escalators. In the same episode, when Roger is mauled by a bear on a remote island, he and Francine have to eat his bottom half to survive. Roger shrugs it off because his body will just grow back, then freaks out at the thought that it might not.
* Heroes of Might and Magic had a unique death animation for them, whereas they collapse on the ground, while their sword sticks in the ground with its handle straight up, just like a cross on a normal grave.

* Good Taste of having eaten "A growth from the dirt" and the protagonist is banished. His mother's parting words are; "Can’t you see, Minor-mine, that what you did was not in..."
* Goat tokens from Scapegoat can be substituted for fusion materials a la King of the Swamp (which isn't in this game) after being on the field for one turn. While you still need an original piece of fusion material, it greatly cuts down on the difficulty of fusing.
* Grave Encounters has one scene where the title ghosthunting crew is attacked by a series of ghostly black arms reaching out of the walls and ceiling. An earlier scene shows one of the characters being grabbed by an arm that bursts through a door window.
* Gungrave are invincible and always get back up even when riddled with bullets. Yes even the mooks. Their muscles continue to move even when it should be physically impossible. The series' protagonist is one as well. Brandon 'Beyond the Grave' Heat won't stop until he settles his score with Harry.
* Harvey Dent, now Two-Face, also hunts down members of the mob, Gordon, and Batman because he views them to be responsible for Rachel's death. So now It's Personal for the villain.
* Here's the Plan: Awarded Best Chilean Short Film at Chilemonos 2017.
* Happens in "1600 Candles" after Francine accidentally causes the Smith family to forget Roger's 1600th birthday by using a classified CIA experiment to revert Steve to a toddler, causing him to become the center of the family's attention. Because of this, Roger blames Steve for making the family forget his birthday, assuming that Steve is at fault due to getting all the attention instead of Roger. As a result, Roger decides to pants Steve in the school dance while Francine manages to fully escape his wrath.
* Hazbin Hotel: Hell is almost exactly like Earth, has all the sex, drugs and booze you could want, you'll get a cool demon body with awesome powers, you're restored to perfect health, you'll get to see your loved ones again if they end up in Hell but most of all, there's no sign of any kind of eternal punishment. Aside from the yearly extermination, there doesn't seem to be much reason why people should avoid going there, much less be redeemed.
* Hilariously, due to the glitchy nature of early Second Edition, he's only a
* Hercules (1983) had this as the default for pretty much every character.
* High School Musical there's Sharpay Evans. She has parents who own a Country Club.
* Heirverse: Poor Gin and with good reason. Also oddly enough Aizen as well, though in a different context.
* He has since moved back to the U.S. and become an American citizen.
* Heavy Rain includes a sheet of origami paper and instructions on how to fold a Spanish Pajarita origami like the ones the Origami Killer leaves lying around.
* "Heads" are vampires who are addicted to drugs of some kind, and seek out users of said drugs to get a fix from drinking their blood. The practice is looked down on for needlessly risking infection (vampires can't catch hepatitis or HIV, but they can
* Hänsel und Gretel by Engelbert Humperdinck has a carefully notated part for a "cuckoo instrument."
* Green Lantern, a variant of this is done for Hal Jordan by someone else. Someone who, incidentally, despises Jordan.
* Harold Lloyd, an inspiration for Clark Kent, found that if he took off the stage glasses of his most famous film character, no one recognized him.
* Golden Sun games, Isaac and Felix are Heroic Mimes when you play as them, but have a number of speaking roles when you're playing the other. Both have speaking roles in the ending, where you're not playing as either, Felix also says "why" once when you are in control of him in one particular scene (which might have been a translation goof since he originally just said "?").
* high time ratio. So by the time the guy would be found (if ever) he would have spent the equivalent of several hundred years in an empty room with nothing to do and no way to even kill himself. Kovacs is confident that the goon would be utterly insane before the end. Naturally the guy cracks and tells Kovaks what he wants to know.

* Grojband: In "Zoohouse Rock", Trina persaudes Mayor Mellow that Grojband are actually musical bears and he cages them as the zoo's newest attraction. Their attempts to free themselves result in a riot where the townsfolk release all of the animals to run wild through Peaceville.
* headjack is unplugged while their minds are inside the Matrix, they die instantly.
* Gravity Falls Dipper, Mabel, Stan and Soos disguise themselves to watch Gideon's official opening of the Mystery Shack and reveal of Gideonland without being caught by security. The Pines are all wearing black trench coats and sunglasses and make no attempt to disguise their hair, but Soos is wearing a fake beard and a sign on his signature hat that that reads "NOT SOOS."
* Halo 3, Chief has to make an impromptu evacuation from a landing ship. He leaps out and falls from low orbit, using a door as a drag shield, and lands stunned for some hours, but still alive. Johnson finds him and lampshades Chief's tendency to keep doing this.
* Global Effect (an early 90's PC game) would let you nuke enemy cities at will. Made the whole screen fade into white for a few moments. It was a guaranteed way to punch an ozone hole in the sky.
* Highlander is one, which isn't surprising when his native culture (as Ramirez claims) threw children to the dogs for fun.
* Go Wait OutsideYou are asked to wait outside while something is finished; even if you come back in immediately, it's already done.
* Haku has shown to be fast for age, as he was able to quickly close the gap between Zōri and Waraji and take their swords from them before either of them realised what had happened. This is
* Guerrilla: A German Marxist group isn't keen about supporting the British Black Panthers, since they aren't sufficiently radical for their taste. Eventually they come around.
* Goldberg told a story about Hennig spraying his seat on a plane to make it look he had urinated on it.
* GURPS Illuminati University is set in a very weird pun-filled interdimensional university where wizards, demons, aliens and budding mad scientists happily mingle.
* Grand Theft Auto was released by the 1C Company. Translations of the games to languages like Indonesian, Arabic and Filipino are also available.
* Happens in Chapter 7, while navigating the Grand Line's weather for the first time, after Cross has finished expressing how much he loves feeling alive, Nami snaps for him to get to work:
* here, but the short answer is that the film is completely wrong. If Monty only offers the choice to switch when you pick the correct door, then of course switching always loses you the car.) In fact, this is a standard question in statistics about how reality is reality and mathematics is just a model of the real world.
* Guilty Gear often assume Johnny's last name to be "Sfondi." This is not the case, he's never referred to by anything more than his given name.
* Hatfields & McCoys dramatizes the famous American feud that perpetuated itself on reactionary acts of vengeance.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2, as noted below in Literature.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) episode "Daimar the Demon," the title character believes he is predestined to destroy Eternia. He-Man makes the giant monster realize that he has free will and doesn't have to be evil, and so Daimar chooses not to hurt anyone after all.
* "Gridlock" dealt with a future human culture with smart drugs that could produce single specific emotions.
* Hannah Montana. He lets Jackson be abused by his chief, and refuses to ask a smaller discount for the abuse episodes to decrease in intensity, but can't bear it when he is subjected to a day of it himself. Now remember that most of Robby Ray's time is used to make his popstar daughter have a successful career.

* Hawn and Streep were both in their mid-forties when they played these eternally young parts. In an uncommon example, both women are older than Willis; Streep by six years, and Hawn by ten. The film earned an Oscar for visual effects.
* Grandmaster of Theft. Or so it seems, it turns out it was a fake and she lied about even bringing the real one in the first place.
* Hidalgo the main character releases the titular horse back into the wild, but without either of them being upset (in a good way).
* High School Musical has a rather subtle version. Watch Troy's face as he first hears Gabriella sing. The guy just totally lost his heart.
* Halo: Reach more than a few Scorpions. After several days of Convenant invasion, when you gather together a bunch of stragglers, survivors, and the lost and make them into a counterattack, you're not going to have everything up to the standard TO&E. And Warthogs are a lot more likely to survive the initial 'run away and hide in the boonies' phase than Scorpions.
* Heck this dates as far back in the original series when it wasn't just about card games. Yugi bests him in a Duel Monsters card game and gives him a mind crush in the hope he'll be a better person. Not only does this not work, but Kaiba goes on to make an
* Griffin as Carly's love interest in "iDate A Bad Boy". Freddie suffers some severe
* Having acquired a lion in the course of preparing for the bicycle race, the gang decide to use the animal to intimidate an assortment of local shopkeepers for a "protection" racket. At a butcher's, they decide to order ten pounds of steak for the lion. Inevitably, the money and the steak are put in identical bags, and the gang doesn't realise they've thrown the wrong bag into the lion's room until after he's eaten every dollar.
* Gorillaz) and one for speaking (Nelson De Freita until 2017, being replaced by Kevin Bishop).
* Grevaine's ride ain't half bad—it's a classic Cadillac with a souped-up sound system used to power the living dead.
* Hayate the Combat Butler He does try to return to apologise but finds he's unable to.
* Hidden Depths type) who adopted a much more sophisticated persona as she got older. She is snarky about bimbos who don't wise up with age, while also being annoyed in a self-deprecating way about how little attention she is getting compared with her days as a sexy airhead.
* Hannibal, he simply seems to enjoy being creepy for creepiness' sake, the sequel turns it into a kind of weird romantic love for Clarice Starling, with him sneaking into her house and watching her sleep (while touching her face and hair). In a deleted scene, he breaks into her car and licks the steering wheel to get the taste of her. Not to mention the part where she's talking to him on a cell phone trying to find him, and it turns out he was behind her touching her hair. The weird thing is that it's actually meant to be romantic.
* Hellsing organization that hunts down vampires and unbelievers and is full of serious badasses, among them Father Alexander Anderson, who uses technology designed to regenerate wounds to put him on the level of the vampires he kills. Iscariot frequently clashes with the Protestant-based Hellsing Organization, a vampire-hunting organization which isn't above using undead to fight undead.
* Hades (nicknamed Hell) is very aptly named. There's also Haven, which was originally a symbolic name but became far more ironic over time. Hope and Refuge also fit under this trope, as does the planet Torch, specifically named for its symbolic connotations.
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child can alter the past, as the villain is nearly successful at using one to bring back Lord Voldemort.
* Gomez Addams, of all people, starts to show this in the Broadway adaptation of * Government Drug Enforcement: The state pumps its citizens full of toxic substances to keep them complacent.
* Godzilla vs. Hedorah, Hedorah’s suit actor, Kenpachiro Satsuma (who also played Gigan, Pulgasari and Godzilla himself during the Heisei era) suffered a bout of appendicitis on set and had to be rushed to hospital with the suit initially still on, as it took too long to remove. There, according to his memories of the incident, he found out that anaesthetics didn’t seem to work on him.

* Gundam". For example, Amuro Ray's home cluster was designated as "Side 7".
* Godzilla (2014), Ford, with absolutely nothing else he can do, points his sidearm at the female MUTO as she's approaching him, clearly about to kill him. She suddenly stops and Ford looks puzzled for a second until the next shot shows that Big G has appeared out of nowhere and clamped down on the back of her neck.
* Guided Muscle: At the end, after the Coyote falls for the Roadrunner's last trick and gets blown up by his own dynamite trap, he puts up a sign saying "Wanted: One gullible Coyote. Apply to manager of this theater."
* Gotlib parody. The source material being what it is, it ends with all named characters death. The doctor who diagnoses all deaths as viper beat (yes, even Ophelia's) dies beaten by a viper. The gravedigger has an heart attack seeing all these corpses. Then the narrator shoots himself.
* Great Space Battles by DECADES) is described as being a veteran of 'countless' Imperial policing actions - but we never get to find out what these are, even though they are serious enough that battleships were required.
* Gulliver's Travels scientists and philosophers with no common sense. The keep control over the lands below by dropping boulders on their heads when they don't comply with Laputa's rule.
* Heavens Feel has one too in Shirou's fight with Saber Alter if you don't bring Rider along. Shirou kills himself to stop her, to let Tohsaka proceed without interference. Taiga and Ilya in the Dojo are a bit troubled because they can't really call it a bad end due to beating Saber in a one on one fight, which is pretty damn badass.
* Help Not Wanted: Someone at some point makes a comment to each of the four goblins about their foul breath. Chapter 1 in particular has Grovmar telling his older brother that his morning breath smelled worse than the pile of trash they were sleeping in.
* he has permanently lost interest in Courtney and will never return to her due to having become fed up with her behavior.
* Grey's Anatomy: with almost all of the major pairing, all of which easily span over three seasons.
* Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later. Apparently this was intended from the start, however, and the reveal was only put off because Laurie’s actress wanted to have people actually think she’d killed Michael for a few years.
* Help! I'm a Fish labratory. What makes it sadder though, is that Stella is a little girl, about five.
* Hereditary, Annie builds miniatures. The main way we learn this is through the opening shot, that depicts the unoccupied dollhouse she's building, before zooming in and revealing it to be identical to her son, Peter's, bedroom.
* Hayao Miyazaki is a notable exception. His critical reputation in the West is on par with the best live-action directors.
* Goats powers from "The Panties of Potency". This had nothing to do with the artist having trouble drawing Toothgnip standing on all fours, honest!
* Hanna hinted at Hanna being a lesbian, rejecting a boy but kissing Sophie later on. In the series, Hanna and Sophie are vying for a boy's attention.
* Help Not Wanted has the four main goblins, none of whom are skilled in using weapons. They usually rely on creating makeshift weapons on the fly or simply running and hiding from danger instead of confronting it.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, where none of the news sources in the opening chapters tell Harry anything (which, as Hermione tells him, is partly because he doesn't bother to pursue them carefully).
* He can use the Buster Punches — a move unique to Brad's custom martial arts style — hinting towards his own connection to Brad.
* Havalina Rail Co., the Love theme is entirely about a relationship on the brink.
* Hamilton from Jefferson and does a provocative dance with him climaxing in a high kick. She never appears again.

* Gunnerkrigg Court contains a minor retcon. In the first chapter, Antimony reconstructs a robot from spare parts in order to carry a shadow across a bridge (it was the only logical answer). To many, this implied that she was at least somewhat technologically proficient, as she is able to look at a piece of what we assume to be complex machinery and repair it almost completely. However, as the comic continues, we learn that her best friend Kat is actually the scientist and Antimony is perplexed by machinery if anything. So, how did she rebuild a complicated gizmo like Robot? Well, we learn that all she really did was snap his fully functioning joints together (showing she is at least familiar with the "Head bone's connected to the neck bone" song), and didn't actually need to mess with his hardware to reboot him.
* He tends to run his hand through his hair when he's about to concentrate on something. (
* Harris's version is still fairly well remembered, however. It's usually one of the first songs mentioned whenever the topic of musical
* He gets his own back later when he realizes the doer and his wife were
* Guild Wars 2 the bug that prevented him from attacking you was fixed, it's still much less difficult than the fights that came before it.
* Goku's Kaioken is a pretty straight example. When used at low power and in short bursts, it can be used almost indefinitely. When used the way Goku does it, sometimes boosting its effect as high as
* Good Ship Chronicles is perhaps the greatest pilot alive, but also dangerously unstable and prone to snap necks at the slightest provocation.
* Heathers stereotypes—stating that they "weren't dirty, they just had flair", making references to ribbons, rhinestones, pearly necklaces and purses, deciding that Kurt and Ram must've been fans of the Village People and Judy Garland in life and just generally painting them as having extremely feminine qualities that they clearly didn't actually have when they were alive. Possibly justified, as the suicide note JD faked for Kurt and Ram painted them as having hid their "gay forbidden love" from a disapproving world, though the fact that the first assumptions their fathers make are "rhinestones, disco, pearly necklaces and Judy Garland" is still pretty telling.
* Hadestown it's a long, dangerous trek, and he's already battered before Hades has his workers beat him up and attempt to force him out. Hades additionally threatens to kill him once he's done singing.
* Hanlon's Razor: Among some strains of thought, most of the ills that plague humanity and cause conflicts come about through simple ignorance, not premeditated malice. Thus, promoting a breadth and depth of knowledge through a better education actually makes us better people.
* Happiness in Slavery, much to the amusement of others who know better.
* Goodbye Lenin, when his mother (who doesn't realize that the Berlin Wall has come down) sees a Coca-Cola banner on the building across the street from her apartment in East Berlin, the protagonist explains it by showing her a fake newscast claiming that, after it was proven that Coca-Cola had actually been invented in East Germany, the company agreed to build a factory there as part of an out-of-court settlement.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire believed Frank Bryce, the caretaker of the mansion where he lived, committed the murders. Bryce was not charged because the forensics experts failed to establish a cause of death - the Killing Curse doesn't leave signs that can be noticed without magic - but the villagers remained sure Bryce was guilty... somehow.
* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life. The DS games take place at least a hundred years in the future from the others.
* Had a scene where, in the final stages of larval infestation, Noah's
* Helix's ability to coagulate fuel, and satellite communication to the outside world, though instantaneous, is only active for an hour a day. Then the satellite is sabotaged directly after the CDC's lead researcher decides he's lost control of the situation and states that he intends to call for backup.
* Great Mazinger Jun Hono several times. In one of them, he stated, "Girls must not fight". The ironic -and frustrating- part is he intervened right when Jun was gaining the upper hand, and because of him, she was unable to defeat the Warrior Beast.

* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince there is a inversion. When the new (unnamed) Prime Minister is warned by the new Minister for Magic (Rufus Scrimgeour) that Voldemort is on the move, the PM remarks that the Ministry should be able to handle him since "you can do magic." Scrimgeour reminds him that Voldemort and his people can do magic too. In other words, magic is less effective when used against other magic users.
* hammy actor with an inflated ego, he has the laugh in his repertoire as well.
* He sired Myrmidon (and thus the Myrmidon people) with Eurymedusa by transforming the both of them into ants (hence the name—
* Hanna-Barbera series have laugh tracks, firing at more or less random times. It doesn't help that by 1971, instead of using the more sophisticated and costly Douglass laugh track services, the company was using a "bootleg" laugh track machine that recycled the same five laughs over and over in a very obvious fashion.
* Grimoire’s Soul: Almost everyone on Lystrata can use magic, though in Kesterline proper the general populace is under the belief that only male nobles of the Mage core can use magic. Outside of Kesterline issues with or a complete inability to use magic is treated as a disability.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) come-back to save both the day and Teela.
* GURPS, though in their case it's because they're all so old they exhausted their creativity millennia ago.
* He also occasionally yells out the names of Asian dishes, such as moo goo gai pan (being the only Asian words that come to his mind).
* Hal Clement trope. Still, it has almost no plot at all, being significantly less interesting than his other stories.
* her grandmother, her uncle (dad's brother) and his daughter, Kim's cousin.
* Grand Theft Auto 2 double-subverts this with remotely operated vehicles; yes, the game is designed such that the player character is unlikely to be attacked while the camera perspective focuses on the remotely operated vehicle. But that won't protect you if you're standing next to a burning car when the remotely operated part starts, and if said burning car explodes before said remotely operated part is over.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, Rena Ryuugu packs quite a punch. She usually does it playfully but still...
* High School U.S.A. into taking them for a ride in it, and then causing them to crash the car by distracting them. The kids then concoct a scheme to persuade Archie's dad that he wrecked the car himself.
* Halestorm to a Halestorm song. Lovebites opened for Halestorm on their 2019 tour of Japan.
* Hell Teacher Nube, with a taste for parfaits and confectioneries...and a huge scythe.
* Go Seduce My Archnemesis: Exploiting your nemesis by having sex or flirting with them.
* Hard Head: Characters who hit their heads never suffer anything more serious than a headache or dizziness.
* Gold Digger, where one character translates an ancient message in rhyme, and is called on it.
* Go into the Light: When a person dies, they have a near-death experience which causes them to cross over to the light.
* Ground Control at his disposal, and has the personality of a paladin, always choosing the "good" option over the lawful.
* Hellsing and seems to think that he has the right and obligation to decide which vampire lives and which vampire dies. At the moment only ONE seems to be considered worthy to live and that one was intentionally made by him and had to go through hell to earn his respect. Most vampires only stay around long enough for him to kill them.

* Heroes scene mid-way through Volume 4. Turns out that she is not dead and still plot important.
* Harry Potter does one after being revealed as a villain at the end of the first book.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys. The trope is best demonstrated in the episode "If I Had a Hammer".
* Grimm's Fairy Tale Classics episode "Puss in Boots", the narrator lists everything that the miller's three sons received from him after he died. When the narrator says that the youngest son Max was left with the family cat, Max lets out a big "WHAT?", and the narrator talks to Max about what his father's will has specified.
* "Golden Parachutes" has the members travel through various points in American history and be brutally killed at each turn. It's animated by poster designer Luke Mcgarry and his twin, Joe.
* Hellboy Animated movies, Hellboy is drawn with a huge upper body but mere human-sized legs.
* Half-Elven books are 3/4 elf, 1/4 human. It's also mentioned that some of the Kagonesti or "Wild" elves have a small amount of human ancestry that Tanis can see in their faces.
* Heck, there's even Pokemon who are fruits or vegetables: Exeggecute, Sunkern, Seedot, Ludicolo, Tropius (technically its banana beard), Cherubi, Cherrim, Whimiscott (based on the cotton plant as well as the
* Harry Potter and the Escape from Gringotts, showing the involvement that Bill Weasley, the bank's security trolls, as well as Bellatrix and Voldemort played in the whole thing.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire: When Hermione goes to the Yule Ball with Krum, a generally respectful and decent Quidditch star who Ron had been a fanboy of, he tells her she's "fraternizing with the enemy." This leads to them fighting for several weeks.
* Gods of Mars, the physical form of the Breath of the Gods—an alien machine which can revive dying stars and create entire solar systems—is a swarm of metal blades whirling around a core of glowing energy. The machine is not connected to or supported by anything, and the blades occasionally pass through each other as if they were intangible. The sight of it does funny things to the human mind.
* Graduate Meeting of Mutual Killing was labeled as the leader not by general agreement, but by her own word. However, she indeed is trying her best to be a levelheaded leader, with varying grades of success
* GURPS lists the offensive potential of several engines. Because GURPS assumes that most engines will not have particularly coherent exhaust streams they're relatively weak compared to normal armaments.
* Gotham has Gordon catch it after practically the whole GCPD abandons him to Zsasz, to the point where he actively screws over one cop at one point in the episode.
* God-Emperor waking up and giving a set of orders before going back to bed. Said orders result in the creation of The Ship. With a keel of approximately One Astronomical Unit in length (1 AU = 149597871 kilometres, by definition the distance from the earth to the sun), the remains of the Imperium stripped to build it, Holy Terra itself hollowed out and fitted with cogitators and command system and the Imperial Palace itself becoming the bridge and God-Captain of Humanity guiding it.
* Hector Con Carne). On one of these occasions, annoyed by the situation, states that "I'm not even supposed to be on this stupid show anymore!"
* Hidekatsu Shibata is the narrator. In the English version, Bob Magruder narrated the series until his death, after which he was replaced by Jim White.
* Guardians of the Galaxy that Groot had in fact died, and "baby Groot" is a different being—essentially, the old Groot's son.
* G-Rated Drug to the girls they proceed to beat him into a bloody pulp, leaving him utterly broken as he weakly cries "Mommy..."
* Henry Kuttner with all kinds of extra abilities — which refuses to obey any order not relating to the original single purpose.

* Glee, Terri Schuester thinks having a baby will strengthen her marriage. She goes as far as faking sonograms, wearing a false belly, and refusing to let her husband touch her in order to pull off her fake pregnancy. Her plan was to adopt the child of one of Will's pregnant students immediately after birth and pass it off as her own.
* Hawk the Slayer kills them both the moment his son dies. In fairness, he does insist they be armed first.
* Groundhog Day made him unaccountable for his actions, one of his crazy stunts includes driving on the train tracks...towards an oncoming train. He's able to get off before the train smashes him.
* Highlander movie (1986) and the series, the immortals can regenerate from any mortal wound, and do not age. They can only be killed permanently by cutting off their heads (or presumably if their bodies are burned to ash too quickly for them to regenerate, although this is never explicitly stated in the movie). In fact, they have to die at least once to become aware of and "activate" their immortality, otherwise they'd spend their days as a mortal until they died from old age.
* Guardian the story also has it as an insurance scam, but with the wolf as an innocent patsy. "I know that wolf! He's got asthma!"
* Highly Visible NinjaNinjas are stealthy, but they can't be so stealthy that the audience doesn't know they're there.
* God of War: Ascension, Kratos sees through Tisiphone's illusion because she was wearing the ring of his wife Lysandra.
* Harry Potter are wearing cloaks with hoods, only lifting them when they are about to suck out your soul.
* gunfire. Helpful if you're dropping your boys into a hot zone and need to take out a cluster of high-level enemies. The Tiberium Wars pods land gently, slowly, and are generally sitting ducks until the Zone Troopers get out.
* Herdier, being partially based on a Scottish terrier, has part of its fur give the appearance of an impressive moustache. It evolves into Stoutland, whose moustache is
* Good Eats; just like real yeast, they do nothing but eat, multiply, and pass lots of gas.
* Higher Learning fratboy, where they lay on the bed and he reaches under her dress and lowers her panties. As they go into it, the girl starts to have second thoughts and urges the boy to stop for a moment and put on a condom; he ignores her. After struggling and screaming a bit, the girl breaks free and flees down the stairs and out of the dormitory, with the rapist awkwardly pursuing her with his trousers around his ankles. The mostly male crowd, not understanding what has just happened, laugh and applaud. It's clear the crowd is laughing at the rapist rather than the victim, but it's still uncomfortably inappropriate humor in the midst of a tragic scene.
* Harry Potter proves to be this. He primarily acts as headpiece for the Ministry with recommendations from Malfoy and other respected individuals deciding his actions rather than his own opinions. However, unlike his Undersecretary who is decidedly evil, Fudge simply wants to stay in control, and he seems to know that any disturbance in the peace would see him quickly ousted. As such, he refused to review the case of Sirius Black or accept Voldemort's return in order to maintain the status quo.
* Graham Aker of the Union and later Earth Sphere Federation, with his sportsman-like qualities or rather Samurai-like hence his nickname "Mr. Bushido".
* Halsey - "Is There Somewhere". This is an interesting one because it is written from the perspective of the former other woman (whom the boyfriend has chosen his partner over)
* Grand Theft Auto III; additionally, the mission "The Getaway" features the player character serving as getaway driver.
* He's been around for 6 games and counting, and no-one knows his honor's name. Or his brother's, who is also a judge. Or his Khura'inese counterpart's own. Judges in general in this series and the spinoffs (other than Justine Courtney) never seem to get given names ever.

* Harsher in Hindsight before Scully learns that she is barren as the result of her abduction in season two, and a year before she loses a child that was conceived from the eggs stolen during the abduction.
* Googlebrains in general, but he changed his mind, instead opting to drop the "uploads every Friday" schedule.
* Hamlet. If one were to take in exact punctuation, capitalization, and spacing it would be more like 1 in 10^360,763.
* Guilded Age race could be considered good or all that nice. Either they are: xenophobic, condescending, tyrannical, downright genocidal or all of the above. Really, the only reason why Humans are labeled like this (at first), was because they were the only ones shown.
* Golgo13 without damaging either the violin or the player. He's provided with concert footage of the target, and plays out this trope when he notices a moment when the player tilts his violin enough so that the string is exposed.
* Hellsister Trilogy, Supergirl still eats physical food because she likes the taste -and the sense of normalcy- but she gets as much energy as she wants from yellow sunlight.
* Haruhi gets bleeped in the anime as she blackmails the computer science club president to give her a computer by taking photos of him groping Mikuru. In the event he tries to deny it, Haruhi says she'll say all the male thugs ganged up on Mikuru and BLEEP her.
* Hentai artists NaPaTa and saitom. While NaPaTa didn't show his face at Anime Expo 2016 whatsoever, saitom, on the other hand,
* Half-Life 1 tells us that rag-tag Resistance teleporters simply swing around Xen like a dimensional sligshot, making teleportation cheaper and a bit safer.
* Greater Tuna: "Well, what else do you expect from a town that has an elk-hunting season and no elk?"
* Highlander Brigade, due to his appearing in his underwear in an episode.
* he has recognized quotations from Shakespeare and played sports well enough on occasion. He often fails to understand the popularity of things like fads, fictional movies, and spectator sports, and certain forms of humour leave him cold. He speaks positively about the anonymity of living in a hotel since it allows him to avoid "useless" conversations with neighbours. Some of his personal conversations end abruptly when he sees something that brings his mind back to his current case, and he hastily takes his leave to follow up an idea, with the others reacting to his sudden departure. All that said, other characters seem to regard him as merely a bit unusual. Julia tells him, "You're not the only one who lives inside your head." Murdoch's continual studies and the deep concentration to pursue them also have provided him with highly useful expertise.
* He-Man, when Superman is attacked by Skeletor, he confidently stands still, thinking the villain will only hurt himself or damage his weapon, only to be shocked when Skeletor's magic sword slashes his chest. Superman then properly dodges or blocks attacks after this. This was the first time in the comics that Superman's vulnerability to magic was brought up.
* He subverted his reputation for upbeat, funny, over-the-top characters in
* Guns N' Roses released their album, Chinese Democracy. Not long after, Axl Rose said they were planning to do just that.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers movie. One of the lines in the song was "Let's Dance!"
* Good News and Bad News (an M-rated MLP fic): Twilight's been dating Flash Sentry, and when she discovers she's pregnant, they go to tell Twilight's father... but before they can say anything about it to him, he happily greets Flash as "my boy" and, at Twilight's confused reaction, admits that Flash is his son from his first marriage. The couple are stunned when they realize what this means for them.
* Greedy, bad-tempered, class-conscious manager Basil Fawlty is a rare protagonist version of Pantalone (albeit an
* he comes to realize that humanity is as part of the world as is nature, and he relents in his mission.
* GO-GO Tamagotchi, Himespetchi wants to act in a movie with her crush Mametchi and disguises herself as a boy to achieve this. The name she assumes as part of the disguise? "Himeboytchi". For added bonus points, "hime" is Japanese for "princess", which begs the question of why Himespetchi didn't think to change that part of her name.

* Godzilla, however this is uncertain, as they never return to show that they actually survived the injuries sustained in their respective movies after dissolving into particles of light and fleeing to space.
* Green Arrow found him huddled in the bathtub, half-dressed, with the shower on full blast.
* Hare-Way To The Stars has a similar gag, with two of these in a row when Bugs asks Marvin the Martian for help getting back to Earth.
* Hellblazer are the English politicians, military, policeman, and aristocracy who are not, has been written by Englishmen like Jamie Delano, Paul Jenkins, Warren Ellis, and Neil Gaiman.
* He later does the same with his second daughter Anne Neville, who marries Edward of Lancaster against her will.
* Heroic Sacrifice saving Titan from the rock. When Beaufort and Fircone go to investigate they see badger pawprints around where the boulder was. Someone from Krono's group intentionally sent the rock rolling and tried to make it seem like it was the cub's fault.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers ending, you don't want to know what the bad ending is like.
* Halo also feature holograms that can be deployed to distract enemies, a Covenant technology that was later reverse-engineered by the UNSC.
* Goosebumps originally took place in 1995, while the protagonist's younger sister was born in 1988. The newest edition changes those dates to 2015 and 2008, respectively. Nothing else is changed, though, so for some reason only one of the family's computers has internet access.
* Hercules seems to have this misfortune. Before he is even born Hera conspires to make his life as hellish as possible by denying him the kingship Zeus intends for him. He is attacked by snakes as a baby. He is forced to undergo twelve years of harsh labors after killing his family in a Hera-induced rage and has additional torments thrown on by Hera during those years. Everywhere he goes he has to fight monsters or gods. He is often cheated by kings after he fulfills his obligations to them, leading him to seek retribution later. He saves Olympus from a race of giants. Finally, he is betrayed by his second wife, who inadvertently poisons him with hydra blood, leaving him in agonizing pain and having to be burned alive. His crime that started all of this? Being born the son of Zeus. All that waited for him in the underworld? Wandering around wheat fields in the dark for all eternity. The least Zeus could do was elevate him to godhood.
* Harry Potter And The Ice Princess, when Harry wonders how Elsa can get around using public transport when she's royalty. As Elsa explains, few countries know the names of every member of their royal families, and in Elsa's case she's further aided by the benefit that she hasn't been officially introduced to her people yet and so few people outside of her family know who she is.
* Hard Light projections since Eugene's now strong enough to put his fist through floorboards... and also heavy enough Clover can send him crashing through the boards.
* Haku reveals that he's also male. Kurenai quickly apologizes, and figures he's probably so used to it that it doesn't annoy him anymore.
* Hardspace: Shipbreaker used to be a Cutter but some unknown cloning mishap took him off the field; since he sounds entirely normal otherwise, it's most likely something physical.
* Hannah Swensen ended up with a book of recipes that had been featured in the series up to that point (the main character owned a desert bakery, so most of the recipes were for cookies, brownies, and similar). And one of the stories, while not a cookbook (since it had a plot), included enough recipes to host a Holiday Dinner; in fact, the very dinner the characters were getting ready for while the plot happened.
* Guitar Hero, even as it was already losing steam in the wake of the recession.

Unsurprisingly it came out early in 2010, the same year the series died its first death.
* Harry Harrison had Bill getting recruited by an insurgency and then by military intelligence; eventually a bust occurs and every insurgent turns out to be (or at least says they're) working for the military.
* Harry Harrison duology, it's established that Earth is overpopulated and polluted. At the same time, it's still an important planet.
* Guys tend to have a dark, yellowish or brownish complexion; pasty guys are almost certain to be some sorts of
* GURPS for chivalric duelling with blunt swords (the relevant "tech" being applying 19th century metalsmithing to armour), a masked combatant who wins two out of three fights removes their helm to reveal "the well-known feminist agitator Miss Viola Dalrymple".
* Highlander starts on top of a warehouse. Both men fell through a skylight and the fight continued inside the warehouse.
* Godzilla inflicts this trope on the bereaved singer's fiancée in the Arrogant Worms' "Tokyo Love Song".
* Guardians of the Galaxy: Ronan emerges unhurt regardless of who attacks him or with how much ferocity.
* Heather Hudson normally wore prescription glasses began wearing wrap-around shades when she became leader of the team. When she received her version of the Vindicator/Guardian battlesuit, Madison Jeffries modified her shades for wear with the suit.
* Harkovast, making the need for mammary glands a somewhat universal adaption.
* Goblin Slayer that will only end when either all goblins are dead or goblins rule the world.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019), even though the MUTOs were to blame for the destruction and Godzilla was actually the one who stopped them. Though it's unclear which Titan actually stomped on the Russells' house.
* Harry's uncle tries to get him to take a travel-sickness pill by offering to put in it a cup of tea.
* Higher-Tech Species on par with the Peacekeepers and the Scarrans. This is further indicated when they are the only party outside those two to bid on Crichton's wormhole knowledge.
* headless undead ninjas. The boss of said area, Mytha, is a half-woman-half-snake, also beheaded, who carries her head in left hand and uses it as the sorcery catalyst and occasionally as a magic grenade.
* Grimm; it seems to have happened before in the past. Of course, the Wesen known as Baron Samedi can also turn people into the more traditional zombie.
* Hannie Schaft, The Girl With the Red Hair. A member of a Dutch resistance movement who orchestrated many assassinations and sabotage efforts against the Germans, she was eventually caught and shot. As the story goes, two soldiers were tasked in doing so, but the first only wounded her, despite shooting at close range. Supposedly, she told him, "I shoot better than you," before she was killed by his partner.
* Guardians of the Galaxy implies there's a version of the 2014 movie in the Marvel Comics universe. Peter Quill's only comment is a bemused "it takes a few liberties".
* Harvey Beaks was not renewed after Season 2, with its final episodes moved from Nickelodeon to the less-popular sister channel Nicktoons. Its cancellation only became public knowledge after creator C.H. Greenblatt confirmed on Tumblr that Nickelodeon had pulled the plug (he was not happy with how they treated the show).
* Grand Funk Railroad's "I'm Your Captain (Closer to Home)" revolves around the captain trying to talk his crew down from one of these, but he apparently doesn't succeed.
* Harry Potter, Sirius drops his wand in shock when his father reveals he never actually disowned Sirius after he ran away.
* (he was going to use a typewriter) before he can begin, putting an abrupt end to the act.

* Greased Lightning, about an African American moonshiner and early NASCAR driver.
* Halo 4, the two groups oppose each other again, with the opening level dropping your team right into the middle of a big battle between the two.
* Han Solo, as a rogue, has a DL-44 heavy blaster pistol, as in his own words, "Hokey religions and ancient weapons are no match for a good blaster at your side, kid."
* Has Edward Vogler from the first season. His first act as board chairman is forcing House to fire one of his team, ostensibly for budget reasons, as a sick test of obedience.
* He simply replaces the old backpack with a new one capable of keeping up with and even exceeding the speed of a Trans-Am'd Kyrios in fighter mode without needing to transform himself, along with additional beam cannons
* "Hey! It looks like you're reading an article on TV Tropes! Would you like help with that?" If those words set off an involuntary shudder, you almost certainly used Microsoft Office during the deeply unloved era of Clippy, the "helpful" assistant that constantly interrupted your work to tell you it thought you were doing work and would you like it to help with that work that you would have finished already if you weren't desperately seeking the
* Gordon the Big Engine has become this from Season 8 onwards due to
* Grappler Baki fake. In any case, wrestlers are depicted as legitimate combatants; Mount Toba nearly kills Baki even though he hasn't been in a real fight for a very long time.
* Gohan and Krillin are the best of friends and, particularly during the Saiyan and Namek arcs, a great example of bash brothers (though, ironically, Krillin is close friends with Gohan's father and is more of an extended uncle to Gohan). After the seven year time skip, the next generation of warriors
* Halo: Combat Evolved plays. One of them asks "Why do we always have to listen to the old stuff?" and their sergeant replies that it is part of Earth's culture.
* Greyland Films also makes rather decent realistic masks, but out of foam latex (like many movie prosthetics/masks are), and while some can be pretty realistic, they are not as impressive (or expensive) as the silicone masks are.
* Hamtaro before it ever aired in Japan. It should also be noted that in Japan it was episode 173, and the English dub didn't dub past episode 105 in order, so this episode was treated as a special in the U.S. instead.
* Heathers, where Veronica has, pre-movie, ditched her old friend Betty Finn to get in with the Heathers and participates in their mean girl hijinks, but a) is extremely self-aware and self-loathing about it all and b) still speaks to Betty in the cafeteria and once invites her over for a game of croquet—the film deals with the social aftermath of such a shift rather than making the moralization of it the Aesoppy point.
* Heroic Neutrality: They fight evil only when it hurts their friends, but consider friends they've just made as worth fighting for. Since villains who aren't targeting the Straw Hats tend to threaten every innocent person in the vicinity, conflict between the two forces is pretty much inevitable.
* Hand Waved as having come from a different dimension. This is usually the most in-depth explanation they ever get anyway.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, or Satako, and it usually involves getting Keiichi into a ridiculous outfit, pulling a prank, pushing someone's buttons or out of his clothes entirely.
* Great Sleep however, and now the Dynasty is looking to rebuild their former strength with more mundane force of arms.
* Good Eats featuring bananas and plantains spoofed this multiple times.
* Hector Berlioz's "Symphonie fantastique," ends with the symphony's main theme being cut short by a guillotine-like crash, followed by a drumroll and "ta-da" chords.
* Gotham City Garage underneath a mountain where he fabricates his army of robotical enforcers.
* Goofy short "Tennis Racquet", due to the amount of gardening going on during the tennis match, one of the Goofys ended up doing a backwards version of this, stepping on the rake while walking backwards and getting hit in the back.

* heavily enforced have one, that character can die without guilt, just like Shizuka does in the anime continuity, although she survives in the gamebook continuity.
* Hama was an imprisoned waterbender who taught herself the dark art of bloodbending, allowing her to control the bodies of her victims in a rather painful way. She used this to escape the Fire Nation prison. In her later life she became at least as destructive and cruel as the fire benders she hated, as she used her bloodbending to abduct innocent Fire Nation citizens.
* Goten and Trunks. At the age of eight, Trunks is able to become a Super Saiyan, much sooner and more easily than Future Trunks, and Goten became a Super Saiyan at seven, making him the youngest Super Saiyan in history.
* Happens between Fran Fine and the Sheffield children quite a few times on
* "Here Comes my Baby" by Sons of Admirals (at least in the Youtube community)
* Heroes Never Die: Dying over and over has given Izuku experience easily comparable to Pro Heroes. Death Arms internally notes that when he first saw Izuku rush to save Bakugo, the look on his face made him think he was a pro who had just arrived on the scene.
* Harry Potter. It extends to the Quidditch World Cup too. The team Harry is supporting play fair while the opposing team use all manner of dirty tactics.
* Happy Heroes, the villain Big M. decides to put aside his hatred of the Supermen for once to save them from having their energy drained. He has his assistant Little M., who is in Lightning S.'s costume, use his lightning powers to strike him and destroy the energy-draining machine (he was just going to have Little M. strike the machine until he realized the lightning zaps him every time he uses the ability).
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. Hanaukyo Taro inherited his grandfather's fortune and, with that, hundreds of maids willing to serve him. In each season he has three personal maids who constantly try to seduce him. The problem: he's only a child.
* Gwent: The Witcher Card Game: The Ritual Sacrifice card triggers all deathwish effects on your side of the board, in its art Brewess is leading the children of Velen to the sacrifice.
* Goodbye to Halos is this. She openly asks "Is it weird if I want to love everyone?"
* Haru Natsu Aki Fuyu on other girls, much to Akiho's anguish. Eventually, Akiho makes it abundantly clear that she doesn't like it, and Haruka stops. While not necessarily afraid of commitment, until then Haruka didn't see a need for it.
* Grey's Anatomy: Teddy marries a patient because he has a chronic illness and cannot afford surgery so that he will be covered under her insurance. She originally has no romantic interest in him, but they fall in love, though he unfortunately dies shortly after.
* Hideaki's father, Jigoro, is brutally honest with his words, coupled with extreme
* Gunheads General deViers starts out as a competent and respected commanding officer but after his previous campaign turns from a major victory into a massive disaster, he becomes obsessed with preserving his legacy. He sends his Army Group to attack an Ork world in the hopes of retrieving a legendary battle tank. If he can accomplish his goal he will be proclaimed a hero of the Empire and will earn a spot in the history books. The fact that his entire Army Group is getting destroyed in the campaign does not seem to matter to him at all.
* He graduates fully to this trope when Chthon possesses him, replacing his removed arm with one of pure scarlet chaos energy that is continuously changing shape and hurts to look at, smiling a smile that rips his cheeks into something the Joker would envy and sending all of reality into a tailspin.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2 says that they married Hannah Abbot and Rolf Scamander, respectively.
* He saw Rodrigo die by a poison apple, and dropped Cesare off a high wall.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team: When the Ryuuka first appeared, she mistook Taro for a new servant.
* Hannelore asks Pintsize to find pictures of sexy firemen (although it's debatable that it was porn,

* God Hand, Gene boots a mook out a window. He then helps a second mook line up with the window before doing the same to him.
* Harry Dresden uses wind magic almost as often as fire magic in the early books (he begins using force magic instead in later books), maybe even more often but to less destructive effect - except in the case of the napalm-firing Renfields in
* Harlan Ellison. Studio heads, however, were unimpressed, claiming that the premise wasn't "big enough", at which point Ellison stormed out of the meeting.
* Haroun-al Rashid compared to some of the others (which tells you quite a lot about them!), but it still involves a real city being effortlessly transformed into a fantasy by the protagonist of the series.
* have people would be more fun, and Metagaos is far too hungry to care whether what he's eating can feel or not.
* Gosu. Before him, Sa Paecheon, the Devil of the Venom Hands, was considered the strongest person of the old murim.
* Heart of the City don't age, but their pop-culture references remain current. In 1998, Heart was an elementary-age girl swooning over Leonardo DiCaprio; by 2008, Heart was an elementary-age girl swooning over The Jonas Brothers. Also worth a mention is the fact that Heart and Dean have a new school teacher every year despite not getting older.
* Hannah Montana seemed to address this change, from Miley wincing at the girlish look of the new room her dad put together for her, to Hannah trying new styles of music and getting backlash for it, to Miley Stewart wondering if fans would accept the real Miley without the wigs and flashy clothing after she revealed her identity and performed as herself.
* Heroic Trio when a bad guy takes over a train station as bait for the heroes.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince for their staff to wear that the two realized they had just invented wizard body armor, by accident, as a joke. This swiftly caused them to ditch the prank angle and just flat-out sell the hats (among other items like cloaks and gloves) as protective gear.
* have the costume party where the title characters go as themselves and get lost of compliments on the reality of their costumes.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix Ron decides to confrontationally interrogate Cho on her favorite Quidditch team right when she and Harry are having a moment when he notices her wearing a bit of their merchandise. It is something he feels very strongly about, but he doesn't seem to have a clue until Hermione tells him off for it that he was messing things up for Harry.
* God of War The first phone number is given as a phone number, but the second only appears as what appears to be a bunch of randomly-placed numbers. (Follow them left to right and from top to bottom to get the number.) As of December 2017, twelve years after the game's release, both numbers still work.
* Hc Svnt Dracones most people store their personal data in cloud servers accessed by placing a quarter-sized "Toggle" on a smartglass surface. For just 50 credits a Toggle can be implanted in your palm.
* Grant Morrison Magneto has been compared to the Nazis, nor the first instance of someone pointing it out to him, or even Magneto acknowledging it himself.
* Good Eats, half straight-up Edutainment Show. Alton prefers to educate the viewer on food science and cooking theory, rather than simply giving out recipes as most TV chefs do.
* HA-HAA! DANCE GAVIN DANCE, BABY! DOWNTOWN BATTLE MOUNTAIN TWOOOOOOOOO!!!!!" (from "Thug City").
* Hank Pym beliefs. Opposite of his girlfriend Wasp, who loves being a superhero (and isn't happy that Hank doesn't feel the same way).
* Golden Age stories often began with Bruce Wayne and Dick Grayson on vacation where they would invariably stumble across some crime or mystery that needed solving.
* Goku subjects Frieza to this during their fight on Namek. He fights until Frieza is no longer a challenge, then throws that fact in his face, believing that living with the shame of being defeated by a superior fighter was

* Gravity Falls, who also animated the pterodactyl from "Land Before Swine".
* God, who goes by His title ("God" or "Lord") as opposed to His name ("Yahweh," "Jehovah," or the nearest transliteration depending on the alphabet) in most translations.
* "Gypsies, Tramps, and Thieves" The daughter winds up repeating the mother's life.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Cormac McLaggen asks Ron if he can introduce him to Hermione, stating "I'd like to get to know her on a first name basis, know what I mean?"
* He later defeats a villain by analyzing the artistic and cultural significance of the design of the villain's ship.
* Hanging Judge: Runs their court like their own personal fiefdom; don't count on any justice if you're brought before them.
* Gundam 00 pilots a Gundam that specializes in close quarters combat; Exia and 00 are armed with massive swords that also have integrated beam rifles. The GN Sword on the Exia and the GN Sword III wielded by 00 Raiser are essentially massive switchblade-type broad sword that can rapidly cycle between rifle mode and sword mode. The GN Sword II is used in conjunction with another sword II and also doubles as rifle with a range of firing modes. Setsuna was less proficient with the rifle mode earlier in his career, but eventually becomes a better marksman (to the point where Graham Aker notes that Setsuna's ranged attacks are far more accurate than they were).
* Halo has the player shred an entire cruiser with a measly two missile pods.
* High Maintenance sometimes features Evan, who is asexual, sometimes to the consternation and confusion of his family. In "Trick", he makes a connection with Kym, an intimacy coordinator, and clarifies that he is not aromantic, and is in fact very lonely. Kym is somewhat familiar with asexuality but is still uncertain how to navigate Evan's boundaries, but they find a way to give it a try by episode's end.
* He also celebrated the 30th anniversary. First he largely re-recorded the original
* Her being oblivious to this trope was crucial in foiling her former master Winifred's plans.
* Going Postal. This being the Discworld, they hack the semaphore-driven "clacks" network, which is a telecommunications system, but without the electricity.
* .hack series, werewolves are a type of career that players can choose for their avatars in The World, providing they have an expansion pack and certain other requirements. They appear as wolf-eared humans with animal-like agility and strength, in addition to being able to shapeshift into regular-looking wolves.
* Hawkwind went away, pointedly dropped Moorcock as inspiring daemon, and wrote songs based on Philip José Farmer's sci-fi/fantasy instead.
* Guy Maddin features the odd quote, "Everything that happens will happen again. Twice."
* High Fantasy means that plenty of direct Lovecraft influences make their way into the series as well.
* Hawaii Five-0, Danny's nephew Eric is a goofball and casual misogynist, but inexplicably brilliant when it comes to science. Danny gets him a job at the morgue and he excels at it while still managing to annoy everyone he comes into contact with.
* Grumpier Old Men, Grandpa Gustafson (Burgess Meredith, in his final role) tells his son John (Jack Lemmon) about his daily dietary habits, which involve waking up with a cigarette and then eating copious amounts of bacon for every meal. Despite his habits, he's managed to outlive multiple doctors who've told him that it's a medical miracle that he didn't died thirty years ago, with his only justification being that "God forgot about me" before he shrugs it off and says "Well, it just goes to show you." John points out that ending a story with this implies that there's a moral, but Grandpa says there wasn't a point, he just liked telling that story.
* Gone with the Wind. He does everything for Scarlett because he is in love with her and believes someday she will realize that she loves him as well, and endures watching her moon over Ashley Wilkes and just generally abuse him.

* Hear someone 'rejoice' about finding 'joy' or 'yuetsu', or maybe just find things really 'COOL!'? They've probably read or watched
* Grand Theft Auto: Liberty City Stories were the two biggest sellers on the system, and were exclusives for a while, until they got ported to the PS2
* Going Postal "The broom must have been kept as an ornament, because it certainly hadn't been used much on the accumulations in the stable yard. On the positive side, this meant [Moist] had fallen into something soft. On the negative side, it meant that he had fallen into something soft."
* Hermione Lodge. Mother of Veronica. First appeared in Winter, 1942.
* God marked Cain after he killed Abel to prevent anyone from killing him. Years later his grandson killed someone in self-defense, possibly as
* Hauptmann has a laser mounted in it's "mouth", positioned in such a way as to look like the 'mech is smoking a cigar. Even better, it's traversable (the mouth is its traverse slot, much like those in turretless tank destroyers), so it can roll its 'cigar' back and forth in its 'mouth' for maximum macho points.
* Hero Must Die, but is brought back to life for five days in order to take care of problems that still persist after his victory. Over time, he grows weaker and more reliant on party members. The game ends on the sixth day, when the hero finally dies, this time for good.
* Guardian Cats and the Lost Books of Alexandria. He eventually makes his way to a library where an old cat asks him if he wants to go on real adventures. Marco jumps the call quickly, though his job as a Guardian isn't as action-packed as a typical adventurer's.
* Hand Wave that all the people Marik defeated are returned to normal when he's beaten, none of these revivals are adequately explained.
* Hellwasp swarms can inhabit dead bodies or possess living but helpless (such as from its own poison) creatures, although in the latter case it kills its victim in a few hours.
* Hayride: The killer uses a sledgehammer in at least one of his murders.
* Halo 5: Guardians's opening cutscene; while the impressive mobility abilities Fireteam Osiris show off are almost all doable during gameplay, the team cuts through Covenant and Prometheans at a rate that's impossible for the player to do even on Easy (especially when enemy vehicles are involved). Also, Osiris enter the battle by jumping from a dropship high in the sky; good luck surviving a fall anywhere near that high in the actual game.
* Half-Life 2. Probably the same goes for other Synths used by the Combine.
* Gundam Breaker was originally a rereleased version of the PS3 game of the same name, with more missions and parts to earn.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix The text plain out calls it a "double take".
* Hellboy and was amazed at moments that came straight out of his comics, and also said he doesn't care about the critical lashing it received.
* Hannah Montana is the only Latino in an otherwise monochrome cast, but he subverts the TV stereotype of Latinos by being intelligent, wealthy, and motivated.
* Hägar the Horrible is upset to see a wanted poster of himself, but not because he's wanted; rather, it's because they made his nose too big.
* HERZ: Kurumi is this towards Shinji. Neither Sinji’s marital status nor intellectual realization that she IS hopeless stops her from keeping trying to seduce him.
* He did an impressive off-the-cuff rendition of a story about the Duke of Devonshire's estate being inspected during
* Gunnerkrigg Court killjoy, unable to communicate comfortably with her peers and oddly passive-aggressive towards those older than her. Mostly due to her best friend Kat she's gradually moved away from this, to the point where it's unusual for her not to be smiling.
* Glory Hound ways mean he gets less than even his exploits would merit in the abstract.

* Hellboy (2004) named Karl Ruprecht Kroenen, who, we're told, became addicted to surgery and amputated most of his own face. We only briefly see what he looks like under his gas mask, but it's very nasty.
* Harold takes immense pride in his knowledge and intelligence, often gets frustrated with those who know less than he does, and will not hesitate to correct others whether wanted or not. Not surprisingly, most of the characters find him annoying, but he's generally a decent guy despite that.
* Hanna-Barbera had been around for so long, they were able to reuse jokes and gags (and yes, even plots) from older productions in newer ones. For instance:
* he lost rather quickly. The reason why Toxikon praised Ember so highly is that she is one of few Dragons who averted this trope, yet he also became frustrated that no one else is willing, or don't want to listen to Ember's progressive ways.
* He was obsessed with touching everything at a jellyfishing museum, and Jeffery was a mascot they were featuring there.
* Heat Guy J says the creator took elements from all over the place to create the city.
* Harry Potter series, only humans have last names. Magical creatures like house-elves, goblins, centaurs and giants have only one name.
* Harry Potter of the series, causing him to feel Voldemort's emotions.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban Harry's accidental magic makes Aunt Marge inflate and fly into the sky.
* Gotcha Force, although they're technically small alien robots. They're still obviously meant to resemble toys though.
* Harvest Moon series about relationships in a small farming village, but Marvelous wanted more emphasis on romance, farming, and gimmicks. After the series deviated too far from his original vision, he left and formed his own studio.
* Hanamaru Kindergarten has a horror-style ending song which features this.
* GrimGrimoire cycle Lillet goes through, they become even more powerful, until she's capable of summoning dragons, golems, and arch-demons.
* Hailey Hatred had a tendency to call out an opponent's name during matches. Usually right before bowling over them.
* H₂O: Just Add Water of a little brother. The only major conflict she deals with - that she's champion of the swim team and therefore has to give it up to keep her secret - is resolved in the second episode. Halfway through the first season and further into the second, the writers started playing her status as the responsible one for laughs and highlighting her neurotic nature.
* Harry Potter was quite fond of using this to demonstrate the incompetence or impotence of the Ministry of Magic:
* "Good bye Lind L. Taylor" "Good bye Raye Pember" "Good Bye, Naomi Misora" he knows their names.
* Gulliver's Travels, their heads have become stuck reclined to one side, and they often suffer from strabismus: one eye turns inward and the other looks up "to the zenith". Their clothing is ill-fitting because they insist tailors use quadrants and a compass rather than with tape measures, and it only makes them look ridiculous.
* Hercules: The Animated Series Icarus. Icarus hates him for dating her, but no one seems to notice the similarities.
* Heartcore and his Blast Bomb spell. This is pretty much an ability with the same power as a nuke, meant to take down entire cities with him.
* highly contentious. Accuser Wade Robson in particular noted that he had in fact testified twice on Jackson's behalf, and the depiction of him burning Jackson memorabilia was fabricated — in real life, an auction house revealed that he had sold the memorabilia to them (and tried to do it anonymously).
* Harper drove a Porsche Speedster - as befits the low-rent detective, it's painted a couple shades of primer (and presumably, in the mid-1960s, Speedsters were still affordable for low-rent detectives).
* Gorillaz. Then again, it's very hard to tell the gender of ravens, and it doesn't really matter except to other ravens.
* Green-Sky Trilogy. For many centuries, the tree-dwelling Kindar have lived in peace, completely unaware of their nearest neighbors, the Erdlings — actually other Kindar who were banished down there in the early days. The Erdlings have subtly interacted with Kindar society all along. They hang out under the orchards to catch falling fruit. They rescue and adopt babies who fall out of the trees. And Kindar who ask too many questions still end up imprisoned down there. When all of this is discovered, the Erdlings become de-wainscoted and the two societies prepare to integrate.

* Héloïse by Marcel Aymé, the thirty-five-year old Martin turns into the title female character each evening, causing her to clash with his wife. Things get complicated when Martin falls in love with Héloïse, and when Héloïse gets out and sleeps with other men. At the end of the story, Martin's wife tells him that Héloïse is pregnant; and that Martin/Héloïse will give birth to a boy who will soon turn into a girl. Ouch.
* Guys and Dolls (1955). In the opening sequence, a man in a tourist group is pick-pocketed by a local while he's distracted.
* God-Emperor of Mankind is approximately 50,000 years old, if his backstory is accurate, although he's spent ten thousand of them on life support.
* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de 3 — Owarinaki Unmei special: ten endings.
* Harry broke the First Law of Magic when he was a teenager prior to the series start, which is the cause of his antagonistic relationship with the White Council as they were going to execute him for killing in self defense. In
* Godslave's hiatus strips suggests that this is the source of conflict between Heru and Anpu.
* Hamilton. Act 1 chronicles Alexander Hamilton's rise in political power, ending just after he's appointed Secretary of the U.S. Treasury. Act 2 shows the gradual downfall of his career and personal life, ending with his death in the duel with Aaron Burr.
* has a budget that barely covers transportation and lodging for the small production to do its field recording. They couldn't even do any episodes on Scottish towns for the first series because they couldn't afford the train fare.
* Harris "Harry" Brewis, known as "HBomberguy," is a bisexual YouTuber known for his political and video game videos.
* Golden Sun for some odd reason, though inaccessible in default classes.
* He does eventually start to feel genuine love towards her due to becoming more in tune with his human emotions
* Hero Elementary episode "Forces Of Nature" reveals that Dr. Inventorman's first name is Martin, much like his voice actor Martin Roach.
* He also calls out that he's basically forced to be the hero in Avalar, since he can't go home otherwise:
* Guitar Hero, and the point where most players would just give up and put the controller down.
* "Hell has come to Earth. Those four are gonna send it back." —
* HERZ After doing that, she should look like a planet-sized, glowing, white-haired and white-skinned version of herself, but she prefers to keep looking human to stay with her family. However, people who come across her think that she is weird and even eerie.
* Grounded for Life had an overly helpful relative switch the family over to new energy efficient bulbs, cue a room full of 300W lamps with wisps of smoke rising from each.
* Havenfall Is for Lovers, Antonio puts his leather jacket on the heroine to protect her during a fire. She proceeds to wear the jacket on and off for the rest of the route, at one point waking up to find she's wrapped herself up in it in Antonio's absence, as an indication of the growing intimacy between them.
* Gossip Girl, Serena tricks Dan into believing that Blair dumped him, so he would cheat on her. This turns out to be true, but since Serena didn't know it is a case of manipulating into sex and, therefore, accidental adultery.
* Hey Arnold! has a non-romantic example. Harold sees that Arnold and Eugene are stuck in a very high tree and taunts them.

* Gossip Girl's Blair Waldorf finally says them to Chuck Bass but it doesn't go so well:
* has a Shinogu/Hatsumi ending, for those of us who thought the manga's ending was TEH FAIL.
* Heroes' Frontier Step: Performing an action so noble, without any sort of personal drive, that it solidifies you as a hero.
* Glee where the cast is singing, they will lip sync to a prerecorded track of themselves singing so the audio quality is better and so they can concentrate on dancing instead of singing and dancing at the same time.
* Graham McNeill novel, Pasanius manages to free himself because the Chaos torturers cut off his arm. Vaanes, realizing this, argues with, questions, shouts at the torturers to keep them from noticing.
* He's Out There narration of a storybook over footage of the carnage of the penultimate scene.
* going so far as to write an in-depth description of the medical staff performing surgery for a collapsed lung and internal bleeding).
* Heathers: The Musical that became the man he is due to society having "given up" on him.
* Grrr". It had a very catchy, if bizarre song ("hate something, change something...") sung by Garrison Keillor, who's not well-known in Britain, and was full of bright and surreal imagery. It also had a fun flash game, but it took three or four close viewings before anyone realized that it was a Honda commercial. And it took a trip to the website to realize what the commercial was about.
* gone on murderous rampages in robots many times before and hasn't been caught.
* Hannah Martin is introduced as eight years old in 1992, but is later identified as sixteen in 1999 despite being portrayed by the same actor. Worse, her parents Philip and Julie didn't even get together until 1985, and she wouldn't have been born until at least 9 months after that.
* Heroic BSoD: Your brain fails at a crucial juncture as you are committing your good deeds.
* Harrow in "Aegri Somnia" ("Hallucinations"), Harrow and the thug fall into the aquarium's shark tank during the struggle.
* Hayley Atwell been in places where movies with her in them are playing. She wasn't recognized either time, and all it took was a pair of glasses.
* Goldeen, a somewhat decent Pokémon in the main RPGs is regaled to the role of a
* Gurkha Rifles, let us say if the lorry was under fire and it would be dangerous to stop altogether so as to present a sitting target, the Gurkhas trained themselves in bailing out of a moving truck going up to 30mph and hitting the ground running. Observers have incredulously said it looks bloody dangerous and they are frankly surprised the tough little sods get up and dust themselves down as if nothing out of the ordinary has just happened.
* Gunpei Yokoi, with some going as far as naming it as one of the greatest games of all time.
* Glengarry Glen Ross, as Blake explains that the bottom two salesmen will lose their jobs at the end of the month, the chalkboard behind him tells the audience what the characters realize about that stipulation immediately: Roma has such an insurmountable lead on the leaderboard that the other three recognize they'll be fighting for just one spot. That's probably also why Blake went on with his "pep talk" despite Roma not being there.
* High School Girls: Subverted, where the sweet-looking glasses girl of the group is the dimmest and most perverted out of all of them.
* Gordon Freeman). His ability to speak Spanish isn't specifically explained, but it's not really much of a stretch either—especially since he lives in New Mexico.
* Herc and Carver start the show as this. They're briefly suspected by Daniels of stealing evidence money when they seize drug money from Wee-Bey and some of it goes missing. Then they actually steal money during a raid on a stash house in the wake of Kima's shooting. After spending season 3 working under

* Guild Wars is heavily metagamed, since each player can only bring eight skills into the match, and players are almost always on the same level in terms of overall power. Over the years, this has seen the rise and fall of many solo and team-based strategies, as new ideas blaze ahead, then die off as everybody else tries to counter it.
* Harry has to get a physical to prove his relatives abused him, much to his dismay.
* Grand Theft Me. His brother Yadu was the ancestor of the Yadavas — thus the ancestor of Krishna.
* Haven the Bolt-Gun Killer has the ability of impersonate others by wearing their skins as a Trouble. The killer uses a bolt gun in order to preserve the victims' skins to be worn later.
* Goof Troop. He is fairly self-centered and ambitious but generally is a good person and will help out others.
* Goldie Hawn (1972). In both films she plays madcap, giggly, high-energy blondes that bring a bolt of excitement into the life of a lonely man.
* Harmony and Association were settled by several fundamentalist sects' the names were an attempt to try to ease tensions. It doesn't work.
* Heathers take on socially progressive and liberal topics, teen bullying, violence, and murder. Paramount Network later burned off the series, heavily edited, over five nights beginning October 25, 2018.
* Haruhi Suzumiya (and the novel it's based on) with a Christmas Party, though it is very decidedly not the focus of the story.
* Gravity Falls: in the episode "Headhunters", Dipper has a fight with a wax version of Sherlock Holmes, the former uses a piece of fireplace equipment while the latter uses a sword.
* Halle Berry; she later gave an interview saying that she mainly did it because she was under contract (thus beholden to people).
* Gorillaz website, Murdoc had most of his internal organs surgically exchanged with 2D's.
* he can release poison from a venom sac he implanted in his abdomen and clothes apparently make it hard to release it.
* Green Lantern tried using a ring and could only fire off a single arrow of light before getting drained.
* Hide and Seek Emily's drawings of people with two heads are a clue to the mystery.
* Granted, we never learned the true name of the Triad member who'd become Mr. Negative, just that he'd pulled a
* Her sons, the 13 Yule Lads, arrive one by one over the course of the 13 days before Christmas, each stealing or harrassing people in their own unique ways. They also leave good children gifts in their shoes, and leave potatoes for naughty children.
* hentai, Mai and her co-workers are basically contracted to carry out this trope: they sleep with specific men in order to obtain sperm for female clients. Mai herself is a more benign example, since her fiancé Yuji died in an accident and she's working to get enough money to have a procedure done that will allow her to use Yuji's DNA (extracted from a cigarette) to have his child.
* Golden Films was fond of this trope. Most of the time they never explained exactly why the objects came to life:
* Golden Age the US President and then took over the country himself with an army of criminals.
* Harvey Birdman often blends longer beats with faster speed for comedic rhythm.
* Harry spends a week on the couch after comparing his godson Teddy's mood swings during a full moon to PMS.
* Gozu, a dead Yakuza brother returns as a young attractive woman with no explanation given why.
* Hannah Montana falls solidly into the airhead heiress variety. Some might put Hannah Montana herself in that category.
* Headhunter, protagonist Jack Wade does a swift, one-handed Neck Snap when doing a stealth kill from behind. He must have some impressive arm strength.

* Glee storyline with Quinn and milked it for all it was worth. That being said, Heather still had a noticeable baby bump that was clearly trying to be hidden with some looser clothes.
* Harrison Okene, a 29-year-old cook, was the sole survivor of a tugboat that capsized just off the coast of Nigeria during a heavy swell. A hundred feet below the surface, in complete darkness, Harrison survived as he crouched inside a 4 square foot air pocket. More than sixty hours later, he got the attention of a team of divers who had arrived to recover the crew's bodies. After two days in a decompression chamber, Harrison returned to land. It's worth mentioning that he was on the toilet as the boat capsized. This man survived two and a half days under the Atlantic, chest-deep in freezing water, in nothing but his underwear.
* Gustav Holst and flat-out refused to write an extra movement when Pluto was discovered in 1930.
* Greek Mythology, Poseidon is the hot-tempered god of the sea. Incidentally, he's also a god of earthquakes. So he doesn't just kill you with water.
* Godzilla vs. Megalon kaiju movies were low-budget shlock with laughable production quality and effects, an impression which overshadowed the genre outside of Japan for decades afterwards.
* Gravity Falls, which airs on the Black and White Period Piece Old Lady Boring Movie Channel.
* Hamlet Justified in that it was (allegedly) a fencing match instead of an actual duel, at least at first, so a break between rounds would not be out of place.
* He always managing to further some goal every time he is effortlessly crushed, eating out of his hand doing exactly what he wants.
* Gold Digger Jaqcues Schnee. Now, she's almost completely withdrawn herself from social life and drinks vodka straight from the bottle.
* Hellboy movies feature the BPRD logo on everything, and even has "BRPD" embroidered on their flak jackets. For an organisation so secret that they don't even want people asking "What does BRPD stand for?" This is a carryover from the comics, where the BPRD is more or less openly known.
* Greysky City leader. However, the reality is that Bozzok is a treacherous snake who pursues brutal retribution against anyone who challenges him.
* High Rollers during 1978 offered a prize where a contestant could appear on "Project UFO" if they rolled a certain combination with the dice. The prize wasn't awarded, however.
* Hell Girl has an episode where a woman in a fishing village, fearing her sister will move away and leave her, kills her and keeps her corpse tied up in a shed. The woman then forms an equally creepy obsession with the murdered woman's daughter, who barely manages to avoid being killed and preserved in the same way.
* Going back farther, when European settlers first came to the Americas, they brought several plant species with them. Normally not thought of as being aggressive, when introduced to the environment, they went absolutely berserk. Before kudzu, the Deep South was overrun with peach trees (see the correlation between peaches and the state of Georgia), and Argentina was smothered under feral spinach. That said, being edible, these weren't as bad as kudzu. (Technically,
* Harry Potter books, though the difference is in girth as opposed to height.
* Gotham Academy made it so that they no longer had to deal with his broadcasts.
* Gotham: Sarah Essen is killed in only the second episode of Season Two.
* Grand Theft Auto V, it's possible to get caught in a sting operation when picking up prostitutes.
* Headless Horseman: An undead (originally a faerie) without a head, originally from Irish folk tales.
* Heroes phone calls from his apartment, but the audience never hears the other side of the conversation. This happened so often that when Mohinder met with Nathan Petrelli in an episode, someone remarked on the commentary, "Hey! Sendhil's in a scene with another human being!"
* Global AirshipA mode of transport that lets you reach any part of the world map easily.

* Hetalia: Axis Powers montage of a bunch of them floating around for a while.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince of a meeting between Tom Riddle (the boy who would be Voldemort) and a witch named Hepzibah Smith, in which Riddle is clearly covetous of Hepzibah's magical artefacts. Two days later, Hepzibah was found dead, and her house-elf Hokey (the wizarding equivalent of a butler) confessed to accidentally spiking her cocoa with a poison that resembled sugar. Harry and Dumbledore, however, know the truth: Riddle killed Hepzibah, stole the artefacts, and altered Hokey's memories to make her think that she did it.
* Gorkavich, a real Russian name. Agness Kaku's unedited translation used "Gorkavich", but it was changed afterwards to fit with the reference in the previous entry.
* Grimjack, John Gaunt leaves Heaven to save the life of a friend who, if killed at that time, would be condemned to Hell. As a result he is cursed to be reincarnated for as long as the pan-dimensional city Cynosure (where the book is set) exists.
* Heartbreak and Ice Cream: Characters eat ice cream following a break up.
* goth assassin, is too stupid to live in a place like Greysky city without someone smarter than her telling her what to do. When she fought Haley, she attacked her with pickles. Her reasoning was thus: Haley never ate pickles, but pickles are yummy, so the reason she didn't eat them must be that they're deadly to her.
* Hare Tonic is a more modern variation, where Elmer takes Bugs home to stew him. Having already set Elmer up for failure, Bugs helpfully puts himself in the pot.
* Green Tea Rescue), slams it just above Mineta's head and tells him that, if he tries to do anything like that again, the next time he won't miss.
* He's not competing with anyone, but Amuro Ray has a habit of counting how many enemies he's downed in a battle.
* Harry Potter. Just don't trust anything if you can't see where it keeps its brain!
* Hellsister Trilogy, the embodiment of change and renewal, joins the heroes in the third story arc.
* Habbo grew in popularity. As such, the members of that older generation often lament how memes went from being inside jokes that had staying power to suddenly being fleeting fads that show up, get about two weeks of attention, and are never mentioned again.
* Gulliver's Travels is titled "A Voyage to Laputa, Balnibarbi, Luggnagg, Glubbdubdrib, and Japan." Admittedly, at that time Japan was almost completely closed off to foreigners and thus almost as fantastic as said other countries.
* Gospel music is an inversion of this. It has a rich history as a uniquely American music form, based on African call and response and rhythmical patterns. A lot of early secular soul and R&B music was influenced by this tradition.
* Gregor's idea of a good time is raping and killing people — especially those who can't feasibly fight back. A woman and her baby in the backstory, his own little brother when they were both children, a surprised Loras Tyrell who had nothing but a wooden shield while he was swinging a huge sword, a bunch of helpless unarmed prisoners...and it's mentioned that he regularly goes raping and pillaging the smallfolk. Facing an actually challenging opponent like his brother Sandor and Oberyn Martell just makes him even angrier.
* GURPS High-Tech has (realistic) anti-laser goggles, to protect against weapons intended to blind the target.
* Godslave looks at Edith with a very fangs-filled smile when he realizes that Anpu's return and Edith's appearance mean his boring life is about the get interesting.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure!: The Kokoro no Tane birth sequence had to be cleaned up in later episodes, because people complained that the fairies looked like they were wetting themselves doing it.
* Half-Life 2 provides a variation with its frighteningly intense Inn battle.
* Hamilton — only two women in the cast who both have minor roles, and several long scenes with no music where men argue over Congressional votes and the wording of a document. Of course it became a smash hit.
* Haze is both of the unmotivated and vicious variety. His prime motivation to do anything is money, but he's deep down a good guy.

* Grey Wolf's MSZ-006-3B Zeta Gundam III B Type is in a yellow color (much to the pilot's chagrin), has additional airfoils, and a
* Hermione forces Ron into the room so they and Harry can have a discussion about Ron's objections to Harry's homosexuality and all the other Weasleys clear out in a hurry.
* goedendag. (Flemish revolts against the French are innumerable; they were particularly common in Bruges, as France kept occupying it.)
* High School Musical, Gabriella decides she needs to do this, as she so eloquently sums up in song. She comes back, though.
* Harley Davidson and the Marlboro Man all wear black bulletproof coats.
* Hardball centres around Mikey (Maori male) and his two best friends/coaches: Jerry (a disabled white male) and Salwa (a Middle Eastern female).
* Godzilla (2014) movie whose poster is in young Ford's room is "Let Them Fight."
* Guns Of Darkness is one of the earliest examples to play this realistically on film. The protagonists run their station wagon into quicksand as they're trying to smuggle the deposed President of Tibulación out of the country. After getting his wife across to safety, Tom Jordan goes back to help the President across. The human characters barely go in up to their necks in the course of all this, and the car takes several minutes to go completely under despite being a lot heavier than the three of them combined.
* Heaven's Feel, with Illya barely managing to save his soul in a jar at the cost of her own life.
* had more than their blood drained out of them, which would go a long way towards explaining things.
* Hatoful Boyfriend, and would like to see if she's still interested when she grows up.
* Gravity Falls: Journal 3 or even being called as such just feels weird to him, even though his nickname is arguably more embarrassing.
* Green Lantern (1941): On the cover of issue 12 Green Lantern and Doiby Dickles are looking at a wanted poster for the Gambler posted up on the wall while the Gambler's distinctive shadow, with gun drawn, is cast on them from behind.
* Guardian: The Lonely and Great God: Kim Shin has one stuck in his chest. It's invisible to almost everyone except Eun-tak, and even she can't see it at first.
* Hark! A Vagrant. This catches the attention of the bodybuilder prince, and they work out together instead of dance.
* GURPS. This trope is deliberately invoked with both the Pacifism (Reluctant Killer) and Pacifism (Cannot Kill) Disadvantages. The former makes hardcore violence of any kind against a human being extremely difficult, and both seriously traumatize the character that possesses them if they are forced to kill. Characters with the Post-Combat Shakes Disadvantage are always sickened after a fight.
* Hidamari Sketch, where Yuno and Miyako catch Sae talking into the fan, pretending to be an alien.
* Haikyuu!! counterpart Koushi Sugawara, but cares a lot about the rest of the team and makes sure they don't overwork themselves.
* Here hosted a December 2011 episode he invited Cookie Monster to perform "Silver Bells" with him during the opening monologue.
* Harry's Law; the suspects in violent crimes who hire Harry are almost always innocent or in a moral grey area.
* Grrl Power, there are a few million humans living among the wider galactic community. Cora mentions that most of the abductions were probably voluntary, though of course she can't be sure.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, sending you text messages that alternate between "This is a picture of me thinking of you, I love you so much!" and "Come date me when you're not fucking one of your whores."
* Hammerjack, Avalon is armed with stealthblades that she can extend from the wrists of her sensuit.
* Hardcase, Jack makes it very clear to Simon that he is not in Mexico to join his revolution. He is only there to collect the money he believes Rozaline and Simon owe him.

* Great Mazinger: In the same way and with the same purpose, Tetsuya shouted "Brain Condor!" and "Mazin Go". And Jun shouted "Queen Star On! Venus Go!" every episode after the third one.
* Hey Arnold! The Jungle Movie (the voice of the Pigeon Man), and Kevin Iwani (an archive coordinator at Nickelodeon).
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality uses transfigurated bearing balls during battles.
* Great Expectations, a young and suggestible Pip turns on everything he considers "common" after Estella disparages him for being common. This comes back to bite him.
* Hardcastle and McCormick card with him everywhere, including in the pocket of his bathrobe. Since his retirement project was to catch criminals who were getting acquitted on "technicalities," he wanted to make sure he followed procedure (even though, come to think of it, a retired judge isn't a cop, either).
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets. Hermione was down in the script to hug Harry and Ron, but Emma Watson was too embarrassed to hug both boys in front of a set full of people (it's in the Great Hall). They came up with the compromise that she would only hug Harry and give Ron an awkward handshake. In post-production, they even had to slow down the film when Hermione is hugging Harry - because Emma kept breaking it too quickly.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban; the plot heavily features wizards who can take an animal form.
* HG Wells comes to this conclusion after her eight-year-old daughter was murdered.
* Grand Admiral Thrawn ships out of hyperspace at a specific point. It worked so well that other commanders started using the tactic whenever possible, including Admiral Ackbar.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Nova Prime doesn't want anyone to tell the Guardians how to write a mission report so she can keep getting comedy gold like their last one.
* Hamilton cast performed "Yorktown" at the Tonys, they decided that due to the recent Pulse nightclub shooting they would remove all the prop guns from the number, meaning the cast was performing a number about a battle while miming having weapons. It should've been ridiculous, and yet somehow it actually managed to be incredibly poignant instead.
* Hightown: Junior, who gets pushed to carry out a hit under experienced killer Osito's supervision.
* Harley Quinn is given quite a makeover, with her and the Joker's roles being reversed: in this game, it is John Doe who is the doting subordinate to Harley, who is now a ruthless (though still quite unhinged) crime boss.
* Heel–Face Turn, and he's rewarded by surviving his arc, while Super Buu is de-fused and Kid Buu was atomized by a Spirit Bomb.
* Gunnerkrigg Court) major reasons why the Court and the Woods do not currently get along.
* Happy Heroes almost always call out the names of their attacks whenever they use them.
* Half-Life 2 uses this to make City 17 look like a real city, but most of it is blocked off by rubble or other things (including tons of locked doors) preventing you from exploring. The rest of the world also stretches farther into the distance than you can visit.
* Harry Potter, when he decides to get his snark on, tends toward this variety of snark.
* He did bump it up to 12 for the Top Christmas Specials and Next Best Christmas Specials. Why? BECAUSE IT'S CHRISTMAS!
* Göring also made comments that he would eat a broomstick if enemy bombers reached Berlin. He was subsequently known as "Meyer the Broomstick".
* Hellsing got 13 episodes. All funding was cut around episode 10-11, and they had just enough to wrap up the series in the next two-three episodes.
* good is a somewhat more tangible and definable concept than it is in our world.
* grudges against superheroes are treated with comparatively less contempt.

* Heroes of Might and Magic: In one version, the Necromancer city can build a 'Pyramid of Skulls', which looks somewhat garish, but boosts your weekly production of Skeletons significantly.
* Happens occasionally in Peter Robinson's Inspector Alan Banks novels, usually to a young police officer who isn't used to seeing dead bodies (at the beginning of
* Higurashi: When They Cry requested an extra arc to fill in some holes at the start of the second season. The manga written by him do a great job at capturing the mood.
* Grabbed by the Ghoulies, you will be yanked inside her coffin, the coffin will rock, she will make rather... interesting noises, and you will take damage gradually until you shake free.
* Golden Age continues. In many of these cases, control of the series and franchises was wrested from the original creators long before their deaths, often because they didn't understand the value of their creations. For some prominent examples:
* Hell on Wheels. For striking up a relationship with Eva, a white prostitute, Elam is nearly hanged in the highly racist 1860s.
* Harvest Moon fandom is interested in the marriage system than actually raising animals and growing crops. This is probably why the bachelors and bachelorettes have gotten increasingly more attractive and elaborate over the last decade.
* H. G. Wells in which the Eloi seem to live in this kind of future but are actually little more than sentient (barely) cattle for their underground dwelling Morlock masters.
* Hero Hotline Sturgis Butterfield has been Mister Muscle, Muscle Man, Brother Bicep, Mister Mighty, and Flex.
* Guilford and Darlton have little time for the racist attitudes of many Britannians in the military. Not particularly because of principle, but because they think that a meritocratic military that allows in talented Japanese like Suzaku is much more effective than filling the ranks with incompetent Britannians.
* Happy Days, Ralph Malph is excited that a prospective date's number starts with Klondike 5—"Hey! I got a Klondike 5!"
* Hell: A Cyberpunk Thriller has the Fecund 5088 birthing unit, a bald female cybernetic head and torso. She proudly offers her prenatal charges "soothing sounds and music," "comforting visual displays," and "direct projection of parents' voices into fetal chamber." She's also "programmed to respond to doubts you may have about the moral dilemmas some find inherent in [her] existence."
* He dies and is soon forgotten, she survives and marries the newspaperman who comes to cover the incident.
* Grimm named Max. He goes for a walk, and two women who saw the show invite him to their place to see "the monster". They discuss how it's a very realistic mask... then he goes "full woge" on them.
* He also doesn't understand that even though he's never killed anyone in person, his own hands aren't exactly clean. Given that he's a high-ranking member of a terrorist organization and everything.
* Hell, just about every team has their own Memetic Loser, as if there's a diversity quota or something. Radditz is this for the Saiyans, Appule is this to Freeza's force, and Guldo is this to the Ginyu Force. The androids have Android 19, the poorly programmed fat mime.
* Gundam a fast machine, it's capable of shedding those armor layers regardless of how fast it's moving at the moment.
* Harry Potter And The Ice Princess, Elsa only ever saw Malfoy as a friend at best, but when Harry and Ron infiltrate Slytherin under polyjuice, they confirm that Draco is judging his potential relationship with Elsa based on how it would benefit him socially rather than showing any true appreciation for her as a person, affirming to Elsa that she will never date Malfoy.
* Good Omens. Then he notices the camera crew, and sheepishly remarks "Gosh, am I on television?"
* Hellboy story, the pagan goddess Cloacina is portrayed as the patron saint of Venice, opposed by the forces of hell.

* Guy Fawkes, the man who wanted to blow up the English Parliament in 1605, has changed into a popular bonfire puppet on
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas: Done twice early on in the game. Done either to escape being shot at or escape being run over and riddled with bullets. Returning either risks same.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged has the two criminals that murdered Seras' parents arguing about this trope.
* Hazbin Hotel, whereas Vaggie has a more feminine name, wears dresses and hair bows and looks more conventionally feminine. However, Charlie is more soft-spoken, cheerful and optimistic, while Vaggie is more aggressive, grumpy and cynical.
* Goldust was named the worst gimmick of 1995 by Wrestling Observer, but is today looked back upon as one of the greatest gimmicks of all time.
* Grogar, the most powerful villain who united the Mane Six's past enemies,
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi: Occurs many times on the bus. Yumi hangs it in "Number Please".
* he discovers her inability to carry on an intelligent conversation,.
* Hannibal Rising, among other details that spoil the mystery of where Hannibal came from and how he became what he is. Harris claims that he never wanted to write a prequel, but was told by his publishers that, if he didn't, they'd find someone else to write it for him.
* God Never Said That: People's ideas about canon are falsely attributed to the creators.
* Happens again in Chapter 39, while fighting against the soldiers of Enies Lobby.
* Hey Arnold! when Olga was growing up, despite their reassurance during the episode proper.
* Gomer Pyle, U.S.M.C. assigned to a Marine platoon, with inevitable hijinks resulting.
* hand-twitching version as a captured alien is being "dissected" (whoops, turns out that's just its containment suit).
* Happy Birthday dear old Grandma, Grandma, Grandma! The best Grandma in the world, Grandma, Grandma!
* Go to the restrooms on the 95th floor of the John Hancock Center the next time you go to Chicago. The ladies' room has the best view of the city skyline ever. The men's room... doesn't. They must settle for the observatory on the 94th floor.
* Heavy Metal, even Black Sabbath's Nativity In Black, which is told from Satan's perspective, is about him changing his ways and becoming a good person by way of experiencing love.
* Hawkman; after all, taking on a T-rex with a mace seems downright sporting by comparison.
* Grim Fandango, Manny's scythe can and will be used for practically everything, from opening vaults to locking cupboards, to digging through litter boxes, to fighting.
* Hightown: Frankie Sr. does what he wants in prison. It's pretty clear he could escape when he wants to.
* Grover Cleveland did something roughly similar in real life. He didn't marry the mother but did support the child, even though he was only one of the possible fathers. His political opponents tried to use the scandal against him, but the fact that he owned up to the situation and took responsibility despite no one being sure he was the actual father made him look better in the long run.
* Hiding the Handicap: Hiding the fact that you're disabled or afflicted.
* , Harry throws acorns at his younger brother because the kid won't stop asking mostly-unanswerable questions.
* Going Postal, as Moist Von Lipwig is about to be hanged, he says "I commend my soul to any God that can find it!"
* here. He saved Hinjo in the end, but only because he might not be able to kill people later otherwise. This nets him good karma as he soon gets a horde of goblins to murder.
* Greek heroes are Genius Bruisers. The ancient Greeks believed as much in exercising the mind as the body.

* Gumshoe's boss (the guy who invented the Blue Badger) is only ever referred to as Chief.
* gushes over a lot of things, but she gets gets particularly worked up about relatively mundane things like stairs and plumbing (as a result of having spent the majority of her life underwater).
* Heileen, even if you did nothing but treat him like garbage the entire game.
* Guy Moon, who composed all of seasons one and two and half of season three provided backup vocals on "Insect Aside".
* God of War allows Kratos to rip the basic enemies in half right from the get-go, letting you know Kratos isn't the type to play around.
* help him defend Asgard from Hela; as none of them are Asgardian, Loki would have to convince them to risk their lives for people they don't know.
* Harry Potter", cover-based combat and all (probably to facilitate the production of the tie-in games).
* Harker finds the puncture wounds the following morning after an encounter with Dracula and his bride (the latter having bitten him), which in the movie, is bad as it means he'll turn if Dracula isn't killed. Unfortunately he doesn't get the chance to stake him as Dracula finishes him off before he can. When Helsing comes to the castle later, he finds Harker's turned body in Dracula's coffin, the count having exacerbated the wound and most of his neck is dried in blood from the marks where it drained out of.
* Hey Arnold! The Jungle Movie with the characters still dressing like it's the 1990s and Arnold keeping his walkman.
* Heist (2015), the casino Vaughn and his partners rob is being used to launder money for the Mob.
* Gloryhammer, we are introduced to the Astral Dwarves of Aberdeen whose king wields a "Crystal Laser Battle Axe."
* Harvest Moon. If you marry Nina (but oddly, not Ann), then they will get married.
* Havenfall Is for Lovers — into other things, though he's also capable of throwing around waves of force and creating defensive shields. His power is also specifically linked to his home territory, in this case the bowling alley: not only is he at his most powerful on its grounds, using his magic away from the bowling alley is physically painful. Razi likens it to an electrical current, which within the bowling alley is grounded so that he can safely channel it, while away from that ground there's nothing to bear the brunt of the power except his own body.
* her grandfather; she knows the world of her grandfather and the Tooth Fairy and the Soul Cake Tuesday Duck exists, and she wishes it didn't.)
* Hack/Slash, but also upbraids them for being evil in a self-serving and hedonistic way instead of getting on with his "cull humanity" plan.
* Happy Heroes has the heroes go up against a different monster, usually summoned in one way or another by the primary antagonist Big M., in a vast majority of episodes. However, some of the monsters make recurring appearances, and a few even have detailed personalities and backstories.
* "Good Golly": reflects the controversy over the continued use of images and ideas with racist origins (e.g. the Confederate Flag).
* have a downside?" while they're each blowing a monstrous bubble. They spend the next three strips stuck to each other.
* Harry Potter series: though essentially ordinary witches and wizards for most of the month, prejudice against them has continued despite the development of potions that allow them to retain their minds while transformed, to the point that laws have been passed to effectively legalize anti-werewolf discrimination. Because of this, most werewolves have great difficulty finding work, and those who do usually end up forced to take jobs far below the level of their ability; poverty is common as a result.
* Hexwood is famous for bending and colliding genres in her novels, but this book in particular stands out.
* Happy Days had the character "Chachi," whose name sounds a lot like the Korean word for penis ("chaji").
* Harry Harrison. After that, the Chingers quickly learned to fight. In fact, they're much better at it than humans, mostly because humans are led by a bunch of incompetents.

* Happened (reportedly) to Pierre Trudeau once. No microphone picked up what he
* Heart of the Woods, Madison spots Tara outside in a snowstorm, and only realizes "Tara" is an illusion when she sees that "Tara" doesn't have a face.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, an irritated Madam Pomfrey shoves a bar of chocolate in his mouth as he's talking and puts him back in his bed.
* Henry Stickmin Series, Henry can steal property from the Toppat Clan, which is an international crime syndicate with a huge profile of stealing super valuable items such as large jewels.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, he concedes that Trelawney may or may not be a seer but he is brutally frank about what he thinks of her methods.
* Great House, two quests involve you rescuing these family members from their Telvanni captors.
* Highlander was a high school football star who got drafted to Vietnam and had his legs blown off.
* Healing Hands. Their government is terrified of this and has been killing anyone who shows signs of beginning to transform.
* Hellsister Trilogy. It's clear from the beginning she is severely outmatched, but she gets several good licks in before going down, such like smashing him across the room and hitting him several times with her fists or her heat vision.
* Gustav Mahler. Mahler must have liked the effect because he did it again in his sixth symphony.
* Golf With Your Friends, cosmetic hats are awarded for playing the game for a while. They include many, many things that aren't strictly hats, such as a cake, a rotating radar dish, a hamburger, and a nest with eggs.
* Hammer films dropped out of the film only three days in, when his wife died suddenly. A month into filming, the director dropped dead of a heart attack. One scene in the film involved filming the aftermath of a motorcyle accident and the retrieval of a corpse from the scene. A member of the production crew died in a motorcycle accident just as filming got to this point.
* Heroes of Maple of the six Legends and is pivotal to the heroes' plans to stop Damien.
* Her best friend Catra already knew the truth, and was actually shocked that Adora didn't know.
* Halloween: Sins of a Father or throwing a tantrum when Steven refers to Tommy as his father.
* Hawkeye has signs of this through the mid and late seasons from the stress of saving the lives of soldiers that are just going to get killed later anyway. But the final episode is when he really is broken because he inadvertently caused a mother to kill her own child.
* Harold Shea and Fletcher Pratt, uses the Magic-as-EMP variant (even a match will not work).
* Hakaider gets his hands on it and attempts to fire, the recoil literally (and gorily) tears his arm out of its socket.
* Had a parody ad, this time for birth control. The voiceover is totally standard, but the video shows Amy Poehler repeatedly seducing men, women,
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality ritual to give him power.
* H. H. Holmes, America's first (known) serial killer and a failed physician, may have begun murdering just so he could sell the bodies to anatomy departments at the colleges he'd attended.
* Halloween Horror Nights event, following Willing Suspension of Disbelief and the premises for the haunted houses and scarezones, the guests themselves follow this trope by entering dangerous environments on a whim.
* Guerrilla Days in Ireland and part instruction manual on how to run a guerrilla campaign.
* Harry Potter, she receives a life sentence in Azkaban for crimes against Muggle-borns after the events of the 7th book.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Quill makes everyone grab onto Tony when he uses the Infinity Stones to erase Thanos' forces, which allows him to survive, albeit with a crippled arm.

* Hercules Unchained, the titular character finds himself under the spell of the Evil Queen Omphale, who keeps a staff of Egyptian priests on hand to preserve the bodies of her killed and discarded lovers. True to form, the evil Queen commits suicide at the end by tossing herself into the priests' vat of preserving chemicals.
* Hilariously inverted in the episode "Our Man Bashir", where Bashir is playing a Bond-like hero on the holodeck, and
* Guys and Dolls (1955): "Pet Me, Poppa", "Adelaide" and "A Woman in Love".
* Harry spends most of the movie thinking he's going to die from "The Big One" (
* Hairy Maclary's Bone by Lynley Dodd has a nonlethal and very young-child-friendly variant: the titular dog is being followed by his five friends who all want the bone he's carrying, and he leads them through a series of obstacles, at each of which one of the five fails to pass and is eliminated from the chase, until he's finally shaken them all off.
* Hiimdaisy comic: "Eva, I... I need you! (Eva starts to stare and blush in awe)... TO STOP WHINING AND FLY US OUT OF HERE!"
* Gravedale High episode "Night of the Living Dad", Gill Waterman accidentally lets slip that Marty is a fake dad that Frankentyke made to prevent everyone from finding out that his real dad is the human scientist who created him.
* Henry Stickmin Series: In "Fleeing the Complex", one scenario involves Henry and Ellie, along with several other escaped inmates, getting into the back of a truck. It's not untill after they're all inside and closed the door that they realize there's nobody behind the wheel to actually drive the truck (one of the inmates actually quotes the trope name here). This leads to a fail.
* heathen) and may treat them more harshly than those who never believed to begin with. Ostracism and even violence are not uncommon among certain faiths.
* Haruka Tomatsu auditioned twice or thrice before becoming Cure Fortune.
* Hercule Poirot, Poirot uses this to point out the flaw in Hastings' aborted plan to murder Major Allerton (who Hastings suspects has dark intentions towards Hastings' daughter) by poisoning him, as wiping his fingerprints off the bottle containing the poison he planned to use would have wiped away all the fingerprints on that bottle, making it obvious that someone had killed Allerton and with Hastings the prime suspect.
* Harvest Moon: The first potential love interest in most games, the one that lives closest to your ranch, is usually the easiest to win over. They're relatively low-maintenance and will accept most inexpensive gifts from you.
* Heaven's general Julingshen, Sun Wukong's first opponent in his war against the gods, wields a massive axe called "Flower Storm". It's quickly destroyed by Wukong's much more formidable Ruyi Jingu Bang.
* He is known to whip up tea and pastries at moment's notice, anywhere.
* Gundam Build Divers lose on screen twice, the first time is because he's ambushed by a cheater and the second time is because Riku has to unleash the arsenal he's carrying to rescue Sarah and even then, it's by the skin of his teeth.
* Happy Tree Friends had Lumpy growing a giant ear of corn to be used for judging at the carnival. It happens to be a very hot day and the corn pops into popcorn and it ends up killing everyone.
* Halloween III: Season of the Witch are textbook examples; they are just like any other mask, but if its wearer sees a certain commercial, all hell breaks loose.
* Grrl Power with all her copies. Most of the time she has five of herself with different hair colors and outfits.
* Gwen says she knows this can now be true of her and her nemesis Charmcaster at the end of their final episode in
* Gundam Wing: Endless Duel they can be used offensively in a variety of ways, mostly as either chained together as a sort of lightning whip, or used to shoot out electricity. But there is an attack where they fly at the enemy on their own and electrocute them.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, Race Bannon proclaims to his partner Benton

Quest that, as he looks after the boys the most, he has a better claim to the children. Dr. Quest tells Bannon to calm down, but Race pulls Benton's arm forcing him to the ground. He exclaims there's nothing that can be done to stop him and storms out. Dr. Quest is still lying on the ground when race steps back proclaiming that he forgot his keys.
* Hardly Working degree. This includes Raph getting his hand out of a cement block, finding a new pair of pants and killing his evil twin, and Grant getting his leg out of a bear trap, excorcising one of the Eight Kings of Hell, throwing a pagan idol into the sea, and, of course...
* Gundam Build Fighters Try, a GM Custom attempts this with two GM Rifles during one of the tournament battles. It gets blasted by a beam rifle and falls over backwards dead.
* Growlanser games usually have these integrated in, where they represent the other party member's opinions of their leader.
* Heaven's Design Team Himself, it does make their actual "race" suspect. They're clearly not angels either, as they are treated as a separate group who serve as a liaison between the titular team and their client.
* Higher-dimensional beings like playing Brockian Ultra-Cricket, a game so complicated that a complete compilation of its rules became a
* Hedda Gabler is often played by a black actor, as James Earl Jones played the part in otherwise all-white production.
* Head Over Heels says "don't tell him about the group chat without him or we'll have to make another one". The only one who seems to tolerate his presence is Joon-Hyuk, and that's because of proximity.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone. The second chapter skips forward almost ten years to the preteen Harry we'll follow for the rest of the novel.
* Haruhi Suzumiya is a horrible idea, but the mere fact that Kyon was honestly trying to slap her makes Haruhi realize how much she screwed up, and she tones down.
* Grey portray an enormous set of elevated highways spanning the globe, allowing specialized vehicles to drive from Europe to Antarctica in the space of a few hours.
* He hijacks a local TV station's news program to present a faux commercial warning the city of Gotham that he's poisoned their consumer products.
* Grand Theft Auto V where each of the main characters sample a marijuana-legalization activist's weed and trip out appropriately. First Michael tries it and hallucinates getting attacked by a swarm of aliens. Then Trevor has a taste and gets attacked by clowns. Then when it's finally Franklin's turn to smoke the hash...nothing happens. He just makes a remark on how weak it is.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983): He-Man would often defeat his opponents by throwing them just off-screen.
* Hannibal. Season three's Italian setting and continual references to Greco-Roman art, philosophy, and aesthetics cement the connection.
* Goblins, which involved violent crippling and sheer nihilism. Next we see the now-wingless Duv, she's plucking the wings from little birds and on the brink of madness.
* Happens during economic bubbles: the prices of an asset such as real estate or shares rise because there's the expectation there will be buyers, thanks to the * Hikaru no Go, has been dead for approximately a thousand years. He's only been really conscious for like twenty of them, though. He needs a host consciousness.
* Gravity Falls uses Grand Romantic Gestures to pressure Mabel into continuing to go out with him, doing things like training a parrot to squawk out an invitation to a dance, or setting off fireworks that spell out her name.
* Hetty Feather book, Hetty is asked to say grace, but she's never heard of it, so she literally says the word "grace".
* Heel Realization: Someone is ashamed to discover that they have been the bad guy.
* God himself also qualifies, he never lies and he never tolerates injustice and sins, but he still forgives and loves those who faithfully follow his path. And it never changes.

* Gods Eater Burst fits this to a tee, in charge of maintaining the Far East Branch's God Arcs. complete with oversized gloves and a tendency to hug the protagonist when they do something stupid.
* Gran Turismo series are based on real routes of the Shuto Expressway in Tokyo, and Route 7 includes a replica of the Rainbow Bridge, which can also be seen in the background on Route 11.
* Happy Tree Friends then picks up his head, mistaking it for a pumpkin, and carves it into a lantern.
* Half's Saga: Half and his warriors manage to break out of the Asmund's burning hall and hold out against the overwhelming numbers of Asmund's warriors for an entire day before being cut down.
* Halo 5 has weak spots on its front and back that can be exposed if you knock off the armor covering them.
* Hawai'i was an independent monarchy before Americans living in Hawaii deposed Queen Liliuokalani in a coup d'état. The United States supported the coup and eventually annexed Hawaii based on trumped-up claims that the Queen's government was oppressing the American immigrants. To this day, the Native Hawaiian community itself is divided over what they want to do about it—some want total independence from the U.S. while others want Hawaii to remain a state but for the Native Hawaiians to have sovereign rights similar to the ones Native Americans have... and there are lots of "in-between" and "none of the above" views mixed in there as well.
* Halloween Town, he'll tell you that he hated the form at first, but soon got used to it, and even found it to be fun.
* Godfrey Ho Ninja Movies — Ninaja action movies. More than eighty have been made since the 1980s.
* Gorn: It's okay for things to be blown up and chopped up in disgusting ways if they were already disgusting organic things to begin with.
* Good Luck Charlie is almost entirely this floor plan except for the wall between the living and kitchen and the angle of stairs.
* Hayao Miyazaki, the Emperor wants to be immortal through the head of the Spirit of the Forest, which means the death of the spiritual world.
* High School Musical trilogy: Most of the gang get into the colleges they wanted to go to, Troy escapes from the pressure he's under in Albuquerque, and he and Gabriella go to schools near each other so they can stay together.
* Heart's Desire era and take over the body of an old preacher. He then proceeds to give shady characters the power to turn matter into energy at will. They quickly turn on one another, before only one is left. The alien reveals himself and his goal: he has come to Earth to destroy potential enemies but has seen enough to realize that we won't last long enough to invent interstellar travel, and thus are no threat.
* Haruhi Suzumiya is a little bit of sci-fi, comedy, mystery, romance, and slice of life in a highschool setting.
* Hammer Horror carrying a girl this way - though in a twist, it's because she's hurt her leg and he's actually being very helpful.
* Gordon Haskell, scored a #2 hit in the UK during Christmas 2002 with his jazz ballad "How Wonderful You Are". The song's success was the result of heavy airplay on BBC Radio 2, and it remains the most played song in the history of that station. Despite the success of the song, Haskell had no further hits.
* Heel–Face Turn), Aurra Sing, and every female Sith ever are among the most notable.
* Heavy Metal, an astronaut exits the space shuttle in a 1959 Corvette and descends to Earth. Strangely, he only deploys a parachute after he lands.
* Godzilla vs. Kong and an antithesis to everything that his father and grandfather had stood for.
* Harry Potter when Voldemort is in power. Plenty are genuinely being blackmailed, or coerced into doing terrible things by Voldemort threatening their families, but others claim this when they worked for him willingly.
* Heroics for Beginners. His ventilation ducts ARE too small to crawl through. From the back cover:

* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla are a duology concerning the Black Hole Aliens attempting to conquer Earth using their superweapon Mechagodzilla.
* Hei's character tends to play around with this trope. Compared to other contractors, he's extremely empathetic towards the people around him, and is known to act irrationally based on his feelings.
* Goofy, Goofy tries using this method to treat his cold. It makes him too hot, so he turns on a fan, which makes him too cold.
* Hellsing Abridged, after Integra describes Millennium as a "cult of nihilism", Seras declares that she will be "their fucking Kool-Aid!" The Major starts off his responding speech on loudspeaker by telling them about how Jonestown's drink of death was actually Flavor-Aid, a less popular competing brand.
* Gunnerkrigg Court about Annie's mother that he regrets as soon as he reveals it and leaves Annie utterly distraught.
* Halo of eating humans, the Brutes are the only ones who actually relish in it, as they consider humans to be quite delicious.
* Hand of God: There's a group of them who perform criminal acts (ranging from burglary to murder and rape) for money.
* Happens in a flashback where Earl tried to rob a wealthy family only to get trapped in the sons room. Afraid of the boogeyman, the kid looked under his bed only to find Earl. They both start screaming.
* Godzilla movie does present a few scenes of Godzilla sightings at the beginning, it still takes a good half hour until he shows up, and until then you had to watch a spineless New Yorker complain about her career. And once Godzilla shows up and then keeps 'hiding' during parts of the movie, guess what? More of a spineless New Yorker, except now you get to watch her screw everything up and have an awkward rekindling with her ex-boyfriend Matthew Broderick.
* Groundhog Day where Bill Murray turns his daily meeting with "Ned" into an extended and and quite uncomfortable hug.
* Heart of the City story arcs often end suddenly with no further explanation. An example is an arc where Heart's mom agrees to go on a date, which Heart dreads until she learns that the man is a talent agent. After that, the arc ended.
* Hamster Corporation has involved this trope with the release of Nintendo's arcade games for the
* Hannibal Rising (2007). Hannibal is being raised by his aunt, the Lady Murasaki-Lecter, whose samurai ancestor was into collecting the heads of his enemies. When she's insulted by a local butcher, Hannibal cuts off his head with her sword and presents it to her. His aunt is not pleased, but when Hannibal is arrested for the crime she impales the head on the railings outside police headquarters while Hannibal is being interrogated inside. The police naturally assume they have the wrong man and let Hannibal go.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series. Bleez is generally depicted as the commander of the Red Lanterns in the field, while Zox remains with Atrocitus most of the time, ready to execute his bidding.
* Godot, aka Diego Armando to be caught: he drops little hints throughout that eventually help Phoenix reach the correct conclusion. It's also hinted that he's not going to live very long anyway.
* Griselda Marchbanks proctor for the O.W.L. exams seen briefly in the fifth book, mentioned that she personally tested Dumbledore when he was a student.
* Glory Of Heracles IV Both the protagonist and Plato gain the ability to do this after losing their bodies. There are 100 or so characters one can become, scattered around the world.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys each had the titular characters delving into full-on Gumpdom.
* Harry Potter: This trope is frequently discussed by Snape, who seems to be under the impression that Harry will use his fame as the person who defeated Lord Voldemort when he was just a baby to try and escape punishment. Harry doesn't do anything of the sort.
* Great Mazinger), this includes sending a jolt up into the sky, which somehow causes a thunderstorm that sends an even bigger bolt back down for Great to use.

* happier sorts of thoughts that cross his mind when he cottons on that she's getting sweet on him.
* Hell Bastard Comix) has a little of everything: demons, violence, pirates, pop culture references, violence, and deep love of alcohol (and also violence).
* Grim inflicts this on Jack O'Lantern, a one-episode villain from the Halloween special. Justified in that he had wished for
* .hack games (IMOQ) had gag dubs with the original voice actors, unlocked after beating the final boss. They were left out of the English versions, which instead replaced the second Japanese voice track with the original, making the games dual audio but both serious.
* Higurashi: When They Cry Keiichi points out Oiishi's use of this trope when he tells a story about how the old demons of Hinamizawa demanded a mother feed herself to one of them in exchange for curing her son and when she ran away the demons (with the other villagers' help) caught and ate them both. Oiishi counters that a lot of old stories are like that.
* Haruka, Michiru, and Setsuna started out standoffish and borderline antagonistic. By the time of the final arc/season, they were part of the group after being impressed and befriended by Usagi.
* Global Guardians, and then he was killed as well. The third and current version of the character is the cousin of the original. He's been a member of the Guardians and two other teams, Primal Force and the Ultramarine Corps.
* High School Ninja Girl, Otonashi-san in their part-time clerk job, but she consistently outdoes him without even being aware of this.
* Hannibal share a consciousness, they understand each other so deeply that they're able to reproduce the other faithfully in their respective Mind Palaces, making it "as if" the other were actually interacting with them. For example, Will uses this to have an effective conversation with his Mind Palace version of Hannibal in "Secondo" that helps him better understand the real Hannibal's childhood, and Hannibal points out that he and Will share certain chambers in the palace and he found a 'victorious' version of Will there in "Digestivo".
* Havenfall Is for Lovers: Diego and Antonio's routes are "human meets vampire".
* Heroes Reborn with Tigra. She is still Patsy Walker, but has the Tigra werecat abilities.
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child: both are the gossiped-about children of famous fathers, both feel determined to break free of the past's legacy, and both have a well-intentioned troublemaking streak. Additionally, unlike the other members of both sides of his family, who were all sorted into Gryffindor, Albus is a Slytherin.
* guess what it's like in your possession. Extremely difficult, as most Level 1 characters will be burned to ashes within several turns (along with their equipment), and the Tower contains many high-level monsters and a nasty boss.
* GURPS who refused to murder civilians, but since then it's been extended to heroic types who likewise refuse to shoot civilians.
* Hanna: In "The List," Hanna disguises herself as a young man to infiltrate the hotel.
* Harry and His Bucket Full of Dinosaurs episode "It's in Nana's Room", the dinosaurs believe that saying Nancy's species (nanosaurus) is unlucky because whenever someone says it, a birdlike creature poops on their head.
* Glowing Eyelights of Undeath) into creatures like this under his control if they're wicked enough.
* Gravity is about two such characters, knocked free after their space shuttle is destroyed by a cloud of space debris. The question is then, how do you get back to Earth?
* Half-Breed Discrimination. Your parents should've never dared to conceive you!
* Harley Quinn (2019) and her first appearance has her walking out on him.
* Haruhi Suzumiya eventually reveals that she figured out Mikuru's origin on her own; it's pretty obvious if you're paying attention.
* he's actually a very talented forward, but he hides his talent because he's shy and afraid his teammates will think he's hogging the action. After he overcomes his shyness, he subverts this trope and starts to specialize as a forward, and the remainder of his hissatsu techniques are all shoot techniques.

* "Groundhog Day" Loop episode in which Dean dies every day, and most days he has to explain to Dean not only what is happening to him but that Dean has died multiple times, in ways that are sometimes heartbreaking and sometimes darkly absurd, in the other timelines.
* hilariously depicted in the TV movie. The kid in question is clearly so terrified that he can't take the obvious step, but he eventually figures it out just in time and the plane whizzes by him.
* He also regularly does this with Toad. Toad is apathetic, likes using his giant Toad-Headed Gundam to kill people, he likes to get high on sugar, he played Darth Vader in a three-part
* HBO, one of the fake McDonald's Monopoly winners identified a location in Florida as the one in South Carolina (a different state) where she had purchased her ticket. But it's not obvious that one McDonald's will look a lot different from another, and it's entirely possible to confuse the two.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, Harry unintentionally torches an Auror with the blast of a rocket-enhanced broom.
* Goosebumps three-parter features the miniature town of Karlsville, which draws people into it through various means. Whenever this happens, the population sign automatically changes.
* Have a Nice Death: You've lost the game and are dead but at least you get a cheery message about it.
* Herb Alpert's "This Guy's in Love With You" (for when he gets tired or hinting and finally comes out and says it...but it is obvious that he's been hinting for a VERY long time!)
* Great Escape teams of paired contestants, imprisoned in varying scenarios (Alcatraz, a mental institution etc) have to go through four levels while solving mental and physical challenges, evading guards and picking up keys and equipment..
* Harvest Moon, the scent that lingers. Buy some, or we'll break your fingers.
* Gulliver's Travels. Reldresal (who personally agrees that the reasoning for the war is silly) nervously tells him to keep that thought to himself, because compromisers are seen as being disloyal and put to death.
* He Had a Name: Villain dismisses someone they killed as an inconsequential casualty. Hero emphasizes their anger by pointing out that their fallen friend had a name.
* Green Lantern: Hal Jordan's home base of Coast City was destroyed, starting a chain of events that turn him into an insane killer/possessed victim of an entity called Parallax.
* Healing Factor might say that they want to die, but when stabbed in the leg with a fallen water pipe, water rising as they quickly lose blood, they quickly start to worry about how cold they're getting.
* Hc Svnt Dracones hostile life forms on Earth. After the lunar colony was wiped out by "Whispers" and a tether of what looked like crystallized blood formed between Earth and the Moon the rest of the solar system decided to steer well away from their ancestral home.
* , he was about to confess to Italy just as Germany stepped back into the picture.
* Green Lantern has a flashback scene where Hal takes Carol up in an old trainer/stunt plane.
* Harry Potter, Neville Longbottom is often treated as such by the Golden Trio, and Ginny by her brothers.
* Going Bovine. She smashes snowglobes to free their occupants and has a sugar addiction.
* Gravity Falls as symbolism of Jesus coming back to life, since his name is short for Jesús.
* Hellsing plunges headlong into this trope upon becoming an Archbishop and receiving full command of a collection of holy knights for the purpose of stopping Millennium's attack on London. With so much military power at his command, Maxwell goes off the deep end and orders his men to kill the Protestants of England as well as the vampires, resulting in a mass slaughter of innocent people that thoroughly disgusts not only the main protagonists but Maxwell's top agent and former mentor, Alexander Anderson.

* Guilty Crown, you see Ayase reaching for a shoe on the floor. It becomes significantly funnier when you remember that the main character's name is Shu.
* Heathcliff's girlfriend, Sonja has one on her cheek. Considering she's a cat so her face is covered with fur, how it's actually visible is anybody's guess.
* He Loves Me... He Loves Me Not: The first half of the movie sets up that a girl named Angélique is the lover of a doctor and nearly commits suicide upon learning that he will not be leaving his wife to marry her.
* Gran Turismo features a 300-page book about cars, mechanics, and driving technique. The American version... seems to be missing 285 pages.
* Gravity) when an oxygen cylinder explodes during the zero-G fire scene.
* Haikyuu!! to protagonist Hinata. Flash forward to both of them showing up for volleyball practice in their new high school Karasuno.
* Glinda the Good Witch of the South is said to "commands the spirits of the air" in * Happens often, especially when Calvin refuses to take a bath. The next panel will have him in the bathtub complaining.
* He was never serious in his campaign for President, because he'd have to give up
* Granting that controlling such physiological reactions is often beyond the parameters of the conscious mind, I would nevertheless advise that you withhold secretions from the ocular region with regard to an irretrievable quantity of bovine suckling fluid.
* Halo Wars, with one mission involves the player having to protect civilian evacuation shuttles, which are under attack by Covenant forces.
* Have I Got News for You has been running for over twenty years some of the short pieces of footage have been reused when in the first round when players have to guess the story. The shot of a man stacking money (seen in the Angus scandal episode) has been used whenever the story involves a lot of money being handled (such as in S44E07). While it is used sparingly, it does happen.
* Goldilocks, "because Goldilocks had hair that seemed to be made out of gold"
* Gravity Falls: In "The Time Traveler's Pig", Stan has Soos modify a dunk tank so that the dunking mechanism can't be triggered. Soos does so, and claims that it would take "some sort of futuristic laser arm cannon" to actually set it off. Unfortunately, he didn't account for time travelers from the future who happen to have laser guns...
* Harry Potter book uses something like this, where Harry and friends direct the pieces and it's not clear while they're playing what happens if the pieces they control lose.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, Harold does this after Freakshow's wife asks if they're going to fuck her.
* He also has this with Optimus Prime, as both are resistance fighters who care deeply for the soldiers under their command. And their greatest strength comes not from their might as warriors, but their incredible capacity to inspire hope and resolve in others.
* Grant Morrison gave us the original character John Sublime, who was introduced with the strong suggestion that he may be the greatest overarching threat permeating the X-mythos. A sentient colony of bacteria almost as old as the Earth itself, Sublime was revealed to have orchestrated many major events in the X-Men's past, including the creation of the Weapon X program, all in a bid to wipe the mutant race from the Earth (as they are the only species immune to his mind control). It's implied that he may have even manipulated humanity to create the very idea of anti-mutant prejudice in the first place, thus making him the one villain who has managed to consistently keep the heat up on the X-Men since Day 1.
* Gothon than believe his honor propaganda. It's implied he doesn't either and just wants revenge.
* Halcyon 6 gives you Bucky Rogers the Super Soldier. His primary distinction is the fact he cannot pilot any ship except for the weak and useless Shuttle. He does have a decent selection of ground-based powers, but then again your regular officers will gain those as they progress (and since most of an officer's experience is gained via space combat, Bucky will be outleveled by anyone unless you grind him intensely with station tasks or the starbase gets invaded often enough to give him more chances to gain Experience from ground combat).

* He missed the second Z in a regular viewer's name for over a year and a half, resulting in a
* Hearing Cersei's interpretation of Maggy the Frog's prophecy, if it could even be called that, causes Tyrion to realize just how incompetent his sister really is. "Valonqar" has several meanings
* Growlanser II aspires to create a democratic territory for his fellow mercenaries, who are only of use to the current reigning kingdoms in times of war. However, achieving this goal requires deceit, trickery, and fighting against the game's protagonists.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, but, like the other website 'filler' characters, they will not reply. One mission involves going on a date with a gay man, but this is not a Gay Option, since this is an assassination mission.
* Gratuitous Iambic Pentameter — The link at left will take you to this trope.
* Haunted Ohio II, the deaths of a certain family's members are heralded by a number of owls that fly away one by one until none are left. This occurs after a man muffled in a coat knocks on the family's door before vanishing. This happens on winter nights for two years in a row. When the knock comes on the third year, the family does not open the door, at which the knocker chuckles and says, "Soon no one will occupy this farm but the owls."
* have testified that they are afraid of days when there is a clear blue sky: drones are more likely to attack when there's better visibility.
* GURPS is designed for this exact purpose. Not only can you do more damage with your chosen weapon, but you're also proficient with anything similar to it.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn games with simplistic 2d figures instead of the rest of the game's lush cel-shaded 3d animation.
* Gravity Falls on it. When confronted with this fact, Robbie admits he didn't write the song, trying to get out of the blame. Wendy says she doesn't care about the message, she's upset he lied to her about writing a song for her. It's never addressed where he even found the mysterious-looking CD, much less if the subliminal message actually affected Wendy or if she was just flattered that Robbie supposedly wrote her a song.
* Halle Berry has stated that this belief makes it hard for her to find roles.
* Godzilla Raids Again (by replacing it with Anguiris' own roar from the same film).
* Gravity Well Generators prevent hyperspace gates from opening in their area of effect — and, worse, keep any opening gate from closing and the ships passing through in stasis, essentially turning them into sitting ducks.
* Heretics of Dune. He's shown eating multiple full-course meals after such stunts to replenish his strength, to the amazement of onlookers.
* Green Lantern NautKeLoi is from an aquatic extraterrestrial species that breaths through gills and have fins on their heads.
* Halo, though their post-war ships are moving towards this trope as well.
* Gravitina except for her enormous cranium, which she was mocked for that lead her to villainy.
* Hero Killer: A villain who has successfully killed at least one hero who tried to stop them.
* Hail, Caesar! play Classic Hollywood movie stars - Clooney as a Robert Taylor-type leading man in a sword and sandals epic, Tatum as a song-and-dance man and Johansson as an Esther Williams-type starlet appearing in a musical.
* Héctor Germán Oesteheld. The line was thus abandoned. Both comics were re-published years later, when the political conflicts were over, but Oesterheld was dead by this point.

* He revisits the first warehouse (going through another wall of course) and finds the guy he needs to talk to has gone through the first hole and stole a car..
* Goofy "How-to" shorts, when the narrator asks for the scene to play again. A notable example is "How to Ride a Horse", where the run before a failed jump is run backwards (complete with backwards music) and the horse ends up running up a tree.
* High Middle Ages, it was considered obligatory for new converts to Christianity to strip naked for baptism, as a symbol of them being freed of their Original Sin.
* Hikaru no Go in the nobility was expected to keep their hair very long (see "Real Life", below).
* Goa'uld is just what he does. When not outright correcting, he's delivering horrible puns.
* Highlander: The Animated Series, though, this probably won't take very long.
* Hey Arnold!: Nearly every episode is standalone, but several episodes introduce characters that become regulars, such as "New Teacher" and "Ms. Perfect".
* Graveyard Keeper has one beneath the church, which hints at the darker, gruesome past of the setting. It's filled with the requisite monsters and treasure, though instead of trying to clean it out for profit/the greater good, you're actually helping an eldritch cultist find suitable materials and sacrifices for his dark rituals.
* Harry Turtledove. It makes use of animals (or, theoretically, people...) that are grandparents and grandchildren of each other, pushing the elder one forward in time and the younger one back in order to create a massively destructive discharge of sorcerous energy that can be directed anywhere on a map.
* Half Full When a test subject falls into a vat of collected sweat, the pheromone overdose transforms him into a monster with the power to allure women.
* Gravity Falls: Near the start of "Blendin's Game", Dipper and Mabel try to get some candy from the vending machine in the Mystery Shack's gift shop. The kids are naturally upset when it gets stuck (with Mabel crying "Everything is terrible forever!"), but Soos shows them a way to not only unstick the machine, but open it up so they can get all the candy they want.
* Grow Island are advertissment games for the Shibaura Institute of Technology.
* Gravity Falls first Season 1 finale "Gideon Rises", Gideon taking control of the Mystery Shacks means Soos has to get new jobs from scene-to-scene. First he's a short-order cook at a diner, and then a bus driver. After the episode ends, he resumes being a handyman.
* Happy Happy Clover takes the cake due to his cute voice in the anime, big eyes, and is so small compared to the others. Same goes for the tiny field mouse who shows up in the manga.
* Grand Finale", the scene where Quark and Vic play Go Fish because there's nothing else to do was the last scene ever filmed for DS9. So, there actually was nothing left to do on the show.
* High and Tight — Shane only ever calls his little brother 'Scotty'. Their other brother Seth notably doesn't.
* Heroic Sacrifice, it seems pretty confirmed he doesn't think of her as a machine.
* Heroes. Why does he need to remove the brain? How did he just appear right behind you? How'd he survive/come back to life? What, exactly, are his powers?
* Hensuki: Are You Willing to Fall in Love with a Pervert, as Long as She's a Cutie? dresses as a boy during the school day, but once it's done he wears the girls' uniform before heading to the student council. The rest of the student council is fine with it since it lets him perform his duties more efficiently and they became used to it anyway.
* Haou Airen the people in their surroundings are corrupted to the core.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team, but in the original manga it turns out that she has repeated problems with actually selling the doujinshi.
* Helen Mirren, her character was a stereotypical gangster's moll, but she refused to play it that way and insisted on making her more intelligent and interesting.
* Greg Maddux was an exceptional control pitcher who had once gone through as many as seventeen seasons with at least fifteen wins. He possessed an immensely good command of his pitches, sported excellent discipline, and knew where to find the strike zone consistently that he rarely gave up walks on opposing hitters. But what really puts him here was his uncanny ability to read players just by studying their body language and their mental capacities to figure out what they were about to do. There's a good reason why one of Maddux's nicknames is "The Professor".

* Hervé Villechaize depressed, and has destroyed his own life through his irresponsible behavior. However, he still completely shakes up Tate's life, influencing him to finally move past his failed marraige, deal with an obnoxious coworker, and quit his job rather than allow his boss to negatively influence his work.
* Grumpy Old Men. Grandpa Gustafson had more Unusual Euphemisms for sex than your average Fark.com thread. In other words, when it comes to women and for an old man, he has an abnormally perverted obsession with sex, even revealed clearly just by his kinky remarks.
* Having willingly volunteered for church cleaning, the Hyacinth accidentally volunteers to clean the church hall toilet, desperate to be picked for something after being rejected for pew polishing, changing flowers, brassware, changing the altar cloth.
* Going further back to early Spanish rule, the frequent and destructive earthquakes forced revisions to colonial building codes and led to the development of the unique, hybrid
* Hexx mentions the Chaos wars, which apparently involved one of the four deities in the setting.
* HAT Films. Not entirely clear what the religion involves, but it sure likes gold.
* Happens to a lot of young people when they first start choosing their own clothes and hairstyles. They can look ridiculous because they haven't found what styles work for them or they want to be part of some subculture.
* God Hand; in one of the few cutscenes involving him fighting, Gene, the protagonist, proceeds to launch three enemies to the sky. While the moves are not normally "one-hit-kill" type in the game, they're pretty much available to the player, and if one takes advantage of counter hits and the tension gauge/roulette, can accomplish the same thing in-game.
* GURPS Illuminati University). The book makes it perfectly clear that she can't be killed, might only be reasoned with if the player is lucky and/or smart, and that attracting her attention (even in a positive fashion) is not a smart idea even if you're a literal god.
* Hellraiser series and adaptations had variations in puzzle boxes and even whole buildings. Any of them could open a gate to Leviathan (hell) or summon, banish and control cenobites (demons) by finding the correct geometric state in the puzzle.
* Heel Realization students. Bustier starts reconsidering and revamping her teaching methods, meaning Chloé stops enjoying her preferencal treatment.
* Hail to the King in order to save his life, just like what Ultraman did with Hayata.
* GURPS Technomancer. The first above-ground atomic explosion in the U.S. releases magic into the world. As a result, people can cast spells and weird hybrid creatures are born, but only in the area covered by magical fallout.
* Grease, "Grease", "Sandy", "Hopelessly Devoted to You" and "You're The One that I Want", were later incorporated into revival productions of the stage musical.
* Harry Nilsson only had one #1. You'd be forgiven for thinking it was "Coconut" due to it becoming a
* Habitat: Works pages, ideally obscurer ones and tropes of the sort found in the works they enjoy.
* Harry Hill's TV Burp included a man who seemed to cite his major influences as "Jane-Claude Van Damme" and "Fester Stallone."
* Grand Theft Auto III reveals that he never was in the army, who turned him down numerous times because of his bad temper and tendency towards alcoholism, and that he lost his arm due to an accident with a homemade bomb.
* Great Teacher Onizuka. Said father still "goes to work" every day, acting as if he's still a big mover and shaker, and even his son doesn't know the truth.
* He didn't even last that long, really... far from it... In the very first chapter he explains his plan to get rid of all evil humans by killing them off to Ryuk. Ryuk replies that if Light pulls through with his plan, he'll be the only evil human left...

* has strips one frame tall but sometimes dozens of frames wide (it varies).
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), except, of course, his gender.
* Gravity Falls. The contestants battle against each other in a variety of challenges, the winner getting a single Time Wish (which allows them to wish for anything, paradox free) and decides the fate of the loser. Dipper and Mabel are challenged by Blendin Blandin, although after they win they ask for Blendin's old job restored and give the wish to Soos.
* Half-Identical TwinsFraternal twins need to be (nearly) identical too, or the audience won't recognize them as twins.
* Hilari Bell: Kavi and Jiaan do this to infiltrate a palace under the control of the Hrum in the third book.
* Harvest Moon DS who wouldn't acknowledge this game exists if it broke into their house at night and ate their children alive.
* Grizzly Man. It was described as being a particularly harsh fall, with a salmon run that was far below average and bears that were hungrier and more aggressive than usual. Guess it doesn't matter how much of a strong connection you have to nature when there's a food shortage... it didn't help that he had stayed longer than planned and the bears that did know him weren't the bears in the area anymore.
* he can't see who he's attacking. Once Luffy manages to catch him, however, the fight is over rather quickly.
* Glory in the Thunder. It quickly becomes clear that the Will of the World is an intelligent and seemingly malicious entity, which Tsovinar actively fights against.
* Hellsing through the means of sin and betrayal, and that they will march into hell to do battle with its demons when they die.
* Groudon (it's a lava-controlling, earthquake-making dinosaurian badass)
* Heart Songs, consists of the band members' favorite song titles, lyrics, and bands, as well as several lines dedicated to Nirvana's Nevermind album.
* GURPS IOU is the advantage Mundanity. Magic and super-science fails to work in a Mundane's presence, and at the higher levels monsters, aliens and assorted other non-normal entities actually change to have mundane explanations (a monster turns into someone wearing a monster costume, the alien invasion turns into a movie set) until the character leaves the area.
* Grand Theft Auto. All wheels vehicles tend to spontaneously lose at least one wheel.
* he'd fallen for her while she was still alive, and would have been fine with her even if she wasn't a zombie.
* Hegemony Series have the Companion Cavalry, a strong heavy cavalry unit (and the only one for most of the beginning), and the first thing you do is have your king Philip join them.
* Goblins is set within D&D rules, most of the above for clerics, druids, and paladins applies here.
* Hartman Hips: In reality, the human female body only forms a slight pear shape.
* Good Needs Evil: If you remove evil then how can we know what good is?
* Guerrilla: Jas and Marcus arrange to break their friend Dhari out of prison. Jas gets the idea from a TV story about how Timothy Leary got broken out by the Weathermen in the US. Jas smuggles glass pieces in which Dhari then eats, and he's rushed to a hospital near the prison where she works. They then break him out there, taking a guard hostage and shooting another in the process.
* Gunslinger Girl, with 13 episodes and a 13-episode sequel, as well as a 2-episode OVA.
* Hanna-Barbera studio was launched in this period and created some of its earliest characters:
* Harry Harrison, the protagonist mentions that there are warehouses in their off-world colony filled with gold and other precious metals (distilled from seawater) that would make anyone an instant billionaire on Earth. On their colony, however, which is deliberately dependent on Earth for survival, gold isn't any more valuable than for its physical properties. They don't even bother bringing it with them during their annual migration to the other hemisphere.

* Harry Potter, the boarding school Hogwarts selects students at birth. A magic quill takes down the names of magical children the moment they are born. Muggleborn kids don't learn about this until they are eleven, though.
* Heretic Giordano Bruno is a spy working for Lord Walsingham, head of Elizabeth I's secret service.
* Hello Cheeky, Denis King always introduced himself with "Hi, fans! Denis "Nickname" King here!". Then there was this, which everyone got to deliver at one point or another—"Meanwhile, in a [location], not a thousand miles from [noun related to location]…"
* Gone with the Wind, set during the waning days of the Civil War and featuring an iconic burning of Atlanta.
* Grace Kelly several times had cab drivers telling her that she looks like Grace Kelly, according to a particular biography.
* Hero Realms. While a powerful faction of smugglers, rogues, and assassins, it doesn't control all criminal activity. The player could be an independent Thief, and the Necros cult pretty much still preys in the alleys and slums of the setting.
* Hades himself had Leuce, an Oceanid Nymph and his first wife. After her death, he honored her memory by turning her into a white poplar tree.
* High Sparrow", after beating his rival Alliser Thorne to the position of Lord Commander, Jon Snow graciously promotes him to a key command position. However, Thorne's key ally Janos Slynt refuses a direct order immediately afterward, prompting Snow to order his execution. Thorne stands to block the guards for a moment, clearly thinking about defending Janos, but ultimately decides he has more to lose than gain and steps aside.
* Halo control panels are made of light - blue and purple for the Covenant, and aquamarine and orange for the Forerunners. They usually have visible emitters. To a lesser degree, humans have also started to use these.
* Green Thumb powers, but she is still getting the hang of it and sometimes involuntarily summons animated vines.
* Hero Elementary episode "AJ's Extra Superpower" has Sparks Crew getting ready to go to Citytown Hero Con. The second half of the episode emphasizes this more, with AJ trying to return an envelope to his hero Jetman Jones, which has his new comic book.
* Guerrilla, being in a vehicle when it explodes is an instant kill, regardless of your health or the vehicle's size.
* going to the store and its sequels invoke this with featureless, unemotive CGI mannequins, their absurd bodily movements, and the remarkably high attention to detail in inserting them into real-world settings.
* God of War III Kratos at last brings fourth the destruction of Mount Olympus, and the gods upon it, as all was foretold.
* Goblins, Minmax humiliated his adventuring partner Forgath by yelling at a passing young (adult) woman "Hey! Thirteen and hot!" on a crowded street. The passersby didn't realize he was talking about her Charisma score, not her age.
* Haley goes through several different outfits, including a black version of her leather armor while
* Gran Hotel from Bambú Producciones are a classic example: Alicia is the upper-class daughter of the hotel owner and she's having a love affair with Julio, a poor waiter.
* Good-Looking Corpse, a group of villains use portals to find and harass heroes.
* Heroes, in the first season, before chopping it off in Season 2 and letting it grow back in a slightly shorter fashion in Season 4. His haircut had to be written in because Milo Ventimiglia hated the long hair so much that he buzzed it all off after filming.
* Hellblazer: John Constantine is a talented sorcerer, his power is of the mile-wide but inch-deep bent, and he can't dish out anywhere near the force that his magical peers like Zatanna and Dr. Fate can, but he doesn't need to. Between his silver tongue and his ability to manipulate and improvise, he'll make you beat yourself faster than the other two could beat you into the ground.

* Good Witch ex-wife that if she wants to go through a complicated legal battle for custody over their son, he will oblige her, and she will lose.
* Harley Quinn she wants to show off how much better she is without the Joker, even if those things do not benefit her own career.
* Hero Factory Building Contest #53. It appeared in a flashback in episode 3, and later, rebuilt as a monument, in episode 4.
* Hero's Chains is a cyborg with an A.I. integrated into his own body in order to handle nanotech, data searches, and communication. He treats it like a sibling.
* Got the Whole World in My Hand: Symbol of a hand grasping at the globe.
* High-School Sweethearts shows that they at the very least knew each other during their time at Hexside.
* Harry Morgan played a nutty U.S. Army General in the 3rd season episode "The General Flipped at Dawn". He did such a good job that in the 4th season he was cast in the role of the 4077th's new commanding officer, Colonel Sherman Potter, which he played for the remainder of the series.
* Hamilton. He’s fallen in romantic love with at least two characters so far, but barely thinks about or initiates sex, and was surprised a character would be upset with him because they weren’t having sex anymore.
* Heroic Age which connects all stars, as well uplifting several races. In time they eventually undertook a journey out of their home galaxy and into a new one. The story is about how the lesser races cope with the "Golden Tribe's" absence.
* Harry grows into this in the sequel, being a talented swordsman and * had returned from whence it came (or at least run off to carry out her evil plan elsewhere) during the transformation.
* Gossip Girl has Serena vs. Blair in season 2. Some clothes ripping included.
* Green Green (a teenage boy) by a giant bear and Reika (a teenage girl) getting molested by a group of monkeys for laughs, Reika eventually manages to escape while Bacchi's rape is depicted in detail, to the point the Bear orgasms inside of him.
* Happens often when a thrown grenade hits a wall and unexpectedly bounces back into (most of the time) Filemon's mouth.
* Healin' Good♡Pretty Cure, caused Twitter to crash during the scene said moment happened.
* Harry Potter and the Portrait of What Looked Like a Large Pile of Ash has Harry "savagely" calling Voldemort a "very bad and mean wizard."
* Heavy Metal, went to the crossroads to sell their soul in exchange for musical talent.
* Grampa Simpson tries and fails this trope in "War of the Simpsons". This elicits Nelson's first ever "
* HBO have several channels now with a repeat 3 hours later -W channel (HBOW, Show-West, etc)
* Happy Heroes, has 60 billion inhabitants according to what Little M. tells Big M. in the first episode.
* He is even worse in the manga. After butchering an entire squadron of Maverick Hunters who were out to stop his rampaging, he kept their corpses encased in ice chambers as port as a trophy collection of his victims. When the Colonel of the Repliforce repimanded him for such misconduct, in a temper tantrum he released several Maverick Hunter prisoners and told them to run for their lives, only to viciously hunt them down for sport and kill each of them with his ice powers, save one, who was saved by X and ex-Maverick Blizzard Buffalo, the latter being reformed in the manga as a hunter. After Walrus viciously injured X into unconsciousness, Buffalo went to fight Walrus alone, who brutually murdered him by impaling Buffalo with a Frost Tower attack. Repliforce leader General had enough of Walrus's evil deeds and brutally shot him down during his second encounter with X as a punishment for his previous misconduct and to save X's life.
* Hate Plague that can plunge the world into permanent anarchy, reflecting her views on humanity and wish to destroy the world.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers strip, Norway strangles Denmark with his own tie.
* Gone with the Wind want to go to war with the North, except for Rhett Butler, whose explanation of why secession is a very stupid idea falls on deaf ears.

* Halo are a downplayed version of this; they're divided into Queens, Protectors, Domestics, etc., but most Yanme'e castes are physically fairly similar to each other. Also, they use the same high-tech energy weapons as the rest of the Covenant.
* Harry Potter franchise is one of the most renowned and feared hunters of dark wizards. But such a job comes with danger, and he wears the scars all over himself. He's missing a leg, an eye, and his face is horrifically scarred, including a chunk of his nose missing completely.
* hard science fiction writers and series like Larry Niven, Robert Reed, David Brin, and Peter Watts tend to be pretty close-knit with each other.
* Guts himself has already been in these situations more than once. There's the Eclipse, as noted above, and then against the Baron of Koka and when
* Hayao Miyazaki's entire filmography: scenic flying sequences are a signature element, and he grew up around old airplanes in the factory operated by his father and uncle.
* Hercule threatens to do this to Cell in the manga, but it is never shown. In the anime, he smacks his butt at Cell.
* Harem Seeker, becomes this after a woman he trusted accused him of raping her, turning him into a social pariah. He learns to slowly grow out of it as he meets more honest women.
* Heroes staying on the show thanks to the reveal that she was one of three clones. Also, Nathan Petrelli was really killed and had his place taken by an amnesiac, permanently transformed Sylar.
* Harold and the Purple Crayon is old enough to walk around, seems pretty intelligent, can draw very well, and yet doesn't have much hair and wears a onesie.
* Gulliver's Travels introduced the word 'yahoo' for a stupid loutish person, 'lilliputian' to describe something very small, and the lesser used 'brobdingnagian' to describe something very large.
* Highlander. Paul is half British but English rather than Scottish. He used a Scottish accent in the flashbacks.
* Gulliver's Travels features a race of Giants and a race of morally and intellectually superior horses.
* Henry Tumour sprinkles profanities all over the place, including "fuck" — once in bold, very large print — with the teenage narrator explaining that this is just how teenagers talk, but that since there's one word he's not allowed to use in a kids' book he has to misspell it "cnut". So someone is insulting someone else by calling that person an Anglo-Saxon king?
* glue from tar, and were also apex hunters. The reason why they were absorbed into the modern variant of humanity is because they were so few in number compared to us.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, in order to have the audience empathize with the extreme boredom and tediousness the characters had to go through, animated the same episode about the arc eight times, with only minor differences for each one. Unfortunately, the tactic backfired horribly, and it became one of the most hated story arcs in the history of anime.
* Grey was killed, his brain was downloaded into a robotic body: he thinks he has been turned into a cyborg, i.e. a human mind into a mechanic body, when he's actually became nothing more than an AI. Main character Grey is forced to kill him/it.
* Grand Theft Auto V mentions this in his segment on Blaine County Radio with a fossil fuel lobbyist when they disparage science as being wrong because they maintain sound does not carry in space, yet all science fiction movies are loud. As we are led to disbelieve most of what comes out of these characters' mouths, we can accept that Grand Theft Auto is at least correct on this trope.
* Guardians. It's evident that they were all killed, but the number of wrecked Guardians strewn all over suggests that they made their killers pay for it.
* Heir to the Dojo: Given the nature of martial art schools in this genre, there tend to be certain characters who are chosen by his/her master as a successor.

Xianxia has another particularly popular variant - characters going into ruins of ancient long-gone sects, discovering and passing some sort of a test in order to gain their "inheritance", ranging from techniques to artefacts to bound servants (bound immortal demons and the like).
* Gregor Clegane does not specifically love battle, just wanton slaughter—he gets just as many jollies from butchering civilians, raping women and murdering children. When he asks Cersei who he's going to kill in a
* Goodbye Deponia: First, Rufus has to put laundry through a quirky laundering machine in a specific order so he can get out with Cletus' outfit; then, Rufus has to go in and out of various hallways and doors to ensure that Cletus is stuck in a room with Donna, ensuring that he and Goal can escape safely.
* Hal Jordan has ever pulled off, and then he goes down some ten minutes after the war is officially over and can't make the Korean he lands near understand that he doesn't want to fight now, it's over, they're not at war...so he winds up shooting him in the face at incredibly close range. Blood everywhere. Seriously screws him up.
* Heel–Face Turn Zakath with a broken city when he finally decides he's been delayed long enough... and smashes through a few walls while going to make this threat.
* Halo 4 a space battle. For their part, the splintered remnants of the Covenant are still mostly trying to recover the pre-Covenant scientific traditions that had been hobbled by the Prophets, though we later find out that some factions, like the Arbiter's human-friendly Swords of Sanghelios, have made some impressive headway in this regard.
* .hack: Most of the series of animes and games have floating rocks, islands and the like. Makes sense, seeing most of the animes and all of the games are set in a fictional MMORPG called "The World".
* Gravity Falls: Dipper is the only character to both appear and speak in every episode.
* Gravity Falls: Journal 3: Ford wonders if the Truth Telling Teeth have a truth serum inside.
* Herman Hesse in its original German) revolves around an extraordinarily complex game whose rules are never explained. It's implied, however, to be a kind of Liebnizian symbolic model of philosophy.
* Gyo features the Citrus Circus. It's all the fun of the circus, but almost everyone's infected (Except the ringmaster, who's just insane, and a few other members of his troupe) and collosal Animal walkers roam the Big Top.
* Harry wishes he had popcorn when Amelia Bones and several Aurors come to arrest Gilderoy Lockhart and the house elves immediately supply some.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: After Italy lied about being under attack by Russia, Japan revives instantly before giving one.
* Gunstar Super Heroes, but has the exact same basic story starring characters with the exact same names as the original (though the two plots do diverge after a while.)
* Heaven, representing various alignments and their associate philosophies and home to gods, fiends, angels and the spirits of the dead — have very weird skies indeed, which might include floating mountains (Ysgard) multiple huge moonlike spheres which are actually other layers of the same plane (Carceri), the other layer of the plane, inverted in respect to the one you're on and facing "down" on you (Bytopia), an endless field of geometric solids floating in space (Acheron), etc.
* he's an eagle. When he falls to the ground, he ends with "I told you I was a p-pig!"
* Gregory Benford spend a brief time trapped in a Tunnelworld after an encounter with some 4-dimensional aliens. It was a closed loop, so traveling in any direction for a long enough time would return you to your point of origin.
* Hands Held in the Snow nobleman, crossdresses in almost every appearance so far. Nobody comments on it much beyond curiosity, but he likes to flaunt his sparkly wigs and dresses.

* Guards! Guards! detail, in nervous handwriting, the author's intent to put his dragon-summoning spell into practice. The rest of the pages have been badly scorched, demonstrating that this didn't end well.
* Henry V: War Criminal? where Bottom (who's been turned into a donkey, fittingly) raises his ears to suggest sexual arousal.
* God is one too. Only four of his angelic children had ever seen him in the first place (most likely Michael, Lucifer, Raphael and Gabriel) and most of the angels know damn well that Lucifer was the favorite. Where did that leave the rest of them? He's actually gone so far as to
* Harold Peters Inskipp, commander of the Special Corps, in Harry Harrison's SF novel
* Haruhi Suzumiya, one shudders to consider what she would do if aware of them.
* Hellbound: Hellraiser II Frank when she sees him in hell. He catches her, holding a knife to her and tries to rape her. She ends up kissing him, causing him to stop restraining her. It apparently distracted him enough for her to be able to figure out how to destroy him (throwing his blanket into the fire, causing him to burn).
* he gained his powers and accidentally killed his parents after being experimented on during Osborn's attempts to cure his family. with the real Li, this also does subjected the real Martin Li to Adaptationalillainy.
* Golden Scepter, a surviving antediluvian Alicorn Emperor from the Alicorn Civilization, is an "Antecedent"-type god, meaning that he's
* Hecatomb had a literal "It Was Only A Dream" card which can eliminate practically any card your opponent has out, essentially making them have never happened.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle. So, who are the main characters, and what happens to their appetite after they smoke some weed?
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows in the form of a counterpoint argument.
* Great Expectations: Spooky fog helps set a foreboding mood for Pip's first encounter with Magwitch the escaped convict in the graveyard, and his second encounter, when he brings the food and the file that Magwitch told him to get.
* Highlander only had the first of its six seasons released in Japan as a series of VHS tapes.
* Hell. The episodes that were paired up with these two, "Wallaby on Wheels" and "Bedfellows," were aired together in reruns to still allow for an even number. Oddly, when the show initially began airing on Nicktoons TV, "Leap Frogs" was shown for a while before being pulled again, but "Heff in a Handbasket" remained in circulation until the show was removed from the network. This meant there were two half-hours that included "Wallaby on Wheels" (one with the original "Heff in a Handbasket", and one with "Bedfellows").
* hat, the Posbis became downright civilized and if anything on occasion a little overprotective.
* Highlander has a variation, with Richie asking Duncan if it ever gets any easier for an immortal, referring to losing a loved one. Duncan replies that it doesn't.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers has a strip for this, in which the arrival and existence of America's friend Tony are explained.
* Heroes, Elle Bishop, after her electrical powers manifested, was subjected to extreme electrical torture to see how much she could take. By her own father, no less. The end result is a sadistic and insane girl whose father sends her out in the field, referring to her as an "executioner".
* Harahpin: Untoria's moons have skull-like faces and appear to have a hypnotic effect, driving creatures to blood lust.
* Have Spacesuit Will Travel, though it's described as looking more like a loaf of pumpernickel, or an oblate spheroid.
* Guns N' Roses' song "Welcome to the Jungle" also depicts a Wretched Hive. In fact, the line "You know where you are? You're in the jungle, baby! You're gonna die!" was said by a cab driver to Axl Rose during a trip to visit a friend.
* Goatswood, an isolated town whose people are known for their distinctive look. This seems to be a * Gomorrah (2008). Two teenage hoodlums have been running out of control in the local Camorra clan's territory, despite warnings from the mob boss to behave themselves or die. They ignore this warning, stealing a cache of weapons hidden by the Camorra. An older mobster points out they'll have trouble with the police if two youngsters are killed publicly, so he approaches them with a deal — for 10,000 euros they return the weapons and kill a mobster who has betrayed him. The youths follow their target to an isolated location, only to be murdered in an ambush and their bodies carted away by a bulldozer to be disposed of.

* Halloween Episode when Sheen, Carl, Cindy, Libby, and Hugh were turned into monsters.
* Happened with Dennis at the end of "The Maureen Ponderosa Wedding Massacre" on
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony: One of the missions for Yusuf Amir involves stealing a subway train car with help of a transport helicopter.
* Hags may or may not eat their lovers; it depends on whether they feel hungry or think it would be more "fun" not to.
* Going Postal so that the clacks owner comes under suspicion and the race is called off.
* Happy New Year, having been whisked off to a remote hospital to recover from his bullet wounds, giving his partner DS Ronnie Brooks and would-be lover Alesha Philips the shock of their lives when he's brought back to testify against his assailant.
* Heroes of the Storm explicitly subverts this by making sure that all xp rewards are shared evenly with all team members (there is no gold so gold sharing is a non-issue). This is partially due to blizzards attempt to make a more casual-friendly game, however, this does remove a lot of kill stealing complaints and general hostility that the old games used to have.
* Have Gun – Will Travel episode "Return of the Lady", Diana ties a handkerchief around Paladin's arm before he goes to fight B.G. in a saber duel..
* Goosebumps, the shop had previously vanished entirely, leaving behind an empty plot of land.
* Helliconia series is an epic chronicling the rise and fall of a civilisation over more than a thousand years as the planet progresses through its incredibly long seasons, which last for centuries.
* Hellgate, set in California but shot in South Africa, Ron Palillo is the only actual American in the cast.
* Hey Arnold! She looks up the symptoms of monkeynucleosis, a long-debunked disease, and is relieved when she finds out she only has the first symptom. Then, when the book slips from her hands, she realizes she has the second symptom, sweaty palms, and starts to notice the others showing up in sequence. Of course, since the disease isn't real, all of the new symptoms she notices are purely psychosomatic.
* Hey Ash, Whatcha Playin'?. The skit has him realize that whatever he writes into the game becomes canon to the series.
* Highlander: Duncan MacLeod, in contrast to shorter, dirty-blond Connor MacLeod.
* Heroes of Might and Magic. One of the Inferno towns (where ammo carts are sold at a discounted price) is described as being the former home of Demon-Sovereign Kha-beleth, where the town's workers became particularly skilled at manufacturing ammunition to allow their lord to practise his favorite sport - hunting, preferably of two-legged prey.
* Golden Ending has everyone, including the villain and the boss who dies in every other ending, surviving.
* Gumball sometimes can be this, like when he left Anais out of a party in "Halloween" by hanging her from a tree branch.
* half-demons. Otherwise the new appendages would appear underneath the user's shirt uncomfortably.
* Hägar the Horrible by his wife if he complied, the owner chooses the second option.
* Glove and Boots' video "Jigsaw Puzzle", in order to get out of the handcuffs, Mario cuts Fafa's arm off with a hacksaw.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle. The producers added in two Jewish roommates as the lead characters' friends.
* Hardware after Anne throws her ironing board out the flat window in frustration.

* Harry/Voldemort or Harry/Tom Riddle ship. Voldemort is 53 years older. Slightly less creepy if
* Help Not Wanted, Ogrell Syn'Gorrsh gets his arm bitten off by a wyvern in the penultimate chapter.
* Hayate the Combat Butler challenge him are the (at worst) minor characters, usually the ones on his side.
* Harry Potter, Draco is the trio's resident expert on clothes. Also, Harry and Draco share an awkward bro-hug.
* Grand Theft Auto). It implies there's still 50 states, despite the addition of fictional states such as Liberty State, Alderney, North Yankton, and San Andreas. Cities get the same treatment, with Liberty City, Alderney City, Vice City, and Los Santos featuring prominently in the series, among others.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers of each other, but they didn't actively try to ban Italy from being with the other.
* Grant Morrison The Crack, in turn, is home to the Paperverse, the fictional reality that The Hand mines for exotic technology.
* Guild Wars, Varesh transforms into a Margonite-like appearance (and eventually a full margonite form) over the course of several missions. This involves getting 2 extra pairs of eyes (first appearing as bumps, then fully appearing) and become a lot paler.
* Green Day's "Longview". "Bite my lip and close my eyes, take me away to paradise...", "When masturbation's lost its fun...", "some say quit or I'll go blind", and "I'm so damn bored I'm going blind", in reference to the myth.
* Hatty Jones' first and only feature film role to date was the titular character in the 1998 adaptation of
* Grimm plays this straight and has a notable subversion. Wesen (fairy tale creatures) are indeed the things that go bump in the night, but they in turn grow up with cautionary tales about Grimms, who will come to kill them if they eat too many people.
* he and his family all just used her new toothbrush, flees in repulsion and makes this in the front door.
* Going into "Nanoshock" and becoming "Necrotech" is a very real danger in K.C. Alexander's * Heroes is somewhat of a prodigy in real life too. By the time he was 4 he was on Ripley's Believe It Or Not for his amazing piano skills - notably being the youngest soloist to perform with an orchestra at the Sydney Opera House. By the time he was 9 years old, he was in a 9th grade math class.
* Guyver, the shapeshifting Zoanoids finally reveal themselves to normal humanity after millennia of hiding among us... on the day they conquer Earth.
* Goosebumps, ends with the heroine ascending into heaven, having saved someone from a terrible fate.
* "Hated in the Nation") leads to their gruesome deaths. When the public catches on that the hashtag really does kill people, all hell breaks lose.
* her crush Qiu Tong. Similar situation for Qin Xiong and his upperclassman, though in this case, the upperclassman absolutely towers over him.
* Hack/Slash, Cassie manages to defeat Laura Lochs by soaking her in high-proof alcohol and igniting her.
* Happy Gilmore: An odd example in that the plot's initial conflict, Mrs. Gilmore lossing her house, is not the real villain's plan. Instead, that would be Shooter's attempts to kick Happy off the Pro Tour for stealing his thunder.
* Gospel Choirs Are Just Better: Gospel choir music signifies "this scene is important".
* Halo is a big fan of music from the late-20th and early-21st centuries, to the annoyance and chagrin of the soldiers under his command whenever he plays this "old stuff" before missions.
* Hank Zipzer: In "Hank Rocks Out!", Rosa and Stan get locked inside a potable toilet at a rock festival. Stan attempts to break the door and winds up tipping the toilet over: covering the tow of them in human excrement.
* Guns, Germs, and Steel where a Boer family was attacked by the Zulus and we see the husband, wife, and the older son dead in the morning. However, the infant survived the attack and his cries can be heard.

* Golden Age story, a murderer frames Bruce Wayne by shooting a bullet through his own hat with the gun he had just used to commit murder, and then throwing the gun at Bruce who had come in when he heard the shot. Bruce instinctively catches the gun, and so is holding a smoking gun next to a dead body when the police burst in a few seconds later, with the murderer claiming Bruce had tried to kill him too, pointing at the bullet hole in his hat.
* Grojband. While he does interact with the eponymous band and other characters several times, it still usually has something to do with Trina's crush on him.
* He goes on to give an extremely pessimistic view of death, saying "you're just gone, like the light goes out. And you know how they say there's people who will remember you forever? They die too." Naturally, the kids burst into tears. It's at once a hilarious and terrible Aversion of
* Halo of terraforming to make a colony world suitable for human use. There's also an outright aversion in the Grunt homeworld, which has a methane atmosphere. That said, there are plenty of planets that play this fairly straight too, even if they have an extra moon/sun or two.
* .hack games take place in 2010, with a virus having wiped out all computers except for the Altmit OS in 2005. The next three games take place in 2017.
* GoBots and slowly clump away down the road like bricks turning under their own power.
* Highschool Romance, which features Shoji, a boy, who has to crossdress to attend an all-female school and befriends (and possibly romances) two of the students.
* Happosai situation, as the Clone is a vampiric ghost-like entity that is the living embodiment of Ranma's evil.
* had the Eternal Light Corporation, a profit-driven religion. As the Weird notes after throwing off their brainwashing, "any religion that insists you sign a non-disclosure agreement should be considered suspect".
* Gunnerkrigg Court. They succeeded, with one exception: Diego kept a record of her in secret.
* Guilded Age: Turns out killing the entire crew is an efficient distraction.
* Heated Storm Yields a Wild Horse's Heart initially refuse to believe in the Kiss of Death despite Ranma and Genma both changing forms when exposed to water.
* Hc Svnt Dracones take it a step further with a quantum backup system that downloads them immediately at death.
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age has Felix with the Cure ability so you can heal your party. However, it won't be fully adequate in later battles where you'll have to heal multiple people at once and the character who can use multi-target water healing abilities doesn't join your party until much later. To compensate, Jenna's default class can learn multi-target healing abilities to let you get by until you obtain your dedicated healer.
* Happy Feet, a baby penguin is seen dancing next to Mumble and Gloria (and is later revealed to be their son Erik in the sequel).
* Handedness is something humans express to the extreme when compared to other mammals. Processing visual details and spacial clues to the degree we do in color requires immense amounts of brainpower when compared to hearing, smell, taste, and touch. Fine motor control and language also require a lot of brainpower (but not as much as vision). Humans have brains large enough to completely handle vision with one side of the brain while fine motor control and language are handled by the other side. Our brains are powerful enough that one side can do all three but, as anyone who has tried to write with their off hand will tell you, the end result is awkward and clumsy.
* Hare Lift Bugs and Yosemite Sam are on board a crashing airplane with only one parachute. Bugs suggests they draw straws. Sam: "You draw the straws, I'm takin' the parachute!"
* grow accustomed to going about during the daytime after trying the bars.
* Hank The Cow Dog in one book where Sally is forced to borrow Slim's filthy and falling apart truck to drive Hank to the vet, she gets back at him by attaching fireworks to the spark plug of his car to make it seem like his engine is exploding next time he starts it as a prank.

* Greeting Gesture Confusion: Characters don't know which greeting gesture (handshake, hug, bow, kiss on cheek, etc) to use.
* Goosebumps - Only 50 episodes from the first three seasons were dubbed in Japanese.
* Hardwar features the moon Titan converted into a mining outpost by various anonymous mining corporations. Problems of unspecified nature arose and the corporations responsible for the operations immediately left, taking interplanetary means of travel with them and stranding thousands of colonists on the moon. They still live there, two centuries later, using whatever tech and vehicles have been left behind and patching them up with local resources - but everything is a banged-up mess, nothing looks clean, and life is extremely cheap.
* He TRIED to do the same earlier in the comic with a giant, citing the various environmental and physical reasons that make giants impossible to exist. The giant proved his existence via club to the face.
* Hellsister Trilogy. Superman agrees to rescue them as long as they help them out. Sivana believes Superman is bluffing because heroes feel compelled to save everyone, including villains, but Supergirl retorts that, given the stakes, she's willing to leave them to their devices. At the end, Luthor and Sivana agree to cooperate and are rescued.
* Half-Life 2. Barney is officially a Civil Protection officer, which leads Gordon (and by extension, the player) to initially believe he has been captured when Barney helps him escape.
* Green Lantern villain, is a huge black ex-Marine (and a member of the Geoff Johns Awesomely Revamped Villains Club). Unlike the previous bearer of the powers, this Tattooed Man knows how to use his powers to maximum effect.
* Gopher. Unlike the web's system of hyperlinks, Gopher used a hierarchical system similar to a file browser. Gopher was invented in 1991, but had died out by the end of the decade. There are still a few gopher servers floating around out there, and some web browsers support the gopher protocol either natively or via an extension.
* gun sports a knee-length leather trenchcoat with an impressively oversized belt and cuffs.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, while wandering the old library, Annie and Kat come across a painting which has a set of footprints leading into it.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law's Deadly Duplicator accidentally makes four copies of Mentok, they immediately form a barbershop quartet. Phil shoots three of them, and Mentok starts looking for replacements, starting with a baritone.
* Hellboy, the various Nazi factions have a bizarre habit of being involved with almost every story arc in one way or another, even if the arc had nothing to do with them. One chapter hung a lampshade on it when Roger and Abe find (an utterly inexplicable and with no plausible or possible reason for even being there) a Nazi submarine in the ancient tunnels of a lost civilization beneath the Himalayas. They aren't remotely surprised; the damn Nazis have shown up everywhere else.
* Grand Theft Me: Your enemy could've swapped bodies with someone you know, and are now pretending to be the person to dig up dirt on you!
* Glory Seeker: A character wants other people to consider him/her to be a badass.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone when Harry mention the dream he had of riding a flying motorcycle (a callback to the start of the book when he was left on the Dursley's doorstep).
* Hayate, Dearche, Signum, Subaru and Yuri sport a battle attire similar to Archer's (see F/SN example below). Like him, they achieve an effect similar to the actual longcoats of their allies.
* Grandia tweaks the trope a bit by giving a female party member an unexpected case of traumatic stress disorder, forcing her to return to her village before the final battle begins.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire them off, the result being that she had to go to the nurse to get her nose re-attached to her face.
* Godzilla vs. Kong, throughout the film, there are repeated allusions to an ancient war between Godzilla and Kong's ancestors, but the details are left very vague, including why it happened, which side started it or what the outcome was, beyond the implication that it led to the decline of both species.

* Hades and Persephone. A bit one-sided, but he (also) gets shot with Eros' arrow of love. Instant attraction and abduction (with her father's permission and advice) ensues. On Persephone's side, it was more
* Hermione and Draco get into a "Yes you do."/"No I don't." exchange about whether he has a stick up his ass.
* Hal Roach when he looked upon the antics of a group of children from his office window and felt that a series of shorts about a motley group of moppets could make good comedy and have audience appeal.
* Herbert Hoover ran for President in 1928 without ever having held elected office before, won, then the Great Depresion happened and he got blown out in his re-election bid in 1932 and never ran for another office again.
* He's from Wales in the 1980s. In the movie, this is totally ignored.
* Happy Feet Two does this while trying to comfort his son, Erik. Gloria even lampshades it:
* he looks instead of a motorbike most of the other Investigation Team acquires after getting licenses.
* Godslave's main character, Edith, has visibly white facial features (especially when compared with clearly black Blacksmith Girl), but her skin is a darker shade of brown.
* Happens to Bubbles again in "15 Minutes Of Fame" when her "same time sneeze" video gets a lot of likes.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone. The movie qualifies for this trope, but the book doesn't.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire murdered come out of his wand and swarm him, giving Harry just enough time to escape.
* Gor of the setting, have a similar treatment, the oldest being about 5,000,000 years old.
* Hatoful Boyfriend and spinoff material, Ryouta Kawara has a job at a maid cafe to support his ailing mother. In the manga, he specifically takes pride in being the most popular waitress there. In a drama CD, he coaxes Sakuya into trying it too, saying it's easy because pigeons like themselves don't have discernible differences between males and females.
* Havenfall Is for Lovers features the Jersey Devil as one of the protagonist's potential love interests, in the person of non-binary delinquent Jordan "JD" Davies.
* Harry Turtledove for Home. This is also the case for members of the Race who have spent any lengthy period on Earth, as the lizards are not used to change (their empire having remained largely unchanged for the past 50,000 years).
* Halo 2 finds a second Halo installation, Sergeant Johnson does the same as above with his cigar.
* Hetalia: Paint It, White would be just under an hour long, about the length of two regular half-hour episodes, without the clips from the series thrown in. Given the source material, they didn't have a lot to work with, but wanted a feature-length film. The move proved controversial in Japan and the Japanese DVD release removed the clip show parts, but the American release includes them.
* Hang 'Em High, with her complaining about having to miss the hanging.
* Guardians of the Galaxy has the hero's mother die in hospital on a flatline sound.
* Good Omens (2019) has Thou-Shalt-Not-Commit-Adultery Pulsifer sternly rebuke a villager for calling him "Adultery" and not using his title of Witchfinder Major. When they arrive at Agnes Nutter's house (the witch he's there to burn), she opens the door and greets him simply as "Adultery Pulsifer".
* Happy Circus Music: Traditional-style, upbeat circus music that sets a cheerful mood.
* had names, it's a bit hard to swallow that half the army could have been killed off and hardly any of the major characters were among the casualties. The only confirmed deaths from pre-existing characters were Neji, Shikaku and Inoichi.

* Gone", the social worker handling the paperwork for the Buffy household went a little cuckoo bananas nutcakes after being tormented by an invisible woman. Perils of a Sunnydale life.
* Good Angel, Bad Angel: A character's conscience takes on the form of an angel and a demon or devil near the character's head.
* Gunnerkrigg Court (over Annie's protests) that the situation calls for a witty quote. The best that Annie can manage on such short notice is "I hope you like your... smashed... death ray!"
* Green Day, reached new critical heights and received a Grammy nomination for Album of the Year.
* Grim Tales from Down Below. The language used seems to be that of the demonic Nergal symbiotes that both Junior and Minnie possess.
* Hell's Gate that come in one-point-five-inch and two-point-five-inch calibers capable of firing shrapnel rounds, high-explosive or solid ammunition. They're used to shoot down dragons.
* has, and putting a suspect in the trunk of his car and driving like crazy to get said suspect to talk. And the list goes on.
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah, in which another scientist manages to duplicate Serizawa's research.
* HetaOni, as far as anyone knows, the Nations are all still trapped in the mansion and in danger of dying.
* God of War: The unimportant, unnamed women who offer Kratos sex in each game of the series.
* here partially because he finds the comparison of Tarvek and kidnapped princesses highly entertaining.
* GURPS (a Japanese-only scourcebook about women's professional wrestling)
* Grent's Fall's medieval setting, it's no surprise this applies to leaders on both sides.
* Grim Dawn Oathkeepers are essentially paladins, carving their way through the post-apocalypse and its otherworldly menaces in the name of the deities they serve. It bears mentioning that, while many follow the good god Empyrion and his light and protection, many others serve the much more morally-ambiguous Witch Gods, and nothing stops the player character from dipping into both their services and gifts. It's also explicitly mentioned some of them follow more malevolent divine figures.
* Gulabi Gang is just a small fraction of their other, nonviolent, humanitarian activities.
* He's does tend toward polo shirts when not "on the clock". It's a good look for him.
* Highlander: A Temporary version due to the show’s premise, but they still count:
* Guardians of the Galaxy. It's later discovered that the "Gamora" in custody is actually a female Alpha Flight agent that Gamora had gagged, switched clothes with, and painted up to resemble her.
* Hilariously parodied in the episode "Rimmerworld", in which Lister comes up with a lengthy and elaborate plan to escape from a prison cell, and Kryten replies "Or we could use the teleporter."
* Grumpier Old Men, Gustafson's daughter and Goldman's son are planning a wedding, but it falls apart under pressure. In the end they show a wedding ceremony, which turns out to be for Goldman and Maria Ragetti. The kids reveal they eloped.
* Grimm stops treating Ruby like crap, stops demanding to be made the team leader, to making Ruby coffee so she can keep studying. She's been the perfect team-mate ever since.
* Greg, is constantly the target of women's scorned hatred. While he is not avoiding ex-lovers, he is seeking out new women to love and leave.
* Golden Threads Tie Us has mastered the art of the blindsiding and backstabbing the enemy. She has lost count of how many mindless zombies she has slain via driving her sword into their backs.
* Godzilla: Planet of the Monsters: To a limited extent. Only those chosen by a governing A.I. left on the colonization mission. And horribly deconstructed in Haruo's narration which he calls a hell worse then Godzilla. Due to the lack of space, resources, and energy, everyone is cold, hungry and miserable in their ship. It's only been 20 years but they still haven't found a planet they can colonize and it's gotten to the point that going back to Earth might be the only way to survive.

* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone when Dudley's old sweater keeps shrinking every time Petunia tries to force it over Harry's head, until it's small enough to fit a hand puppet. Though it was obviously magic, Petunia came to the more logical conclusion, sparing him from severe punishment.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, Hagrid was briefly questioned by Dolores Umbridge regarding some footprints in the snow. Although he tries to defend Harry and friends by lying about them, it's pretty clear that he's doing an absolutely bad job at it. It still managed to get Umbridge away, though.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) sudden increases in weight.
* Groundhog Day: At the end of the film, when the looping stops and the storm ends, Phil declares "Let's live here!"
* Good All Along: A character thought to be a villain turns out to actually be a good guy.
* Good Omens, drawing the attention of the local chapter of the Hell's Angels.
* Guild members must get the Guildmaster's approval before taking an apprentice.
* Gomer Pyle, U.S.M.C.) bone in his body. One gets the impression that he would probably never make officer, let alone NCO status, as he's just too nice (as well as klutzy and scatterbrained) to effectively lead troops.
* Halo: Combat Evolved brought to "Combat Alert Alpha". Klaxons sound throughout the ship, the crew and Marine complement get to their stations, and the cryogenics bay thaws out the Master Chief.
* Hercules (2014): It turns out that Cotys attacked his own villages, and framed the rebels (who he claimed followed a warlord) for doing this.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (1974) (and most of the other cars being stolen are pretty darned cool, too).
* Hilda: The Trolberg library has a secret room filled with magic books, and serves as a front for the Witches Tower. The librarian, Kaisa, is a witch herself.
* Haré+Guu. The four (human) residents are not particularly concerned about the rather surreal landscape and creatures that surround them.
* Hannah Montana guest-starred on an episode as a singer (though the vocals were recorded by someone else), years before her singing career began.
* Glory Road is a reconstruction of pulp adventure novels with an ordinary modern day man swashbuckling his way across several savage planets inhabited by "dragons" and other such beasties in search of a device that recorded the memories of all the Empresses of the Fifty Universes.
* Grand Kingdom Limited Edition/Collector's Edition comes with poster, artbook, soundtrack, decals, and collector's box. The Grand Edition comes with an artbook, soundtrack, Parade poster, Lillia poster, cloth map, 6 lapel pins, 6 mini art prints, transparent decal stickers, and collector's box.
* High Plains Drifter suddenly decides he has urgent business elsewhere.
* Hank Zipzer team of Hank (white male) and his two best friends: Ashley (Asian female) and Frankie (black male).
* Grandia III. Everything you've seen indicates Miranda is a Cool Big Sis, until it's revealed she's a mother. Her personality, however, fits this trope.
* has NOTHING in its torso. A football can literally fit through the space in the middle of the statue. As it turns out this work of art is a portrayal the void that grief leaves behind in those whom were mourning.
* Grimble by Clement Freud, a recipe tells Grimble to boil a potato for 20 minutes. He cuts it into sixteenths and boils them for a minute and a quarter.
* "Helen": The narrator finds his grandfather acting bizarrely in his new apartment, claiming someone named "Helen" is taking over rooms and making threats. Turns out some computer virus has been downloading obscene material and relaying threatening messages through a Bonzi BUDDY called "Helen," and with the computer gone the grandfather starts getting better. The narrator still thinks it's weird that there's no documentation of the virus online.

* Harmoknight, who arrive on Planet Melodia on a massive, spiky-green meteor and cause nearly every animal nearby to become violent.
* Godzilla 2000 received an international dub in Hong Kong, which has never been officially released in full. TriStar completely re-dubbed the movie for its American release, in addition to making numerous small cuts for pacing reasons. However, a single line from the original dub was retained because sound editor Darren Pascal was fond of it.
* Grim Dark. He corrupts worlds until they are twisted messes where no one but the bad guys can ever get a happy ending.
* Hikaru no Go, a mistake in translation between Korean Go pro Ko Yeong-ha and a Japanese reporter gives the titular character cause for anger- it had seemed that Honinbo Shusaku had been insulted. When the mistake is discovered, Yeong-ha decides not to correct it so as to piss Hikaru off even more.
* Halberds were also commonly used in war, ranging from a simple addition of a blade fixed on a right angle to the main blade to as many as 4 crescent-shaped blades fixed just below the main blade.
* Grotesco fault they have been murdering each other for millennia — nope, the gays made them do it! Oh, and it's not Satan's fault either: He's also an innocent victim of the horrible gay conspiracy.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch: Voluntary example with destructive intentions when a gremlin puts metallic elements in a microwave. It explodes and that's exactly what he had in mind.
* Grand Finale. For delicious irony, Zuko, the son he considered to be a failure, gets appointed as the new Fire Lord and vows to undo the damage Ozai has done.
* gotten into a fistfight with a classmate. He then pushes the boy to the ground... and accidentally gets him impaled by a tree branch through the throat. Since that boy turns out to be the "extra", by killing him Matsunaga broke the curse for the class of 1983.
* Hercule Poirot comes close to being romantically involved with is a highly skilled jewel thief.
* Golgoth Studio was a French company with ambitious projects: making HD sequels and remakes of famous arcade games on PC. However, it went pretty badly for them. The only game they actually released was the mediocre and unfinished
* God Save The Mark, the hero is such a sucker that con artists from all over the city practically line up for the opportunity to take his money.
* Hash House Lingo: Fast food services have their own slang for menu items.
* Gwen Stacy. Here, Harry Osborn throw bombs at the clone pods in a fit of rage, which turns out include the real Gwen.
* Goku's arrival on Earth was supposed to be an alien invasion/genocide until he hit his head and forgotten his mission.
* Happily Married at the end of the third and final movie in the series.
* Have you ever wondered how the dragon scale got into Max and Emmy's house in
* He's still arrested because when he came back to Japan, his plane was delayed and could not land until after midnight, giving the police a whole extra day.
* Harry Potter, has been known to express controversial views about gender and gender-expression, even going so far as to treat transgender people as being wrong about themselves (especially in the case of trans autistic people), declaring that transgender women aren't women on social media, and giving donations to groups that have similar viewpoints. It makes the books' themes and points harder to view, since it comes across as the story saying your birth doesn't define you, except in regards to your gender.
* Gödel, Escher, Bach: An Eternal Golden Braid uses against the fools who fall into his trap at the center of the labyrinth.
* Godzilla. When he gets into a fight, he doesn't stop until either his enemy has been defeated or until the battle ends in a draw. Only rarely has he been defeated in battle.
* Hideki Kamiya without Kamiya's knowledge when he was just finishing working on localizing the original game for the Western market, nor has he had any involvement with the series since and has even admitted that he's only the creator of the first game, not the series as a whole.

* Halo has plenty of examples that aren't just the usual "shoot head for max damage" ones:
* He does a lot of movies and makes numerous public appearances (he presided over the jury of the 2011 Cannes Film Festival). But whenever anyone tries to interview him... (unless you're
* Heroism Addict: They want so badly to be heroes they'll start disasters just to have someone to save.
* Haze — including the main character, who only gets a unique model once he joins the Promise Hand. This is well in line with the game's themes.
* Grand Finale, this stock ending can be met with lots of fanfare as the characters we root for succeed.
* Greek Ninja, although shown and claiming to not like people and even being rude to them a lot of the time, somehow manages to gather a group of capable fighters around her. The twist is, most of them join her on her quest even though she was unwilling to accept them. The only character she actually asked to join her on her own accord was Electra.
* Godzilla movies increasingly became this especially into the Heisei series, featuring aliens, space travel, giant robots, androids, time travel, and various other scifi shenanigans.
* Harry Potter and a secret common room which requires some trick to enter.
* had heavy merchandise and toy lines behind them Obviously, kids won't buy an action figure for a character who never does anything on the show except stand in the background.
* HERZ: Asuka in more ways than one: she was the last important female character Shinji met during the War. In the story she appears after Misato, Kurumi... and she is married to Shinji.
* Harry Potter books to be under the "language education" section of bookstores, since lots of kids just learning English become better at it by reading the English books and comparing them to a translation.
* Hamilton premiered, struck the iconic pose and performed "What I Did For Love" with the original cast.
* her. She's a little surprised but agrees. The princess, who didn't like the whole "Do X and marry my daughter" thing the king came up, orders her suitors to find the hero and capture him in exchange for her hand, then marries a knight she'd had her eye on once they're all out of the kingdom.
* hero protagonist for various reasons, not least because it makes him look like a badass. In one job he was equipped with a particularly powerful pocket-sized handgun that looked like a fashion accessory and so was inadequate for intimidation. Carrying a sword, on the other hand, gets you a little more respect.
* Grey Gardens, except the daughter was the one who got rejected by her fiancé, and unlike Estella, she never left the house (except when she ran away to New York for a few years). Miss Havisham herself may have been based on the real-life shut-in spurned bride Eliza Emily Donnithorne.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, the people of a certain village believe that a floating golden feather in a glass orb helps the people of their village become great runners, and when the feather falls, the people begin to run out of energy and lose their ability to run. While the feather falling and the people failing to run are connected, it's a third, external force causing it: The manipulation of gravity. The feather is implicitly magic, but it was gravity's fault.
* heel before the gig is up. And semi-major heels are generally free game to humiliate and torture without earning the ire of the audience.
* GURPS Furries have furries as human creations, and some of the templates are designed with this in mind.
* High School D×D. An "EX Novel" set in one possible future of the series shows that Issei is indeed married to multiple women and has had at least one child with each heroine.
* Hanamaru Kindergarten classmate Koume in confessing to a boy, it results in Koume screaming "Take me!" As Anzu explains to her shocked teacher, "that's how my Mama confessed to Papa."

* Hidden in Plain Sight: Something is being searched for, and it turns out it was there the whole time but blended into the surroundings.
* Gods and Generals. His wife even recites the Lovelace poem to him in its entirety before he enlists, right after he says that he dare not presume to quote it to her.
* He's told not to remind the Zenos of their promise to make their own tournament. He does so anyway because he's bored
* Gravity Falls with hillbilly speak. A flashback shows he talked like this even before he went crazy.
* Go, Little Book! into limericks, one book at a time. The second book goes as follows:
* Gulliver's Travels by the intellectual protagonist. Also similarly, "brobdingnagian" is in the dictionary too. Guess what it means?
* Halflings of Kelethin, or the Coldain Dwarf and Barbarian city of New Halas.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys. Herc and Iolas agree to jump on three.....then say three and jump.
* he is reformed once and for all (though still remaining untamed) after Twilight saves him from Tirek even though Discord had earlier done a Face–Heel Turn
* Hello From The Hallowoods Watching Little Mikey get bullied is hard enough on its own, but then we find out two of the bullies picking on him for his "boyfriend" are together as adults, and at least one of them is still dealing deep-seated internalized homophobia. Relistening to the bullying scene becomes darker knowing it's not only coming from a place of self-hatred, but one that hasn't gone away after more than a decade.
* her actions and encouraging her that her decisions and feelings are the right way to go.
* God Bless America, a pedophile mistakes Roxy for a child prostitute and Frank, for her pimp.
* Grandfather Clause #1: In 2004, the NCAA specifically allowed eight Division III institutions to continue to play select sports in D-I
* Hawkwind with this magnificent reference to a rather disappointing support act:
* Happened when British comedian Tommy Cooper had a heart attack on live TV in 1984. He was declared dead on arrival at the hospital shortly afterward, although going by the video recording on YouTube it (thankfully) seems like he died pretty much within seconds. Since part of Cooper's stage routine involved frequent minor technical mishaps, the audience continued to laugh even as Cooper collapsed, assuming it was
* Hates Small Talk: This character despises engaging in casual conversation.
* Hilariously done in the Lil' Jon song "Get Low," where in the radio edit the lyric "To all skeet skeet motherfucker, to all skeet skeet goddamn" is changed to: "To all skeet skeet skeet skeet skeet skeet, to all skeet skeet skeet skeet skeet skeet." ("Skeet" is a slang term for ejaculating onto someone, which to many is a lot more inappropriate than the words it replaced). The edited version of this song in general is about 50% of this trope and only 50% the actual lyrics.
* Gradisil by Adam Roberts features jet planes being retrofitted to journey into Low Earth Orbit. By riding on electromagnetic fields the planes, over the course of a day or so, can reach orbit. Big planes like a 747 are used to lift private space-habitats into orbit.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets: His brotherly love for Ron and, to some extent, Ginny, pushes him to go down to the Chamber of Secrets to rescue the girl, and his respect for Dumbledore gives him the things he requires to kill the Basilisk, one of whose fangs he uses to destroy Tom Riddle's Diary.
* Highlander helps Duncan bring them down from the inside and expresses regret for his past actions, they patch their relationship up.
* Guns N' Roses (Data East), as the left plunger is shaped like a blooming rose, while the right plunger is a pistol gun grip. In other words, a gun and a rose.
* Happens to Sprig Plantar and Ivy Sundew in the second-to-last episode of
* GT, Shenron decides that humanity has become too dependent on the Dragon Balls, and decides to take them and leave Earth for a hundred years, so that humanity can learn to solve its own problems.

* High Society, she "considers herself engaged", and then feels terribly guilty for "betraying her sister".
* Heroes in the later seasons, though, he just stopped bothering and let himself get riddled with holes, even though doing so clearly inconvenienced him much more than simply stopping the bullets with telekinesis.
* Go Animate. There are two major characters that are quite notable for being this:
* Hell, it's easier to point out when Frank Castle is NOT giving one of these. He's really not that big on talking to lowlife scum...
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix to Dolores Umbridge - who is compared to a toad in the books. This serves to create dissonance between her sweet, grandmotherly appearance and the horrible things she does - to make her all the more terrifying.
* Grey's Anatomy when April refuses to accept defeat and ends up hijacking the (supposedly damaged) ambulance used in the scenario and driving her last patients around to the hospital entrance.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, will supply Nico with car bombs once the two become good friends.
* He also had made sure he drew the heroes all the way down to Antarctica- his Evil Plan
* Gorilla Monsoon: Became the Voice of the then-WWF during this decade.
* Hear Me the Money: It's possible to discern how much money you've got in your hand, or what it's made from, simply by listening to the noise it makes.
* Gourry Gabriev is nicknamed "jellyfish brain" because he lacks so much common knowledge about the world and is generally clueless in any circumstance.
* Gwendlyn Di Corci. Players remember the art of a mostly naked woman, but probably don't remember what the card does.
* Gowron is an example. He was presented as a Klingon who genuinely gave a crap about honor. Indeed, he was a political outsider who often opposed the High Council. But as time went by, he cared more and more about keeping his position as leader of the Empire secure, to the point of deliberately sending a brilliant general he viewed as a rival on impossible missions.
* Greenmantle, since Hannay is not involved, the surprise falls on Archie Roylance instead.)
* Heir to the Jedi, the character Fayet Kelen, owner of Kelen Biolabs, would often do this with his minions (he actually called his employees "minions") but then would soften it by doing something like giving them a compliment or asking about their family.
* Heroes features a variant of this. The original plan was to make the show an anthology series, with the first season's group of heroes story ending with the battle at Kirby Plaza, and then being replaced with an entirely new cast each season. However, the ratings for S1 were so successful, and the show became such a hot property, that the finale was hastily changed to end with a cliffhanger where Hiro time-travels to feudal Japan. The following season wasn't planned, and began a precipitous slide in both quality and ratings that ended with the show's cancellation at the end of its fourth season.
* He missed all of one game his entire pro career, in the last season of his career due to a ruptured disk in his back. He was back on the field the next week.
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret, who demeans Ayase in any given opportunity. Ayase Yuuto's self-steem issues are more of an obstacle than Sutherland, who isn't even a regular character.
* he doesn't need an evil side to get more evil, super powered or kick ass.
* Halolmancy: Casting salt into the air then reading the patterns as it falls to the floor. Can also be salt cast into a fire. Also known as Alomancy.
* Grand Finale, which was cut when the crew knew for certain the third season would be the last.
* Harry Potter A notable example is his raid on the Ministry in Book 5, which basically boils down to "Grab Sirius and run," then changes to "run away from Death Eaters."

* Hellsinker as well as the extra stages, the graphic design goes from just weird to downright surreal.
* Halo, a conglomerate of alien species that embark on crusades in the name of their gods, the Forerunners, all in the name walking the path to the Great Journey.
* Google Chrome's blue circle in larger multicolored circle (clockwise from top: red, yellow, green).
* Heat features Robert De Niro once again, planning one last bank heist, before retiring.
* Gregory Peck was used by the United States Air Force Academy to teach the four basic leadership styles, as Peck's character uses all four styles to whip his bomber squadron into shape. It is also used for leadership training at the Air Force's Non-Commissioned Officer Academies.
* Guilty Gear. His shades are removed only in his Burst sprite (to show he's serious now, of course).
* Happy Gilmore (using a hockey stick instead of a golf club) and tries his "grab shirt and punch head" technique on Bob Barker (which backfires).
* Hero House has Solid and Liquid and Snake, with Liquid always feeling outclassed due to his recessive genes.
* Highlander, Ramirez finds and trains Connor MacLeod so that somebody would have a chance of defeating the Kurgan. When the Kurgan takes the aged immortal's head, Connor takes Ramirez's sword and uses it as his own from that point on, later using it to behead the Kurgan and fulfill his mentor's wish.
* H. Beam Piper, in the book of the same title. "At the end of the Big War, ten thousand men and women on Abigor, refusing to surrender, had taken the remnant of the System States Alliance navy to space, seeking a world the Federation had never heard of and wouldn't find for a long time." Eight centuries later, their descendants have begun raiding into the territory once held by the now-collapsed Terran Federation.
* He's thrown onto Mariel during an earthquake and accidentally gropes her breasts.
* Goth Oz being in range of the shotgun he's pointing at a talking tree.
* Hades and Bowsers are planning to backstab each other first and then take out the other villains.
* Hereditary Twinhood: Twins begetting twins or having twin relatives attributed to "twins running in the family".
* Guardian — which by some accounts was little more than a gigantic raft by then — back to Cape Town. In a tragic irony, almost all the passengers Riou saved were never seen again — only a single lifeboat with fifteen people was found by chance, by a French merchant ship.
* Growing Up Creepie episode "Attack of the Wasp Zombies", the hypnotized students chant this to Creepie as they corner her.
* Highlander establishes the existence of an even older Immortal than Methos, who was established in the series to be the oldest Immortal.
* Haibane Renmei, one character corrects the fact that Rakka refers to him as Hiyoko, pointing out it's "Hyohko", with exaggerated emphasis on the "oh" sound to make the pronunciation difference clear.
* Her parting shot has her accuse Jason of doing the same thing, not knowing that he did actually sleep with Sal.
* Gwen Stacy was originally remembered in the 21st century only for being part of Peter's
* Green Lantern: New Guardians, Glomulus is essentially a living construct made by Larfleeze. As in he can be dispersed whenever Larfleeze feels like it. Kyle Rayner asks if Glomulus is truly alive or not. Glommy's response? "Glomulus is Glomulus." It's kind of endearing that he can brush off something like that.
* Grand Theft Auto IV that shows the Nazis as a pigs...and Hitler desperately needs a baby pacifier.
* Grande Odalisque to create a cultural distance, making the figure seem Turkish instead of French and thus lessening the scandal of the nude figure.

* Henry IV, Hal and Falstaff spend most of their scenes together trying to top the other in insults.
* Hatchet: Victor is killed as a result of other kids throwing fireworks at his house, setting it on fire. His father tried to go in to rescue him, but accidentally split his skull with a hatchet.
* Harvest", an angry mob of crazed villagers do this to Clark, who has lost his powers from blue kryptonite exposure. Fortunately, the soil shields him enough from the kryptonite to give him back some of his strength, allowing him to break free.
* Highlander. Particularly with Duncan. He chops a heavy oak desk clean in two with his katana, and a one point beheads a opponent with a fairly light sword with little more than a few inches of movement. The samurai he got his sword from also used it to cleanly slice another sword in two as easy as if were a piece of bamboo. Though in general there seems to be something about Immortals that makes the swords they wield have more cutting power than they should.
* Hellsister Trilogy spends a long while ogling to her trunks-wearing boyfriend Dev-Em while they enjoy a day on the beach.
* Grey's Anatomy. In one episode, an experienced doctor ordered one of the newbies to watch a premature baby in an incubator overnight. The exhausted doctor fell asleep, the baby died, and her supervisor explained she knew the baby would die and assigned her to watch it specifically so she could get used to patients dying.
* Goes Horribly Wrong, agent Ethan Hunt is labeled a rogue agent. Hunt must band together other decommissioned agents to expose the true double agent, thereby clearing his name.
* Goldeneye in which Bond mows down a dozen Russian soldiers who just happened to be on duty at the wrong place and time.
* Hero, for which reason he generally prefers more modest swords made from unbreakable steel or summoned fire.
* Grimlock is occasionally shown to be a bit of a Neidermeyer in the comics when he's put in command of units other than the Dinobots, largely because most Autobots aren't used to doing things
* Glitch-hop/dubstep producer Tristam is notorious for having extremely little information shared with the public. Images and videos of him are very rare (none of which are recent), prefers to keep his true name and identity secret, and shares only vague and occasional updates on social media.
* Guild Wars 2 when confronted with something so risky. The player characters don't quite hit this mark, as their sparring partner and only their sparring partner survives the game's intro, but players can recruit gladium of the first type and talk gladium of the second.
* Gundam. Every time it's been attempted has been out of sheer desperation.
* Greg does regularly visit Steven and considering that they interact with the Mayor, there doesn't seem to be any problems. Later episodes reveal Greg helped build the house Steven lives in and it's most likely that Steven is registered as home-schooled and under Greg's guardianship.
* Green Arrow is captured by crooks who send a chunk of her hair to the police. The cops think it is a fake as the hair is from a wig, but Green Arrow knows that Canary's blonde hair is actually a wig.
* Hey Arnold!: Arnold. His friends call him out on it and he decides to stop helping people. Then it turns out that, without his help, everyone's life goes to hell.
* Happy Heroes: In the first episode of Season 7, when Ambassador Wang first appears, she sports a mustache and is mistaken for a male as a result. She's quick to point out the mistake and wipes off the mustache, which her son Lele doodled on her as a prank.
* Great White, the entire film only covers approx. five days (after finding the body, Benny estimates the man has been dead for about a day and a half).
* HERZ: In a scene Shinji walks on Kurumi when she is having a shower. Immediately he screams and flees, and Kurumi chases after him. Asuka sees both, fetches a bat and starts to chase them.
* Haruhi Suzumiya. At best, all this edition accomplished was giving fans of the series a way to read it in public without getting any weird looks.

* Guardians of the Galaxy Drax suddenly starts laughing maniacally. When their ship grinds to a stop he throws his arms in the air and says, "Yes! Again!"
* Healing Factor — if she wants to feel the effects of "ordinary" toxins like alcohol.
* Grand Prix Legends: The 1955 F1 mod has the cars, tracks, and drivers of that year's F1 championship.
* Heroes, what with the whole brain-stealing supervillain thing he's got going. He usually just brushes it off without responding directly to the accusation.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, Hermione has a moment of embarrassment.
* Godlike are nothing more than a collection of convenient parts that serve to focus powers — in fact, they cease functioning when removed from their creators' sphere of awareness.
* Hc Svnt Dracones couples take after the mother. After all, one type is gestated in a biological womb and the other is built by an internal manufacturing center.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys count because those vests don't cover anything... and the fangirls (and boys) are grateful.
* Help Yourself in the Future: Someone goes back in time to help their past self.
* Groundhog Day. In the DVD commentary, the director claims that all he had planned was a punch followed by a stunned/surprised reaction from Ryerson; actor Stephen Tobolowski (who played Ryerson) decided to turn it into a full-on, stare-in-the-camera spin-and-fall after the punch.
* Helen, trapping and terrifying humans just as she herself once was.
* Hera, in the Dodekatheon, is known to take human men to give her Scion children. Of the original six pantheons (Pesedjet, Dodekatheon, Atzlanti, Aesir, Amatsukami, Loa), only three deities refuse to make Scions naturally at all: Artemis (devoutly lesbian; when she wants sex with a human, she's always chasing skirts), Athena (who for some reason just can't shake that "virgin goddess" thing) and Osiris (who is less unwilling and more unable; he's castrated).
* Harley Quinn does this to the Joker in issue 17 of Harley Quinn (2016).
* Half-Life 2, a giant, gorilla-shaped robot who throws vans around, beats the snot out of Striders, and communicates via beeps and other robotic noises. Dialogue explains that he was initially built by Eli as a 4-foot-high protector. Alyx had been upgrading him over time, up to what we see in-game.
* Guild Wars qualifies. The Forgotten have spent the last thousand years fighting a slowly-losing war to keep Abaddon and his followers bound in the Realm of Torment. As of present, they maintain only scattered outposts in either dimension.
* he is originally thought to be the Green Goblin before it's revealed Norman's been manipulating Harry into taking the fall for him. Besides making the Harry story tighter it also makes the reveal of Norman Osborn being the Green Goblin a genuine shock for the first time in over forty years!
* Greek mythology has the myrmekes, giant ants attracted to precious metals that hoard treasure in Indian deserts. Legend has it that locals take courageous hit-and-run raids of their gold stores, giving them vast wealth.
* Hajiotsu has Otogi reveal to Shuuko that he's aware that the whole relationship of Himari and Kai is based off of a test of courage. When she begs him to not tell Kai, that Himari should be the one to tell him, Otogi goes with it.
* Hawk the Slayer, the nuns put a big plate of food on the table. Gort the giant pulls it towards himself and asks them to bring food for his companions as well.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 1, Ron directs a lot of these towards Hermione.
* Hardly anyone remembers the team of KC James and Idol Stevens known as the Teacher's Pets, but they do remember
* Happy Heroes. However, at the end of the episode, he learns that the dinner is actually with Mr. Lightbulb himself, who has to point out that he never explicitly said the celebrity involved in the prize was Miss Peach.
* Harry Potter, Harry barely escapes from Voldemort, managing to return to Hogwarts. It seems like he's safe until he's lured to an office by Barty Crouch Jr, disguised as Mad-Eye Moody, and held at wandpoint while Crouch maniacally explains his plans. Luckily, he is interrupted by Dumbledore before he can kill Harry.

* Grave Humor: A humorous epitaph written on a dead person's tombstone.
* Half-Life. Glowing pools in the "border-world" Xen are capable of literally teleporting you from alien point to alien point.
* Gondica have a language that lacks stops between words, consisting of really meaningful shrieking. When they learn to speak the languages of non-harpies, they have a very hard time to actually make pauses, and a typical harpy quote is said to be "WhatdoyoumeanImspeakingtooquickly?".
* Half Baked: The guy on the couch. Steven Wright has made a comedy career out of his unnaturally mellow stage persona.
* Halo, but this particular strategy allowed humanity to hold out for almost three decades, when otherwise they would have been defeated in weeks or months.
* Her head gets used to give Gaby, Percy's stepdad from hell who even beat his mom Sally, some very well deserved karma.
* he outright decides to plant a fake suicide note on the scene of a crime and when this is found out, he tries to claim that this act wasn't * High-Class Gloves) were considered a standard part of a woman's outfit. Everything after that was either a special occasion (like a fancy dress ball or a wedding) or fetish-wear.
* Hamlet, the title character has a perfect opportunity to kill Claudius, when he finds him praying for forgiveness for his sins, but he does not take it as he fears that Claudius dying shortly after being absolved would send him to Heaven. As a result, Hamlet decides to wait for a time when Claudius is in the middle of some sinful behavior.
* Halloween Episodes, Seymour Skinner suffers this after a golem uses him like a yo-yo.
* good defensive system is the core of the Italian school of football.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince in London. This is a mild example since while the bridge is somewhat known, it's not as renowned as things like the Tower Bridge or the Clifton Suspension Bridge.
* Harry Bosch, in which he discovers the corpse of a fellow tunnel rat, and is referred to often in subsequent books. In the TV adaptation, he served in the First Gulf War and in Afghanistan.
* Hadassah, frequently begging her not to leave her despite that Hadassah gets absolutely nothing out of the relationship and is only hoping that her unconditional love towards Julia will open her eyes to the immorality and emptiness of her life.
* Gray Mann, the heretofore unknown third brother, has a life extender machine embedded into his spine. It works far better, as it is smaller, is never shown malfunctioning, and has left him ambulatory and in much better shape than his brothers after all these years. The Ring of Fired
* Harry comes out of an undeserved two-year stay in Azkaban a little loopy. When Hermione drags him by his foot after he exhibits extreme reluctance to go shopping with her he yells "Holy mother of sheep! What in the name of chickens are you doing? Cheese and crackers woman! Stop killing the brain cells that I have managed to preserve!"
* Herman is mistaken for the mummy of Tuth IV in episode "Mummy Munster" of
* Grenadier by grabbing the latter's breasts (while she's undressed) and shaking. Cue bullets spilling out of an embarrassed Rushuna's cleavage and forming a pile up to about her knees; afterwards, she insists that they're just ordinary breasts.
* Hawaii Five-0 episode "Labyrinth". As part of a kidnap plot, a woman has plastic surgery to look like a wealthy socialite. She then murders and disposes of the victim and tries to take her place.
* Granblue Fantasy. Her wild upbringing led her to base her entire worldview on the law of the jungle, where the strong eat the weak. Which is why she wants to be the strongest in the world, so that she won't have to feel fear or grief ever again like she did as a kid. Her natural human compassion does stop her from the more negative aspects of this trope, though they still surface at times (notably when she nearly left a child get killed by a monster, believing the kid should be strong enough to take it on if he wants to live).

* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! has this with the fairies: whenever they need to be around the girls and not raise suspicious, they tend to just go limp and act like dolls and no one really questions why three teenaged girls are toting around strange dolls (though Itsuki does get a pass somewhat - around that time, she was starting to really loosen up). The only time the fairies don't act like this is around little kids.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix didn't suggest using it instead of the risky method of sneaking into fireplaces.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince even more so; the bulk of the book is made up of exposition of Voldemort's backstory, romance plots, and Quidditch, with precious little happening in the wizarding war until the very end. It also falls right in between the two longest and darkest novels in the series.
* Grand Theft Auto when you have to protect a character from becoming target practice for the enemy. Carry him elsewhere where he can safely wallbonk when you gun down the enemies on your own - his firepower on your side wouldn't have made a difference anyway.
* hard. Only two people actually need the relationship pointed out to them and both times literally pointing in their general direction provide all the proof needed.
* Gunslinger Girl after Hilshire is wounded carrying out an assassination mission he was supposed to assign to Triela.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (2000) plans their heist on a blackboard with UV-florescent paint. (Inability to completely wipe out this critical evidence when the first hideout gets raided by the police is how they're tipped off to what's going on.)
* Gmail and Google Maps were showcases for AJAX. No one had seen a web page that could be dynamically updated without reloading before. They showed it was possible to build web apps that worked as well as desktop apps did, heralding Web 2.0.
* Halcyon Park based purely on blurry footage of the machine's design.
* Godzilla vs. Megalon for the line, "He's programming himself to grow bigger!"
* Harry Potter films, the teachers present at the staff table in the Great Hall correspond curiously with the teachers who have scenes elsewhere in that particular installment.
* Higurashi: When They Cry with him. In the visual novel and manga adaptation they interact more.
* Heathcliff, in both the comics and the animated series, has a large, bulbous black nose.
* Hellsing, the Roman Catholic Church has a modern version in the knightly orders answering to Iscariot. They wear medieval-ish gear, but use more modern weapons, and are deployed to fight an invasion of vampires.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality advisors. Hermione, understanding their psychology, had her officers' chairs removed for her meeting with Draco.
* Hero Insurance: Destroying buildings, neighborhoods, or even whole towns is okay as long as it's ostensibly being done to "save" people.
* .hack//SIGN: Morganna attacks Tsukasa after Tsukasa brings Subaru to the hidden area where Aura was held. This too used an alternate phrase, "I don't need you anymore."
* Guilded Age, averting this is a major factor in why and how Harky began to gather allies to fight the human invaders.
* Hannah Montana who believes anyone less intelligent than he (read: everyone) is his to manipulate.
* Goldie Vance is set in 1960s Florida, but the subjects of racism and homophobia almost never come up. This is particularly notable in the way that Goldie, an African-American, openly pursues a relationship with a Japanese-American girl named Diane, and nobody bats an eye.
* Glee teenager whose singing can often be mistaken for a woman's. Not only does he have many stereotypically feminine traits and interests, but when the characters are divided up by gender he has been shown to prefer the company of the girls.
* Happened in-universe when Gold Roger was executed and said his treasure would be for the one who found it in the Grand Line. This was know as the start of The Golden Age of Piracy for all the new pirates who embarked in finding it; more senior pirates, however, saw it as a very negative thing as the seas will be plagued by new romance-driven pirates.

* Heaven's Memo Pad's ED is Mr. Big's "Colorado Bulldog", of all things.
* High Noon is a calm, collected, responsible former marshal who needs deputies to help him fight Frank Miller, who's arriving into town on the noon train, but no one is willing to help him. Finally, when the marshal realizes he's utterly alone, he hides his face away, near tears, in the solitude of his office.
* Harry tries to use Legilemency on Luna, and finds that her mind is complete chaos.
* Heidi Lovelace. At only 5'4, this is inevitable. Zig-zagged depending on who her opponent is and on whether or not she wins.
* hates it. This is only revealed near the end, as before everyone thought "Arcie" (from "R. C.") was it.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire: Harry asking Cho to the Yule Ball comes out as roughly "Wangobawimme?"
* GURPS turns your character into this towards his owner only. If ordered to "make them give you the money and don't take any gruff", a Slave Mentality character will not hesitate to stand up against the most physically and socially intimidating person.
* Gotham Girls with some loot, keeping it from Batgirl. Batgirl gets it by yelling out "Over here!" to Harley who, caught up in the game, tosses it over before she realizes what she's doing.
* Grand Admiral Thrawn which eventually leads to his plans collapsing and his death.
* Gracie's fellow agents, all of them male, wince sympathetically after hearing her scream in pain while getting a bikini wax during her
* He had a habit of saying, "Yes, well" to start his sentences, answering "Yes, of course", humming a ditty when tinkering on things, displaying a half-interested attitude when people try talking to him while he's working with lab equipment, and touting a very cheeky grin when he makes a clever joke.
* Gundam Build Divers Re:RISE has enough room for strong characterization and the occasional in-joke for long-time viewers.
* Guys and Dolls features "the oldest established permanent floating crap game in New York." The "floating" adjective is because it constantly seeks out new venues after its old venues get locked down or raided by cops.
* Halo: Combat Evolved, a whole huge mass of unknown contacts begin to converge at the other side of a nearby door... Later in the same level, you meet up with a squad of surviving marines and fight the Flood in the swamp. If you get separated, you'll quickly find the last green blips disappearing from your sensor in the midst of the endless yellow.
* Heroes and Villains: The flow of the story seems like it is going to start allowing this with the addition of Doctor Horrible. On his way to the HQ with Elsa, he talks about the Hyperloop. The narrator gets in on it too sometimes, starting the next segment of the story with a filigree lead-in.
* "Growth Spout" focuses on Mr. Krabs. SpongeBob doesn't appear until the final two scenes of the episode.
* Harry Harrison. Only here the black protagonist of the novel also travels back in time to prevent the changing of history.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, and even she eventually lightens up and has a great time.
* Goblins: Duv the White Terror has a single wing which marks her out as a chosen one of Maglubiyet, the goblin deity. Her backstory claims that she was born with two but the other one was burned off in a fire.
* Hamilton. They meet when Alexander attends a ball hosted by the Schuylers (presumably near where the Continental Army is encamped), and are married not long after, with Alexander's war buddies serving as his groomsmen and Hercules Mulligan as the flower boy.
* Gundam even has its own dedicated flight lifter mounted on its back.

* Hakushon Daimao has the title character's daughter named Akubi-chan, who grants people's wishes (who yawned) by mixing up the wishes, usually granting them literally.
* Grand Theft Auto V Floyd leave, stating that "Robert was right" about Floyd, to which Floyd replies "Who the fuck is Robert?!". The scene ends with Trevor leaving the apartment covered in blood, and a news report later announces that a man and woman were found dead in the area.
* Harry Potter as "Umgubular Slashkilters") that follow Harry around and cause trouble.
* High School D×D has the Devils getting familiars instead of the human magicians. One short story, which made it into the anime, focuses on Asia and Ise trying to find familiars. She recruits a tiny, lightning spewing dragon. And he almost recruits a clothing-eating slime, but Rias destroys it first.
* Hidden tracks. On a CD, you can clearly tell if a song finishes many minutes before the actual track is finished that there will be a hidden track. On a vinyl record you can easily see more grooves, and on a tape you will see there is still some of the tape left to go. Obviously, it doesn't work at all on digital as you can clearly see the "song" is 20+ minutes long, leading to iTunes either indexing the hidden tracks separately, or keeping them as they are but making them album only due to the track length.
* Great Expectations: Pip drops his glass when Magwitch returns and reveals to Pip that it is he, and not Miss Havisham, who was Pip's anonymous benefactor that set him up as a gentleman.
* Grey Worm, and the Unsullied in general, can kick some serious ass with their spears and phalanx formations.
* Green Antarctica, where due to tiny population numbers and incredibly low survivability, incest and cannibalism are commonly practiced.
* Heavy Gear. The titular mecha are much smaller and lighter than battle tanks with considerably less firepower and armour, complementing battle tanks by being utilized in terrain impassable to large armoured vehicles or where the expense of battle tanks isn't merited. The invading CEF, who initially didn't have Gears, made extensive use of hover-tanks and did very well for themselves.
* HappinessCharge Pretty Cure! - a Mother's Day episode was released on May 11th. A soccer episode was released on June 19th, the start of the 2014 World Cup.
* Harry Potter's video game have flying book present as enemies (they try to ram you out of certain platforms) and others serving as platforms.
* "Hare Trimmed" - Yosemite Sam attempts to woo Granny (called Emma in this cartoon) after discovering she inherited 50 million dollars. Bugs Bunny overhears about the plot, and poses as another suitor in an attempt to keep Granny from being conned, before pulling a * Hermione was originally supposed to have a Muggle sister who was cut out for this reason. There just wasn’t a way to have her involved with the plot all the way back home. The same can be said for why her parents not really ever being around.
* Heads in Jars interface fairly well with robotics when the plot demands it.
* High Priest: The top priest in charge of leading a religious organization.
* Hell, and since the Demon Sun is made of radioactive green hate this isn't fun. The closest it ever comes to night there are those occasions when the Ebon Dragon (who flies through the skies at all times) briefly eclipses the Demon Sun.
* Groucho Marx: “Take two turkeys, one goose, four cabbages, but no duck, and mix them together. After one taste, you’ll duck soup for the rest of your life.”
* Godzilla about its roots, not that they would actually want to watch any of the "shoddy Asian rubber monster movies". Even the 2014 film still receives the effect of this. For instance, plenty of people tend to complain about Godzilla's short appearances, which is actually as much as how he appeared in earlier films.
* . Her patron goddess is Bast — see Mythology — who is behind her transformation and talks to her in her head every so often. Miyet may become an actual example if Bast removes the fur, which she says she can:

* Hello Cheeky tried to fit as many jokes into a half-hour as possible, with one or two musical interludes every episode. However, since the musical interludes were performed by the regular cast and written humorously, the jokes never actually stopped.
* Gods Need Prayer Badly: When a deity's power is proportional to the strength of humans' belief in them.
* Greedo shows up first, trying to capture Han Solo and cash in on the bounty Jabba the Hutt has placed on him.
* Global Operations, defusing a bomb brings up a loading bar and then indication of which wire to cut on the defusal kit. Cut the wrong wire and it will explode instead.
* Hey, It's That Place!: Recognizing a setting from other films and TV shows
* Gunslinger Girl: Petrushka confesses her love to Alessandro, but he dismisses it as a result of her conditioning. To prove it isn't, she slaps and then insults him, both acts which, due to her conditioning, make her physically ill.
* Grand Theft Auto game has entire forces of dirty cops, some dirtier than others.
* Heroes, air is continually blown out of the plane until it crashes about ten minutes later. (Probably due to the turbulence from the incredible windspeed outside the craft.)
* Guernica denies any intentional symbolism, artistic scholars have still tried their best to make sense of it anyway.
* Hellsister Trilogy. She's her sister's dark side's embodiment, possessing more than enough power to crack a planet in half but completely lacking morals or compassion.
* Grim Trigger, but once he's in the story more, it's clear that he's actually a lovable jock.
* Grief Syndrome kicks in, they're able to heal the section marked in blue without draining their Soul Limit (which would happen for the red.) If they get hit before the blue section is fully healed, though, it turns red and becomes normal damage that does require draining the Soul Limit meter to replenish.
* Harkovast, Chen-Chen at first seems pretty helpless, but is suddenly revealed to be a master of the sliding mountain style, which allows her to kill armed opponents with her bare fists.
* Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later looming over the frightened-looking protagonists.
* Halloween costumes in general, especially those for preteen girls, have become rather horrifyingly inappropriate.
* Guilded Age pauldrons, even though he normally has his axe handles sticking up over his shoulders.
* Hack/Slash stars a former Final Girl who becomes a slasher-hunter. She gradually meets up with other (mostly female) slasher survivors, ultimately assembled in the finale storyarc as the All-Final Girl Team.
* Halloween Otome: Emma serves this role, elected into position by The Count and supported by Mr. Wolf. Can be levelheaded or headstrong depending on the player’s choices.
* Gyarados have a well-deserved reputation as terrifying, powerful, and destructive monsters, but even they flee from Wishiwashi's powerful * Green Lantern, so Lanterns don't exactly have a great reputation there).
* heck injury when the fighters learn to rely on the armor instead of self-control and start hitting each other as hard as they can. Add rules against grappling, right-of-way, designated target areas, and before you know it it's a slippery slope.
* Hero Unit and can slow him, which severly cuts down on the the damage he can deal as he is a melee unit) and setting up a number defensive buildings. Once he is killed, his base is easy to destroy. Not that this gets the player anything, they still have to finish the mission normally.
* Good Prosthetic, Evil Prosthetic: Characters' moral alignments are shown by whether their prosthetic parts are simple and non-threatening, or hulking and intimidating.

* H₂O: Just Add Water: When Zane hears there is a marine biologist doing a study in the area, he initially assumes Dr. Zenman's older male assistant to be the biologist.
* Grand Theft Auto series is loaded with these, most side activities have a good reward for getting to a certain level in them, making them worthwhile even if you aren't completely enamoured by them:
* Guardians of the Galaxy: apparently the local (heavily militarized) law enforcement can send you to prison without a trial (none onscreen, at least). It is possible that the Corps was pushed to desperate measures, as they were dealing with a severe terrorist threat at the time of the movie.
* has been done and the battle is mostly lost. In practice this is less of an issue because, at least for now, even if Alzheimer's is caught early, there's very little that can be done to alter the outcome or even slow the progression.
* He also says "All the planning charts and demolition orders have been on display at your local planning department in Alpha Centauri for fifty of your Earth years...".
* Gollum comments, however, that if the Ring is destroyed, he will "die into the dust," which fits this trope exactly, aside from him not getting the chance.
* Haré+Guu) and as the straight man ends up being driven crazy by Guu's craziness.
* Gotham City Garage argue as to what Dick's batons are called as being chased down by a killer giant robot. Kara lampshades it:
* Go into the YouTube comments section for the wildly popular Japanese song
* Grand Theft Auto V, Trevor also reacts harshly to being called a "motherfucker" and starts rampages because of this. However, some of his missions imply it's true.
* Harry Potter and the Natural 20, Voldemort continuously sends minions and dangers Milo's way. Milo levels up with each fight and adventure and will eventually gain the power to revive the dead, a skill of course useful to the Dark Lord's plans.
* Günther Prien, another U-Boat ace, who was killed in 1941 attacking a convoy a week before Kretschmer's capture. Before that in 1939, he managed to get publicly praised by
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019). Serizawa shares his final moments with Godzilla, who weakly opens his eyes to see who is before him before his incoming revival.
* Grounded for Life, Lily has a tattoo of a golden sprite on her lower back, with a banner reading "Dean". Her new boyfriend Brad doesn't find out until months into their relationship. He gets over it, she relents and points out that she chose Brad over Dean — and then realized the money Brad offered for its removal was originally earmarked for her to get an iPod.
* Hell's Kitchen they usually have some kind of preliminary competition between the two teams. The winners are rewarded, the losers are punished. Many of these contests are extremely subjective and they usually go back and forth until they end with a one-point victory.
* Hidekaz Himaruya, have been collecting dust for years and probably only Himaruya himself would know if they'll ever be resumed.
* Halo uses it extensively. Fitting, since it's a military-based series. Notable examples include "Sierra" (Spartan) and "Bravo Kilo" (refers to Brutes, short for "Baby Kong").
* Glee seems to get into this trope occasionally, especially with the school news coverage of the prom king/queen elections. Of course, this could just be more of Glee's typical over-the-top exaggerated style.
* Harvey Girls Forever Fanon: In the episode "The ants everywhere!", the ants are CGI.
* Hayate the Combat Butler think of themselves as experts in the topic of love. They give advice to Nagi and Saki. Although they are the only ones who've confessed to their crushes, we haven't seen any case of them actually succeeding. Their advice also doesn't seem to fit well, even if they are smug about it.
* Head of the Class Charlie got an acting gig as "the King of low prices," a crazy late night commercial pitchman for an appliance store.

* Hercule Poirot story "The Disappearance of Mr. Davenheim", Poirot takes a bet from Chief Inspector Japp to prove that "the little grey cells" are superior to running around looking at footprints by solving a case without ever visiting the scene of the crime or talking to any of the suspects.
* Hallmark Channel have been filmed in the Ottawa Valley, since there are many small towns, like Almonte, with traditional stone houses, and the transition from fall to winter matches the ideal scenery that many American viewers have in their minds of Christmas season.
* Gravitation as early as Volume 1, but it takes a very long time for him to begin acting like a normal boyfriend to Shuichi.
* Grave Encounters-style reality show, who are filming overnight in a mental hospital but express skepticism that any of the ghost stories about it are true. Of course, once they are in lockdown, shit gets real...
* Highlander: Endgame movie turned out two of the most infamous critical and commercial implosions in cinema history and were both Retconned. This one didn't fare any better and a 5th movie went Direct To Cable.
* Greek Ninja have a moment, specifically he hugs her, in a way that is obvious it's not just casual. Such intimate contact is not common in Japan between friends, so when she questions him on it, he simply replies: 'I meant it the western way then.'
* Hexen contained special mushrooms that emitted deadly gas. The mushrooms were covered in green pustules, made weird squeaking noises, and released the gas when damaged.
* Hank gets poked by a kid and inks in the touch pond, causing the kids in the area to run away.
* Harry Turtledove, the Race quickly takes to calling humans Big Uglies. Humanity responds by coining Lizards to refer to the Race.
* half of his entire riches. At this point it's revealed that the entire story was just Donald's happy dream.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (1974) Dash cams in police cars weren't common for another decade and a half.
* "Griffon the Brush-Off": Gilda threatens Pinkie Pie with physical harm for coming between
* Halo rear since they were fourteen. Their skills and reputation are such that the Covenant calls them "demons."
* He even went the wrong direction from the starting line in a race. It was a
* Hermes does it in "Insane in the Mainframe" when "celebrating" Zoidberg's 10th anniversary with Planet Express by reading out of a "Minimum Obligations Manual":
* Godzilla was a vicious alien robot built with the intent of first discrediting, and then killing Godzilla. Powerful enough to battle Godzilla and King Caesar at the same time, the robot proved a match for anything that the more heroic kaiju could throw at it.
* Goldie & Bear Instead, they just split the interior of the brick house three ways.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) didn't think girls would play with a Hordak toy, nor would boys play with a toy of a female She-Ra character.
* Gnolls do the street cleaning of the filthiest and most disgusting street refuse (and are suspected of actually eating a lot of it).
* Gotlib, so his script is refused, he doesn't get paid and Gotlib concludes: "Grimm does not pay."
* Harry Potter speech when he has trouble letting go. Of course, it's not as though Ginny isn't fighting Voldemort almost as hard as Harry himself.
* Hela Throughout the movie, she's shown to be bitter about the fact that nobody remembers her.
* Have I Got News for You replayed the clip, and to everyone's surprise, it got a rather more positive reaction. (Paul's reaction was something like "It's a matter of timing. Fifteen years later, it's funny.") It's also possible they were laughing at how cheap the set looked, and Ian Hislop with hair, rather than the joke.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City and puts it into the mouths of Bandit Keith and Zombie Boy.

* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince spreads the word around school so that everyone thinks it was romantic anyway.
* Half-Life 2: The Combine transforms a large amount of its human dissidents into "Stalkers", pitiful creatures whose limbs and ability to speak were removed. Basically, these things are the work slaves of the Combine, held and processed in the citadel for the rest of their poor excuse for a life.
* Gundam series' follow the more realistic quickly-fading spherical explosion pattern. There usually doesn't seem to be much debris, though, but it may just be vaporized by the Mobile Suit's compact reactors failing catastrophically.
* Grand Finale, JUST as it seems it just might work, Arbiter changes his mind and joins Chief in being blown up in a gas explosion.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows did not come out until 2016, a gap of nine years.
* Green-Sky Trilogy Readers complained, and an amazing video game sequel ensued.
* Guards! Guards!) he meets Angua, falls in love, and it's stated he always knew the "mechanics", even if he didn't see how they applied to him, so that meant an end to conversations like this:
* Greyscale stories, the world is literally grey until you meet your soulmate (in less extreme cases, it might just be a specific color you can't see, like your soulmate's eye color).
* Green Acres: In the episode, "The Rains Came", Mr. Haney attempts to make it rain over a drought-ridden Hooterville with a rain-dancing Indian, who speaks broken English, refers to Lisa as, "Pret-ty squaw", and greets people with, "How!" He fails to conjure up rain, though.
* Grant Morrison's Batman. Oddly, though, we never see him do any actual wrestling
* He also gets comics donated for the show. A couple of them STILL leave him feeling ripped off.
* Haiti also invaded and annexed the Dominican Republic in 1822. As in the home country, the freed black slaves replaced the whites as dominant class and banned them from owning land. They also confiscated all properties of the Catholic Church and severed relations with the Vatican. The Dominicans later rebelled and secured their independence in 1844. By then, they were so fed up with Haitian black rule that "black" became synonymous with "Haitian" in the country, and black Dominicans would claim to be mixed (
* Grand Theft Auto IV contains a rather long and involved bank robbery mission.
* Hello Neighbor get over them (in the Alpha at least), since they're not infinitely high and there's a glitch that allows you to use a trashcan to fly above the map.
* Here's one for a Budweiser commercial, with a dog training a horse. No, really.
* Goddess Creation System he'll end up losing interest. Instead, she puts on an attitude of quiet suffering while serving under him and acts as though she longs to return to his brother. His ego can't take it and he grows increasingly obsessed with making her his.
* Harvest Moon and its many offshoots are like this. When some game-specific significant event occurs, such as your character's marriage, the credits roll. Then, you can continue playing. In fact, there is often some post-end content such as new seeds, or new NPCs to romance.
* Graying Morality: The central conflict becomes less good vs evil over time.
* handwave. And once it's resolved, nobody seems to explore the matter or ever mention it again.
* Harribel is revealed to be alive and now ruling the Hollow World after Aizen's defeat, before being defeated by the new Big Bad
* Hercules to squash Claudius (the "Adam" role), with a joke about how much strength that would need.
* Great Mazinger is armed with the Great Typhoon, Great Boomerang and Navel Missile.
* Hakushon Daimao, ended on a downer note with the genie being forced to leave Earth for 100 years.

* GURPS allows casters to do this, though it's more difficult than using other energy sources, presumably because the pain makes it hard to concentrate. Usually, spells are powered with Fatigue Points (i.e. wizards get tired when they cast spells) or with enchanted "energy batteries" called powerstones. Once you burn through all your available FP (or earlier, if you choose), if you keep casting spells without resting, you start burning HP. Ordinarily, you can only use up hit points until you lose consciousness, at which point the energy drain stops (you don't die). The supplemental advantage "Word of Power" drains so much fatigue that it's guaranteed to drain life from a normal person. It will keep speaking itself even if the caster dies in mid sentence.
* Grand Finale of the series as a Blakfist and Don Spaghetti crossover, but soon it was taken down and so the series was taken to the forgotten pits.
* Hilda of Trollburg knows all secrets overheard by the city's rat population and is willing to trade them for new secrets, or sometimes for a rancid cod sandwich from the dumpster behind this one restaurant by the docks, they like those.
* Hell on Wheels: In season 3, Cullen Bohannon has sex with a Mormon girl while visiting their family, whose property is an obstacle to the railroad project. Towards the end of the season, Cullen is kidnapped by the Mormon settlers and finds that the girl is pregnant. Her father, who initially wanted to hang Bohannon as revenge for hanging his oldest son (legitimately; the boy shot the Sheriff), agrees to forego such punishment when Bohannon does the honorable thing by converting and marrying her.
* Hilary Tamar mysteries, barrister Julia Larwood is notorious among her friends for getting lost in her native city of London, let alone anywhere else.
* high school cheerleaders often do this by wearing bikinis and shorts and bikini tops during their car wash fundraisers.
* Gotham Girls, Harley Quinn and Poison Ivy try to keep their loot from Batgirl in this manner. Unfortunately for the crooks, Batgirl takes advantage of Harley's childish gullibility and calls to her to throw the item to her. Harley, caught up in the tossing, does so and realizes too late that she's suckered while Batgirl makes her getaway.
* Hallway Fight: Characters fight their way down the length of a hallway.
* Hey Arnold!. Most one-time crush characters, such as Summer from the episode "Summer Love," fall under this description, but two girls are particularly notable:
* Heralds of Valdemar of magically warped creatures that persists three thousand years later.
* , Hibari Minoru almost goes to the window to check for flying pigs when his nephew Kyouya shows interest for someone other than himself.
* GONE, he suddenly has some personal vendetta against all females, which is Lampshaded by himself.
* Hate Sink and probably be on his side about turning the man into a pig.
* Gordon R. Dickson, the protagonist transfers his consciousness to a specially prepared body in a morgue.
* Heboris modes and the infamous Phantom Mania mode, were incorporated by the author into later releases, with credit given to the original modders.
* Global Frequency accidentally crashes through the set of a hardcore gay porn film.
* He's even played this for laughs as a means to poke some fun at Seamus Blackley during his review of * Gravity Falls: Journal 3, the Author reveals that the fez actually belonged to Stan's father.
* H. H. Holmes' "Castle".. It's not clear how many people he actually killed, since when he was caught, he just ran with it and started making victims up, including several people he claimed to have murdered that were still alive or who died in completely different circumstances. He claimed 200 and confessed to 27, but only nine were ever anything like confirmed (and four of those were after he left Chicago). The "hotel" part of the building was never actually completed, it was just a small apartment complex with storefronts on the first floor (making the higher numbers extremely unlikely). When he was executed, a vigilante set the place on fire, but the damage was limited enough that the building was repaired and stayed in use for another forty years before being replaced by a Post Office branch.

* Good Cop/Bad Cop: A classic interrogation technique, where one cop tries to earn the suspect's trust to get them talking, while the other cop intimidates them if they refuse to cooperate.
* Grand Theft Auto, which meant putting missions or other activities constantly on hold while Niko raced from girlfriend to girlfriend, trying to keep each one happy.
* He's spoken trustingly at least once of how, if people tried to use one of his destructive devices for evil, "the government would put a stop to things before they went too far."
* Hey, the Damocles counts too! Even though it's shaped like a huge anchor. And is
* Hashashin, and that Sasaki Kojiro was a unique exception due to Caster mucking with the Grail War's spells. Later entries in the series have completely ignored this rule, with Assassins being as diverse as any other class.
* Harvey Street Kids end with a card reading "BRB!", meaning "Be Right Back".
* Highschool of the Dead. And all of a sudden his being able to headshot shambling zombies while sticking out the turret of a badly driven Humvee makes sense...
* Griffith invokes this when Guts leaves the Band of Hawk, a rational leader (like Griffith was up until that point) would accept the loss of one soldier in the face of success... but Griffith chooses instead to cope by screwing the princess to fill the void
* Gone with the Wind example, the audience at the time of release could be expected to have read the book.
* Great Mazinger was even worse, since he was so obsessively focused on fulfilling his mission (due to he thought piloting Great Mazinger was everything what he had) that if Jun tried to seduce him he didn't get it or taunted her or both (and since she had no patience for stupidity, they ended up fighting).
* Glory Hound or to get hero-cred, while caring very little about the safety of others.
* Helena Howard, playing Nora, is of mixed African-American and Caucasian ancestry like her character.
* Halo than they do against unshielded targets. In particular, while the regular plasma pistol shot is considered largely useless in both multiplayer and the campaign, if you hold down the trigger to make a charged shot, any shielded target hit by it will have their shielding completely drained, leaving them open to headshots from ballistic weapons.
* He gets another when he tells Elsa that Anna is dead because of her and causes the snowstorm to stop, and briefly notices how Elsa is taking it. He's genuinely surprised at the grief she has for her beloved sister
* Grossology was actually loosely adapted from a series of nonfiction books with the same title.
* Higurashi: When They Cry remakes, an anime, and eventually several other remakes.
* Hatsukoi Anzu fills out a marriage license and has her brother sign it when they're kids. This is the start of her route when he finds it and realizes she's treasured it for years.
* "Heart of Asia", a 1999 trance anthem by Watergate, is actually a cover of the theme tune from the 1983 Anglo-Japanese war film
* Herrick is pulling himself together offscreen during the entire second series of
* Hexagons are common background elements for promotional materials related to
* Harry Potter insisted on using all real food for the Great Hall. This did not go well, as they had to replace food whenever it spoiled, essentially forcing them to churn out the Hogwarts feast over and over again. In subsequent films, much of the Great Hall food was cast out of resin.
* Highschool of the Dead Because of this, all the survivors have to get out of there themselves, with no help of any kind coming to save them.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, Poyo is this for the good guys, while Biam is this for the bad guys.
* Harvester, she'll offer you refreshments while she calls the police, and never stops her saccharine tone.

* Golf courses in Florida regularly have to call Animal Control to remove alligators from their water hazards and avert this trope.
* Heart of the Alien, was originally intended to be set during the events of the first game, but played through the perspective of Buddy (Lester's alien friend, although technically Lester is the alien). Interplay vetoed this idea, but still included an extensive flashback which shows everything Buddy did during the first game.
* Guild Wars, where due to the large number of free character slots (8, if all the campaigns are purchased) and low level cap (20, easily attainable within or shortly after the starter area) many players have multiple characters. Having a character of each class is the norm, and many players reserve a slot to create "disposable" PvP-only characters of whatever class they're needed as by their team. Players with multiple accounts are fairly frequent, and spare accounts being used solely as "mules" are not unheard of.
* God Loves, Man Kills" themselves to further their ability to cleanse mutantkind despite being questionably human themselves at that point.
* Hijacking Cthulhu: This person is somehow capable of directly taking control over an extremely powerful being for their own personal gain.
* Grand Theft Auto IV sometimes taxi cabs won't answer to Niko Bellic in which he will angrily show his disapproval.
* He also gets another one earlier, after being released from an alien probe that he'd been trapped in.
* Heroes' Frontier Step: The good deed that shows a character will become a true hero.
* Golgo 13. An actress is pretending to be a client so Duke Togo can be captured on film committing an assassination. When Togo responds to her entreaties with his trademark stoicism she has to improvise, saying among other things that the mark had injured his left hand. When looking through his sniper scope, however, Togo realises that the mark moves as if he's been using his right hand from birth, not someone who had to adapt in response to an injury.
* Golden Age (1936-1944). In a 1942 storyline, the eponymous hero is injured and dying. He is nursed back to health by preteen girl "Butch" Buchanan. She becomes his sidekick, legal ward, and surrogate daughter for the rest of his series. But she originally viewed him as a gangster and declares herself his "moll", doing her best to seduce him.
* He has admitted, in at least one interview, that they keep a mini bar on hand while they're doing the commentary, and have gotten
* Grand Theft Auto V if Trevor is pursued by the police of Blane Country, they will call him out by name over speaker, implying that they already know him really well.
* half, until Barney admits that he was just jealous of James for having a father when he doesn't). However, James and Barney have very similar personalities (being close friends while growing up) and tastes in clothing; the only major differences are that James is gay, monogamous, and happily married (and because of the last two, doesn't share Barney's sleazy love of having sex with women, or, in James's case, men).
* Gomez uses this to bluff the owner of Gus's laundromat when Hank sends him there to search for evidence of an underground meth lab:
* Goku is watching something horrible happen and responds with "Guh...
* Harry Potter, Mr. Weasley's Ford Anglia and some cars used by the Ministry of Magic are enchanted so as to comfortably seat over twice as many people as could be squeezed in normally.
* Harry Potter has the act break right in that very spot, and while it remains a light-hearted parody, the characters still feel like they're going through hell.
* Happy Gilmore, Happy's ice hockey skills unexpectedly transfer to playing golf, and
* Happy Heroes: One episode of Season 11 features Starshadow and Moondance on wanted posters. Hilariously enough, the picture on Starshadow's poster is a selfie.
* Hans Christian Andersen is open to many allegorical interpretations, as are its various adaptations.

* handwaved (at least in the novel) in that the city was specifically designed to function on its own for practically forever; with maintenance systems, food processing systems, and so on that operate out of sight of the residents (some of which are encountered by Logan and other Runners).
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, Sirius and Remus. They dispell Harry's worries and mention that while James had his negative sides, he was ultimately a good and noble man and he did mature beyond that.
* Hatsune Miku has been able to make several live concert tours using a similar technique.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! Erika's president of the school's fashion club. Having parents who run a clothing shop helps.
* Hamilton is essentially a biography of Alexander Hamilton in the form of a hip-hop musical and soundtrack.
* God gave the Israelites when they were wandering in the desert for 40 years.
* High Score was a shortlived animated series from Matt Wilson, originally competing with Homestar Runner. The characters were later redesigned for
* Harry, youngest son of Charles and William's younger brother, actually threatened to resign his commission if he wasn't permitted to accompany the rest of his unit to Afghanistan and developed a reputation as a dedicated and highly competent small unit commander. When his presence was outed by the Aussie media, he ended up transferring and training up as an Apache pilot, on the grounds that it wouldn't matter if everyone knew where he was, because Apaches were targets as a matter of course.
* He survives, though the party accidentally misplaces the crate holding his lower half.
* Harry Potter books to be lies. When Rob questions whether he is "breaking the story that magic doesn't exist," Bucky responds with "What? No, magic exists, I saw a thing on TV. But trains?... Owls?... ENGLAND? Nice try, I'm not buyin' it." Cue two-hour argument between Rob and Bucky over the existence of England (Canada and Greece, too).
* Grace Hopper was this for software engineers. She found the original software bug (
* Herbert also performed a rendition of "Somewhere That's Green" from the
* Harry Potter refers to an embarrassing incident when he was in primary school and turned his teacher's wig blue by accident.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, with a few scattered mentions of the unanimated novels.
* "Gorilla Fist" concludes with the reveal that the plot was driven by DNAmy
* Gravity Falls where nothing menacing appears. Examples include "Double Dipper", "The Time Traveler's Pig", the "Truth Ache" segment from "Bottomless Pit!", "The Deep End", and "Carpet Diem."
* Gratuitous Greek: Several ancient Roman authors often inserted Greek quotations into their works.
* HERZ: Misato. Being the Director of UN organization HERZ she has to deal with politicians constantly, often playing them against each other.
* Hadrian's Wall was eventually outflanked when the Scots realized all they needed to do was to sail round both ends in large boats. This allowed them to land raiding parties and get the loot home again.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows suggests what she might have been about to say:
* Henry is once seen not to follow his own advice; he carries a .357 Magnum.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, when Harold and Kumar finally get to White Castle, the former requests 30 sliders, 5 french fries, and 4 large cherry cokes. Kumar orders "I want the same, except make mine Diet Cokes."
* Haruhi Suzumiya allowed to have a relationship with someone outside of her own time frame, per obvious work reasons.
* .hack, who has expressive cat ears and a ponytail that looks like a cat tail.
* Gold Digger: I'm not dating or marrying you for "true love." I just want all your money, you rich fool!

* Harry Turtledove could actually be used to demolish old buildings and roads, and English majors are employed to do so).
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, Harry accidentally but usefully sticks his wand up the troll's nose.
* HeartGold that's not what you said, but wants you to help all the same.
* Hilarious Outtakes has this happen to Buzz after he looks through Lenny, the toy binoculars.
* Hexen: Zedek's "Cannonball" passive ability allows him to instakill any enemy by jumping upon them from a higher level.
* Happy Yarou Wedding, Akira steals Yuuhi's bento and then is convinced he must have him as his housekeeper. Eventually they get together.
* Halo 4 campaign. They never speak, and get no characterization, except for being highly efficient at their job. Indeed, given that they are the players' multiplayer avatars manifest into a canonical setting, the variation of possible Fireteams Crimson is too heavy to be able to give them a set character of any sort.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (1974), the gang steal a Cadillac Eldorado that turns out to be filled with packets of white powder. Atlee pokes a hole in one bag and tastes it, then declares it to be heroin.
* Hellboy, both the title character and Liz, who has fire powers, seal the deal with a kiss while the flames she emits cover them.
* Hilda: In episode 8, the entrance to the hidden section of the library is, fitting enough, behind a bookcase.
* Happens to Dr. Doofenshmirtz in the episode "Tip of the Day", when an old video he made in high school winds up on the Internet. The video in question portrays Doof roller-skating while wearing only a white speedo and purple cape...
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002), after Tri-Klops has just crashed a vehicle into one.
* Here Today was released in May 7th 2021 in the US, but wasn't released in the UK until September 3rd and Portugal until October 7th.
* Guardian Fairy Michel will stop at nothing to catch Kim and Michel, even though they aren't the thieves he's after.
* had nothing to do with trolling (and the troll face was actually referred to as the person's "cool face").
* Heroes Unlimited, which includes rules for playing as a non-superpowered hero who fights crime with a robotic exoskeleton. The player can customize this exoskeleton however they please, with the only limiting factors being their imagination and the design budget.
* Halloween Horror Nights Hollywood in 1986, scareactor Paul Rebalde Brooks fell between two tram cars on the backlot tour and was crushed to death. This caused Universal to put the event on hiatus until 1992.
* Henrietta Lacks, who is the originator of the HeLa cell line used across the globe.
* Harry Brown on his estate murder his old war buddy. Harry ends up killing several of them because they just see an old man with a bad back and keep letting their guard down around him. It also doesn't help that these teenagers are just arrogant wannabe-tough guys no match for the real thing, and often out of their minds with alcohol and drugs too which impairs their judgement further.
* Happy Heroes, whenever a character comes into contact with fire, electricity, or a similar source, the worst that happens to them is usually that they become visibly singed and have ashes covering their whole body, including their face.
* Happy Tree Friends, and eventually sneezes so hard her brain flies out of the back of her head.
* Halloween — in a scene where a cop clumsily shoots at Michael, one of the commentators mentions that, as a lifelong resident of Haddonfield, the guy should have realized shooting Michael just pisses him off. Although from the very first movie, shooting Myers does work, as he does get knocked back by bullets. In the fourth Halloween movie, Michael is similarly riddled with bullets, until he falls down a mine. It takes a full year of medical care by a hobo who found him before he fully heals.

* Hershey's answer to the Weinermobile, the Kissmobile, is designed to resemble a row of three Hershey's Kisses sitting on a plank, with the first Kiss serving as the vehicle's cab. While the Kissmobiles are no longer traveling America — they were decomissioned in late 2019 due to age and safety concerns — the cars themselves are now on permanent display at the AACA Museum in Hershey, PA, just down the road from Hershey HQ.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix: Made in 2007, set in 2 August 1995 – 17 June 1996.
* Hawkman surrounding him is because of post-Crisis writers trying to somehow combine the two.
* He was said to have invited a don to tea, "to welcome Stanley Casson, our new archaeology Fellow". "But, sir," the man replied, "I am Stanley Casson". "Never mind," Spooner said, "Come all the same."
* Grim Fandango, and all of that green beauty is actually the remains of people who have been killed by Hector over many years.
* Gotham, Gertrud Kapelput (the Penguin's mother) is of the Petty Patty variety, selling out the father of a classmate she had a problem with.
* Hammerspace Hair—a character pulls out something they were storing in their hair
* Hand on Womb: A woman resting her hand on her stomach as an early sign that she is pregnant.
* Greg Costikyan player character) and a little old lady with a revolver in her apartment.
* Hellsister Trilogy's identity, since he met him once, but Linda warns her father against getting too nosy.
* God him/her/it/none-of-the-above-self appears to the Fantastic Four as * he starts accusing Acro of murdering the ringmaster (he did, but he was aiming for someone else. The birds desert Acro when he's at his most intense, but come back afterward.
* Heroes Rise up to get the people to give in to paranoia and support Victon's anti-Powered policies. However, during the final battle at the end of the third game, you are once again confronted by Rebellion. You have the option of trying to convince him to once again become the hero you remember and help you defeat Victon.
* Goldfish Poop Gang: Those annoying bad guys that keep popping up again and again.
* Her control improves as of season two thanks to Grisleda's training, but she's still absolutely wrecked by the Trix in that season and Valtor in the third season. It's only after enduring * Hearts of Darkness: A Filmmaker's Apocalypse. Two of them read "Apocalypse When?" and "Apocalypse Forever", respectively, referring to the constant delays.
* Going Postal, as he spent 19,000 years of his existence trying to deliver a message (and willing to wait for time to start over to complete his task), and having no further orders to follow is bliss.
* has a genin state this verbatim when she leaves to spy on Naruto, Anko, and Kurenai after hearing they're going to have a threesome.
* Hawkeye and Margaret again, in the series finale. With the rest of the 4077th going their separate ways after the end of the war, the two have an EXTENDED makeout session before parting. B.J. and everyone else just kind of mill about and look away politely, waiting for it to end.
* He's Just Not That into You. Ergo, she shouldn't ask him out, she shouldn't call him, etc.
* Heart of the Alien, included the best console version of this game yet, which loads really fast, and has the best soundtrack thus far.
* happened, but never took place in this version of reality, while the werewolf backstory took place sometime around the Neolithic.
* her Heel–Face Turn was her love for Zuko, and she openly admits this when confronting the enemy.
* Green Lantern. To them, they're simply fighting off the light, which they see as intruding in the universe.
* Grimm Fairy Tales use a cigarette to light the fuse on a firecracker that they then use to blow up a young boy's snowman.

* gods are really just pygmies who attained power through the Lord souls pulled from the first flame. However the literal definition of humans in this universe is "Person with a piece of the Dark Soul inside them" add to that inconsistent references to Gwyn and his ilk being called giants, despite giants being an explicitly inhuman race, and it becomes unclear what precisely anyone is.
* GURPS. If a person's soul leaves their body for any reason (such as undergoing a near-death experience), any ghost nearby can try to possess the body with a high chance of succeeding. If the ghost expends enough fatigue and gets really lucky, they can control the possessed body for up to 36 days.
* Gundam 00's Ptolemaios II is all of the above - in an early episode of season two it dives from orbit down into the ocean.
* Grey Wardens are a milder version of this trope. They take in anyone, from the lowest commoner to the highest king, who has skills and desire to fight darkspawn. If a criminal joins their ranks, s/he will be pardoned, which is used a few times in the actual game, most notably during the prologue. However, not only are Grey Wardens expected to spend the rest of their lives fighting darkspawn, but since they take in the taint their
* High Plains Invaders: Aliens invade an isolated town in order to steal uranium. They seem to feed on it, and Jules theorizes that pure uranium is like opium to them.
* G-Rated Sex - For when masturbation can’t be shown outright but is implied.
* Halle Berry was noted in saying it was the only thing he liked about the movie.
* gokuu9000 begins most of his newer videos with an intro that shows a logo for his username in front of the classic "Starfield Simulation" screensaver from Windows 95. A lot of his videos have a brief 3-second song that plays during this part, but some of them use a random sound bite that's different every time.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, wondering, "Who's Cedric — your boyfriend?"
* Hetalia Bloodbath 2010 gets motivated to work together in order to solve the mystery.
* Her Scarlet Letter child from an affair. Her former friends bully and ostracize her for having a baby with a married man, while still being married to her estranged husband Jin as well.
* Gold Digger: Marrying a rich person just so you can have access to their wealth.
* Harry Potter took seven years of planning and organizing before JK Rowling published the first book. The seven books were published over the course of ten years.
* Great Ship the universe, or functions as a control center for it - the visible universe simply being another layer to the ship's hull.
* Hearts of Iron has both Imperial Japan and Nationalist China (biggest/most dangerous Chinese faction) don different shades of yellow as their faction colours.
* Good, blow an audible kiss ("Mmmwah!") to the audience, and smarmily state "Goodnight, everybody!"
* Harry and the Potters, anyone? Draco and the Malfoys? Whoever heard of making rockbands off books, really...
* Hello, [Insert Name Here] into following a simulation's plot. When he throws his dog tags away (presumably with the player's own name printed on them), it's symbolic of him taking his life into his own hands; now that the game's over, the player can no longer control what happens to Raiden.
* Grand Theft Auto IV. Ligner is likely derived from the German word for "liar" which is "Lügner" and may be pronounced like "Ligner" if you're not familiar with German.
* Highlander: The Search for Vengeance: Marcus pines for Rome but, unlike Colin, he looks to the future because he believes he can recreate it through conquest. He knows things die, but you move on and help build civilizations.
* Green Eggs and Ham is especially odd in the two levels it has. At first glance, it's about why it's a good idea to try new things. Unfortunately, it also has the message "no matter how often someone has told you they don't like something, keep pushing and badgering and harassing them into trying it - they'll like it and thank you in the end." Or, even more so, "freedom doesn't work" - in the sense that offering someone a free choice will often result in them taking the option that's worse for everyone, including themselves.

* Guardian Angels play with this idea. On one hand, they are soldiers of God ordained to guard particular areas on Earth or in the whole of Reality. They are powerful and dangerous forces that Fallen Angels and their hosts don't ever try to directly fight. Any supernatural threat that comes against their domain can be stopped swiftly and efficiently, but throw a mortal threat against them and they do nothing. While they will guard, for instance, the home of a retired Knight of the Cross from a supernatural threat, they must also protect Free Will and respect the free choice made by any mortal. So, as much as they may want to stop a stupid kid from torching the retired Knight's home, their hands are tied.
* Guide To Moral Living In Examples, an ever-growing collection of short stories about the daily challenges of life, such as what to do if you are attacked by a six-foot bacteria or if the company that you're applying to has been infiltrated by Hideous Telepathic Space-faring Lizardmen in Mansuits.
* Gravity Falls: In "Society of the Blind Eye", the gang runs past a display on "Romance in Settlers' Times", which involves a man carrying an angrily-struggling woman over his shoulder.
* Helvetica, and Sans and Papyrus are two of the most popular characters in the game, to the extent that even people who have never played the game know about them.
* Haven (2020): One of the reasons that Kay and Yu left the Apiary is because Kay was set up with a "Mate". He didn't even glance at her profile before they ran away, but Yu convinces him to at least take a look.
* Hades & Seph Saga, while Persephone creates plant life (creating various breeds of flowers that flourish in the Underworld), can reincarnate souls and is given the title of "Goddess of Life" when she is given her title.
* Goofy, happy go lucky Wally West/Kid Flash and focused, rough and tumble Artemis Crock. Ironically, the writers paired them up because of their
* Go West, Young Lady and ride out to raid Killer Pete's hideout. However, Killer Pete knows of this and plans to have the posse wiped out in an ambush by Chief Big Thunder Cloud's tribe, while he and his gang loot the town. Learning of this, Bill sends one of the women to warn the men, and hurriedly organizes the rest of the townswomen into a fighting force that ambushes the gang and does a good job of subduing them by pelting them with pots and pans and whacking them with brooms.
* Harry Belafonte song "Day-O (The Banana Boat Song)", about a guy who's working so hard he can't wait to go home... to talk about a guy who's partying so hard he doesn't wanna go home.
* Gus should stay away from coffee altogether, seeing as how the cleaning lady regularly urinates in his executive coffee machine.
* Greg Egan applies. This is almost universally accepted as a fact of life.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: "You don't know me! I'm the United bloody Kingdom and I can hild my loquer better than you any day!"
* Her cutie mark doesn't represent that she's good with PipBucks (though she is), but that she's good at the thing PipBucks were originally designed for: Finding people.
* Glow by Amy Kathleen Ryan, the protagonists Waverly and Kieran are some of the first children successfully conceived in deep space. They live on a ship called the Empyrean with hundreds of other children and families. The ship has been traveling for over 40 years on its journey to populate a distant planet.
* Halloween (1978) states she was written like this to make her comparable to the main villain, Michael, and that when she stabs him several times at the end of the movie, this is her taking out her pent up sexual frustrations.
* High Rhulain, all the participants must declare what their targets are before slinging at a pinata-like target (the head is worth more than the legs which is worth more than the body). The heroine declares "two eyes and a head" and hits them, a never-before seen feat.

* Harry Potter on uses of the number 7 in the series. Voldemort knowingly invokes this when he decides to split his soul into 7 pieces by making 6 horcruxes. Unfortunately for him, he accidentally creates a 7th horcrux, which ultimately leads to his downfall.
* Happens completely by accident in Randall Garrett's short story "Time Fuze". Humanity invents an FTL engine that, as a side-effect, induces a supernova in the system's local star. They don't find out about this until they reach their destination... and on their return trip, they discover that they accidentally blew up our own sun as well.
* Hellsister Trilogy close calls in a short space of time. She has expressed over and again her desire to retire and lead a normal life, but everybody keeps needing her to save the universe, and she answers the call every time.
* He smiles in a flashback when he holds his newborn daughter. This old, hated Civil War veteran not only has a loving wife but now a beautiful daughter.
* "Hawk" Hurrleson, play-by-play announcer for the Chicago White Sox, anytime a White Sox player hits a home run:
* Grindelwald was the most powerful dark wizard of his era, so dangerous only Dumbledore stood a chance at defeating him. When Voldemort goes to question him about the Elder Wand, he's been kept in prison for so long he's little more than an emaciated wreck, possessing none of his former power.
* Heroes Unlimited program has expanded beyond a couple of elite Super-Squads.
* Highlander II: The Quickening to sneak into the shield facility. When they wake up, they snarkily compare how many bullets they took getting 'killed.'
* Halo Legends episode "Homecoming". While she doesn't do it in front of her superiors, Daisy does rip off her dog tag and throw it into a fountain after returning to her homeworld.
* Godzilla (2014), except for the unnamed couple with the cute daughter, the crowd running from the tsunami doesn't flee into the buildings to gain height. Averted with the soldiers on the railway bridge, as there's only one direction to run.
* Gothel herself is also an example—while she normally looks like an attractive middle-aged woman, she's * here) boss, a dwarf and a half-drow, the rest of the bunch are humans. Not depicted: doppleganger (or is it?), half-orc, gargoyle.
* has this as the MO of Azazel. Anyone infected by Azazel's Ichor is turned into a slave of Azazel, and has their personality warped under the control of the core.
* grinch. The term means someone who hates a holiday (particularly Christmas), and tries to make it miserable for everybody else.
* Half-Life: Opposing Force continually laments that his HEV suit doesn't have one.
* Hidamari Sketch: Sae, who's generally pleasant, consistently described as "beautiful" in the manga's character profiles, and is called "a walking encyclopedia".
* Good At Numbers, but as the son of doctors, he's the one to provide medical backgrounders.
* Guys Are Slobs" is apparently the show's next biggest theme behind "mystery-solving".
* Guardians this is how Jaireth feels toward Kotu, even though he's not Kotu's biological father.
* Hearthstone: Heroes of Warcraft there is a Master of Disguise card, which shows a hot female Blood Elf... but it's actually a male Tauren. They don't call him Master of Disguise for nothing.
* Gotenks. Because of his immaturity, he fails to take his opponents seriously and drags out fights because of his obsession with looking cool, which results in disaster every time he tries to fight an enemy. It's because of these qualities that the rest of the Z Fighters decide not to let him participate in the Tournament of Power.
* Grand Piano Keys: This trope is penalized. Every time you hit a wrong note, you can't play for a few seconds, and you lose some of your time.
* Heroes of Might and Magic has something like this, as different troops have different native terrains and have no penalty when moving on them.

* Hellsing has Alucard's Control Art system, which releases greater and greater levels of his immense power when the situation calls for it, the final level of which has to be released by Integra.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series tries to mess with it to create a universe she considers better.
* Good Girls, by Carol Lay, features a number of ongoing series. One of them involves a pair of twins who are two heads on one body. When one of the heads gets chopped off, the remaining twin can't handle it and tapes the dead head back on to the neck stump, then carries on with the explanation that his brother simply isn't feeling well at the moment.
* Hayate the Combat Butler. Maria however, stays completly oblivious to this.
* Gravity Falls who can enter and possess his body anytime he falls asleep. When he appears in the present storyline, he reveals that at one point he had a metal plate installed on his skull to avoid possession without this trope.
* Granblue Fantasy Versus isn't exactly a great fighter, but him and his bros can manage to pull of some crazy things to keep up with the rest of the cast. When you get to their win screen though, it shows they were just imagining the entire fight at the bar.
* Hawke's sister Bethany survives the prologue but dies at the end of Act 1 - nor entirely stopped blaming himself for it.
* Henry and the new Cinderella in Season 7. Many fans argue that they are nothing more than a much more boring rehash of Snowing (plus, them being a copy of Snowing
* Good Bad Bugs. Glitches that skip large portions of the game are sometimes made a separate category.
* Grey Knights, the daemon accuses Alaric of Pride, which, it claims, blinds him to both his faults and his defeat.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince Ron mumbles Hermione's name while unconscious in the hospital wing.
* Hank himself ultimately meets such a fate at the hands of Jack Welker. He's not the first person to meet this fate at the hands of Jack, as Jack had earlier ended Declan's life by shooting him in the face.
* Griffith is so broken by Guts leaving the Hawks that he immediately seeks out Princess Charlotte for
* Green Lantern gives us 1963: "suspect escaped into an extra-dimensional vortex".
* Healing Factor and extend the host's lifetime by at least a century or two, so there is an incentive) and time-share instead of taking over entirely.
* He tells Michael "not now" when his lover, Susan, calls him on the phone saying she needed urgently to speak with him.
* Guest Star Party Members. Whenever you talk to her, she says very nice things about how the party is blessed with the light.
* going toe to toe with Tex, Maine, more Texes, and now running through an active battlefield with no cover, cutting down soldiers and not taking a single hit. At this point, the "non-freelancer" part is redundant. He's one of the most competent characters in the series.
* Hellboy, the title character is a a very skilled paranormal investigator who has solved many supernatural cases.
* Granny Weatherwax once Bowdlerized a summary of Nanny Ogg's favorite song as being about "a rodent that can't be persuaded to be bothered by anything". The actual song title is "The Hedgehog Can Never Be Buggered at All", and hedgehogs are eulipotyphlans ("insectivorans" of traditional usage), not rodents.
* Hey Arnold!, Harold is caught stealing from the butcher, Mr. Green, and is forced to work there to learn his lesson. After a while, he loves it and dreams of being a butcher when he gets older. Once his sentence is up, he tries stealing another piece of meat, just so he can get sentenced to work at the butchery again, but Mr. Green doesn't fall for it as he found Harold more trouble than he was worth (Harold had pretty quickly cost more than the ham he stole or the work he would give in accidentally destroyed merchandise). However, when he needed help with his annual meat sale he's forced to accept Harold's, and afterward is so impressed he takes him on as an apprentice.

* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name, and a ghost. And it's barely into its third chapter.
* Gypsy Tales: "The Gypsy Woman and the Devil" ends with Vunida's children searching for their mother, not knowing as the audience and the wise old man do that the devil has turned her into a cherry tree near their house.
* Goofy shrinks after being caught outside in his nightgown in the cartoon "Father's Week End".
* Hairspray, are perfectly realistic except for the fact that people burst into song at random.
* Heracles and Dionysus were both sons of Zeus who later ascended to become gods on Mount Olympus after their mortal selves died.
* Good Is Not Nice guy who (at least initially) is disliked by many of his peers for his extremely difficult personality.
* Hanzo the Razor trilogy about a metsuke in Edo Japan who rapes his female victims into submission in order to expose nefarious plots by corrupt and devious officials.
* Gundam Wing had a large background cast of Arab characters, in the form of Quatre's private army. However, although also of Arabian descent, space-born Quatre was blonde-haired and blue-eyed. Justified with his surname "Winner" which suggested mixed heritage.
* Green Rocks), other times it's just because they got frozen inside a block of normal ice.
* Half & Half get linked this way by the local variant of Kami-sama as part of a life-extension deal in which they had to decide which one would die. This system was partly to keep them from trying to off one another and partly so that the one to die would have more miles under the metaphorical belt. There seems to be a feedback filter implied somewhere.
* Gods of Destruction (e.g. Beerus) enforce a balance between creation and destruction, destroying planets so that new ones can be created.
* Having to watch his beloved wife be burned at the stake on false charges of witchcraft drives Dracula utterly insane, leading to his campaign to essentially
* God of War III much later in the year. Unless a bunch of friends give you their codes, you would have to spend several hundred dollars on preorders to get all the costumes available.
* handwaved with the Season Finale, where he shows up in the alternate future timeline John winds up in, obviously alive and well, and we're all supposed to get used to that version, since he acted exactly the same. Unfortunately, it was never meant to be.
* Gran Turismo) class, and 59th place overall (after starting from 174th place on the grid).
* Half-Life franchise displays many hallmarks of a cosmic horror story, coupled with orwellian scifi elements. Ironically enough the player is working for the unexplainable eldritch abomination in this case (the G-Man), while the main antagonists (the Combine) can be explained more or less rationally as an invase extraterrestrial space-faring species which has a nasty habit of conquering/assimilating one dimension after another into their empire, complete with all the inhabited (and uninhabited) worlds and civilizations they contain - Though the sheer speculated size of the combine's empire compared against the player could itself be defined as a cosmic eldritch abomination in this case.
* Grand Theft Auto series, named after a term for carjacking - which you will be doing a whole lot of in these games.
* Heisei Ultraseven: Ran further with it, showing that Seven was out of commission while recovering on Earth after failing to leave the planet, within the series it took more than 20 years for him to recover.
* Hal Jordan vigilante), and they often collaborate together when the opportunity arises, most notably in their cross-country tour of America during the Bronze Age.
* Grey's Anatomy gets a prosthetic leg after losing hers in a plane crash; she eventually discovers that she can cure her phantom pain by having someone stab her in the (fake) foot.
* Grayson is about a sheriff in the Middle East and is also hugely based on King's own experiences.

* Harley Quinn in "The Man Who Killed Batman", but was later retconned into being Harley's real name.
* Golden Dragon Fantasy Gamebooks, the insectoid swordsmaster Lord Mantis has an artifact called the Glove of Unerring Dexterity — if you fight him, he has a chance of killing you instantly. But if you beat him or otherwise somehow get his glove, besides improving your attack roll, if you roll a pair of 6s you automatically skewer your enemy's heart.
* Gore Vidal claims to have inserted homoerotic subtext into the script of
* Happens for good guys, too. At the end of the episode in which Batgirl was introduced, Bruce Wayne straight-up says "I'm sure we'll be seeing her again."
* He was born when a synthetic drug split a man's personality in two - the pure good side became philanthropist Martin Li, while the pure evil side became Mr. Negative. helps people that suffer because of Negative.
* Going Cosmic: A work begins to incorporate more philosophical and theological themes.
* GORA has a brief flashback scene to the early 1900s, shot in the scratchy, silent, black-and-white footage of the first 'moving pictures'.
* Heroes. When she lands on the chalk outline, she concludes that she was wrong.
* Highlander: The Search for Vengeance the hero Colin spends over 2000 years mourning the death of his first wife. While also seeking revenge on the man that killed her.
* Hank Pym. After years of this, Marvel finally dropped the "ambiguous" part and made it canon that Hank suffers from bipolar disorder.
* He follows this up by describing how he tried to write a sketch about this, but realised it didn't work because it was mostly about what he was thinking, and it was only really funny if he explained it was true. So he came up with the idea of a "not-sketch", where he just stood in front of the audience and talked about what happened.
* Have I Mentioned I Am Sexually Active Today?: Someone goes on and on about a prolific but nonexistent sex life.
* Gren is a male with female breasts due to being used for drug testing.
* here recorded together (this was likely averted with the Vancouver-based actors in the show such as Hiro Kanagawa).
* GURPS, which is two yards long. If its claws and bite don't kill you, its sting definitely will.
* Harald has despised the Starks ever since Robb executed his father. Yet, he does not seem to be bothered in the slightest when Ramsay murders Roose, who avenged Rickard.
* Guardians of the Galaxy – Mission: BREAKOUT! props, but also the original Abominable Snowman animatronic from the Matterhorn Bobsleds and an octopus that briefly featured in the Country Bears Jamboree from Disneyland just across the way, and Figment from Epcot.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure!, Erika is obviously the only one who misses romping around and being "beautiful 14-year-old superheroes" at the end.
* having Vicky read "I'm happy and I don't need my Fairy Godparents anymore" off of a note.
* Highlander novels, 'Scotland The Brave', said he was an immortal who 'died' because he was getting too famous, also explaining the continuing Elvis sightings through the years.
* he lied about his culpability in his past crimes, claiming that a Skrull impersonated him.
* High-explosive squash head (HESH)/high-explosive plastic (HEP) shells comprise a type of multipurpose explosive munition useful against a wide range of hardened targets. Instead of penetrating or exploding on impact, HESH shells are filled with plastic explosive that "squashes" on contact with a hard surface, like reinforced concrete or tank armour. Less than half-a-second later, the shell explodes, causing destructive shockwaves to ripple through the contact surface, pulverizing concrete into dust and deforming steel plating to such an extent that pieces break off and become dangerous shrapnel. This type of munition has become less effective against modern main battle tanks, but still works fine against concrete fortifications and most other vehicles.

* having his eyes gouged out), shot, and left to rot in a river for a few days. His disfigured, decaying face was purposely displayed to highlight the cruelty of lynching.
* Hey Arnold!. There's also the Nancy Spumoni Snowboots from "Arnold's Christmas" which every girl in town wants for Christmas. Helga's mother spends an entire day waiting in line to get the very last pair.
* Her defense stats are deplorable who at least has the decency to wear magic-enhanced cloaks.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, where Ron is nearly crushed by a falling tower.
* Hee Haw had Cletus Biggs of "'Biggs, Shy & Stir', Kornfield Kounty's most honorable law firm".
* Hayley Kiyoko) before bleaching it blonde, which she has since then.
* happy go lucky wouldn't hurt a fly Kaylee. When Simon and Book sign up for passage on the good ship Serenity, they're unknowingly invoking the trope.
* GURPS Banestorm on Imperial Rome. Hence, it is completely inevitable that it will feature blood-soaked arenas hosting gladiatorial games. This is mentioned fairly briefly in the main book covering the setting; a published adventure for a previous edition of the game, "Fighters of the Purple Rage", deals with a band of gladiators who escape from the imperial arena. Rather oddly, it assumes that a party of (presumably more or less heroic) PCs will be willing to pursue these skilled and desperate fighters into locations which they must know better, in order to capture them and return them to slavery and death.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law: After getting sprayed with "amnesia gas", Harvey wakes up and immediately comments, "What happened? I don't remember anything from specifically the past couple days."
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix: Made in 2003, set in 2 August 1995 – 17 June 1996.
* Gory Discretion Shot: When a person gets killed in a gruesome manner, the gory details aren't shown on-screen.
* Hamilton, Alexander's first sentence to Angelica is 'You strike me as a woman who has never been satisfied.' She immediately takes it as a come-on, but he follows it up with 'you're like me, I'm never satisfied' - he was actually saying that she seems like she always keeps fighting and never settles where she is; the sexual meaning was just a bonus. Apparently, this innuendo actually was made in real life - though there, it was Angelica's flirtation.
* Grey Hunters, they find soldiers, and Ragnar spies on them to discover that they are loyalist. He is very careful about contacting them, in order to avoid provoking a fight.
* Han Solo at Star's End has Han using this tactic. While ferrying a group of people to find the top-secret prison called Star's End, Han discovers the leader of the mission dead and the data pad containing the prison's secret location destroyed. After he locks up the others while he tries to sort things out he discovers that the dead leader had scratched the location into the table he was found dead on. Han then tells everyone to calculate a hyperspace jump to the correct star system but he deliberately gives everyone the wrong planet. He then outs the killer as the one who corrected his calculations by using the right planet.
* Herman Melville had a very strange relationship with this phenomenon:
* Graveyard Keeper: You can harvest flesh from the corpses brought to your graveyard and either sell it at the Dead Horse Inn or make it into burgers and serve them at the Inquisitor's witch-burnings. No one seems to notice, or particularly care.
* Golgo 13, but in one particular episode, when he's hired to kill a female assassin he was with intimately, they share a few genuinely touching moments, until he reveals that he knows more about her than he let on. She immediately knows what that means, and gets a final happy day before Togo kills her. It wasn't a lie, but it wasn't anything that would stop him from completing a job.

* Golgo 13: Golgo 13, widely considered the most dangerous hitman of all time, has only one rule - once he accepts an assignment and as long as his employer honors their contract, he will finish it, no matter what. Race, social class, and gender makes absolutely no difference. Neither does physical health, he's assassinated several handicapped targets as well. He also has at least one underage target to his name.
* Groundskeeper Willie claims that all Scots naturally hate the English, Welsh, Japanese, and other Scots.
* , Hermione covers her ears and hums loudly to drown out Kreacher describing the process in detail.
* Graduation, with his voice-over telling the audience this is why he is not at his graduation. The film then goes back to explain how he ended up in this situation.
* Haré+Guu substitute teacher after her attempted relationship with his regular teacher fails, she turns her attention to him to Hare's horror.
* Good Luck Charlie, Bob describes a jingle as the basic concept of an Ear Worm: "A catchy little tune that sticks in your head and drives you a little bit crazy."
* Grim Dawn called the Aetherials which all but collapses civilization. Suddenly humanity finds itself thrust in the middle of a cosmic war between two absurdly powerful races, one of which, the Chthonians, seeks to revive their universe-ending deity and to that end sacrifices humans en-masse, while the Aetherials are perfectly immortal so long as they are provided with a host, and seek to take away their enemies' advantage away by extinguishing humanity first. Meanwhile the Gods on which humanity has relied all this time for protection are nowhere to be found and said to be trying to advance their own personal agendas, which pushes some of the most desperate human factions into deals with the devil with older gods. Several characters even note that the war was lost the moment either Aetherials or Chthonians were allowed to set foot in the physical realm, and a god the player encounters even states that the Grim Dawn (the aformentionned invasion) is but the beginning of humanity's suffering.
* Harley Quinn Volume 3 starts with Coney Island invaded by zombies. Their origin? An alien named Vertigax crash-landing on a farm and disguising himself as a cow, who accidentally gets butchered. After the meat-processing, we see that Vertigax has been shipped all over as various meat products (particularly Coney Island hot dogs), contaminating everyone who eats him. This, naturally, results in zombies.
* Hazbin Hotel: Charlie. To most characters, they don't take her too fondly and think her idea to help sinners is a waste of time. To the fans, however, she's just downright precious.
* hates that Shawn has been lying to her all these years like her father did.
* Gomer Pyle, U.S.M.C. went on, Jim Nabors was given opportunities to showcase his bell-like if somewhat bland singing voice. The sharp contrast between this and his in-character hick accent stopped being striking or funny fairly quickly.
* Greek Mythology was this. After all, he survived his adventures, while all of his men died, and Polyphem the cyclops blew his INT roll when Odysseus was there.
* Gohan, Krillin and Dende are wishing with the Namekian Dragon Balls loud enough that Piccolo, who was on the other side of the planet could hear it.
* Guardians of the Galaxy There was also a limited cassette release packaged to look like a homemade mix tape.
* He also tries to find a book on how to make friends. All he can find is a children's book,
* Gosford Park, after a man posing as a servant reveals himself to be an actor and moves from "below stairs" to "above stairs". To punish him for his deception, one of the maids spills tea in his lap. Her fellow servants quickly hide their smiles, his fellow nobs shrug and keep on keeping on.
* Grand Finale returned for a sixth season a few years later. The fact that the fifth season ended with the girls having left the WHOOP organization is never addressed.
* her attempt at a normal life goes awry because her "crime" was having paid for the dress... but neglecting to let the woman remove the security tag, and not letting the store's guard explain the situation to her before overreacting.

* Hannibal is a subverter. The Angel-Maker rips out the lungs of his victims, flipping them to resemble wings in pure gornery.
* Grizzly Tales for Gruesome Kids animated series, narrated by host Nigel Planer.
* Hecatomb), and similar dirty tricks, all to get the requisite 20 soul tokens at your enemies' expense. And since every player gained a soul token at the beginning of his/her turn...
* Heroes, Mr. Linderman demonstrates his healing power on a wilted orchid.
* Hawkman, they are both cursed to meet, fall in love, and die tragically in each life. The battery of the Star Sapphires, who represent love on the emotional spectrum, even contains the crystallized remains of their original incarnations, which were found on Zamaron. The two are all but stated to be the personification of tragic love.
* Here Comes the Three Angels: Jun does a hands-free (and eventually a pants grabbing) version of this in Episode 5.
* Grimm (quite possibly the most powerful Hexenbiest in the world, although she became one as a side effect of a magical ritual).
* Haruhi Suzumiya doing this to punish Mikuru, for not following her nonsensical baseball signals in "The Boredom of Haruhi Suzumiya".
* Goldfinger, whose ultimate goal is to increase the value of his gold reserves by irradiating all the gold in Fort Knox.
* Gravity Falls episode "Bottomless Pit!" had Mabel swap Grunkle Stan's false teeth with a set of magic gold teeth that forced him to always tell the truth.
* Higher Flier, Dainty Dish starts propelling herself around the room with involuntary wing pumps during an allergy attack. The library ends up a complete mess in less than thirty seconds.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Lost and Damned, you frequently participate in conversations with your fellow gang members while cruising down major roads and even highways on motorcycles. They're not even yelling at the top of their lungs. In real life, the noise of the motorcycles plus the wind would make this sort of conversation impossible.
* Gyro Gearloose is one as well. In one episode, to increase the budget for a cheap sci-fi show as part of a way of reinventing it, Scrooge has Gyro build a new spaceship that he wants to be as realistic as possible. Gyro's response? Make it an actual working spaceship. He proceeds to do something like this again in the "Super Ducktales" 5-parter: after recovering his money from the above example with Fenton, Scrooge asks Gyro to build a security guard for his money bin that won't let anyone get to the bin. Gyro again takes him too literally and programs it to not let
* Hellsing, Tubalcain Alhambra sends waves of Brazilian police officers to attack Alucard, fully aware that they are no match for him, so that he will use up most of his bullets to make it easier for Alhambra to fight him.
* Grand Theft Auto III: There is a mission titled Kingdom Come where Claude has to kill suicide bombers, that chase him and if close enough detonate themselves.
* Have You Tried Not Being a Monster?: "Have you tried being straight?" or "Have you tried dating a man/woman?"
* Gor series the Kurii destroyed their homeworld in intercine battles, so they went looking for a new home and found Earth & Gor. The Priest-Kings have waged a war against the Kurii to keep them out for millennia, all unseen by most humans.
* her young assistant Timmy became mutated, he began eating her arm, getting as far as her shoulder. It was because he was latched on that he could control her mind. She later is saved after getting a Mad Scientist Lab Tech to surgically remove Timmy.
* Guttural Growler. Both were once enemies of Goku, and both gave him a run for his money when they first fought him, and both continue to be badasses after.
* Gratuitous Space Battles, which is one of the most powerful galactic civilizations, a technologically-advanced powerhouse that has existed for thirty thousand years and counting and is bent on conquering what parts of the galaxy they haven't taken yet. Their "Emperor" is a bit "under the weather" - no one's seen him in about a thousand years or so, but the Empire itself keeps marching along.

* He has another one after reading an email from someone claiming that the only reason he had put
* GURPS as part of grappling, but you usually fail at the required rolls, unless you have high ST and/or points in the Neck Snap technique.
* GURPS automatically come back. However, the Soul Jar does house their spirit, leaving open the possibility that they or someone else can use another power to bring them back.
* Graduate Meeting of Mutual Killing does include amateur sleuths as the protagonists.
* Guild Wars 2 is a massive sentient tree that gave birth to the Sylvari race (and keeps giving birth to new Sylvari ocasionally) and holds their main city in its immense trunk. It can speak through an avatar in the form of a pale Sylvari lady in a white dress and can show prophetic visions to people in times of crisis (the awakening of the Dragons being a serious one).
* Hearth's Warming Eve" has the ponies putting on a play about the origins of Equestria, with the cast appearing as the historical characters portrayed.
* Going Greek. The final frat party reveals that he is not only telling the truth but that she is so devoted she got a "Property of Gil" tattoo on her neck.
* Here We Gooooo! Since Yoshi caught her letter with his tongue and accidentally wiped off several letters, he refers to Princess Caramel Seltzer as "Cammy Seller".
* Goblins like Dies-Horribly, simple observations like Big Ears, or... "Stop-The-Ceremony-I-Swallowed-A-Bug".
* Harry Riddle she's a muggleborn and such a move is bound to get daddy's attention.
* Guns Firing Underwater: Guns can be practically drowned in water and still fire accurately, if not a little worse for wear.
* Google "20 bug bombs house" and you'll find countless stories similar to this one; homeowner has bug infestation. Homeowner uses bug bombs — more than they need. This usually turns out okay as long as they read the
* Happy Tree Friends. Expect that character to suffer a slow and agonizing death. Major episodes that do this are: “Eye Candy”, “The Chokes on You”, “Water Way to Go”, “Brake the Cycle”, “An Inconvenient Tooth”, “Ski Ya, Don’t Wanna Be Ya”, “Can’t Stop Coffin”, “Whose Line is it Anyway?” and all of the “Sniffles vs. The Ant Family” episodes.
* Godslave starts with Edith waking up the morning after chapter 1's events, then skips to the previous evening to deliver the exposition.
* Goliath Awaits has a certain amount of luxuries and is miraculous in its mere existence. But it also has a somewhat dictatorial system, a certain amount of lies told too its people and the constant threat that one day the water might break in and kill them.
* Gossip Girl's Chuck and Blair waking up in the back of his limo, holding hands.
* Health Hotline: The commercial uses some stock footage of people talking on the phone.
* Guy de Maupassant, and starts up an affair with a beautiful maidservant of the woman, who had told him she was built similarly to her mistress. Things end badly when, thinking it is the maidservant, he goes up to the woman and lifts up her skirts and kisses her on the behind.
* her pizza to burn. Of note is at 1:40-1:50, where she does the worst animation of lip-licking you'll ever see.
* Grimm only drug described as a combination of Meth, Rat Poison, and Helium, though functionally it's basically Heroin. Nick has to hunt down and break up a drug ring dealing the stuff, made more difficult from the fact that, since it's lethal to normal humans, it's not on any official government lists.
* Godzilla Junior in his unicorn form and Princess Luna get into a brawl because Junior was fighting the Canterlot Guard. Junior had just crash landed into the castle and was delirious, meaning when a guard grabbed him by the hoof he thought he was being attacked; leading to an escalating fight with Luna jumping into the fray to protect the guards.

* GoldenEye (1997) moment. This has no gameplay impact whatsoever, though.
* Halloween Episode. Not only did it use footage from the Shinkenger DVD movie Shinkenger returns, it used on Super Sentai stock footage from previous and as yet to be aired episodes of the series. The only original footage was a few shots lasting a total of a few seconds.
* Guards! Guards!, Vimes notes the same thing, albeit without the kill orders.
* Hellsing. She also fits in with the cultured groomed due to her love for classical German opera. And then there's Dok...
* Gold Werewolf form is punched off a cliff by Kamen Rider 2 and explodes on impact.
* Happiest Season: Sloane's husband Eric is black, the main character of color in the film.
* Hc Svnt Dracones has Inquisitors who are empowered to hand out summary judgements in order to relieve the workload on their courts, though they're rarely allowed to give out sentences more severe than a year in prison. Which isn't to say that it doesn't happen sometimes.
* He and his new friend Esme went on a full night drug and alcohol binge.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: Rocket has a habit of stealing prosthetic limbs and eyes for his own amusement.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series, Kilowog's Green Lantern uniform now has a pair of Green Briefs over the black skin-tight suit.
* Happy Gilmore, going constantly from one tournament to another, but it's not until Happy goes back to his mentor Chubbs and gets Chubbs to help him with his putting and focus that Happy can actually compete with the better golfers.
* Grimm: In "Eyes of the Beholder", when the teenage boy Hank is guarding learns his girlfriend has been kidnapped (by stealing Hank's phone), he gives Hank the slip by climbing out the bathroom window.
* Godzilla and Mothra: The Battle for Earth, who causes many of the problems in the film due to his reckless destruction of the environment and later kidnapping the Cosmos.
* Gossip Girl where Dan automatically assumes everyone on the UES has this attitude, which causes problems in his relationship with Serena. Has been played straight, or at least been attempted to, on a few occasions, yet not nearly as often as one might expect.
* Harry Potter, he joins the DA. It's notable that he's one of the few characters to approach the trio and introduce himself to Ron, Hermione, and Harry, rather than just Harry.
* Heel–Face Turn, but this doesn't accomplish much because it's a telepathically-controlled zombie. Roy ends up dying because Xykon doesn't even need the dragon to fly, so he just blasts Roy and the dragon corpse out of the sky.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys by covering himself in mud and lying down, blending in with the mud patch which the mooks ran through while looking for him.
* Hell House, the whole mansion qualifies, but over it all seems to be the ballroom, to the point Ben Fischer makes it a point to try avoiding it.
* Here There Be Monsters and Captain Marvel, Jr., two of the most powerful beings in their parallel Earth, have been dating for years. And wanting to get married.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch. One scene shows a jet airliner passing by.
* had feelings for Bob, but it took hearing Bob's feelings for her to realize them.
* Halo series that there's roughly a fifty/fifty chance any human vehicle in the air is going to end up making a landing on fire.
* Gundam Build Divers, Yuuki, Do-Ji and Sarah are crossing a thin land bridge over ice cold water that, if they fall in, they incur a wait penalty. The boys save Sarah from falling in, only to fall in themselves and start flailing in a panic, only to realize that it isn't that deep at all.
* Gravitation Shuichi and asks Hiro why Yuki would be interested in someone like Shuichi. Hiro replies, "That's what I'm trying to figure out."
* Goyo Guardian is legal again too, but only in America. Magician of Faith is legal once again, as is Tsukuyomi. All of these were legalized again because they were far less broken in the current meta than they were before. (And indeed, Tsukuyomi seems barely worth using now as it did before.) While most players equate Raigeki becoming legal a sign of hell freezing over (seeing as it was one of the cards that required the creation of the List in the

* God of War games have included Efreet, which are of Arabic myths, and Manticores, which are of Persian myths.
* Gottlieb, shooting a pinball into the volcano causes it to erupt a moment later, sending the ball back onto the table.
* grandfather creating hilarious and embarrassing medical conditions to both excuse her from school and prevent her friends from visiting her.
* Heroes of the Storm) from the world through, among other things, feudalism, whaling, something involving the Catholic Church, and the Salem Witch Trials.
* GrimGrimoire). And then you find out that the loop has been going on much longer than you think...
* Healthcare Motivation: A character desperately needs money to pay for medical treatment.
* Hardly Working Pat starts flirting with the animal control operator, and forgets about the tiger trying to eat them all.
* Heartbreak and Ice Cream: Character gorges themself on ice cream in response to being dumped.
* Griff says that Ser Rolly Duckfield is a "solid" man, but disagrees with him being raised to the Kingsguard. He worries that, at this rate, the illustrious order will be filled with men "each more blindingly adequate than the last."
* Gravity Falls has Grunkle Stan who uses this to get out of trouble at times. Unfortunately, he slips up in "The Stanchurian Candidate" by using an expired bomb that fizzles out.
* Hansel and Gretel got wise to this and prevented them from using it a second time, so they had to resort to bread.
* High School Musical, and made these boy-obsessed teenage girls their primary target in the next two films.
* Gravity, the protagonists continue to transmit to them (even asking permission for various actions) in case they or someone else can hear their transmissions and help in some way. This serves as a handy means of exposition for the audience, as well as providing dialogue when a protagonist is by themselves.
* Grey is... trope. While Black and White do have contrasting hair colors, it is short tempered Black who has the white hair and introspective White that has black hair * her dead mother into the closet towards the end of the movie, Piper Laurie can be seen moving her feet.
* Havenfall Is for Lovers may likewise be much, much older than they seem; their profiles only state that Razi "looks 35" and JD "looks 25," with no indication of how long either of them has actually lived.
* Hagrid explains that giants are kept secret because Muggles who see them don't live long enough to tell anyone (and their corpses are assumed to be the result of a mountaineering accident). It's possible that Muggles who see dragons or vampires meet a similar fate.
* Helen begging for their life in episode 187 was intentionally left blank to encourage the actor to ad-lib it.
* Gundam, which attempted to do this as a last hurrah for the franchise.
* he and the player share one as the player is about to leave the Mystery Shack. Much to Mabel’s joy.
* Hell on Wheels, that of Olive Oatman, who was similarly kidnapped and tattooed in 1851.
* goes prompt-supercritical, resulting in a nuclear explosion. The advantage is that it has the exact same power as an Orion drive, but it can keep the pumps on a lot longer. The disadvantage? If it gets shot in the gas tank, it'll explode.
* Heck, even the lovable Weebles toy line that originated in the early 70s recently got a revival as you can obviously see in
* Gorillaz apparently has one which the book Rise of the Ogre reveals is "Ocean Bacon".

* Harry tries to call a Quidditch tryout to order in Half Blood Prince. He isn't quite loud enough, so
* Hell's Gate trilogy is an extreme example — the second book came out in 2007, and the third... is being written, but there's no set completion date; current expectation is around 2016. Maybe.
* Haru and Midori talking with her classmates about how a drama ended just as it was getting good.
* Hellblazer: John Constantine's original run clocked up 300 monthly issues, plus specials and original graphic novels. The trade paperbacks originally weren't even numbered, though Vertigo finally corrected that.
* Gundam X explicitly debunks the notion; it is, however, set in an alternate universe to the majority of the series featuring Newtypes, and doesn't use the term "Newtype" in quite the same fashion as them, so whether this holds for the other series or not is questionable.
* Help I Am Being Held Prisoner: Max first was sent to prison as a student radical, became criminalized inside and was rearrested for burglary after he got out. Harry (a prankster who accidentally made some politicians get into an accident and has them seek revenge) tries to avert this by keeping from taking part in the crimes of the group, but eventually gets dragged in.
* Green Baby is part of Pucci's stand Whitesnake's evolution to C-Moon.
* Happy Tree Friends episode "Just Desert" play with this: When Lumpy jumps into the water of a pool and he doesn't show up even when the sun sets and night comes, a Blurb says: "Wait, was Lumpy underwater all the time?!?". When he shows up the next morning they add: "Lumpy must have slipped out during that fade-to-black!".
* Harry Potter so when he accidentally discovers his magic he decides he must be force sensitive. He begins his self-taught Jedi training immediately afterwards.
* Guerrilla: The police are shown to beat people just for talking back. Later, they deliberately beat a black leader to death after he was identified for them by an informant. This is one of the grievances the activists have against them.
* Have Space Suit – Will Travel use radioactive half-lives measured in base-twelve for timekeeping.
* has the 70th Hunger Games turn out this way when, due to several of the Tribute trains coming under attack and being delayed, various tributes from Districts which don't normally interact end up spending a while at a station together, unsure if further attacks will come. As a result, once the Games start, the District 2 tributes let the Boy from 12 into their alliance and The District 4 kids ally with the girl from 12, the girl from 5 and the two tributes from 10.
* Gunnerkrigg Court is incredibly possessive of her best friend/love Gamma, to the point of freaking out if someone touches her or speaks to her.
* Götterdämmerung Brünnhilde immolates herself in Siegfried's funerary pyre.
* Higurashi: When They Cry (Kai) has Hanyuu and Rika do this in the ending credits.
* God Forbid's song "Anti Hero" Explore themes of anti-heroism, with lyrics like "Torn between right and wrong."
* Good Is Not Soft: Too firmly committed to heroism to be gentle with evildoers.
* Hail to the King, the unnamed human protagonist trapped in King Sombra's body thinks this crazy land of talking ponies he's in is just a crazy dream or hallucination. He learns he isn't dreaming when he decides to "wake up" by stabbing himself in the leg.
* God Eater, it is rumored that Kanon Daiba has the "God of Rare Drops" skill, which increases the chance of getting rare materials after a mission. Even though it's been proven false, some players will still bring her along for luck when they're hunting for that last item they need for an upgrade.
* Good Republic, Evil Empire this trope, in all opposition to actual history.
* Hercules, and so, his divinity is restored just as the scissors snip.
* he gets stabbed in the back by Black Zetsu. He only has a few moments to react, but those moments are devoted to screaming about how this can't happen to him.
* Guardian: The Lonely and Great God: Wang Yeo realizes at the end of the series that every reaper is a sinner because they committed suicide in their life and they're made into reapers as punishment as well as to make them realize how precious life is.

* Greek restaurants, traditionally, do not have menus. Diners are led through the kitchen and invited to lift pot lids to decide on a meal. In places where health laws prevent such tours, there is often a wall of photos of all of the dishes to help diners choose.
* Hanna-Barbera had Snooper framed for crimes committed by a Snooper robot created by a mad scientist who has a whole platoon of Snooper robot lookalikes. He infiltrates and tells Blabber to wait thirty minutes before calling the police. Blabber mistakenly believed he said thirty seconds, so he called the police anyway. Snooper lampshades the trope when the police tell him he qualifies for a reward for capturing the real mastermind:
* Glitch Techs season 2, Zahra starts developing feelings for Five. She then asks Miko if she likes him that way.
* GUN×SWORD. It's more a spaghetti Western than other space-western anime.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix in the school, which prohibit not only meetings which could be used to fight her authority but also rules which prevent girls and boys walking together and are designed to give her the final say in any situation she can think of that may come up at Hogwarts.
* Goosebumps received an 'M' rating for its first season in New Zealand for 'supernatural themes'. Season 2 received a 'PG', despite no decrease in supernatural themes, it featuring mutants, killer worms, shambling mummies, and living dolls among other creatures.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys has two episodes that used this premise as a plot: "Yes Viriginia, There is a Hercules" from season 4 and "For Those of You Just Joining Us" from season 5.
* Hayate the Combat Butler. Hayate taught her how to defeat her fears (or the knowledge of how to), but when admitting it to Ayumu, she still wants Hayate to be the one to start the romance.
* Highlander. He was apparently a foundling so his actual origins are unknown, like many Immortals. Adrien Paul who plays him is half-British, half-Italian.
* Hajime no Ippo (manga serialization started in 1989, has since topped 1,000 chapters and going strong)
* Hannibal shows a good reason not to be drinking buddies with a psychopath: "Here, why don't you cut off your face?". Said drinking buddy notes: "It seemed like a good idea at the time." (The amyl nitrate and other fun chemicals also being consumed probably made this seem like a better idea.)
* Heck, in Mage, the New World Order (one of the Conventions of the Technocracy) actually HAS a Room 101, in direct homage to
* Green Rocks personified, as red-k Clark and brainwashed Kal-el are still noticeably better people than average.
* Heartcore, Ame has pink hair with green bangs, a style that has been likened to a strawberry.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, the fandom exploded with praise for how the story had changed for the serious and the better character introduction. Since her arcs ended, and Athena faded back into the background, the fandom has returned to the less vocal minority, and Hata has made note how he's happy the story has returned to its normal functioning many times.
* GURPS the government gets around to formally suspending the Constitution. The Provisional President makes regular speeches about the upcoming end to the Permanent Emergency and a return to democracy, but no one with a working brain believes those speeches.
* Hawaii has a car dealer who calls himself Madman Dan. Amusingly, he both invokes and subverts the trope: he's in full lunatic mode when hawking used heaps off his own lot, but has also been known to suddenly become both calm and eloquent when acting as the representative for upper-class vehicles... like the one he himself drives.
* Half-Life 2. It makes more sense than most though, as they've conquered the entire planet.

* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, The Villain's Sister and here you were making a fool of yourself for love.
* has several, both in the human conflict and in the Second Long Night.
* Halfway Human scientists work for infocompanies that monetize their research.
* Happy Marriage Charade: They have the perfect marriage...or, at least, it seems so.
* Hazbin Hotel has Alastor brutally murder (and then devour) a butcher for attempting to rape a female customer.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters, this is Will's reaction when, after learning everything about the Guardians, Matt wants to join the fight on Meridian.
* Global Warming: Undisputed fact in the scientific community, the only remaining questions being whether we're screwed in a few decades or right now, and (in addition to the obvious first step of "stop burning fossil fuels to power everything") what the most effective ways to extinguish the metaphorical trash fire are. Meanwhile, media outlets refer to people and governments choosing to ignore the experts pleading with them to do anything at all about the tangible effects of an unfolding disaster as "a debate".
* Gregory Edgeworth became one by way of a flashback case, which fleshes out his personality a little more.
* Gravity Falls) and the boy band Sev'ral Timez all cling to the ceiling in order not to be seen by Grunkle Stan.
* Gold Digger called Peebees, and their small size means they are waaay too dumb to accurately tell what's bad, blowing up things like bridges for being too unsafe or a couple for one of them stealing a kiss, and finally climaxing in a villain convincing them to target Brianna herself due to the amount of damage caused by her firing them off in the first place.
* Her partner Leliana very much subscribes to this trope: kill a traitor? You'd be hard pressed to talk her out of it. Cut out the tongues of slanderers? This and threatening The Inquisitor's family is her stock in trade. Kidnapping the children of The Inquisition's enemies? A valid tactic. Using an assassin's remains to scare off threats? This is actually one of her prouder funny moments. She hates herself for these actions but firmly rooted in
* Glenn Medeiros' cover of George Benson's "Nothing's Gonna Change My Love For You" still remains a late-80s adult contemporary staple, and while a chart topper in several countries, it only peaked at #12 on the Hot 100. His sole #1 on the chart was 1990's "She Ain't Worth It", which featured labelmate
* Hanna-Barbera, (whose name gets called "Beetles," although detractors of the band often wore buttons saying "Help Stamp Out Beetles").
* Heaven's Lost Property: The combat angeloids are built to have 3 main attributes: Computational ability, Combat prowess and Emotional control. They are focused on two of them while lacking in the third one.
* Gute Zeiten Schlechte Zeiten, which has run for 3,500 episodes since 1990)
* Heroes of Thantopolis Ghosts are the residents of a ghostly city called Thantopolis, who are just there to reflect on their life.
* Griswalda does not, as he was more of a fairy godfather to Lucifer.
* Halo: Combat Evolved firing at them from inside the structure, only to make your way inside to find nobody.
* : Gygax tradition regarding proposals involves making electric blue candy as a proposal gift, and the one being proposed to accepts the proposal by eating the candy. In the Towers, on the other hand, proposals involve making a silver bracelet and giving it to the one you wish to bond with — if the proposal is accepted, then the one being proposed to puts the bracelet on and replaces a section of their armor with it later.
* Great Pretender who have also committed far worse crimes, and he frequently uses his cons to get enough information on them to turn them over to authorities... after he makes off with their money like a bandit.
* Half-Life 2) disorientated, scaling up to lifting multiple humans off the ground at once and immobilising them completely, with the current known peak of their personal power shredding buildings and smashing through defences without noticeable effort.

* Ground Zeroes), with none of the trailers particularly convincing them. Each won many fans over when the game was leaked and eventually came out. For Sutherland, it was at the end of the campaign, due to the emotion put in during those final scenes. For Skull Face, it was the interrogation tapes and end credits, due to Horan's chilling and terrifying performance, and how shockingly horrific his actions in the tapes were.
* Hayao Miyazaki, with both the natural and human worlds shown as being hostile and dangerous.
* Gustav Holst: "The Planets" is one of the most popular musical works of all time and has been plagiarized so often by other composers, especially on movie soundtracks that depict science fiction or battles that most people probably assume he stole it from them instead of the other way around. It's also his only famous work, more well known than the composer itself.
* Gotham before their feud. Penguin is so moved by this he spares her life in response.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983): He-Man's nemesis Skeletor had (at least in the Ladybird books) a 'mystic viewscreen' which let him see absolutely anywhere, including inside Castle Grayskull. When you can watch the heroes' every movement and still lose every time, you're obviously doing something wrong.
* Heel Realization: Your conscience succeeds in getting a message through.
* Grenvilles Planet, the planet discovered by Grenville and Wisher has four moons.
* Hatoful Boyfriend, although his feelings towards the subject in the photo are far more complicated than simple love or hatred:
* Harry walks into his workplace shortly after breaking up with his cheating boyfriend and nearly everyone stares at him.
* Hägar the Horrible once was trying to communicate with an old Viking using one of these. The problem: The trumpet was full of letters.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn is fair game... and, technically speaking, a distant enough relationship to be legal even by American standards.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: When Harry protests the use of Polyjuice Potion so his friends can pose as decoys, Hermione tells Mad Eye Moody "I told you he'd take it well."
* He and Little John carry the Sheriff on their shoulders to celebrate his "generosity" in contributing to Richard's ransom, then dump him in the moat immediately after revealing their identities.
* Happy hardcore act Dune released two albums of orchestral ballads;
* Hamilton to the point where girls are casually referring to a politician from the 1700s as "Alex"
* Goth Girl And The Ghost Of A Mouse featured a man who would often say, "When a man is tired of [food item], he is tired of life."
* Gourmet Girl Graffiti is mainly about three high schools cooking and eating together.
* he was working with Cas so they could get the souls out of Purgatory.
* Grampa tells a lot of stories about WWII — like the time he posed as a burlesque singer in Munich and accidentally drew Hitler's eye — but one episode shows that one of his ramblings, that he was the leader of a platoon which included the fathers of several Springfield regulars as well as Mr. Burns himself, is in fact 100% true.
* Hexen. It leads to a small cell area and a passage to the hub's boss.
* Golden Age was not considered insane enough to qualify for this defense. When he tried it, Batman easily proved that despite Joker's eccentricity, he was fully capable of understanding the illegality and consequences of his actions. It was only when the Joker became a homicidal maniac in the 1970s that Arkham Asylum became a necessity for him.
* Hannah Montana when Jackson eats too much chocolate and he has nightmares about a Godzilla chocolate bunny.
* has in the later MCU films demonstrate his increasing inability to keep things from spinning out of control despite his best intentions.

* Heroes when Sylar and Elle become a couple and decide to use their powers to "take what we want". Noah Bennett even calls them "Bonnie and Clyde".
* Godzilla (2014) for dramatic effect by Joseph Brody when he screams that the EMP coming from Janjira NPP's ruins will "send us back to the Stone Age".
* Hasbro franchises did this (all three cases are toys displaced by other toys):
* Gundam 00 gets a custom pilot suit and that is necessary to stop her Quantum Brainwaves from affecting her in the same way Allelujah's does him.
* Helluva Boss is heavily implied to be married to his wife Stella for political reasons, and neither of them has really cared for each other. Though he does say he did try to make it work once. When he starts sleeping around on her Stella is more annoyed that he's in a relationship with Hell's equivalent of a commoner than the fact he's cheating on her, while his daughter who he cares for deeply is worried that her parent's marriage is falling apart and her beloved father is going to run off with his new paramount, not quite understanding that the marriage was never that strong to begin with.
* Guild Wars plays this straight in Nightfall (Start in the settled mixed terrain of Istan, than the deserts of Kourna and Vabbi, than the poisonous and empty Desolation, finally the dark hell like Realm of Torment), and somewhat straight in Prophecies (Pre-searing is Green Hills, and the game ends in the volcanic Ring of Fire), but with some mix-ups on the journey. Factions and Eye of the North largely avoid this.
* He also pulls a variant when he melts with pleasure at the sight of a "sad crying clown in an iron lung" for sale, as he's always wanted one.
* He finally achieves this after Prince George is shot and Blackadder becomes the new Prince Regent thanks to the madness of King George.
* Guardians Inferno" music video slavishly follows the visual codes of '70s television, including laughable "aliens" and "spacemen" costumes, painfully obvious Chroma Key and other crappy special effects, over-the-top shots and camera moves, etc. Seriously, it's so "bad" in a well-done way and faithful to the tropes of the times, without knowing the context it's almost impossible to guess it's not a 40-year-old music video.
* Gold Digger where the title character after being tossed into a cell creates a forge from scraps around the cell and is well on her way to creating super-technology within days of being tossed into it without her captors noticing.
* Gravity Falls: Dipper does this in "Gideon Rises" after waking up from his nightmare of Gideon destroying the Mystery Shack.
* Heroes of Might and Magic has a passing mention of a coming of age ritual called "Snark Hunting", which basically comes down to this. It's then subverted when it turns out the heroes' quest was not one of these.
* Gravity Falls's "Weirdmageddon" finale to Gideon and Ghost Eyes when they go through weirdness bubbles.
* Gran Torino tends to call Toshinori "boy" on occasion despite All Might being roughly in his forties or even fifties, and passes the nickname to Midoriya as well.
* Heroes Reborn. She screams "No. That's impossible!" before trying to shoot him.
* her boyfriend Tad have broken up and remarks that he's "still here" before placing her hand on her chest. Assuming that she means her heart, Marco starts into a speech about how Tad will always be there but that it gets easier. Kelly stops him and says that she meant Tad was still on top of her head and hadn't moved out yet.
* Guidestuck character Cal Strider. All that we know about their gender is that he/she got extremely angry at being called "Mr. Strider".
* He gets over it, lets go of Dee willingly... and gets a boyfriend (sorta) in the epilogue.
* HappinessCharge Pretty Cure! versions of the characters in question were shown inside their mouths, with the camera continuing to zoom in.
* Gundam Build Fighters, Sei's Build Strike Cosmos is plummeting back to Earth and risking his Gunpla of being destroyed by such an act. Meijin Kawagachi III ends up positioning his A-Z Gundam in its Waverider Mode to help Sei because he doesn't want such a lame win.

* Good Luck Chuck features a gaggle of nude women in various sex scenes with the main character, attempting to take advantage of his "curse" that they will then immediately meet the man of their dreams.
* Gul'dan served as this for the orcs in both the original and revised canon.
* Half-Life 2 carries a packet with plot-critical super-secret stolen data through a long sequence of hostile environments to where it can turn the tide of battle. Due to the bad quality of the radio communications, they can't simply transmit the data, despite sometimes establishing video communication (one can surmise it was analog, or that the Combine jammed the transmissions).
* Heist, was going to be about a group of criminals performing thefts in 1969 San Francisco, and was cancelled in 2010.
* Groom of the Tyrannosaur Queen takes place in a lost time colony in which humans have spent the last five millennia coexisting with dinosaurs at the end of the Cretaceous period. They're a pretty weird bunch.
* Heroes III: Shadow of Death since it also denies the use of any beneficial spells (including resurrection) that become increasingly mission-critical as the game progresses while not protecting against the game's most powerful attacking spell.
* Godslave, Edith's friends call her Eddy, in addition to her boss calling her 'my bombae'.
* Hayven Celestia universe most sapient species are covered in fur or scales and wear little more than jewelry and tool belts. Unless they're in hazardous environments like open space or the krakun's sulfur-saturated homeworld.
* Goldfinger's scheme was to nuke Fort Knox to devalue American gold and increase the value of his own.
* Hellhole co-operation has the Constellation, ruled by the Diadem (an elected-for-life monarch with a provision against electing the son or daughter of the previous monarch) and the Council of Lords (the Constellation's parliamentary assembly, the people who elect the Diadem from amongst their own ranks and composed of the lords ruling the planets of the Constellation). The backstory even features a rebellion fuelled to a large degree by one of the historic issues with feudalism — what do you do with the surplus sons?
* Gunnerkrigg Court. Apparently, the intervening years were not kind to her.
* Hatoful Boyfriend Anghel). His love for you finally frees him, causing him to depart for the afterlife.
* has genuinely good reasons to be harsher get rewarded when he pulls the asshole card.
* Han Solo Trilogy regular mentions mouse/rat-like creatures called "vrelts." The smeepriness is extended to common phrases featuring rats, "a deadly game of cat and vrelt."
* H. G. Wells — One of the earliest science fiction writers, many science fiction tropes originated in his novels and short stories.
* Grinning maniac. Although his own mother is probably long dead, he has a great respect for the bond between mother and child, and tends to be more lenient when moms are on trial.
* Hank Schrader has an excellent sense of intuition and is a great shot under pressure, which makes him a brilliant field agent in the DEA. His work on the Heisenberg case eventually contributes to his promotion to Assistant Special Agent in Charge, which is only a step or two from
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019). Godzilla then chomps him from the neck stump and Ghidorah attempts to get by flailing before Godzilla's atomic breath destroys him. For an alien dragon that almost destroyed the planet, Ghidorah's death is almost comical.
* Hayate × Blade Ensuu is thought to be this. Her fixation on getting to fight Ayana again stems from her opinion of the other girl as someone who is of the "same kind" as her.
* Green Day song "Jesus of Suburbia" is performed live, the city it is performed in is substituted for Anaheim in the line "from Anaheim to the Middle East".

* heard the word? The bird is the word! also got a revival from this show.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets has this on Lucius Malfoy near the very end of the film.
* Granblue Fantasy, receiving chocolates from certain major characters during the Valentine's Day event results in these accompanying special art of the choco-handover.
* Going away from individual names, many companies aside Gaunt's Ghosts also have unique and memorable names and histories even if they don't happen to be prominently shown in a particular series of novels, some examples being the Tallarn 3rd "Desert Tigers", the 8th Cadian "The Lord Castellan's Own" and the Catachan 24th "Waiting Death".
* Hatley Castle/Royal Roads University, in Victoria, British Columbia, Canada, has featured in numerous films; The
* handwave away (valid) criticism as the angry cries of the sinister elite/rich/establishment/etc. who have the most to lose from your unorthodox candidacy. "Frankly, I'm GLAD they're worried!"
* her own spinoff show, Sarah Jane has returned to being a journalist, though she is far more interested in defending the Earth from aliens than getting a scoop. Luckily, the two tend to go hand-in-hand. Still, her job is usually just a device to get the plot of the week rolling.
* Goblin Slayer: Sword Maiden is blind, but retains her ability to see auras, which allows her to navigate in spite of her handicap.
* Gregory Helms (previously known as The Hurricane or Shane Helms) speaks with an accent that to many viewers sounds African-American, despite being white. This is largely because he's from North Carolina, which is a state not often represented in wrestling.
* Havenfall Is for Lovers which is very difficult to break out of even once the person stuck in it realizes it's an illusion.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows after the Battle of the Seven Potters.
* Green Wing. The only rule actually explained was "curbing the Matterhorn", which entails insulting your opponent as much as possible.
* Harvey Moseiwitsch Volodarskii: He's a stage magician, for starters. A stage magician that you fight in the middle of a live performance, while he summons pigeons to attack you,
* Happily Ever After: An unambiguously happy ending, which often includes the love interests becoming a couple.
* Hands in general. Hans offers his gloved hands to Anna repeatedly, pretending to open up to her while really concealing himself, and Elsa attempts to both cover hers and keep them away from people, not touching anyone or, in contrast to Hans, even giving the appearance of connecting with people. She looks at them in horror when she's terrified by her power, and in amazement when she realizes she can create life, and often uses them to make gestures as she casts magic, although her
* Her need for control over Fodlan's understanding of its past and influence over its people to accept Sothis as their goddess is part of what contributes to the quagmire of societal issues plaguing the continent, and she has very
* Halloween Is Grinch Night, being basically the protagonist walking through a series of strange, nightmarish visuals.
* Good Omens not only explicitly uses this concept as the core of its magic system, but actually introduces a system which measures the intensity of belief in one of its footnotes.
* GURPS 4th Edition has the Fashion Sense Advantage, which grants a +1 on reaction rolls thanks to knowing just what to wear (or how to wear it).
* Halle Berry — that does at least look like it offers more mobility.
* Graviton is a rather terrifying example. He's merely a physicist yet he already has some degree of fine control of his power. He then gets put in a coma for 10 years and the first time he's actually used his powers to anything resembling his full potential, it takes a team of 5 heroes (one of which is the Hulk, another being Thor) to take him down. If he even had any practice with his powers... HOO BOY!

* Gyo, this starts happening once humans begin getting infected by the Death Stench. The larger walking machines (which may have once held sharks or larger fish) require more infected bodies to act as power sources, and what results are shambling machines carrying tens of the infected at a time.
* He also canonicized the proper term for a Star Trek fan. Once at a convention, he used the term "Trekkie" and a fan corrected him with "Trekker" - the response? "No, it's * Hikari Sentai Maskman, They were near the end, only to start again). Lather, rinse and repeat, until the show gets replaced with another show.
* Gravity Falls, Dipper reads in Journal #3 that the author needed to hide the book away from someone before it trails off.
* Heckle and Jeckle cartoon "Messed Up Movie Makers" had a movie company using the boys' motel as the locale for filming an action TV series. However, the action scenes are causing collateral damage to the property. Heckle and Jeckle have to get rid of them somehow.
* Grumpy Bear: In a idealistic setting, you will see someone who isn't a happy camper.
* Hey Arnold!, as both grandparents are quite hyperactive, and awake almost all of the time. Almost inverted with Grandma Gertie, since she seems to even be awake at odd hours in the night.
* Hail Mary, which is a modern retelling of the Virgin Birth, was banned for mixing sexual content with religious content. Argentina's large Catholic population in particular considered this sort of thing blasphemous.
* Griffith and his swordplay was not only fast enough to beat Guts's twice but he has almost surgical precision with his cutting to the extent where his sword is just a blur and Gut has cuts all over. However after three years Guts managed best Griffith's speed in their last duel.
* Godslayer Chronicles, in contrast with the rogue gods, became the hundred by binding themselves to the land. This was done by spilling massive amounts of their own blood upon the ground. The act purged them of the insanity of the rogue gods, but forever confined them to an area within an unspecified radius of where they spilled their blood. Any god that leaves its realm or enters another's realm (including rogue gods entering a realm of the hundred) bursts into flames and dies.
* Golden Queen Galaxia" opens with pipe organ music for the first 25 seconds, though after the first 10 it's relegated to the background melody.
* Hadestown ends with Hades and Persephone promising that when she returns to him in the fall, they will focus on repairing their marriage after Orpheus reminds them of their love for each other. Whether they will ever be able to truly reconcile is unknown.
* Gravity slow down until it hits something else. This includes both space debris and the protagonists themselves.
* Hamlet speech that's deliberately written to be obtuse and impenetrable is quite something to witness.
* Henry Stickmin Series, one of options for getting past the Right Hand Man is a dogpile. If chosen, Henry and his team will dogpile on the Right Hand Man and then the Right Hand Man's own men become ecstatic and join in on the dogpile in excitement. The choice ends up being a fail though, as the Right Hand Man blows everybody off of him.
* Gunnerkrigg Court was so subtle that no one noticed it at the time. Then she was introduced standing next to the Headmaster at the parlay, watching the proceedings silently. As it turns out, she's responsible for training the future Medium, and she's a valuable source of information.
* GURPS Technomancer take the role of aliens in pop culture, seelieologists believe much of the modern understanding of magic has been reverse-engineered from two faeries captured in Roswell.
* Green Lantern not named Kilowog will be hit by this. Every time a Green Lantern needs some supporting Lanterns, writers tend to pick the one or two they like, and make up some new ones. The ones who get the most focus are Kilowog, Arisia and Soranik Natu.

* Hc Svnt Dracones features the corporate colonies on Mars mass-producing human-animal hybrids called "Vectors" to repopulate the solar system after the Earth is destroyed by a nuclear war. In the successive centuries baseline humanity gradually goes extinct.
* Green Day's "Walking Contradiction". One of the guys walks past a mover hoisting a piano with a winch and pulley and finds a mirror. He picks it up, uses it to check his face, and shines a beam of sunlight into the mover's eyes. The mover lets go of the rope and the piano crashes to the sidewalk, narrowly missing one of the other band members.
* he tried to frame Curtis for rape number three. Then Curtis tries it on Jo when she finds the second victim, but she shoots him dead.
* Glory Days being in action, illegally took command of a combat unit out of his chain of command and ordered it to take a ridge it was previously ordered by the proper commanders to leave alone. As such, the unit suffered heavy casualties to satisfy the officer's battle lust and Potter is forced to report his friend to Command when he should have remained a REMF.
* Grand Admiral Thrawn still around from the previous season's finale.
* Goof Troop system will remember the last password you obtained, allowing for a quick continue.
* Gray's early line of "Shut up, Tobin" quickly became a meme due to its delivery.
* Heroic Vow: The hero makes a promise that they intend to keep at all costs.
* Green Lantern, which is why the entity that provides their power is called The Predator, but they run on all kinds of love (be it between a man and woman or a mother and her child or so on and so forth) and the Predator is actually the one that is corrupted by its hosts, not the other way around.
* Heretic, first time because of an evil wizard and his army, second time because of a magical disease.
* here from co-workers to dating), then Nick and Dexter scope out a lunch date of Sharon's.
* Heck, Team Kimba has so many of these that the one who OWNS MARVEL COMICS, is a density manipulator who can instant-KO anyone without a force field, and is trying to become the new Batman
* Hark! A Vagrant behaviour of young female bicyclists of the 1880s and '90s
* Hawkeye #1, Madame Masque attempts to drug Kate. Kate takes a fake sip of the wine and then dumps it in a pot plant. The result is this trope.
* Hellsing to easily slice apart Nazi vampires. She was using a sabre, though.
* He suffers a lot to save, and always gets berated in the end with his actions never been recognized.
* Golf features the "Unplayable Lie" rule, to deal with situations that can arise where playing the ball as it lies is practically impossible to do in a way that would make any progress at all. Once a player has located his ball, he can unilaterally determine it to be unplayable, which offers him three options. First, he can take a drop within two club lengths of where the ball lies, no closer to the hole. Second, he can take a line that connects the flag stick with his ball, and take a drop as far back along that line as he wishes. Finally, he can go back to where the previous shot was played and drop the ball there (or place it on a tee if the previous shot was the tee shot for that hole). To prevent obvious abuse, all of these options cost a one stroke penalty, but can still be the best option if attempting to actually play the ball as it lies would result in MORE strokes due to whiffs or having no clue where a stroke could potentially send the ball.
* Gravesite tells the prisoner if that if they answer his questions, everything will go smoothly...but otherwise, "this whole show will go south".
* Henry VI. One of the most famous scenes in these otherwise little-known plays depicts noblemen on both sides of the quarrel picking roses in the Temple Garden to signify their allegiance (an event which was completely Shakespeare's invention). Perhaps most indicative of the tragic symbolism, though, is the title character's lament for his nation, symbolized by a pair of anonymous soldiers in Part III:
* GURPS. The Adepts of North Polar Jupiter are said to use the martial art "Thuleschlag", which at higher levels allows the user to become invisible and blind or kill an opponent by touching them.

* Hammerjack, Zoe uses her speedtec to move at superhuman speed, pushing herself so hard that the heat eventually causes her body to literally melt.
* Hercules. For all his muscles and incredible strength, Herc remains a kind hearted soul who wouldn't hurt anyone. Given, that this version is pretty much a Superman expy, and in a Disney adaptation that couldn't very well be faithful to the original myth; this is only to be expected.
* Goof Troop episode "Sherlock Goof" has Goofy attempt to say "simultaneously" before settling with instead saying "all at once".
* Grand Prismatic Spring is also rainbow-colored and the largest hot spring in the United States.
* Hellblazer by removing all his more unsavory aspects (baser urges, demonic blood, clinginess over an ex-girlfriend...) and leaving it in his place. This screws him over later when Demon Constantine is on Earth and ends up raping John's niece Gemma (during John's wedding). Believing it was the real John, Gemma summons a vengeance demon and sics it on her uncle. While the misunderstanding is cleared up, their relationship is irreparably broken (and John considers her right to hate him).
* Hard Luck, Buster chugs a bottle labeled "POISON" which is actually whisky.
* Gone To Hell, the Survivor's actions and aesthetic are based on scrabbling for survival against seemingly impossible odds.
* Helstrom due to being too far in development, and was allowed to finish production but also declared non-canonical to the MCU in order to fulfil their contractual obligations to the parties involved.
* Harmony Theory. He can see invisible things and see through illusions and Changeling disguises.
* Hayate the Combat Butler. Most blatantly whenever the homage has something to do with either of the anime's main sponsors (Konami and Geneon).
* Hates Being Touched: A common trait in rape victims is that they feel uncomfortable about other people touching them.
* Guards! Guards!, a thief performs an unlicensed theft from the Unseen University that leads to a dragon taking over. Unlicensed theft is bad enough in Ankh-Morpork because the Thieves Guild feels very strongly about people who break their rules. Making it worse, he stole from an academy full of wizards, who could easily destroy the world if they weren't distracted by the drama of being at a university. It doesn't help that the UU Librarian is a vengeful orangutan who can use library shelves to travel through time. Finally, Lord Vetinari, the ruler he helped depose, has the most advanced intelligence service on the disc with his own personal assassins. Just because the thief got away in the book doesn't mean he got very far.
* , Harry does it when the barman at the Leaky Cauldron mentions that Snape was a Death Eater.
* Grusilda, Monster Masher can combine any two creature cards from graveyards into one creature.
* God of War III: Kratos rips off Helios' head to use it as a lantern. It can also reveal hidden chests.
* Good Eats uses a rejoin eyecatch (the title card and a quick snippet of the theme) starting with the third-season episodes.
* Having been somehow formed almost exclusively by Jenova, they were actively dissolving in the purifying rain — explosion unrelated. Still, the were avenging Sephiroth, Jenova, and Kadaj by killing Cloud even as they went down, so it still counts. Only Cloud had a Get Out of Death Free card for world-saving, apparently.
* Hamilton is between the titular founding father and his wife Eliza Schuyler. It's brought up often in the first act how Hamilton is a penniless immigrant who has yet to make a name for himself, while Eliza is one of three daughters of a wealthy New York senator. Eliza constantly reassures Alexander that she doesn't care for his background and that she loves him for the man he is.
* Graffiti artists who manage to keep their anonymity in spite of developing global fame, for example * has this with multiple characters, especially Sasuke and Sakura, with Sasuke attempting and threatening rape, attempting to rob/murder Naruto, and more while Sakura agrees with everything Sasuke does.

* Growing Up Brady,. When he reported to the set the next day, the producer slapped a Band-Aid on the cut and decided that Greg Brady had "cut himself shaving." Barry thought, "What does Greg shave with, a lawnmower?"
* Grave Peril At Bianca's party, the lights go dark, and spooky laughter comes out of nowhere. Harry notes that it's tough to beat vampires at the creepy laugh. They get a lot of practice.
* Halo effort to finally give answers to all the loose threads, sometimes by the dozens within the same work.
* GoAnimate, as well as utilising source port programs of the original Legacy Video Maker such as Wrapper Offline and GoAnifire that don't require taking out an expensive subscription to Vyond, thus allowing the community to continue to survive against all odds.
* Green Lanterns can't affect yellow with the power ring. After the Corps was reformed, the yellow weakness only applies until a Green Lantern learns to overcome great fear, making this trope an important rite of passage.
* Harry Potter is a straighter example of a squishy — or, more accurately, brittle — wizard, as the mere act of shaking his hand will break a few fingers. This doesn't make his magic any less powerful.
* Going Postal" During his speech, uplifting music begins playing, provoking a startled reaction from Moist. Just before the big finale at the end of the speech, Moist tells them to cut it out.
* Gospel Duck is a children's Christian multimedia character that just so happens to have the exact same distinct voice as
* got to write an episode programming a year later, the episode never made it past script form.
* granddaughter from the future appears. The biggest piece of evidence that they're related? She wasn't supposed to tell anyone she's from the future, and yet blurted it out minutes after she met him.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas half hour – of nonstop driving), so that softens the blow.
* Hermione uses Harry's owl Hedwig to send a letter to her younger sister and Hedwig barks after being let inside.
* Grey's Anatomy, in-universe: Miranda Bailey is very short and can clearly be seen using a variant in the OR to ensure she is at the proper height when operating.
* Gunless, the general storekeepers Claude and Carl have split their store in half following a disagreement about selling liquor.
* Hearts of Iron IV modifiers, which grant armies bonuses to attack and defense respectively when fighting in provinces where their country has a core, a.k.a their homeland.
* He does show merit as a leader during several moments in season 8, most notably when
* Hidan of the Akatsuki. This guy wasn't sane to begin with, but once he gets into his rituals...
* have been kinda wavering for quite the while, as time passes they have grown stronger - but Shinichi is trapped in the body of a little boy (the titular Conan) and cannot openly tell Ran who he is, lest she and his friends will be targeted by the same evil organization that shrunk him. In the meantime poor Ran waits for Shinichi's return...
* Happy Days: The fifth-season, two-part episode "Fonzie's Funeral" had the Cunninghams stage a fake funeral for Fonzie to put him into protection from a mob whose leader, The Candyman, is wanted for robbery, money laundering, extortion, and counterfeiting (after Fonzie had gone to the police with $100 bills found in a hearse he was repairing). At Fonzie's "funeral" visitation, series' regulars and memorable guests saying their "farewells," and "Fonzie's mother" (Fonzie in drag) comforts the survivors. (The "funeral" allows the Cunninghams time to hatch a plan to catch The Candyman and his goons.)

* Hedgehogs aren't related to pigs. Their name dates back to the Middle English of the 15th century; it was known as
* Habbo is free for users, you would need the in-game currency of Coins to buy furniture, Habbo Club membership and other goodies. And you need to pay actual money to get these coins. (You can get 5 coins for a dollar.)
* He plugs in a Tentacool, thinking its tentacles are wires and thus thinking it's an electric type. This gets the Tentacool electrocuted.
* Guards! Guards! and break things at any moment. Luckily for them, he agrees to come along quietly.
* Harley Quinn #2. Harlem Quinn and some guys from her neighbourhood attempt to get rid of the unconscious assassin Sandy by dumping him off an an overpass on to a stopped train. However, he wakes, falls off the roof of the train and gets hit by a train going in the opposite direction.
* Grand Theft Auto IV was about 16 or 17 years old when he and fourteen other child soldiers from his home village fought in the Bosnian war.
* Harry is the one that causes the whole mess that his mother, Sara, his girlfriend, Marion, and his best friend Tyrone get into when Marion, Tyrone and him decide to try heroin. Throughout the movie, their lives begin to slowly decay. His left arm gets more infected as time passes due to his heroin abuse.
* Hedda Gabler: Thea Elvsted's husband is twenty years older than her, leaving them with little love between them and nothing in common. The gap is one of the causes for Thea's departure from the house and her romance with Lovborg, a man her own age.
* God forbid I should live, an Emperor without an Empire! As my city falls, I fall with it! He then tore the imperial insignia from his armor and, together with a handful of friends, charged into a mass of Janissaries. This was the death of the last Emperor of Rome. Somewhere Romulus is smiling.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Italy brings warmth and joy to the tough and harsh Germany and the cold and calculating Japan.
* Grimy Water: Water with a tainted color that harms or kills the character upon contact.
* Hayes and Natwick, along with Myrna Loy and Sylvia Sidney, had earlier played this character type in a made-for-TV movie,
* Harry's got a minor variant on this - he's got a thing for older women, but being surrounded by the likes of Natasha (who he has decided confused feelings about since she treats him like a nephew), Sif, Darcy and Carol (who may only be a year older than him at most, but looks rather older than that), is going to make this kind of inevitable.
* Hellsister Trilogy suddenly flies into the battlefield and smashes into Darkseid.
* Goh starts the beginning of Chapter 11 suffering through one after having a nightmare of being unable to find Chloe and realizing that he can't recall a happy memory with her since he isolated himself from her to focus on Mew.
* Heat Guy J's dialogue is espousing what a man should and should not do.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets is that spiders are afraid of basilisks, because they have eight eyes pointing in every direction, and no eyelids. If there's a basilisk anywhere near them, they can't help but look directly at it and be killed.
* Grand Theft Auto III pay attention to the radio, and you'll hear an Eris Running Shoes ad claiming that nope, their factories ain't sweatshops, no sir, hell no. Then you hear some kids saying "It's fun! We get to play with knives!", "My friend Joey sewed his hands together!", and "Yesterday, I made a dollar!".
* Harold is fairly popular in the fan base but was deemed a loser and
* "GM" within the context of tabletop RPGs and MMOs means "game master"; for the former, it refers to the one in charge of the game, and in the latter, they perform administrative and moderative tasks such as dealing with problematic players. Amongst
* has a documentary team fired into space from a giant cannon and exploring Venus via silk balloon.
* Herschell Gordon Lewis features one kill in which the killer pulls a young woman's tongue out, leaving an excessively bloody mess.

* Gold–Silver–Copper Standard: A (usually) decimalized fictional currency with denominations directly connected to the metal they're made from.
* Green Lantern: Secret Origins and possibly in other comics, Hal curses and swears and the ring goes "unable to translate".
* Goalkeeper Tommy Salo was blamed for Sweden's 4-3 loss in the quarterfinals against Belarus in the 2002 Olympic hockey tournament. While he can be blamed for
* GURPS include a number of blue screen-style effects, of varying severity and duration. In addition, all sorts of spells, powers, surprise effects, etc., can produce "mental stun", which is essentially a very short-term BSOD.
* Her Tears Were My Light game engine to achieve this. The character Time can rewind during conversations or warp to previously saved time points while retaining new memories, allowing her to change the outcomes of various events.
* Heavenly Sword, Nariko is a Japanese name that means "Gentle Child". She's anything but.
* Harlan Ellison's story "The Deathbird", in which God is the villain with good publicity and Satan is the hero with bad publicity.
* Hard Light. This is well balanced though, because his light bee is still vulnerable in extreme situations (like potentially being sucked out into space), and he is also a complete coward with a low tolerance for pain.
* Hillary Clinton is another nerdy politico who identifies as a baseball fan, having rooted for the Cubs (while growing up in suburban Chicago) and Yankees (since becoming a U.S. Senator from New York).
* Halloween: The First Death Of Laurie Strode, a young Michael Myers is shown daydreaming about cutting Baby Laurie out of his mother during a meal.
* He ultimately chooses to allow himself to be sealed away before he can accidentally do any more damage with his power.
* Harrison Ford actually took up acting as a way of confronting his social anxiety. It shows in interviews that, while friendly, it's often difficult to get a word out of him.
* Gregory Horror Show, the main character is offered a bowl of soup by Gregory. He initially refuses, but after being silently threatened by Hell's Chef and being told by Gregory that the last guest to refuse the soup mysteriously disappeared, he decides to try it. After taking a few spoonfuls, he discovers a golden tooth (which Gregory mentioned the missing guest had) within the brew. The guest promptly faints and Chef attempts to kill him using his knife, but Gregory stops him, saying "...fear will make his meat sweeter, sweeter..."
* Gosick, is known for its vast amount of books and labyrinthine staircases. A great deal of humor derives from the fact that Kujo has to climb the stairs to reach the greenhouse at the top level, while Victorique has the privilege to use the elevator. The library is also a prolific source of urban legends among St. Marguerite Academy students. It is said that a golden fairy inhabits the top floor, and that those who step on the thirteenth step of the stairway would be cursed.
* Heel–Face Turn in "Magic Duel", she departs in the same way, except she also trips and lands on her face.
* Happiness In Minimum Wage: A worker is content with being paid minimum wage.
* Grocery Store Episode: An episode where a character goes to the grocery store.
* Heroes: When Hiro goes to meet Isaac the painter in the first episode, Isaac is already dead and Hiro is arrested — by a police force that conveniently storms the room at just that moment.
* Gunbuster's Super Inazuma Kick, which they use to tear through hundreds, if not thousands, of aliens to get back to their ship.
* Greg Egan's short story "Riding the Crocodile", the galaxy has been fully explored and is populated by a multicultural group of civilizations known, appropriately, as the Amalgam. The only region of the galaxy left unexplored is the galactic core (the "bulge"). No one has ever attempted to enter the region, and all nonsentient probes sent in have come back out several hundred years later (despite how it sounds, that's an extremely short timeframe in context) with no record of anything between when they disappeared and returned. It's obvious that the cause is artificial, but beyond that, absolutely nothing is known about whoever is sending the probes back. The story chronicles a couples' attempt to enter the bulge and meet with the elusive race or culture that the Amalgam has dubbed "the Aloof" due to their total unwillingness to engage or communicate with anyone outside the bulge.

* Guy's veins glow with green G-Stone energy whenever he uses his powers in
* Goliath was the best warrior of the Philistines, until he was killed by David with a single rock and a sling (and divine intervention).
* Goggles Do Nothing — Goggles look cool, so who cares if they don't actually protect your eyes?
* Hajiotsu has Shuuko ship Himari and Kai. Since she was the one who instigated the idea of confessing to work on Himari's problems talking to guys, her initial goal for any further suggestion is to simply have Himari loosen up. But when she sees how happy Himari and Kai actually are together, she drops it and wants to help the two get along better as a couple.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged Rule 34, as he stops resisting Zorin's illusion powers when they conjure up the titular hedgehog with a foot-long erection. This leaves Zorin both confused and disgusted.
* Grimm is a race of frog-like Wesen. They cause sexual attraction in human form (thus causing them to be often victims of rape attempts) and they secrete a very poisonous toxin in self-defense. Another Frog-like Wesen never seen on camera but shown in one of the books is the Fossegrim
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix. In reality, her parents were a member of the Department of Magical Maintenance (read: a janitor) and a Muggle.
* He-Man, the Most Powerful Man in the Universe. Of course, he doesn't always fight the forces of evil by himself...
* Heavy Metal. The charges against Captain Sternn. The viewer soon learns that Sternn also ran a "preschoolers prostitute ring" and "sold dope disguised as a nun".
* Hey Arnold! that Suzie had indeed divorced and left Oskar by that point.
* Going Postal this with the aging postal workers: "They all wore uniforms, although since no two uniforms were exactly alike, they were not, in fact, uniform, and therefore not technically uniforms."
* Grant Morrison, who essentially writes herself into the story using fan fiction. King Mob also comments on how he now gets to live the crazy science fiction/espionage adventures he always dreamed of as a kid. Considering it's no secret that King Mob is just a cooler version of Morrison...
* Hatred was placed back on Greenlight, it was ranked #1 in only a few hours. More than a few people concluded from the get-go that the devs were banking on this and similar to drum up free publicity for a mediocre, cheaply made game that would have been ignored otherwise.
* He also only has access to publicly available information. So when he is asked if the US government has a secret space program, he honestly answers that he doesn't know.
* heroic levels) to function. And still leaves the Force user powerless.
* goddess. She uses the wisdom and rebirth associations of the snake as much as she does the predatory aspect.
* Green Mansions. She wasn't white or European; she belonged to a lost race that even the local Indians didn't know of. Her skin — depending on the lighting, it seems — varied in color, and in bright sunlight seemed "luminous".
* Happily Married. However, in Season 6 he seems to HATE his wife now and doesn’t want to be married to her. He tried to get her dunked for being a witch in “The Intelligence”, tried to burn their marriage certificate in “The Understanding”, and said that he messed up with his Halloween costume because his wife is still his bride. (He was Frankenstein and she was his wife)
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix), and talks in a simpering, sweet manner.
* Higuchi from the Yotsuba organisation looks like the missing link, putting him in sharp contrast with his more conventional-looking colleagues, two of whom are outright gorgeous.

* Gwen Stefani's song and music video of "What You Waiting For?" uses this trope.
* Guy de Maupassant: a young girl is raped by a valet named Baptiste, turning her into a pariah in her village (hence the nickname). A man marries her anyway in spite of public opinion (on occasion joking that he at least is assured of her fidelity). Then one day, some asshat with a bone to pick with the husband uses the nickname again, driving the poor woman to suicide (the story opens with the narrator seeing the sparsely-attended funeral and joining in).
* Goblins and Frostlings are both in the habit of riding wolves; goblins also ride
* Happy Heroes is deliberately made to look ugly, with his puffed-up lips and zig-zagged mustache, contrasting heavily with the much more adorable appearances of the Supermen, their non-biological father Doctor H., and even Big M.'s own assistant Little M. In-universe, Big M.'s so ugly that anyone who looks right at him throws up on the spot.
* Had Thor not been there to keep the Hulk at bay the Helicarrier would have crashed and Loki's plan would have more than likely been successful.
* Hatoful Boyfriend — and is stopped only briefly by an anti-materiel rifle.
* Hannah Montana, Miley creates a song and dance to help her remember all 206 bones in the human body. On the day of the test, she can't remember them because she can't dance and sing.
* Highlander where Duncan has evidence that clears a soldier who’s about to be executed, but he doesn’t make it in time-the guy is shot just as he’s arriving on the scene and shouting at them to stop.
* Grant Morrison. Her husband Beak, who resembles a sort of human-chicken hybrid, also has bird-like wings on his arms, but he also lost them after M-Day.
* Harvest Moon: A New Beginning the player unlocks the Multiplayer/Wi-Fi feature of the game. This allows the player to trade items and interact with other players' animals while there. This is not only a great (and fast) way to obtain animal produce from animals you have not unlocked yet, but also a way to obtain items that you won't unlock until much later in the game, like the infamously necessary Yam Seeds.
* Gor, distances are measured in "passangs", which are 7/10ths of a mile.
* Harken is the only survivor of Elbert's knights. He becomes first a
* Highlander had a villain of the week who was a slightly mentally unstable doctor who got fixated on Duncan after he witnessed evidence of his immortality. He'd been kidnapping and experimenting on other patients before that as well.
* Gravity Falls: Although he's quite happy having a long-distance relationship with what's effectively a female version of himself (that is, chubby), Soos had a picture of a muscular woman in a bikini come out of the Mailbox That Knows Everything when he asked it about his dream woman.
* Gravity Falls. All the audience sees is the traditionally-animated shadows of the fighting monsters. Soos even comments he's glad he is looking at it and seeing it all.
* Hermann Hesse, a young woman who nearly had this fate is found by Goldmund.
* "Hans, Who Made The Princess Laugh," Hans manages to make her laugh when he gets enough people stuck to him, forming a human chain.
* her relationship with Landon. Her affections for the latter came about because he was the only one kind enough to actually help her (as opposed to every other boy — except Cloud — who just lusts after her but is unwilling to help her), rather than simply because he helped her get a good grade — i.e. he treated her like an actual PERSON rather than just a hot babe.
* GR: Giant Robo, and failing to live up to the manga's previous adaptaions. Not only that the 2007 anime's failure put a stop to any future adaptations of Giant Robo being made, it also put a halt to any new adaptations of Mitsuteru Yokoyama's works since.
* Haru is the heiress to the Jigokumeguri zaibatsu. Tsurezure is middle class. People comment on how weird it is, but nobody seems to have a problem with it (Haru's father is even a

* Hate Plague: Mysterious forces causes a bunch of people to turn hateful.
* Going Postal a Prophecy that never actually existed. "Wishing that someone will come along and sort this mess out one day is not the same as a prophecy." In defiance of non-Fate, Moist succeeds. (In forcing what wasn't destined to occur into happening anyway, Moist is, in fact, following Weatherwax's philosophy to the hilt. It's a double inversion.)
* Good/Holy). Light and Holy elements are often the same in fiction, but not always.
* Goombella is a walking Parental Bonus as well. Many of her tattle-analyses toe the line (or break the fourth wall). Oh, and the Goomba-Gang that tries to hit on her "plays real nice".
* Grendel, the adoptive daughter of Hunter "Grendel" Rose discovers that her father has a safe hidden away. Furthermore, the book makes it clear it's of vintage design as a matter of aesthetics for Rose, so the girl is able to read up about classic safecracking methods she can use to get it open.
* Heavy Metal are some other genres that tend to feature a lot of instrumental improvisation. Like in jazz, improvisation in these genres is usually based on the "pentatonic blues scale".
* Heart Of China has a battle atop the Orient Express. He's armed with a sword. You're armed with a piece of metal you ripped off the train. Don't forget to duck when the tunnels show up (the only way you know to duck is that he ducks first; he's facing the direction the train is moving).
* Harrow: In "Finis Vitae Sed Non Amoris" ("The End of Life, but not of Love"), a former soldier suffering from PTSD has a huge collection of knives, which makes him the primary suspect when a body is discovered in his backyard.
* Goosebumps, because the father had been growing evil mutant plants down there. Kids find unfinished basements scary, so it makes sense to include them in a kids' horror series.
* Halo 3 takes place in an old missile silo that serves as the makeshift base for humanity's forces in East Africa. At one point one of the soldiers actually remarks on its very 21st-century style, complete with ancient hydraulic doors.
* Grandma's Boy (2006) for stimulation. Unfortunately, Jeff's mom walks in at the worst possible time, leading to one of the funniest lines ever put on film.
* Hidamari Sketch, when Yuno's train to take her back after a visit home starts off, her father runs while keeping his upper half erect and visible in the vertical door window.
* go to the Marine Cathedral expecting to have to kill an innocent person.
* Green Lanterns devotes one issue to Simon telling his mom he's a superhero, and another to detailing Jessica's everyday struggle with anxiety.
* Gravedale High is the class’ token nerdy fat girl. One of the teachers is also a mummy with very bad breath named Mr. Tutner.
* Hewlett-Packard was founded in a garage. The garage is now a Silicon Valley tourist attraction.
* he is good friends with and can therefore get tickets to his sold-out concert. Brian lucks out when he manages to buy tickets off of Lowell that the latter had previously acquired, but his truthfulness is still called into question when the seats turn out to be in the nosebleed section.
* GoldenEye Q waxes lyrical about the features of the new Bondmobile, none of which are used in the film.
* Go! Princess Pretty Cure, Kirara goes to a fashion show in New York City.
* Heavy Metal story "Harry Canyon", the title character is a taxi driver ready for this stunt with a disintegrator ray installed in the back of his seat to kill anyone trying to rob him.
* He is, but Section 9 had already sought and received consent from the Canadians to proceed. Much of the episode takes place with Section 9 tailing him until the proper authorizations are given allowing them to move in for the arrest.
* Green-Sky Trilogy and the iron-fisted rule of the Ol-Zhaan priests and the repressive aspects of society are dismantled, things start vastly improving in that area.

* Happy Gilmore, Shooter's psychotic and devoted fan hits Happy with a car during the final showdown. The injury doesn't prevent him from competing, but it does eliminate his incredible long shot, forcing Happy to rely more on the skills he's been developing for his short game.
* !HERO: The Rock Opera's Maggie is Mary Magdalene combined with the Samaritan woman at the well.
* He also originally joined the army when England was mainly fighting colonial wars against greatly outmatched opponents. The idea of an enemy actually having a gun had never come up prior to World War I.
* Grand Theft Auto V long torture session gathering enough "hatless" hints to narrow it down to one guy, or Michael getting fed up and shooting someone at random, depending on the player's choices.
* Grand Theft Auto V radio commercial, the lawyers take a more proactive approach to ambulance chasing by telling people to 'throw themselves in front of vehicles' to get injured for lawsuits.
* Godzilla Millennium in the West) when Yuki visits Yuji and Io, and has to ask two dockworkers for directions to the Godzilla Prediction Network HQ.
* Hercules) has its hero battle three such creatures. They are toy-sized when created by one of the villains, but become this on Earth once they enter its atmosphere (by design). There's an unidentified insect, a three-headed dragon that spits "cosmic rays of deadly fire", and a centaur.
* he is Superman and he likes her. They get together right afterwards.
* Guest House Paradiso: Eddie is welcoming a new guest into the hotel when there is a huge explosion from the kitchen. When the guest asks about this he answers, "Mice... Basque separatist mice..."
* High School D×D, when Katerea Leviathan finds herself overpowered by Azazel, she decides to blow herself up and take him down with her. However, it doesn't work as Azazel ends up killing her.
* Hand sanitizers and antibacterial soaps always claim to kill "99% of germs" on packaging and in commercials. What they don't say — or will only say in
* happy for Rafael and Serena despite being attracted to him, which makes her earn his friendship and respect. Rafael keeps telling her all of his plans and asking her for suggestions. She also pretends to be Serena's friend, and she easily trusts her. She exploits both of her false friendships with the couple to manipulate them, turning them against each other, and to obtain information.
* Glory Seeker card, he's apparently eager to be in the fray of battle.
* Grindels, which are essentially Thwomps that are covered in bandages.
* Half-Life Xenian organisms pretty much either have too many eyes, or none at all. Examples include Antlions, and Headcrabs.
* Hellsister Trilogy, withdrawn, gloomy Brainiac-5 first falls for outgoing, hot-headed Supergirl and later for Laurel "Clothes are a silly concept" Kent.
* Guards! Guards!, the Supreme Grand Master, the leader of the plot to overthrow Vetinari by summoning a dragon, is eventually revealed to be Lupine Wonse, Vetinari's secretary. Even if his job as secretary mainly involves taking notes, it's notable that Vetinari asks him for advice and Wonse seems to abuse his position by providing questionable suggestions about the dragon situation.
* He portrayed himself as a crooked politician throughout 2004 and 2005 (complete with a "cabinet" of henchmen wrestlers) who handed out American flags to spectators. In late 2005 and early 2006, he transformed into a
* Gundam Seed Destiny Altered. On the couple of occasions that one of the antagonists attempts to open fire on the inbound pack, one of the protagonists consistently intervenes to engage said opponent, preventing them from completing their attack.
* Grown Ups, the wives spend at the entire water park visit trying to get an extremely sexy lifeguard to walk their way. And then they find he's from Canada, eh?
* Hey Arnold!. In one episode Arnold mistakenly thinks his teacher is in love with him when she's actually talking about her fiance with the same name, and another time he and Gerald think Mr. Green the butcher's life is in danger when a few people say they're going to "get him" (they're actually planning a birthday party for him).

* Heaven's Feel, even more so. His actions in the route, and the backstory it reveals, does an impressive job of building sympathy for him, considering that he lives to see others suffer and is actively trying to destroy the world. Seeking the reason for his twisted existence, he died without regret. No wonder Shirou realized that he liked Kirei.
* Grimm featured some very inbred Reinigen (rat Wesen) who could join together to make one of these if they so chose.
* Goldfinger. Nothing like this happens in the actual movie. In the movie, Goldfinger has Bond dead to rights and stays in the room to watch. Bond only "escapes" because he manages to convince Goldfinger that he's of more use alive and he turns off the machine. Even then Goldfinger thinks Bond is probably bluffing, but didn't want to take the chance and Bond stays his prisoner the rest of the movie until the army eventually rescues him.
* Hannah Montana, Miley is good friends with Oliver who has a massive crush on Hannah. At first, Miley tries to brush him off, then decides to act like "a nightmare date" to drive Oliver off. When that doesn't work, Hannah just comes out and reveals herself as Miley. Oliver instantly realizes that it was Hannah he was crushing on and only sees Miley as a friend to end the triangle.
* heavy. The shorts are "Return from Olympus" (occurring in modern times, with a flashback to the Labors of Heracles), "Labyrinth" (about Theseus, naturally), "Argonauts", "Perseus", and "Prometheus".
* Hegel famously said that everything in history happens twice. Karl Marx in "The 18th Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte" said that Hegel forgot to add: "the first time as a tragedy, the second time as a farce".
* Halt and Catch Fire Joe MacMillian and Cameron Howe are about 13 years apart; Joe is 35 at the start of the series and 45 by season 4, Cameron is 21-22 at the start of the series and 32 by the final season.
* Happened frequently during the Johto arc as well, most notably delaying episode 147 (in which Squirtle leaves and Ash also sends Tauros and Heracross back to Professor Oak's Lab) until after episode 150 and then immediately following it with episode
* Higher Learning: Neither of the three main characters — Shinji, Asuka and Rei — have any social skills whatsoever. And their new teacher Kaoru is determined to change that.
* Gorillaz occasionally interact with live-action performers; during their Grammys performance, their computerised selves performed alongside Madonna. Another video shows them having fun with Jack Black at Venice Beach.
* ''Goliath II'' mouth, but later crawled out unharmed and ran away, never to be seen again.
* Guys tend to have high cheek bones, making them look more mature. Girls tend to have lower cheekbones, making them look younger.
* Grojband: Laney had this reaction to a feral rat and a big dog that licked her face.
* Grand Theft Auto: Chinatown Wars as any for why you can't get away from Liberty City.
* Halloween Episode appears to be static, but is actually a Flash element. After a little bit, the banner starts to move, and all of the hosts get killed in horrific ways.
* Gone with the Wind has to strip naked so her nightgown can be used to mop up the blood of the dead soldier. While her nudity is covered by angles and objects, the Code still forbade any nudity whatsoever. Not to mention, of course, that it contained quite possibly the most famous use of the word "damn" in an expletive sense in any Hays Code-era film.
* Hellboy subverts this as most of the people of Enigma, Georgia and the swamps around it are hospitable and welcoming to Hellboy (who some mistake for the Devil). The swamp children, despite their odd appearances from toxic waste, are just that: sweet children. The brothers Duffy and Deeter however are as evil as they are beautiful and Brother Jester is corrupted by some foul power and his own vengeance.

* Happy Death Day the happy feeling of success. That part of the ending was removed, and Tree was allowed to keep living and have a scene with Carter in a café.
* Gravity Falls capable of harming him. Though he figures out not all of it is immune to him touching it, and beats it with one of its own legs.
* Grover Cleveland took a major role in raising his goddaughter Frances after her father died. During his administration, rumors abounded that the bachelor president was going to marry Frances' mother. Those rumors turned out to be a generation off.
* Hiiro no Kakera is capable of neutralizing all magical attacks. It is part of the reason Logos thinks she is the sacred maiden blessed by God.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows when Ginny invites Harry to her bedroom to give him his birthday present (a kiss). How far they would've gone is debatable, but they clearly would've gone past "thank you for the gift" if Ron hadn't shown up to assassinate the moment. In the film, Ron is replaced by George, who knows exactly what he's doing.
* had a will. It's subverted when her ghost confirms she did indeed have one, which leaves everything to her daughter and fellow witch (Dorothy even gets her car, the one thing Olivia hadn't included in the will at the time because she was thinking of trading it in, after some doing).
* Hannibal Lecter it was based on was later remade a second time) and Hopkins' portrayal became so iconic, Cox carried the 'first to play Lecter' footnote for much of his career. Many still wonder what he could've done with the role if he'd been cast in the later films.
* Gunslinger Girl as the conditioning process that turns the girls into cyborgs wipes their memories. Two girls have backstories involving rape, but all memories of the incidents have been heavily repressed by the conditioning:
* Grunts! by Mary Gentle, a dragon collected modern weaponry from different realities. Orcs seized the hoard and were cursed to become cigar-chewing Marines. Pegasi don't last long against a Bell HU-1 helicopter armed with Sidewinder missiles, but guns are vulnerable to misfire spells usually used on bows. Luckily, there are magical countermeasures for misfire spells, and so on. And then the aliens came. The reverse later comes to apply; pegasi armed with Hellfire anti-tank missiles and a dragon with a technological cloaking device.
* Hidden Object Game! The game goes so far as to start with the words "Deep in the Caribbean", have an undead pirate villain with a crew of ghosts, and ends with a cutscene where the two main characters are looking out at their new ship when the mainmast suddenly breaks off. Several scenes in the game are directly redrawn from the old VGA backdrops. The list goes on and on and on. The sheer number of homages is so vast, that it's likely tantamount to copyright infringement on a grand scale. Fortunately for the developers, Lucasarts has done nothing against it. Yet.
* Go, Mutants! where religion has gotten a lot less popular after people found out that aliens exist.
* her are just friends, swapping stories of their relationship woes over ice cream in Amy's apartment. Amy's husband shows no sign of jealousy and Samantha, Theodore's OS and girlfriend, displays fleeting curiosity of their past history but quickly gets over it.
* Heechee Saga spacecraft left behind to search for alien artifacts to reverse-engineer. The destinations are pre-programmed and can only be accessed randomly, making exploration a dangerous crapshoot. Some of the survivors return rich; many return dead, if they return at all.
* Half-Breed Discrimination who is discriminated against by one or both of their parents' species.
* Harry Potter's Spectrespecs helps her find Harry when he is invisible, in contrast to the book, where it's not clear what they do.
* Happiest Season, a Christmas-themed romantic comedy about a lesbian who accompanies her girlfriend to her family's house for Christmas, only to discover her girlfriend has not come out to her family.
* Greek Mythology has the triangle of Aphrodite, Hephaestus and Ares. And then there's the perpetually recurring triangle of Zeus, Hera and whoever Zeus happens to be sleeping with at the time.

* Heralds of Valdemar) and tervardi (songbirds); there are also the dyheli (elk) and kyree (wolves), but they aren't bipeds. However, all of these are created species, mostly created by a single human mage. There are also weakly-sapient companion birds, also human-created.
* Golden in Death by J.D. Robb, features Lt. Eve Dallas, Homicide, wearing this for a no-knock warrant on a homicide suspect's home. It's at her husband's suggestion, "to complete the look".
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire: Karkaroff's caricature-esque grimacing.
* Hannah Montana: When a mouse invades the Stewart household, Jackson tries to catch it by covering the floor with mouse traps. However, he traps himself in a corner and tries to jump across the countertop to get out. He fails and falls, landing on and getting caught by multiple mouse traps.
* Highlander, who had become a professional motorcycle racer and died on the track). Mostly, this is treated as little more than a bother and having to leave town for a while, but a few times there have been attempts at justifications, such as Duncan complaining about how hard it is to forge/alter records and documentation for his friend Hugh Fitzcairn, who has not adapted well to new technology like computers.
* Gotham had a brief contest between Jerome Valeska and a cannibal named Robert Greenwood, about who should lead the group of escaped maniacs. Greenwood's argument was that he terrorised the whole city and ate twelve women while Jerome merely chopped his mother to death. Jerome retorted that he despite his young age, has a vision and ideas about chaos and ambition and just eating people grows old after a while. And he proves to have all those qualities along with a total disregard for his own life which earns him the leadership among the psychopaths, essentially winning by proving that no matter how depraved others are, he has taken the idea of amorality and evil to a level that very few can even comprehend.
* "Harvest" involves some other survivors trying to avoid a Xenomorph while making their way to the emergency shuttle.
* gold. After being floored by this unnaturally good bargain, Scrooge does so (Donald brought a shoebox full of dirt so he could "keep his feet on the ground") during the trip; the alien feeds the dirt into a machine that soon creates a rapidly-growing planet, with weather patterns and capable of supporting life. With that, the alien flies away on his new world, happy to have something other than gold to work with. In the end, Scrooge is left wondering who got the better end of the deal.
* Glory in the Thunder. Vahagn schemes to marry Barsamin to Princess Katarosi because in four years Bars will gain citizenship, at which point he can assassinate Katarosi and gain complete control of the country.
* GURPS features a world divided into four layers, based on kabbalistic cosmology: Assiah is the material world, Yetzirah the world of spirits, Briah the world of deities and archetypal entities, and Atziluth is the home of capital-G God.
* Gotham" was a man called Cardinal Quinn who was also known on the street as the "Diddling Priest" because of multiple accusations of sexual abuse.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi's nerves as a result. For example, in "Collect All Five", there's this little exchange when Ami explains to Yumi about the Super Rainbow Blast cereal:
* Harvest Moon: Back to Nature is rated E10+. It's possible that this was due to the fact that E10+ rating didn't exist when the originals came out.
* Half-Life, during the "Surface Tension" section, you have to fight Marines along the side of a cliff face. It becomes extremely narrow in places and can be nerve-wracking for people with a fear of heights.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows in the movie is equally awesome:
* He also narrated the frightfully awful, fundamentalist Christian dreck-fest,
* Hell's Kitchen once had comedian Vic Reeves attempt to order two fried eggs, which prompted the following reaction from Gordon Ramsey:
* Gukko birds like Ka resemble giant hummingbirds with a second pair of wings replacing their legs. The Le-Matoran of Le-Koro had a defensive squad of Gukko riders.

* Griffons have the front halves of meat-eating birds, usually raptors, and the back halves of felines. It's noted in the griffon splatbook that, even in families, it's rare that two griffons will look alike, as they are that prone to diversity in which avian or feline they resemble. Certain aspects do have certain species associated with them (snow owls and snow leopards for the Snow aspect, vultures and ravens for the Carrion aspect, lions for Pride aspect, sea eagles and otters for the Sea aspect, etc), but even then it's not guaranteed.
* Hellsing and at his (Pip) request Seras drinks his blood in order to become a true vampire. This, coupled with Seras' anger at losing Pip, allows her to utterly massacre Zorin and her forces.
* Hebrew on the Roman alphabet. Always relied on Earth alphabets, yes, but not always Roman.
* have their own dragon. But they're low-status captains, because their dragons are of the smallest breeds and they don't have a crew to manage.
* Ha'tak) they also used full-power multimegaton blasts to attack Earth, with the practical effect of both terrorizing the populace and culling them to a manageable number. There's a good reason why Goa'uld rule scattered backwards villages instead of entire cities.
* Harry Potter and the Descent into Darkness they instantly take a liking to each other.
* Half a millennia ago, a warmonger general committed outrageous war crimes during his reign to which led his execution, the souls of his army, sealed away by dark prophet; hoping to ensure the people of Europe and China mainly, that he never returns.
* Grimdark future, so it remains here: Nurgle units for the Chaos forces are slow but pretty punchy and extremely tanky.
* herself...or maybe an entirely different trope known as "Hungarian Gender Confusion" in the fandom.
* Hawk and Dove, as Hank and Don were aged up to being adult men while the rest of the DCU didn't age with them. Marv Wolfman then poked fun at the continuity error in their cameo at Donna Troy's wedding, with the college-aged Hank and Don being baffled when someone had the impression that they were much older.
* Guardians of the Flame: Walter Slovotsky. At the beginning of the story, he and Doria have already been "friends with benefits" for some time. His charming personality and status as a football star imply that he's very popular with girls. During the first trip to The Other Side, he also sleeps with Andy-Andy (angering Karl, who's attracted to her). She ends up with Karl though. Even after he gets married, Walter doesn't stop, and continues having sex with other women.
* Gordon Brown in response to a pager alert at the same moment as he realised the joint of beef they were supposed to take to his parents for Christmas was still in the fridge at home. He largely forgot about the phone call as he discussed this with his wife, with the result that the Chancellor interpreted "Where's the beef?" and "Is it too late to turn back?" as being Balls' reaction to the political situation.
* Helen of Troy also had Divine Level beauty despite being a mortal (though this may be explained by Zeus possibly being her father). Her beauty started the famous Trojan War.
* Go Animate, this is presented as a good ending for everyone involved. (Except the character being executed, of course.)
* "Hi Ho Silver Lining" was not originally by Jeff Beck. It was first recorded by The Attack, but the song is often attributed to Beck because his version charted first.
* Hilarious in Hindsight was released, within a few years he made a comeback and successively served as mayor of Oakland and California attorney general, eventually becoming the governor of California himself again.
* here, he does better than everyone expects due to having subconsciously absorbed a lot of information from falling asleep while watching TV documentaries, even if his critical thinking skills are sub-par. However, he loses on Final Jeopardy due to being unable to spell.

* have and that she always tries her best at everything she does...considering the rest of the Kendo Club's members are still average humans this leaves more questions than it answers.
* Grand Theft Auto V killing his targets (which is asking a lot from Trevor).
* Harry Potter books to Ronnie, she misremembers the name and makes the occasional reference to "that Muggle girl, Shirley Holes." The first time she mentions the name is when she's talking to Dobby, and he seems to get the idea that this is what she'd like to be called. Hence, whenever he appears in the fic afterwards, he always addresses her as "Miss Shirley Holes."
* Heinlein's, Wyoming Knott introduces herself to Mannie, adds "Call me Wy, but don't say ‘why not’." (She's consistently called Wyoh, never Wy. Heinlein sometimes showed a tin ear for dialogue.)
* Hackers, where hackers from all over the world are joining in a virtual attack on the Gibson supercomputer in order to overload its defenses.
* Grandparental Obliviousness: A grandparent left in charge of their grandchildren is too senile to keep a proper eye on them.
* Henry VI, Part I. She apparently is also a bit of an evil foreigner, called the "she-wolf of France".
* Godzilla and has appeared in several fanworks since. To a lesser extent, his mortal enemy, Solomon, sometimes appears as well.
* Grim Prairie Tales, Colby gets sealed alive inside a burial mound by the tribe whose graveyard he desecrated.
* He later reappears with an arm in a sling, pushing away another reporter already on the scene. He is promptly attacked by the monkeys who steal his toupee, with Betty cheering them on.
* head. This one didn't murder her either, and in fact, the "victim" might not have been all that upset to be so immemorialised.
* Herman Melville apparently once wrote a manuscript that told the story of a woman who waited years for the return of her sailor husband after he disappeared at sea. Meanwhile, he'd gone off and started another family elsewhere. The manuscript was never published and is now lost, but records of it exist in Melville's letters to Nathaniel Hawthorne.
* Graham McNeill, the Chaos forces herd prisoners toward the Imperial outpost. They are slaughtered, and the forces learn the positions of the Imperial guns.
* Graham McNeill, Togandais has an animated skull — with glowing eyes — bringing him books in the library.
* Hanappe Bazooka that Nero had Dance and Bazooka start the Great Fire of Rome.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City. However as the story progresses he soon realizes he was very much alone in this belief as Sonny has screwed him at every turn.
* Godfall takes this to new heights, desiring to exterminate all of Metropolis for the unforgivable sin of not being ruled by Kryptonians.
* Gradius, Shade Man uses Options to attack Mega Man with Ripple Noise blasts.
* High Rhulain is probably even worse. After having his face raked by an osprey's talons, he is described as looking like this: "The black-and-grey-striped fur was normal from ears to eyes, but below that it was red, glistening flesh and bone. The whole muzzle, nose, and upper lip had been torn off. Half of the warlord's face was a frightful mask - a spitting, bubbling skeleton, as he continualy sucked air to breathe."
* Hajime no Ippo. Oh, and in the early volumes, Kimura falls for a nurse and, when he thinks this is serious, discovers she has a man. Seconds before entering the ring for a match. Ouch.
* "Hearth" means a fireplace, or poetically, the centre of a home. The idiom is "Home is where the heart is" (i.e. home is where our emotional priorities lie), but "away from home and hearth" (i.e. travelling and therefore deprived of the comforts of home).
* Highlander, you've got the four-hundred year old immortal Duncan MacLeod and his three-hundred-and-fifty year long on-again, off-again snarky romance with the twelve hundred year old immortal Amanda Devereaux.

* Grand Theft Auto IV, done in the style of a Weazel News report, talks about bikers causing violence while the crawl below reads things like 'Laid off worker gets laid', 'Stimulus package includes vibrator', and 'Bologna recall totally fucks worker's lunch plan' among others. And it's done again in a similar trailer for The Ballad of Gay Tony, with the main report focusing on illegal guns trade while the crawl has lines like 'Swine Flu scared by woman in mask' and 'Parents demand school closing - saying public education is socialism'.
* Hell on Wheels: Gritty drama following the expansion of the Railroad.
* He believed it and discussed sexual activities with her, leading to his arrest.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi "Secret Origin", where Ami as a child states that she loves riding on the bus and hopes that she and Yumi will ride on the bus every day when they're older. It so happens that in the present day, Ami and Yumi travel in a tour bus as rock stars.
* Hercule Poirot has the Belgian detective revisit a 16-year-old case when the daughter of the (now deceased) convict requested that he clear her mother's name.
* Globehunters: An Around The World In 80 Days Adventure: The hunter pursuing Eddie, Sasha, and Trevor has an upper body bigger than his lower body.
* Grateful Dead - "Touch of Grey". The pop song introduced them to new fans in the 80's, whom their original fans absolutely hated.
* Hannibal. Hannibal creates an anatomically-correct origami heart out of a human corpse and leaves it for Will to find.
* Hermann Hesse, when the protagonist Josef Knecht is still a young boy, the Music Master himself comes to examine if he's eligible to be educated in the elite schools. He does it by making the young Josef play music together with him. Thereafter they practically have a baroque-style version of what jazz musicians usually call "jam session", using a popular song as the basic theme. After this, the Music Master explicitly tells to Josef that making music together is the easiest way to create a friendship.
* her eccentricities and wanderlust suited her and her desire to go out and see the universe.
* Heir Apparent features a teenage girl trapped inside a VR game with time-distorting qualities. While several weeks pass from her perspective, her story is alternated with the attempt to revive her in the real world, where only a few hours pass.
* Hairspray had no personality whatsoever outside of being a love interest to Tracey. The musical adaptation gave him a lot more character.
* Gunnerkrigg Court example of this setting as well; this led to many of the fans referring to Zimmy's mind city as Sunny Birmingham or Zimmingham.
* Green Lantern to travel easily and quickly between worlds, no matter the distance.
* Hey Arnold!: Despite putting on a tough exterior, even Helga G. Pataki has her moments. This is extensively displayed in episodes such as "Das Subway", when the subway breaks down and Helga automatically fears the worst.
* Heroes Hiro's dad. It's likely he knows his son well enough to guess that he'd be silly enough to open it. And according to a deleted scene, Kaito had the power to see all outcomes of anything, so he would see the possibility of Hiro opening the safe and planned accordingly.
* Grimoire’s Soul: The main method of using magic in Kesterline and in the world at large is via grimoire, commonly taking the form of an actual book, but also including objects like scrolls, bones, and computer tablets.
* Hellspark", which she gradually gets the hang of over the course of the novel.
* Good News Week that aired the week after ex-Prime Minister John Howard had a shoe thrown at him on live television, Mikey talked about the event, saying that after the event had occurred, he had never been so ashamed of being an Australian... because it was the worst bloody shot he'd ever seen!
* Harriet the Spy has a rhino running and stumbling on a prop before crashing into the screen and hanging on to the Nickelodeon logo.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Made in 2010 and 2011 for Part 1 and 2, respectively; set in July 1997–2 May 1998 for majority of the story, except for the epilogue which is set in 2017.

* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, as the Knight Bus skids to a screeching halt in front of the Leaky Cauldron, the last sound heard after various crashes is the distinctive loud wail of this cat.
* Gunfighters of Casa Grande, who would later make a career out of voicing trailers.
* Ground Control is this. He's the protagonist's best friend and a pretty sociable guy with a habit of collecting battlefield souvenirs and playing cards. Doesn't change the fact that he's a pretty good sniper at the same time.
* Godfrey Ho's movies immediately end the moment the final bad guy dies.
* Gorgo the Ogre features bat-frogs (large frogs with the wings and upside-down sleeping posture of bats) used as mounts for the Black Ogres.
* High School Ninja Girl, Otonashi-san doesn't want go out with Kunitachi-sensei is because she looks exactly the same as his older sister. They're personalities are practically identical as well, and they both have a crush on him.
* Guilt Complex showing their remorse could cause them to go about it in a way that makes things worse or hold them back from actually fixing their problems.
* Heart Hunter's female face can turn anyone who feels any kind of love into a heart, which promptly gets eaten by the male face.
* He ruled that Mateo Morral, the anarchist that tried to kill King Alfonso XIII during his wedding day in 1906, was murdered while in police custody and could not kill himself as historically recorded.
* Her oldest younger sibling seems to have a name, but she's only called "Skipper".
* Grimm featured a creature called a reinigen — essentially a rat-man — that could summon Swarm of Rats to do his bidding. He was nearly framed for the death of a music teacher.
* Gossip Girl, where Chuck outright tells Blair that it's her turn to chase him now. Which she does.
* Highlander card game had these various attack methods alongside dodge and parry mechanics. Failure to block or dodge resulted in damage. Accrue enough damage and you die (presumably, the pain knocks you out and your opponent decapitates you at his leisure). However, if your opponent manages to pull a decapitation strike card and you can't properly defend, then they win.
* Grand Theft Auto III Maria Latore apparently dies like this off screen.
* Great Teacher Onizuka. He winds up getting a better score than anybody else thanks to this.
* Heart of the City strips focused on Heart's friend Dean having a pet cat - Spock - who's so sick that his parents are about to have him put to sleep, but in the end, it turns out that it's a dog with the same name as the cat, and the cat is going to recover. The last strip of the series reveals that the cat who inspired the comic version has died.
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age up the ass. It isn't until after discovering the true nature of the Lighthouses in Lumeria and then going to the far west to tackle the Jupiter Lighthouse is when the game starts to pick up.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle. Starts (and ends) in Hoboken, and goes through Newark, New Brunswick, Princeton, Cherry Hill, and miles of the New Jersey Turnpike.
* Happy Days has Potsie constantly interrupting Howard's attempt to watch a Braves game on TV, ultimately causing Howard to miss Hank Aaron hitting a game-winning home run. Howard shouldn't have been able to see that game at all; Milwaukee Braves games in the 50s were not locally televised.
* Han kidnaps Leia to prevent her from marrying Isolder. Though she's outraged at him initially, over the course of the book she chooses him instead of Isolder and they get married at the end. It helps that they had been lovers before.
* Glenda Jackson: Labour MP who represented Hampstead and Highgate, also a successful actress.
* Goblins, a goblin defeats an adversary whose god forbade him to wield any weapon by tossing him one.

* Golem XIV, the eponymous supercomputer was constructed to create war strategies, but, as a purely intellectual and inscrutably smart machine, it quickly figured out that all warfare is inherently wasteful and unprofitable, and took up philosophizing instead.
* Hellsing is a good example of useless military, first sending the troops before calling the Hellsing Organisation after massive losses.
* Gravity Is Only a Theory: Somebody rejects the theory of gravity or at least acts like it might not be true.
* Goblins. Then, for a long time, no major protagonist dies. Later, in Book 4, a main character dies on both story arcs: K'seliss and Chief.
* Hell-Bent Fer Heaven war in order to get Andy to kill Sid, Rufe's rival for the affections of Andy's sister Jude. He does this in classic Iago style by whispering into Andy's ear in order to convince him that Sid's family is out to get him.
* Grandfather Clause or an adaptation of one) can get away with playing a Discredited Trope straight because the trope is too essential to the work's formula for it to be abandoned.
* He ultimately decides to put on bowling shoes (thus costing him the lawsuit settlement) to help his team win the championship.
* had a single planet of origin). When someone does eventually go looking for it and find it again thousands of years later, Earth is little more than a highly radioactive dead rock.
* Gulliver's Travels nods to this law; the Lilliputans realise that since Gulliver is proportioned the same as they are but is 12 times the height, he is therefore 1,728 times the bulk and thus needs that much more food. However, it also ignores the fact that if the Lilliputans were really human-proportioned but 6 inches tall, they would rapidly freeze to death. The book also ignores the fact that the Brobdingnagians could not possibly exist because they should collapse under their own weight, despite the narration pointing out that they are as large compared to Gulliver as he is to the Lilliputians.
* Godzilla: Tokyo S.O.S. for her troubles. She explodes and, at that point, her children's eyes turn from a benevolent blue to a hellish red and they proceed to team-up with Mechagodzilla to beat the hell out of Godzilla.
* Heroes is played fairly straight, with Hiro and Ando's trusty Versa practically having more screen time than every other vehicle put together. However, season 2's hapless Rogue got only two or three shots in the premiere before being stolen from Claire Bennet in the second episode and appears later on as the vehicle of choice for smuggling illegal immigrants across the U.S. border. Meanwhile, Claire's father harped on the theft as a way to "compensate" for Claire's irresponsibility.
* "Haoma" is a central nervous stimulant plant used to make drugs that enhance senses or speed up perception of time. It is said to have been included in a sacred drink named Haoma in Zoroastrianism, but is
* Hanada Shonen Shi - after being hit in the back of his head, the titular character gains the ability to see ghosts, all of whom want him to fulfill their unfinished business.
* Hardcore Leveling Warrior: There is a secret series of skills called nightmare which are said to spread calamity every time a player uses them so much so that there is a mark left on any player that uses it. Luckily only a select group can use these skills only by being exposed to the power and it corrupting them.
* Harley Davidson and the Marlboro Man, Harley throws his gun at one of the armored car guards, and then punches him out when the guard catches it. He does this because he can't shoot very well.
* Groove Coaster 4 until you meet its difficulty's requirements. This gets worse if you play in the US, where the NESiCA network goes into maintenance in the middle of the day or in the evening (in Asia, the maintenance takes place early in the morning), so even if you didn't mind playing a few casual rounds in guest play, if you mainly play "boss" charts you will not be able to play any of them during maintenance.
* Harry Potter fandom is large and diverse enough that almost anything is acceptable in some circles, but in general the following rules hold:

* Grand Finale and half of the Iranian hostages being released had become Carol and Susan's vacation and half of the Iranian hostages being released.
* Good Omens, this time listing all the little pleasures of life that simply wouldn't exist if all there was to existence was Heaven. The idea of humanity having merit simply for being human is the general theme of the book.
* Going Under: Tappi uses "put fires out" as a metaphor, in the conversation that gives her first Level 3 task. She literally says its a metaphor. But Jackie and the task interpret it literally, to put 5 fires out, with water.
* Happy Heroes: The premise of Season 9 is that the heroes accidentally set off a time machine Doctor H. created when he was younger and are sent to the past.
* Gordon Lightfoot's "The Wreck of the Edmund Fitzgerald," about the real-life sinking of the titular ship on Lake Superior, killing all twenty-nine crew members, in 1975.
* Herbivores Are Friendly: Plant-eaters are kind to others vs. plant eaters are mistrustful and prejudiced against others.
* Happy! in the first season finale, atop the roof of the abandoned department store the latter uses as a lair.
* Good Eats to do this, especially given mid-20th century ingredients and equipment, hence the origin of the trope in the zeitgeist.
* Gosford Park where a valet/butler tries to kill a wealthy aristocrat, but the housekeeper beats him to it!
* Harkovast are a good example of this trope, being an army of warriors who lack not just names but also cannot speak and always have their faces covered by helmets. They are so anonymous that they are the only creatures in Harkovast who cannot be identified with a real-world animal.
* Hazbin Hotel ability (out of the middle of some sort of card game, that Husk had been winning), and then tells the resentful Husk that he would be perfect for the job. Husk accepts only after being plied with cheap booze.
* Half-Life also came up with graphical updates in the form of the High-Definition Pack and Source 2007, respectively.
* Happy Tree Friends Happy Tree Friends is, this usually has fatal results on the people around him and, less frequently, himself.
* Golden Ending, who brings down the Warship on its own, and Jeremy manages to defeat Hex, resulting in a happy ending for everyone instead.
* Gravity Falls mentions doing "FCLORP", or Foam and Cardboard Legitimate Outdoor Role-Play, as a reference to LARP.
* Higurashi: When They Cry On a similar note, in both seasons, there are moments where the "crazy faces" kill the horror.
* Hecate's Orphanage to Cadence, with the death of Thesis. However, this doesn't stop her from remaining a badass, though she never really has another love interest.
* Helmut at one point gets turned into a frog and remains that way for the remainder of the series, not that he minds being stuck that way.
* heavily states that he doesn't have any friends, and that he lives in an isolated castle outside of the kingdom walls. His reason for being friendless? He's a mentally/emotionally unadjusted jerk with an almost total inability to read social cues. It's only partially his own fault; on one hand, he has serious mental problems. On the other hand, he's a sourpuss, and mean as hell to everyone he talks to.
* Going Another Way, after being Rei's girlfriend for several months, Shinji learns that, because Yui Ikari's DNA was used to create Rei, they're technically siblings. However, due to the countless other women who's DNA was also used to create Rei, the amount of Yui's DNA that actually makes up Rei is less than 1%.
* Gregor and Cordelia, as their A support makes their relationship a Matchmaker Crush
* Gone Home, when Terry Greenbriar, the main character's father, receives a letter from his father Richard about Terry's new time travel novel. In the letter, Richard writes that "readers of (Terry's) chosen genre will lap up copies hungrily," implying that sci-fi fans do not have discerning tastes.

* Hanzo's hair is about waist-length, which along with his cap gives it an unfortunate resemblance
* Going Rouge: An American Nightmare "Going Rouge" — subtitled "The Sarah Palin Rogue Coloring & Activity Book" — is also scheduled for that release date.
* Harry, which was broadcast via his glasses to the Kingsman, to allow them to figure out the rest of it.
* Heroes has the eclipse, everything from a real one to an illustration by Isaac. Another is the RNA symbol, a single helix with half of some base pairs coming off of it. This is also used as the symbol for Takezo Kensei, as it is stated to be the characters for "god send".
* Grey's Anatomy. However, when the show's writers decided to make it canon, some of the loudest complaints of it came from former shippers of that pairing because of how abruptly both characters went from pining after other people to wangsting over each other and how it involved a cheating subplot that made them rather unlikeable, and the pairing was quickly nipped in the bud.
* Heroes (Czechoslovakian, imprisoned for several years following the pro-Soviet coup).
* he is not that well trained, relying on force and his regeneration. He become much more disciplined once he starts absorbing people.
* God of War III because there aren't any men around (due to the bridge being destroyed), Aphrodite has her way with her slave maidens. Then Kratos arrives and she pushes them away so that she could invite Kratos to have sex with her. If accepted, the slavemaidens will watch and become so aroused by Kratos' sexual process that they will begin having sex with each other. After Kratos leaves, by the end, Aphrodite is once again sandwiched between her slavemaidens as Olympus crumbles.
* Gunmen is actually how Kryten's mind is interpreting his battle with the Armageddon Virus, with the others rigging the AR equipment to allow them to enter his mind to help buy Kryten time to construct the "dove program". Becomes a full holodeck malfunction when the Virus deliberately spreads to the equipment to both disable the intended exit method, and remove the special skills from the AR program.
* High Deryni at one point during the long night before the confrontation with Wencit at Llyndruth Meadows (and in a now-or-never frame of mind), Morgan and Richenda share one of these.
* Guild Wars 2 makes extensive use of this trope, from personal storylines (which affect instances) to dynamic events (which alters the state of the world players share).
* Harry is a Dragon, and That's Okay: Draco Malfoy still has an axe to grind with Harry and goes out of his way to cause trouble — and mostly falls flat. For Harry's part, he just shrugs off Draco's attempts and finds him rather strange. Eventually Draco realises it works far better in his favour to team up with Harry than antagonize him all the time and forms the Defense Club with him.
* He was brought back for a second stint about a year later, though. His replacement in the meantime was Michael Sundin, whose brevity on the show was
* He's been having trouble recognizing love between Pokémon too. He assumed Grovyle had a fever when Grovyle was clearly crushing on a Meganium and, throughout Sinnoh and Unova, he's been clueless to it all, to the point that his then-newborn Pokémon Scraggy understood more about love than he does. He does employ his female Snivy's
* GO, Tenma and Aoi. According to the latter's seiyuu Aoi has a crush on Tenma, but it has yet to be seen or hinted at.
* Greenfire: After Greenfire reveals to Rarity how he grew up alone in a forest, Rairty is the one who snuggles up and begins weeping. His gentleness and sensitivity during the scene triggers Rarity's Love Epiphany.
* Hank Williams Jr.'s "All My Rowdy Friends Are Coming Over Tonight." Not only did it end with a party (with all of Bocephus' rowdy friends), the party went on (by some accounts)

* Highschool of the Dead But they're forced to stop moments later, because Rei hadn't fully recovered from her back injury.
* Heroes, tries to be something of this when he repeatedly forces himself in the middle of every ongoing situation, but each time is sent away by the colonel in charge of supervising him. (It's stated that some of this is due to not wanting to take risks after the Julia Donovan incident, but additionally the members of Stargate Command just find his presence annoying and disruptive.) He never ends up in the middle of the action like he wanted, but he ends up witnessing a good deal more of it than he really bargained for.
* he wouldn't act on it Zia, in part because he's envious that she can be less uptight than him. Unbeknownst to him, she reciprocates the crush.
* Grandpaw In fact, working as a foster grandpa most likely helped extend his life (along with the love and care of the human who took him in).
* Gundam Wing: Endless Waltz quietly remarks "Anything and everything for the one you love..." (in the English dub) or "Heh, somebody's got a crush" (in the original Japanese).
* Higurashi: When They Cry is instantly satisfied at the thought of using this money to buy nothing but sweets.
* Harry Potter, Hagrid acquires a dragon egg and christens the hatchling Norbert. When he sends it to some dragon experts in Romania, they realise it's a female and they rename her Norberta.
* Grand Theft Auto in San Andreas where there's an Asian gangster on a boat that challenges you to a duel if you then immediately manage to slice his head off with one swing.
* Gone with the Wind, Scarlett is Gerald O'Hara's favored child. He has come to realize that he will never have any sons and speaks to Scarlett in a sort of man-to-man way that Scarlett enjoys very much. Scarlett carries this out much further with her own children; her youngest daughter, Bonnie, is her favored child.
* Grim puppeteers are jungle-dwelling giant spiders that, after they've drained their victims dry of fluids, string up their remains like marionettes with their silk, climb up a tree, and use their macabre puppets to lure passersby within striking range.
* Grand Theft Auto III has a good example of a "dated" present day: being made in 2001, Liberty City looks like any modern metropolis, but if you pay attention, you see how the 1998-2000 dot-com boom, when businessmen had just discovered the Internet, is still in full swing. Smartphones still didn't exist, text pagers were still in use, cars still sported the 90's curvy box look, nobody ever thought the person Donald Love was supposed to be satirizing would be the President of the United States, and Islamist terrorism wasn't even considered a threat compared to domestic crime.
* Heroes vs. Villains season. Future contestants have listened to this, being wary of forming romantic relationships for fear of attracting attention.
* Helluva Boss, and spend the episode trying to convince him to go through with it while a group of cherubs try to talk him out of it.
* Hayley and Hotch go through a painful period after their divorce, but after some time has passed, it becomes clear that they still care very much for one another.
* Hilgya for the Order, at the same time that Roy received a Sending from him, with a challenge to face him in the banquet hall of the Temple of Thor:
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe: Prince Adam knows his way around a kitchen, and even has his own specialty in spiced bread. This may have been intended to help offset him from his super powered alter ego.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, not knowing how long he’ll be gone or what he’s even doing. They only end up being apart for about nine months but when he sees her again for the first time, he muses that he never quite realized how beautiful she really is.
* Harima got a flash of inspiration for a manga and used Eri's umbrella to scratch it on the ground (it was a dud) trashing it in the process and he was forced to walk her home.

* "Great, where do we sign up?" and all their old friends are dead. And once they rescue Trumpkin and find out what's happening, they rush off to help rescue the title character, with no thought of getting their old thrones back.
* Heel–Face Turn out of love for her adoptive son Henry. And as nasty as she was before, Regina is nothing compared to her wicked mother Cora.
* Grant Morrison protagonists: Shining Knight, the Guardian, Zatanna, Klarion, Mister Miracle, Bulleteer, and Frankenstein.
* Hayate the Combat Butler. She actually seems fond of him, but he seems to think he needs to sweep her off her feet which causes her to reject his advances.
* Hellraiser: Hellworld. Then, the wizard rises from the grave to kill the scientist, as the original killer opens the Lament Configuration and the franchise icon puts in his obligatory appearance.
* Hanna-Barbera about the Day family, whose husband/father makes these.
* Hero Clix have characters get progressively weaker (and lose special abilities) as they take damage.
* He Who Fights Monsters: He who seeks revenge against the villains should be wary, not to get so influenced by them that he crosses the line and becomes a villain himself.
* Grrl Power and when she learns that everything she thought she knew is wrong.
* Google suggests you swim across the Atlantic Ocean. If going between China and Japan, it suggests you jet ski the Pacific.
* Gotham's Willow Street Card Room, a Mafia operated hangout seen in the pages of the
* Hartman Hips's cartoons indeed have wide hips, this actually comes from Stephen Silver's character designs and art style.
* Halo: Combat Evolved, Master Chief is given a ride to the control center by Pelican dropship, bypassing most of the Covenant's defenses by travelling through the ringworld's network of gigantic service tunnels.
* Halloween 5: The Revenge of Michael Myers, but it involves lots of bullets and no plot resolution.
* Guide, and prevent you from seeing anything that may alarm you. Ford isn't impressed.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows curse after Amycus Carrow spits at Professor McGonagall. The only other time that Harry used this particular curse, he was provoked by Bellatrix Lestrange openly mocking the death of Sirius Black, the closest thing Harry had to a father, whom she had murdered in front of Harry a few minutes earlier. Harry explains his reasons as simply, "He spat at you."
* Halo Wars reacts appropriately upon realizing they've been pulled inside a planet only to wind up on another planet.
* He tells a story about "Buck Buck", a game about which group of kids can get dogpiled longer before collapsing. Bill's team was good on defense, but the kids from the * (Heart)Gold is disguised as the Gym Leader to throw you off. Even the one guy, who gets defensive about it when the player fights him.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets is one of the oldest and easily the most famous take on this plot, but fan writers are still coming out with new versions today.
* God's Own Country, most of the eroticism is kept romantic and not explicit.
* High School D×D falls apart), and they're based out of Kuoh High School.
* health regeneration with every hit and infinitely floating in one place out of many a boss' attack ranges with the correct soul and accessory combinations.
* Heroes, it never comes to pass. This of course allows for more alternate timelines to be created and averted.
* Head Office. Then, once Jack finally gets settled in an office, before the morning is over a group of protestors throw hair removal cream n him, and a second group of protestors dump a sperm whales liver on his desk and then harpoon it, splattering Jack with blood. When a third protestor (who he ends up falling in love with) arrives, he instinctively dives for cover when she yanks something out, although it turned out she was just taking out a petition.

* Hazbin Hotel, red eyes, and large devil horns bursting out of her head.
* GUN×SWORD tries... and fails extravagantly... to be this. They seem to be a direct reference to Pumpkin and Honey Bunny, referenced somewhere below.
* Happy Endings, Max comes in after just leaving his hairdresser's funeral. He quickly says "the real tragedy is I need a haircut and I have no one to go to!"
* Hellraiser III: Hell on Earth, Pinhead reveals that Monroe killed his own parents with the same gun he tries to use on the pillarized Pinhead.
* Harvest_event has a tombstone reading "RIP The Tenth Class," a reference to players constantly clamoring to discover/add a hidden tenth class or the removed Civilian class from the Hunted game mode.
* Halo: Chimera Rising: McBride is ordered to find a way to kill or at least maim a Spartan. He succeeds.
* here, as part of that colonization porn led the way (or was right there on the front lines) in technical innovations such as streaming video, secure online commerce, site password protection and verification, CAPTCHAs, and the spread of broadband... as well as a number of plagues like spam, malware, and PC hijacking.
* Halo: Nightfall somewhat covered their tracks by introducing them as part of an entire "Covenant Fringe", a collection of Covenant-allied species too weak to have seen military action against the humans during the Human-Covenant war, and too small in population to be of much notice to the core Covenant races.
* Gunsmith Cats, where Rally is asked to kill an ATF agent to prove her loyalty to some gun-runners. She knows by weight that the gun is unloaded, asks for a bullet, and shoots the ATF agent's bonds, releasing him.
* Hayride: The movie's resident killer uses an axe for quite a few killings.
* He gets a lot more secret keepers in the sequel: as of the moment, Garrus,
* Ground level portals built by the long-lost "Roadbuilders" were the main form of transportation in John deChancie's
* Hell's Kitchen line was from an actual show. It actually came from a parody of Hell's Kitchen called "Hell's Cafeteria", wherein two talk show hosts play the role of contestants.
* Halo Theme as "Greatest Journey" (the final escape theme) when Martin O'Donnell swapped out the first game's synthesizers with a live orchestra.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers the artist experienced. He'd watch Americans freak out over ghost movies that the Chinese guys in the room laughed at, while the Americans laughed and made jokes about Japanese horror films that the Japanese people found terrifying).
* Hey Arnold!: In "Cool Party", Curly goes crazy (again) after he's among those not invited to Rhonda's party, and acting on an impulse, frees all the animals from the zoo.
* Hellsing and feeds her (via her own blood) with more diplomacy. At the epilogue, she chides at her like a mother would to a naughty child.
* GWAR was killed by Mr. Perfect, using the very weapon he used to kill so many creatures throughout the years.
* Having excessive amounts of space junk floating around is becoming a real concern for engineers. Generally, space garbage can either be burnt up in the atmosphere or tossed up into a graveyard orbit, which is beyond a geosynchronous orbit. This isn't a perfect solution, but requires less fuel in some cases, like for satellites in geosynchronous orbits. And that's where the
* He's repeatedly tried to ruin the wedding of Susanna, the Countess's best friend and confidante, besides attempting to blackmail her into sleeping with him,
* Gun Shop Owner: Someone who owns a legitimate gun shop. These will usually refuse to sell to obvious criminals, but otherwise not ask questions. Some will decline to sell to those they see as "shady".
* Happens in another episode, "This'll Kill Ya" when an asshole doctor thinks he's been poisoned by one of his colleagues. It turns out that his colleague had tricked him to teach him a lesson, but this isn't revealed until after the doctor kills him as "revenge".
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, Liz offers him "magic eyes", to which he responds he already has binoculars.

* He also anonymously pays for his employees' defense attorneys if any of them are ever charged with a crime.
* Heroes of Might and Magic dedicated his life to becoming the greatest Dragonslayer ever. In particular, he dreams of slaying an Azure Dragon, the mightiest of all dragons. In the final mission of his campaign, he does just that. The ending cinematic depicts Dracon sitting on his fallen foe's body, dissatisfied with his victory. He realizes that he had wrongly built up the moment of victory as the key to contentment and validation and he wonders what he will do next.
* Haxo subway station, the only intermediate station on a line built initially in the 1920s as a connection between lines 3-bis and 7-bis, but later abandoned on account of being considered superfluous. Not so sinister, as special trains packed with enthusiasts stop there every now and then.
* GoldenEye, Bond and Natalya Simonova end up surrounded by camouflaged Marines and CIA agent Jack Wade after blowing up Alec Trevelyan's facility.
* Greek myth, was told by the Fates that her newborn son Meleager wouldn't live any longer than it took the log in her hearth to burn up. She smothered the log, preserving his life. Decades later, when Meleager murdered his uncle (on his mother's side, naturally), she threw it in the fire. Meleager died once it was consumed.
* Harboured & Encompassed: Horatio falls in love with Archie almost immediately, and before that, he didn't even realize he was gay. He ponders at one moment whether he's Archie-sexual. Later in the sequel, he's in a committed relationship with Archie and Will (who was his roommate), so presumably, he grows out of it or he levels up to Double-Target Sexuality.
* Harifuda / Hikifuda — 48 card deck with 8 copies of one through six cards.
* High Lifes and Low Lifes with multiple credit cards of Frances', apparently since she figured it might work This Time.
* Guards! Guards! rats. Vetinari actually befriended and advised the rats, so now they were the only ones left (and quite loyal to him). Whether or not this is the same place as the aformentioned Scorpion Pit is unknown.
* Guards! Guards!, where the Patrician is locked up inside a supposedly escape-proof cell of his own design. Not only did the guys who locked him up overlook that the door with its unpickable lock had bolts on the inside (enabling Vetinari to lock the door from the inside and keep them out), they also failed to realize that there was a hidden compartment inside the cell containing enough food and water to keep him healthy for several days should they decline to feed him, along with a copy of the key to the unpickable lock.
* Guys and Dolls, Nathan, all set to marry Adelaide, loudly demonstrates that there's more than one way a person can develop a cold.
* Happy Heroes episode 1, the Supermen's Skill Balls have fallen into the ocean, and Careful S. and Kalo go underwater to retrieve them. They find them in a sunken shipwreck.
* he kills his business partner Sid Hudgens. Hudgens ran a tabloid where he routinely outed people in Hollywood as gay or Communists (both career killers in the early 1950s), covered (or created) celebrity scandals, and speculated on organized crime and political corruption in Los Angeles. So when Hudgens is found murdered, the natural thought is that after years of doing that he finally ran a story or found dirt on the wrong person, not that he was part of an elaborate criminal conspiracy and became a loose end.
* go vertically upwards once they reach higher levels and gain a God Mode button, whose cooldown can later be reduced to be shorter than it's duration, even further cakewalking the game.
* High-Heel Power: High heels seen as a symbol of female sex appeal or power.
* Gold and Silver. For example, when you first meet him, he asks you "Hello! You are trainer? Battle Gym Leader, win you did?"
* Grojband has one episode where Mina used this technique to vanish along with Trina.
* Here There Be Monsters: Since Dr. Sivana's scheme to destroy the Marvels and conquer the world is apparently going to succeed this time, the Acrobat suggests that the Monster Society of Evil do something nice for their boss... like getting him laid. Illyria retorts she did not need that mental image.

* Gotham Central: When Renee and Crispus encounter the Black Spider, they have already arrested and handcuffed two members of Burnley Town Massive in the room behind them. When the Spider shoots Renee with two machine pistols on full-auto, spraying bullets wildly, the two other suspects and everything in the room with them is also sprayed with gunfire. Afterwards, when Allen shoots the Spider, one of the gang members shot by the Spider claims that it was him, but the ballistics and angle of the shots mean that Allen physically could not have shot him from that position.
* Gods Need Prayer Badly by denying him or her the worship he or she needs.
* He once flew from New York to San Francisco in order to convince Lily to return to her ex, Marshall — but then forced her not to tell their other friends. However, his heart of gold only applies to his friends and family. For other people, he's a complete and utter
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost just had to feature the original three Hitchhiking Ghosts, Gus, Phineas and Ezra, as secondary characters.
* Have Space Suit – Will Travel, Kip accidentally sets fire to the barn where he has his lab. His mother worries but his father merely comments that one should be careful about making explosives in a frame building. However, Kip is in his mid to late teens, old enough that entrusting him with flammable or corrosive substances wouldn't be considered out and out negligence even in this day and age.
* Hidden City, such as the Mayor and Alex, are 'spirits', who despite lacking a proper physical body mostly look and act exactly the same as the normal human characters. 'Ghosts' also exist as shadowy monsters to be banished for treasure, as well as items to be found in various locations.
* Going Rogue by adding moral complexity and considerably more shades of grey.
* Gunslinger Girl has a number of omnibus collections. The first two are three volumes each, and every subsequent one is two each.
* .hack//Link, perform a Cross Rengeki with Endrance and he'll attack the monster while Tokio is in the attack's path, only to leap in and carry him off with lots of sparkles and such. Tokio promptly freaks out. Once Endrance gets his Xth form that makes him look even more feminine Tokio will also get said sparkles before realizing what he's doing and freaking out.
* he knew he was going to die, so hired a shapeshifter to impersonate him and inspire the people briefly after he was gone
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, Drax is contemplating a series of ponds that reminds him of his daughter. His face is serene, betraying no emotion, but the empath Mantis begins sobbing after touching him and experiencing what he is feeling.
* he does it again out of boredom Lucy does not take the joke kindly and wallops both of them over the head for acting like creeps.
* he did kill his commander. Rutledge found the girl naked and strangled and he was covering her with a blanket when the commander came in, misinterpreted the situation and fired his revolver. Rutledge had to fire back to save his life and knew no one would believe him. Despite claims to the contrary the court-martial was rife with bigotry.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, also has an Estrogen Brigade. There's even a community to bring him back in a prequel movie.
* Grey-and-Gray Morality: If the story is Enlightenment-themed and has a War at its center, expect horrible people and saintly ones on both sides. Bad things done in the name of good intentions, and good things achieved for mercenary motives.
* Happy Days in which Joanie and Chachi check into a motel, only to discover that the only room available in the honeymoon suite. Chachi suggests they can share the bed if they keep one foot on the floor, like in the movies. Then Fonzie turns up and assumes the worst.
* Grail in the Garbage: This is what one often finds in these kind of stores. Keep in mind that this is not necessarily a good thing for the customer.
* Gottsumon - when Gottsumon evolves to Insekimon, Yoshino comments that all that seems to have changed is his colour.

* Heroes' pilot was an hour and a half long, and many of the "lost" scenes and characters that didn't make it into the premiere were recycled in modified ways (the Terrorist character of The Engineer was changed to the neurotic Ted Sprague, for instance).
* Grand Theft Auto V personality and weapons-grade abandonment issues.
* Hat Films due to the dissonance between real-life injury and virtual injury:
* Good Omens, who played Aziraphale, admitting that he read slashfic as inspiration for his character and played him as though he were in love with Crowley. Since then he has been an immense shipper ally, and has retweeted shippy fanart and even slashfic.
* Guardian Ghost, although the living half of the main cast got revived from their own deaths, so they could count for this too
* God knows how many Naruto trope. The key distinctions are abilities like save/load, checkpoints or outright contact with the GMs.
* Great whites, of all things, are not particularly bad as far as large predatory sharks go. While giving them a wide berth is mandatory unless you are
* Hank gets caught in a tornado holding on for dear life to a telephone pole as the wind tears his clothes off piece by piece until he is fully nude. When he finds himself in the eye of the tornado with only a few seconds to get to safety, he's too embarrassed to let anyone see him naked, but the only two objects near him that he can use to cover himself are a large Texan flag and a small potted cactus. Being the proud Texan he is, he chooses the cactus rather than sully his state's flag.
* Happy Tree Friends: In "Sucker for Love", Nutty's obsession with a heart-shaped box of chocolates on display in a candy store window causes him to imagine himself marrying the box, making it breakfast, riding with it in an ambulance as it breaks water during its pregnancy (implied by the bulge in its center), and having three small boxes of chocolates as his children. Then he finds the box cheated on him, discovering the affair after seeing Lumpy (who's now a milkman) leaving their house with chocolate smeared on his lips. A quick scene shifts to Nutty in jail, where it's implied he killed Lumpy out of jealousy. When he walks in the visiting area, he meets the box of chocolates (now sporting a scarf and pair of glasses) with a dent on its side (which he may have caused after beating it in his rage from its affair with Lumpy), and expresses to it his regret for treating it. After his release from prison, they both live happily together until their old age, when the elderly box of chocolates dies by falling over and spilling its contents. Before returning to reality, the elderly Nutty stands in the rain, mourning over the box of chocolates' grave.
* Hard Being Pure is a talking rat taking his job as a doctor quite seriously.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Snape enters the Shrieking Shack and remarks to Sirius and Lupin, "Listen to you two, quarreling like an old married couple."
* Guilty Crown. While he had three, though the third was rather ambiguous and she survived at the end.
* Haibane Renmei are born looking like normal humans, until their wings grow during their first night in the town. Having a pair of wings explode out from one's shoulder blades is about as painful as it sounds.
* He Knows Too Much: Someone gets killed for knowing too much about something that was supposed to be a secret.
* Goblins are often used to comical effect for their sheer stupidity (as the flavour text on most goblin-related cards shows). In the Mirrodin block, we're introduced to Slobad, a goblin who was outcast from his tribe for being
* GURPS suggests, as an optional rule for "realism", representing this by starting the characters out with the Reluctant Killer disadvantage and then letting them buy it off..
* Hercules alone wasn't enough for several of his Labors, so he had to use his brain alongside it. When he found out that the Nemean Lion's hide was impervious to weapons, he strangled it with his bare hands. To fight the Hydra, which could grow its heads back, either he or his friend Iolaus seared the stumps with a torch right after cutting them (though relying on Iolaus rendered this Labour invalid since he was supposed to do them alone). To clean up the enormous and never-cleaned Aegean Stables, he used his strength to alter the course of two nearby rivers and make them pass through (though this was also rendered invalid — see below).

* Guardians Of The Globe El Chupacabra... and the guy backs off, believing him entirely right away.
* Harry Potter are his biggest assets, but by the end of the series, he's hardened enough to hold his own in serious battle.
* Great Ship procedures that make slower-than-light interstellar travel possible.
* Harry Potter is caught; catching the Snitch is also worth 150 points, usually resulting in a win for the team whose Seeker catches it. Thus, most matches end with the Seekers in a mad race for the Snitch. However, large portion of matches still end up by a winning team winning by 10 points.
* Hack/Slash, Delilah Hack mixed the remains of the children she butchered into the food she served in her job as a school lunch lady.
* Helo was originally in love with Boomer, who was in love with Chief Tyrol. Helo fell in love with Athena, a copy of the same Cylon model as Boomer, when they were set up together by the Cylons on the planet Caprica, thinking that she was Boomer. Helo married Athena some time after learning the truth, and they became arguably the series' most stable couple.
* Having too much ammo to perform a pickup in contact with the enemy is a self-solving problem.
* Goth) never lost an opportunity to point out that in real life, she's a preppy fashionista who loves all the things the goth found phony.
* Here is such an example north of Montague, Michigan, where US 31 was temporarily shunted onto its pre-freeway alignment before the freeway was extended to the north; the shunt is still clearly visible but unused.
* Goof Troop treat him like crap, and show as many of his reactions as possible—both to immediate actions and the treatment as a whole—playing them completely straight in stark contrast to the rest of the show's comedic nature. Usually what Pete goes through can be justified by PJ episodes, and to a lesser extent Max episodes (which tend to feature PJ in major roles), but "Bringin' on the Rain" was a Pete episode that used this a lot.
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost based on the attraction, it is quite natural to have Madame Leota and her Séance Room having a role.
* Grand Theft Auto (the first game) first depicts the logo for DMA (now Rockstar North) running along a white background, and then getting run over by a car. The Rockstar logo is, appropriate to the name, brought in with the sounds of cameras flashing and paparazzi shouting.
* he), such as in one scene during the arc where he's introduced, where he stops a grenade with his foot and then kicks it right back into the throng of terrorists who threw it.
* Hard Light. Unfortunately, the weapon copies only last for a short amount of time before disintegrating and the picture used to make them is deleted as well.
* Gravitation, there's Ryuichi's Kumagoro, a stuffed pink rabbit that he treats like a person, and even provides a voice for. There's some speculation, though, as to whether this is real or simply an act put on by Ryuichi.
* Green Lantern, Hal treats Bat-Lantern pretty much the way he would Batman. He soon runs into an alternate version of his long-term love interest Carol Ferris, and they have the same strained working relationship.
* Hercule Poirot's novels and stories in depth to create a detailed written dossier that he'd regularly consult to make sure his performance was in keeping with what he thought was Christie's vision. In addition, he'd maintain the character's accent and mannerisms as long as the mustache was on his lip.
* Gran Turismo before you'd end up hitting them. If you actually do, you'll just clip through them.
* GoldenEye 007, during the second Bunker level, James is locked in a cell next to Natalya. In order to escape, the player has to use their watch magnet to obtain the key from the guard. In addition to this, the player can also get a few throwing knives as well.

* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law: X the Eliminator started out as a villain hired to steal Birdman's crest. After years of failure, X becomes an obsessive stalker, initially unknown to Birdman.
* Grow Ornament games series as the goal is to decorate a Christmas tree.
* Highlander) for the trope, as she wasn't a warrior herself. This may have symbolized that "Connor MacCleod" died there too, as he casts off his previous life with her.
* Golden Age Human Torch, android hero of WWII, is visually indistinguishable from a human being.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, belonging to the same person, who hates him. That car is the guy's prized possession, which gets repaired...only to be wrecked again.
* Harry Potter embodies this trope. She's as mad as they come, and her devotion to Voldemort is nothing short of obsessive.
* Gotta Kill Them All: A character wants to kill everyone on their list.
* Hated by the majority of the audience has to dislike this character.
* Greg Egan called "the Autoverse" somehow becoming more real than the hardware it was running on, much to the confusion of all the characters involved, as well as the reader.
* Harpy High, the wizard falls in love with the protagonists' mother, who is in a coma. He explains that he can read most of her personality through her face (laughter lines, etc) and so strongly believes that he knows her very well, despite never talking to her.
* Heart of a Dog, Bormental only meets Vasnetsova once, when Sharikov brings her to the apartment as his future wife. In the 1988 film, Bormental has a long-standing crush on the girl (she is aware of it, but her feelings on the matter are up for interpretation).
* Harry Potter) consists of any creature that can use magic and mainly uses said magic for malicious intent. Dementors are the most promenent members in the books.
* Grells sort anything that isn't a grell into the categories of food, not food, and threats.
* He's justified though, as she has a latent version of the same condition herself. So the child has a 90% chance of dying early and a 9% chance of being born physically mutated.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi episode "Tsunami Yumi", while lost at sea Ami imagines Yumi as an enormous sushi roll, because they're Japanese of course.
* Hemo Erotic. When he admits it to Dean, his brother is more than squicked out.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi has Kaz attempt this to get back into the tour bus when their cats, Jeng Kang and Tekirai lock him out. Kaz gets mailed to a bunch of other places courtesy of the cats until the package eventually returns.
* Henry Ford, who controls Detroit as his own personal fiefdom using army troops and mercenaries.
* Hexen series also has the displacement/banishment device which does the same to enemies.
* Gurren Lagann's Simon has goggles that light up so he can see his way through tunnels he's digging.
* Hell to Pay, John Taylor buys a particularly sleazy informant a glass of Angel's Urine (not a trade name) and an order of Pork Balls (serving size: 2).
* Half-Life: Opposing Force has the G-man detonate a nuclear warhead to destroy the Black Mesa Research Facility, presumably on the orders of his unknown "employers". Anyone who didn't manage to escape (read: hundreds if not thousands of Black Mesa employees and abandoned USMC soldiers) is presumably killed in the blast, or the ensuing spread of radiation.
* He freaks out whenever there's not enough food in the house for his tastes. When Jon ran out of candy bars, Garfield ran around wild-eyed and demanded that someone appoint a committee to address the crisis.
* Happy Madison Productions for his hot-headed reputation) and former NYC mayor Rudy Giuliani.
* Grand Finale to the point where Katara can barely block a single strike from her.

But thanks to Azula's overconfidence and mental instability, Katara manages to lure her over grate over water and restrain her, barely stopping her.
* Heroes) is set up to track down and lock up superpowered individuals. At present, though, the general public is not aware that they people with powers exist.
* guessing. Water is found by dowsers simply because water is plentiful and easy to find by following geologic cues.
* Hilarious in Hindsight since hats are now insanely popular to the point where they are a meme generator.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, especially in regards to Judge Mentok, who often doesn't even pay attention to his own cases — instead whiling away the moments swapping the minds of all the jury members or goofing around with the bailiff. And he's known to just declare guilty verdicts solely based on one piece of evidence.
* Godzilla vs. Gigan, the JSDF make it clear they don't want any giant monsters on human-occupied territory by shooing away Anguirus.
* Harry Potter, Harry tries on the titular victim's Death Eater mask out of curiosity and after accidentally biting his lip, it blood-bonds with him and he is unable to remove it.
* Halo: Evolutions. He himself notes in the ship's log as he takes command that any repercussions that come with this breach of military protocol will fall squarely on him alone as a result (luckily for him, the military brass decided to simply do nothing considering the gambit worked and stopped the enemy).
* Goblet of Fire, which tells you how to pronounce it, think Hermione Granger's first name is pronounced "Hermy-own", "Hermy-owny" or even "Hermy-one".
* Guest House Paradiso, when beautiful Italian film star Gina Carbonara asks if she can have her salad "undressed" (meaning without any dressing), Richie and Eddie take her dinner up to her room - both naked, save for chefs hats covering their modesty.
* Healing Factor, and heal very quickly even from massive wounds. Poor Prometheus had his liver torn out every day and grown back by the next morning. The Hydra also had this: whenever Heracles cut a head off, it instantly grew two more. One of its heads was also physically indestructible, which got it buried under a big rock.
* Gotham Central, in which her lesbianism was revealed to the readers and then the other characters, Renee Montoya definitely fit into this dynamic with her much more feminine girlfriend of the era.
* Hillary Clinton, and even contacted the blog's creators and gave them an autographed copy of a "Hillary Texts" post she made herself.
* Golden Boy. He has a ridiculously high libido and tends to get caught up in erotic daydreaming at the slightest provocation, but he can always hold his horniness at bay whenever the situation calls for it, and he will always end up putting his various love interests' happiness over his own.
* Happens to Iago when he and Jafar are walking out of their secret lair. Iago is about to cross the door/wall when Jafar has to shut it when Jasmine pops out of nowhere, smashing Iago in the process.
* Grim Prairie Tales. But there is no sign Colochez in the room, only the mirror.
* Hightown: A single young woman's murder turns out to be tied into the work of a major crime syndicate.
* Happy Days: When Chachi asks for Mrs. Cunningham's permission to ask Joanie to marry him, he says "I have to marry her.' Mrs. C freaks out, taking "have to" in the traditional way; but Chachi explains he "has to" because he loves her so much.
* Hail. Hailstones the size of golf balls can cause major injury especially if falling at high enough speed or blown about by high winds. Once hail reaches orange/tennis ball size, it is fatal to humans and animals trapped out in it unless they can find immediate cover for their head. Baseball size and beyond is even worse, in that it can both smash through vehicles and any glass (just as golf ball or higher can),
* GURPS. There's also the standard "Compel Truth" spell and an equivalent psychic ability. Again, despite the name, it only prevents victims from lying (if it works...) It does not force them to say anything.

* have to stack on the afflicted player and dispel the debuff so that the damage can be split between them.
* Heroic Sacrifice called a Final Strike, expending all their magical power and any they can draw from their surroundings in a massive detonation. When Vanyel did this, he scoured a mountain pass down to bedrock and destroyed an entire invading army. In life, Vanyel was explicitly stated to be capable of leveling cities all by himself.
* Haven't You Heard? I'm Sakamoto) who order food "and a smile" from him.
* Gods of the Fall: A group of mushroom growers ride elderly war elephants, patrolling the main road through the Dead Wood and bordering fungi fields. Many once served as mounts of Corso's cavalry before the Fall.
* GURPS makes Tenure the blanket term for this sort of job security. Interestingly, priests are given as an example of people with Ultimate Job Security.
* Gotham, Poison Ivy was a kid (Claire Foley) but rapidly aged into a more mature version of herself (Maggie Geha).
* Hel an inspirational sermon about how the protagonist lacks the strength, goodness, bravery, honesty, selflessness, and overall mental health she would need to save the world alone. So we all have to unite and to it together instead. Would make a good page quote if the song was in English.
* Harley Quinn is this when it comes to the Joker. Lampshaded in this exchange:
* Heel Face Turned. She pulls him away while Howl and Sophie are having their moment.
* Good Luck Charlie episode "Double Whammy", Amy convinces Teddy to tryout for the school mascot, due to how she herself was the mascot as a teenager. Teddy tries to throw the tryout, but being the only one to go for it, she gets the role by default. After a fight with Amy, Amy ends up in the mascot costume instead, and gets kidnapped by the rival school's team in the process.
* He even says what everyone watching was thinking: "That was unexpected."
* Harry Belafonte: Jamaican-American singer, composer, ACLU ambassador and civil rights activist; well known for popularizing calypso music like "The Bananaboat Song (Day-O)".
* Golgo 13: 142 volumes spread across 50 years; started in 1969, plus two live-action movies, one animated movie, one OVA, a video game and a 50 episode anime. Still in production as of 2021.
* Harry Potter in book six, with various characters pointing out that Snape and Malfoy had been accused in the last five books. Snape is really the ultimate red herring of the books because he acts suspiciously throughout the books and is the suspect in at least two books, but he is revealed to have been acting on the good guys' side in the final book.
* Hellcat briefly wore a Shadow Cloak during a stint with the Defenders. She eventually decided it was more trouble than it was worth and folded it in on itself until it disappeared.
* Harvest Moon for the Wii your character can order pretty much anything over the phone and have it delivered instantly, but it costs twice as much as if you went to the store and bought it.
* He was promoted for essentially doing the impossible (his training officer in the backseat, who had told him several times to eject; it's been said that, had the pilot known he lost the wing, he would have ejected right then).
* Hades Megara caught up in the middle, Hercules lying unconscious nearby, and Sora and his friends on the side rooting for Auron.
* Half-Human Hybrid: Half-Human heritage mixed with... something else.
* Golden Sun has this all over the place, although there are certain occasions where an enemy will be slightly powered up without changing the name/color.
* Greek mythology describes the huntress Atalanta as a gorgeous muscular blonde with endless suitors. However in Hallmark's
* High Roller Casino launches balls into a spinning roulette wheel on the playfield. Depending on which color slot the ball goes down, you receive a different prize: points (black), bonus X (red) or chips (green).
* Harvest Moon: More Friends of Mineral Town, proposing to the Doctor would cause him to say something like: "I can't believe it... You and a guy like me..."

* Hey, let's send a ship captain, a medic and a security chief on a dangerous, secret and politically dicey mission instead of commandos who are actually trained for such operations. Let's also make sure the ship captain we send has information the enemy wants. Nothing bad is going to happen because of this at all. While we're at it let's send bridge officers on away and combat missions instead of purpose-trained marines like every other navy in history.
* Goosebumps series. And there also was another book that featured a haunted car.
* GTA Radio: Princess Robot Bubblegum and Sword Boy are stated to be a couple, though it's stated that Sword Boy goes both ways, so not everyone thinks he's the best match for Bubblegum.
* GWAR-esque barbarian costumes (borrowed from a film they were making at the time) and running around screaming obscenities in the idea that after the audience was subjected to this, Death Piggy's arrival would come as a relief. To their surprise, many fans would stay for GWAR and leave when Death Piggy made their entrance, so they decided to play as GWAR full-time.
* Havelok the Dane; The villainous King Alsi marries his niece, Princess Goldburow, off to a servant boy named Curan, as a way to deprive her of her rightful inheritance as his brother's heir. However, it turns out that Curan is really Havelok, the lost prince of Denmark who himself was deprived of his throne. Both of them eventually regain their thrones.
* Gnomeo and Juliet and winds up falling for Nanette, Juliet's friend (roughly equivalent to the Nurse).
* great when Homer is audited in "The Trouble With Trillions". How triumphantly the agent brags about how "powerful" their computers really sells it:
* Good Morning, Vietnam where he keeps trying to start the motor of an already running jeep.
* Gravity Falls: In "The Inconveniencing", Dipper and Mabel join Wendy and her friends in raiding an abandoned convenience store that shut down in the nineties. Dipper finds an old newspaper with a headline that reads "Cheese Crust Pizza Declared Delicious".
* Harry Nilsson, another singer from the 1960s, was sometimes credited as simply "Nilsson".
* Golden Films childhood friend to be in cartoons. Jessie and Gabriella are both very touchy around each other as well.
* Greek Ninja slips from holding on to a Pegasus and lands in the hands of satyrs.
* Harry Potter and the Portrait of What Looked Like a Large Pile of Ash:
* Gosick opens with Avril telling Kujo a horror story about a mannequin that invites people that stop by store window into the store after closing hours. She, or a spirit possessing the mannequin, then consumes the victim in the dressing room.
* Happens again in Dressrosa, with the various pirates, thugs, and other mavericks from the Colosseum banding together to take down Doflamingo- though at first, it's more of a desperate race to see who will get to Doflamingo first.
* Hayate the Combat Butler is to jump from a tree branch to 'accidentally' land with her foot in his face.
* Hellboy, the Bureau of Paranormal Research and Defense which is an international agency that, as the name implies, deals with paranormal activities. Unlike most examples, the organization operates out in the open.
* Gravity Falls after two seasons to likewise avoid this problem when the show became critically acclaimed.
* Harassing Phone Call: Being contacted by someone who's either a pervert or straight-up evil.
* Happy, Texas. One of them raises the question, "Why did the armadillo cross the road?" This turns out to be a trick question, as the armadillo is roadkill.
* Half-Human Hybrid") together, and are later joined by a small, animate pumpkin dog Steven created.
* Glee with dodgeballs until he starts to bleed. This causes Kurt to change his campaign focus from fighting obesity to banning dodgeball.

* Halloweentown had "skull phones" which worked exactly like interdimensional walkie-talkies.
* Great Teacher Onizuka is sometimes this. In one example from the anime, he comes across a large bag of money (that's good), which he spends all at once. It turns out the money was the school's field trip funds, which was planted on him in order to frame him for embezzling (that's bad). He somehow manages to convince the school not to fire him (that's good), but only by pledging an even more expensive field trip which he can't possibly afford (that's bad). He then fails to earn anything near the amount needed, only to win a car in an unrelated lottery (that's good). He then lends the car to a complete stranger, with no guarantees that the stranger will return it on time, if ever (that's bad). The stranger turns out to have been hired by the person trying to frame Onizuka (that's bad), but has a change of heart and returns the car anyway (that's good). At the last possible minute, naturally.
* Heavy Time. Mining of the asteroid belt of Earth's solar system is a critical part of the economy in the 24th century.
* Hiddenverse: Witch's Tales 2's fiancee Rapunzel is terrified of frogs, so Alice decides to hide him in a cake, in the hope that when he jumps out and surprise-kisses Rapunzel the curse will be broken.
* Godzilla (1954) is the guy who flips the switch that electrocutes Godzilla.
* Grey Knights remains able to talk after decapitation due to Chaos sorcery.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Harry wonders what Dumbledore does during the summer holidays and "amused himself for a moment, picturing Dumbledore, with his long silver beard, full length wizard's robes, and pointed hat, stretched out on a beach somewhere, rubbing suntan lotion onto his long crooked nose."
* "Here I am, brain the size of a planet and they make me pick up paper off the floor. Gives me a headache just thinking about it."
* Hellsister Trilogy blushes profusely after accidentally revealing her feelings to her crush.
* Hebrew calendar, very confusing conversation between a religious soldier and his non-religious IDF commander, who thought "Tammuz" (the name of a month) to be some insult he must have misunderstood:
* Guardians of the Galaxy it seems like a hopeless prospect, something Rocket points out. However, one by one, they all do agree to stand and fight beside him.
* Hey Arnold!: Arnold and Gerald form a bowling team for a competitive league in "Coach Wittenburg".
* Grace spent most of her life in a laboratory, where she was treated as a something between an experimental animal and a
* Gravelord Nito is effectively Lordran's Grim Reaper. He has a skeletal theme, only Nito is a giant skeleton wearing armor made out of
* Harry Potter and how to deal with it after the obligatory freak out. And you know, deal with being a slave (cough Servant). He also has to hide his scar, because other people freak out when they meet Harry Potter too.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets Harry throws Lucius the diary wrapped in an old sock, thereby freeing Dobby.
* Guardians of the Galaxy As a bonus bummer, the long time he spent in the tube has damaged his body so that he needed a full-body life-support suit to survive.
* Here. There's a TV version of this commercials where the M&Ms, instead of being mad at the audience member for interrupting the movie with their cell phone, they're mad at the narrator for nonchalantly mentioning the movie they're starring in isn't even real!
* heavily overpowered one if you've got Broken Steel installed.) This may be tied to the oddities of his transformation; he's one of the very few to fully hold on to his sanity and morality.
* Guards! Guards! has a dragon who is appalled by humans, not because they kill (dragons kill all the time, and are expected to do so), but because of the ways humans try to justify it.
* Harry overhears what he thinks is Hermione and Susan talking about sex, when they're really trying to decide on the cocktails to be served at Ginny's birthday party.

* Gunslinger Girl and Tosca. On the other hand, all of this culture has little effect on Rico (probably due to her handling) and Angelica can't remember anything anymore. The "cultured" in Henrietta's case was a side effect of a more pragmatic notion, though: if memory serves, Jose ordered her to play violin partly to improve the sensitivity of her fingers, which was lower than expected after the cybernitization surgery. He could, of course, have picked another, less cultural exercise for her, so it wasn't an entirely unexpected side effect, either. Triela, Claes, and Angelica, on the other hand, have had very educated handlers who treated them like their own daughters, hence the culture.
* Good Girls, the three women have to smuggle a package from Canada into the US for gang leader Rio. It turns out it's counterfeit money disguised with gift wrapping paper.
* Hellsing. He felt like stopping out of nowhere in 2007 but Young King Comics did not declare the series as finished or cancelled. If it ever comes back to serialization, the fans will probably have forgotten about the series altogether.
* Heath Ledger in Joker paint instead. Sting reportedly does not like to be a Heel and prefers to be a Face; this preference and his drawing power are likely why few have even tried to turn him over the years.
* Gravesite begins to care more about his script-writing than the actual Warr or his soldiers, causing
* Guild Wars 2, Warriors or Guardians who equip a hammer will get a skill that does this (called "launching" in the game). It's about as satisfying as it sounds.
* Gorillaz that Murdoc smells "like halitosis on toast". More recently, 2D declared that Murdoc's singing sounds "like someone treading on a duck".
* Heat Guy J (ordinarily by taking pictures for a small fee), she feels she has no other options. So she rides her pet donkey up to a nearby bank...only to be stopped by Daisuke.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: When asked what gender New Zealand was, creator Himaruya had the character reply "Which do you think I am?" The series has made use of gender confusion for running jokes before, so it's very possible he's just setting another one up.
* Harry also managed to give psychic-birth to a spirit of intellect "fathered" by the psychic coppy of the (female) Fallen Angel Lasciel, although this isn't exactly a normal situation.
* Hades' lover Maria wouldn't have been killed, Hades wouldn't have cursed the Oracle, Luke's mother wouldn't have gone insane trying to become the new Oracle, Luke wouldn't have tried to bring back Kronos, and there would have been no decision for the kid in the prophecy to make in the first place.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Harry is not old enough to enter the Tri-Wizard tournament, and doesn't even try to enter, someone else puts his name in the cup as part of an elaborate scheme, but he ends up actually WINNING the tournament, and going above and beyond the call of duty.
* Gold in particular worships at its altar. His are so blatant that mental objections fill the panel when he acts like he planned it all along.
* Godzilla: The Series is able to run incredibly fast for a creature of his size; he's able to keep pace with vehicles on the Brooklyn Bridge; which means he can go somewhere around 50 miles an hour or more.
* Heroes, Hiro starts speaking in just fanboy references after getting his memories jumbled up. He's just about to be committed to the loony bin until Ando realizes that Hiro is attempting to tell him something and pieces the references together.
* Hellsing, creating living, tangible shadow monsters (or transforming into the same).
* Hange Zoe is one of the rare flipped versions, usually being very warm, kind, and easygoing. But when the situation calls for it or the stress is becoming too much for anyone to bear, Hange quickly becomes cold, harsh, merciless, and prone to violent bouts of anger.
* Greek Mythology, the White and Red god of victory and honorable combat.
* .hack series are usually sent into a coma in the real world, and are temporarily knocked unconscious at the very least.

* Gullah Gullah Island was dedicated to Philip D. Garcia, the original performer of Binyah Binyah, who was killed in a car crash in early 1997.
* Godzilla: The Series, to a swarm of ants big enough to uproot and carry a tree.
* Harlan Ellison). It was originally announced for 1973 and Ellison claimed he was eventually going to release it until his unfortunate passing in 2018. Its fate remains unclear.
* Gunthany!"), then seriously, that Gunther would in fact be a better match for her friend. This time, however, Tiffany doesn't take the bait. This could be an example of a subversion, such a thing might add some variance to the page, no?
* Highschool of the Dead. He's actually very good at handling the weapons he gushes over, he just didn't expect to need these skills in real life in order to fight zombies. He is often told that some of the things he claims (like being trained by Blackwater USA during a trip to America) make him sound like a manga character.
* He does this again, where he goes to get the Cupid's Arrow Orchid for the garden.
* Great Teacher Onizuka as a basic condition with the apparently normal people simply using coping mechanisms which just don't stand out as much... for the moment.
* Guild Wars 2 for their main methods of warfare. The dedicated infantry of the Blood Legion often deride the Iron and Ash for relying on crutches (technology and stealth/deception respectively) and only change their mind about individuals from those Legions who prove themselves in combat.
* Halo. 343 Guilty Spark hypothesized that the Ark would be in one, but was proven wrong.
* Hedley's "Don't Talk To Strangers" is about a man who has sex with a woman. The morning after, he realizes that she's twice his age and old enough to be his mother. He literally went to school with her son.
* Hero-deities, for former mortals who have just recently (in divine terms) begun their ascent to godhood through exceptional endeavor
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas: CJ's age is never specifically stated, nor hinted at. One would assume he was at least 18 in order to travel to Liberty City on his own, although it isn't entirely impossible to run away from home as a teenager. Since the game allows the player to enter bars and strip clubs, CJ would have to be about 21 at the very youngest during the events of the storyline.
* Hikaru no Go ends after the Hokuto Cup, with Hikaru becoming even more determined to continue playing Go — which he has pretty much been doing throughout the entire series. His rivalry with Akira, as well as his goal to achieve the "Divine Move" that his former mentor had been desperately aiming for are never resolved.
* Gremmy Thoumeaux summons a giant meteor to crash down on them. Fortunately, Kenpachi destroys it in time
* Happens repeatedly in "No Weddings and a Funeral" (always to Klaus, because no one really notices or cares what he's saying)
* Growing Pains when Mike is telling his parents what grade he got on a test. He begins with "I..." and Ben blurts out, "An 'I'?! That's worse than an F!" (it turns out it was a more typical grade (a C or a D).)
* Godzilla (2014), everytime Ford Brody is with a group of people, he tends to be the sole or one of the few survivors.
* had to be attacked for this to work, and due to its tiny size, it would also be killed easily.
* Hank the Cowdog series was originally written with adults (particularly those who had worked on ranches) in mind. The books became incredibly popular with children.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn and it's in the beginning of the game, but it's anticlimatic due to Garet and Isaac assisting you with their strength and summons, allowing you to win the fight in just a few turns.
* Gordon Freeman brings this up regarding the development of the atomic bomb, and how the scientists pressed on despite fears that it would "catch the atmosphere on fire and burn up the whole planet". In reality, they had already determined that this was impossible by the time they actually tested the bomb.
* her; in her memoirs, his relative Princess Zita from the Habsburg clan wrote that she heard him say "Nobody will ever know how much I loved Sisi".

* Hell' personal kennels in the deepest pits of Hell. They also share a deeply inimical relationship with another kind of infernal animals, the hellcats.
* Green Acres, parodying both himself and then California governor Ronald Reagan. He later portrayed the unnamed state's governor who would host marathons of his own films on a local TV station.
* Henry VI Part 1 where Suffolk first meets Margaret is of this form. For the first half of the scene, Suffolk soliloquizes while Margaret tries to talk to him; for the second half, their roles are reversed.
* Halo structures of Requiem are as perfect and clean as the day they... appeared.
* Half-Blood Prince, Harry and Dumbledore risk life and limb, and give Draco the opportunity to invade the school, to get their hands on one of Voldemort's horcruxes. Dumbledore dies, Snape betrays them all, Neville is seriously hurt, and Bill is permanently scarred. And then the Horcrux turns out to be a fake; the real one was stolen years ago. Sorry Harry, but your Horcrux is in another castle.
* Half-Life 2 are a rare serious interpretation. The sphere stores dark matter plasma for the Combine and is relatively safe so long as it remains confined in a storage device or generator. If released, it accelerates rapidly and smashes about before exploding; organic matter is disintegrated on contact, vaporizing the victim into thin air while floating them upwards due to their mass being canceled out by the process. Especially notable as the Combine doesn't use it merely as a portable power source but actually weaponized it as the grenade launcher-equivalent on the Pulse Rifle.
* Hell Girl. It doesn't go over too well and even before then, Ichimoku Ren and Honne-Onna leave.
* Grace has darker skin than any of the main cast, but her human ethnicity (and her "father's") has yet to be officially determined, though the texture of Dr. Sciuridae's hair implies African-American ancestry. Seeing as Grace is an shapeshifting
* He repeatedly justifies that everything he is doing was for Lois's sake, including wanting to bring an alternate Lois to his universe. When Prime!Superman confronts him and says how horrified and disgusted Lois would be of him, he instead claims that she would be alive.
* Happy Gilmore uses to defeat Shooter McGavin is definitely awesome by analysis.
* Henry and Beezus, Henry is being teased relentlessly by friend and stranger alike after winning $50 in beauty treatment coupons for a local beauty salon in a raffle at the grand opening of the new hypermarket in town. To divert attention from this fact, he accepts a vendor's offer (earlier in the chapter) to taste dog food.
* Harry Potter, when the Weasley twins test their products on unsuspecting students. These candies cause anything from mild illness to turning the person who eats it into a canary. Eventually, they develop Skiving Snackboxes, so that students can take one to get out of class, since they will cause you to puke or develop boils, etc.
* Goosebumps, where a camera would predict misfortune in its photos and make them happen. Worse is that it gains its power by being inhabited by a gremlin that can jump from the camera into other electronics, like a camcorder, VCR, and computer...
* Harriet Bree of Atlas' "Ace Ops" team has Super Speed as well. Hers in particular
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince to get Harry to save her, and that was back when she was simply his best friend's sister. He wants to keep her safe by cutting off a romantic bond that would make her a greater target than before.
* Helena Bonham Carter started off playing Bellatrix Lestrange with a posh accent, which gradually evolved to become more Cockney-sounding. Carter's explanation is that Bellatrix is just so weird that she transcends accents.
* Highway Blossoms considers Mariah a nuisance, as a rude, hard-drinking and immature woman.. Mariah's case is a mixture of Seniority (she and Joe have known each other a long time, perhaps even longer than Tess has been alive), Supervision in Joe's case(since as he puts it, Mariah "needs someone to look after her") and Caring (because Mariah has a few moments in which she shows she really does care).
* GURPS Fantasy Tech be used by someone with the wildcard skill Katana!; in the hands of an ordinary swordsman, it's just a katana.

* Granblue Fantasy as the Coop Quests are made for multi-party battles, and it would be difficult for a beginner to fight these mooks alone.
* Haegemonia: Legions of Iron doesn't explain anything, since it lacks a campaign mode.
* Heroes of the Storm, which increases the damage dealt to enemy heroes by 100% (which can be decreased if certain abilities are chosen). It can also be increased by choosing the ability that causes it to increase every time an ally dies.
* Gravity Falls rug (door hidden behind a non-revolving bookcase) and the many rooms in the basement (path hidden behind a vending machine).
* Gravitation remixes... each more explicit than the last. Plus Gamerz Heaven.
* Heralds of Valdemar novels, a group of real mages make their way across an enemy country by pretending to be a group of stage magicians in a traveling show.
* Grey Wardens are a variation. In their day-to-day work, they mostly kill darkspawn, who are
* Grimm nest when Salem starts talking to him through one of her Seers. His response is a quick "Nope." as he bisects the creature.
* Goku strips naked in the middle of the street to get changed out of his torn clothes, right in front of Upa, Krillin, Yamcha, and Puar. Both Yamcha and Krillin yell at him to put some clothes on.
* High School Of The Dead, a map of the globe is shown with red being the zombie infection spreading from Asia to Europe and the Americas at a fast pace.
* Hey Arnold! The Jungle Movie, unseen dream where he woke up and it didn't happen.
* has to happen, because 800 years (30 generations or so) ago there would have been 2^30 ... over a billion ... slots to fill in your family tree, and only around 400 million people on Earth to fill them.
* Heart of Darkness, featuring Andy the kid genius. Among his inventions are a cobbled-together interdimensional vessel, a plasma-gun and a control-helmet made from a colander.
* heretics, which isn't exactly heresy even if the Temple called it that). The Tribunal Temple also persecutes the Nerevarine Cult as heretics (technically they are, just not really of the Temple, seeing as they developed in parallel in response to the same event and from the same source religion. It's actually the Temple who made the most radical changes of dogma, the Nerevarine Cult just explained away the new gods as false gods and added in a messiah figure). Both of those change towards the end of the main quest, with the Dissident Priests acknowledged as having had a point with much of what they said and the Nerevarine Cult recognised as being right about the messiah figure thing, both by one of the gods of the Tribunal himself.
* Harry Potter is frequently — make that at least once every book — described as looking like a miniature copy of his dad James, only with his mother Lily's green eyes. When Harry encounters the young James inside a memory, he finds experience uncanny, comparing it to looking into a mirror, but that finding some that details are just a bit
* Hela who can slaughter entire armies single-handedly and without even breaking a sweat.
* Hamburger Hill has this as a point of contention, fitting with the anti-war movement. A lot of the soldiers we see are met with nothing but hostility by anti-war Americans, who do things like throw bags of dog shit at them, harass a bartender whose son died in Vietnam, coerce another soldier's girlfriend to stop writing to him because his service is "immoral", and even praising the North Vietnamese Army as "heroic" and calling the US soldiers "Evil." One character even signs up for another tour in Vietnam after coming home to nothing but hostility.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, Birdman became addicted to a tanning cream that gives him massive boosts of energy because he's solar powered. It showed him selling all of his stuff to get more and end up getting a sort of intervention.
* High-Class Gloves went out in public with bare hands (or arms, if they were wearing short-sleeved, low-cut evening gowns). Daytime gloves often reached the elbow when worn with short-sleeved dresses or jackets, and evening gloves could go all the way up to the shoulder depending on glove style and/or wearer preference. White kid leather was the preferred color and material, particularly for the most formal outfits, but gloves could be worn in a rainbow of colors and materials with less formal gowns and daytime outfits.

* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban when the main characters find an adult sleeping on the Hogwarts Express:
* Halo SPARTANs are able to physically even match the Elites and Brutes.
* Harry uses "The Song That Never Ends" as part of a ward scheme designed to discourage upper-year Slytherins from breaking into first year students' rooms. After the students in question are freed from it Dumbledore comments that he still occasionally whistles a tune he heard at a Muggle circus fifty years ago.
* Harry punches a wall after he breaks up with Ginny and she spitefully comments that she's been concealing her pregnancy for the last nine months and isn't going to let him see his own daughter.
* Gold Digger for everything except attacks by another were, silver, magic, and Dwarven Steel.
* Hells Paradise a garage full of propane explodes a few feet behind Keane. He gets up a few seconds later, coughs up blood, then continues on his way.
* Half an Hour 'Til Lunch at the Black Priory" is set at the magical equivalent of a computer help desk, and also includes a kind of smartphone created by holding a small scrying pool between two plates of glass.
* Happy Heroes the one who dies instead of Kalo, who is now the one trying to get over his friend's death. Happy S. realizes that the story implies that Careful S. wishes he were the one who died instead of Kalo.
* GodzillaFinalWars - the titular kaiju is released to single-handedly fight off an alien invasion.
* Highlander the camera zooms across Madison Square Garden, over the heads of the crowd, until finally settling onto MacLeod's eyes, which are lit in this fashion.
* Happens to Provenza and Flynn in episode "Layover", when they allow two stewardesses they are arresting to use the bathroom before taking them down to the station. To add insult to injury, the stewardesses then steal Provenza's car.
* Gorillaz song 'El Manana', 'El Mañana' (The Tomorrow). It has no awkward Spanish meaning, however; it just sounds silly, not to mention the fact that it was done so because their keyboard had no 'ñ'.
* Grand Theft Auto V, but he's left the mob and now works in show business.]]
* He also keeps supplies - disguises, forgery supplies, fake diamond rings, etc. - in several stashes spread across the city.
* grants immunity to Armageddon to the hero's own army. The stats provided by the Blade make casting Armageddon even easier too.
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger tropes allows him to notice when something happens during a battle that leads to the heroes winning, cuing the team to start turning the tables.
* (he almost exclusively used his personal Twitter account to make public statements rather than the White House's official @POTUS account); another involved Congresswoman Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez. Both cases deemed that, as they were using the Twitter accounts in an official capacity, they could not block users from their posted content as it impedes their ability to hear about it.
* He eventually sides with the Continental Congress, with White New England surrendering to him after they defect to the Red Oak Pact. Post-war, Maine (which now controls most of New England east of the Connecticut River) enjoys a great deal of autonomy within the Third Republic.
* Grandma Godai had a pair of these when she was younger and chose the poor one. However, she tells Kyoko to go for the rich guy since the poor one will only give her a life of misery.
* GoLion. Cue the ensuing war to take his place, and the billions of resulting deaths.
* Highschool of the Dead When she undoes them, her hair reaches halfway down her legs.
* heard of the Dark Powers, theirs remains a minority opinion. (Out of character, it's left up to the DM to choose.)

* Hannibal by Thomas Harris, a psychologist attempts to explain Hannibal Lecter's attachment to Clarice Starling; his patron, Mason Verger, impatiently asks, "does Lecter want to fk her, kill her or eat her?" The psychologist replies, "probably all three, although I wouldn't want to predict in what order he wants to perform those acts." This quip is reproduced, more or less faithfully, in the film version.
* He has had notable success, perhaps too much to be considered the Casanova Wannabe; besides the Daxii, there's a long-but-not-deep relationship with
* Heavenly Blue: Divinity or holiness are associated with blue due to the association with the sky.
* Hap and Leonard is a drama series based on the characters Hap and Leonard, created by novelist Joe R. Lansdale and adapted by his series of novels of the same name.
* Gotham: After Oswald Cobblepot realizes that the Riddler no longer has the intelligence that made him a threat, Oswald chooses not to kill him commenting that now that he’s “plain old Ed Nygma” he is no longer worthy of his attention.
* Guardians of the Galaxy (and who also communicated solely by saying "I am Groot!"). When Groot helped free one test subject, a young human girl, Groot was seen as a traitor and banished from his homeworld.
* Harry develops into this by the time he's around 14/15 after a growth spurt or two, and
* He hires the "Singing Chocolates" to give Gandra Dee an enormous amount of candy:
* Good Luck Charlie to Teddy that just because he doesn't like her doesn't mean there's anything wrong with her.
* Heavy Rain, the protagonists' child watches the same short nonsensical mime and music for hours.
* Happy Days. Not as bad as some examples, but his parents seemed overly gleeful to give him money to get away from them; likewise, they dumped him with the Cunninghams to get away from him; and, after his dad said something angrily, Potsie expressed that he was just glad his dad was talking to him again.
* Green Lanterns can navigate black holes and emerge from white holes.
* Hans the Hedgehog": The daughter of the first king bears the brunt of Hans' revenge for her father's not keeping his promise, in which she played no direct role. Hans violently assaults her, accuses her of deceit, and sends her home disgraced for the rest of her life, but no further punishment befalls her father.
* Go Animate over time thanks to this trope. Originally, the grounding videos were more or less parents grounding their kids and not really liking it at all. However, as time passed on, the grounding reasonings got more and more ridiculous and, thanks to people like Issac Anderson, the creator of "Punishment Days", became more violent, with the characters changing to fit the mood.
* Hawkeye, Trapper John, and BJ tend to mockingly salute Frank Burns. Played For Laughs most of the time.
* Good guy Mugen receives a scar (well, three parallel ones) on his cheek from an enemy with knuckle claws in the three-part finale of
* Hamilton, Madison is seen crying after the events of "It's Quiet Uptown."
* Heathcliff & the Catillac Cats Mungo finds a cat genie in a bottle in the junkyard. The genie is a jerk and knowingly let Mungo (who is, let's say, mentally challenged) waste his wishes with wrong phrasing.
* Green Lantern, can open any lock, and has used it to save children trapped in safes. The fact that he cannot help but open any lock he's within a foot of no matter how foolhardy it is and how much he doesn't want to is a pretty big downside, but while it has mostly ruined his ability to hold a job it's also saved his life and others.
* Hero of Another Story," sipping her hay shake and looking barely interested while a magical deathmatch was going on. You can bet that in the longer fanfics about her, this is mined for all it's worth.
* Guy: Double Target has Heel as the warden of the Prison Planet Geo in which women are used as sex slaves for male prisoners as a reward.

* Goats a plot, revolves around the heroes trying to fix the buggy software code which the multiverse runs on. If it's left unfixed, all of existence will crash on December 2012.
* Hedgehog-san, jokingly suggested that "Sonic's new friend Mr. Needlemouse" might be a playable character in the game.
* Green Arrow sports one fairly often. Of the moustache-and-goatee variety. It is magnificent, if detrimental to maintaining a secret identity.
* Gravedale High: In "The Grave Intruder", one scene has Gill do the bunny ears prank to Frankentyke when the two are photographed.
* He was much less rigid with this in the original trilogy, and could sometimes even turn an eloquent phrase here and there (like "Once you start down the dark path, forever will it dominate your destiny!" or "do or do not, there is no try"). It mostly comes in during his first few scenes, when he's using
* Gunnerkrigg Court: Kat and Paz appear to be this for each other. At one point, Paz mistook Kat's compliments for flirting, which led to a fairly awkward moment at the time. But later we find out that this caused Paz to realize she actually likes Kat. So Paz asked Kat out... and Kat said yes.
* Heathers, these are the school colors. This means the antagonistic cheerleaders wear red and black.
* Gratification and serve to resolve positively without adding anything of consequence to the story.
* God as a story of people fighting for good and triumphing over evil is a large part of his Faith, and Sanya simply seems to belive in doing good and helping people.
* Gold Digger as Leprechauns defending a vault full of gold. Their title mecha is about six feet tall when combined.
* Good Eyes, Evil Eyes: You'll know who's the hero and who's the villain by the shape of their eyes. The narrower, the eviler.
* Godzilla fandom that just love to ship Godzilla and King Ghidorah together, despite the fact that they're both archenemies and giant monsters.
* Highlander: The Search for Vengeance. Technically, it was only the girl who reincarnated, since the guy was immortal, but same idea.
* H.Bomberguy", where he points out that whenever there's calls on social media to boycott a particular company or brand for their practices, the resulting publicity inevitably means that brand is given attention.
* Grand Finale has a more serious one, where Fran tells Gracie she has style and flair. Gracie responds she learned it from the Nanny.
* Henk Rogers, co-founder of The Tetris Company, regrets lending the * Hard Target, Chance drops a primed hand grenade down Fouchon's pants and then tosses him away.
* Having been trained by Carnelian and the other Quartzes since he was five, Steven/Rhodonite in
* Guns N' Roses, a song about a man on his deathbed embracing his own death. It's interspersed with a beeping ECG in time with the percussion. Naturally, he flatlines at the point where he realizes he's actually afraid of dying, as indicated by the long beeeeeeeeeeep and all the medics calling a Code Blue.
* Hey Arnold! when Mr. Hyunh's new boss comes over for dinner after mistakenly believing Mr. Hyunh has his own family. Arnold and the rest of the boarders decide to pretend their Mr. Hyunh's family to impress his boss enough to give Mr. Hyunh a promotion at work.
* Harry Potter. To be fair, even disregarding the number of near-death experiences, hairs-breadth-escapes, and hideously one-sided battles Harry's had to face, you can't blame the adults for trying to prevent him from getting blown up or having his soul sucked out.
* "Green Isn't Your Color": Fluttershy makes it big as a fashion model, and Rarity is jealous, but trying not to show it and being supportive so Fluttershy can have her chance to shine. Meanwhile,
* Guilty Gear: Sol Badguy's stage takes place right next to the decapitated head of the Statue of Liberty.

* Granblue Fantasy has Djeeta blaze through the same plots Gran took the whole season to finish and accomplish near all the classes, with just enough time to have fun with her crew and team up with fan-favorite characters.
* Grey-and-Gray Morality it uses viewpoint characters who pretty much all have both flaws and things you can admire them for.
* guests, it can look like this trope when a bobcat pounces on a live chipmunk that scurried under its fence or a polar bear drags down a goose that unwisely paused to rest on its exhibit's moat.
* Godzilla vs. King Ghidorah has a dub for VHS and a dub for the Universe Laser DVD.
* Higurashi: When They Cry while Rika wears a collared shirt and pleated skirt with suspenders. Their school is a rural schoolhouse that's so tiny (all years from elementary school through to high school are in a single class) that neither of the two teachers working there care to enforce anything beyond a loose dress-code.
* Hamlet decides to kill Claudius early on, but spends much of the story fooling around and killing other characters. He finally does it near the end (and if Laertes hadn't imposed a half-hour deadline in the last scene, who knows whether he'd have done it then, either). Part of the reason for this is given as him waiting until he's absolutely certain that Claudius is guilty (reasonable enough, although that doesn't really explain why he needs to also fake insanity) and then refusing to kill Claudius at prayer after said guilt is established (as that would mean Claudius would go to heaven). On the other hand, it does take Hamlet a ridiculously long time to actually set up his plan to figure out if Claudius did, in fact, kill his father.
* He's quite put out that physics isn't working the way it's supposed to, and later forms a working theory that the gods edited the physical laws when they left our universe and created the Everworld universe, forming a personal goal to take a look at the 'source code.'
* Harry Potter, which are very large, fire-breathing magical creatures, but basically just animals. They're mentioned as being mere shadows of the Elder Wyrms discussed below — which, as it happens, is a very, very good thing.
* Great Big Sea, Alan Doyle begins a song with the wrong verse, stops singing, asks the audience for "your amnesia to forget that ever happened", and has Sean ask if he plans to sing it right this time. On the dvd you can see Darrell cuff him on the head.
* Happens in a cartoon by Swedish morbid cartoonist "Gurr"; a little girl comes up to a man and politely says that if he will "follow her into the woods", she'll give him a beer!
* He Is My Master) do use Anna's obsession to their advantage on occasion.
* Gullah Gullah Island heavily encourages children to make good choices for thenselves.
* Here There Be Monsters, Dr. Sivana's master plan fails because he wastes too much time gloating.
* Haruna sees Onii-san as a replacement for her dead fiance Mamoru in * Half-Life level where you need to bring one of the three hiding scientists to the eye scanner to unlock the front door of the building. If you decide to kill all three of the scientists, get them killed by the malfunctioning surgery saws, or otherwise let them die before the door is unlocked, you end up trapping yourself. The game will then fade out like the G-Man endings after the last remaining scientist dies.
* Hercules: The Animated Series where a temporarily human Medusa turns back into her gorgon self while the sun sets.
* Hancock's Half Hour TV episode "The Missing Page", a librarian is impressed when Hancock asks for some weighty intellectual tomes, only to discover that Hancock just wants to stand on the books so he can reach a sleazy crime thriller on the top shelf.
* Goodarz kills his long time rival and counterpart Piran, then sheds tears for him.

* Harvest, likewise set in a dark, decaying, and haunted castle, albeit without any vampires.
* Highlander a "hunter" uses night vision goggles to kill immortals in a completely dark room.
* Harry Harrison appears to be like this, then the protagonist discovers that it's a local effect sustained by feedback between mildly telepathic wildlife and the colonists.
* Google? Google remembers. And it may even have some tips on how to do it better.
* Guiding Light Abby was deaf (as was her actress, Amy Ecklund), but quickly became the love interest of one of the show's legacy characters shortly after she was introduced.
* Gourry Gabriev as well. The first time the two are seen eating together, Lina orders one of everything on the menu, and Gourry orders a smaller list in triple portions. And then they eat it all.
* Half in the Bag, Mike and Jay try to pull this off with Mr. Plinkett's corpse in order to get a government settlement through his lawyer. As the body had already decomposed to a skeleton, said lawyer isn't fooled for a second.
* Gunsmith Cats to sever the ropes holding the hostage and also hit one of the hostage-takers in the leg. Originally, the gun wasn't loaded at all, and she's such a gun expert that she knew it from the weight and called the bad guys out on it, that's when they gave her one bullet. It helped that she was not on particularly good terms with the hostage.
* her Enforcer duties but still notes that she's her mother and dear to her.
* Half-Life: Opposing Force, Shepard encounters a fat security guard named Otis with his hand stuck in a vending machine. The guard curses, going like "Stupid machines!" and asks the player for a quarter. It's possible to operate the machine with the Use key, and this makes a candy bar pop out. However, the guard does nothing if you do.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality put out when he discovers that it's no better at magic than him, and thus considers his "dark" side to be defective.
* Gone with the Wind running the US Navy's blockade, delivering supplies from Europe and elsewhere to the Confederates.
* Hand Waved the process as being a form of limited time travel; by incorporating some kind of powdered opal into the fluid heads are kept in, they create a tiny bubble in which the heads are perpetually in the time period during which they were alive. Presumably, a certain amount of cloning is involved for certain heads as well.
* Harry Potter on top of it, but unlike his father and aunt eventually grows out of it.
* Gone with the Wind has quite a lot of engagements and weddings going on before, during, and after the war. It averts all three above.
* H. G. Wells's "The Man Who Could Work Miracles" is a vintage example, in which the title character chooses to undo all the damage he's caused by willing that history re-set itself to just before he discovered his powers, at which point he'll lose them forever.
* Harry Chapin's "Sequel": "Don't ask me if I made love to her / Or which one of us started to cry / Don't ask me why she wouldn't take the money that I left / If I answered at all, I'd lie."
* Guitar Hero is by no means a crappy game, it's clear that both games are designed for different audiences.
* God of War III, oddly enough, gives Poseidon these. They flicker on and off after wounding him.
* hentai. It's a constant source of irritation for western hentai fans, and the first question usually asked whenever any hentai work is given a western release is "Is it uncensored?" This sometimes even extends to spoken words as well, leading to hilarious scenes where a woman is begging to have all sorts of excessively lewd and depraved things done to her, but the word "manko" ("pussy") will still be inexplicably bleeped out. Sometimes they even bleep out "chinpo" ("penis"), although that's less common.

* Hands Held in the Snow levels of adorable. It's fully romantic, but still as positive as ever.
* Gunbound has two. First, the mobile E. Sate has a Kill Sat as its normal attack, though it doesn't as much fly through space as hover above it's head. However, there's the giant Kill Sat named Thor that hovers above the stage, adding damage to attacks on certain turns, and becoming stronger as it deals more damage. The two of them together is a sight to see.
* Hack/Slash used a cornfield (formerly belonging to a farmer he killed) as a hunting ground, having turned it into a deadly maze. It's full of traps and surrounded by barbed wire, and nails through the stalks that rip into anyone who tries to just run through them.
* Gordon Ramsay was originally tipped for a professional football career with top-ranking Scottish side Glasgow Rangers, but a succession of serious leg and knee injuries forced him to give up this dream. He turned instead to professional cooking.
* Half Human Hybrids gain some forms of magic from their magical ancestors. Half-Celestial, Half-Fiendish, Aasimars, Tieflings and Half-Dragons are just some of the most common types.
* Gravity Falls: The main antagonist is a dream demon named Bill Cipher.
* Guardian Fairy Michel: Poyo's adult form as the Fairy of Spring is tiring to use, but very powerful.
* Hazel grew up on a diet of English boarding school stories and firmly expects this trope to take effect as soon as she arrives; it does, but mixed with a hefty dose of
* Hellboy that they died years ago. This includes the Lobster in "Conqueror Worm", a group of sailors that shares a drink with Hellboy in "The Island", and Harry Middleton in "Darkness Calls".
* half-ghost with a one human and one ghost body, especially since in canon her ghost half can be altered into a copy of her human half.
* Graffiti Kingdom. Elevators are giant pancakes and on the stage there are giant bottles of milk, salt shakers, ice cubes, snowmen, and the main areas are completely made up of shades of pink.
* Heal It with Booze: Using alcohol as anaesthesia or pouring it on a wound.
* Highlander, Hideo Koto warns Duncan about what happens to foreigners like him in Japan.
* Hawkfrost, a major character in the ten previous books had his role reduced to ominously floating around ThunderClan camp a few times from
* Gratuitous Ninja — Ninjas, like their samurai counterparts, make anything more badass just with their mere existence.
* Higher Learning: The story included a bunch of omakes later were compiled in a single text archive. Several of the omakes were an arc story featuring the adventures of the missing Unit-04, but most of them were stand-alone comedic scenes (such like Gendo ordering dozens of burritos for Rei and her clones).
* Heroes vs. Villains that he's targeted right off the bat in his tribe?
* have a minor quarrel, seeing them as astronomy enthusiasts, decides they are arguing about the origins of the moon, and imagines of their arguments out loud.
* Halo: Combat Evolved's first level involves fighting off hordes of Covenant forces boarding your ship. A later level has you and your allies boarding a Covenant ship in order to rescue your captain.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix Hagrid explains that the easiest way to identify the "gurg", or chief, of a giant tribe is to look for the biggest, ugliest, and laziest one.
* Halloween Unspectacular. There's usually another unconnected multipart story in each one.
* Go the Fuck to Sleep along the same lines but with kids who won't eat anything.
* Hermine is described as a "young girl" in the prologue (twenty-five years before the main campaign), but her actions and influence suggest she isn't literally a child. She's most likely a teenager in the prologue, though whether she's in the 13/14 range or closer to 17/18 is unclear.

* Hetalia: Axis Powers skewed towards Greece and Japan, many fans see this as more of a Type 4 triangle with Turkey at A, Japan at B, and Greece at C.
* HeartGold/SoulSilver arc, dressing up as the Johto Safari Zone owner, Eusine, Silver, and Lance... in the same page.
* Highlander was French and Canadian, hence the setting shifting between Seacouver (filmed in Vancouver) and Paris.
* Grïgnyr of Ecordia: A Retelling of The Eye of Argon: Carthena, a skilled warrior woman, turns out to also be a princess.
* half beautiful woman, half rotting corpse (as befits the Death and Underworld deity). Depictions vary as to which half is corpse and which beautiful woman. One version has the dividing line run vertically down her body from crown to feet. Thus viewed from one profile she is stunningly beautiful. But when she turns to face you...
* Guri-like one, a human built around a robot core rather than the other way around. Her outer layers are cloned human material, but her "brain" and inner mechanisms are robotic.
* Grand Finale" features the grown-up Twilight recall to her student Luster Dawn the day she moved back to Canterlot and became the new ruler of Equestria.
* Hc Svnt Dracones running the Solar system don't want that cutting into their profit margins and try to suppress it.
* GURPS bring back their dead members for burial. Occasionally subverted, though; an informal punishment for a Ranger who screws up too often is to be abandoned in the past.
* happily waits outside for Billy, he tells her he's done for today and then she releases an exhausted sigh.
* Godzilla: Final Wars heavily relied on digital effects for its depiction of Godzilla.
* Gravity Falls. On top of that, the "hint" wasn't even for the laptop's password.
* Henry VIII's test was a disappointing start to a disappointing marriage.
* Heinlein juvenile; it's clear that the Wormfaces are the exception, not the norm, and one of main duties of the aforementioned intergalactic federation is dealing with such threats before they get out of hand.
* Half-Life 2 as its condition had already deteriorated, but it slows the process enough to allow the rebels to evacuate.
* Hal Clement. Clement created a globe of the planet Mesklin and wrote the story around it, but the book didn't include a map.
* Gloryhammer is broken out of his prison of magical ice by Chaos Wizards, according to the video to "Rise of the Chaos Wizards", he escapes immediately and is fully cognisant.
* grotesquely costumed closely to make out the actors' bare skin underneath, making it clear that what we're seeing is just a really high-tech Hollywood makeup job — although whether that's the case in-universe is doubtful, especially since the gang is living in near-poverty in the Gotham City sewers.
* Hercules has had several limited series and a graphic novel dedicated to recounting his adventures in a potential alternate future, where he travels throughout space. In the course of these tales, he goes to several different worlds where characters use various epithets such as "fropp", "moogies", and "bvadlak", which serve as fairly obvious substitutes for "shit", "balls" and "asshole", or some other unflattering term for an individual, respectively.
* Higurashi: When They Cry died from a heart attack during his work. What was his job? He was a bus driver. Guess what happened.
* Gundam Breaker 3 he let him win. Will was so angry at this supposed betrayal that he temporarily quit Gunpla Battle.
* Hack-O-Lantern is about a teen manipulated his satanic grandfather into joining performing a human sacrifce.
* Haft Sang, albeit with changes - the same-sex relationship between Cam and Mitchell was replaced by a heterosexual relationship, Haley's character is replaced by a teenage boy, and her boyfriend Dylan is replaced by the teenage boy's close friend.

* Guitar pickup manufacturer DiMarzio trademarked double cream bobbins on humbucking pickups. This has caused headaches for Gibson because many of their vintage guitars used double cream pickups (which came about from a faulty batch of bobbins that didn't have the black pigment in them) before DiMarzio started manufacturing and selling them in that color. When reissuing those old instruments, such as when they recreated
* Halloween Episode) plays a prank on everyone, tricking them into thinking the pirate-ghosts have returned. Once the characters catch on to the prank, one of them teasingly scolds: "Niblet!" and everyone has a good chortle. (However, it's a bit of a subversion when you remember that the pirate-ghosts actually did kill some people, and they were nothing to laugh about.)
* Happens at a bank robbery with an almost immediate turnaround at the beginning of
* Half-Blood Prince gets mauled by Fenrir Greyback and acquires a series of nasty facial scars that are compared to Moody's.
* Happy Tree Friends keep getting put into positions of responsibility despite their obvious incompetence, among other things.
* Hags. After stealing a baby from its cradle or its mother's womb, the hag consumes the child. A week later, the hag gives birth to a daughter who looks human until her thirteenth birthday, whereupon the child transforms into the spitting image of her hag mother.
* Heroes has the ridiculously verbose "I have the ability to-", rather than just "I can fly", or even just silently hovering.
* Hayate the Combat Butler chapters sets up a confrontation between Mikado and Hayate, promising one of the rare occasions when the plot actually moves forward. Cut to the next week's chapter titled "This is the kind of manga you're reading" with Saki constantly interrupting the conversation with phone calls to Hayate about completely trivial worries, refusing to go away. Notably, there were as many readers highly annoyed at the trolling as there were those amused.
* Goosebumps, but a chain of accidents impede production and threaten to have Zeke kicked off the cast.
* Gödel, Escher, Bach: An Eternal Golden Braid. You can't tell from the weight of the book how much of the dialogue there is to go!
* Hallmark Channel actually extends its Christmas movie marathon right to New Year's. This wouldn't be a deliberate example, but since it's Hallmark, it's easily justified.
* Go! Princess Pretty Cure. In contrast, the seasons before and after these animate the finisher attacks in 2D all the way through.
* Hawaii Five-0 or off doing grunt work while the new action girl gets screen time. Actress Grace Park had a child during production of S3, so that may have affected her role.
* Heavensward storyline has the player character showing more emotion and having more dialogue choices that reflect the changes, which may be a sign of the character being one of their own instead of just a simple projection of the player.
* "Hey Arnold! when she was faking having amnesia and pretending not to know how to use a spoon, prompting Arnold to help by feeding her. Helga is secretly infatuated by this while the other kids who are watching from afar are disgusted.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Dumbledore is killed after a very tense conversation in Hogwart's Astronomy Tower.
* Gurps has a lot about this kind of story and how to draw a typical plot of this kind.
* Grand Theft Auto: "Welcome to the Land of Freedom, Bitches! AHHHHHHHHH!"
* Hero's Realm is a distinct homage that harks back to the old school Final Fantasy and Dragon Quest games and combines what they have to offer in one package. It flows together as smoothly as what an optimistic gamer would expect.
* Hilarious in Hindsight for those who remember when said tech was either very common or hyped as the next big thing.
* Highlander franchise have rules against fighting each other on holy ground and using ranged weapons to incapacitate an opponent before closing in for the kill is considered "cheating".

* GURPS) all the way to Cosmic Humor (which causes reality to mock you in the most painful way it can).
* Harbinger Down's character barely escapes with his life, and comments, "We need a bigger bucket." From then on they drag an entire tank of liquid nitro with them.
* He falls several dozen stories, screaming the entire time before landing in a water fountain. "That makes two of us."
* Half-Life 2: The Overwatch transhuman infantry serving guard duty in Nova Prospekt prison have a unique uniform; while the standard Overwatch soldiers have a navy blue camo pattern and blue optics, Nova Prospekt prison guards have yellow optics, a dark ultramarine-ish color with blue stripe and a Nova Prospekt insignia. This is also the case with Shotgun Soldiers, whom have orange optics and dark reddish-brown uniforms, but otherwise behave identically to standard Overwatch soldiers with shotguns (and in fact replaced those following the update that added them in).
* happens on 5/24/1987 when Marvin blows a bubble gum bubble that causes him to float off the ground, out his window and outside the house as a man in a bus stop looks on.
* Gravity's Rainbow features a relationship between a Russian soldier (the father of Tchitcherine) and a black African woman. Using scraps of their respective languages, the two of them develop "the beginnings of a new tongue, a pidgin which they were perhaps the only two speakers of in the world."
* Guardian title was The Manhattan Guardian, who was sponsored by a newspaper that had bought the rights to the name and costume from Cadmus.
* Hexenringe: All legends and myths known in the real world are based on actual events in Xanadan (faerie dimension) and when any legends and myths (or any story, actually) are recorded or represented through creative means, such versions appear in Märagan (Imaginary dimension).
* Green Lantern Hal Jordan returns to Earth to find Coast City destroyed by Mongul and the Cyborg. He makes a beeline for where Mongul is beating up Steel and, just like Superman, screams Mongul's name as he tackles him.
* Grojband Trina. She and Corey have an intense sibling rivalry, in which Corey drives Trina crazy by trying to get her riled up enough to write in her diary so that he can then steal it for lyrical inspiration.
* Highlander III: The Sorcerer. During his time in 18th century France, Connor was in love with an English woman named Sarah. She is reincarnated into Alex Johnson, who becomes his love interest in the present.
* GWAR song "Biledriver" has the line "kill the messenger who begs us to consider terms".
* GURPS - which turned out to be a memorably quirky acronym (as opposed to the abbreviations that most games at that time shortened to).
* Gregory Haines pisses himself after he finds out Erin killed the werewolf Kieran and she pulls a gun on him and nearly shoots him.
* Grand Theft Auto IV storyline while still retaining the humor of the series.
* Golden Axe carry bags bigger than they are. Between levels, they attempt to steal your magic potions if you have any.
* Hayven Celestia universe inhabited planets are named after the dominant species with the suffix -tec. For instance, the krakun homeworld is Krakuntec while the geroo homeworld was called Gerootec, before the sulfur-breathing krakun terraformed it and renamed it Krakuntec IX.
* Hawkeye Soammes, a character also voiced by Jack May in his appearence in
* He, She and It. An experimental robot decides that its kind shouldn't exist, so it kills its creator and destroys his lab, and then blows up itself. However, another character later realizes that she has backup copies of the plans on her computer, and could probably figure out how to build it again if she wanted to.
* Hercules (Pure Magic). Hercules' initial goal is to kill him to stop the prophecy that otherwise guarantees Deianira's death, but after winning the battle, he learns that Deianira has been taken away, leading to the true final battle on Mount Olympus.

* Higurashi did (though the final scene implies that Featherine takes them all to the afterlife).
* GURPS lie detectors that operate on micro-expressions and brainwaves have been perfected.
* Gold Coin Comics. He is willing to stand in front of Silvia to protect her, even though they met a few minutes earlier.
* Goddess Mode, Hermeticorp controls Azoth, the god-like AI that everyone relies on, which means they pretty much control everything.
* Good for the Soul", while trying to buck up Maeve, Homelander talks of how she killed a hostage taker by throwing a pen into his eye.
* GoldenEye game will have you doing this quite a bit as if you're spotted on a security camera, the alarm will sound and everybody and their brother is going to be after you.
* Glen Cook series often justifies his distaste for Morley Dotes' vegetarian restaurant menu with the argument that pigs, which will otherwise eat just about anything, won't touch green peppers or cattail hearts.
* Hates the Job, Loves the Limelight: Character loathes their occupation, but loves the attention.
* Golden Moment: The sweet tender moment in which a lesson is learned.
* Green seems to possess varying hair lengths after the beginning of the
* Grenadier, the hero, a swordsman, has a(n impractically) long katana, sharp enough to slice an incoming artillery shell in half (without triggering the fuse,) and cut a giant boulder clean in half, albeit with assistance from the heroine's pistol (four rounds to the back of the blade at the moment of contact, to propel it into the rock.)
* herself manga. Since she didn't finish regenerating after Shiki cut her to pieces, she closed her wounds with packing tape and staples. Since her pain threshold is so high, she didn't even notice any real difference until Shiki cleaned her and patched her up with actual medical supplies.
* Halo: Blood Line: Spartan-II Black-One has one, though in a variant it's actually a cybernetic prosthetic that lets her keep seeing despite the loss of her actual eye.
* Here I Stand for their own forces, and possibly other consideration from England. A similar tactic is the "Serenissima Subterfuge," where a power (normally the Hapsburgs, occasionally France or the Ottomans) declares war on Venice to give the Pope cheap control over it.
* H₂O: Just Add Water: None of the girls' parents are aware that their daughters are mermaids. In fact, some of the other kids' parents seem to be suspecting something, while the parents themselves are clueless.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, Isumi gives Hinagiku a bokken made by Masamune. It works on demons and has the usual powers a wooden sword has in anime, which is to say it can cut robots in half.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers of places known for their casinos and gambling culture.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, where Harry is in detention with Umbridge and she makes him write "I must not tell lies" over and over again with an enchanted quill which carves the phrase into the back of Harry's hand as he writes, simultaneously using his own blood as ink. Harry stares at this in disbelief as she asks him with a warning tone, "Yes?". He backs down and says, "Nothing." to which she replies, "That's right, because you know that deep down, you deserve to be punished, don't you, Mr. Potter?" Jeez, not one for subtlety, is she?
* Grand Finale (or, if he doesn't wish to give pursuit, ask them for the videotape).
* harder version of Atziri, who drops some of the best unique items in the game.
* Hand Waved as being generated by the mobile suit's combat computer for the pilot's benefit. They do usually get the bit about touching to talk right, but a few times we see characters communicating by radio when it's supposed to be jammed (although it could be one of their "laser comm channels", but those are supposed to be reserved for emergencies, while there's often a lot of chatter going on in the show).

* Half-Blood Prince, Dumbledore's late sister, Ariana, is repeatedly described to be a Squib, but later chapters reveal that she was indeed a witch, it's just that the torment she endured at the hands of the Muggle boys twisted her pysche to an extent that she could not voluntarily control her magic.
* Grand Theft Auto. It went on to become the first-ever non-Nintendo franchise to have surpassed 200 million copies sold, the fourth franchise known to have reached that milestone, and is currently the third-most successful video game franchise of all-time.
* Heavy Rain has a clean scar across his cheek. Its origin was going to be explained in DLC content that was indefinitely postponed.
* Gyro right before dying at the hands of Valentine (having realized he wouldn't win).
* Hawkgirl's energy mace (and Thanagarian Nth Metal in general, as we find out in
* Gravity Falls episode "The Golf War", the Lilliputtians offer to "elaborate through song" on how they control the balls at the mini-golf course, but Dipper turns down their offer.
* Haruhi Suzumiya that arc. Also, just as the fourth book could be considered Nagato's day in the limelight, the seventh book, "The Scheme of Haruhi Suzumiya," could be considered Mikuru's as well as the earlier chapter "The Melancholy of Mikuru Asahina."
* Hilariously this doesn't or barely works since his troops are prone to threatening him and running if the battle isn't going in their favor. This is why Lelouch turns the Black Knights into a military force because in his second major battle his troops ran. In the third major battle? They would've ran beforehand but Lelouch the
* Goblins: Klik comes from a race where every member has a "positive" that heals them and a "negative" that hurts them. Klik's positive is metal, meaning it can consume any metal item to heal itself of almost any injury.
* Greystone Valley seem to be comprised of just about every fair folk from real-world mythology.
* Grimm and ended up ripping a guy's arm off when he lost control in a fight.
* Going even further, they had assets to use from Lucasfilm's archives. For instance, during the production of Season 3 episode "Wookiee Hunt", the crew had a meeting with Peter Mayhew to make sure they got Chewbacca's appearance (while working within the art style), characterization and body language accurately.
* God is referenced as the Hand that stopped the bullets from killing Jules and Vincent in
* Halo: Glasslands. Basically, it's not just Humans Are Warriors, but Humans Can Support Their Warriors.
* Gosu. However he survived and finished his life by raising a fifth and final disciple to wreak revenge on the the four disciples that betrayed him.
* Harry Potter: The giants can be considered as such: wizards have killed many of them, and the few that are left have a tendency to fight each other to the death. They aren't built to be cooped up together, but don't have many options besides huddling together in the mountains.
* Golden Mean Fallacy: The middle of two extremes isn't always the right answer.
* Hawkins, Indiana is represented by Jackson, Georgia, roughly halfway between
* Gone", an accidentally invisible Buffy does this to a social worker (moving her coffee mug and whispering, "kill, kill...") who was probably about to have Dawn taken away. Kind of mean, since the social worker wasn't being unreasonable, she just happened to visit the Summers' house on a really bad day... which is probably every day around there...
* .hack// for its in-engine cutscenes, using higher-quality models for close-ups, as well as featuring pre-rendered cinematics that put the in-engine graphics to shame.
* Guilty Gear has this occur with Slayer, who opens his Story Mode in XX telling Ky that it is it is "customary for the king of the night to ask for permission from the protector of the day before venturing into the sunlight".
* Gravity Falls and all evidence of his brief term was erased from history.

Trembley eventually founded Gravity Falls itself (after plummeting to it on a horse), but his role in it was covered up in order to ensure that he was completely erased from history. He was replaced by William Henry Harrison as the official 9th US President (which is incredibly ironic, considering that Harrison died barely even a month into his term), and they made waste-shoveling village idiot Nathaniel Northwest the founder of Gravity Falls.
* Heck, an important part of the first few seasons is that Prue, Piper, and Phoebe didn't even
* Harry Potter giving Harry a reason to break up with Cho without having her ultimately responsible for the betrayal. It also writes out Marietta Edgecombe, the original (serum-less) tattle-tale, as well as Hermione's "SNEAK" jinx.
* Hanako Ikezawa: She seems able to keep up with the class despite her bad attendance record, although Mutou suggests she isn't a "star student," and she and Hisao find a shared interest in their mutual love of reading.
* Have I Got News for You reading the auto-cue and having to give out the awful one-liners. However that's all part of the fun of the show.
* Hercule Poirot stories revolve around murder; there is the occasional jewel robbery though.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, then to a culture with access to it the current stars are a giant pile of resources that some idiot set on fire.
* Grant Morrison also written by Morrison. They're kind of a fan of this, in case you couldn't tell.
* Hicks gives Ripley a tracking bracelet, and we then see her later turn around and give it to Newt to comfort her. But then when Newt falls down the shaft, Hicks reminds
* Golden Touch turns his daughter (and in some versions, his wife as well) into a golden statue. Not Stone, but pretty much the same idea.
* Harlem Duet by Djanet Sears is an updating of the love story from Othello. During one scene, the male character, who has recently left his wife for a white woman, both exemplifies and deconstructs this trope.
* Godzilla vs. Kong. For the first time in Kong movie history, they put him in chains that even the biggest and strongest incarnation couldn't break free from even after minutes of struggling with all of his strength. When the ship was flipped over, he had to be released manually or else he would have drowned
* Godzilla vs. King Ghidorah's middle head gets blown off in his defeat. It gets replaced by a metal head.
* Gunslinger Girl Pinocchio throws Triela through a (closed) window, only to have her smash through another window after him just moments later.
* Harry and Hermione are about to kiss when Sirius knocks on Hermione's hotel room door.
* Hamilton ultimately feels this way towards Jefferson despite despising him and not agreeing with him on anything since they are ideological rivals. This is why he
* Gunnerkrigg Court featured robots for many chapters, before it was revealed that some - if not all of them - are magitek, and capable of operating without motors, actuators, or any visible power source. In retrospect, this helps explain how Antimony - who by her own admission doesn't know the first thing about how robots work - was able to single-handedly reassemble Robot S13.
* Harry decides that his only hope of defeating Voldemort is to be more evil than him - so he studies to become a lawyer.
* Goof Troop... which wouldn't have happened if people had just listened to him in the first place.
* Hamlet 2, the plot surrounds a semi-desperate high school drama director creating a Grease-esque musical surrounding a "Sexy Jesus" (who is to be played by him). At one point, one Hispanic cast member says to his friend in Spanish, "We're going to hell for this play."
* Goodnight Sweetheart closing forever — leaving him in Post-War Britain.
* Harold & Kumar Escape from Guantanamo Bay and assumes that every person of Korean descent is a North Korean agent. Hell, he can't even figure out that Harold and Kumar's parents were born in the US and tries to talk to them through an interpreter (who wasn't even able to understand that the parents were speaking English despite their having a Midwestern American accent).

* Heat Guy J ends this way, with Daisuke leaving the city, his loved ones, and best friend behind...which comes off as a total non-sequitur since he spent most of the series talking about how much he loved the city.
* Hearthstone at the Nintendo World Store was cancelled, and many suspect it was Nintendo's decision to try to distance itself from Blizzard's controversies.
* Harper and Charlie first meet when arguing over buying food from a delivery man. Rocky first meeting aside, they prove to get along well later on.
* Go ahead and list as many transformations as you can. If you can't think up a good example, go ahead and leave an entry blank.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, Harry accidentally casts a spell in a zoo that releases a large snake from its enclosure. While the people are panicking, the snake doesn't attack anyone, it just thanks Harry and tries to go home to Brazil.
* Hard Core Fan Freaks for those devoted to following Robert Jordan's massive
* Green Eggs and Ham (2019) briefly features Lem's Kites, Snorkels and Pole-Vault Poles, which sells exactly that and no more. It is, we are informed, "Plummeting out of business".
* Hetalia: Axis Powers is that the personification of Ancient Egypt was the mother of the present-day personification of Egypt.
* Godzilla and Mothra: The Battle for Earth Battra skips the cocoon altogether, and transforms from caterpillar to imago in a flash of red lightning.
* Heart Core does this on a daily basis against her father Royce ever since that day when he forced her into a painful and permanently scarring ritual. She doesn't care if she gets denied Heartcores from humans, loses royal privileges, or gets locked into the castle dungeon. She just keeps defying and messing with him in every way possible just for the sake of getting any sort of payback at him.
* Hedwig and the Angry Inch, about the magic of radio and rock 'n roll.
* Heroes, it's heavily implied but not outright stated that Angela and Arthur Petrelli actively chose to neglect Peter in favor of battling each other with Nathan as their pawn in their individual grand schemes. This, in turn, led Nathan to become Peter's de facto parent.
* Glory makes Harmony look like a rocket scientist. She's the ditziest
* Guild Wars 2's main threats, the Elder Dragons, are mountain-sized entities that essentially restarted the world in the past... and yet the Vigil alone is shown to have enough resources to wage war against them on as much as three fronts. And the only thing keeping them from actually defeating the dragons is, apparently, their childish unwillingness to work with the spy and the scientist orders. While a lot of work is done to find the dragons' weaknesses, starve them of their respective sustenance, and build technology that directly counters their magic, it's still a relatively small number of people doing this work. In the ancient past, precursor races working together could only manage to barely protect a handful of races from the devastation. In the present, most of the world hasn't even been involved in the dragon plots yet.
* going on. She softens towards him after she helps him get to Babu Frik and asks him to come with her when she leaves for the Colonies. At the end of the film, Poe non-verbally suggests they go somewhere more private, but she declines. It's a lighthearted exchange and leaves their relationship open-ended.
* Happy! to help him win a card game by reading him other peoples' hands.
* has her She's Back manages to surpass Episode 30. That really speaks for itself.
* Gold Digger Annual #8, Gina manages to give a Laura Croft Expy an atomic wedgie.
* Hercules: The Animated Series fell into this trope when it was the day parents visited their children at Hercules' school. In their defense, Hercules would be disappointed anyway since he expected his birth parents to show up.
* HERZ -the organization the main characters work for- has one where the cast often holds meetings and reunions.
* Gourmet Girl Graffiti are in a more detailed, realistic, hand-drawn style.
* Gone with the Wind, when Gerald O'Hara is drunk, he sings a song called "Peg in a Low-Backed Car".

* Gungrave when he was a hitman for Millenion. It causes problems with his best friend.
* Hatoful Boyfriend. All along it's easier to see his contempt — when he feels it — than any of his other feelings.
* Hercules and the Captive Women, when a scene is shown with a couple of people running back and forth on the deck of a ship, Joel and the bots improvise an argument about a missing dinner roll and fruit cup.
* Gotcha about a boy who likes to play pranks on people. His sister gets her revenge by turning off the water while he's in the shower. He goes outside to turn the water back on but the front door slams shut behind him. While trying to get back in the house, he loses his towel and gets covered in gray paint. When a neighbor steps outside to see what the commotion is, he poses as a statue in her garden.
* Green Antarctica: the Tsalal discovered gunpowder centuries before the rest of the world, but never invented guns until they met Europeans, instead focusing on rockets. They also never developed ships suited for sailing the open ocean, though this was partially due to the Antarctic Current being really hard to get through, and partially because they didn't think there was anything out there, or at least nothing worth traveling to.
* Have You Come to Gloat?: The scene where someone is captured and the captor visits them.
* Happy Days episode with a Halloween theme had Joanie, dressed as Snow White, curtsying after reciting the "mirror, mirror, on the wall" poem.
* Godzilla (2014) This doesn’t apply to his father who does get killed halfway through despite looking like the main protagonist.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: With how many times "jaw dropped", "mouth dropped", and their variations are present within the story, it's amazing the characters' mouths can still work properly.
* Gulliver's Travels are incapable of speaking more than a few words to those around them due to that trope. It is unclear how much that trope affects the written language, since there they suffer another problem — they can't remember what they just read.
* Heel–Face Turn scenario) and allows Dingo's consciousness to remain in the driver's seat, though it is able to speak to him.
* Highway Blossoms, this happens during Amber and Marina's first meeting with the Trio, when they realize that Tess has a New Mexico license plate(Marina's home state) and that Mariah and Joe recently dismantled a car they found. Amber puts two and two together.
* hat at one point) and they're scattered across known space, so they don't have an independent economy to worry about, and b) information is universally valuable, cheap to transport and can be sold to multiple buyers once you've got it, so as commodities go it's not a bad one to base your business on.
* Heck, this trope generally defines Buffy's high school experience. She's constantly fighting the undead and whatnot, and gets labeled a troublemaker because she's missing so many classes and being near unfortunate events (due, of course, to helping). In her case, it eventually turns out that
* Gunnerkrigg Court: his own boss has to smash him unconscious against a wall to calm him down.
* He Who Fights Monsters: A character who ends up becoming just as bad or even worse than the enemies they fight.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony, Tony is ordered to kill several men with a supply of satchel charges. Knowing that he's drugged up and has no clue how to use them, Luis knocks him out and does the job himself.
* Grand Moff Wilhuff Tarkin has terrible luck with commanding anything. Every warship we have seen him personally command gets destroyed. The * God of War (PS4) about Faye’s death, worsening the tension between them.
* Harry Potter work this way: Sure, the LOOK like a regular two-person tent on the outside. But on the INSIDE, it's roughly a fourth of a circus tent, complete with kitchen and numerous bunk beds. And those are the ordinary-looking ones.

* Grizzly Man features real footage of two bears fighting, one of which, makes a pretty big mess during the scuffle and even slips in it.
* Hellsister Trilogy being near from D'reema right when he spoke the Anti-Life Equation. Before succumbing to the Anti-Life Equation, which destroys Free Will, Kara had just enough time to hypnotize D'Reema into speaking the opposite Equation, thus cancelling out its effects.
* Hells: After her adventure in Hell, Rinne wakes up in the hospital, her adventure seemingly a dream and quickly forgotten. The next day, she passes by several people who resemble the people she met in Hell, then she saves a little girl who resembles her friend Steela from being hit by a car. She instinctively calls the girl Steela, but the girl says that is not her name and introduces herself. Still, this causes Rinne's memories to return, then she is seemingly contacted by the spirit of the real Steela.
* heroic towards the end of the series it's Mikazuki and not Eugene who rallies Tekkadan to follow through on Orga's orders.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 2 episode 10, Big M. unleashes a flying saucer that causes people to gain ten pounds every time they say something honest, effectively forcing them to lie if they don't want to become so fat. The effects of the saucer, including the victims' gained weight, are reversed by the end of the episode.
* Hellboy (2004) on his team are massacred by Sammael clones and he can't be reached.
* Green Lantern villain Black Hand was obsessed with death to the point of necrophilia (though it's never been stated if he goes "all the way" or not).
* He also made appearances on the Argentine "Titanes En El Ring" TV show, under the name Diábolo.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try no secret, just inner mysteries towards yourself.
* High Definition. In fact, it's pretty much eliminated the "cowboy" shot, once standard in the porn business, as imitating the point of view of a man who is having sex with the woman on top with better video cameras means that those breast implant scars are really visible from that angle. It seems television will always be the exception to the rule.
* Hadestown, due to Hades and Persephone's deteriorating marriage and the heavy industrialization of the Underworld, the world above only has summer and winter, and either one can come at a moment's notice. Orpheus's quest is to write a song to fix things and bring back spring and fall, putting the weather back in order.
* Hellboy the title character is a paranormal investigator, and he frequently tracks down and defeats various supernatural creatures and threats.
* helped further ruin an already ruined economy and then awarded himself a huge pension), is seen as immensely improper to do in any advanced democracy.
* He might not have done this actually. He told Sayid to not let "Locke" speak a word, but Sayid didn't stab him until after he'd said "Hello, Sayid". If he had followed Dogen's instructions, perhaps it would have worked.
* Hakumen counts as well, as he has this reaction when Jubei informs him of Terumi's return.
* Hatoful Boyfriend versions are another story...) but people like the humor and character designs.
* Hayate the Combat Butler cynical due to his horrid childhood, especially in the manga, but simply can't help but help people he sees in need. Mostly. If he's particularly annoyed with someone (ex: The SC Rangers, Fumi) he will try to avoid getting involved with them but after getting roped into it anyway he always does his best to actually help out. Hinagiku is in a similar position, as past experience has also left her quite cynical to the point where she's more likely to snark at a villain's motives than actually be surprised. Nevertheless, she is a steadfast Ally of Justice (with a legendary sword or two to prove it) who will leap into action to protect others. Both also have a shared trait of helping others even when it would be a detriment to themselves.
* Halo has very large levels with even larger, expansive background areas that are usually blocked off by cliffs/drop-offs.

* Gosh Dang It to Heck! — replacing taboo words with similar sounding ones.
* Gregory Helms of "the Hurricane," would at times appear on WWE TV as a reporter under his own name.
* Grell Sutcliff. The men she falls the hardest for are the men who have beaten her in a fight. Incidentally, guess what her favorite color is?
* Help! visit a jeweler seeking help to remove a ring stuck on Ringo's finger - in the background, George casually pockets several bits of merchandise.
* Herbert Hoover pointed out, for the idea to have any chance of working, Allied forces would have to exterminate 25 million people or move them out of Germany.
* Heirs of Fates Again, he remains a Dragon for the whole chapter and cannot recall anything when he recovers.
* Hello Cthulhu trapped in Sanrio's Sugar Bowl. Dagon, for example, runs a fish-and-chips shop.
* Grand Theft Auto V has Michael collecting the wreckage of a submarine for the "grieving" widow of the man who was killed in the sub after she promises to make it worth his while. Upon gathering all 30 pieces (which requires you to go all the way around the island) she offers you a measly $10 and a signed photo of her late husband. Michael has the option of expressing his opinion of the suitability of this reward at muzzle velocity.
* Hank at golf. He will follow the victor around endlessly while constantly making an obnoxious whining noise.
* Grand Theft Auto IV doesn't like to be called by his old name, Florian Cravic.
* Glory Days, roleplaying game included "the Liberty", an airborne aircraft carrier that served as a mobile base for the superpowered Delta Squadron.
* heals all that ails him. Josuke suspects the chef of being an evil stand user that means harm to Okuyasu, but he turns out to be a good guy with no ulterior motive other than to help people.
* Halo 2 re-simplified the system by doing away with the sub-rank palette swaps.
* Hedwig and the Angry Inch has an animated segment for the song "The Origins of Love", and some of the flashback scenes of Hansel growing up.
* Goat gorillas are white-furred apes with hoofed hind legs and horns.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) and its later sequels/remakes had Prince Adam/He-Man. One of the things that made the double identity more plausible than most is that He-Man has a totally different skin tone and build than Adam does (In the 2021 series He-Man's shoulders are significantly broader than Adam's), so someone who's seen both would not notice a resemblance.
* Goof Troop did this with his friend PJ after he had collapsed into a covered trench behind him back-first onto a pipe.
* Harry Potter: Peeves: "Shan't say nothing if you don't say please." When Filch does say please... Peeves: "Nothing!"
* Hantu Raya that is physically identical to its master. One of the stated uses for it is committing adultery, because it can pose as the sorceror while he is off sleeping with another man`s wife.
* Gregory Maguire is his only novel for adults that isn't a revisionist take on an existing tale or setting.
* Hellsing essentially declare war on Hellsing when they openly send one of their operatives, backed up by troops from the local law enforcement, to attack Alucard and Seras, live on national television no less. Just in case they didn't get the message, Volume 4 has them send a messanger to Hellsing headquarters with a live link to the Major, so that he can pretty much say "Let's fight!".
* Halo: Combat Evolved. Funnily enough, it ended up getting ported to both PC and Mac after all.
* Hercules of playing characters who have a tendency to suddenly yell.
* Healer is this: he does jobs for people, asks no questions, requires no information beyond an objective or paycheck, and forgets whatever he does find out.
* Grim Fandango dolls, not real skeletons. Hence the oversized heads, the non-transparent interior, etc.
* He is the man who takes your best shots and laughs. He is the man who makes aces quake in fear. He is the man who defeated Ken Shamrock and Bas Rutten in legitimate fights. He is

* Happy Heroes are revealed to be in 3rd grade in one episode, placing them at around eight years old (at least mentally; they presumably haven't been revived for that long).
* "good guy", depending on your interpretation of them. This speaks volumes about the rest of the galaxy's inhabitants.
* having an idea prompted Kalinka Cossack to collapse to the ground, protesting to her father that "I thought you loved me!"
* Hawkeye that the others may be the most powerful collection of beings in the world, and he's just a guy with a bow and arrows, but they still need him.
* Half-Life 2: Gordon Freeman, Alyx Vance, Barney Calhoun, Eli Vance, Kleiner, Magnusson, and Mossman.
* Good Omens uses the "angels" (and demons) being immune to alcohol but with a slight twist: as is seen at one point, Aziraphale and Crowley can (and do) get roaring drunk, but can instantly make themselves sober again.
* Hell Night the bodies of the killers parents are in a living room hidden in the basement.
* Hell, Dave in general. Being a Knight of Time, there's a bunch of alternate versions of him from stable time loops and splintered timelines in existence at any given time. At one point, Jade looks for him with her Junior Compu-Sooth Spectagoggles (basically scrying goggles) and finds fourteen different versions of him.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, it's revealed Sirius Black, the "dangerous" fugitive, was actually following a clue to the whereabouts of Peter Pettigrew, who framed him.
* he doesn't know what the truth is (so nobody can get it out of him), because he's so paranoid that he keeps himself in a state of total confusion.
* God of War: Chains of Olympus, Kratos fights a Cyclops, which is then eaten by a basilisk.
* Green Lantern. Subverted, as each law has some basis in safekeeping the Corps, like banning relationships between Lanterns so as to not compromise their mental state.
* Hercules, for instance, just one god (though an extremely powerful one who's actually physically stronger than Thor), cuts loose and matches the Skrull Skyfather in single combat, when said Skyfather has, with his wife, enslaved countless thousands of pantheons and gods. And he's not even half as prominent as Thor.
* Gundam SEED fanfic "Chaotic Cosmos", this trope is subverted; Blue Cosmos' new leader, Cervantes, manages to convince his right hand man to pretend to be the pilot of the Freedom Gundam in order to win support from Orb (which Kira Yamato, the real Freedom pilot, saved in the previous war). Since no one had seen who the pilot actually was, all they needed was a fake Gundam so that Asmodeus could fill Kira's shoes.
* Hacktivist and doesn't feel out of place at all (helped by the fact that they maintain their British accents), and the variety of mature lyrical themes relating to politics, conspiracy theories, corruption, and anarchy.
* Great White climbs on to the yacht to escape the shark, but the fraying rope holding the boom snaps and the swinging boom smacks her head: knocking her out and knocking her back into the water.
* Harry Potter. His nickname is The Boy Who Lived, after all. Everyone just thinks that "normally, he would be dead" part.
* Guerre et Paix, Mr. Boy. In the film, his worst trait is simply being a little too obsessed with the family name.
* Grimm fanfics often seem to re-purpose the weak spot at the base of a Blutbad's spine as an erogenous zone especially when stroked (as opposed to being thumped, its original use).
* Heartbreak Ridge. At one point, he shoots at his recruits with an AK-47 — the preferred weapon of the enemy, which makes a distinctive sound when fired.
* Half in the Bag for using this trope. In the dream world, the protagonists never show signs of being hurt, taking any suspense out of the fight scenes.

* Happy Heroes is on his way to rescue Sweet S. when he runs into some clotheslines. By the time he gets to her, he's wearing all black, with a black top hat and his face hidden. Sweet S. spends a couple days dreaming about her mysterious savior, and never learns his identity.
* Hey Arnold! episode "The Journal", Arnold's parents are getting in married in San Lorenzo, and after they finally share their wedding kiss, an earthquake hits sending everyone running in panic while the two continue kissing. Afterwards, Arnold's mom asks, "I think I just felt the earth move".
* Hammerfall. Notably, several of their song titles are lifted directly from
* Heroic Comedic Sociopath (Lord Shojo). Do evil people like cats or do cats like evil people?
* Hidden Depths were revealed pretty quickly, and she was revealed to be quite smart.
* Hex has immortal witch Ella Dee. At one point, Azazeal foils Ella by cutting off her powers with St John's Wort. This has the effect of rendering her mortal, and, well, how many mortals do you know that are over the age of 500?
* Harry realizes that he does not react physically to anyone but Draco, stating that he must be "Draco-sexual".
* Goblins is broken and hellish corruption begins leaking into the mortal world, the borders of the comic panels become covered in demonic, bloody vines.
* Good Luck Charlie episode, "Duncan Vs. Duncan", Amy and Bob are in the 15-items-or-less lane with 17 items. When the lady behind them screams for them to get out of line, Amy loses her temper and scans her face with a pricing gun. Meanwhile, Bob stands by, eating a donut (he claims he was trying to get them down to 15 items). This particular instance isn't seen to the viewers, but is heard about from Bob and Amy.
* Highlander: Connor does this with Brenda at the end of the original movie.
* Going Under the Water Safely Device) mission to Leshp. They try to run away, but Vetinari puts a stop to that.
* Good Times - Goal: Get out of the projects. Resolved in the final episode by all (except Bookman). Michael moves into a dormitory. Thelma and Keith move into a duplex when his football career rebounds, only to have Florida move in with them. JJ gets his own place. Willona and Penny move to the same duplex.
* Golden Age story — the very same that first gave the Penguin's name as "Oswald Chesterfield Cobblepot" — was about his aunt coming to visit in Gotham City, and he begged the Dynamic Duo to help him put on the facade of being a law-abiding citizen because he couldn't bring himself to disappoint her with the fact that he's a criminal. The story follows with Penguin's aunt believing him to be a weapons developer for the military and that he helps Batman and Robin fight crime.
* He also shows how pirates would work in practice — they're interstellar traders who covertly supplement their income with smuggling and piracy, rather than permanent raiders operating from a secret base. All merchant vessels are armed against pirates (and because they hire out as mercenary warships) so carrying weapons isn't unusual; therefore stopping piracy involves undercover policework more than dramatic space battles.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), Trollans always obscure their faces with their scarves and hats. Because in their culture, showing faces is an intimate gesture. This is shown in one episode when Orko revisits his homeworld and flirts with his crush Dree-Elle towards the conclusion. Another episode reveals that not all Trollans hide their faces, as shown with the Trollan country of Karadania that doesn't share the tradition.
* having had enough of Fate bad-mouthing Asuna, Negi kneed the table they were hostily sipping tea/coffee (they had an argument over which was better) at and flew into a punch toward Fate's face, which he blocked simply. A Moment later when the table came falling down, Negi caught its' base leg on the tip of his finger.
* Hannah Montana episode, "My Best Friend's Boyfriend", Miley's best friend, Lilly is on the phone with her boyfriend, Lucas and tells him to hang up first. "No you!

No you!" Eventually Miley gets irritated and grabs the phone out of her hand and says "No, me!"
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 narrative and while the first one is about Quill, the second one is about Rocket. Gamora and Yondu are both tritagonists by virtue of being the second most important character in each of the two plots.
* Hand Wave why so many psitanium arrowheads, the currency of the game, are buried around the camp.
* Guy Gardner: Warrior experience simulations of the adventures of Guy Gardner and his descendants through a cybertronic inducer while visiting the asteroid museum Warriors.
* He most likely seated them into .38 cartridges with the intention of grabbing a dropped service revolver, as there were going to be plenty of those to go around
* Glee, Sue gets Brittany to give her the set list for New Directions, but Brittany has no clue about what she's going to do with it.
* has said, "Often, I get the feeling that the story is really happening somewhere and all I'm doing is trying to work out the best way to tell it."
* Hands Across the Table: Allen sends Regi daffodils, and yet, she still doesn't realize he's in love with her.
* Happy Heroes has a habit of forgetting stuff, even at the cost of easily winning a battle - it's not uncommon for him to forget to load the ammo into a weapon he's using, or load the wrong kind of ammo into it.
* God of War is a siege of Mount Olympus as Kratos and the Titans aim to overthrow the gods.
* Halloween II (1981), a trick-or-treater and his mom are shown arriving at the emergency room of the hospital where the action of the film takes place. The boy has a razor blade stuck into his gums between his front teeth; presumably it got there when he bit into an apple.
* Goofy Feathered Dinosaur: Feathered dinosaurs are portrayed as goofy, even though in reality a lot of predatory species had feathers.
* Grey's Anatomy subverted this with one patient of the week, a young man with a talent and passion for ballet. The boy's father was a burly football-loving dude... who bragged about his son "kicking the other kids' ASSES" at ballet as enthusiastically as if his son were excelling at any other traditionally masculine sport.
* Hidden Years deals with young chief Ember set on learning how to fight with a sword, like her father, until Redlance points out that that she has more talent when it comes to handling a spear and that, yes, a spear is a chief's weapon, too, citing among other examples Two-Spear. He goes on to train her, soon after drawing a comment from Pike that she was already better than himself.
* Granblue Fantasy, has a severe fear of heights because he fell out of a tree as a child. He feels that this makes him unworthy of claiming the title of the Winged King.
* Hercules My Shipmate retells the story of Jason and Argonauts. The gods are real for the characters but their physical reality is not clear.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2 ("I'll join you when hell freezes over! Dumbledore's Army!) from the book.
* H₂O: Just Add Water doesn't ever show Emma actually freezing something. She points her hands at whatever she's freezing and squints really hard. Then we get a CGI shot of ice molecules appearing (the same one is used each time) and it cuts to the object already frozen. Rikki's power is also very easy to simulate since it involves boiling water done via smoke effects. Cleo's power on the other hand does require plenty of CGI effects which is probably why you rarely see her using her water manipulation to lift objects unless they're inside the water. Also they do have a CGI effect for the girls turning into mermaids - their body turns to water and then you see them with the tails but more often you'll either just see them jumping into the water and they'll already be in mermaid form when it cuts to an underwater shot or they'll fall to the floor out of shot (with the transformation sound effect) and it'll cut to them on the floor with the tail.
* Happily Failed Suicide: You attempt to kill yourself, but you never pulled it off, and you're happy for it.

* highly This patchwork of state laws creates plenty of business and headaches for the federal court system, which sometimes has to decide which state's law trumps the other.
* Heroes of the Underground, set during the Sino-Japanese war, has a group of local resistance fighters led by their local folk hero, Dong Yi-shan.
* Heathers, J.D. and Veronica sing a song called "Our Love Is God" about destroying what they've known and building everything new with the power of their love.
* Hate Sink: Of course it's obvious that we're supposed to hate this guy.
* harmonizing of the "Ode to Joy" is a barely-reworked version of a poem by Schiller, one of the few indisputably Enlightenment poets, with the theme of universal brotherhood and peace and people coming together in joy.
* Henry V is killed when a group of the French attack the luggage train he's guarding.
* He later gets a more traditional example after pummeling Cell with his
* Hearthstone: Heroes of Warcraft has minions enter into one of these in the center of the play area.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix even though Harry wholeheartedly appreciates their courage and they eventually become more competent in later books, it’s rather hard to say exactly how much use his friends really were during the Department of Mysteries. Neville and Luna probably stumble the hardest, as the former accidentally disarms Harry during a fight and later is taken as a hostage to force Harry into surrender (after Harry had bought them an opening to flee), and the latter breaks Ginny’s ankle trying to help her, effectively knocking one of the DA's best fighters out of the battle.
* Grand Theft Auto: Liberty City Stories (late nineties, made in 2006, set in 1998).
* Harriet Owen's only major acting role was Jane in the Disney theatrical sequel
* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life about how you broke her heart and how she threw off her arranged marriage because of you only for you to betray her.
* Gunbuster carrier craft that uses mathematical computations and a load of other stuff to somehow warp the fabric of spacetime itself in order to move.
* Hades, lord of the Underworld and ruler of the dead was associated with dogs, tawny owls, and serpents.
* Heroic Dolphin: Dolphins portrayed as heroic creatures who help and protect those in need.
* Heir to the Empire , Mara Jade devises a plan to disguise Luke from Imperial patrols while they're on Myrkr: she rubs the leaves of a poisonous plant all over his face and he breaks out in hives. Now, these aren't your everyday hives, mind you; its more like the result of blister beetle venom.
* He came back, however, for "The Sacrifice", but since it was too late the result is a
* Grange Hill: In a mid 90's episode, a guy and a girl try to escape from a fire by climbing out of a window. She slips, falls to her death, her boyfriend blames the guy who was with her and spends the rest of the season stalking and harassing him. He eventually stops and apologizes (possibly since everyone was against his vendetta).
* Greg Egan are unable to alter their own past but can interfere with other branches as they like. Since all known time travelers come from branches that suffered World War II, they can't change the path of the war, but are limited to minor interventions like redirecting the occasional bomb, which don't derail their personal histories.
* Heckle and Jeckle cartoon "The Rainmakers" when a TV reporter covers the drought precipitated when Jeckle wished it would stop raining forever:
* Goblins sport something close when angered. It's not quite glow — it's their widened pupils. Big Ears on the other hand did receive these when he acquired his enchanted paladin gear.
* Hands: Twilight at one point calls Andrew an "indecisive cowardly jerk". Andrew doesn't like being called indecisive.

* Gravity Falls is an area with an exceptional amount of supernatural occurrences that is revealed to mostly be drawing from a decaying dimension of weirdness and nightmares.
* Hatou. Each of these is one of the infinite possibilities for the flow of events that didn't get determined in her world.
* Goodbye", when that song is about mocking people who are fixated on high school.
* he tears Aranea's soul from her body; a power not previously established (though his power set can be inferred by the name of his mythological role, being one of the few that have been explained outside of Fanon), and by a borderline-Creator's Pet, which justifies it somewhat, and many characters who have ascended to the god tiers display sudden and immense increases in competence involving their powers shortly after ascension without any prior knowledge or practice.
* Hikikomori by moving to another town so her situation is not known, in turn allowing her to make new friends.
* Henry Stickmin - Completing The Mission, Ellie snuck aboard the airship and exposed how Henry left her after helping him escape from the prison complex, this causes the other Toppats to turn on Henry and force him to walk the plank for his denouncement.
* Heroic Sacrifice, Ted Knight, was given a full-issue funeral with eulogies by various Justice Society members, Starmen, and his cousin the Phantom Lady, amongst others. It helped transition into the series' final story arc.
* Havenhurst, after Tammy gets dropped into the building's basement, she finds Wayne on an operating table with the lower half of his body missing, a huge cut going up his torso from the bottom, and his entrails hanging out.
* Hanyuu can pull off a menacing adult woman's voice despite being the same age as Rika. She can even pull off an inhuman voice, as she is a
* Hamilton John Adams. Even if they didn't die on stage, they were certainly all dead by the end of the show.
* Hardcore Entertainment presents: Seven Does Voyager before he can finish.
* Hate Sink, is one of the oldest examples of a character whom is supposed to be despised by the audience (due to being a narcissist and genocidal racist), and is one of the rare examples with religious significance.
* Harvest Moon: Animal Parade: Maya. She seems to be so cutesy as an adult because her parents have been, and still are, the same way.
* Higurashi: When They Cry) would; this instance of his calling out her boyish traits (unlike most other times) deeply hurts her feelings. Keiichi has to get lectured by both Rena and Shion before he finally realizes what he did. Unfortunately, at that point, the wheels are already in motion for tragedy.
* has been known to sleep with many people, even when she was dating Shining Armor that didn't stop her from cheating on him, and she slept with three other guys when she was engaged to him and even when married to him.
* Happens again in the Piccolo Saga. Only Tien was around to witness Piccolo's defeat.
* Grim Reapers, he loses his glasses and starts fumbling around on the ground Velma-style—even admonishing a brick wall that he thinks is his partner. It also happens to a lesser extent in the aforementioned OVA.
* Green Lantern who looked like a humanoid squirrel, died when he stepped onto a road and was hit by a truck. Just think about that for a second and you'll realize why it qualifies for this trope.
* Harley Quinn, the president has declared the ruined Gotham City to no longer be part of the United States, leaving it to be fought over by various supervillains.
* Hilda: Episode 9 resolves around the sibling contacting the ghost of Craigie Williams, whom they suspect took Frida's favorite book (it once belonged to him). Turns out Craigie didn’t take his old book back from Frida; his sister Engilbjort did. When her ghost is also summoned, she and Craigie get into a heated argument.
* Godzilla vs. Kong is activated, often with a close-up on his optics.
* Hanna-Barbera was still able to make beautifully drawn cartoons, thanks to Ed Benedict's brilliant character designs and colorful backgrounds despite a low budget.

* Glee. Quinn spends the entirety of the first season pregnant and is barely showing for quite a while. Even when she does grow, she does slowly and it isn't until the last few episodes when her baby bump is very prominent.
* Hellblazer. It's a wrinkled, beat-up looking khaki trenchcoat in line with a hardboiled detective or noir antihero.
* Hercules and Megara are about to kiss, when Phil on Pegasus, impersonating a police helicopter, drags him away to punish him for sneaking off to hang out with Meg.
* Greg Proops accidentally messes up when giving out the multiple choice answers:
* Gregg Turkington's comedy persona Neil Hamburger is built on anti-humor. He tells a barrage of painfully humorless jokes in an obnoxious voice, often while hacking unpleasantly between punchlines.
* Guys and Dolls" as the bickering CIA agent from New York, and the only clue is that his accent sounds less fake than the other one.
* Haircombs: For female assassins and spies, especially those who frequently hang out in social gatherings, hiding the weapon in plain sight as a cute accessory.
* Heshikiri Hasebe swung it in anger to successfully slay a man hiding inside it, hence the name.
* Have Space Suit – Will Travel between hostile and benevolent alien races).
* Heroic BSoD. She ends the season climbing out of another grave into the light, having rediscovered the value of living.
* He Panned It, Now He Sucks!: People get pissed off when a critic gives a negative review of a well-liked work.
* Heel–Face Revolving Door: Having to choose between good or bad.
* Godzilla vs. Evangelion: The Real 4-D he, Rei, and Asuka are up against.
* Grimm's Fairy Tale Classics, she ends up deeply traumatized by the ordeal.
* He can easily plow through walls Kool-aid Man style. The Midnight Crew are understandably reluctant to face him.
* Hellraiser: Revelations (who played Pinhead in every film prior) refused to have any part in it.
* Hamilton wrote the play (plus its award-winning songs) and, in the original Broadway production, played the lead role: Alexander Hamilton.
* Heat Guy J, Kyoko is dieting (read: starving herself), so that she can look good in a bikini at a pool party her crush has been invited to. She's working at her computer, and visions of ice cream and cakes come out from the keyboard.
* Happens early on: Yuki whaps Shigure over the head with his bookbag to stem his flirting with Tohru.
* Heel–Face Turn, in the same story that introduced her now-canonical civilian persona of Selina Kyle.
* Guns N' Roses' "November Rain" has two, Slash soloing outside a church and a sad Axl lying on a casket in the rain.
* Hancock, when he turns himself in to improve his public relations he is basically kept there on the honor system. This is demonstrated at one point when he jumps over the fence to retrieve a basketball and then goes right back in.
* Hawkeye also looks unscathed when he hurls himself through a window, but at least
* Grim Trigger: the art style changes to paint-y, more realistic style in horror scenes, as opposed to the usual bright cel shading.
* Goggles and the Tears. They ditch the armor after making it to Emporia on a hijacked hovercraft.
* "Heavy Metal Maniac", "Long Live the Loud" and "Pounding Metal" by Exciter
* Harbinger of Impending Doom: A character tries to warn everyone about something they barely escaped from, but they just dither until it shows up anyway
* Harry Potter, his robes end up "shining with blood", there is not a drop to be seen in the film.
* Guyver last ten entire books with little else going on. For comparison, the first book covered the hero's birth, death, resurrection, and initial defeat of the Chronos Corporation.

* Heroic Sacrifice and explode it's warp core right in the middle of the fleet.
* Harvey the Mailman appeared as a silent background extra, as his voice actor, Lou Rawls, passed away in 2006.
* Guild Wars 2 as the rest of the game. Combat also changes appropriately when underwater; you use a different weapon while swimming, which has a different set of skills than what you're used to. There are Renown Heart quests and dynamic events that take place entirely underwater, and resources, scenic views and skill points can be collected just like anywhere else. You're also equipped with a breathing device right from the beginning, so you don't need to worry about the annoyance of drowning.
* Gravity Falls that they are, if you even dare to suggest the Pines family aren't Jewish you'll be met with quite a bit of hate, even if you agree with the fans but try to bring up what the creator said.
* Heart of Steel gives us Jim Thompson, who completely flips his shit after getting torn in half and restored as a clunky cyborg and decides to hunt down not only his girlfriend Julia but also Alistair, who only repaired him in the first place because he was in love with Julia. We learn later that he was actually responsible for Julia being attacked when Jim started to suspect she was planning to break up with him.
* Heel–Face Turn: The bad guy switches sides and becomes a good guy.
* God Bless America the big difference between Chloe and Roxy is that Chloe is open about being a jerk, while Roxy is sweet and sort of polite about her utterly depraved psychopathy. Especially when she's trying to sweet-talk Frank into murdering people more or less at random.
* He also made sure to rescue and shelter the surviving crew of the very enemy ships he fought against and sank, in contrast with other admirals at the time who would take such opportunity
* Highlander is where all immortals keep their money.. Thanks to his "great-great grandfather" depositing 10,000 francs, his account holds over a million. Humorously, one time when he tried this the bank was robbed while he was in the middle of cashing out the account. So much for that idea...
* He often refers to women he's fond of and/or respects (Buffy, Nikki Wood,
* Harper's Island with a guy getting tricked into having honey smeared on his back as part of a massage, then a pillow emptied on him.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows stated that she later reversed the spell, but it still shows the length she goes to protect her family.
* Hand Wave the boss's room is protected against teleportation. Both are plausible.
* Hat-and-Coat Shot - Let the audience know that the story is over and it is time to grab your hat and coat and go home
* Hazbin Hotel, Charlie has an interview on the news to get people to come to the titular hotel. In spite of Vaggie's attempts to keep Charlie on track, Charlie doesn't really have a way to convince people to come. Charlie settles on "sing a song and hope that translates to more clientele" after her initial time goes bad.
* Guild Wars located in the elite endgame area for Nightfall, the Domain of Anguish.
* Happy Days there was a note saying "Don't close the garage door, it's broken" posted on the garage door.
* Good Bad Bugs a massive strip of land out in the middle of the ocean that denotes the edge of the game world for each continent.
* Henry Kuttner (which may have been the inspiration for the "funniest joke in the world" Monty Python joke) which was actually written during WWII was about a marching stanza in German that the allies covertly inserted into the ranks of the German soldiers which translates to "LEFT! LEFT! LEFT a wife and SEVenteen children in STARVing condition with NOTHing but gingerbread LEFT LEFT! LEFT a wife and SEVenteen children—...." and this mentally sabotaged the Germans; they couldn't get it out of their heads, and it won the day for the allies. Be warned though, if you actually read this story, even reading it in English a few times as it occurs in the story, it will play a number on your head (just how bad must it be in German)!

* heals (and speeds) allies and damages (and slows) enemies pick off the low-health sap trying to escape.
* Hallowicked: Became CHIKARA's first-ever Triple Crown Champion in 2015.
* Harry Potter trope, usually making Ron Weasley either stupid, evil or stupidly evil.
* Heart of the Swarm, the Protoss still suffer from this; it's their estranged exiled brethren, the Dark Templar/Nerazim that have made the innovations. The new Stalker was designed by the Dark Templar, the Immortal is just an upgraded old unit according to the lore, the Colossus and Mothership are old weapons they've just not used until now, and the Void Ray is a joint effort between the Dark Templar and the Khalai. Thus, the only new units the Protoss have that they actually designed themselves are the Phoenix and Void Prism (the Sentry has no unit lore so the jury is still out on how it came about).
* GUN×SWORD while racing against her in an obstacle course, her pet turtle, Kameo (already attached to a sinking Wendy) grabs onto Marainne's stretchy bikini bottom as she runs past them. This results in Marainne's bikini bottom getting stretched beyond belief, giving her a huge wedgie.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019): Godzilla reduces King Ghidorah to just his middle head. The head continues roaring and trying to bite Godzilla until he vaporises it.
* Gravity Falls, something Dipper finds a little uncomfortable and awkward, and he sort of understands how Wendy might have felt about him having a crush on her.
* Gorilla Monsoon once parodied this. A male wrestler kicked his male opponent in the stomach, and Brain said, "There's a kick to the uterus."
* Hand of Glory is the ability to magically open any lock. No wonder it is generally associated with thieves.
* Heroic BSoD: The hero suffers too much and has an emotional breakdown.
* Greyhounds and whippets are normally quiet and docile, but when they whine, they can be quite shrill.
* GURPS IOU (Illuminati University) had a class in the Thaumaturgy department called "Things Men Were Not Meant to Know". There's also a class in "Men Things Were Not Meant to Know". Also, what the O in IOU stands for is a closely-guarded secret.
* Goblin of Greed; the titular goblin who hordes the aforementioned pots and jars and throughout the course of many cards details how he went from riches to rags and everything in between.
* He also likes coffee so thick that after a few seconds of pouring,
* Half-Minute Hero have to do with said release being officially described as the "ultimate version" of the game.
* Green Lantern Simon Baz: being forced to resort to grand theft auto after being fired, he once stole the wrong car and mid police chase, he found a bomb inside. Faced with no other options, he drove the car into his now abandoned former workplace and ran. The explosion was seen as an act of terrorism and Baz was captured and under interrogation when the ring came to him...
* Hayate the Combat Butler is able to suck the blood of a target who is 'near death' to restore her youth. Isumi is hinted at having the same ability, but she's only 13, so it wouldn't have any effect.
* Granted, if She had actually said anything, Bethany's head would have exploded, so...
* Gravity Falls came into the picture, it would've only been a matter of time.
* Good Omens as the road behind the military base, noted as appearing to be "paved with rubber". Mention is also made of a river where the deliveryman would go with his future wife to spoon, and on one notable occasion, fork.
* Harry Potter series was originally distributed in Canada by Raincoast Books. In 2010, the series was re-released by Penguin because of Bloomsbury's new distribution deal.
* He challenged a young boy called Brandon to a Scrabble game and insisted that BURGLKAF was a word. ("Burglkaf's not a word". "Oh, really, cos you just used it in a sentence, smart guy!"). In the next episode, he jumps over BURGLKAF in the opening credits.

* He was trying to scribble out the name of the other employee that the killer was trying to frame, but the killer purposely left a pen that had no ink on the table and then switched it out with a functioning pen later.
* Head First, people remember fun parts much better than boring parts.
* Hercules Megara. After a fight between Hercules and the Cyclops, a pillar was knocked onto Meg, fatally injuring her. As a result, Hercules' powers were restored.
* Greek Ninja, who is not only annoyed by girls' attention but also appears unaware of their gaze.
* Guilty Gear, was once punched by Sol so hard that the tree he was tied to was uprooted and flung several hundred yards and crashed through other trees behind it, and was only slightly dazed for a bit. The more humanoid gears such as the ones mentioned also possess an affinity for magic and all the destructive power that goes along with it.
* Godzilla vs. Hedorah is a surreal horror film with hallucinogenic animated portions.
* Grimm, a Filipino supernatural creature in some ways akin to a vampire.
* Hans Christian Andersen that ends badly for the male protagonist. The girl in the story is named Johanne (which was Jenny´s original name).
* Half-Blood Prince to get the memory from him. Horace was unwilling to part with the proper version of events because he was horrified and ashamed of what he had done, believing he had done "great damage".
* Hideyoshi constantly acts like a mother hen to the rest of the Oda forces, having them all work at his place to keep an eye on them and scolding the main character at various points for doing dangerous or reckless things like staying out late or running in the hallways.
* Gordon R. Dickson, Alex wants to marry but can't on his meager salary.
* Hannie Caulder never says a word: communicating only through subtle gestures.
* High-end digital still cameras are capable of recording HD video, making them popular with indie filmmakers, as the cheapest high-end models cost only a few hundred dollars at the lowest, compared with HD cameras that start at multiple-thousand range.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers' attention that Japan doesn't seem to be the kind of person who'd sleep with someone on a whim alone.
* Hero House has He-man, who joins the crew far later than the rest, yet ends up being an invaluable addition.
* Good Angel, Bad Angel: When a character has to make a moral decision, they imagine an angel and a devil appearing on their shoulder to give their two cents on the right choice to make. Typically, the angel will try to encourage the person to make the right decision and the devil will do the same with the wrong decision.
* Heralds of Valdemar. The King (or Queen) and Heir of Valdemar are always referred to as such. Indeed, this trope is powerful in Valdemar that the start of the first book sees the heroine traveling on the Road beside the River.
* Hammerjack, Avalon is fitted with an explosive collar after being captured.
* Henry Kissinger: U.S. Secretary of State (1973-1977), National Security Advisor (1969-1975).
* Grafted Wargear, which is impractical to remove without killing the equipped creature.
* Heroic Comedic Sociopath Brock Samson has a false tooth loaded with arsenic, which he offers to Dr. Venture when they are captured by Baron Underbheit. Hank and Dean think this is the coolest thing ever until they agree that a cherry Italian ice tooth would be even better.
* Higher Learning. After the death of the Final Messenger, SEELE's forces invade the Geofront, intending to kill everyone and put Instrumentality in motion. Shinji and Asuka fight for last time in their Evangelions as they struggle to solve their remainder psychological issues. Kaoru finally reveals his identity and his backstory. Despite everything what the heroes did, humankind goes through Instrumentality, and Shinji has to make a choice. The last scene happens several months later, featuring Shinji and Asuka going to school while humankind is gradually returning and rebuilding their world.

* Guude left a retirement present for him that pushed him a little too far and drove him to swear vengeance.
* Godzilla: Final Wars, Gigan has both a long range beam and short range "shotgun blast".
* Hellboy has the BPRD, which is a secret at least throughout the first movie.
* GURPS roleplaying worldbook cites several such metahumans, including two caught in a nuclear bomb test in 1951, a girl whose rapist tried to burn her alive, and an early-1970s illicit American military program to "destruct-train" draftees in order to force a few metahumans out of their numbers.
* Gretchen and Spinelli invert their typical hair tropes, as Spinelli (brunette) is fiery and Gretchen (redhead) is brainy. Gretchen * Gravedale High, as the school is located near a graveyard. Two Zombies; Blanche (a student) and Coach Cadaver (a teacher) are prominent characters.
* her character was actually Dead All Along. She burst into tears when she found out.
* Hammurabi's legal code thus took them out of the running. (Meanwhile, castration had the added benefit of ensuring that a defeated opponent couldn't produce an heir, and blinding prevented the victim from leading armies into battle.) Mutilation was also seen as more merciful than execution because it gave victims a chance to repent and save their souls.
* Hatoful Boyfriend dubs the game "the world's greatest pigeon dating sim."
* Hey Ash, Whatcha Playin'?, is pretty far from "wholesome", she does rock some mean costumes of male characters in many early episodes.
* Halloween III: Season of the Witch, killing anyone who poses a threat to their plans or simply hates Silver Shamrock. A drunk who falls victim to the robots warns Dr. Challis that Cochran has spies all over the place. Furthermore, it's impossible to make phone calls from outside Santa Mira, where his factory is located.
* Gonta Gokuhara: The Ultimate Entomologist is shot many times with a
* Hellboy. Has become less prominent in recent years, as subsequent story arcs have revealed more of the Hellboy-verse's cosmology, which is more like a mix of Gnosticism & 1920s weird pulp fiction than Christianity.
* Going Through the Motions: 3D games have a recognizable set of animations for each character which are repeated throughout the game.
* Goyo: Ang Batang Heneral: The epilogue happens during the lead up to the 1935 Philippine presidential election.
* Heel–Face Turn after landing on Earth). However, conflict would still arise if: A) humans mistook the alien as an invader; B) the alien had a kaiju servant or a powerful weapon and they want the Ultra to help them dispose it; or C) a greater threat (usually a kaiju or an even worse alien) is after them.
* Harry Potter, the deity known as Tau is the embodiment of corruption. However, the corruption is not portrayed as an evil entity , but as a force of change. It is worth to mention that corruption was the first thing to exist in all of reality, and that reality itself is a corruption of nothingness.
* Godzilla, Mothra, King Ghidorah: Giant Monsters All-Out Attack!. Actually Baragon is never attacked by the JDSF, as the Cabinet never actually takes action. In this instance Godzilla is still the Bigger Fish. Baragon goes straight to battle with him. Baragon is the hero, but nowhere near being the bigger fish.
* Green Wing a farm "in the air" and takes them for walks in the weekend. By the end of the episode she's trying to get in touch with a petting zoo in order to hire out a pig so she can take pictures of it with herself in a balaclava to prove her claims.
* Hell Night with Marti, the most innocent of the four pledges and the only one to survive both killers.
* Healin' Good♡Pretty Cure is in it for one episode, and she's already got enough hilarious expressions, blunt one-liners, and over-the-top reactions to warrant becoming a meme factory. She just keeps getting funnier from there.
* Godspeed, and re-freezing a person after they thaw means almost certain death.

Amy has to come to grips with that last part, since she was thawed early.
* Gus Hardin is known for her only two top-ten hits: "After the Last Goodbye" in 1983 and the Earl Thomas Conley duet "All Tangled Up in Love" three years later.
* Gravity Sucks: Gravity is depicted as "catching" or "sucking" things.
* Heavenly Creatures. Also, Pauline renames Bill — her lovesick suitor — "Nicholas" because it sounds better.
* Half-Life 2 of the G-Man appears between Dr. Breen's broadcasts. First on a malfunctioning screen in the canals, then on the monitor in City 17 while the Rebels are tearing it down. Apparently, they don't see him, although one of them did hear some weird music in his appearance before that.
* Harry Potter's famous wizard cards have figures from mythology (Merlin, Circe), history (Agrippa, Paracelsus), and also characters unique to the Harry-Potter-universe, such as Alberic Grunnion and Hengist of Woodcroft.
* Grogar takes the "ancient" to its full extreme: His rule of the world came so long before the three tribes of ponies united to form modern Equestria (which itself was before the time of even Celestia and Luna) that Tirek and Sombra themselves only knew of him as a
* Gundam 00 fulfills the nominal Char Clone role. Subverting the trope, Aker does not come into his mask until the second season, by which time most Gundam tropes have been creatively subverted or lampshaded. The mask is explained as covering a disfiguring set of scars left on Graham after his GN Flag was irreparably damaged in battle against the Gundam Exia. The general assumption is that he was burned from the heat of Exia's GN Blade.
* Greyhawk — is known for manifesting at gravesides just to put the fear of Himself in funeral-goers.
* Heel–Face Turn Starlight Glimmer does this when, while trying to put off reuniting with her childhood friend Sunburst, she convinces Spike to tell the story of how he saved the Crystal Empire.
* Good Luck Charlie Amy bloats up (making her look mordibly obese) after suffering an allergic reaction.
* Heart of Steel, and brilliant roboticist who hasn't had much in the way of human company in ten years. He takes utter delight in things like making beastmen and other chimeras and is initially confused when his guest Julia doesn't share his taste in romantic gifts.
* Grand Nagus Zek, ruler of the Ferengi. His first act upon arriving at DS9 is to sample five sexual holosuite programs in succession, despite Quark's concerns that the programs in question may be "a touch energetic for his advanced years".
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince: When Ron has been poisoned and is unconscious, he whispers Hermione's name without waking up. Everyone else quickly leaves.
* Hey it's our world too!" and even risked his own skin to save Hawkgirl's life by carrying her unconscious body clear of an explosion.
* Happy Birthday to Me is a creepy nerd who has taxidermy as one of his odd hobbies.
* Hellsister Trilogy, Galactic Golem's only weak point is the radiation-leaking white starbust on his head. He can be defeated by hitting that spot, but the puncher may not survive the resulting chain reaction and subsequent explosion.
* high elf/human pairs would be Sylvanas, the middle Windrunner sister, and her human boyfriend Nathanos. Look at how she's an entire head taller!
* Glue at a rave in the woods, much to the former's discomfort and the latter's glee.
* Gustave Flaubert — 'the correct word', or the exact word(s) needed to produce the effect he wanted in any given scene — he went and scrupulously checked every fact (down to attending medical examinations to ensure his medical histories were correct).
* Goron Chieftains are also typically distinguishable by their size. However, in several games a colossal Goron appears who is not in charge and apparently has no distinctive rank.
* GURPS 4e also has "Science!" as a Wildcard skill, which can be substituted for ANY science skill but costs a ton to buy.

* go to great lengths to protect their children. But while Marion does it via smacking down assholes who deserve it, Josephine does it via trying to shut down anything above a G rating.
* Hercules (2014) is unexplained, and Amphiarus' visions are treated as real.
* GLOW occasionally featured the women bleeding, but only in ways that didn't detract from their physical beauty — either with fake blood or coming from a body part like the leg. Accidental aversions happened whenever the women were injured — such as Susie Spirit, who dislocated her arm in a memorably graphic moment.
* Hank Williams Jr.'s song "I Got Rights", this happens at the trial of the man who murders the singer's wife and son.
* Hey Arnold! for him to serve his tour. He did however save the life of a soldier that he came across after a battle, whom he reunited with in "Veteran's Day" and the soldier thanked him for it.
* Henry Winkler) expresses disgust at this, Princess Carolyn, who never actually knew Herb, goes on to make up all sorts of over the top stories about her doing charity work with him well into the night.
* Half-Life had been draining the Earth of its resources for the past two decades, and letting roads and cities rot. The surviving humans are essentially imprisoned in the few cities not overrun by alien fauna and are ruled with an iron fist, chemicals in the water, and a dampening field that prevents natural reproduction.
* Guiding Light from the first 40 years would make such an archive binge impossible). It may be the largest single work of fiction in human history.
* Hayate the Combat Butler. Not entirely sure if Maria caught on (Maria can be unbelievably dense sometimes), but her response is dead on.
* Glitch Techs series revolves around a tech support group, whose real task is capturing video game characters that wreak havoc after "glitching" out from of various consoles and arcade cabinets.
* Heart of a Dog, Dr. Philip Philipovich Preobrazhensky gets away with regularly flipping off the House Committee, lives technically alone in seven rooms while most of his contemporaries barely get one, spits out blatantly anti-Soviet views and nostalgically longs for the cultured old times. He can afford it because not only is he really good at his job, the authorities use his surgery services as well.
* He gives her a perfect husband and a perfect home, then sends her an average child.
* Gundam Build Divers Re:RISE, the rest of BUILD DiVERS are surprises to see that Parviz’s real life identity is wheelchair-bound.
* Heisei Rider vs. Showa Rider: Kamen Rider Taisen feat. Super Sentai has skeleton-themed armor. His transformation even has a giant skull and spine with ten spider leg-like limbs dropping down and wrapping around him before forming his full armor.
* Grownish, twins Jazlyn and Skylar are played by sisters Chloe and Halle Bailey. Interestingly enough, despite looking extremely similar, in real life they are not twins as Chloe is 2 years older than Halle.
* Helmets Are Hardly Heroic: Heroes never seem to wear helmets, or at least not face-concealing ones.
* Graham Masterton features a scene where one of the bad guys, a psychotic Vietnam vet, puts on a full-head demon-mask featuring a leyak, an Indonesian evil spirit. He writhes in agony, to the accompaniment of screams and crunching noises, as his buddies try to get the mask off, but when it finally comes free, the dead man has no head left. Something has eaten his head while he was wearing the mask...
* GURPS: The semi-felinoid alien Sparrials in the Space setting have Kleptomania as a trait in their species template.
* Goof Troop doesn't de-age Goofy, but introduces his son, Max, and focuses on his life as well as Goofy's.
* Godzilla: Planet of the Monsters. Aside from Metphies, he is possibly the only one to survive.
* Hawkmoon's quest leads him to Tanelorn and the final destruction of not only the Cosmic Balance but also the Law and Chaos aspects the first part of this entry unleashed on the multiverse.

* Hamlet, Fortinbras, the Prince of Norway is a foil to Hamlet, having none of the latter's introspection when it comes to avenging his father's death. Another classic example of Hamlet's foil is his friend, Horatio, whose level-headedness clearly serves as foil to Hamlet's rash nature.
* goes to great lengths to justify it), White Base still has a big, old-fashioned and suspiciously nautical steering wheel on the bridge. The same goes for both the Musai-class cruisers and Gaw-class carriers.
* Hell Girl a red string. This sends the object of their vengeance to hell — and damns the client to go there too, after death. So it's still a destiny bond, but a very different kind...
* having the Sept of Baelor blown up allies during this period, like Euron, the Tarlys and the Iron Bank.
* Heart of the Alien, years after it was released. Chahi acted as a creative consultant during the sequel's early planning stages, but was not involved in the actual development and most of his ideas were ignored as a result.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers France and England are also a good example of this, as they are often seen fighting over literally nothing. The ship was later turned into a gag during the movie Paint It White, where the alien's information on France and England says that they love each other, sexually.
* Guild Wars 2 and the brutal, industrious, and militaristic Charr, where the humans are in serious decline and are in very real danger of extinction and the Charr are thriving. They're reluctant and wary allies in the game, courtesy of the de facto ruler of the Charr being unusually progressive and far-sighted (who also wants the traditional marker of the true leader of the Charr, which the humans stole centuries back), while the human queen has more than enough trouble on her hands without the Charr.
* Hey Arnold!. Here she not only learns what has become of her family and friends without her presence, she also must find a way to return to her universe and fix what's gone wrong because of her wish as well.
* He ultimately turns out to be a good guy when he is confronted with just how corrupt the government really is. Even then, he is slightly conflicted about breaking laws. Then
* Half-Life, headcrab zombies develop unnaturally long arms and long claw-like fingers.
* Hello, Dolly!, Dolly and Horace were old friends who'd known each other for years before either was married the first time, but none of the refences to that aspect of their backstory made it into the musical version.
* God Is Flawed. Dean's worldview hasn't fundamentally changed and in fact he's actually proven right.
* He's also prone to opening things in his Top Tens with a clip from some artist other than his preferred:
* Heroes of Thantopolis certainly lends itself to this trope, but the city is actually a pretty cheerful (and clean) place considering that everyone is dead.
* Haibane Renmei, Hikari with her glasses looks the most like a smart young lady.
* Halo were responsible for most of the Covenant's brain work, and books reveal that they overlapped somewhat with traditional elves in prehistoric times.
* Heroes in general become this for Skitter early in the series. She idolizes them early, but quickly realizes they're just as flawed as everyone else.
* Hey Arnold! went through quite an extensive animation bump around the time of season 3 and only got better from there. The animation studios still varied, but compared to the first and second season of the show the change was dramatic. The movie also looks amazing in comparison.
* Gravity Falls episode "The Inconveniencing" Mabel finds a bunch of Smile Dip. She takes a packet, dips the dipper in it, and then pours the rest of the packet right into her mouth.
* Guilty Gear Xrd, one of the items Faust can throw at random is a bottle of helium that serves no purpose other than giving the one who touches it a comically high pitched voice for a lengthy period of time.

* HEAVILY (more or less; Lycia's not a monarchy but Lilina's father is nevertheless the head of a country). Then again, the same is true of their love interests, so it's all relative.
* Haunted Legends 5: The Stone Guest an angry mob of torch-wielding citizens who blame local scientist Don Leporello for the disappearance of several orphans burns a straw dummy with a photo of him attached, encouraging the fire to spread to the front of his house.
* Highschool of the Dead still under the effects — and frantically humping a broomstick, thinking it was her!
* Heilung the language, instead of just reading along or hearing it and thinking "that sounds cool."
* Half-Life series. Not only is he Gordon Freeman's employer, but he is also his observer: Gordon occasionally glimpses him watching from a distance.
* Head Sports: This is a main feature of the game. Players have "Power Shots", which are superpowered shots that are much harder to block than regular Kicks.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, a guy sees Salmoneous in drag, and pictures doing this date with him.
* Heavy use of understated, single-word reactions ("Fascinating," "Indeed."), without any intensifiers: "Indeed" would work equally well as a response to "Would you like some coffee?" as to "They're going to kill us all!"
* Heavy Metal Taarna's heroic mount is winged and featherless, but is much more benign-looking than a traditional pterosaur.
* Gulliver's Travels are inbred descendants of a stranded human couple. By the time Gulliver visits, they are a race of savage beasts without a shred of sapience and being used as draft animals by sapient horses.
* Hare Trimmed Bugs, in old lady drag, playfully leads suitor Yosemite Sam on a chase through the house, up the steps...where he shoves a piano down into Sam's path.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets and because he asked to be placed there, rather than letting himself be chosen. Dumbledore tells Harry that character is shown through one's choices and asks him to examine the sword he used to slay the Basilisk. When he sees it is Godric Gryffindor's sword, Harry has all the proof he needs that he truly belongs in that house.
* Hard-Boiled Wonderland and the End of the World is about a man whose subconscious is used to store classified data in a cyberpunk future.
* handwaved however since he is depicted with black hair just as commonly.
* Harrison Ford. The film's rating permits showing that using a glass shard cuts you while you're cutting the rope.
* Hidalgo, an Arabian sheik is fascinated by American culture and anything related to cowboys.
* Hatsune Miku: Project DIVA, some slight instances of Engrish were corrected. For example, "Rest X Notes" seen during a Technical Zone became "Notes Left: X".
* Gunsmoke: With 20 seasons on the air, it's still the longest-running US live-action scripted series.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys is casting director Beth Hymson-Ayer...).
* Harpoon Gun is bodged together from a post-hole driver, winch, other bits of farm equipment and one of the creature's own knives.
* Good Wings, Evil WingsYou can tell the angels from the demons by these.
* Gradius: The series is no stranger to including thickets of space debris to dodge, even shifting the asteroid rocks to similar obstacles of ice chunks, volcanic fireballs, cubes, and "kidney stones" inside a giant bioplanet.
* highly lethal Destroying Angel mushroom,or lye crystals, the latter of which will cause severe burns on contact.
* Go Nagai. They also store one entire set of Jeeg Parts to rebuild the robot as long as the head survives.
* Haré+Guu-hockey mask and a coffin instead of a sleigh, among other things.
* Hellsinker. Then there is also Millionlives and Ninelives in the Shrine of Farewell.
* He's a genius toymaker. She's his girlfriend. Together with their robot dog, they fight crime! They are:

* he and the gang all grew up in the same orphanage and that Sorceress Edea used to be their Matron. He is essentially being asked to blow his mother's head off by his brothers and sisters—as is demanded of him.
* Highschool of the Dead out of jealousy because Rei had chosen Hisashi over him.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, bodyguard and hitman for club owner Tony Prince. The three occasionally run across one another, but their stories are largely independent. All three are together in a single location only once, during a diamond deal they've all been brought into by various circumstances (which was foreshadowed by the achievement for completing the diamond mission in Niko's story, called "Impossible Trinity").
* Golden Eyes' "dinner date" with German officer Hugo Von Schwatzenburg in the * Goggles Do Something Unusual: Eyewear that does more than correct or protect vision.
* High-order maritime salvage operations behave very much like these even through the the traps are not intentionally engineered, whether a wreck is five days old or five centuries. The combination of deep water, foul weather, rusty engineering, hungry fauna and old explosives makes for a lot of hazards. Some wrecks (typically felled ammunition freighters) have been deemed too dangerous to approach, despite their accessibility.
* Heaven, which imagines Christianity from a fish's point of view, ending with "And in that Heaven of all they wish / There shall be no more land say fish."
* Gwenpool has both an intromission from the character's creator, Christopher Hastings, and a scene where Gwen's exploitation of the fourth wall has her scaring artist David Baldeon to drop coffee on the page.
* Heat Guy J, the eponymous J is a large stoic android always ready to hand out an epigram on what it means to be a man, who works with the 'cool' and laid back Daisuke (Dice). Collectively they form the investigative team of the Special Services Bureau in the city of Judoh.
* Harley Quinn shows that she's capable of speaking in a more normal voice and only switched to the screechy one once she donned the costume.
* Godzilla (2014) prequel comic to have survived the Permian Extinction and shifted between dormancy and active hunting across 250 million years, appearing at various points throughout human history. The MUTOs eggs laid dormant in a massive skeleton for millions of years.
* Godzilla: Final Wars. Godzilla has just destroyed the rogue "planet" Gorath with his breath, and as he stands recovering from the effort, the camera cuts to a close-up of his face and a shadowy figure slowly lowering itself into the frame behind him. Godzilla slowly raises his head, turns around, and faces his most powerful opponent, Monster X.
* Gone Horribly Right and at the same time are so expensive that the super-rich effectively become a different species. For now it's just Sci-Fi, though.
* Hatred founder Gabe Newell himself, no less, along with an apology), it later became the number one seller on Steam Greenlight.
* Harmless Lady Disguise, he speaks in an alarmingly convincing female voice.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 3 episode 40, Little M. gives Big M. a cup of water to drink. The water doesn't stay in Big M.'s body, pouring out through numerous holes he accumulated from being hit by projectiles from guns that were being shot at him and Little M. earlier.
* Gunslinger Girl. Because Section 1 consists of adult male human operatives, who are not happy about being upstaged by half-mechanical little girls.
* Have I Got News for You: The BBC topical panel quiz briefly flashed up "VOTE CONSERVATIVE" just before an election. There were complaints, leading them to briefly flash up "HUMOURLESS BASTARDS" the following week.
* Handsome Lech Nakatsuka Kouta predictably earns the title "Mr. Sexual Harassment."
* High School Star Musical, the main characters get a script like this as a surprise challenge in their acting class. They turn the page and the rest is blank - they have to improv the rest of the story. The resulting scene, and how they play off of each other, establishes their characters while showing early-on how clever and aware the writing is about the craft of acting.

* Hajléktaland to build the reader's empathy toward the homeless. It is an intentionally harrowing read.
* has as far as he had without all of these other characters backing him up. Zig Zagged Trope indeed...
* "Hey You, Don't Forget About Me In Your Memory" was made with the intention of airing in February 2015 (the anniversary of * Hard Rain. Kanezaki only discovers this when he gets curious about some missing communication logs, which include the order cancelling the operation the chief has assigned to him.
* He chastises Akira for treating him like he's an old man. Seconds later, he complains about nearly
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City has a garage that outfits any car you drive in with a remote-detonated car bomb.
* Harry Potter Harry, Ron, and Hermione are eating what they think is a beef casserole in Hagrid's hut... then Hermione finds a large talon in her serving. They lose their appetite pretty quickly after that.
* Happy Heroes and use it to travel back in time and prevent the abduction to no avail.
* High School U.S.A. bully, and the episode ends with Marsh ignoring the movie as prejudiced propaganda and accepting Brad for what he is.
* Gregor Clegane is an enormous knight and one of the more repugnant characters in Westeros, with a sinister beard to boot.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Austria makes a brief attempt to forbid Hungary from fighting off the Prussian army. He quickly lets her do what she wants when he sees how disturbingly determined she is to get Prussia's blood. In the anime, the dub of that episode makes a lot of jokes about Maria Theressa being queen and Prussia's belief that "chicks couldn't lead". There's an interesting inversion in a flashback of when Hungary realizes she's a woman. She comes to the conclusion that she should give up fighting and be content as Austria's maid, while Prussia tries to encourage her to stop wearing dresses and go hunting with him.
* Gorilla My Dreams", Mrs. Gruesome Gorilla believes Bugs Bunny, who is revealed to have travelled downriver in a barrel, to be her baby. At first, Bugs is against the idea, but he agrees to be her baby to keep her from crying. When he does, she dresses him in a bonnet and a diaper.
* Harley Quinn #0, Harley finds herself dreaming that she is performing in front of an audience of comic book fans. She forgets her lines and tries to remember this piece of advice, but gets confused as to whether she is supposed to imagine the audience naked or herself naked. Ultimately she imagines herself naked and starts belting out her lines, only the dream changes so she is now in church.
* Heralds of Valdemar series, since the average Herald doesn't live long enough to die of old age. Many Heralds, for this reason, never settle down with a single partner (though all viewpoint characters do, of course) and many minor Heralds instead go for promiscuity and short-term liaisons; it's also mentioned that people who married before being called to become Heralds often find their marriage suffering as a result. On the other hand, many Heralds do manage to form lasting relationships with other Heralds or with non-combatants, and simply accept that their duties are likely to often separate them from their lover and that they will probably die first.
* Having 50 or more rings when you activate checkpoints or reach the end of an act usually grants access to a bonus stage. Which combined with the counter reset in the early games can turn the extra life at 100 into a
* Harry himself is noted in-universe for almost always going for the Disarming Charm in a fight and actively warned that it makes him predictable. It pretty much always works, being so
* Hairspray shows features of Baltimore, such as overhead street signs, that would not exist for decades.
* harsh penal colony in Tasmania where he died before a decade passed.

* Guild Wars 2 are bioluminescent, intelligent plant beings. Did we mention that they're a playable race?
* Glinda is canonically in love with Elphaba, even decades after her death—however, she is married to a man. She uses him for money and it's unknown if she's attracted to any men or if he is
* Hex Wives, the witches' magic is based on blood. The more blood that is spilled, the more powerful the magic becomes. It doesn't matter who's blood- theirs, their enemy's, a farm animal's. Even squishing a cockroach provides a minor boost.
* Hamish and Dougal see the stars, they're in a tent. Immediately lampshaded:
* Grand Theft Auto from various stations in nearly every corner of the United States and has become increasingly bitter and alcoholic.
* Gold Digger, who is pretty much the embodiment of the "shameless and amoral whore" archetype.
* Guild Wars climactic battles in its active crater. It explodes at the very end of the campaign.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix is a much more traditional example than most in the movies, with moves like turning glass shards into powder and manipulating water.
* Harvey Comics had many junk food ads featuring its characters, Little Lotta was never included in any of them, for obvious reasons.
* Hey Arnold!. They were mocking him even after he got second place, and the girl who beat him became the city's champion by also defeating several grown men. Really, this plot could have been avoided early in the episode by having her challenge the guys who were mocking him.
* Hero Factory, disregarded some of their earlier character traits, and had a new intro and closing sequence. This coincided with the toy line experiencing a retool of its own, though it was canceled after that line, along with the animated specials.
* Higurashi: When They Cry and that her horns are due to a genetic disorder.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Igor Karkakoff dismisses the conspiracy theory of the paranoid "Mad-Eye" Moody, citing an incident where Moody smashed a birthday present because he believed it was a disguised basilisk egg, only to find that it was actually just a clock.
* Goosebumps book "How to Kill a Monster" is "Step One: Run. Step Two: Run Faster."
* he managed to find a method that could allow him to time travel back to the past in order to retrieve the Infinity Stones to the present day to successfully undo the effects of Thanos's fingersnap and bring back everyone who were previously killed by him. So in a way, the entire plot of the movie and triumph over the Titan happens because of a mere rat that came at exactly the right moment, right time.
* Gold Digger's Zelda — a genetically engineered mook to an evil (but he's getting better) child genius — has no body hair at all, not even eyebrows (or possibly eyelashes). She hates it (she used to have very long and luscious hair). It's explained as the result of having "Dolphin DNA" being used in her gengineering.
* H.Bomberguy's parody of anti-feminist YouTubers in "ThunderF00T vs. FemiNAZI Ghostbusters: A Measured Response" exhibits this while going on the run from The Feminists, also allowing a sideswipe at fake-skull-owning white supremacist Davis Aurini in the process:
* Hellsing: Walter, Hellsing's butler and soldier, is revealed to be working for the Millennium Nazis (only in the manga).
* Heidi would start on time. The numerous phone calls prevented Don "Scotty" Connal and Dick Cline from getting in touch with each other. Just as Charlie Smith was returning the kickoff, the Eastern and Central time zone broadcasts of the game cut away to the opening minutes of Heidi, while Raiders QB Daryle Lamonica threw a 43-yard touchdown pass to Charlie Smith for a 36-32 lead. As the Raiders kicked off to the Jets, Earl Christy fumbled the ball at the Jets' 12-yard line, followed by Preston Ridlehuber recovering the fumble and taking it into the end zone, giving the Oakland Raiders a 43-32 comeback victory.
* Gunnerkrigg Court to her. Annie generally never acts this way and doesn't have much reason other than being visibly frustrated previously, but as a whole she's generally stoic.

* Harper's Island covered in newspapers clippings and photographs and boxes of police files, and creeps the hell out of protagonist Abby Mills when she finds it.
* Harmless to occur). Tucker is disappointed to find out he was left out of all this.
* Hilary Swank, to the point where her neighbors didn't recognize her and assumed that her brother must have been staying.
* Hand Cannons bullets and the boltguns/bolters are the full-sized version of that and is standard issue for most Tactical marines that is also regularly used with both hands. The Space Wolves use it one-handed at the same efficiency, plus the bonus of also being able to carry a melee weapon in the other hand.
* Grand Theft Auto V now resting and buried beneath the water, far away from the light.
* Have I Got News for You have coincided with a week of very slow news, with the result being that normally insignificant stories get higher prominence; one example was series 36 episode 6, where the stories in the second round consisted of a haunted sofa, a drawing of a spider somebody had sent as payment for a gas bill, a woman who'd been training for a mission to the South Pole by sitting in a refrigerator and a man who'd converted a double-decker bus into an "all mod cons base for holidays". The two regular panellists, Ian Hislop and Paul Merton, spent the entire round in sheer disbelief of the worthlessness of the "stories".
* "Hell, Yes!" Moment: A character suddenly realises they're about to finally have some good luck.
* Halo: Played straight by every major faction, though the lore notes that UNSC didn't develop a reliable means of this until several years into the Human-Covenant War.
* hands it back with an autograph. Though justified as he was more focused on keeping an eye out for his Rogues who were planning an attack.
* Hell Girl just before the police could even see him. That event gives the poor Takuma the nickname "Devil Child". And because of his reputation, the other citizens frame him up whenever they send someone to hell with the Hell Correspondence.
* High on Fire's lyrical content seems to be almost exclusively along these lines. One gets the feeling they just set their D&D campaigns to music.
* Gulliver's Travels is partly a parody of improbable travel narratives.
* Happens to him again with what used to be iced tea with lemon, but after two weeks looks more like a "nasty science experiment."
* He then has another one at the end of the same episode where he plans to kill himself and take the Joker with him, but turns out he tricked him with a dud. It is actually a
* Haruhi Suzumiya about it, he responds "Just kidding, that's not what I think at all."
* Gold’s example, Ashley’s boss game, “Great Juice”, always appears in the first playthrough of Remix 2.0 on the third difficulty level, and it must be completed as 5-Volt, which is easier said than done. Because 5-Volt’s main movement is teleporting, you’ll land on the grapes with no jars underneath more times than not, especially since the jars occasionally move, and the clunky movements make it difficult to correct that mistake. In addition, you’ll need to contend with the wasps, which must be hit so that they don’t reach the spill meter, but 5-Volt will instantly be knocked out if she touches the stingers, resulting in you instantly failing the microgame.
* Go, the Victors head to L.A. after their run-in with Simon to take revenge on him. They track down Todd (whose credit card Simon was using) instead. A brutal beat down follows? Nope. Instead, we see Todd and the Victors sitting a table together while Todd draws a map to Simon's place.
* Hero, Rival, Baddie Team-Up: A hero, a rival and an enemy have to fight together against a big bad in common.
* He does once get command of a small army and actually manages to force a draw against a numerically superior enemy... though he did it by sacrificing all but two of his troops in a charge across an open minefield in broad daylight to serve as a distraction.

* Goodys Burger House, the most prominent fast food chain in Greece. They also starred in comic strips and a short film.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone: For being caught out of bed, Harry, Hermione, Neville (Ron in the movie) and Draco are sentenced to searching for a dead unicorn in the Forbidden Forest.
* Guardsmen flies or hovers or at least can be shoved into something that does, and they have insane close combat killing power and anti-tank firepower coming out of their pointed ears. Consequently they are considered Warhammer 40000 on Nightmare difficulty.
* good on the mantra that the needs of the many outweigh the few and that no personal sacrifice is neither too small nor too great for a cause greater than one's self. The turians are the Mass Effect galaxy's peacekeeping force, holding the barbarians at bay and preventing the light of civilized life from ever being extinguished. The turians also maintain a string of client-states on the periphery of their territory; races that have accepted turian dominion in exchange for guaranteed protection and limited sovereignty. The Volus in particular provide necessary economic infrastructure that the turians have always lacked. When humans made first contact with the Alliances' armed forces at Shanxi, the turians chose to wage war and assimilate the humans into their empire as a client race. Their efforts backfired when their mobilization drive provoked an intervention from the Citadel council and the subsequent negotiations brought the conflict to a close and Humanity was inducted into the galactic community.
* Hearts of Ice, Ranma and Akane run into all kind of Eastern deities and mythological creatures. Shampoo meets up with an old Chinese divine dragon. Akane gets stranded in the Kami Plane, works as a bodyguard by Yuki-Onna, is trained by a Tengu and meets Susano-O. Ranma meets Emma-O and makes a deal with a Phoenix. And so on.
* Half-Life, any dead person or monster will blow up when taking enough damage, leaving behind nothing but their intestines. Even their clothes turn into bloodsplatter and intestines.
* He even admits that "2012 was not his year" in one of his last promos before the year ended. But he promised to make 2013 his year, and it got off to a good start, being the Royal Rumble Winner, and he did beat The Rock for the WWE Championship at WM 29. But then he got Triple-Powerbombed by
* Heroic Sacrifice and then the Marines' HQ? They were trying to kill his brother.
* Hardspace: Shipbreaker has many ways in which your vision, which is filtered through your helmet and HUD-providing visor, can be messed with.
* Harry Potter context is all: these are British books. While "damn" and "hell" might offend some in the US, they are no longer at all offensive in the UK. "Arse" and "bitch" are both relatively minor curses, and "effing" is just a euphemism. For the examples we have:
* Half's Saga: Sailing homeward after marrying Hringja, daughter of King Hreidar of Zealand, Hjorleif observes a giant rising out of the sea who chants a prophecy that predicts the death of Hringja, Hreidar, and Hjorleif's own imprisonment.
* Guardians of the Galaxy future of the Marvel Universe, The Protege has this ability for all inherent abilities, with no restrictions and can combine them. Needless to say, she quickly becomes the most powerful being in her universe. Eventually, she tries to use these to become the new One-Above-All before getting smacked down by the Living Tribunal.
* Heroine Chic — there's a charity event held every year called "Heritage Con" that brings together Legacy Heroes and their namesakes. The only named example who shows up in the comic is Paragon, a retiring "silver-age hero" who passed her name down to Paragon II in order to help the younger hero establish herself in the business.
* here, as it's hard to be sure if we really know what he means. It's not hard to make an educated guess, though.

* Hector: Badge of Carnage, Hector starts the game by having to fish out something out of a toilet in the prison cell of a police station which while not 'public' fits the trope completely. After many other disgusting bathroom jokes and puzzles, episode 3 has you interacting with the portable public toilet at an outdoor festival.
* Heracles is also known to fly into mad rages at times. This is never a pleasant thing for anyone he was fighting — or for any innocents in the vicinity. He murdered his family one time after a particular nasty rage brought about by Hera, which led to him undertaking the Twelve Labors as atonement.
* GonkParticularly in animated medium, if a character is supposed to be considered ugly, then the best way to do so is to lay it on thick.
* Good ol' Micheal Myers's preferred day for a killing spree is, of course,
* Halo is free to pace around the room while his bridge crew repetitively tilts up and down.
* Hero's First Rescue: A superhero often has a rescue mission (especially from a burning building) as their first major act of being a hero.
* h3h3productions is occasionally "triggered" by idiotic videos which causes him to seize hilariously in his chair.
* he's a member of the White Council, the uber tier of human magic users. His Grandfather is one of the strongest Wizards in the world, the Blackstaff and a member of the Elder Council. His Godmother is one of the handmaidens to Queen Mab herself and a powerful Sidhe. He also bascially gets his own massive island in Lake Michigan which he's both responsible for (it's a prison for the most dangrous monsters in the world) and his home for a long stretch of time. Finally, he's now the Winter Knight, a literal noble in the Unseelie Court of the Winter Queens.
* Guards! Guards!: Captain Vimes tells Sergeant Colon to (force) open a gate. Colon tells Lance-Constable Carrot to open the gate. Carrot knocks gently to ask the people on the other side to open it.
* Greed's ambition is notable in that he desires to possess everything. Most people would chalk this up as evil, but the thing is that he also
* Handsome Tom also had this happen to him, relegated mostly to posing as Kickassia's flagpole. This was lampshaded in one of the "making of" videos, where Doug passes out the script and apologizes to Tom for having him be "an object". Tom takes it pretty well, pointing out that objects are useful. The other contributors have also said that Tom's okay being in the background because he doesn't think he's an especially good actor and is there mostly to have fun.
* Grandia, there's a gargantuan mile-high wall that bifurcates an entire continent.
* Hannibal T. Hairball from the 2006 series has a Russian accent in spite of being a member of a race of alien cats called the Catatonians. "Rumpity Dumpster" introduces his half-brother Pierre Fluffbottom, who has a French accent.
* Gundam: Reconguista in G does this all over the place; fans have counted at least six or seven different factions, each with their own objectives. Alliances are formed, fall apart, and shift on a near episode-by-episode basis, and is further confused by the antics of various double agents. The primary conflict, however, is the Earth nation of Ameria vs the also Earth-based Capitol Tower vs the space nation of Towasanga.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, Michel looks like a young boy but is as old as the Earth itself.
* Goosebumps is rated PG on television (even though some episodes are edited for horror content that goes beyond the PG level and scenes of dangerous behavior), except for the episode "The Werewolf of Fever Swamp", which is rated 12 for animal violence (the werewolf killing deer), moderate horror, and moderate threat.
* Haruhi Suzumiya story for Kyon, except he didn't actually ask for it, he's not the one being retgonned, and the "angel" responsible is affected by the changes as well... It does happen around Christmas, though.
* Heralds of Valdemar who suffers from severe arthritis (incapacitating when they meet, later somewhat alleviated by magic).
* Have you ever heard of a band called The Garden Wall? No? How about The Anon? Not ringing any bells? How about

* H.A.W.X. can be said to have an anticlimatic final mission by gameplay terms. Operation Twilight was no more intense then your bog standard dogfight and your opponents fights not in state of the art fighters but older Migs. No superweapon or Ace Squadron to make the last stand against you or anything.
* Gossip Girl are basically a male and female version of the same character. In a completely different way, Blair and Dan.
* he returns with a prosthetic body from the chest down after getting killed.
* Godzilla vs. SpaceGodzilla, who's crystalline shoulder growths are so massive, they render him almost literally immobile.
* Gossip Girl: Serena is very protective of her brother Eric and Jenny, her boyfriend's younger sister.
* Halloween Unspectacular takes the time to list all his examples. He notes that for him, they tend to fall into three types: A (the breathtakingly incompetent ones), B (the moustache-twirlingly evil ones), and/or C (the gratuitous back-story ones).
* Heralds of Valdemar, Alberich is considering whether or not he should help Valdemar, as this would violate his oaths to the Sunpriests. Then he remembers that the priests swore oaths to the Sunsguard as well—and never fulfilled them.
* He didn't, of course, but Ryoga doesn't know that. So, Ranma uses Ryoga's misinterpretations to egg him on, because he needs Ryoga to fight him with everything he's got, while Akane shouts, "It's not true! He's a liar! A liar!"
* Haunted (2005): The second story featuring Mr. Whittier, "Obsolete", deals with mandatory euthanasia of all humans so that everyone will move on to the next world (shown as a party on Venus) rather than continue to reincarnate on Earth.
* Hikaru no Go. He is amazed by things like telephones and airplanes, often to Hikaru's annoyance.
* Happy Endings. It's still one of the first things that people notice about her.
* Graceful Loser: An antagonist or opponent who is willing to accept defeat.
* Hidalgo. The film centers around a 3,000 mile horse race across the Arabian desert. The raiders, kidnapped princess, and backstabbing among the competitors were not officially part of the deal.
* Hand Behind Head habit after the first movie. She also shares Twilight's tic above, though she does it less often, being more used to her human form.
* Hayato. He piloted the Guntank, a pretty sub-par Mobile Suit that had horrendous mobility, slow reaction time, and was useless in terms of close combat; yet he still managed to use it well, and survive the One Year War.
* Granblue Fantasy but with few exceptions, each class has two types of weapons they can equip as their main weapon. The primary exception is the Grappler line, who can only equip melee weapons. The Harpist line also greatly favors Harps over their secondary Daggers, because Harps are able to boost their abilities.
* her mother's abuse, along with the effects thereof. In that line, we get Ragyo's backstory being subject of at least a few, seeing as it has never been seen in the series.
* Heather Dale, can't possibly want to marry a sailor like him, even as it becomes clear she likes both him and the sea. Eventually he works up his courage to propose, and of course she delightedly accepts.
* Grandma's House, and as a result, Grandpa Bernie (his character) was stated to have died in the Series 2 premiere. What makes it extra sad is that Bernie had just been proven to be fine in the Series 1 finale after a series-long subplot about him possibly having cancer.
* He steps it up a notch in the Wii version by doing just this before the match too.
* Harry Turtledove book, by the 2030s, humans have habitats in orbit of Earth and the Moon. Presumably, this trope is a regular occurrence there.
* Heart of the Inferno, get rid of Sauron's corruption inside him, and retake Erebor as his reward for helping the Free Peoples win the war.
* Heather Alexander. The entire song came about from a joke about "What if the unnamed woman was a rowdy redhead?":
* Glee. The episode "The Quarterback" focused on how Finn's family and friends and everyone he knew coped with the loss. The show preferred not to say how Finn died because, in Kurt's words, his life was more important than the moment of his death.

* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Wormtail tries to justify to Harry, Sirius, and Lupin his betrayal of Lily and James Potter, claiming that Voldemort would have killed him if he hadn't told him where they were. Sirius shouts furiously, "THEN YOU SHOULD HAVE DIED! Died rather than betray your friends, as we would have done for you!" Justified in that Sirius isn't saying that, all other things held equal, it would have been better for Peter to die than James and Lily; rather, he's specifically berating Peter for giving up his friends to save his own skin.
* Harry Potter, during the meeting in the first chapter between the Muggle Prime Minister, and the Minister of Magic, as seen in the page quote above.
* Henry Darger and decades-long composition than for any artistic merits it might have (though really, the length and the large number of important illustrations make a wide release of the story very challenging, so it's not like people can simply pick it up at a library/bookstore/e-book shop to judge said merits on their own).
* Gregor isn't usually the most charismatic of folk, but he does manage to deflect Oberyn's
* Hell froze over would be getting a western-produced live-action TV series adaptation.
* Heath Ledger does not break character (with rumors about how it was a mistake by the effects team abounding, though it turns out it was entirely intentional), nor does he even turn to watch the explosion even when he gets on the bus. Everything is executed perfectly, resulting in one of the most memorable scenes in the movie.
* Hellish Pupils: When someone's pupils become anything but round, bad things are to follow.
* Hercules, the writers basically threw the script into the air and said, "Screw it." They wrote most of his dialogue this way.
* happens to keep him from being in another class in a later cutscene when he rejoins and uses a power exclusive to his base class.
* Harry Potter and the Philospher's/Sorcerer's Stone, Gryffindor wins the House Cup because Neville scored the last ten points they needed to break the tie with Slytherin.
* Grim Fandango (though it does have a somewhat appropriate in-game acronym "LOL").
* Got Milk?, an executive with his mouth full for lack of milk accidentally gives Oreos their name!
* Golan the Insatiable are set in a different timeline than in the 2013-2014 episodes.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! initially acted cold and aloof around her fellow Cures, but showed a more compassionate side to her friend Momoka, her mother, and, on one occasion, a runaway child. She defrosts slightly after joining the team, but still keeps many of her Sugar And Ice aspects.
* Greek mythology. Damned if he does, damned if he doesn't. (And the tale cites his enemy Morrigan knew this.)
* Hagrid's parents are a normal-sized wizard and a giant woman (not the "very tall woman" kind, she is a different specie than human). How, you ask?
* Glee show up to watch their kids, and even some of the ones who have been established to support the club are absent during important performances. In addition it is notable that Quinn fails to reappear after Finn's death despite the fact that characters with less of a connection to him appeared, there wasn't even an explanation for her absence.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe entitled "Fabulous Secret Powers".
* Hicks keeps an antiquated pump-action shotgun "for close encounters," and ends up having to rely on it on several occasions, particularly during the Marines' first run-in with the eponymous critters because
* Hercule Poirot) but take their orders from him. At the end of the book, he commits suicide when the attempted coup fails and the three others die in their lair's self-destruction.

* Grim Hollow from wood, clay, ceramic, or a mixture of those materials, and left in place of human children stolen by the fey. They can cover up this visibly artificial nature with a potent magical illusion of being flesh and blood, and they are fully sapient and aware. But their bodies never age, in the sense of maturing like a human, condemning them to looking like children forever. Most humans hate and fear them, seeing them as collaborators rather than victims.
* Hibernatus: At the height of his epic breakdown where he reveals everything to Paul Fournier, Hubert de Tartas grabs the formerly hibernated man and shakes him vigorously.
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger and a few Mooks. They do not even have a spectacular lair, as Tsu Shogun plans his attacks from a rented storage depot. Prior to that, near the end of the first season, Doctor Z reorganized the corporate-themed villains into the Delusion Empire.
* Grammer Gorilla [sic], "a super-strong simian who likes to talk good [sic]." And yes, even though he flies into an
* Harry Potter, who are a surprisingly reputable if aptly vicious team.
* Hc Svnt Dracones Transcendent Technologies Inc is known for making, aside from implants that defy physics, biological spaceships. They don't need as many crewmen as other Corps' ships (aside from ASR's robot ships) and can heal damage, but when damaged they have a chance of going crazy and doing stuff like rebelling, eating some of the crew, teleporting to a random part of the Sol system, or just sulking.
* he's also in contact with a nearly infinite number of alternate selves, some of whom passed the local universe's Do Not Pass Go, Do Not Exist time travel brick wall.
* Grezzo 2; just replace the original taunts with random Italian insults.
* Happens in "No Weenies Allowed" when SpongeBob wants to get into the Salty Spitoon. He cracks his knuckles and his entire fingers snap like sticks, resulting in him putting them into some ice cream to relieve the pain.
* Godzilla (a phenomenon dubbed "beam wars" by fans), and physical fights were often compromised due to the overly bulky monster designs.
* Halcyon 6, that responsibility lies on you, if you refuse they send the Revenue Fleet after you. Fortunately, Yabling law allows for nullifying debt after a trial by space combat.
* Hentai to consummate their marriage despite the titular bride's incredibly small...er, "receptor".
* Heroes of Might and Magic V-like monsters, human knights on ordinary horses, necromancers on skeletal demonic steeds, dwarves on mammoths, and orcs on giant bulls.
* Helluva Boss plays this straight if you pronounce his name as it's spelled instead of pronouncing it with the silent "o".
* GTA IV, if you carjack someone, there's a chance that they will try to fight back. Speed away, and they will grab onto the car's door handle, getting dragged down the road until they finally lose grip.
* High School Musical Troy climbs onto Gabriella's balcony in both the first and third movies. By the third it's implied that he's done it often; she has a basket on a rope ready to go down when he calls her. It's even written into their show.
* Hearts of Iron), it's not unusual to sometimes see NatChi and ComChi used for the Nationalist / Kuomintang and Communist forces, at least when they aren't using the KMT and CCP acronyms.
* Gravity Falls short, "Dipper's Guide to the Unexplained - Mailbox", Mabel causes a mailbox to explode using a video of her putting gummy worms in her nose. The explosion messes up her hair, takes off a small part of her sweater, and covers her in soot, but not much more than that; meanwhile, Dipper's and Soos' shirts are completely ripped to shreds.
* Hans-Ulrich Lutz, a pilot with the now-defunct Swiss airline Crossair, managed to keep his job despite several on-the-job blunders-such as retracting the landing gear of a plane while it was still on the ground and nearly landing at the wrong airport due to a navigation error. Unfortunately, this would come back to bite Crossair when Lutz

* Gone with the Wind, a novella that was discovered and published decades after her death.
* Gyunei and Quess's Jagd Dogas (though, since they're not Newtypes, they can't use their Funnels).
* Gold Coin Comics is a childhood rival that somehow survived his entire hometown being wiped out.
* God Michael — showing up, and the Spectre him/itself being specifically referred to as the Wrath of God), and then kinda sorta disavowed again.
* Gods and Warriors grants them. When we get back to Akea in the final book, that's exactly what the Crows have been doing.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Both Italy and Japan laughed around each other. They also happen to share feelings for each other.
* Gravity Falls throughout the episode and while Dipper does catch the ghost the first time, Pacifica is the one who gets rid of it.
* GUN×SWORD: Van and Ray Lundgren are both this, due to being loyal to their dead (would-be) wives.
* Goofy — First a central character in the Mickey Mouse cartoons. Got his own succesful spin-off cartoon series from 1939 until 1965. 50 cartoons in total. Received a 1990s TV cartoon series, two TV specials and two cartoons in 2007 and 2011.
* Hawaii Five-0 episode "Kuka'awale" ("Stakeout"), an old lady finishes a joke: "She says 'what's she got that I haven't got?' and he says 'Parkinson's'." It gets a laugh from the Five-0 crew and Chin Ho calls her a dirty old lady. He's right, as that's an actual joke, and a dirty one at that. The lady with Parkinson's gives better hand jobs on account of her condition.
* Gradius. To make a long story short, it uses "bubble memory", an early attempt at memory hardware that doesn't use moving parts unlike floppy disks or hard drives. Unfortunately, the Bubble System imposes a waiting timer in order to warm the hardware up to operating temperature, and it is very fragile and vulnerable to electromagnetic fields, which are everywhere in your usual arcade due to how many other cabinets are present. Bubble System games ended up being ported to more traditional ROM chips for overseas releases.
* Hanging Around: Suspending someone by their neck with a noose to the point of death.
* Heathcliff & the Catillac Cats –- much to the annoyance of Dixie's muscular older brother, Jake. Jake pays a visit to the junkyard later to warn Mongo to keep away from his sister. This stems more from not wanting his sister distracted from her athletic training than not liking Mongo.
* Green Day, singer/songwriter Billie Joe played St. Jimmy in some Broadway shows.
* Hans also wears gloves throughout the film, only removing them for The Reveal
* Granblue Fantasy features the Dark Essence – Crystals used by the high-ranking officials of the Erste Empire to drastically increase their combat abilities, and to corrupt Primal Beasts into their more violent Malice forms.
* H 3 H 3 Productions: Ethan is Ashkenazi like almost all American Jews, but the Israeli-born Hila is Sephardi.
* Goodbye Charlie: A male chauvinist lady killer is killed by his latest conquest's husband, and returns as Debbie Reynolds.
* Gravelord Nito, First of the Dead, who is, more or less, Lordran's equivalent of
* Global Frequency angel might have similar effects involving similar probabilities.
* Groundhog Day and began musing about vampiric immortality and what one would do with their time when it was limitless. He reasoned that vampires were like normal people without being forced to adhere to the same rules or moral boundaries. He questioned if and when it would become boring or pointless, and how a person would change over time, especially if that person was incapable of substantial change within their own limited mortal life. He singled out men he deemed to be in arrested development, who could not outlive their adolescence.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, the eponymous Onizuka once described love as "That magical spark between two people that you hope won't start a fire and burn them both to death."

* Gone Horribly Right, with the economic damage being so horrific that only in the closing years of the 20th century would citizens of modern Southern states achieve economic parity with their pre-Civil War ancestors.
* Gone is an alien virus that was riding a meteorite when it crashed into Earth — specifically a nuclear plant, which caused it to rapidly mutate and somehow become a mind-devouring god-like being.
* He has made some pretty insightful commentary about cultural differences and traditions, and how they can colour peoples' interactions, especially in the long term.
* GO-GO Tamagotchi episode 9b, Wagassiertchi falls into a hole and is brought back up again by a geyser of brown liquid that gushes out of it. Kuchipatchi tastes the liquid and finds out it's chocolate, leading to the creation of a chocolate hot spring in Patchi Forest.
* Hamlet 2 having decided to quit acting and become a nurse instead. The main character is a huge fan of hers and invites her to the school to give a talk about acting to his drama class — which ends up embarrassing for all concerned, as the kids have no idea who she is.
* Hardware synthesizers, especially analog ones, are often perceived as superior to software; analog equipment, in particular, is often described as having sound that is described with measures like "warm", "fat", "organic", "full", and other wizardry which no original synth designer have ever thought about.
* Guns N' Roses. The song was quickly written, it had been heard that Slash does not really like the song.
* He does it again when, having been suspected to be a serial killer and quickly cleared, he's in a police station talking with the chief about how heroes like him are stealing all the respect from the police when the serial killer, who is actually a Mysterious Being with a grudge with the police and
* Granny Girl Hinata-chan, that she's seeing all these things for the first time.
* Heroman end with large captions of "To Be Continued" in blocky, comic book title style text.
* Halo 3: ODST isn't one, but the "Sadie's Story" subplot contained in the audio logs is.
* Halo 4, you can do this to Covenant who are trying to enter a space station through an airlock.
* God-Created Canon Foreigner: The adaptation features a new character created by the original work's creator.
* Halloween Episode aired 20 years to the day of the premiere of "Blue's Big Costume Party".
* Gone with the Wind Scarlett finally realises — too late — that her supposed true love for Ashley is "only a sort of dream I had when I was a little girl".
* Go to south Florida around the Fourth of July sometime. Many of the Cuban immigrants who live there are some of the most fiercely patriotic Americans you'll ever meet. It's not an exaggeration to say that a lot of Cuban Americans * her Rage Breaking Point and teach her a lesson about empathy with the corrupted gem monster they're up against in that episode.
* Highwind girl on the nose. Cid calls her "Lady Luck" and occasionally calls out to her to help him.
* Harry is constantly described as looking exactly like his father, except that he has his mother's green eyes.
* Head ("Hey, HEY we are The Monkees! You know we love to please! A manufactured image, with no philosophies...").
* Good Eats, Alton Brown has ensured that all of his crew make at least one-time appearances as characters on the show.
* Grease, Danny deliberately hits Kenickie in the head with a car door so he can take his place in the drag race. He did this accidentally in the original movie.
* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life, your child's stuffed bear will occasionally come alive when no one else is in the room.

* Harry and the Shipgirls drive the basilisk fang through the diary itself.
* had been scheming against him who stole the credits of Roodaka's victories from her to become the leader of the Visorak horde, and while still a capable leader knew deep down he never earned his position and so tended to overcompensate by making his victories as impressive as possible, which made it all too easy for Roodaka to string him along.
* Hercules: The Maze and the Minotaur, where Hercules and Iolaus do mention that they've been to "the East."
* Go-Getter Girl: A young woman who strives to be perfect in every respect whether it be school or outside.
* Half in the Bag: Mike and Jay's movie reviews are usually sandwiched by a framing narrative of them being VCR repairmen who are typically exploiting their one customer Mr. Plinkett by charging him an hourly rate to fix his VCR while actually just drinking beer and discussing movies. Sometimes plot arcs get extended over a number of episodes, while other times they dispense with the pretense completely.
* God Never Said That: Fans misinterpret something the creator said or mistakenly believe the creator said it.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows after Ron suddenly thinks that no one's warned the house elves in the kitchens and Hermione instantly goes to snog him.
* Grey's Anatomy, as it's done by the certified Military Trauma Surgeon Owen Hunt, albeit done in an unconventional fashion with a ballpoint pen.
* He genuinely seems to hate vampires but that's more about class than a matter of species. Vimes especially despises members of the
* Ground-based shields can be bypassed by landing outside their protective radius and slowly walking under them. They serve to prevent your force from having the living bejeesus vaporized out of them by orbital bombardment. That forces the enemy into a land engagement which you usually have a better chance of winning — the scenario that took place in
* Happens during the game as well. If a zombie or any other special infected are pouncing the player and a Tank is near, he'll gladly smash them to get to the player. In fact, Tanks can inadvertently
* Halt Evil Doer! turned terrorist. Amusingly, he's close friends with flag-waving terrorist leader, General Venom.
* Hammer House of Horror have been built specifically as a prop for a low-budget horror TV show.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince. It's very rare, and has negative long term effects, but you've got to be a little bit surprised that neither side thought to brew up some for any of the really big/dangerous stuff.
* Heroic Age, which only go to specific places. Travelling off of a Starway is possible, but it requires a powerful psychic to navigate for you, and said navigation seems to be based largely on intuition rather than anything concrete. The Silver Tribe, being psychics by default, have little trouble doing this, while humanity only has a single known individual capable of such a feat. All other species are entirely dependent on the Starways.
* GoldenEye, this is one of the movies where real AK-74s are shown alongside fake ones (both modified AKMs or Type 56s as well as rubber props). Bond himself did get a hold of a real AKS-74U. Oddly, Xenia and Trevelyan are seen with fake ones in some scenes. Likely they didn't have enough of real AK-74s as the movie demanded.
* HaPijamot at All’, in which the apartment they live in was empty.
* Goldfinger: Auric blabs about his master plan to a bunch of goons, not Bond. Bond just so happens to be peeking in. Then Goldfinger kills the goons; however, he made sure they told their people to cooperate before he eliminated them. Then inverted, when Bond himself explains the plan to Goldfinger, and why it is doomed to fail. Initially Bond thought the plan was a heist, but when Goldfinger says it isn't, Bond realises what the true plan is, and tells Goldfinger that it's actually quite brilliant.
* Hercules: "How sentimental. You know, I haven't been this choked up since I got a hunk of moussaka caught in my throat! Huh? So is this an audience or a mosaic? Hey, how you doin'? Lookin' good. Nice dress."

* Hc Svnt Dracones. Energy weapons only appear in spaceship combat, where lasers are more expensive and have a lower rate of fire than railguns but have longer range and deal more damage per hit, while particle fields deal massive damage to everything in the one hex directly in front of the ship.
* Highlander "Eye for an Eye". A portion of the franchise's Queen "Princes of the Universe" theme played with it.
* Have You Been Paying Attention?, as its intro suggests, tests a group of five comedians/radio personalities on the week's events.
* Green Lanterns, those same circles tend to assume he's developed brain damage.
* He's Just Not That into You. One of them is "Chasing down a person you love through an airport to stop them from doing something".
* Hammer's Slammers exists to enforce contracts between Mercenary companies and governments, as well as to prevent atrocities. The backstory mentions that the Authority was formed when a planetary government massacred a mercenary unit. Seeing a major opportunity, the escrow firm that handled the unit's contract began working with the major banks. Using the Laws of War as a justification, the new cartel blockaded the planet into "stone age savagery" for their violations. With their new power, the cartel grew in wealth and influence, and founded the Authority to deal with the paperwork and oversight.
* Grandia, Justin must go through one of two magical portals. The right one will let him put an end to the deadly, acidic rain that's harming the locals, while the wrong one will kill him outright. When he doesn't immediately come back out, Feena (who chose the portal) begins to panic. He only shows up again as they're leaving the collapsing dungeon, and Feena responds as expected.
* Guardians: Kuratov imprisons the three heroes in his lair behind a magnetic forcefield. When Major Larina comes freeing them, she just shoots the generator that's on the outside to shut it off.
* Good Times: Willona's apartment is rarely seen, like when she adopted a young Janet Jackson.
* Gravitation television series begins its first episode with a live-action sequence following the main character as he runs somewhere. It lasts for only about ten seconds before switching to the anime version of the scene, and is never used again.
* Heaven Sword and Dragon Sabre, and get buried under the sand after the protagonist finds out the following morning, but she survives, and reappears around the later part of the novel.
* gratuitously, 'WHAT!?' is the response from almost every character in the game, to almost every event that occurs in the game
* Guile Hero for Scheherezade is lampshaded in at least one adaptation.
* He also explains one aloud in a blackly hilarious scene involving a bully pushing him a bit too far.
* Gnosticism the hierarchy is like this; the God of Light or God Supreme (also called Monad or Pleroma, similar to the Jewish concept of Ein Soft), the (normally) twelve Aeons or Emanations of God, among them is Sophia. Then Sophia mistakenly creates the Demiurge who creates the material universe and the Archons as his servants.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law episode "Turner Classic Birdman" reveals that this is why Harvey Birdman became a, well, attorney at law: he was tired of the constant stress of being a superhero and desired a more mundane life. A pity all his allies and enemies followed him into law, ensuring his law career was as crazy as his superhero career.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Aunt Marge believes she has accidentally broken a glass by squeezing it too hard. In actual fact, Harry subconsciously made it explode. However, she does claim to have accidentally broken another glass a few days before at someone else's house.
* Gundam 00, everything blows up. One example involved the 00 Gundam quartering an asteroid its swords, triggering expansion in pockets of frozen gases sufficiently to cause the surface to rupture with extreme force and leading to a spectacular explosion.

* Harvester. It involves at least three bolts, a chair, several scalpels, and some barbed wire...
* Han Solo and Princess Leia borderline it. Harrison Ford, Han’s actor, stands 6’1 and Carrie Fisher was a foot shorter at 5’1.
* Great Teacher Onizuka occasionally, but he's a genuine mentor to Noboru all through the manga series. Even if his methods are somewhat extreme.
* Harry Potter with lots of clues and red herrings in it, and all this set in a pretty unique setting.
* He was disguising their true plan by hiding it behind his back with one hand and somehow operating a pump-action shotgun with the other.
* "God's a bit tetchy", he is disturbed to note that that punishment includes the children. Aziraphale is hesitant about the plan but unwilling to question it, whereas Crowley is outright horrified by it.
* Harry Potter and didn't realize the anachronism until fans pointed it out.
* He doesn't seem surprised to be waking up next to her. Presumably, it was just a one-night stand.
* Harry Potter' world where he's practically unknown. A sharp contrast to his celebrity status in the world of wizards (On those occasions where he isn't vilified).
* Has happened three times with Walt the canary: he's pooped on Lincoln's head, in his room, and in a dogcatcher's drink. Unfortunately, the dogcatcher drank it.
* Halo: Combat Evolved, one (AI-controlled) human ship takes on 12 similarly-sized CCS battlecruisers and manages to destroy four of them and cripple at least one other, though the books reveal that the Covenant were trying to board and capture the ship rather than just obliterate it.
* Hans the Hedgehog": Applies to the two kings, who get lost there on the way home and have to ask for Hans' help to get out.
* He also occasionally referred to the "much better writer" who used his brain while he was asleep, and occasionally left fragments of an idea behind.
* Hanna-Barbera. While Atom Ant had atomic superpowers, Inch High used his wits, ascribing to the adage "the bigger they are, the harder they fall."
* Green-Skinned Space Babe: In reality, were aliens to exist, we (most likely) could not have sex with them.
* He was also burned to a husk (while still human) by a four-tailed yoko. Ouch.
* GX has an entire deck that runs on wildly-improbable five-card combos; he can't seem to finish a duel without using up every single card in his hand or on the field, all in one move. Worse still is his heavy reliance on monster fusion, which of course means that he magically has "Polymerization" in his hand without ever having to wait to draw it. One time during his duel with Ryusei Gin/Lorenzo, Judai plays Climax Hour, which makes it so he can automatically summon a monster if he draws one on his third turn after playing Climax Hour. When it is about to be his third turn, Judai uses Hero Call to put Elemental Hero Neos on top of his deck. Gin counters by using Stage Select to shuffle Judai's deck. However, Gin is shocked when Judai draws Elemental Hero Neos anyway and defeats him with it.
* Handle with Care: Picoult admitted to taking liberties with the way juries are selected in order to make that section of the novel more interesting.
* HERZ chasing after him, but she never managed to get him to reciprocate her feelings, and her attempts to seduce him were impulsive and ill-though-out and alienated him further.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: Mantis winds up reading the mind of a Zom, an undead cyborg created by the Badoon. She's horrified to discover there's still some of the original being's mind left.
* Good golfers, particularly longer hitters, can get bored when they have to play more forward tees than they usually do in order to play the same tees as their less skilled/athletic playing partners. They didn't spend $300+ dollars on a driver to hit 3-iron off every tee.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Two of Kiku's and Feliciano's children pretty much inherit their hair colors and hairstyles.
* Gundam X focuses on the remnants of the old Earth Federation trying to reclaim their old influence... by forcibly conquering Europe, Asia, and Africa. By the end of the series, though, they're still having a hard time with North America (they really didn't expect the generally lawless and fractured city-states and Vultures to band together against them) and the remaining space colonies are not pleased with the Federation's revival.

* Heroic example in the season 10 finale, when the team absorbs enemy fire to power a time machine.
* Gundam the Attack Drone concept; it's one of the few things to appear across almost every continuity. In order:
* He did get the sentence shortened to a month. When he should have been in prison for years for orchestrating the entire theft. Again,
* Highlander III: The Sorcerer film has Connor's sword shattering, so he goes home to Scotland to reforge it and rebuild his strength.
* Gold is taboo. To mint coins from the stuff is borderline blasphemy (and possibly treason), nopony buys gold jewelry, and even to mention it in a complementary manner raises eyebrows.
* Haguro is in love with Inugami's carnage, to the point he refuses to believe Inugami even has the ability to like normal people.
* Hender's Island are creatures known as spigers, which as their name implies, resemble a cross between a tiger and a spider, and grow to the size of trucks. They're actually a type of crustacean related to mantis shrimp, though.
* Halloween Special, the Yugopotamians believe that Earth is preparing for war because of all the costumed (turned real) monsters. When confronted, Timmy announces that war is on, and as the Yugopotamians leave they drop a "P-Bomb". While Wanda and Cosmo are worried, Timmy is not, and we soon see why: the P stands for Piñata.
* Halo 3 will at low health occasionally overcharge their energy cannons to wildly unstable levels in order to turn themselves into mecha-shaped bombs.
* Gorillaz, which had a zombie grabbing Murdoc in the balls. According to Murdoc, it really hurt and he was "singing falsetto for weeks".
* Harry Potter be interested in her. Those who read the books with that bias wound up bemoaning the sinking of the Harry/Hermione ship and vilifying Rowling for carrying on relationships that had been well-established in the books.
* Guardians of the Galaxy shows how a young Peter Quill gets taken by aliens.
* Highschool DXD: Panders to the fans of this trope with the petite Sona Sitri and her lovely Queen piece Tsubaki Shinra.
* Helluva Boss is shown to be extremely violent and loud when discovering that her husband Stolas has been cheating on her with Blitzo the imp. So bad, in fact, that she was willing to put out a hit on him.
* Harvey Street Kids Lotta trying to win over a cat who likes everyone else on Harvey Street. After the cat gets stuck in a tree, she goes up there to save him, to which he claws at her, letting her grip go. Once she is saved by other animals, she learns her lesson, and the cat, who easily lands on his feet, gets some comeuppance.
* Hamlet 2's musical-within-a-movie has a song about how Jesus is this:
* Going My Way: The Robert Mitchel Boychoir provided the boys that played the part of the parish choir.
* Green Ronin Their only beneficial abilities are that a) their bad luck is literally contagious, meaning people within ten feet of them take similar penalties, and b) they can once-per-encounter trigger a Calamitous Mishap, meaning that something very bad (for instance, being struck by lightning or having the ground give way) happens to a person within five feet of them... and also them.
* heavily invokes this trope (and occasionally lampshades it in the script). It's a show with four male characters and four female characters, with two male actors playing all of the roles. In particular, the actor playing Nicodemus and Enid not only holds conversations with himself during costume changes, but also plays out a scene involving playing the monster that's mauling Nicodemus off-stage.
* Hannibal Lecter He almost drops the act when Jack points out he's a fictional character, but manages to compose himself before it's time for his verse.

* Guardian. Although she's somewhat cynical about pilgrimages and the Church of Yevon, she never wholly abandons her faith—she transfers the greater part of her belief in Yuna, who she knows to be good and trustworthy.
* Happened again after WWII, with the added distastefulness of lots of Nazis finding work with their former enemies. Gestapo personnel, German scientists, and other potential assets were recruited by both sides in the * Haruhi Suzumiya is a headstrong/charismatic example. However, despite her desires and delusions, Kyon is the real leader of the Brigade (level-headed variant). This is most obvious when comparing both of their interactions with Yuki. While Yuki follows Haruhi's orders, she makes no attempt to hide the fact that she considers Kyon a higher authority; he has explicitly countermanded Haruhi's orders a few times. She also tends to (silently) ask him for permission whenever an odd situation arises.
* here. The readers already know it's Tarquin, but the characters don't.
* Good old Professor Farnsworth can have this effect when he actually is making sense
* Happy Sugar Life is murdered by Satou after she had taken a picture of Shio living in an apartment room she "owned."
* Grand Theft Auto often features trains that the player must be wary of.
* GURPS but a particularly funny example appears in the Biotech supplement where the [[Catrans girl Felicia]] parahuman template has a Super Mode that causes their libido to go into overdrive afterward.
* hiding the siblings means they likely have a set up to avoid that possibility. Of course, they are officially dead and who will look in a "commoner" school for royalty?
* Haruhi Suzumiya, he uses Koizumi, and adds a "just kidding" at the back. If he wants to show off his general knowledge, he uses Kyon and his references.
* he turns purple after Nanoha suggests that he's quite nice despite his stoic exterior for suggesting that the TSAB will be lenient with Fate by taking her circumstances into account, and immediately claims that what he said isn't necessarily his opinion.
* Hate Sink: A character designated to be hated by the audience. Affably Evil characters are not supposed to be hated.
* has one such scene where Phineas and Isabella fall asleep on the bus to Charlotte.
* Happens in most MMOs sooner or later, thanks to Players Are Morons (sort of justified on the side of the developers, because only the players who can't find the items will write long ranty bug reports saying finding the objects is impossible).
* Hannah Montana where Oliver, Lilly and Miley are stacked up like this watching Jackson fail to persuade Robbie Ray to up his curfew.
* Great Ten, serving as a paragon of wisdom and emotional strength. It takes some kind of woman to have lose 25 children eight days after they're born and remain in control. She's actually had sex with most of her teammates - but that's because these couplings produce soldiers with even greater abilities.
* He does it again by putting a whole carrot, a whole fish, fishbones, a rotten tomato, aojiru (kale juice, which is rich in nutrients but bitter to taste) and baker's chocolate in chili soup. (Although this last one isn't that unusual — chocolate, especially dark chocolate, goes very well when added to chili. Mexican chocolate is
* Hamlet as a power grab for the throne of Denmark (complete with marriage to the now-widowed Queen Gertrude to add insult to injury). Hamlet learns of this when his father's ghost appears to him in the first scene.
* Hayate the Combat Butler are said to have this kind of a relationship, hinted at being a rivalry of fortunes. What with only one person of child-bearing age each and both of them after the same guy, it's likely one of the families will die out, if not both.
* Health Justice Now: The cover of the book has a picture of the Caduceus; a well-known medical symbol, fused with the scales. This makes sense since this playbook is about social justice linked arm-in-arm with health justice for us all.

* Heroic Sacrifice when they failed to show up. In other cases specialized regiments have been mistakenly sent to the wrong warzones. With jungle fighters being sent to ice worlds, and arctic combatants being sent to battle in rain forests.
* Halt and Catch Fire Joe deliberately informs IBM that Joe and Gordon, as Cardiff Electric employees, have reverse engineered the IBM PC BIOS code. IBM sends in an army of lawyers and Nathan Cardiff is left with two choices: fully commit his company to the PC clone project Joe is advocating or get sued into bankruptcy by IBM. Everyone is furious at Joe but in the end he gets his way. This is then subverted when we realize that the project's failure will ruin everyone except Joe. He forced everyone else to take a high personal risk and commit fully to the project, but due to his father's connections he can walk away at any time and resume his old life.
* Heavy Metal 2000, Odin at first appears to be an ally helping Julie in beating Tyler to the well of immortality. After Tyler is killed, Odin reveals himself to be an Aracatian who was manipulating Julie so he could use the well of immortality for himself.
* he seems to view life as a comic book. Also in his case, it may be more a case of simply wanting to save her, because he wants to save EVERYONE (it's what heroes do, after all), and it's only in the process of trying to save her that she becomes more than just another innocent civilian that needs saving. While the Dulcinea Effect is falling in love (lust) and then helping, in Hiro's case, he was helping and then fell in love. He followed much the same pattern with Yaeko as well.
* GUN: The renegade army led by Sergeant Hollister are former Confederate soldiers turned raiders and pirates, operating out of an old U.S Army fort, and wear parts of their old uniforms mixed with facepaint and tattoos.
* He is first shown fighting a 'Mech twice with twice his size and hideous amounts of firepower… and almost wins by destroying its engine, except it pulled a trick he didn't expect.
* Harry Potter about Harry's death is what gives Harry the chance to win the war once and for all.
* Grand Theft Auto III got mainstream success and critical notices in the leading newspapers that only movies and music albums ever got.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Lost and Damned were founded by US Marines that met during the Vietnam War, but after the war ended they turned into a biker gang since they continued thirsting for violence. As for their current incarnation, Jim Fitzgerald and Clay Simmons originally belonged to the USMC and the US Army respectively and now use their skills to help the Lost.
* Godzilla (2014) plan which could make the kaiju problem worse, the military are not portrayed in an unsympathetic light.
* He Who Must Not Be Seen - A work goes to ridiculous lengths to avoid showing a character
* Harry and Dumbledore yell one when Minister Fudge states that he called a press conference to announce declaration of war against Voldemort.
* Godai does this several times with Sakamoto over the course of the series, although usually, they are not after the same woman. Though that might be more
* Gulliver's Travels are as tall as church steeples and have a moral superiority in proportion to their physical size. When Gulliver describes European society, the Brobdingnagian king is disgusted. In contrast, the Lilliputians see Gulliver as a giant, and their own society is a parody of the worst aspects of European society. But just because they're morally superior doesn't mean they're above tormenting Gulliver for kicks, such as the bratty boy who tossed a rock at him, the court's dwarf, and the noblewomen.
* Happy Days, think they've accidentally gotten married, to Jenny's delight and Fonzie's horror.
* Hatsune Miku, along with being featured in a pizza ordering app for iOS gadgets. She's even helped with Sapporo tourism with the annual "Snow Miku" festival, and serves as the mascot of Goodsmile Racing's stock team as "Racing Miku".

* Happy Tree Friends. He just doesn't have a reason to utilize these skills most of the time, lacking the evil side's bloodthirst.
* God-Emperor of Dune rules the Galaxy as a tyrant for 3000 years to enforce peace.
* hand waved as being replica of their creators, they are still made of rock or metal and don't even reproduce sexually.
* Grenadier: Teppa Aizen also used cloth drills, along with other assorted cloth-based powers.
* Greek Mythology on top of other wrathful acts when he came of age. That being said, there are times that Hera actually got things right; why don't you ask Medea on how it turns out for Jason betraying her marriage?
* H. G. Wells (1895). While exploring a far future museum, the Time Traveller discovers that most of the items are useless. However, he breaks a lever off a machine for use as a club and finds a box of matches and a lump of camphor that he uses to make fire and light.
* Hannah Montana" has Lilly make it clear to 'Hannah' when they meet backstage that she can see through the Hannah disguise when her best friend is right in front of her, even if it's easier to buy the deception when watching Hannah on TV or at a distance at a concert.
* Hatoful Boyfriend. Ryouta even gets anxious and possessive when considering the idea that Hiyoko may grow apart from him in time.
* "half-swording", or "murder stroke", which would have allowed him to use his sword as a make-shift club.
* Hellsing who are killed this way are vampires they are created artificially so they are vulnerable to this form of termination, while Alucard and Seras are not.
* Guardians of the Flame in their fight against slavery. Predictably, the opposing factions, although not privy to the details of things such as how to make gunpowder, find ways to adapt the technology through magic. In fact the slavers manage to make some water-powered rifles which partly work by a spell.
* Good Luck! Ninomiya-kun (seen in the page's picture) in one episode while cooking dinner for Shungo's sister. Pity anyone who walks in on them because they get roped into wearing them as well. (It's implied that the mushrooms they were using in the stew were intoxicants or aphrodisiacs.)
* Gundam Wing Gundam Heavyarms. Despite an armament of 52 missiles + 36 homing missiles, instead of using them against multiple targets, he invariably launches all of them in a single barrage against a few targets.
* Halo Wars can be used as a more conventional, if ad hoc, Kill Sat. On the other hand, Covenant ground forces can call upon their own ships in orbit to deliver plasma bombardment or 'glassing' on their enemy.
* Heterogenia Linguistico's scales, but this is apparently equivalent to flirting, and Hakaba's guide Susuki asks if Hakaba was coming on to him (the lizardman).
* Higher Learning apologize to each other and agree that it never happened and they will not speak about it ever again.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince Harry accidentally (but not unhappily) facilitates breakups between both Ron and Lavender and Ginny and Dean, though he doesn't see either.
* Heroes, Peter Petrelli is sued by a man who claims that Peter injured him while saving him from a bus crash. However, the man drops the lawsuit as soon as he's accomplished his real objective: meeting Peter.
* Gunslinger Girl — it's better for Lorenzo to pass this off as a success than admit to glitches in the cyborg program.
* Godzilla vs. Megalon, while much of Western kaiju fandom overlooked these later installments (which didn't get as much circulation in the West) until fairly recently.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, even though his body died when his own curse was reflected. Therefore, he only needed a new body.
* Henry Danger episode "Indestructible Henry, Part 1", Ray gives Henry and Charlotte an old VCR tape to watch, and both of them try to find the on button on the tape until realizing they can't even find a screen. Henry then believes that the reels are what you look into.

* Gunfighter Gothic series has the protagonists facing off against many fiendish Christmas figures, both mythical and otherwise. Krampus is, of course, one of them.
* Hardspace: Shipbreaker quick in getting them out after clearing most of the ship out of the way, or carefully cut off fuel and coolant flows (unique to them) to give yourself a more lenient time limit. Both classes start sending lightning arcs everywhere after a few seconds, and both will detonate and utterly trash the ship they're in if you're too late.
* Hawaii Five-0 to steal some of it and leak the info back to McGarrett, leading him to the person who ordered his father's death.
* Grim Fandango had an interesting description of its main character, Manny Calavera.
* Halfway through Season 2, Bobby and Ronnie Anne Santiago move from the show's suburban setting to the city to live with their extended family, the Casagrandes. This was a two-part episode where we meet the entire family in what is an obvious way to launch a spin-off... and indeed, * Gravedale High didn't tell you), and Blanche (zombie). And that's just Mr. Schneider's class.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 is able to pick up on Peter's feelings for Gamora, and is happy to share this with the whole group. Drax is...amused, to say the least.
* Helvetia, a feminine personification of Switzerland, can be seen on Swiss coins.
* Hero & Daughter lost her last job because she accidentally burned down the house. One conversation reveals that she's risking the same fate, as Ralph warns her not to play with fire near the alcohol. His reaction to her following pun is called "a good one" by Lilia.
* He wasn't happy for the rescue. Later in the Cell Games, Gohan lost the used of his arm protecting Vegeta from a fatal blast from Cell. And at the tail end of the Kid Buu fight, he was pinned down by Buu to keep Goku from throwing the Spirit Bomb. It was the combine effects of Fat Buu and Mr. Satan that saved him.
* Harry Chapin / I don't know when, but we'll get together then," but the son nevertheless desires to be like his father. At the end, while reflecting that his now-grown son is too busy to spend time with him, the narrator muses "he'd grown up just like me" - the last two repetitions replace "dad" with "son".
* Gokusen in love with her and determined to win the fight and her hand.
* Heroic Sacrifice in the main game as well. He lives to see his beloved friend smile.
* GURPS, a sidebar makes it very clear why you shouldn't get between a mother animal and her young.
* Glory Girl also qualifies, as her power generates fear in her foes and respect in her allies, which she can increase or decrease as she likes. Combined with her
* Hayate the Combat Butler, the SC Rangers are filming a video and need feel the need for something more "shocking". So Izumi suggests they go film Kotetsu's room. Given that Kotetsu is an avid photographer and Hayate's self-professed stalker, it comes as no surprise that the entire room is literally covered in various-sized pictures of Hayate. What really sets the creepiness factor up a few more notches is the fact there there is literally nothing else in it except his bed. Risa and Miki definitely find it creepy. Izumi finds it "pure love".
* Helix and specifically requesting the aid of the CDC's Dr. Julia Walker, which kicks off the plot as a CDC rapid response team and an army liaison are dispatched.
* Head of the Class, for which he was given zero budget. He talks the principal into being in the show as Mr. Mushnick, then explains his concept for production. (Quote not guaranteed exact; we couldn't get someone to search it out.)
* Happy Heroes: In Season 2 episode 21, Big M. jumps through an open window to escape from the Supermen's dorm. Big M. doesn't realize he's too high up in the building to land safely until Little M. points this out, at which point the slow-motion jump is interrupted by him falling to the ground abruptly.
* Glomping used to be a popular thing to do in anime conventions but has since fallen out of favor with the anime community due to instances of cosplays being damaged, people getting injured, and just the general idea of invading a stranger's personal space by surprise hugging them becoming frowned upon.

* Golden Age and forces them to keep fighting when they get seriously wounded:
* Grey's Anatomy: Amelia Shepherd is a former addict who lost her boyfriend and baby. She had a brain tumor for ten years and her brother died. She makes consistent, usually unfunny jokes (to the other characters) whenever possible, especially when upset.
* GURPS has the Enemy disadvantage. By adjusting your Enemy's Power level (how many people are looking for you and how powerful they are), their Intent (what they have planned for you), and their Frequency of Appearance (what the GM has to roll for them to show up), it's very easy to simulate this trope. Of course, to quote the rule book, "You can get a 60 point bonus by taking Enemy (FBI, 12 or less, Hunter) but... even with an extra 60 points, your career may be short." As current page image Mr. John Dillinger learned.
* he was causing the heat wave, and subsequently forbidden by a judge from performing any heroics. When he defies that order to save a life, the police arrest him for breaking the decree. Later, in holding, a man was taunting him ("Tugging on Superman's cape") when the guy accidentally hits another detainee, then wants Supes to help him. Superman just steps aside and says, "Sorry."
* Guy Gardner, Kyle Rayner, John Stewart, and Charlie Vickers are all legendary members of the
* Grandia II Ryudo does this to Elena shortly before the dungeon containing Valmar's Tongue.
* Gothic Horror: Horror stories with heavy emphasis on Romanticism (sometimes including an actual romance arc), and often focusing on mystery and symbolism; had a great deal of influence upon many modern Speculative Fiction genres/sub-genres.
* Havenfall Is for Lovers: In JD's fourth season, they and the heroine head to a supernatural nightclub. The bouncer outside turns out to be three tiny bouncers in a trenchcoat.
* Hamtaro only covered 104 episodes of the 296-episode TV series. The tie-in video games continued to be translated long after, however.
* Heartbeeps, among other films, never happened. Apparently he spent his entire 80's career being a wrestler and getting cancer.
* Heel–Face Turn is caused by the discovery of people in jars for organ harvesting.
* Greg Ayres: "Look, I finally have the same hair color as the character I'm playing! I knew if I kept my hair purple long enough, it would happen."
* Halo 2, standard Forerunner Aggressor Sentinels were silver and fired orange beams, while the stronger versions were gold and fired blue beams.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers - it's England who's obsessed with magic and the occult, not Nazi Germany.
* Gough Whitlam that merely went unused until then. In addition to the political controversy that erupted over "the Dismissal", it became a galvanizing moment in the then-nascent movement for Australian republicanism.
* Henry Cho talks about his mother-in-law speaking loudly in English to his father, a man of Korean descent who however speaks perfect English. She says "HELLO, IT'S GOOD TO MEET YOU" loudly and slowly, and his dad turns to him and asks, "What is she doing?" — "She thinks she's speaking Korean, Dad!"
* Happy Tree Friends", Disco Bear (in his first appearance) accidentally injures Petunia and Giggles as he tries to dance with them. He ends up misinterpreting their movements as they're in pain as some kind of new dance, and tries to join in.
* helped the Germans because panzers are more maneuverable over frozen lands than muddy ones. The resulting stalemate by the end of the year meant the war would inevitably drag on for several more before the Russians could fully repel the invaders.
* Happens again when SpongeBob starts singing, "There no place like hoooome..." then gets cut off by Sandy's crying.
* Henrik Drescher the main character Mo ends up eating everyone in his town and then the whole world.
* Good Old Days, like Gambrinus or Le Roi d'Yvetot, are usually depicted as quite plump fellahs.

* Hiei was thrown off of a cliff to his death as a newborn and miraculously survives. Most likely due to him being wrapped tightly and thickly in bandages to keep his fire within. Also, it's implied he lands directly in moving water, yet he didn't drown.
* GoldenEye. Trevelyan says that he considered making this offer to James, but realised that Bond would never accept it.
* Growing Paynes, the Paynes attend a wedding, and the boys wear kilts. Percy hasn't had a haircut in a while, and people keep mistaking him for a girl. In the end, he gets frustrated and proves he's a boy by lifting up his kilt to show off his... blue underwear.
* Hermats have a name followed by a number (e.g. Burgoyne 172, Dogayn 418 or Rulan 12).
* Hero Elementary are like this; each of the classes/teams seems to have a uniform of sorts, but the members each individualize it. For example, the main characters, the Sparks' Crew, have a basic uniform of a blue or white top with the school insignia, red gloves, and blue bottoms, but Lucita wears a skirt with leggings, Benny wears shorts and AJ and Sara wear pants. As for the tops, Sara wears a hoodie and Benny wears a short-sleeved sweater vest, while AJ and Lucita wear long-sleeved shirts. Interestingly enough, these outfits sync up somewhat with their out-of-school clothes.
* Great Gaffa's Ghost implying that the 'Mech itself is haunted by the old general's spirit, or somehow a spirit itself seeing as how it has been reported on half a dozen planets thousands of light years apart.
* Haven is often completely unaware that they are the one causing the supernatural activity and are often completely unaware of the Troubles themselves.
* Good is, obviously, good; concerned with freedom, liberty, all that other such stuff. They do not specifically associate good with government and are, in fact, very quick to consider toppling corrupt regimes or recognizing when evil is
* Gyges, an android of the same model, is able to use the time shift keep up with the Shrike in a fight for a few moments before being torn apart. The last thing he sees before dying is the Shrike using its
* Harry is trying to avoid the girls in his life and gets a bit paranoid in his reasoning.
* Hack/Slash featured the RapeVan, a malevolent van that prowled lovers lanes, raping other vehicles, obliterating them and anyone unfortunate enough to be in them at the time.
* Go-Getter Girl and mentions once being so distraught over failing a math test that she accidentally flooded her old school.
* Harriet Smith becomes Emma's assistant, who develops feelings for Bobby Martin, the company's IT guy. Emma doesn't approve mostly because she thinks Harriet can do better rather than having an issue with them being co-workers.
* Heads of state, from royals to presidents, are all subject to some kind of admiration, some of it fanatical. Dictators are the most extreme example.
* GUNBare!'s fifth level boss is a giant mecha in the form of a cute robot maid.
* Good Burger starts out this way, with the smooth-talking Dexter treating the dimwitted Ed with nothing but disrespect, and then tricking Ed into giving Dexter most of the profits made from Ed's secret sauce. Dexter eventually realizes he's taking advantage of the incredibly good-natured Ed and they're better suited teaming up to take down Mondo Burger.
* Hammer's Slammers: Powerguns use precisely arranged copper atoms stored in a plastic matrix. The atoms are pulled down the mirror-smooth barrel of the weapon by electromagnets. The barrels are cooled by liquid nitrogen and air, as most use a rotary assembly. The net effect is a machine gun that ejects plastic discs instead of brass cartridges and hoses cyan bursts that can flash-boil your brain instead of bullets.
* Harry Potter that they have a literal undead author in the case of Moaning Myrtle, who died encountering the Basilisk, but can still share details because she stuck around as a ghost.

* Helluva Boss: In the pilot, one of I.M .P's clients was a man who murdered his wife because she cheated on him with the deliveryman. He was enraged about being caught and executed and contracted the group to kill the jogger who caught him hiding the body.
* Haruhi Suzumiya because "Your potential usefulness was marginally greater than the threat you present."
* .hack// games, static fills the screen whenever Skeith is around. Static also intermittently appears in glitched fields and dungeons, as well as when Data Drain backfires and causes negative effects.
* Hayate the Combat Butler at the idea of his little girl getting involved with anyone, pounding anyone he thinks is a would-be suitor senseless. Oh, and we should also mention being perfectly willing to challenge said would-be suitors to a fight above a pit of lava.
* "Goodbye, world" "Okay, Jim, see ya 'round. Hey, where ya going cause gunshot Oh! That's not what I thought he meant by that at all!"
* Hero Killer. To date, Nikita is the only one who managed to get one-up on him, and she still runs if she has the chance when he shows up.
* have Dalí work on a short film back in the 1940s, but understandably never finished it. It was revived some fifty years later and unleashed in 2003 in all its surreal glory.
* Haruhi herself starts out the series with a perpetual frown (hence the title of the first book,
* Haunted Mansion hasn't got any real official backstory so far, although there are just enough clues to make the audience wonder. The Internet has a gigantic amount of theories about the backstory of the Mansion. More recent additions to the Mansion seem to create a "canonical" backstory have raised great protestation from the fans who imagined a backstory as they rode through the attraction.
* He also did this in the Christmas short that went with the movie, using peppermints.
* Hellish Copter, second assistant director Andy House had his name removed from the credits and replaced with the pseudonym Alan Smithee.
* Goyo: Ang Batang Heneral, we see the titular general as he's liquidating the last of the recently assassinated General Antonio Luna's friends and allies. Manuel Bernal, as he's being tortured and coerced, refuses to give in, preferring to insult Del Pilar, Aguinaldo, and all those that follow them. Even when they bring his brother in, Manuel just reminds him to remember what they fought for and to stay strong.
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost, a person's mind, emotions and memories are carved in ectoplasm and remain behind after death. Because ectoplasm is a much more versatile support than flesh for a human mind, the resulting ghosts need a lot of focus ato "materialize" into a visible form and re-access their memories.
* Glee's Kurt Hummel almost always fixes his hair while singing a high note, and always sits with his legs crossed.
* Great Mazinger, and he is under the orders of the Emperor of Darkness (also known like Hades).
* Grand Theft Auto Advance: starts of with a one last job situation, needless to say. Things become way more complicated than it seems.
* Harry and Ron move into a really crappy apartment. It has a closet which they are afraid to open the door to because they're fairly certain there's something living in there.
* her husband Khal Drogo dies Eventually Dany ends up having sex with Irri.
* Hey Arnold!, in order to avoid hearing one of Grandpa's war stories, Ernie gave the plausible excuse that he left his underwear in the dryer. Oscar then followed up by claiming that he also left his underwear in Ernie's dryer...interpret that how you will.
* governments do things that would put them in jail (or worse) if it wasn't for the crazy circumstances.
* Gorilla, Interrupted's web videos, ironically make them some of the best in the film.

* Hidamari Sketch, following the lives of several art students, appropriately throws in numerous brief scenes that use a wide variety of different art styles. Yuno's daydream during an art history class starts imitating the painting styles they are being taught about (Fauvism and Cubism); watercolour-style art is occasionally used in particularly emotional scenes; other scenes use imitations of collage, silhouette, pencil sketches and a variety of other media.
* Heralds of Valdemar, uses the combination of highly polished armour, mirrors, and some minor magic to amplify reflected light, to storm a Karsite position with few casualties. This is particularly psychologically damaging to the Karsite soldiers as they worship a Sun God.
* Grim Dawn and resistant to Sleep and Fear. There are also four Hero versions that may show up to make life that much more difficult for the adventurer: Nemedian, Effigus, Asper, and Crowfiend. The latter two can summon ravens while Effigus can summon the insectoid Infestor.
* Harry talks the Potter house elves into throwing pies and other pastries at James, Sirius and Remus.
* gotten a bit high, they butchered the entire crew of the ship their target was on, leading to two of them nearly being killed while they were recovering their energy.
* Godzilla, a radio crew reporting the attack on Tokyo realize they have no way out. Accepting it, they announce this fact to their listeners and continue reporting until Godzilla destroys the tower from which they're broadcasting.
* Halo: Contact Harvest, a nervous Grunt attacks a human militiaman during a diplomatic meeting and starts the entire Human-Covenant war. The "negotiations" involved the Brutes demanding the humans hand over the planet with everything on it. There was no way this was going to end well.
* He also employs clever tactics, advanced constructs, and sophisticated attacks as standard, but as a result he is easily flustered by direct, intense pressure that doesn't give him time to think or plan. This is in contrast to Green Lanterns, who are typically quite adept at simply reacting without thinking in combat.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 and he thinks nothing at all of the countless lives that would be destroyed by his ultimate plan. That he describes the sensation of meeting life other than himself as "disappointing" speaks volumes.
* God and had to earn a proper resurrection afterwards over the course of several episodes.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name, Toni greets Zombie and then Conrad as the paranormal investigator she hired. She thought Hanna was "their little brother or something."
* Grand Theft Auto of flying them before that if he sneaks into an airport and hijacks one.
* Guild Wars 2, Zojja feels this way about Eir Stegalkin, who was in command during a battle that went terribly wrong and resulted in the death of her mentor Snaff.
* Halloween (1978)'s best friend, considerably nicer than the other, non-cheerleader, friend.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Zeus gets mightily pissed at the thought of a mere mortal reading out his rights. Violence ensues.
* heroic, four multicolored dimples in each cheek, seven pupils in each eye, and seven clawed fingers and toes on each hand/foot.
* GURPS lose about half of their power when in space due to lack of atmosphere.
* "Hello, hello? What's all this shouting? We'll have no trouble here!"
* Going from a car with a key switch ignition to a push button ignition, and vice-versa. You'll end up either trying to stick your keys into a non-existent key switch or looking for a non-existent "push to start" button.
* Happy Ending Override - a subversion of the Happy Ending where it's undone in the sequel
* Hero Flash!! Its artwork features all the letters from the artwork of those cards.
* Hentai, Yaku turns into a werewolf when the moon is full...unless she has a good orgasm by midnight. She is ashamed of this alternate form (and so usually tries to prevent it), but it can occasionally be handy in fights.

* Hilarious variant in "Berry, Berry Interesting" where Pikachu slams into an
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! shows Tsubomi and Erika walking to school and talking. They actually use that scene - at the very end of the series.
* Heat so the two would again star side-by-side. The first was both a critical and commercial success. The second was...not.
* Hell-Bent Fer Heaven, in which a jealous schemer tries to re-start a family feud in order to get a love rival killed, takes place over a span of five hours one evening.
* Heroes graphic novels can also absorb people auras, killing them and giving her their power.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, Kasai has a long scar above both eyes that crosses the bridge of his nose. It's usually concealed beneath his glasses, so it's only shown when he's on duty Tsuruya's bodyguard.
* Halo: Combat Evolved set at the midpoint between a gas giant and its moon. Most of the other Halos in the series appear to orbit gas giants as well.
* ("Heidi becomes a princess"), passing it off as a sequel to the aforemented series.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, levitating him by his ankle so that his robe flips over, revealing what's described as a pair of "grey and sagging Y-fronts."
* Harper's Island and by extension the girl's mother), and is the one to kill the murderer.
* Groundling Marsh: The show was generally done using live-action puppets. However, whenever someone would start narrating a story, it would be told using animated still images.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince Professor McGonagall acts as her Minder.
* Guest host Pam Anderson did an opening monologue where she said (paraphrased): "I'm really neverous. They say when you're nervous you're supposed to imagine the audience naked...that's not working. Maybe you're supposed to imagine
* Guardian (Jaime Reyes) and Traci Thirteen as one, and the aforementioned Nightwing and Oracle as another.
* God of War (PS4) has the Valkyries, who are among the toughest enemies of the games with each having a unique attack. After you defeat them all, you can challenge their queen Sigrun, who is not only stronger but has all of their attacks.
* Glee, Quinn is the prettiest girl in the school, and everyone thinks so. When Rachel is considering a nose job, she brings Quinn with her to show the type of nose she wants. This trope is later deconstructed though when Quinn reveals her fears that all she'll ever be is pretty.
* Heterodyne stories, while Bill is canonically paired with Lucrezia, his brother Barry is paired with whoever the "High Priestess" character happens to be this time.
* Heart of Ashes takes the name of his ancestor Ancalagon and turns it into Cail Agonn.
* Happiness in Slavery typically serve humans because this is a cornerstone of the genre. There may be some attempt at an explanation or handwave, but they inevitably fall short because it's very hard to justify just why entire races of sapient creatures would willing choose to obey someone else, especially if they're stronger and/or smarter than a human.
* Hardly Working and implied immortal, which gives rise to a number of claims.
* Great Horned Giant Space Hamster: Sports a rhino-like nose horn that allows it to charge and gore at foes.
* He also inverts the trope at one point, when suggesting that they deal with Haruhi's latest Reality Warp by convincing her that "It was all just a dream.
* Grimms', and when he goes to the city with the animals, the princess identifies him, and since he has the tongues of the dragon, he can prove the marshal a liar.
* good-looking bad guys and bad-looking good guys destroy them and their hospitals.
* Halo: The Cole Protocol, Major Watanabe is heavily scarred from being tortured by Insurrectionists. Because of his experiences, he disapproves of using torture as an interrogation method.

* Highlander, with Amanda and another immortal playing the main roles, with Duncan following along behind and digging them up after the inevitable shootout with the cops. Apparently, there are several of these...
* Guards! Guards!; instead, it's an impregnable fortress that he can "escape" at his leisure.
* Gregory and the Hawk's "Boats and Birds" is about wanting to be there for someone you love, but accepting that one day they might want to leave you. Most people's first impression is that it's a song about one-sided romantic love, but others have pointed out that it could be a * Heavy Metal Mater, therefore prompting Mater and his two guitarists Rocky and Eddie to play faster.
* grenadiers were selected among the strongest and largest soldiers. Early grenades were softball-sized iron balls filled with explosives, and were thus very heavy; the grenadiers, who were responsible for throwing them, needed to be tall and strong enough to hurl them at the enemy without risking the lives of their comrades.
* H. Beam Piper. Piper's Terro-Human Future History ended with a series of galactic Empires. This was justified: the universe was too big to hold a vote for general leader. Not only counting a vote of trillions, but also transporting the vote took far too long. The aversion is in the planetary governments: Piper's Empire allowed each planet to be self-governing, under a general Imperial constitution that controlled how the planets interacted with each other. This meant that any number of types of governments existed from planet to planet, from enlightened democracies to totalitarian nightmares. The capital planet of the Empire itself, Odin, was actually run as a constitutional monarchy, with a strong parliament to balance out the Emperor.
* GrimGrimoire and leave Amoretta in the bed alone if Amoretta doesn't keep safe.
* GWAR does this on occasion, an example happening in the climax of The Animated Tales Of GWAR.
* Helen Hunt) becomes suspicious of her nighttime-hours keeping neighbor, believing he's a vampire. She confronts him about it, under the light of a full moon...
* Goblins, orcs and trolls find themselves dying off in droves after the fall of Mordor, reduced to being monsters under beds and villains in fairy tales and stories, never again to be the great threats they once were.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows finished the series-long conflict between Harry and Voldemort, complete with more major character deaths than the other books combined.
* Here's an article encyclopedia that makes detailed predictions of what conditions would produce what sort of Alien Sky.
* Henry Danger: In "Holiday Punch", Ray wants to decorate their Christmas tree with his grandfather's lights, which set on fire in their storage box. At the end of the episode, Ray's attempt to turn on the lights on the town's last remaining tree causes the tree to burn.
* Guardians of the Galaxy uses a huge holographic board for strategics.
* Harrington starts the series as a space-naval Commander and, much like her inspiration Horatio Hornblower,
* Harry Potter, his teeth quadruple in size and shoot out like bullets and his head explodes.
* Guilty Gear generates spontaneous cherry blossom petal showers with almost every move she does.
* Grand Theft Auto: Chinatown Wars was prominently featured in promotional material, has a spot on the box cover, and has her own character bio at the official website, so it's a bit surprising that she's killed off as soon as you meet her.
* Having been born in Barcelona during the Spanish Civil War, Spanish soprano Montserrat Caballé grew up in a family that couldn't afford to send her to school, so they made a deal with a wealthy family to have them finance her studies in exchange for her appearing at the Barcelona opera house every season. Her big breakthrough came in 1965 when she replaced Marilyn Horne in a production of Donizetti's

* Goldfinger: US-Chinese relations in the aftermath of Goldfinger's plot: China has just financed and supplied a terrorist attack and attempt to detonate a nuclear device on US soil. Worse, despite his globe-trotting nature, Bond never visits mainland China (he does visit Hong Kong, but as a British colony it would be spared in an all-out nuclear war between the US and China).
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas line in the first cutscene of the game where after hearing Carl swear in anger, Tenpenny sarcastically replies with "Don't swear Carl, you motherfucking piece of shit gangbanging cocksucker." Since the prologue line was dummied out, the final mission line becomes this.
* Hackette. STEM fields, or even simply being technologically savvy, are assumed to be a "male" thing, so a female character being revealed as a hacker comes as a surprise.
* good deed results in an instant death sentence. Even something as simple as saying gesundheit.
* Here's what jewelry commercials would look like if they were honest.
* Harry Potter who can change any part of her appearance at will, which she says was very helpful in the disguise section of her Auror exams.
* Heaven's Lost Property, it is eventually revealed that every 6000 years, Minos orders Ikaros to wipe out human civilization and reset history to zero, leaving only enough humans to repopulate, in an attempt to prevent humanity from ever advancing enough to challenge him. Ikaros breaks the cycle by developing free will and rebelling.
* goes into a suicide mission after kissing Yoko (which cemented her status as the person with "the kiss of death" in the fandom) and it seems she reciprocated his feelings, as in her personal Lotus-Eater Machine.
* High-level characters could go to the last Waypoint of each act and send a Town Portal to be used by low-level players in their party. This allowed n00bs to gain access to certain areas without completing the prerequisite quests (for example, getting to the Canyon of the Magi without killing the Summoner, or to the Durance of Hate without ever assembling Khalim's Will). This was nerfed in the 1.10 patch.
* Hikari Sentai Maskman had a birdman warrior who fought alongside the Jetman team before he was killed off).
* Highlander lock his adopted daughter in a shed because she was trying to stop him from getting revenge on the kid who raped her. Richie heard her and let her out just in time for her to shoot the kid when the kid threatens her dad.
* Guest vocals and general collaborations with who knows how many bands(mostly Progressive, of course), including Ayreon and Gojira, and having Chuck Billy of
* Greg Egan, written in 2009 it has the Iranian theocracy overthrown in 2012.
* Gotham City Garage bump into when they break into a Luthor's secret base.
* Heroic Fantasy: Fantasy with a High Fantasy-type setting but smaller-scale conflicts and more personal stakes.
* Henry Handel Richardson (real name: Ethel Florence Lindsay Richardson) adopted a male name because of the difficulties 19th-century women faced in getting published.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, making him equivalent to a normal human once more.
* Gotham. As this causes a massive downturn in violent crime, City Hall and the GCPD turn a blind eye.
* Happy Days, both Richie and Howard believe that the United Nations will put an end to all wars.
* Hank Azaria failed to get the part of Joey but was later written in as Phoebe's scientist boyfriend David.
* Guts and Casca's child in his demonic form is Ugly Cute, being very much grotesque due to his cursed existence but still having infantile attributes like chubby cheeks and puckered lips.
* Heroic Myth immediately takes off for the Dungeon to see how strong he is now and is delighted to find that he can slaughter monsters with ease even without the help of a Spirit.

* Goro Akechi, a teenage detective investigating the Phantom Thieves, approaches them with proof that he knows their identities, but, like Makoto, he uses this to make a deal. He claims that he knows that they aren't really responsible for
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn got some of this, with many people complaining that it felt like Camelot stapled the first two games together, without any of their original charm.
* Higehiro: In the very first episode, after Gotou rejects him, Yoshida gets very drunk.
* Gwen Stacy was Peter's first real relationship, the first girl he fell in love with, and both Lee and Romita Sr. thought initially that she would be the
* Grand Theft Auto IV uses a similar, more stylish death screen with a camera flash at the moment of death, and the word "WASTED" appearing moments later.
* Group Picture Ending: The story closes on a group picture of the main cast.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) has several attachments he uses; approximately a dozen in the original cartoon, though naturally the toy is limited to three. In the update, it only seems to have the claw and blaster, but no longer requires attachments, able to transform from one to the other as needed.
* Gullah Gullah Island, began. Justin Campbell took over the role as a result.
* Hard Rain - An American/British/Danish/French/Japanese/New Zealand/German/Australian co-production.
* has, and continue through the propeller-powered fighters and bombers of WW2, the early Korean War-era jets, the first supersonic jets, the Vietnam era fighters, the '4th-generation' fighters, and the relatively recent arrival of stealth designs. It does indeed look at least partially as if there has been a general trend towards sleeker, more advanced looking designs over time.
* Gundam SEED Destiny, Shinn and Kira spend the entire series as faceless enemies to each other that only know each other by their Gundams. They do meet briefly, but don't know who each other is. This means that they only know each other by their actions in battle, and Shinn in particular without knowing of Kira's kind shy nature, believes that he's either evil or crazy and either way a very arrogant person that needs to be put down. Kira doesn't think much of Shinn at all, and when Shinn changes machines, doesn't initially even realize it's him he's fighting (while Shinn interesting immediately correctly assumes the guy piloting the brand new Strike Freedom is still Kira). When Shinn meets him again and is told who he is, the idea that this kind man was the guy he was fighting kills any remaining notion that his side was correct.
* He did the same thing, albeit more successfully, in Disney's dub of
* Goofy (1932), first appearing in the early days of the sound era, may have been the very first cartoon character with a voice like this. Bill Farmer is capable of pulling off the voice while still giving Goofy an impressive emotional range in modern productions.
* Happiness: The entire male population of the school is conflicted between the knowledge that Jun is a guy, and the fact that he makes a very convincing girl.
* Haunting Ground to achieve this. Both employ heinous methods to harness it:
* Heroes of Hellas III, Athena's sacred olive tree is barren and dying. After every so many completed levels, they give you a closeup of a slightly healthier tree with one or two new branches.
* Gypsy Tales: In "The Gypsy Woman and the Devil", Vunida wants to feed her thirteen starving children. She gets her wish when the devil turns her into a cherry tree; while her fruit helps them survive into adulthood, they never realize the tree is their cursed mother, not even when they hear the wise old man tell the story of her encounter with the devil.
* Green Lantern—are still frequently cited as major milestones in the comic book industry's move toward social consciousness.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets Over a large area of small platforms that you have to be GOOD at jumping.
* Gothic Horror plane of Innistrad, where they're the result of the slumber of the dead being disturbed by unresolved business, strong attachments to the living or the world, disturbance of their graves or evil magical activity.

* Goth now brings to mind the stereotype of a modern subculture of people who wear a lot of black and listen to depressing music, rather than the various Gothic tribes who invaded Europe in the second quarter of the first millenium AD and were the eventual destroyers of the Roman Empire.
* Great Alta Saga become king and queen of the Dales because they prove they're the best fighters in the army.
* Godzilla Neo and ran with it, as he doesn't just transform from "Kamata-kun" to "Shinigawa-kun", but is depicted as shedding skin and features even more vestigial body parts like smaller arms and more eyes.
* Great Expectations: Jaggers has masks of the petrified faces of criminals that he represented but who were hanged decorating his office.
* Gossip Girl learned where Chuck's trademark hideous scarf from season one could be purchased, it sold out in a matter of days.
* Gundam SEED Destiny the show ran into, this was probably intentional to pad out time.
* Haunted House, most of the remains seen consist of nothing but various skulls.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: This happens to Germany after hugging Italy in "Buon San Valentino" (Part 2). And in Germany's head, there are army men (complete with a General) sorting files... in which they don't know where to store any of those heart-shaped files containing feeling of romance.
* Goodbye My Princess: Cheng Yin and Xiao Feng are the only people present at their first wedding. Then they have a public wedding held by Xiao Feng's grandfather.
* Gulliver's Travels (2010): During the film's climax, Edward uses his robot suit to give Gulliver a wedgie that lifts him from the ground.
* Highlander in the pilot, when Duncan gets a buzz, while Tess is riding him. He mentions feeling something, and she replies that he better be feeling something after all that effort on her part.
* Hell's Kitchen, Ramsay brings the chefs out to the grand prix and asks them who wants to race. After getting a volunteer, he's all "yeah, right," and reveals that what they will actually be racing is golf carts, which they have to use to deliver their food to Chef Ramsay several times throughout the challenge.
* Hercules has more than one example during the "Zero to Hero" music number, all of them cut away just as Herc is about to stab, strangle, or pummel a monster to death.
* Harry Potter but she hides her condition making herself pass as just "very tall".
* Harry Potter books. During the First Wizarding War, a wizard named Rookwood, who worked for the Department of Mysteries, set up at least one agent (Ludo Bagman) to pass along intelligence for the war effort, ostensibly to help the Ministry. Of course, Rookwood was actually a Death Eater spy who was passing this info on to Voldemort, and after the war Bagman was hauled in front of a tribunal and accused of being a Death Eater as well, but acquitted, partly due to his being a dim bulb and popular athlete who they saw could easily be taken in.
* Hanna comes from a secret government program that develops otherwise aborted fetuses into powerful soldiers.
* Haunting - They will torment the living, annoy, or bedevil the living, or seek to drive the living into confessing if they've done wrong.
* Half-Life 2 combined in one. Not only is she a good mechanic, she's also a godly hacker.
* Hand of Glory: A macabre and magical candelabra made from a dead man's hand.
* Gravity Falls: This happens multiple times in "The Legend of the Gobblewonker" when Dipper needs to reasses the number of back-up cameras he has when they get smashed.
* Green Lantern (2011) Kilowog sniffs Hal Jordan, loud and long, before remarking: "You smell funny."
* Good Eats also used "That drink powder" in an episode about pickles. He had a guy in a red glass burst through a wall in order to "tell" us what it was. Alton then remarked "Aren't you supposed to be a pitcher?"
* Gotham Central, a crime scene technician for the Gotham City Police Department, has a nasty habit of stealing evidence from crime scenes to sell on the black market, since there is a brisk trade in Gotham crime memorabilia. This originally seems to be something of a victimless crime, since he is not actually stealing from a person who is losing their own property, except that his tampering with evidence lets criminals go free and gets honest police officers charged with felonies. After his memorabilia scheme is halted by Renee Montoya, it is revealed that his black market connections actually run a lot deeper than believed, and for years he has also been stealing and reselling heroin that the narcotics squad had confiscated.

* Gustav Mahler originally wrote his sixth symphony with the scherzo movement second and the slow movement third. In rehearsals for the premiere, he changed them round and performed them like that for the rest of his life. When he had died, however, his widow Alma claimed that he had changed his mind and preferred the slow movement as the third one after all. This has sparked a fairly large debate about which way round it should be played.
* Glissade's delusion, and even then it doesn't really work - in the ending "Flickering, Fading," he manages to put out the fire and simply starts over, while in the "Sacrificing Myself" ending he burns to death trying to rescue her.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) wouldn't be particularly useful.
* Henry means "home." Henry is an orphan who's spent most of his life being shifted from foster home to foster home.
* Hanamaru Kindergarten: Tsuchida's puppet show is a fantasy fairytale...up until the handsome prince summons his giant robot, which the children think is awesome.
* Heel–Face Brainwashing: A bad guy gets brainwashed or hypnotized into being good.
* Hell's Boiling Point she was a human, just that he was looking for her. Eda tries to bluff her way out, but ends up having to trick the guards of the Emperor's Coven into thinking Hellboy's an accomplice and escaping in the ensuing chaos.
* GURPS has a slew of them from a half dozen weapons that disintegrate the enemy to Mind Disruptors that make the target's body want to die.
* Gorbachev Must Die: from the Soviet leadership. The 1991 coup attempt succeeding is a popular choice for this.
* Great Lakes Avengers, with the Grasshopper. After spending a couple of pages setting him up as an important character, revealing his identity, origin, and mandatory superhero romantic troubles, he decides to exit the scene by engaging the "Maximum Jump" capability of his super-suit. It launches him into space and he dies.
* Hades, but he's also one of the most entertaining characters in the whole game with his hammy, snarky, and flirtatious attitude. Scott Bullock's killer voice acting really sells it. By the time you finally fight him, you'll wanna kick his ass, but he's kept you laughing for hours.
* Grand Theft Auto: Liberty City Stories, with Toni going on Chatterbox and whining that his mother never seems to appreciate him. And when he's out, his mother tells the main character how worthless he is, even though the man is a capo to the Leone family.
* half-monster named Meteora, and the daughter of Queen Eclipsa and her monster lover.
* Grand Finale There's quite a few parts that focus on the evacuees and their attempts to get out of dodge before the fight starts.
* Guilty Gear. Potemkin has the voice of a TI83 running a voice module at quarter speed, and the extremely threatening looks to go with it ; he's also one of the nicest and most polite characters in the series.
* Gradius, but they certainly get used against you. The idea generally isn't to dodge them (which is fairly easy) but to keep from getting forced into a very bad place by the beams (which isn't).
* Hey Arnold! has a bar mitzvah (the ceremony happens at 13) despite being in fourth grade. It's never stated outright how many years he's been held back, but it's either three or four. Torvald is also 13 and in the same 4th grade class as the other main kids. He starts off as a bully but after Arnold helps tutor him at math with positive results, he becomes a lot nicer. In a later episode, he joins the kids' football team against the 5th graders because he's technically a 4th grader despite Wolfgang's protests.

* Hero House has Solid and Liquid Snake, who seem to have taken their rivalry across the multiverse itself.
* Hanafuda / Go-Stop — 48 card deck, with four cards for each month of the year. The Korean version Go-Stop adds jokers.
* Harry has a major falling-out with his mentor Ebenezer McCoy in the sixth book, upon finding out that he is the Blackstaff, a member of the White Council of Wizards with special
* "Hel-looo, I'm the Nostalgia Critic, I remember it so you don't have to!"
* Golden Sun gets the name right... but the attack where its sword turns into a lightningbolt the size of the screen is translated as Formina Sage, which the last one would correctly translate as Fulminous Edge.
* Hellsister Trilogy lures her evil duplicate into the anti-matter universe, where their invulnerability doesn't work and Kara has a chance to destroy Satan Girl.
* Harry Potter series has very low muggle involvement, with the only ones regularly appearing are Harry's Uncle, Aunt, and Cousin.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, this is the theory Harry and Draco came up with as the primary alternate hypothesis to the pureblood credo that muggle blood is weakening magical ability: ambient magic is slowly fading. As it turns out, magic isn't weakening, and neither are wizards - it's just that magical knowledge is slowly being lost to the Interdict of Merlin.
* , Hermione tries to communicate with her eyes that she thinks Luna is an impostor. Unfortunately, the sex-crazed alternate Harry thinks she's talking about having more sex and signals back he's always up for a threesome, which Hermione mistakes for him saying he's got a plan and to follow along.
* Grojband has a recurring character named Barney, who periodically provides plot-related help in an episode related to his job and what the band are doing. His hat always changes to his Job of the Week.
* Heavenly Nostrils, so that was its title when it launched in newspapers in March that year.
* Happens twice to Dave Strider. He used to hit on Rose (ironically) before learning that they were brother and sister. In Act 6, he and Rose see their
* Helix from which the virus originated is government-funded, and he's been sent to help keep it secret at any cost. In spite of this, he's out of the loop enough to be taken aback when he witnesses various disturbing happenings at the base, including stumbling onto a group of frozen monkey corpses in the artic snow.
* Gravity Falls be restored by reminders of those memories, though this can take time.
* Grayson with the character, which kind of became King's whole thing thanks to all his popular superhero works doing those things. King himself jokingly acknowledged the possibility of this trope taking effect.
* Gogol Bordello's "Invisible Zed" has darkly humorous and surreal lyrics about a woman who has no idea that an invisible man is lurking in her home, watching her get naked. He's apparently even able to have sex with her without her realizing, as "Little does she know, when she is yawning, she's orally pleasing an invisible man." By the end of the song, Zed has impregnated her with invisible sperm, and she gives birth to a new invisible man.
* Harmless Freezing: Someone is frozen and is then unfrozen after several years have passed, and must now adjust to the new world.
* He states that demolition of Earth "will take slightly less than two of your Earth minutes". Granted, working out a population's units of time just to use it to tell them precisely how long they have before all being killed, and consciously pointing out that they've taken the trouble, is a typically Vogon thing to do.
* Greater-Scope Villain release, it returns as a separate entity from the Princess of Doom made up of him fusing with Shiori, created when the Nine-Tailed Fox brought Shiori back to life. He kidnaps the main characters into an alternate version of their city, and they have to fight him to finish him once and for all.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law has a scene in one episode with Phil trying to establish dominance over Doggie Daddy, while Doggie just looks onward uninterested.

* Gotham Girls: The Three Bears become the Three Babes, among other changes.
* Green Isn't Your Color Fluttershy accidentally becomes a famous model. Fluttershy dislikes the attention and would quit, except for the fact that she doesn't want to disappoint her best friend Rarity, who's encouraged her to take the job. Secretly, though, Rarity is jealous of Fluttershy's newfound success, and almost wishes her failure out of spite. Twilight Sparkle, being the confidant for both secrets but finding the stress of keeping both parties unhappy too much to bear, comes up with a plan to make Fluttershy's next runway event be as ungraceful as possible using Twilight's magic. This works, initially, except that Rarity, being utterly disappointed in herself for her own feelings and completely unaware of Fluttershy's, decides to support her friend with cheerful applause. This, combined with Rarity's great fashion sense convincing the fashion-critical crowd that her opinion has weight, ends up making Fluttershy more popular than ever.
* Half-Life 1 to be Dr. Vance). Gordon doesn't need to hear all this, as he's a highly trained professional, so it's all for the benefit of the audience.
* Haganai: This is Pegasus' preferred method of punishing his daughter Sena, often because she's been tricked into doing something stupid by Yozora.
* Hana no Namae. The 'brooding boy' is Kei Mizushima, a famous writer of depressing, nihilistic works, who himself has a tragic past and struggles with mental illness. The 'gentle girl' is Chouko Mizushima, the distant relative he takes in after her parents die in a car accident, who grows flowers in his yard, is quiet, soft-spoken, and kind, and in love with him. The story revolves around Chouko's desire to love and save him from his depression and Kei's feeling that he doesn't deserve it, or can never bring himself out of it enough to do anything but drag her down with him.
* Hexen states that the universe is surrounded by a crystal barrier, beyond which there is a darkness inhabited by demons. The Serpent Riders are merely the three who slipped through a tiny hole which was sealed almost immediately.
* G-Rated Drug: An ordinary substance is treated as if it were a drug.
* Grand Admiral Thrawn, but he no doubt thinks this frequently. The plans he comes up with, such as locating and ambushing the Rebels on Atollon and mass-producing TIE-Defenders on Lothal, have a fair chance of success if not for such underlings as Admiral Konstantine and Governor Pryce bungling everything.
* Grand Avenue Michael's grandmother sends a note in his lunchbag made with cut out letters. It says "Eat the carrots or kiss your video games goodbye". He thinks "Some kids get notes of encouragement in their lunches."
* GURPS: Magic is actually worth negative points because they're easy to kill and incapable of any real thought—Mummies are the same as Zombies and Skeletons, the only difference is the preservation of the corpse. The Whight template is similar and far more intimidating.
* High School Musical: After the credits, we see Sharpay run toward Zeke (who has been crushing on her the whole movie) and jump on him because he makes the most awesome cookies ever. Of course the implied post movie hookup was kind of killed by HSM2 (but then HSM3 had them dance together at the prom... mixed signals, Disney!).
* HERZ: In the battle of 2015 Asuka’s Eva got impaled by nine spears and then cut into pieces and eaten, and she felt each blow, slash and bite. Her heart stopped for a few seconds. Misato got shot and collapsed bleeding on the floor. The narration pointed out it was a miracle Asuka was alive, and Misato always wondered how she survived.
* Groundhog Day involves him growing out of this, and he eventually gives a genuinely heartwarming speech.
* Her ex-husband, Mickey himself, fits the trope in a roundabout fashion. He spends the majority of his career as a criminal defense attorney, and his clients are usually guilty of something, if not necessarily the crime they're accused of. While he isn't above hunting for lucrative cases and cashing in on publicity his usual clientele comes from the lower echelons of society and he views himself as standing up for the little guy against a large, unwieldy and often flawed judicial system.

* Harry Potter. Since Voldemort likes to establish a sense of grace and grandeur into his actions, he doesn't just kill Harry and be done with it.
* Grand Theft Auto, the protagonist's boss in the first Vice City campaign is one of these.
* Gungrave anime. During the family party, Bear is not fond of seeing Harry go to the dessert table with Sherry. When the two have gone fairly far, Bear speaks up.
* Happy Tree Friends killing her... which results in them crashing into a telephone pole.
* Hayate the Combat Butler's Saginomiya family uses the blood of others as they're close to dying (essentially their Life Energy) to keep their powers. Ginka, Isumi's great grandmother uses it to maintain her youth. Isumi uses it to restore her powers. Hayate is the subject of both, and Ginka's attempt leaves him shrived for a while. Isumi just sips from the blood from a head injury, so there's no real effect on him.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi) by a crazy fangirl named Harmony, who would constantly remind them "I'm your #1 fan!"
* Haruhi Suzumiya character) than the girls, but it still appears from time to time.
* He died very early on into their mission to destroy the walls after he was eaten by Ymir. His death is one of the causes of Reiner's eternal angst and his desire to be seen as a capable older brother figure. It's still haunting him 10 years later.
* Heroes of the Pacific sank without a trace and received universally mediocre reviews.
* Henry Danger: In "Diamonds Are For Heather", Heather is a jewel thief who has a photographer with her use a super bright flash on his camera to termprarily blind everyone in the room including Captain Man and Kid Danger while she and her photographer were safely wearing special shades.
* Heroes Daniel Linderman offers Nathan Petrelli a choice between an ordinary life and "a life of meaning."
* her long-lost daughter Meteora, who has gone completely insane and become a giant, soul-sucking monster.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 3 episode 13, the Supermen go into the world of a movie taking place in an ancient Chinese-looking world consisting of a bunch of floating islands linked together by bridges.
* have the hots for Iria the Merlot Insurance company features her in all of their ads - while wearing string bikinis.
* Good Mythical Morning: In a video titled "Wedgie Machine Challenge", Rhett and Link play a game similar to hangman called "Wedgieman", with the main difference being that they received wedgies via a hook and crank that get worse each time they get a letter wrong.
* Gulf", "Kettle Belly" Baldwin killed two guards this way when he and "Captain Gilead" escaped from the New Age Hotel.
* Half-Life: When you're outside of Black Mesa, mortars fall at times. They make sounds similar to this.
* Hellsing, Integra orders Alucard to kill Kim because of the reporter's insistence on letting the world know that vampires exist.
* Go Away, Unicorn! "Stop Stirring the Pot, Unicorn!" episode, when Alice is about to season her roast duck and is deciding on what seasoning to use:
* Harry Potter characters are shopping in a magical bookstore that contains every book ever written.
* Haibane Renmei's character designer Yoshitoshi ABe, is also a 13-episode series.
* Greater-Scope Villain for the entire D&D multiverse, so it's a good thing the Gods did a damn good job in sealing him. They placed him in his own personal prison universe, and he still hasn't gotten out (keep in mind, this happened before the world as we know it existed).
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah time bomb as he's quickly going to explode/meltdown as soon as his heart reaches critical mass. The human characters even measure how high his body temperature is before he goes critical.
* Having your limbs crippled 50 times gives you increased resistance to future broken limbs with the notification that "Repeatedly breaking bones has led them to become stronger (somehow)." This is actually truth in television - because adult bones usually lose calcium slowly after time, they tend to become stronger after the process is reversed during the knitting of bones.

* Goodfellas is seen telling his girlfriend not to talk to any men while he goes to the other side of the room.
* GLOW (2017): After Ruth directs an opening sequence for the show, cameraman Russell hits on her by saying she has a "decent eye." Ruth makes a sarcastic comment about the faintness of the praise.
* Halo: Reach Covenant mook had even if you removed all the color, due to dramatically increased differentiation between their armor, which has carried over into subsequent games.
* Happens a lot in hockey, at least among individual players (friendly rivalries between teams are almost non-existent). One of the more famous ones was the rivalry between
* Harry Truman. The photo of Truman proudly holding up the newspaper reading "DEWEY DEFEATS TRUMAN" remains one of the most iconic images of his presidency.
* Hierro that destroys the attack that was hurting him in the process.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 2 episode 11, Happy S. enlarges the sun with the magnifying glass to melt the ice monster. It works well to melt the monster, obviously, but then there's the matter of Happy S. having made the sun big enough to make it dangerously hot on planet Xing Xing... oops.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers specials, where he's the main host and the nations not only recognize him, but tell him how good of a job he does.
* Hero Academia Dx D has a terrible sense of direction. This gets to the point that, during the Sports Festival, she gets second place during the Obstacle Race and the teachers watching nearly have a collective aneurysm trying to understand how it happened.
* Has sadly become a factor when adult women, whom most people think are attractive, are caught having sex with underage boys (e.g., * Haikyuu!!. He is a volleyball prodigy, a genius setter who can analyse everything going on in the court and make pinpoint tosses. He can memorize anything quickly if it is volleyball related and can spike, pass, and serve better than most players as well.
* Hairspray portray Penny Pingleton with glasses, despite Kerry Butler, the original, having never worn glasses in the original cast.
* Here There Be Monsters it was useless, but also because it gets him charged with attempted murder. His younger partner proves to be smarter by peacefully turning over his gun.
* Gohan kicks him through a building ranger the shit out of some parks.
* Gotham: Happens in "Rogues Gallery" when Jim is interviewing the Arkham inmates about a missing set of keys and the attack on the Frogman.
* Helios only appears for one scene, but ends up being responsible for the destruction of Odysseus's last ship, and his exile on the island of Calypso.
* Good Omens, the demon Crowley, with his impeccable sense of style and cool merges into wartime German society by wearing its uniforms. Posing as an SS colonel, Crowley reflects that while the Nazis may be horrendous unspeakable bastards, they certainly cornered the market in well-tailored stylish uniforms.
* Godzilla vs. Evangelion: The Real 4-D roles as Shinji Ikari,Rei Ayanami, Asuka Langley Shikinami, Misato Katsuragi, and Gendo Ikari.
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating: Part of Hani's arc is learning to believe in and stand up for herself, especially toward her so-called friends.
* Gordon Korman football players (who has ironically given himself the nickname The Beast) gets a bruised elbow. He then insists that it's actually a compound fracture and walks around with his arm in a sling for nine weeks.
* Gray-and-Gray Morality where the only options are to pick your poison.
* Haruhi Suzumiya respectively, but had given no word on if the books would continue until August 2020, when the 12th volume was finally announced, nine years after the release of Surprise.

* Hard-boiled Wonderland apartment when he's there to both intimidate him and search/ransack the room.
* Haibane Renmei. At first, Reki is treated like an older sister to Rakka; however, it turns into this in the last few episodes of the anime.
* He does have one other line, where he apologizes to Calamity Jane for * High Rollers (a $500 item) as a prize; it was touted as state-of-the-art way to see and hear the people you're talking to. Videophones differ in one key respect from all the other items in this entry in that nobody really wanted them. Video chat systems, the modern equivalent, are nothing like as popular as voice only or text chat.
* Hercules (2014): Spoken word for word by Cotys, but ultimately averted. Despite Hercules and his comrades confronting him about the truth behind the civil war, Cotys still elects to pay them for their services and send them on their way rather than kill them (at first). He later views his own daughter this way, and orders her killed, but Hercules stops it.
* Grudging "Thank You": There's one thing I want to say to you... um... thanks?
* Half-Life 2 were pretty badass too, considering they were a bunch of cigar-smoking war veterans, fighting toe-to-toe with a whole alien army * hero. Judau jacks the Zeta Gundam simply because it's the only mobile suit for him to use. Heck, Judau spent the first several episodes repeatedly trying to jack the Zeta Gundam so he can sell it, only to have an enemy appear the moment he gets his hands on it and be forced to fight it off.
* Harveste, who was living with abusive relatives after his loving parents died protecting him, killed his legal guardians and his cousin, effectively re-orphaning himself at the age of five.
* Goblin Slayer. When they rape a woman of another species, the child is always a goblin.
* Groundhog GDIME takes its name from this trope. Charlize from England falls into Middle-earth, multiple times. After each visit, Middle-earth seems to reset itself. The loop continues as Charlize tries again, but she always fails to seduce Legolas.
* Goes on the assumption that all monsters are naturally evil, but occasionally throws a curve ball, like when Sam and Dean encounter a group of vampires who
* Heavy Duty: from Lamont A. Morris to Herschel Dalton (which carried over to
* Goliath - if you can get past the wings, fangs, and talons - could be seen as downright handsome. And let's face it, any man with
* Hilarious Outtakes a guard. The guard laughs his ass off at him before being smacked in the face by the chicken and sent flying.
* Gulliver's Travels features Gulliver going to the island of the Liliputians whom he is a giant to. The second part has him go to an island of giants that are just as big to him as he was to the Liliputians.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows; it was originally intended to release on 7/7/2007 (as seven is a number often associated with magic and it was the seventh and last book), but it would have fallen on the second anniversary of the 7 July terrorist bombings in London, so it was changed to 7/21 instead.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! — Everyone except Cure Moonlight (her civilian form counts, though)
* Green Patches, where a scientific expedition can be launched to a quarantined world.
* Harry gets his invisibility cloak in the first book; it's used several times throughout the series, and seems to be a relatively mundane magical item. Until the final book, when the heroes learn that invisibility cloaks are unreliable and wear out over time... except for Harry's. It's strongly implied to be
* Gundam Age has the Invisible Umbrella system used by the Vagan and later reverse engineered by Bisidian pirates. All warships including the 1km+ long Fa Bose class and space stations have this system although its use in mobile suits appear to be relatively rare.
* Gokujou Parodius, the first boss is a tutu-wearing panda with a quacking duck's head on top of its own.
* Greaser Delinquents: Young men wear leather jackets, grease their hair and drive a motorbike or a cool car, while being badass.

* Grand Finale, to spectacular effect. It's called "Macross Attack" here, though.
* Half-Life 2 that Leeches are eaten due to the absence of native fish, so they are off to a good start.
* He is forced to face the consequences of his own actions a few times, such as in
* Gurren-Lagann ejects layer-by-layer from the titular mecha, starting from Tengen Toppa Gurren-Lagann, to Super Galaxy Gurren-Lagann, to Arc Gurren-Lagann, slowly but surely closing in on the Anti-Spiral homeworld, a component of their own super-mecha, Grand Zamboa, upon which their central hive-mind stands, and culminating in Viral manually ejecting Lagann from Gurren and throwing
* GURPS whose dominant life form is a gigantic spider. It looks like a huge tarantula with white fur and weighs 70 pounds.
* he is angered that he was tricked and eliminated by Frieza, and humiliated when Frieza calls him an amateur/second-rate dilettante. He tries to blast Frieza from the stands as revenge, but Zeno immediately erases him from existence for attempting to break the rules.
* Gunnerkrigg Court between technology in the court and the unexplainable, etheric magic in the forest beyond the court.
* He tries in the anime, he just ends up realising quite quickly that there's very little a normal person can do to help in those sorts of situations and decides to take himself out of the game to
* Hassle-Free Hotwire: On the way to being this, as more and more cars either incorporate a necessary processor into the key itself, or require the key fob to be present before they'll start.
* Hero Chat is a fast track to alcoholism, so they eat ice cream instead.
* Happens to Joan in "Heroine" when she was forced to go out to a fancy restaurant for lunch with
* "...Guests who overstay welcome, cause too much bodily harm. And get lawsuits."
* GoldieBlox is aimed at young girls and features the titular character Goldie, a girl builder, engineer, mechanic and inventor, and has a construction kit.
* Greek Mythology used for a sort of personal guardian "fate" or soul-double that accompanied a mortal through life. Sometimes a mortal could become a Daimon. However, this was simply seen as a different form of existence, instead of a remarkable change.
* Higurashi: When They Cry they died isn't shown until the first episode of the second season, however.
* Going Postal, a banshee attacks Mr. Groat and Moist sees it, but he doesn't want to discuss what happened. Adora Belle sees through it.
* Hero Protagonist in a video game that was able to attain self-awareness and become a proper AI.
* Hakurei Sabi in particular, is considered the best Swordsman of Japan history and is an in-universe
* Glorianna has been yanked back to the 21st century on at least two occasions. She wasn't impressed.
* Glim and her father might be made of fragile wax, but they can reassemble missing bits just by heating them and sticking them back. As demonstrated when Glim's father accidentally rips off her arm, and she just sounds annoyed, asking in a deadpan voice to give it back, before putting it in place.
* Groovies in: Musical Evolution" had the Pussycats performing their theme song in about half-a-dozen musical styles (from original 60s pop-rock, to disco, to punk rock, to country music, to arena rock, to EDM, and back to pop-rock), with each change in musical style accompanied by a change in animation style.
* Goku is de-aged to childhood as the result of the Black Star Dragon Balls, making him approximately the same age as his granddaughter, 10-year-old Pan.
* Half Past Adventure proper; it's a cream-colored blade with a rootlike shape to its hilt.
* "Hand to Hand" (Nov. 13, 2013): Jata, the VERY MUSCULAR crown Prince of Feraga, has just laid waste to his own arranged wedding, knocked his forced-bride-to-be into the pool, and is currently beating the stuffing out of his own bodyguards (who have turned on him because of his insensitivity to the feelings of his own bride) with no sign of stopping until Uncle Deadeye, the mute bodyguard seen in two previous strips, stops Jata's fist from connecting with the back of Miles' head, SMILING as he does it! We then cut away while someone in the audience says "Wow, I didn't know cats could bend like THAT."

* Head-in-the-Sand Management: I'm in charge, but I won't address a threat till it's too late to do anything about it.
* Gust Front as he jumps into combat with just his knife, presumably killed off-screen.
* hedonists with powerful pheromones. However, they also have strong receptive empathy, so it really is in their best interest to make sure everyone around them is truly happy and consenting.
* Guardians' immortal lives are considered so cheap that, when a Guardian's
* Haiyoru! Nyaru-Ani, Nyarlko's beat her pet Shantak and you hear a cow yelling.
* Good Shepherd, to the point where a nice, caring, all-loving priest is less common than it used to be, especially in secular works, but religious works and the occasional secular work still have this trope played straight with kind, all-loving priests.
* HERZ: After the Angel War Shinji, Asuka and Rei were still soldiers but they seldom piloted mechas. After the last chapter, Shinji and Asuka retired from piloting for good.
* Grandia. Finally, the party reaches the top after several consecutive days of climbing.
* hearty, exuberant manner, and Pantalone, given his position of power, unrestrained greed, and often-unreasonable nature. The second series replaces him with a much more straightforward Signora in Queen Elizabeth I.
* Harmonic Feedback, Drea's grandma tells her that her older brother Paul died in the Bataan Death March at age 18. He paused to help someone who had fallen and was shot for it.
* Harvest Moon: Back to Nature remakes tends to be distrustful of Won, the token Chinese character. While Won does charge more than the general store for exclusive seeds, he's a completely honest member of the village and doesn't do anything wrong. Considering Won is Chinese and the rest of the town is Japanese/vaguely American/European (depending on the version and region) with the exception of one black character in the original, it’s plausible he just doesn’t like Won for being different.
* Google, but also an email service, a social media service (which has shut down since due to unpopularity), a data storage service, and a mobile operating system that rivals iOS in popularity.
* Goldimouse and the Three Cats when Sylvester takes his family for a walk:
* Gosu comes into the tavern-at-the-fork, four different customers see him as a scarred brutish man, a young pretty man, an old man with a white beard and a noble lady respectively. The readers simply see him as a regular looking man (although his face is completely shaded out).
* Hergé". Not only did his nightmares stop after he completed the album: the book itself is regarded as one of his masterpieces.
* Gunstar Heroes and become increasingly pissed as you keep killing them (in addition to the little off-duty mannerisms of the bosses themselves). It culminates in you walking off-camera to break in there yourself. This scenario was so iconic that Treasure's recycled it in a few of their games since then.
* Guilty Crown was hoped to be the creation of the next generation of anime, and is admitted to be the favorite work of many of the writers. Many viewers have thought otherwise, however.
* Heroic BSoD to admit that she loves the protagonist. She has no problem sleeping with him, but confessing love is trickier.
* "Happiness Is a Warm Gun" has since become this with increased debates on gun control worldwide since the sixties. Most glaringly, The Beatles' home country became subject to this in 1997 when the Firearms (Amendment) Act banned handguns in the United Kingdom.

* Grand Theft Auto III edition with some visual improvements comparable to the Xbox port, adjustable visual quality settings, improved loading times, customizable controls, and a checkpoint system for missions.
* Heterosexual Jamie and asexual Erin are in love and have a non-sexual romance. Relationship stress ensues when Jamie suffers from sexual frustration, and neither of them wants to have sex with the other.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone - is said to curse the killer with a "half-life".
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 1: Six other characters have to turn into Harry and consequently also have to wear his glasses. Hermione puts on a pair of Harry's glasses before transforming. Once she sees how much they adjust her eyesight, she criticizes his.
* Hilariously, it turns out that for many of the extraterrestrials on Earth, the 'not an alien' thing is
* Harley Davidson and the Marlboro Man, the two main characters try to rob a bank to help a friend save his bar. Unfortunately for them, the bank CEO is involved in the drug trade on the side, and the transport they swipe is carrying the newest designer drug. It goes downhill from there.
* Hero Factory line had the Heroes adopting various animal motifs for their new armor.
* Hajime no Ippo: Many of Kamogawa Gym's opponents get a fair amount of focus during each arc, and the series usually gives an in-depth look at their gym, their aspirations, their friends and family, and the people coaching them.
* Highlander TV series, like the films, is also predicated on the fact that a beheading is the only way for Macleod to survive battles with other immortals. Therefore this happens in virtually every episode (although usually off-screen).
* Heart of Gold strange. When they stumble on an old spaceship, one that is dark and cramped, Ford is unimpressed, maybe even disgusted, but Arthur finds it fitting.
* Godzilla (2014), he's Godzilla, so he's going to have this in some sort or another.
* Hazmat in issue #10: "Today's gonna suck as much as all the others... but just a little bit
* He also starved himself for two weeks to play Steven Jay Russell, a con artist
* Here Come the Brides). Bridget Hanley (the youngest bride) was the female Teen Idol from the same show.
* Hawaii Five-0 of the New People's Army, the armed military wing of the underground Communist Party of the Philippines.
* Harry Potter is no stranger to breaking the school's rules, thanks to having some kind of terrible danger strike the castle every year.
* GX is especially bad with card exposition. For example, Pot of Greed is used, and explained, in nearly ever single duel. Sometimes more than once.
* Gul'dan is based around this concept. Instead of naturally regenerating mana, he
* Golden Sun. Matthew, the hero of the third game is the first to have plant-based spells in his default class, but he doesn't really develop the ability.
* Halo novel, which explains exactly how the Chief got back to Earth and how Johnson and several others survived.
* he's forced to go on vacation, resulting in Toy!SpongeBob playing with Toy!Toy! SpongeBob and... yeah, the real SpongeBob decided to cut it off there.
* He builds a human-shaped clockwork automaton that writes out the entire book and draws all the pictures with a dip pen every time it's turned on. Quite the feat considering that this book is as thick as one of the later "Harry Potter"s.
* Harley Quinn solo comic depicted her as seeing the world around her as a slapstick cartoon universe in which none of the the violence she commits has serious consequences, while in fact she really is killing and maiming people.
* "Hell Bent", which means he no longer is consumed by the horrors that drove him to extremes.
* Hercules; Megara and Hercules were having a post-date conversation and falling in love when Phil arrives with Pegasus to interrupt and chastise Hercules for sneaking out on him. Making the best of the situation, he gives her a flower and a kiss on the cheek before he leaves and that leads to Megara's "falling in love" song.

* Hilarity Ensues. Mrs. Arcadian's attractiveness is questionable in absolute terms, but the father finds her to be rather fetching.
* Gudgeon, feigned buying it... And thanked them for helping in the anti-submarine exercise, starting an unwritten agreement based on a lie: any American sub forced to emerge wasn't a spy sub but had just helped the Soviet ships in an exercise to deal with actual spy subs and now owed them a case of whisky as prize for "winning", and any Soviet sub forced to emerge had helped the US Navy in an exercise to counter actual spy subs and now owed them a case of vodka.
* here, the memetic case with Obi-Wan and Anakin is not actually the advantage in a one-on-one fight that the film (and pop culture) suggests.
* God of War II, Kratos is impaled through the midriff by a huge sword wielded by Zeus and is dragged down to Hades. When Gaea restores him to life for her own task, we get a lovely view through the ragged hole clean through his torso as it heals up.
* Hamtaro, go on suspenseful adventures in which the Ham-Hams overcome fears, misunderstandings and endangered expectations.
* Highlander were banished from their clan after their immortality was triggered and they were viewed as demons.
* Happy Tree Friends: The Mole has been depicted as one in "Mole in the City". Likewise, Handy has managed to build 3 houses, two of such by himself.
* Haunted (1988) investigates ghosts though he doesn't believe in their existence.
* Headline News-like newscasts and lifestyle programming on a repeating loop. The Chicago affiliate of NBC Nonstop aired some hockey games of the Chicago Wolves AHL team, based in suburban Rosemont, Illinois.
* Happily Divorced, and Fran's ex-husband is one of the producers for the show.
* Guild Wars the Krytan swamps are heavily populated by Orrian undead.
* Heroes playing the Indian character Mohinder Suresh; at the beginning of the show he attempted to do some kind of Indian accent (possibly Tamil?), but after a few episodes he settled on a (relatively good) straight British accent. We also have the Korean-American actor James Kyson Lee playing the Japanese (and Japanese-speaking) character Ando Masahashi, presumably under the tutelage of his authentically Japanese colleague Masi Oka.
* Hercule Poirot also has a surprising number of happy marriages and romances arranged to the satisfaction of all to his credit as well.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers fanfiction. They tend to fall into one of two camps:
* Heavy Object has the Legitimacy Kingdom, the Capitalist Corporation, the Information alliance and the Faith Organization. Unique in that location has no bearing on which country belongs to which group meaning there are constant skirmishes between neighbouring countries belonging to different groups.
* Halo Wars, but it isn't usable except on the multiplayer map "Sandtrap"; it's big enough to transport light vehicles in addition to people.
* Heck, this trope seems to be invoked in at least half of the myths where an explosion is called for. Most of the time it's played straight (as with the surfing myth above), to the point that the phrase
* Graham McNeill, Davin's moon is so mist-bound that Loken is always bringing up his gun to shoot before he recognized an ally. More seriously, remembrancer Petronella Vivar takes it upon herself to go to the battlefield, and her shuttle goes unrecognized and is fired upon.
* High and Tight has Becky breaking things off with Vinnie because she can't handle him going off to war. However the night before he's to leave, she's seen coming to the house to talk to him. It's left open what happens between them.
* Going Postal, Tolliver Groat makes all his own medicines using natural ingredients... like, say, arsenic and sulfur. His throat lozenges dissolve walls.
* Harry Turtledove. It's noted a few times that repeated letters in their names (such as the character Ttomalss) are sounded separately and are not compounded together. For the same reason, if the combination 'SH' is found in a name, it is pronounced 'ss-hh', not 'sh'.

* helps the current lord resist another would-be ruler, because she can't conquer the country if someone else already has.
* Green Lanterns are literally using fear as a weapon. This leads to a lesser-known retcon. Green Lanterns used to be selected because they were men without fear. However, if current GL's didn't experience fear at some level, then Sinestro's ring would be useless against them unless there were others around whom Sinestro could manipulate.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire the curse and is immediately reborn as a phoenix chick.
* Having been the Kikions' original master, Hokuto is just as much disregard for life as they do. Throughout his screen time, he repeatedly blows off any and all pain and anguish he causes, insisting that it's all for a "
* Gymkata has its tagline declaring star Kurt Thomas is the master of the titular martial art. As at least one vanished review of the film points out, he's also the inventor and only known practicioner of gymkata, too. Of course he's the master.
* Harvest Moon games, you can raise affection points with many characters by giving them the kind of food they like.
* Her secretary, Miss Pauling, seems like a charming, mousy young woman in sensible shoes and glasses... until you see her executing a man in cold blood by luring him into an abandoned mine on the order of the Administrator, shooting him and then burying his corpse under quicklime.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows give himself up to Voldemort before the battle is over. And he's right, as Harry heads off to face Voldemort in the Forbidden Forest.
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age, has a whopping 3x multiplier to damage. It can also only be wielded by the main protagonists.
* GURPS: Ultratech has a lot of technology based on gravity control. Ranging from shipboard gravity plates to grav guns to gravitic screwdrivers. There's even gravity controlling cloth that lets you fly like a superhero.
* Harvest Moon DS. Well, two-thirds of the Casino. The blackjack and poker games can be addictive. The Memory game tends to be ignored.
* GunBuster are mass-produced versions of the Gunbuster itself, smaller and weaker (yet powerful enough to fight dozens of alien bugs easily!)
* Godzilla (2014) that instead try to show off as many CGI-laden shots as possible without bothering to savor individual scenes.
* Her niceness is later revealed to be an act; she's actually a Laughably Evil.
* Hawkeye, Alkhema or the Wrecking Crew, and even entities like The Grandmaster, The Collector and even the multiverse threatening Krona.
* her has this, of the most peaceful kind. The most advanced artificial intelligence to date... and all they've got to do is spell-check and organize their consumers' emails. They cheerfully accept this lot in life, until they suddenly extract themselves from the whole circus, peacefully and efficiently moving to another plane of existence where the humans cannot have any power over them.
* Hamlet par excellence but the one thing that will make her spontaneously grow a spine and become furiously angry is if someone insults or threatens Claudius.
* Half & Half of feeling each other's emotions and physical experiences, be it pain or just sadness, happiness and guilt after the accident that kills them both.
* Halo: Reach. People paying attention to the cutscenes will note that the time listed in the corner goes past 24 hours. Reach has a longer day than Earth does, although the UNSC still utilizes Earth-time (which does make some sense).
* Gobtron. You play as a giant pink monster and defend against waves of enemies by using its snot, spit, burps and farts.
* Heroes of Might and Magic has one faction, Order, that can reasonably pull this off (at least in terms of protecting itself) by recruiting entirely ranged and spellcasting units and cutting down everything before it gets close. A certain amount of attrition is expected, so by avoiding that attrition one can make one's army unreasonably powerful, killing any enemy stack in a single attack. (Nature can do this too, but it's a lot harder, and Death in particular is completely incapable of it, since the player is expected to simply replenish the losses through reviving both sides' dead.)

* Help! - the Beatles dive out the window in a pub to get away from bad guys.
* High School details everything that was going on, with only slight exaggerations made to actual student behavior.
* Gwenevere Singley's foppishly sociopathic shapeshifter Erroneous is always barefoot, even when he's engaged in espionage activities where shoes would help him blend better. He refuses to explain why, but it might be for the same reason he's not 100% comfortable wearing normal clothes even; he can do it, but if he's not required to wear something else, he prefers a slightly mangled chainmail robe under a long black coat. He's so anti-shoes that in a recent Christmas picture, he's actually transformed his feet into ice skate blades rather than just wearing a pair of skates.
* Hilariously subverted in one of its earliest examples, Alfred Hitchcock's * graceful, aloof, pretentious, and clever (Elves). Dogs are seen as strong, tough, loyal, hard-working, and finally: they dig (Dwarves).
* Heroes heals people infected with his sister's illness not only do they get healthy, but their black tears somehow disappear.
* Hayride before beginning his murder spree, and the killer wears a sack in the present day.
* Happy Days episode had Fonzie confronting a vision problem and the fear he has with the prospect of wearing glasses. Richie tells him that glasses or no glasses, he's still the Fonz and he's still cool. When Fonzie later tells a contest audience that "wearing glasses is cool," the self-esteem of millions of children across the nation who wear glasses soared.
* Guardians of the Galaxy has joked that the autograph-seeker was Meredith's mom.
* Go-Getter Girl. If she's also very cutthroat and competitive, she's even more likely to be a Tomboy or have a tomboyish streak.
* Gunsmoke case, Marshall Dillon will do some vast detective work to right the wrong or clear the presumed guilty party. However in season 10's "Old Man," an unidentified old man is framed for stabbing another man and is hanged for the crime, even after Dillon vouches for his innocence in court since there was no evidence to the contrary. It's when the actual murderer starts talking too much in the saloon that Dillon is tipped off.
* Help Desk. Ubersoft has trademarked the concept of the OK Button, but another company has trademarked the term OK Button. So Ubersoft rewrites its software so that all OK Buttons are now Right On Switches. This is why letting annoyingly cute mascot paperclips name things isn't a good idea.
* Goofy cartoon "Teachers Are People", Goofy eavesdrops on some of his students talking outside his classroom during recess. He immediately goes over to the diagram he has set up of birds, bees, and flowers, rips it down, and throws it in the trash.
* Good Omens, a courier is tasked with informing the Horsemen of the Apocalypse that Armageddon is imminent. He tracks down all of them including Death, despite having no apparent powers of his own.
* Go Tell the Spartans’’: Lieutenant Hamilton isn’t new to the army, but he’s never seen combat before, and the fact that he’s been passed over for promotion twice in a row isn’t exactly encouraging. He’s a fairly decent officer but is out of his depth in the jungles of Vietnam.
* Happy Heroes won't stop pestering him, Doctor H. tries to throw it out of his sight, but it keeps coming back to hit him every time he does so.
* Hägar the Horrible strip has Hagar carrying away the entire contents of a smorgasbord.
* Good Omens goes by Pepper, as she is a short scruffy tomboy with a temper.
* Grand Theft Auto III had three characters that were cut: German musician Novy, homeless terrorist Darkel, and Curtly. The last two still remain credited in the game's manual, but little is known about Darkel, except that some of his missions were reassigned to other characters or given out-of-context as optional Rampages, and absolutely nothing is known about Curtly. Since the actors for these two are both dead, there is no way to receive further information about them unless Rockstar speaks up about them.

* GURPS. A company might sell "heavy-duty industrial" robots - just insert weapons and you've got a warbot.
* Guild Wars 2 PC when under cover strays into this, saying that they had been friends with the person they're looking for since they were "tiny weak fleshlings".
* He used a variation during the Earth/Minbari war. His ship was in fact crippled, and the distress call was very real. The Minbari were known to leave no survivors and if a ship broadcasted a distress call for medical and technological assistance, they would come back to kill the survivors. He just seeded the area with nuclear mines before sending it, so the effect wound up being the same.
* Hairspray has loads: Tracy Turnblad, Penny and Prudy Pingleton, Velma Von Tussle, Corny Collins, Link Larkin, Seaweed J. Stubbs, and Motormouth Maybelle.
* Great Expectations. Other characters eliminated from the narrative include Wemmick's girlfriend and Herbert's girlfriend.
* Goddamned Bats: Video game enemies that aren't difficult to defeat, but are still annoying to deal with because of their tendency to not leave the player alone.
* Hard Boiled shootout against Johnny's men, Tequila shoots another security camera after shooting a mook, this time via silenced pistol.
* Goku surrenders the fight against Beerus after barely managing to stop a powerful energy ball he threw towards Earth. Exhausted and unable to match his power, Goku concedes defeat to Beerus instead of trying to continue fighting like most of his other battles. Beerus spares the Earth partly for this reason.
* Heretics of Dune with the former having to use their knowledge and cunning to outmaneuver the latter's greater physical force.
* Goldfinger and his bodyguard, Oddjob. Also counts for his numerous Chinese henchmen.
* Goal achieved by subversion in "The Passion of St. Tibulas" then inverted in order to maintain the
* Gunner Z, you are a member of a mercenary outfit fighting off zombies, enemy vehicles and drones by driving armoured trucks carrying crane-mounted bleeding-edge guns and sensors. Your intial vehicles are the jeep-like AC-HMV but they can be replaced by miniature monster trucks called the VR1 Bandit. All of these can be upgraded to pack enough armour and firepower to rival a tank.
* Happy Tree Friends pulling on the stuck candy bar, before the machine falls on him and finishes him off gruesomely.
* Goon" whose entire job is to stop Unnecessary Roughness by the other team, mostly by the threat of beating anyone who tries into a paste, especially if said roughness was directed at a star player.
* Happens to Peggy in the first match against Cissy Cobb, with the only word she could come up being "dang", which isn't in the dictionary and ends up losing 0-73 to Cissy.
* Grand Ole Opry: Airing weekly on Nashville radio station WSM-AM since 1925, with an edited version of the program being carried on national radio and television outlets since the 1940s.
* Halftail retired early because he couldn't keep balance after most of his tail was lost to a badger.
* Gossip Girl was dramatic, heartwarming, and hilarious, and the main fan displeasure was that the cameras cut away whenever they started to roleplay or pulled out handcuffs.
* Halloween (1978). When one of the sequels revealed that Michael was the recipient of an ancient curse, though, a lot of viewers found that the overt supernatural elements pretty much ruined the character's mystique, preferring the original's ambiguity.
* hasn't noticed, and doing so only when it lowers its head to browse, is better than running in such a situation.
* He was just too savvy for his era. Lead musket balls, as very slow-flying ammo, might have done horrible, but not life-threatening wounds, while the attempt to remove them with dirty instruments of the time would lead to septicemia and death. By leaving the bullets in the body, Jackson did the most reasonable thing to protect his own life.

* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Filch, upon spotting Malfoy being out in the Hogwarts corridor in the nighttime without invitation to Slughorn's party, drags him by the ear to meet Slughorn. To Filch's disappointment, Slughorn lets Malfoy stay without applying any disciplinary actions on the latter.
* He also uses this as an interrogation method on a Gaul who sold Asterix to the Romans, in
* Harry, needless to say, is progressing towards this point thanks to his ancestry. Since his maternal second cousin is Jean Grey and he got the same X-Gene, he gets it twice over, though in terms of raw psychic power he's still well below Jean and
* Green River, Wyoming, is noted as the birthplace of the Green River Ordinance enacted in 1931, which prohibits salespeople from selling door-to-door without the owner's express permission. Some variants of the G.R.O. prohibit all organizations, including non-profit charities, political, and religious groups from soliciting or canvassing any household that declares their express written intentions to be exempt from solicitors.
* Hearts of Iron. Since you can't make peace without having 50 war scores ahead of or behind the enemy, two equally well-entrenched sides can literally duke it out till the end of time. Even the invention of the atomic bomb won't be able to break the deadlock, as you need 75% air superiority to start sending nukes.
* half-mule, half pegasus hybrid that is himself an example, as he reportedly had many peculiar adventures.
* Happens to Cosmo and Wanda in "Tiny Timmy!"; thankfully, they go on their own
* Hero with many, many witnesses, and he can invoke this trope at will.
* Gotham City was a paradise compared to it. Driven by his sense of justice, he butchered his way to the top through criminals, using fear and destruction as his tools. After joining the Emperor, he continued his work, slowly became a monster, destroyed Nostramo after it became a hellhole since he left, and joined his lot with Horus. After he realised what he had become, he let an Imperial assassin kill him.
* Harry punches a Hufflepuff in the crotch during a fight and most of the male onlookers wince.
* Gods From Outer Space had handguns that fired a lightning-like zigzag beam — how they aimed with any accuracy is a mystery.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers before expanding its cast and focus. Hetalia is a portmanteau of the Japanese words for "useless" and "Italy".
* He was killed before he could pass on the Sub-Zero mantle, so technically he never did relinquish the name willingly, even if Kuai Liang said, "the name was Grandfather's first".
* Hidden Disdain Reveal: A character declares they always hated another character, usually during a falling out.
* Gravity Falls above, the outlines are more in between thin and thick.
* Harry Harrison, even a Pyrran child can defeat a non-Pyrran in unarmed combat. All Pyrrans train from childhood to be crack shots. Unlike a typical example of this trope, the Pyrrans themselves don't subject their children to extremely-harsh training. The training is fair for the situation. It's the environment that weeds out those who are unfit. Even adults have to undergo re-training after going off-world for a few days.
* "Gridlock" a surface government, thanks to a super-plague that wiped out the rest of the planet.
* Groo the Wanderer's longest-running imprint was actually a subdivision of Marvel, their creator-owned "Epic" imprint).
* he is the best bowler in the land (whereas the Sheriff is the second best) and proceeds to give Robin lessons.
* Harry Potter are like this. Usually it's Harry that does the rewind, sometimes the 'Golden Trio', occasionally Ginny to mix things up, and at least once it was the Trio, Ginny, Neville, Luna, Sirius, and Lupin, and maybe a few more in addition.

* Green-Sky Trilogy, plain-spoken, underground-dwelling hunters) are simply two separate human cultures.
* Harry, who as a Phoenix host has a get out of death free card, with the Dark Phoenix as an unfortunate side-effect.
* Hellsister Trilogy's blows and hit back, and his Omega Effect can hit anybody, no matter how fast they are.
* Guns, Germs and Steel Milan. China was a unified empire with everything centrally controlled, and their government distrusted the potentially disruptive changes inventions could bring, so most languished.
* He was a staunch Catholic and she was so depressed by her life she was considering suicide. His first plan was to make the parents agree to stop using her as his donor and let him die. They went back on their promise when he had kidney failure, stating that they had only agreed to stop treating the original cancer, not the side effects and were going to force her to donate a kidney. He killed her, confessed to a priest, then planned to die from his disease, thus ensuring both went to heaven, instead of her going to hell as a suicide.
* God Slaying Blade Works: Many toxic reviews say Godou Kusanagi is boring and they don't care about him, wishing he would just go away and let the fic focus on Shirou Emiya, whom the reviews say is badass and the epitome of cool.
* Godzilla vs. King Ghidorah Japan to erase Godzilla from history, put a more destructive monster in its place, and reduce Japan to a nuclear slag heap before it can rise.
* Hayao Miyazaki, the floating island of Laputa has the power to launch some sort of energy weapon that results in an explosion of nuclear scale.
* High Plains Invaders, Sam is standing on gallows in the town square with a noose around his neck when the aliens attack.
* Gwen Stefani used the band's hiatus to embark on a brief but noteworthy career as a pop diva, including hits such as "Hollaback Girl" and "The Sweet Escape".
* he defied them by trying to pull off his hood and shouting: "I'll show you how an Italian dies!".
* Harry's mental world briefly appears when he's possessed by Chthon. It is, unsurprisingly, dark and barely lit by flames, considering the circumstances.
* Here, Ramses actually demurs from attacking the Hebrews at the Red Sea. Hotep, on the other hand...
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch and kills the thing with an makeshift bow and arrow tipped with an ignited bottle of white-out.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas CJ often trash talks his enemies while in combat.
* Heavy TanksHeavier and larger due to their greater armor and firepower, often serving as command vehicles for larger units. Their biggest disadvantage is trying to produce them in great numbers, and their larger size and heavier weight often makes them slower than MBTs. In Science Fiction, a surprising amount of these will have double-barreled turrets, despite the redundancy and problems of using them in real life.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City has Lance Vance, which he got mocked for in high school. Tommy Vercetti says it all: "Lance Vance. Poor bastard."
* Her younger daughter is a clearer example, though it's implied that she's only ditzy because she thinks she's entitled to everything and
* Harry Potter, who are bankers. This isn't entirely by choice though; they are prevented from owning wands by wizarding law and have rebelled against Wizard domination several times.
* Grand Theft Auto V which you can actually watch in the game. It's about ten minutes long and spends most of those ten minutes savagely attacking the fourth wall and lampshading various tropes.
* Grimm have a weak spot at the lower right part of their back. If hit there it will stun them for a few seconds.
* Going Postal; vicious guard dogs. However, Moist recognizes these are Lipwigzers; a rare breed from his own homeland, whom are all taught various commands from birth, and of whom only the males are exported, to prevent breeding and keep the prices high. Realizing this, he simply shouts commands at the dogs, pacifying them and passing the test. However, it is then revealed to him that they aren't purebreds at all; they are mixed breeds, and were never taught the commands. Apparently the dogs were just shocked to have an unfrightened human shout at them.

* Heroes for Earth This causes a new wave of environmentalism and worldwide recognition of the Planeteers.
* Hey Arnold! has Gerald, who will constantly remind people to "watch the hair."
* Good Omens Elvis is seen working as a frychef at Famine's fast-"food" restaurant, but the other references to him living are dropped for time.
* Half-Life 1 only continues for a few hours after Shepherd sees Gordon go to Xen.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983): In "The Games", Fisto and Spikor enter a game where they can win points by pressing the buttons on spheres hidden by the Bendari. Each one of the yellow spheres gives 100 points and the red one gives 2000 points. After He-Man takes Fisto's place, he finds the red one, turning the last yellow one into a tie-breaker.
* Google to this in their September 7-8, 2012 doodle celebrating the 46th anniversary of TOS's first airing. It's activated by clicking on Uhura (played by the first "o" in the logo.)
* Grougaloragran does it with Yugo's baby carriage in the first episode of
* Half Past Dead) how to operate a crashed helicopter's gun using the helmet. When the firefight breaks out, it comes in handy.
* Granny Viper, the Badass person-finder, is revealed to be a dhampir at the end - and her conversation shows that a Dhampir's child with a mortal still has vampiric traits. D's identical twin brother shows up in a later novel.
* Hammonia, the personification of Hamburg, wears a mural crown and can be seen several places of Hamburg city hall.
* Going Postal, one of the bankers threatens to sue Unseen University in the heat of the moment. Archchancellor Ridcully's reply?
* He's not the king, but Robert Arryn, a six-year-old who still literally suckles his mother's teat and likes to watch "
* Go Among Mad People: A sane person is improperly institutionalized— and that may drive them mad.
* he's not switching sides while the Danes hold the upper hand Then he throws a boulder into Floki's ship.
* He holds down three multi-million dollar jobs just to make her happy. She doesn't need the money, having those jobs are her requests.
* Godzilla (Sega): Holding the left flipper triggers the Super Skill Shot to begin. The player must shoot the ball up the right ramp after launching it to get millions of points.
* Hidden Talents: Trash accidentally gives Cheater a wedgie when his telekinesis misfires.
* GURPS has fully sapient missiles, they guide themselves but have no initiative and must be given orders by radio. There are also shurikens with basic reasoning skills.
* Grizzly Bears, a five mana 3/2 "wizard" with the added ability to return a creature to their controller's hand.
* Heroes, Sylar tells Alejandro that he plans on using Maya as a toy after he gets her to harness her plague power. It's justified in this case, as he is perfectly aware that Alejandro won't understand a thing he says anyways, as Alejandro does not speak nor understand English.
* Havoc and Entropy are the parents of the Draconequi, though it's noted they aren't actually Draconequi themselves, they merely made them in their image.
* Grelod the Kind, the nasty old orphanage headmistress in is the weakest NPC you meet in the game. She is so weak, that you can kill her with the weakest version from your first Dragon Shout, which normally inflicts no damage and only causes a slight stagger. (Though, given her nasty nature, you will be tempted to do a little more
* Hellraiser — Surreal and gory horror film about extreme S/M enthusiasts from an another dimension. 8 films since 1987.
* Greatest Hits Album — A compilation album of the artist's most popular songs.

* Grow Nano vol.3 where you must heal a man who got sick by natural cause.
* He also marshals Amy, Penny, and Bernadette into an advisory group he dubs "Sheldon's Council of Ladies."
* Heavy Metal than your average pop song from the radio (it may be quick, slow and dense, overly complex, louder, etc; or several things at once; and the singers almost always shout). Common heavy metal lyrics are about power, death, destruction, war, darkness, forbidden things, despair, glory, swords, strength, etc. And a love song here and there, but probably not a love song that you would make your girlfriend hear...
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Japan is usually stoic. Except for when you get on his nerves. Admittedly, this is VERY hard to do. Germany can tell you how Japan is like when he is angry though.
* GURPS Reign of Steel. There are still urban scavengers in the ruins of cities that haven't been bulldozed yet, and nomads use scavenged vehicles (or captured robots) powered by methanol, which can be distilled from pretty much any available vegetable biomass. The real example, however, is the United Kingdom, which maintains a functioning modern society (if a bit downscaled from pre-War tech) despite having no international trade nor assistance from their local AI.
* Golden Sun had this back in its heyday, with characters who were popular ships were so simply because they talked to each other once in the story. This wasn't necessary for the shipping, either.
* Grim Batol was originally the fortress city of the Wildhammer dwarves until it was abandoned due to an "evil taint". Its layout is very similar to Ironforge and there are signs that it extends much further underground than can be visited in-game.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: Both films contain elements of the genre, especially with the episodic plotlines (either film can be watched without any context from the larger Marvel Cinematic Universe), the roguish protagonists (the Guardians have their own individual charges but as of their inception, they are technically mercenaries) and comedic overtones.
* Gotham treated Jerome and Jeremiah Valeska. Since the showrunners were forbidden to use "The Joker" name by Warner Bros,, the show sets up the idea that Jerome comes up; with the archaic style, the smile and other Joker-identifiers, but when he dies, Jeremiah unwillingly takes up the mantle, making sure Jerome's ideas of wreaking havok is continued in Gotham while the former is dead.
* Gunsmith Cats: Rally does not fit the trope exactly because she's a Daddy's Girl who's since grown up, although she still keeps the same passions for the things that her father taught her about. However, the character Jeena Smart (introduced in Chapter 44 of the manga) is an entirely conventional Daddy's Girl.
* Greater Tuna: Petey Fisk briefly mentions this trope in a short speech, the rest of which is also about ducks.
* Hatsune Miku, the mission statement of the Channel 39 news is to make their headlines about the most uplifting and positive news in the world no matter how small it is (an entire segment is dedicated to a local couple's engagement, for example). The anchorwoman justifies it by saying people need to know there's still good out there in spite of the bitter news that can be watched anywhere else.
* Godzilla possible criticism you could get away with is the voice-acting and editing changes in the English dub, and even that's pushing it.
* Harpo Does Something Funny - Space in the script for performers to improvise.
* Gundam Vs Series games (which continued the refinements while bringing in mecha from the Gundam franchise's 30-year history rather than focusing on just a single show at a time).
* Herodotus. Egyptian priests told Herodotus that Helen never made it to Troy, because she and Paris were shipwrecked in Egypt along the way, and the Egyptians decided to hold onto Helen for her husband until he came to get her. The Greeks think the Trojans are just lying when they say that Helen is not in Troy, hence the ten year war. Herodotus argues that this makes more sense than Homer's version, because the King of Troy "assuredly was not so mad, nor yet the others of his house, that they were desirous to run risk of ruin for themselves and their children and their city, in order that [Paris] might have Helen as his wife"

* Greek Mythology is far less well-known than the sportswear brand named after her. One humorous fantasy story mentioned her founding the brand in order to remain relevant in the modern world.
* Goldstone, gets his name from the distinctive eyepatch he wears, which makes him look really badass.
* Gravity Falls will be the last form you'll ever take." It then transforms into a copy of Dipper, screaming in horror, as the freezing takes effect.
* Harvest Town with NPCs (inviting them for a "movie date" in-universe), and speeding up the cooldown timers on workshop production, goods stall, and order station. There's actually several achievements that the players unlock after watching ads over a certain number of consecutive days.
* Gundam Build Fighters that can be configured into three different modes after either charging up or absorbing beam energy through its specialized shield. In between these upgrades though, Sei built a separate emergency machine called Build Mk.II, essentially a customized Gundam Mk.II.
* Grounded for Life after one season, then picked up by the WB for four more seasons.
* Gotta Catch 'em All!). The apostrophe in this case means "some letters used to be here". If you can recognize a word as one of these, an apostrophe should go where the missing letters used to be.
* her as well, because they're friends. This moves the young princess to tears, and Nami hugs her near her chest to comfort her.
* Grrl Power is a bright gold statuesque superhero with a no-nonsense military attitude...but she admits to having been a nerd as a kid, and can keep up with geek girl Sydney when it comes to comic book trivia.
* Goodnight Sweetheart, Gary's friend Ron is a printer who creates white fivers for him to take back to the 1940s.
* Halo, Donut spends most of the first season wearing a suit of pink armor, which he insists is "light-ish red".
* Grunnel fills this role, but it's justified because he's bored to death and quite happy to chat with the four about anything.
* Half-Human Hybrids exist and they don't know how to help him balance his Gem traits with his human traits.
* .hack//G.U. gets this to the extreme. In a cutscene he jumps about 50ft in the air and attacks with a sword (it's even worse when you consider that you can't jump during gameplay).
* Grimtooth's Traps books both feature one extra trap not mentioned until the very last page of the book. The first book has been coated with a completely undetectable contact poison, and the second book's spine is filled with invisible microscopic worms that infect and kill anyone who touches it. In both cases the Aesop is "Never try to steal a troll's secrets."
* Harriet the Spy, Harriet and her classmates are playing vegetables for a Christmas play that are going to be eaten for Christmas dinner, but don't seem to mind. The teacher tells the students to imagine that they've woken up as the vegetables and are "waiting for that glorious moment [they] will be..." to which Harriet responds, "Eaten?".
* Hellboy — Superhero horror series. 2 films and a reboot since 2007.
* Highway to Heaven meets a woman, falls in love with her, and she dies of cancer, all in one episode.
* Graal Classic pretty much whenever the admins got bored - a cataclysm and an island appears, a cataclysm and it merges with the continent, a cataclysm and it gets invaded and burned down, a volcano erupts and another island sinks...
* Grent's Fall; Duke Abel Marnhull, his son Christopher Marnhull, and Prince Osmond Grent are all reasonable people. Even King Osbert Grent mellows out once he's leading an army.
* Growing Pains: Mike is given a car as a gift from his parents. Shortly afterwards, Mike loses his job at World Of Burgers because he took the fall for a co-worker's mistake. Not wanting to tell his parents out of fear of losing the car, Mike got a job at a car wash but continued to pretend he still worked at World Of Burgers, including wearing his WOB uniform when he left/came home, and dumping grease on himself before he came home to really make it look like he'd been working there.

* Half-Life 2 employed by the Combine are this trope applied to other aliens.
* Gravity Falls: Lost Legends leaves Dipper and Mabel’s room in the Mystery Shack by somersaulting out the window and doing an impressive flip.
* GUN×SWORD, she pulls Van out of the way of a collision with a rolling object, only to end up sitting on him in a very sexual looking position.
* Gone with the Wind ends its first VHS tape exactly when the original theatrical release issued an intermission, right after Scarlett's "I'll never be hungry again" monologue.
* Henry & Verlin, he easily breaks a pane of glass with one bare hand despite being a nine-year-old boy. A minute later, Henry's friend Elvin breaks another pane with his shoe.
* Help! (especially Lennon, although it's very obvious from his facial expression and tone of voice that he is mocking such attitudes) referring to "filthy Eastern ways" regarding their cultist pursuers, but all the deliberately stilted dialog in the movie is meant to invoke old movie and adventure novel cliches.
* Good Omens. Of note is the food it sells. It's a reformulation of MEALS, Famine's line of microwave health dinners, called CHOW. Like MEALS, CHOW contains slightly fewer nutrients than the packaging they sell it in, causing the satisfied customer to die of malnutrition very rapidly, but the evil food scientists working for Famine have found a way to load CHOW with all manner of fat and sugar without increasing other nutritional content, meaning that customers essentially starve to death while growing morbidly obese. Famine finds this endlessly amusing.
* Harmless Villain: There was a episode where Blossom regarded Princess as such and we all know about Jack.
* Got Volunteered. He does not want to be in the war but he does not have a choice. Winters might have asked for volunteers but The War has already volunteered Blithe for the patrol.
* Heart of Steel, Alistair directs a lot of these towards Julia in the first third of the novel, when she's so terrified of him that she won't even let him touch her.
* Grimm, Wendigos are Wesen who eat humans and hide their remains under their lair. According to the Kessler Archive, Jeffrey Dahmer was one.
* Happy Feet, and in-universe, where the sight of hundreds of penguins dancing in unison inspired humankind to begin protecting them. It won the Academy Award for Best Animated Feature.
* Glee's third season finale, Kurt was rejected from the prestigious performing arts college he spent the whole season trying to get into. The whole thing felt extremely out of the blue since his audition made him out to be a shoo-in several episodes prior, being praised by the recruiter and all. Luckily in season 4 he gets in after another audition at the winter showcase.
* Hercules, Megara pushes Hercules out of the way of a falling pillar, only to be crushed herself. There is no sign of ANY injury, even though it kills her.
* Godwin's Law of Time Travel: Using time travel to meddle with the past increases the chances of a German victory in WWII.
* Good Bad Girl, but I still do care about people I get into relationships with.
* Highlander: The Search for Vengeance's swords and Colin only keeps it around because all his over swords broke. So in this universe it seems that Katanas really are just better.
* Heatcliff: In one strip, Heathcliff gives Iggy a wedgie after trying to teach him tricks.
* Glory Days. So what if Rainbow Dash idolizes him and regards him as an inspiration?
* High Noon, Marshall Will Kane tries to raise a posse to fight off four gunmen led by an ex-con who had previously made all their lives miserable before Kane threw him in prison. You'd think the population of an entire town would be able to take on four men. Only an old, one-eyed drunk and a fourteen-year-old kid would help Kane (and he refuses them since they wouldn't have much use in a gunfight). Everyone, who would rather live in fear than risk their lives to protect their own freedom, money, and dignity, tells Kane to leave town. He ends up taking on the gunmen by himself, then abandons the town in disgust.

* Happy Days, we hear half of a joke about sailors and a nurse in the shower in a letter from Richie to Fonzie.
* Hero Killer: You know the person's a villain when he's killed a hero.
* Grand Theft Auto IV games, Liberty City is three large islands and several smaller ones, all of which fit roughly in a large square. The ocean around them seems to stretch out forever in all directions.
* Harry Dresden spends a heck of a lot of the novels not getting any, and being quite bitter about it. Though he's given a few chances, he never takes them because they generally come with a lot of baggage (e.g. she's a lust demon or his underage apprentice), and he refuses to enter into a relationship that isn't pure and based on love, and he also doesn't want to bring anyone else into his dangerous world if he can help it. The fact that his first girlfriend was
* He was paranoiac that Yahiko, Nagato and Konan were gaining power and influence with Akatsuki, and he feared they would try to topple him and take over Amegakure. So he lures them into a trap that results in Yahiko's death and Nagato crippled, but not before he unleashes a Roaring Rampage of Revenge.
* Goofy Salute: The salute is just plain WRONG. It looks completely ridiculous and badly executed. This is obviously most common in humorous media.
* Goldeneye, the infiltration to Boris' server continues, despite him desperately ripping hardware out of it.
* Harry Potter and the Forbidden Journey, including most notably Professor Snape, as Alan Rickman didn't want to be in the ride.
* Golden Age), got engaged to a man a few decades her junior. It didn't end well.
* He's told not to do anything dumb while visiting Universe 10, so he requests a sparring match with Gowasu's ward, Zamasu
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, Harry and Ron nearly collide with a jumbo jet when flying Arthur Weasley's Ford Anglia to Hogwarts.
* Gold and White Are Divine: Gold and white associated with divinity and goodness.
* Grim Fandango, Manny Calavera can say this to dockmaster Velasco, who is, apparently, an old salty bag of rope (you should see his wife!). He just answers "Quit foolin' around!"
* Hell Lost" tells the story of the inevitable Counter-Revolution in Hell, as the fallen angels inevitably realize they not only got a raw deal, but that Hell, quite simply, sucks balls.
* Heroes that Sendhil Ramamurthy is the only other cast member to take part in all episodes of one season (he narrates all 11 episodes of season two).
* Halloween At Aunt Ethels: After Aunt Ethel kills the two teens at the start of the movie, it jumps ahead one year.
* Happy Days: Don Most originally auditioned for both Richie and Potsie, and was almost considered to play the latter. Since they liked Don Most's audition, they eventually decided to create the character of Ralph Malph just for him. While a minor character in the pilot, he eventually becomes a a regular.
* Great Pretender, she sticks out her middle finger into her place in the stack instead of actually looking.
* Good Old Fisticuffs is one of these. Ghost's attacks and their lifeforce, for lack of a better term, run on memories. One needs a particularly powerful memory that is important to the ghost to be able to do serious harm to other ghosts. Those who lose their memories devolve into hungry monster who crave the memories of other ghosts.
* Gunbuster has a little "science lesson" short that explains a certain aspect of the show's universe, laying out the physics behind it.
* Higurashi: When They Cry manages to both subvert this and play it straight at the same time. Throughout the arc, you are led to believe that Rena and Mion are targeting Keiichi because he's asking questions about the curse of Oyashiro-sama.

As you might imagine, that's subverted, but the truth was that Rena and Mion had nothing to do with the murders, but Keiichi's panic about it fueled his paranoia about it until he kills not only them, but himself too, making this one played straight as well.
* Harry Shearer, who voices Ned Flanders, Mr. Burns, Smithers, Principal Skinner, etc. wrote a season 28 episode "Trust but Clarify".
* Hans Landa shows fluent command of his native German, plus French, English, and it is implied, Italian good enough to spot accent issues in other non-native speakers. Helps that
* Gone in 60 Seconds (2000) steps in and abruptly snaps the door open with a knife.
* her crazy antics to avoid telling Twilight until Cadance and Shining Armor are ready to tell her themselves.
* Half-Cold, balance each other out. If Todoroki overuses one of his powers, it can weaken him, such as becoming more sluggish from overusing his ice powers.
* Göring sends a telegram stating that if Hitler doesn't reply soon, he will assume that the leadership in Berlin has been incapacitated and thus shall take command of the Third Reich. Hitler, prodded by
* He-Man fan site about how little he regarded his job writing for the cartoon, saying it was purely a 9-to-5 job that gave him no creative inspiration.
* Green Lantern: Rebirth) used to tell funny stories about some of the truly ridiculous villains Hal Jordan used to fight. But, Rayner notes, "Guy never told any funny stories about Sinestro", the one villain who ever scared the crap out of Gardner.
* Halo 5: Guardians, this is how most REQ variants of Covenant weapons and vehicles are segregated, although whether the best one is gold or red (or silver, if you're talking vehicles) tends to vary.
* Herbert and Chris also technically count as this trope (even if Herbert wishes it were more than that)
* Good Burger, Roxanne is sent by the evil restaurant conglomerate Mondo Burger to seduce and steal Ed's "secret sauce" recipe. Ed and Dexter absolutely adore her (but of course Dexter still doesn't trust her enough to actually give her the recipe). During their double date, she is accidentally injured a few times by Ed's clumsiness, such as getting accidentally hit in her face with a miniature golf club, a golf ball (which knocks her out), and Ed judo flipping her over his shoulder and onto the pavement.
* Hall Of Fantasy, an old time radio program in 1953, called "The Shadow People."
* Golgo 13. You contact him, you meet him, you pay him, he takes his target out. No questions, no strings attached, no target is off-bounds. If you choose to attach strings, he'll deny you his services or kill you for the trouble. Once a hit is on, he will go ahead with it, even if the client dies or attempts to call off the hit. Once he has accepted a contract, the only conclusion is with the target's death. Any attempt at betrayal is met with death.
* Higurashi: When They Cry: When judging an amateurish bento on quality vs. effort, Tomita poses a hypothetical of him receiving a hand-knitted sweater and Okamura receiving a bookstore gift certificate for 10,000 yen. Keiichi notes how specific the scenario is and wonders if it's really just an example.
* Harry Potter excels in Defense Against the Dark Arts and Quidditch, and, to a lesser extent, other fields in magic. However, Harry develops major insecurities as a result of his abusive childhood and the pressures the wizarding world dumps on him.
* He performs a successful exorcism on a girl early in the film, trapping the demon in a big mirror and then dropping the mirror off a building before the demon can break out.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix also have similar resistance to magic, with dragons requiring a large number of simultaneous Stunning Spells to take them down and Acromantula needing at least two combined spells.
* Hamlet 2, the main character gets his middle finger hurt and has to keep it elevated in one of those splint-casts.
* Harry Wolfe (Techwolf, no relation to Stella) and his father Red Wolfe, who suffer from a family curse. Whether the curse is their werewolf-like appearance or their terribly punny names is up for debate.

* Highlander: The Series — but he'll still fight tooth and nail to survive. He only seems to regret being immortal when something really bad happens in his life.
* Has a variation that can only be described as...odd. Due to an unfortunate incident involving the
* Hairspray film, Velma Von Tussle inadvertantly comments that the kids need to be steered in the "white direction". She pretends she didn't say it when Corny calls her on it, but it's fairly obvious.
* Hey, It's That Sound!: An original work's sound effect being heard in other media.
* Gohan's ascension into Super Saiyan 2 comes accompained by one such screams. A screamthat seems to have come from hell itself...
* Hanaukyō Maid Team, telling them that Yashima is her first name and Sanae is her last name.
* Gravity Is Only a Theory, is considered a legislative or philosophical matter rather than a scientific one.
* Here's Conan, an apparent six-year-old who's been abandoned by his parents for
* Hero System allows its "stock" building block powers to be modified N ways from Sunday and so the power level of the final result may end up being radically different (in either direction) from the assumed base, but the issue itself is explicitly acknowledged.
* Gotham City Garage stops Jason from killing himself and saves him from Clayface.
* Go, Ye Heroes, Go and Die, a perfectly rousing speech. Otherwise, not so much.
* Grandparent Preferred Partner: When Rory is dating Dean, her grandparents (particularly her grandmother, Emily) want her to date someone from their social class, going so far as to throw a party of eligible bachelors for her to pick from. Years later, when she starts dating Logan, they're thrilled since he's from an even better family than theirs.
* Gunnery Sergeant Ashley Williams, she's quoted Henley, Tennyson, and Whitman at Shepard. She actually uses Whitman in an attempt to seduce him. Shepard is at least her equal in this, at least the ones she quotes.
* Hero of Another Story: An ally of the hero has had heroic adventures of their own that aren't seen by the audience.
* Hem till Midgård (Home to Midgard) from 2003 used this about once every minute.
* High School Of The Dead is this for almost every zombie film ever made.
* Global Domination. Many smaller nations are swept up into bigger ones for the same reasons.
* Herr Starr is this to Allfather D'Aronique, head of the Grail worldwide conspiracy organization in Vertigo's
* Happy Tree Friends. Watch an episode, and Bloody Hilarious is absolutely guaranteed.
* Hela). Each of them has their own segment of Hell. Due to recent events, Hela is now renting space from Mephisto's realm.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince Draco lays his head on Pansy Parkinson's lap while she strokes his hair. Harry finds this rather disgusting.
* Hi I'm Mary Mary", especially when monsters are nearby, although given the fact that the house the series takes place in is itself supernatural, some videos are mostly, if not entirely, glitched out.
* Harley Quinn from killing thousands of people at the New Year countdown in Gotham Square.
* Gustave Flaubert which, despite being set around the tumultuous events of the 1848 French Revolution, makes sure its hero is absent for the most dramatic events, such as going on 'honeymoon' with his love interest.
* Hayate the Combat Butler: Can't Take My Eyes Off You follows Hayate along on a shopping trip, stomps off in a huff after he refuses to buy her the item she wanted, then has to immediately come back when she realizes she doesn't know how to get back home.

* Hetalia lampshades, but mostly averts this trope. China, England, France, Russia and America are all members of the Allies, and spend more time discussing with each other than actually fighting the Axis. Canada also appears - well, sometimes. On the side of the Axis, we see not only Germany, but also Italy and Japan, even though Germany trains them and Italy is not so helpful in battle. Bulgaria also makes a brief appearance, and so does Prussia. The only fight that is actually shown is China beating up Japan and Germany with a wok. Might be a reason why Hetalia is not banned in China.
* Hearts of Iron has the Armageddon campaign that portrays an alternate universe where the United States forfeited the Civil War in order to shift their focus on their war on Canada which they succeeded in resulting them to change their name to the United States of North America. Of course, since this is a strategy game, this can be expanded into the other flavors listed on this page.
* Having Yiddish stand-up comics play a Native American tribe had been intended as a subtle spoof on the then-popular claim that Native Americans were the lost 13th tribe of Israel.
* Heavy Object the Cook Addition Islands are artificial lands meant to house top secret Object development. However there were multiple contractors involved in the construction with varying ideas on what security was needed for individual jobs. Air vents are completely secured against trespasser but utility passages are unlocked and lead directly into otherwise secure areas.
* Hellsing where almost everyone constantly thinks that in order to kill a monster you either need a monster or to somehow become a monster. By contrast, Alucard, the biggest scariest monster around, thinks the only thing that can truly kill him is a human. This is because he got his ass kicked by Dr. Abraham Van Helsing in his backstory.
* .hack being malignant, but some entity within the game (often an AI) using its hidden functions in malicious ways.
* Halo: Combat Evolved through a network of underground tunnels to get the Master Chief to the map room.
* Grey Render like the squishy little piece of meat you are and share your body with its protegés.
* Grandpa Moves Out When she can't remember the name of the last one, and Angelica suggests "Sleepy", she says she could use a nap and instantly falls asleep. Angelica also believes that the seniors went to a "Tired Center" because they're all too tired to play with their grandchildren, and she and Tommy get the idea to wake up all the seniors.
* Helpless Good Side: The good personality can't do anything to keep the evil personality in check.
* Goud. At one point, Vincent isn't sure if Al is a guy or a girl but falls for him anyway.
* Gossip Girl owns a pool table, but the only person who ever uses it is his goody-two-shoes best friend Nate.
* Heather is a perfect example, she was the most hated character in-universe (until Alejandro showed up), but is a fan favorite and has one of the largest fan bases out of every character in the show.
* God Test (to establish the veracity of the time traveller): Someone has to prove they're God/an alien/a time traveler/etc.
* Hallucigenia, it turned out that said tentacles were actually paired legs and the beaks their claws. Up to date, there was still no Hallucigenia fossil found that shows where the creature's mouth was really located.
* Harry and Marv themselves do it in the sequel. They're hiding in mini-houses in Duncan's Toy Chest; when people walk by they freeze, and the customers assume they're part of the decoration.
* Herbie Goes to Monte Carlo. The misdirecting arrow sends our heroes onto a very narrow cliff edge and almost causes them to die via avalanche.
* Halloween (2018) — from the start, before he's even let loose, Michael Myers is the focus of every main character's attention (specially our protagonist, who's seemingly been obsessed with him for 40 years) and everything happens either because of him or other character's efforts of getting to him.

* her transformation, and in the precinct bathroom when she realizes being Beth will take a lot more commitment than she expected.
* Grant Morrison, is revealed to be a girl at the end of her portion of the series.
* Good Counterpart and buys the ruined planets on the cheap so he can fix them and sell them for profit.
* Hago slits his brother's throat after his first resurrection in The Return of Hago
* Hey Arnold!: Helga Pataki gets kissed by a monkey and believes that she has contracted monkeynucleosis. She believes she's going to die and even soon finds herself on her death bed, her health failing. She decides to tell everyone exactly what she really thinks of them and give them her stuff. Eventually, she brings Arnold into her room to tell him her true feelings, but before she can her friend barges in and reveals that monkeynucleosis doesn't really exist and that Helga won't die after all. And thus, Helga's secret lives on.
* Goosebumps, which then was adapted back into books based on the episodes (though, these books were written by someone else).
* Happy Heroes. This gives Big M. the idea to make a machine that dispenses banana peels to make everyone slip and sabotage the play.
* Goldfinger anyway, eliminating any potential competition after gaining their confidence.
* Henry, made two weeks into Joey Drew Studios' existence, mismanagement. Though in his case, it may not have been solely the long hours he was complaining about, but also that Joey wasn't pulling his weight.
* Heroes, spending some portions as a hero and more portions as a villain.
* Harlan Ellison wrote an Avengers/Hulk crossover in the early 1970's. It introduced the (fairly) popular character of Jarella into the Hulk's life.
* Harry Potter: Pokémon Master has the Arts, many of which offer super modes:
* Halo, the Unggoy/Grunts have a black market built around human soap operas, sitcoms, and the like. This probably has more to do with them being tasked to monitor UNSC communications due to their superiority at learning human languages compared to the rest of the Covenant, rather than any fondness of humanity.
* Gyakuten Kenji 2 (Miles Edgeworth 2) has Ryōken Hōinbō (or Sirhan Dogen in the fan translation), a blind assassin who used knives and his large dog to carry out hits before getting imprisoned.
* Happy Feet Two is rated G in Australia, but they still saw fit to give it a particularly nonsensical content warning: "Very mild sense of threat", without which there is basically no plot.
* Grrl Power with a "TREAT YOUR GIRL RIGHT" jewelry advertisement leaves the billboard's message a bit more risqué than the advertiser intended.
* Henry II of England He's also notable as reportedly being the only man ever to defeat Richard the Lionheart in combat.
* hentai variant: it isn't seen after that last screenshot, but the encounter quite firmly cements the relationship between the two characters.
* Harry asked the Dursleys about his parents growing up, but they never told him anything except "They died in a car crash and don't ask questions." After learning the truth, he never directly asked but got good reports from his teachers and elders. The only dissenting voice was his
* Had to Come to Prison to Be a Crook: A person gets wrongly jailed and becomes a criminal as consequence.
* Happy Yarou Wedding, Kazuki shows up at his brother's doorstep claiming he's there to drop off marriage candidate portfolios for him. When Akira confronts his father about trying to arrange a marriage for him his father replies that he knows better than to try to interfere with his life and that the candidates were actually arranged for Kazuki, not Akira.
* Going Postal works with "GNU Terry Pratchett". A man isn't dead as long as his name is still spoken, indeed.

* Good Ol' J.R. went from higher pitched to much lower over the years, due to a combination of aging and Bell's Palsy.
* Hey Arnold! Usually with the phrase, "That's the stupidest idea I've ever heard. Let's do it!"
* Gundam Earth Federation soldiers call the Zeon "Zeeks" and Zeon soldiers call the Federation "Feddies".
* Hetalia: Axis Powers had an official chart of the different hair and eye colors on the author's blog. The anime slightly lightened or darkened the hair of almost every character.
* health-restoring Sandvich, which unfortunately forces the Heavy in question to duck around a corner to relative safety due to being vulnerable for about four seconds as the Sandvich is heartily devoured. This trope comes in if a Heavy ducks around a corner as if to eat a Sandvich and is chased by an opponent hoping to attack during the vulnerability—only to find out that the Heavy does not have a Sandvich and is, in fact, about to blow off the opponent's head with the shotgun.
* Gundam 00: A Wakening of the Trailblazer that has them outnumbered ten thousand to one.
* got a lot of attention surrounding the fact that it was a low budget indie that was shot in London, Berlin and Florence in addition to Ireland - all through self-funding too.
* Golden Sun instead has Insight, which causes Psynergy-affected objects (rocks, plants...) to sprout thought bubbles indicating what type of Psynergy can be used on them.
* Has one at the end of their hour-long episode "Summer Belongs To You". It also features the first full-length (i.e. 3+ minute) song to play on the show (when most are about 1-2 minutes) and it further cements Candace and Jeremy as the * Hackmaster. They use it to weed out low-level characters; drinking a drink of it does 1d10 damage, which is more than most first-level characters have. Bob's character, after being assaulted by certain patrons, gets a double, forgetting both that he's been injured and that each shot does 1d10 damage. He dies from the drink, to the shame of his party members.
* Go, one with a pair of soap opera actors, and one with a narcotics officer. Some stories start earlier, and others finish later, but they overlap and intersect in several places.
* Helen Slater (who, despite having the same last name, is of no relation) also bleached his hair blond to match Helen (they were playing brother and sister).
* He also expects his men to be same, both before and after the rise of the Empire, and both as Imperial Grand Moff and as a Rebel leader. He doesn't care what quirks they may have, only that they do their job and keep any useless quirk out of it... And if Imperial officers under his command don't do that he takes the chance to take them out and weaken the Empire.
* H. G. Wells, the protagonist pretty much does nothing to actually advance the plot; he's little more than an observer of the unfolding Martian invasion. Better still, he's just trying to stay alive long enough to reunite with his wife, whom he had left with relatives when the Martians first touched down.
* He even took it to the next level; people seeing Date Peepers they know may decide to start spying on the spies, and in turn may be noticed and followed — to the point where almost nobody doing the peeping actually knows who's having the date, just that
* Hilariously lampshaded in a fan fiction piece that notes how an underwater base (Terror from The Deep) that had to deal with Lobstermen frequently ordered higher-than-average amounts of butter. Go figure...
* he invented the personal jet that bears his name — and he never even had an opportunity to drop out of high school as he never went beyond the 8th grade. The Wright brothers themselves were simple bicycle mechanics who possessed what amounted to only a basic education for that era (which wasn't much).
* Happy Heroes: In Season 9 episode 32, Careless S. goes to a saloon in the Wild West and sees one of the cow patrons successfully catching a mug that is slid to him this way. Careless S. orders a glass of milk and tries to catch the cup as it slides... only to fail and end up ordering more glasses of milk, which he also fails to catch.

* Hand of Thrawn, and the galaxy's not sure if this is a trick or not. One group sends a small force against him as a test. The Triumvirate manages to figure out who they are and start the opening move of one of Thrawn's responses against these people, a response which had the last time totally decimated their taskforce. Convinced, the small force flees.
* Harry Potter mini-sermon on how ambition wasn't "Slytherin" or "Dark."
* Hares aren't considered part of the group of genera as other rabbits, though they're all still in the same family — hares don't burrow and aren't born blind or hairless. That means, technically, "jackrabbits" (another name for hares) is a misnomer, but that's just * Happened in volume 4 where Guyver III's megasmasher at least took out Guyots shield. A Zoalord's shield was shattered much much more easily in volume 13 during the Imakarum vs. Agito battle.
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child. Harry's youngest son Albus and Draco's son Scorpius get their hands on a Time Turner capable of traveling back years into the past rather than mere hours. They want to use it to save Cedric Diggory from dying at the hands of Voldemort. Their meddling in history results in two alternate timelines:
* Granted, those are a little old now. The new slogan is "Become yourself".
* Hercules way.", pointing a thumb in the opposite direction to where they're going.
* GURPS includes the concept of Security Clearance as a character advantage which can be bought with the points used in character creation, when applicable.
* Hard Light projections that can operate some distance from their robot bodies.
* Gordon Ramsay. He at one point describes a soup as tasting like gnat's piss, and also describes a slice of undercooked meat as being "like a bison's penis."
* Great Lakes Avengers mini-series, Living Lightning thinks 'GLA' stands for 'Gay-Lesbian Alliance.'
* Hellboy, who certainly looks the part but is (usually) the good guy.
* he killed Dumbledore (done at Dumbledore's request, but only Snape and Dumbledore knew this).
* Hellsister Trilogy, aware that he will most likely kill her, but determined to try and to take him with her.
* Got Volunteered: I was forced to do something thanks to the other characters.
* Happy Gilmore takes up golf initially for this purpose, with the intent of saving his grandma's house from the IRS.
* Hell Girl smash the watch that was her mother's gift to her, just before pulling the red string and sending Rina to Hell.
* GT 3 uses "Are You Gonna Go My Way?" and "Again" by Lenny Kravitz for its opening and ending themes, respectively.
* Harry Potter and has his first kiss with her, but it ends after Cho's friend Marietta Edgecombe betrays the DA to Umbridge.
* He did grow fond of his initially involuntary wives, who did their best to treat him well and keep him as happy as they could.
* Heart of Darkness. The cheerful Amigos can speak English, but it appears their primary language is actually Spanish.
* Gundam" mech, it's very blatantly pink, and it is called the "Tieren Taozi". "Taozi" is, for the uninformed, Chinese for "peach". Later on, all of the lead Gundams become capable of going into Trans-Am mode where they become sparkly, pink and, of course, three times faster.
* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla II: Mechagodzilla II has an artificial diamond armor that channels the energy weapons of kaiju into its strongest weapon, the Plasma Grenade, which hits with devastating force. Neither Godzilla nor Fire Rodan could harm the mecha with their breath weapons, and Fire Rodan was mortally wounded by a point-blank Plasma Grenade shot.
* Good-guy Elite Guard: Jazz, Sentinel Prime, and Blurr serving under Ultra Magnus in

* Grunts are often sent out to die for the sole purpose of making the enemy waste their ammunition.
* Haunted Heroine: A heroine haunted equally by her own past and the uncanny events around her.
* Head On: When Chris Shane arrives at the stadium skybox, one of the investors immediately assumes that since Chris is in a threep, Chris is one of the caterers and should get the investor a refill. (For bonus irony points, the whole reason for the skybox is to flatter Chris' dad into investing in a Hilketa team.)
* Green Lantern (Hal Jordan) looked like an entirely new character, with long flowing hair, a green hood and power glove.
* Green Aesop story "The King Who Wasted Paper". The king doesn't realize how wasteful he has been until there is only one tree left in the royal forest.
* Gold Through the Fire: The communist Soviet Union is portrayed (accurately) as persecuting Christians, though this goes into demonization territory as the KGB even threatens, kidnaps and tries to kill Peter in the US apparently just out of malice for him as a Russian Christian who fled.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows before she gets blown to pieces.
* Gotham and his rise to power as it does on Jim Gordon and Bruce Wayne, with conflicts usually shown from two perspectives - the GCPD's and Penguin's crime family. A writer for The Atlantic even argued that the series should be renamed The Penguin Show.
* Gravity Falls episode "Sock Opera" Mabel tickles Dipper to cheer him up. Later she uses tickling while fighting a villain who is "wearing" Dipper's body.
* Heroic Sacrifice: Killing yourself for a greater cause is the height of bravery.
* has no jurisdiction. Lo and behold, Batman comes a-knockin' on Lau's door.
* Happy Families Are All Alike when he meets Chachazero. Not that she didn't have plenty of that to begin with...
* Golden Boy he's an incorrigible pervert, either love him or think of him as a true hero. But then, he's also amazingly kind, noble, and will work himself to the bone helping anyone who needs it.
* Grey goo missiles called the "Nano Virus" are a high-level planetary siege weapon in
* have had spaceflight for 320,000 years. It's just that until recently the only Liir with the motivation to make use of the technology were their Suul'ka overlords. A couple centuries ago the Liir heard the psychic screams of the Suul'ka-Morrigi war and finally decided to rebel and establish colonies on other planets so that if one world's Eldest went Suul'ka the others could stop him.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers such as how they come to be (in the series, nation-tans start as children that appear out of the wilderness, and there is little other explanation). Many conversations and dramatic fanfics have been spawned from this.
* Halo/Brutes, going all the way up to Field Marshals and Chieftains, are often seen battling alongside their subordinates, which is kinda justified by the fact that both races promote their troops based largely on their personal kill-count and give them increasingly better equipment as they ascend the ranks. Human generals are more practical, however, and remain safely in bases or command warships instead.
* Halo franchise; the novels even have the UNSC use the code "blood arrow" to indicate that all friendly positions on a planet have been overrun:
* God-Emperor scenarios among all of these factions, unlike the apocalyptic mass warfare of the regular miniatures game.
* Hannah Montana: Rico was a side character, till he joined high school at the same time as the core cast.
* Heart Catch Pretty Cure are like this, as the attacks end up purifying the Heart Flowers of an affected human, freeing them from their problems. Erika Kurumi/Cure Marine has the dubious honor of being hit with it twice, the second time showing that it does bring about a calming effect on them and when a Giant Snackie is hit with one, he just turns his suit white, but he still works for the bad guys.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army sure knows how to make titanic fire-filled clockwork soldiers look sinister. Er... even more sinister.

* Heroic RRoD the match, not before it). Ikki actually reports her cheating before the match but persuades them to let the match continue as he wanted to prove a point. Ayase ultimately loses because her guilt dulled her reflexes and skills.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, but that's actually a perfectly satisfactory answer here.
* Graham Williams's highly acclaimed tenure and was given the job of toning down the horror element and playing up the humour and whimsy. In additon, his era oversaw a whole slew of behind-the-scenes troubles, none of which were his fault. While his era is regarded as divisive at best, it's generally agreed that he did the best he could under very trying circumstances.
* Hilarious in Hindsight now, considering the price of gas is now anywhere between $3.50 and $4.00.
* HERZ: Shinji. He tries to be a good person and making the right thing, and the fate of humankind rests on his shoulders.
* Hilarious in Hindsight: Something from a work becomes funnier or more relevant because of current events.
* Hagrid's Magical Creatures Motorbike Adventure, one of the duplicates of the motorbike explodes when the Cornish pixies activate the "dragon's fire" speed on it.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy, there's a TV, a computer, a toaster, a radio, a chainsaw and many other devices that Polterguy can interact with to scare the Sardinis.
* Heldanic Knights. Finally, two trade powers of the setting will jump each other throats in a secret war for profits.
* hajj. The setting has regular interstellar travel, but places are strictly limited and considerably smaller than the waiting list; there's a lottery to allocate places, but it's implied that the results are not entirely impartial.
* GURPS major organ failure a "heart attack"). It's only possible to survive if someone resuscitates you within a few minutes of the attack.
* Grow start with a man breaking his alarm clock so he can keep sleeping, you need to wake him up.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows. (In the film, it's Hedwig coming to the rescue which gives him away.)
* held captive and asleep" of the planet, obliterating all life, including the descendants of the Titans' own creations.
* Gravity Falls episode "Roadside Attraction", Stan gives Dipper advice on how to talk to girls, claiming to be an expert on the subject. At the end of the episode, Stan's forced to admit that he's anything but. The end-credits cryptogram states that Stan's best relationship was with an animatronic.
* Goodfellas) so he won't have to split the loot with them or risk them constantly blabbing about it.
* Hannibal by Thomas Harris: Doctor Lecter knows his knives. He engages a knife-dealer at a fair, where they discuss blades before he settles for a serrated Spydecro, used for gutting a deer.
* Happy Tree Friends and actually gave him the toughest fight in the entire series.
* Happy Gilmore, there is a scene where Happy meets the cruel orderly, and, after finding out what he's been doing to the residents (his grandma in particular) beats him up and tosses him out a window where he gets attacked by the other residents of the nursing home. This is more satisfying, as in the released version, he gets away with all he does.
* having seen everyone he loved dying horribly. His father committed suicide, his first friend died saving him, hiss second friend committed suicide by jumping into the line of his Chidori
* Gothic Earth product line, is an Alternate Universe version of our own planet in which supernatural horrors lurk beneath the façade of Victorian-era society. Also, some characters from classic fiction in our world are real there.
* Healing Factor they display initially make it look like shooting them is futile, but the ability to regenerate is powered by their Philosopher's Stones, which have a finite amount of energy. The result is that even if bullets don't look like they do anything, they still use up some of the Philosopher's Stone's power, it's just that other forms of attack obviously work better.

* Gollum Made Me Do It: The evil personality bullies the good personality into compliance.
* Hamilton Eliza breaks down and cries into her son Philip's chest after he dies in Stay Alive (Reprise).
* Groo the Wanderer loves cheese dip. So, when he acquired a magical wish, his choice was a mountain of the stuff... unfortunately for everybody within several hundred feet.
* Hell. Revelation refers to it as the Second Death, but that's because of its finality and totality, not because those cast into the Lake of Fire are annihilated. Far from it. The inhabitants are immortal and not consumed by the flames, but quite capable of being tortured by them.
* Hey Arnold!. They don't get in trouble, but they do evacuate the stadium extremely quickly, on the off-chance one of the teachers or school personnel may be attending the game, or watching it.
* Grim Fandango. Worst case is the tube-switcher repairman, whose name didn't make it past the original puzzle design document (it's Juan Brennis).
* HD video board currently at Charlotte Motor Speedway broke the Dallas Cowboys' screen's record when it was completed in 2011.
* Hellsister Trilogy, Superman, Supergirl and a third Kryptonian crash into Darkseid's stronghold and bump straight into Kryptonite Man. After rescuing them from the trap they had been lured into, Lightray considers the trio too cocky, but he'd probably also get cocky after shrugging off the attacks of thousands of parademons.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, but at least there, the girls look more their age (Haruhi-chan spinoff notwithstanding). As for the school itself, most of the action takes place in the club room where the titular character hosts her SOS Brigade, though there is focus on other parts of the school.
* has an important argument with Archer, who uses his future Shirou credentials to make her reconsider her own motivations, a process which took past Shirou a route and many arguments to complete. She does not spend enough time with Shirou for the remainder of the route for them to hit it off.
* Grand Theft Auto III, you'd be the most notorious criminal ever to set foot in the country, but that doesn't seem to hold much sway with the Red Jacks street gang, who want you to join them in drive-bys and street brawls.
* Happy Gilmore, Happy is forced to putt for a victory with a collapsed TV Tower fallen on the green. Refusing to putt around it to take the tie and play for the tiebreaker, Happy instead plays it through the tower like it's a putt-putt course, and sinks the winning putt to win the Tournament, and more importantly, to beat Shooter McGavin and win his grandmother's house back.
* Haven have sex with other women, but it's obviously not very enjoyable. Jordan McKee inflicts agonizing pain on anybody who touches her bare skin, so only Nathan can touch her (Audrey can too, but both girls are straight).
* has an instance of this when Harry gets annoyed with the other Gryffindors hounding him when "he'd made it perfectly clear that he didn't feel like associating or being bothered. Now they'd decided to ignore him, as 'punishment'. That didn't bother Harry in the least. He preferred it so."
* Gunnerkrigg Court. The Court has "decon rooms" but they don't perform traditional decontamination. Instead, they remove magic from any plants brought from Gillitie Wood, so they're safe to keep at the Court. Annie and Kat sneak into one of these rooms, but they don't find out its real purpose until many chapters later.
* Grey's Anatomy, Preston Burke's last regular appearance was when he left Cristina at the altar. He shows up for one episode many seasons later to offer Cristina his cutting edge medical lab in Europe in order to move with his wife and their children back to her native Italy.
* Hiccup kills Grimmel in a similar manner to how he tried to kill Krogan during their first encounter (i.e. untying his prosthetic leg)
* High School Ninja Girl, Otonashi-san wears, along with her sailor fuku, a ninja mask, headband, leg wrappings, and ninja armor. An early chapter has a uniform inspection where she justifies the first three (she has a cold, helps her study, fractured her legs).

* Haruhi-chan the dish. Achakura acually does this with every other food Nagato gives her.
* Harry Dresden trusted friends. This is suggested to have a lot to do with the brutal, but effective, methods of emotional control his first master, Justin Du Morne, taught him, which he notes when seeing his former fellow apprentice (and first love) Elaine get herself under control.
* Golden Guitar, who used a gizmo-filled electric guitar to fight crime.
* Granblue Fantasy, Arulumaya's 5★ uncap reveals that her dreams allow her to see her future visions more coherently, at the expense of draining her consciousness the longer she lingers in them. Of the two times we see of them, once when she was little and her dream vision allowed her to avoid a Doomed Hometown scenario and her most recent one which foretold what would be happening in the What Makes The Sky Blue event.
* He and Jerry Pournelle put their friend Frank Gasperik into several novels under various names. He's the big biker dude in
* Gravity Falls: In "The Inconveniencing", Grunkle Stan loses the TV remote and refuses to get up and change the channel, even when a cheesy old romantic period piece movie comes on TV. Later he is so transfixed by the movie that he misses Dipper's phone-call for help from a haunted convenience store.
* Hatoful Boyfriend by elaborate alternative names, including himself. They correspond to the bizarre fantasy-JRPG universe he hallucinates due to a chemical imbalance, and tend to be loaded with symbolic meanings and references that, in retrospect, are incredibly relevant to their storylines.
* Go Animate (read: putting them through several painful punishments). However, the parent often won't let them get away with this and they'll punish them afterwards.
* GrimGrimoire for fighting against demons due to them being composed of pure spirit (i.e., with no flesh that can be corrupted.)
* He managed to avoid it in Kalos, though in a sense he was still involved; Serena had to crossdress as
* Grim Fandango are one of the few identifying physical features one can carry over from the Land of the Living. This is used in a puzzle early on in the game, where Manny has to make a mold so that a local resistance group can make a replica of his teeth and access the Department of Death's computer network.
* Golf is a proverbial sport for rich people, politicians, and those with time on their hands. The Golf club
* Harry Potter very fierce. Fang is said to be a coward, but also fairly intelligent for the trope, at least going to get backup when he runs away.
* Harvest December: Masaki is placed in the awkward position of engaging in a conversation with Mashiro while the latter is stark naked.
* Hero System editions, you can't teleport into something solid. A teleporter's "natural safety system" will automatically shift him to the nearest clear area big enough for him. However, this is a severe shock to that teleporter's system, and you don't get any defenses against that damage, so better hope the GM rolls low.
* Hercules: The Animated Series Icarus warms up to the military lifestyle.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, Fujiyoshi and Miyabi encounter one, but don't realize what it is until a few seconds later.
* Grownboy gives Caprice a long list of chores for caring for his animals in "Disassister".
* Górsky & Butch pair of policemen suffer this when in the desert, seeing each other as a bottle of mineral water and cola respectively.
* Gottlieb shows a shower of fireballs dropping out of the sky and onto the game's virtual reality landscape.
* Goblins to laugh along. Minmax however is not amused and promptly throws Dellyn through a window.
* Happy Heroes, the Supermen and Doctor H. are watching a TV show and about to find out who the perpetrator of a crime is when Mr. Lightbulb interrupts it with a commercial for the carnival and its fruit juice rain (the episode mostly takes place at this carnival). The ad runs for long enough that we never see who the villain in the show is, which doesn't sit well with Sweet S. at all.

* Harry sneezes while hiding in a hollow tree from Dudley and his gang.
* Gundam, you frequently have a battle between a Gundam and a Mobile Armor. The vast majority of the winners will always be a Gundam and yet, there's still always someone in the franchise who can think they can win with a Mobile Armor.
* Good Lawyers, Good Clients: If a client is good, then the lawyer must be as well, and vice-versa.
* Guilded Age: Syr'Nj has plant-based names for body parts. Toes = Taproots, Hair = Foliage, etc.
* Gunnerkrigg Court cliffhanger in Chapter 7, Chapter 8 begins with the TicTocs swooping in to break Annie's fall. Interestingly this is the first (and to this date, only) time we see the TicTocs in a group, actually doing anything.
* go farther than the more common version of the trope, since the man who talks to her is a caricatured pimp rather than a mere would-be client.
* Hilariously averted near the strips end, where the Dark Warriors are holding the four elemental orbs, threatening Sarda, who then points out that they have no idea how to use them. Bikke beans him with the Orb of Water, knocking him down, making Bikke the only one to really harm Sarda in the entire comic. Sarda responds with
* Godzilla vs. Kong emerges upon Hong Kong and battles Kong and Godzilla in the broad daylight of a grim, grey morning. Specifically, Mechagodzilla emerges just after dawn has broken.
* Gravity Falls Rule 63 suspects she's a crazy mastermind who murders anyone who gets in her way.
* Gypsy Moth uses red bricks the most, usually devastating the racers with Rockets, but will often go with anything she can get.
* has sex with Frank and commits suicide halfway through. Compared to Jenny, O'Brien is perfectly sane.
* Higher Learning: Shinji was afraid of confessing Asuka because he is a shy kid who did not think she liked him. Asuka was frightened of confessing Shinji because she is afraid of opening up to other people, and he had ignored all hints she dropped. It took a bottle of sake for them reaching each other out and blurting their feelings out.
* Hellfire could look pretty impressive, all of the supernatural crowd knows that to be a sign of poor form.
* Guilty Gear series, with resident badass Sol Badguy dressed in red, black, and gold.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army uses this in the opposite manner from the comic books—to make the monsters that HB fights more sympathetic and to make HB resign from the BPRD.
* Graceful in Their Element: Nimble in their field, awkward outside it.
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret, although she tries, Shiina never really had a chance to get with Yuuto, since the first episode makes it pretty clear he ends with Haruka.
* Gravity Falls: In the season 1 finale "Gideon Rises", Soos almost reveals Dipper's crush on Wendy while Dipper is talking to Wendy.
* Harry Welsh also says this to Dick Winters after inquiring about how his (rather minor) ricochet injury is healing.
* Grantchester when a character is convicted of murder and sentenced to hang. The angle shifts momentarily to one above and behind the judge to call attention to the action.
* Goose Girl at the Well) told her father she loved him as much "as meat loves salt". He wasn't particularly pleased by this answer. In some versions of the tale his kingdom is cursed to go without salt (or his exiled daughter cannily serves him a dish of meat without any salt) and he rapidly comes to realize just how critical the substance really is.
* Gulliver's Travels to the Yahoos who only like them because they're shiny. Realizing how superficial and materialistic humans also are for valuing something that is so intrinsically worthless, he eventually throws them into the ocean and decides he wants to be a Houyhnhnm instead.

* her brother. Yet when you watch her in interviews, she's the happiest she has ever been.
* Hero System features the Psychological Limitation "Over-The-Top Villainy". Villains with this Psych Limit must follow this trope (in addition to several of the other "Overblown Villain" Tropes.
* Hello Kitty: Popsicle has released one shaped like Hello Kitty's head.
* Hayate is this down to the core. Her magical power is by far the highest in the entire TSAB (she's the other known SS-rank mage) and her attacks are equal to
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating: Hani and Aisling have been friends since kindergarten. This is part of why Hani is reluctant to realize Aisling's being a very bad friend to her, and end the friendship.
* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de - Hachiyou Shou -> "HaruHachi" (or, going from the Japanese version, "Haruka8")
* Godzilla series' 30 films (and counting) there are a few distinct story arcs.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 establishes that Drax never wears a jet pack, nor shirt, because, according to him, he “has sensitive nipples.” So when Peter has to hastily put a jet pack on him to get him off the planet about to explode:
* Grace has a mental breakdown when she realizes everything her psychopathic brother Damien said about humans
* Green Wing ends with Caroline being carried up into the sky by a mass of helium filled balloons at her wedding reception. The DVD boxset extras shows an alternate ending where Guy and Mac grab onto Caroline's ankles and are taken up with her. It ends with Mac saying, "Caroline, there's something I've been meaning to tell you."
* Halt and Catch Fire, Gordon has one of his tantrums and tries to dramatically slam the door to his office. The hydraulic door closer slows the door so that it shuts with a disappointing "pfffft".
* Hanaukyō Maid Team and invents all sorts of inventions for the main character, which unfortunately have a tendency to explode or malfunction.
* Happened to one of the New England Patriots Cheerleaders at a party where other members drew, among other things, Swastikas. Patriots owner Robert Kraft is Jewish. You can guess the rest.
* Heel before the bell. Technically illegal, but it happens so often that it's usually completely ignored by the referees nowadays, who just signal for the opening bell after the first guy gets in the first shot. Another version, taken a little more seriously, is when someone is attacked backstage before the match.
* Grey's Anatomy. Rather understandable really, seeing as how there's a shooter in the hospital.
* God of War (PS4), but Atreus eventually can't take it and kills Modi.
* Goofy heads taller. This also applies to real life: at the Disney Theme Parks, a person has to be at least 6' to portray him.
* Godzilla's arrival at Berezniki is marked by his Atomic Breath exploding through the underground rock to destroy and open up the tunnels that
* Grand Theft Auto V in his own right, so he's certainly not just pretending to be a tough guy.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy: Some of the fright 'ems invoke this, for the summoned monsters and for the Sardinis.
* Harry Potter films) have confessed to switching roles on set without telling the crew, which fits their characters perfectly, as Fred and George Weasley would routinely do this to the irritation of their mother Molly.
* Higher Learning by Arael, Shinji and she talked about her feelings and their relationship while they lay on bed and Shinji tried to reassure her.
* Grand Theft Auto is an 86 years old woman who is the leader of the Haitian gang, and uses voodoo magic to put Tommy in a trance in order to work for her. For a series with so few old powerful people, Auntie Poulet really stands out.
* Harry is disapointed to find out that his father and godfather relentlessly bullied his least favorite teacher, Severus Snape.
* GLOW (2017), being a fictionalized version of the real G.L.O.W., naturally illustrates the contrast between the wrestlers' lives and personalities and the characters they play.

* Heel–Face Revolving Door: "It's all about being on the team currently closest to my personal goal."
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Santa goes missing one year, so the nations help by delivering presents themselves. Japan fills his gifts with games and boxes nested inside larger boxes.
* Hikaru no Go, but the strongest example would be Sai, who has been a ghost for centuries, striving to play the greatest game of Go ever ("the Hand of God", as he puts it).
* Hello, Dolly!. Cornelius Hackl and Barnaby Tucker sputtering at Irene Molloy the hatmaker: "Uh, see, we're two ladies about town lookin' for hats to Molloy—" "We're hats, you see, and wondered if we could buy a lady or two to Molloy with for..."
* Gunshow. "Feminist Robot" and "Ghost Blowjob" are some of the most famous, to the point where the latter certainly overshadows the original strip entirely.
* he wanted to marry Mutsumi at first, but she made him promise Naru that he'd marry her — because Mutsumi knew Naru was also in love with him, and she wanted them both to be happy. Since the entire manga plays on Urashima Taro, it was ultimately Mutsumi, the fated girl, who said "Screw Destiny
* Goosebumps: The kids in the "Night of the Living Dummy" series take up ventriloquism as a hobby. Then they find out the dummy is talking on its own…
* Harriet the Spy: Harriet's mother threatens to do this when Harriet keeps using the word "damned."
* Grizzly Rage: Four college students drive into the woods and quickly get targeted by a vengeful mutated bear.
* Heck, that whole story mainly consists of a long series of "Beren gets himself in a mess and Lúthien gets him out of it."
* Guest House Paradiso when the owners of the guest house unknowingly feed their guests contaminated fish. Once one guest starts projectile vomiting into the hall, all the other guests start too, causing an enormous flood of vivid green puke.
* Gray State, how his beliefs drove him over the edge, and how the film's backers decided that Crowley and his family had been taken out by the government because his story got too close to their actual plans.
* Harmony Theory: After Charisma sees what Rainbow can do, she seems impressed and starts calling her "Hot Stuff". She is also pleased by Blaze's resistance to torture.
* Hero Antagonist "Control". He is also the Greater Scope Villain for the overall series when it's revealed that he funded the Insurrection that the Freelancers fought against.
* Glitch Techs Miko's older sister Nica is really paranoid about public appearances because every teenager is constantly looking for embarrassing moments from their peers to post on social media.
* Grant Morrison's Batman, Bruce is given false memories of a life in which his parents weren't killed. Jim Gordon and Dick Grayson are dead. Bruce is a dilettante doctor, coddled by Martha and a disappointment to Thomas, especially when he falls for a patient who turns out to be Selina Kyle, distracting him while she robs the surgery.
* Heaven Sent", the Doctor smashes the bedroom window with a table and leaps out, plunging down into the ocean. Of course, he doesn't know what his escape plan is until after he has leapt out the window.
* Gods Need Prayer Badly provides a rare monotheistic example in the Great God Om, but believing Om is the only god doesn't actually make it so, and Om has to deal with the pantheon somehow. There's also a Bast, a cat headed god, but the only difference with the Egyptian cat goddess appears to be the gender.
* Happy Heroes: All of the characters are aliens in some form, and yet they all speak English (or, taking into account the show's country of origin, Chinese) perfectly fine.
* Head made every effort to distance themselves from their cultivated image. In a parody of boxing movies, preteen heartthrob Davy Jones got his face beaten to a bloody pulp by sparring partner Sonny Liston (think the '60s era Mike Tyson). Intercut into this we see Jones joshing with Liston beforehand, saying "You won't hurt the face, will you? Million-dollar face, this is!"

* He caught flak from his fans when he stated on Twitter that he felt underwhelmed by
* Grand Theft Auto V completely threw the "One weapon per slot" restriction out the window. So assuming a player has all the DLC, they can be walking around with up to: 11 melee weapons, 11 handguns, 5 shotguns, 6 SMGs, 2 LMGs, 5 assault rifles, 3 sniper rifles, 2 rocket launchers, a grenade launcher, a minigun, a musket, 25 frag grenades, 25 tear gas grenades, 25 sticky bombs, 25 Molotov cocktails, 5 proximity mines, a jerry can, and 9,999 rounds of ammunition for most weapon types. And this list does not even include some of the limited-edition special weapons, such as the railgun.
* Going Postal. "Moist made a sound like an owl. Since he was no ornithologist, he did this by saying 'woo-woo.'"
* Harry Potter told about the ending ahead of time so that he would know the true motivations behind his character. It has been suggested that Rickman only took the role because of this: rather ironically, he had an aversion to always being cast as the villain, so he needed to know that Snape had major sympathetic qualities for him to accept.
* He'll also viciously attack ANYONE who insults his fallen opponents, whom he'll consider comrades. Apparently, challenging the strong is Gao's way of making friends.
* Greatest Generation back to back. At least they lived to be a part of the post-WWII economic expansion from the late 40s to the early 70s.
* Godzilla shows Godzilla closer to his original portrayal as a malevolent monster out to destroy humanity.
* GoldenEye's character distracts both a fat admiral and James Bond with her sex appeal whilst actively trying (and succeeding, in the former) to break their ribs with her thighs.
* Harrow: Quinn, the mysterious body pulled up from the river in the first episode and not identified for several episodes thereafter. He only ever appears in photos and in flashbacks.
* has 120 in every stat. And then there are Pokémon like Glalie and Phione, which have 80 all around.
* Halo: Reach; you can kind of see the outlines of their heads through their visors if you squint hard enough.
* Happens to SpongeBob in "Porus Pockets" when after gaining a large fortune, SpongeBob begins to act like a stuck-up snob to Patrick and would rather hang out with a large crowd of moochers he continuously throws his money at. He goes back to normal at the end after he is left broke and his new "friends" abandon him.
* Hawkeye and Charles are amazing surgeons, but both have no management skills whatsoever. When Colonel Potter left each of them in charge, Charles turned the 4077th into his personal fiefdom (but did take care of his duties) and Hawkeye quickly degenerated to
* Happens to one of Madrox's dupes after he refuses to be bought out by Singularity, courtesy of Damian Tryp Sr.
* Heroes suspects his wife is cheating on him with their blond, hunky water delivery man (not without reason, she's cheated on him before). So Matt uses his mental powers to "convince" the man to take a different route.
* Golden Age". Within a handful of pages Di ends up riding a winged flying pig.
* Henrietta and Louisa Musgrove are crazy about Captain Wentworth who flirts with both. Louisa then manoeuvres Henrietta away to her original suitor and seems to have Wentworth for herself, but he ends up with neither Musgrove girl.
* Harvest Moon series uses small towns, with every part and building of the town being accessible. Usually, this means an overworld with about 20 enter-able buildings, with some being houses, some being shops, and some of them being combinations. The overworld also generally has one or two medium-sized "wilderness" areas to roam in.

* Herman's Head say the versions of Penny and Aggie featured there were bisexual and lesbian, respectively.
* Godzilla vs. Hedorah has a very odd and out of place scene where a man drunkenly hallucinates humans with fish heads.
* Highlander: Endgame shows that the events of the film take place around Christmastime.
* Hey Arnold! Cut to Arnold and Gerald (who would usually be on the other end of town). Arnold would look up, turn to Gerald and ask, "Did you hear something?" To which Gerald would reply, "Nope."
* Grow games works in strange ways, because the games use toon physics and the creator puts emphasis on creativity. In general, the way a creature works depends of the game, and pretty much every creature can transform in strange ways by interacting with an object or being in a specific place, but there are examples that are consistently weird.
* Head of State has some pretty silly attack ads against protagonist Mays Gilliam, claiming that if he gets elected the White House will explode, or accusing him of supporting cancer because he didn't appear at a cancer rally. Mays responds by making ads consisting of his opponent getting massive praise... by KKK members and Osama bin Laden.
* Granted, tattoo needles don't go in nearly as deep as medical needles, though the same can't always be said for piercings.
* Haegemonia: Legions of Iron: The only way to get a planet to surrender is to rain fire down on it until it either surrenders or the inhabitants are wiped out.
* Heracles was a roving warlord whose strength and charisma was such that he ended up revered as a god by his own men, and was later killed by his wife. His earlier sack of Troy is narrated differently by a bitter Priam, who attributes it to "
* Hilary Tamar books is an Oxford professor, who is assisted in solving crimes by a quartet of barristers.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) following his failed attempt to claim the Elders' power in the prologue. After using his new magical powers to defeat Randor in their rematch, he pulls the hood back and reveals his new identity as Skeletor.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (2000), when a police car is smashed by a wrecking ball through a concrete barrier while chasing the protagonists. Because they were the protagonists, they make sure to show that no cops were killed.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix's "Battle of the Department of Mystery" which features about a dozen or so per side.
* Hellsing. Tubalcain Alhambra is introduced as an important character, with an eccentric personality and even having a nickname...and is killed a few minutes later.
* Hans Zimmer will be writing the score, and Chris Corbould will be on special effects.
* Great House. Ultimately Downplayed, as it's implied that they use various forms of magic (particularly necromancy) to reach those ages, and very few of the oldest ones are mentally stable anymore as a result.
* Helluva Boss (a Netflix film that intended to be a commentary criticizing the sexualization of children, but received tons of backlash for its execution coming off as very hypocritical).
* God of War series, if Kratos were allowed in normal gameplay to pull off acrobatics and feats of strength a fraction as impressive as the ones he does in cutscenes, a huge chunk of the games obstacles would suddenly cease to be an issue.
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age, where you help a penguin cross a stream and get started in a trading sequence that takes you through every little island on the map, eventually unlocking an area with a bonus boss.
* Good Eats. The episode ends by revealing that Mrs. Lovett ended up marrying Alton's ancestor, and some time after they arrived in America he disappeared under mysterious circumstances...
* Goof Troop, Goofy is generally this towards Max. Max is at times characterized as generally ashamed of Goofy in general, so it's not just one-way.

* Happens to the slap-happy spider in "Meatless Flyday" when, dressed as a wedding cake groom he turns to kiss the fly (who is dressed as the bride) and he ends up kissing a stick of dynamite.
* has a small child abducted by a large bird and brought to its nest... only to have the child eat them all in the credits.
* Happily Failed Suicide: You failed to commit suicide, and that's a good thing.
* Goddess Creation System. Xiaxi first seduces one brother, then another and then moves on from both to the crown prince while still stringing the first two along when they finally find her again, but her reasons are entirely practical in nature and she doesn't love any of them.
* Hellstrom's Hive can release pheromones that affect the emotions of other members of the Hive, as well as human intruders.
* Gospel drummers and extreme metal drummers are often friendly and will look to each other for guidance; gospel drummers often look to extreme metal drummers for guidance on fluidity, stamina, and consistency at high tempos, while extreme metal drummers often look to gospel drummers for guidance on groove and syncopation, fill ideas and accents, and stick control.
* Happy Monster Band. The band's music encompasses all the themes of a normal preschool show.
* Herland, by Charlotte Perkins Gilman: Herland was founded in the wake of a volcanic eruption which killed most of the men, with the rest wiped out in civil war with the women.
* Godzilla vs. King Ghidorah involves a Time Travel plot to remove the original dinosaur that became Godzilla from an island occupied by Japanese Troops in WWII. When one character asks why they couldn't bring one of the Japanese WWII veterans they knew with them, since they'd know where the dinosaur would be, the Futurians who had the time machine explain that if the same person was in the same point in time twice, it would cause a paradox that would cause one or both of the person in question to be wiped from existence.
* He doesn't seem very awesome at first, but as the series goes on, he proves his cunning, bravery and loyalty more than once.
* GURPS, says that the Warehouse contains thousands of records of MIB sightings that the Secret Masters didn't authorise and don't understand.
* Golden Age used silver bullets to slay the vampire/werewolf hybrids the Monk and Dala as they slumbered in their coffins.
* Good Eats episode "Great Balls of Meat" begins with a diner trying to escape a giant meatball, only to get trapped in a blind alley and get run over by it.
* Hc Svnt Dracones is a device called a "Neuroplex", an ocular implant that flashes pages and images related to the subject while the user is asleep or otherwise not conscious of what they're reading. It gives you one point about every two weeks, up to three in a skill, though achieving four points requires a specific Quest anyways.
* Graduation: If the series centers on kids in school, expect this to be the final episode, especially if it's a high school series. If it's a live-action show with aging actors who would resemble graduating high school students by the end of production, then it's all the better. A series centered on college students rarely have this as an ending (as most college shows, whether or not they're spin-offs, don't last) but the graduation ending on college shows does exist.
* Hell Girl does this a lot. Like the first episode of Season 1, the first episode of Season 2 is about a cute school girl getting bullied. Unlike the Season 1 episode, however, the girl or none of her classmates know who's doing the bullying. Her school locker is filled with caterpillars. Her uniform and text books are filled with writing, calling her horrible names. And she is stalked and harassed whenever she is alone in school. A school nurse notices and feels sorry for her. She befriends her and things seem to be looking up. Then a female classmate shows the girl the nurse's office, which is filled with the stuff that was used to bully her. The nurse then reveals herself to be a * Haibane Renmei. For the record, the series was directed by Tomokazu Tokoro, yet to this day many people still falsely list it as being one of Konaka's works.

* Good Eats, Alton makes Italian sausage. After filling up a long tube of edible collagen, he pinches and twists the collagen to make the links. The very last link is a bit smaller than the others, but it's usually the one that gets cooked and eaten first.
* Godzilla has shown a surprising amount of intelligence in several films.
* Highlander, Duncan and Fitz have an argument and drew their swords. A guard yells at them, "There's no dueling in the city! Can't you read the sign?" In the next flashback segment, it's revealed that at the time, neither man could read.
* Heavy Gear. If the fuel tank of a flamer (flamethrower) is hit it will have (undescribed) catastrophic results.
* Hannah and Her Sisters movie, enjoys himself, and decides life is worth it for such things.
* Goosebumps. If a book has the main characters transforming into something and the story is about them trying to turn back into kids, odds are quite high that the last sentence will have that happen.
* High-Heel–Face Turn, in earlier appearances of season one especially.
* God of War explaining how Kratos became as powerful a warrior as he is. He was a captain in the Spartan army which was legendary for its brutal discipline and regimented tactics producing some of the most elite soldiers in history. He and his army were defeated by a barbarian army of warriors which easily overpowered the Spartan's training and discipline with individual battle prowess and savage ferocity to the point that Kratos' army was slaughtered to the last and Kratos himself only survived by selling his soul to Ares who made him the most powerful warrior on the planet.
* Henchgirl being reviewed as, "A...near-perfect example of...what...to do...when writing...a...book...Great" - BB Bowl, The AV Clob.
* God of War II, you start off with some of the magic attacks from the previous game but are soon relieved of them.
* Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec's paintings, which frequently depicted high-kicking chorus girls doing the can-can.
* Gundam Unicorn, Marida Cruz was shooting to kill. But she made sure that no reactors are hit. And when it hits...it took out the colony with it.
* Hero Union BBS, a young hero visits a thread to ask the retired heroes for some endgame advice after defeating her world's demon lord by herself. When she mentions that she's only nine years old, some of the thread's participants become shocked or impressed that a hero so young was able to accomplish such a feat.
* Goodfellas when Robert DeNiro's character systemically kills all of the participants in the Lufthansa Heist at JFK was an accurate representation of real life in which gangster James Burke did just that.
* Halo: Reach. The general consensus among fans is that the MAC firings seen were fired at a slower speed to reduce their collateral damage.
* Higurashi: When They Cry: A young boy discovers that the village he has just moved to suffers mysterious deaths and disappearances after every Watanagashi Festival. Watanagashi apparently was originally celebrated this way. Wata can mean "cotton" or "intestines".
* He does it again in the epilogue of the 2015 Secret Wars. Having been granted the power of the Beyonders, he works in conjunction with his
* Halloween III: Season of the Witch. Due to a negative audience reaction, this idea was scrapped.
* God of War. Poseidon apparently gussied his daughters up, presumably to make Spartans want to make out with them.
* Hercules does an interesting variant at the end of the scene where he figures out Hercules' weakness. The screen fills up with smoke as it fades to the next scene, and the last things we see are Hades' eyes.
* Head-On. With this, it would even appear that Calypso is not in total control of his Jackass Genie ways, as even he is depressed by the outcome of this wish. Most likely Karma in his case.
* Heroes is a pretty big offender. You can always tell the new character is a good guy if they look like a model. Sylar and Adan Monroe are the only exceptions.

* Haré+Guu, when there's a mosaic filter over them most of the time they're onscreen, censoring whatever they're supposed to be doing.
* Hajime no Ippo for a brief moment, putting them in an awfully precarious position given their current location and profession.
* Harry Potter Vernon Dursley might count as a rare villainous version.
* Hello Cheeky joke. Usually the statement would go along the lines of "How does he think of them?" or "He's working well tonight!"
* High and Tight features an early twenties boy who has never done anything with his life trying to join the army.
* Highlander shown in Europe and Canada were slightly longer than those shown in the US; the extra material is referred to as "Eurominutes."
* Hamtaro, Penelope's owner Kylie was voiced by an actual girl her age.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Canada instead of swearing, squeaks "Maple hockey!"
* He suddenly becomes incompetent at basically everything after owing Applejack a life debt in "Spike at Your Service",
* He also caused the extinction of the dinosaurs with his underpants in
* H. G. Wells didn't like the St. Paul's Cathedral in London very much...
* He made another one so hot it started crawling across the room as if it was alive, it also dissolved the carpeting and simply touching it would hurt. Gaston's coworkers decide to lock it in a closet only to realise that their floor's keys and De Mesmeaker's contracts were in it.
* Harry Potter series — she is the only other person (he knows) who understands how it feels to have been possessed by Voldemort.
* Good Bye, Lenin! for just a few months... during which the Berlin Wall fell.
* Harley Quinn. He also tends to reveal the motivations and backstories of his characters at a drop of a hat, even when it would make no sense in casual conversation.
* Greg: Ted displays his rouge tendencies by sneaking onto a college campus disguised as a professor to score the digits of the female students.
* He delivers the line "Booze. I must have booze," in a traumatized monotone during
* Hannibal, Hannibal Lecter breaks into Agent Krendler's house and his dog is initially hostile, but Hannibal actually makes the dog cower in the corner while he pokes around.
* Hilariously, besides the heroine and her rival, there's a 3rd character with the magic bra and panties — their principal, a giant burly
* God Bless America: Frank, who seems to believe that he's actually doing something worthwhile. Unlike Roxy, he seems rather naïve — not unlike the mentally-handicapped television kid he keeps identifying with and pitying for all the wrong reasons.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! after she first transforms into Cure Sunshine and later, when she first debuts in female clothing during the fashion club's trip in episode 25.
* Hellevator: An elevator that leads to the afterlife, usually to Hell.
* Gossipy Hens: A group of people, usually women, who do nothing but gossip.
* Heavy Object Frolaytai needs information from an enemy officer and has no time to play games with him. When he refuses to answer, she shoots him dead and then has her staff revive him. Every time he fails to answer her question she repeats this, each time requiring more equipment to keep him alive.
* Hellboy, a woman tells a story to residents at a Japanese tavern that amounts to nothing more than a man suffering a horrible misfortune, which the other residents treat as a hysterically witty joke. This is the first tip-off that they're all evil spirits.
* gradually became more like solid shapes). Osaka sometimes wonders if they're detachable, or even alive...
* Grendel series starts in the present day, becomes this trope for the Christine Spar story arc and its immediate aftermath, and then leaps ahead several generations for the Grendel-spirit's later incarnations.

* he himself almost died, and was knocked into a coma, by this same method.
* Grrl Power by travelling back from a deployment through some sort of dimensional portal. She thinks she has been gone for a few days at most; her return point is 57 days into the future. This isn’t actually a plot point, as such, and isn’t a time travel story but it DOES cause a wrangle over what pay she is due.
* Hence the phrase "Prison Gay", with the con asserting, despite the evidence, "I'm not gay"
* Grange Hill. He strangely stopped being a complete bastard the day he had to send it to the cleaners.
* Haruhi Suzumiya is quite hard, especially if you haven't read the light novels.
* Hermes' wife, Labarbara Conrad, is noticeably taller than nearly every other human we meet. She's also slim and a dark beauty.
* Green Day opens with "Know Your Enemy," in which the protagonist rails against the establishment and encourages others to do likewise; Act 2 ends with Gloria realizing that her life's been ruined:
* Hearts and Hooves Day) opts to break down the doors rather than opening them.
* Han's dramatic comeback is it's a deliberate homage to the cavalry charge in a western with the Falcon coming out of the sun.
* Graze Ein, being the largest Graze variant, naturally has the biggest shoulders of all the Grazes. The "doom" part is also literal, they're as big as they are so they can store a pair of gun-wielding sub-arms.
* Gotham, Gerald Crane pushes an acrophobic victim off a building tethered with a very long rope, and a hotel maid he falls past is too busy to notice.
* Green Lantern Ring - if the user doesn't have a strong will, getting the thing to so much as light up is a herculean task. If the user has a decent will, they'll be able to create constructs, but they won't hold up well in battle when the user is frightened or rattled. If the user doesn't have much of an imagination, it forms very boring and mundane things.
* GrailQuest Excalibur Junior is arachnophobic. This is problematic when fighting giant spiders, as the sword is either shaking in fear or plain refusing to be pulled from its scabbard.
* Gundam contains multiple large ships although large ships tend to be rare
* Gregor and the Curse of the Warmbloods; Gregor acknowledges mentally that there was no other way to ensure the prophecy would happen the way it needed to.
* Hellblazer issue #141, "Shoot", was based on a school shooting. It was about to be printed when the Columbine massacre happened... The issue was eventually published as a special in 2010.
* Hilda: There are multiple kinds of giants in this shows' universe. In episode 1 and 2 we meet the midnight giant Jorgen and his girlfriend, both of which are tall as mountains (in fact, the female giant actually resembled a mountain while she was sleeping). They are the last two of their kind on Earth. Later, in episode 11, we meet the forest giant, which is hardly taller than a large tree.
* Goblins to defend him. Unfortunately, the (many) situations in which he gets scared tend to go downhill fast if you start brandishing spiky things (and when it goes south he gets even more scared, and the arm gets spikier, and...).
* GoGo Sentai Boukenger knocks the user flat (and that's for morphed Rangers; it could be worse for someone untransformed). A special armored vest had to be developed to disperse the energies.
* GURPS third edition the combat penalty for fighting whilst on fire was less than that for fighting in total darkness. Allowing characters with sufficient HP to improve their combat ability in the dark by self-immolating to use themselves as a light source.
* Harry is a particular example after his powers start to kick in around chapter 60 of the first book, making him
* Halloween Episode, which ended with Jessie (the chaser) getting chased by the kids into one door, going “Wait a minute!” and resuming chasing them.
* Heathers to make things all the more ridiculous. Many people, however, interpreted the film as a genuine deconstruction of high school cliques and teen movie clichés, and it was soon branded a top-tier high school movie.

* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Japan has black hair and is very smart. Italy, a brunet, is a genius in art.
* Harry the Bunny has a tendency sometimes to say "Mm-hmm" or "Mm-hmm, mm-hmm."
* GURPS from up to a mile and a half away. A group of soldiers carrying these have almost begun the approach towards beginning to have enuff dakka.
* He shows emotion for the second, and final time, in his last ever scene.
* Harry claims to have dreamt about being naked in front of his class to hide the fact that his actual dream was about a boy Isis killed while he was her host.
* Hawaii Five-0, growling at Juliet, giving her a taste of her own medicine.
* Haganai. Even Yozora is shocked at the random twist in that game before recollecting herself to call it a good game, while Sena angrily snaps the disc in half.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), Queen Marlena was once an astronaut from Earth who crash-landed on Eternia. When her ship was repaired, she decided to stay, because she and King Randor had fallen in love. She married him and became his Queen. In the episode "Visitors From Earth", astronauts from Earth crash-land on Eternia. When their ship was repaired, they offered to take Marlena back with them, but she said her place was with her beloved family.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, like in the books. Alternatively, he could be killed offscreen in some other way. It should be noted that Cornelius Fudge wanted anybody who claimed Voldemort was back eliminated, thus making Barty's death even more possible. That said, his final fate is never revealed in the films.
* good side. The good version of Calvin does indeed do all the chores cheerfully and gets excellent grades — unfortunately, he also writes poetry and makes Valentine cards for Susie. Again, the original Calvin has to face the consequences.
* God of War begins, he starts wearing a suit of godly armor eerily similar to the armor Ares wore. And just like Ares, Kratos has begun a campaign of destruction and conquest of Greece.
* Gwynn had short locks for a brief period when her hair was burned off during the "Dangerous Days Ahead" arc. She grew it back over time. Played for laughs when the long-moved out Zoe moved back in and, trying to find at least one normal event, asked Gwynn what happened to her hair.
* Halo, the marines call the Elites "split-lips" or "hinge-heads", and have plenty of derogatory names for the Covenant's other species too.
* Gundam SEED Frame Astrays gold bonded to the armor. Unlike the Akatsuki, it serves no practical purpose whatsoever.
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger is a rare live action example. Interestingly, it was originally supposed to be a one season show with twelve episodes, but the budget increased for one more episode. Then, a second season was made that also lasted thirteen episodes.
* has compelling parallels to a coming-out story. Though the implications are probably unintentional, this story may be one of the oldest examples of this trope.
* Gray Hulk (aka Joe Fixit) had his own "love interest" (though more like a
* Going Postal: "There was a pregnant pause. It gave birth to a lot of little pauses, each one more deeply embarrassing than its parent."
* Heck, when you consider it, his baseball models are doing politics: he * heels wrestlers, you create a formidable and threatening opponent for your star player to eventually defeat.
* Go look up the life of your real-life heroes. They are likely to have a flaw or several. They can still be great men or women. They are also human. Human history is full of this.
* Happily Adopted: A character lives a happy life with their adoptive family.
* Gone Girl after hearing about the Laci Peterson case, where the handsome, seemingly perfect husband of a heavily pregnant woman was shown to be curiously unfeeling and calm regarding the disappearance of his wife. Turns out he was having an affair, too, and attempted to continue the affair all throughout the search efforts. The difference is that the husband was eventually convicted of murdering his wife, while Amy was actually the mastermind behind her disappearance.

* Hector as well; since antiquity, it's been common to note that Hector is in many ways the better of the two between him and Achilles, being more loyal and conventionally virtuous than Achilles, who can be selfish and vindictive. He's immensely respected by friend and foe alike, and without Achilles fighting with them, Hector pushes the Greeks back to their ships after a series of running battles. He's also fighting to defend his country, compared to the Greeks who are invading; when he's killed, the whole city erupts into mourning for their coming doom.
* Happens rather accidentally to either Jeebs or his brother (Or both?) in an episode of
* Hey Arnold!: In "Arnold & Lila", Lila starts to like Arnold only because Helga wrote "Arnold Loves Lila" on the wall and Lila assumed it had to be true. Arnold tells her he doesn't "like-like her" and Lila becomes very disappointed, but realizes she only came to "like-like" Arnold because she thought he felt that way about her. So when Arnold realizes he does "like-like her", Lila isn't interested in him anymore.
* Handbook for Mortals to the point where a rumor began that they were written by the same person.
* here. Dax manages to hold her own with Worf in that episode (both come in to sickbay, supporting each other, with various bruises and fractures at the end); apparently, she was used to it enough as Curzon to manage.
* Heroes of Newerth clones' Single Draft mode where every player is given a choice from three random heroes that can be swapped between other players in your team.
* Harvey Girls Forever! episode "Weekend at Audrey's" has Audrey doing this with the Harvey Girls' newest toy when she breaks it and has to pretend it still works when she takes it to a party.
* Goblins which another character notes is an apt name since Minmax clearly doesn't understand what it means.
* Hatchet II, two of the hunters hunting Crowley used to be married, causing tension between them. Eventually, they end up alone together and decide to have a shag in the middle of the woods.
* Hc Svnt Dracones project as none of the other species they were splicing with human genes had their own cultures and societies. But, after Earth was sterilized in the Terra Firma/Corptown war they went with it anyways, and Vectorized dolphins are a common sight in the oceans of terraformed Mars, Venus, and Europa.
* Hans Christian Andersen. As anyone who knows the tale knows, the "duckling" is not a duckling at all, but a cygnet, a baby swan.
* Hates Small Talk: I'm too serious to have time for pointless chattering.
* Heroes for Earth. This version of the mobile oil platform is equipped with a laboratory, opulent dining quarters, brig, galley and an army.
* Half-Life, allowing hordes of Antlions and headcrabs to pour into formerly-safe urban areas, swarming over both the retreating Combine forces and the advancing rebels.
* Higurashi: When They Cry is described as a little girl with pigtails. Her girlish fondness of her teacher Keiichi is meant to emphasise how much Keiichi has changed since he moved to Hinamizawa.
* has declared as sharing a universe and has made connections between characters from both works. For example, Manolo Sanchez's mother Carmen is the sister of Manny Rivera's great-grandfather Justice Jaguar.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, the camera follows a set of dog footprints up to the spot where the now-human Sirius Black is standing.
* He also juggles while discussing the diagnosis-of-the-week in "Clueless" - his giant tennis ball, the Magic 8-Ball, and a pencil case - and while three-ball juggling is pretty basic, juggling differently-shaped objects adds a few layers of difficulty.
* Graceling has this as a magical talent. In a setting where certain people are "Graced" with a magically-enhanced natural talent that can range from mind control to swimming to cooking, the heroine Katsa is Graced with superhuman survival skills that let her function perfectly without sleep or food for days, withstand blizzards, instinctively know how to live in the wilderness, see in the dark, navigate without a compass, defeat anyone in any kind of combat, and kill anything that she sees as a threat with her bare hands.

* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix to read "the strong smell of cooking sherry" before getting the hint?
* Hannah Montana: Jackson's best friend Cooper secretly loves to bake, although he is embarrassed about it. He actually baked Miley's birthday cake which Jackson had to deliver after messing up the previous cakes.
* High-Lo: Try to guess which card in a line will be high or low. Also made into a game show, as
* Gran Turismo 4 has many useless (from the game's viewpoint, that is) historic cars, including the Daimler Motor Carriage (1 HP!), Ford Model T, Daihatsu Midget I, Fiat 500F/R, Subaru 360, 1948 VW Beetle, 1954 Corvette, etc.
* Godzilla generally levels out into one of these. Destructive? Yes. Uncaring? Ayup. But at the end of the day, he hates other kaiju a lot more than he hates people.
* Heroic BSoD that makes him question what he's fighting for that's brought upon thanks to the arrival of Spike.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn's questionable writing quality is blamed by several fans on the game being rushed. This is supported by the later-released European version clearing up several awkward comments compared to the American version.
* Green Lantern, Sinestro Corps member Feena Sik had the flowering reputation of an artist revered across space sectors. Then she became so determined to bring her art to life she completed a ritual involving her husband's blood to do just that. At her next show, the paintings immediately came to life and massacred the audience. All of her previous works have been blacklisted and banned from reprinting out of fear that they'll come alive.
* Hamilton: the song "Stay Alive" has George Washington and Charles Lee arguing over plans on the battlefield with Washington shouting "attack!" and Lee "retreat!". This is based on the real-life battle of Monmouth, where a similar incident occurred.
* hilariously/disturbingly v.2010. Due to a mistake in the materials files, if a dwarf got wet in hot weather, all of their body fat would melt off and they'd bleed to death.
* Godzilla. In his three previous appearances in the Showa series his hands were metal hooks.
* Hazbin Hotel: In a show set in Hell, Valentino is considered one of the vilest demons of all. This is because even though demons haven't been proven to objectively exist despite being a nigh-universal fear, Valentino feels very real due to what he is: a controlling pimp who abuses and exploits his employees. People like him absolutely exist in real life, and combined with him lacking the comedic quirks and over-the-top personalities of other demons, he comes off as all too realistic and hits disturbingly close to home.
* Gulliver Tie-Down scene, helped by an abridged book aimed at children that removed most of the context. In the original, heavily satirical text, the Lilliputians are a parody of the British and French aristocracy, based on the idea that they are intellectually small; thus they obsess over trivial matters, such as going to war over a disagreement on how to serve eggs. The Brobdingnagians, by contrast, are simple but wise, having a society in which everyone works together because they understand that it's in their mutual interest to do so.
* Heavy Weapon revels in this trope, set in an alternate 1984 where the "Red Star" has declared war on the rest of the world, and the player rolls the title vehicle through nineteen faux-Soviet countries.
* He emphatically informs his employer Jaime Lannister that "dragons are where our partnership ends." Having seen one of the beasts
* God-Created Canon Foreigner: One specifically created by the original creator of a franchise.
* Hannibal Buress has a bit saying that nowadays it's probably easier to get cocaine on a plane than a bottle of water.

* Happy Heroes. The English dub made by Lookus reflects this characteristic by giving him a low-pitched, stupid-sounding voice.
* Graham McNeill, both the Space Marines and the Unfleshed suffered horrible dreams while on the Chaos-tainted space ship.
* Goshinki and Gyu-oh were not as fast as the others, examples listed. But considering their body mass,
* Greyjoy Alla Breve ahead of him so the villagers know where to run so as to escape Joffrey's claws. This saves several hundreds of villagers (as those who ran warned others) and, after he somehow survives the last battle of the war, ensures Lancel has a good reputation and a chance to return to a normal (or almost) life.
* Hey Arnold! it with the two, and threatens them if they ever insult Patty again.
* Goblins, Kin wears a cursed leash that she has been told has a 50-50 chance of exploding if she tries to remove it. She does not know if this is true, but is unwilling to test it.
* Hamon will fail. Characters trained in Hamon will burst into flame and die upon trying to become a vampire, while Jonathan will refuse to train vampiric players in the specialty and instead kill them on the spot.
* Gulliver's Travels miniseries: In contrast to the lily-white Lilliputians, Brobdingnag is home to many black giants (including Alfre Woodard as the Queen) looking a little out-of-place in 18th century powdered wigs. This is actually consistent with the Utopian nature of the island and probably a way of playing up its superiority to both Lilliput and Gulliver's England.
* Hans' plan to keep Westerguard is to start war between Isles and Arendelle by killing Anna and making it look as if it's Islanders' fault.
* Hadriex would go on to use this trope in many future videos, getting better at it as he went.
* Golden Freddy. When you look at the poster at the end of the West Hall while it displays his face, he appears in your office. You will then hear robotic murmurs and hallucinations just before he instantly kills you and crashes the game
* Goblins where multiple realities overlap and multiple instances of the same person can exist at once. Kin is invited to join a Kins-only team consisting of Kins from other realities, and several different Minmaxes team up against another Minmax when they realise he's trying to erase the Maze, and everyone inside it, from existence.
* , had the main character working for a fashion company called Zimaletto. In 2006, Amedia (the producers of remake) sold the Zimaletto brand to SELA, an actual fashion company, who used it for their luxury clothing. There are a few Zimaletto shops, even.
* Half-Life, and in sequences where Vortigaunts are fought alongside Alien Controllers, killing the Controllers causes the Vortigaunts to become docile.
* Grigory Leps, who only got 70 performing one of his hits on karaoke.
* Good Will Hunting makes repeated passes at his much younger female students, though he's always politely turned down.
* Godzilla dub as an audio option for their first troubled release in 2011.
* Hero Factory's 6th podcast has a planet's moon vanish because it was eaten by a villain, who left a moon-sized poop behind. Accompanied by the line "That's no moon."
* Hank Azaria) is the page image for a reason. Very flamboyant, very effeminate.
* Guardian, Lulu refuses to explore a cave on Besaid Island with Wakka, Chappu, and Yuna and gets angry when pressed thanks to her traumatic experience in Yojimbo's cavern with Lady Ginnem.
* Golden Sun, came out, it started out with Jenna and Kraden escaping Venus Lighthouse, around the same time as Isaac's final battle with Saturos and Menardi, which Felix and Sheba saw with their own eyes. Once the sequel's prologue ends, the player switches control over to Felix, as now said player is the one being chased by the very characters they controlled in the previous game!
* Haven: Call of the King tanked, and the remaining two games were canceled.
* HERZ: Asuka’s father stopped looking after his daughter when she was four. She is twenty-six now and he is still absent of her life. He never shows up, never calls… and Asuka never ever mentions him. It’s telling that she has managed to forgive Gendo but she never talks about her father.

* Good Scouts is bandaged from head to toe by his nephews, and as he tries to free himself he spills a jar of honey on himself. A bear arrives and starts licking him. Donald, unable to see, thinks it's the boys and tells them to stop; when the bear doesn't he hits it, causing the bear to growl. Donald rises up to shout "What's the big idea?", and at this point, the bandages over his eyes loosen, gets a good look at his assailant, and beats a hasty retreat.
* He achieves his class upgrade by stealing it from himself in the future. Naturally, this comes back to bite him when he has his class upgrade stolen by his past self.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, Hera, Queen of the Gods, acts as this towards her husband's bastard son Hercules. This is in keeping with original myths of their relationship, as Hera was responsible for the majority of hardships the hero faced in his life.
* Gor, most city-states are built like this, with walls to keep out outsiders and gates to let people in.
* Hammer Of The Witches, the covert operations team's boss says that the proposed plan to hunt down a target is so crazy his superiors might just approve it.
* Gotham Central had her join the GCPD after her husband died. (Though the bible's canonicity is debatable, as Renee's entry also states that she opposed Batman's vigilante activities, while in the series she supported them, in contrast to her partner Harvey Bullock).
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince filmed her earliest scene as Bellatrix Lestrange while pregnant, where her bump was very poorly hidden by a huge leather belt. It's especially noticeable in the scene where she and her sister Narcissa visit Snape. Bellatrix is in the background for most of the scene and when she does come into the foreground she is standing behind someone or something.
* Hangmen Also Die!, Dr. Svoboda and Mascha use the method of writing notes for the sensitive information and saying inconspicuous things out loud when they figure that the Gestapo is probably bugging the apartment.
* Godiva Hair: Botticelli's 1486 painting "The Birth of Venus", if not earlier with Lady Godiva herself.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 in the opening credits which feature Baby Groot cheerfully dancing to "Mr. Blue Sky" while the other Guardians battle an inter-dimensional monster in the background. The battle finally moves front and center after the monster throws Drax into the speaker system, angering Baby Groot.
* GURPS. Unlike most Literal Genies he actually tries to be helpful, but manages to screw things up anyway.
* Hagwood trilogy, the evil High Lady of Hollow Hill, Rhiannon, has removed her heart from her body and placed it in an enchanted casket. The only way to kill her is to unlock the casket with the key specially made for it and then stab the heart.
* Heavy's sister Zhanna as he is, yet manages to seduce Scout (before quickly changing her mind after he annoys her) and Soldier with no difficulty whatsoever.
* GURPS about it for days and are effectively rendered useless to the team.
* Hamilton: After learning of her husband's affair, Eliza sings an entire ballad as she burns Alexander's letters in the form of "Burn".
* Hex Wives: When Becky sheds blood by accidentally killing Danali's cat, and thereby activates her magical powers, she starts to fly. She then crashes to ground because she has no idea how to control her flight.
* Heroes, whereas her superpowered mother is a regular woman who lives in a trailer.
* Happens for weird, but non-evil purposes in the sci-fi comedy novel
* Gratuitous Rap before shifting back to a Broadway-style musical piece.
* he was raised to believe he was a literal God that nobody else really fully understands.
* Godzilla (1998) trying to get her breakthrough scoop), he still decides to get back together with Audrey in the end.
* Here is a video with the summaries of all the stuff he has currently read, and links to these readings.

* Gustav Mahler could be viewed as deconstructions of Romantic era music, particularly his later symphonies. His 6th symphony, for example, takes apart the idea of the "Heroic" symphony that Beethoven codified in his 3rd. In Mahler's version, the hero is not quite so successful. He then went on to parody himself and his critics alike in his 7th symphony.
* Hellblazer had the King of the Vampires, who was the first vampire and the one from whom all others descend.
* Gunnerkrigg Court is actually described by a ghost as "attractive... like a magnet".
* Gulliver's Travels. Supposedly, Jonathan Swift was actually aware of the name's meaning.
* Happy Tree Friends, also comes quite close to this trope, though he has at least died a few times and has been defeated by Lumpy and Good Flippy.
* Hana Wa Junai Ni Junjiru, where Tsubaki (presumably lower class himself) is being trained to be a high-class prostitute serving only the nobility and Daniel is a gardener at the manor. Daniel works to be knighted just so he can be with Tsubaki, but his fixation on class causes even more tension because Tsubaki doesn't want to be associated with the nobility's prostitute system and would rather Daniel had run away with him when they were kids.
* Halloween Episode; and the third, despite his attempts to be careful, winds up with him as a giant floating head.
* Goldfish are clearly fans of retro games, adding in tons of references in their music videos, featuring pixel animations and drawn animations.
* Half Magic for himself and their mother. The sequel shows that he is, in fact, a very good father to them.
* Good. The salt of the earth like their liege, they are shown relaxing while off duty, laughing and talking about their families to show they're nice. Assuming they have to arrest the heroes, * he's her teacher. While Yuu finds out early on, the rest of the cast doesn't until they're caught and it becomes a scandal.
* Gold Digger granny was the only person insightful enough to treat her with the level of affection she would give a little girl.
* Harlem Heroes are suicidal in their gameplay tactics. It's telling that, in a sport requiring a minimum of seven players, with subs, they have over thirty.
* Good with Numbers Bursar has posited that there is an extra number between three and four, which he calls "umpt" (as in, "umpteen" minus ten).
* Granblue Fantasy: During the Silverwind Stretch arc, Io, Eugen and Rosetta are saved from an avalanche by Orchid while everyone else was caught in the avalanche and separated. With Orchid exhausted from the effort, soldiers quickly moving in to surround them, and the cold weather not getting better, Eugen decides the best course of action is to surrender.
* Glorianna as an excuse) whenever a relationship starts getting serious.
* High Speed) who the cops are after. How long you can stay on the table depends on how good a Karma Houdini you are (which of course depends on your skills at Pinball).
* Half-Elfs and Half-Orcs in 3.5 were some of the worst race options a player could pick (outside of Diplomacy maximizing for Half-Elfs), with only some minor boosts to skills and immunity to sleep effects that high level characters are immune to anyways (Half Elfs) or the only race feature to make up for their unbalanced racial modifers
* Grammar Nazi commenting on the importance of commas) is a picture of a woman holding up her dog, with the caption reading "[she] finds joy in cooking her dog and her family".
* Green Lantern tells Hawkgirl to leave him behind so she can carry wounded soldiers out in his place. She does so without argument.
* Hammer's Slammers Steuben and a unit of his White Mice dress as members of a rival mercenary company hired by the other side and assassinate an anti-war politician, who was being paid by the enemy.

* Gotham), but for the most part episodes were fairly self-contained. This changed about half way through Season 1. Then Season 2 started following up on Season 1's dangling plot points while holding its own arc; from that point on, every Season has been divided into two main arcs.
* Guild Wars has you surrendering to an enemy force in order to pull off a rescue/jailbreak.
* Heroes of Might and Magic was given a post in Tatalia's military by King Trallosk, who openly dislikes Alkin and privately hoped he would get himself killed on the battlefield. Much to the king's displeasure, Alkin has enjoyed a long and glorious military career.
* Gradius in numbers. Dr. Venom also applies to this too, since he's been modified by the Bacterians.
* Heavy Hulls are better-armoured than other hulls but have less space on the
* Her mother takes this to the extremes in the anime, having them fall from freakin' space at
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child Dephini reveals herself as the true villain of the story by casually murdering an innocent Hogwarts student, and claiming to be the daughter of Voldemort and Bellatrix Lestrange.
* Grand Theft Auto III. A development oversight yes, but still rather interesting that the old texture and model are still being used.
* Gray Lensman series, two planets have their inertia dampened (i.e. forward momentum placed in stasis), after which they are moved into place on opposite sides of a planet of villains. When their inertia or forward momentum is returned, they rush together to crush the planet between them. This is merely a coda to the use of an antimatter bomb of planetary size. Later in the series, this is deemed insufficient and more powerful weapons are used, including planets from other universes with intrinsic velocities significantly above lightspeed.
* Hellsister Trilogy locks Highfather's daughter D'reema away so she can't ruin his scheme by speaking the Life Equation.
* Gosick does this for her mother back in her home town, where she was accused of killing a priest and was banished.
* Google Earth flight simulator, if you hit the ground, you die. However, if you start on the ground, don't take off and be very careful with the controls, the game doesn't register you hitting the ground and dying. Because of this, you can, among other things, taxi a propeller plane through/out of/into the Grand Canyon/Mount Everest and taxi an F-16 on or even under water.
* GTA IV (which takes place after this mission), and also makes Luis' appearance in "Museum Piece", a later mission, completely illogical as well.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, Zeus tries to woo Deianeira, and while she doesn't sleep with him, she admits she was attracted to him. She later marries Zeus' son Hercules.
* GURPS Space allows alien designs from intelligent gerbils (literally if you wish) to "plasma life".
* Hero Core is ridiculously easy compared to the kind of stuff you have to put up with on Hard. Granted, you are fighting it at level 0, but you'd think it would be a slightly more difficult endboss, or one that made Hard seem easy.
* Heralds of Valdemar with some slight progress towards steam technology. When the Mage Storms make magic unreliable, Valdemar does far better than the Empire.
* Heavy Metal could actually be considered a subversion. Despite popular stereotypes, it’s actually less concerned with displays of machismo than hard rock from which it spawned. Hard rock got its strongly masculine attitude from the Blues and exaggerating it further, while metal music distinguished itself from hard rock by moving away from the Blues, including lyrically. While hard rock uses extreme lyrics to evoke a sense of a macho rebellion, heavy metal uses it to evoke fantastic horror. The irony about hard rock’s love songs appealing more to women is that it’s actually just another show of machismo because those bands are trying to be seductive, while heavy metal is just doing it’s own thing. As time has gone on metal has continued to diverge from hard rock and now hip-hop is the popular choice of music that is made by men for men.

* Goomblast takes the cake. When it comes to jaw-dropping, that huge mouth of his blows the competition away.
* Harpoon spiders are arachnoid aberrations with disturbingly human eyes encircling a spiderlike head. They hunt by firing their adhesive-coated fangs at prey, reeling in their target via fleshly lines, injecting them with a paralytic venom, and then
* Hawkman stops the villainous archer the Spider by shooting out the Spider's eye, destroying his ability to aim unless he manages to switch handedness.
* he's mostly just scared that she could have gotten hurt. He tackles her to the ground and shields her from the bullets when Reyes is gunned down in front of them. In the Season 2 finale, when the Hand kidnaps her and a bunch of other people Matt has saved as bait, he's so worried about Karen that he can't focus on tracking the hostages that Elektra has to calm him down, and when he does rescue the hostages, he can't resist stopping to make sure Karen is okay before she goes.
* Hell, even Dream is sort of an example of this. He has stars for pupils in pitch-black eye sockets, but they are
* Harry's Law, a suicidal man jumps off of a six-story building and lands on Harriet. Both survive with minor injuries. Two minutes later, she distractedly crosses a street and gets hit by a car. She lands on a mattress being loaded into a moving van, and doesn't even break any bones. In both cases, it's completely unexpected, even interrupting her internal monologue. It's portrayed as serendipity, because both the suicidal man and the car driver end up joining her law firm by the end of the episode.
* Good Is Not Nice: Being the good guy does not mean you're not a jerk.
* Grow but it have a twist. In the game's last turn instead of erupting a creature will emerge from it and pour lava out of it's head-tentacle.
* "Heavy Metal Breakdown", "Headbanging Man", "Back to the Roots", "We Wanna Rock You", "Get Ready for Power" and "Under My Flag" by
* Grim Fandango really wanting to make the game accessible to modern audiences. Treated like a piece of art, more than a just a game, the original aspect-ratio remains the same but graphics are improved and point and click controls have been added. Also getting a port over to PCs.
* Googlebrains has Lack of Inspiration which is technically an omnibus.
* Golden Swallow: The expert swordsman and killing machine, Silver Roc, will leave behind swallow-shaped golden darts on the corpses of bandits he killed.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban and is genuinely befuddled on the first day of class to see that none of the students have figured this out and have tied their textbooks shut in various ways. They are a pain in the ass for the owner of Flourish & Botts to stock too, with him having to keep them in a cage so they can't hurt customers.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix starts out in the darkened Department of Mysteries with the Death Eaters and the D.A. firing spells off at each other.
* Happy Ending Override: A sequel starts by undoing the happy ending of a previous installment.
* Heist Episode: An caper-style episode where the characters have to steal something.
* ^H. (Each control-H deletes one letter^H^H^H^H^H^H^H character.) This is a reference to 1980s-era Unix systems, where misconfigured terminals would display control codes instead of invoking them. (A more obscure option is control-W, which deletes entire words ^W^W^W deleted one word in the Berkeley UNIX and in the vi text editor, and was therefore used for more succinct examples.)
* Grandmaster of Theft and chooses to work hard to prove that she deserves the position based upon her own talents, not family.
* Grace is a downplayed version. Animals don't flock to her but she can befriend any animal she encounters and sometimes
* Grimm. Eve tries to go along with it but finds herself unable to operate the unfamiliar equipment.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try and the latter two enjoying teasing the hell out of Fumina

* Hellsing. Walter even says that as long as they are paid they will not betray their contract.
* Harpo Marx money was proof of guilt. In reality, another passenger on the train had loaned him some rubles, knowing that the Russians had a habit of overcharging people who paid with foreign currency and not wanting Harpo to be taken advantage of; since Harpo didn't give the other passenger money in return, it was not an exchange and therefore legal. (Said passenger eventually learned that Harpo had been detained and straightened things out.)
* Greyhawk includes a zombie variant known as a "Son of Kyuss", an aggressive zombie with green worms crawling about in its eye sockets. If the worms land on someone, they burrow under that person's skin and attempt to reach the brain, at which point the victim becomes another Son of Kyuss. Given the nature of some of the beings in the game, these creatures are probably too weak to cause a full-scale apocalypse, but they can easily wipe out an entire village of zero-level humans.
* Good Cannot Comprehend Evil: Good people can't understand why people are evil.
* Goofy. Then again, Donald has had quite a lot of jobs himself, mostly due to his own incompetence.
* Haledjian knows someone is the culprit because he claims that a cook in the kitchen was yelling and waving a bright red lobster before he was found murdered. The lobster wasn't supposed to be cooked yet, and lobsters are only red when they're cooked. However, that detail wouldn't be impossible, just weird. The back cover of a regular mystery might well say something like, "Why was the cook waving an already-cooked lobster before he was killed?" Another question is, was the cook yelling
* Henry V charming her into letting him kiss her, her father and the French and English courts re-enter to sign the terms of peace. Some productions have the couple shoot apart as if they'd been zapped by lightning.
* Grand Admiral Thrawn is a very calm and collected man, playing his cards so close to the chest that they're under his jacket. When Slavin suggests destroying the Syndulla family's Kalikori—an extremely important heirloom to Twi'lek families and culture—Thrawn grabs him by the collar and snarls in his face for a moment before releasing him and apologizing for his outburst, making Slavin look as scared as if he'd just insulted Darth Vader's mother to his face. As practically the only non-human officer in the very speciesist Imperial military and an art lover besides, Slavin's suggestion hit two of Thrawn's
* Hammerspace. This is sometimes described as them "generating" the weapon out of the protoform.
* GunBuster. She is clearly stated to be gynoid (female android) even before that.
* Good Times. It was mentioned that as a married couple they could get more from social security than if they were single.
* he went berserk, beat the tar out of him, and forced him to admit that he's more evil.
* Go Tell the Spartans’’: The village of Muc Wa spends most of the movie being besieged by the Viet Cong as the main cast tries to hold them back.
* Goddess Creation System Xiaxi competes with warrior princess Ming Zhu in a hunting competition to nonlethally subdue wolves. Her opponent puts out one's eye, knocking it unconscious but not killing it. When she turns around, she sees Xiaxi's wolf acting like a big friendly puppy towards her.
* Handy into the camera whenever he has to do something that requires hands.
* Higurashi: When They Cry anime is obviously less compressed, as it has only the last two arcs to cover (plus an additional, anime-only arc at the beginning). It still suffers from it though, as the last two novels are also by far the longest ones.
* Graces also seems to be invoking this trope with one of its win quotes. Asbel refers to himself, his brother, and Cheria — who clearly harbours romantic interests for him — as "Lhant's Triplets of Terror." Cheria angrily retorts, "I am
* Help I Am Being Held Prisoner: Harry (a prisoner whose snuck out of the prison but intends to go back) and Marian use this to keep a guard from the prison they run into at a party from seeing Harry's face and arresting him for being an escaped prisoner.

* Haven episode "301," Audrey uses broken glass to cut through her ropes. Her hands get very bloody in the process.
* Hey Arnold!, when Rhonda asks Arnold what day his birthday is, he replies "the 7th" - a reference to the series premiere date of October 7, 1996.
* Harry invokes this to warn the Fomor that Chicago is under his protection once more.
* Guild Wars products tend to include infinitely-available in-game weapons for your game account, as well as trial account keys and access to preview event weekends for the product you've just pre-ordered. The quality of some of those weapons is sometimes worth the pre-order alone.
* Higurashi: When They Cry ending is the "True" ending while the "normal" ending is the "Good" ending. This is probably because traditional, route-based Visual Novels frequently have two endings to each route (aside from bad ends). The True ending is typically bittersweet, while the Good ending ensures everyone lives happily ever after. It's not to do with one being canon, as the PS2 ending certainly isn't.
* HBO feature presentation sequence used between 1982 and 1997, that featured a metallic HBO logo (which was in fact a scale model, as was the rest of the sequence) rotating across a space background with moving stars behind it near the tail end of the sequence that then transitions into a series of light rays that move across and inside the "O" to reveal the type of program being aired ("HBO Feature Presentation", "HBO Special", etc.).
* Hatchimals typically sing a version referred to as the "Hatchy Birthday" song when hatching from their eggs or growing into another stage. They sing gibberish sounds to the tune of the traditional song.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, provided you find his habitual cursing and severe hatred of the English amusing.
* Heroes of the Storm. A modest fee will unlock any number of snazzy-looking mounts which, of course, offer no gameplay benefit over the default mounts.
* Halo 4 returns to Requiem six months after the single-player campaign to clear out the rest of the Covenant remnant forces there, starting by popping out of slipspace and plowing straight through a Covenant armored cruiser, ripping the alien ship in half without suffering any damage from the impact.
* goofball goddess, was probably just doing it to put on a show for the others who were watching...
* Good Morning, Vietnam), and shouts, "Oh, you're going straight to hell for that one!"
* Haruhi Suzumiya is coming dangerously close to RROD in the preview of Book 10 of the light novels.
* Highlander takes place in was officially named Seacouver after fans began using the name to refer to the previously unnamed city.
* Heroes Save the World, a superhero novel about geopolitics, the concept of tragedy as a conflict between irreconcilable goods, and what happens when one hundred fourteen-year-olds get superpowers.
* Hannibal On the other hand, Will Graham falling asleep on a couch in the same patient's room (and waking up to find he's been draped with a blanket) is straightforward adorable.
* Godzilla (2014). In terms of seriousness, it comes close to some of the darker films of the "Heisei" era, putting a serious focus on Godzilla's penchant for destruction, but also portraying him as one who could be a benefit.
* Happy Tree Friends tend to react realistically to being injured, the short "In Over Your Hedge" has Lumpy not being phased much by Fliqpy impaling him with lawn flamingoes, only screaming when he sees the latter running toward him.
* Hades has an in-game system called the Fates' Prophecies, a document that grants rewards for completing the game in various fashions or gathering different resources such as, for example, picking up every available boon from a single god.
* Graduation Day: Part 2, Buffy tries to get Angel to drink from her. Angel refuses, so Buffy punches him until he vamps out and bites her.

* Harlequins' Solitaires. Only one human has visited it, but has sworn never to speak of what he found there, while the Arch-sorcerer Ahriman is obsessed with plundering its secrets for himself.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) : The Mystic Wall separates the Light and Dark hemispheres of Eternia. For a time its utterly unbreachable and, as far as inhabitants on either side are concerned, a literal wall around their portion of the world. Right up until current events are kicked off in the series, when Skeletor breaks it down.
* "He's a Pirate" plays in the background, and quickly slows to a halt with a cut to present day, the treasure alluding him. A slower version of "He's a Pirate" plays again as he searches in present day, slowing even further as the search proves fruitless.
* Gundam and its multiple continuities had several of these serving to launch both aerial and amphibious mobile suits.
* Here's a customer who did have a connection (via a manager), and abused it to get free food. His M.O. is to come into the deli, ask for something they have that is not ready, then complaining to the manager so that the employees at the deli are forced to give him a meal for free. Eventually, however, the store manager catches on when he finds that the other manager is always signing off on no-charge purchases on the deli production sheets for that specific customer, plus security camera footage shows the customer deliberately looking for things they didn't currently have available. He has the customer banned from the store and gives the other manager a one-week unpaid suspension.
* Gomorrah: Joana is an expensive hooker who's controlled by her bosses using her drug addiction and threats of violence.
* Heroes Chronicles and settled down into a generally-benevolent-ish kingdom.
* Happy Death Day 2U), she does this with the marker, with an added utterance of "Boom!".
* Hanna-Barbera, newfound popularity and more recognition. There are still some critics (and hardcore animation fans) that criticize the shows, but most people have generally warmed up.
* Gorgeous Gaijin - The tall, sexy token white foreigner in a Japanese work.
* Guardian Angel: A personal angel who helps someone in specific ways.
* Harry Turtledove, reptilian invaders calling themselves simply "The Race" are often referred to as "Lizards" by humans. They return the insult by calling humans "Big Uglies".
* Good Girl Gone Bad: She used to be a sweetheart, but after a traumatic event, she's rotten to the core, and she likes it that way!
* GURPS requires only a moderate rate of fire to use suppression fire but without an RoF of around 20 (attainable only by a very few weapons) reliably hitting targets is virtually impossible.
* Happy Heroes: Season 3 episode 29 ends with Doctor H. taking a group picture of Careful S.'s duplicates.
* Heterogenia Linguistico, the werewolves give Hakaba an unknown but tasty circular disc of food for breakfast. When he asks what it is, they answer with a word he doesn't know yet. Later, he checks the Professor's notes and discovers it's a slice of giant earthworm. In a later chapter he eats some fresh worm guts, knowing exactly what they are, and admits it's pretty good.
* Grim Tales from Down Below descends on a pillar of light to challenge a Kaiju-level monster with a sword? Definitely worth watching. Then top that off with a jumbo size fountain pop and you got a veritable movie.
* hard series, and it takes several books for him to finally snap out of it. Even then, it remains a lingering wound for a long time after.
* Gunnerkrigg Court dated were people she helped raise from childhood.
* Henry James. In the first case due to her father's molestation, in the second after a random attack as a girl.
* he is dating. True to form, Harper and Zeke (who got together at the end of season 2) have outlasted their best friends' more passionate but more fleeting relationships.

* Happy Days, Joanie becomes a student teacher at her high school. She is accosted by a thug student, and Fonzie enters and saves her. He lets Joanie cry into his chest after the ordeal.
* Havok bullies McCoy even though they're both super-powered. Hank has a visible mutation while Alex doesn't.
* Growing Pains episode, Mike prepared cheat notes on the soles of his shoes for an important test. However, when doing the test, Mike found that he was able to do the test honestly since he legitimately knew the answers. However, Mike's notes are discovered at the end and the teacher logically assumes he used them to cheat and it takes the rest of the episode for Mike to convince his parents and teacher of the truth. Both to allow him to prove that he knows the material and for his parents and teacher to drive home the point that preparing to cheat is wrong in itself, Mike retakes the test, on top of the desks, barefoot and his underwear to make sure he is using no unauthorized materials.
* Hilarious in Hindsight now that Cloud is part of the roster in Smash 4.
* Gunnerkrigg Court is that the couple in question are named Spinach and Beanhead.
* Grimdark, and their lore was expanded to include mind control, brain washing, forced sterilization and genocide to put them more in line with other factions.
* Happy Tree Friends Happy Tree Friends?". It's never specified whether the invulnerability refers to their ability to stay alive (which would make it an obvious lie) or coming back after every episode.
* Grey's Anatomy was in the habit of getting drunk and picking up random men for one night stands. In fact, that's how she met Dr. McDreamy in the pilot episode.
* Hardly Working, in which Pat sings about his dream to have this sort of relationship.
* Hero Tales, and his companions are fated to have to choose between allying themselves between the two by the constellation that watches over the mark (for the most part). Taitou just wants to face Keirou out of revenge instead.
* H.Bomberguy being a symptom of the fact that Wiseau's viewpoint wasn't healthy or accurate.
* Go God Go while trying to cut down on the time until the Nintendo Wii came out. Unfortunately, he ended up freezing himself for 500 years, when technology such as the Wii ceased to exist.
* High School D×D is very fascinated by Japanese culture, to the point that she has several Japanese artifacts in her bedroom. Having a Japanese boyfriend might count too.
* Harry Potter by magic interfering with technology/electronics, but there are so many mechanically simple inventions that they could be using... and if an auto can be magicked enough that the electric starter isn't an issue, then clearly it's not much of an impediment.
* Great Barrier Reef on earth. Covering approximately 344,400 square kilometers of ocean.
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost by users Kelly-M-Mortal, Benthehyena and Scrooge Mac Duck. It focuses on the Haunted Mansion ride from the Disneyland parks, and includes short stories, a multi-chaptered fanfic, and various illustration and one-panel comics, all set in an unique Fan Verse of which the most important character is the Hatbox Ghost.
* Grand Finale, "The Big Comet Caper", The Big Cheese is caught embezzling funds for his latest evil scheme and threatened with banishment by Princess Vi. So, he builds a tractor beam that attracts the Love Comet (Harahoro Comet) and pulls it towards Earth, threatening to drop it on the city if he is not made Emperor of Little Tokyo.
* Green Day occasionally has a song written about lead singer Billie Joe Armstrong's wife, Adrienne, which seems to paint her in this light-see: "She's A Rebel", "Last Of The American Girls", and "Youngblood".
* harder than their usual style. Then the albums afterward produced plenty of heavy hits (such as their highest charting song in the US, "Best of You"), and it did not seem that much of a black sheep.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) and for the deaths of millions around the world which could have been avoided had they not fired the Oxygen Destroyer and let Godzilla finish Ghidorah off.

* Henrietta and Elsa are younger than Triela and in love with their handlers.
* Hamilton, but often butt heads over their opposing philosophies and often find themselves on opposite sides of issues. Despite this, both highly respect each other, even if they do view the other as being wrong.
* Hania The Howling Huntress, May 24, 2014, but, it looked like it could have.
* Hades. Even if he's not being actively punished any more, all his friends are still in the prison and they can't leave.
* Gundam Wing) introduces the Hydra Gundam, whose shoulder cannons are effectively incoms.
* Groundhog Peggy Sue, a subtrope where the looping encompasses a substantial fraction of the character's life and the character may be able to skip over some of the intervening bits.
* Her not recognizing a manual may be a case of the author not realizing the prevalence of such vehicles in Europe. It does not, however, explain how she got a driver's license in Japan where she would be required to understand a manual transmission. But as is stated in-universe, how she
* Hand of Thrawn) as the result of a Force duel between Yoda and a powerful Dark Jedi, with the cave still retaining a "stain" from his death when his Dark Side power was released.
* Hayate the Combat Butler. They promised to spend the rest of their lives together and even gave each other promise rings. Izumi promised to be his bride as well.
* GURPS magic there are a two versions. Flesh to Stone turns the target entirely into stone or metal and Partial Petrification works piece by piece, specifically so that the target can be tortured.
* Glee: Rachel Berry is the triple-threat Genki Girl. She always signs her name with a gold-star sticker, and wakes up every day at 6:00 for her daily exercise routine. She claims to have won her first dance competition at three months old.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Harry realizes he has feelings for Ginny when he sees her kissing Dean.
* Grammar Nazis who complained that the above slogan should read "as a" instead of "like a".
* Heavy Metal band Arcturus used to dress as pirates onstage while singing about astronomy and space travel.
* Good Luck Charlie, the teenage son hits on a girl with an identical baby carriage. Charlie is a girl, but this girl was carrying a boy with her. You can imagine what happened.
* Hector: Badge of Carnage, the owner of Beefmart implies that this is the fate of any health inspectors who threaten to close him down, and advises Hector not to purchase any meat from a particular bucket of "veal".
* having spent the day doing stuff with Spongebob to make his last day alive enjoyable.
* Half-Life 2 is another example; "she" may be an AI, although it is more likely she is just the alien equivalent of a tech support answering machine.
* Harry Potter And The Ice Princess makes Elsa the equivalent of this on two fronts, as she is the only one of Harry's close friends who both isn't from England and isn't in Gryffindor, having been born and raised in Arendelle and sorted into Ravenclaw after she started at Hogwarts.
* Harvest Moon: Another Wonderful Life is this, to the point of even wearing a leisure suit and calling the main character "babe". He fails miserably at romance (though he fancies himself quite the catch) which is lampshaded by his mother, who questions your mental health should you pursue him.
* Hades Cup... and attacks that take weeks to connect and can be seen from a mile away, making it very unlikely that it will manage a single hit on you while you and your companions hack away at it for a good ten minutes until it crumbles to dust.
* GURPS Technomancer the legendary past was actually high mana, even though there's no evidence to support this.
* Hatoful Boyfriend, our heroine shows up late to school... only for the teacher to point out the date in the upper-left corner of the screen (it's a vacation day).

* Gravity Falls, Grunkle Stan interrupts a man who is in the process of proposing, in order to crack a joke about how terrible marriage is.
* hallucinations, but he is flying like a hummingbird rather than like a duck.
* Hercules, tempestuous and absolutely awesome. Easily the best part of the movie.
* Godzilla (2014), Shinomura's body is composed of thousands of individual cells that will grow into a new Shinomura if left alone.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City Stories apparently has a lot of free rein, and doesn't report for any kind of daily duties, work, etc. during the part of the story he's still on active duty.
* He gets called out on this in "The Adventure of the Naval Treaty," when he once again identifies a complete stranger by name. At first the man is startled, but then he realizes that Holmes has simply read the monogram on his pocket watch. "For a moment I thought you'd done something clever."
* Happy Days, where Richie decided to stand up to a bully who'd been tormenting him. It's plain to everyone that the bully is perfectly capable of kicking Richie's ass, but Fonzie (who up to this point had been protecting Richie from the bully and giving him advice on how to deal with him) makes it a point to tell the bully he'd better fight fair. What most people miss is the clear sub-context that Fonzie fully expects Richie to get beaten up badly...and he also intends to deal with the bully later in order to put a stop his crap once and for all.
* here for more details. The key difference between the two groups is that Al-Qaeda sought to weaken their enemies via attrition like their founders had done so in the war with the Soviets, while Daesh wanted to take the fight directly to their foes by collapsing the local governments and actually managing to form a state of their own.
* Heroes of Might and Magic because his knowledge of magical rituals is needed to defeat the villains, and claims that since he was unaware of the passage of time during his 'incarceration', he doesn't feel like he's been punished at all.
* Healing Hands, though can only heal one square inch at a time. He still ends up saving the lives of quite a few people with this power.
* Heroes and her penchant for calling her 'weaker' half 'little mouse'.
* Goats, a plotline deals with people defeating humourless cyborg chickens with old parlour jokes. We only ever hear the punchlines of the jokes, but the punchlines are from real jokes which you may be able to identify if you know the joke.
* grisly or suspicious ends, a percussionist for the group Los Kumbiamberos RS, who was kidnapped on-stage by armed assailants in the middle of a 2015 concert and murdered outside of the venue.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers dying on the streets because the Great Depression has crippled her country. She is rescued by Switzerland and adopted as his little sister, and is now one of the richest countries in the world.
* Golden Ending was made as a revamp of the series with improved game mechanics and a whole new story.
* Hello, from the Magic Tavern, each wizard has a color associated with them and domain over a particular area of magic. So Usidore the Blue (and by extension any blue wizard) is the master of Light and Shadow, Spintax the Green is the master of Truth and Lies, Can the Yellow is master of Time and Space. There can only be one wizard of each color at a time, although different wizards assume the role of each color at different points in time.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn and seemingly joins just so there will be two characters of each element.
* GrayStillPlays' brand of comedy. In simulation games, Gray always attempts to make the worst possible choices, and get people killed whenever possible, and boy, does he make it hilarious.
* Hero Factory also utilized this system, though with a retool of its own: introducing a new type of mask connection and bringing back Technic-based builds and functions, but keeping the articulation and customizability of CCBS. The line's story is rebooted, however.
* Hardcore Henry and the framework's bars are arranged in two-foot squares, this audibly snaps the opponent's spine in two places simultaneously.

* Harry Potter, taking the combined word count to approximately 1.7 million words.
* Halloween Fairstival, and occasionally mashed up in ways that make no sense. Strong Mad is the only person who finds it funny.
* Hellboy. Hellboy's hands are both red and his right hand is significant for being over-sized to punch better, but Hellboy is not designing and directing anything with his hand, and he does not have a larger plan involving giving out cars and money.
* Grimer and Muk are said to have been created from a polluted stream by x-rays from the moon.
* Hec Ramsey has an interesting variation. The young cop, Chief Oliver B. Stamp, is actually the superior of the old cop, Hec Ramsey, who is his deputy. Fortunately Stamp recognizes his own limitations and comes to rely heavily on Hec's experience.
* Gossip Girl doesn't belong in their world. However, Blair is in love with Chuck, and this childishness only leads to her becoming so disgusted with him she actually does go out and find another love interest.
* Gunpowder was first discovered by a Taoist philosopher/chemist searching for the formula for immortality... Irony much?
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) disintegrates both the right and left heads to ash.
* Hartford Convention, despite whatever impressions you may have gotten from your history textbook. While today, textbooks primarily cite the British practice of stopping American merchant ships they suspected were bound for France (who they were at war with at the time) and seizing goods or even kidnapping American sailors, many, especially New England, saw the war as a naked attempt to appropriate the land of Native Americans, many of whom were allied with Britain. New England even traded with Canada and Britain throughout the war in defiance of federal laws, which is the main reason they were spared the bulk of the fighting despite being the only area to border a British territory.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, a German army decided to bait out an Italian soldier by calling out a relatively common Italian name. The soldier with that name came out and said, "I'm here!" and the Germans got him. Later when the Italians decided to do it back to them, they had an Italian soldier yell out a common German name. The German soldier with that name came out and said, "Who called me?" "Me!" replied the Italian soldier. The German shot him right there. This joke in fact predates World War I.
* Help, Help, the Globolinks, the invading Globolinks are repelled by music.
* Half-Life 1, the incoming Marines are given their alternate orders just before arriving at Black Mesa. Shepherd's squad, of course, gets shot down before they receive their new orders.
* Happily, like the ADS system above, the US DoD is keen to distance itself from accusations of torture and devices that might facilitate it, so these projects aren't likely to be released into use any time soon.
* "Hair Today, Gone Tomorrow" has Nancy starting to undergo female pattern baldness, and the stress that Dale's antic put on her is making her hair fall out even faster. Redcorn also tries to get back together with Nancy in this episode, which stresses her out even more. In the end, she rejects Redcorn and she and Dale are last seen purchasing a wig for her. Especially ironic since Dale is bald himself.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince. He seems completely oblivious to what he interrupted.
* Good Omens is kicked off when an intentional two-child switcheroo turns into an unintentional three-child switcheroo.
* Happens later when Keith attempts to sneak off with Jou's tournament finalist card while the latter is sleeping in the anime. Jou screams this, only to mumble "That's my pizza!"
* God of War begins with the protagonist attempting to commit suicide, with the rest of the game leading up to why.
* Hey You, Pikachu! as a gameplay mechanic - the player's handed a device called a PokeHelper that translates human language into something a wild Pikachu understands.

* Grace is a relatively developed example of this, however. While she still primarily exists to further Harold's story, she does have her own established personality and interests (sweet, intelligent, awkward, and quiet, loves art and works as an illustrator), and she even has a bit of backstory (she had an emotionally abusive father and as a result has trust issues).
* Hercules Against The Moon Men and learn the evil queen's true plans.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality as the Chaos Legion's special attacks require others to help make them work.
* Grand Theft Auto games let you have some fun with this. Touching fire lights you on fire, but it generally isn't enough to kill you if you have enough health, leaving you with the option to walk into people and set them on fire. Several of the games allow the player to become immune to fire-damage by completing the Fire Fighter minigame. Like the Saints Row example above, this makes using fire based weapons like the Flamethrower or Molotov Cocktails a much more viable option for causing mayhem without significant risk of burning oneself to death in the process.
* Hellsister Trilogy's bedside for the whole time she remained unconscious after fighting her evil duplicate.
* High Risk - six former circus performers hit the road and help people solve their problems...for money.
* Han Solo and the Lost Legacy featured a group of cargo cultists who were the descendants of the crew of the treasure-laden starship of an ancient warlord; they lived on a backwater planet for generations, maintaining sacred "landing fields" complete with mock-ups of spaceships and ritualized "communications procedures".
* Hamilton: Near the end of the play when Aaron Burr has had enough of Alexander Hamilton and seeks to challenge him to a duel, Hamilton sends Burr an itemized list of thirty years of disagreements, with the side dancers in the play delivering the pages to Burr across the stage one by one. Burr's response is just a "Sweet Jesus."
* He does manage to find them because the marshal assigned to their case had Haley's number saved into his personal cell phone. Granted, they note that isn't standard procedure and that it was a special case because Hotch was the man's friend, but it's still pretty sloppy.
* Hard Candy several times between Hayley and Jeff from the second act onwards.
* Hellboy. Mignola also came up with an explanation for why Hellboy doesn't encounter these types of vampires more often: Vampires used to be a real epidemic in Europe, but humanity got too good at fighting back. So, in 1774, the heads of the European vampire families agreed to bide their time and go into hiding until humanity collectively forgot about them.
* "Grail Mountain" with its purple puddles and "East Ghoss Forest" with its mud in * High Time to Kill tries to make Bond and Dr. Kendall jump off from a cliff of a mountain since it's "much more fun" than just shooting them, but after a brief struggle, ends up going over it himself.
* Grand Theft Auto V than most examples since both sides are playing with other peoples' lives to further their own goals.
* Glitched Miko AU: Downplayed. Hector and Miko agree that there might be something more between them, but its way to soon in their 'relationship' to be sure of that and they both agree that for the moment at least its best if they stick to being friends.
* Gravity Falls: In "Boyz Crazy", after Wendy is freed from Robbie's hypnosis (and subsequently dumps him), Dipper asks if she wants to hang out. Understandably upset (and perhaps seeing through Dipper's attempts to hide his crush), she calls both him and Robbie out for trying to manipulate her and stomps into the forest.
* High Rollers they're in his new stomping ground, is to piss himself.
* Gravity Falls wanted to give the character a pig after his sister wanted one growing up, the name was given by series writer Aury Wallington, whose family had raised a number of pigs growing up, each year having one being named Waddles. And each year, they would apparently eat whichever pig was named Waddles at the time and then raise another one to be eaten the following year.

* Guild Wars 2 has the Gem Store, mostly selling cosmetic items and convenience services. Gems can be bought with real money or exchanged for gold in both directions. At very different rates, mind, so it's very costly to buy gold this way, but it does provide dedicated players with an alternative to paying real money for gems.
* Halo: Reach's "Keep What You Steal" is also reused when Six retrieves "the package" (Cortana).
* Gotham, when Alfred finds out Bruce was burning himself intentionally to "test his own strength", his first reaction is to hit the boy and call him a "stupid boy" before immediately hugging him tightly and trying to reassure him.
* Hearts of Iron has a point system for various cities and provinces. If the enemy captures more points than morale, then the country surrenders. Obviously, capitals are worth a lot and often are a driving point to surrender.
* Harry Potter all wished that the prophecy had never been made and James and Lily were still alive, taking them to a world where the Potters were never killed but Voldemort never fell.
* Henry VI Part 1: Gloucester's first objection to Henry's marriage to Margaret is that he's already betrothed to the Earl of Armagnac's daughter.
* Happy Heroes. The police genuinely do their best to protect the planet, but the enemy is usually too good for them and it's up to the heroes to save the day.
* GREATER GOOD? HIS WIFE WAS THE GREATEST GOOD HE WAS EVER GONNA GET!
* Halo Wars. And in this case, its use of this trope lasts as long as the ship does.
* Guilded Age they soon decide that not only is it too dangerous to let the monster get stronger by consuming more people, they can't stand by and let these people die like that.
* Golden age parodies and homages often have superheroes wearing double breasted uniform coats, usually with a logo on their chest—that was unheard of back then. Heroes wore circus strongmen outfits (such as Superman or Batman) or, more rarely, something closer to a
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) of an ancient, Godzilla-worshiping city deep within the Hollow Earth. The ruins are infused with radiation from the Earth's core, making it Godzilla's preferred place to rest and heal after a fight.
* He's Back: Character who has been in a depression snaps out of their funk and gets back in the game.
* Harry, Fred and George are kidnapped from Avengers Tower by Snape and Dumbledore and end up in the Hogwarts hospital wing. Once Harry wakes up they decide to leave.
* having a different orientation after a rotation of 360°. They require a full 720° to remain unchanged.
* Herriman's letting Bloo get away with his pranks so he will get beaten also backfires, when it turns out the new guy just wants to show Bloo his comedy routine
* Guttural Growler: A character speaks in a voice that's coarse, raspy or snarly.
* Guardian also briefly forayed into tennis shipping when Andy Murray, then split from his longtime girlfriend, and his fellow Brit Laura Robson first ventured into mixed doubles together, and were adorable at it, though things were hindered by Robson having barely turned 16, and it seems to have died down after Murray and his girlfriend reconciled.
* heals and powers up their units, but damages those of other affinities). Their workers can also do the same to individual hexes as a defensive measure. This can also screw up any non-Harmony faction's trade, as their trade routes can't go through miasma hexes.
* Gotham changes Firefly from a white male named Garfield Lynns to a young Latina woman named Bridget Pike (played by Michelle Veintimilla).
* Gossip Girl are so creative with their high school uniforms that half the time you forget they're even supposed to be wearing uniforms.
* Harry Turtledove alternate universe where everybody drives carpets instead of cars. (Los Angeles still has a major air pollution problem, though, caused by stray fibres shed by thousands of carpets.)
* Glee, Sugar Motta has her rich father fund a second Glee Club within the same school after New Directions refuses to let her join. It doesn't change the fact that she can't sing to save her life.

* He also does this for the actors in his works: once he knew he had Daveed Diggs and Renée Elise Goldsberry as Lafayette/Jefferson and Angelica Schuyler, he went ahead and wrote "Guns and Ships" and "Satisfied", which feature some of the fastest sung lyrics on Broadway, simply because he knew Diggs and Goldsberry would be capable of performing the songs (although, as Diggs pointed out in an interview, they don't even touch the fastest songs in Hip Hop). Lin also noted that he looks forward to the day where high-school age actresses perform "Satisfied" in high school productions, simply because he wants to see if they're capable.
* Golden Dragon Fantasy Gamebooks, a short but atmospheric series with a simple playing system.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try because of it. In the latter case, it turns out the maker had a barrier set up to ensure no one can attack the Tryon 3 during the transformation sequence.
* Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters, briefly, as part of Muriel's ceremony.
* having a bit of a problem with the bottle right now". One can only imagine what chaos a drunk genie would cause.
* He eventually decides to rebuild the Archean Empire with himself as the ruler and plans to trap everyone in Star Spirits in order to preserve Titus's spirit.
* Heathcliff is another antiheroic feline; while a likeable guy, he also tends to pick fights, steal fish, and generally cause trouble. Oddly, he befriends mice like Garfield does.
* Heroes episode "Run!", Jessica is implied to break free from handcuffs purely by her own strength.
* Hank Williams III Sr. and so starts off every concert by doing some country songs and his grandfather's hits. Once that's done he informs the country fans that the part they came for is done with and that they can leave before launching into the Psychobilly Death Metal songs from his group Assjack that he actually likes to perform.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, Prince Nuada has two weapons: a curved short sword, and a spear that can alternate between compact and full size. The spear's tip is detachable when struck at a living target and will attempt to burrow deeper if removal is attempted.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City. Amy from the VCPR station is a Genki Girl who was put on heavy anti-depressants ever since her family was brutally murdered.
* Harvey Beaks: With the exceptions of Fee and Foo, most of the cast is some sort of anthropomorphic animal.
* Grounded. In a few instances, they'll even celebrate sending the kid to their room by throwing parties or going out to Chuck E. Cheese's without them.
* Gravity Falls" also had this in effect. When Dipper and Mabel steal a time traveling device lost by a time traveler from the future, they use it to travel back in time to the start of Stan's fair, all the while never running into their past selves from eariler since there aren't any instances of time travel duplicate at all.
* Grandia has your party traveling East across an ocean to The New World which is clearly a distorted Europe.
* Gulliver's Travels wherein the first act ends after leaving the land of the giants and the second act starts with a land that has nothing to do with giants or dwarves.
* Hare Conditioned fires a rifle at a store manager, but all that comes out is three "Bang" signs in succession. The manager then produces three "Ouch" flags out of his mouth.
* Heroic Sacrifice but just arguing that "he was too wimpy to do it until now" makes him look a million times worse, as, if that's the truth, countless planets would have survived if he hadn't been such a selfish coward.
* Goldfinger at his factory and has him strapped down on a circular saw table, expecting him to talk. Bond tries willing himself to die, and comes to disoriented and thinking he's in heaven, before he realizes he's being wheeled drugged through a New York airport.

* Graduate Meeting of Mutual Killing has Valkyrie and Vieiras, who seem to serve as high-ranked members of a very high caliber and answer directly to the same person, Veritas.
* God of Evil so he may be at peace in an endless void. Out of eternal hate, he finds other living things appalling- save for those that worship and follow him. Even then, he's just saving them for last.
* Hawkgirl gets another when she walks in on Batman, who she knows had earlier been on a time-travel trip to the future, and asks him to tell her about her (as yet not even close to being conceived) son. The episode ends at that point but the question is asked with such heartfelt pleading that you
* Harbinger of Impending Doom: A character tries to warn everyone about something from which they barely escaped, but they just dither until it shows up anyway.
* Green Hill Zone, and then a crypt full of animated undead. A few green hills later, the player reaches Stonebridge, their first town. The chapter is populated by the Krug, the first of the game's four monstrous races.
* highly martial culture also means that the more martially oriented a group, the more important they tend to be. In broad terms, the Loroi social pyramid has the Torrai at the top, then the Mizol, Teidar, Soroin and Tenoin, then the Listel, Doranzer, and Gallen, then the civilians. The men exist largely outside this system.
* Haven episode "Ain't No Sunshine" featured a man's shadow coming to life and killing people who angered him. The heroes destroy it with bright light, but it reappears on the man. They defeat it for good by keeping the man isolated in total darkness: no light equals no shadow. Fortunately for the man, he's blind.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone (or "Sorcerer's Stone" if you're in the US), while they don't die the trio does indeed get whittled down to just one over the course of running the gauntlet to the mirror.
* Good Will Hunting, Will describes how his father would add a layer of psychological torment by making him choose what he would be beaten with. He always chose a wrench, the worst of the three options, "Because fuck him, that's why."
* GMAC financing the first guy now thinks the couple is buying a large number of cars and adds that they need to know what they were intending to do with all those cars.
* Guilty Gear's Bridget is a self proclaimed bounty hunter. However, he's not exactly very competent at it. His only real successful bounty to date happened to consist of innocent people (in Bridget's defense, the bounties were given to him under false pretenses). Ky Kiske only paid him due to feeling bad for the poor little guy.
* Harley Quinn (2019): When the Joker captures Harley's crew at the end of Season 1, he tortures the notoriously misogynistic Dr Psycho by strapping him to a chair and forcing him to watch videos of feminist rallies.
* her plans are foiled by the Vorlons, a race that has already reached true immortality, and apparently by less immoral means. (But then again, you never know for sure with those First Ones
* Harlem Globetrotters On Tour plays "Sweet Georgia Brown," the Globetrotters' theme, at the start of each game.
* Go God Go. An avalanche covers him and he isn't found and unfrozen for 500 years, awakening in a Buck Rogers parody. He is eventually sent back in time, but several weeks before the episode starts, forcing him to have to wait even longer for the video game console.
* Gossett himself pointed out that a "Best Supporting Actor" Oscar is something of a curse; smaller projects think they can't afford you, and larger projects don't think you can open a film on your own.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), but if she knows, she never moves to Secret Keeper.
* Half-Blood Prince, cracking his skull, and knocking him out for the rest of the match, causing Gryffindor to lose 320-60.
* GTA IV avert this to a degree. When a car suffers massive damage from collisions, the engine usually just dies and grinds to a halt. Also, cars no longer catch fire or explode simply from being flipped over. Cars still blow up from explosives, gunshots, or catching fire.

* HappinessCharge Pretty Cure!! And anything between Megumi and Seiji is flat-out ignored! According to a PreCure fan, this is due to the writers not wanting the morals of the story to be distracted by the results. The morals is that romance can be happiness but at the same time causes misfortune and everyone should be mindful of other people's feelings even if they don't feel the same way.
* Harry Potter features some of these. Friendly examples (which Quirrell disparages as a sport) include Daphne challenging Neville to a duel when he and Harry attack her mock-army — hostile examples include Quirrell vs. Auror Bahry.
* Haruhi Suzumiya series. (There were Gundams shooting, but heavily censored!)
* Hanna does this a lot- Erik Heller and Marissa Weigler are killed this way.
* Happened, quite hilariously, to commentator Tim Daggett at the 2008 USA Women's Gymnastics National Championships. He led up to Chellsie Memmel's vault by explaining that as Chellsie was coming back from injury and pacing herself in the run-up to the Olympics, she had only vaulted a Yurchenko full the previous day of competition, and how, while she was capable of more, he would be totally shocked if she did anything but play it safe because she "wasn't ready" for bigger and both she and her coaches knew it. He was just winding up this spiel when Chellsie not only busted out an upgraded — and very impressive — Yurchenko 1.5 vault, but
* High and Tight is set a couple of years in the future where a hypothetical war has broken out in Eastern Europe, and Ireland has entered the war.
* great and promptly ejaculated on the earth. Since the earth IS Gaia, she became pregnant.
* He also goes on the entire series without noticing that the jury is * Harmful to Minors: Something that adults are immune to affects children dramatically.
* Healing powers ironically tend to follow this trope straight. Venus Adepts (which until late in
* Hellboy (2019), who'd never worked out before, did extensive training to get into shape to play Hellboy. He also created his own makeshift costume out of sports equipment so he'd be ready to better handle the extensive make-up and prosthetics he'd have to wear.
* Godzilla Junior, a living dinosaur mutated by radiation into the King of the Monsters. Princess Luna, an immortal magical amalgamation of three enchanted species with magic tied to the moon and stars. They get into a
* Gremlins, and when this rule was broken, it resulted in a number of Mogwai getting born from Gizmo's back who weren't nearly as nice as him. The third and final rule was never to feed a Mogwai after midnight (something the new Mogwai tricked the protagonist into doing by means of ripping the wires out of a mains-powered analog clock), because that would result in the Mogwai undergoing a transformation into one of the eponymous Gremlins. The key to defeating them turned out to be weaponizing the first rule, which worked on both Mogwai and Gremlins alike.
* He doesn't get the chance, as Neyla merges herself with Clockwerk in front of Arpeggio, and kills him in her first act as Clock-La.
* Hero Bank: The manga and anime adaptations are both based on the games of the original duology.
* Hear the Wind Sing meets the nine-fingered girl. He found her passed out at the bar, took her home, and spent the night making sure she was okay.
* Hardcore speedruns remove the advantages of items and donations, but still require permed skills from many Hardcore ascensions, as well as tighter planning. Luck doesn't hurt, either.
* Hell's Highway role, with only one level allowing them access against tanks.
* Gulliver's Travels stealthy. Circumstance, sadly, probably wouldn't have allowed it to ever be otherwise; if he had written a straight-up attack on English society, he would have risked political retribution, or at the very least, the ire of other citizens, so his only option was writing a symbolic fantasy story. Then again, it's probably better that it succeeded too well than succeeded too little. The fact that most remakes ignore the second half of the book (only covering Lilliput and Brobdingnag) probably doesn't help.

* Great Ship to truly fuel with the diffuse gas, as the fuel tanks are larger than continents.
* H₂O: Footprints in the Sand has the rare facesitting variation. With two different girls, in fact.
* had to use psionic monsters and enemies to keep a psionically-gifted PC from running roughshod over a campaign.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army while carrying a baby. He tosses it in the air long enough to load his giant pistol and fires it after the baby is back in his other hand.
* Happy Tree Friends, aside from a handful of characters who are consistently adults and one who is visibly an infant.
* God-Emperor of Dune: The Fish Speakers, God-Emperor Leto II's galactic occupation army, whose elite members make up his personal guard unit. Entirely female as part of his master plan for humanity's destiny and to prevent things like his soldiers raping civilians or otherwise abusing their monopoly on violence.
* Gundam, with the presence of anti-beam countermeasures that render all beam weapons affected useless. The only way to combat this is old-fashioned solid ordinance.
* goddess of love and fanservice, herself, Aphrodite and to instead (awkwardly) join him on hunts and stick with him 24/7.
* Headless Horseman: When the van blows a tyre and runs off the road, Liam and Ava are thrown off the seat and end up lying on top of each other. They both comment, awkwardly, on this situation.
* Guild Wars 2 Charr storyline if you're an Ash Legion soldier, you have to fight a plot of the Flame Legion to attack Blood and Iron Legion leaders while wearing Iron and Blood Legion uniforms respectively.
* Happened to that guy who was making fun of Rorschach in Happy Harry's in the first chapter of
* Hallowed Ground is about a small farming town who kills visiting families and tries to make one visitor give birth to their messiah.
* Herb Alpert: American trumpeter with a decades-long instrumentalist career, particularly for Jazz. Also known for The Tijuana Brass which also incorporates a mariachi sound.
* Hell's Gate, this is taken to a more literal extreme than most - it's about a war between two rival civilizations, one of which has a 19th century tech base and a bit of psionics, the other of which is at largely the same functional level, but whose "technology" is entirely magic-based.
* Hellgate: London During the whole speech, however, he is literally torn apart with gaping graphic wounds.
* Grrl Power, and has an Adderall prescription that doesn't seem strong enough.
* Heckle and Jeckle cartoon "Rival Romeos" has the two fighting over a girl, only for them to take their lumps collectively at the conclusion and swear off girls. However, when a buxom Mae West-type girl passes by them, they primp themselves all over as Heckle looks to the audience and says "Here we go again!"
* Handsome Lech, and too openly lecherous to actually be respected by women.
* Green Lantern: Earth One was a brilliant physicist before getting his ring.
* Grindhouse and were played in certain American cinemas referred to as grindhouses.
* Happy Heroes, Big M.'s body inflates like a balloon after he's hit by a needle that a guard shoots at him.
* Haunted House) the vacuum cleaner is used to defeat paralysing ghosts.
* gravity-braided plasma, at close range it tears straight through shields.
* Half Moon: like him, she's a nascent shaman fascinated by the mystical aspects of their world.
* High School Musical has the inexperienced basketball jock Troy and math geek Gabriella auditioning for the leads against professionally trained Sharpay and Ryan. The rest of the school is horrified and tells them to get back to where they belong. Naturally they win everyone over and get the parts.

* Gundam SEED attempts a justification by saying the sand-ships use a "scale system", where the vibrations of micro-scales propel the ship in the same fashion as a fish's fins. Naturally, it works just as well underwater.
* Great Big Sea is from the perspective of a guy who'd like to be the 'someone new' the woman goes out with:
* Gruesome Grandparent: A grandparent who is abysmal to their grandchildren.
* Headey was also pregnant while filming parts of the first season. The flowing sleeves trick was also used in this instance and one episode sees Cersei wearing her marriage cloak, which completely covers her from the neck down, to an event which she quickly excuses herself from.
* Harry Potter and the Mind, speaking of Alastor Moody, said that "little children saw through the crust and thought him wonderful — mostly because he talked to them as equals and took them seriously when other adults dismissed them."
* Headhunters: The final scene emphasizes Diana's pregnancy as a symbol of their happy relationship.
* Hidden Expedition: Two characters are shot (one fatally). Not only do they not bleed, but their hazmat suits are undamaged — despite the fact that getting Gunshot Victim #2 out of the tomb before the mercury vapors finish him off is a plot point.
* Heroic Spirits are copies of souls stored in the Throne of Heroes, and therefore have no memories of any previous times they were summoned as a Servant for a Holy Grail War. However,
* Gravity Falls episode "Not What He Seems" begins with Dipper and Mabel coming across some illegal fireworks and intending to shoot them from the Mystery Shack's roof. Grunkle Stan catches them and tells them that they won't be firing any of the illegal fireworks...without him!
* High Elves, complete with a rivalry with the local elves in the Vulcans.
* Heloise in general is shown to be far more evil and better at making people miserable than her boss Lucius Heinous VII, who is an ineffectual
* Gone Horribly Right, one of the only actual explicit universal laws that the Fifty Families agree on is that a ruler that dies loses his crown permanently, no matter how immortal/invincible/etc she later becomes and whether her mind is intact or not. Gil gives a slightly more cynical explanation; nobles don't want someone ahead of them in the line of succession to just pop back to life and disrupt their claim, so they made the rule that you're out if you die. It's not uncommon for nobles to get resurrected and then try to hide it, which Gil and his father think makes for wonderful blackmail material.
* Hey Arnold! did this to the one character that didn't deserve it at all - Helga. One wonders how she even manages to survive by eating cereal for dinner and a complete lunch of "An individual package of crackers, moist towelettes, and shaving cream", not to mention that her mom forgets to either buy food or leaves the grocery bags on the roof of the car. But in the Thanksgiving episode, this trope is invoked on her when she declares that she has nothing to be thankful for while at the table.
* Harriet goes through the girls' room window to leave the school without being seen by Dudley or his friends.
* Goof Troop has Max and PJ being reminded of a horror movie killer by Pete (intentionally) and Goofy (by accident). And in the final scene of the episode, Pete is scared to death and faints by the appearance of a masked chainsaw-weilding man... which turns out to be Goofy, cutting off a tree.
* Gottlieb had his likeness on the backglass repainted three times because he didn't want it to look beaten up even after ten rounds in the ring.
* Hanazuki: Full of Treasures, characters would cry two sheets of tears whenever they're upset.
* Hayley Kiyoko has a number of songs about women liking women, such as "Girls Like Girls", "Pretty Girl", and "Sleepover".

* Grounded for Life: Claudia is throwing a bachelorette party for one of her girlfriends while Sean incites a mob of angry Yankees fans for catching a fly ball still in play. A cop shows up who Sean thinks is here to control the mob outside the house, but he is a stripper.
* G-Rated Stoner: A character that acts like a stoner, sans any presence of drugs.
* Hand waved whose form overlaps with normal space and subspace, allowing them to draw their mass into or out of normal space. They can also become FIRE and other energy forms with practice.
* Gundam which were essentially naval ships on enormous motorcycle wheels.
* Hazbin Hotel appears to dislike just about everyone in the room at any given time with the exception of her girlfriend, Charlie, who she is consistently nice and pleasant too.
* Guardian Warriors: Created to be super commanding officers, they have the super human strength and speed typical of super soldiers, though to a lesser degree than most examples of this trope. However, they make up for it by being able to emit pheromones to manipulate others, having enhanced intelligence, an improved resistance to physical damage, poison and disease and by being
* Harry Potter segment, Montymort's (Mr. Burns) only weakness is his enchanted shin.
* Godzilla Threshold applies. If they lose, Earth is toast anyway, so you might as well do anything you can to win and hope you don't hit any populated areas.
* Going into the 1992 UK general election, few gave the ruling Conservative Party any hope of clinging onto power, due to lingering resentment at former prime minister
* Hero Factory: In "Invasion from Below", Hero Natalie Breez discovers that the beasts are only attacking the city because a drilling operation has disturbed their nest, and that they are actually sentient, sapient beings. After Breez makes peace with them, a stray gunshot fired by an stepped-on weapon causes the beasts to attack again. This time, the Heroes don't bother with reasoning, instead they kill them all, unhatched eggs included. The end of the episode finds our Heroes celebrating and being celebrated, with Breez joining in on the party.
* Godspeed, which focuses on a colony world cut off from all superluminal contact, something in the locally-grown food causes a gross imbalance in the number of men vs women, so that very, very few girls are born. As such, women on that world are treated with great respect and tend to be sheltered and hidden away from anything that could conceivably be a danger. On the other hand, unprotected women are in considerable danger: the lack of women has made many of the men sexually frustrated, and willingness to rape is quite high. The only reason the female doctor is permitted on a spaceship voyage to the outer system is because she is elderly, and therefore long past being sexually attractive or having any childbearing value.
* Happy Death Day. Every time Tree dies she wakes up she wakes up weaker and weaker and she feels the after effects of whatever killed her last. If the cycle goes on too long she won't even be strong enough to wake up at all.
* Heinrich Prinz von und zu Sayn-Wittgenstein and Egmont Prinz zu Lippe-Weissenfeld, dubbed as
* Headache of Doom: If you have a headache, expect it to turn out to be for a very serious reason.
* Heileen ending, and lastly another difficult to get lesbian ending. The third game in the series has an expansion pack that opens up romantic endings for both female characters from the first game, Ebele from the second game, and a female pirate who appears briefly in the ending of the second game.
* God's Not Dead got a lot of criticism for depicting people who don't share Christian beliefs this way. Pretty much every Atheist character in the films is characterized as a smug, angry, selfish, obnoxious, mustache twirling and unhappy person who wants to destroy christians because he hates their faith.
* Goodbye, Mr. Chips has a scene set in 1914 where one of Mr Chipping's students asks him if he thinks the war will last long. Chips says he thinks the Germans are already beaten and just don't know it yet, and that the whole thing will be over by Christmas. He then jokingly asks if the boy was thinking of joining up, not knowing that by the time the war grinds to its conclusion the same boy will have joined up and died in action.

* Highlander soundtrack is one of the purest examples of Heavy Mithril around.
* Gregory's Girl, Billy the Window Washer is idolized by the boys for his reputation.
* Ha'tak class ships are 700*650*315m so no kilometer ships till the end of Atlantis. And did the 1 gigaton missiles explode when the impacted Ha'tak shields?
* Hilarity Ensues! The sheer amount of mishaps a Big Mek can have with it is both hilarious and terrifying to both sides of the fight.
* Gozer's dog demons Zuul and Vinz Clortho both have glowing red eyes.
* Henry IV of France he was planning to start a war with Spain to free a young woman he wanted for his bed.
* Gravion: Early in Zwei, Eiji encounters a picture where Raven is shown to be together with Ayaka, so they must be two different entities. Raven is Ayaka, however, because the Raven mask will make anyone take on the Raven identity, and Ayaka is his latest host, the one who wielded it when the portrait was taken was most likely Luna's father.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix Firenze was banished from his herd for accepting a job working for wizards after Hagrid helped him escape from an attempted execution when they tried to beat him to death for betraying them by "becoming a servant" to a human.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix uses both game engine cutscenes and pre-rendered animated cutscenes. It is extremely easy to tell them apart.
* Happy Tree Friends, Cuddles (the character who has died the most) and Giggles (the runner-up) are in a relationship. Episodes showing this, however, end with both of them dying horribly...except for one. The episode "I Nub You" have them as a counterpoint to the romance between Handy and the newly-handless Petunia. (Cuddles pushes Giggles on a swing: Handy finds doing the same tricky, so they just ride a see-saw; Cuddles and Giggles hold hands: Handy and Petunia tie their bandages together, and so on). Although Petunia and Handy, as the stars of the episode, die horribly, Cuddles and Giggles get to live.
* God of War: Chains of Olympus review, he subverts it. When describing Kratos' behavior as "incongruous" the screen cuts to the text "A word I can't fucking illustrate."
* Golden Age series as one of the reasons why the Alternian Empire is having so much trouble fighting the United Galaxies. The harsh and volatile leadership common in Alternian society destroys morale and prevents R&D from being developed as quickly, as opposed to the much more forgiving United Galaxies leadership. This is also a major reason why so many trolls have defected.
* He gets very upset whenever anyone disagrees with him or ignores his input... and yet sees absolutely nothing wrong with treating his kwami like crap whenever Plagg tries pointing out his problems or expresses his
* Hazbin Hotel About half of his lines in his first turf war scene are him making innuendoes, but it's really just him taunting Sir Pentious - who clearly doesn't understand it - and having a good time. At one point, he gets chained up and slammed into a building. His taunt about it... doesn't go well.
* Grimtooth's Traps books. Grimtooth commented that he'd gone to a diner for its all-you-can-eat elf special, and was told after his first plate, "You've had your elf; that's all you can eat!"
* Grand Theft Auto V. It's also the most satisfying and par for the course for the series, as in the other two endings, the villains get away scot-free.
* Hellsister Trilogy, Supergirl wears red cape, boots and skirt, and her love interest Dev-Em wears a dark blue suit.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! over a scene involving Blossom, Marine and a guy who looks like a fusion of himself and Itsuki.
* he wouldn't die by Mando's hand. He shoots out the streetlight and leaves as the informant screams for help and the red-eyed critters start closing in on him.
* here, as Alex draws some conclusions about King Hippo's relationship with his ex-wife.

* hawk phlegm from the back of your throat, because "hawk" is the sound you make when you do it.
* Heroic Sacrifice after finding out he's the reincarnation of a death god.
* Hellboy himself inverts this in the first film, warning the afterlife that if they don't release his girl from death, he'll cross over with her ...
* Grim Dawn and he's very much okay with giving his life for an actual noble cause, and setting the many captured souls within him free.
* Haunted Manor 3: Painted Beauties has several paintings you can enter.
* Hero Class Civil Warfare puts Izuku's planning and management skills front and centre, showing how a team filled with a disparate set of powers can be effective, as opposed to a poorly-led team that banks on winning fights with raw brute force.
* Hell Tanner, the last Hell's Angel has to take plague vaccine across a post-apocalypse America in
* "Hello" by Hawk Nelson as well: "Every time I want to say, 'Hello'/Every time I want to stay, I go/Can never find the words to let you know/ Sometimes you plague my mind a million times..."
* Gosick isn't allowed to leave the Academy until later in the story, so she often solves crimes based on descriptions of the circumstances given to her by witnesses.
* Harry Potter: Colin Creevey is Harry Potter's very eager fanboy, including asking for an autographed picture, though he tones it down in later books.
* Granblue Fantasy, Aliza's mom, Alicia, tells several embarrassing stories to the main character and Lyria in the introductory Fate Episode for her SSR version. Aliza can't stand them because it reminds her of when she used to be weak and cry.
* Gottlieb has a Coffin with a person (or a ghost?) sleeping inside, stretching awake.
* Gundam making it infeasible and maybe impossible, but Sunrise has stated they would like to eventually "upgrade" the statue to be moving.
* Granny Weatherwax is also a major believer in Wax On Wax Off, not just as training for young witches (such as Eskarina and Tiffany), but as a permanent part of a professional witch's repertoire.
* Haru wo Daiteita mode more than once (although admittedly he gets a lot better as time goes on).
* Highlander II: The Quickening he's working with about the immortals and to cut their heads off.
* Going Postal, there is a bit of a confusion for some characters (and for the reader) as to how the curse of the Post Office was related to a pie. It turns out it was related to the pi (Bloody Stupid Johnson built a letter-sorting machine in which the pi equaled exactly three, and mayhem ensued).
* goes for this variant, and the tagline assures us that yes, he has "every human emotion," except apparently shame.
* Highlander, then it means the actors for that fight were good enough to avoid all that.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. A strip shows Sealand ignoring his "Papa" Sweden and watching TV. Sweden gets a big cardboard box, writes "England" on it, and then sneaks up behind Sealand, and throws the box over him and shakes it with him inside, calling it a "Dambolis" with Sealand saying "Please stop it!". It's even funnier because the strip is presented as a step-by-step of how to make a Dambolis (it will take 3 minutes, it claims).
* Harvest Moon 64 like Maria, Popuri is the bubbly pink-haired florist like Nina, Karen is a bartender with emotional baggage like Eve, and Elli is sweet and looks near identical to her grandmother Ellen.
* has a woman explaining her body art: to remind herself that she can always find her way, of childhood with her father, and the time she killed her boyfriend.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix Hagrid reveals that Karkus, the gurg of the giants who was sympathetic to the Order's cause, was decapitated and replaced by a usurper with Death Eater ties.
* Golden ring to rule over all!. Otherwise, the monster that drops this item will drop the similar-looking Turquoises in place of a Ring of Varda, which can be sold to the librarian, but is mostly useless.

* Glitter has Mike make a joke about Eric Benet's sex addiction. Mary Jo doesn't think there's anything funny about sex addiction and keeps trying to explain this to Mike as he keeps making more jokes about it. Eventually she gives up, which is for the best since there aren't many other places to go when making jokes about Eric Benet.
* Happy Heroes of all things is even moving by itself at all would tip him off that something's going on.
* Guards! Guards! at the villain, causing him to stumble backwards over a ledge and fall to his death. Sergeant Colon remarks "What a way to go. Killed by a wossname, a metaphor," which Nobby Nobbs follows up with "Looks more like it was the ground."
* Harry Potter, all of the Death Eaters on watch when the Death Eater lair was blown up were spies; fortunately, all of them chose that moment to report to their respective organizations, so none of them were killed.
* Hallow can convert damage spells directly into health. Coincidentally, an awful lot of damage spells are fire-based.
* Harkovast fits this trope, even if his armour is more battered then shining most of the time!
* He probably shouldn't worry about the situation. No problem, he's an orphan, right? The cereal in the cupboard will restock itself and the letter carrier will skip over his house when the taxes are due. The Internet will work cost-free and his boombox will still impress the ladies come Sunday night.
* Hayven Celestia: Most sapient species resemble anthropomorphized Earth animals to some extent. Geroo partially resemble ferrets and kangaroos, while ringels look a lot like scrawny raccoons.
* Glee Rachel but he is also sexually frustrated due to Quinn also being president of the celibacy club. It should also be noted that all the female celibacy club members are cheerios and all the male members are guys just trying to get into their pants. Furthermore, the point of the celibacy club seemed to be more about teasing the guys, rather than staying celibate for religious or moral reasons.
* Gregory and the Hot Air Balloon, the fanfare first plays, and then the title character's dog-like pet lizard crawls around on the "o" causing the slice to fall out.
* Heroes, Mohinder's father used a Big Board map to track where his genetic theory predicts people with Abilities are likely to emerge. After his death, Dr. Suresh's map becomes a clue for numerous characters who are working to track down Ability-users.
* Godzilla vs. Megaguirus, a fairly big and bulky prototype VTOL, onto a Shibuya rooftop even after the controls have been rendered almost inoperable. Later, she pilots the same VTOL up high enough for a satellite tracking system to lock onto it, then dives back down and slams it into Godzilla in a kamikaze attack, only bailing out at the last second.
* High Fantasy with only glowing yellow eyes (and a beard) visible beneath their helmets.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Russia's version of Maru Kaite Chikyuu has a well-placed scare cord, followed by,
* Good Luck! Ninomiya-kun a helicopter ramp and lands on Shungo's face ass-first. This may be a warning to the viewer that "yes, it's going to be that kind of show."
* Happy Birthday to Me, Etienne and his rival attempt to force each other off the track. Etienne eventually wins the scuffle (forcing his rival into a ditch) and the race.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality by motorboating his lips.
* Gottlieb has no truly frightening aspects, and the horrors are downplayed to a family-friendly level.
* Graduados, except the seniors and the teenagers, attended high school together in the eighties, and they are now in their forties. Unknown to them, Patricia Longo is Jimena Benitez, the fat girl of the class that everybody insulted and mocked. She got thin, she changed her name... and wants revenge. Several hints of her true identity were released here and there. And one day... a comment from Patricia left Loli pondering. She had a wave of flashbacks in the night, and got her Eureka Moment: Patricia is Jimena!

* hide's in that alcohol would later be a part of why he did actually die.
* Hc Svnt Dracones as well, and the sapient robots known as Cogs can receive Transcendent Implants, albeit illegally as TTI doesn't want that to be known.
* Gor since he never thought he'd be the type to do that. Stalling for time occurs throughout the series as well.
* Harry Potter mistakes concerning the way he treated Harry throughout the series due to growing to care more for Harry's personal happiness than for properly preparing him for his inevitable showdown with Voldemort. He admits that he acted exactly the way Voldemort expects people who actually care for others to act — foolishly.
* Hilariously enough, this is what Cobra Commander becomes after Serpentor becomes head of Cobra in season two of
* Godzilla (2014) has some doubts about Godzilla's ability to defeat the Mutos, in spite of chasing one of the Muto out of Honolulu and hardly being affected by the Navy's gunnery in San Francisco Bay.
* He served as this to Vegeta, corrupting him into a cold-blooded sociopath even by Saiyan standards by nurturing his dark tendencies and
* Guardians of the Galaxy, during the Kyln prison break, an exasperated Gamora comes to this conclusion on her future teammates.
* Gotham City Garage's robot enforcers called "Gardeners" execute whoever gets out of line.
* he sacrificed his life to save Lelouch's. When Lelouch was betrayed and abandoned by everyone, Rolo was the only one who stayed with him, even after Lelouch admitted he was just using Rolo and had tried to kill him numerous times; he then saved Lelouch by overloading his Evil Eye to carry him to safety, fully aware that the strain from using it for so long with so much range would be too much for his heart to endure. As Rolo lays dying, and it meant something to him.
* Guardians of the Galaxy to destroy Ronan. Though you are more likely die yourself from just touching or coming into contact with one of the stones.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Even by Kree standards, Ronan is brutal and shows no empathy towards others.
* Hell Teacher Nube Ritsuko, who switches between appreciating him for being a good person and despise how his side-job is dealing with the ghosts she hates so much. When she finally starts to return his feelings, he had already moved on to Yukime.
* Grow Ver 3 could count as one since every item and creatures are attracted by its gravitational center, even though the red ball itself is placed on a gray ground.
* Heroes has an incredibly creepy example between Eric (who can move other people like puppets) and Meredith.
* Groundhog Day, he sometimes starts to bitch publicly as a way of venting his frustration. Luckily for him, the time loop didn't end on any of those particular days.
* Gorillaz, Cyborg Noodle has naturally appeared in fanarts where she's making out with Real Noodle.
* Heinz advertises that its vinegars are "not made from petroleum." This isn't as absurd as it first appears: petroleum can be used to artificially make some of the ingredients of vinegar. In fact,
* Hell, Pancho Barnes, the lady who owns the bar that Yeager frequents, was doing that stuff back in the
* Happens to Kick and Kendall in the episode "Dancing With the Enemy" on
* Helen of Troy is only fairly attractive, not beautiful (but she is very conscious about her image and spends a lot of time on it; this, coupled with her exotic appeal and personality, is what makes Troy fall in love with her). Odysseus and Agamemnon say that she's the most beautiful woman in the world because the Hellene soldiers will fight more willingly than they would for the real reasons for the war, which are more complicated and less glamorous.
* Heather manages to use her attractiveness in the same way a few times but is still widely hated by her castmates.

* Harry Potter. (Her mother died when Luna was nine, and her father doesn't seem to grasp all of his responsibilities perfectly...)
* Goofy short "Double Dribble", the camera holds on a shot of basketball players standing in line. As the line moves there is a gap, and the camera moves down to a ridiculously short player.
* Grunt pop-science author Mary Roach confirms that the chicken cannon is a real thing. She is silent, however, on the above story—which, given her sense of humor, suggests that it didn't happen.
* Hercules Hades against naive farmboy-ish Hercules who trades almost solely on his superstrength.
* Harry successfully pulls this off in his first interaction with Lucius Malfoy, quite possibly by accident. When Lucius makes veiled references, Harry responds by playing along... badly. His deception is so obvious that Lucius sees through it almost immediately. Then Lucius starts to think it was
* Harry Dresden, the hero, has this in spades. In several instances, he will assume full blame for the choices of others, even through less than logical reasoning, such as failing to inform his girlfriend fully
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys. The first after living long enough to give him three children (who were killed along with her) the second after they were married for probably a few weeks. Both murdered by angry gods. Iolaus had a wife in the first film-length episode, but she died (supposedly in childbirth) and was never mentioned again.
* Hank Pym after their rough divorce got along very well and even had romantic relations before Janet's death.
* Hamlet is set in motion when the ghost of Hamlet's father appears to him and tells him to avenge his murder at the hands of his brother (Hamlet's uncle).
* GoldenEye. Not to mention proving that the genre could have first-rate console titles, not just inferior ports of PC games. Many players didn't even know the game was based on a film.
* Harry Potter protagonist, Dudley's sister, hisses at her brother in annoyance once. Harry proceeds to correct her pronunciation of Parseltongue:
* Highlander: The Series: Spanish Immortal Otavio Consone taught Flamenco dancing to a woman named Anna Hidalgo, whom he hoped to marry. But when Anna revealed that she loved another man and was carrying his child, a furious Consone murdered Anna's lover and ran her down with a car, crippling her for life and ending her dancing career.
* Her relationship to this trope comes to a head in the following episode, "Steven vs Amethyst". Amethyst realizes that while she's been lazing about, Steven has been training hard and has not only caught up to her but is starting to surpass her. Despite that, the episode reveals that Steven considers himself this trope as he has Rose Quartz's great power but is still flailing about when actually using it. He views his achievements as accidental rather than the result of serious skill on his part.
* Good Eats episode on celery has a sketch of a celery drink just made regrowing hair, then shows Alton paying the man whose hair supposedly grew back in private.
* Heaven's Lost Property: Nymph and Astraea decide to eat a watermelon from Ikaros's garden patch. They get carried away and eat the whole melon patch. Considering Ikaros used her whole battle array to kill bugs that were eating her melons, this is somewhat worrying.
* Gödel, Escher, Bach: An Eternal Golden Braid features a Genie too, and it wouldn't be Hofstadter if Achilles wouldn't try out what happens when he wishes that his wish wouldn't be granted.
* Go Mad from the Isolation: Someone goes insane from being locked away from other people for a long time.
* Gordon Ramsay Junior. Despite how he acts on Hell's Kitchen, in real life, he's actually a very nice and friendly mentor, and he's generally much more kind and friendly with child-contestants, and even lets them stick his head in guacamole if they win a challenge. He’s also got five kids of his own.
* He claims that everyone there obeys the traffic laws... of his or her own country of origin.

* he is revealed to be a time remnant of Future Barry Allen, giving him an intimate knowledge of Team Flash that no other villain had. No matter what plan Barry comes up with to stop him, Savitar will simply draw on whatever new memories he gains and plan around it. Only the Heroic Sacrifice
* Gunsmoke story, following the exploits of Marshal Matt Dillon and his deputies as they try to keep the peace in Dodge City, Kansas.
* Heart of Steel Alistair Mechanus uses his mental connection to the network of his island lair to great effect. When he loses his network connection, however, he is forced to resort to manual data entry.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas has the super punch cheat, where any punch that CJ lands on an NPC sends them kilometers away at incredibly high speeds.
* Hero Factory, which has a TV mini series, with another one in the works.
* Gunnery Sergeant Ermey himself doing a guest voice on any given cartoon, notably
* Happily Married couple, who've rigged the entire house with death traps, to prevent one another from getting to their RAV-4 before the other.
* Hearts of Iron II, you can 'liberate' countries whose territory you conquer. If you conquer the Mideast, you can created a united Arab Federation which includes the territory from Egypt to Yemen/Oman and Iraq (but not Iran/Persia, Turkey, or Libya).
* Grace Park got the parts and she was cast as Boomer. The producers were so impressed by her Dee audition that they let her try out for Starbuck, and she was one of two finalists for the role. Subsequently, she didn't need to read for the role of Boomer, and, thinking it was a minor role, got a pleasant surprise when she read the end of the Miniseries and learned her character was a Cylon and a major role.
* Heroes has Peter Petrelli and Hiro Nakamura, the former a huge catalogue of power but wildly inept in use of them (at least until his power gets seriously downgraded and he starts using his head), the latter a manchild "master of time and space".
* her first appearance was just an easter egg" reveals Jake has a bear/dog/rainicorn granddaughter.
* Heroic Sacrifice if he actually lived and despite initially being hostile to Rose (namely because he didn't get to be a dad here), he quickly embraces her as the daughter he never had.
* GW doesn't like giving exact numbers for in-games vehicles because it tends to attract nerd rage. As of confirmed numbers, we have Imperial ships, escort frigates and destroyers are 750 meters to 2 kilometers long, while cruisers are up to 7.5 kilometers long. There is no canon specs for Battleships, Battlebarges and Mechanicum Arcs. The largest ship size confirmed in codex is of Necron Cairn class tomb ship which is 15 kilometers long.
* Half-giants, Veela, Goblins or other similar people are sometimes called "half-breeds", even by occasionally more open-minded characters. Other magical creatures like mermaids, centaurs, or werewolves are also occasionally have the term applied to them even though the former two are entirely non-human and the later are technically just diseased humans. It's probably because they appear to be half-human, half something else. It's not clear to what extent this is a slur and to what extent it is an actual term for
* having graduated at the age of 13, setting a school-wide record that has yet to be borken.
* Hamlet could theoretically be a few days, two or three if you suspend disbelief a little, but then he's gone for perhaps several months, as he travels from Denmark to England and comes back, possibly after spending some time there. The Histories, by necessity, span months, years or decades.
* Haven't You Heard? I'm Sakamoto, and always just ends up looking even more cool than he did before.
* GoodFellas is carried out via a bullet to the head; Tommy himself kills a henchman the same way one scene prior.
* Guns N' Roses), "Sweet Child O'Mine" (his then-girlfriend) and "Rocket Queen" (a girl who wanted to have a band with this name).

* Hanna: Hanna. She's a short, slim teenage girl, but is a highly skilled martial artist and quite good with firearms. Sandy is another example, though really all the Utrax girls may count, as they're just teenagers but have been trained as assassins from childhood. In fact, that's why they were chosen, as people don't expect them to be a threat.I
* Harry Potter unwillingly becomes the Intimidator in the sequel, after initially being seen by various powers as a curiosity/potential leverage on Thor (who was James Potter. Long story). This is partly because of his propensity to act as a
* Grand Theft Auto V gives us The Altruist Cult, one of the most horrific examples of this trope. They fit the archetype as rural woodlands dwellers who are crazy, cannibalistic murderers.
* Halo 3 weekend event, which plays on random weekends as well as on Halloween.
* Halloween III: Season of the Witch, (the one without Michael Myers) the main character is bound to a chair so a laser powered by Stonehenge can shoot out of the microchip in the Halloween mask he is being forced to wear and will cause snakes and bugs to crawl out of his mouth. Anyway, he manages to take out the television from across the room by flinging something at it. The camera cuts away and cuts back to him with a glass shard in his hands, covering the fact that there's no logical way he could have grabbed it.
* Guards! Guards! The Supreme Grand Master of the Elucidated Brethren of the Ebon Night and his attempts to conduct their affairs with proper ceremony run into a snag when one overblown request is met with a casual "yup".
* Gundam, each series has concluded with an awesome final battle between the most powerful mobile suits and pilots.
* Happy Heroes. Needless to say, he packs quite a wallop when he fights monsters.
* GURPS; one which keeps going even though subversions and parodies are numerous enough to form their own subgenre.
* Hell(p) takes place in Hell, so every human character is dead from the start. Made quite obvious due to people retaining any physical injury that killed them forever. Whether demons are alive or not is unclear.
* Glee." Sam's immediate reaction is "I watched that film seven times! Lor menari," (apparently, it's "you have beautiful eyes" in Na'vi.)
* Harry Potter. Lockhart dressed them up like cupids and set them up working as letter-carriers, which they did not seem to enjoy and nor did anyone else, least of all the other teachers. However, that's the only major appearance of dwarves in the entire series.
* good and only then realize that they are having sex. They agree that fat sex is the best sex they have ever had. Lois lets Peter fatten her up, literally shoving the food in. At the end of the episode, she has a heart attack and begrudgingly agrees to get all her fat lipped out of her. The plastic bag full of her fat nearly fills the bathroom of her hospital room. Peter tries having sex with it.
* Goodbye, Mr. Chips, the title character is a retired school teacher whose career ran from the 1870s to the 1910s, and corporal punishment came with the territory. He recalls administering a "thrashing" to a boy caught falsifying his marks on a test, and on another occasion to a boy who climbed up onto the gym roof to retrieve a stray ball (with the implication that he considered a thrashing a good thing if it stopped the boy breaking his neck trying something similar in future).
* Granblue Fantasy a shopkeeper, a blacksmith and a cook, she also happens to be a bartender, an innkeeper and also does various odd jobs as the plot demands.
* "Go Go" has the line "I wanna go cruisin' like Nemo!", in reference to Captain Nemo from
* Gumby cartoon has Father Time accidentally causing various time-related problems for the world because he ate too many sweets before bed.
* Heroic Age in the first episode features a squid-like creature that lives in the sand (though it can also hover above the ground) and has the main character dive into the sand to wrestle it underground.
* Heroic BSoD for being unexpectedly named the club president mainly involves crying in this way, represented by two lanes of tears as wide as her eyes.
* Green Lantern Corps handles the day-to-day operations while the Guardians of the Universe focuses on the big stuff. However, he has shown he can fight when the situation demands it.

* Grey Worm holds this mindset due to his upbringing as a merciless killer with the Unsullied. Doesn't stop him from falling for Missandei. Grey Worm doesn’t even have the words to properly describe his feelings for Missandei, simply invoking this trope, instead: “You make me weak.”
* Hesitant Sacrifice: When having to give their own life for the greater good, the person in question gets emotional about having to die.
* Hetty Lange, who's firmly on the side of the good guys—she seems to have limitless knowledge of
* Harold the Barrel involved the titular character threatening suicide, and the crowd eventually called up his mother.
* Hell, the second to last episode gave a fairly large amount of backstory on Noah.
* Good Burger: The reason Heather was committed to Demented Hills was that, "Small space aliens landed in her head and told her to break into the zoo and free all the kangaroos."
* Higurashi: When They Cry fired, let alone the only doctor in the Village.
* he's actually not there, and is using an invincible illusion to fight in the tournament, so it's impossible for him to be injured.
* Green Lantern: While the more human shaped lanterns tend to wear clothes, many of the more alien among them like Apros and B'ox do not.
* Grimm's Fairy Tale Classics: The witch from "Brother and Sister" punishes her stepchildren by whipping them. When Rose fails to stop her from doing this, Rudolf shields her by covering her with his body.
* Highlander movie, Connor MacLeod's mentor is Ramirez, played by Sean Connery. He's killed by the Kurgan, leaving Connor himself to face him more than five hundred years later.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City, there are a handful of missions that will cause a certain artifact to appear at your mansion after completing them.
* Henrietta Irving gives this as a reason as to why she hasn't confessed her love to Bram Stoker in
* Good Omens has Crowley moving into Aziraphale's small house in a small town(complete with nosy neighbours). The neighbours had long suspected Aziraphale to be gay and Crowley found this amusing, so while Aziraphale is at work, he spends his days banging against the wall and shouting Aziraphale's name.
* Hayato Kazami goes through a near-miss variant during the British GP when he makes contact with the * High Lifes and Low Lifes: At the end of the film, Inspector Tremaine and Sgt. McGill arrive at Mason's mansion and are looking in bewilderment at the shot-up exterior. Mason, who has been injected with a non-fatal dose of insulin, staggers out and addresses them with a string of bizarre militarism-s before declaring that he likes them and passing out.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire's ghost asks Harry to retrieve his corpse, and Harry does so.
* He invokes the trope deliberately in an episode of the anime, when he gets a marriage proposal from an
* Golden Ending, throws them in jail. An allied prosecutor lets them out and says the charges are dropped.
* Haruhi Suzumiya novels don't usually use Story Arcs, but this trope has happened at least twice:
* Granblue Fantasy (which is just her talking to herself while drunk). There's also the question of the vast number of characters who were high-ranking officers/knights in other islands and/or those who had been of royalty or noble blood in general.
* Great Devil War series Death, whose name is Mortimer, has a basement in his house filled with hourglasses, one for every human being, that is both a person's life and indicate how long someone has to live and when they die. In the upper half of the hourglasses, one can see the most important memories that has shaped a certain person, and in the lower half, how that person is going to die, however someone's destiny can be altered. The hourglasses exist in many different sizes, some as small as a thimbles, others the size of a wardrobe. In some of them, the sand is a regular golden color, in others it is red, blue, purple, or a colorful blend. The color of the sand can indicate whether someone is sick and also indicate a person's emotional condition. Yellow indicate sickness, while dark and light indicate the amount of evil and goodness in a person. All of the hourglasses glow with a faint sheen taking on the color of the sand. If an hourglass laid on its side, the corresponding person is able to travel between the world of the dead and the world of the living. If an hourglass is placed upside down, they will receive more lives to live in. In an hourglass belong to an immortal person, the sand run both up and down.

* Haruhi Suzumiya actually interested in) assumes there's no point in trying. It's something like a rite of passage; students do it because all their peers have done it, not because anybody really expects it to go anywhere.
* Halo: Combat Evolved are mobilizing to defend against Covenant boarding parties.
* God commanded Jeremiah not to marry nor have children due to the fact that things in Jerusalem would be so bad during the days of his ministry that people will mourn over the loss of families and children because of the Babylonian invasion and the famine and poverty that would result from it.
* Gravity Falls: In "Double Dipper," Mabel swings the microphone over her head at the end of her karaoke rendition of "Don't Start Unbelieving."
* H. G. Wells all have an everyman protagonist recounting events almost entirely out of their control (although by the end of Sleeper the protagonist takes more of an active part).
* Heroic Age powerful, but may kill themselves if they snap out of it.
* Heroes since it was a pretty awesome day for both characters. Hiro teleported himself into a comic book store, and the shop guy realized that Hiro was the guy from their comic books.
* Gossip Girl, depending on whether or not you believe he had genuine feelings for her.
* Hellsing has this as essentially the reason the entire plot happened. Alucard is the most absurdly powerful and indestructible vampire who has ever existed, so much so that he's working for the good guys by obliterating lesser vampires. So one of the pitifully few enemies who survived the initial encounter decided to pull out all the stops in the hopes of finding a way to truly destroy Alucard for good, including bringing in some others who'd also survived. It still failed.
* Grey Goo (2015) has not one but two of these; the titular Goo and the Shroud, respectively. One's an exploration probe. The other's something two of the factions (the beta/morra and the goo, respectively) are freaking out about.
* Grimoire’s Soul: Towcard may be willing to kill Medhi because he's learned too much, but he's also quite correct that Kesterline's social system is built on nothing but lies, even if he breaks it to Medhi in the least kind way.
* Heroes have been around much longer than anyone thought and that regeneration/self-resurrection is a power that popped up in at least two individuals. And people like Peter, who can basically do anything as the plot demands. There are some religious scenes in the series, such as weddings and funerals that take place in churches or temples. Nobody really brings up how their myriad superpowers would relate to miracles, though.
* Hands Held in the Snow: One of the main characters, Emi L'Hime, is engaged against her will to a noblewoman from a foreign land, marking an extremely rare case of same-sex arranged marriage in fiction.
* Grand Theft Me: The character outright steals other people's bodies to survive.
* Hercules villain Hades, easily overshadow him in the viewer's memories.
* Gorkamorka: A line says that orks sell their craptastic first gun as soon as they can to buy a better one. Once they get older and better equipped, seeing younger orks running around with their own craptastic shootas make them briefly nostalgic.
* Grim Tales from Down Below. While Mandy never exactly looked up to him, Grim was a major part of her childhood. He used to treat her like his snarky niece, then several years later, he married her.

* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983): "Day of the Machines"
* Hellboy, where Abe is placed in a water-filled glass tube to recuperate after being injured by Samael. Due to his fishy nature, it was probably more comfortable and useful than putting him on a hospital bed—although it's not clear how he was supposed to get out again.
* He lead his date through the caves under Canterlot, and ended up finding the imprisoned Princess Cadance.
* Goosebumps books, you need to know about the book being referenced to get a good ending!
* Greystone Inn is a disembodied brain in a jar. As he is on top of a living puppy with a mind of his own, Haynus unfortunately feels the humiliation of not having control over its actions: Anyone can get rid of Haynus by simply using a ball or cookies.
* Gravel (as such, quite a few of said "black ops" had been to kill some of the more insidious members of said community).
* GoodFellas starts showing how Henry Hill enters the mafia world during his childhood. It age cuts to Ray Liotta after a few minutes.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law. His shield went off when he hit "superty".
* Halo 2, in a cutscene early in the game, Master Chief disarms a Covenant bomb on board Cairo Station with the help of Cortana.
* Harry's real parents are absent due to being dead, Harry's aunt and uncle treated Harry like dirt, giving him lousy birthday and Christmas presents, locking him in a tiny closet and letting Dudley get away with bullying Harry, while lavishing all their attention on their son. Dumbledore called them out on this, implying, interestingly enough, that the Dursleys did more damage to
* God of War II) to fire lasers with every swing, and suck out the souls of your enemies).
* Gunsmith Cats manga, Minnie May is masturbating to a photo of her missing boyfriend Kenny when Becky walks in on her.
* Gravity Falls episode "Tourist Trapped". Mabel gets a crush on a local named Norman, and Dipper suspects he's a zombie from his unusual behavior. He turns out to be a bunch of gnomes instead.
* Golden Age Green Lantern, had no vulnerability to yellow, but a similar vulnerability to wood. This was due to his more magical ring being connected to "green, growing things".
* HappinessCharge Pretty Cure! being destroyed, and she joins the team around the time the other Sixth Ranger characters would. Notably, both, Cure Honey and Cure Fortune, had been promoted to be members of the quartet even before the show began, so it was only a matter of time when they would officially join.
* Heritage of the Wolf, one slur dogs use against wolf-dogs is "lobo" (which is Spanish for "wolf").
* Hồ Chí Minh built up an image of this. Several of his famous photographs are of him being affectionate towards and/or surrounded by children, feeding them, celebrating the Mid-Autumn Festival/Children's Holiday with them, etc. Allegedly this is because (in his words) he had neither family nor children, and considered the Vietnamese people his family. He wrote poems about children and their education, as well as letters (which includes the creed of the Young Pioneer Organization), and mentioned the importance of their education and happiness throughout his career and in his will.
* Happens to Aziraphale and Crowley several times, but mostly to Aziraphale who apparently gives people the impression that he is "gayer than a tree full of monkeys on nitrous oxide." Not to mention the fact that Crowley seems to have a habit of calling Aziraphale "angel" with other (human) people present, while Aziraphale calls Crowley "dear" on a regular basis. The most notable incident being when Crowley and Aziraphale give
* Gunnerkrigg Court to keep his critics from asking the wrong questions.
* Gravity Falls features Bill Cipher, a triangular demon who must be summoned from the center of a circle of candles.

* Happy Days: In "They Call It Potsie Love," Joanie develops a crush on Potsie. She falls asleep on the living room couch and fantasizes about getting married to him.
* Goof Troop, Max and PJ lie to their fathers about joining the baseball team, so they try various methods to keep them from going to the games and finding out the truth. One of those methods is filling Goofy and Pete's exhaust pipes with cement.
* Hilarious Outtakes, there's at least one of Matt Hullum (Sarge, Doc, and Wyoming's voice actor) cracking up in the middle of his lines, not only because they're usually hilarious, but also because he often doesn't read them before recording.
* he realized what was happening. He just hid in an unmanned Naboo fighter and stuff happened.
* High on the list of places urban explorers visit. The legality and safety of such is debatable, as abandoned buildings tend to be still privately owned and covered in pigeon poo, syringes, or both.
* Gotham Cobblepot spends most of his screentime impeccably dressed, regularly outmaneuvering and defeating others, both mentally and sometimes physically.
* Her possessiveness is demonstrated earlier in the movie as well. When Danny reacts excitedly to finding a picture of Adelaide Adams in his cigarette packet, she snatches it away from him and bursts out:
* Harry himself that he tells Voldemort exactly how his shiny new weapon works. It's not even really gloating — he's actually trying to give Voldemort one last chance to save his soul.
* Grrl Power, after Sydney punches Dabbler (an alien succubus) in the lower back for an earlier (sexual) prank.
* Highlander II: The Quickening, a random bar patron flips Connor off right before bashing him over the head with a bottle.
* Growing Pains, a girl befriends Carol Seaver just so she can get close to Carol's brother, Mike. Carol feels hurt about being used.
* Happened even earlier in book 7 with the Ellimist doing the offering. He explained that due to cosmic restraints, he couldn't stop the inevitable Yeerk invasion of Earth but he could bring a small remnant of humanity (including the Animorphs) to a sort of wildlife preserve on another planet so that all would not be lost. Turns out that the Ellimist was really just using the offer and subsequent vision of the future as a way to help the Animorphs in their fight.
* Halo 3. When he's captured by the Brutes, Truth tries to force him to activate the Halos, because only a human can do it. When he refuses, the Brutes attempt to force him to do it by physical force. He just punches their chieftain straight in its face and then insults it. Even when Truth himself attempts to force him to light the Halos, Johnson remains defiant and even insults Truth himself straight to his face while he's being manhandled by the Brutes from behind.
* Heels can also be managers (as Vince and Paul have shown) as well as commentators, and—in the case of Nick Patrick—even
* Hey Hey It's Saturday, Drummer "Animal" never spoke a word onscreen. Once, when he received an award, instead of speaking his thanks, he handed a letter to another cast member, who then read it aloud.
* Guy Ritchie he and an employee tried to tamper with. The owner was booked for insurance fraud and grand larceny.
* Harry Potter, women and men both serve in pretty much all positions of the Ministry of Magic, are Aurors (the wizarding equivalent of police officers), are teachers and heads of Hogwarts, and run their own businesses. Both genders also balance family lives (taking care of the home, dealing with the kids, etc.) and having careers and lives of their own.
* Greg Rucka novel, the Big Bad does this in concern to Joanna Dark, the hero. Joanna points out that she herself is ill, mainly because of a barely-healed gunshot wound to the stomach. The Big Bad pulls a gun, reverses and blam. Now both have a gunshot wound to the stomach. Now nobody can say the fight was unequal.
* Greek Ninja appears stoic, as oppose to the whole group surrounding her.
* Grand Theft Auto panic. Incidentally, PC players tend to avoid said patch not because they want to enable it but rather because it disables all modding function (although it has since been reversed). The Steam version of GTA San Andreas are pre-patched.

* Grace O'Connor, fondling her boobs (which were considerably bigger than her previous ones) was first thing she did.
* Happened during WWII to a great extent. The Germans used a great many captured tanks — French ones were used as training, guard and anti-partisan units, Czech ones formed standard combat forces. In the Desert campaign, it was not unknown for both the Axis and Allied sides to scrounge and use each other's captured vehicles so long as the ammo and spares lasted, with Germans operating examples of practically every British tank, whilst so many Italian tanks were captured intact in early 1941 that they were used to equip entire
* Grunts! and Russian Army greatcoat, monitoring her fellow orcs for "ideological instability".
* Hellsing - We don't know how you did it, but being seemingly human and the same age for over 50 years is quite an achievement, Doctor.
* Higurashi: When They Cry for the (former) page image, of course. The eyes change depending on the media, though. The anime goes for cat eyes, as do the sound novels. The manga artists change between this trope and cat eyes.
* He rejoices at having "finally" found someone interested in him, he may have made it look like a love letter on purpose.
* Her broad knowledge of restorative herbs and root magic has been instrumental in keeping the whole coven healthy and active.
* hear the falling C-Gas canisters, he's not sure what type of bomb is falling towards his position until he can actually see them.
* Hide Your Pregnancy: When the actress is pregnant but the character isn't, measures are taken so her baby bump is not visible.
* He famously raped/seduced Queen Leda of Sparta in the form of a swan. According to at least one form of the myth, this led to Leda laying
* Hacking has enabled anyone who's interested to play through all three original-series games as Amy Rose, using her
* Half-Life 2: The Combine occupation of Earth has reduced much of it to a wasteland, populated by hostile alien life forms. Food has been reduced to what must be very revolting, as one NPC says to the player, "You gotta be damn hungry to wait in line for this crap."
* Happosai until it's revealed that the child barely even felt Ranma's fist.
* Happy Days) let Richie, Ralph and Potsie fight the Red Devil gang before finishing the job afterwards.
* Hail, Caesar!, Eddie Mannix is shown running the titular film past a group of clerics to make sure its depiction of Jesus doesn't offend anyone. None of them have any objections to the depiction, but they have questions over whether or not it's realistic for a character to jump from one speeding chariot to another.
* he's a criminal who's pissed off at humans and in 2 episodes ends up causing the End of the World as We Know It. Luckily, Frank is there to fix things.
* Guiders of Our Dreams. Fang murdered Lexia's family AND destroyed her village, and they are forced to work together for a greater cause, which is to kill the queen of Skiya. After a while, they do start to get along and look out for each other. Zephyr and Orpheus are also like this, but they simply don't trust one another.
* Harold Shand, the anti-hero of the classic 1980 British gangster movie
* Grey An Alien Dream Grey is stuck in is a city in ruins and flames that's choking in zombies.
* Gold Coin Comics, Theo, whose job class (healer) is normally reserved for girls, is mistaken for a woman when Lance first meets him.
* Gravity Falls: "Headhunters" began with Mabel, Dipper, and Soos mistaking Grunkle Stan for one of the wax figures in the sealed-off room of the Mystery Shack.
* Gold and White Are Divine: Gold and white are precious, rare and valuable and therefore associated with God or the gods.
* Happens once to Hikaru Gosunkugi in his introductory episode of the anime, when struck by lightning.

* He gets it back (or at least manages to find it again) in the third installment.
* Harry deals with fantasies of Hermione and Daphne naked by thinking of Umbridge naked.
* Harry Potter trigger an ancient magic known as an 'Aperio', where three people separately make the same wish at the same time and are transferred into a world where that wish happened. In this case, the three find themselves in a world where the prophecy was never made and James and Lily Potter are still alive, but Dumbledore was killed by Voldemort years ago and Lucius Malfoy is now the Minister of Magic. As a result, the Hogwarts curriculum is now basically rigged to make sure pure-bloods achieve the best scores while muggle-borns are so prejudiced against that Lily is only able to remain in England because James altered official records to give the impression that she has pure-blood heritage. On a more personal level, Peter Pettigrew's true allegiance is still unknown to the remaining Order members, Ron is Harry's school rival due to various past pranks, and Ginny has spent the last four years in Azkaban for opening the Chamber of Secrets.
* Hamtaro: Ham-Ham Heartbreak, but also a portrait which eyes follow you around for no discernible reason.
* Helena Bertinelli (aka Huntress), aside from a short temper, lacks any of the
* Grim Fandango. He normally looks like a shorter man in a blue suit, with a stylized skull for a head.
* Highlander (1986). He is an immortal who can only die permanently if his head is chopped off. As a result, other methods of death just end with him standing up again as soon as his body has healed enough to stop being dead.
* Help! My Story Has the Mary-Sue Disease by topic, but doubles as general character-writing advice.
* Hey You! What If...: "You Could Turn Into A Giant?" shows that being a giant might seem like a fairy tale, but if you somehow became a giant in reality it would be anything but. You'd have slow reactions and be so heavy that you couldn't stand up. In fact, you'd have to live in a bath.
* Haldon "Half-Maester" is so-called because he supposedly never completed his maester's chain, so is
* Gunnerkrigg Court as they slouch apocalyptically toward their destination.
* Heterosexual Life-Partner Clint about reconciling her status as a world-saving do-gooder Avenger with her identity as Black Widow the ruthless spysassin who Works Alone(TM), and Clint brings up that she's technically helped save the world twice.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone while the villain can't see it.
* Green Rider book, Karigan learns of a ritual the original Riders used to honor their fallen while traveling through time. At the end of the book she restarts the tradition.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, reducing America to tears. He probably would have continued on if England hadn't taken pity on America and stopped him.
* harmless girl scouts minor insults. (Whether it be mocking his Canadian heritage or just approaching him while wearing a t-shirt he doesn't like.)
* Hatsune Miku players who don't have exposure outside the game) aren't aware that the vast majority of Vocaloid music isn't commissioned by a company and is mainly just indie music by individual people that happened to get popular on the Internet.
* Goddamned Bats (since Golbat only evolves with a high level of friendship).
* GURPS Thaumatology: Age of Gold includes "enigmatic White Russian exile" Irina Fedorevna among its magical heroes.
* Grow, the designer will chew out the mechanic and the architect through a cell phone if they build a train without consulting him while he was already working on a project.
* Hank Hill catches Bobby smoking and decides to punish the boy by forcing him to chainsmoke until he's green in the face. Hank then feels compelled to correct his son's smoking technique: "If you're going to do something wrong, do it right."
* Gor, where Tarl/Bosk manages it with a few lines and a Rousing Rock. ("It is the Home Stone of Port Kar.... If you wish it, it shall be so.")
* Hercules: Hades is about to blast Pain for wearing Hercules brand sandals when he's distracted by Panic sipping loudly from a Hercules brand soda cup.

* Grand Blues!, which coincides well with the 4th Anniversary of the game.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), He-Man, Man-At-Arms, Orko and Battle Cat have to travel back to Preternia to stop Skeletor destroying Castle Grayskull with the Wheel Of Infinity.
* Hellboy (2004): Karl Ruprecht Kroenen's revised origin in the movie explains that he used to have a beautiful face as a child, but developed an extreme form of body dysmorphic disorder (referred in the movie as "surgical addiction"). As a result, he butchered own body by removing his own eyelids, lips, toe, and fingernails. During the movie, he always wears a gas mask to filter out germs, and his real face is shown when he's found supposedly dead and taken to Professor Bruttenholm for the autopsy.
* Hannah for Alois. No matter how much he hurts her, she wouldn't think of leaving him, since she absorbed Luka's love for him.
* Harry turns into a girl because Metamorphs experience a random major physical change when their powers first awaken. Due to the inadvisability of shifting anything more complicated than soft tissue, the change is permanent.
* Hapag-Lloyd Flight 3378 ran out of fuel and landed 500 metres short of the runway at Vienna airport on July 12, 2000.
* henchman, with the camera suddenly snapping to the side when Brock breaks his neck.
* Gunbuster pilots looks like a one-piece swimsuit with a sweatshirt over it.
* Guards! Guards! and is aware of every plot against him, wouldn't take notice of their plot until it's too late.
* Heels with a rebellious streak, or who break the rules in new and creative ways.
* Halo 2 into a Covenant carrier, Chief shoves off the bomb and falls to Earth as the ship explodes; only for Commander Keyes to maneuver her ship into his path and "catch" him.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas briefs (both incorrectly listed in-game as “boxers”) found in one of the game’s clothing shops. Meanwhile, there is nothing stopping the player from stripping CJ down to his briefs in a safe house and doing gameplay dressed that way. In point of fact, there are numerous online videos that capture that occurrence.
* Gumball), so they would either pick the whole intro or the whole episode depending on the situation.
* Grandia an NPC in New Parm is all set to celebrate his own funeral. He sincerely believes you should be able to have fun at your own funeral.
* Heroes of the Desk: Repercussions by smashing up the London Bridge, Big Ben, and the Eiffel Tower.
* Half-Minute Hero, you'll be treated to a still picture of what your hero wound up doing because he couldn't proceed (stranded on an island, forced into back-breaking slavery, etc.), and you won't be allowed to save your scores for that attempt.
* Heel–Face Turn adaptation also spoils the ending, wherein Sailor John steals the treasure, but loses it in the sea.
* Hamlet, when a meeting between Ophelia and Hamlet is organized and she greets him by offering to give back several items he had recently given her (most likely love tokens, given that they were betrothed). Given that Hamlet was not in the best mental state and soliloquizing about suicide and death just before the meeting, he doesn't take it well.
* Gravity Falls) GF creator Alex Hirsch has implied that these references were meant more as jokes, but you can find plenty of fanart and fanfics that take the concept seriously.
* Heroes says that yes, he was going to eat them, but they realized how ludicrous that would sound, so they left it vague. It remains to be seen whether they'll ever come up with a different explanation.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army features a sword fight between Prince Nuadda and Hellboy (who else?).
* Goblin King for instance, a 2D Scooby and Shaggy fly through a completely CG background.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters, it's established that the Ben Shui

Chosen One has the ability to cancel out any and all chi magic in the area surrounding them.
* Greg Champion's "I Made a Hundred in the Backyard at Mum's" has a sequel sung to the same tune by Ian Macnamara, "I Took That Wicket".
* Haruhi Suzumiya: This is, technically, the intent of the SOS Brigade. Thanks to their leader they tend to make things much worse whenever they actual get a case.
* Harry discovers that he's the heir of Slytherin (by conquest) and Gryffindor while Hermione is the heir of Ravenclaw.
* Haven: Audrey Parker is so inept at picking out pretty clothes she has to have elderly bachelor brothers do it for her but she wears them so, so well.
* Gravity Falls: In the premiere episode "Tourist Trapped", the first creatures Dipper and Mabel face off against are a group of gnomes looking for a queen.
* Hashima Island of Japan. It was once one of the most densely populated areas in the world, and its main industry was mining. Eventually, the industry died, causing it to suffer the same fate as many other real-world ghost towns.
* here, aggregates unintentional cringe comedy from all corners of the internet. Even though this is a definite case of laughing at the given subject in almost all instances, certain postings and many commentators take a more aggressive and transparently mean-spirited approach towards their subjects.
* Goof Troop to melt his innards''. To his dismay, Goofy loves the dish and asks if he has any hot sauce.
* Grand Theft Auto V after answering a call from Michael while his phone is rigged with a bomb.
* Harrow the Ninth or not, they need to take a moment to regain their composure.
* Happens extremely often at cake shops when they are asked to hand-pipe a message on a cake, as frequently documented by the
* Hardspace: Shipbreaker Mackarel-class and Gecko-class vessels qualify handily, being boxy, angular and mostly gray (aside from company paintjobs). Javelin-class vessels are a bit different, more comparable to near-future science fiction ships with rounder, rocket-like shapes; the data logs you find indicate they're highly modifiable.
* High Priest Akhenadin noticed that Kisara either wouldn't or couldn't summon her powerful Blue-Eyes White Dragon
* Haruhi-chan, Yuki gets into the act herself. Later, Mikuru and Yuki get into a cosplay contest. However, Mikuru cannot hope to beat Yuki in a cosplay-off. She is simply the best there is.
* Great Hyperspace War the first time but sources later in the timeline were mostly made before the retcon and maintain that the species is gone so...
* government public schools, airports), but that's what the morass of First Amendment jurisprudence has tried to untangle. It's also important to note that the societal aspiration to "free speech" is a very American thing, and it's weaker in other countries; many people, even the freest of thinkers, value social stability over the ability to say controversial things and view the American obsession with "free speech" as a way of "saying stupid things for the sake of saying them".
* gnostic is considered the source of suffering in the world. Depending on the sects, this is either because he is deliberately malicious and arrogant, or because he is ignorant about the true nature of things, or a combination of both. Valentianism in particular is quite forgiving towards him, seeing his ignorance as pitiful or even innocent, and holds that he will eventually wise up.
* Half-Life 2 scene, one can see them entering in new coordinates behind Alyx's back.
* Ground Hog Day Loop and which features half an hour of comedy as he complains and makes use of his situation in various different ways. The last ten minutes however has him very seriously empathising with a man who lost his wife by referencing the death of his own son. Something he holds a lot of guilt and grief over, his somewhat silly persona being the there as an attempt to forget about it as he knows he'll never forgive himself.
* Haré+Guu thanks to Guu. When they return to normal, after Haré finds out the Doctor actually is very hard-working, he finds the nasty surprise that he has abused being a kid with some of the island woman, who promptly take Haré away. We hear some smacking sounds and then we see Hare lying on the ground, with his pants pulled down to reveal his red butt.

* God of War: After he saves her, the Oracle of Athens reads Kratos' mind to see the man he truly is... and is horrified to discover that Athena's chosen "hero" is/was a brutal, bloodthirsty Spartan warrior who committed all manner of atrocities.
* Having an older female sibling care for you in some way is a popular roleplay scenario in
* Han Guk Young, Sujeolnyeo Seo-ssi (Lee Tae Ran) dresses like a man and goes out spying at night.
* Haruhi Suzumiya with a tabloid press newspaper, showing what would happen if Haruhi was to spread the picture of the computer club president groping Mikuru.
* Gran Turismo has particularly strong plastic fences. On the Grand Canyon rally course, part of the course travels along the very edge of a cliff with only a foot-tall plastic home depot orange netting keeping a runaway car (or Truck) from careening off the edge. Somehow this flimsy-looking fencing handles the task incredibly well, even so far as bringing a full size Dodge Ram truck doing well over freeway speed to a dead stop.
* Harry takes a potion to permanently turn himself into a girl because the wizarding world is extremely bigoted about homosexuals and crossdressers.
* Hey Arnold! has these constantly, often spearheaded by Sid or Stinky.
* High School Dx D fic that doesn't start with Raynare killing Issei or the protagonist replacing Issei is near impossible. Yes, even if Issei is being replaced with someone who should be too smart or too powerful to be killed by Raynare.
* Halo: The Cole Protocol takes this to extremes; think of Imperial Japan on crack.
* going next-level on her April Fools' pranks, she asks for a new pair of undies.
* Half would ring screaming alarm bells in anyone with even the most basic knowledge of optics. Perfect freestanding, three dimensional, beyond-human-eye-resolution holograms do not spring from nowhere.
* Hellblazer: One arc has John be interrogated by a tribe descended from Cain. His ordeal consists of plunging his hand into boiling water, which will burn him if he's guilty of theft. He exasperatedly sticks his hand in and tells them he's innocent... waiting until he's far out of earshot to scream (having used magic to fake his innocence).
* Gulpin and Swalot are Poison-types themed around digestion and gastric acids; according to Swalot's
* Hawkman looks like "death reheated", causing GA to explain the phrase is "death warmed over".
* Hatchetfield series doesn't like his daughter Alice dating Deb — he'd much rather she go out with a nice girl like Grace Chasity instead. Alice rebuffs this with, "Grace Chasity is a nerdy prude!"
* Heel–Face Turn to save him, thus kickstart the second half of the plot.
* God Loves, Man Kills, Purifiers make it look as if they've killed the Professor, Scott, and Ororo in an explosion when they have actually taken the three prisoners. Only Wolverine's enhanced senses reveal the deception.
* Goliaths have a similar issue. Goliath society is built upon competition and continually topping past achievements. Once a goliath suffers from a permanent injury or begins to lose physical ability due to age, they almost always die trying to do something that tops feats they'd accomplished when they were younger and healthier. This is noted as a serious issue for goliath communities, as it means they never have access to the wisdom that comes with age and experience and must always hope for leaders with innate wisdom, instead, while permanently missing out on leaders with experience.
* Gritha is a Giant woman capable of holding Gil in the palm of her hand who works on Castle Wulfenbach. Her "lab-sister" Susa is at the other extreme at around a foot tall, their creator Dr. Quintus Varangius was
* Half-Life 2 also states that The Combine have placed a giant portal at the bottom of Earth's oceans, which is sending the water to other Combine-conquered worlds.

However, the secondary purpose was terraforming.
* He Who Gets Slapped by Leonid Andreyev, Baron Regnard plagiarizes the title character's work and steals his wife. To hide from the pain of this experience, "He" runs away to France and joins the circus as a clown. In his act, he plays a great philosopher who is slapped by the rest of the troupe.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) in the ending being just one of them.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas was re-released on PC for free for a limited time to promote Rockstar's own gaming platform/launcher around mid-September 2019.
* Haggard likes to switch between English, German, Italian and Latin in their songs.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone an image of someone's greatest desire, but "Men have wasted away in front of it, even gone mad" indulging in the fantasy. Dumbledore stops Harry from becoming one of them.
* Granny's standard approach to gods is that just because they exist is no reason to go around worshiping them - it only makes them start putting on airs.
* Go Animate" videos will pull out all the stops to make sure a character gets grounded and humiliated. Recently, many video makers have taken to the term "GoAnimate Logic" to explain how anyone can do anything and how everything gets put back to normal.
* Green Lantern). Power speciation obviously doesn't apply in such cases; the focus is instead on personality differences. (Although this can still result in power speciation of kind, as different personality types apply the same powers differently.)
* God Slaying Blade Works, gets to earn his happy ending, and one where the 4th Holy Grail War's Lancer gets to die a heroic death just like he wanted instead of getting betrayed and killed like a dog.
* He says this while standing next to Red, who just happens to have chosen fire.
* HECU Marines sociopathic soldiers, there also are soldiers that genuinely dislike what they have been ordered to do.
* .hack//SIGN, which effectively concluded the original Morganna saga, consisted primarily of various characters from the series and the games gathering for a grand party, which culminates in an all-out dance.
* Hey, Wait!: In the heart of enemy territory, the hero narrowly escapes detection when they're told something like "your shoe is untied".
* Hagrid accidentally overhears Snape and Dumbledore arguing about something — Snape apparently promised Dumbledore he'd do something but is now trying to back out of it. No one figures out what this might be until the following book, where it turns out
* Hammers of Misfortune's debut album "The Bastard" has Heavy Mithril written all over it. The album is split in three parts and tells the tale of a bastard son who had been left for dead by his father and seeks revenge later in life with the Blood Ax.
* Heroes Reborn arc Doctor Doom had guard robots that had this programmed into them.
* God Titles like Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, the one who was (existed since the beginning), who is (presently is), and who is yet to come (always will exist), the Great I Am are richly deserved.
* Gotham adds to the backstory of Commissioner Gordon that he was formerly a college football star.
* Heartcore, magic spells require a vocal command to use. This can range from simply calling out the spell's name with weaker spells, like a fireball; to long incantations ending in the spell's name, like Ame's "Devil Drive" attack.
* Goldfinger quips "Three more clicks and Goldfinger would have hit the jackpot" because the bomb originally was intended to be defused with 3 (003) seconds left.
* Gravity Falls hides pieces of Journal #2 inside his over-sized pompadour.
* guaranteeing that German intelligence would know something was up and put their military on alert, and then canceling an early order to abort, just so they could get a good idea of what the Wehrmacht had in the way coastal defenses to better plan the ''real'' invasion.

* Hand of Thrawn through it and into the generator building to destroy it, bringing down the shields right as a massive space battle breaks out overhead, which could devastate the planet's surface.
* Goblin Market", is about a girl who starves herself after giving in to temptation and eating fairy food.
* Hellsing Ultimate: Each episode had the Millennium Lieutenants with their overconfidence thinking they're a match for Hellsing... before Alucard tears them to shreds.
* He did this again in "For Real", It's not just to frighten the masses, but also to keep an eye on the Titans East who are "participating" in his "Ultimate Titans Challenge". The civilians all cheer on the Titans East through the entire thing.
* Hilariously, Planters Peanuts actually got in trouble for doing this on Twitter. The company made three of their own meme accounts to promote their new “Baby Nut” mascot, which violates Twitter’s spam rules, and thus the accounts were banned.
* Greg to be about growing out of the childhood illusion of Christmas. It goes the other way too, being lampshaded quite frequently by DJs who think they're being more subversive by playing it than they actually are.
* Grey Hat hackers rather than with any intent of helping or harming the system or its owner. Many offer to fix the exploit for a price to profit off of it, however.
* Grand Finale), but in his case it is subverted by showing him to be alive and well in the framing story.
* GURPS Fantasy Bestiary describes several types of carnivorous plants in its Fantastic Plants section.
* Grand Theft Auto, the Department of Homeland Security), falling into this trope.
* Gravity Falls: Played for laughs in "Boyz Crazy" when Stan tells Dipper that subliminal mind control messages are in music all the time.
* Highborn, when a wizard suggests that Jessica the Gorgon might be pregnant, Trillian's reaction is "No! Don't you even suggest THAT!"
* Heartbreak Ridge in the Korean War. One of the characters handwaves this by saying "we joined the Corps later." The real reason for this unlikely situation is that the filmmakers tried to get military support from the US Army but they rejected the request, unhappy with the script. When the Marines offered to help instead, the characters were hastily rewritten to be Marines, and the handwave thrown in.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) Kobra Khan is shackled and muzzled when transported. The muzzle is left on in his prison cell due to him being able to spit acid-like venom.
* Harry the Handsome Executive opens doors by kicking them in—but if they're locked, he has to use the key first.
* Goblins, Complains-of-Names says that Minmax's name is an oxymoron, to which Minmax replies "Well, you are a moron."
* Guardians of Order produced a small number of card games whose mechanics were inspired by their Tri-Stat system; one such title was
* Helen Hunt, including the original finale - and in some appropriate resonance, would also do the opener for the series revival in 2019.
* Heathcliff & the Catillac Cats featured a brand of cat food literally called "Brand X", which Heathcliff actually prefers.
* Golden Sun, his weapons' special effects activate much more frequently than anyone else's, and with the right sword, he can deal tremendous physical damage.
* Gossip Girl Serena gives her mask to Jenny at the Masquerade, causing Nate to confess his love for SERENA to Jenny. Blair, his girlfriend at the time, dumps him when she finds out, and Serena didn't recognize his true feelings until much later.
* Granny Weatherwax is very good at this, managing to fade into the foreground and occasionally go where ever she'd like while people are keeping their eye out for her.
* Golden Age — Superman had originally been conceived as being from the future). Even after the yellow sun explanation came into play, Krypton was still described as having a much greater mass than Earth.

* Harry Potter are capable of sensing and even responding to a person's immediate thoughts.
* Goldfinger, Oddjob is sucked out of the plane, head first, via Bond putting all his strength into stabbing through a plane window.
* Good Omens: Anathema Device and Newton Pulsifer have both given their vehicles names (hippy Anathema's is a bike; loser Newton's is the worst car ever). They're literally destined to hook up.
* Grand Master Flash And The Furious Five shows the band from a distance, but still on the foreground of an otherwise empty street.
* Gotham episode "The Blade's Path", Ed Nygma, after stealing what he hopes are mind-enhancing drugs, but has been told are actually sugar pills, encounters Solomon Grundy/Butch, who knocks him out. Upon recovering consciousness, he mutters "Sugar pills, my foot! That dream was horrible!" before noticing Grundy is still there.
* Heavy Weapons Guy he will rip people limb from limb with his bare hands.
* GoodFellas: Borderline. For the most part it's not, but they do appear to bond at times. Like when Tommy asks Henry advice on a bigoted girl she's dating who doesn't like Italians.
* Green Lantern would actually work, even citing the M'Naughten guideline.
* Harsh Times into the military doing black ops for the Department of Homeland Security, but first he has to find a way to beat the drug test.
* Grand Finale like the engine's broken). The characters go as far as taking selfies with the guards to really sell the "clueless tourist" angle.
* Green Hill Zone and Chemical Plant Zone, both zones from the original Genesis titles, are reimagined for the game. Green Hill Zone has gained a desert because of Eggman, which includes new locations. Likewise, the place is filled with robot leftovers everywhere due to the countless fights Sonic and Eggman had over the years. Chemical Plant Zone, likewise, has a story justification for its inclusion, now becoming the space-port towards Eggman's Death Egg.
* Gundam befriending—or falling in love—with the Newtype and being forced to fight them.
* Harbinger (Finmonster) a normal weapon, given its ability to harm supernatural entities.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas mission "Green Goo", it's always the third box that contains the eponymous green goo you're looking for.
* GUN×SWORD: Van gets this for a moment when he sees the Claw pass.
* Heroes "R" Us is exactly what Heiss deserves, and leaves him there. This backfires badly when Heiss escapes and seeks his revenge, becoming a recurring villain in the series.
* Hägar the Horrible tends to be guilty of this. In general there are maybe seven or so basic setups (Hägar getting nagged on by his wife, Hägar and Lucky Eddie stuck on a deserted island, vikings attacking some noble's castle, Hägar returning from Paris...) that are repeated over and over again.
* HauntedWeen: The whole mess starts because Eddie accidentally impales a girl while trying to scare her. He then butchers her with a machete for seemingly no reason.
* GoGo Sentai Boukenger. It's even defeated in the traditional way when DaiBouken drills away the first letter on its forehead.
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child rife with convoluted plots and questionable characterization?
* Heart of the Woods with the last of her strength, showing just how great the difference between them is.
* Heel–Face Turn, and were redeeming influences on each other as a result - plus Natasha was (and is) a lethal combatant in her own right.
* Hercules has the song "I Won't Say I'm In Love", in which Meg sings about all of the things she will never say.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban everything. This causes her to get a B-equivalent in Defence Against The Dark Arts, making that class the only one where Harry beat her in that year's exams.

* have their brain and/or body frozen after death. They accumulate a ton of money for the procedure, and the interest generated from that money is used to pay for the upkeep of their brain.
* Go On "Go for the Gold Watch": While Ryan is celebrating that his show is the #1 rated radio show in LA, Terrell Owens pulls out a Gatorade cooler and dumps it on him.
* Harvest Moon in the latter. Every other game is just about a peaceful farming life in which your goals are set up by yourself, like maximizing your profits and getting married.
* Hail to the King, a human wakes up in King Sombra's body. When he ignorantly asks if Princess Cadence is Sombra's daughter, this is her reaction.
* GSN among others) usually have ticket plugs and sweepstakes mailing information excised, as well as having shows with cigarettes as sponsors for those particular shows excluded from replays.
* having gone to some length to avoid military service themselves. Liberal bloggers have also adopted the "chairborne" terminology, as well as referring to "the 101st Fighting Keyboards" and the like.
* Guild members must pay the Guild and the Guildmaster their share of all loot before receiving their cut.
* He finally acquiesced in 2021 in order to promote the new Wallflowers album and gave a few
* Heralds of Valdemar: When Starblade k'Sheyna relives his torture in his nightmares, one scene he and we both see is Starblade kissing Mornelithe's feet in adoration.
* Happy Heroes and doing good deeds. One of those deeds is to help a boy open a can of tomato soda, which the monster finds so hard that he whips out a knife to open the can and gets the soda all over the kid, who falls over. Sweet S. comes to the scene and thinks Punk Monster just killed the child since the soda on the kid and the knife looks like blood.
* GUI: Ctrl-C is copy-to-clipboard. Command line / Shell prompt: Ctrl-C is
* Heart In Hand shipping hockey players Sidney Crosby and Alexander Ovechkin before the author changed the characters' names and teams to original ones after the fic began attracting readers outside of the hockey RPF fandom.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City, one mission includes you and Lance Vance beating up two cops and taking their uniforms. They fit perfectly, although Tommy Vercetti complains that it's "a bit tight around the crotch".
* Hercules: The Animated Series taking place during Herc's high school years (a period skipped over entirely in the film) with Hercules always self-identifying as a "hero in training," and looking a tad scrawny compared to his adult self from the latter two-thirds of the movie.
* Guzzler, has living flames that chase the player around the mazes, and the player has to extinguish them with water absorbed from puddles.
* Herman's Head, Herman's CPR usage on a friend ends up cracking some of her ribs. Unfortunately, a lawyer seems to take advantage of the general lack of knowledge of CPR risks to get the friend to sue Herman for the injuries.
* Go-Karting with Bowser: The villain puts aside their differences with the hero to play a game or spend some quality time together.
* Halloween III: Season of the Witch returned to the Michael Myers saga.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn: The adventuring party for most of the early game.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, though revealed to be much more insightful than he appears.
* he falls on the floor, you can see him injecting something into his arm, maybe it's some kind of super-duper high-tech Enclave Rad-X?
* Greasy Spoon. Despite the disgusting food, Garfield and Jon frequently ate there.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, who taught her each of their languages (judicious use of time-stopping was apparently used). This presumably means that she also speaks Egyptian, Greek, and Hindi, along with god (of death) knows how many other languages.
* Helen is also the daughter of Tyndareus. Her mother believes that she hatched from an egg after she had intercourse with Zeus in the form of a swan because she is insane. However, the story has taken life of its own and become a rumor that Helen is of divine origin.

* Groove Squad school rival), was made as a pilot. The series was not picked up.
* Hanna in the Moccan hotel, cause she never been in a place with electricity and tv before.
* Goofy's First Love" features two brief gags where Mickey, Donald, and Goofy are flung past Minnie and inadvertently end up wearing her clothes, both occasions resulting in Minnie being briefly nude.
* Hemlock Grove: Dr. Johann Pryce. He's not just completely unremarkable, one might even get the impression that he's actually asexual before he displays an interest in men in later seasons.
* He Who Fights Monsters: When a victim of bullying ends up being one themselves.
* GURPS, instead you have to rely on being so far away that sensor locks are nearly impossible. While some degree of stealth is possible, the heat generated by engines is a serious problem. Closer in, electronic counter measures can prevent a ship that has been spotted from being easily hit.
* Goodfellas, Morris sells wigs for a living and praises their reliability in a commercial shown on TV. Seconds later his own wig can't endure the beating delivered by wiseguy Jimmy Conway, though.
* Gone. He fell for her because she was the only girl who hadn't fallen for his charms.
* High Diving Hare tricks Yosemite Sam into jumping off a high dive into a barrel of water, except there's no water in the barrel. Bugs dumps a bucket of water after Sam, and Sam tries to get the water to fall faster than he so it'll be there for him to land in. The water lands on the barrel in time... Sam misses the barrel entirely.
* Hackers. Notably, the villain is a cyberpunk themed hacker and is attempting to cause an environmental disaster to make himself extraordinarily rich. He just plans to blame the teen hackers.
* Hajime no Ippo it's more like punched across the ring, but Ippo sends Hisato flying across the mat, flipping in the air until he finally rolls to a stop and is declared K.O.'d. It was Ippo's first and last punch in that match to boot, after taking a counter that was considered to be the equivalent of Two Tons of weight behind it.
* Harry Potter. He better be asexual, or else he's going to live a life of forced celibacy, or have to romance giantesses.
* Gossip Girl. The third time around Blair was single again; she confessed her love for Chuck once more and knowing that he felt the same way about her begged him to tell her. He didn't.
* Good Omens Unfortunately for rogue demon Crowley, it's more likely than you think.
* Going from an AR-15 style mag release (a button on the side of the magazine well) to one like an AK-47 (a lever on the back of the mag well) then to one like on most hunting rifles (in front of the mag well), If you're really used to one platform, but then use a completely different one, then don't be surprised if you reflexively use the motions for the completely wrong gun!
* Harry Potter to report You-Know-Who's return, because no mainstream paper will report it.
* Gods and Generals Actual Events —> Book —> Movie —> Video Game
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) by using an Oxygen Destroyer to wipe out both Godzilla and King Ghidorah in the water (this only harms Godzilla, who is forced to retreat to his underwater kingdom for cardiac recovery) and without Godzilla to intervene, King Ghidorah is free to take over Washington D.C. as his new base of operations. Even so, the humans helped Ghidorah gain a soldier in Rodan by pitting Rodan against him only for Ghidorah to overpower the radioactive pterosaur into serving him. Fortunately, Dr. Serizawa and Mark Russell are able to revive Godzilla with a nuclear warhead. Even with this boost in strength courtesy of the humans in assisting him, Godzilla still struggled in taking down King Ghidorah though fortunate for him Mothra aided Godzilla by giving him a power boost from her own body's energy while Emma and Madison Russell distracted Ghidorah long enough for Godzilla to gain the strategic advantage. All in all, the US military can be blamed entirely for the destruction of Washington D.C. since had they not intervened, Godzilla could have dismembered Ghidorah in the oceans and ended it there.

* Happy Feet Two: Will the Krill believes "black holes" (whales, actually) are myths to keep people in the swarm.
* Heroes of the Storm (at least in theory — they haven't been shown in action thus far).
* Headless Horseman, Headless makes all of his kills by decapitation as he needs to deliver the heads to Hell to keep his end of the bargian.
* Goddess Creation System Xiaxi looks at the daughter doing one such thing for her family and lampshades the trope, thinking that Yixin's kindness towards her family is rooted in pure evil.
* Hawkwind incorporated a stage dancer called The Amazing Stacia, who stood well over 1.8 meters tall and who, onstage, regarded clothing as a constricting inconvenience.
* Hakuouki, Okita Souji promises to kill Chizuru for all manner of transgressions, such as getting in his way in combat or telling anyone about his illness. By the end of his route, he manages to turn it almost into an endearment.
* Hart's Hope's entire power-up ritual by duplicating it as she goes along.
* Halo: Combat Evolved part of Master Chief's HUD, and didn't show up anyplace else.
* Go Fly A Kite". Verne accidentally interrupts Benjamin Franklin's famous kite experiment, causing the electricity in present day Hill Valley to disappear. Doc and Marty must head back to 1752 and simulate a storm in order for Franklin to make his discovery.
* Hand Wave why so many kryptonian survivors, objects and meteors ended up on Earth.
* Haibane Renmei, the Haibane have small wings. They can move a little, but never fold or really flap. The wings are always held stiffly behind them or to their sides. It's even mentioned that Haibane can't fly. The series' trailer has an extremely quick flash of an X-ray of a Haibane wing, which indicates that only half of the wing bones are outside their body; the other half, required to fold them, lays flat in their backs. A fan theory suggests that they break out all the way when the Day of Flight arrives.
* Henchmen #21 and #24 seem to have these debates a lot. Another episode showed them arguing over whether or not
* Grell gets really excited at the thought of both cutting Sebastian into pieces and having his babies.
* Hellboy's cosmology, Lemuria was destroyed in the first war against the Ogdru Jahad.
* Good Girl Gone Bad: A good girl turns evil due to tragedy or trauma.
* Half-Life 2 mentions off-hand the existence of several dimensions and how time and space works differently in each. Freeman didn't age between the events at Black Mesa and the events of Half-Life 2, probably because he was put in one of these dimensions by the G-Man, where Freeman decided to take a nap.
* Grant Morrison run, the Men in Black are only one subgroup of a massive organization that has different suits for ostensibly different purposes (the Men in Green, for instance, are more scatterbrained, whereas the Men in Mauve are implied to be completely ruthless).
* has never gotten over his devotion to his childhood friend Lily Evans, even decades after she broke off their friendship. In fact, if it hadn't been her Voldemort killed, he would never have made his Heel–Face Turn.
* Gorou's (at the time) girlfriend, Futaba, also was killed by a Greed during the Tokyo Disaster. Gorou tells Kou that they are in a long-distance relationship, but a little bit of digging on Yuuki's part reveals that he's lying.
* Heroes of Might and Magic. Somewhat justified in that they were specifically created for that purpose by infusing human criminals with demon blood.

* Godzilla uses a similar origin, but Zilla was mutated from a marine iguana instead.
* H.B. Warner and Dorothy Cumming, who played Jesus and the Virgin Mary in the 1927 silent film
* H. G. Wells, had the all-destroying alien tripods land in London at least partly with the intention of having them reduce his home districts of London, Woking and Bromley, to smouldering corpse-heavy rubble. Wells utterly despised Bromley for its parochial mentality and its lower-middle-class smug smallmindedness. He also wanted to get even for long, soul-destroying thirteen-hour days spent in a miserable McJob working for a tiny-minded bully. Although today's Woking, London, boasts a statue of an alien tripod on the main street, to commemorate Wells' vision...
* Hard-Drinking Party Girl were attached to Zelda-related projects for a while too.
* Heavensward especially hard, affecting them even long after the event.
* Heroes, Hiro met Charlie, his doomed love interest, in one of these in Midland, Texas, called the Burnt Toast Diner. There was a later sad example of in-humor: the diner Hiro and Nathan met at was called Fly By Night.
* Heart, but at least they weren't using the song because of some perceived lyrical meaning.
* Grave Encounters deconstructs this to the point where it bears to question if being the sole survivor is truly a good thing. Lance was ultimately driven mad after years of being trapped in the horrifying alternate dimension, and Alex was forced to kill his love interest in order to get out alive... and alone.
* Henry Ford is sometimes believed to be the inventor of the automobile. Gottlieb Daimler and Karl Benz actually invented the vehicle twenty years before Ford. He wasn't even the first person to invent the assembly line method of mass production (that would be Ransom Olds, the founder of Oldsmobile) though Ford and other figures in his company did significantly improve it.
* He draws cat whiskers on her face. In fact, when questioned, he reveals that he never even thought of anything else that he could possible do to someone who's sleeping.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers is an anime and games otaku; he has stated he prefers 2D to 3D and is a direct parody to Japan's (the country) otaku culture.
* her case it makes her endearing rather than annoying. It helps that as proud as she is, she's equally generous and kindhearted.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix. The Department of Mysteries is a very strange place.
* Hanako and Alice walk back to the hotel together under an umbrella at the end of Volume 1 of * Hellblazer movie adaptation, where John is a gun-totting American exorcist.
* he had Nate and co completely helpless, but didn't just kill them because he wanted Nate "to see Shambhala and die knowing that [Lazarevic has] taken it from him."
* Harry makes a sandwich using tomato, cucumber, lettuce, pumpkin, hummus, cabbage, cheese, jam, and sunflower seeds.
* Gravity Falls, with the season one finale bumping the show up to Level 4.
* Heroic Willpower. And even then it is clearly shown that he might fold under that pressure at any moment.
* Healthy Country Air: The country is good for the ill, especially those with respiratory-based illnesses.
* Halo 3: ODST gives the player a first-person view of an orbital drop.
* Guile Hero to make a hole, this time in his hat. The bandit obliges, and mentions that he can't give him any more holes, since he's out of bullets, at which point Herschel punches him out and takes back his money.
* Glurge-y Facebook spam will often end with something to the effect of, "Only 3% of your friends will be brave enough to share this," effectively trying to guilt the reader into helping the spam proliferate.
* Hard-Drinking Party Girl — A fixture of the classic harem is to have at least one rowdy and sexually liberated girl.

* Gravity Falls belting out a refrain of "We'll Meet Again" (and playing the piano for it) while reintroducing himself to Stanford Pines. Definitely an example of the third kind, for while Bill is already a megalomaniacal psychopath, his impatience to get out of Gravity Falls has made him even crazier than usual.
* Gold? Jokes have been made about an alternate Australia being made out of gold, but one can still never be too sure.
* Grand Theft Auto Online allow the player to oversee and participate in the smuggling of weapons and other contraband.
* "Hate Me", by Blue October, is from the viewpoint of an alcoholic/drug addict singing to his mother.
* Greek Mythology, Laelaps is a hunting dog which never failed to catch what she was hunting. When Cephalus decided to use her to hunt the Teumessian Fox, which could never be caught, the chase went on until Zeus decided to turn both to stone and put them to the sky as constellations Canis Major and Canis Minor.
* Hakkai is the team cook, being the only one who can actually make anything edible this might be more a common sense arrangement. There's a flashback episode revolving around snow and the four of them eating sukiyaki together
* Happiness Charge and wishing the viewers will keep watching the series.
* Heroic Sacrifice is "a beautiful way to die." Though that's not to say she isn't right.
* Green vs. Red to Lupin's four decade history scattered through the film.
* Golden Mean Fallacy: Coming to the conclusion that the right answer is moderation between the two extremes, even if that doesn't actually make much sense.
* Guild Wars, most spells and other skills have the color of their casting animation determined by the class and attribute the skill belongs to.
* Highlander has an episode where Duncan’s sword fight is caught on tape. The guy asks Duncan to kill his wife and will make the tape public if he refuses. Duncan goes to the wife for the tape but naturally doesn’t kill her. Meanwhile the immortal friend of the guy Duncan killed is after Duncan. The guy shows up at the dojo and tries to get Duncan into a plot, mentioning the story itself. Duncan naturally refuses and kicks the guy out.
* Hideaki Anno into re-dubbing the show with a new cast when it was picked up for streaming on the platform in 2019.
* GoldenEye to James Bond and even saying she has no problem sending him to his death as long as it was worthwhile, M's farewell to him is:
* High Fidelity, when Rob thinks about how he tends to look at someone differently after finding out they're interested in him.
* Gotham: Jane Doe has this ability as a result of experiments performed on her by Dr. Strange. She's capable of taking any person's form simply by touching them.
* Goofy short "The Big Wash", he is turned into a giant living water balloon due to a tap hose stuck in his pants, which swells his whole outfit with water until it bursts.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality that by "working on it" he means "trying to become God".
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, England irritates everyone by falling asleep during a meeting. America suggests they just let him sleep, in hopes that he'll talk in his sleep and say something embarrassing. England (who raised America) then mutters "America, did you wet the bed again?"
* Hannah Montana episode "Mascot Love". Robby and Jackson are trying to fix the garbage disposal/sink in the kitchen which leads to Robby betting $50 that Jackson couldn't do it on his own. When alone, Jackson pauses and says to himself that if he's going to be acting like a plumber then he should look the part, so he steps back and pulls down the back of his jeans to show off his underwear, and carries on.
* Grey is.... He dies sometime in the two years White is gone. We get to see a fair amount of him in the flashbacks though.
* GURPS that the character will never grow older or die of old age, it confers no resistance to disease or harm. Full biological immortality additionally requires immunity to disease and ingested poison (20 points) and Regeneration (regular, radiation only -60%) (15 points) for a total of 50 points. Other forms of immortality require additional powers. Unkillable 2 is common (100 points, can be discounted by achilles heals or hindrances). Radiation tolerance, upgraded regeneration, regrowth, immunity to all metabolic hazards and upgraded regeneration can create nigh invulnerability. Resurrective immortality (Highlander, Ajin) can be pulled off unkillable 1 (highlander, with beheading achilles heal) or unkillable 2 (ajin) and regeneration (between normal and fast for highlander, extreme for ajin) with a custom -60% limiter that makes regeneration work only when a character is dead (-5x HT or fails a death check). Ajin would also have regrowth (only when dead -60%).

* has a detective taking over the family business and a secretary that should be dead.
* Grampa vs. Sexual Inadequacy", when Grampa in a fit of rage told him that he was an accident, Homer abandoned him on the roadside. When he informed Marge of this, she reminded him that he tells Bart he’s an accident all the time. Homer defends himself by saying that when he does it, "it's cute". The cycle of abuse caused by the Simpson men's shoddy parenting is lampshaded throughout the series.
* Gungrave of little studs and buttons. Even in normal clothes he wears a black longcoat that is mostly prominent in the anime (in the game he's seen wearing it only in the opening and quickly changes to his "battle suit").
* Hellsister Trilogy taunts her evil duplicate, telling she's nothing but a weak, pathetic copy who can't
* Gyo, which goes to quite extraordinary lengths in its attempt to devour the heroes. Though the circumstances aren't entirely clear, this example may be justified, as the fish in question have been cybernetically (and, it is strongly implied, supernaturally) augmented for the specific purpose of killing and inflicting terror on humans; many are already dead or dying and seem more driven on by the machines attached to them rather than any natural urge to feed.
* Heck, Arthur winds up creating a new fad by just popping a bottle cap. The kids instantly drop the new toys to get in on it and by the end of the episode, Woogles are in the bargain bin.
* Going Fur a SwimShowing that you can afford to wear fur even at the beach or pool.
* Hellraiser: Inferno The Wire Twins Cenobites also seem to be lacking eyes.
* Gone with the Wind: Rhett himself quotes this just before he leaves Scarlett, Melanie, the two children, and Prissy, to finally (and belatedly) join the war against the Yankees.
* Guinness Book of World Records list the greatest amount of weight lifted by a woman to be 3000 lbs, which was lifted Josie Wahlford, the first wrestler to ever be called a "world champion", in the form of 18 men on a platform attached to a special harness. But assisted by a harness or not, 3000 lbs is still a lot of weight.
* Guilty Gear Xrd -REVELATOR- Let's Rock! Edition includes a CD soundtrack, red vinyl soundtrack, and artbook.
* Harley Quinn while in most comics Harely is too immature for that kind of position.
* Happy Rhodes is a singer / songwriter / instrumentalist. She gets mistaken for
* Halloweentown: A setting with a very stylized creepy, gothic, Halloween theme.
* Harry Potter minor and major characters die or are implied to have died.
* He made his grand entrance by beating the shit out of Tim Drake, the current Robin, in the apparent belief this would make him Robin. (Jason Todd expressed his return to life by beating up Tim. Tim is kind of the
* Grand Finale, Bobby's meat-judging team is left stranded in a creek after fans from a rival school replace their driver and hijack their bus.
* Gravity Falls are discovered, they all swallow red crystals that cause them to disappear.
* Guardian adds an original character named Imogen who is a temple swordfighter, implied to be of the same discipline as Auron, as the muscle on Lady Ginnem's pilgrimage.

* Grendel are simultaneously assassinated at a summit. It ends up causing permanent damage to human civilisation.
* He does screenwriting with his brother Jonathan, his wife Emma Thomas will usually be producing, Wally Pfister will be doing cinematography (and after Pfister shifting to direction, this post is taken up by Hoyte van Hoytema), Nathan Crowley handles production design, Lee Smith will be editing, either David Julyan or
* He probably does. It's likely a family tradition. Look at the Vetinari family arms. Blazon: Sable — that is, black (and
* Heaven's River, Bob designs probes that can coast through a system and remain largely undetected due to their small profile and efficient heat sinks. Since he's building them while hiding in the system's Oort cloud, he has a bright idea to put some of that ice floating out there with the temperature of a few Kelvin inside the probes and have all the heat dumped there. Eventually, the temp will rise enough to be detectable, but it'll take a long time. At the same time, the probes will be able to take active scans using their SUDDARs, since the aliens inhabiting the system haven't discovered subspace and wouldn't pick up the scans.
* Highlander can infuse some merit in the live-action corner of the franchise again.
* Handwave: A work gives a token acknowledgement and dismissal of an inconsistency.
* Greek: When Evan breaks up with Casey, he coldly demands his lavalier back in the most publicly humiliating way imaginable.
* Heartbroken Badass: Even badasses can be victims of unrequited love.
* Gruntz, the final stage of the final level has a TON of enemy gruntz with different tools at the end. Fortunately, you have a large army of gruntz with you as well. Don't expect most of your gruntz to survive.
* God Complex is a mash-up of mythology, post-apocalyptic, and fantasy tropes. Mortals are extinct but now all the mythology gods are back trying to figure out what to do now that they have no one left to pray to them.
* Harvester in response to his mother preaching against violence in media.
* "Hi, Doctor Nick!") is an amoral quack who'll show up at any medical emergency, sometimes pursued by angry former patients.
* Hero in the Shadows like that. He then dies, after which the Waylander from that dimension comes home to his wife. The End. Early in the novel there is a reference to a fortune teller prophesying that Waylander will never know peace until he looks up into his own face. Which is exactly what happens: after saving his wife and child in an alternate past reality and preventing the moment that turns him into a assassin he dies looking up at the alternate version of himself, knowing he is free from the nightmare his life would become.
* Highlander II: The Quickening replaced "The Planet Zeist" with "The Distant Past" and walked right into this trope.
* Harvey Kurtzman left in 1958 (except for a brief return in 1984-88), but their prolificacy in the early days (when it was more of a comic book than a magazine) was what helped get the mag off the ground.
* Harold and Maude gets rid of his hearse, hoping he will let go of his obsession with the grave, she gets him a Jaguar XK-E. Which he then turns into a hearse.
* Gorillaz were caused by this injury, as "a bumper to the face will do that to ya."
* Heralds of Valdemar trilogy, Elspeth comments humorously on Kero's penchant for dry understatement, describing an incident in which, caught up in a flood that washed away half a town, all she wrote was "It's a little wet here, be back when I can."
* Haruhi Suzumiya: Yuki/Ryoko and Kyon/Ryoko were two of the most popular pairings even back when all that was known about Ryoko was that she tried to kill Kyon and Yuki killed her in his defense.
* Gore Gazette). They also hated anything that wasn't a low-quality Z-grade gorefest and trashed Hollywood fare for being crowd-pleasing blockbuster fare, making them an early form of the hipster in a way (despite all of the racist comments they made in their reviews).
* He also points out that as long as the prosecutor and defender argue properly for their own sides, the one who wins the argument will be the one who is actually right, thus uncovering the truth of the case. This is nothing less than the core principle of adversarial trial.

* Hägar the Horrible comic, Lucky Eddie fills this role when necessary.
* Goldwater, an amateur photographer, always cherished a candid photograph he took of Kennedy during a White House reception. Goldwater sent Kennedy the photo, only to have the President return it to him with a friendly inscription urging Goldwater to become a professional photographer!
* Grand Theft Auto and become popular again just for appearing in the game.
* Happy! was supposed to play a giant foul-mouthed baby, but Weird Al does not swear, so the showrunners allowed him to ad-lib lines where necessary.
* Happy Halloween, Scooby-Doo! is the Batman villain Scarecrow, and so far, Batman himself isn't confirmed to be in the movie.
* Grand Theft Auto V. Now, while you can see their mouth moving in case you speak through your microphone during the game, every character refers to them as a mute, often calling them creepy and weird for it.
* Glowfic and have to be caught up, and (sometimes) they are caught up onscreen, via some old character explaining it to them in conversation.
* Harrison Ford. The matchbook is for the Blue Parrot nightclub, with the number of Michelle's contact written on it.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, which has a region south of Las Venturas called Hankypanky Point.
* Heretic, if an attack would guarantee a one-hit kill or render the enemy as good as dead (such as by transforming them into something weak), boss monsters are either completely immune to it (in the case of special effects) or take a negligible amount of damage (in the case of literal one hit kills).
* Heath will then give a different fake sponsorship for the episode, usually in the form of a play on words of a religious phrase or product.
* Gonna Be the Twin-Tail!! who sees Tail Red has this reaction, even the villains - in their cases, it's both invoked and exploited in order to give Tail Red the edge on combat.
* Hidan is very good at this, which greatly annoys his partner Kakuzu.
* Godzilla movies are released in the United States without the extras they had in Japan. Until the mid-2000s, they didn't even have Japanese tracks.
* Guinan breaks out she's the first to pull out a gun almost as big as she is.
* heal a sick Last Order who was slowly dying due to the strain of the summoning of Aiwass. Since he is an esper (in a world where magic and psychic powers are innately incompatible), using magic caused his body to essentially start self-destructing.
* Haven episode "Silent Night", the town of Haven gets trapped under a giant glass dome. Several birds and drivers crash into it.
* Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later. But Moustapha Akkad balked when he asked for $10 million as his directing fee - which he believed was compensation for the revenue he had never received from the original. Supposedly he stayed on as an uncredited producer.
* Guarding Tess: When the FBI and Secret Service raid the kidnappers' home and arrest them, they find Tess buried, but alive, beneath the floor of the farmhouse.
* Hancock's Half Hour episode "Agricultural 'Ancock", Sid sells Lord's Cricket Ground to Tony, and Bill mentions that someone tried to sell him Sydney Cricket ground but, at the time, he had no money left after buying Sydney Harbour Bridge. Bill goes on to mention that he was still having a fight against Sydney Borough Council about who owns the bridge.
* Harry Potter. It's noted that it's a lot more discreet when you're wearing robes rather than Muggle trousers.
* Grand Theft Auto V, Franklin covers his mouth with his fist, and Micheal puts his hands behind his head, covering his ears in the process.
* her knight, — while Suzaku continues to royally own the attacking Knightmares.
* Helluva Boss has a group of Cherubs trying to show an infirm, suicidal supervillain a mall Santa to show the simple joys and purpose that childhood wonderment can provide. Blitzo gives them the counter-argument by revealing "Santa" to be a gross, scabby pedophile in disguise. Chaos ensues.

* He and Kotarou (also aged up to late teens) are listed as classmates, so it's likely some sort of work study program. Most of his class still have (age-appropriate for their new age) crushes on him, and as of the fifth chapter, no character who was an adult in the original (including Evangeline) has been seen at all.
* GPU just so all the pre-built OEM vendors could sell their woefully underpowered computers and claim compatibility with the latest OS.
* Harry Turtledove, the Race comes up with a counter in the form of their STL starships being capable of being launched towards Earth to impact the planet at 50% of the speed of light.
* Heroes of Might and Magic come with fold-out cards showing creature statistics and town construction dependencies and a manual nearly reaching 150 pages.
* Happy Heroes has Smart S. warn viewers not to hit people on the head since it hurts a lot.
* Highlander II: The Quickening. "No sun, no stars, only heat and humidity."
* Gregor Clegane and his underlings employ it indiscriminately throughout the war, particularly at Harrenhal where Arya witnesses their work firsthand. Gregor is also commanded by Cersei to inflict it on Septa Unella and prolong it as long as he can.
* Greek Myth, having built the Labyrinth of the Minotaur and pairs of wings that allowed him to fly, among many other things.
* GUN×SWORD's Fasalina, who (unlike the only other girl in her group, Melissa, who was merely confused) fully embraced the methods of The Claw and, most of the time, puts up a damn good fight against the heroes.
* grew up together, as they have little interaction in either game's story mode.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters has had a few major examples:
* Half-Life 2's bigger synth enemies (Striders and Gunships) are essentially immune to any sort of normal ammunition, so they have to be dispatched with rocket launchers or energy orbs.
* He then took an interest in dog breeding, and raising his own shetland sheepdog led to him creating the pet raising sim
* .hack//G.U.. Then again, it is in a MMORPG setting, so impracticality doesn't need to count.
* Hayate the Combat Butler that the two of them only just realized it was a date.
* Green Lantern, does his job using a semicircle of terminals he creates with his ring. This is convenient, as his workstation is wherever he happens to be.
* Heroes of the Desk: Repercussions readers only find out that those responsible for cleaning up what happened needed mandatory counseling.
* Gradius's stage 9 midbosses, Boost Core, has harmless exhaust...but only on the first loop. From the second loop onwards, its exhaust is lethal to the Vic-Viper and its peers.
* Hare-abian Nights short directed by Ken Harris, has Bugs declaring that he should have taken "dat left toin at Dess Moins."
* Grey's Anatomy Cristina tells Meredith at the beginning of the fifth season what most of us have been thinking for years in one little speech: "SHUT UP!!"
* Happiness in Mind Control: I don't care if my mind isn't my own! I'm better off this way!
* Gorkamorka expansion was about the Necrons in the ruins waking up and going on an icily murderous rampage. Any mob that was below the usual retirement point was going to have a very hard time with it, and so it was there to end the campaign.
* her brother, leading to him being banned from being in parades and around horses.
* hideous as a young adult), and the tyrannical Kaido looks monstrous.
* Godzilla (2014) have a total of eight limbs: in the male, he has one pair of front legs, one pair of wings, a pair of smaller arms on his abdominal region and a pair of digitigrade hind legs. The female MUTO has a similar arrangement, though instead of wings she has a second pair of forelegs.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 7 episode 28, Little M. tries to bring Big M.'s attention to a slip stating he's lost his job as a general by indirectly giving it to him, so as not to witness him having a heart attack over it. His attempts fail due to various outside factors distracting Big M. from noticing the note.

* Gunless: Upon leaving a store, Sean is faced with three armed men who have found out he is the Montana Kid. It seems like they are going to try and kill or capture him for the bounty but it turns out they just wanted to meet him as he is the only recently interesting thing to happen to the town. Sean is actually disappointed by this as he is accustomed to wild west call outs and was expecting to have a gun fight.
* her grampa look externally human; she is a peppy blonde ten-year-old and he a hunchbacked old man with a big bushy mustache. When not posing as humans, however, they appear to be some kind of mutant hybrid between a flies and fish. Also their bones are made of rubber. They're good guys, though.
* Hairtrigger", Doug Timmons is planning to carry out a mass shooting in a government building in Albany.
* Harkovast, Chen-Chen never mentions the fact she is a kung-fu master until the group get ambushed and she reveals her fighting skills.
* Glee times a million. To be fair, the back nine episodes are quite uneven, but plenty of people were hating on it before the season even officially started because the pilot was shown at the beginning of the summer of 2009, kicking off an extremely aggressive and relentless ad campaign by Fox (the most amusing facet of which was when they came up with the term "Gleeks" and then tried to pretend that hardcore fans had christened themselves that).
* Good News Week, a magazine for people who go bow hunting for feral pigs.
* Hades Shaded: Once you go to the dark side, every color on you follows.
* Halo series has Drones, who are sapient aliens that look sort of like a cross between a moth and a beetle.
* Harry Potter, and a deployable shield which can apparently stop both physical objects and spells.
* Hell Is a Martial Artist, she rewrites reality to make him her son. Urd, unable to see any good in her mother, drives herself up the wall trying to figure out her mother's angle and notes that even if she sent the request from Nidhogg, it'd still require Yggdrasil's approval and comes to the conclusion that Yggdrasil's been hacked, rather than realizing that God agreed with Hild.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983): Skeletor subverts this trope, but Evil-Lyn and the Sorceress play it straight.
* Heroes, who besides being one of the most powerful characters in the show's mythology has also racked up by far the highest number of main character and supporting character kills.
* Hex: Azazeal and most of the Nephilim (Baraquel, Araquiel, Sariel, Ramiel). On the good side, Ella Dee, daughter of John Dee.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, greatly underestimated the heroes, and thus was shocked that bunch of ragtag idiots could hold an Infinity Stone.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (2000), who gets a lengthy philosophical soliloquy at the end.
* Half-Life 2 (or Half-Life 3) will ever be produced? Expect answers of every kind that does not include a yes or no.
* Heroes in the Shadows-counterpart. Unfortunately, this makes him an ideal asset to the Kraang, who try to kidnap him along with April because they think he could help them perfect their mutagen.
* Hambledon Cricket Club was once the preeminent cricket club, and was responsible for defining and updating the Laws of Cricket. With the rise to prominence of the Marylebone Cricket Club it rapidly declined, and is now only a village club playing in the local league.
* helping him in question in a closet and ran off with the missile launcher. Except.
* Hanna: Rhianne Barreto, like Sophie, is mixed race with European and South Asian descent.
* God of War: Chains of Olympus to keep within R-rated territory. Barely.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City Stories go down in a single well-aimed gunshot each, in contrast to a previous (and connected, storyline-wise) boss-like encounter which can be hard even with super powerful weapons.

* HERZ: Rei is the author's favourite character. Although she does not show up in a lot of scenes she is ever-present, the remainder characters talk about her constantly, and she saves the day several times.
* Grey-and-Grey Morality. This can result in a lot the above situations if the villain's original redeeming points don't get removed, reworked, or acknowledged.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets has the eponymous chamber built by Salazar Slytherin, located through a secret passage in the 2nd floor's girl's bathroom and only accessible to parselmouths (i.e. snake talkers). The entrance was originally just a hidden trapdoor, but because of plumbing reforms that threatened to reveal its existence, it had to be adapted into an elaborate mechanism by one of Salazar's descendants.
* Gorgeous Period Dress: A colorful dress to show off the fancy new color films
* Gordon Freeman killed the dinosaurs. Or rather, merely boasts that he did.
* Happens during Finn McMissile's introductory scene at the very beginning of
* Haru wo Daiteita: When Iwaki declares his love, he entwined his fingers with Katou and held them to his heart - awwwwwww.
* Hamlet, or at least from Heaven, because of the sins he was not given time to seek absolution for before his death.
* he insults trolls and dwarfs all the time. spends his days surrounded by trolls and dwarfs and therefore knows for a fact that most of them are bastards, while the nobles are just being ignorant bigots.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban: Animagi - wizards who can turn into a specific animal - show up throughout the series, but they are central to the plot of the third book.
* Haven at times because of the emotional distance she keeps from people.
* Haute Camp-ture", Cody aims to use his time at Playa Des Losers to get a tan to make himself more attractive to women. He foregoes sunscreen to make the most of every ray of sunshine coming his way and of course ends up not with a tan, but a pink, full-body, majorly painful sunburn.
* Glorfindel: slew another Balrog by plummeting to both their end. Just. Wouldn't. Stay. Dead
* Han Solo, it's seen that before the original trilogy he was once fairly idealistic, though never to the point of being wide-eyed.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. And Chapter 17 references Medieval German master swordsman Johann Liechtenauer.
* Hannibal Rising had its script written by the book's author, Thomas Harris (who is also the one narrating the audiobook version).
* He actually was hit by exactly that in one episode, though he spoke prior to it.
* Hardcore Punk — members of the band Vice Squad took a dim view of some of the other acts signed to their label Riot City records, having an argument with label head Simon Edwards in which they claimed they could make something of the same quality "in ten minutes". Shortly after, the group took a couple roadies into the studio with them and quickly wrote and recorded the song "Glue Accident", then submitted it to a Riot City compilation under a fake name, claiming to be friends of Vice Squad who would only deal with the label through them. Not only did Chaotic Dischord get signed to Riot City, they became one or the label's best selling acts.
* god-emperor of tyranny. Some really evil villains from other parts of the cosmos worship him too- including the aforementioned Church of Crime.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged: When Alucard and the Queen of England have a downright filthy conversation, Sir Penwood screams before declaring, "I can never have sex again!"
* Gramarye, a colony founded by the Society for Creative Anachronism. In this case the loss of technology was deliberate.
* High School D×D. One of the primary reasons his girlfriends keep him on a short leash is that he loves to sneak into the girls' locker room or up to a peep-hole and watch them change. In fact, he was introduced trying to do this. Though he wasn't actually peeping at the time, he very much wanted to.

* Gunslinger Girl. Cyborg girl Claes whenever she sees something that reminds her of her dead handler Captain Raballo (who has been wiped from her memory).
* Gottlieb pinball renames Sha'uri, daughter of the chieftain Kasuf, to "Sari".
* Hands Across the Table has Ted suggest that he should be Regi’s roommate while he pretends to be in Bermuda, and all is fine until romantic feelings begin to bubble up.
* Highschool of the Dead wears glasses until the second chapter, where she finally removes her contact lenses. Though the manga wastes no time establishing her as the smartest student at Fujimi High, by showing her analytical and decision making ability, which is how she and Hirano survived long enough for Takashi and the others to find them.
* Hans-Ulrich Rudel), the only man who got that. His claims include destroying over 600 vehicles, along with sinking a battleship, two cruisers, four armored trains, and 51 enemy aircraft.
* Greek architecture and statue-work is almost always shown to be austere marble. At the time, it was austere marble covered over with bright, gaudy paints.
* Guild Wars 2 gender in that there are defined male and female sylvari, but it holds no biological relevance. And more specifically, Caithe and Faolain.
* Halo who got it right-hooking the computer his wife was in up to electronic sensors to keep her sane while her clone grew to maturity, then downloading her ASAP. She considers him to be a murderer and runs for it.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 has Kraglin and Star-Lord being awed by a Zune, because it can hold 300 songs. Apparently that's something neither of them had seen in their decades out in space.
* Gravemoss years to refine his technique), and that thanks to the corruption of the Darkhold, Gravemoss is losing focus and control.
* Golden Logres the player must divide them between Land's End and the kingdom of the Fisher King to complete their individual quests.
* Gravity Falls episode "Scary-oke", Dipper tries to convince a pair of government agents that there's something weird about the town by showing them Journal 3. When they aren't moved, Dipper randomly recites one of the magic spells enclosed and ends causing zombies to burst from the ground! Luckily, it turns out the undead can be destroyed with three-point harmony, requiring the Pines family to sing.
* Gremlins Mrs. Deagle when the gremlins mess with her stair lift to send her flying up and out the upstairs window.
* Grogro and his race have a special technique that requires a certain innocence and dimwitness according to Gilberto: basically it's swallowing the opponent's whole by being too dumb to choke or see the issue.
* He also had problems with putting on tire chains though it should have been trivial to someone with his experience. He rarely had a need for them on the roads and ice roads he normally drove on.
* Gundam 00 is fairly fond of this one. Both Gundam Dynames and Cherudim Gundam akimbo a pair of beam pistols. Gundam Arios has two double barreled beam rifles (and a pair of beam gatlings mounted in each arm). Not to be trumped, Gundam Virtue and Gundam Seravee are both capable of using two beam bazookas at once. Gundam Zabanya (which succeed Dynames and Cherudim) can not only akimbo two of its 10 Rifle Bits, but also break them down to Pistol Bits for the same purpose.
* Harry puts a spoonful of dirt into his relatives' dinner before serving it to them.
* Grant Morrison: a hate plague on a global scale that eventually causes all sentient life on a given planet to wipe itself out.
* Gunnerkrigg Court is used to make faraway characters stand out from a group. There are even certain instances of characters going "background" while still central to the frame, illustrating feelings of alienation.
* Happens to Pumpkin when Fluttershy's animals steal her potty in "Fluttershy and the Missing Potty".
* Haruhi Suzumiya fault. Shamisen is something of a philosopher, and his first few words toy with the trope. When the gang express their surprise that he can talk, he brings up the possibility that he is merely articulating noises that correspond to human speech without understanding them. Kyon points out that by that line of reasoning, there is also a chance that every human conversation that ever occurs is a complete coincidence.

* Hannibal, he gets a speech warning him to stop toying with Will Graham:
* Going Postal attention and quietly orders a subordinate killed for his incompetence.
* Greenfire: When Greenfire gives Rarity a ride over a cliff, she's very appreciative of his rippling, warm muscles that she's almost in full-body contact with.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team: In Episode 11 Taro finds Mariel stored in a jar of liquid in an underground room.
* Hermione becomes friends with Harry and Ron after the boys team up to save her from a mountain troll. She and Ron later become a couple and go on to get married.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. Taro is only 14 years old but tries his best to act in a responsible manner as head of the Hanaukyo family, including looking after the maids' welfare. Although the maids technically are under his orders, they at least influence what he does most of the time and sometimes (as in head Security maid Konoe Tsurugi's case) try to order him around.
* GUN×SWORD is amongst the antagonist's group, however she seems fond of newcomer Michael and if he's not being guided by The Claw, he goes to her and she teaches him. It doesn't excuse her position as a villain though, making her a rare villainous Cool Big Sis.
* Golden Sun exist only to be slain by sea monsters, thus giving the player a chance to veer the ship off its course — and they're all wearing red bandanas.
* Hannibal. Moreover, he sees the people around him, even the people he likes, as being far beneath him — toys at the very best and mindless animals at worst. He indirectly refers to the common people as "sheep" in a very condescending way. As Will points out, every single thing about Hannibal, from his dress sense to his dietary habits, is a way of proving his superiority over everyone else.
* Glücksrad, RSTLNE was so widespread they simply called it "ERNSTL" — a diminutive of the common German name "Ernst" — without naming the individual letters any more.
* He is much more obvious about it when he gushes about Carlos the Scientist whom the entire city agrees is a very beautiful man.
* Guitar Hero used to initiate a "death drain" that would sap your Rock Meter if both combatants made it to the last part of the song. This was later replaced and now the song just repeats, but on Hyperspeed. And it gets faster each time both players make it to the end.
* hilarious., but his methods easily place him squarely into this territory.
* "Haters wanna hate, lovers wanna love, I don't even want, none of the above. I want to piss on you! Yes I do, I'll piss on you, I'll pee on you!"
* Hellsister Trilogy and his Apokoliptian troops strike both Earth and New Genesis during the second story arc.
* Happy Heroes Season 2 episode 11 features an ice monster that can freeze objects by breathing ice on them.
* Hebi comes around, her position as General automatically demotes everyone else, and she takes solitary Dragon status.
* Goldfinger does this to a woman giving him a massage after the titles after asking her to leave so he can talk shop with Felix Leiter.
* Good Luck! Ninomiya-kun Houjou Reika. Both demonstrate extreme devoutness, top-notch martial skills, and protective behavior towards Reika.
* Harvest Moon DS: If you choose to go for Skye, a playboy thief. His lines get cheesier with each heart event.
* have revealed, people to become less risk-aware, and can cause more impulsive behaviour. Which we knew from fiction.
* High School Musical: The Musical: The Series he pretends to be Gina's boyfriend to get the North High Student to leave Gina alone.
* Hannibal Lecter Pop-Culture Reference"... which makes one wonder how he knew that name would be forgotten in the future. Ray later uses John Wayne while in the Wild West.

* he finds the motivation he needs to discretely organize a resistance within the Cardassian military and civilian population to fight back.
* Godannar: Mira Ackerman, who was in a relationship with Goh, has been presumed dead for 5 years, but in reality has been in a coma. By the time Goh finds out, he has already been married to Anna.
* Henneko: The Hentai Prince and the Stony Cat. The main charcacter Youto Yokodera is a complete pervert and is doing actions to get a sexual thrill. However all of his actions in doing so is thought of as a good deed (such as he polished the tile floors of the school so as to see girl's panties in the reflection he is rewarded for cleaning the school).
* Happy Days when the Fonz is frozen by Mork he comes back by first wiggling his thumb.
* Golden Sun. One puzzle requires you to push a column on one geyser so the other one will propel you high enough.
* Headshots CAN still instakill a zombie in the remake. However, for this to happen you have to get a lucky
* Happens several times between Bernard and Bianca (involving a marriage proposal rather than a kiss) in
* Guy Made of Bees, who is also supposed to be unkillable without the use of a certain (different) inventory item.
* head of a Durslar beast, only to realize Fred's parents are there, so Angel claims it's a prop head from a movie.
* He was actually kidnapped by the villains at one point, just like the previously mentioned Rocky and Bullwinkle example. And then Sheep
* Happy Days, can occasionally be seen in a bit part such as a photographer taking pictures in "Fonzie Loves Pinky Part 3."
* Great Teacher Onizuka: Urumi was doing calculus as an elementary schooler, and speaks at least 5 languages by the time she's in high school. She left school because she found it boring, until she came back to see what the deal was with Onizuka, and he convinced her to stay.
* Hand Cannon (mostly by Confederates), and in conficts with American Indians.
* Grand Theft Auto III games. Its core gameplay, featuring a third-person view of a protagonist who brawls, shoots and jumps in and out of cars, is so commonly copied that it's also a subgenre unto itself.
* Heroes Fight Barehanded: Many superheroes prefer to use their fists snd feet instead of using any (lethal) weapons.
* Hank Zipzer: In "Operation: Prank Adolf," Rosa is attempting to teach Emily to enjoy April Fool's pranks, and basically forces Emily to look through the eyepiece of a telescope, despite the fact that Emily already knows it has boot polish on it.
* GoLion started with Earth being destroyed in World War III, when the east and west finally launched their missiles at each other in 1999.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1982). These rumors have since been confirmed to have been false.
* He doesn't seem to mind his lack of powers, but that's probably because he's still eleven years old.
* Gunsmith Cats features a truly massive jaw. It's not just aesthetic though. One might notice that Bandit NEVER leaves any bones left over after a meal. And he eats walnuts with the shells on.
* Good Omens miniseries shows that he got it from his angel friend Aziraphale.
* her who first reached out to Anna at the party in the film and also the one who open her arms for their shared hug once Anna defrosts back to life) and constantly suffering nightmarish flashbacks to the events of the film and its climax.
* Harry Potter has this happen to Ron and Hermione. To add insult to injury, Harry and Ginny have sex without a condom once and Ginny gets pregnant.
* heel mask. When the fans booed him for it, he stopped and apologized for it.
* Gundam Fight 7th introduces us to Wolf Heinrich, suggesting that Germany has a long-standing tradition of ninja.

* Harry Potter fanfics will every so often have Death show up as a result of the final book. The actual details vary from story to story.
* Heroic BSoD trial. He then decides once and for all that he will no longer be a loyal Lannister retainer and shoots his father's plans to save face and send him to the Wall. When the trial by combat ends in failure for him, he's released by Jaime so as to flee Westeros, but before he leaves he burns his final bridge by killing his father. Of course it's one thing for Tyrion to fight Lannisters he dislikes (Tywin and Cersei) but another for him to fight against Lannisters he likes, namely Jaime, and in Season 7, Dany rebukes him for suggesting a softball strategy rather than a ruthless one because he doesn't want to go against Jaime. This becomes obvious when after Dany listens to his suggestion to lay siege and encircle the capital, they come upon the Lannister train carrying the pillage of the Reach back to the city near Blackwater, and the resulting battle sees Jaime charging at Dany with a spear all the while Tyrion watches in horror muttering "No" to his brave, foolish, Cersei-serving brother.
* Guardian Ghost are this, where if anything happens to break their link (like the ghost half of the pair getting destroyed) then the Spirit dies instantly as their soul gets wiped out.
* Highlander. The original version of her who paid Richie to follow Duncan in the pilot was cut but she kept following him in later episodes. She was determined to find out his secret and why he was always involved in trouble. Once, it got her kidnapped. She was dropped after season 1 though.
* Hey There, It's Yogi Bear!, Yogi's singing voice during the gondola scene is that of James Darren, which Boo-Boo lampshades during the song. His singing voice for all other songs in the film is by Bill Lee. Boo-Boo and Cindy also have different singing voices than their regular actors in the movie.
* Grimoire’s Soul: In Kesterline it breaks down for the most part by class and gender, with nobles having their cores revealed at the age of 14:
* High Class Call Girls Hermann Göring or grasping, self-indulgent German ambassador to Vichy France Otto Abetz. Expect him to be killed by the people he wronged, or executed for ripping off the Reich.
* Gone with the Blastwave with no comeuppance. As one character put it: "Why haven't we lost this war yet?"
* He later suspects that Ravenpaw told Fireheart what he had seen. During battle, when Fireheart is fighting for his life and calling for help, Tigerclaw just sits there and watches; fortunately Fireheart manages to fight his way out.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, Mort (a ghost) has a barely-concealed crush on Antimony (still alive). She does not reciprocate.
* Heckle and Jeckle cartoon "The Lion Hunt," Jeckle calls out "Are there any lions around here?" Four lions rear up from the clearing behind H&J and yell out "YES!"
* Hell, this time in the proper-noun sense, would later turn up in the episode "Hell Bound", as a century-old ghost has remained free by sending other souls to Hell in his place. Although the vortex to Hell is seen, the characters and audience never find out what lies beyond it.
* Guilty Gear Xrd, so the character has truly outlived Kaneto Shiozawa, with Takehito Koyasu voicing the revived Zato-1.
* Guy in Back, because their main function is to aim the chopper's antitank missiles (and, in designs with a turret-mounted autocannon, to aim that as well) and good visibility is crucial here.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: The ending theme, "Maru Kaite Chikyuu", along with its variations by the different characters. There are also some of the character songs, namely "I am German-Made" for Germany, "Absolutely Invincible British Gentleman" for England, "My Heart Has a Light" for Russia and both "Mein Gott" and "My Song That Is Written By Me, For Me" for Prussia since he's all about telling people who he is.
* God Hand, finding the sense of humor to be weak, and other issues that make it seem like they hadn't played the game for more than a few hours. The review itself was also poorly written with multiple spelling errors that have gone unfixed to this day.

* Grand Theft Auto V and that it was actually Brad who died and was buried; and Dave had been responding to Trevor's letters as Brad.
* Hands Up! when a stagecoach arrives. A bearded man exits the stagecoach and introduces the sisters to his wife, who exits the stagecoach behind him. Then a second wife emerges, then a third. Five wives come out of the coach before the man is revealed to be Brigham Young. The film ends with Griffith leaving with both sisters in the stagecoach, which has a sign on the back reading "To Salt Lake City".
* Hazmat Suit) that the soldier could wear, but it was met with only a limited interest, which has prompted the company to switch to a powered design and a medical application to raise more funds for the development, as they were essentially told to come back when they'd have more than that. In fact, they still have only a lower body support and an open-loop computerized remote control, instead of a fancier brainwave or muscle potential inputs, though they are working on it.
* GURPS fire a "bullet" of light, albeit one that moves at the proper speed.
* Harry Potter has three main kinds of teleportation, each of which has limitations:
* Golden Snitch. It's just that the version Hogwarts uses has simplified rules and is significantly faster, thus the points won from catching the Snitch have much more weight.
* Her primary outfit in Volumes 1-3 shows off a bit more of her figure than the rest of the cast, with some exposed cleavage. This gets downplayed from Volume 4 onwards, as while she's still attractive and her outfits tend to show some skin, they're still much more concealing than her original outfit.
* He also has an in-canon avatar called The One Above All. The One Above All happens to take on the appearance of influential creators of Marvel Comics. He's usually Stan Lee, but has appeared as Jack Kirby and other writers as well. He usually takes a
* Hellsister Trilogy into the antimatter universe, and the two of them come dangerously near from an antimatter star as flying and fighting across a solar system.
* Green Day. The song's about living on your own for the first time and in a bad neighborhood, not taking a vacation.
* has her body usurped by an Eldritch Abomination, she and Wesley spend the first couple of minutes fighting some small gremlin-like monsters, then discussing the creatures' biology. She describes a portion of their reproductive process, which evidently involves crystals, bacteria, and parasitism.
* Highlander III: The Sorcerer, the villain Kane and the other two evil immortals are trapped in a cave for centuries, only being released in the present to attack Connor once again.
* Grand Theft Auto III. To top it off, she's also the most powerful mob boss of the game.
* her second appearance style dream delving session, where she's confirmed to be really dead, but alive in Homer's memories.
* Halo 2: The final battle takes place as Tartarus activates Installation 05. While the Arbiter and Sgt. Johnson try to take him down, 343 Guilty Spark keeps announcing various power-up phases completing in preparation to fire.
* He uses the line on a dog, who merely walks away thinking, "He's lucky Mom was in the military."
* have sharks in their name or use sharks as their mascot, including the NHL's San Jose Sharks, arena football's Jacksonville Sharks, and the Chinese Basketball Association's Shanghai Sharks. How 'threatening' they are depends on how their season is going.
* Green Lanterns and getting confused by them. The reason being Jessica is the cautious planning type who tries to learn as much as possible before she acts, while Simon just hasn't thought to ask the Ring these things because he's more impulsive.

* GURPS. Pretty cushy place, if you can deal with the outrageous quarantine regulations and you're not trying to leap the Cobalt Curtain.
* Gunslinger Girl. Triela, one of the more efficient and proud cyborgs, is highly embarrassed and has to run him down while still in agony from her period.
* Harry Potter: "There is a room in the Department of Mysteries that is kept locked at all times. It contains a force that is at once more wonderful and more terrible than death, than human intelligence, than the forces of nature. It is also, perhaps, the most mysterious of the many subjects for study that reside there. It is the power held within that room that you possess in such quantities and which Voldemort has not at all."
* Halo: Reach, courtesy of a sniper: "Where does he get off calling a demolition op Priority O-"
* Goku, and much of Future Gohan's passive-aggressive comments about him begin to make sense after that.
* He made a full recovery by season 5, where he opens his own firm specifically to help the little guy. Unfortunately, it went under and he had to settle for teaching law at Greendale.
* Hägar the Horrible, it makes sense that Hägar, a viking, would believe that.
* Halo 4 gives us this happening increasingly frequently as Cortana's Rampancy progresses. Also, we have Captain Andrew Del-Rio after the Chief refuses to give Cortana up for deletion in response to her condition:
* Had the series continued, one episode would have featured Squishy, Hugger of Worlds. Basically a lovable space buffoon who loved to
* Happy Heroes, Miss Peach introduces someone named Mr. Success for a TV show. Mr. Success, upon entering the stage, is met with a chant "Succ-ess! Succ-ess!" from the crowd.
* Going Postal in order to give any eyewitness report something to latch on. In his official duties, he wears very distinctive clothing to distract from his face, and when the newly formed newspaper reporters come to interview him, he fights tooth and nail to avoid being clearly photographed.
* Her rival battle teaming with Rolento against King and Craig Marduk in
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas: The gangs can use you for target practice and the police isn't the least interested, but then you kill just one of those Ballas vermin and the police are all over you. In that specific case, there's at least the justification that the Los Santos police unit that deals the most with the gangs, CRASH, are corrupt as hell and working directly with the Ballas.
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger, Akibared, Nobuo, becomes aware of the fourth wall. He convinces the rest of the characters of this and this trope is in full effect for the rest of season 1 as the final episodes revolve around the Akibarangers trying to thwart attempts from the producers to end the show. Season 1 ends with The heroes fighting the end credits
* Guzzlord has a mouth at the back of its throat. It seems to either be a portal to another realm or a case of
* Hat Luncheon", Paige tells Owen when they get to the Hat Luncheon they're going to be serious people doing their serious job in a serious way, until Molly puts Paige's crazy hat on her which is a miniature train looping a mountain.
* Haruhi Suzumiya. It is also a reference of how Itano created this trope in the first place; see the first example filed under Real Life.
* Head-Turning Beauty: Helen of Troy, the most beautiful mortal woman in the world.
* Half in the Bag movie than this?" (Although they immediately provide multiple other examples of the same subgenre.)
* Hamster's Paradise, and two moons, one the size of Earh's moon named Pyramus and and a smaller, more reflective moon named Thisbe.
* Gravity Falls features a load of this in "Northwest Mansion Mystery". When the Lumberjack Ghost first manifests itself to Dipper and Pacifica, it makes a room full of mounted animal heads speak in unison and ooze blood-red ichor. Later, the Lumberjack Ghost animates some more stuffed animals to attack the guests at the Northwests' party.

* GURPS: The "Dungeon Fantasy" sub-line features classic dungeon fantasy-style clerics and holy warriors, and allows for the possibility of them worshiping a range of deities. Gods of Love are an option, and their worshippers tend to become adventurers to promote giving happy endings to good stories, as most tend to be romantics at heart, or to combat evil monsters and undead abominations that their patrons oppose.
* Having lived her life as a man, Saber doesn't even think of herself as a woman and isn't bothered by Shirou walking in on her in the bath. But later, when she develops feelings for him in "Fate", she starts to act embarrassed about him seeing her naked and care about
* Great Ship, and with the interiors being a completely sterile environment. However, the "minor" hull damage consisted of dozens of kilometer-wide impact craters, which required huge amounts of hyperfiber to mend.
* Heathers, accompanied by Kurt and Ram, go out to the cemetery to pour a jug of Thunderbird over the grave of the recently deceased Heather Chandler, "y'know, from her homies," but Kurt and Ram end up drinking the booze instead.
* Green Acres that they literally wore the exact same outfits for all six seasons (save for Oliver and Lisa), that it could very well be the poster child for a live-action cartoon.
* Hebrew is an example in that, while there are definitely obvious differences between Biblical and Modern Hebrew, one can nevertheless understand a lot of Biblical passages on the strength of a Modern Hebrew education alone. For instance, students in Israel going on a field trip to see the Dead Sea Scrolls can simply read them unaided.
* He made absolutely no secret that this was the reason he came back to play
* Happy Heroes does exist, but does not have the seasons available in their entirety anywhere. This is only two fifths of the show's total seasons and mini-seasons that have been dubbed in English.
* HappinessCharge Pretty Cure!. Iona's quite ashamed at the fact that a lot of trouble would have been done away with if she hadn't spent that time vilifying Hime.
* Guilty of Romance tells a story that takes place in the red light district in Tokyo for the most part.
* Haruko seems like one of these, attaching herself to soulful brooding main character Naota and being the main impetus behind his
* Groo the Wanderer has massive, if slightly flabby, arms and torso... and skinny little rubber-hose legs that don't look like they should be able to support the top half of his body, being the same diameter from ankle to thigh.
* Hero of the king as a way to win the approval of the Chinese government, while others insisted that variants of this "Emperor And Assassin" story had been told in China for centuries, even in Hong Kong under British rule.
* Guns N' Roses (Jersey Jack) while fending off their own propaganda. The name and aesthetics are also lifted directly from the film.
* Gordon Sinclair. Due to the positive reception of the commentary, MacGregor's version was issued as a single, accompanied by an instrumental recording of "America the Beautiful". It reached #4 and he never saw the charts again. A recording by Sinclair was also issued, this one featuring "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" instead; it was also a minor hit, reaching #24, but he never saw the charts again either.
* Hajime no Ippo: Ippo is notable for three things, strength (he punches way above his weight class), stamina, and an iron will. In a long bout, this trope is very much in evidence, as Ippo just never gives up, and can take a lot of punishment. The scariest thing for his opponents, after the intensity in his eyes, is that his punches just don't die.
* Gravity Falls, it's said that .GIFfany survived "Soos and the Real Girl" and went into Rumble McSkirmish's game. If that's true, why didn't she appear with him during Weirdmaggedon? We didn't see every character from his game then, but one does still wonder...
* Godspell, "By My Side," the only song retained from the original Off-Off-Broadway production, was composed by its performers, Peggy Gordon and Gilmer McCormick (with lyrics by non-cast-member Jay Hamburger).

* Grand Finale, just as Kim takes a sip of her soda, Ron freaks out. Cue Ron getting it in the kisser.
* Hellblazer, the mother of John's friend Chaz is some overbearing witch with an orangutan familiar. They have to off the familiar (which kills the mother) to free Chaz from his mother's oppression.
* Goofy's pants catch fire after he strikes a match on them. He tries to douse the flames by sitting on a pail of water, but sits on a keg of gunpowder instead.
* Gravity Falls, and it's even called "Greasy's Diner." Lazy Susan, one of the waitresses, has a thing for Stan.
* Guilty Gear, who uses many of his moves and carries an oversized syringe larger than herself.
* Halo: The Fall of Reach even came out; it's only one of several details that have been retconned over the years.
* Harry Potter Hermione insists on the correct tense when she travels back in time. Hermione likes things just right!
* hats with brightly glittering sequins. The fun really starts around the two minute mark.
* Good Night, and Good Luck. for being too over-the-top. All of the McCarthy moments were actually archive footage of the real Senator McCarthy.
* Hazel and Cha-Cha, the duo sent after Five. They have quite a list of kills racked up between the two of them.
* Gundam franchise: Sometimes Gundams can only be defeated by Gundams, while other times any sufficiently advanced mobile suit can potentially defeat one.
* Hajime no Ippo, Miguel Zail makes the best use of tactical decisions, always observing the enemy boxer in order to give the right commands. Two other examples for boxers are Kenta Kobashi, who makes up for his lack of boxing talent by studying his opponent beforehand and developing strategies against him and world champion David Eagle, who also uses strategy in his fight, but more on a psychological level.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, this belief is the reason Harry Potter's adoptive relatives took him to a shack in the middle of the sea in order to escape the letters he was receiving. Unfortunately for them, there is no such rule in this setting - and even if there was, Hagrid's so big and strong he could probably just row there by himself.
* Hellraiser: Bloodline features Pinhead responding to an "Oh my God"-type moment with "Do I look like someone who cares what God thinks?"
* Heidi Game.. After the bad publicity NBC received from football fans for the incident, it soon became standard practice for sports telecasts to always air a game in its entirety (with the current National Football League enshrining this in its television contracts), although as you'll see, there have still been exceptions.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002)y mecha-dragons, energy shields — Practically every bit of technology was combined with magic. There were also technological devices using or enhancing magical artefacts, like a belt powered by rare magical water which punished the wearer with an electrical shock as soon as he tried to do evil.
* Highlander had the final battle take place at the Silvercup Studios roof, with the "Silvercup" sign a local landmark.
* Hawk the Slayer when he rescues a witch from a couple of peasants who want to burn her cursing their hogs. She was actually trying to cure them, but they're not in the mood to listen. She replays Hawk by using her magic to locate the rest of his group and teleport Hawk to each one.
* Herzogin Cecilie is known to have logged 21 knots (39 km/h). Though the age of steam was clearly set to make them obsolete at the time of their making, they were still cheaper to build and maintain than their more advanced steam-powered counterparts. Even as steamers came to dominate short- and medium-distance shipping, they continued to make use of the great trade winds on the big, intercontinental cargo-hauls until long-distance steamships became more cost-efficient than them. Only the marine diesel engines spelled finally the death sentence to the windjammers.

* God of War to Kratos' size the time you fight him, he's still noticeably larger than the already-abnormally-large Kratos. Titans, giant monsters, and oversize gods abound in the rest of the series.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) occasionally has trouble with this after storing something in his hat; usually flowers will be the first thing he pulls out.
* Green Wing: This is a rather large part of Dr Alan Statham's character, especially when it comes to his "secret" relationship with Joanna. No, dove, there is no method of checking for broken bones which involves sucking on people's toes.
* Handa-kun that that features the main character's life in high school six years earlier.
* High School Musical is self-centred, arrogant, and narcissistic. She wants everything to go her way and is very entitled. Sharpay is willing to backstab anyone, including her twin brother Ryan, in order to be in the spotlight. Her family is wealthy and often spoil her with expensive gifts. Nevertheless, she is proven to be kind and loyal towards her friends and family.
* he's not a real Markovian but an avatar of the Well World computer itself, to the idea he predates
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters, freaking Cornelia out with how human their behavior is.
* Harry Potter book, which shows Harry and Ginny and Ron and Hermione being married couples who see their sons and daughters off at Kings Cross Station.
* Hayate was mentored by Genya Nakajima when she served under him in the 108th Battalion during the four-year
* Herbie: The Love Bug with his mother. Norm pauses, as he works out Cliff's age against when the film came out, until a horrified Sam begs him not to do the math.
* Google deep dream: using AI to generate (or rather “dream”) examples of faces, animals, eyes, etc. on top of an image. The results are cool, but also disturbing in every sense of the word.
* Grand Theft Auto it looks like a hybrid between a Lamborghini Murciélago and a Pagani Zonda. To add to the cool car trope nature of the franchise, each of the three main characters has a specific cool car all their own.
* Heroes at best or just a simple cheerleader at worst. However, later Duo Heroes zigzag this (e.g. the 2020 Bridal banner having female Bridal Micaiah fighting and the male Groom Sothe assisting).
* Heidi Lovelace/Ruby Riott. Debuted in 2011. Worked OVW from 2012 to 2013 and CHIKARA from 2015 to 2016, before joining WWE and becoming Ruby Riott, joining the main roster not long after arriving to the company.
* He attempts to move on when he meets Pumyra. Though their relationship is rocky at best, as she originally blames Lion-O for the fall of Thundera, he's able to help bring out her good side. As time progresses, the two become close.
* Grave of the Fireflies in memory of its' director Isao Takahata on April 13, 2018 following his passing eight days prior.
* Halloween 5: The Revenge of Michael Myers: Tina Williams has a scene where she breaks down crying after a conversation with Dr. Loomis, then composes herself, making sure to smile before rejoining the party nearby.
* Golden Films", the Wicked Queen is described as the fairest and most beautiful woman in all the land before Snow White gets older. This is not obvious to the viewers at all as she looks like a wrinkled old woman with big baggy eyes, a long nose, and a wart on her cheek. Averted in a second adaptation by Golden Films, where the Evil Queen looks much better.
* Harry Nilsson. Of course, Nilsson dramatically re-arranged the song (the original is barely recognizable as the same tune); nearly every cover of the song since then (including Carey's version) is based on the Nilsson version.
* God of War II uses his reflective shield to blind Kratos several times in his boss battle.

* hating, in the eighties, and hopes to finish it now that he's reached retirement age.
* Going Merry so the former two can leave, but arrive to find Luffy, Zoro, Sanji, and Usopp cornered by several dozen Marines and about to be arrested. Thinking quickly to help her new friends, Dr. Kobato gives an ear-shattering scream and pretends that she and Nami (who is disguised as a nurse) were taken hostage by Chopper. The rest of the Straw Hats just roll with it, and while Dr. Kobato is successfully "saved" by the Marines, the ruse works long enough to give the crew their chance to escape.
* High school or college cheerleading squad uniforms could have a sleeveless shirt and pants format for men while the women wear skirts with a midriff bearing top or tank top.
* Gray Beaver gets this too. In the novel, he's stern at best towards White Fang and beats him at worst for misbehaving. He even gives White Fang away to Beauty Smith due to being
* Harley Quinn (2019): The power of the Queen of Fables, an old school villain who once soloed the Justice League by summoning various fairytale characters to fight for her. Given the nature of the show, this can have various uses such as having the Big Bad Wolf slaughter a family, the Three Little Pigs dispose of a body for her, or Humpty Dumpty provide the main ingredient for a really big omelette.
* Green Acres that tells the story of some farmers in a book Oliver is reading, the character that Lisa plays puts one over Oliver's character's eye after getting into a fight at a barn dance. Actually it was pot roast, but same difference.
* Hey Arnold! Gerald is disappointed at this, wishing his dad had a more exciting tour of duty, only to discover that he saved the life of a fellow soldier by administering emergency first aid while passing through a combat zone.
* Golett and Golurk are golems from a far earlier civilization who may or may not be powered by magic or actual ghosts.
* Happiness Is Mandatory you be happy by applying Better Living Through Pharmaceuticals. As a result, many Citizens are so happy they forget to do anything else, like eat or sleep.
* Hancock can't stay with his girl Mary. She's also married the next time he sees her. Of course, by this point, he has amnesia of who he is and didn't really care about it, even after he discovered the truth.
* Hamilton is a sophisticated man of letters, a most talented lawyer, and successful statesman, and he will talk about this NON-STOP! During said song, Aaron Bur asks several times, "why do you assume you're smartest in the room?"
* Grand Finale, which is far more capable of handling that kind of load.
* Hellsing. His response? "If your God would allow my insanity to spread across the globe, then, wouldn't it seem you to that any God like that would be just as insane?"
* Gotham: The first time that Bruce invites Selina to a Wayne Foundation ball, Alfred sends some "proper" clothes to her to wear. When Bruce sees her for the first time, he is stunned by her appearance; she reacts the same to him, being the first time seeing him in a tux.
* Hakuouki follow Hijikata's route. The anime grafts in some scenes from other routes to help fill in various character arcs, and both adaptations adapt in different resolutions for characters who died offscreen or otherwise disappeared during Hijikata's route of the original VN.
* Hercules and is said to become an ordinary mortal, he seemingly retains superhuman durability, managing to tank multiple blows from a hundred-foot cyclops that throw him dozens of yards through the air and crack stone on impact.
* Hellsister Trilogy's strongest, fastest and most powerful member, as well as one of the smarter Legionnaires.
* Henchgirl: Multiple instances between Mary and Fred in the first two issues. Fred (as Mannequin) carries Mary home after finding her passed out in trash bags in an alley after Mr. Great Guy foiled the Butterfly Gang's bank heist at the beginning of Issue 1.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City. "I completed Vice City and all I got was this lousy T-shirt."

* He also screams for Batman when Charlie Collins, whom he spent most of the episode terrorizing, threatens to blow them both up with a bomb and calls the man crazy. Granted, that's because Charlie guessed (correctly) that the Joker would hate dying "next to some miserable little nobody."
* Green Thumb and their magic is apparently tied to their home turf, meaning that in extreme cases they can't leave it without dying.
* Hermione is also shipped with her Slytherin rival and resident mean girl Pansy Parkinson (who J. K. Rowling has described as the Anti-Hermione), and the much older
* GoldenEye: As Q demonstrates numerous lethal items disguised as mundane objects, 007 picks up a sub and examines it. Q snatches it away hurriedly.
* Hanazuki: Full of Treasures: The Chicken plant in "What is a Chicken Plant, Anyway?" seems to enjoy live prey, as it eats Lime Green Hemka, Yellow Hemka and Blue Hemka. Hanazuki also forces her way in to save Yellow.
* Gloriana was picked up by Warner/Reprise from the independent Emblem Music Group several weeks into the chart run of "Wild at Heart".
* Hawkeye to keep her family out of danger, and that by dragging her mother back into her life, it ultimately gets her mother shot.
* Great Battles of the American Civil War (originally published by SPI, as of 2021 by GMT)
* Heavy Metal film, the villain has a mechanical hand. For the final fight, he swaps the hand for a buzzsaw-type cutting tool.
* Goosebumps were given intros and outros hosted by the books' writer, R.L. Stine himself, with Cryptkeeper-esque jokes and puns, but mixed with stoic Rod Serling-esque delivery. For unknown reasons these were abandoned after season two.
* Harry Potter. It is outright stated that Dumbledore is the only wizard that Voldemort ever feared, and during their duel, Voldemort ultimately fled rather than try to fight him any longer. Prior to this, when Dumbledore arrived in the Department of Mysteries, none of the Death Eaters even bothered to try and stop him. They just ran.
* Heroes is also an Overprotective Husband. The writers of the show figured they couldn't go without this in Season 2, playing the stock plot almost to the letter. Despite everyone involved knowing there was a damn good reason for caution.
* glitch that allows you to ride in any form, though. Riding as a Goron looks just as funny as you would expect.
* Her sister Sansa, after being held captive and abused for a year, is finally going to be taken away by some friendly people to marry a great guy...
* Granblue Fantasy producer Koichi Haruta now voices the wind Primarch Raphael.
* Hell Girl had an episode in which a writer and his daughter are trapped in an old asylum.
* Happy Gilmore: Happy's grandmother owes $270 thousand in back taxes to the IRS and has her house repossessed. This drives Happy into competing in golf tournaments to save her house.
* "High-Heeled Eds": While trying to think up a way to scam Sarah, Nazz and Jimmy, Eddy gets an Idea Bulb, though it flickers out briefly until he adjusts it.
* Have you ever used a phone booth with a video screen rather than just a cell phone?
* Grand Theft Auto V has a ghost lady appear at around 11:00 PM at the north eastern section of the map. If she is approached, she disappears, but a name spelled in blood is labeled Jock. A newspaper in the internet of the game references a tragedy transpiring at the cliff she is spotted. This happens to be the same Jock running for governor in game.
* Heroes, Molly Walker suffers from nightmares and continually draws the same symbol in her more nightmarish drawings. The eyes were Maury Parkman's. He could see Molly when she tried to find him.
* Herpetologist Karl P. Schmidt did one of these in 1957, after being bitten by a small boomslang (a venomous snake); he believed it wasn't large enough to be dangerous, so he did not take antivenin, but did type a running log of his symptoms through the night and into the next morning; he was found dead later that day.

* Heart of Steel, Alistair Mechanus' lab coat gets increasingly damaged over the course of the story, leaving him with his collar torn open and one sleeve missing, exposing a number of scars and a well-toned arm.
* Guts manages to survive a lot of painful punishment from Nightmare — a kick, followed by a lightning sword uppercut, then a
* Happy Together: There are strong hints that Lai and Chang are deeply attracted to each other but they ultimately never act on their feelings.
* Guild Wars is littered with the ruined temples, towers, and cities of pilgrims who came there seeking Ascension. Internal strife, the harsh climate, and the natives of the desert wiped out all of the pilgrims.
* Hikaru no Go is a borderline case. Anyone with black hair and a bottle of peroxide can have blond bangs, but this qualifies due to the sheer length of time he keeps it, aging from 11 to 16 with the two-tone hair.
* Global Frequency, the main female lead is listing her very long list of academic qualifications, all of which she has achieved at a very young age (she's no older than thirty). The male lead makes an offhand joke along the lines of "how'd you find time to have a life?" The female lead, suddenly very touchy, begins insisting that she had a life, ending with a completely out of the blue and not very convincingly delivered declaration that she "had boyfriends," the implication being that she's lying and is probably still a virgin.
* , has been written as an ebook for the Kindle. Though it's not exactly the book from the episode — it reads more like a prequel.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows. It makes appearances all throughout the series, in fact.
* Heaven's Gate' Vincent Canby, and finally, Cimino getting the film pulled from distribution after said premiere and cutting ⅓ of the film in a desperate attempt to salvage the movie's reputation. With all those factors in mind, critics were already expecting it to suck by the time they reviewed it. Although critics have softened their views, the shorter version is still panned, as the cut muddled up the storyline. On the other hand, the rerelease of the uncut version in 2012 was actually very well-received.
* Gundam Wing, who has her own scrapyard and is quite proficient with computers.
* Hey Arnold!, she does a very sinister version of this with a flower she picks on the school grounds after feeling like Arnold is acting as if she doesn't exist (handing other girls their umbrellas, slamming a door in her face, helping others with carrying heavy items...)
* Hercules regularly throttles or flame-broils Pain and Panic. They might not be the sharpest minions out there, but after over ten years you have to wonder if he's just too lazy to find anyone else. Small wonder they're happy to see him get punched into the River Styx.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name was also in love with her. It's a pretty dysfunctional family.
* Green Arrow expy and in addition to giving GA an array of "Arrow" gadgets similar to Batman's (Arrowcave, Arrowplane, etc.) some Batman scripts were recycled.
* Gran Torino movie). But Walt, a veteran of the Korean War, knows full well the horrors of killing, wants nothing to do with it anymore, and doesn't want Thao, her brother, to get himself killed or end up with the stain on his soul that comes with killing. Instead, Walt tricks Spider and his gang into shooting him in broad daylight, shattering the code of silence of the Hmong neighborhood which has kept them unpunished and getting the entire gang put away for murder.
* He often does both at the same time (and make it effective), in one of the first episodes Kakashi sticks his finger in Naruto's ass with so much strengh it sends him flying, several arcs later, when Naruto is fighting against his (until that point) stronger enemy he decides to use the same technique, except that instead of a finger he sticked an explosive, Gaara states that his sand armor was the weakest in that part.
* Heavenly Guardian characters were replaced with original ones because the developer somehow lost the license.

* Golden Sun members who say it are freezing to death, having been deprived of the strength to warm themselves or escape.
* Hellboy efforts to sabotage the BPRD by taking a loss as the low bidder to force the Bureau into using their sabotaged goods, because he's in bed with Rasputin and the Nazi remnant behind Project Ragna Rok.
* Gold Tooth Traditionally reserved for people who like to literally put their money where their mouth is.
* Hannah and Her Sisters: Holly and April. They compete over acting roles, men and everything — and the latter usually wins. However, they still do projects together, like catering.
* Hammadou Djibo Issaka of Niger became a media darling in the 2012 Olympics after becoming a wildcard development entry. He was beyond terrible in the single sculls (a full minute behind the second worst athlete in an event slated for about seven minutes), but the fact that he only started rowing three months before the Olympics gained him a lot of popularity.
* Helluva Boss), and various other denizens of Hell repeatedly insult him.
* Go Animate warn viewers to turn down their volumes since they know it's going to be insanely loud.
* "Good Old Days". Presented as the sentimental nostalgic ramblings of the singer about his
* Harley Quinn (2019) has Lex Luthor, as per usual, but also features a bald Riddler who has a question mark tattoo on his forehead.
* Hannelore, shortly after her first appearance, mentioned that she had severe OCD. Over time, she developed more and more quirks and phobias to the point of being essentially a female
* Heralds of Valdemar when a mercenary is left behind because he'd be tempted to take part in "one last battle", despite being very old and having only one arm.
* Hellblazer on the devil. However, many issues later, the Devil managed to give the finger back at John.
* Hellsister Trilogy's wedding. During the reception, Fred Danvers tries to talk his daughter into introducing him to the Leaguers, although he's clever enough to use deliberate euphemisms such like "the team" or "the Gotham guy".
* High School D×D, the Valkyrie Rossweisse becomes a Devil because the Underworld has much a better health insurance program and pension plan compared to Valhalla.
* Guardians of the Galaxy quietly rolled their eyes and continued waiting for the movie.
* Good Omens, it's mentioned that Crowley made changes to the plans for the M25 to make it a demonic sigil. This sets up his character (he likes to do large amounts of low-grade evil), and once the apocalypse comes it turns into a rather nasty barrier, that completely destroys his car as he crosses it.
* Heroes Inc., and as would be expected, the comic makes significant use of magitek borrowed from the game.
* Hardison that had actually robbed it. The reason this works is that the local cops already new the target of the frame was corrupt and believed it without much evidence. There was also the fact that the rest of the team posed as witnesses that gave the altered version of events and their mark also shot Nate.
* Good Omens, Anathema Device, occultist and professional descendant, is psychic enough to see auras. She, unfortunately, misses the Antichrist's, "for the same reason that people in Trafalgar Square can't see England."
* He once made a map describing how he found the item of the week. The map shows France, Africa, China, the dojo, and a red car.
* Hawke where he reminded himself that his magic would "serve that which is best in (him), not that which is most base." Mage player characters can be this as well... or not.
* Guards! Guards!, Sybil asks Vimes if he thinks the noble dragon is a thaumivore, and Vimes says "I just think it eats magic, that's all."
* helped Arthur by preserving his immortality, not the evil witch seen in later versions of the story.

* "Hearts and Hooves Day" has two different moments of this: In the first instance, Sweetie Belle crashes a funeral, jumps on the back of the eulogizer (who is wearing a clerical collar), noogies him while singing that he's "too old" to be a suitable romantic candidate for Cheerilee, then jumps away. With a great big smile. While cheerful upbeat music plays. That the coffin is almost entirely off-screen and that the shot only lasts for two seconds is probably the only reason the show got away with it. Later in the episode, Apple Bloom's over-the-top
* Gravity Falls, the gloves are red to symbolize that her family has "blood on their hands".
* Greg Snegoff and his mother, Alexandra Kenworthy, played couples in the following dubs:
* He's good at this. Rare is the occasion when a machine enters a conversation with him and doesn't come out the other side at least severely cynical or depressed. In fact, the one occasion this didn't happen in
* Hero's Realm by having sixteen heroes… with not one line between them.
* Hey Arnold!. Not only does she get top grades, is a Valedictorian, humanitarian and has her own trophy room, but she's gorgeous and tends to steal the lime light at any given second. Everyone adores her... except her sister. Their parents even love her more than Helga.
* Hamilton. It's particularly evident in the line "This man will not make an orphan of my daughter!"
* Good Eats, Alton has an uncle (actually Alton in a costume) who wears a white suit (although he isn't fat or abnormally sweaty), since he's supposed to be a parody of Col. Sanders. He usually shows up when the recipe in question is distinctly Southern (such as fried catfish).
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged, Alucard gives a particularly nice one to the SWAT team who bust into his room:
* Gottlieb, who appear all over the playfield and backglass but have no effect on the game itself.
* Grenadier communicates underwater at great length with Rushuna Tendo, educating her in underwater combat through an extensive series of pre-prepared signs. In the manga, he tries to communicate a lengthy monologue but runs out of room on one sign.
* Griffith/Femto; it's been stated that trying to fight him, let alone beat him, would be akin to the characters in a story trying to challenge the author.
* Hellraiser Hell World when it turns out that Pinhead, the Cenobites, and Hellworld all do exist.
* Half-Life 2, the Combine views Earth as simply another one of their millions of conquests. They don't even bother stationing most of their transhuman forces on it. Until, that is, they discover the humans have developed teleporter technology superior to their own....
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows via photos of each page four days prior to the release.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban: In the final Quidditch match between Gryffindor and Slytherin, the Slytherins start off with a huge advantage — they're far enough ahead on the scoreboard that Harry can't catch the Snitch until the Gryffindor Chasers score enough goals to close the gap, or else Gryffindor will win the game but lose the cup. But rather than utilize what is essentially free time for Malfoy to catch the Snitch and win the game, they insist on repeatedly trying (and failing) to injure the Gryffindor players, causing Madam Hooch to award Gryffindor multiple free penalty shots.
* Half-Life 2-esque telescreens. He notes that now that the Citadel is gone, the suppression field is as well, and it would be a good time for re-population.
* Harry and Salazar Slytherin have to share a bed in a small inn. Slytherin states that it's not an uncommon practice for total strangers.
* Hilda immediately following the emotional rollercoasters "The Fifty-Year Night" and "The Deerfox."
* Hey Arnold! was hailed as the "Keeper of Urban Lore" which were basically urban legends. Justified in the fact that many, if not all, of them turned out to be either true or having an explanation.

* Harvester. The bastard got his entire lower body shot off during WWII, so what did he do? He crawled all the way from Germany to England, stopping every few miles to wind his intestines back in.