Green Lantern tried and failed repeatedly to just beat the guy into submission. Cap then spoke to the man, pointed out the destruction he was committing not only was destroying some of the artifacts of Egypt (they were fighting in a museum at the time), but he was also going to harm the people he was hoping to show the wonders of Egypt to. * Hidamari Sketch: Admit it, a lot of people reading or watching the show have mistaken Sae for a guy. She herself is also wary of that and tries to make herself more feminine, even praying for bigger breasts
* Godzilla: The Series are the result of genetic-altering, such as the DNA Mimic and the D.R.A.G.M.A.s.

* GoldenEye have direct evidence of how dangerous he is when cornered. The only such opportunity that has a justified reason for not killing him is in the Statue yard, where Trevelyan is trying to frame Bond and Natalya for the theft of the helicopter. If a post-explosion examination of the bodies revealed that they had been shot beforehand, it would have raised suspicion. Also, given Trevelyan's motivations, it's not merely enough to kill Bond, and if it would be he usually has more pragmatic reasons for keeping them alive. The aforementioned frame-up is just the first such example.
* Great Alta Saga starts off with the heroine's mother dying in childbirth and the father handing the new baby over to the midwife to be fostered, because he can't love the child who killed his wife.
* GoldenEye over London. * Gloom mixes elements of death metal, sludge metal, black metal, groove metal, and technical death metal to create something that is very easy to pick up but defies all categorization. The band chalks it up to the fact that all of the members have played in a band that fell into at least one of those genres over the years, and the result was that they all brought a bunch of individual musical preferences to the table that they just played around with and allowed to gel together without letting any one of them take prominence.
* Hetalia makes the genderbent version of Liechtenstein wear a crown and cape over his regular clothes.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City about his own amoral ventures) gets fed up with the guy and shoots him the crotch.
* Hilariously enough, players seem to have no problem roleplaying themselves as either of the two varieties.
* Hellsing is a lot more cultured than most of the men in his squad. And he is the heroine's love interest.
* Goat Simulator will, naturally, explode if kicked, headbutted or even jumped on too hard. Oddly, boats and moving vehicles are completely indestructible. Drag a parked car into the road, and it will explode when hit, while the car that hit it will drive off without a scratch.
* had them in Summer colors for a winter war. Played straight by some of the rest of the WWI Russian Front (where the Germans beat the Russians handily, though as the war went on, the Russians had fewer and fewer uniforms period), the Winter War, most independence wars (hence why they are "Independence Wars" rather than "Nationalist Revolts that were stomped flat within a month"), and the Yugoslav Revolution in WWII.
* Hellblazer: In "Mortification of the Flesh", we learn that the Vatican has one, specifically, a room enchanted to be hidden from the eyes of God so that whatever is done in there isn't a sin. Built by Pope Alexander VI, who you may know better as Rodrigo Borgia. And the room certainly lives up to its reputation, having seen theft, fornication, murder, demon summoning... in that chapter alone.
* Guild Wars 2. Mesmer and Thief characters can both wield sword and pistol.
* Gunnerkrigg Court: "Schoolyard Myths" has a panel showing Annie holding her mother's hand shortly before her death.

* GURPS calls this disadvantage "Trademark,". The more they increase the character's risk of getting caught (by narrowing the list of suspects or requiring the character to spend extra time at the crime scene), the more points they're worth.

* GTA, it was constantly blamed as the drive behind all manner of anti-social and violent behavior. Notably, it was directly implicated as one of the major contributing factors behind the Columbine High School massacre.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality: Harry James Potter-Evans-Verres. His ability to think more logically than most is both his biggest strength and weakness; there are times when one needs to act on intuition, and he has a near compulsive need to understand what he's dealing with before reacting.
* Guns N' Roses guitarist Slash. His name is on every kind of music equipment a guitarist would need. So far he has 8 Gibson/Epiphone Signature Les Paul guitars (Two of which are the exact same product, only with different names on the headstock. No spec-differences at all), 3 Marshall Signature Amplifiers, 2 Dunlop/MXR Signature Wah-Pedals, a signature Slide and a Seymour-Duncan Slash Signature Pick-Up set, etc. In fact, the only thing he doesn't have signature-versions of are a custom string-set (although he's probably trying to get that arranged), guitar-picks and cables. Given his appeal and skill, it's no surprise his return to GNR resulted in one of the five highest-grossing tours ever.
* Hc Svnt Dracones drones are used instead of fighters, they try to get in the same hex as enemy ships and then deal automatic damage every turn, unless the enemy's flak barriers hit them.
* GMA Network) which is done by lipsynching various songs as a way of conversing each other and it is in split-screen.
* Greg Rucka. Secret agent Tara Chace is issued a gun for a mission; her contact comments, "Your file says you're a P99 girl," to which she replies, "I'm more of a stay-at-home-and-fancy-a-cuppa girl." As the series handles guns and gunplay very realistically, weapons are rarely issued, and when they are, it's usually a sign that Something Bad will happen.
* Hannah Montana, Hannah's anklet acts like this. It's a keepsake of her mother's, and when she loses it everything goes wrong until Robbie Ray tells her that her mother is always with her, regardless of the anklet.
* Happy FlashbackA flashback to a happy(er) time in a character's life

* Good Adultery, Bad Adultery: Sometimes, adulterers are seen as good, other times, they're bad.
* Here We Go Again! for the JSDF in canon. Especially when the titular tank, 'Here We Go Again' goes up against the flame dragon, lives to tell the tale and even gets badass claw marks scarred into its hull for all to see!
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas. Plus at least one (probably two) rival agencies.
* Her greatest exploit was when she leaves her home village. She's running past the villagers to pick up the speed she needed to leap from the harbor onto the ship that was
* Healing Factor. Based on the Hercules example, it's necessary to cauterize the hydra's stumps so new heads don't grow. (Save for fire-breathing hydras. They need ice.)
* Glory Road marks the only time that Texas-El Paso (UTEP, but known as Texas Western when they won the title) has made it past the Sweet Sixteen in the NCAAs.
* GURPS seems to be in perpetual limbo, possibly due to an edition change since the Foglios wrote most of the content, perhaps because the Foglios have lots of other, probably more profitable work in hand. Other GURPS examples might include:
* Han Solo. He seems to be so lovable that all the pretty rotten things he has done seem so justifiable that they don't seem to sink in. Particularly in the

* God Slaying Blade Works, because Illya is so powerful, a few characters speculate that she has divine ancestry (she doesn't).
* GoDaddy.com uses a version of this trick to draw people to the online version of its commercials in the (unfulfilled) hope of seeing some
* Gundam 00. Feldt Grace and Mileina Vashti can count as Paramilitary brats.
* Hilda: Season 1 takes place within 4 weeks in the fall. Season 2 takes place within one year after the events of the first season and the episodes unfold over half-a-year with 2 months passing by. The events of the upcoming 70-minute movie special will take place a day later after the events of "The Stone Forest" in Season 2. That being said, so far, the series took place within 2 1/2 years.
* Global Warming has resulted in many coastal buildings getting lost in the water.
* Hawkeye made things better for some, but he still struggles to get respect outside of his fanbase.

* Grant Morrison who acts competent and tough when he has the advantage, but becomes a sniveling coward whenever he doesn't.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters has Godzilla blasted point-blank with a nuclear explosion, which only rejuvenates him after he (barely) survives getting hit with the Oxygen Destroyer, a weapon that had successfully killed the original Gojira and use of which basically killed all sea life around the point of detonation for several miles.
* Heroic Sacrifice and crewed by ancient skeletal death robots). After punching through its void shields, hundreds of Astral Knights spent hours battling across the surface of the World Engine, destroying everything that looked remotely important while beset on all sides by thousands of Necrons. Nearly wiped out to a man, the Chapter Master himself led a handful of survivors down into the bowels of the Engine and destroyed the main shield generators with melta-bombs, allowing the Imperial Navy to finish it off. And so the Astral Knights vanished into legend.

* Hercules, Hercules dives into the river of death to retrieve Megara's soul, proving himself a "true hero" and regaining his godhood.
* He also manages to procure replacement parts for the submarine by setting up a crooked casino and buying stolen parts from the Army with casino chips. This leads to the line, "Henceforth, you shall refer to the casino as 'The Supply Depot.'"
* Gurren-Lagann is also seen dual-wielding giant sunglasses/boomerangs or drills for some of its attacks.
* Hearthstone: Many of the cards summon other cards, some do nothing else. Murlocs are particularly infamous for this.

* Green Goblin because he thought Spidey would be an easy target, the Goblin soon became obsessed with the idea of making the much younger Peter Parker the "heir" to his legacy as the Green Goblin, seeing in Peter Parker the traits he wanted his heir to carry on, but found lacking in his own son.
* Godzilla (2014) have a quasi-religious attitude towards Godzilla, with Dr. Graham even calling him "a god, for all intents and purposes." Serizawa believes that Godzilla is essentially the personification of the balance of nature and the only hope humanity has of neutralizing the M.U.T.O.s, even if he has to kill people and destroy cities in the process. Admiral Stenz understandably thinks them naive for this.
* he were slain, Henry immediately swears he'd seek (literally) bloody vengeance. He's almost surprised to find that he truly considers the Shepherds his friends. Henry's emotions are always difficult to read, but he seems to have forgiven the Shepherds for Mustafa's death, knowing that true responsibility lay with Gangrel, whom they defeated.
* Granny Goodness is not, by any stretch of the imagination, a nice old lady.
* Heroic Self-Deprecation puts others' needs before her own, never expects anything in return, or thinks of herself as special for doing it.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows that Umbridge was prosecuted and imprisoned.

* He's also done bodyguarding and space piracy according to his stories, so he's pretty much an all-around hired gun. However, he found bodyguarding to be boring (but easy money, naturally) and prefers to work in smaller groups or alone, so he's arguably a Bounty Hunter foremost.
* Heroes, Angela wakes up Sylar through this while they're both comatose.
* Harry Potter goes from wearing his cousin's ill-fitting hand-me-downs to learning that he has a vault full of gold that he has inherited from his well-off parents, and then he inherits Sirius Black's estate. * Harry Potter". However, even aside from the disdainful prejudice of all this, as Ron Weasley pointed out in the page quote, if wizards hadn't done this they'd have died out due to inbreeding (we're shown that all existing "pure blood" families are interrelated, with many more extinct).
* Hell Girl by mail. Nowadays, she has her own website that you send your request on. Her computer looks rather out of place in the old Japanese hut she lives in.

* Happens to Anya too, when Xander casually mentions that the mayor's planning an Ascension. Her reaction? She leaves town. Though not before conveying dire warnings about how, as someone who has seen some pretty horrible things, most of which she caused, she also was a personal witness to a previous Ascension — so she knows what she's talking about.
* Goblin Slayer: Dwarf Shaman and High Elf Archer often argue with each other for trivial reasons, usually pulling the race card against each other. That doesn't stop them from working with and protecting each other.
* Harry Partridge, and thus modern monster hunters like the titular Dogtooth are basically glorified exterminators wasting their talents on dumb, harmless creatures that do stuff like eating garbage cans.

* Heel–Face Turn is still around in the Sohma main house and more hateful than ever because she can't stand that Akito has a happy family, driving Ren to verbally abuse Akito's son Shiki and Akito got stabbed once while protecting Shiki from Ren. There's also the Sohma retainers who disapprove of the changes Akito made in the household after the curse broke and they're shown harassing Shiki by telling him what an awful person his mother was in the past. Shiki also mentions that Akito greatly regrets her past actions towards the cursed Sohmas and distances herself from the people in the family besides Shigure, Shiki and Tohru.
* He seems to always either take the wrong direction (when given the choice between three roads, one of which he's told is right and one of which he's told is wrong, he takes the third road), or take directions too literally (when told to go "straight down the road" to the Seikan Tunnel from Hokkaido, he did just that — despite the fact the road curved and his route caused him to leap off of the road). His absurd levels of stamina, which lets him run at top speed for literally hours or even days without stopping, as well as being able to

Although it is made clear that this is the traditional silly/'feel good' at the end of the news bulletin and not a lead story. One of the player's reply options is "Well, logically, the best lawyer would be a dead one", which causes him to caustically point out that that definition includes every single attorney in the Land of the Dead.
* Guild Wars has an example in the third campaign, Nightfall. In the manual one of the recruitable heroes, Razah, was described as having a variable class, that the player could determine. When the game came out, however, he could only be a Ritualist. This was averted three years later, when an update allowed him to change his class as stated in the manual.

* Harry, Ron and Draco put a bucket of purple paint over Ginny's door.
* Golgo 13 never fails an assignment, or for that matter misses a shot. If he did, he'd lose his reputation as an assassin and there would be no series. Later chapters solve the problem by focusing more on the people who hire him and how their situations deteriorate to the point that they need to bring in a hitman. (Infamously, he doesn't appear in one story at all; the central character merely uses Golgo 13's reputation as a weapon.) The fact that the stories are standalone and bounce around time help in this regard. For completeness' sake, there have been several occasions of him missing, at least once by weapons sabotage creating a misfire, and one complete miss caused by the target's allegedly psychic bodyguard.
* Grandia, Feena is kidnapped by the leader of the Adventurer's Guild and is blackmailed into marrying her on threat of being expelled from the guild. After Justin defeats Pakon's bodyguard and unties her during the wedding, she responds to his demands by resigning and going on adventures anyway, without guild sanction (something which, between Pakon's inept leadership weakening the guild and the game's adventures going to places far beyond the reach of the Adventurer's Guild anyway, means nothing).
* Glory Girl also gets enhancements from Adrian - a headband to focus her
* Green Wing who wake up together, naked in bed and the former had to borrow the latter's underwear. As the latter doesn't want to talk about the situation as a whole it's ambiguous if they had sex or if he simply doesn't want to talk about the fact they got drunk and ended up naked together non-sexually.
* Hans-Joachim "Jochen" Marseille aka the "Star of Africa", while not exactly the most famous German ace of World War II, was exactly what you'd expect an ace pilot to be — a total womanizer and party guy with not much respect for authority. He was transfered to the North African theater in order to get him away from French women. While in the Battle of Britain he had not been notably successful, in North Africa he became virtually unstoppable. He would charge his plane straight into large British formations, then use high deflection shots to shoot the cockpit of his foes (at such an angle, you can't even see the plane your shooting at due to the engine). He racked up 158 confirmed kills, which all were against Western Allies, all but seven in North Africa. On 1 September 1942 he shot down 10 fighters that can be verified on RAF records. Erich Hartmann said that he thought Marseille was the best shot of any fighter pilot. He was killed when he tried to bail out of his Bf 109G after the engine failed and he hit the vertical stabilizer.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City Tommy Vercetti was sent to Vice City because, as "The Harwood Butcher", he was too hot for Liberty City.
* he wants her to kill him so that he and the souls of the rest of the Sith can possess her and turn her to the Dark Side.
* Gossip Girl (2021): Julien and Zoya improvise to dress up as the real boyfriends of the women who their female friends are cosplaying as after their initial choices were leaked before, so they're still original.
* Here U Are, who stands at 196 cm at age 18, is pretty docile and quiet young man unless someone decided to mess with Yu Yang.
* Harry and Hermione have a clue wall in one of the guest cabins at the Centre Parcs.
* Hall Monitor": Patrick is so scared of the Maniac that just seeing a police sketch of him sends him into a screaming fit. Said sketch is clearly a stick figure rendering of SpongeBob, and they didn't even draw him scary-looking.

* Guns N' Roses, the album received mixed but generally positive reviews.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone's exposition as they walk side-by-side.
* Henry Danger. In the episode "Dream Busters" Henry wakes up to see Captain Man and Schwoz, he tells them he had a very strange dream, but that "You weren't there" to both of them.

* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix there are a number of scammers going around the school selling things which supposedly do to panicked students as O.W.L. and N.E.W.T. testing approaches for the fifth and seventh years respectively. Ron and Harry desperately try to buy something from a Ravenclaw sixth year which he swears was solely responsible for his nine 'Outstanding' OWLs before Hermione confiscates it and dumps it out snarling:
* He also uses the "default method" of killing with a spontaneous heart attack as a sort of calling card. So that people would know someone was responsible for all the dead criminals. (At one point his game plan was to phase this out, noting that after using this trope to gain the public's attention, he's best served by changing their perception to attribute every death to

* Gorgeous Princess Creamy Beamy: "In Russian East Stereotypia, prostitute pays YOU! ... Why did I ever leave Russian East Stereotypia?"
* "Have a Cigar" alludes to this with the line "By the way, which one's Pink?"
* Harry Potter. For example, the heroes are looking for info on the Sorcerer's/Philosopher's Stone, and Hagrid tells them that they should give up and the only people who need to worry about the Stone are Dumbledore and Nicolas Flamel... when they didn't know about Flamel yet. In the movie, they turn "I shouldn't'a told you that" his catchphrase.
* Hera is an aversion, but only because she can be just as awful to her own kids. She drove Hercules insane so that he killed his wife and kids, but she also threw her own son, Hephaestus, off Mount Olympus for being ugly.
* Harley Davidson and the Marlboro Man that he can't shoot very well. This gets him in trouble more than once and causes the Marlboro Man to berate him.
* Golden Age that twisted the ruins of Suroch into a teratogenic wasteland.
* Grim Jack went by the name Goddess. It was eventually shown that she was indeed

* Gone Home focuses on the relationship between the player character's sister and her girlfriend.
* Heroic BSoD is when he learns that his species, Life Fibers, see humans as food, and he realizes that he has been feeding on Ryuko all along, since he needs to drink her blood to activate his powers.
* had to be re-examined by historians when it was pointed out that corn grew only waist-high in the 1860s, hence couldn't have provided concealment to standing soldiers.
* Hakkasan group has two restaurants in Las Vegas named Herringbone and Seersucker. Oddly, the names of both of these kinds of fabric are related to food: "herringbone," because of course herring are food fish, and "seersucker," whose name comes from a Persian phrase meaning "milk and sugar."
* He complemented the power of causing mistrust and discord by his presence alone (he didn't have to say or do a thing to start a fight between Caesar's advisers) with a good amount of mundane skill in psychological warfare and sowing mistrust and fear. He also had been sentenced to death at the Colosseum, and was alive at the beginning of the book due to making the beasts attack one another.
* Hanna-Barbera, where the titular white whale was basically a superhero who went around righting wrongs underwater with two SCUBA-diving kid sidekicks. We swear we are not making this up. The original pitch for the show would have had Captain Ahab as a recurring villain, but mercifully the writing staff shot this notion down.
* GURPS Aliens. Note that these are both ostensibly science-fiction (rather than fantasy or magical) species.
* Haqqislam is following a version of Islam that embraces progress with numerous Christian and Jewish minorities living in its realms. Jerusalem is still a holy site for the Abrahamic faiths.

* Halloween Episode - and thoroughly terrifies Chuckie with her cackling.
* Henry Winkler. After, he began to understand how much "The Fonz" meant to others, and changed the way he saw the character. While standing around at the park, he heard from behind him the word "Fonzie!", obviously uttered by a young girl. He turned around, and was confronted by a young mother holding the hand of a little girl of eight or nine. The mother was staring, chin on chest, apparently in utter shock, but not for the reason Winkler suspected. After the mother recovered a little, she told Winkler that it was the first time her daughter had ever spoken.
* Gunnerkrigg Court that she develops into later. There are also a few other chapters given to robots, forest creatures, and Jones.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: In the team's earliest days, Major Victory tended to be like this a lot, on account of being stuck in his spacesuit (otherwise he'd age to death in seconds). Not a good combination with four other guys also suffering from the severe trauma of seeing your species nearly wiped out, and it nearly leads to a brawl between Vance and Charlie-27 when he gets fed up of it.
* Hazmat Suit — Ominous-looking protective garb frequently worn when radiation is about.

* Heroic WillpowerThrough sheer willpower, love and loyalty the character maintains their Face status.
* Gundam ZZ that preceded him. Other minor blackish characters also show during the course of the series, like Masai N'gava, a female Zeon's pilot looking to clean up the name of her dead mentor.

* Heroic Comedic Sociopath: An otherwise amoral character fighting for a good cause, whose more sinister deeds are usually played for laughs.
* Heavy Metal features Den, who gets snatched from Earth and flung to some far-distant planet, never to see his home again. The fact that he's turned from a scrawny nerd into a perfect physical specimen who gets to have sex with hot babes sorta takes the sting away.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows because, well, adults don't generally like youths putting their lives on the line, and Harry and Co.'s adventures were generally without adult approval.
* .hack//Legend of the Twilight, particularly the anime adaptation, writes the brother and sister protagonists, Shugo and Rena, in a way that came across as incestuous to a lot of viewers.
* Gunners until he got tired of their ruthless and indiscriminate killings of anyone in their way and left to become a freelance mercenary.
* he actually succeeds in erasing the original Robotnik from existence.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, towards the end, when Harold confronts his two co-workers.
* high altitude nuclear explosions that resulted in fireballs being as cool if not cooler than anything Hollywood could produce well into the age of CGI. Just another example of something that's just as easy to get wrong as right. It should be noted that these explosions were still in the atmosphere, just very high up.

* grot-guided missiles (and the option for two more), a flamethrower, a deff kannon (which produces a blast the size of a dinner plate that will reduce nearly everything it hits to chunky salsa), one of the largest chainsaws in the game, and the "supa-gatler", a gatling gun so nice that it fires between two and twelve shots, three times a turn, up until a double is rolled and it runs out of ammo.
* Halo: Combat Evolved, as the cave in question is very obviously artificial. This was a consequence of the game's script being handled by Microsoft's Franchise Division, who were tasked with completing it within a few days only using descriptions of each level and without even being able to look at the game itself. In this case, a writer only had outdated concept art that showed a more natural-looking cave to go by, and felt the clarification was necessary.
* Heroic Sacrifice) before he gradually stops being suspicious of her ample knowledge about him and his personal future and comes to reciprocate her feelings.
* Harpoon was released in 1989 and one expansion pack assumed that the Soviet Union would still exist in 1996. After the USSR's collapse, there was a big scramble to create new scenarios that weren't obsolete. Of course, since it was a simulation the existing ones were still developed.

* He does this again in the season 2 premiere, when he's trying to escape from
* Gnomeo and Juliet Disney gave up on it and handed it off to someone else.
* Halo: The Cole Protocol: A straight example is actually justified. The Rubble is explicitly said to be very unusual, the asteroids having been artificially tethered together, with the whole thing being kept stable by constant AI-controlled adjustments. Additionally, the asteroids are Trojan asteroids orbiting a gas giant, and each individual asteroid is relatively small. Then-Lieutenant Jacob Keyes even lampshades this, noting that this trope is what civilians, or "dirt siders", think of when they think of asteroid belts; when he first sees the Rubble, he initially can't accept that it's real, because it isn't what happens in nature, with him explicitly noting that asteroids can be millions of miles apart from each other.
* He's rather relieved when he finds a passport that has his name on it, then he finds the other passports and becomes even more confused.
* Godzilla killed him at the end, and all later films star a different individual.
* Grand Theft Auto games came with maps. The original on PC actually came with three maps on two poster-sized sheets, which contained maps of Liberty and Vice cities, as well as San Andreas.
* Hadou God counts as this, as they utterly transcend the concept of size and therefore have no problems erasing a universe or two. They can warp their surroundings towards their own desire on a conceptual level, ignore any law of physics or replace them with their own laws and can only be stopped by a stronger God.
* Gotham). Even the first episode of Season 2 has her barefoot in Arkham Asylum.
* Gregg Allman took a more drastic measure. When he got his draft notice,
* Harry Potter, is generally seen as the best, or at least better than the first two.
* Good Morning, Vietnam, Adrian Cronauer is trying to come to terms with the fact that the Vietnamese kid he'd befriended and who had saved his life by getting him out of the local bar shortly before the Vietcong blew it up is actually the Vietcong operative responsible for the bombing, who'd he'd been responsible for getting into the bar in the first place. He furiously calls Tuan out for turning out to be his enemy when he thought they were friends, only for Tuan to tearfully call out the Americans for invading Vietnam and slaughtering Vietnamese, including his family and neighbours, because they don't even regard the Vietnamese as human.

* Haven: A Novel of Anxiety has the titular town in Idaho, which seems nice at first, but is full of racists who massacred Chinese miners in its early days and harbored Nazis after WWII.
* Going Another Way features one between Asuka and Rei of all people. Essentially, Shinji and Rei are already in the beginning stages of a relationship, but Asuka shows interest in Shinji as well while dismissing Rei. Things blow up after Asuka slaps Rei in front of the entire school. The fight itself is not shown, but the aftermath is quite impressive.

* Happy Birthday, Pumpkin and Beanpole, a children's book, the eponymous two witches invoke this as a prank on each other's birthdays by casting spells so the wrapped gifts resemble things they aren't. For instance, one present appeared to be a teddy bear but it was actually a hot water bottle and two pairs of bed socks.
* He learns from this incident, as in a later episode Thor makes sure to beam up some human food from the SGC before "borrowing" SG-1 to help with the Replicators yet again. This leads to General Hammond being told that the base's entire food supply has vanished, and the team spending the trip to Ida pigging out on ice cream since there's no freezer and they don't want to waste it.

* Grand Finale, May's symbiote-created clone April does this when it turns out that May dying leads to an apocalyptic future where Carnage symbiotes ravage the world.
* High School D×D. Maybe magic demon powers are keeping it in place.
* Guild Wars 2 has winged lizard creatures with long tails that it calls "bats". The use of this trope is even stranger because in the previous game there were called "incubi".
* God Bless America, Roxy mistakes Frank for a pedophile when she first sees him spying on Chloe.
* Hello, from the Magic Tavern. Chunt takes a few dates out to Make Out Point, which Arnie expects to be like this trope, but it is actually nothing like it. Make Out Point is a place full of dangerous monsters, and if you and your date "make it out" alive from there, you know they're the one.

* Godzilla Against Mechagodzilla. The main gun of Mechagodzilla is broken at the end of the first movie, and can't be replaced - but this is purely because the JSDF can't afford to replace a key component. The head scientist flatly states that if they can give him the enormous diamond he needs to replace, he can get the weapon working again within a day.
* Great Pretender, but sticks—and while it starts out being somewhat belittling, it becomes increasingly affectionate as the series goes on.
* Hc Svnt Dracones and traditional governments that sterilized Earth. * He was actually able to do extremely good Scottish accents. It was Gene Roddenberry and the show's producers who made him tone it down to the cod-Scottish accent you hear on Star Trek. In his audition, he first did Glasgow. Bad move. He then tried the different Aberdeen accent. Still unintelligible to non-Scottish ears. Finally, on the Daphne-Moon-out-of-Frasier principle, he had to adopt a compromise accent that was vaguely there somewhere (just as Daphne Moon's Manchester accent does what it's meant to - except in Manchester). We who actually live in Manchester accepted that Daphne's Manchester accent isn't meant for us - it's to convey the general impression to Americans while being intelligible to them. Same thing with James Doohan's Scotty: conveying the general idea of Scottishness while still comprehensible to Yanks. Not meant for genuine Scottish people to listen to, alas. Just think how Americans would take to a real Glasgow accent (it's why

It turns out that one of the Argonauts is the culprit.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows between the revelation and Voldemort's death.
* Haganai is a little weird about this. The screentime is somewhat balanced, but it is done by having the entire cast be together almost all the time. However, closer examination reveals a two-tier format, with Yozora and Sena being the main girls, and making the others a mixed-bag of genre tag-alongs.
* Gods & Heroes: Rome Rising, with the game rights bought by Heatwave Interactive.

* Heralds of Valdemar has Need, an elderly mage-smith who transferred her soul into a sword so that she could guide a teenager in rescuing young women from an evil mage. And then, having powerfully bespelled the sword so it never rusted, broke, or wore down, she just didn't fade. Exactly how old Need is, she doesn't know, but she outlives the gods she served, records of whom haven't survived to the present day, and was old when the Cataclysm happened. Need experiences total sensory deprivation when she doesn't have a bearer whose senses she can leech and "sleeps" for centuries at a time even when she has bearers, who she unconsciously compels to help women and gay men. In exchange she heals her bearer, protects fighters from magic, and possesses non-fighters in battle to fight as an ancient swordmaster. When she's awake, she calls everyone from teenagers to four hundred year old ghosts "youngsters" and has somewhat odd priorities.

* Heavy Object starts panting heavily whenever he's confronted with cutting edge Object technology, much to the disgust of anyone witnessing it.
* Halo: Harvest, as the name implies, is a chiefly agricultural world and covered with extensive areas of farmland. This is not uncommon in the setting — some planets have more hours of daylight than is typical for Earth and happen to have huge tracts of very rich volcanic soil, leading to very large crop yields. Agriculture on such planets is both cheap and productive, and it costs less for other planets to import food from the farm worlds than to grow it locally. This is subverted later as the war rages on, as many of the Outer Colonies where much of the farming goes on are lost, and the Cole Protocol restricts interstellar travel, leading many inner planets to reluctantly take to growing their own food instead of importing it.
* Goofy, Goofy's invention, the Extendo-hand has a boxing glove as an attachment, which is used to attack enemies. When you beat the game, this is what knocks Pete out in the game's ending cutscene.
* Goblin Slayer's equipment looks pretty shabby and worn even compared to the gear of most rookies, but it gets the job done. Other silver-level adventurers look down on him partly because his equipment isn't as fancy as theirs. The thing is, it doesn't need to since he's only hunting goblins and it's also easily replaceable, though he prefers to get it repaired.

* Gravity Falls and still has time to chase down Dipper and Mabel. He's only out for a few minutes.
* Heroes of Might and Magic campaign "Birth of a Barbarian", Yog is still technically a Wizard with the Chain Lightning specialization, but his stat growth is more in line with Barbarians. More importantly, this Campaign specific version of him cannot acquire a spellbook or learn any magic at all (rendering his own specialization completely useless). This can make his campaign a bit challenging for players accustomed to casting spells. He apparently lightens up on this attitude later in life, since the "normal" Barbarian Hero version of him can buy a spellbook and learn magic like any other Hero.
* Happens earlier then that. Now let's see... was it the Mariko Kuonjo story arc (Ranma went on a date with Kuno to prove "she loved Kuno more")? Or the Wishing Sword story (Ranma went on a date with Kuno to either steal the wish-granting sword or get him to make a wish that would cure Ranma's Jusenkyo curse)? Or even both? And then there was Harumaki, whose astral projection terrified Ranma in his dreams for about a week until Ranma agreed to go on a date with him in exchange for the old lech knocking it off.
* Hannah Fury loves this trope. It's featured in a large number of her songs, most notably "Beware The Touch", "My Next Victim", and "Never Look Back".
* Heavy Metal off the same album is a blatant retelling of Taarna's story.
* Guilded Age: Byron is billed as "the Berserker" and generally treated as the most competent member of the group, but he's usually also the first to go down (one way or another) when things get sufficiently serious.
* Hercules are an even better example. Though they have fought on occasion, and there's still a little rivalry, ultimately, they understand and can talk to each other in ways they really can't with the other Avengers.
* Halo reversed it, causing the light to dim instead whenever they spoke. Johnson addresses Monitor 343 Guilty Spark as "lightbulb" because of the effect.
* Hellsister Trilogy, who has just teleported himself in the place to announce he's in charge of operations now. Every villain nervously agrees.

* Green Worldz is so strong that the hero has to resort to feeding her severely damaged body to a giant-size monster baby in order to get rid of her. Even after that, she is revealed to be alive in chapter 110 and managed to regenerate her body back.
* Heel–Face Turn: throughout the game he fights with a Zubat, which later evolves into Golbat. Golbat can evolve further, into Crobat, but only if it is extremely happy with its trainer. This doesn't happen to your rival's Golbat until the final battle with him, well after he realizes the error of his ways and starts treating his Pokémon better, showing that he has indeed changed.

* He gained 50 lbs for the seventh season and lost most of the weight as the season progressed. He has explained that making his character get fat was part of the sitcom deconstruction that the show is aiming for but was told to lose weight at the advice of his doctor.
* H. G. Wells, Colonel Adye is being held at gunpoint by Griffin. An attempt by Adye to grab the gun ends in either it going off or Griffin just flat out shooting him (Wells is unclear). He is described as falling down and not getting up. Kemp later tells Adye's men, "He's killed Adye. Shot him anyhow." So even Kemp, who witnessed the actual shooting, is uncertain if Adye is dead or not. He's never brought up again after this, until the epilogue involving Thomas Marvel; Adye is mentioned as having questioned him about the whereabouts of Griffin's notebooks, but Wells isn't clear if this happened before or after the shooting.
* Guitar Hero Live. Fans weren't happy with the entirely different gameplay and obvious cash-grab features. The genre still exists with the fan-made Clone Hero, which takes the classic 5-button play and pushes it to its limits, but will probably never be mainstream again.

* he wants them to join him in conquering the universe and so holds back to not kill anyone while repeatedly telling them to just surrender and casually disintegrating their wargear in the showiest fashion he can come up with.
* Harry Potter And The Mysterious Curse Of The Girl Who Lived plays with this idea, keeping Harry a boy but placing him under a strange curse that makes everyone magical see him as a girl. With a very few exceptions (Dumbledore, Ollivander and Luna), the curse stops them from considering for even a moment that "Harriet" might not be a girl, no matter how many times Harry tries to tell them.

* Good Bad Bug would occasionally have a squad of mooks spawn after a mission who would chase the player down across the entire zone until the player left or they were defeated. The bug was that occasionally the spawned mob wouldn't be level-appropriate, as they were supposed to be, but level 1 or 2, even when the player would be at levels 20+. The programming for these mobs meant the "chase hero down and fight them" rule overruled the normal "avoid starting fights with players X-number of levels higher" rule, resulting in the hilarious sight of a squad of enemies earnestly blasting away with all their powers at a player who could just stand around and completely ignore them.
* Heroes. Most fans would have been happier with that than with the final version of season three.
* Harry Potter fanfiction averts this quite often, actually, whenever it cares to expand the universe far enough to get there. Jesus is most common, but other important religious figures can sometimes come up.

* Hansel and Gretel": From the second edition of the Grimm tales onward, the plan to abandon Hansel and Gretel in the woods is put forward by their stepmother, and the father only complies because the stepmother pressures him. The trope does not appear in the first edition, where the woman is the kids' actual mother, and the father shares the blame for abandoning the children.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. He has to call Iceland to get the fist back because The Rocket punch just kept going straight to Iceland and Iceland's head was in the way so it couldn't come back.
* Heliodisplay, is a scam, requiring a cloud of water vapour or some other denser-than-air medium on which to project a 2D image. Like a cinema without a screen, at ten times the price for one tenth of the clarity.

Dumbledore was originally her transfiguration teacher and took her under his wing and they stayed friends thereafter. He got her the job at Hogwarts in the first place. She and Dumbledore found out they had similar family and love situations and one night Dumbledore told her everything about his own story. She’s probably the only person who ever got it straight from him. They’re probably the most important person in each other’s life by the time of the books and show an intense loyalty to each other.

* Good Omens stayed extremely close to the book. A lot of fans loved that, but others - not to mention the critics - were more mixed in their response, feeling the series missed an opportunity to make the material come to life in a new way, or update details that lost their resonance outside the book's 1990 context. The most criticised aspect was the inclusion/reliance of a narrator that allowed the show to include chunks of the book's text and could feel quite stifling of the series doing anything interesting of its own.

* Heart of the Swarm has "Tac Fighters"-small fighters that it constructs, and act similar to the Carriers' interceptors: fly out, shoot targets, return to base, and attack again. Unlike the interceptors, audio dialogue indicates they're manned.
* Halo franchise is filled with lots of these. In the games, the most prominent examples are Noble Team (a group of SPARTAN supersoldiers who have been serving in the military since they were kids) and Alpha Nine (a group of elite Orbital Drop Shock Troopers who find themselves scattered and stranded behind enemy lines in a Covenant-occupied city).
* Hatchetfield are sneaking through the obscene word "bugger" to their tween audience.
* Hearts in Atlantis, a teenage girl is attacked by bullies, leaving her with a broken arm. Not only does she scream and wail loudly enough to wake the dead, but she has to be carried away from the scene, since apparently her broken arm leaves her unable to walk. It doesn't help that during all this carry-on, Anthony Hopkins is telling us what a brave lion she is. Er, no.
* Happy Tree Friends episode "Shard at Work", Warren Graff (who voices Handy the beaver) choked himself with water while recording a scene where Handy gets a fish bowl stuck on his head.

* Hellsister Trilogy finds she can't love him back the way he wants to be loved and ends up falling for dashing but abrasive Dev-Em instead.
* Herman strip shows a man with a tracking collar and ear-tag yelling about "ALIENS!"

* Gus Fring has this eerie level of calmness that he exerts at all times, even when he's
* Half-Life 2: Dr. Kleiner and his team developed a teleporter, but it's unreliable. The first time it works without a hitch, but the second time it goes haywire because Kleiner's pet headcrab Lamarr jumps into it mid-operation. The third time, Gordon and Alyx spent nearly a week real-time in transit, but only a couple seconds at most pass for them.

* Goldberg did briefly turn heel in Spring of 2000, but that got quickly nixed as fans didn't react well to Heel Goldberg. Mind you, not the usual booing that a heel gets and that sort of stuff, but rather fan apathy at how
* Grant Morrison's Batman has given us Spyral. We don't know terribly much about them. Their agents have technology that makes their faces impossible to perceive, they use a finishing school to train attractive female agents, and they have a disturbing number of double agents.

* Good Dick one of the characters is a survivor of the father/daughter type.
* "God/Heaven/the gods/[my dead loved one(s)] will know." (The hero doesn't feel like they're really in the dark. Often overlaps with #1, if the hero's devoutly religious.)
* Gorillaz's "Feel Good Inc.", appearing as the cover in an American iPod ad, led to the popularization of the band in the United States outside of Alternative radio. (It remains their only top 40 hit in America.) It's even mentioned in their book Rise of the Ogre as one of the main reasons they became popular to begin with.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe, this claim is more reasonable than the others).
* Gohou Drug involves the characters infiltrating an all-male boarding school, where almost all the guys are gay simply because there are no girls around. One student even explains this trope directly to the main character.

* Harry Potter: There have been several fics involving Hermione misusing the Time Turner in order to seduce her past selves.
* HERZ: Even after twelve years, the scars that Asuka received when she battled the MP-Evas still hurt. Her blind eye bleeds every so often.
* Hand of Thrawn, and doesn't seem to have much ambition of his own beyond surviving and being handsomely rewarded. Flim, being a typical con artist, is interested in a short-term reward, claiming that people of his "profession" don't stick around long enough for the mark to take a closer look at them. As such, he knows that he has no prayer in actually running the Empire, especially since he doesn't have the political or the military skills for the job.
* Hawaii Five-O meant he was back to relatively normal by the end of the episode.
* "Groundhog Day" Loop to save the team. Cassandra was able to being him back by "restarting the game", but this "unsaved" Ezekiel had no memory of anything after the loop started, and didn't really believe the team when they told him because "that doesn't sound like me".

* Hellsister Trilogy's headquarters' cells when she runs into something invisible forcing her back, and guesses it has to be some kind of force-field.

* Halo, there are less than a thousand members of their species left in the whole galaxy.
* Going Bovine it is, most of a time has a deeper meaning to all those seemindly empty conversations.
* Halo Wars, where Captain Cutter's special ability is to fire MAC rounds from orbit to ground targets. Once again, no collateral damage. Although it should be noted that the Mac rounds being used in Halo Wars are stated in expanded material to not be large ship guns but rather smaller Mass Drivers mounted on the ships outer hull, similar to the Mass Driver that is used in the last level of Halo Reach. The guns can be seen during the missions "Cleansing" and "Repairs", where you are moving about the dorsal surface of the ship, along with the cutscene that plays just before the latter mission that depicts the ship engaging a covenant vessel.

* Harry S. Truman as one of these, given the potential dilemma of choosing between killing a couple hundred thousand Japanese or losing a similar number of Americans and killing an even larger number of Japanese. In his mind, and to most Allied citizens of the time, there was no question what the 'right' thing to do was. At the time, using the bombs to improve the efficiency of the Strategic Bombing campaign was not seen as a particularly horrible or unique decision, what Nina Tannenwald has called 'The Nuclear Taboo' coming about in the aftermath.
* Heartbreak Ridge Tom Highway. Way down. Webster wisely leaves.
* has Adrien and Marinette hooking up after losing Chloe and Nathaniel, respectively.
* Happy Happy Clover doesn't actually do this, she does making a kissing gesture at the reader in Volume 3 between chapters after she learns that the reader is still reading about her and friends. The expression she makes is cute to say the least.
* have an unfortunate legacy of crashing and burning but that was little comfort to fans who continued to see them drop out of the playoffs almost every single year they made it.
* Glory of ham. Seriously, she might not have had a single scene that wasn't gloriously hammy. Overcompensating for your lost hell-empire will do that to you.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) and dismisses that illusion. The final obstacle was a centaur who demanded a test of strength. He-Man was unwilling to fight him, so he proposed a tug-of-war, which the centaur accepted and lost. On the way back, He-Man gets attacked by an evil wizard who wanted the girl for himself, but he quickly defeats him and returns with the apple to win the challenge.

* Higurashi: When They Cry outfit or another. Or maybe she's just a sadist...

* He warned Japan against withdrawing from the Washington Naval Treaty, knowing of the sheer US advantage in industrial and financial strength, and argued that the treaty was actually excellent because (1) it stopped the US from outbuilding Japan by insane margins, and (2) Japan wasn't capable of building much more than what the treaty allowed them to build. However, he did this in an era where the Japanese, the IJN in particular, was fulminating against the treaty and thus got labeled as dishonorable. To make things worse, he did not have enough influence in the IJN or the government to do anything about it. He was proven right; US naval construction dropped in 1943-44 because they realised that they won already and didn't need any more.
* Hilariously averted with the cultists; after their first plan to destroy the universe ends terribly at the hands of the Light Warriors, they come back a few hundred strips later seeming much more competent; they see through Black Mage's disguise like a window, lock of the rest of the Light Warriors, and actually set up the summoning ritual for the monster that will end the universe. It seems like a massive threat to the universe and the Light Warriors.
* Happens to Jimmy in "Stranded" after getting hit in the head by coconuts.
* Herakles also beat Ares in a straight-up fight (not that this is impressive; for being the god of war, he's pretty much a sissy), and later on fought Apollo over a temple and managed to stand on even ground with him, and Herakles didn't have anyone backing him up for that fight. He also intimidated Charon into helping him, and almost shot Helios out of the sky until the sun charioteer gave him a boat. This in addition to all the monsters he took out.
* He later befriends Princess Shirahoshi, the biggest mermaid alive, whose size is comparable to their ship. They more or less remain platonic, however.

* Half-Life 2 has a particularly nasty trap involving a room that looks perfectly harmless, with only a single cut-in-half zombie in plain sight. Step on the wrong spot, though, and the floor will give way, dropping you into a cluster of a half-dozen other zombies. * Hanna-Barbera sets are still in print. Hammering home that some of this displacement came from the fact when these shows were new, a lot of older people weren't using the Internet as much for younger people to have noticed.
* Good Technology by Red Guitars doesn't necessarily condemn technology, but does lampshade its absurdities and moral ambiguities. The last verse sums it up:
* GoGo Sentai Boukenger, something you can't be in real life. Even then, it's somewhat justified, since with the exception of his mother, his non-human half is a race of literal monsters who desire destruction.
* Grimm, a virtual stranger to her, is able to wake her, since he is a prince and has taken a potion to make himself pure of heart to do it.
* Hannah Montana" features a female-to-male version of this; Lilly decides to escape the latest round of bullying by pretending to leave Seaview High and then return under the guise of 'Otis Scott', who immediately attracts the attention of Amber, Ashley and Miley. * Harsher in Hindsight: A scene that was already sad or unsettling becomes even worse thanks to current events.
* Haruhi Suzumiya her quirky whims, which can involve physical abuse. * Hamish Alexander is a completely straight example: Earl of White Haven, brilliant tactician, fleet commander, etc.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix and b) that there's a self-defense clause in that law, and that Harry was clearly acting in self-defense. Fudge refers to Harry blowing up his aunt, but Dumbledore points out that that happened two years ago, and that since Fudge didn't press charges then, he can hardly do so now. He then tries to argue that Harry has been up to all kinds of nonsense at school...but as Dumbledore points out, what happens at school is not legally the Ministry's business. It's not that Grave is ignoring Hyouma, Grave is just being himself, and Mika usually has to explain to Hyouma why Grave acts the way he does.
* High School D×D, Rias is horrified to learn Issei sacrificed an arm for the power to rescue her. She asks what he plans to do in the future, since she's still a powerful political prize.
* Grandma Got Run Over by a Reindeer for the hit and run of Grandma and rid the world of a holiday icon, just for a lot of money.

* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys because they are half-gods or hung around with and battled half- or full-gods, so most injuries that are less than lethal are usually shrugged off as par for the course. One of the more specific incidents involves Xena having her shoulder dislocated mid-battle; she doesn't even notice until someone points it out, bangs against a wall of the cave they are in (strongly enough to cause a tiny tremor) to pop it back into its socket, and then continues on without breaking pace. At least everyone around had the decency to have "did that just happen?" expressions on.
* Gravity Bone (a "twentieth-century cyberpunk" game involving hacking with now-outdated technology).
* Goof Troop just loves her daddy, Pete, mainly because he's willing to spoil her a lot of the time and lets her get away with bratty behavior her mother doesn't tolerate.

* Guild Wars: Factions, in which Mhenlo (and Master Togo, to an extent) seems to be trying his utmost to invent the Bald of Suck (as any player who's herded him through the entirety of the campaign can tell you). Played straight in the rest of the series with Mhenlo (who's actually a fairly decent henchman when he's not forced into obnoxious-allydom) and PC Monks, Dervishes, and male Necromancers.
* Halo: Reach implies that combat Scarabs are not so much vehicles piloted by a Lekgolo worm colony (as fans previously assumed) as a huge Lekgolo worm colony in a similarly massive suit of Powered Armor. For some idea of the scale here, the combat Scarab is adapted from a form of fully-mechanical mobile mining platform. They also normally carry a complement of more normally-sized infantry to protect against boarding attempts and man-mounted guns.

Once your opponent is bleeding out, his form is bound to suffer. That's assuming your foe's limbs are all still attached. And this can be done without closing in enough for him to land a
* Heracles takes on this role when part of an ensemble, and is one of the earliest recorded Big Guys in human culture. There's a reason why we use the adjective "Herculean" even today.
* Golden Age, a rare non-radiation based version of I Love Nuclear Power.
* Greg Egan— apparently the process causes those who undergo it to become more empathetic than baseline humans, meaning that the first transhumans worked selflessly to peacefully uplift everyone else to their level instead of exploiting or subjugating them.
* Happy Heroes takes place on Planet Xing, in a time where interplanetary travel is commonplace.
* Hannah Swensen, this got Ronni Ward fired from one of her previous jobs - she was a cocktail waitress at a bar, where she totaled her customers' bar tabs early, took their credit cards and rang them up. Then, when they'd order another round, she'd ask them to pay in cash and pocketed it. When the owner complained to the bartender about his coming up short, the bartender started keeping a closer eye on the cocktail waitresses and caught her in the act.
* Heavy Rain: A symphony of high instruments play at some points when Norman starts to suffer from the effects of Triptocaine. It's also included in Norman Jayden's main theme.
* Great Balls of Fire entered the stage, his head blocked a "C" on a giant screen behind him.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) all his life, and was thus reluctant to feed on sentient beings, something they had no problem with. When he succeeded in freeing the others, they saw this reluctance as "soft", and some of them tried to urge him to do so when the opportunity presented itself. (He never got the courage to do it, at least not before one or more of the heroes arrived to interrupt him.)

* Hancock's Half Hour TV episode "The Bowmans", where Hancock is a radio actor and is shocked when he gets a script that kills off his character. (He gets his own back in the end.)
* Godzilla made use of stock footage. The footage was frequently used to save money for fairly standard scenes of buildings being destroyed by monsters and military attacks on said monsters. King Ghidorah in particular was a favorite subject of this, seeing as he appeared in several movies. As a result, the creators frequently reused the same footage of King Ghidorah soaring over his victim city, raining destruction from above. Another favorite was reusing footage of the army or navy firing shots at Godzilla or other monsters.
* Higurashi: When They Cry; Rika Furude cares about all of her friends, but she has a closer bond to Satoko compared to the rest. The rest of the cast is aware of both the favoritism and its innocent nature but are not really bothered by it.
* Highlander: The Series live for centuries, so they have plenty of opportunity to mix with some pivotal events. Given their potential lifespan, if a character doesn't actively seek out an historic event, it's likely that one will just happen while they're around.
* Green-Skinned Space Babe but is interrupted by Uhura coming into the room.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, and he goes to extreme lengths to prevent it. Onizuka's definitely interested, and they go on a few dates, but apparently never actually do it.
* Heavy Gear: The bad guys try to do this after dropping big bombs stopped working.
* handwaves why the faction leaders are still alive after centuries of rule.
* Gravity Falls episode "Into the Bunker". Mabel shoves Dipper into a closet with Wendy in an attempt to get him to confess his feelings for the latter. Unfortunately, the "closet" was actually a decontamination chamber, leading to the lair of the Shape-Shifter...Mabel finds out too late and can't get them out. Dipper comes to terms with his issue in the end though.
* Grimm in front of them. The Wesen see the Grimm's black eyes reflect their nature back at them.
* Green Lantern rings used to require charging every 24 hours, but this has gradually been changed to more closely follow a "battery" model, where the charge depletion depends on the use of the ring.
* He does the same thing regarding Inara, who has a similar response.
* Halloween: The Curse of Michael Myers, who played Dr. Loomis and died in 1995.
* Gosh Dang It to Heck!: Vulgar language isn't in vogue in this decade, so everybody speaks in family friendly swearing.
* Heel–Face Turn moment. But, some would rather think he was always an ass or worse while others would rather think he was always a sweet guy with a troubled past and bad friends.
* Grabbed by the Ghoulies: Wherein a teenager has to save his girlfriend from a haunted house.
* Hebban olla uogala nestas hagunnan hinase hi(c) (a)nda thu uuat unbidan uue nu (a phrase, in Flanders and the Netherlands it is analyzed to death)
* Henry's got boatloads of characters like this. Six-year-old Jennie Anges, who is "already marked for heaven", snatches consecrated communion hosts out of a church tabernacle to protect them from enemy soldiers who would desecrate them. Naturally, she gets desecrated instead.
* Go Shogun Remy Shimada is none other than the villainous Leonardo Medici Bundle.
* , H'ara'k demons use ground up gems as medicine, line their nests with gold (which their young absorb through their cocoons), and require platinum to breed. One such demon, Samantha "Sammy" Gardener, works as a fence to make it easier for her to acquire said materials for her clan.
* Hello Cheeky, John occasionally suffered this trope, usually while trying to conceal something he had just said about his affair with Barry's wife.
* Happily N'Ever After, Rick wonders what in the world Ella sees in the Prince because while the man is pretty, he's a complete moron.

* Grace considers to be evil behavior are highly subjective, vaguely explained and completely arbitrary.
* Half-Life 2. Although it does hold Striders, Gunships, Razor Trains and other tools of oppression, most of what you see are colossal empty rooms with no discernible purpose.
* Gotham City Garage murdered their father. She believes him and intends to get justice for her father until Harley Quinn — of all people! — reveals that she's been lied to.
* Healthy-eating videos don't skimp on showing how harmful unhealthy food can be to the body, from clogged arteries, to heart attacks, to damaged liver. Several older ones seem to ignore the idea of eating junkfood in moderation, either you eat all healthy (fruits, veggies, grains, etc.) or all junk (Burgers, fried foods, chips, cake). That unhealthy foods can be safely eaten if you eat them sparingly, with plenty of healthier foods in between, is rarely mentioned in older videos.
* Hank Zipzer. It's a deliberate ploy on his part to use humour to divert attention away from his learning difficulties: figuring that it is better to have the class laughing with him rather than at him.
* He's not the real Uchiha Madara. Naruto has decided that knocking the mask off is a short-term goal of his - he finally succeeds in chapter 598 by shattering it, and 599 reveals Tobi's face and true identity.
* Grand Theft Auto are only voiced in English. Often this is due to the games' contents being extensive enough to preclude a foreign-language soundtrack due to technical or budgetary constraints.
* Graham McNeill, Maggard is sexually exploited by his mistress, on top of having his vocal cords removed because it was unfitting for him to speak in his mistress's presence.
* Halloween to signify that The Shape was returning. After that, there was no looking back.
* Hadestown (he proposes to Eurydice moments after Hermes advises him not to come on too strong) who's described as being "touched", "naive", and "sensitive of soul". He has an odd gait, is constantly moving or tapping to the beat, and tends to get easily distracted whenever he gets inspired by something. He's intensely fixated on playing his song and singing it to himself, often moving or spinning (stimming) while he does so. His obsession with music leads him to focus completely on writing his song, forgetting about basic necessities like food and firewood for the winter.
* Headbutting Pachy: The unrealistic portrayal of Pachycephalosaurid dinosaurs headbutting things.
* Harry Potter: Hogwarts Mystery, this scene draining all your energy, even if it was maxed out prior to you encountering the plant - either cough up, or be treated to having to watch the student you took time out of your day to create essentially be tortured for you not giving the game money.
* Grim Tales from Down Below has Grim, the personification of death, speaking in a slightly garbled manner in the beginning but it begins to get more and more difficult to understand as the story moves on.
* Golf Story. He regularly hits 300+ yards in his matches, but he's lousy at hitting cleanly or accurately. You can make the player character one depending on how you level him up; it's even enforced to an extent, as apportioning points to drive distance will lower your other stats slightly.
* Heckle and Jeckle turn into surgeons giving Chesty the Bulldog the onceover in "Magpie Madness" (1947) as they try to spring Dimwit from an asylum.
* Gourmet Girl Graffiti wears short pigtails and is the least mature of the cast.
* Gothic 2. You don't even get any spells for the first third of the game, so get ready to use light swords and run very fast. But, if you stick with it, the later bosses become ridiculously easy. A properly built wizard can kill the last dragon in three shots, before he can even attack you.
* Gold Rush! came with a map of the Americas, and a history book as a manual.
* Harry Potter is completely oblivious to the fact that her little "Duddykins" has become a smoking bully that runs with a group of other malcontents, and thinks he just goes to a friend's house to have dinner every day. She also somehow overlooks him gradually turning into a miniature humpback whale (not literally) for 15 years.

* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, Dumbledore tries an Every Flavored Bean and knows instantly that it's earwax flavor.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch to the jerkass head of security. This is one of the more peculiar examples by the standards of the trope, since the Gremlins are an asexual species that reproduces more like a fungus.
* Harold Ramis commentary track, "I take full credit for turning 'slime' into a verb."
* Hercules, after the Hydra's head is cut off, three more grow in its place. Having had enough trouble while fighting the monster with one head, Hercules had no choice but to run away from three snapping heads.
* God-Emperor himself was one. The Space Marines get a pass since the augmentation process (a long and arduous process where a bunch of extra organs that grant superhuman abilities are shoved into the prospective Space Marine's body) doesn't actually change their genetic code so they aren't truly mutants or mutates. The extra organs themselves might suffer mutations however. The Adeptus Mechanicus get a pass as well since their function is a vital one and again, their enhancements do not actually do anything to their genetics.
* Hanna as the protagonist. (Hey, if she's old enough to fight, she's old enough to have a beer.)
* Gran Pulse. The sequel game implies that there may be more to the planet than the heroes originally discovered, however.
* He also discovers from the same woman, that his lovemaking abilities are nowhere near as good as he'd like to believe. She spends most of the time that they're having sex either thinking "I don't like that, why is he doing it?", or wondering about what's on television or what she's going to have for dinner. After a brief freakout in the bathroom, however, he does successfully turn the evening around and reads her mind to find what she really
* Grave Academy is a Forum/RPG that centers on a school for monsters which is based in such a castle.
* Hellsing has a male case in Pip Bernadotte; the man uses his hair as a scarf just to keep it out of the way. Rip Van Winkle also falls under this trope.
* Gravity Falls about discovering the identity of the author certainly can be considered this, as its just only halfway on the second season the audience who it is.
* her friend being convinced that they're a couple, resulting in their relationship becoming real. In Makoto's Rank 7 event, she responds well to expressing an interest in marrying her, and to being enthusiastic about playing her boyfriend.
* Hermes Conrad and various other agents of the Central Bureaucracy. They even have a neat pseudo-
* God of War: Ascension Orkos at the latter's request, thus finally freeing him from his bond with Ares, Kratos takes the time to give him a proper funeral pyre in the ruins of his old home.
* Hero Antagonist: These guys may be antagonizing the actual protagonist, but they have good intentions, maybe even better than the protagonist's.
* Heck, considering that the Mad Scientist is a possible character build, and having a laboratory is no real problem, the PCs could easily play to this trope.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban features one of these as Harry runs away from the Dursleys' place at night. For some reason that is never explained, the swingset and merry-go-round start to move on their own.
* Going Postal Crispin Horsefry doesn't know much about the game of Thud except that he got a piece stuck up his nose once when he was a kid.
* Highlander: The Series during the Bronze Age. He also probably didn't have the mental capacity to completely understand the morality of his actions or learn to change with the world around him.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, adding party hats to character's heads, giving the characters laser eyes, and altering dialogue to read "Okay that is quite enough thank you".

* Grimm's Fairy Tale Classics are best friends, nothing more and nothing less. They love one another but not romantically, plus Klaus is also close friends with Snow's eventual romantic partner alias the Prince of the story (who doesn't get to meet Snow until the very end of the story).
* Gratuitous profanity: and assume that people who read this site can handle grown-up language without fainting, it's not fucking necessary to emphasize every goddamn sentence with bullshit swearing.
* Headbutting is a common practice amongst the thick-skulled, reptilian
* Godzilla (1998), "Deeper Underground", which is frequently on setlists but not as well-remembered by casuals.
* Here Comes Mr. Jordan has the angel's supervisor chewing him out on assuming there's "no possible way" someone could survive when scores of people have cheated certain death.
* Godzilla: The Half-Century War, Doctor Randall loves attaching drills to his creations and wishes his masers had drills.
* Halloweentown of time travel takes San Dimas Time, as one character comments, "It's almost twelve, and so far we're only at the 1970s."
* Hello. It is I, your boss. Great news! The video call went very, very well. Asia is on board. Too bad you couldn't participate. Probably you were worried about overages on that limited data plan you use. Perhaps you shouldn't have uploaded so many vacation photos. Oh. Ah. These shorts are for a younger person, wouldn't you say?"
* Hellboy (2019), we get lots of unnecessary insert shots of close-ups on gross things, including Baba Yaga's missing eye and the necrotic flesh of the hag who reassembles Nimue. The camera virtually pushes the viewers' face into it.
* Hell: An afterlife where bad people go to face eternal punishment for their misdeeds after they die.
* Green Lantern Simon Baz, they're instantly concerned because the ring only accepts a new Lantern when the previous one has died. The Flash quips that he hopes it was Gardner, before asking if he was going to Hell for saying that.

* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged: As a walking, talking caricature of the stereotypical Tumblr user, Rip Van Winkle spouts those like there's no tomorrow.
* Hair-Trigger Temper she had in the Buu Saga like how she was the one who trained Goten in marital arts.
* Guns Akimbo: "It's a wonder the Decepticons didn't just kill us outright, but vector sigma, am I the only one that knows that guns are supposed to be for killing?"
* Helium Speech: Inhaling helium causes a person to speak in a very high voice.
* Gotta Have It, Gonna Steal It: Someone wants something trendy but isn't allowed/can't afford it, so they steal (or attempt to steal) it.
* Good Luck Charlie: PJ is the family Ditz. His eventual girlfriend Skyler is an even bigger ditz.
* Heart of Swarm. Its appearence will vary depending on whether you have completed the Zergling Evolution Mission prior and which permanent mutation you chose for your zerglings there.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone when the mail arrives one morning, we get this exchange as the Dursleys and Harry are having breakfast:
* Henry Stickmin Series, an optional choice has Henry wearing a trench coat with Ellie to get past some guards. However, being taller turns out completely useless in this context, and the guards just arrest them anyway.
* Granblue Fantasy has Aglovale and Percival. Aglovale is cool-headed in contrast to Percival's tendency to often be hot-blooded. It also reflects in their elements that Aglovale's element is water to Percival's fire.
* ham to end all hams when he's his NORMAL self between his plan failing and the Doctor intentionally annoying him, eventually being reduced to having a manic gleam in the eye and shouting things like "The universe belongs to me!"

* He unfortunately never heeded the warnings regarding the Fatal Family Photo
* Gods of Egypt, the gods are roughly twice as tall as a normal person, with Ra being the biggest of them all. By and large, they treat humans in contempt.
* Goldfinger has elements of this (the plan in the movie is different).
* Henry becomes this starting from Season 3 where he is used more as a
* Good News Week: Several episodes of the Australian current-affairs comedy have ended with both teams losing to the studio audience. On one particularly memorable occasion during the show's original 90's run, the show was won by host/scorer/umpire Paul McDermott.
* "Groundhog Day" Loop: Someone gets forced to re-live the same day over and over.
* Green Lantern to be this, and was for a while, but the deaths of the rest of her family meant she had to take the throne. Being the ruler of an entire world leaves little time for ring-slinging.
* Go! Go! Nippon! are named Makoto and Akira, which are usually thought of as male names. In fact the protagonist is confused when they come taking him at the airport, since he was expecting two boys.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire from the game. The match commentator remarks how that has never happened before.
* Golf With Your Friends, ghosts, ghosts pushing trolleys, ghosts swinging axes, and more.
* Here Abide Monsters-era refugees for whom only four years have passed, as well as encountering medieval-era and Mongol refugees.
* He's entered and exited through that window a couple of times (including * Hellblazer, John Constantine gets this a lot. A lot of times, the people saying it are right. Even Constantine agrees.
* Hape Kerkeling's dorky character Siggi Schwäbli attempting to perfom an aria ("Der König ist tot") for the audience, only for musician Achim Hagemann to troll him by playing inappropriate samples.
* Highlander while visiting Scotland on vacation. He was visiting a museum in Edinburgh, came across a suit of armor, and wondered what it would have been like if the man who wore the armor were alive today.
* Groo the Wanderer. You'd think that, as monumentally stupid as he already is, he wouldn't need the help of this trope on top of it. You would be wrong.
* here"—ironically, the original inspiration for the character) as the Joker.
* Hellboy Animated features this as a gag early on. When the BPRD confirms that they cannot locate Hellboy, Corrigan casually announces, "He's not on the planet." A surprised new BPRD member asks, "This has happened before?" The rest of the veteran control room team rattle off several previous times this has apparently happened, with the final one having Hellboy show back up frozen in a block of ice, complete with picture. Hellboy wasn't too happy when he thawed out.
* Grell the grim reaperOutside of the French translation, the word 'chainsaw' is never used, and none of the other characters seem to know what it is.
* Good Omens (2019) he's lazy. Instead of going through all the time and effort of doing things the traditional way, he invents new ways that are more efficient and require less effort on his part. In one of his first scenes, the demons Hastur and Ligur report how they corrupted a priest and a politician. Crowley reports that he downed all the mobile networks in London, which will piss off millions of people, who will spread that low-grade evil around and increase the overall evil in the world significantly more than corrupting one or two souls, no matter how important.
* Going Down In La La Land, a 2011 movie about an aspiring actor who has to build his career from gay pronographic industry and escorting.

* Happens to Usagi twice in the manga: the first time was at the end of the Dark Kingdom arc when she gathers all the power she had to defeat Metallia, causing her broach to shatter and Usagi herself to fall over stone dead. The second time was in the fight with Chaos in the Galaxy Cauldron: she channels the power of hundreds, if not thousands, of Sailor Crystals within the Cauldron through her body to dissolve Chaos into the Cauldron, hopefully not to be reborn from a long long time. This act causes Usagi's body to totally disintegrate.

* Goanimate. An even more ludicrous example of this is Caillou getting arrested for simply being a baby show character after calling the cops that his dad was going to rob a bank.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City. Underground racing circuit plus bazooka = win for the player.
* Hero System films, and "every problem can be solved with a good wrestling hold" was standard in those films.

* Goosebumps, the artificial (we hope!) faces started out beautiful, but became monstrous because the experiment was flawed.
* Guest star Tony Randall accidentally turns Miss Piggy to stone. Of course the rest of the gang can't resist cracking jokes in her face about "being taken for granite" since she is in no position to retaliate. This is also a variant that while she might be stone, she can still hear and mumble incoherently in that state, making all the insults really hit home.
* Grounded fall under this. It doesn't matter if there is no possible way for the kid to be caught in the act, or if they have gone to many measures to ensure they won't be caught afterward. Someway or somehow someone will find out what they did and tell their parents, who will then ground them ground them ground them for a long time.
* Harry Potter as the series progresses). Hogwarts isn't immune either with its hiring of Gilderoy Lockhart as no matter how questionable the decision seems in hindsight there really is no proof that Dumbledore knew the full depths of Lockhart's background.
* Heavily downplayed with Hinata. The closest she ever veers into this trope is at one point Naruto winks at Tenten (which wasn't for romantic reasons anyway, and she knew that), and she politely asks him to never do it again.
* Go Girls involves four of the characters finding out their business is being sold and they will soon be out of a job. Naturally they go to a bar and the main character asks for four shot glasses and a bottle; he then asks the other three if they want anything.

* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Dumbledore tells the story of how when he had an exceptionally full bladder, he came across a room containing a magnificent selection of chamber pots.
* Guns Akimbo. Nix loses a couple of fingers trying to catch a throwing knife. This causes some confusion when she tries this trope, so she has to pick up a severed finger to do it properly.
* Helen Fielding noted that she was on a journalism trip when her group decided she shouldn't go into dangerous territory in the Middle East since she was very young and a woman. Her caravan's jeep ended up hitting a landmine and she can still be seen trying not to shake when talking about it.

* Grey Knights one of his intended victims, claims that he can make any wish come true, and proves so. What does the target tell him?

* Grunts! Some odd piece of magic summons a U.S. Marine staff sergeant into the middle of a battle between a swarm of alien locusts and a battalion of trainee elf marines and their orc marine sergeants (yes you read that right). Harold's partner Reese also has a large number of aliases, with his original name being somewhat unknown as well (It's John H. <Unknown>).

* Guitar Hero are expected as those fans realize that "Satch Boogie" is not on that level, and that's the only really hard song in the game.
* Guild of Calamitous Intent fame. Enrolled villains (and protagonists alike) are ranked in order of their threat level; a low-ranking villain such as The Monarch is a good fit for a wash-up scientist like Doctor Venture, while a full-fledged superhero such as Captain Sunshine needs an equally sinister antagonist to match him. Villains and protagonists can increase (or decrease) in rank if their skills improve (or degenerate). And it's all good for keeping the bureaucracy happy, and making sure there's no outright murders of one or the other.
* Goddess Creation System Xiaxi scores the interest of the crown prince by pretending to be able to predict the weather, cause fires and freeze objects. She's actually making use of a magic forecasting system that doesn't belong to her and using chemistry too advanced for ancient Chinese to recognize. Later, she cements her position as a sage by showing vast knowledge of mathematics... relatively speaking, since she can't actually teach anything about middle school level.

* Goku's power-multiplying Kaioken technique, which is also supposed to be crippling if the multiplier is set too high. After learning x2, however, Goku takes it up to x3 and even x4 for short bursts in his battle with Vegeta when the x2 doesn't work. The power boost seems to give him an edge, but this trope taking effect means that using them was actually doing more harm to himself than Vegeta to point where Vegeta

* Harrow. Startled he takes a few steps back, and narrowly misses being hit by a second body that impacts the ground a few feet away.
* Hey Arnold!: Some people have noted that Helga's obsession with Arnold seems oddly sexual at times considering she's only nine. That said, while most kids don't really have "those feelings" till puberty (about 11-12 for most kids) its certainly not unheard of for kids younger than that to have sexual thoughts and feelings.
* Hidden Elf Village: A hidden, oftentimes off-the-map secret location for a town to be that very few people know of.
* Gokusen gleam menacingly; this man creates the same effect with the top of his head.

* Hetalia Bloodbath 2010 to figure out what happened to them after they got knocked out by the shadowed figure.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019)) and reimagines Monarch as a massive organization with incredibly advanced technology and seemingly endless resources.
* High Plains Invaders. He is insistent that all of the survivors get of town alive. When Rose suggests that they might be able to crawl out past the Bugs, Sam rejects it because Serena's broken leg means that she cannot crawl.
* GoLion, Jaga The Blue Cat is an able and wicked familiar for Honerva/Haggar, likely blinding Shirogane/Sven before he was killed/disabled. Add to that, the Space Mice are definitely justified in fearing being devoured by this monster, who came from a world where it was bathed in Human blood. On the minus side, any sighting of the Blue Cat told the force that something was up, so its ability to spy (ala Laserbeak) was later limited.
* Groin Attack), with the occasional reference to one or two people who have managed to use it in the past. In an anime episode, Hiro (minor character only seen ONCE in the manga series), actually finds Excalibur tolerable and also enjoyable, and becomes the strongest meister in all of Shibusen, even taking out Black Star, Kilik and Death the Kid. This ended when Hiro couldn't stand Excalibur's constant sneezing and puts him back.
* Henry might have finally become an aversion. Since the 2011 Draft, he has been tear-assing through Smackdown, booked like the Juggernaut, culminating in his dethroning the aforementioned Randy Orton for the World Heavyweight Title at Night of Champions. The promos have made heavy mention that it's his first title reign in his 15 year (on and off) WWE career, so we may get a decent run with Henry as champ.
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child one of the few people who could stand up to Harry's temper when he was making a stupid decision. Given that the play's father-son drama is largely based on Harry making stupid decisions, one wonders why Ginny comes off so passive, especially in the face of her son's obvious unhappiness.
* Gogol Bordello, since he's lived in the US since the 80s. An example would be the title of the song "Undestructable" or the following lyric in "Voi-La Intruder":

* Harry Potter Severus Snape, the Potions teacher, repeatedly laments that very few, if any, of his students are up to his standards of intellect. To their faces.

It becomes a vicious circle, because the environment of constant ridicule and deprecation without any kind of aid or approval from the teacher does not lend itself to productive education, thus causing children to make mistakes and earn even more insults. In some cases, Neville Longbottom in particular, fear of him makes students so nervous that they're simply so stupefied with terror that they can't do their work properly, thus earning his wrath.
* Gum-Gum powers: Alvida and crew, Coby, Zoro, Nami, Buggy and crew, Carrot, Pepper, Onion, Usopp, Kaya, the Black Cat Pirates, Sanji, Don Krieg's crew... the list goes on.

* Heat: Neil McCauley may be a professional criminal, but he has a sense of decency that clearly outstrips all other criminals and many cops. He doesn't want to kill the security personnel he robs from and is angered when his accomplices do so. And he holds much more anger and malice toward other criminals who engage in duplicitous and inhumane behavior against him and his friends than against the police. He cares for those close to him as much as any hero, and it's impossible to not sympathize with him most of the time when he's shooting someone, as they usually deserve it.

* Half-Life 2. The Combine Overwatch's transhuman soldiers wear very realistic body armor with protective inserts, along with somewhat more-advanced gasmask-helmets. They have no frills or un-necessary parts to their combat armor aside from armbands denoting their rank- after all, if the Overwatch are attacking something, they don't 'need' to intimidate it. It'll just be 'dead'. This is also carried by the sociopathic Metrocops; though in their case, their thuggish brutality, black uniforms, and State Sec-esque look is more than intimidating.

Depending on the installment, those precautions might actually be taken, but they never seem to be enough.
* Greg Kihn Band – "The Breakup Song (They Don't Write 'Em)" is both an example and an aversion, as hinted at in the extended title. While the song starts "We had broken up for good / Just an hour before", and mentions the breakup throughout the verses, the song is equally (if not more) a lament of the perceived passing of this genre, with the chorus saying "they don't write 'em like that anymore".

* Gundam, or both. This is justified in-universe due to cost-effectiveness; the prototype usually carries a better reactor, armor, and weapons. Mass produced units based on these super prototypes tend to sport cheaper and inferior features (or the features are removed from the mass production unit altogether) so they can produce a lot more with same amount of budget and resources. The prototypes are also usually very goal-oriented, with each one being designed to test some new weapon, technology, or design technique. Additionally, most of the super prototypes remain superior only to their generation of Mobile Suits as technological race is a strong theme in the Gundam series; few suits that can hold their own against even the bog-standard suits of later generations. As a whole, the super protoype mobile suits are one-offs that spawn cheaper copies and are later discarded or destroyed. There are a few exceptions to this:

Lester, a friendly resident of the camp, suggests that in the case of Baal Namib, what you can do is making him think that you just had a vision from their god and you've renounced the other gods because of it. To do this, Lester and your character stage a comically exaggerated conversation where they almost scream everything they say while standing right next to Baal Namib. It works.

Where things get funky is, years later HRC felt the need to change their name once more after several members departed, and they believed The Havalinas had disbanded by that point, so they felt it was safe to shorten their name to just Havalina again. Which just led to confusion a few years later when a completely unrelated Mexican band formed, also calling themselves Havalina.

* High School D×D, Kateria Leviathan and her forces from the Khaos Brigade launch an assault on Kuoh Academy during the peace conference between the Three Factions.

* Half-Life 2 expansion, when they were still bad guys, a bonus mission has a pair of Vorts being sent to retrieve a stolen Xen crystal. The two slaughter an entire platoon of marines on the way.
* Herbert the pedophile MAY be this. Although he frequently preoccupies himself with ensnaring little boys, he harbors an unrequited crush on Chris Griffin that appears to go beyond mere lust, evidenced in his song "Somewhere That's Green" (parodying musical score for the off-Broadway & Broadway stage musical and later, film adaptation of Little Shop of Horrors) where he's dressed as a woman, marrying Chris, and settling down a quiet family life. In another episode, he rescues Chris from an evil possessed tree and fights it in another parody of the battle between Gandalf and the Balrog in
* Halo, and ending up being the only living thing on a fragment of the ring.
* Harvard, at first, in stark contrast to his father's elation. The fact that he wasn't jumping for joy could have foreshadowed that he would drop out before graduation.
* Grange Hill, as it was the only card game the girl knew the rules of. The person who lost the first round attempted to play it cute by removing one shoelace, at which point they were busted by the teachers.
* Hieronymus Glove from "Escape From Beneath Glove World", the founder of the glove-themed amusement park. Despite being frozen in a block of ice, he's completely lucid and can still run the park, and thanks to a speaker on the edge of the ice, can still speak.

* Hank the Cowdog: Hank hears a clicking sound and thinks there's a bomb, but it turns out to just be Drover's teeth chattering because he's scared.
* Hakuouki, Souji Okita wants nothing more than to be helpful to his father figure Isami Kondou and to earn his approval. This mostly leads to heartache for everybody, because although Kondou loves Souji like a little brother, he's somewhat oblivious to how strong his feelings run and how jealous he is of Kondou's reliance on Hijikata. Meanwhile, Souji quickly comes to the conclusion (helped along by the manipulation of Kamo Serizawa) that the only way he can be of help to Kondou is to use his prodigious talent for swordsmanship to kill Kondou's enemies... whether Kondou approves or not.

* Harry has secret lessons with Snape to learn Occlumency. When Malfoy comes upon a lesson, Snape explains that Harry is in remedial Potions.

* Happy Heroes. He swaps the role with Smart S.'s role as the prince when Smart S. gets hurt and can't play his normal role properly.
* Highlander comics has Duncan and many other immortals forced into this. Methos is the one to incite a breakout, and coming across a pile of dead Watchers only makes him madder, possibly due to his ties to the group in the past.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019). Ghidorah quickly establishes that he's genuinely evil and not only aware of humanity, but actively wants them dead. When Madison unplugs the ORCA from the speakers in Boston, he not only zeroes in on her in seconds, but Ichi's (Ghidorah's middle head) eyes narrowing as it looks through the window at her implies he's worked out he's being tricked by this tiny human - something reinforced by his preparing to obliterate her with all three of his gravity beams even after the ORCA is smashed.
* Haunted Headquarters: A spooky place where there be monsters, and you're stuck living or working there.
* Greek Ninja, Sasha and Daichi came close to defeating each other. Later on, Daichi joins her and her team on their quest.

Wilbur is so faithful to his wife that he seems completely oblivious to her advances, but Velma's plan works anyway because she just throws herself at Wilbur as his wife comes in the door to "catch" them in the "act".
* Here Come the Brides episode "The Crimpers," Joshua and Jeremy get into a fight in the dark with Jason and Stempel, with each pair thinking the others are kidnappers.
* Hannibal There's also a song written specifically for the moment that spells it out for those who didn't catch what was going on.
* heel on their opponent (and ignoring the referee's request to back off), they will have done something to get themselves disqualified. At its most basic? Walking back up the ramp so that the referee counts them out. As long as you're still the champion, who cares about a non-pinfall/submission loss? This is why No DQ/Falls Count Anywhere matches were created to begin with.
* Heavy Rain is an aging, asthmatic retired-cop-turned-PI who's on the edge of hardboiled. (Softboiled?)'
* Hellsister Trilogy, Nemesis grabs Duplicate Man's left hand and crushes his fingers before sending a surge of energy through his hand.

* Gundam SEED Destiny cast, with Shinn Asuka and Lunamaria Hawke helping them battle the Festum after their war ended (Cagalli Yula Athla is their sponsor; this implies Shinn has made some peace with ORB).
* Halo 4 of Requiem has a local portal network for quick transport across the entire planet.
* growing mental instability, the last album Barrett recorded with the band.

* Great Detective who works tirelessly for the betterment of the society by bringing its stray elements to public justice.
* Hamlet: a series of rather tragic events reduces an entire royal court to one man.
* has a few of these. It's a sequel to another fic where a little girl initiate saw four year old Obi naked by the shower and was interested in his, um, anatomy. This time, he's an adult chained to a wall naked. Siri, the girl from the first fic, is the one to rescue him, much to his dismay. Naturally, her first concern is to make sure he wasn't hurt in any way, but after he assures her he's fine, she takes a few moments to enjoy the gaze before letting him free. She tells him "You've gotten much larger than the last time I saw you". And from where her gaze is described to be at, it's obvious she doesn't just mean his height. Then there's the requisite lightsaber joke.
* Halo Wars 2, the final upgrade for the Jackrabbit is a support drone with a machine gun. Sunray 1-1 also has an identical drone, which instead fires Spartan Laser beams.
* Gunka No Blazer: The inner section of Baselland's capital city is arranged like a star fort.

* Hero Elementary episode "Picture Perfect" is about Sparks Crew getting ready for Picture Day. They have to stay clean, but run into a problem when they have to get Mr. Whithers out of a mud puddle.
* Grand Theft Auto V: Letting Trevor roam on his own for a time and then switching to him has a decent chance of showing him in bizarre situations, usually holding a bottle. Among the best examples of this is whatever lead to him waking up in someone's drained, wrecked pool with a burning helicopter crashed into it and the house behind it missing an entire chunk.
* Grimm later tells him that he shouldn't live like she did, being afraid of getting to close to people in fear of them getting hurt.
* Good Morning, Miami is what happens when a major character is this. Predictably enough with characters who get fleshed out and given a lot of screen time, the writers fell into the "too likable" trap. The main character came across as a girlfriend-stealing asshole and the love interest came off as a bitch who didn't appreciate what she already had.
* Heidi's Song where Rottenheimer, Sebastian, and Schnoodle turn into monsters. However, at least one viewer has pointed out that the way Rottenheimer and Sebastian belittle Heidi by telling her she's small and "a nothing" is the most chilling part, because it feels similar to the tactics that bullies in real life use.

* High and Low (1963): The kidnapper has a pretty basic one: Abduct an executive's son and demand ransom. Unfortunately, he accidentally kidnaps one of the kid's friends.
* Harry Potter series has the centaurs who refuse to accept any sort of human dominion over themselves, and indeed even contact with humans is seen as a crime. Though it ends up being averted, as Hagrid, arguably the character who has the most contact with centaurs, regularly gets frustrated with them and considers them to have their heads in the clouds. Neither the narration nor other characters consider him wrong. In fact, Firenze, a centaur who is eventually banished for continued contact with humans, is treated as the most heroic and open-minded of his kind. Ironically, the only elves we do see in the series avert the trope entirely, as they have a psychological compulsion to serve their master's wishes.
* Guy - "Goodbye Love," where both parties know things aren't working out and split, but can't find it in their hearts to truly let things end, and decide to try and work things out one last time.
* Goodbye Lenin, the main character's sister Ariane clearly recognized her studies in (clearly Marxist-Leninist) economic theory would be useless in a country (East Germany) which was turning capitalist... so she quit whilst she was ahead and went and got a job in Burger King!
* Harvest Moon to be a fluffy life sim about the relationships people have, with the rural setting and farming elements only acting as a backdrop. Years later, he ended up outright leaving the series due to not liking the way it was going.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Mr. Weasley borrows a tent from a friend of his for use at the World Quidditch Cup. What seems like a small (3'x5') tent outside has at least 3 bedrooms, a kitchen and a dining room inside. As Harry gets his first look, he mutters happily, "I love magic!"
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn. They're deadly in combat, but poor strategists; when the protagonists arrive, their soldiers are all milling around aimlessly rather than engaging in anything productive, and the protagonists realize that as long as the generals don't specifically give them new orders, that's all they'll do.
* Hey Arnold! gives us this during a football game between the 4th and 5th graders.
* He returns in the second game's final case with newfound resolve, just in time to walk Phoenix through his own Darkest Hour
* Happens in convenience stores as well. Some chains even have it as store policy that police get free coffee and fountain drinks, plus counter space to do their reports if they want it. Of course, this can also be seen as enlightened self-interest; when your place of work is often seen as a very large free ATM, having police hanging around or known to commonly come in at the cost of a few drinks is cheap insurance.
* Hagrid's Magical Creatures Motorbike Adventure movies. Slightly averted as they did appear in the books.
* Hairspray falls into this - especially in the movie musical, with Christopher Walken and a cross-dressing John Travolta singing and dancing together in "You're Timeless to Me". A smaller example is Tracy (a short, dumpy girl) and Link (Zac Efron).
* Guardians of the Flame like game and then find themselves inside the game world, having been turned into their characters. It turns out their professor and the game master is a wizard who hails from that world, so he based the game on its features. Since they got so into it, he'd decided to send them inside, thinking this would be fun, with a standard quest. Boy, do they suffer for it.
* Happens again in the final battle when Smith says, "Everything that has a beginning has an end, Neo" — revealing that the Oracle is still in there somewhere.
* Gravity Falls episode "Roadside Attraction", Soos is accidentally left behind by the Pines in a Corn Maze tourist trap.
* Harry Potter qualifies, being a wizard obsessed with all things muggle. He seems to prefer making up his own explanations to doing actual research though. His intrigue is a little off, however. He's fascinated by things like "muggle money" despite wizards also having money (with a direct exchange rate).

* Haikyuu!! rotates around different ones each episode, which consist of players attempting to hit the drink bottle on the other side of the net with the ball with various results and reactions (such as Kageyama succeeding and getting excited about it, and Hinata failing to even get the ball over the net with Tsukishima and Yamaguchi snickering beside him).
* He told Shen he didn't have to be defined by his past, that he can choose what to be now. Shen agreed. Unfortunately, he chose to be the bad guy.

* "Guns and Roses" had Don investigating the murder of an ex-girlfriend he had never mentioned. Somewhat
* He probably had no intention of publicizing his inventions anyways, and nobody in town would probably figure out how it worked.
* Gravedale High episode "Long Day's Gurney Into Night" had a brief scene where Duzer, a teenage gorgon, broke her mirror by looking into it.
* Happens in a later episode when all of ISIS starts interrupts Dr. Krieger's surgery on Ray in the episode "Legs". Kreiger even references the trope by name.
* Gunnerkrigg Court who designed an anti-gravity device at the age of twelve... which she didn't even find that remarkable, instead getting annoyed when the practical purpose of the device was ignored at the school science fair for the anti-grav device itself.
* GURPS has the Brainsuckers. As the name suggests, they don't just control the host, they also eat his brain to feed their offspring.

* Grand Finale. As the two villains fight one other, the heroes are able to banish both of them to the Netherworld.
* Having fallen out with the Channel 4's director and never knowing how far is too far,
* Hero and Leander. It's a Greek myth, relating the story of Hero (Greek: Ἡρώ), a priestess of Aphrodite who dwelt in a tower in Sestos, at the edge of the Hellespont, and Leander (Greek: Λέανδρος, Leandros), a young man from Abydos on the other side of the strait. Leander fell in love with Hero and would swim every night across the Hellespont to be with her. Hero would light a lamp at the top of her tower to guide his way. When Leander drowned during a storm, Hero threw herself off the tower.
* Hercules after being told by Zeus he is still not worthy to become a god, Hercules completely smashes the floor in his frustration.
* He even references The Tale of One Thousand and One Nights with the first line in his intro song; "Ali Baba had them forty thieves, Scheherezade had a thousand tales". What's funny (and rather sad) is that most kids - or even adults - wouldn't register that both Aladdin and Ali Baba are stories that Scheherezade told during those one thousand and one nights.
* Hand of Glory: A severed hand that is either holding a candle or each of its fingers are lit like candles, sometimes used to help people steal.
* Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters, starts as a fan of Hansel and Gretel and collected all their newspaper articles, has a lot of witch data and his dream is to be a witch hunter like them. He gets his chance to help.

* He also intended to destroy every computer hooked up to the internet, believing that it would destroy society (not being sure whether humans were directly or indirectly dependent on computers). However,
* Happens to Barney in a "Definitions" when he and Robin seem to have a no-strings-attached
* Heidenfeld - Kerins, Dublin 1973. White castled twice, even though this is flagrantly against the rules, which state that a player can only castle if neither the king nor the rook have moved before. Amazingly, Black let this stand, and Tim Krabbé has
* Harry Potter himself seems to have this, due to being the main character. Each school year, he gets into mortal peril at least once and each time barely manages to survive it due to the circumstances being slightly more in his favor. When people start praising his victories against the dark forces, Harry lampshades this by saying he only succeeded due to having an improbable amount of luck.
* Hannah Montana, Amber and Ashley do this twice Miley and Lily; first sticking on them the signs "I am dork" and "I am dorkier" respectively, then the signs "I am still dork" and "I am still dorkier".
* Grimm attacks while all of their capable fighters were drafted in the war. Humanity came perilously close to extinction until the final battle in Vacuo.
* Hey Arnold! has an example in the episode "Stinky's Pumpkin.'' Seized by the belief that he's no good at anything, Stinky decides to grow the titular gourd at the behest of a disembodied voice. His efforts culminate into him having the following conversation with his father:

* Halflings of other campaign settings can also be hot-tempered warriors, just not as a culture.
* Haze - The Land Carrier is what its name suggests: rather than a Land Battleship, it's a rather useless land helicopter carrier which seemingly whiles away the hours by driving in circles.
* Gypsy Rose Lee made a few minor film appearances under her real name, Louise Hovick, since film studios in the early years of
* Harry Biscuit intercepts another bullet himself seconds later, but he's
* Grand Theft Auto IV this is how one of the first named antagonists can be killed.
* Hazel killed her mother and herself to stop Gaea from raising Alcyoneus back in 1942.
* Guts isn't immune to this. Nosferatu Zodd did this by simply transforming into his Apostle form. When they meet again after the Eclipse, Guts is better prepared for it since he's fought many Apostles up to that point.

* Harry Potter font used in the movies is the exact same one used on the American cover of the books, complete with lightning-bolt P.

* Helltaker, and shows a surprisingly caring side when she even helps Helltaker make food for the rest of harem in the ending.

* Hägar the Horrible and his crew pillages a lot, and occasionally burn, but they spare the women. (Kids read the strip, after all.) There are a lot of jokes about this; for example, in a strip, Hagar is leading an army with siege engines and a battering ram against a castle, but it has a sign that says, "No looting and pillaging allowed!" Hagar says, "Gee, I kinda hate to turn back now..."
* Hamilton had become a gateway show in two different directions: theatre fans came in without ever having had any interest in hip-hop and came out realising how great it could be and wanting to learn more, while hip-hop fans went in skeptically and came out realising that they might've prejudged musical theatre.
* GURPS Faerie mostly models its depictions of fairies on actual folklore, darkness and all.
* Gyokumen. Big time towards Kougaiji. Made even worse when it's revealed she doesn't even like her own daughter.
* He actually betrays the New Reichsmen by lying about the Human Bomb's ability to generate explosions while held captive in the Eagle's Nest.
* Harvey's existence has the distinction of not only getting played as

* Heroes Now that the show itself has been canceled, the Expanded Universe presumably has free rein again.
* Happy Tree Friends, although Cuddles and Lumpy tend to take the most damage, if only because they appear the most.
* Gunnerkrigg Court: Anthony Carver seems to be completely unable to express himself when in the presence of more than one other person. When alone with only a single other person he can be charming and funny, but as soon as he enters the company of two or more he shuts down, becoming icily stoical.
* Good Kid MAA Dcity (2012) is a fictionalized version of his own teen years. K-dot is dating a girl named Sharane his parents don't like. * have a digestive system that ends with their stomach where nutrients are simply absorbed directly into their body and they completely lack an excretory system. Anything they can't digest (basically anything that isn't meat) is simply vomited back up later. Furthermore, demons don't actually sleep; instead they go into "Rest" for six hours every week where they're technically conscious but nearly catatonic the entire time. Sunny finds it very unusual that humans need to sleep every night but can be awake and alert instantly, whereas demons need decades before they can throw off "Rest". Next, demons don't seem to breathe except to speak, allowing them to stay completely still for long periods of time. Lastly, any demon can consume the brain of a human to learn everything they know; they have to consume the entire brain to do so but that's because they don't know where memories are stored so eat everything to make sure.
* Gorgoroth is by far the worst offender because they prefer their lyrics to remain unintelligible; they go so far as to instantly sue anyone who dares to post their lyrics online.
* Happy Tree Friends episode involved The Mole and a Ferris wheel. The wheel ended up slicing Lumpy in two (and grinding the left half)
* Happy Wars is sold as a free to play game, however it requires an Xbox Live Gold membership to play most of the modes, including multiplayer which the game is based around. * Gray Lensman, a single dose was described as several tiny granules in a nasal capsule.
* Hang Time: A twist in that it's also Your Book Hates You; in the episode "Fighting for Your Dreams," Kristy tries to take Antonio's mind off of blowing a shot at getting into the University of Kentucky after injuring his knee by watching TV... only to turn on the Kentucky Derby, and then a commercial for Kentucky Fried Chicken (although she turns off the TV before the announcer says the full name). She then reads a mystery book to him, in which the character remembers the summers he spent in... you know where this is going.

* Good Charlotte in Canada, the phone number for Kids Help Phone, a hotline that provides confidential help for young people struggling with bullying, abuse, mental health, or other issues, came up because the video features mentions of teen suicide (the song is very clearly anti-suicide and encourages teens to ask for help and to keep going).

* Gossip Girl Chuck Bass runs on this trope regarding Blair for most of the show's duration. It doesn't help that Blair goes back and forth between reinforcing this belief and telling him he's the best man she's ever known and all that she's ever wanted.
* Harry Potter. Also, there were a number of common cracks made on his name that got really lame after a while (and they indicated as much), and his friends. "Oh, Potter, you rotter," "potty wee Potter," "crackpot," "Potty and the Weasel," "Weaselbee," And Hermione's reaction to the "Potter Stinks" badges? "Oh, very funny. Really witty."
* Harry Potter seems to generally avert the trope: Magic evolves like science does. New discoveries are made. This is evident with Broomsticks: newer broomsticks are better for example: The Nimbus 2001 is better than the Nimbus 2000, who are both outdone by the newer still Firebolt.
* Henry IV ends with news that Northumberland and Archbishop Scroop are arming for war.

Yet he also acts like a perfect gentleman and adheres to an old-school code of chivalry through and through. One notable incident early on his him flying into a rage when he finds out a mortal friend's son is being stalked by an immortal because he raped the man's adopted daughter and considers just throwing him to the wolves despite his dislike of vigilantism. He also has the personal honor to draw the line when a newly immortal 18-year-old girl he's known since she was a child starts coming onto him.
* Grammaton Clerics engage in countless shootouts without any thought to taking cover, preferring to run right into the middle of large groups and start firing in all directions. This is handwaved at the beginning, when it's explained that the Clerics studied gunbattles and had developed some mathematical system to predict and avoid gunfire. This is leaving out the fact that gun battles are dictated by terrain and lines of sight, which are inherently unpredictable, and most gunfights are based on suppression and teamwork within a squad, with liberal use of machineguns and grenade launchers. Additionally, anyone with a machinegun or shotgun (let alone grenades or mines) could take down a Cleric by simply filling the area with lead. The

* Help! It's The Hair Bear Bunch!. Any respect the zoo animals give him is purely tongue-in-cheek.
* Heart of Gold is a justified example, as it doesn't use anything near a normal drive to get places. The Infinite Improbability Drive works by manipulating probability (or, more specifically, the improbability of the ship's being in a specific location) to essentially teleport the ship to its destination. Because they don't need to spend energy to push the ship against gravity, space conservation would not be high on the list of priorities for building the ship.

He winds up at St. Johns where he grew up and got his start playing hockey. When on TV, he is glad to be back home, but throughout the movie is shown sitting alone night after night in an all-hours dirty spoon by himself with no friends, no fans, constantly keeping tabs on an up-and-coming player who has been labeled by the sports media as the "next great enforcer." Turned Up to Eleven when he faces the younger version of himself when his normal level of thuggery on the ice turns brutal as he doesn't want to be remembered as going down as a "Nancy-Boy Fuck."
* Gundam model kits) in order to appeal to beginners. This included parts that came pre-molded in the proper colors so there was no need to paint them (which also solved the issue of small hard-to-paint places like the Gundams' faces), and runners made to match up so the builder could assemble several parts at the same time simply by locking the two runners together and then clipping off the completed parts. However, long-time modelers complained because they felt that simplifying things took away the challenge of building and limited customization. Because of the complaints (and because the changes were more expensive than anticipated), Bandai dropped them after only about three years.

* Hamilton's greatest strength, and greatest weakness, is that having grown up with nothing, he throws himself completely into any opportunity placed in front of him, and can't say "no". His writing continues to open doors for him throughout his life and creates the American financial system, helping the new country stay afloat: but it means he's an absent father and husband, and when the opportunity to sleep with Maria Reynolds comes up, he can't resist that either (which comes back to bite him hard).

* Hilarious in Hindsight used to be considered this. Tipped to be a future Slam winner as young as 16, he proved himself able to regularly beat the best in the world... in the small tournaments. At Grand Slams he lost in the first round as often as not and hadn't even reached a semi-final before his maiden title. With other young guys such as Lleyton Hewitt, Andy Roddick and Marat Safin proving that they could succeed where he failed, many people speculated that he was destined to be the talent who could never come good.

* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality: to make Hermione a better researcher, Harry puts her through the "2-4-6 task", an experiment created by Peter Wason, the real-life psychologist who coined the term "Confirmation Bias": Harry writes down and folds up a "rule" that certain triplets of numbers follow and tasks Hermione with figuring out what it is. Hermione can say as many triplets of numbers as she likes and Harry will say "Yes" or "No" depending on if they follow the rule or not. As a starting point, Harry says that the triplet "2, 4, 6" follows the rule. Hermione tests the triplets "4, 6, 8", "10, 12, 14", "1, 3, 5", and "-3, -1, 1" and is told "Yes" for all of them. Hermione guesses that the rule is that each number is increased by two. Harry doesn't answer and points out that less than 20% of people can guess the correct answer. Hermione then tests "2, 5, 8" and "10, 20, 30" and also gets yes for both, leading her to revise her answer to "each number must increase the same amount each time". Harry gives her the paper, and to her shock, the actual rule is "Three real numbers in increasing order, lowest to highest". Harry then points out that Hermione had only come up with triplets that would confirm the hypothesis she already had in her mind and was content to end the experiment without getting a single "No" response, leading her to come up with a result much more specific than the real one.

Even the cyberbrain-equipped police officers were hacked, and left unable to understand the descriptions that the men gave. Any attempt to sketch the Laughing Man resulted in a picture of his logo.

* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, you have to escape an angry troll at one point. The camera "conveniently" switches to show Harry's face from ahead, which effectively inverts the controls. You may like new Japanese or European motorcycles for their modern appearance, but there is a reason there is no such culture built up around Honda as there is around Harley-Davidson. Many prefer older engines or models, convinced of their superiority despite all evidence to the contrary. One female rider was constantly harassed by her younger brother over her choice to ride a modern Harley powered by an Evo engine, while he still rode a Shovelhead-powered bike. One day she brought another Evo rider home, who averted the trope by stopping the tirade with a tale of how he had had to tow the Shovel-riding brother home with his Evo, after the Shovelhead had broken down...

Doom metal, however, despite being one of the more blues based subgenres of heavy metal has grown more popular among women as time has gone on, and now many of the most notable contemporary doom metal bands like Sub Rosa are driven by women. For all the subgenres that are coded as being hyper-masculine, there is also plenty that are coded as specifically acting against this trend, such as symphonic metal, gothic metal, alternative metal, progressive metal, and post-metal.

* Heroes - Some people think the rot even began with the season one finale. The problem isn't that the writers never planned out the show... it's that they intended the show to have an anthology-format with a rotating cast. Problem was that the season one characters instantly became popular national sensations, so they were forced to come up with new plots for them on the fly. It didn't help that there was a Writer's Guild of America strike which truncated season 2. Viewers started leaving in droves during season 3 when they started just recycling plots from season 1 (how many times can Sylar flip-flop from evil to good and back?).
* "Goosey Goosey Gander" is said to be about about a R.C. priest sheltered by an aristocratic family in England when Catholic worship was illegal. He met a savvy veteran who shared that he had gotten short on money and taken his sword to a pawn shop, with the plans to redeem it as soon as he got paid. Until then, he had only the hilt of a sword attached to a stick that went into his scabbard. Later that day, Napoleon returned undisguised to hold a surprise inspection. He found a soldier who did not pass, then turned to the veteran and ordered him to cut down his comrade. The veteran, knowing he faced punishment if anyone knew he had pawned his sword, cried out "May God turn my sword to wood so that I need not do this thing!" He then drew his sword hilt which had a wooden blade. The next day, he received a beautiful new sword and a note saying "This one will get you more at the pawn shop," signed Napoleon.
* He averts this on one hand, as many of his signature songs, including "Ring of Fire", "I Walk the Line", "Folsom Prison Blues" and "A Boy Named Sue", reached #1 on the country charts (with the latter being his biggest hit on the Hot 100, reaching #2). His cover of "Hurt", however? That didn't get any higher than #56. An image of a cloudy sky is shown only to "ripple" to a video of a sunset sky over a beach just a while later, rendering the first image redundant, the logo's general animation reeks of some of the most cheesiest effects ever seen in an '80s home video logo, looking like it was made on Photoshop or Microsoft PowerPoint, and while the music is fine (if a bit strange), the "Hikon, Hikon, Hikon...!" chanting that starts to sound like "pine cone" after a couple of seconds, shattering glass sound, and one of the potential voiceovers (drunk-sounding male voices shouting "A HIKON FILM!" loudly in unison) are too over-the-top, thus topping off an already ridiculous logo.

Clay once complained bitterly that his supporters kept nominating him against opponents he had no chance to beat, and passing him over in years where he would have been virtually guaranteed to win.

Dudley's gang frequently beats him up, referred to as "Harry Hunting." He is absolutely friendless until Hagrid shows up in his life.

* He's had enough of an affair with Barbarina, a servant girl, that she's able to blackmail him,
* Harry Potter features Luna and her father, whom she adores. While she definitely seems to have adored her mother equally, her early death eventually creates this dynamic between Luna and her father.
* Good Is Not Dumb: As nice as I am, that doesn't mean that I'm easy to fool.
* Havemercy As for obeying th'Esar himself...it's not uncommon for them to spit on the ground at the mere mention of their esteemed ruler. They'll fight his war, but th'Esar walks a fine line of disciplining them and pleasing them so they'll keep fighting his war at all. This is the way things have to be, of course - men with weaker wills wouldn't be able to handle the dragons at all.
* Grimm: One episode deals with the "Cupiditas", which somehow manages to be both cherubic and demonic. It uses a potion made from its own spit to make people fall madly in love with another (to the point of reciting really awful poetry).
* Has-beens struggling to find a purpose in life (Troy McClure, Ranier Wolfcastle, Drederick Tatum)

* Hell(p) likes to disappear into his black hoodie. For personal reasons.

* Gracie Fields was pretty much a second-string national sweetheart, but was perceived to have blown it when she left wartorn Britain to live in her newly-liberated second home in Capri, Italy. This was seen as letting the side down.
* Halo 5: Guardians city on the Elite homeworld; specifically, the holy city of Sunaion, which is located right over a sea.
* Good Powers, Bad People: The villain has powers more suited for good guys.
* Hank Zipzer: In "Ballot Box Hunter", McKelty wins the election for school council by cheating. * hemophages follow the "race war" scenario, but since the humans treat them like a plague to be eradicated, it's not like they have a lot of options. In the beginning, two investigators arrive at the scene of the crime, where a hemophage's body can be seen. One of them accidentally touches the blood. Two seconds later, his partner pulls out a gun and puts a bullet in his head (which is, of course, ignoring the fact that he's bound to get some of his partner's blood on him).
* Griswold shows that a suspect is only pretending to be a writer because
* He both plays this straight and averts this. He had two #1 hits as a lead, "Whatever You Like" and "Live Your Life". "Whatever" topped the Hot 100 for seven weeks to "Life"'s six, but the latter is generally better remembered today than the former, likely because it features guest vocals from

* Good Eats), Cocoa Carl (a notorious and unscrupulous purveyor of heavily-processed convenience and snack foods), and The Mad French Chef (sometimes shown to be one of his instructors from culinary school, who doesn't like his sometimes unorthodox ways of cooking).
* Goeido — An athletic technician à la Asahifuji who had enormous success at the high school level and reached makuuchi a mere two and a half years after his debut. Unfortunately, despite his ring sense and mastery of technique, he was prone to mental breakdowns and could self-destruct at any moment. He bounced up and down the ranks for a long time before finally correcting his problems and going 12-3 in in March 2012, which propelled him to Sekiwake. He held onto that rank for two years then peaked, going 12-3, 8-7, and 12-3 from March to July 2014, picking up two jun-yushos in the progress. This was good enough to promote him to ozeki, the first in an eternity to make it with fewer than 33 wins. His career since had been marred by breakdowns, inexplicable collapses, and feeble efforts, and despite the occasional flash of brilliance (he actually got the first yusho of his career in September 2016, and 15-0 at that), his record was far below ozeki standard and he'd been kadoban nine times. His confidence seemed to be all but gone by this point, and it looked like he was content to cling to the rank for as long as he can like Kaio. In fact, he ended up passing Kotozakura, Musashimaru, and Kotoshogiku for tenth place on the list of longest-reigning ozeki before he retired after posting a 5-10 record at the first tournament of 2020.
* Gunslinger Girl is pedophilic. While most of the girls have crushes on their handlers it's almost always unrequited, with the exception being Petra who is a few years older than the other girls.

* Hilda, though in her case it's more of an illusory power, much like a Zorua/Zoroark.
* Grandma's Boy (2006) is something of a professional Nerd Nanny, its her job to get video games which are behind on development finished on time (it helps that all the nerdy testers want to impress her so they stop goofing around and work diligently). But it turns out to be an aversion when she reveals she also smokes pot, drinks, and even plays video games as well as they do.
* Gotham City Garage is happy-go-lucky, innocent, and optimistic in a post-apocalyptic world where the last city on Earth is ruled by a tyrant and the rest of the planet is a barren wasteland inhabited by bandits and scavengers. Big Barda thinks she'll have to break her cheerful idealism before it kills Kara... until they discover the "super-strong and invulnerable" thing.
* Gravity Falls they're left that way until both realize what happened and separate themselves in a panic.
* has been given most of the memories of her alternate and made to think that she was the alternate. Her slip-ups in the façade actually save her live at one point as following correct procedure would have gotten her killed. Others attribute her strange behavior to the injuries she supposedly received in an explosion. Her last slip-up is telling a girl that she is FBI in the middle of a gunfight as she rescues her. No attention is drawn to it until the girl asks at the end what the FBI is, in front of her boss who tells her that it hasn't existed in their world for years.

* Heroes get their powers from being injected with a gene-altering formula.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi had Kaz ordering a hair tonic to overcome his male pattern baldness, and it ends up frequently turning him into a werewolf who terrorizes the girls' cats. The cats later take the tonic themselves to use it against Kaz, and when Yumi finds the smashed tonic bottle she points out these kinds of products usually have side effects; in this case, Kaz and the cats have all of the hair on their bodies fall off.
* Halo because they were designated by the Forerunners as their successors. Oftentimes, the alien Covenant have had to resort to kidnapping in order to attain access to Forerunner tech.
* GUN×SWORD. So, he offers the subordinate a handshake (cue him squeezing the guy's hand hard enough to crack bone). Then, the Claw says that if the guy doesn't want a handshake, how about a hug. Not only is the hug also hard enough that you hear bones breaking, but when the Claw strokes the guy's back with his clawed hand, it's implied (but not shown) that he is ripping open his flesh. Throughout this horrible scene, the Claw is speaking in a gentle voice.
* has, another Vertigo title, was originally called 'The Area of Madness', but as more entities started coming out of it, the definition was expanded to the land of dreams, the land of the dead, the place where all human consciousness gravitates.
* Henry Rollins is using his natural voice for the role and is in his 50s.
* Heroes in Crisis saw it as a healthy mental health facility, so the implication that it has reopened with zero change to how it's run...the series can't even qualify for a bittersweet, it's just misery.
* Higurashi: When They Cry has "I'm sorry" and "USO DA!" ("THAT'S A LIE!"), both quite common phrases in themselves, but both clear indicators that things are about to get worse.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Harry takes a shortcut through a maze by blasting through the hedge in order to rescue Cedric. Yet it takes a spell and quite some fighting with the branches just to open a small hole.
* have fun, not just focus on affording the next upgrade. Many similar games feature a rather bland progression due to designs this one parodies, only adding a few more obstacles or enemies from one stage to the next, and allowing a player to keep whatever they earned on a failed stage, just to retry as many times as they need. These games eventually become a grindfest where the only real goal is to purchase the next upgrade, with the only benefit of progression being... more upgrades, and another stage to grind for said upgrade, at a slightly faster rate than before.

* Haruhi Suzumiya two-part episode "Remote Island Syndrome" (and the corresponding chapter in one of the light novels) has an example of this inside a locked room on an island hit by a terrible storm.
* Goldberg beat Goldberg several times after the streak was broken. And Goldberg lost some of his invincibility once he joined WWE.
* Gone with the Wind. Ashley, although respected by his community, is not quite one of them—he's more bookish and intellectual and less inclined towards the hunting and carousing his friends and neighbors enjoy. Then, after the horrors of the Civil War, he becomes even more withdrawn and brooding. He describes the sweet, kind Melanie as the "gentlest of dreams".
* Golden Wind: Leaky-eye Luca, the first mobster from Passione Giorno encounters, and the only known Stand-less member. Giorno's defeat of him is what causes Giorno to gain the attention of Bruno, leading Giorno into joining Passione.
* he was not responsible for the boy's disappearance this time around, which was shortly thereafter confirmed by Patrick Jane via both a phone call and a note in one of his partner's pocket that he somehow planted in there.
* Glee: Santana tells Karofsky that she has figured out that he is gay.
* He uses it on his own father in pretty much the exact same way: "With all due respect, which is none, go to hell."
* Hazbin Hotel that starts off relevant to the story, but quickly derails into the typist making puns, complaining about an orangutan he claims made a face at him at the zoo, and blaming his wife for leaving him after he cheated on her with a cleaning lady.
* Hello Mary Lou: Prom Night II). Kelly is self-aggrandizing in a playful, deliberately scene stealing way, such as doing a flamenco impression while talking about prom and playing keep away with the volleyball in gym class.
* Harvest Moon video games. Some of the bachelor(ette)s have these, usually in the form of hearts, that tell you how much they love you. Once you get them to a certain level, you can then use the Blue Feather (HM's equivalent of a wedding ring) to propose to them.
* Going Postal, Moist has some unspecified plan for doing this when he takes Adora to the ritziest restaurant in Ankh-Morpork. In the end, they do escape paying the bill, but ironically thanks to the villain of the novel rather than anything Moist intentionally does.
* HERZ: After the Battle of 2015, Kensuke became a soldier. He is not an Eva pilot but he is satisfied with being a jet fighter pilot.

* Heroes of Might and Magic: The final mission of the original game requires you to sail to an island in the center of the map and capture the Dragon City there, which leads to a final battle against 20 Dragons. While Dragons are the strongest units in the game, a decently-sized army led by a high-level Hero won't have too much trouble with them, and without a human leader, the dragons don't get a bonus to their stats or spell assistance. The previous three missions against the rival lords are significantly more challenging, especially Lord Alamar (the Warlock lord) who's likely to have twice as many dragons, as well as dozens of other units, by the time you face him.

* Heroes's motivations is titled ".07%" after the percent of the world's population he's going to wipe out as part of his plan for world peace. (Incidentally, in the scenes set in the future, it didn't work.)

* GPS has a small correction for time dilation between the surface of the earth and up in space. A satellite in space experiences 0.6 nanoseconds more for every second on Earth. This is actually how GPS works - by knowing what time each satellite the receiver is getting data from thinks it is, it can use the time dilation to calculate the distance from the receiver to each satellite, which can be used to triangulate the receiver's position.
* Gundam Build Fighters; after its spectacular first use, most of the smarter fighters (and this being the World Championship, that meant most of them) realize what's going on and go out of their way to disable the shield first or attack with solid projectiles like missiles that can't be absorbed.
* Grease, Danny himself tried to win her over by getting involved in sports after she expressed interest in a jock, despite that he and the other T-Birds were making fun of the jocks earlier in the film.

* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi episode "Puffylicious", Kaz supposedly opens up a new restaurant called Puffylicious which both Ami and Yumi will run, but is later found out to have been a prank by Kaz for all the times the girls got him with pranks. Kaz comes dressed up and pretending to be a critic and the girls must find something to cook in order to get a good review for the "restaurant." The girls keep trying to cook different things from a recipe book and one recipe had a baking time of 18 minutes at 200 degrees but because they were strapped for time, Yumi suggests baking it for 2 minutes at 1800 degrees. She tries and the oven melts as a result.

* Hell Bent For Election: Inverted, as the Defeatist Limited’s railroad line’s track is switched to Roosevelt’s, causing the former to crash.
* Grimm. The Grimm are well-known (and feared) among the Wesen for this method of killing, as many Wesen are far tougher than humans. The Reapers, trained to hunt the Grimm, usually carry scythes in order to do the same to their hated enemies. It's also revealed that, prior to the Brothers Grimm becoming synonymous with others of their kind, Wesen hunters were known as "Decapitare", which is Latin for "decapitator", or more literally "he who decapitates". Some Wesen still use the older name.

* Hearthstone and killing Galakrond himself, and one where the League of Explorers defeat Galakrond before his rampage can begin. It's not technically stated which one is canon, but given that 2021's story arch largely takes place in Stormwind and Orgrimmar, it's safe to say that Rafaam's ending isn't canon.
* Hell, it's so common it became one of the main plot points in the canon video game, which saw several missions devoted to CTU being taken over the antagonists.
* Halloween on Spooner Street, the line Quagmire says his Japanese grandfather used to say translates to "As long as a man has pearls between his toes, he will never be poor."
* Half-Life 2 and modification into actual transhumans (though the Combine often picks up random civilians for conversion too). Soldiers presumably go through the same rank system with the highest-ranking Elites being more like synths than cyborgs.
* Halo series, the Cole Protocol is the most important Naval code to humanity's fleet, since it lists the actions they are not allowed to do to prevent the Covenant from discovering Earth. However several rules are often ignored because they're just technicalities. We only hear one of those, Subsection 7: "No captured Covenant vessel can be brought back to human space without a thorough search for tracking devices." (Useless because the Covenant self-destruct all their vessels in danger of capture.)
* Hayden Panettiere and Jessalyn Gelsig she's wholly believable as their child.

* Hasbro line is the original Anton Vanko version, but sports the armor of Dmitri Bukharin, the fifth user of the name in the comics.
* Greg Costikyan, a vicious satire of the way nearly anything done in the average roleplaying game would be violent sociopathy in real life, one of the ways to earn extra character points is to agree to make one out of every four words out of your character's mouth be an obscenity.

This is in contrast to the first game's dropships, which are purely unarmed transports.

* Harry Houdini claimed to be able to withstand any blow to the abdomen if he had time to brace and would frequently work this into his shows. According to testimony surrounding his death, he was met by some students/fans who asked him about this ability backstage. Harry told them he could perform the feat when prepared and they took it as a sign to proceed. They struck Harry and the blows were believed to have ruptured his appendix. Houdini most likely would have survived had he undergone emergency surgery, but he refused medical care. However, rupture of the appendix by blunt trauma is not common. It is also reasonable that Harry already had appendicitis and all the blows did was confuse Harry about the cause of his abdominal pain, making him dismiss a warning sign that could have saved his life. In either case, Harry refused to abandon a show in favor of emergency care and subsequently died of peritonitis secondary to his ruptured appendix.

Tolkien says "and all those who heard his great voice echo in the hills answered crying: Auta i lome! the night passes!". As usual, he manages to be both a total badass and utterly adorable at the same time. Unfortunately, the battle's name translates to "Unnumbered Tears". It didn't go so well.

* Heart of Steel has Jim, a male example, whose reaction to the idea that Julia might be breaking up with him is murderous rage which only gets worse after he gets turned into a cyborg.
* Hercules Hermes was said to be in the myths; Ares is portrayed as short, pudgy and bearded whereas his mythical counterpart was a hunky young jock; The Titans are reimagined as elemental monsters when their mythical counterparts were mostly humanlike; and the Fates are conflated with the horrifying Gray Sisters, making them look like inhuman hags with only one eye to share between them as opposed to the admittedly intimidating, normal-eyed old women they were in the original myths. The TV Series both continues this trend somewhat and plays with it—Icarus is depicted as a hyperactive weirdo while Echidna, mythologically a beautiful snake woman, is portrayed as an ugly she-dragon.

* Gully dwarves are the other highly problematic race of the setting. Like kender, they're comic relief characters, but unlike kender there's only one real joke about gully dwarves and it's that they're dwarves, but with severe Down's Syndrome. They're smaller than other types of dwarves, and also extremely stupid- they speak in broken common, they don't know how to practice proper hygiene so they always smell bad, they have no society of their own, and all they can really do to survive is scavenge the refuse left by other races. There's almost nothing about them that

* Happens in a rare myth of Guanyin, the Chinese interpretation of Bodhisattva Avalokiteshvara, who is recognized as almost exclusively female due to a mixture with his/her own Tara and some fertility goddesses (although Avalokiteshvara truly appears only in 4 of his 32 incarnations as female). It is connected with a school of Shaolin, there, Guanyin changes into a man for the sake of the group and later is "allowed" to stay that way.
* Gone with the Blastwave. They're by and large a bunch of apathetic, incompetent, manic-depressive bunglers, but they're still soldiers. They run the gamut of the scale — most are somewhere in the III to IV range, but a few are in the II category. There aren't many Type I Sociopathic Soldiers in the cast, mostly because almost no one seems to care who they're fighting for or against.

* Good Omens: when they arrive for Armageddon, it's noted that the commanders of the Heavenly hosts and the Legions of Hell look remarkably similar, all part of the book's theme that neither side is all that different from the other.
* "Hard Heads": In this episode, four of the Rangers battle the monster Serpentina who transforms into a giant snake and devours all of them. The remaining two Rangers, Nick and Vida, are later able to free them.

* Gundam for his alignment. In-universe, it was rumored among the troops that Char wore his famous mask to hide a horribly scarred face, when it was really just to conceal his true identity; the mask actually kept Amuro's sword strike from being a fatal one.
* GLITCHED. After the glitch corrupts him, none of the townspeople of Betwixit remember him, much to Gus' confusion and frustration. Even the photos and books involving him are corrupted.
* Glory Hound told the truth of everything that he had witnessed, but he only took the credit for Cell's defeat after he was convinced that doing so would calm down everyone in the world.

* Gun Struggle's pistol against a marble floor and forcing him to fire, causing part of the slide to fly back into his face from the confined gunshot.
* Gnaw: Food of the Gods II has a scene in which giant rats attack a swimming competition. The cheesy special effects, however, kills any shred of horror from the scene. The intercutting shots of panicked people in a normal sized competition pool with shots of ordinary-sized rats walking around and splashing in an obvious miniature pool had no credibility whatsoever.

* Harry is this throughout the book series, due to being a newcomer to the wizarding universe who is dumped into Hogwarts at age 11 without knowing a thing about magic. Over and over again, most of all in the first novel but quite a bit in subsequent novels, someone explains to Harry and the reader some point about the magical universe. In the fourth novel,

* Halo, like all SPARTAN-II members, underwent extensive surgeries and procedures to maximize performance. One side effect of his condition is a decrease in...er...interest. Though this side effect is described as a common and likely result of their hormonal adjustment, it is not universal or absolute when it does occur, leading to a few exceptions:
* Gwyneth Paltrow as Odin among others. Also just most casting choices in the movies and shows.
* Harley Quinn by having her skin permanently bleached white, much like the Joker, instead of her using a costume.
* Hassan of the Cursed Arm's mask is wired into his head, and even if it wasn't, it is a part of his culture, so he refuses to part with it. Some people take issue with it because it makes him resemble a member of the dreaded White Fang.
* Hex Wives, Danali's magical powers activate when she has her first period. Isadora gives her some pretty frank advice on dealing with menstruation.
* Hasbro movie claimed that Tony Stark used the armor to chase off the terrorists who'd kidnapped him. In the actual film, Tony straight up kills many of his captors, and then blows up their base for good measure.

transported 10,000 years through time to our world.
* Haikyuu!! duo Hinata and Kageyama at one point (begrudgingly) ask him to tutor them so they won't fail their exams. While Tsukishima's physical prowess is average at best (only his ~190cm height is something to write home about), he makes up for it with his intellect; the official statistics rate his game sense 5/5, meaning he strategises very effectively during matches.
* he doesn't free the Hebrews until the Ten Plagues have run their course my heart be hardened, and nevermind how high the cost may grow," meaning he's trying to be more like an immovable object against Moses and God's unstoppable force.

Claire Bennet (and one of Primatech's major facilities) is in Odessa, TX. The Volume Three finale is set in Hartdale, NY and Fort Lee, NJ. The plane carrying all the heroes at the start of Volume Four crashed in Oklahoma.
* Hat Films and the people populating the Sirs' various game servers call themselves "Hatters".
* Gundam series, the military units are composed of weaker "grunt" mobile suits that are largely ineffective and are destroyed in large numbers by the much more powerful Gundams and other "hero mechs", which are always piloted by the main characters (protagonists and antagonists) of the narrative. * Halo: Combat Evolved onward have played it straight with all vehicles; heck, destroy a Covenant vehicle, and not only will it explode, but what's left of it will explode a second time.
* Halloween: Resurrection of all people (playing another character, mind you). However, all of the extremely forced references to how cool and up-to-date the Internet is only succeed in severely dating the film to its early 2000s roots. No one watching today, in a world where the Internet is so massively ubiquitous that most people spend half their day using it, would ever find the inclusion of it as anything but forced and laughable.
* Havemercy. And now she has her own fandom. Ninety percent of Havemercy fangirls started as Shoebox fangirls, and they're an insanely loyal bunch.
* Goddess Creation System (女神制造系统)
* Great Eastern Railway Class A55 Decapod: a steam locomotive built to match the acceleration of then-current electric trains. Built to prove a political point, the design never went into production.

* High School Prodigies Have It Easy Even in Another World, the prodigies use their modern knowledge to kickstart a revolution against the Freyjagard Empire. While the imperial nobles use spells and dragons, the prodigies introduce modern weaponry to the commoners from rifles to missile systems. This is downplayed in that the prodigies have at least two mages among their allies and the empire is developing firearms, albeit ones that are more primitive than the ones used by the prodigies.

* Greater-Scope Villain: A bigger threat than the Big Bad who isn't as directly involved in the plot.
* Harlequin Shadowseers wear face-concealing, featureless masks in combat (and outside of it?), ensuring that the last thing the enemy sees will be the reflection of their own face (though the implication is that it goes beyond a reflection, and the enemy literally feels as though they are fighting themselves). On that note, all other Harlequins use masks as well, but theirs have actual theatrical expressions.

As one of the only people who knows Spider-Man's real identity, he spends the greater part of the movie making things difficult for Peter Parker, battles Spider-Man a few times as the Green Goblin, and eventually, in one of said battles, gets injured. Later in the movie, Peter asks Harry to help fight the team of Venom and the Sandman, but Harry declines the offer. At this point, the Osborne family's loyal butler Bernard arrives, and tells Harry that Spider-Man was really never responsible for Norman's death, and that he died of his own folly. Apparently, the butler knew this all along, but still allowed Harry to play out his vendetta against Spider-Man.

* Good Witch could give Batman a run for his money. She (and the other Merriwicks) have some kind of magical ability to always sense whenever someone's around, and knows when someone is going to open the door—and who it is—before they even knock.
* Gorillaz, but many of their music videos follow a narrative thread, such as rappers being kidnapped for experiments.
* Gundam Build Divers Re:RISE and that he could have altered the ending in an instant but couldn't bring himself to do so. As the Gunpla he was using, the Uraven Gundam, was a long-range sniper machine, this gives him plausibility as to why he never appeared on-screen.

* Greek Mythology...until they die, and one goes to Mount Olympus, and the other to Hades. Turns out only Pollux was the child of Zeus, while Castor was completely mortal, thanks to complications involving shape-shifting and infidelity. (And Ancient Greek beliefs about twins, though theoretically it's perfectly possible for this to happen to fraternal twins.) With Zeus's help, Pollux donates half of his godhood to Castor so that the two can be together, even though they'll have to spend half their time in Hades. Hades isn't so bad, though, if you're virtuous. The Elysian Fields are there, as well as a possibility of reincarnation.

It's mentioned he's previously joined several Brotherhoods of Funny Hats with names like The Men of the Furrow, as a prelude to defrauding the other members.
* Having a character with the last name "Wharmpess" isn't funny. Giving him a dream of starting his own brewery named after him is not funny. * Greenwich. Some of the puns don't quite translate over to English, sadly.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas with street gang members (Grove Street Families green, Ballas purple, Vagos yellow, and Aztecas cyan) so that you knew who would shoot at you on sight (Ballas and Vagos).
* Haru Okumura, aka Noir. Haru has a very diverse movepool, specializing in Psy magic and being the only one aside from Joker who can use Gun skills, but she can also use
* Hamilton, Hamilton speculates that dying must be like "a beat without a melody". In the song where he duels Burr (The World Was Wide Enough), he begins rapping after the shot with no orchestral or choral backup.
* Greek Mythology there were a few examples of this type. For instance, male gods would occasionally reveal who they were on taking leave from the woman they had just impregnated. In a more spectacular example, Hera posed as an old woman to trick Semele, one of her husband Zeus' lovers, into getting him to promise to do her a favour and then make that favour to show himself to her in his true form. She did not survive the experience.
* Higurashi: When They Cry. Although it isn't the end of the series - the answers are provided in the next four arcs - it is the end of the question arcs, the arcs that lay out the mysteries that the reader is supposed to solve.
* Hamlet, Laertes. Once he gets poisoned, he realises how low he had gone in his quest for vengeance.
* Groin Attack on one of the zombies. Though the zombie's crotch crumbled to dust, he was otherwise completely unharmed by the kick.
* Godzilla (2014) scars that the survivors of the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombings developed.
* Harbourmaster paradisial; nothing was subjected to the kind of pressures that would select for sapience, until a comet strike altered Tethys's climate, allowing the entomorphs to evolve to sapience.
* Guardians of the Galaxy resembles the sigil when seen from above. (Which could be explained if the city came first, and the sigil was inspired by it.)
* Gregory Maguire characters, and protagonists that generally weren't as memorable as Elphaba, the flaws in the story just became more obvious.
* Hawaii Five-0, but it's More Often Than Not Murder). Starting with season 5, Danny is absent one out of every five or so episodes.
* Hamilton: Angelica Schuyler's signature song "Satisfied" outlines how she has this platonically for her sister Eliza, for whom she played matchmaker with Alexander Hamilton even though she realized both sisters had fallen for him. Angelica knew that she could have had Alexander for herself because of her wits and status as the elder sister, but swallowed her own feelings in order to allow her sister to marry her love while she ended up in a loveless marriage.
* Hazumu chose Tomari from the start because she was the one who didn't hesitate to save Hazumu's life. She loved him/her in both genders, choosing to change her own sexuality just to be with Hazumu.
* Heroes Unite: HUB from Heroes Alliance has a hover-wheelchair. When you're a technopathic millionaire, why not?
* Hawk and Dove, reportedly has unpredictability as a superpower. Despite some rather basic tactics (find the toughest guy in a group and attack him head-on), all mystical and mundane attempts to predict his actions automatically fail.
* HERZ: SEELE’s attack in 2015 failed because another secret organization accidentally learnt about their plans and interfered with them… something SEELE had not counted on at all.

* Harpo and Chico Marx). Not one person could tell the difference. Chico's daughter also stated at one point that during a run of their live stage show, Chico and Harpo switched roles for one performance as a kind of Easter egg for her to see if she could tell (she ended up missing the show altogether).
* Hatchling Quest: Humans from Samus’ dimension have done this over many years. Enhancements include immunity to most diseases, 250-300 year long lifespan, requiring only 4 hours of sleep, and more.
* Goten in his early appearances. He has yet to learn how to fly (considered a very basic technique in DBZ) but is able to turn into a Super Saiyan. Gohan compares it to learning how to run before you can crawl.
* Heir to the Empire, Thrawn uses one in a clever application of a cloaking device. The (realistic) weakness of cloaking devices in his stories is that they are double blind and therefore difficult to use properly in conventional combat. He comes up with a clever solution: cloak the cargo bay and fill it with TIE fighters. Scanners would show the bay is empty and once they got into range the fighters could launch inside the enemy shipyard. It is only partially successful thanks to the timely intervention of Wedge and Rogue Squadron as well and Han, Luke and Lando.
* GO-GO Tamagotchi, Mametchi, Memetchi, and Kuchipatchi meet a Tamagotchi in a ghost costume trying to scare anyone who visits his house. The Tamagotchi, named Jacktchi, is in reality a pumpkin-headed boy.
* "Hard edges":, a flat construct roughly the size of the inner solar system with a hole at its center for the sun to stay in and wildly different environments depending on each region's distance from the sun. Most worlds of this type are populated on only one surface, but some are explicitly inhabited and inhabitable on both sides.
* Gyromancy: Divination performed by going around in a circle marked along its perimeter with letters of the alphabet. When the dizzy person stumbles onto the letters, words can then be interpreted as a message. Similar to the technique used in psychic circles and Ouija boards where the participants form a circle and place one finger on a glass surrounded by a circle of letters of the alphabet. The glass will touch letters in turn to indicate words and the words then form messages.
* Harry Potter fanfics is to hold another Yule Ball (sans the Triwizard Tournament that it's supposed to go with).

* Heaven's Feel ending, but is revived by Ilya via Third Sorcery in the True End.

* Hellsister Trilogy has Darkseid — the God of Tyranny who has been plaguing the galaxy for millennia — and the Source of Evil, which is as old as sentient life itself.
* Highlander: The Animated Series. Fortunately, all of the decapitations happened slightly off screen.
* Highlander episode "Not To Be". Methos almost lampshades it with the line "You know, this 'Bad guy just my size' routine never works, Macleod. " Less than a minute later, he proves it DOES work, by donning an Irish accent along with the bad guy's coat and shoots the other henchmen.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, the various gods have sexual encounters with mortals, but they otherwise avoid relationships with them. "The Green-Eyed Monster" shows Cupid falling for Psyche, which Aphrodite disapproves of. Part of that is because she's jealous of Psyche's beauty, but it's also because of this trope. Aphrodite notes she's had experience in this area and that mortals are like plums: they taste great for a while but eventually become prunes. Cupid's situation is resolved by Hercules suggesting Aphrodite give Psyche ambrosia.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, the following time-saving exchange

* Hiding jokes and so on in the flannel panel or legal disclaimers of a magazine is reasonably common. The legal bits for just about any magazine usually ends up being an unreadable disclaimer, they're needed but no-one reads them (except for people looking for the hidden messages), so they're printed as small as possible.
* Greyhawk gives us Murlynd, demigod of Magical Technology, and his White Paladins. Murlynd himself is styled after a Wild West sheriff, and he and his clerics and paladins are the only ones who can wield firearms in the setting.
* Grimm Grimm we meet is a pretty nice guy who treats these Wesen like he would anyone else, but they still react to him like he's a serial killer because his ancestors lived up to that reputation.
* God-Mode Sue: "Why are we even here? He can do everything!" vs. "Why is this guy even here? He can't do anything!"
* GX has Kurosaki and Ruri. Most of the time, the big brother is very protective towards his younger sister.
* he hates sweets. As such, he gains the least benefits that come from desserts.
* Hercules: The Animated Series: Jason explains why he seeks the Golden Fleece; it can allegedly span across the widest chasm, make flowers grow in the desert, and even turn an old man's hair from gray to black. Jason is initially disappointed when the Fleece's powers turn out to be considerably less than advertised, but he eventually reasons that it has spanned the chasm between him and his estranged crew, and made the flower of hope bloom in the desert of despair. (And he's noticed some highlights in his hair.)
* Happy Heroes, Big M. is shown on a few occasions to be wearing underwear with a heart pattern on it.
* Great Teacher Onizuka: Onizuka and some of his students play paintball, and two of them decide to drop in via the window.

* Gunslinger Girl. Rico and Henrietta slide under a closing door during the attack on the terrorist-occupied nuclear power plant.
* High-Speed Battle at you for the boss fight, which annoyingly doesn't really explain the controls to you until it's probably too late.

* Harley Quinn's first solo series (pre-New 52/Rebirth). Harley, being a lover of love, decides to help it grow wherever she can - being in love is the easiest way to get her to spare you. Early on she fights Two-Face to save a hostage he was taking as his own because she felt the story was romantic, and later on she plays matchmaker to a pair of bounty hunters trying to bring her in.
* Herr Meets Hare: The first cartoon in which he said this, after accidentally digging to the Black Forest in Germany.

* Heroes had a lockdown in Level 5 to keep the bad dudes from getting out.
* Greek Mythology, the Twelve Olympians (and sometimes the Titans) are what most people think of when they hear about gods, but lesser creatures like nymphs are sometimes referred to as gods as well. Also, heroes tend to be divine-human offspring, and can sometimes send a god running in a fight.
* Halo: Reach, in Headhunter mode players collect flaming skulls from the dead, in Oddball mode, the "ball" is a flaming skull, and in Juggernaut mode, the juggernaut's entire body is set aflame.
* Headhunter was set in a world where the organ market is very profitable. Weapons are designed so they don't damage the target's precious organs. There was a massive black market of organs. The player gets to explore the cargo-ship which is the centre of the operation.

* Guyver film adaptation is a bizarre half-example. There were clearly two conflicting visions for the movie: one as a straight adaptation of the very dark and violent source material, and one as a more lighthearted, slapstick-y adaptation geared towards children. The result is a film that would regularly and awkwardly transition from violent deaths to goofy slapstick with cartoony music. The sequel treats the first as canon, but all such silliness is dropped (the subtitle says it all: "Dark Hero").
* Graham Norton, where he says Alfonso Ribeiro (Carlton) told him to use this trope.
* Guardians of the Galaxy – Mission: BREAKOUT! at the end of the ride, All the guardians thank the audience for their help, Leading to Drax saying "Why are you thanking them they did nothing, You should be thanking me". * He was occasionally seen walking down the street carrying a folded umbrella, in pouring rain.
* Hexen: The freaky faceless floating wizards known as Dark Bishops have an ability to go transparent and move very quickly in a straight line — as the manual puts it, they "phase in and out of existence as they travel from place to place." Since they're ranged attackers, they don't use it to attack as such.
* Grand Theft Auto IV as well since, with some practice, you are able to control a car decently while drunk yet cops will still chase you down when they spot you. Yet, when sober, you can drive far worse without a peep from the cops.
* Guild Wars 2 has a wide range of activities to distract from the main story, such as jumping puzzles, collection achievements, and complicated crafting professions. Perhaps the biggest time (and gold) sink for many players is crafting legendary weapons, which requires either incredible luck with an item drop or completing a series of special achievements.
* HERZ when she was having a shower in the base’s locker rooms. He screamed in terror and ran off.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, Ginny sends a Valentine's poem to Harry using a singing dwarf. The message ends up embarrassing both of them in front of Malfoy.

* Golden Sun, so making a Ninja of anyone else would make them a Mcninja.

* God God, a distinction the Romans probably appreciated more than the Pharisees did.
* Half-Life 2. The player's attacks don't hurt him at all, but if you grabbed a sentry gun from earlier in the level, carried it all the way to Eli, and set it down facing him, it would quickly blow him away.

* Gone in 60 Seconds (2000) of cocaine and realize it probably belongs to a drug kingpin.
* Heretic manual does this, possibly by design but also jarringly, as it alternatingly and simultaneously tries to sound appropriate for a high fantasy setting ("They stood solemnly, surrounding seven candles, each flame tied irrevocably to the flow of Earth's breath") and to assure people this is a game for those who want to see blood and guts ("Watch 'em scream and burn — it's great!") Sometimes the styles blend together so that you can't draw a line between them, but it still sounds odd. "These hideous abominations of the dark world move bloody fast and possess deadly sharp blades for appendages."
* Hair-Trigger Temper: A hotheaded hero has a bad temper, but is still good to the core. Relates to the trope above.
* Happens in the Stereophonics song "The Bartender and the Thief" when the title bartender is distracted from the con by a horny lesbian describing her sex life (or something like that).
* Henry: When he arrives and discovers no one in the studio to greet him, he just decides to look around. When he sees * Happens ALL THE TIME in real life. Be it chemicals in various things that could give your child cancer, or a new credit card scam, or what have you, this is transparent and frequent. While they sometimes have valid points, it's a very cheap tactic (forgoing responsibility to the public and focusing on profits by taking advantage of fear-mongering).

* Harry overhears what he thinks is Hermione having sex with Fred, George and a cucumber. It turns out that the twins are painting a still life while Hermione holds a fruit bowl at the proper height.
* Grease. As for Carr, he continued to work as a theatre producer before dying of liver cancer in 1999.
* Gravity Falls implies that said group is called the Royal Order of the Holy Mackerel and Stan probably made it up as a part of his persona as the "Man of Mystery".

* Happy Heroes has this, needing visible directions, in the form of arrows on the ground, to get to a meeting place on his own.

* Heart of Darkness or the hero, and ends up helping Andy defeats his boss.
* Greek Mythology the first major figures are Gaia and Oranos, whose children were the Titans, many monsters, and the Gold race of men who died out by not reproducing. Then Cronos, the leader of the Titans, castrated Oranos and overthrew him, then Cronos' kids overthrew him (yeah, they've kind of got a children killing their parents theme here). Also Zeus created the Silver race of men, but they were too warlike and he had to destroy them, so Prometheus made the Bronze race who were our ancestors. Then the Olympians wiped them out with a flood, but Prometheus' son Deucalion and his wife Pyrrha survived by floating in a chest. Zeus took pity on them and told them to throw stones behind them. The stones thrown by Deucalion became men, and the stones thrown by Pyrrha became women.

In DBZ and Super 17 and 18 are much closer in personality with the only noticeable differences is that 17 is more cocky and battle loving than 18 but also less cautious (which gets him absorbed by Cell quicker). 18 also loves clothes and shopping, which bores 17 to tears.

The Englishmen offer to bet him a hundred weight of gold on the matter and he says no, only a bushel is enough, since he has only a bushel of apples to wager against them. They all return to the house, and the man recounts his trades; at each step this wife declares that it was a wonderful trade and gives her reasons. In the end, she laughs with delight at the sack of shrivelled apples because she had gone to borrow a handful of herbs from the schoolmistress and been told "Lend?" I don't have anything to lend you. I couldn't even lend you a shrivelled apple!" and now the wife could lend her "...ten, or a whole sack-full! It makes me laugh to think it." "Al-Andalus" can be formed by Marrocco by conquering Spain, and the Middle East can be "integrated" if conquered, and Turkey can reform the Ottoman Empire and unify the Middle East under their rule.

Hades agreed on the condition that Orpheus not look back until the couple were back in the living world. Sadly, Orpheus turned to look JUST as they were almost out of the Underworld, because he wanted to be sure that his wife was really behind him.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team is particularly a victim of this. The maids and slice-of-life were abruptly destroyed by ACTION, FIGHTING, and other such things in the last couple episodes.
* Hades, Thanatos is invariably listed as Zagreus's 'cherished partner' with whom he shares an 'Undying Bond'.
* Hellsister Trilogy's child are put on a bus after the first arc wraps up, are conspicuously absent during the second arc, and return at the beginning of the final storyline, thirty-five chapters later.

* Hack/Slash is victimized by one of these when a couple of guys put him in a gas chamber and start to turn it on. Unfortunately, the gas actually deploys and they can't turn it off. He comes back as a slasher.
* Groo the Wanderer, Chakaal responds that the gods are uncaring buffoons when they attempt to assign her a task.
* Hard Boiled, Inspector Yuen runs out of bullets just as he tries to shoot the mob hitman Alan. This proves to be very convenient later when he discovers that Alan has actually been an undercover cop all along.
* High School D×D may have hip-length crimson hair, but Akeno's black hair reaches her legs, even in a ponytail. Asia, Rossweisse, Irina, Serafall, and Tsubaki also have pretty long hair.
* High School D×D, are designed to be as non-lethal as possible, but accidents can happen. Riser loudly boasts that he could finish off a weakened Issei

* Half-Human Hybrid Avatars have five), with what is essentially an organic network cable that looks like a braided ponytail.
* Helluva Boss, have hell hounds that look like anthropomorphic wolves. The former has one among the main cast (Loona, I.M.P.'s moody receptionist), and a few appear as background characters in the latter.
* Handled much more realistically in possibly the most famous example,

* Goldie & Bear, Bear and Goldie are this respectively to Prince Charming. He doesn't really care and is willing to put up with it so long as it gets him a day of fun away from his boring princely duties.
* Gorilla, Interrupted: Due to time constraints, the director wrote a loose, 50-page outline for a film to shoot in seven days. This led to many scenes that relied on the actors simply improvising their lines and finding a way to get to the next scene, because they didn't have time to rehearse and deliver extended dialogue. However, one of the four main actors felt uncomfortable improvising and wrote his own version of the script filling all the blank spaces with gags largely inspired by Monty Python. The director ultimately had to reassert his control of the film.
* Hellblazer story "Counting To Ten" (widely known as 'the laundromat issue' in the fandom) takes place almost entirely within the bounds of a laundromat over the course of an hour or so. It's a much darker version of this trope, this being a horror comic.
* Hamilton, has soured the deal for certain people, especially with Angelica being supposedly presented as a Mary Wollstonecraft-esque proto-feminist.
* Her Tears Were My Light, the character Time can reset the current timeline (game) anytime and start from the beginning without losing her own memories. This is a central mechanic of the game.
* Halo 2; the announcement trailer has a debate between a general on the ground wanting those platforms to be used as Kill Sats against the already-landed invasion forces, and the admiral in orbit trying to hold off the Covenant fleet:
* Hiimdaisy comic has the protagonist, Yosuke, and Teddie do it in when Chie meets her Shadow.
* Golf Story of Tidy Park have this going on. They reminisce about playing for leisure over the more modern concept of playing for a low score ("a tidy six is better than a messy four") and require members to use vintage clubs any time they're on the property.
* GS 260, Mimete grew into a 12 story giant and destroyed a military facility and kidnapped one of its commanding officers.
* Hammerspace by her superhuman strength. It still has some serious recoil though. At least once she's told to get a smaller, more practical weapon.

* Hei pose as newlyweds in order to hide out at a resort while on the run in the Gaiden OVA.

* He also threw the young son of his host out of one of the higher windows of a castle, permanently crippling him. He becomes much more sympathetic when (two books later) we realise that he did it for the great love of his life (
* Hal Blaine and The Wrecking Crew. Whether this name was actually used in the '60s — or indeed by anyone other than Blaine himself — is a big point of contention among the other musicians.
* Guild Wars also has similar (but much more severe at higher states of drunkenness) graphical effects, with the added bonus of the drunk player character shouting typical drunk phrases ("I love you, man!"). Not only is there a special title for those who spend a certain amount of time drunk, but there's also a particularly infamous quest that has you performing various acts while ascending up the drunkenness ladder, culminating with having to herd several pigs into a pen while barely able to stand.
* Heckle and Jeckle has the magpies as mounties facing the outlaw Powerful Pierre. The boys hide inside a single overcoat and throw virtually every fruit and vegetable at Pierre, to no effect.
* Handwaved by the Babelfish, a very small organism that went into your ear and read brainwaves to act as a universal translator.
* He Knows About Timed Hits: Video game characters explain how the controls work.
* Granted, these are licenses for "anything he builds". Hopefully the building process includes him designing controls he can use.
* He mentions something he calls a "button board"... Heavy, do you mean "keyboard"?
* Gunpowder siege weapons + a cowardly enemy hiding in the city center = bowling for peasants. There's just something so cheering about seeing a line of enemy infantry launched into the air as a cannonball skips down the main avenue. Especially if your opponent has been rude on the world map, or put up especially annoying resistance on the city walls.
* GURPS be. Two, even if you conveniently are trained in Law, anyone trying to defend themselves with the Law Skill in an official legal capacity suffers an inherent -3 penalty to their skill roll.
* Her voice also has a tendency to drop in tone at the end of some lines throughout the game to denote that she doesn't exactly have your best intentions in mind...
* Had Operation Downfall taken place (Olympic in southern Kyushu in November 1945, Coronet in the Kanto Plain in March 1946), it would have surpassed even Overlord in the number of invading Allied troops (up to 5 million US troops and another 1 million British; in contrast there were "only" 2 million total Allied troops involved with Overlord after two months). The massive number of casualties projected from the experiences of fighting in Iwo Jima and Okinawa (1 million American, half a million British,

* Hideyuki Tanaka. Tsukasa Hojo intentionally named the character after him in the manga long before the anime version was made.
* Gran Hotel, the new maître d'hotel, Ernesto, had only appeared in five episodes when, even as his character was making headway wooing the stiff head of housekeeping Angela, the actor, Juan Luis Galiardo, died unexpectedly. Remaining footage allowed him to appear briefly in two more episodes. These and two more following episodes were dedicated in his memory. Unusually, the dedication was positioned in place of the series title, over the beauty shot of the hotel at the end of the opening credits.

* Good For: Moving a lot of infantry around fast (men often find it hard to stop or slow down when there's 20 guys behind him wondering what the holdup is), breaking a wavering enemy (a huge mass of men moving quickly towards them was often the signal for enemy infantry to leg it), facing cavalry (deployed easily into square).
* Harley Quinn and Poison Ivy friendship, a way of emphasizing strong female characters, and diffuses much of their underlying creepiness (Harley seeming more comedic than actually crazy, and Ivy being less misanthropic, etc.)
* He's a very specific parody of a series of ads for warehouse sales in which the (unseen) narrator would scream every single word at the top of his lungs. "PERSIAN RUGS FIVE BUCKS, JUST FIVE BUCKS!" were a common fixture, but they also advertised used CDs or slightly damaged clothing, among other things.
* Great Teacher Onizuka. Onizuka initially gets in trouble when scandalous pictures of him are released at the school, but the other teachers eventually realized the pictures were digitally altered after analyzing them. Upon finding out about this, Onizuka decides to hire the student who made the pictures to make custom porn for him. The student is so bemused by this that not only does he decide to stop antagonizing Onizuka, he actually accepts his request.

* Gravity Falls, Mabel's rather suspicious new boyfriend "Norman" has a small smear of something red on his face, which Dipper guesses to be blood but "Norman" insists is actually jam. Although it's never clarified on the show itself, the "Between the Pines" special specifies that it was indeed jam.
* Glorious Shotgun Princess: "Hello! I MAY HAVE TAMPERED WITH THE VOLUME CONTROLS!"

* Green Lantern story, Speedy responds to Green Lantern wondering why anyone would use drugs by giving the hypothetical example of a young man whose father figure neglects him to go "[chasing] around the country." Which the heroes have, of course, been doing. Green Arrow is contemptuous of this hypothetical "sob story"... and then walks in on Speedy, his own surrogate son, shooting up.
* Grrl Power apparently makes her a priority target because it just sees a black void where an orb would be.
* Government phone numbers in America run the table. Some will give you the runaround and supply circular instructions; others lead to unattended voice mail boxes. The Social Security Administration is better. If you're on hold for a while, they'll let you leave your number, and call you when they've reached your place in the queue.

* Grand Theft Auto IV has a large fanbase, but mostly because he's a flatly efficient antagonist.
* Great Devil War: Death, whose true name is Mortimer, features heavily. He is an ancient man whose task it is to bring the souls of the dead to their afterlife upon their death. He has his own domain, a dead world between Heaven and Hell. He has a hundred-sided die which he rolls for every newborn human and asigns a lifespan with. In the basement below his house, in his world, he keeps a hourglass for every living human, which indicate when they will die. Mortimer has a sister, Life, whose name is Vita, and keeps a white pet snake, Tempus, who is Time incarnate.

While they're away, a group of down-on-their-luck drifters known as "The Trio" happen upon the abandoned car and dismantle it to sell for parts, resulting in it not being there when Marina and Amber return, and forcing the two to travel together. Amber only realizes the truth later after noticing that Tess, one-third of The Trio, has a New Mexico license plate(Marina's home state) that she got recently. Amber calls The Trio out on their actions, but Marina is willing to forgive them for scrapping her brother's car.

* Hannibal is impersonating a villain to find where they've taken a hostage. He's confronted by one of the villains, who says he knows everything. * he still covers for him by claiming to Karen that Matt got into a car accident. When she visits him, he says that he was hit by a Japanese...car, allowing him to tell her a half-truth about what really happened (Nobu is Japanese). And even though Matt's lying about the cause of his injuries, Karen still correctly suspects that Fisk had attacked him.

* Hercule Poirot, Hastings tells his daughter that Poirot was something like a father to him.
* Haunted Fetter - An inanimate object or place that is possessed by a ghost/spirit as a way of binding itself to the realm of the living.
* Herodotus about conquering mainland Greece was a peculiar battle in which an Athenian army assisted Miletos (a Greek city in Ionia) in reasserting its independence; in the process, they managed to torch the Persian provincial capital at Sardis. This made Xerxes' father Darius (who was Shah at the time) VERY angry once he got over his confusion (Athens was a tin-pot town nobody important had ever heard of). Darius shot an arrow into the sky, and swore "O God, grant that I may punish the Athenians;" later on, he had a servant remind him of his pledge at dinner daily, and various plans for fighting the Athenians were drawn up. Xerxes was not so preoccupied, and was rather confused with Darius' request that he also try to "punish the Athenians;" supposedly, the only thing that convinced Xerxes to go at all was a recurring dream of a phantom telling him to go to Greece.
* Hero: 108 fits into this trope nicely. She's just a fangirl of cute things, from bunnies to flowers.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, this is Rocket's reaction when he realizes Groot has run away with the bomb.
* Hayden Panettiere has several tattoos, but most of those are pretty discreet — except for "To live without regrets" tattooed on her left side in Italian.

Much fun was had at her expense when it was pointed out it was misspelled... although the fact that she only bothered to have it removed several years later (and has even posed topless while showing it) suggests she goes by the message rather than the spelling.
* Hannelore goes out with Sven just to see what dates are like. Nothing romantic or sexual is expected to happen, and it doesn't.

* Hc Svnt Dracones Mars has been turned into practically a lower-gravity copy of (pre-nuclear war) Earth, while Venus tried to preserve as much of the original landscape as possible and the eco-engineers got a bit creative with the flora and fauna. Ganymede also has a breathable atmosphere but it's so cold that most of the population still lives in domes. Transcendent Technologies Inc only terraformed Europa a little bit for their research into the Monolith.

* Groo the Wanderer to overrun helpless cities, which Groo despised, though he lacked the intellect to understand why).
* GUMSHOE and others). A given because the system is built to facilitate (and encourage) roleplaying detective work.
* Guns N' Roses. Particularly Slash, who mindlessly came up with the main guitar riff as he was warming up, and the rest of the band thought it was so good they had to build a song around it.
* Happy Days had Richie going to a Halloween party with a girl who was several inches taller than he was.
* Goal in Life that she lacks, unintentionally implying that her lack of interest in Pokémon is, in fact, a critical flaw in his eyes.

* Hey Arnold!, Eugene is disillusioned when he learns that his idol is a foul-tempered hypocrite. However, he's also a good person as demonstrated when he selflessly saves Eugene and Arnold from untimely deaths.
* Happy Heroes: The Season 2 finale, "Race of Champions", is about the heroes participating in a car race. Big M., the show's villain, naturally tries to screw them over during the race.
* Hayate Yagami, Lieutenant-Colonel at 19. Even if you assume she started her career
* Hajimete No A Ku has one, on top of that it has ridiculously accurate aim, able to shoot glasses of the heroines face without hurting her.
* "Her Majesty", the last track on the second side, cuts out the last note. The reason for this is that "Her Majesty" was originally supposed to be a part of the medley, between "Mean Mr. Mustard" and "Polythene Pam". Listen to it in that order and it makes perfect sense musically.
* Hellsing Hellsing head Integra because she was that damn good at asking nicely.
* Grand Theft Auto (Classic) game, there is a button to honk the horn while driving a car. If you press it while your character is on foot, he burps or farts.
* Going into Strahd's crypt in "I6: Ravenloft" without neutralizing or avoiding a magical trap can get you turned into a statue, not of granite (which is relatively easy to fix in D&D), but of several metals layered on top of one another.
* Helion tells Phaethon the true story of his "birth": a personality based on Helion in a simulation was deeply affected by burning a planet and turned to contemplation, waking it up.
* Hannibal expresses doubt about the idea of "a Krogan scientist worthy of the term", upon which Adam tosses the other's earlier words right back at him.

* Hannes getting eaten by the very same titan that ate Eren's mother years before, in the same manner, while again Eren and Mikasa are Forced to Watch. Eren can only laugh in despair at the cruel irony.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality Draco believes (along most Slytherins, apparently) that Dumbledore was the Greater Evil and that Voldemort and his Death Eaters, though bad, were the only people with a chance to stand up to him.
* Go through the entire game and complete every (non-lethal) objective in every mission,
* Harpers' Weekly two-panel cartoon called "Banana-Skin Butcheries". The gag is mixed with anti-Irish bigotry. * Hikikomori: A character with a strong aversion towards going outside.

* Going Postal cons the city into thinking the gods gave him a ton of cash, his business competitor comments that they will handle this in the newspaper by stating that they are interested in "profits, not prophets." Since he's saying this out loud, no one in the room gets it. He tries to explain the joke by repeating it, but it goes over their heads again, so he sighs and remarks that it will look better in print.
* Good Is Not Nice: Yeah, yeah. I'm a hero who saves the day, but that doesn't mean I'm a nice guy, so get a clue, you idiot!
* Grandma's House and is looking for something else to do with his life.
* Heavy Rain, when the Lieutenant Carter Blake breaks the door of the apartment owned by a suspect and the FBI agent Norman Jayden tells him that's a crime.

* Harry Turtledove. In that world, ancestor spirits can talk to their grandchildren on a daily basis, so that the ghosts can just ask their people to pour a little beer on the ground for them and express thanks when they get it.
* Hilarity Ensues. The setup often works because it exploits the existing naming convention for Army implements. Portable combat radios have designator names starting with "PRC"-such as the PRC-25 and PRC-77 'Nam era backpack rigs, up to the modern PRC-152. Thus, so easy to tell the rookie that you need a portable radio, type 7, modification E. Got that? PRC-E7. Go to the sarge and say you're looking for the PRC-E7.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone and trying to kill Harry, the latter notices his touch burns Quirrell's skin, so Harry grabs the Professor's face with his hands and he starts to burn at the point of being turned into ashes. Ray takes dance lessons. Henry confesses to a girl he likes and kisses her in front of everybody, challenges a bully to a fight, and agrees to hang out with a nerd.

* Goldberg, giving Hart a concussion which led to Hart retiring due to Post-Concussion Syndrome. While Goldberg wasn't very technically sound and he was a bit sloppy, he at least tried to bust out new moves in his matches and while they weren't textbook perfect, they look effective enough. Let's be honest, the Spear and Jackhammer were all he needed, because fans loved him for it.
* God of War (PS4), where this is basically the entirety of the game. It all starts with Kratos's wife Faye already dead, her last wish is for her ashes to be spread on the highest peak in all of the realms. His young son Atreus is alongside him for the whole journey, but there is little comedy here. The death of Faye leaves Kratos adrift in a position he admits he's just not yet ready to return to: having to be a father figure again. Despite the fact that his hugely traumatic past life is centuries behind him at this point, Kratos is still so terrified of messing up with Atreus (as he has with so many other things) that he really doesn't know what to do or how to act, now that he and his son are forced to deal with each other. It certainly doesn't help that Kratos kept himself distant from Atreus throughout most of the boy's childhood, again likely because of his own insecurities towards being a father again. As a result, both of them have opposing personalities, mindsets, and opinons. Faye had always been the mediator between father and son, and now without her, Kratos is left grasping at straws.

* Hell House LLC II: The Abaddon Hotel, with some of them leaving the hotel to lure in more victims.
* Hearts of Stone the player winds up luring Olgierd to a moon-goddess' temple, to stand on a giant mosaic of the moon and fulfill the final part of his contract with O'Dimm (effectively, the devil) that they would meet on the moon. * Greek Mythology: cut off one head, and two more will sprout out from its place.

* God of War III, though not hurt by being released at the time the price cut was taking effect.
* Great Big Sea. In the song, the eponymous individual's funeral/wake becomes a rowdy party, with a long stop at the local pub for everyone to get hammered. Nevertheless, the lyrics are open to interpretation in regards to what the attendees actually thought of the deceased, except for the versions which include this final verse:
* Heavy Metal 2000: Julie tries to seduce Tyler to get close enough to kill him. This works, though the attempted assassination doesn't.

* Gray Fox, whom off-screen supposedly shoots down a pair of jet fighters using a MI-24 Hind attack helicopter (which is not nearly fast enough to deal with super sonic jets), which he can't beat you with.
* Gundam, but there are several games where the player can spare Bernie's life, and even convince him to switch sides and join the Federation.
* Heel Realization, it's extremely likely for him to kill her outright! There are many other examples of this throughout the series of characters attacking their siblings, lovers, parents, or children, because the game didn't bother to code in an exception to their AI.
* Godzilla. Since then the series has never held onto a main creative team for more than a few movies at a time, with directors, composers, and special effects supervisors coming and going on a regular basis.
* Heaven's Gate has the title character monitoring our life which is actually inside a computer.

* Gravity of space debris, so Kowalski tells Dr Stone to get inside the space shuttle immediately. She says, "Just a second" as she's securing the Hubble equipment, but Kowalski snaps "Not in a second — NOW!"

* Guys and Dolls, as it's about a lady refusing to be a slut just for gifts like furs.
* Grand Theft Auto, because Niko can get run over all day long and the cops won't care.

* Greyhawk of beings called gods, but they claim that these gods did not actually create Oerth and furthermore many of them started out as mortals who ascended to demigod status and later to godhood. Therefore the Skeptics deny these gods their faith. They're little more than a fringe group, and the one time a Skeptic gained political power, it turned out to be a disaster—one of the previous Dukes of Urnst drastically raised church taxes when he took the throne, caused a series of riots in the nation's capital, and ended up dying when no cleric would heal him after he was wounded in battle with mountain raiders.
* Halloween II (1981), a bumbling security guard stumbles around outside the hospital checking for a disturbance. He gets startled by a spring-loaded cat, sighs and relaxes. Three guesses who he encounters next...

* Harry Potter and the Forbidden Journey, it's implied that Voldemort sent the Dementors in to attack the guests. Since there's not much he could gain from this, other than possibly making Harry and Dumbledore look bad, his motivations probably fall under this.
* Harry Potter and the Alien Reality, Harry represents an unexpected factor to most villains faced by the SGC as none of them are used to facing magic, although SG-1 take care to ensure that Harry doesn’t do anything to expose his magic to the Goa’uld even if the NID are aware of his magic.

* Hela cells (an immortal cancer cell line used in biomedical research) act like Grey Goo, in that they're notoriously hard to kill off and often
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child, Harry correctly dreams that he'll find Albus wearing Durmstrang robes in the Forbidden Forest. In the books, the only psychic dreams he has are him experiencing what Voldemort is seeing or thinking due to their mental link.

* Hetalia: Axis Powers meaning that he and Italy found each other again. Daawww...
* .hack//G.U. that Natsume has a split personality: Her normal self is her cheery, slightly ditzy self while her other self is crazed, rampaging Pker known as The Edgemaniac. This is played for laughs.
* H. G. Wells' "The First Men on the Moon" has some moon-aliens with ridiculously large heads, whose sole purpose is to remember things. They are brought in so they can learn English vocabulary from the humans.
* Haven episode "Fur" featured hunting trophy animals coming to life and attacking people, including a bear.
* Gun Kata: the art of dodging bullets by estimating statistically where they would land and not having any body parts there.
* Having only met them twice before, Kevin assumes they're a couple and spends a * Hero Chat. The heroes chastise the city for the fact that only a couple people asked permission before making merch of them, and Chloe (in her civilian identity) starts to handle merchandising rights. The heroes of course donate all their royalties to charity, but akumatized victims get royalties from their merch too. The heroes joke that technically Hawkmoth has shared creator rights to the villains, and they might be able to trick him into revealing his identity by offering him royalties.
* Heat Guy J, on orders from Clair, a small robot boy does this to a security guard before making a copy of the guard's face to wear, in order to gain access to the building where J is housed.

* "Groundhog Day" Loop when O'Neill referred to the villain who had engineered it as "The King of Groundhog Day".
* Goblin Slayer or raped by goblins and they're looking to do the same thing to her. Fortunately, this is about the time when Goblin Slayer shows up to clean house.

* Hamlet, the title character gives a speech in which he calls death "The undiscovered country from whose bourn / No traveler returns" in spite of the fact that he's spoken with the ghost of his father.
* Hearthstone: Heroes of Warcraft is represented by Valeera Sanguinar, who dual wields fel-powered daggers and can infinitely summon them each turn (for 2 mana) for her heroic power. She can also equip various dagger-like weapons if they're in her deck and many of her spells are based on how one uses a knife, as many of them depict someone putting a knife in someone else (Eviscerate and Shiv are such examples). There's also Fan of Knives, where she throws a lot of knives at any enemy minion on the board. Valeera herself, while not appearing much in the main game, has always been fighting using knives during her comic debut.
* Greater Morphling break the standard card template to fit all their text.
* Green Lantern (2011), Hal Jordan gives his ring to Hector Hammond in exchange for Carol Ferris' life. After playing around with the ring for a bit, this happens:
* Glyde's Birdbots are cute and goofy and aren't dangerous in small groups, but in large numbers, they manage to capture Megaman.

* Gravity Falls has the friendship triangle between Mabel, Candy and Grenda.
* Harvey and Scottie, although that doesn't last, which Jessica has predicted from the get-go.
* Heroic Sacrifice, on the other hand, is much more dramatic - though even that has barely two minutes of buildup.
* God, the characters make several not-so-flattering comments on Woody's abilities as a playwright.
* Hangman's House of Horrors in Texas, this trope is frequently invoked by actors playing clown or doll characters. One common tune is slowly repeating the first six notes of "Ring Around the Rosey" in a minor key.

* Half-Life 2: re-purposed gas mains, blades on car engines and cars on pulleys.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle has the creepy tow-truck driver's pustulatent boils shown close up.
* Highlander — Sword and sorcery series. Five films since 1986, one TV series and animated series spin-off.
* Han Solo Adventure novels, owns a sector of space (the Corporate Sector), in which the Empire permits it to harvest and exploit resources with impunity. Strip-mine entire worlds? Enslave whole populations? Execute workers for conspiring to form labor unions? Check, Check, and Check. As long as they pay their tribute to the Emperor (which is much lower than what their taxes would be if they operated in the Empire proper), anything goes.
* HERZ has been training since she was four... and she is mother of a five-years-old child.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, the alien Proeliites engineer a world-wide crisis to profit from the war machine, prompting the Doctor to engineer personified nations to combat the crisis.
* he took a bullet for Chief Powhatan. Willow bark is traditionally an ingredient used in aspirin and can be used for pain relief on its own too.
* Goosebumps of R.L. Stine's original manuscripts are Portal Books that, when opened, release the monsters into the real world. He's dedicated his life to keeping the books locked and hidden in a house full of booby traps to presumably slow them down should they escape (which they do when the film's protagonist comes knocking).
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle which is a famous example of this.
* Hermitcraft Server songs, and perhaps most famously Pixlriffs and ZloyXP, creators of the Hermitcraft Recap, a Youtube series that functions as a sort of weekly news of the server.
* Hard Luck, Fregley has a hard time putting on a shirt and ends up with his head sticking out of an arm hole.
* Happy Endings, Dave and Alex try to play out this trope even though they were never actually married (Alex left Dave at the altar). They have many friends in common and value those friendships too much to make those friends choose sides. They do fight sometimes, especially at first, but eventually play this straight, even after they get back together and break up again.
* Having noticed the popularity of the Vanquished Tentacle of C'thun, Blizzard introduced an improved version, the Vanquished Clutches of Yogg-saron. The concept's the same, but now it can summon 3 types of tentacles! One of them shoots acid.
* Hayate the Combat Butler tendencies, the bike is returned to Nishizawa intact.
* Guess Who gender- and race-flipped this, being about an African-American woman who brings her white fiance to meet her parents.
* Groucho Marx, Master Detective agrees to act in a radio serial. But when a beautiful starlet is found dead before production even begins, Groucho is determined to find out who killed her.

* Helicoprion, not a shark. Not that this makes it any less badass, though.
* Highway to Heaven — though again, having an Angel of the Lord riding shotgun probably makes the little things easier to deal with.
* "Hey, Tommy, I think somebody hit me in the back of the head! Did you see him?"
* Gungrave, there was Harry and Sherry. Sherry was only twelve and Harry was a full-grown man when they first met. Maria and Big Daddy is a more obvious example.
* Grisha Yeager forlornly describes himself as a bad father, a bad husband and a bad man before asking why he is still alive.
* Green Lantern is vulnerable to be underestimated. Many villains are under the impression a Green Lantern can easily be Curb-Stomped as long as you bring something yellow to the fight. Rarely does it occur to them Green Lantern might be smart enough to go around his weakness to yellow.
* Happens to Lilymon in Digimon Adventure when she's hit by Myotismon's Nightmare Claw/Dead Scream attack. Wizardmon heals her.
* He views his cup bearer at Harrenhal as more competent than all his advisers and she's one of the few people to get away with snarking at him, because Tywin enjoys that she's sharp and gutsy enough to match him. Of course ironies of ironies, what he doesn't know is that she's actually Arya Stark, the daughter of his archenemy. Whether he would have been more impressed with her if he'd known she was the runaway Stark daughter and managed to survive right under his nose, or just angered at her brazenness was never explored.
* green liquid. Real nuclear waste usually just looks like dirt (possibly with metal (plutonium or uranium) rods mixed in.)
* Hey Arnold! and says "fart" when he meant to say "Let's make a brand new start".
* Greg Egan allows a person to play with their circadian rhythm, meaning that they can fall asleep at-will or set aside the effects of fatigue. The protagonist in particular used a mod that dulls emotions to keep the mind clear for rational/tactical thinking (standard issue for police officers) to not be bothered by his wife's death, which is implied to be a semi-common form of abusing mods. More conventionally, the book also mentions that most southern Australians have black skin to combat the destruction of the ozone layer.
* Heechee Saga, who are responsible for leaving behind advanced technology when fleeing from the Assassins, which was bound to be found by a younger race and, without proper instructions on the use, would likely end up misusing it to disastrous ends. Furthermore, the continuous use of said technology is what attracted the attention of the Assassins toward the Heechee in the first place, which means that, by leaving such technology for anyone to use, the Heechee have doomed an unfortunate young race (namely, humanity) to extinction.
* "Grumpy Young Men" has Will trying to invoke this while on a double date with Carlton. Unfortunately, he picks up on the signal much quicker than his date does, to his chagrin.
* Goku down pat — but he's the closest thing the series has to a genuine hero, and it's his relationship with Sanzo/Konzen that is the impetus of...pretty much everything that happens in the plot.
* Going Postal semaphore system). He turns it around by averting the trope, by reintroducing regular deliveries and introducing stamps to speed things up (as well as argue the physical delivery of letters has more emotional weight).
* GURPS which makes said things man was not meant to know much easier to find.
* God Hand infamously got a 3.0 score from IGN; the lack of ability to block attacks adding in unnecessary difficulty in his eyes was part of the reason.
* Green that live to fight, and if they don’t get enough battles to satisfy them, they will turn on each other in frustration and take attrition damage. This is alleviated by setting up raiding camps, which allows the troops to reave and pillage the countryside, simultaneously increasing your income and damaging the local enemy’s morale.
* Heart of the Woods. Morgan immediately understands that Evelyn is threatening Tara and reluctantly complies.
* "Grade School Confidential" revolved around several students discovering Ms. Krabappel and Principal Skinner kissing in a janitor's closet. The rumors about what happened

* Glimmer becomes queen of Brightmoon. She still feels that she's always right, but now she has the authority to steamroll any objections. When Adora and Bow both object to her course of action because they know it won't work and only make things worse, Glimmer pulls rank on them and goes through with it anyway.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law has Sebben & Sebben, the legal firm where Harvey works, which is later revealed to have sister branches that cover numerous products:
* Griffin still manages to make Barry Bluejeans's return one of the most memorable moments in the campaign.
* Gratuitous Mariachi Band: A Mariachi band pops ups into the scene gratuitously or in an unlikely scene.
* Harry Turtledove, although this is partially justified by the mission parameters. Considering the whole series is supposed to be military science fiction, it's surprising that Turtledove would get this so spectacularly wrong.
* has an answer to pretty much any threat, but it is by far the worst color at drawing cards, preventing it from reliably having access to those answers.
* Harry Potter and the Green Flame Torch / Pillar of Storge / Fortress of Shadows
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn. It is ironic because he is the oldest person in your party for a good half of the game and yet he seems to be the most naive.
* he's just been possessed by Ansem in the first game. Half the time he's not even listening to Sora, and the other half he just sounds rather bored.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, Hellboy shoots a rampaging plant elemental to save a packed street full of people, all while carrying a baby he saved from a car that was about to be crushed. 10 seconds after he's done saving the people, the baby's mother starts yelling at him, "What did you do to my baby!" and a policeman pulls a gun on him. The people almost riot right then and there, until Liz steps in front of Hellboy and bursts into flames, which gets everyone to shut up.
* Greeny Phatom is a TV show. It never aired on TV; it appeared on the Internet post-2009. It's unlikely that TV stations would ever air a show that's made in MS Paint anyway.
* Headless Horseman, which unleashes him on the modern-day south, including one incredibly badass kill that has him leaping over a car and taking the driver's head off on the way.
* Harry and the Shipgirls. Oh, did I mention that she has a massive amount of guns that she has purchased, and is hands down one of the best snipers in the entire setting?
* Gottlieb had "percussion bumpers" and "pop bumpers," and Genco used "power bumpers".
* Good For: Facing cavalry (horses, being sensible creatures, will refuse to charge into a mass of gleaming metal spikes; as nearly all cavalry of the time carried melee weapons, that meant a square was invulnerable to cavalry so long as it held formation).
* Haruka Tenou/Sailor Uranus. In the first anime we get her origin story, but it still leaves out how she can possibly drive a car at 16 (in Japan the minimum age is 18). In the manga we know she's a famed racer and that she was
* Gun Game, a popular FPS gamemode mod where players progress through a list of in-game weapons, gaining a new weapon with every set amount of kills until they're at a final level (usually a melee weapon of some variety), has been a staple modded gamemode of most FPS games ever since the original Counter Strike. Eventually it was added as an official mode to CS:GO(), Valorant, and Halo Reach, Halo 4, and Halo 2 Anniversary's Multiplayer via the Master Chief Collection(renamed "Arms Race" for the former, and "Escalation" for the latter 4 games).
* Gogos has a Mega Metropolis series with a hexagonal shaped 'home' for each gogo.
* HalloweeNight A school janitor devises an evil scarecrow to exact revenge on those who have tormented him, but then loses control of his fiendish creation
* God of War has three main flavours of door: large, very very large, and "yeah, definitely a boss here" large. (Or, from a god's point of view, miniature, small, and medium).

* Higurashi: When They Cry, it would still be one of the least screwed up things in the series.
* Harry, who's being trained by Fandral, is developing into one in his own right in the sequel, having height, strength, speed, balance, lethally fast reflexes, and a talent for improvising.
* Good Luck Charlie as Beau made the girl up to trick Teddy into going on a date with him.
* Good Burger, Kenan Thompson and Kel Mitchell talked about how they're becoming big stars and that they'd like to known as "The artists formerly known as Kenan and Kel". Kel then shows their symbol: a white card with a black circle on it. Kenan takes a look and says "It's upside down." They then try to correct it.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team: Gender flipped: Mariel is one head taller than Taro, despite being the girl.
* Hellboy (2019), a heavier brow, larger teeth, and ragged horn stumps.
* Happens when the family goes to "Itchy and Scratchy Land" in an early episode. After a rather deadly roller-coaster that ended in the family jumping out of the way of a buzz saw onto mattresses, Bart and Lisa title-drop the trope.
* Guild Wars. A charr's last name is chosen to show solidarity with their warband. Kalla Scorchrazor, Rytlock Brimstone, and Pyre Fierceshot are fairly typical charr names. Norn surnames seem split between Scandinavian-style patronymics like Olaf Olafson or Olrun Olafdottir and self-given titles like Gunnar Poundfist or Knut Whitebear.
* Harmony so the mortals would have tools to fight against evil without having to rely on her should she ever abuse her power.
* Haunted Castle dies, Harry asks Nick why more people don't choose to be ghosts. Nick, who's used to recently-bereaved students asking him stuff like this, explains that the only people who actually become ghosts are those too afraid of death to cross over, and that being a ghost is a pretty sorry state, all in all.
* Halo: Combat Evolved, Master Chief appears to be the only person to have survived the events of the game (plus Cortana, but she's an AI living inside his helmet). Him sitting alone on the ship makes an unsettling contrast to the first level where he's surrounded by one army and fighting another army. Later expanded universe materials would reveal other people survived too.
* Hal the Toucan's boomerang mechanic, which is very difficult to predict and control. They even acknowledged its unpopularity in one
* Goliath Awaits. Generations have grown up, and some people don't want to return to the outer world when a crew finds them 43 years later.
* Highlander is focused on a group of Immortals who can only die via decapitation, and their mutual quest across history to become the last surviving Immortal and claim "The Prize."
* High School Musical. There aren't any major cheerleader characters until #3, and even then, the only reference we get to a date with a cheerleader (in this case, Jason wanting to date Martha, the hip-hop loving nerd) is in a deleted scene.
* Half-Life (whatever his "profession" is) and calm compared to all the other characters.
* Grew a Spine: Finally catering to yourself after a long period of doing things for others.
* Gray sigils unlock secret endings, and require mastery of puzzle mechanics to complete them.
* Happens when Kaji is holding Misato up to access the emergency hatch in the elevator they're in during a power outage. The power comes back on and the two collapse to the ground in a rather suggestive position, causing Ritsuko, who sees them as soon as the door opens to call them a pair of perverts.
* HappinessCharge Pretty Cure! and she ultimately realizes where she screwed up.
* Heel–Face Turn a few minutes later, but only because Sam wakes up and, in his confusion, abuses him as he always does. Gollum didn't take it well at all.
* Highlander, neither Duncan nor Richie can bring themselves to take her head. That doesn't stop Methos:
* Glee towns mentioned are real places, but none of them are very close to each other. Lima, where the show is set, is two hours away from both Akron (where arch-rivals Vocal Adrenaline are based) and Westerville (home of the Dalton Academy Warblers), making it a stretch that characters can casually drive between the locations like they're the next town over. And once the original kids graduate high school, most of them move out of state for college and other endeavors, and yet they all have the free time to fly back to Lima to make guest appearances whenever the plot calls for it. Sue finally lampshades this in the fifth season:

* Haunting Starring Polterguy: The Sardini family will just pass through poltergeist Polterguy. However the ecto monsters and the monsters in the underworld can touch (and hurt) him.
* Harry, upon a CIA agent discovering his knowledge of future events, gets this in his fourth life and in a later life is given the full treatment by a
* Golan the Insatiable threw an old man into the sun when he only meant for the man to tackle a nearby pigeon.
* Greek Ninja feels that she is (and is right on a few circumstances).
* Herc and Carver get a case of this in Season 2. Carver gets promoted to Sergeant at the end of Season 1. When he gets recruited to the Sobotka detail at Herc's request, Cedric Daniels' only condition for Carver is that he won't be treated as a sergeant in the detail, as he feels that Carver had only earned his promotion as a result of spying on the detail for Burrell during the Barksdale investigation, and instead reports to Kima Greggs. Like with the Barksdale investigation, Herc and Carver again are relied upon to do the leg work for the detail, and while they are instrumental in planting trackers on many of the smuggling ring's vehicles, they're the ones stuck with menial jobs like installing an air conditioner in the home of a judge approving the detail's wiretaps. The final straw for Herc and Carver is when they're left out in the rain waiting for Nick Sobotka to return home, despite his having already turned himself in. Daniels attempts to convince them to stay, pointing out that surveillance is part of the job, but Herc and Carver aren't having it. Seeing that Major Colvin is looking for a DEU Sergeant posting in the Western District, Carver jumps at it, feeling that Colvin will at the very least recognize his rank. Herc goes with him, not wanting to do the menial work with Daniels either.
* Great Big Library of Everything" he idly picked up during their visit and accidentally pocketed. Nyarko even complains about how unfair it was for him to assume that she's always responsible for these things.
* God has the prophet Hosea give his children symbolic names. The first son, Jezreel, is named for a valley where Israel's evil kings have shed blood, and where God promises they will be punished in turn; his daughter is named Lo-ruhamah, "not pitied," because God is through being merciful; and the youngest son is Lo-ammi, "not my people," to foretell that God will eventually send Israel into exile among the nations.
* Haegemonia: Legions of Iron weapon systems) ambushing the Martian ambassador's shuttle, sparking the war between Earth and its colonies.
* He appears in towering form over the apocalyptic Los Angeles landscape at the climax of
* Harry Potter's main strategy was to make the villains talk, as a way to buy some time and think of a way to get the hell out. In the final book, his plan is to keep talking himself, to both try and get the big bad to step down after realising he is well and truly screwed either way, and to tell everyone why the big bad is screwed, and if he is killed they can just mass kill him.
* Happily N'Ever After has a group of trolls begin walking toward a light shining at the castle. A pink one walks into the camera and walks back out.
* Green Lantern: Krona uses one to see the beginning of the universe (unknowingly altering it in the process).
* Hazbin Hotel: After Charlie announces her goal to open a hotel to rehabilitate sinners, she's met with a long silence. She awkwardly explains that she chose a hotel because hotels are for people to temporarily stay at while on their way to their destination. She's met with even more silence and at least one demon laughing at her vision.

* Have them sound nothing like the guy. When a male comedian impersonates a female (or vice versa), this can be chalked up to
* Harry is a Dragon, and That's Okay by simply announcing at the end-of-year feast that, "The position of Defence Against the Dark Arts teacher is now vacant," to widespread cheering.
* Goat Story - Old Prague Legends: Goat walks in on Jemmy and Katy in bed together and is heartbroken, because she's in love with Jemmy.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban's transformation into a werewolf. Also, the stories of his transformations as a child coupled with the bloodstains and destruction in the Shrieking Shack are pretty disturbing, especially since he has to go through a similar process every single month.
* Grey's Anatomy, there's a possibly suicidal man who disappears from the ER. George and Alex are out in the parking lot looking for him (and fighting about Izzie) when he breaks through a high floor window with a fire extinguisher and jumps, crashing right on top of a parked car. Surprisingly he survives, giving George an opportunity to impress Hunt by taking command of the situation.
* Gods and Warriors slave Userref mentions in exasperation that during the period between the first and second books, Pirra once tried to escape from the House of the Goddess by clinging to the webbing under a chariot.
* Gorillaz fame is supposed to be the "pretty boy singer" of the group, who Murdoc describes as "a blue-haired, black-eyed god"' with "an arse like a satsuma".
* Helltaker. While her doing the latter didn't completely ruin the apple pie, it still left it burned, something she is embarrassed about.
* had such a close relationship with the Air Force that the real Cheyenne Mountain has a door labeled Stargate Command. (It's a broom closet.)
* Goofy once did the "dad does the housework" version in "Father's Day Off". Being Goofy, naturally, the house is left a shambles.
* Good Luck! Ninomiya-kun facade and hits Shungo if she feels he's acting perverted.
* Harpoon which focused on conventional weapons. For a nuclear variant the game designers recommended dousing the game in lighter fluid and setting it on fire.
* Grand Theft Auto, you can often rely on a boat being near water to help you make an easy escape:
* Henry Danger: The episode "Opposite Universe" has Henry and Charlotte travel to an alternate universe where the personalities of people they know are now flipped. The heroic Captain Man and Schwoz are now evil and sporting beards.
* Grand Designs, clients who try to save on money by being their own project managers inevitably end up causing delays and cost overruns due to their inexperience. Kevin McCloud always advocates for the hiring of proper professionals because the upfront costs are almost always cheaper than having to fix mistakes.
* Harry puts a spider in the pancake batter while making his relatives' breakfast.
* Harry Potter; his companion explains that "Outside Existence" simply means that "Nothing exists out there... you'll find there's a great number of things that don't exist."
* Harry trips and knocks over a canned food display while he and Hermione are shopping.
* Haven't You Heard? I'm Sakamoto: Essentially the entire premise for the show. Sakamoto frequently performs unlikely, or sometimes, outright impoossible acts.
* Goblins : The Goblin clan have strict traditions on keeping all magical weapons in a poorly locked chest in the middle of their war camp, rather than using them in battle. Later subverted; Complains steals the gear from the chest so he can do battle with Minmax (and gets banished from the clan as a result), and the goblins start training as adventurers when they realise they're tired of being fodder for low level adventurers.
* Grim Trigger is separated into arcs, and each arc has its own cover and music sequence that plays in the beginning of the book.
* her. At the end of the episode, Connie's father also accidentally sees Luanne and when she screams about it, Joseph (who's passing by on his bike) says "Aw man!"
* GRRL Power. Halo and Maxima may be strong enough to blow up buildings just by pointing at them, but no civilian is going to be intimidated by having a finger (or a shiny orb) pointed at them. A gun, on the other hand, gives a pretty clear message.

* High School Musical, it's said that Sharpay and Ryan always got the lead roles in all the productions before Troy and Gabriella, and one character remarks that if Sharpay could find a way to play both Romeo and Juliet, Ryan would be out of a job, so it's safe to assume at least one of these would be a romantic pairing.
* HBO produced about it. All of the effects in the logo probably could've been achieved with CGI, but instead, Liberty Studios—the company behind the logo—went all out with making it using practical effects. The entire city landscape was an actual model that was 10 feet wide and 30 feet long, with so much stunning attention to detail that it took over three months to fully construct, and during the making, smoke was pumped through in order to give it the appearance of a three-dimensional environment. The music that scores the opener was produced with a 65-piece orchestra. The HBO logo was made with brass, and the laser effects were achieved with light and camera tricks. Other than some superimposition effects for the family at the beginning as well as the ending title cards, practically no computer effects were used to create the opening. No wonder it's such a favorite of many!

* He doesn't understand how HM moves work and tries Strength, Flash, Fly, and Surf to get around a tree that you use Cut on, but, predictably, none of them do the job. He finally refers to Red's twitter and, ignoring the obvious clue to use Cut, lights the tree on fire. This causes a massive wildfire that levels the forest and a nearby town.
* He also has a point about the gods' inaction against evil mortals. It's explicitly pointed out that the reason Universe 7 has such a low mortal level is because the gods don't help mortals as much as they should. The

Which he promptly loses. It gets returned to the mansion and Maria counts it, stating that it's almost exactly what he was given for living expenses. Nagi passes by the table and asks what all the chump change is. The characters, especially Maria and Nagi, have continually shown disdain for the value of money. Apparently, being perceived as not even making the top 3 or 4 teams that year is better than getting second. It's easier to overlook a missing year than it is to overlook a lone yellow banner in a sea of black first-place finishes, especially as it is standard practice to place all banners next to each other in the rafters (meaning there wouldn't be a physical gap where 1973 would have been).
* Heroic Age, the relationship between Age and Dianeila is made extremely obvious over the course of the series, though they never even kiss.
* Hercules: in earlier works, the Hydra had been drawn with 3, 6 and 9 heads; with good CGI Disney managed 21 heads, but attempted to hide it with cel-shading. It's still pretty obvious. In contrast, the flames on Hades' head are CGI, but this is a style choice and no effort is made to hide it.
* Guyver features this after the Zoanoids go public and claim that the Guyver and his allies are alien invaders. The recent anime just barely scratches the surface of this plot and is the only non-manga iteration to get up to even that point.

Outside of this cheating, the Soviet Union is likely to eventually become this if you are playing as one of the western Allies and the war against the Axis concludes (and vice versa), and if the Axis defeat the Allies before the USA joins then they will probably end up being your dessert in the same way.
* Green Ranger, the rest of the Mighty Morphin Power Rangers immediately ask the new kid that dresses in green from head to toe if he has noticed anything unusual lately. He hasn't, though. False alarm, guys! The dressing in green part isn't so much the genre blindness (Less they were going to beat up everyone who wears something green) — it's the fact that said Green-wearing kid is also a known martial artist with something of a rivalry going with the Red Ranger.

Miki's reaction to Meru's response seems to indicate that she agrees with her colleague's sentiments more than she had realized. Averted in the Japanese version, where Meru's reaction is actually the opposite — she relishes having psychic powers and even says that she uses them to find out if the boys who loved her would ever marry her.

* Guild Wars is more commonly known as "Mad King Thorn". As the second-born, he was not expected to inherit but did so anyway by murdering first his brother and then his father. Drought and high taxes left the people impoverished and on the verge of starvation while Thorn hosted sumptuous feasts for his courtiers. He fed people to animals for his own amusement, chopped off both hands of anyone suspected of theft, executed anyone who spoke against him, and on at least one occasion had an entire village's population skinned alive. Of his eight wives, he killed at least four personally. Thorn's reign came to an abrupt end when an enraged mob stormed the castle and murdered him. After being very "creative" with his body, it was dismembered and sealed in several boxes which were hidden through Kryta for fear he might one day return.

* Good Omens has a number of fans in spite of Ligur being graphically melted into nonexistence by Crowley's holy water bucket trap. Some fics try to justify bringing Ligur back to life with the reasoning that Adam restoring the Earth back to the way it was before the almost-Apocalypse might have meant undoing the deaths of everyone who died during it, but others don't bother with an explanation.
* Half-Life 2 does something similar: After disabling some huge thumpers and getting bugbait to control antlions, one of the Combine Bunkers has an alarm going off. Inside, there's a red button that you can push to turn it off.

* Hamenday Island is about to crash headlong into Highdawn and kill hundreds of * Gunnerkrigg Court (whereas the regular comic only updates three times a week). Tom Siddell explained that the break was supposed to represent the protagonists' summer holiday, so the time skip between Chapters 14 and 15 wouldn't feel so abrupt.

* Hercule/Mr. Satan is a subversion. He's the official world martial arts champion (a title he got because Goku and his friends were too busy saving the world to participate in the tournament) and incredibly arrogant about it. He thinks Dudes flying around and shooting energy blasts are all trickery, and when he learns that it's real, he still acts like it isn't publicly. Among all the main fighting characters in the series, he's easily the weakest. At the same time, he is legitimately the greatest martial artist in the world among normal human beings, so it's not like that bravado comes from nowhere either.
* Henry gets off lightly compared to Will Scarlet/The Knave of Hearts. Despite been a main cast member his role in episodes is mainly that of a recurring guest with his biggest reason for been around (been from the spin off) is ignored except for two brief mentions.

* Hälge, Edwin and his wife are completely apathetic to each other. One strip has Edwin start to call her over, only to realise that he's forgotten what her name is.
* Harry Potter is referred to by Dumbledore and Voldemort as "old magic", apparently predating the spells-and-potions type magic that is currently widespread. When Voldemort uses more old magic to resurrect himself, he incorporates Harry's blood so that he'll gain Lily's protection for himself. In so doing, he inadvertently gives Harry an extra layer of protection against himself.
* GunBuster: Noriko explains in one of the "Science Lesson" shorts that hyper-advanced human ships utilize cyborg dolphins as part of their navigation systems, alongside psychic humans.
* Gunslinger Girl cyborgs are stated to be slowly dying. The finale, which takes place twenty years after the previous chapters, shows that all the first gen cyborgs have died. A few of them had died off-screen between the second-to-last chapter and the final chapter. Claes and Rico died peacefully out of battle, while Petruskha died of leukemia.
* Global Frequency, a group of terrorists are wearing suicide vests that will go off if they die, killing their hostages. They're also planning to poison themselves if their demands are not met. * Hamtaro: Jingle never seems to be able to remember Hamtaro's name. This leads to problems.
* Heinlein's way of handling the hazing from the upperclassmen — and that's just for starters. This character was largely based on Delos Wait, a fellow classman of Heinlein's at the Naval Academy.

Even later again, the time is 8PM and there has been no sign of sunlight. It's also implied the hospital has its own dimension.
* Haruhi Suzumiya. Also, Koizumi teaches him how to play Go during one of their usual club meetings where they do absolutely nothing. After a few games, Kyon is easily beating Koizumi. It is also implied that Koizumi just really sucks at board games so Kyon beating him might not be a sign of vast intellect.
* Henry Danger: In "Tears of the Jolly beetle", as Kid Danger is introduced at a town awards ceremony, Piper, Henry's nine-year-old sister, screams that she loves Kid Danger and then tells Charlotte that she thinks Kid Danger is hot.
* Goof Troop and his baby had a diaper). In the ending scene, he is significantly nicer than Pete and about as nice as Goofy.
* Guild Wars. Is quite happy to destroy as many villages as needed, and work with demons, to get rid of the sunspears.
* Harry Melling, who plays Dudley Dursley in the films, has lost a huge amount of weight over the years (to the point of having to wear a fat suit for the final movie) and is barely recognizable from his younger self. He's publicly stated he is happy about this so he can avoid
* Half-Life 2. In the 'Episode' expansions it's heavily implied that even if the Combine occupation forces are driven from the Earth, the retribution from the Combine proper will be even worse than their current regime.
* Halo 5: Guardians. Activating several secret triggers on the desert map "The Rig" causes one to rise in the distance, consume a mining platform, and slowly sink back into the earth.
* Haise Sasaki by the man himself, prefers to use the quinque gifted to him by Arima, "Yukimura", instead of his powerful but mentally debilitating kagune. His fighting style is noted to be similar to Arima's, with one observer stating it to be "as smooth as water."

* Hardy's usually dry, expository writing becomes particularly gruesome in this scene - describing the bloodstain on the white ceiling as like a giant ace of hearts, and eventually just writing: "drip, drip, drip"...
* Habitats operating under a "New" economy don't use money, instead most items are produced by public nanofabricators that are supplied with raw materials by robot miners, and everyone who contributes a few hours of "community service" each week is allotted enough resources to feed six people each day. Anything that can't be nanofabbed or requires more resources than a person is allotted (services, implants, spaceships, earth relics...) are either bartered for or obtained as favors from one's social network, which assign "rep" scores to people based on their actions. The Titanian Commonwealth has a variant where the government quantifies people's economic output as "kroners" that are invested in microcorps which do anything that nanofabs can't and give their employees rep.
* Heaven Above: When the sky is associated with things pertaining to the divine.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army on the packaging, while Hellboy himself was referred to only as "Red."
* Goof Troop opening, a photo album shows Max's family visiting Egypt and posing in this way.

Thomas took Blackwell's name and decided he would try to aspire to be the man Blackwall believed he could be. After joining the Inquistor's party, he leaves for Orlais to take responsibility for his past. The Inquisitor can later intervene and order Orlais to release Blackwall into their custody to be judge. If the Inquisitor pardons him or releases him to the Grey Wardens, he redoubles his decision to help and, in turn, inspire others.

The extent of his abuse is never fully discussed, but Willow admits to having planted hidden cameras all over the house out of fear of what he might do to their children. Winter fled to join the military and bottles up her emotions. Weiss left the country to escape him, but is dragged home and spends Volume 4 trying to escape when he places her under house arrest. Willow clarifies that his actions are the result of being left alone with an abusive father and a helpless, alcoholic mother.

* Hidamari Sketch is lauded by many as a very realistic example of how a highly gifted child with severe (most likely untreated) ADHD might behave. She's the smartest and most artistically talented of the main characters, yet she's also prone to getting herself hurt by scampering around irresponsibly, frivolous wastes of money, quirky leaps of logic, insensitivity, and simply coming off to others as being too hyper to tolerate sometimes.
* Held Gaze: Two people stare deeply into each other's eyes before or after kissing.
* Gruul signets are the most megalomaniacal, as they're frequently redesigned to look more and more like a vanity portrait of the guild leader. The Dimir subvert this, as they are a very secretive guild that officially does not exist So, while they have a signet, it's only seen either by precious few or by those they are about to eliminate.
* Hey, You! and if she does use a name, it's a simple nickname such as Long-nose-kun (Usopp), Swordsman-san (Zoro) or Cook-san (Sanji). * grudging admiration Rin became somewhat nicer to others. So Shirou is basically the only reason why Rin isn't a complete bitch to others, or even a full-blown villain. It makes the dynamic very interesting because Rin was at some point considered to be a villainous character or at least a bigger rival in the novel until her background was changed in order to create her "childhood trauma" as she herself put it.
* Highlander has made a pact with the Frasers - only he is allowed to fight Connor Macleod. All the Frasers avoid him, leaving the unsuspecting Connor befuddled.

* Golden Snitch: What, you think you have an advantage just because you won the first nine rounds out of ten? (Shows up outside of game shows as well.)
* Halo casual. Here's an overly simplified explanation; traveling through slipspace causes chronological and causal paradoxes, forcing reality to automatically "reconcile" itself after each jump. If too much slipspace travel happens at one time, the strain on reality will automatically cause FTL traffic to slow down or even halt until the universe can reset itself.
* Greek Chorus is Mr. Lindquist, Mrs. Nordstrom, Mrs. Segstrom, Mr. Erlanson, and Mrs. Anderssen, but none of them are ever called by name.
* Glee when Sue's special needs sister dies, there's a very touching funeral where New Directions sing 'Pure Imagination' and play a video of clips showing Sue and her sister. Sue is very grateful ... right up until the next series when she hates them all again.

* Guitar Hero respectively (the CD containing the songs was actually released in 2003).
* Grace Under Pressure with an increasingly amorous hallucination of Samantha Carter. Rodney refuses her advances, though, because he knows she's only doing it to keep him from enacting a plan he himself knows is potentially a bad idea.
* Guardian... and can only be obtained by killing many Guardians and harvesting their parts.
* , he's kicked out of the Tendō home. Even though he now lives out of a tent in a vacant lot, Ranma no longer has to deal with his father or the Tendōs so he's actually much happier; besides, he's used to roughing it after spending most of his life on the road.
* Halloween, which may or may not canonize the film series or even each other, creating multiple, ambiguous, self-contained continuities.
* hide to a pop artist for a cover, which led to a boycott of him and the official estate by some fans.
* Godzilla vs. Megalon was intended in part to launch a new Giant Hero, the robotic Jet Jaguar, for Toho Studios. In some ways this is the opposite; it was originally planned as a Jet Jaguar movie and Godzilla was added to attract an audience.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army. Even after getting torn apart, they rebuild themselves.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban: Hagrid does this to an injured Malfoy.
* Hassle in the Castle," Scooby uses a foot bath (and a blanket) to pretend he's

* Greg Fishel of WRAL-TV does this on an almost nightly occurrence. As long as the news story right before him isn't drop-dead serious, he'll make a pun out of it. Without any knowledge of what the story was before he went on to the set.
* Gus Fring. On the surface, he is a respectable businessman and a major supporter of local law enforcement agencies. In reality, he has no qualms with murder and other heinous acts just to keep his meth empire going.
* GURPS, as while the presence of their commander on he front allows to see the situation in more detail and inspires the troops to do better, the commander is more vulnerable to misfortunes of war (random injuries sustained during battle).
* Good Omens has Crowley rely on this, having shut down mobile phone service in London for several minutes during busy hour, which he expects to produce a lot of angry executives who take it out on subordinates and so on. He views it as a much more efficient method of spreading pain and misery than the usual demon nobles' gradual corruption of righteous or powerful individuals, something that none of them are able to understand or appreciate.
* HBO, suggesting that superheroes could be a positive force for social change if they really existed. To elaborate:
* have a company (let alone an actual scientific degree) if not for Otto gaining both under Peter's name.
* God, the Devil and Bob, Bob asks God why he allows evil to exist. God takes a deep breath and explains to Bob, just as a train passes between them and the audience. Bob is impressed and accepting of God's answer, but we never get to hear it.

* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone: Despite being very badly behind in points (due to Harry), Gryffindor wins the House championship for the year (due to Harry).
* Gunnerkrigg Court! Though it doubles as foreshadowing, as later "enjoy, but don't forget what it's about" became a good plot point.
* Grim Tales 11: Crimson Hollow has portraits of the Black Family to collect. When you look at them on the collectibles screen, they change from a normal portrait to a gruesome illustration of the subjects' fate and back again.
* High School A.U. between Aang/Katara and Zuko/Katara. (Katara ends up being paired off with the Blue Spirit, who in the main show was Zuko's alternate identity.)
* Harvest Moon: Island of Happiness appeared to be abandoned at first. However,

* he takes a rocket to the back and still manages to recover; an alien ambushes and attacks him brutally, yet he recovers quickly afterwards; not long after he goes through the (excruciating) miracle of giving birth to an alien baby. He even manages to crack wise while Tex is beating his ass, suggesting he can shrug off her punches better than most non-freelancers.
* Hanbun no Tsuki ga Noboru Sora was the only thing licensed by the short-lived distributor Crimson Star Media.
* Half-Life 1... until the tram takes a different route than before, taking Sora to a previously unseen location, and after it stops a guard appears out of nowhere and tells her (using audio of the G-Man's) that she's "not supposed to be here". After the credits, it opens back up to Sora in a some sort of abandoned building in the middle of nowhere devoid of anyone aside from a scant few monsters. Then she finds and boards a mysterious alien ship and leaves. The end.
* Gosei Sentai Dairanger: Ryuu Ranger dual-wields the Double Dragon Swords.
* Good People Have Good Sex: When the (adult) good guys have sex, it's affectionate and when bad guys do it, it's not. Heroes in a relationship will also have a lot of sex.
* Gunnerkrigg Court are greeted with cheers from the students? Bob Sutton the gardener, who chuckled at Renard's jab about Ysengrin's "terrifying skills of gardening". As we discover later, he's the one who regularly handles some consequences of this — successfully. Also, he always shows a good sense of humor and good sense in general.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys suggests that the original Olympics started as a way to peacefully settle disputes.
* Gravity Falls) is utterly nonsensical horror. Notable examples include:
* Her wish was to "continue living" but every girl who makes a contract has their soul rip out and turned in to a soul gem
* GunBuster, this trope is used as a joke to scare the younger space cadets by telling them that ghosts appear on ships during hyperspace travel.
* Henry Huggins who thinks that girls are rather silly, and he reacts with disgust if he sees a girl act particularly girly. However, his usual hang-out group (consisting of himself, Robert, Scooter, Beezus, and Mary-Jane) include two girls, and he regularly visits Beezus' house to play checkers with her, even though he is rather reluctant to be hang out with her alone in public.
* God Hand and costs 600,000 gold, which is about as much as an average playthrough of the game will net the player, making obtaining it a matter of either ignoring all the powerups to save money, or spending a rather long time in the casino.
* Gunsmith Cats seasoning: when the crook she's chasing manages a sudden, unexpected turn, Rally tries to do the same, but only ends up sending her car skidding sideways... through a back alley playground, with a young girl caught right in their path. So her partner opens the passenger side door, yanks the girl inside and passes her across the front seat to Rally, who deposits her out the other end, right where she was standing before.
* Greek mortals abuse their children just as often in myth. For example, Echetus gouged out his daughter's eyes, chained her in a cellar, and made her grind iron chunks to dust. Acrisius locked his daughter Danae in solitary confinement to prevent her from having children, and then threw her in a box and dumped her in the sea when she got pregnant from Zeus. Mythical women suffer various physical punishments and sometimes death for getting pregnant out of wedlock, even when they were raped. Beating kids barely even gets mentioned in Classical Greece, except when someone like comedian
* Halloween III: Season of the Witch features a recurring advertising jingle for Silver Shamrock novelties sung to the tune of 'London Bridge is Falling Down'. This becomes increasingly sinister as we learn of Silver Shamrock's actual purpose.

* Gunnerkrigg Court the Court does, but Paz reminds her that the Court (and indirectly, the robots who are the original roboticist's descendants, who spend every waking moment trying to better themselves or be helpful) is also capable of recognizing its flaws and changing them:
* Harry Truman (Nov. 1, 1950), White House policeman Leslie Coffelt was shot three times but still managed to shoot would-be assassin Griselio Torresola through the head, killing him. Coffelt died at the hospital shortly thereafter.
* Greece and Turkey and not above borrowing a camera and making prints for one another if Japan gets (cute and) angry.
* Hikari Sentai Maskman is occasionally seen fawning over things like dolls because of not being able to have them growing up.
* Guilded Age: The effectiveness of the Gastonian Peacemakers was not lost on Harky, especially after the miserable defeat in B'ial Vezk, so in response he put forth a call to arms for a team of champions that would serve the World's Rebellion, one member from each race. It worked. Extremely well.
* Hey Arnold! setup. The movies and the final two episodes put him back in the spotlight and he retains some of his old quirks.
* Hancock and Shirahoshi are Divine Level beauties. Nami and Robin, especially Nami, and a few others are World Class beauty. Most other female characters, except the
* Gretchen was something of a Sergeant Rock to the other camp followers in
* Hell Girl starts with this, followed by creepy trance music. It did a damn good job of turning mundane, peaceful scenes (like a cityscape at sunset) into spooky panoramas.
* Hank the Cowdog often teases and takes advantage of Hank and the other characters. Other cats aren't shown to be much better.
* Greg the Bunny: In the first episode, Tardy the Turtle is eating crayons and says "Crayons taste like purple".

* Henry VIII, and the birth of modern liberal representative democracy. Small trope, big impact.
* Gore Verbinski, feeling that "there's no reason other than financial" in making the film.
* Halo 3 includes several crashed human aircraft. Standing near one reveals some interesting radio chatter regarding a space-battle above, including the calmly-stated line "I've lost avionics, I'm gonna try and hit their carrier. Goodbye guys."
* Goosebumps, the evil ghost possessing the car is destroyed when she realizes that she accidentally did a good deed by unknowingly saving the boy she was trying to kill. She had used mind control to force the boy to get into the car, but before she can finally kill him she sees that his house had caught fire and he would have been dead already without her actions.
* Hermione is this to a lesser extent as she was raised in a Muggle home, but comes to Hogwarts much better informed than Harry is. There are things she still has to have explained to her, such as
* Glee. What makes them more awkward is his tendency to try and impress girls with them.
* Haruhi Suzumiya: Kyon and Mikuru have to share a futon when having Yuki send them back to their own time (by time-freezing the room they're in for three years), leading to much freaking out on both their parts. From their perspective though, they only had to share for a few seconds before Yuki opened the door again and they were back in the present. The anime adaptation changes this to each of them having their own futon... but still freaking out for some reason.
* Henry Stickmin Series, while other times, the weirdest option gives you the best outcome by virtue of this trope.

* Harder science versus softer science. As a general rule, the closer to mathematics a field is, the more likely its practitioners are going to hold unfavorable opinions of sciences that are less math-based, such as economics (as evidenced by the trope image).
* Hamilton, Eliza Schuyler decides, at the age of five years old, to become her father's son, so that her family has someone to continue their legacy. In doing this, she was inspired by the trope namer, which her grandmother used to sing to her as a young girl.
* Half-Life 2 take the memories and knowledge of their victims by consuming their brains. Or at least we assume that's what they're doing. They ram their tongue in through the brainstem. Of course, they are psychic so it could just be some form of alien data transfer rather than NOMNOMNOMKNOWLEDGE.
* Hercule/Mr. Satan (with Bee the dog) holds the distinction of being the * Gulliver's Travels flying city. At least until he gets to the land of the talking horses, which is basically perfect.
* Grillers have a fish tail poking out of their back. If it's shot enough, three more appear. When enough damage is dealt to these weak points, the machine is destroyed.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, when Uncle Vernon makes a very over-the-top malicious face when he says "Justice!" in the beginning.
* Heralds of Valdemar (one good enough to even impress Alberich) is MindHealer Crathach. When he demonstrates his skills for Alberich, he immediately finds himself part of Sendar's battle guard.
* Heavy Weapon has a "Meteor Tractor Beam", it makes meteors rain on you shortly after it is fired.
* Harry suffers this at the end of Book 4 when Voldemort ties him a gravestone and tortures him repeatedly while the Death Eaters watch.
* Grand Theft Auto V, while Franklin is a ghetto hood who, like CJ, wants to move up the crime ladder and work for bigger scores. Trevor however is entirely conformtable being a gangster and wouldn't dream of being anything else.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series Kilowog then admits he was going to join him anyway. He just wanted to see Hal "fight the squirrel."
* Hermione has to dig through her beaded bag in search of Harry's Postal Service Vanishing Cabinet, while Fred and George watch in bemusement.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, they incited several...very interesting...reactions from the other nations present.
* Happy Few (alternatively titled "Four Lovers"). The two couples decide to engage in partner-swapping, in order to explore the boundaries of their relationships.
* Halloween III: Season of the Witch: Teddy is murdered by being stabbed through the ear with a power drill.
* Graf Eisen's Zerstörungsform is the insane lovechild of the aforementioned Goldion Hammer and
* Harley Davidson and the Marlboro Man films made so far, and it takes place in 1996 which is really overestimating the rate of churning out sequels. Good job at predicting it would turn into a long-running franchise, though!
* G-Unit become popular. Most of the members of the latter have managed to become major stars in their own right though.
* Hatoful Boyfriend. His utter despair and grief after all of this death expressed itself in the development of severe narcolepsy, as well as frequent hallucinations of a ghost that would tell him how everything was his fault, and that he deserved nothing but guilt and self-hatred for the rest of his life.
* Guts, meanwhile, may qualify as a World Class/Imperfect Beauty himself, given how much attention he gets from the female members of his new group. In the past, even some guys (Griffith especially) wanted him, and after the Eclipse, he attracts his share of demons as well, and not just because of the Brand on his neck.
* Here There Be Tygers": A group of astronauts exploring space discover that the planet they are on is alive, and able to read their thoughts and grant their desires.

* Henrik Ibsen The play can also be said to deconstruct Gregers´ counterpart Relling, a cynical psychologist who plays on people´s illusions. Which of the two who is morally right, is under heavy debate.
* Grim Up North: Barbarians frequently hail from cold, dark, "northern" territories.
* Hey, Aoshi bears the distinction of being the only swordsman from Kenshin's 'generation'—already active during the revolution and left at loose ends by it—who's younger than Kenshin himself.

* Happy Heroes: The title card of Season 8 episode 11 shows Big M. as an Arabian princess riding a flying carpet.
* Grimgor Ironhide is the most powerful Orc Warboss of the current timeline;
* he's featured in an alternate timeline in Season 4 and is resurrected in Season 9... only to be Killed Off for Real
* High School Musical: The Musical: The Series probably dropped in "damn" and "hell" to push it into the TV-PG rating, though otherwise, it's no worse content-wise than its G-rated film predecessors. Young children may find it too boring and the meta-humor may be lost on the current generation of Disney Channel kids, so this is somewhat understandable.
* Helluva Boss) is Martha and Ralphie, although Martha does sleep around.
* gunfights, with even the B-Daman designs becoming more weaponlike and more damage being done.

* GoldenEye are said to be involved in the arms trade, among various other criminal enterprises.
* Hell Bent For Election, Joe pulls the switch just in time, and Roosevelt speeds towards Washington, while Thomas derails and crashes.
* Growing Around has some examples. Justified, as it is set in a universe where kids rule adults:
* Goodfellas, it concerns itself more with the "working-class" mob, rather than the bosses, with several of the protagonists aspiring to get "made" as full members.
* He and his father, "Cowboy" Bob Orton, tried to do burn the Undertaker after defeating him in a handicap Casket Match in 2005. Their success was short-lived.
* Grand Theft Auto V and will find any excuse to justify his behavior.
* Hey Arnold!: The lead character is blond and he's easily the nicest, most understanding person in the entire series and will go out of his way to help those who need it, and rarely has a bad thought about anyone.
* Hell(p) is never seen without a pair of aviator sunglasses. Justified, considering he lives in a desert city that is constantly bathed in scorching sunlight. His shades also get bonus cool points because one of the lenses appears to be partially broken.
* Hal was apparently leaving during his jobless period. A Mouser came by and took the sack he was carrying. Hal notices this, and said "He took my sack!". Kamek heard him and said "What are you, gay?!"
* Gravitation anime, Yuki checks in on Shuichi who's sleeping on his couch and pulls the blanket farther up to cover him more completely. Shuichi doesn't notice, but Yuki stares at him for a while after that, as if it's just sunk in that he's now sharing lodgings with another man he cares more for than he should.
* Guyliner: All Ancient Egyptians wore lipstick and black eyeliner if they could afford it. Possible reasons include protection from eye parasites, blocking glare from sunlight, and a protective magical charm.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) with a forcefield that he claimed

* Happy Endings. Lampshaded in "The Ex Factor" when Penny meets Pete's friends, and is shocked when they are able to avoid such things. Notable is "Fowl Play Date" when Penny and Brad accidentally kill Alex's parrot and have to cover it up.
* Gothic series have a limited amount of items and, in the first game, currency (the trade system is based on direct exchange, so the latter running out doesn't prevent deals). Usually a few new items are created once per chapter.
* Hey, he's just a dog — he only knows words like "ball," "good,"... and
* Hellsister Trilogy's first story arc has six different generations from Superman's descendants join the main cast to fight Mordru and his Legion of Super-Villains.

* Grant Morrison asked one of the women to transform into Jean Grey, who had recently broken up with him.

* heard, as in the whole dorm (as well as your whole body, meaning covering your ears won't do much) is probably vibrating at this point.
* Gun Machine. During an investigation, a police detective finds a New York apartment, where guns are mounted to every surface. In patterns of gear-like circles, waves, paint-speckled row of guns, wall to wall, floors and ceiling. It was crafted over a period of years, and serves some function, but only the owner could possibly tell what.
* Goat Simulator and detonate by a simple headbutt. The worst they do is set your goat on fire. Kind of justified since the goat you play is pretty much immortal.
* Grandia III! So why did they say they can't talk to Drak, and if they can, why do they need a Communicator? Not to mention the fact that Drak apparently knows who you are and why you're here, when your whole reason for coming was to bring him a message that he apparently already knows by being a Guardian.
* He does it again in a later episode when he discovers a picture of Beck in a swimsuit
* Hey Arnold! The Movie to steer them to safety until the driver comes to.
* Hanging Judge, especially in countries with corrupt legal systems (or, depending on the time, pre-modern justice systems), but while they can and sometimes do exist in locales with legal systems that have a better array of checks and balances, they are far less likely to get away with it. How much they can get away with depends on the circumstances. Unreasonably harsh or arbitrary sentences, sentences motivated by prejudice, or outright illegal sentences? Guaranteed appeal, and the judge can face consequences all the way up to being removed from the bench in the case of truly egregious misconduct (though never as a first resort). The judge watching you enter the courtroom in filthy ripped jeans and a vulgar novelty shirt from Spencer Gifts for the same thing that you've gotten into trouble for many times before, then taking a look at your rap sheet, noticing that you have been getting into trouble with the law almost nonstop from the time you turned eighteen, have multiple serious offenses on your record, and have clearly not learned a single thing from any of those experiences, and deciding to hurl the book at you? Nope, you're probably not going to get anywhere with appealing that.
* Hardball: In "Sorry Salwa", Tiff loses a handball battle to Salwa, so she uploads an embarrassing video of Ms Crapper dancing - and frames Salwa. Salwa is banned from handball at school.

Jeremy for the death of the regimental bear by shackling his ankles, giving him a five-minute head start, and then tracking him down, planning to shoot him the way Jeremy shot the bear.
* Goof Troop. This is unique in that Max has no "iconic" depiction to revert to and, unlike other characters, has aged appreciably over time. However, Max's appearance and role is arguably based on Goofy Jr., a character used in Goofy's original cartoon shorts; this is somewhat confirmed by one episode in which he introduces himself as "Goofy Jr., ma'am."
* Hades/Pluto, Hades pretty much got the job of ruling the afterlife because his older brothers screwed him over. Zeus claimed the Earth and the Heavens, Poseidon the Sea, meaning the Underworld was all that was left for Hades. He didn't like the job, but he wasn't overly cruel about it (at least, not in comparison to some of the other gods). And since his realm included the entire afterlife, including the Gardens of Elysium, he was essentially the ruler of both Heaven and Hell.

The last person in the line stops short at the edge and takes off his blindfold, not only realizing the near-miss he made, but also seeing another group of whistling office workers in blindfolds. Around this point, a voiceover lets the viewers know that Apple will announce the Office on January 23rd, adding, "You can look into it, or you can go on with business as usual." Apple spent weeks hyping up the ad, only for it to miss the mark, with people misinterpreting the commercial's metaphor as an unflattering portrayal of potential customers.
* Hero System licenses) can and will set you back quite a considerable chunk of points. Star Hero and The Ultimate Skill also expand on the basic list if the GM chooses to use the optional categories in game.
* Having survived many a storm on the open seas, it takes a lot to scare him. But the Great Lakes are prone to sudden gales, particularly in the autumn — the worst being called the November Witch, the sort of gale so vicious they're known to rip steel hulls to shreds and take entire ships to the bottom of the lake. * Het Fornuis Moet Weg ("The Stove Has To Go"). It's about a girl who wants to become a carpenter and a boy who wants to become a stay-at-home dad. They argue about it with grownups who are moving an old stove out of the house. Eventually, one of the grownups gets an idea: the stove can be seen as a symbol for the old times when a lack of modern household appliances meant that work around the house took all day and gender roles stayed reinforced. Because of modern luxuries, women now actually have time to study and choose their own careers, so there shouldn't be a need anymore for gender roles to stay as they were. The story is considered a children's classic in The Netherlands.

* Hawksong by Amelia Atwater-Rhodes, the shapeshifting Avians and Serpiente have been entangled in a war that spanned over generations and has simply devolved into endless bloodshed. Turns out, it was all engineered this way by the Falcons because the Serpiente originally contained and wielded the full power of a particular deity, Anhamirak. When the person acting as balancer for Anhamirak's powers fled, the Serpiente powers turned wild and destructive. The Falcons then split the Serpiente leader's power in half and gave the second half to a little girl, whom they turned into a hawk and thus created the Avians. Then both the Serpiente and Avian queens were assassinated with both sides blaming the other. Et voila, endless war that keeps both sides and their powers very separate.
* Harvest Moon the Kappa is the one bachelor who will never live with the player character if married, but as with every other marriage candidate, the PC becomes pregnant very shortly after the wedding. Every other husband will notice the PC seems unwell and take her to the doctor; the Kappa, however, just appears in the PC's house one day and says "You, pregnant," and then disappears again, prompting a "..." reaction from her. * Hellsister Trilogy: At the end of "The Apokolips Agenda", nearly all heroes have been defeated by Darkseid, including Superman. There's only Supergirl left to save them. * Hannibal focuses a lot on psychology, emotions and the relationships between the characters, mainly the complicated one between Will Graham and Hannibal Lecter. They early on develop a deep sense of kinship and mutual understanding, and by the end of the series, its revealed that they have romantic feelings for each other. A smaller example is also Margot and Alana. Both queer women, they fall for each and have married by the end of the series, along with Alana having their child.

* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality believes in this trope... in a way. He notes that for the longest part of history humans have been absolutely horrible to everyone except for their personal allies. He does think that humans have potential to be good, but they need to be conditioned to do so. Professor Quirrell, on the other hand, believes the trope wholeheartedly, to the point where he questions whether people really care for each other and don't just pretend to do so.
* Heel–Face Turn villain Hobgoblin is based on this trope. Hobgoblin's still a greedy jerk, but he's realized that he can make a major profit out of being a Luke Cage-style hero for hire. Thus he gets paid while avoiding the risk of jail time if things go bust.

* Hc Svnt Dracones "range increments", shooting beyond which adds a cumulative cover bonus to attack difficulty, is determined by the shooter's stats. This not only led to Nimue wearing said helmet making few appearances in ''The Storm and the Fury", but also to Mignola writing a scene in which the helmet gets ditched so Fegredo no longer had to illustrate it.

* Hell's Kitchen (2005-present, 2004-present if UK version is counted)
* Hanabi and Sanae also begin fooling around eventually; Sanae has feelings for Hanabi and is willing to take anything she can get from her and is also well aware that Hanabi is afraid that refusing will end their friendship.
* Heartcore has big red scars on her cheeks and forearms, inflicted upon her by her father Royce.

* Good Omens (2019): Much in the same way that angels (with the exception of Aziraphale) don't dance, demons (with the exception of Crowley) lack an imagination, many of them preferring the old "meticulously corrupting individuals" tricks and are much slower on the uptake when it comes to modern human inventions like cars and computers.
* Heroic BSoD) after the horrible toll that the Eclipse took on both him and Casca. After spending two years on a bloodthirsty vendetta against Griffith, the bastard responsible for it all, he becomes obsessed with finding a cure for Casca's post-Eclipse insanity, even after he's warned that she may not want to be cured.
* Half-Life 2 is protesting being put into a "host body" as the only way to survive teleportation. Speculation is that he is one of the slug-like Advisors that attacks Gordon and Alyx throughout the Episode sequels. Although he probably dies when Gordon damages the teleporter.
* Gohan is to kid Trunks in both timelines, future Gohan teaching and inspiring future Trunks and who Trunks still remembers long after his death. Teen Gohan does the same to Trunks in the main timeline as seen in the Buu saga, Bulma evens muses in
* Grand Theft Auto Advance, one of the things the drivers of other cars may say if you crash into them is "I hope you have insurance!"
* Gone in 60 Seconds (1974) that was the very reason why the film was made in the first place.
* .hack features characters from many previous entries in the series (Kite, Pi, Haseo, Midori, Albreio and so on) due to the fact that this is a 3rd version of the The World. The main character and villains however are entirely new.
* Gnostic writings claimed that Eve mated with the serpent in the Garden of Eden, and that Cain was the resulting offspring. Mainstream Christian theologians have consistently viewed this belief as heretical, but that hasn't stopped the "serpent seed" doctrine from cropping up again from time to time.
* Hellsister Trilogy attempts to kill his daughter Raven after torturing her.
* Guilty Party, though the most classically Great Detective-ish of them is their patriarch, The Commodore/Dorian Dickens.
* Gunslinger Girl but still. It's fairly popular for its depiction of child soldiers and its characters.
* Greek Mythology win. He was trapped and humiliated by Hephaestus when he and Aphrodite (Hephaestus' consort) were caught in an illicit love affair, fled in fear from the monster Typhon, lost a boxing match to Apollo, was wounded by the hero Diomedes with the aid of Athena forcing him to flee the battle, was defeated by Hercules twice (stripped of his armor one of the times) was stuffed in a bronze jar by the Aloadae (Hermes had to get him out) and defeated in battle with Athena every time they came to blows. Zeus himself - his father - once told him he was worthless. It must be noted that Ares was generally regarded as the god of carnage and bloodlust associated with war, whereas Athena was the goddess of strategy and military prowess. The characteristics of the two were combined in the god Mars, who was held in much higher regard by the Romans than the Greeks ever regarded Ares. Also, note that this form of Ares is the form we have recorded from the city-states—like Thebes and Athens (which had Athena as their patron goddess)—which held Ares in relatively low esteem. Other, more warlike Greek cities had a higher opinion of Ares; Sparta's warlike society had a much higher opinion of Ares, but they didn't write as much, so their myths are not as well attested.
* Hardware, when the characters are talking about a customer who they suspect may be building his own makeshift weapon:
* Grand Finale, Optimus grabs Megatron and jumps into a device that turns all of Cybertron into a technorganic paradise, reviving all the sparks Megatron took. Both die, although Optimus's spark appears once to pass the torch to Cheetor before joining the Matrix.
* Grenda is also a popular traget because of her deep and gruff voice (
* Hetalia: Axis Powers that they should drink and celebrate when England was finally offed.

* Gotham. For instance, there's this gem in the finale while he's kidnapping another character's daughter:
* Grey's Anatomy. It's so obvious that Addison later asks Meredith if she's still sleeping with Derek.
* Hc Svnt Dracones, midweight powered armor meant for bomb squads. It projects a superheated field that vaporizes bomb triggers and can curl up into an armored ball, resulting in a few embarrassing web videos where pangolin suits are seen being thrown like cannonballs.
* Groove Coaster chart. The instrumentation of the track gives off the feeling that it had the potential to be a very difficult track.
* Happy Ending Override: Thought your happy ending would last? Just wait until the sequel!
* Good Omens fandom, as they're an immortal angel and demon who have known each other for six thousand years.
* Greg (holding up his painted pet rock). He appears to distinguish "rock facts" from actual facts, sometimes.
* Henry V. The uneducated Pistol takes it for a Cornish name, so Henry, the erstwhile Prince of Wales, calls himself a Welshman instead.
* Highschool of the Dead: This actually makes things worse for the hero since Rei's now focused on Takashi, but way too often she ends up comparing him to her dead boyfriend Hisashi or berating him in a way that makes Takashi think she is. She eventually gets over it and admits that she'd dated Hisashi more because it hurt too much to be with him, but now she's all his.
* has one where he arrives at the Festivel of Lights polished, buffed and covered in flags, which impresses Molly very much.
* Guacamelee!: Chickens appear as a recurring visual theme, and as the butt of jokes as well.
* Headless Horseman: Candy, who decides that she has had had enough of Wormwood's murdering ways and helps the teens escape on the proviso that they take her with them. It is also revealed that she is the only person in town who is not a descendant of Calvin Montgomery.
* Hidamari Sketch to do something goofy while in the buff whenever the residents of Hidamari Apartments go to a bathhouse.
* Grimlock also does it when he gets smart in the episode "Grimlock's New Brain".
* Great tits (stop giggling!), birds that normally feed on seeds and small insects, have been documented supplementing their diet by attacking hibernating bats. Specifically, they peck the helpless bats' heads to get at the brains.
* Hans Baumann, which in a children's rhyming style contains the phrase "For today we rule Germany/Tomorrow, the world!"
* Go, Ye Heroes, Go and Die: A speech that tries to be motivational, but ends up being the opposite.
* GUN×SWORD. Van gives one of the early hints of his heart of gold by covering Wendy with his coat after she faints (all we see is her waking up to discover the coat). Later in the series, Ray demonstrates that he still cares about his brother by covering him with a blanket while he naps.
* Hamish And Dougal attempts to flirt with Mrs. Naughtie. Her response is "Och, you and your silver-tongued bullshit."
* Hayate the Combat Butler to pay her back. For her, it seems to be mostly just an excuse to keep him around.
* Hatedom: The opposite of a fandom in which a group of people share a common hatred for a show, genre, or character.
* Higurashi: When They Cry gang almost always uses their iconic weapons:
* Harvest Moon) Seeing as how a good portion of the point of the game is to tend to animals, it took a while for the franchise to avert this trope.
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost, the Hatbox Ghost has a gigantic nostalgia filter on about any changes made to the Haunted Mansion ride since 1969. If we were listening to him, the souvenir records of the ride would still be vinyles, you know.
* Growing Pains) gets in a car accident due to him drinking and driving and winds up in the hospital. When Carol visits him, Sandy looks like he's okay and we're to believed that he'll be out in no time. Carol then comes home and Mike tells her that the hospital just called and said that Sandy had just died from internal bleeding. The last shot shows Carol in tears as Mike and their parents try to comfort her.

* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets's part. Some people use "ancestor" in a sense that includes "descendant", but it's best not to for clarity's sake, lest they fall into this trope.
* Halo: the Art of War constant quip-throwing as they rack up a bodycount is a sign of them having issues, in contrast with the quiet professionalism of the other Spartans.
* Groo the Wanderer: Minstrel sings all of his dialogue in rhyme (which writer Mark Evanier admits is a real pain), In one issue Groo becomes annoyed with Minstrel after acquiring magic powers and wishes that he'd stop rhyming. Minstrel knows the wish has worked when he tries to sing a tribute to a man dressed in orange and can't think of a rhyme for it.
* Heroes of Mana, the game sends you back to the beginning but with your equipment, profiles and glossary carried over which makes the game easier the more times you play through it.
* Guards! Guards! against him. In one of Carrot's letters home, he describes how a mugger kicked him in the Vitals, but he was wearing his Protective.
* Grosse Pointe Blank goes from diegetic to nondiegetic and back again. Martin Blank's car radio is playing the sentimental beginning of "Live and Let Die" (the Paul McCartney song from the movie) as he pulls up to his childhood home. Stopping the car, he looks up and sees in shock that the house has been turned into a convenience store. The background music blasts Axl Rose's screaming metal version of "Live and Let Die". As Martin wanders into the store, the metal BGM is replaced with the store's Muzak version of the same song.
* Goosebumps, making him or her act evil. In the sequel ("The Haunted Mask II"), a mask resembling a ghoulish old man even goes as far as making its victim wearer become very old and weak.
* He also insisted on doing the take over and over again until he was sure it was right, despite having already suffered burns to his legs from prior takes.
* Hellsing's Alexander Anderson has his moments with his people. Surprisingly, so does Alucard in the manga in a twisted way, towards his interaction with Seras, Bernadotte and mercenaries. He's also known to lecture the vampire punks before he kills them, and when he starts calling Seras by her name he actually pats her on the head almost like a dad praising his little girl.
* Green Arrow crush on the Emerald Archer in her early days as his sidekick, but then along came G.A.'s son, Connor Hawke...
* Hero Oh Hero and speaks entirely in unintelligible TV static. He seems friendly though.
* Halo 4, and were fleeing from infected planets to inhabited ones which happened to be in Forerunner-controlled space.
* Harry Potter has Ron's Quidditch match (which Harry can't play in). He and Hermione get ready to suffer through Ron's utter humiliation when Hagrid shows up to ask them to follow him. They do, discovering that he has a (literal) giant half-brother. When they get back, they hear the crowd chanting a mocking song the Slytherins came up with, and realize the lyrics are now celebrating Ron, and sung by Gryffindors. It turns out Ron started blocking goals like a champ after they left, and while initially put off that they missed the whole thing, Hagrid's problem is enough to make him forgive them.
* Godzilla (2014) has recently ravaged. As they get into visual range of the city, we see Ford's point of view as he scans over the numerous burnt and ruined skyscrapers. Then he catches on to one "structure" that is moving, and sees several of his guys diving right past it...
* Greek Ninja has very long hair and is one of the most feminine characters.
* Halo 4 starts flirting with a female Spartan he just met. Then he learns she's his boss.

* Going further, the mere thought of someone using dragons in battle is enough to give wiser tacticians pause. Authority figures like Tywin Lannister brush off the severity of the threat they present (not without cause, as dragons are believed to be extinct at the show's outset and the last living specimens were known to be drastically undersized due to being raised in captivity) but when a fully grown beast takes the field in Season 7 against the Lannister/Tarly army, the results are
* Her go-to anecdote about this is that an adoring fan once recognized

* He's apparently outgrown those tendencies by the end of season 3. Ironically, in

* Godfrey of Bouillon, first King of the Kingdom of Jerusalem, was a leading crusader in the First Crusade, and unlike his relative Baldwin of Edessa and his contemporary, Bohemond of Taranto, he was a genuinely honest and pious man seeking to execute what he thought was God's will. Like William Marshal, he also underwent considerable
* Hange realized that some Titans must be intelligent after discovering
* He wrote a short story, "The R Strain", about the reaction of the Jewish community to the genetic engineering of ruminant pigs, which according to a straightforward interpretation of the rules could be kosher — but it's not necessarily that simple.

* Halloween III: Season of the Witch steal Stonehenge and take it to California.
* Hammer's Slammers former Slammer Angel Tijuca returns to his homeworld after his enlistment term is over and ends up working for one of the drug cartels fighting over it. He spends his time trying (and failing) to train their thugs and just getting stoned most of the time.
* has a commercial showing a woman at a table in a restaurant looking at the jewelry the man she is dining with gave her, then at him, with a sparkle in her eyes. The side message literally reads, "The 'Check Please' store" while the song playing at that moment has the lyrics, "It's nice to see you in my bed."
* GURPS. The ad text read in part: "tonight's the night the teddy bears summon Cthulhu!"
* Half-Life 2 some of the obstacles included energy fields to which you needed to shut off the power to get past. Often by literally pulling out a (inexplicably large) wall plug. These fields also allow combine troops (and trains) though while preventing Gordon and his rebel friends access.
* Great White, Charlie tries desperately to send a mayday, but the plane sinks, taking the radio with it, before he can determine if he got through.
* Good Burger has the main character, Ed. When Dexter says he looks familiar, Ed isn't sure why but speculates that he (as in Ed himself) might be someone famous, like a baseball player, or a pretty nurse.
* highly sarcastic, he says that "underneath that loud, grouchy exterior is another angry person. Underneath that is a kitten though."
* Hangin' with Mr. Cooper, Nicole attends a school where both her mother, Geneva and her older cousin, Mark Cooper, work. When Nicole has trouble with bullies, both Mark and Geneva step in. Mark's interference results in embarrassment but Geneva delivers the epic "Who's been messing with my baby?!" speech that sends the bully running for the hills.
* heavily, who, though often not allowed to actresses, frequented theaters. It's also important to remember that, at the time, theatre was considered on par with bear-baiting, gambling, and prostitution as forms of entertainment. It wasn't until the ascendancy of opera and the gradual stratification of theatre into "proper" and "improper" forms (classical drama=good, popular entertainments like vaudeville=bad) that theatrical productions were viewed as upright and morally correct.
* Harry Riddle regards Voldemort as just an upstart. Also, Harry is completely unfazed by Filch's threats:
* Helen Arryn is also taller than the average woman and she's considered quite beautiful regardless.

* Heroes where anyone with "special abilities" was within a few blocks of each other in New York City, and didn't even know it.
* Gundam Wing artbook has a picture of Relena waist-deep in a spring in the forest, with no clothes on.
* Grandma's Kisses", SpongeBob's grandmother gives Patrick a sweater as a present. When Patrick opens it, he thinks it's a hat and wears it on his head until SpongeBob's grandmother tells him it's a sweater.
* Happens often with Spanish speakers as well: the Spanish word "bizarro" and the English word "bizarre" are just one letter away and both come from the Italian word "bizarro" which means "choleric," but they have vastly different meanings. In English it means "extravagant, unusual" while in Spanish it means "brave." This doesn't stop Spanish speakers from using "bizarro" as its meaning in English while it makes no sense most of time.
* Gorf are two other early "talking" video games, which also have a machine monotone (in fact, they both feature the exact same one).
* HellBoy II: The Golden Army, and Liz, his girlfriend, decides to resurrect him anyway. Not sure if it qualifies, though. The angel did warn that she will the suffer the most for her decision.
* Have you heard the one about the cannibal who dumped his girlfriend?
* Hellboy. Also note Prince Nuada, a very handsome elf prince, is the main antagonist of the second movie.
* Gravity Falls exploits this by getting Mabel's friends to hold down Mabel in Dipper's body and give her a makeover, so that he can get the key to the house's attic.
* Halo: Combat Evolved. The player even has the option to switch between the original graphics and the updated assets at the push of a button.
* Gun Dogs is used in an unusual fashion, though. Your titular Gun Dog can find a local blacksmith at a town who offers to upgrade your gun with a chunk of metal from a meteorite he found, and some experimental designs he's been working on. The end result is a much sturdier and faster-acting firing mechanism for your gun, so in game your gun gets a reaction bonus.
* Hayate the Combat Butler maid by his employer. Naturally, the employer's pet white tiger, Tama, takes a liking to him, and, umm... yeah. The scene is censored, so we're not quite sure if it's actual rape or molestation, but Tama's certainly going through the motions there before Hayate knocks him away with an uppercut.
* "High-energy" shields which differ from the above by, aside from having more stopping power, also extending into the fifth dimension, thereby preventing inconvenient teleporters or fusion bombs delivered by the ubiquitous transform cannons from simply popping into existence right
* Gossip Girls Chuck Bass there has only ever been Blair in his heart. He remains devoted to making her happy even when she's with someone else, including giving food poisoning to the man who's trying to stop her wedding to Prince Louis.
* Grimmjow Jaegerjaquez, whose finely sculpted abs draw about as much attention as his
* Grand Theft Auto V, there is a celebrity named Poppy Mitchell. She is an actress popular in the romantic comedy genre, and she has a reputation as "America's Sweetheart." One mission in the game requires you aid a paparazzi in capturing video footage of Poppy engaging in anal sex with one of her co-stars. Another later mission requires you to get footage of her fleeing from the police while drunk driving. Needless to say, these two incidents pretty much destroy her squeaky-clean image.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire Harry sums this up by telling him that he's crazy.
* Here Come the Brides. The two fight until they crash into Lottie's saloon, when Joshua and Jason separate them.
* Hallex, seen in Samara's loyalty mission, causes euphoria and heightened senses. It's probably one of many drugs that originate on alien worlds.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality is a note from his future self reading only "DO NOT MESS WITH TIME"

* Hawkman have all had turns being antagonists at some point but they tend to be more gray than many of the aliens here.
* Hellsister Trilogy warns that fights have a tendency to find her and him, whether they like or not, and later he's of course proven right.
* Hilarious Outtakes even corrects with "His name is Lee, goddamn it!").
* He grew up in his family's aircraft factory (it was owned by his uncle and his father was its manager), so naturally, a lot of his works feature either flying, lovingly depicted sophisticated tech or both.
* Hikaru no Go to Hikaru with a tendency to look down on him), but he has a serious, introspective deep voice mode.
* Got the Whole World in My Hand and how he keeps the world under control. The trope is about villainous logos depicting a colossal hand holding the world as a marker of villainy.
* Grover Cleveland has just "so owned" Present!Andy use of changes in the future affecting a simultaneous point in the past.
* Gundam SEED because they are "unnatural." As both sides become more and more Naziesque, the sympathetic characters on both eventually defect, forming the Three Ships' Alliance.
* Grant Morrison graphic novel; when the Justice League discovers the existence of an alternate Earth run by villains, Batman flat out says it's not their problem but later changes his mind.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, the SOS brigade get part time jobs as grocery store mascots, where they hand out balloons (outside, in the middle of the summer) while wearing frog mascot suits. It's portrayed as miserable and overwhelmingly hot- Mikuru nearly passes out afterward.
* He also declares war on a cupcake shop that's run like a fancy restaurant, complete with a maitre'd taking reservations out front, saying that they're sucking all the joy out of cupcakes.
* Guild Wars 2. The disguises are almost always magical in nature to make up for the fact that there are five playable races of varying shape and size (and most enemy factions, like the Nightmare Court or the Sons of Svanir, consist of only one race); even so, a few instances also make it so that the player can't do anything too suspicious within a certain radius of enemy units, or you'll be exposed and the disguise will disappear.
* Graham Chapman said that during their writing partnership, Chapman would sit in total silence for ages, then come up with an idea out of the blue that would make a sketch funnier.
* Goosebumps, which focuses on live action adaptations of the horror stories from the book series.
* Golden Logres has the Fisher King, the King of Castle Carbonek who has been guarding the Holy Grail for centuries.
* Haunting Ground wants to rape and impregnate his "niece" Fiona Belli. He's too scared of her dog friend Hewie to fight her until he's too desperate and has to try. But if he should successfully assassinate Hewie in a pivotal moment, he'll go after Fiona and succeed...
* Hightown: Frankie Sr. Guards allow him time to use contraband cellphones to order hits, to meet with drug dealers and have sex with Renee all in private rooms that they are guarding.
* Grand Theft Auto V. But looking back on it, it was probably a good idea to leave it amongst the wreckage. Doesn't make the sting less apparent, though.
* HeartGold - you can talk to your Pokémon and one of the responses is "[Pokémon name] seems nervous. Want to say something?" If you say "Yes" it responds, "Whoa! Your Pokémon seemed surprised!"
* Gravity: The fact that it happens on Earth's orbit matters little — there is no way to contact anybody, there is very little air, there are very few options to escape, the roaming debris going at hundreds of miles per hour destroys everything that gets in the way, and sanity begins to slip under such stressful conditions. It's probably a quick death if you get hit with that debris, but it's in no way merciful.

* Gundam X closure before she can finally die. After her job is done, she willingly leaves with no harm done to Tifa (who even says Lucille's presence was kind and gentle), and manages to pass away in peace.
* GoodFellas. If it isn't obvious, he's definitely not a man you would ever want to cross paths with, or even attempt to piss off. It says a lot that he is considered the cruelest, most brutal character of the whole film. And for bonus, he's this even when he's casually speaking.
* Halo The newbie questions why they're listening to it, and gets admonished by the sarge.
* Halloween (1978): As related by Dr. Loomis, the villainous Michael Myers has "the blackest eyes... the devil's eyes." We never get a close-up to confirm this description, but the space behind the eye holes of Michael's mask is always completely obscured by shadow, giving him a blank white face and solid black eyes.
* Haven. Audrey and Duke are absolutely disgusted and beat a hasty retreat.
* High School Musical 2, one of the characters sings about how he doesn't dance. Which is odd, considering that he was doing perfect choreography in the last movie.
* Goro is fought in Goro's Lair and Shang Tsung in his Throne Room in the first
* GURPS adaptation and attributes their efforts to the BoBs, though battleroids (a type of cyborg that the Security Officer is all but directly stated to be) are still discussed.
* Hideo Kojima: At one point, the player is asked to turn up the volume to listen for a faint noise. When a loud explosion occurs shortly thereafter, Gillian complains his ears are ringing. "That's because you turned up the volume," Metal cheerfully replies.
* Gregor Clegane was a vicious bully even as a child, burning and nearly killing his younger brother Sandor for playing with a toy Gregor had already discarded. He got even worse as he grew up, becoming one of the aforementioned "thugs with a sword and a massive sense of entitlement". It really doesn't help that he's always angry due to chronic migraines and is always looking for someone to lash out against. He's also the
* He sipped at his wine whilst he listened to his companion whine at him.
* Happens again in another episode with another girl who is assumed to be a hooker—but who is actually a
* Grim Dawn has the Riftgates, which were torn open where the Aetherials entered the land (and still continue to do so in some) and which can be used to travel through the rift from one Riftgate to another. Your status as the Taken lets you tear open tiny, temporary Riftgates (only one at a time, however) that let you travel to any other you have claimed. It's mostly you using them, however, as others tend to fear them, need guidance to use them properly, and generally find the trip to be terribly unpleasant; one dying NPC outright refuses, knowing he won't make it through.
* Gravity Falls: When Alex Hirsh was asked on Twitter whether Ford had extra toes in addition to his extra fingers, he responded with "Eh, why not?"
* Happy Endings, a man whose birthday is on Christmas (just like Jane) is rallying others like him in a bar as to all they feel they are owed for.
* Gunnerkrigg Court explodes when Antimony knocks it over. Of course, by this point it was already established that realism was the last thing on Dr. Disaster's mind when he designed the simulation.
* Hightown (lesbian main characters, gay supporting characters, lesbian supporting characters, queer female romance)
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name have red or reddish eyes, although some are more evil than others and the least evil of the four we've seen so far isn't drawn with visible irises at all.
* Gravity Falls: Lost Legends story "Face It", after the story's plot is concluded, Pacifica sent a text message telling Dipper that the hug she gave him didn't mean anything. Unfortunately for her, she actually sent the text to Mabel, and unconvincingly claims the text is just a joke.
* Handsome Lech Barney is. It seems like that old stuff: quick flings are one thing, but getting into a steady relationship is something completely different.

* Greater Basilisk is a creature that can rapidly drain the magic from its targets vs a school of witches. Chances are it would have easily sucked the whole school dry and moved on to its next meal if it weren't for Luz and the Troublemakers, and had done so before.
* "Great Big Sky," a philosophical number that would have provided the janitor with a big act-ending solo, in much the same style as the already-written title song of the yet-unproduced
* Hellbound: A human of royal blood needs to be sacrificed by the villain to open the gates of Hell.
* Hardcore Mecha, the Round Hammer artillery mecha is able to fire smoke shells to confuse the enemies. It is also the only ability of that mech with infinite ammo.
* Hercules proper, the Irish demi-goddess Morrigan is played by the Canadian Tamara Gorski (and no, she doesn't have an ounce of Irish blood in her, she's of Ukrainian descent). Then again, no character in that show is played by an actor of the same nationality (e.g. the lead is a Greek with a Roman name played by an American).
* Helix as its companion end credits theme begins, then played straight again as it ends.
* Goroawase Number. This day is often celebrated in tandem with Miku Day.
* GURPS Technomancer, although there's enough circumstantial evidence that most people believe it.)
* Heart of Gold, justified in that it's brand new (with some controls still wrapped in cellophane). Arthur favorably compares it to the "dingy Vogon crate" he and Ford have just left.
* Hela takes over Asgard by killing everyone who would oppose her and claims the royal palace for herself
* Habitat: "Edit Page" of tropes written by someone who uses British English
* He also tends to connect with other long-lived characters, notably the Face of Boe. He also attempts to connect with, and clue Doctor Lazarus into, the woes of a long life in

* Heroic Age are willing to do this, being as prideful as they are, they would do anything to win at all costs.
* Halo 3 Missile Pod can be continuously fired without needing to reload.
* Heroman comes from a rich-looking family while Joey looks really poor, although this fact isn't brought up at all, although it was hinted at by Lina's dad.
* Godslave to Edith, start to harass her daily and pick fights with her by stealing her stuff and forcing her to battle them to get it back. At some point, they take her phone and change her Instagram password before she can get it back.
* Granblue Fantasy of Therese's SSR version. She's helping Fille commemorate a major Gem Domain holiday with a performance duel... and Fille got her an outfit that is several times too fancy and poofy to effectively fight in. She ends up having to rip the dress up a bit in order to move freely and win. Unfortunately, she then realizes backstage it just makes the outfit more revealing...
* Headless Horseman, the confederate private walks past a scarecrow only to stop and realize it is the headless body of the scout. Later, Headless poses as a scarecrow to terrify the teens. Doc questions why there is a scarecrow in the middle of a forest. When he turns around, the scarecrow pole is empty.
* Grant Morrison's JLA. One scientist is aware that "the world" is alive and they are killing it, but no-one will listen. Eventually doctors are forced to cut out the city with a laser, killing them all, but before it does the scientist and his wife load their son into a vessel and lauch it towards the liver, where "the iron-rich blood will give him powers and abilities undreamt of by our race". The last panel of the comic is the rocket lying on the surface of the liver, with two bacteria moving towards it.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) was full of these. Some examples:

* Half-Life 1: Quite a lot of the doors in the Black Mesa Complex do this vertically and horizontally.
* Guest-Star Party Member, he doesn't pull anything you haven't seen before. All of his attacks are the same ones he had when he was helping you, they just do significantly more damage.
* Happens to Dr McCoy, after a fashion. In "Where No Fan Has Gone Before", the main cast of
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating: Hani agonizes over this when it's made clear Aisling and Deirdre, her friends, don't like her girlfriend Ishu at all. Eventually she firmly chooses Ishu after learning just how bad of friends they've been to her.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle that drive any good Stoner Comedy.

* Grace Potter and the Nocturnals' "Ah, Mary," which sounds enough like a normal love song, albeit a conflicted one to a terrifyingly disturbed woman, except is that the name is only used in the chorus, where it's always "Ah, Mary"...
* Harvest Moon is surely near the top of the list of games inducing catharsis through sheer calming energy. Living on a beautiful farm waking up each day to tend crops and feed animals and then leisurely walk around the town talking to people you are befriending? Could anything be better to wipe away the stress of a busy day?
* her and forcing her to give the town back to the Mayor and make crime illegal again, or she'll never see her property again.
* harder SF - with lower oxygen requirements - decide they wouldn't mind the place to themselves...
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix escalates quickly into childish name-calling. Considering both characters are scene-stealing and bombastic on their own, the fact that they have a scene together at all should make the wizarding world explode. Just imagine if the scene had been in the movie.

* Gordon R. Dickson, the two alien races who come into play are both giants compared to humans. A member of the species who act as the antagonists of the story (enormous beings from a high-gravity planet) once showed up to the Olympic Games on Earth and casually proceeded to break several human track and field records in quick succession without even trying, just to show his contempt.
* Green Lantern. A physical disfiguration - a scar on her face by an enemy - is what triggers her deviation from the rest of her race. (Two other members, Ganthet and Sayid would later also take names, with far more heroic results.)
* Halo 5: Guardians. It's possible that the temple's been retrofitted with modern Sangheili technology hidden just out of sight to facilitate this, however.
* Green Lantern himself) in WWII when he didn't have access to his ring's powers.
* Hell Girl features one of these - though not too unexpected since every episode revolves around a different set of characters. This time, it just happens to be someone who gets away with murder since he's such a great ballplayer.
* Hasbro came back to Marvel to pull together the various transforming toys they'd licensed from Japan (mostly from Takara's Diaclone and Micro Change lines) into one coherent storyline. The * Haunted House) has the front door slam behind the player once they enter the house. There's no way to open it again, so the player has to find an alternative way out.
* Gravity Falls monster in the bunker, and it's escaped. They defeat the monster by trapping it in a cryogenic pod.
* Have them there for a bit, then realize the laws of physics still apply, and then splat.
* Harold & Kumar: The eponymous pair, Harold (straight man) and Kumar (wise guy).
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City, where you're attempting a biking mission. You have to drive through an office and then take the elevator up to one of the top floors. Keep in mind you have to take your motorcycle with you.
* He then adds how he's going to go out for an exam to get a better job.
* Henry James was a hit in America, but dismissed as exploitative and narrow in England.
* Gundam Wing was this to the mass production Virgos. However this was due to both of the mobile suits being test beds for their respective systems; the Vayeate needed an external reactor to power its beam cannon while the Mercurius had to dedicate all of its power to the "Planet Defensors", leaving it with very little offensive capability beyond a beam saber-shield. The Virgo was designed to be something in-between; housing less than a quarter of the Mercurius' Planet Defensors so that it can wield a less powerful version of the Vayeate's Beam Cannon. This was acceptable, as the Virgo was to be mass produced and unmanned, so what they lacked in quality they made up for in overwhelming quantity. In fact when the two prototype suits were later rebuilt as unmanned Mobile Dolls as well, they fared much less effectively against the Gundams, as they were only marginally more effective, but there was only two of them compared to the dozens of Virgos flying around.

* Gravity Falls, Robbie takes Wendy to a place called the Lookout Point, which is the popular teenage hangout spot in the titular town.
* He needs to spend more time with Peter since he is not present in any of the drawings
* Heavy Object who has to be carefully controlled by her older sisters to keep her from going on a rampage. She plans to use her capture to escape into a safe country and indulge her "hobby", starting with her latest target, Qwenthur.
* Harry ends up with Voldemort after being turned into a kitten by a Potions accident. When Voldemort has a nightmare Harry touches his lips to Voldemort's and then licks his tears.
* Harry becomes one in the sequel, primarily thanks to exposure to Natasha, Loki, and Strange. He's a mixture of the classic version, being capable of coming up with entirely plausible lies on reflex (which unnerves him when a surprised Hermione points it out, indicating he's not totally aware of it), with increasing elements of the Truth Twister variant thanks to exposure to Doctor Strange. The latter is best shown chapter 45, where he effortlessly runs verbal rings around
* Happens disturbingly often to Josef, despite the fact that his Awakened sword is capable of keeping him together despite wounds and blood loss, as well as dull his pain. While this turns him into a
* Gore Vidal and conservative attitudes to sexuality and basic hypocrisy.
* Halloween Special briefly sends Jimmy and Golly into a cartoon world made of Milt Appleday's childhood drawings.
* H. Beam Piper) uses Atomic Era dating, starting the year zero A.E. at 2 December 1942 by the C.E. calendar (the date of the first self-sustaining nuclear chain reaction). Characters occasionally speak of Nth Century Pre-Atomic dates to refer to dates before that time.
* Her last "match" deserves a disclaimer. It took place during the old school retro edition of Raw and was a falls count anywhere, no-DQ match against
* Harasscat in order to try to get Pixie and Dixie. However, he doesn't do the pose.
* Hatoful Boyfriend going to hell, he'll keep flirting with the threat or his companions. Said companions are less composed or used to danger and tend to be bewildered by his timing, like normal people.
* Hark! A Vagrant has a comic where a teacher assumes the name "Tits Palmer" is a joke, only for poor Tits to break down crying and need comfort from the other kids.
* Gravity Falls: Journal 3: Category 2 ghosts are pranksters who "Always have "Kick Me!" or "Possess Me!" signs they tape to your back".
* Green Lantern show up while they're trying to deal with a 'situation'.
* Happens to Fry in the episode "The Luck of the Fryrish" while he attempts to retrieve a horse racing ticket from some electrical wires while using a conducting rake.
* Gravedale High episode "The Grave Intruder", Coach Cadaver at one point briefly removes his own brain and is still able to function without it.
* Happens constantly when an actor plays a gay role. Harry Hamlin, who played gay in
* Gossip Girl Jack showed up and made full use of this trope to manipulate Chuck and destroy their relationship.
* Hell's Highway, where German tanks can only be destroyed by anti-tank weapons, allied tanks, or planting TNT on the rear of the tank.
* Green Lantern: Butcher, the embodiment of the Red Lantern Corps, uses an axe when he's inhabiting the body of a lifeform capable of wielding it properly. True to his name, he also has a belt full of cutlery tools, including a rather menacing cleaver.

* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire: Made in 2000, set in 4 August 1994 – 25 June 1995.
* Gyro Gearloose makes many more inventions than people know. People don't know because if he thinks they're dangerous he'll destroy the prototype and destroy the blueprints. He originally dealt with the blueprints by * Green Lantern. As a boy, Sodam Yat grew disgusted with his planet's murderous xenophobia, including when his fellows murdered an alien astronaut whose ship crashes on his planet. In response, he labored for years to repair the alien's ship and leave, but just as he was finished, a power ring arrived to induct him into the Green Lantern Corps. While that meant that now he didn't need the ship to leave the planet, the fact that he worked with that much determination to repair a ship he didn't know, nor how to pilot it or even where he could have gone after he launched, all for the sake of leaving a place and its evil is an incredible display of courage worthy of the Corps.
* green lieutenant, showed up late in the war, desperate for field experience. Everyone smirked at him and hoped he didn't get anyone killed. After one sortie across a river, he was promoted because he was slated to serve in the post-war officers corps and everyone shrugged it off.
* Greek Mythology. Also, a well-known myth tells of the Titan Prometheus, who stole fire from the gods to give to mankind.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) originally had 65 episodes, but was successful enough to merit another 65 for a total of 130.
* High Score Girl chronicles the budding romance between rich, attractive, athletic, incredibly talented and highly reserved Akira Oono, and lazy, bumbling, plain-looking, uncultured and gaming-addicted Haruo Yaguchi.
* Great Khans intentionally evoke the idea of being based after the Mongolian Empire — although it's slightly lessened because horses have gone extinct.
* Greyfield was the aggressor, and explicitly stated that Forsythe was called out of retirement to defend Lazuria.
* High School Musical: In the films, Chad and Taylor - two of the only main black characters - are paired up together
* Golden Kamuy: Wolverines in Karafuto climb to trees so they can jump down on preys and attack their spine.
* He wears only a poncho in an episode or two of the animated series.
* He's one of two out of a group of about a dozen that doesn't want to kill a prisoner.
* Hello Kitty, but then dismiss this possibility and say that they must have been visited by the spirit of music.
* Heroic Sacrifice, in a box in the woods, hinting that she is alive. Also, Will is seen coughing up a slug from the Upside-Down and his surroundings briefly flash into a resemblance of their Upside-Down counterparts, but it's left ambiguous whether or not he just imagined it. Both storylines are addressed in the next season.
* Hero House has several examples, which is unsurprising, as it features the entire Batfamily, and several of their rogues.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. China is considered the older brother of the rest of the Asian countries, such as Japan, South Korea, Macau, Vietnam, Hong Kong, and Taiwan, but except for Korea, they don't always acknowledge this.
* GWAR was at one time banned from the state of North Carolina, for certain... elements of their costuming.
* Hammer's Slammers is hinted to be this trope. Personally loyal to President-For–Life Van Vorn, the Guard were "political bullies" rather than actual soldiers.
* Grant Morrison's JLA, the Key rants (basically to no one, since only his nonsentient robots are around to hear him) for about a page about how brilliant he's made himself through the use of brain-altering chemicals, and how it's allowed him to finally beat the JLA. It ends with this aside:

* Hercules, himself, fell victim to this trope. He was fatally poisoned by the Hydra's blood when his wife, Deianira, mistakenly used the blood of the centaur, Nessus, whom Hercules slew with his poisoned arrows, as a love potion. To clarify (as much as one can, given the various interpretations of Greek myths), the centaur attempted to kidnap Deianira, and Hercules came to the rescue and slew the centaur with an arrow coated in hydra-blood poison. As he lay dying, Nessus told Deianira to take some of his [the centaur's] blood, and if she ever feared that she was losing Hercules to another woman, use the blood as a love potion to keep Hercules faithful forever. Eventually, Dieanira became concerned that Hercules was straying in his devotion (whether or not he was depends on which writer you choose to believe) and spread the blood on his famous lion-skin cloak. Although Hercules was too strong for the potion/poison to kill outright, the pain did drive him to suicide (effectively), so this story actually contains heavy irony on multiple levels.
* Greek Mythology a bit of obstacles in Odysseus's path that are only around for a few instances.
* High School Musical (even if the theatrically-released third film was positively received by critics).
* Good Eats. Alton goes to visit Coco Carl in a maximum security prison, to ask him about the ingredients in a store-bought protein bar (which included palm kernel oil, high fructose corn syrup, and large amounts of sodium), that was being marketed as a health food.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy: Poltergeist Polterguy constantly has to collect ectoplasm (bilious green slime) that drops from the ceiling to the floor when he successfully has scared a person out of the room or when he's in the crypt.
* Harry Potter, which looks at how IR theory relates to the Harry Potter universe.
* high defenses and is still a very competent unit, it's easy for players to overlook him because of how he compares to the others.
* Grand Theft Auto III radio conversations and ads have hinted at a war between America and Australia which happened sometime in the mid 1980s. It's played for laughs.
* Hey Hey It's Saturday would have amusing sarcastic captions show up every now and again. Caricatures of the guests would serve the same purpose. Note: these were all done live.
* Highlander: The Series sees this come up, quite naturally since Holy Ground is the only refuge for Immortals who don't want enemies coming for their head. Played with directly in the episode "Homeland", in which an Immortal Norseman named Kanwulf disguises himself as a local priest, committing several murders in the process of searching for an axe Duncan took from him over three centuries earlier.
* Happily Married, making the conversation completely nonsensical and undermining Jakoby's claim to be able to "sense" these things.
* Goblins has something of a Jigsaw Puzzle Plot, with various Cryptic Prophecies and two current main story arcs, with a couple of other villains floating around, all of which seem likely to come into confluence at some point.
* .hack//G.U. is "Haseo-sexual". Or "Mia-sexual" considering the first 5 games.
* Gotham almost as soon as the first episode finished airing. It doesn't help that Oswald Cobblepot calls Jim Gordon "old friend," talked about him while naked in a bathtub, and at one point introduced him to his mother.
* Good End, this is usually the one where the player character gets laid.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Lost and Damned, after witnessing him slaughter dozens of mobsters on his own) and Johnny and the Lost never find out what he did.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys/Salmoneus comedic episode. (Iolaus does not appear in this episode either, but Michael Hirst still turns up in a major role. Playing a woman...)
* Halloween (1978) rather than Death By Not Paying Attention (Including Having Sex) for all the imitators that followed.
* Guyver, Oswald Lisker — Guyver 2 — was replaced by a female version, Inspector Valcuria, designed by the original author. She showed up in the manga as a new Guyver looking just like her animated incarnation.

* Heck, with that movie, you'd think people would have more of a problem with Santa saying that he's going to "cancel Christmas," which implicitly makes the holiday
* Harrow: In "Audere Est Facere" ("To Dare Is to Do"), Harrow confronts the killer on the roof of a skyscraper. Lured over the safety rail, the killer gives Harrow a shove that leaves him hanging by his fingertips from the lip of the ledge.
* Heads or Tails?: Luck dictates what will happen through a flipping a coin.
* Gremlins original script, Billy would have returned home to see his mother's head rolling down the stairs.
* Guild Wars who follows the player and his/her party and other players and spouts out random quotes mostly concerning of the various titles and achievements. Even his main dialogue window exemplifies this trope, "I'm working on a new piece for the Monastery Gazette. A sexy exposé on all things adventurous. I can tell by your smell that you're on a mission...or out of soap. How I would love to follow you on your exploits. Watch you destroy your enemies with ruthless impunity; witness how you scrub those tough-to-clean blood stains off your armor. Allow me the privilege to tag along and observe, would you?"
* Gobbledegook (though Fred and George claim all this involves is pointing and grunting). Granted, we hear this from Percy, who hero-worships him.
* GURPS example, Skin-Changers are clever enough to preserve the skins, and save them in jars when they're not being worn.
* Grab "I'm taking them home with me!" as they run off like a kidnapper.
* Graceful Loser employee. He chose Owen, and has never regretted it. Owen tests another Literal Genie for him, the Cauldron of Life, which legend states will make anyone who bathes in it live "as long as the mountain stones." Owen spends the rest of the series with a stone arm.
* Gravity Bullock screams, accompanied by a loud, prolonged glissando and tremolo of violins.
* Hero with an F in Good: A character who isn't very good at being a hero.
* grandfathered in due to the park's age), allowing teams to construct their angles and dimensions for practical reasons or to be intentionally quirky. Teams will tailor their rosters to take advantage of these quirks - Yankee Stadium, for example, has traditionally had a pretty short right field, so lefty power hitters often hit a lot of homers in that direction. Supposedly, this was intentional - Babe Ruth, a lefty and probably the first player to be known for his big bat, was already a Yankee when the first Yankee Stadium was built in 1923. Incidentally, the Yankees often have a high proportion of power hitters that can hit lefty (either naturally or as a switch-hitter) on their roster.
* Great Lakes Avengers have a nasty habit of losing members, including Mr. Immortal's love interest in issue 1.
* Harry Potter begins with Ginny Weasley on the edge of death, being rushed into a muggle emergency room and receiving life-saving care. The 23rd chapter tells the story of how she ended up in an emergency room. (She was hit by a delivery truck while walking through London on her own for the first time.)
* Hayden Panettiere trope was averted for the episodes filmed while Hayden wasn't on set (except for "That's The Way Love Goes").
* He's a Friend: Mutual allies of the Hero come to blows before realizing their relationship, forcing the Hero to make them both back down.
* Halo 4 begins with a short prologue cutscene, followed by the first mission. Only after the first mission is complete does the title card appear on the screen.
* Halo: Combat Evolved, a game which was legitimately less bloody than than its predecessors, albeit not massively so.
* head. There are some crazy theories like some are suggesting a body double. The reason for the body double? So that Kate and Ari can run off and elope.
* Hercules: Hades does this twice; the first when Pain and Panic tell him he's late for his meeting with the Fates and again later, once he finds out that Hercules will stop his plans.
* Grand Finale's gone, everything resolved, story's over, right? Wrong.

* Gohan says something similar to Cell after he comes back in the Cell saga: "I'm glad that I can rip apart the one who killed my father with my own hands!"
* Heathers and attempted rapists... which explains why many fans aren't very sympathetic when J.D. targets them.
* Heroes. For example, when he joins Danko in Season 3 he's doing it to protect Claire and moderate Danko, though he actively works against the heroes.
* Harry Potter Harry can speak Parseltongue, the language of snakes. He can't tell when he's doing it, so he didn't even realize this was a special power until the second book when his friends had to explain that he'd suddenly started sputtering hisses in front of everyone.
* Hellraiser: Frank Cotton built his body from a single drop of blood (and a few bystanders).
* Hellsing has a remotely good relationship with. Seras looks up to and genuinely likes Alucard even though he's an inhuman monstrosity that frequently scares the crap out of her, and Alucard appears to have a soft spot for his fledgling.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters is based on their shared love of books.
* "Hacksaw" Jim Duggan comes out waving the American Flag. The crowd's reaction was negative.
* Harry Dresden gets to looking like this around the beginning of Book 4 (Summer Knight) — he's around 6'8", very thin (as he has no money for food), has actually lost time due to being in his lightless lab for months, and his hair (very dark brown, as are his eyes) has not only grown out for several months, but is burned off in patches, producing a look that he himself terms "time to take Rover to the groomer."
* Happens to Frank and Jesse Colton when they are captured by Chinese gangsters in the
* gyōji (for the higher- and lower-ranking of the two, respectively; family name spoken first, according to Japanese tradition), wear kimono and use fans adorned with purple rosettes and tassels. Inosuke's rosettes and tassels are purple and white, while Shounosuke's are solid purple.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, Kyon's little sister hides in his travel bag to go with him on a vacation. Of course, she is instantly discovered, but in the anime version (pictured), they ultimately allow her to go with them.
* He also keeps ripping through Edd's screen door. "Not the screen door AGAIN, Ed! Father hasn't recovered from the last time!"
* Grand Finale; the organization is taking part in a global scavenger hunt, and Numbuh One is being interviewed by a pair of rather snarky kid-reporters:
* Grey's Anatomy, as the casts of the shows usually have a good presence on social media and encourage viewership of each other's shows; same with the fans. The actors move between the shows very easily, acting as an extended family and also pushing their cast mate's outside projects with ease. Several of them are also married in real life to other cast and crew members of Shonda shows.
* Grimmjow comments to Orihime that Ulquiorra has a habit of striking "prey" in the same location as his own hollow hole. He speculates that Ulquiorra does it subconsciously and may not even be aware of what he's doing.
* had to have HIS appendix removed and the writers apparently weren't feeling especially creative.
* Great Mazinger: Mykene were a civilization had lived underground for millennia, so their entire empire — an intricate network of caves and caverns — was an Elaborate Underground Base.
* Green Aesop discovered in the mid-2010s have this moral, with Gilgamesh's killing of Humbaba and the subsequent cutting of the cedar forest being treated as wicked and unnecessary.
* Graceland and dies right in front of Mike. Everyone tells Mike that he was not responsible for what happened but Mike still feels really guilty. At the end of the episode, he is doing the dishes and when he looks down it seems that his hands are covered in blood but it is just tomato sauce.
* He Say, She Say on his previous album, and later died and resurrected as "The Cool." The songs dealing with him show his rise and fall as a hustler, ending in betrayal and death.

* Gokaiger epilogue; Doggie Kruger and Signalman salute the Gokai Galleon passing by.
* Heroes Volume 5: One's a mind-reading detective trying to quit the habit, the other's a mental fragment of a murderous supervillain trapped in the detective's head. They fight crime! ...Or not.
* Harmonic Feedback: Once a boy named Kyle confessed his undying love for Drea behind the school library. She believed him until his friends came out laughing. They'd filmed the whole thing, and quickly posted it online.
* Gobelins comic has a bodybuilder goblin try to pull the Sword in the Stone out. At first it look like he succeeded, hoisting the sword above his head, but then it's shown he ripped the entire rock it was attached to out of the ground, which then crushes him.
* Hermes, the god of trickery and messenger to the Olympians, had many animal motifs, but his most notable were hawks, hares, and tortoises.
* Good Omens has Aziraphale and Crowley, a pair of literally an angel and a demon and the most popular ship in the fandom by a country mile. Although, admittedly at the time of the book, both of them have spent too much time with each other and with humans to be quite so purely good or evil.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Kreacher leads the house-elves employed at Hogwarts into battle against the Death Eaters.
* GURPS, a character may be created with multiple personalities. Depending on the "point value" of each personality (they may have different abilities), this can actually count as an advantage! The trigger is a roll against IQ in a "stressful situation"; fail the roll and switch personalities. (If you have more than two, the new one is chosen at random.)
* Half-Life 2. Every citizen is given some ration packets, and how many they can get per day depends on their compliance with the Combine. Even then, those rations aren't even tasty, which is why joining Civil Protection and the higher ranks is one of the gimmicks that would guarantee better food and living conditions.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, mostly to Hayate. Hinagiku is another favorite target for this, sometimes even when Hayate is also present. Most often it's someone hiding behind one of them for protection but the clinginess is definitely there.
* Hachioji Clan (at least when they aren't begging for treats or trying to convince her to take them on a walk).
* Hell, the trope is Averted with both Jen and Mary. Jen got the most screen time of the other girls and had the standard setup of the trope (Like being the only one of the girls not to have sex with their boyfriends). But then it turns out that
* Grojband episode "On the Air and Out to Sea" Trina's braces picks up radio frequencies from her little brother's radio station.
* Heck, all Best Buy ads are commendably non-stereotypical, showing that women can get just as excited about technology and be just as knowledgeable about it as men can.
* Heroes of the Storm, while the ally benefits from shielding, healing, extra protection, and other bonuses if talented.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix Cho gets this impression of Harry on their date, thanks to his poor choice of words in describing his meeting with Hermione later.
* Guild Wars, one of the final quests in the Northern Shiverpeaks is to track down a band of deserters to retrieve the supplies they've stolen. Alas, they're not all that dangerous if you actually play through the game to that point instead of getting run through like so many seem to.
* Grand Theft Auto V has a jetski manufacturer named "Speedophile", a pun that only works with the British pronunciation of "pedophile".
* Gungrave, a 2003 crime drama with some sci-fi mixed in for good measure, originated as an adaptation of a lukewarmly received PS2 shooter. It's even harder to believe it after you find out about it, just because of how the action sequences in the show took a definite backseat to characterization and drama, and its overall heavy, depressing feel.

* have finished the chicken picnic and stares at the screen for a few moments in complete silence.
* Greg Grunberg makes, even if it's just a cameo or voiceover. Not only are they best friends, they've been best friends since Fourth Grade.
* He also said that Castillo's desk should always be free of paper work, and that the cops knock on the door before entering the office. In later episodes, Castillo would be shown sleeping at his desk whenever the Vice team was engaged in a major/multi-day case.
* He Who Fights Monsters: They started out a good guy but ended up becoming just as bad as what they were fighting against.
* Highlander: Immortals can be corrupted by absorbing to much evil from the quickenings of wicked immortals and in turn pass on that corruption in the form of a dark quickening. Duncan is only known immortal in the canon of the TV Show to overcome being turned by one.
* Handling the Undead. Lindqvist has himself acknowledged that his writing is a way to handle his feelings caused by the loss of his own father, who drowned at sea.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 has Ego whose "purpose" is to destroy the universe and turn it into himself because of Ego's Narcissist attitude.
* goes inside his own body. He inserts the robot by dropping it down the back of his underpants.
* have an epiphany and thank their colleague even though their conversations never actually come together.
* Going Postal involves navigating an obstacle course where one risks stepping on a rake, a roller-skate, and/or an empty beer bottle with a hood over one's head.
* Hawke. He only breaks the confidence when he realizes that the spoilered character is desperately needed.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas has the classic Wrong Side of The Tracks mission, where you must take Big Smoke to the train station where he proceeds to shoot a bunch of gang members trying to make their escape on top of a speeding train.
* Harry Potter was always picked last, but not because he wasn't any good. Nobody wanted Dudley's gang to think they liked him and end up getting beaten up for it. A bit ironic because had anyone had the guts to try picking him, it's very possible he would have been quite good, given how he ends up a natural at Quidditch.
* Godzilla: King Ghidorah's Showa and anime incarnations are renowned for traveling the cosmos, destroying civilizations.
* Hamish and Dougal literally. (Rarely both at once, for maximum miscommunication.)
* Gurren Lagann - The movies were sub-only, although they were dubbed in European Spanish and Italian; as for the TV series, well, see below
* here feature 158 songs that quote, "You have heard but don't know the name of", because they've been featured in many different media.
* Hibernation/Migration Situation: Drama arises when an animal character needs to hibernate or migrate after the seasons change.
* Green Eggs and Ham: The number 17 shows up or is mentioned many times during Season 1.
* Gwent: The Witcher Card Game: Many card effects indiscriminately hit either side of the board. It's a common rite of passage in the game for ignorant newbies to accidentally obliterate their own units.
* Gold and Silver every single villainous team has tried to use the mascot legendary in their plans and a couple more legendaries often have a plot important role.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, who looks back on his original time as the Star-Lord with distaste, isn't exactly thrilled about heroics or self-sacrifice, but will still risk violent and painful death to save the universe, time and time again. Because the universe needs protecting, and there's no-one else around.
* Hawkman continuity is also home to the Manhawks, enemies to the Thangarians who are much more hawklike and the Fetherians, a lost tribe of bird-people encountered by the Golden Age Hawkman, the best known of whom is Northwind of
* has on hand. Interestingly, she never gives it back when the spell is broken.
* HeartGold and SoulSilver. You also help a girl who's being kidnapped by a Hypno as part of the Sevii Islands quest in FireRed and LeafGreen.

* Happens a second time as Duke's leaving Vegas: He gets in an elevator full of cops (there was anti-drug convention at the time). As Duke is in trouble with the law, he burrows himself into a corner of the elevator. When the cops look at him, he turns into the corner away from them.
* Haruka, so she finds it hard to understand how she's expected to act in social situations.
* Halloween (1978) takes place in an ordinary Midwestern suburb (although it was actually filmed in the Los Angeles suburb of Pasadena), and was one of the first horror films to utilize the familiar suburban environment and a key contributor to the "suburban Gothic" sub-genre.
* Heartwarming Orphan. She even wears purple and black arm floaties and all but dances her way through life.
* GURPS as a rule tends to avoid "alignments" as such, and instead represents character traits through the use of Disadvantages.
* Heck, almost ANY troublemaker/their parents have one, but Caillou and Boris are still the most prominent examples. Their parents sometimes
* Hawkeye sees through Envy's Mustang guise, and shoots them as they revert back.
* Hey Arnold! TV movie "The Journal" has one during Arnold's parent's honeymoon in Rio de Janeiro.
* Heroman trope, has puffy hair, and lives in America but it's hard to tell. He might be Mexican, mixed, or African-American.
* Herman's Head, his head is the one controlling things, with bits of his personality disagreeing.
* Hell Fest-style event where a killer dressed as one of the scare-actors starts stalking a group of teenagers.
* God-Created Canon Foreigner: A character exclusive to the adaptation was created by the original work's creator.
* Gunslinger Girl, providing a distraction so the hostage can break free.
* Helium Speech: A high-pitched voice effect acquired through either inhaling helium before speaking, or by pitch-shifting a voice recording.
* Happens all the time in the English dubs of animes that occur in Japan, where the characters are typically voiced by American performers who don't have a drop of Asian blood, and use their "normal" voices.
* GURPS Reign of Steel has many of the AI Zoneminds keeping human slaves in a variety of ways and for a variety of purposes. This makes sense in many applications since robots are expensive to produce but human vermin are cheap and disposable. Notable cases include:
* Haruhi Suzumiya, Kyon often complains he doesn't understand what Yuki, Mikuru, or Koizumi mean with their technobabble, although they don't attempt to "dumb it down". In the Drama CD "Sound Around" however, we have two scenes in which this happens.
* Gravity Falls. Outside that basic morally alignment switch regarding the four kids (and the resulting costume changes), everything else is pretty fair game.
* Halloween has some creepy interactions between Michael, a homicidal maniac, his two sisters, and other girls. With his one sister he caresses her leg when she's in an undressed state and pretends to be her boyfriend before killing her. His violent murder of the other girls occurs when they're also naked or in a state of undress and he's chasing them while brandishing a knife. Then there's the fixation he has with his sister Laurie.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, had any of the Muggle-borns died he would've considered that an added plus).
* Have I Got News for You episode starring Rolf Harris as host will no longer air due to him being found guilty of indecent assault via the Operation Yewtree investigations that the Savile revelations spurred.
* Guess How Much I Love You, Bluebird has two eggs of her own and agrees to adopt another, much larger egg that Little Nutbrown Hare and Little Field Mouse found that they call "the lucky egg." All three of them hatch at the same time. One day, Little Nutbrown Hare and Little Field Mouse take Big Nutbrown Hare to see the chicks. The proudly praise the bluebird chicks for their singing but say that the lucky chick doesn't sing, that he's very quiet. In response to this, the lucky chick lets out a big, loud caw.

* Hex Hall series a witch is betrothed on her thirteenth birthday. Sophie's father arranged her engagement without ever having met her and without telling her that she was engaged never mind who to. * Gossip Girl (2007). Chuck Bass spends the first two seasons believing his father hates him because Mama Bass died giving birth to him. Then season three features a woman who claims to be Chuck's mother and that Bart simply told him she was dead because she ran out on them when Chuck was a baby. Said woman then proceeds to con him out of his hotel and leave town and the show never bothers to make it clear whether or not she was his mother or a con artist who knew the Basses back when Chuck was little. To make matters more confusing, in season two Bart talks to Chuck about his mother and claims he doesn't blame him for her death but has a hard time connecting to his son because he looks so much like the wife Bart lost. Then in season six Bart is pretty much plain evil and hates Chuck for no apparent reason.

* HarvesterUtility craft used to gather raw resources. Common in RTS games, where harvesting is the main way to expand ones forces. As such the priority is to take these out. This is not the case in non-RTS stories, so Harvesters are rare outside of games. If they are seen, they are operated by Contractors and usually far from any fighting. The more important the stuff being gathered, the more it makes Harvesters a target. As such, they require escorts.
* Goodnight and Billy, despite the fact that the film made a show of them discussing the pros and cons of various locations ahead of time.

* here has the Allied Species (a faction made of Humans and the Covenant races, minus the Prophets). They have no problem with burning entire planets, the humans in their military are basically an army of super-soldiers, and the weaker Covenant races have inexplicably become more badass. They also seem to have an endless supply of soldiers and warships, which doesn't make sense given that in the backstory there were two Covenant Civil Wars in the last forty years. This faction should be much weaker than it is. That aside, the Allied Species spend much of the story criticizing the Jedi and the Republic(with whom they happen to be in an alliance) in general, while their own flaws are never mentioned. The Allied Species are always right and the Jedi are always wrong.
* Harry Dresden tends to be fairly direct in telling arrogant fae (and anyone else)
* Happens a lot during Aegon's Conquest, especially once word of what the dragons can do gets around. The last Stark king is forever remembered as "The King Who Knelt", but not a single Northerner gets toasted by Aegon's dragons. Surrendering also meant that the Starks got to keep their rule of the North (albeit as "Lord Paramount" instead of King), this allowed the North to go through less cultural upheaval than the other kingdoms. Pretty fair price to pay, all told.
* Harmony Theory, Rarity is knocked unconscious by a sniper rifle shot to the head, with the witnesses shocked that it didn't penetrate her flesh and kill her.

* Grant Morrison's DC work, part of DC's multiverse is Comic Book Limbo, a space where all forgotten comics characters go. As long as they are there, no one will remember them, and everybody will regain their memories about them when writers drag them from this terrible place and put them in their stories.
* Halo: Reach of New Alexandria, where the player has to help evacuate civilians, among other things.
* .hack. And that's not even mentioning the multitude of uncanon titles, artbooks, and guidebooks.

* Harry Turtledove is blasting everything and everyone in the vicinity, he waltzes up to it and throws a satchel charge in-between the turret and the chassis. He also ends up liberating Mussolini right from under the lizards' snouts. And yes, the lizards speak his name as a curse.
* Highway to Hell. "I was only sleeping with my husband's boss to advance his career", one of them says sadly.
* HBO confess: He'll paint himself as one of the conspirators and spill everything he knows (and as a "conspirator", everything that would've been hearsay becomes first-hand testimony). Lloyd angrily tells his people to stand down.

* Grand Theft Auto III, while nearby officers will now react to NPC violence it still a differing level of force than what is used against the player. Most notably they never escalate, if the NPC's kill all the cops the fight is over. If the player shoots a police officer, expect half a dozen squad cars and a police helicopter to respond in seconds. In a strange inversion, police in GTAV will always react with lethal force to NPC's regardless of their crime (in GTAIV they can arrest them), while the player can be arrested for minor crimes.
* Haruhi Suzumiya. As demonstrated in her now-famous introduction speech, she "has no interest in ordinary humans" and would much rather meet aliens, time travelers, espers, and other such phenomena. What she doesn't realize is that she's unknowingly drawn those exact kinds of people to her club.
* Higglytown Heroes episode "Twinkle Tooth", Twinkle is unable to come up with a convoluted idea on how she could get her loose tooth back from the sink drain, so the others do the honors for her, right down to them using her catchphrase "Aw, pickles!" when Fran points out the one fatal flaw in their idea - there are no whales in the sink drain.
* Grant Morrison describes a number of his former teammates in one issue. Among them was the Fact, whose appearance and name are a clear homage to/parody of the Question. The Fact went on to feature (sort of) in Flex's own miniseries.
* Heavy cruiser/touring motorcycles may not be the coolest option depending on your view, but their advantages over cars are considerable: they're far easier to repair, much more maneuverable, can carry a few hundred pounds of supplies (plus more if you have a sidecar), and have reasonable performance on dirt roads or damaged urban roads. Plus they can be easily pushed somewhere safe to be repaired, while cars leave you out in the open. Bicycles are also an excellent choice, being even easier to keep working as well as quiet and versatile.
* Hamtaro has gained popularity with furries in both the Japanese and Western sides of the fandom, thanks to being mostly about cute hamsters.
* Gradius V (2009) where he's a comparatively normal green humanoid alien.
* Higurashi: When They Cry speech on how men are supposed to be perverts is an example.

* Gravity Falls decides to have an "epic summer romance" in the pilot and spends some time flirting with every unrelated male of approximately compatible age she can find. * Great Teacher Onizuka: After a serious injury, Onizuka left a bloody hand print on Uchiyamada's bald head. Uchiyamada found it really hard to remove, and almost thought that Onizuka cursed him.
* Hell(p) does this a lot with the red cross symbol both in- and outside of the story. Justified since it's the official symbol of the Help Service, where the protagonists work, and of the comic itself.

* Green Lantern: The Animated Series, one of the lantern ring's abilities is a universal translator. It continues to function as long as the ring has power, even when the rings are otherwise disabled. This leads to a hilarious scene in "Babel", where Hal, Kilowog, and eventually Razer's rings are all completely drained, forcing the trio to spend about half the episode speaking three different languages. Even the viewer is left without subtitles.
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age, as certain items and djinn aren't available in the second game.
* Gunslinger Girl. Alessandro does this while working surveillance with Petra; due to her age and conditioning she's a good deal more flustered about it than he is.

* Grim Matchstick opens his mouth and stretches out his tongue, and a marching band of flames walks out.
* Hex and the City: The succubus Pretty Poison provides backup for John Taylor on an investigation. Succubi are depicted here are demons who feed off lust and help tempt humans into damnation. Their appearance changes depending on the sexual preferences of whoever is looking at them. In their true form though they are monstrous-looking demons.
* Hearts of Iron to take them. The only real way to take urban environments without a costly battle is to surround them, cut them off from supply, and let the defenders break down, but that takes quite a while, as a division can hold out up to thirty days if fully supplied before they are cut off, and still take time to break while being attacked.

* Graduation, four best friends plot to rob a bank during their high school graduation ceremony in order to help out one of the teen's sick relatives.
* Golden Kamuy, Ogata was engaged in a sniper duel. It mostly conformed to the trope, as it was primarily a battle of wits and source for tension.
* Goblins. Later subverted when Dellyn believes Thaco feels the same way, but Thaco refuses to kill Dellyn or call him his nemesis.
* Halo 4 to pursue the Didact. Lasky informs the Chief of this and then mentions that, just in case the Chief had gone already, Lasky had ordered a Pelican readied to pursue him. * Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, Harry mentions that Dudley is the leader of his gang by virtue of being the biggest, strongest, and dumbest of the lot of them.
* Grotesque Tactics — both the first and second game — is generally an RPG parody and plays with tropes all the time, but nothing as much as Holy Avatar — he is the proverbial knight in shining armor, with cool shades and three maidens all fawning over him, and he has been everywhere, done everything. Adding to this trope is one of his special attacks, which is a one-hit-kill for weaker enemies, actually stating so in the description of the skill!
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows. The required "I lost an ear" humor happens the moment the victim awakes.
* Griffon the Brush Off", after Rainbow Dash flies away from a running and shouting Pinkie Pie:
* Gurps the populations of conquered Vilani worlds did this en masse. They felt little connection to the Vilani Imperium and some(like the Khimishargu Vilani) were even rebels. * Heaven Knows What during the opening credits, she's almost immediately accosted by a another female patient who taunts her and then physically attacks her. She's credited as "Psych Ward Bully." Because there is no dialogue during this sequence, we don't hear what she's saying.
* Hidden Expedition a ninja does it to his partner for tossing and catching the titular item as if it were a ball.
* Hawaii Five-O. Additionally, Lord's stand-in, Beau Van Den Ecker, directed a few episodes, as well as appearing in bit parts and serving as the show's Associate Producer.
* Hahli has it even worse than Kongu. Her Mask of Detection has the power to sense the location of the Mask of Life by giving her headaches, but since she can't turn it off, being in close proximity to the Mask of Life eventually becomes so painful to her that she discards the Mask of Detection despite the fact that not wearing it means having a constantly brightly shining head, although this isn't a problem for long since she and the other Toa Ignika are turned into the Toa Mahri shortly after that.
* Harley Quinn. He doesn't handle it well, thinking that smartphones are evil mind-control devices and being outraged to discover that his neighbourhood public library isn't there any more.

* Gundam. Disentangling what each group really wants and trying to appeal to both sides is for many what is ruining the original appeal of the series. The fact the UC and Alternate Timelines appeal to different tastes with the same success hasn't helped matters.
* Happens offscreen to NERV's American base, with everyone on site being killed by Yig's serpents and their EVAs stolen by Tsathoggua.

* Grace Kelly herself wasn't particularly short-lived but her career was short; she only appeared in 11 films between 1951 and 1956 before giving up acting for good to become the Princess of Monaco. However, several of her films became classics, she won an Academy Award and in 1999, the American Film Institute included her among the top 50 greatest screen legends in American film history.
* Half&Half ends with one of the sisters finally deciding between her two boyfriends. She calls him on the phone to tell him, and the scene ends before we ever learn who she chose.

* Half-Life series the .357 Magnum revolver has ridiculous recoil and the RPG has very little. Then there's the M249 from Opposing Force, which will visibly push you backwards as it fires.

* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life In later chapters, allowing your farm and shipment levels to fall by the wayside can cause your wife to leave you. In the PS2 special edition, you can end the game in the first cutscene by simply telling Takakura you don't want the farm.
* Heathcliff used to have one named Crazy Shirley, a white cat that was crazy about him and looked much goofier than his girlfriend Sonia. She even appeared in one episode of the Ruby-Spears cartoon. Crazy Shirley hasn't appeared in the comic strip for several years now.
* High School Musical, the subtext was largely gone by the third film.
* Hero, wherein two protagonists tear straight through an army of mooks to gain access to the palace.

* Hellion, one of Unity's failed attempts at extending its influence beyond Silver Mount isn't much better. It's a cruel, warmongering slavedriver with no regard for its cult's comfort or safety.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys. The injury was written into the episode "Cast a Giant Shadow" as a result of "a little torture" to justify his cast in subsequent episodes.
* has a sizable collection of pilot callsigns and the demeaning meanings behind them.
* Harry Turtledove's span of 150 years, and the invention of a time machine.
* Hernan Cortes's men when they fled the Aztec capital. Set in the middle of a lake, the city was only reachable by man-made causeways. As they fled across these, in their panic many fell into the water. The weight of the gold they had stuffed their clothes with caused many to drown.
* Goofy accidentally bought a painting while trying to tell the hours to a deaf man.
* Happy Heroes, Big and Little M.'s commander is only ever seen from the back, or otherwise has his face completely obscured from view whenever he is on-screen.
* High Noon: Will Kane is a broken-down old sheriff who is about to retire to be with his 21-year-old bride, Amy. Actor Gary Cooper was indeed 28 years older than actress Grace Kelly.
* Halo 2". Among others, he loses it when he gets taken out just after getting a triple kill(even though he's been getting shot the whole time), and the heavens themselves tremble when he gets standbyed.
* Hades annoyed when the subject of his younger brothers Poseidon and Zeus is broached.
* harmless results, the rest of his family join him and they get more competent in their revenge for the Utoniums, but are ultimately defeated.
* Green Tea Rescue: Eri reflects on her telling her brother Toshi the story of how their parents became heroes, and that as much as she dreads telling him about the fighting and the blood, she knows he would be just as (or more) horrified about the kissing and hand-holding and stuff.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas includes references to this, including one instance where Sweet outright says that he and Carl robbed people at gunpoint for the money for both their mother's lifesaving operation and to put their sister through college.
* Hibiki, usually given by Decade. When Decade comments on the theft, Diend completes it by taking another of his catchphrases:
* Happens all the time — to Scotland's enemies. Due to the AI behaving the same way every time, a besieged city will end up with its walls breached and its army retreating to the city square for its last, ineffective, stand. And in one instance, the surviving army consisted of one spearman. Then the Scottish commander rides up with his army and bodyguard.

* "Gonna Get Along Without You Now": Depending on the audience, this country classic has been covered up by Viola Wills (1979), Skeeter Davis (1964) or Patience & Prudence (1956). Some people will go back as far as Teresa Brewer's 1952 version but even that's not the original, which was done by Roy Hogsed in 1951.
* Godannar: Anna Aoi-Saruwatari has one when training to become a Robot Pilot in the second episode.
* Herakles, Heracles or Hercules? Is Ilyasviel herself spelled with one or two L's in the first syllable?
* Highlander was deliberately made as bad as possible because they wanted to make it so that nobody would buy the game after discovering they would have to pay royalties for each cartridge sold.
* Gorn: One of the main elements of this genre, though while gorn is used to excite the viewer, splatter horror uses similar themes to upset or horrify the viewer.
* Golden Sun has Mogall Forest, a dungeon where one screen keeps looping unless you take the right corridor.
* Henry practically says this to Frank in his farewell after kissing Margaret ("Abyssinia, Henry"). As it's Frank, Henry says it in a most disinterested way.

* He has multiple flashbacks back to the time before he became immortal.

* Half-Life: Uplink demo ends with Gordon being cornered by a Gargantua, and the screen fading to black followed by the message "Current evaluation: uplink completed. Require further data."
* Hidden Depths. In one episode someone has left a poetic death threat in Colonel Tigh's quarters, and Lee Adama says it couldn't possibly be Kara because "you wouldn't know poetry if it was hot-soldered across your helmet." Kara proceeds to quote the entire stanza from memory, as well as giving her critique. We later find out this is due to the influence of Kara's artistic father.

* Good Manners, leaving up to the viewers to decide whether they win or not.
* "Hey, Kirby! This means war! If you can stack this many *'s, you win!"
* Harmontown: Dan will often make empty promises to "edit all this out" if things get pretty ridiculous, and will sometimes even shout something to ensure that the section cannot be aired, like "Hitler had some good ideas!" but of course all of it ends up in the podcast.
* Harmful to Minors: Children are exposed to something disturbing that only adults would understand.
* Hannah Swensen's cat Moishe has never gotten along with her mother, Delores, for some reason. Including spreading a pair of stockings the first time they met (with her in them). And the odds are if the phone rings and Moishe reacts poorly, Delores will be the caller 90+% of the time.
* He also has since given Miller's spiritual successor to Swimming, Circles, a highly positive review.
* Greg Davies about his grandmother, who (allegedly) applied night cream each night for decades to keep complexion young:

* Happy Heroes: In episode 8, Big M. and Little M. crawl through an air vent to reach the heroes and make them sick with their cold.
* Gnomes and Goblins, although generally on opposite factions, have a friendly rivalry and often cooperate on complex engineering tasks and love to compete in racing.
* Hayate keeps this going by often commenting to others that Hinagiku couldn't possibly fall for a guy like him, even managing to make himself depressed a couple times thinking about it. It actually goes both ways as Hinagiku has her own insecurities and sometimes feels that Hayate couldn't like her as she isn't feminine enough. Basically it's
* Green Lantern miniseries, the remaining few Darkstars show up ONLY in the climactic battle… just to die to the last man. And yes, they wore red jumpsuits.
* Hello! Project a sister-group or subgroup, the colors she has for either group will be completely different.

* Hermann Goering, by 1945, was called the most hated man in Germany because of his obsession with fame, glory,
* Heavy Object the city of Lost Angels is an actual example of this. The majority of the populace are spies posing as criminals or actual criminals, with just a small portion being drifters and exiles who can't live anywhere else. The only reason the city can survive in its current state is the constant flow of government subsidies.
* H₂O: Footprints in the Sand had an extended sequence revolving around Otoha as a magical girl. That was probably the least odd thing in that episode.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army: The Angel of Death has eyes all over its wings, but none on its face.
* Heroes. Unusually, this comes to a stalemate - Elle has Claire pinned to the ground under her electric blasts, but Claire's never going to succumb due to her healing power - that's broken by Sandra giving Elle a soaking.
* Gunpei Ishihara tried wearing one, but it didn't work - it led to him being mistaken for a drug dealer.

* Half Moon Investigations is named for the small-for-his-age protagonist's Embarrassing Nickname, Fletcher "Half" Moon.
* Heroic example with Anna and Ferdinand, who don't have to wait in the smugglers' cave for long before smugglers arrive with a boat. Princess and prince hide under the plank smugglers use to protect ship from the rain and get a free transport to the city.
* Guyver. They eventually managed to kill him, but they were so terrified of it happening again that they aborted the experiment and fled the planet.
* Heroes-wearing, hair-slicked-back, contemplative-yet-badass street samurai. And is pissed about it.
* heavy and a squad of infantry. Many are, in fact, conversions of an older MBTs too obsolete for their original role, but still too solid and functional to be worth scrapping.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army It shows just how much Liz trusts Hellboy (and, as the director's commentary points out, is the humane decision to make), but she still screwed the world to save her man.
* GURPS. This advantage allows the player to be carrying around an unspecified "gizmo", which he may at any time "pull out" and declare it to be whatever device he wants it to be (that he could have reasonably possessed). Additionally, the gizmo does not "enter play" until activated, so it cannot be damaged, lost, stolen, or uncovered in a search.
* Harry Potter this trope at Harry's birth: he set out himself to destroy him.

* Grrl Power. He has a spy among the protagonists, definitely has some sort of scheme going on, and actively goes out of his way to enhance his maniacal laughter with a device to simulate lightning, but he hasn't done anything outright evil yet. He did kill a king, but he was more of a tyrannical warlord than a benevolent ruler, and Deus did do it so he could help bring the country from a third world country into a modern nation.
* High-end electric pianos weight the keys differently, with the higher keys on the right side with less weight, and the lower keys on the left side with more weight. The rationale is that this gets the keys even closer in feel to a real piano, which do require less weight on the high notes because of the smaller impact needed to hit a shorter string... except that, well, high-end grand pianos have
* Golden Age was a pretty nasty dude, his one bright spot was that he wasn't Stefan Amaris. In the Periphery, people tend to have less rosy memories of the Star League, and general consensus is that given how the Star League treated the Periphery as a cash cow for the Inner Sphere at best and engaged in outright genocide on Periphery worlds at worst, it was only a matter of time before someone like Amaris showed up, and while Amaris was a nasty piece of work, he didn't really give worse than the Periphery had already taken from the Star League.
* Grandia 2 after Ryudo explains they're not trying to kill him. Whether or not she had any real intent to do so (she's not as evil as she wants people to think she is) is up for grabs, but it should be noted that, aside from Ryudo himself, Millenia treats Roan the best of the group.
* Halo: The Cole Protocol: The main setting is a collection of asteroids — modified to serve as a makeshift colony in the wake of a nearby planet's glassing — known as the Rubble. Late in the novel, the protagonists discover a Covenant attack force on another nearby planet and must figure out a way to prevent said force from wiping out the Rubble's inhabitants. The solution? Evacuate the population and then drop the asteroid-habitats from orbit.
* Götterdämmerung, with the Norns, is 15 minutes of pure exposition. The entire opera cycle, however, is 20 hours long.
* Gunrunner was an Autobot commander. His entire squadron was slaughtered, except for him, due to his pretender shell. Worse, he promised them all they would get out alive.
* Harriet Beecher Stowe wrote 30 novels and travel memoirs, plus many articles, in her lifetime, but today she is popularly remembered only for
* Hilary Duff. Specifically they demanded Hilary be paid a fee of $500,000 that she was told she'd get if the movie grossed over $50 million. Lest you think this was Disney being unreasonable, they were offering Hilary $4 million to star in a second film - of which she would also get 25% of the profits. Her mother insisted the $500,000 also be paid out of the principle of the thing, so the offer was withdrawn completely.
* grad student and Teacher's Assistant. CSI Sara points out that while Marlon's life was actively changing growing up, Hannah's life didn't as even with her prestige she was still viewed as some anomaly.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name; Conrad smacked into the air when he tried to enter Ples's house with the rest of the crew, since technically all of them were trespassing.
* He incorporated the no sell into his "rising from the dead" persona, where he would sit up after taking his opponent's Finishing Move. If you see him lying out completely straight after taking a finisher, he's very likely about to do this, especially if his opponent hasn't covered him immediately. Cue an
* Goofy is a historical or famous literary character. As Ulysses (in his adventure with the Cyclops), he ends the story by saying the trope name. Mickey (as Diomedes) then points out that he is illiterate. Goofy then says he'll just get himself a ghost writer, turns to a crewman and goes "Right, Homeros?".
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets people send him cards on Valentine's Day. Ron begs Hermione to tell him she wasn't one of them, at which point she becomes very interested in looking for her timetable.
* Great Mazinger. Amusingly enough, it is also a subversion: Tetsuya used it constantly, in many different ways, and he came up with a lot of variations.

* Hearts of Iron if West Germany somehow becomes fascist it's literally named Fourth Reich.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, after Harry reads a letter Sirius sent him:
* Goddess Creation System, morally shady protagonist Xiaxi saves the life of the rival that kidnapped her not because she's such a kind person, but because she'd be killed for sure if the other girl died. She openly admits it, too, which Ming Zhu seems to appreciate.
* Hardball had Keanu Reeves' character Conor meet his eventual love interest after she unintentionally smacked him with a door.
* Grand Theft Auto: Liberty City Stories while bending over to pick up a dollar.
* "Hide" when she is about to open a gate to another dimension using her psychic abilities.
* Guards! Guards!; nothing that big with that wingspan should ever be able to fly — Sybil even mentions the thing about how you can't just scale something up and expect it to work. The only way they can survive in the real world is by, essentially, feeding on magic. Lots of it. And that doesn't go so well once the magic starts running out.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, an unnamed stand-in for New York is seen in episode 13.
* HERZ: In the epilogue Asuka smacked Shinji on the head because he did not manage to find their daughter among a crowd even though she had told him where she was several times.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, we're treated to a shot of the line of bodies trailing behind the ship.
* He might be humiliated at first but eventually he begins to enjoy being treated like a pretty girl, admires his engagement ring greatly and has to be reminded that he can't really marry Osgood.
* Glen Blacow, if only because players accustomed to a specific style of game will play to that style, and his article was soon followed up by other writers in the same magazine, picking up on this aspect of the topic. Blacow’s four aspects were:
* Headless Horseman, an enemy in the Pumpkin Moon event who appears riding a black horse and wearing a pumpkin as a head. It has a chance to drop a Jack-O-Lantern mask, so that you can wear a pumpkin in your head too.
* Happy Endings are fighting over a sweater which both claim to be theirs. Max maintains they are not going to do one of their dumb competitions-before running away with the sweater. Jane chases and tackles him, shouting "Get back here, you gay!" Max's response is "'You gay'? That's the best you could come up with?"
* Hazbin Hotel: Katie Killjoy explains she was only interviewing Charlie because Jeffery cancelled his cannibal cooking show, then holds up a poster of Jeffery Dahmer labelled "It's Dahm Good" with a sticky note saying "WHO APPROVED THIS?!"
* Handing out merit badges at the drop of hat (which would probably earn you your 'Hat Dropping' merit badge) seems to be Gazpacho's leadership style in the
* Golf even has an iconic example of this. One of the highlights of The Masters, the first major championship of the men's golf season, is the award ceremony in which the winner is fitted with a distinctive green jacket. Even if he's won the event before. Said jacket identifies members of Augusta National Golf Club, the exclusive private club which owns and operates the tournament. All Masters winners become honorary members of Augusta National, giving them lifetime access to the club.
* God of War was the best of all Spartans, and his power only grows throughout the series.
* God sense of the term" during the year Sam was trapped in Hell with him. It's now pretty much considered canon by much of the fandom that he tortured Sam sexually.
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah. Although he's now 40 meters tall, Godzilla Junior is a lot more mellow than his dad towards humans and has a sort of friendship with Miki Saegusa.
* Grianne Ohmsford. The plot revolves around Tael Riverine from the (chronologically) most recent trilogy, who is still fixated on making her his bride. She's been gone, but the protagonists try to retrieve her from her new existence in the belief that she can help stop Riverine. The ancient being that allowed her to ascend grants her return to humanity, but not quite as the protagonists wanted... Tragic especially because she had wanted to be free from the doubt and pain of human life, only to be dragged back again to finish her unfinished business.

* Go Animate sometimes has the "Eric" TTS voice reading a sentence perfectly until it comes to the word 'It', which it reads out as if it were an initialism, while "Julie" speaks with an unusually higher tone for certain phrases, such as "That's it", "Goodbye" or "Let's go".
* Griff the Invisible: Both Griff and Melody. Griff's very shy and childlike, so basic daily interaction with other people is quite a struggle for him, and he's so wrapped up in his own world that he's usually barely paying attention to anything else anyway. Melody's more confident, but has very little comprehension of social rules or other people, which makes it hard to communicate, or understand what others are feeling or why they're acting a certain way.
* Her questions about human behavior and her own responses, including being inspired to
* Heroes: When Peter is controlling the body of Jesse, one of the Level 5 villains, Knox, his fellow escapee, catches him this way by asking "Jesse" if he can't wait to see his family and friends in Detroit, when Jesse's family is from Vegas and he doesn't have any friends.

* Green Lantern rolled around, there was a brief line wherein Guy Gardner mockingly suggested Kyle exchange his green ring for a blue one.
* Grandia in the first, apparently a pair of twins and a set of triplets.
* Heather Farley, a rebellious young student in A. C. Crispin's StarBridge series, is both a traditional telepath and a cyberpath; she swears off using the latter ability after she nearly gets trapped in a computer system.

Dragons, mermaids, fairies, zombies, vampires, werewolves, leprechauns, griffins, banshees, giants, dwarves, goblins, ghosts and centaurs all feature, plus a few more exclusive to the Potterverse itself.
* Hancock's Half Hour, where the layout of the living room changed from week to week according to the demands of the plot.
* "God Complex" comes closest to the Urban Legend described in the trope (in
* He also did an 8-bit themed issue of his show Fedor Comix Draws. It can be seen
* Half-swording provides a new moveset to the swordsman for fighting armored opponents. While half-swording, you could use one hand on your blade to guide your thrust into chinks in the armor. Alternatively, if you like it simpler, just put both hands on the blade to turn the sword into an improvised hammer, and attack him with the infamous mordhau.
* Happens to Django - upside down and naked - before he is sold to the mining company in
* Hey Arnold!: Two episodes of the show used the same gag when Arnold's initial plan to solve that day's problem failed:
* Hellsister Trilogy, a super-team of nearly thirty super-beings, some of them with planet-crushing powers, to fight evil sorcerers and eldritch abominations.
* Gunboat War" between Denmark-Norway and the United Kingdom from 1807 to 1814. Because the Royal Navy had forced Denmark to hand over its battle-fleet through the 1807 bombardment of Copenhagen (i. e. a direct attack on the civilian population of the Danish capital), Denmark could only continue the unequal struggle with its smaller naval ships, i. e. gunboats.

* Goof Troop, P.J. gives Pistol a quarter and says, "You were right; spleen."
* Handful of Rain, telling of barflies trying to replace the emptiness in their souls with alcohol.
* Gorgonites. Justified by the fact they are in essence miniature androids. Although, the company that sells them promoted them as the bad guys.
* Grrl Power. The fact that Anvil took this as an opportunity to prank them both by giving them a group hug, in such a way they were facing (and touching) each other only made it... more difficult for both of them. It did lead to Maxima admitting that she would be interested if he weren't her subordinate.
* Heir Apparent; every time she dies in the game, the game starts over.
* Guilty Gear takes an even more minimalistic approach with the villain simply called "That Man".
* Gone with the Wind manages to get him to let her in where he's sitting with the body, and then nothing is heard from them for hours...until Melanie comes out and says that Rhett's OK with the funeral taking place. Margaret Mitchell was asked about what they did, and her response was "Oh, dear, even the most virtuous women must be careful..." but did not directly deny or confirm the fans' speculation.
* having eyes only for Akane and The Pigtailed Girl, doodles on her face instead. Mariko laughs it off, but every single bystander is outraged at Kuno for being so lucky and yet so stupid.
* Guybrush Threepwood's first name is an example of this. "Guybrush" comes in part from Deluxe Paint, the tool used by the artists to create the character sprite. Since the character had no name at this point, the file was simply called 'Guy'. When the file was saved, Steve Purcell, the artist responsible for the sprite, added 'brush' to the filename, indicating that it was the Deluxe Paint "brush file" for the "Guy" sprite. The file name was then "guybrush.bbm", so the developers eventually just started referring to this unnamed 'Guy' as "Guybrush".
* he fears his heart is going to get broken a second time; the first was when his first love and childhood friend Joani Jump moved out of town. Or maybe he who moved away from her.

* Hephaestus and Aphrodite. Because of how powerful Aphrodite is, she was married off to one man who couldn’t challenge Zeus’ rule. In contrast to Hades and Persephone, they are both unhappy with this union. Faithfulness is not in Aphrodite’s nature and she doesn't feel much for Hephaestus, so she is having affairs left and right. Hephaestus himself is very much aware of this trait of his wife as well as the fact why he was chosen to be her mate, which he found to be more insulting than her affairs or bastard children.
* Gustav Mahler's second and third symphonies are greatly expanded instrumental versions of the Lieder "Des Antonius von Padua Fischpredigt" and "Ablösung im Sommer."

* Hell on Wheels the people running the lawless town of Cheyenne consider cheating at cards sufficient provocation to justify someone getting shot. SSS9 kills him before the bombs can be turned off, leading to Godzilla breaking out and the two being the active threats for the rest of the film.
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating: Hani and Ishu are very much opposites in many ways. Hani is a Muslim, Ishu an atheist. Hani has long hair, Ishu short hair. Hani likes feminine things, Ishu doesn't. Hani is social, Ishu happily keeps to herself. Hani suffers from self-doubt, Ishu is confident of herself. Despite this, they fall for each other over time.

* Grey Goo (2015) over centuries of galactic isolation. A race of towering, four-armed alien refugees known as the "Beta" represent the game's battle-hardened, hard-nosed underdogs.
* Goldstein is in many ways the opposite of Harry, as he has a large, pleasant family and would rather be at home than learning to be a wizard at Hogwarts. Their Sortings are a good example of this: Harry is almost put in Slytherin and is noted to have a "thirst to prove himself," while the Hat quickly rejects the idea of putting Yehudah there, commenting that he prefers a quiet life over one of ambition. (To which Yehudah thinks, "Of course, who wouldn't?")
* Halo: Combat Evolved to have made his way through a decent part of the Flood-infested Library before getting overwhelmed by the monsters.
* Hark! A Vagrant, in which Richard III is preparing to kill the princes with 'dagger cake', only for a modern day historian to point out there was no proof Richard actually did it, and that both the Duke of Buckingham and Henry Tudor had good motives too. Then they notice Richard of York already ate the dagger cake.

* half the map in a straightish line, crushing any minion in his path until he reaches a champion, at which point said champion and all nearby other champions are hit extremely hard, and stunned. * Hercules: The Legendary Journeys where Ares is the God of Love, Cupid acts as the God of War. Ares calls him a maniac.
* Higurashi: When They Cry and Rika the real one. That being said, it's a sure thing she gets the most attention due to her popularity.
* Haley has a mysterious past. It may be revealed by the end of the strip, though.

* Hard Boiled: Chow Yun-Fat's Tequila blows up several motorcycles with what appear to be explosive shells from his shotgun during the big warehouse shootout.
* Half-Life: Full Life Consequences tricked and live and strong and big. However what the fan fiction calls "science" is debatable, since in many cases, it is referred to as a tangible object.
* Greater Houston during Hurricane Rita, before the storm moved north, due to the largest mass movement of civilians during peacetime. Any hurricane will result in a portion of the population moving to higher ground, helping to fulfill this trope for localized areas, but after seeing what happened to New Orleans the Houstonians understandably wanted to avoid it. To this day local citizens are still divided on whether to refer to 'Texodus' as an understandable precaution, a dry run for the next Cat 4/5, a panic-induced fiasco, or a combination of all of the above.
* Greg Warmoth, a newscaster from the local ABC affiliate in Central Florida, WFTV-9 (co-owned with WSB), can be seen briefly at the end of
* Hetalia: Axis Powers movie, England and France stumble upon a digital map of ongoing/successful invasions. England absent mindedly reaches out to touch the UK

* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban When even that doesn't succeed in shattering the glass, she just smashes it against the wall and then acts all surprised a moment later when she "notices" that it shattered.
* Gregg Easterbrook, espn.com NFL columnist, used to have a feature in his weekly Tuesday Morning Quarterback column called "Christmas Creep", where he would list real-life examples of this trope that he found or were submitted by his readers. It became SO common, however, that he abandoned it in favor of the Unified Field Theory of Creep, where he lists all non-Christmas versions of this.

* Hamilton where the three main female characters—Hamilton's wife Eliza, his sister-in-law Angelica, and his mistress Maria—are all defined by their relationship with him and/or other men, due to women being unable to take an active role in American politics in the 1700s. Subverted at the end though, where Eliza recounts her career as founder and headmistress of an orphanage, an endeavor she undertook on her own accord (though still inspired by Hamilton's past as an orphan).
* her stuck in his body. It eventually turns out that, because of both Xander and Karen's unique natures, the decision to dress as her on Halloween created a sort of anomaly within the multiverse. When the spell ended, Harris and Power Girl were both sent back to their respective universes, but along with this copies were created - a girl with Karen Starr's body but the memories of Xander Harris, and a boy with Xander's body and Karen's memories; both are essentially newborns, each deposited in universes where they now live as their "home" worlds (Marvel for the former, Alexandra Harris; Stargate for the latter), and while the latter's story is not followed it's suggested to be somewhat similar to Alex's (in terms of finding oneself and such).
* Goosebumps: In "Beware, the Snowman", Jaclyn DeForest runs into a living snowman in a mountain cave. The snowman claims he is her long lost father who was trapped in that form and trapped on the mountain by an evil witch. He gets her to recite a special song to free him. It turns out he is not her father, he is an evil demon whom the benevolent witch trapped.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series The Green Lantern Mogo the Living Planet.

* herself, having realized that she's been possessed by Khaless, making the saying of her name extra potent.
* Half-Life 1 being killed before your very eyes. In the Xen levels, this job is performed by HEV suit-clad corpses.
* Hide and Seek of her father David. However, the constant and ominous flashbacks shown in David's head every time just before he finds out that Charlie has been causing trouble again make it abundantly clear that at the very least, he's hiding something really big.
* Heroes, although they were still off by about a month). More explicitly, the fourth season/fifth volume says season one happened three years ago even though all the time that's passed up would be about 11 months since the beginning of the series.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 is covered in a beautiful golden metropolis so large it encompasses MULTIPLE planets anchored to the main planet by Anulax Batteries.
* GUN×SWORD appeared at 1:30 AM. Despite this, American audiences frequently tag it as a shonen series.

* Green Wing, Guy Secretan tries to prove his love by getting a tattoo of a Friesian cow on his rib cage, thinking it was Caroline Todd's favourite thing. She, however, meant freesia, the flower.
* Grailblazers is not only underwater, it keeps magically moving around, thus making it unlocateable by mainland governments. The Atlanteans take advantage of this to go into financial services, as the ultimate in offshore tax havens.
* "Hey, let's cut down production costs by taking out the funniest element of the movies, Michael Winslow's voice effects, and replace them with stock audio clips of the actual things he duplicates with his voice!"
* Growing Pains. The show was eventually cancelled when Kirk started to call the executive producers "pornographers" after they tried to go against his decisions.
* Gravity Falls. This is best demonstrated in "Society of the Blind Eye" where she helps Mabel talk about her "Summer Romances" problem. Subverted with her and Dipper though, namely because she sees him as an equal friend and vice versa (though Dipper sees her more than a friend.)
* Haunted Castle: A very old fortress or palace that is said to be haunted.
* Heel–Face Turn; her third WWC Women's Title run was from April 17th, 1993 to February 25th, 1998 when she had to vacate the belt due to an arrest.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, marking the spot with a cross on the trunk.
* Goodnight Punpun by Pegasus, and evidently the source of his supposed precognition.
* Highlander it seemed odd that the police could miss so many headless bodies showing up around the city. The introduction of the Watchers explains it as the spin-off media of books and such confirms that there's an entire sub-section of the Watchers embedded in media and law enforcement whose job is to bury these beheadings as best they can so no one else can make the connection. It's also indicated they try to hide any past records that would make someone realize that a person alive today looks exactly like someone who lived a century ago.
* Hikaru no Go: Hikaru Shindou who is around 12 years old at the beginning of the story, and Fujiwara Sai, who is a couple hundreds years old ghost.

* Hex had her eyes and mouth sewn shut in retaliation for supposedly murdering children.
* Hey Arnold! has a very grating high-pitched voice, especially when she gets excited or cries.
* Granny Weatherwax understands humor on a conceptual level, but has absolutely no sense of humor and has no understanding of how or why jokes work. Illustrated well in
* Hey Arnold!, who the other characters think is "dull" and "slow". His hobbies include counting things, reading ingredient labels (along with seemingly knowing what the ingredients are and how to pronounce them), and collections (specifically, balls of lint and "plain-flavored" gum), he displays muted outward signs of emotion, and he seems to have difficulty in social interaction (he constantly snorts and winks one eye at a time instead of blinking together).
* Halo. Guess the fight wasn't quite finished yet, huh? That the IP was not only given to a company that was set up for the express purpose of creating new Halo games, but is even named after a character in the series, has inevitably lead to claims from people that they are little more then a "franchise farm" for the series.
* Grojband: When the band splits up in "It's In the Card", Corey compensates by making a fake band out of junk he finds in the garage and pretending its real.
* Harry's late mother, Lily Potter (nee Evans) was born to an otherwise Muggle family. Like Hermione, she was an extremely talented witch in spite of this. Lily's sister and Harry's aunt Petunia, who is a Muggle, resented Lily's aptitude for magic, which led to her and Vernon Dursley's attempted (and unsuccessful) suppression of Harry's magical potential and

* Harry's least favorite teacher, Severus Snape. He made improvements to his textbook and invented his own spells while at school, is one of the few wizards capable of brewing the Wolfsbane Potion, and is the only wizard other than Voldemort capable of flight. Also, in the words of his actor in the films, he is a very interesting character.
* Harvest Moon to jump into the lake and accidentally drown trying to reach the Goddess.
* Here's a string from "Ice Cream of Margie (With the Light Blue Hair)", where Homer became an ice cream truck driver: "Our marriage is like soft-serve ice cream. And trust is the hard chocolate shell that keeps it from melting onto our carpet. In cone-clusion, here's the scoop: I love you."
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban: Pettigrew's been outed as guilty and is being turned in! They're going to prove Sirius' innocence! And then Harry can leave the horrible, abusive Dursleys and live with his godfather! Everything's going to be fantastic, everything's going fine, and, say, is that the full moon?... and didn't they just learn Lupin was a werewolf?... aw, shit.
* Grayson had a similar story with their inertial compensator. Unable to buy their own from their more advanced neighbors they were forced to invent their own from scratch and the resulting designs were rather underpowered compared to everyone else. That was only because of the crudity of the Grayson manufacturing base. The engineering principles behind them, however, turned out to be a major innovation and when applied to Manticore's start of the art technology proved to be a vast improvement over previous designs.

* Grrl Power have powers: commit a crime, you're a criminal, but stop one without being a part of the police, and you're a vigilante. One particular criminal has an ability that allows her to leave almost no trace (since she turns into marble)... but she takes selfies, which means it's just a matter of time before they catch her.
* Gunsmith Cats series, even though there was no real evidence that the mob had gotten out of control while she had amnesia, and that the person this was presented to had considerable first-person evidence to Goldie's status as a monster.

* Greenback Jane is a breather mini-arc. While it does have some disturbing moments, mostly it's just a Roanpur * highly specialized climbers Andy and Fränk Schleck. The 4-second lead Fränk had, and the 57-second lead Andy had, was not enough, as Evans beat Andy by 2.31 and Fränk by 2.34, leaving the brothers from Luxembourg in second and third.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy: In the garage, poltergeist Polterguy can activate a chainsaw a scare the crap out of the family members (mostly main antagonist Vito Sardini, because he hangs around here a lot).
* GURPS mentions, for no apparent reason, that the modifications that would make someone especially useful as an engineer on a starship also open up all kinds of kinky possibilities.
* Goat Simulator in the fact that it's a hilariously buggy mess; there's even an achievement for crashing the game!

* hashashim) were brainwashed to lay down their lives for the cult via a low-tech Lotus Eater Machine. New recruits would be drugged unconscious, then awaken in a "paradise" garden full of luxurious feasts and beautiful women, only to be "restored to life" after a night's indulgence with the promise of a return to that place of pleasure upon death. The banquets, garden, and female companionship were, of course, all set up in advance by the cult's leaders, the better to ensure the recruits' compliance with their often-suicidal tasks as assassins. (Better understanding of Nizari beliefs about the afterlife, plus the conspicuous absence of any such garden in or near the real sect's historical base of operations, have helped to debunk this account.)

* Gundam: Most of the attention is on the Mechs, but they're often supported by Armored Vehicles, Infantry, and other craft (Including Land Battleships, Mobile Armors, and Airborne Spaceships). Newtypes would be an example of Extoic Infantry/Pilots.
* Had Tarkin not intervened first, the Tusken would have been faced with Obi-Wan Kenobi, who would have made short work of the chief and chased away the rest. In fact a later chapter reveals he was already walking to their camp, and only Tarkin having a speeder and thus arriving first kept him from doing the job himself.
* Grojband. They are completely obsessed with Grojband. In "Group Hug", they kidnap Corey and hold him prisoner in their Grojband shrine untill he writes a song about them.
* Gundam state that "Earth is the ring"... shown by the existence of laser boxing-ring ropes circling the planet, which a Gundam actually bounces off. Most of the well-off people live in space colonies.
* Golem!Crystal eventually kill her by dropping her into a pit of lava.
* Heroes of Time have two options. Either A) They change destiny and cause a branch timeline, or B)
* H. Beam Piper. The concept is made more believable by using siloxanes (alternating silicon-oxygen chains), some of which are pliable at what we consider room temperature. Piper didn't come up with idea - he was presented with an introductory essay by Dr. John D. Clark describing life on both Uller and Niflheim (see entry below under "Other Elements".
* Gravity Falls: Two words. "Grammar, Stanley." It's enough to completely ruin the gang's attempt to prevent the apocalypse, because Ford just HAD to have the last word.
* Happy Days was probably the most important place in the show. It's where all the kids hung out, Fonzie's office was in the bathroom, and it's owner, first Arnold then Al, were major supporting characters.

* Halo 5: Guardians, Fireteam Osiris has to help evacuate the Arbiter after the Covenant lay siege to his forces holed up in Nuusra's Elder Council Chamber.
* Harry Callahan as the Weapon Of Choice for badasses everywhere. The size of the weapon reflects his lack of subtlety.
* He also waits until his victims are dead when in a private moment he gloats by overseeing the re-purposing of an enemy heirloom (Ned Stark's sword 'Ice') for his own family with smug satisfaction, and throws the sword's wolf pelt sheath in the flames, celebrating the Lannisters triumph over the Starks.

* Go to Hell! planning to set up a colony on Earth and rule it, but is opposed by his rebellious teenage son Red who helps the apes evolve and teaches them free will.

* Grand Piano Keys: No matter how well you do, the round stops after 20 seconds without a satisfying ending.
* Helluva Boss: In Episode 3, Moxie gets super-drunk after getting locked inside a beer keg and drinking half of it so he could breathe. After Millie gets him out, Moxie looks up at her with a goofy grin and says "When did you get four heads? I wanna kiss 'em!" before making smooching gestures.
* Harry Potter, the cubs and adults of the Pack know this can easily happen, so they have the Hypocrisy Agreement, which states that the adults cannot take the cubs to task for things the adults themselves did. As the adults (at least, Remus and Sirius) were notorious pranksters, it gives the cubs a bit of leeway.

* Group B rally series of the 1980s was based around a relaxed set of homologation rules, freeing manufacturers from the requirement to build their rally cars with one eye on commercial mass-production. The cars quickly transformed from rear-wheel-drive models powered with 200 bhp engines into four-wheel-drive monsters with 400 bhp turbo-supercharged engines stuffed into kevlar bodies that only vaguely resembled the family hatchbacks they were based on. The series developed a dangerous reputation, and in 1985 driver Attilio Bettega was killed during the mountainous Tour de Corse, when his car left the road and hit a tree. Things finally came to a head in 1986; in March, Joaquim Santos crashed into a wall of spectators, killing three, and in May Henri Toivonen and his co-driver were burned to death when their car plunged off the road and caught fire, also during the Tour de Corse. Group B was immediately cancelled.
* GURPS is all about this when discussing high tech levels. Aside from the various new pieces of tech presented in the book (including a sentient sponge-brain-tree-Neo Christian house) the writers also suggest that one can simply treat advanced technology from other sourcebooks as being organic in origin.
* he also probably has to do with it as well, as they are the first line of Japanese Vocaloids to be released.

* Hallis Saper that people don't recognize her (since, after all, they're expecting the two-headed lady).
* Half-Life in Opposing Force, where they received their current name and are established to be US Marines, this new characterization creates whole new problems:
* Groundskeeper Hagrid is revealed midway through the series to be half-giant; his father, a wizard, was entirely human, but his mother was a giantess (it's best not to consider the logistics of it).
* Gundam Build Fighters, builder-pilot teams have the builder in back. We only see three pairs though (Sei and Reji, Allen and the Meijin, and the Rennato brothers.) How much they do varies from pair to pair. Allen hardly does anything (that we see), and half the time he isn't even there. The Rennato brothers had the GIB operate their independent weapons. Sei acts as a spotter, as well as handling the special systems.
* Granolah of his titular arc starts leaning into this hard once he finds out Frieza's alive as it was Frieza's forces that killed his original people back in the past using Saiyans.

* Hannibal, in which Starling gives officers a pre-arrest warning that their HIV-positive arrest target likes to hide syringes in her hair, knowing that law-enforcement officers like to shove their suspect down by the head when putting them in the car.
* Gremlins, with the Gremlins being far more violently evil than their 'cause general disruption' attitude in the movie.
* Hidden Figures was rated PG, despite the filmmakers likely aiming for a PG-13 with the occasional use of words like "shit." Because of this, schools felt more comfortable taking students to see the film on field trips.
* "Here There be Tygers" has an entire planet as one of these. The planet is very friendly and wants to do anything to please the astronauts who landed there, from creating fish that cook themselves to perfect weather up to attractive female companions. When several of the astronauts leave, one decides to stay behind. Despite the planet appearing unfriendly with volcanoes appearing on it, the astronauts know the one who remained will be spoiled rotten by the planet. The astronauts decide to list the planet as unfriendly since it would be to those who would exploit it (rather than appreciate its gifts).
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name, he's a bit in denial about being dead, and he's angry at Zombie for getting a second chance at life.
* Goldfinger). Fröbe was such a good actor that the dub is completely unnoticeable.
* Greater God. Strange, by all accounts, quite literally strolled away whistling, leaving him on a plate for Dumbledore.
* Greek Mythology. She also defies her uncle Creon when he orders to not give burial to her brother's corpse, and prefers execution rather than renouncing to her beliefs.
* Hilariously, this is how the entire crew reacts to the prospect of Mal/Zoe. Even the shockingly crude, meat head mercenary Jayne. ("Now, somethin' 'bout that is just downright unsettlin'.")
* Halo elected by a council of elders. However, Elites also believe in meritocracy, and serfs who prove themselves can become part of the main keep, while even Elites of noble birth are not allowed to know the identity of their parents, in order to minimize nepotism.

* High School Musical: Troy and Gabriella. They meet at a ski lodge in Colorado, where a stranger literally picks them out of a crowd and forces them to sing together. They're totally smitten but think they'll never see each other again. Then voilà! Gabriella's transferred straight into Troy's form class in Albuquerque.
* GTA Radio was arrested for trying to take advantage of a cheerleader while working at a school.
* Hello Mary Lou: Prom Night II The song "Hello Mary Lou" by Ricky Nelson (which the writers presumably named the character after) is sort of a trademark favorite song for the titular villain and comes on the radio and the like whenever she's in the vicinity. The problem is the song came out in 1961, while in the movie she dies in 1957. You could say she heard the song and started liking it after she died, however the movie implies her spirit has been lying dormant for decades and is "awakened" when the protagonist opens an old trunk holding her clothes and tiara, not to mention that "she still listens to the radio as a ghost" is a pretty weird explanation to start with.
* Green's My Favorite Color: Harley Quinn is covered in bruises from her boyfriend's abuse. When questioned about them by Poison Ivy, she says that they're from being a criminal and getting into fights with Batman.

* Hatoful Boyfriend the human girl comments on how much she misses the fluffy little heretic.
* Happy Happy Clover starts becoming more serious and filled with drama in the fifth volume which is also the final entry of the series.
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah. The military's cold-based weaponry, especially on the Super-X III, excel at freezing Godzilla to keep his temperature from rising for several precious hours and stopping the aggregate forms of Destoroyah. However, once Destoroyah goes into his three larger forms and Godzilla temperature passes a certain point the military becomes useless again until Godzilla's rage and temperature reach the point where Destoroyah is superheated by him and tries to flee only to be quick-frozen by the Super-X III and Freeze Masers and shattered by the plunge to the ground, then the weapons keep Godzilla from exploding or super-melting and only having a local meltdown.

* Guild Wars 2 gives us the Skritt, who have a unique form of Hive Mind. They all have individual intelligence, but the more Skritt are around each other at a time, the smarter they get. Form up a whole Warren (underground city) and they rather effortlessly start repurposing snatched Asura and Charr tech into their own proto-industrial revolution. When there's only one or two around, though, they have the minds of the rodents they evolved from and are basically this trope made flesh.

* Hero: 108: Lin Chung is usually portrayed as the calm and collected warrior and leader of First Squad, but he does have his moments of levity, like whenever he gets too wrapped up in drawing to focus on the battlefield...Or really anything else.
* Good Omens (2019) a literal angel, but the emphasis Crowley places on it makes it clear that it's more than just a statement of fact.

* Hilariously parodied when introducing Sunny to Liz. The remark in the final panel is priceless.
* Gotham utterly in the dark after his involvement with the mob, presenting himself as a simple nightclub employee (and later, owner), so that she can be proud of him. When Maroni (who can't touch Penguin while he's under Falcone's protection) strikes at Penguin by telling his mother the truth, Penguin swears revenge, and once in private later, breaks down in tears.
* Guns N' Roses (Jersey Jack): The mode "Shall We Play a Game?" situates the player in a war of propaganda between America and China, helping the former outdo the latter in terms of dispersing their values to each other. The former is visually suggested to be spreading virtues like freedom and justice to China, therefore implying that the latter is instead repressive.
* has some recorded evidence. When United States border patrol agents near El Paso, Texas tried to supplement their horseback patrols with a squad of camels, the camels so profoundly scared the horses that they were nearly unridable if there was a camel within several hundred yards. The project was scrapped shortly thereafter.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas has the Rockstar Games and Rockstar North logos appearing on screen with the sound of spray cans, kinda like graffiti (fitting for the game's 90s-era hip-hop mood).
* Gosick shows that she had to be physically overpowered by her captor after fighting back, which you think would have at least left a mark or two.
* Gotta Catch Them All!: A set of items which the characters all want to collect.
* GO-GO Tamagotchi! episode 3b, during class, Neenetchi notices Himespetchi doodling her crush Mametchi.
* gospel of Luke, Jesus Himself challenges this thinking when there were present at that time some who told Him of the Galileans whose blood Pontius Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices. To that, He said, “Do you suppose that these Galileans were worse sinners than all the other Galileans, because they suffered such things? I tell you, no! But unless you repent, you will all likewise perish. Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell and killed them, do you think that they were worse offenders than all men living in Jerusalem? I tell you, no! But unless you repent, you will all likewise perish.” (Luke 13:2-5)
* Happens to women often when promoted from an independent promotion to a major one and/or because of a poorly-executed gimmick change.
* Godslayer Chronicles or "humors" that are given by the gods, which hold the god's powers and are combined in various ratios to produce magic. The one rule to mixing is that blood must always be present, it functions as the activator and no magic can exist without it. Therefore it is also the most sacred and closely guarded of the humors.
* Hangman and seeking revenge against Two-Face and everyone who helped pre-Two-Face Harvey Dent's rise as District Attorney (as Dent's first act as Two-Face is to kill her father).
* Have a popular superhero make a random appearance, and put him on the cover.
* Harvest Moon DS Cute. Claire is very aggravated that no one in her town recognizes her and Keira as lovers. Everyone simply sees them as "best friends" who live together. Claire chocks it up to small-town homophobia and it only makes her more miserable with her life in Forget-me-not Valley.
* He doesn't say it out loud (and it's implied that he doesn't really need to), but Varric has a moment of this kind of thinking in the * Heart of Steel, Shark Reef Isle has a number of these patrolling the island lair of super-villain Alistair Mechanus, variously resembling insects or floating balls.

* Gohan has this as well, subtly: whenever he is powerful enough to overcome his opponents with ease, he lets the power get to his head. Despite being powerful enough to end the fight, he'll toy with his opponent and put them into a corner, forcing them to lash out and overcome his power, as both Cell and Super Buu can attest. In Cell's case, this turned out to be a mistake which ended up costing him his father when Cell decided to try to blow up the planet.
* H. G. Wells. The future technocrats literally live in crystal spires and wear togas. The preface to the published script gives the rationale for the costuming which "cries aloud for cloaks, the most dramatic of garments."
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Ukraine's boobs cause a button on her shirt to pop off. She's later seen sewing it back on.
* Gundam kicked it into overdrive by having Zeon start slapping German names on practically everything and using flags and banners that were literally just Nazi trappings with the Swastika replaced by their own emblem; the franchise has kept running with the theme and hasn't looked back since.
* "Harmony" has a drifter who wanders into a town where music and singing is outlawed due to fear it will attract a monster. The drifter and a like-minded mother and child try to convince the townspeople this is nonsense, but they form an angry mob and attack them. Against all odds, the drifter manages to sing "Amazing Grace", and nothing happens. The townspeople joyously start singing and celebrating him as a hero for banishing their superstitions...then the monster shows up and kills them all.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army movies in mind, so we may see them eventually.
* Grampa in Oz, when the main characters climb into a hollow tree trunk to escape some enemies and end up falling for “a mile and twenty minutes”. * Hey Arnold!-like game on his computer, until an unamused Arnold sees it and shuts the computer off.
* Half-Life 1 and natural racial abilities. This could be considered an inversion actually, as despite the aliens' physical superiority it was pretty clear they couldn't stand up to the United States alone, let alone the whole Earth. However, afterwards, the non-sapient Xen beasts (mostly Antlions) overran the planet, killing off a ton of native Earth fauna and forcing humans to barricade themselves in their cities.
* Greg's nickname, when he was younger, was Greg the Egg due to how "misshapen" he was.
* Higurashi: When They Cry, some early-arc scenes are omitted or moved to completely different arcs despite being referenced later in the arc in oblique ways:

* Goosebumps features a creepy old woman who crafts dolls, but doesn't include facial features on her creations. It is later revealed that she uses a type of magical gel (referred to as "dolly jelly" by the protagonist's younger brother) which not only robs the unfortunate victims of their faces, which then end up on the specific doll, but their souls apparently become trapped in the dolls, too.
* Hidamari Sketch are often colored this way, whether they're hairless and limbless, shaped like restroom signs, or detailed in the outline but still a solid color.
* Goosebumps series can have some particularly interesting plotlines and villains, but the majority of a book usually focuses far too much on kids doing goofy things until the scary stuff happens.
* Harry Potter attractive. Also, Colin Creevey has become rather tall and good looking. There are a few fics out there that sometimes depict Neville has having grown out of his awkward younger phase and becoming something of a stud. No doubt, there is some influence the similar transformation of Matthew Lewis, the actor who plays Neville in the films.
* Halo 3 Covenant Phantoms to hell with a relentless bombardment of missiles. It will also shoot at any surviving Covenant infantry, often to comedic effect.
* half the implicit timeline of previous seasons. * Going Postal Soul Jars. These are apparently old jam-jars scrounged from the nearby kitchen, each labelled with the name of the temporarily dead Wizard and storing his essence. Mrs. Whitlow, the housekeeper, has insisted each jar now carries a small fetish doll of a wizard to prevent misunderstandings, as apparently a cook in a hurry scrounged what he thought was an empty jar to decant peanut butter into. The fate of that Wizard is un-known but may have included toast.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, after Harry has used magic to defend the lives of himself and his cousin, the Ministry sends hims a letter stating that he has in fact been suspended from Hogwarts and that a ministry official would arrive soon to destroy his wand (which they don't have the authority to do either, at least not without a trial). * Heroes of Might and Magic, animated with the same video engine as the rest of the game. In actual gameplay, Archdevils are vastly more powerful and can easily kill whole squads of Inquisitors with a single swing of its mace, but no matter how long you leave the menu screen open, the two will still be deftly dodging and parrying each other's blows with no end of the battle in sight.

The third season finale has Nick finally learning that to a Wesen, a Grimm's eyes turn black when they wog, revealing what they are. Trubel starts wearing sunglasses in order to conceal her being a Grimm from Wesen. Nick also wears sunglasses during Monroe and Rosalee's wedding, as the majority of the guests are Wesen, and no one wants to start a panic.
* Hello Cheeky, has no steady rhythm as the singer can't think of a rhyme for Agnes.
* Highlander III: The Sorcerer, the villain Kane and his two immortal companions are buried inside Nakano's cave when it collapses after his death, with only Connor escaping. Since they're immortal they don't die however, and are incredibly pissed off when they are released centuries later.
* Haruka's alternate self, Konoha, becomes this when he is possessed by the Snake of Clearing Eyes.
* Harry Rex Vonner, another recurring Grisham lawyer, isn't above bugging a jury room.
* He makes a good case for his own personhood shortly thereafter, seemingly passing the test. However he's not perfect, and is still prone to glitches.
* help guide them into the industrial revolution for them, much to their delight, so he contents himself with at least contributing that much to their quality of life.
* Hidden & Dangerous minor upgrade. It doesn't seem to have sold well, and eventually became a free download that included a mission editor.
* Haruhi-chan restores her being... but ends up as the incredibly cute and tiny Achakura. Nagato takes her home.

* Guild Wars 2 in the form of downed skills is this, as it gives players a chance to recover after getting their HP depleted and avoid death.
* Hack/Slash villain Ashley Guthrie initially had the ability to kill people in their dreams.
* Gravity Falls: Dipper and Wendy come to this conclusion in "Into The Bunker", partially cause she likes him better as a friend and partially because she's fifteen while he's twelve-going-on-thirteen and it's clearly a puppy dog crush on his part.
* Goblet of Fire, Winky the house-elf drinks several bottles of Butterbeer a day after being fired by Mr. Crouch. Butterbeer is a very mild drink for humans (children can drink it without any problem) but it's pretty strong for house-elves.
* God-Emperor had fathered quite a few children in his 39,000 years. Known as the Sensei, they were also immortals with psychic powers, and were hunted down by the Inquisition either to make more psyk-out weapons or to sacrifice them to jump-start the Emperor.
* Heechee Saga, the vessels left behind by the alien Heechee have V-shaped seats which are uncomfortable for human crew.
* Golden Earring: In 1974, their driving song "Radar Love" became a top 20 hit in the U.S., a rarity for a Dutch band. Like most acts from non-English speaking countries, they were destined to be one-hit wonders. Then, in 1982, the "Bourne Identity" inspired "Twilight Zone" sparked a brief comeback. After that, they were gone for good, though they are still hugely iconic in their native Netherlands.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, the cavalry arrives during the Battle of Hogwarts: Harry seems to have died, Voldemort has set the Sorting Hat on fire while Neville is wearing it, the Death Eaters seem to have won... and suddenly there are four cavalries coming at the same time: an army of centaurs from the forest, Buckbeak the hippogriff leading a pack of Thestrals, the house-elves from the kitchens, and Professor Slughorn, an old man thought to have left Hogwarts, who actually went to gather reinforcements and led the inhabitants of the town of Hogsmeade and the relatives of the Hogwarts students in a charge that finally turns the tables against the Death Eaters.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix. When Harry, Ron, Hermione, Neville, Ginny and Luna are running away from shelves of crystal balls falling like dominoes in a straight line, initially they don't run to the side out of the path of the falling shelves. They eventually turn around and run in another straight line to the emergency exit door, but the shelves also fall to the sides as well because the shelves falling in one direction also touched the ones to the sides.
* Hidden Temple map, also known as the aptly named Labyrinth Forest, has absolutely no real pattern in how its 25 areas connect with each other. Players can ends up going into the same area over and over again, so more often that not,
* Harry Potter, much like the movies, is a series that's much better to read in a short timeframe, especially after the fourth book really kicked the overarching plot into high gear, though the three books before it were no slouches at setting up plot threads and characters that would become much more important later on.
* Harry Potter elements appeal to adventure lovers, the detailed relationships appeal to romance lovers, the complex mysteries and sharp (and occasionally subversive) wit appeal to adults, and the colorful characters and exciting plot developments appeal to everyone.
* Gospel of Mark, when Jesus is baptized, the heavens split in half and God announces that Jesus is His son. At the Crucifixion of Jesus, a curtain depicting the heavens in the Temple of Jerusalem tears in half and exposes the Ark of the Covenant (figuratively God's presence, representing his departure from the Temple).
* Glider PRO environment. Only the glider itself still looked the same, except for a temporary transformation into a dolphin.
* Good Boys - Seth Rogen's prior comedy before this one - had bombed). It therefore came as a surprise when it got positive reviews and overperformed in it's opening weekend, being the first live action and completely original movie of 2019 to top the box office in it's opening weekend. Most of the positive reviews praised the movie for being a genuinely mature coming of age story.

* Hilda uses her cute looks and charm into suckering people (mostly men) into doing things for her and she is one of the very few characters who is strongly implied to have had sex before an S-support, as she attempts to get an oblivious Caspar alone in her room with her.
* Half-Human Hybrid: A being who is one-half human and one-half something that isn't human.
* Going Another Way who gives out these. The three people who got these were Shinji (a misunderstanding), Asuka (for disrespecting her and Shinji's relationship) and Gendo (for obvious reasons).
* Hero with Bad Publicity: The reputedly scary guy may not be so bad in person.
* her Self-Harm after she sees Weiss rubbing her stomach in a similar way.
* Haggunenons, to be replaced by Disaster Area. The TV series followed suit. This also eliminated the only actual appearance of the Ravenous Bugblatter Beast of Traal, still mentioned in some Guide entries that were moved up earlier in the books. The reason for this seems to be that the Haggunenons were largely a John Lloyd idea and Adams didn't want the complications of including concepts that weren't his.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City. While Tommy Vercetti starts the game in the dumps after a failed deal and has to work hard to earn back the fortune he lost, dealing with enemies both within and without... By the end of it, he owns the entire city's underbelly, all his rivals are dead and he's free to enjoy his fabulous life.
* Godzilla vs. Biollante: The titular Biollante's final form has a technique where she can expand her jaws into something resembling a grotesque, fleshy flower; it's fitting, considering that Biollante's ancestry is one-third plant, one-third human, and one-third Godzilla.
* Goosebumps series is heading this route too. A few protagonists from earlier books have appeared, all still the same age as they were over ten years ago in real time.
* Gone Are the Dayes the family of 4 witnessed a murder in a restaurant and the kids blabbed they've seen gangsters' faces. They have no choice, but to testify at the trial. FBI's solution: relocate them to a remote town and change their lifestyle completely. Next problem: in this new life they quickly end up becoming famous as local political activists and appear on TV. FBI relocates them again, yet they attract attention again.
* Glory opens with the Army of the Potomac marching to the Battle of Antietam in 1862 along with the Army of Northern Virginia coming to meet them followed by a brief but violent sequence of the battle itself. The climax of the film is the (Second) Assault on Fort Wagner in 1863.
* Hayate the Combat Butler already has a full-time job as a maid, and is also mistaken for being in her late twenties or early thirties because of her maturity level.
* Heaven Scent has Penelope cornered at Echo Point and decides to try something.
* Hiimdaisy comic uses this, in context of when the Shadow of a character appears, but only got this on Yukiko and Kanji's.
* Hangmen Also Die! does this to himself after being brought to the Gestapo headquarters by jumping out of a window to his death rather than be interrogated.
* He does eventually come back. The very person responsible for it points out the minor flaw in Dan's approach
* Harry Harrison": Andriad has few metals, so table knives and coins are made from tempered glass.
* : Harry Potter, turned into a weapon by the Ministry after the Prophecy was made, decides to take revenge on the magical world when it turns on him and his best friend, Neville Longbottom. He studies the scientific principles behind magic and ends up creating incredibly advanced technology (artificial gravity, teleportation, matter manipulation). This eventually leads to the destruction of the Magical World as it is forced out of its self-imposed exile.
* Gundam SEED Destiny, begins introducing wireless weapons that don't require spatial awareness. It also introduced DRAGOONs that can emit beam blades, functioning as melee weapons rather than just ranged ones.

* "Going Back to my Roots" was written and originally released by Lamont Dozier in 1978, four years before the more famous version by Odyssey.
* Grand Finale played with the format by having the heroes purposefully self destruct their spaceship base to deter their enemies.
* Gone with the Wind, it ensured that adult characters using euphemistic profanities in the movies could never quite be taken seriously anymore.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters Rhouglar, which ends with Servantis kicking Rhouglar out a window. The fall isn't far enough to kill him, but he's left heavily injured.
* Hawkeye. She gives Deadpool a thumbs up and then turns around and silently screams at Clint.
* Hamlet almost ends up with no survivors at all, when Horatio attempts to poison himself and die with Hamlet. It's only Hamlet's intervention that stops it. Horatio's attempted suicide is actually him trying to follow Hamlet to hell, as it was believed that suicide would damn someone to there.
* have. So what do you do when you are in a brand new navy and nobody has done it yet? In the case of the first US Navy Line Crossing, the crew of a Royal Navy warship that just so happened to be in the same part of the ocean turned up to help.
* Henry Danger. Henry goes through a bad day where he is constantly being hurt or pranked. After a battle with the titular bad guy, Henry goes back to the morning and has to relive the same day over again. This time, he avoids all of the injuries and pranks, but messes up Jasper's model and keeps Charlotte from joining a special academic group. Ultimately, he realizes he has to go back and relive the day over again, suffering all of his ills so that his friends' accomplishments are restored.
* Have You Tried Rebooting?: Solving a problem with the computer by just turning it off and then turning it back on.
* Gosunkugi once receives a mail-order armor which he puts on to help him overpower Ranma. It turns out that there's a mechanism installed into it (described in the instruction manual and all), which will cause the armor to blow up if he doesn't defeat Ranma within a certain time limit.
* Hercules ends with Hercules being accepted into Olympus with all the gods, then-realizing that he couldn't be with Meg that way — opting to remain mortal instead of ascending to godhood. Of course, isn't surprising, considering the reason he became a god was because he decided to sacrifice himself for Meg in the first place.
* Gung Holier Than Thou since becoming a "Rope" gives them a measure of authority to rat their fellow Airmen out to the sergeants.
* Hentai Kamen, a superhero who fights with a pair of panties to cover his face and a really small pair of underwear to cover everything else.
* Gunnerkrigg Court: "Of all the pages I've drawn so far, this is one of them."
* Götterdämmerung, Siegfried - having been given an antidote to the potion that made him forget about his love for her - relieves his first kiss with Brünhild in his dying moments, after Hagen stabs him in the back. Later on Brünhild, who co-engineered Siegfried's death after he betrayed her while in his mindwiped state, makes a huge declaration of her love for Siegfried before she leaps into his funeral pyre and burns herself to death with him.
* Gratuitous Ninja: Nothing makes a show more awesome than ninjas. Doesn't matter what the setting is.
* Gundam as humanity started to live in space colonies instead of the Earth's surface.
* GrimGrimoire has golems as an alchemy unit. They function as siege tanks because of their incredibly long attack range. Being technically mindless, they're also immune to the Homunculi's Psi Storm.
* Halo with regard to the Flood Combat Forms. After becoming Flood, the head is useless and they can lose it with no real problem. But the vital zone is their chest, where the Infection Form is. After having their chest destroyed, the Combat Form is effectively killed... until another Infection Form comes along and reanimates it. The only way to ensure no reanimation is to destroy the corpse (most efficient way is to burn it, but continually shooting/meleeing it also works).

* Gremlins it happens to a gremlin when Lynn stuffs it into the microwave and turns it on.
* Hellboy makes his first appearance, he has an owl perched on his arm.
* H. Beam Piper in 1975, awoke in his thirteen-year-old body in 1945. Being a trained chemist with the scientific knowledge of 1975, he'd have an advantage going into the chemical industry; he also had quite a good memory for horse-race winners. He planned to build a fortune and use it to prevent the war he'd died in by, among other things, getting his father elected president in 1960. Two of Piper's later stories, set in the '60s, imply that he was successful in that part, at least.
* Happy Tree Friends counts, although some characters do tend to ham it up more than others; Nutty, Cuddles, Lifty and Shifty, Lumpy, Russell, Disco Bear and Mime are the most prominent examples.
* Helen lowers her neckline to show Jekyll a birthmark and asks what he thinks; he responds "That's a very lovely neck" before verbally backspacing.
* GURPS makes brain implants practically the only cybernetics still in common use.
* Go Tell It on the Mountain, the protagonist John Grimes spends a lot of time admiring his Sunday School teacher, Elisha, especially his "leanness, and grace, and strength" and would often be too distracted to follow the lesson. Baldwin, who was himself gay, freely admitted that the novel is semi-autobiographical.
* Harlem Beat: there are the Three Men team, Shades, Ultraman (his shades even shaped like Ultraman’s eyes!), and Kojiya twins from Kyan.
* Greek Gods that make gods flee from Olympus, mom, Echnida, is a giant multiple-headed snake and their children are several well-known monsters, including Cerberus, Hydra and Chimera. Incidentally, Typhon is related to the Greek Gods by way of their grandmother, Typhon's mother, Gaea.

* Green Arrow, Roy later upgraded his skillset to include use of knives, billy clubs, hand guns, boomerang, sniper rifles and bolas.
* Guilty Gear Xrd came with the soundtrack, and several key chains. Should be noted however, that previous iterations of the saga came with artbooks, soundtrack and keychains, the most complete version is the one from Accent Core Plus.
* Haruhi Suzumiya is described as being stunningly beautiful in both the novels and the anime.
* Hack/Slash, which is not so much literally Hell as a dimension with demons in it. People don't necessary go there if they die, but those who know about it still call it Hell anyway.
* Grand Theft Auto The Epsilon Program, for example, is just as influential in the HD generation as in previous ones, and Lazlow is not only still a celebrity, but a much bigger one than in the preceding generation. Members of the fictional band Love Fist also appear in games from both generations.
* Green Lantern, who is a former Air Force pilot and later test pilot. His callsign is "Highball", which comes from an old railroad term used to signal that the way was clear for the train to pass without delay, meaning essentially "Full Speed Ahead", fitting with Hal's reckless personality. One of his pilot buddies, Jillian Pearlman, has the callsign "Cowgirl", on account of the cowboy hat she always wears.
* Godzilla vs. Evangelion: The Real 4-D, repeatedly jumping onto Godzilla and trying to pummel him to no avail.
* Had a fascination for gadgets and cars, which cropped up in the Third Doctor's stories. In fact, one car used by the Doctor during his run, known
* Harry has a series of nightmares where Snape is his father. He attributes the second one to too much chocolate cake before bed.
* has no legs), it's still a very long way from convincing. It fooled Strong Mad, though.
* Halo) has a propensity to devolve into Calvinball unless a single person or dedicated group is trying to create something specific (thus keeping everyone on task). Without it, people start pointing gravity lifts everywhere and coming up with arcane, arbitrary, and ridiculous challenges. Such maps end up filled with whatever caught their occupants' fancy in their item spawn frenzy, and they're almost always deleted afterwards.

* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality cannot be killed by any means, magical or otherwise.
* He's a colonel, not a sergeant, but the commander of Fort Drakon in
* Hellboy, has admitted he likes drawing monkeys. Especially gorillas with bolts in their neck, which is why Hermann von Klempt has a series of enhanced gorillas ("Kriegaffen", or "war apes") as aides. In addition, Count Guarino is turned into a chimpanzee during "Box Full of Evil". A monkey that carries a pistol and tortures Abe with a burning poker.
* Gosei Sentai Dai Ranger there's the very high ranking Gorma leader, Archbishop Saw, who initially subverts this trope, being able to hold his own against the DaiRangers. During the mecha battle, his advanced age is apparent as he is too slow to hit Dairenoh and he's stunned for a surprisingly long time after getting hit, allowing him to be finished off. In his younger years, he may have wiped the floor with Dairenoh and survived its finisher, but as an old man, he's much less effective.
* Hangmen Also Die!. By this time, they have already killed him, however. To add insult to injury, they decide to close the case with Czaka as the official culprit in order to save face (having failed to uncover the real assassin despite the harsh reprisals).
* Hercules, the girl Herc is in love with. He immediately leaves to warn Herc, and misses the part where Meg refuses to go along with Hades' plan anymore.
* High Impulse Weapon System is a recoil damped shoulder-fired weapon, approximately equivalent to a mortar round. The video notable includes both someone firing it who is used to the recoil, and someone who isn't.
* Her counterpart Good Bun-Bun from the Dimension of Lame has a similar purity, although he's smarter than she is. Actually,
* GURPS, the descriptions of bushwolves, paladins, treetippers, and milkfish (native non-magical animals) sound like thylacines, glyptodonts, giant sloths, and manatees. The different names make sense since the medieval-era Earth natives who had been brought to Yrth by the Banestorm had never seen them before (they were either extinct, or from lands their original cultures had not yet encountered) and gave them their own names.
* GURPS kinetic weapons generally do far more raw damage than energy weapons. Early lasers are also very dangerous to use as the chemical fumes slowly kill the wielder.
* Gravity Falls has at least one critical flaw that tends to kickstart the conflict of the stories:
* Good Samaritan: A person who helps whenever they see someone needing it.
* Halo. An enemy killed by shooting often fires a couple rounds into the floor before dying. These actually can hurt you so be careful, especially if the gun is the Brute Shot or Fuel Rod Gun. Fortunately, these shots can also kill your enemies.
* He's proved right: by the time of the final book in the series (set forty years after the initial four books dealing with the invasion) Earth culture is invading the Lizards' one, their military position on Earth is weaker than ever, and the US, having
* Harry Turtledove, following the [Star][number] convention. They call their latest target Tosev 3, the third planet from the star Tosev. The Tosevite locals call it Earth.

* Goodbye My Princess: Cheng Yin becomes increasingly vengeful and cruel after he learns who killed his mother and Cheng Ji.
* Hartigan from "That Yellow Bastard" goes through even worse hell than Wallace for the sake of a little girl who grows up to be one of Sin City's best-known strippers. It's more the fact that this is all

* Good Luck Charlie to speed the cooking time. The ensuing explosion launches the turkey into the air and it falls on Teddy. The family ends up eating sandwiches that "may contain turkey" around her hospital bed.
* Hercules. Because Hercules' strength often causes accidents, Hercules is shunned by the community, even though he just wants to fit in. This desire fades after he becomes a hero and puts his strength to good use. Late in the movie, Hades forces him to give up his powers to save the life of his love interest. After Herc is drained, Hades pins him to the ground by throwing a barbell at him and stands over him, taunting:
* Greyhawk setting has Wastri, the god of amphibians and racism who hates all non-human humanoids but himself looks like some kind of toad/human hybrid
* Hellraiser, he shot a bladed chain at a guy's neck. After the blade punctured the neck, it unfolded and on the reverse move decapitated the poor s.o.b. Have a nice day.
* GURPS gives us the Chastity disadvantage, giving your Celibate Hero functional rules for what that entails.
* Green Lantern started a war that resulted in the death of his wife alongside many others. Kilowog also lost his family and home planet, but finds another alien and becomes a part of her family.
* Ground-Shattering Landing military gliders were used to drop troops, jeeps, light artillery and even light tanks, achieving a superior concentration of forces with better support assets than a parachute drop.
* Harry Potter more enjoyable experience when binging the movies that way.
* Hate at First Sight: Hating somebody the moment you lay eyes on them.
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret had Haruka excited to get a "PDS" or "Portable Dream Station". The visual representation made it some sort of crossbreed between a PSP and a DS.
* has a story of a technician teaching his daughter how to do his job. One of the things he teaches her is to remain calm while working. She takes this lesson a little too well because when she's doing her first hard drive swap, she says "Okay, the drive is on fire. Is that normal?" (It isn't and the drive is faulty.) Oddly enough, the more experienced one panics while the newbie remains perfectly calm.
* Glitch Techs: Bergy focuses more on dealing with low level glitches than boss level glitches like Mitch does. It’s not as exciting as fighting bosses but it is a lot safer and with how many low level glitches are ignored by other Glitch Techs, Bergy is able to grind just as much XP as anyone else at the store.
* Hatoful Boyfriend hijacks the booth and, to cover up the usual hosts yelling at him outside, he puts on his theme tune.
* Gregory Benford" creates food like eggs, sausage, and carrots, which are crafted to taste good to their audience.
* Green Lantern don't exercise the full advantage of imagination when wielding one. This is why people like Kyle Rayner, an artist, stand out. And when handled properly, John Stewart, an architect.
* Happens accidentally with Naruto and Hinata; Hinata can't keep her eyes open and nods off, her head against Naruto's shoulder, while Naruto is too panicked to move an inch because of this. Simultaneously played for laughs, cuteness, and drama;
* Golden Sun duology, the world's oceans and continents are now separated into layers, with the heroes' ship being unable to reach any continents other than their own due to the other continents being separated by waterfalls. Other than the addition of layers, the world is still a flat one but may revert back to its original shape in the years down the road since there's still natural activity happening in the world in the thirty year gap.
* Grand Theft Auto V takes place on a freezing December night in 2004. In Ludendorff, North Yankton's bank, decorations festoon the lobby, and a snowstorm is moving through town. It's a perfect night for a heist that culminates in an epic gunfight and police chase into the countryside.
* Gon) act pretty much like a dinosaur. None of the animal characters, Gon included, ever speak. Assumptions about how dinosaurs would act aside, Gon has a bizarre tendency to mimic other animals, often to hilariously destructive effect. Other times he prefers to just nonchalantly leave a trail of destruction across the land for no better reason than finding something tasty to eat.

* Hazbin Hotel: The majority of the main cast being LGBT in some way (Charlie and Vaggie being a gay couple between a bisexual and lesbian respectively, Angel Dust being a gay Crossdresser, Husk being pansexual, and Alastor being asexual) has attracted a good number of LGBT viewers.
* HERZ: Ritsuko played this role in the original series, but now she is mostly retired, and Maya is her substitute and HERZ’s head scientist.
* Heavy Object are all-in-one mechanized units capable of land and sea combat with enough firepower to raze small countries. They can serve as artillery or employ precision attacks to eliminate a single person; they counter infantry, smaller mechanized units, naval vessels, and aircraft. Third generation models go even further by incorporating strategic assets such as space elevators and oil refineries into the Object.
* Guild Wars a Necromancer's blood magic skills often have you sacrificing health to achieve an effect. The same class also uses Death magic, which exploits your dead opponent's corpses (and therefore blood) for similar effect, and their innate Soul Reaping ability, which heals you upon an enemy's death. Blood magic also has you drain health.
* Gundam fans as the "Char Custom Rule", nearly every entry in the series uses this in spades:
* Her daughter, Cassandra Cain, is sometimes shown to be even more dangerous than her, especially due to having Batman and Oracle train her in other tactics than just brute force, and her ability to read her foes before they act. In
* has Princess Cadance. She is, to use an immense understatement, not so "loving and devoted" when you cheat on her. The best example comes after Spike tells her that Shining Armor wants to renew his wedding vows with her:
* Half Breed card, so a character can easily be half-dwarf, half-cyborg or half-Cimmerian, half-Faun.
* Hero: The Guardian Smurf pretty much goes shirtless except when he's training. So also does his friends Fergus MacSmurf and Hawkeye Smurf.
* Golden Logres, he is one of the three Evil Knights that must be defeated.
* HeroQuest world. A more complex and in-depth version with some RPG elements called Advanced Heroquest was produced by Games Workshop alone. Sci-fi versions set on giant derelict spacecraft — Space Crusade, Advanced Space Crusade and Warhammer Quest: Blackstone Fortress — followed the same pattern.
* Harry Potter, there are quite a few instances of female characters undergoing this:
* Her belly pops her button off her pants 13 seconds into the commercial.
* Gotham both lowers the inhibitions of anyone infected by it and can exaggerate parts of their personality with many being driven to extreme rage some time after. Considering the kind of city Gotham is, this leads to a lot of death and destruction when it's weaponized and spread via a bomb during the season finale.
* Gundam utilizes general-purpose technology, while Zeon's units tend to be specialized for the terrain they are deployed in.
* He also rolled up his sleeves for "the cake sale" in "The Atlantis Complex".
* H. G. Wells is quoted as saying, "If we don't end war, war will end us."
* Golgo 13, his brand is shown to be Parliaments. However, in the 2008-09 series, Duke Togo is never seen to light up.
* Grojband related to the episode's subject that reflects upon the events in a non-sequiteur fashion.
* Good Omens, but rather to create a playground for himself and for his chums.
* her mother losing her Magical Girl powers giving birth to her and her mother and grandparents dying in a monster attack when HP was an infant. Heartful Punch admits that wasn't always true as, at thirteen, she angsted about it so heavily that her largely pink, personality reflecting costume had black in it for a time.
* her entire family dead by her mother's hand, as she committed a Murder-Suicide.
* Green Day' "Superfreak" and the Pointer Sisters' "I'm So Excited" at different points in the films as part of his speech.

* , Harry bangs his head on a table when Andromeda tells him that her and her daughter Nymphadora's reinstatement into the Black family means that he not only has to give Remus and Nymphadora permission to marry but determine the dowry as well.
* Graham Greene, she inquires about what happened to the pig, which is the first thing the guy wondered when he was first told about his father's death.
* Harry Potter. She even went as far as decorating her room with portraits of Harry, Ron, Hermione, Ginny and Neville with the word "friends" connecting them, showing how much she values their friendship.
* Grant Morrison are never mentioned or acknowledged, and the X-Men fervently insist that they're not (nor have they ever been) superheroes themselves...despite the costumes, codenames, secret identities, use of mutations to fight crime...
* Hey Arnold! It erupts at the very next second, and the trio quickly searches for a safe path to the hospital.
* Gloryhammer, "The Unicorn Invasion of Dundee" describes what Zargothrax and his army of undead unicorns do to Dundee. He also carts off a beautiful princess.
* Handbells. Going from bass (F3-B3) to the bottom of the treble clef (D5-E5) mid-concert means that hand location for damping has moved about a foot backward, not to mention the care that must be taken to avoid tossing the bells across the room.
* Gone, when he gets so fed up with the stress and dealing with everyone else's problems that he quits.
* Guards! Guards! was mistaken for a piece of rooftop statuary by the Night Watch. It's unclear if this was a deliberate ruse, or if the creature just happened to be sleeping there.
* High Risk and is not above killing innocents to satisfy his own sadism.
* Hayate the Combat Butler seems to always have to fight these things. "No, no, you're supposed to compete in cleaning the house with it." "Then why is it firing missiles at me!?" Lampshaded in that the designer of that robot is almost fired because of her over-powered designs.
* Henry Kuttner, a spaceship crew is starving on Venus because gold and silver are too common there, the society is too conservative to buy any of their devices, and the main medium of exchange is iron, which they only have as alloys. They end up giving away (there are rules against trading without a license, but the right to give presents is sacred) stimulants, threatening the stability of the system and forcing the ruling monopolists to bribe them with enough money to survive until they can go back to Earth.
* Half-Human Hybrid companions that despite the atrocities committed by their ancestors, someone is always willing to change things for the better so that all races can live in peace.
* Henpecked Husband: A husband who is always ordered around by their wife and lacks the nerve to give their two cents on the matter.
* Heart. While Heart's 70s hits make up most of their airplay, "Barracuda" wasn't even their biggest hit in that decade. That would be the #9 "Magic Man", which is relatively well-remembered, but not as much as "Barracuda" and the two #1's.
* Heavensward limited job starts at level 1, because blue magic was newly-introduced to Eorzea, so the description for its soul crystal mentions that it's new and pristine, with no past deeds carved into it yet.
* Gundam himself, is actively involved in the series. Note that newtype analogs, like the Coordinators from SEED, don't really count (they tend to survive, and have stable relationships).
* Gypsy Mama Rose receives a pair of long gloves as a wedding present. She gives them to Gypsy to wear during her debut as a burlesque performer to sell Gypsy's "gimmick" of being high-class. Gypsy removes the gloves during her act (and drops one shoulder strap) as the extent of her performance and the audience goes crazy for it.
* Heracles famously was driven insane by his stepmother, Hera, which led to him killing his first wife Megara and their children. The myths vary on how many children, but the best-known account is that of

* Good Guys Wear Black. Turns out the people who wanted him dead aren't happy that he survived, which is what drives the rest of the movie.
* Halloween III: Season of the Witch movies into an anthology horror film series. Didn't take, mainly because the movie was poorly received.
* Harvester, so much as getting hit on the head with a baseball bat will make a character's organs explode out of them.
* Hey Arnold!, "Mugged": Arnold learns martial arts from his grandmother after getting mugged, but starts becoming more and more aggressive. He becomes guilt-ridden after lashing out at an innocent bystander, but gets over it after a pep-talk from his granny and a final confrontation with the guy who originally mugged him.
* Hercules: The Animated Series. Pain and Panic can give the water in return for fireproof shorts, who Hermes knows that Hephaestus can forge as he owes him a favor. And Hephaestus is... giving a lecture at Phil's convention! Herc is found, and flies back with Phil as Hermes goes through the chain, and thankfully he ends just as Herc arrives, preventing him from finding sea instead of an island.
* Gundam RPG. In about 2000, RTG then licenced this RPG with the intent of eleasing an English translation in the West. Since then, there has been no news on the progress of the translation, despite being 'in progress' for nearly a decade.
* Harry is an example, along with most Quidditch players who don't play for Slytherin.
* Heinlein Juvenile interstellar travel is done via "Horst congruencies", otherwise invisible, carefully plotted points in space where boosting the ship past light speed results in a "transition" to the corresponding congruency near your destination. (Screw up the astrogation by a whisker, and you wind up who knows where.)
* GURPS Supers had the Teleport power with the Exoteleport enhancement, allowing the user to teleport other characters.
* Here's one list: titles for Mary, punctuated each time with "pray for us".
* Gorky Park. Three bodies are found in Gorky Park, Moscow — shot and with their faces cut off. Each was also shot in the face, not as a coup-de-grace but to destroy their teeth. However, a clue survives in that one of the characters had gutta-percha in his dental work (anyone living in the Soviet Union would have stainless steel dentistry) revealing that he's a foreigner.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 however as Drax sees Mantis as a daughter surrogate after losing his biological one.
* Green Eggs and Ham: Used for the panning background shots and many of the vehicles.
* Gora Hakone qualifies; it must be a family trait. His parents disappeared when he was young and he's had to raise his brother from infancy to adolescents by himself while running a business. Despite that, the brothers have a healthy relationship, the bathhouse provides stable income, and Gora remains mostly well-adjusted.
* Guys is set in a bar and deals with this concept in multiple fashions.
* goth version of Pearl with black and red clothes, eyeliner, and spiky hair.
* Helen's transformations back into Richard often leave the latter in some rather embarrassing situations — from accidentally flashing Mintz's neighbors in women's lingerie (while trying to climb down the outside of his apartment building), to being stranded at a high society party in drag.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys where Herc takes a trip to Egypt and, naturally, has to deal with a mummy. It was tough enough to trade blows with him.
* half Japanese, although he'd never set foot there before that point and his knowledge of Japan comes from his dad's stories. Which are wildly inaccurate, either because he's wealthy and out of touch or he's just screwing with his son.
* Hide Your Heart alone had several songs recorded more famously by other artists later on:
* Going Postal where this trope is explicitly reference. Moist von Lipwig goes into a burning building to save a cat, and doesn't leave when he has the opportunity because "A man that goes into a burning building to save a cat and does so, is a hero. A man that comes without a cat is just a toff."

* Halloween Unspectacular series has Ovard Grim. Publicly, he's just the head of a scrap metal reclamation company. In reality, however, he runs numerous other businesses of varying levels of legality, one of which is trading information. In both the fourth and fifth editions, he sells information to heroes and villains alike, always putting his own interests first.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince confirmed canon Blaise as male, some writers made the character purposely female or transgender instead.

* Hc Svnt Dracones shortly before Earth nuked itself in the corporate wars and used to repopulate the solar system.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) felt that keeping that trait would make their version play too young for their intended audience and besides, they had the skill and animation budget to make him expressive enough non-verbally.
* Great Big Sea's "Hit the Ground and Run" describes a young man trying to escape such circumstances.
* Glory. Nobody knows her real name because she predates the invention of written language.
* Going Postal (or "pin heads" as they call themselves). Then, they invented stamps...
* Heralds of Valdemar trilogy, Herald-Mage trainee Tylendel is this for Vanyel; in fact, he's the reason Vanyel discovers that homosexuality even exists, his homophobic family having done their best to prevent him from ever learning about it.
* Guess Who's Coming to Dinner older than Hepburn's daughter, plus they've only met several weeks earlier. The writers intentionally made Poitier's character as perfect as possible so that there would be no reason for anyone to object to the marriage other than the racial difference, as well as the other two mentioned.
* Halloween Horror Nights was initially going to revolve around an evil undead girl known as "Cindy", but it was scrapped due to there being a string of child murders in the area at the time. The event's theme for that year was changed to revolve around "The Caretaker", who was Cindy's father in the original backstory.
* GURPS need humans as a component in their reproductive cycle in one way or another.
* Happy Days Again, the original 1954 recording of the song by Bill Haley and His Comets was used instead of the 1974 re-recording.
* Highlander. During the night, a bear wanders into the log cabin in which they're sheltering.
* Gotrek & Felix can launch gyrocopters as scouts or attack craft.
* Grossology, as the show's science is related to gross topics like bodily emissions and excretions, medical issues (like scabs and boils), insects and parasites, etc.
* Harold Oxley has a beam of light appear around his eyes when the Soviets have Indy stare into the Crystal Skull in
* Hannah Montana — Hannah is a pretty creepy example. Disney now sometimes double-bills the character and the actress in the same albums and concerts, as though they were two different people.
* Hello Cheeky sometimes did this, but with words instead of references.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas. Grove Street Families is loosely based on Lime Street Pirus (a bloods offshoot that wore green), Ballaz is based on Grape Street Watts Crips (a off shoot of the crips that wore purple), Vagos on 18th Street Gang.
* Handles, a fully robotic Cyberman head, who the Doctor initially used as a PDA, but became his best friend during the Siege of Trenzalore, to the point that the Doctor cried when he eventually lost power for good.
* Golems have generally been described as being animated by summoned "elemental spirits,'' but also almost always have their intelligence score listed at 0 and been treated in-game exactly like mindless machines. If said elemental spirit gets enough of its free will back, the golem will generally go berserk and smash everything and everyone in sight in a fit of outrage, but the ethics of imprisoning one in a golem scarcely ever come up.

* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, other kinds of deception can be achieved this way. (Harry has never learnt how to cast the Portkey charm.)
* Golden Sun occurs and Felix becomes the protagonist and Isaac becomes the Hero Antagonist.
* Great Escape: Someone has been thrown in prison, and must now make good their escape.
* Higglytown Heroes "Kip's Dad Gets a Strike", Kip's Dad breaks down when his X-57 bowling ball breaks. During the rest of the episode, he sits in his massage chair whimpering over the remains of his shattered bowling ball.
* He once regenerated from a single drop of his blood landing on an incredibly powerful
* Harry constantly refers to Mandy Brocklehurst as "Broomstick Brocklehurst" and at one point mentions that according to his info on her she spends more time out of her knickers than inside them.

* Hanyuu's origin: she was a normal human once, but she was sacrificed to become a presiding deity over the shrine.
* Hannah Montana: One episode sees Miley and Jackson fighting over the same bathroom. Dad Robby Ray drops the trope to Miley, who is grounded from using the bathroom with Jackson, delaying her plans with Lilly and Oliver.
* Grappling Sundew of Ravnica, which are large and strong enough to snare a dragon from the sky.
* Gnomeo and Juliet featured another laptop computer with a banana on it.
* Green Goblin, who, just like the Joker, can make someone laugh one moment, and horrified the next.
* Grom Hellscream changed from having a scratchy, high-pitched voice in Warcraft II, to a deep, gravelly one in Warcraft III.
* Halo: Contact Harvest device known as a "luminary", which scans for Forerunner energy signatures (and other factors) and automatically relays the data back to the Covenant capital of High Charity; the one here registers Harvest as having lots of Forerunner relics. Tampering with luminaries is forbidden under the pain of death (not the least reason being that they're Forerunner relics and are thus holy); the Kig-Yar attempt to do just that in order to prevent their luminary from letting the Covenant know about their discovery. They fail, which thus eventually leads to a war.
* Harry Chapin's "W.O.L.D." is about a D.J. whose aging voice lost him his job at a big time station, landing him back in his hometown.
* Hancock is a notoriously negligent superhero who has absolutely no regards for collateral damage. This eventually catches up with him, as a warrant is finally put out for his arrest. He is a vagrant alcoholic with no assets, precluding any useful civil suits, and his powers make him invincible, but in the interest of PR he is eventually (voluntarily) taken to court and sentenced to prison for criminal acts.
* Greasy Spoon, and a group of bikers pick on him: pushing him around, taunting him, etc. The truck driver does nothing, just eats his meal as if nothing were going on. Then he leaves, and one of the bikers says to the waitress, "That Norwegian isn't much of a man, is he?" The waitress replies, "No, and he's not much of a truck driver either. He just ran his truck into a row of motorcyles parked outside."

* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child, which has exclusively cast black actresses (Noma Dumezweni, Rakie Ayola and Jenny Jules), as Hermione in both its West End and Broadway runs. The casting prompted Rowling herself to point out the above mentioned (that only brown eyes and frizzy hair were specified, not any race), showing support for the notion. Although race-bending casting is something that happens fairly often in the world of theatre and this is was a deliberate choice by the casting director to set the play apart from the books.
* Higurashi: When They Cry and kills several people (her sister included).
* Guy Gavriel Kay, true wizards bind themselves to the land (and thus gain power beyond the most basic magics) by severing the ring and middle fingers of one hand.
* Gungrave. And it's used in the technology that brought the protagonist back from death and nearly all the enemies he fights throughout the series.
* Gone", Buffy, while invisible, "forces" oral sex on Spike, who has just told her to get dressed and get out. His reaction is a simple "Hey, that's cheatin'!".
* Gratuitous Mariachi Band: Mariachi bands tend to be used for comedy in fiction.
* Heatran might also be extremely ancient, as it was apparently born from lava that pooled at around the same time that the earth was first formed.
* has become all-black. Naturally, the glorious Mother Russia rises again.
* Halo 3 on "The Ark", there's a Brute urinating in the corner of one room of the Cartographer building.
* Hextor, the god of Tyranny and War, is the Evil Twin of Heironeous, the god of Chivalry and Justice. Not exactly a straight example, as they look nothing alike.
* Gorn, about people being gobbled up gruesomely by giant praying mantises.

* Halo: Silentium, as the Flood approach the Greater Ark far outside the galaxy, so many Star Roads assemble that the Milky Way is barely visible, "as if viewed through a weave of shadowy bars".
* Harry is a Dragon, and That's Okay and it means he can shape metal with his own breath and bare paws. The sword he makes for Neville is judged by Nearly Headless Nick to be a decent first attempt, though with plenty of room for improvement.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: Groot is capable of releasing spores and flowers glowing in a bright golden light, which he uses to illuminate the darkness.
* Hakumen can express (the two are old war buddies), to Kokonoe it's meant and taken as an insult.
* Harvest Moon DS is like marrying the Harvest Goddess. She requires several requirements, too, where marriage and a child are the only things still left to be done. The difference is that the Witch Princess does live with the player character, and has the other side-effect of the townspeople hating you because you had to kill off at least 50 of your animals, and donate a toadstool to the harvest festival for several years.
* God of War: Ascension: One of the Furies' inmates has been recording the history of the world across his cell. Except without a pen, he's been forced to tattoo himself, and has resorted to Da Vinci layering with different combinations of his body and the wall to keep the Furies from reading the less complimentary parts, and of course he's somewhat jittery all the time. In his words, the Furies used to be harsh-but-fair before a specific incident, so it's implied he had access to pen and parchment until they stopped caring about their prison and the state it's currently in.

* Hell's Bells as something approaching fact for its backstory. The skies may be red, but aside from that Hell and Pandemonium come across almost exactly like 19-century California and 21st-century Los Angeles respectively, with Pandemonium being a modern metropolis and the Wilds surrounding it fairly barren and lawless.
* Gundam Build Fighters, the sand covering him is sculpted into a Gouf.
* Habitat: Sex Tropes, Fanservice Tropes, This Index Is Full Of Perverts

* Heels often do this by claiming they won matches singlehandedly when there was actually plenty of interference, the fans are all cheering for them, or they are just at ringside at the same time as their enemy to commentate.
* Harley's Holiday, and starts blasting her in the middle of the street. If Batman hadn't spent the whole day chasing her to try and stop things, she could have gotten killed.
* Harmony Theory: As a pegasus, Star Fall has no horn and so casts spells by drawing magic circles on spell paper.
* Grand Theft Auto IV. Packie claims that Francis is even more crooked than himself, Derrick and Gerry, who are all professional criminals.
* Guilty Gear, Kliff Underson cannot backdash, but can bend his body slightly behind to dodge an upcoming attack. But since he's doing it in his aged body, there are occasions that his back cracks and he takes damage instead. This was however changed in later games; he can now do a proper backdash and his body-bending technique has since become a special attack.
* He doesn't find out what's going on until the very end of the film. Even when
* Grand Finale, so the door is left often for them to have a happy ending.
* God Lives Underwater's music video for "From Your Mouth" plays backwards, where it looks like a Japanese competitive eater is pulling food out of his mouth.
* Havenhurst: Jackie is friends with Tim Crawford, a police detective. As a result, he's the first person she goes to with clues about the strange goings-on at the building.
* , Hermione suggests breaking Neville's father's wand if his grandmother still refuses to get him a new one and Harry advises that she not get caught doing it.

Her relationship with her superior, the austere and serious Colonel Maxima, appears to revolve around this trope. Maxima is outwardly disapproving but appears to be quite fond of her new recruit to the Archon force.
* High Plains Invaders unfold over the course of a single day (seemingly morning to early evening, although the overcast conditions make it hard to be sure).
* Goodness Gracious Me cream he was selling. Eventually he accuses a random policeman of not liking him because he is Asian, only for the policeman to think about it and decide he is right, and promptly knock the character out with his truncheon.
* Gold Digger: Time Raft comic book. Notable in that the creator, Fred Perry, produced and animated the whole thing himself.
* Hate. She was very pleased with the result. Both games do feature a bit of smut, albeit text smut.
* Green Lantern: It happened to living planet Mogo. He got better, though.
* hemicrania sine dolorosa explored this phenomenon, and offered space for the suggestion that many visions suffered by Christian mystics might well have been due to HSD, trying to look at the world through an aura of dancing light, and the state of altered reality and hallucinatory perception engendered in the brain at the same time.
* High Marshall Azure pulls this. Considering how strongly enforced Vorin gender roles are it's even more scandalous there than it usually would be. It is, however, subverted in that all of the soldiers under he command know she's a woman, and she makes no effort to hide it from them, it's just that no one outside the army knows she's a woman.
* Heralds of Valdemar series has the Truth Spell, the only form of magic known to the Heralds between the death of Vanyel and Elspeth's becoming a Herald-Mage centuries later. The spell has two forms: The weaker form is a truth/lie indicator, the stronger form forces the target to tell the truth as they know it.

* Happened (again) on a larger scale (much, MUCH MUCH larger scale) during WWII when the Americans dropped nuclear bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki rather than fight their way across Japan.
* Grimm Fairy Tales has to defuse a bomb in Times Square in New York on New Year's Eve. She snarkily comments on how movies never get it right right, and how it is never just one wire, as she rips out all of the wires on the bomb.

* Gunn claims a particular office would make him look 17% less completely out of place.
* Half-Life 2 without breaking from the format. It was still real time from Gordon, Alyx, and the player's perspective. Relativity: it's awesome!

* He keeps all his plastic cups in the same top cupboard, causing them all to fall out when he opens it.
* HD 140283 "Methuselah" is a star initially calculated to be older than the universe, literally older than time. It was later recalculated to be 14.4 billion years old, ±0.8 billion years, which is only slightly better. Even if on the sprightly side of that range, it's very old.
* Going into the wrong bathroom because you normally enter from the hall on the opposite side.
* Hilda: The titular character goes through the wringer and then some during the last five episodes of the first season. She has a heated falling out with one of her friends, discovers her idol to be a morally bankrupt fraud, narrowly avoids certain doom only to get stranded in the wilderness and subsequently held hostage by a Forest Giant and a sentient cabin, learns that aforementioned friend has ditched her for an older girl who turns out to be affiliated with an enemy of theirs, gets in trouble with her mother when her initial efforts to help a Nisse end in disaster, and fears what her mother will think once she learns she hasn't actually managed to earn any badges.

* Hamlet, where half a dozen scrawny little pigs completely dispose of a large viking, bones and all, in about an hour.
* Harry Dresden can't stand him. Harry knows that she isn't seeing him as he truly is, and explicitly tells her that it isn't going to happen. The 'precocious crush' aspects of her feelings fade as she grows up and becomes less rebellious, though the feelings themselves grow and become less naive. Unfortunately, Harry is...well, love hurts.

* Hawaii Five-O. He played an ex-con who tracked down and killed the cops responsible for his arrest (he had lost his hands while holding explosive charges during a bank robbery; he learned how to use his hook hands in prison).

* Godzilla’s intellect can vary depending on the series, but the Legends (2014) version is exceptionally smart, showing intellect on par with an above average human. For starters he is capable of deductive reasoning, deducing that the reason the humans are attacking him is self defense and understandable fear. He is also capable of tactical thinking, baiting the Muto to get into range of a collapsing building trap he had planned out.
* Gold Digger the Diggers family lives in Atlanta, Georgia. Consequently, all the supernatural and superscientific friends, enemies, and acquaintances they make during the course of their globe-trotting and multiverse-hopping adventures inevitably end up finding their way there.

yacht race.
* Gotham Central has between eight and who knows how many major, recurring, or named minor characters in each issue. And that's not counting the villains who pop up from time to time. This happens because it follows two shifts of the Major Case Unit at the Gotham Police Department, and each shift has eight detectives and a shift commander.

* Haruhi Suzumiya, which further develops this version of her character.
* Henrik Ibsen. August Strindberg however was Romantic, dealing with dreams, difficult and painful relationships and self-destructive individuals.
* Grave Robbers from Outer Space, a card game about making low-budget genre movies that both mocks and glorifies the numerous cliches and archetypes of a variety of genres.
* Helicopter gunships are a distinct category compared to attack helicopters; the former carry passengers in addition to their armament, while attack helicopters do not. The Russian Mil Mi-24 is an example of the former category, while the American AH-64 Apache is one of the latter.

Eat your greens. Read 'Everything and Nothing' by Borges. Thanks for listening. Mike)"
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone fits the functional parts of the trope perfectly. When it grabs the heroes and starts crushing them, Hermione remembers that devil's snare only reacts to panicked movement, so she and Harry relax, slipping through the plant's vines. Ron, on the other hand, is so freaked out that he keeps flailing around and will obviously get strangled. Hermione manages to remember another weakness of devil's snare and uses it to free him.

* Heads I Win, Tails You Lose where winning the fight results in the boss defeating you anyway.
* Here There Be Monsters focuses on Blaine's group during a turbulent period.
* Happiness in Slavery: I won't let being in slavery make me miserably! It still feels so great to work my hardest!
* Harold and Maude loves faking his own suicide in front of his mother and the girls she sets him up with.
* Guts himself is called "The Black Swordsman" and gains black armor later on in the series. Despite his time
* Gregory's Girl: Steve is extremely serious about his cooking, which even the head master enjoys.
* Hero of War: A recruiter sells the singer on joining the military by offering him the chance to get paid for seeing the world. Nowhere in the pitch does the recruiter mention the various atrocities the singer eventually commits in the name of fighting for his country.
* head, and a robot body connected to his jar. The chef now wears his "hand-me-down" limbs.
* Gon's Jajanken requires him to shout out his power for it to actually work. He actually finds an interesting benefit from it in that he can psyche people out on what hand he'll throw out.
* GURPS goes so far as to provide the equation for relativistic time dilation to be used for ships with sufficiently powerful engines.
* Guild Wars has its own set of calendars, one for the Canthan continent, and one that is shared by both the Tyrians and Elonans. The Elonan calendar also has a zero year some two centuries before the Tyrian calendar.
* Goblin Market, Laura's golden hair is a key part of the plot, because she buys fruit with "a golden curl" rather than with actual money. Using her hair this way leads to the loss of innocence (and, metaphorically, her virginity).
* Heavy weapons like lascannons and missile launchers that hit hard enough to damage the heaviest of targets, as well as weapon types with special properties that make them particularly powerful against armored foes:
* Hellsing (which was implied to have been taken from the skull of a concentration camp victim fifty-odd years earlier).
* He briefly replaces his lost plasma cannon with a pair of sawn-off 'multicannons', which are normally a shoulder-fired multi-purpose weapons platform. He fits them with autoloaders and hoses entire rooms with anti-tank shells. They prove to be so ludicrously dangerous that Schlock decides to keep them even after getting a new plasma cannon.
* Glee Reprise is on the football team and doesn't have much capacity past that.
* He claims that only 2% of his body mass is fat. While that is physically possible for bodybuilders to achieve, with the build that he has it is certainly impossible. For real life comparison, a Sumo Wrestler with 10% bodyfat would be extremely low, with most being closer to 30%.
* Glest) and Archmages are upgraded from Initiates, who are the faction's basic worker unit.
* Grease going to put up with Danny's douchebaggery, and she makes it clear from the word go. So this trope may not apply to the film.
* He reacts the same way (and for the same reason) when he thinks the Silver Banshee has successfully killed Superman.
* : Here the translator spell does not allow the user to understand all the languages as its mother tongue, instead, the more languages a person knows, the more languages get translated. Due to this, Kiran perceives the Askarian as English and the ancient Askarian as Spanish. It's probably used to explain how people from different time periods, continents and even universes are able to understand each other perfectly.
* Help!. Spending the whole movie trying to kill Ringo, who has a sacrificial ring stuck on his finger, the cult leader muses to himself "Perhaps if we gave away free tickets to the youth organization annual sacrifice and dinner dance, all this could be avoided. It's a very real problem!" just before he turns a flame thrower on the band.

* Hammer's Slammers are ruled by oligarchies with noble titles, including Colonel Hammer's homeworld of Niuew Friesland. Though the planet in "The Tank Lords" appears to be run as traditional feudalism, with barons as landlords of illiterate peasants, including one servant boy who assumes the Slammers are some kind of nobility because they have combat vehicles.
* God of War put it: "Sure, it's a little short, but we dare you to only play it once!"
* Guys and Dolls. At the end of the movie, Sky Masterson marries Sarah Brown and Nathan Detroit marries Miss Adelaide in a double wedding.

* Henry VIII and the business with his six wives than for his political deeds.
* Godslave has Turner tossing Edith around like a rag doll while screaming whether she's still so confident about being able to survive him.
* he becomes an airbender following the Harmonic Convergence. He goes on to confirm what many people feared was the reason why Airbenders are taught to be pacifists. Zaheer was able to literally take the breath out of another person, suffocating them to death.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series ends with Hal Jordan and Kilowog continuing to protect Sector 2814 and Razer believing that Aya is still out there. As Razer flies out to find her, a Blue Lantern ring drifts into the frame.
* Hagrid. He never finished his studies at Hogwarts due to being expelled, but makes up for it by being a walking tank. Who happens to be rather resilient to magic. However, it's nonetheless shown that he's a good hand-to-hand fighter. On the other hand, Hagrid can do basic magic with the broken pieces of his wand hidden in an umbrella. Ollivander himself couldn't fix a wand that thoroughly broken; Ron Weasley was more apt to injure himself when his wand was broken, and Harry wasn't nearly as effective with an unmastered wand. In his own way, Hagrid is a very skilled wizard, just lacking formal education.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, where one butler, who uses roses as a weapon, makes dramatic appearances amid falling blossoms, only for the scene to reveal a moment later his master following behind him with a basket of petals, showering him by the handful. Also used straight elsewhere, particularly with Isumi and when Hinagiku and Ayumu are walking home from work in one scene.
* Harry Potter herself is a Christian (Anglican) and in interviews has stated that the magic in her books was inspired by Narnia, with increasingly obvious Christian allegories (and even some Biblical quotations) toward the end.
* Have I Got News for You, Ian Hislop's contributions are toward the Juvenalian end of the scale, while Paul Merton tends more toward the Horatian end when he isn't making plays on words or indulging in surrealism and flights of fancy.
* Gruesome Grandparent: I treat my grandchildren like trash just like I did to my children!
* He does shout "GIRLS!!", among other things, in his alcoholic fugues...
* Hägar the Horrible! The good news: I just want volunteers for this mission! The bad news: I need four volunteers." (There are just four guys.)
* Gunnerkrigg Court ends as the last panel complements the page and whole chapter, in different ways.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows has seemingly killed this trend, however.
* Hector Ramirez, the parody of investigative reporter Geraldo Rivera from
* GOG.com displays the message "Kewl, your purchase is complete" after you buy a game.
* Grant Morrison, the heroes are sent into a boy's nightmare world, where a telepathic conqueror has created a world where it has already won and there are no heroes to stop it. As the boy's belief wanes, so do their powers.
* "Healthoxine. Because you're worth it.", because, due to social mores, they can't directly name what their product does anyway. Some of these ads tried to skirt the issue by naming another drug indicated for the same thing.

* Hainish: Humanity and all sapient lifeforms are descended from colonists from Hain, and the various species are all thus branches of the greater human family. Some are essentially humans under different names, but others (such as the short, hairy and lucid dreaming Athsheans and the Gethenians, who are sexless by default and only become temporarily male or female to breed.
* Heterosexual Life-Partners and thinks that they've only just recently met.
* Grandia III, the Spirit Sword makes a return as the Infinity+ 1 weapon, and has an extremely similar method of acquisition, with the exception that the player must defeat the enemy, and cannot resort to stealing, running away, reentering battle, stealing, etc (as can be done in Xtreme). Luckily, this enemy is right next to a save/recovery point. Unluckily, this enemy is extremely difficult for no apparent reason.
* has a fair few of these, Third, Smic and Crusader. Crusader is the more interesting one, because he was called Crusader and had been called Mr. Crusader by some, until we eventually found he was called Crusader Crusader. Effectively having only one name, as first and last name is the same.
* Ground State". Also in "Ground State", Connor appears but doesn't speak.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban largely fills this role in the fourth and fifth books, becoming Harry's go-to guy when in need of advice or moral support.
* Gorebyss is a giant pink toothless fish with big eyes that feeds on plankton. Get too close to one and you'll find out it also has a taste for blood, and turns more vivid in color while it feeds on your body fluids. However, this is still downplayed, as it's less cute counterpart, Huntail, is more actively predatory.
* Hell Girl, every person who makes a covenant with Enma Ai, the title character, is marked with a black flame tattoo on their chest once they pull the red string and send the target of their vengeance to Hell. There's nothing they can do about it, and it's a sign that upon death, they are also bound for Hell, no matter how they live the rest of their lives.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) casually wondering if he could knock over the building they’re in by head-butting it, and it only goes downhill from there.
* having a name. In one scene a random vampire is killed when a small tree branch pierces his stomach (note: not near the heart) but Spike and Angel have both survived thanks to a stake or arrow missing by centimeters.

* Hardware who at one point angrily yells "Okay, we get it! You're smarter than us."
* Greg Hartmann is an amoral, egoistic and hypocritical politician who doesn't care about whom he uses, kills, maims, or hurts in his hunt for power. He is clearly an evil character, but he is absolutely lovely compared to his alter ego Puppetman, a complete sadist and sociopath who uses his potent emotion manipulation power to bring out the worst in everyone and only lives to revel in the violence and horror he creates.
* Gravity Falls: This was Grunkle Stan's excuse for throwing the TV out the window when Dipper and Mabel return at the end of "The Inconveniencing". Even better is that he really couldn't find the remote, and simply got caught up in the movie he was stuck watching.
* Happens again in another episode, where Earl and Joy are escaping a bounty hunter and decide to hide out at an old trailer in the woods. They discover a homeless man has taken up residence there, prompting this reaction when they find him under the bed covers.
* Half And Half Big Deedee Thorn regularly competes with her husband's ex-wife Phyllis. She also has an evil sister.
* High-Essence Solars also have Godspeed Steps, which allows them to flash across anywhere up to a mile in an instant. It's explicitly called-out as
* Higher Learning: When Kaoru starts working in the pilots' school his lessons teach Asuka to be less angry and less confrontational, and help her to open up. Her temper gets nicer and less pushy progressively, to the point she is capable of confessing her feelings to Shinji (after a bottle of sake). From that point she becomes kinder.

* Highlander, Connor McLeod concealed his immortality for years by assuming the identities of long-dead children.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony and the only reason she's in debt is that she borrows from a local thug and won't accept your money.
* Heavy Rain (2010) Shelby's character is homage to Noir while Jayden is homage to its more modern counterparts.
* Head of State, Mays metaphorically throws out the script by turning off the teleprompter with a prepared speech on it. He then starts asking the crowd how hard their lives currently are ("how many of you have to work two jobs just to make enough money to be broke?"), ending each question with "that ain't right!" The crowd loves it, and Mays ends up making "that ain't right!" into a new campaign slogan.
* HERZ: Asuka makes Kensuke shutting up and stopping bothering her when she threatens with telling his girlfriend what pervert things he did when they were teenagers.
* here, resulting in nobody even being aware the game exists, and as a result, it doesn't sell well.
* Hello Mary Lou: Prom Night II: Kelly, who is stabbed in the stomach by a falling decoration during the prom, but still seems to be stirring a little as the film cuts away from her, and might not have been stabbed too deeply. During the final scene, after the police and ambulances arrive, there's only one bodybag in the background, which isn't hers due to the body inside lacking breast curves.
* Happens twice in the third episode of Battle Kid: Fortress of Peril. For Context, Arin is trying and failing to kill a plant boss, getting progressively more frustrated each time. Dan suggests that Arin try improvising stories in order to help him focus. He does so, and these stories often get interrupted at the end due to Arin dying.
* High-Five Left Hanging: A character wants to high-five but everyone else declines.
* He calls the accountants to say that he's in the sewers, and the line is STILL going down.
* Hellraiser: Bloodline, the Cenobite Angelique kills one of the future soldiers by appearing in a mirror in her human form as a woman pleading for help before dragging him in and decapitating him.
* Harry Potter since no one bothers to explain to Harry what his classes are Harry assumes that Transfiguration is about transgenders and Defense Against the Dark Arts is an art class.
* He ran his affairs there unimpeded until two of his cellmates were murdered in there; the government kicked the doors in but found out that he was tipped beforehand by his cousin (who had a contact in the National Police) and fled. The hunt for him didn't end until he was shot down in the rooftops of Medellin by the police.
* Hero and the Terror's eyes menacingly hovering over a stern-looking Chuck Norris packing heat.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch, Billy traps the Electric Gremlin in the Clamp Corp. phone system, where the villain suffers the torture of being on-hold.
* GURPS is, paying character points for attractiveness and gaining extra character points if the character is bad looking. Good looking characters receive bonuses to other characters' reaction rolls and ugly characters suffer penalties on those rolls. In both cases, the more pretty or ugly the character is, the greater the bonus or penalty.
* Hark! A Vagrant. "Meanwhile in a 20-mile radius of this event: Bodices ripping, men turning gay."
* Heavy, meanwhile, definitely counts. He has a Ph.D. in Russian lit. and enjoys himself a nice peach bellini. This, in-between screaming at the top of his lungs, chewing through people with a giant minigun, and telling stories about choking an Engineer with his own wrench as if it were

* Heroic BSoD: Something so horrible happens to the hero that they shut down, at least temporarily.
* Göbekli Tepe is a pre-Neolithic religious complex in Turkey that dates from roughly 9600 BCE and was built by people who had not yet developed metal tools, pottery, the wheel, or agriculture. It is believed that the location's use as a religious centre goes even further back; all the way to 11,000 BCE.
* Going Postal has a character stand with his back to a pit of spikes before calling the Igor. Doesn't explain what Igor did, but they found it very laugh-worthy when the mad scientist forgot and stepped back.
* Hell, take any famous easy listening melody that you frequently hear on the radio, in advertising spots, movies or TV series and chances are that most people will instantly recognize the melody and sing along to it, but won't be able to tell you who wrote it, who sang it and/or what the title is. In some cases, they are quick to associate it with the film, commercial or TV series they saw it in and assume it was specifically written for the occasion.
* "Hearts And Minds": A group of soldiers fight the good fight against bizarre invading insectoid beasts, only to find that the "medication" given to them by their leaders is making them see their actually-human enemies as bugs. They lay down their weapons and try to talk to the enemies...who promptly kill them all, being under the influence of similar drugs and seeing our protagonists as monsters.
* Haruhi Suzumiya: Haruhi's powers are borderline surreal, but it's at least based on Haruhi's mood so it's not completely rule-less; Nagato, Asahina's and Koizumi's are Fantastic; and Kyon is Mundane.
* Healing is apparently also affected by morality. A Renegade Shepard will have increasingly visible
* He also doesn't seem to have a place to live, as seen as one episode where families in Stars Hollow "take turns" hosting Kirk while allowing him to babysit their children. (Though he seems to act just like one when he stays at Lorelai's house.)
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) bad (or at least not crazy). Then his face got flash fried off. After seeing that he has a skull for a face now, he completely lost it. The scene where his sanity finally snaps can scare someone as he starts laughing into the sky like the god damned Joker.
* Herr Flick appears quite kinky when he is alone with Helga (that will be the transvestite tendencies perhaps).
* Half in the Bag living with him. When Mike and Jay express confusion, scenes from past reviews are played with the character spliced in, never interacting with anyone else.
* Gundam; thanks to positive press from anime magazines and word of mouth, the trilogy was a colossal success, and the rest is history.
* Hexenringe, a Kaiju character whose destructive presence fails to phase the main character.
* , Harry's girlfriend makes an innuendo about his "wand" and her mother covers her ears and chants "LALALALALA."
* Gravemoss won't feed on him because his memories are far too vile for them.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality intuitively, that won't keep Sauron from figuring it out this way.
* Good Scars, Evil Scars: Whether or not a person is evil is determined by the severity of their deformity. If the scarring is especially horrendous, then they're definitely evil.
* Go Stewie Go", Stewie crossdresses to get a role on a childrens' show, falls for a female co-star, and reveals himself on a live broadcast. Afterwards, Brian asks why on Earth they would do a live broadcast of a kids' show, and Stewie tells him "You really don't want to pull the thread on this one".
* Han's Crime, the judge is tasked with determining whether or not circus knife-thrower Han intentionally murdered his wife during a performance.
* Henrik Ibsen, the main character's husband is a defense attorney who is so

* Harold Holt, Prime Minister of Australia from 26 January 1966 until 17 December 1967, when he went out for a swim at Cheviot Beach, Victoria... and was never seen again. The most widely-believed story (repeated by his biographer Tom Frame) is that he overestimated how good a swimmer he actually was and drowned after getting caught in a rip current in waters that was already known for being very dangerous to even the most experienced swimmer; other theories include suicide, a hit by the CIA,

* Godzilla (2014) their blockade and displacing so much water that the destroyers and aircraft carriers get tossed about in the waves that proceed to flood the city in a tsunami.
* Godzilla, Mothra, King Ghidorah: Giant Monsters All-Out Attack!. Not only do you have the Godzilla returning from the first film as a vengeful zombie-thing possesed by the spirits of those who died in World War II, but you also have three kaiju that were so feared by people that they were actually worshipped as gods. Said three gods (Mothra, Baragon, and Ghidorah) are awoken to help protect Japan against Godzilla's wrath due to the JSDF once again being useless against him. And, even then, the most powerful of the three god-monsters (Ghidorah, who also happens to be the Yamato No Orochi) is no match against Godzilla.
* Haré+Guu. Also Marie once dressed as one after taking advice from Gupta, who has strange tastes.
* Hard-working perverts have confirmed neither Johnny Sasaki in the first game or Raiden in the second game have any junk in their texture sets for any hypothetical action to uncover.
* Heartcore. Destruction of either organ is the only way for a demon to truly die.
* Happy Tree Friends: Giggles the chipmunk enjoys having tea parties with Petunia.
* Hergé, as well. As the film opens, Tintin is in a flea market getting a caricature of his face drawn (in the style of the comic, naturally), and when we get a glimpse of the artist, it's Hergé! He remarks that Tintin's face is very familiar, and wonders if he's drawn him before.
* harem anime (where the page image is from) and its various spin-offs. Ryoko and Ayeka in particular often try to use all manner of underhanded tricks to dispose of one another and get Tenchi to themselves.
* Here is a video of a man building a roof in harmony with a practising marching band, using his nail gun as an instrument.
* Hancock: After "sensitivity training", to make Hancock a more politically correct sort of superhero, he's faced with rescuing a wounded policewoman pinned down by gunfire. He's so overly careful and politically correct with his approach that she finally screams at him to just get her the hell out of there.
* Gloria will be getting the money from the Share B&B appointment and not him, Gloria's is by no doubt overjoyed:

* Grimm who gets adopted by humans. As a result, she ends up being unable to control her animalistic nature until she meets Monroe, who helps her.
* Hayachine grew up somewhat sickly due to asthma, so he is justifiably disinclined towards athletics. On days he was out sick from school he developed a skill in embroidery and handicrafts well beyond his years. The acceptance he received in Ohasama has done a lot to give him more self-confidence after everyone including his own grandmother would give him grief over it.
* Grand Theft Auto 2, which one can get by destroying twenty police cars.
* Harvest Moon 64 strategy guide mentioning that Rick has an unrequited crush on Karen.

Interestingly there's also equipment that you cannot buy with real life money and must grind in game currency to get.
* Hakuouki, something the Shinsengumi discover when their enemies start using silver bullets against them.
* Harry Potter to explain. Whether Harry goes on a Grail Quest, sacrifices himself as a Christ figure, purifies his soul with alchemy, or re-enacts a mythological journey to the Underworld, there's probably a book explaining it somewhere.
* Hellfire Commentaries in the background while apparently banging his head on the wall.
* Grand Theft Auto V often even have trouble starting. Others like the Rat Loader have brakes that take several seconds to bring the car to a complete stop.

* Halo: Mortal Dictata, the Y'Deio system is actually a real system (with a different name of course), and its asteroid belt is notable for being unusually massive and dense, further justifying this example.
* Green Lantern is a completely technological device that is also rendered inoperable, while other characters' futuristic, alien, or otherwise fantastic technology like Booster Gold's costume and Blue Beetle's scarab work just fine, and nobody ever mentions the discrepancy.
* Harry Shearer, and the actors (himself included) are some of the highest-paid in animation.
* Hilary Duff who is overly saturated as a sex symbol, which while not exactly descriptive of Duff's life and career it does come fairly close to use this trope.
* Go Fish (or in the UK, with a special pack, Happy Families) has a metagame. The basic game is that you're supposed to be asking for the cards you want. The metagame comes in when you start working out what cards your opponents want, and trying to stall them by taking them yourself. This gets analysed by the character Solomon in the
* Hellsister Trilogy, who had been previously bickering over leadership, suddenly decided he was happy with following orders.

* Halo 2), which had two Elites talking about the humans. * Hannah Montana when she was sixteen, to her scantily-clad performance of her song "Party in the USA" at the 2009 Teen Choice Awards (where she danced on a pole at one point), there was always a clash between her squeaky-clean Disney image and her real personality. She was forced to appear as Hannah Montana, complete with blonde wig and sparkly clothes - a far cry from her real persona.
* Great Expectations: "Without remarking that man-traps were not among the amenities of life, I said I supposed he was very skilful? 'Deep,' said Wemmick, 'as Australia.' * Hideyuki Tanaka with a poster of Jonathan on his wall, with the voice indicating that there is a core of coolness in there. As Otacon becomes more confident and attractive over the course of the series, Tanaka's performance gets closer to his voice as Jonathan.

* has and it's mentioned that female gladiators are generally less common because the villagers are less inclined to put their faith in female gladiators, which they perceive to be weaker. Of course, said sole female gladiator introduced really isn't at all fond of the sentiment.
* He gets better, but by the end still reads "I know we got off to a rocky start, but I think you're doing a great job" as "I know the goat is a roadie tart, but I bought your dog a grape jar".

* Heroes of Newerth has a couple of heroes that do some variation of this. Magebane has Flash, which instantly teleports him to the target location. Chronos's Time Leap speeds up time for himself as he runs to the target location in an instant. Wretched Hag has Flash of Darkness which works the same as Magebane's Flash. Swiftblade's ultimate ability allows him to perform several attacks in rapid succession with such speed that it looks like he's teleporting from one target to another. Any hero can acquire a Portal Key which allows them to instantly teleport over a limited distance.
* Gutterballs: Hannah has threesomes with Steve and the canonically bi Julia, but it's not clear what these threesomes entail.
* GURPS. The Gloworms feed on this by touching other living creatures. They can feed on animals but prefer sentient victims.
* Grand Theft Auto's radio stations are a great example of this. Some of the DJs even take shots at the other stations.
* Halo: Combat Evolved his way out, but he's thawed out the normal way in the game itself).
* Hilariously, inverted at one point. Plan A worked so well, they couldn't use the myth. (Said myth? Buncha chemicals in a van could explode when you use the auto-unlock. The Build Team went straight for full scale because they were told by experts the van wouldn't blow up. The van
* Godot's ability to consume ungodly amount of coffee is a direct result of the sheer density of his hamminess creating a singularity in his metabolism.
* Gratuitous French — Avoir du français, c'est bien mieux que de ne pas en avoir.
* Hercules reveals that Zazu's suggestion that Scar would make "a very handsome throw rug" seems to have been proven true, as Hercules's headdress (which he later tosses on the floor in frustration) is Scar's pelt.
* hat is adapting to what's hurt them, one can take this as the Borg adapting to Starfleet exploiting the drones.
* Helltaker, being a single soul that shares three physical bodies but act as one.

* Good (i.e. God) gets replaced if a majority of mortals involved in the dominant religion on Earth change their idea of the greatest being of good. YHWH was the Incarnation of Good before God, who apparently replaced him when Christianity became more popular than Judaism.
* Grand Theft Auto V of the FBI and CIA, respectively) take up a good portion of the single-player plot. It is far more extreme than any such inter-agency rivalry in real life (we hope), stopping just short of outright warfare between the agencies.
* Head butler Peepers, unbeknownst to the Bellacourts, was adopted by a family of American Indians.
* God Eater, fell by the wayside and the team has abandoned any attempts at a second season.
* Hellsing animation while the biter spits out the fingers in high quality.

* GT Blitz refers to Jak as a "nimble and lightning-quick racer" even if you've been exclusively driving the big, tanky
* Hell's Kitchen, Manhattan, was named because of the high violence and crime rates which, until the 1990s, were found there.
* ''Gomu-Gomu no Gatling'' was given an upgrade and promoted to finisher after it was voted the most popular attack in the series when he used the jet version to finish off Rob Lucci. After learning the hard way how debilitating Gear Third is to his speed and maneuverability, Luffy has taken to using Gear Third mostly for this... until the Time Skip that is.

* He also manages to sound calm about things when it's apparent that he really isn't. When Snafu talks Sledge out of taking up his own habit of prospecting for gold teeth among dead Japanese soldiers, his warning about "diseases that'll make you sick" is less his worrying about hygiene and more a cover to let him express his concern about the comparatively idealistic Sledge starting down the same road he's traveled.
* Gordon Korman, Bruno and Boots slipped a cold remedy created by school genius Elmer Drimsdale into the sports coach's energy drink. It reacted badly with the citric acid and mimicked intoxication, and the only way Bruno, Boots and Elmer could keep the coach from wandering over to the girls' school across the road was by agreeing to play poker for toothpicks with him. Elmer won all the toothpicks within the first half-hour, which Bruno termed "Beginner's luck."

* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, Dumbledore's Army is willingly revealed by the best friend of Harry's love interest Cho, followed by Harry and Cho having a fight about this in which both sides actually have a point. When Umbridge discovers Dumbledore's Army in the movie, the group is unwillingly revealed by Cho, who has been obviously forced to show its location, as she was dragged along by Malfoy, yet Harry seems to treat it as if Cho willingly did so and alienates her like the rest of the school does, making him look like a bit of a jerk to her. He only realizes his mistake when Snape later outright confirms what he should have figured out from the start.
* Goldfinger. Cheating at Gin Rummy, murder of Jill Masterson and gold smuggling → A plot to nuke Fort Knox.
* Gold were originally going to include a character disguised as Professor Oak. During the arc introducing Galaxy Robo, the final monster of the arc is Kimen Doggler, which splits back into the two monsters so the parasite can take control of Great Five (which had previously been lost underground), allowing the two to team up against the Maskmen. It's eventually blasted off and reunites with its partner before Galaxy Robo destroys them.
* Hermione would have been a massive problem, having someone to turn to might have made her more open to the idea.
* Happens in "Escape to the House of Mummies Part 2" as well. Dr. Venture is the only one small enough to escape and get help, but he gets caught up in a contest with Orpheus and completely forgets about his family who escape on their own and have an offscreen adventure of which were only given glimpses into.
* Head of the Class High School, and the students seemed to spend the entire day in the same room. This was explained by their being in a special "gifted students" program, which sometimes does work that way in real life.
* Halo: The Cole Protocol. After being abducted into the SPARTAN-II program, most of the Spartan-II candidates were able to quickly adjust to their new lives as soldiers; cooperation, teamwork, and camaraderie were easily integrated into their minds, and within five months they were fully willing to take on their training. The only exceptions were the three Spartans who would become "Gray Team", who were the most difficult to control during training. These trainees were loners who tried constantly to escape and resisted indoctrination in any way possible. As their escape attempts became increasingly costly, with numerous trainers suffering broken fingers and shattered knee caps and at least one Pelican dropship hijacked and destroyed, the three Spartans were eventually formed into their own team, trained separately from the rest. As such, Gray Team's members are the most independent and individualistic of the Spartan-IIs, trained to operate for long periods with little control or assistance.

* Guardians of Pokémon series, it was bound to happen eventually in Chapter 148. Mitsumi objects to the entire trial when Blight goes too far over the top trying to frame Gary for some sort of crime.

Then one day, after the developers had added the ability to give stacks of Confusion (which causes damage on skill usage) to armor, it was discovered that you could give said child NPCs Confusion with this, and they would die the next time they attempted to throw a snowball. (Even worse, they gave XP and loot.) Cue a bunch of child murder and a fast hotfix.
* Gundam Wing doujin "Ground Zero" (not to be confused with "Episode Zero") these were used in some particularly tender scenes with Heero and Relena.
* gods. We know that people began figuring out that Earth was round and the sky was not just "up" but rather around us 2,500 years ago, and during the Renaissance the old Ptolemaic idea of planets going around in "epicycles" and that the Earth was center of creation was inaccurate. Fast forward a few centuries and with better telescopes and with Eisntein's Theory of Relativity we now know this planet is one of many, inside a galaxy that is one of many, and that this universe is ruled by quantum physics, which is still being learned.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: first from Nebula's POV and then again in close-up.
* has the premise of a social worker is visiting the house of a convicted sex offender in a lower-class neighborhood when a child comes up missing. The actual offender is harmless and ineffectual, his father is the dangerous one, and an innocent neighbor is more or less torn apart by the mob.

* Godzilla: Destroy All Monsters Melee wouldn't see a US release until the next year.

* Gold Digger gave the villainous Night Flight an entire wing of these.
* God of War (PS4), Kratos now wields a magical battle axe that can be infused with elemental forces and thrown.
* Guardians of the Galaxy prominently features these in many places, such as the playfield (including the central section keeping track of mode progress) and sometimes in the background of the LCD display.

* Goldfish Warning!: Any time Chitose says "my school" (Watashi no gakuen), cue the school for scrubbing brushes (Tawashi no gakuen), although that may just be Wapiko not being able to hear properly.
* High School Girls has Takahashi going to her grade school reunion only to find that her old crush has grown fat, ugly and arrogant.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality jokingly declares that he intends to rape her. It is at this point that Harry realizes that Draco has surreptitiously put up a sound-muffling charm so they can plan these things in secret.
* Heroine Chic wears a custom tailored trenchcoat while he commits crimes.
* Gummi Bears, the place they live in would be torn to pieces without him.
* Grand Hotel, Javi Mendoza sleeps with a different girl every day. His father Santiago puts up with it because he feels responsible for the incident that cost Javi one of his legs.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix of the books (or at least Voldemort's motivations) were about that, but until OOTP, neither Harry nor the reader knew it.
* Goofy short "No Smoking", Goofy can't resit the urge to smoke and begs a man for some tobacco.
* Highlander: The Kurgan is the film’s scary, evil villain who delights in all the killing he does. When Ramirez slices his neck, he picks up a large, prominent scar because immortals’ necks don’t fully heal. He ups the ick factor by wearing large metal safety pins on it.
* Highlander III: The Sorcerer Kane turns the tables on a duo of card hustlers by turning their entire deck into winning cards.
* GMA Network once again as GTV (or Good TV as it was known) in 2021, and pretty much carried mixed programs in a attempt to prevent another decay just like the former two channels.
* Hemisphere Bias: When the Earth is seen from a distance, it is the part of the world holding the target audience that is shown.
* Guys and Dolls, Nathan bets Sky that he won't be able to get Sarah (a pseudo-Salvation Army lassie) to go to Havana with him. Romance ensues, but Sarah returns to find her mission raided because Nathan has been holding a crap game there. Subverts the usual play in that he tells her straight in Havana about the bet, which doesn't bother her much. It isn't until the crap game that the "boy loses girl" portion of the plot begins.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 8 episode 18, Happy S. says "Unforgivable!" to Huo Haha after he accidentally bumps into him, making him drop what they both think is an elemental a staff from a cliff. * goatee. Now they just make you look like a disaffected member of Generation X.
* High School Musical for fitness and fashion magazines. However she has declined offers to do nudity in films and says that the response to that is "but you've already done it" (as apparently pictures intended to be private are equivalent to a film that will be seen by the general public).
* Halo: Reach, exactly one member of NOBLE Team manages not to die by the end of the game. It's Jun.
* Gou Koga, who survived the Bount arc, and was left in the Soul Society.
* Hannah Montana has Miley, Jackson, Lily and Oliver pretend to be part of a cardboard movie display.
* Harvey Dent is the antagonist. He impedes Batman by succumbing to the easy decisions and generally failing to be the white knight for Gotham that Batman wants him to be, even before he becomes Two-Face.
* he learns earthbending, focusing on agility and tactics but with hardly any defensive abilities.
* Goofy is memetically a vicious child abuser via the "It's Goofy Time" meme.
* Gundam SEED. There's a reason their armor is called Foaming Metal though...
* Grand Theft Auto III (2001). With its pessimistic atmosphere, dark tone, moral ambiguity and muted colors, the game has many elements of this trope.

* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas. If the player fails during the driving sequence, the mission starts there for future retries.
* Halloween 4: The Return of Michael Myers, trampy Kelly, who sleeps with Brady, her friend's boyfriend, gets killed, as does Brady, said cheating boyfriend. The virginal Rachel survives.

* Halo 2, who we used to respect, is actually a con man. He will be beaten with a stick tomorrow morning."
* Highlander: The Animated Series who was born after the oath took place and not bound by it, to defeat him.
* Han Solo Trilogy (which might seem to mean something more like pedophilia), but given this is the repressive Empire...). Oddly, Winter is about the same age as Leia, whom Han would marry later in life.
* Hercules (2014), which was also not screened for critics and was a critical and commercial failure.
* Griffith's new Band of the Hawk is even more so because in addition to disciplined and motivated humans, its ranks include champions and monsters with superhuman powers.
* Glee that Quinn is shown texting in a car. She gets in an accident and is temporarily wheelchair-bound.
* Heimskringla had taught magic to the ancient Swedes, they used it for everything. But because magic makes everything too easy, they soon felt that the men were becoming too soft. So they passed a law that only women were allowed to learn magic, and this is supposedly the reason why the Norse ever since frowned upon men practicing sorcery, while it was okay with women.
* Harley Quinn In a fan Q & A, he said that he wanted to feature Ivy, but was ordered not to by the editorial department because she was being used in other comics.
* heedless protests and she only loses control on the last man standing at the end of the fight.
* High School Of The Dead, they jokingly worry about getting a ticket by the police for not having a driver's license.

* Gran Turismo 4 added the ability to repaint cars and add aftermarket rims from the GT Auto menu.
* Hellsing all said damage and then slaughter everyone with look of glee on his face.
* Goku didn't understand money at first. When told you can trade it for things like food, he under or overestimates what things cost.

* Gold Digger, an adopted member of the Diggers family who was found by Gina's father after her clan were wiped out.

* high rolls in the early game, particularly if he has a Dagger and Lockpick as his starting gear: a double-6 that ends up with one split into a 1 and a 5 is going to hurt.
* Heart of Darkness (1958), an untamed jungle is inexplicably divided up by delicate sheer curtains that look like they belong indoors.
* Hiimdaisy where Phoenix tells their mother that it's time for Apollo and Trucy to know the truth. Time will tell if they did address it or not. Of course, the comic follows a path where they never found out, thus leading to this trope.
* Hardanger Fiddle players tried to compliment each other, faint praise might occur when the master fiddlers had to say something nice to the less gifted. "The Miller Boy", reckoned to be the greatest fiddler of the nineteenth century, made this one a classic:

* He actually has an entire segment called "Newscasters Agree" made entirely of this trope. The "It's okay, you can admit it" version is still notable in being the longest of all of these.
* Green Patches. From the "little multipliers in the darkness" (bacteria) and "the non-movers, which, [...] were green and lived on the air, water, and soil" (plants), to "moving runners" (mice and hamsters) and "keen-thinkers" (humans).
* Harry Dresden blew a very large hole in the catacombs and the street above of HYDRA's last base, which may count if you squint at it a bit.
* He's gone full out with this by the second film, when he does everything in his power to keep the Iron Man suit out of the US government's hands...except for Rhodey, who he trusts enough to use one.
* Hasbro's lawyers originally didn't get the memo and started sending out cease-and-desist letters to fanwork creators. Hasbro responded by apologizing to the fans, calling it a "bully move", and
* Grand Theft Auto games, the slightest bump into a police car apparently gives cops enough of a reason to try and arrest you in and of itself. Police in real life have a number of good reasons for doing this (making sure it was really an accident, that the violator isn't mentally or physically unstable and is in a good enough condition to be out and about in public, that no collateral damage was inflicted, etc.) but the ones in this series aren't doing it for the sake of thoroughness, they're just really that brutal and corrupt. Because of the way the wanted stars work in the game (merely moving away from the cop while they're approaching to arrest you is enough to bump you from one to two stars), the aforementioned "bumped my car" offense can quickly snowball into a huge city-wide manhunt with SWAT teams shooting at you from helicopters.
* Haki to compensate. It doesn’t fully remove them, but it does allow them a fighting chance against opponents using their natural weaknesses where it would normally be an impossible match.
* Grand Theft Auto III against the Colombians, and yet she never finds out who really killed her brother.
* Hidden Depths. Despite this, he's one of the nicest characters in the game. Hilda even lampshades this trope in their B support.
* Guardian, Auron gives his coat to Lulu after he, Braska, and Jecht find her injured outside of Yojimbo's cave and then carry her to the temple once they see that Ginnem and her sister are dead inside.
* Happens often in Pro Wrestling, whenever Double Clotheslines are attempted, or both contestants go for a Flying Crossbody attack.
* Half Life 2: A woman is in a culvert as Freeman goes by, she says she's going to stay there to keep the underground railroad open a while longer, and tells him to keep going.
* High School Musical with Troy. The "girly" hobby is singing, the "manly" one is basketball, and it doesn't help his dad is also the school's basketball coach, There are also elements of this with Gabriella but her mother doesn't oppose the singing, it's more that her friends want her to help them win the Scholastic Decathlon instead. They both manage to do both.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) to put in place, failed to so much as scratch it.
* He didn't figure it out until his timeline's Luke and Leia were eight, and even then, only because Luke outright said he was a clone of the older Luke.
* Glory has a classic example of the Drill instructor version. Including the Sergent asking "How many of you don't know your right from your left?" at which about half the hands go up. Not an unusual thing for country-boy soldiers in general, the term "hayfoot" comes from one noted memory aid, and many of the soldiers there were in fact former slaves with little to no formal education, adding to this.
* Haikyuu!! has the twins Atsumu and Osamu Miya who fight on a regular basis, often in a very physical way. The two are each other's biggest rivals and push each other to improve due to their dislike for losing.

* He doesn't just play this trope for the cameras. Many charges of sexual assault have piled up over the years, implying that The Nature Boy has difficulty taking "no" for an answer, even at his age.
* Happens to Ruel in season 1 episode 9, when he's trying to stop anyone from coming into his house... and he gets bull-rushed by the rest of the gang opening the door.
* Gyro Gearloose comics has a tendency to invent things which already exist. In one comic he is asked to repair a suitcase with 4 wheels, of which one is broken. He keeps adding improvements, such as a seat, a steering wheel, bigger wheels and so on, and proudly delivers it back to the owner, only to be told "We already own a trailer!" In another comic, he goes picnicking, but is bothered by various elements like ants, the wind and rain, causing him to create a floor, walls and a roof. In the end, he's re-invented the house, and wonders why he didn't just stay home. In another comic, Gyro is found in the woods studying woodpeckers so he can make a "machine that can make holes like them." In other words, a drill.
* Had to Be Sharp: Someone grew up in an environment that was so cutthroat, dangerous, and distrusting that they had to learn otherwise negative traits (thievery, being able to lie well, etc) just to survive.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, one of the kids whom the new Principal was using as a pawn went a little overboard in his actions; when, to protect herself, she disavowed their relationship, he began biting the nail on his thumb to the point of drawing blood.
* Glen Cook. This led to creation of "climbers" — medium-sized starships, that can hide in this newly-discovered "climbing space" leaving only a "pseudo-Hawking black hole" several millimeters wide. The only way to detect the climber is to notice disappearing stars. The major problem is heat buildup, since the ship cannot dump heat while hidden. Hitting "pseudo-Hawking" with nuclear weapons is considered wasteful, because most of the energy misses the target; microwave emitters, on the other hand, are much cheaper and prolonged, therefore do more damage over time. Another enemy tactic was putting the ship engine over "pseudo-Hawking", but humans learned that quick maneuvering inside an engine can destroy the enemy ship.
* Hellblazer: As different writers take runs on the title, they each give Constantine a Arc Villain to tend with:
* Grand Theft Auto 1977. True to the film's tagline, it, like many others throughout the story, were utterly destroyed.
* Hicks (Michael Biehn) showing Ripley (Sigourney Weaver) how to use a pulse rifle in
* Gunless, a gang of bounty hunters led by Ben Cutter is chasing The Montana Kid for the $4,000 price on his head. They even follow him into Canada were they have no authority.
* Gravity Falls, it's mostly due to his greed and the fact that he seems to genuinely enjoy breaking the law.
* Great Ace Attorney 2, and Cases 4 and 5 are actually two parts of the same climactic final case.
* Hasbroverse shares the same last name as her Japanese voice actress Yuriko Yamamoto.
* Green Lantern. Subverted in the fact that the Star Sapphire's version of Ion or Parallax, Predator, is male.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) to an insane and superpowered monster.
* He's given another shot at a MitB briefcase in a ladder match vs. Dolph Ziggler... only to have

* Godzilla: Final Wars has Gigan blasting Mothra with his eye laser as she spreads her wing scales, which explode in a spectacular fireball. She emerges from the explosion completely ablaze and rams Gigan, destroying him in another spectacular explosion. She later recovers and flies away.
* Half-Life 2 after his arrival to City 17. Luckily, this status just makes the resistance even more inclined to help him out because of his already legendary reputation.
* He also admitted in an interview in the '80s that he took a role in the forgotten 1981 Canadian comedy
* Hangman's Curse appears as Dr. Algernon Wheeling, a scientist who helps the Springfields.
* Heaven's Lost Property things he does is have her stop time so he can run around sexually assaulting girls. This is only the first episode, just by the by.
* Hell on Wheels deconstructs this trope for the most part. The opening episode and series as a whole features numerous instances of native warriors raiding and killing civilians and unarmed men, and most characters in-universe see them as mindless savages, but it is made clear that they are no more villainous nor corrupt than the drunken laborers they have working on the train, that they are trying to defend their land and abide by a moral code that the settlers simply do not relate to.
* Happens again in the Season 9 premiere. Lois speaks with John Corben, who she believes is a detective at the time. When an actual cop comes, he evokes this trope without her consent. She takes it
* Gone with the Blastwave. The flamethrower guy lights up his flamer, revealing a wall full of giant, mutated arthropods. Thankfully, they seem to be scared of the light and scatter away.
* Harry the Handsome Executive of the Swivel to channel his life energy into weaponized blasts.
* High Rollers rare to see a contestant roll the dice if there was so much as a 25% chance of rolling a bad number. Even if there were tens of thousands of dollars in prizes available on the board, players immediately started passing the dice to their opponent as soon as there was a semi-decent chance that they could roll a bad number and hence lose the game.
* "granddaughters" girls from utopian future civilizations, so the replacement was a not-too-bright 1960s woman who implicitly came from a broken home.
* Halo 4, a tremor racks the station. When Chief asks what it was, the head scientist tells you the first evacuation craft had just been shot down.
* Harry is given two Swords of the Cross on separate occasions to find replacements for their original wielders. He's like an intermediary for the dead guy and the new guy.

* Haley's explanation of how Thor ended up on the Minnesota Vikings logo.
* Go to the Steyr AUG from pretty much any other assault rifle. Even if you aren't using a semi-auto-only civilian version, you'll notice there is no selector switch - fire rate is entirely determined by how far you squeeze the trigger (halfway for semi-auto, fully for automatic). Even versions that do have some sort of fire selector are less an easily-used lever and more a somewhat awkward tab underneath the trigger, which when pressed in blocks it from being pulled fully rearward.
* grows out of it to realize Hardison really was terrified every time he was forced to jump off a high point.
* Happy Heroes finale, a complication leads to the Supermen evacuating Planet Xing at the request of several of its inhabitants, with their non-biological mechanic father Doctor H. watching over preparations for a party that the citizens are preparing for their birthday for when they get back. * God of War III upon seeing them with Aphrodite proceeding to invite him into her bed.
* Happy Heroes) in the background, visible above the Supermen and Big M. (who, incidentally, is the show's overall villain).
* Heroine Chic) in the background of scenes taking place on the streets of New York City. In season 3, "MBJ" gets upgraded to a named character (Tom) and begins dating Laren, the roommate of protagonist Zoe.

Pacific giant octopuses, the largest of all octopodes, make this one of their specialties, and have been known to wrestle with divers, grappling using their tentacles and even trying to remove equipment like regulators, diving masks and cameras from the humans they encounter!
* Haegemonia: Legions of Iron has 3D space, but all planets and objects are roughly in the same plane, so there's no real reason to use all the space.
* Henry Rollins' "Liar". It's a song expressly about using this trope to pick up women.

If you read the book carefully, it changes form and direction at the end of Chapter Eight, which is where Trollope put it away for almost a year. When he returned to it, he'd found he'd written himself into a corner but didn't want to expend the energy to rewrite the first eight chapters.
* Harry's mother, not trusting Dumbledore, set up a complicated spell intended to swap her, James and Harry with transfigured pig corpses as soon as a potentially-lethal spell hit them, leaving them in blood-sealed medical stasis afterwards. "Mambo" proponents point to a moment in which a crowd is chanting Mumble's name and he tries to redirect them into chanting "Mambo" instead—a callback to the adelie penguins chanting "mambo" earlier in the film. If in fact Mumble was trying to adopt Mambo as a new nickname, he didn't succeed.
* Hannibal to see what the killer sees, the screen goes black and what looks like a beam of light (or a lightsaber blade) wipes across the screen with an ominous sound effect.

* Halo Wars, they can drop ODSTs (Orbital Drop Shock Troopers) on enemy positions. * Grudgematch of James Bond winning immortality in the grudgematch: massive inbreeding due to James' libido.

* High School D×D, Samael is also known as the Dragon Eater. His body exudes a poison that is deadly to any dragon or any being connected to dragons. Not even dragon gods like Ophis and Great Red are immune.

* Great Britain of a black man that they mistakenly shot in a Lidl supermarket, believing him to be armed when he actually was carrying carrots.
* Grant Morrison is tied down and trapped with a civilization on top of him. Zauriel and Green Lantern could free the Spectre... and kill all the innocent people. * Gravity Falls: The Northwest Family have been this for over a century, and Pacifica learns it the HARD WAY. She may have been a jerk, but even she wasn't in on her father's villainous legacy.
* Green Lantern. It's supposedly advanced technology, but because light isn't normally physical, for all intents and purposes the power rings are magic to everyone except Superman because he's weak to magic and this is not magic.

* Halo Wars, one of the skulls players can collect will make any Scarabs on the map fire, instead of the normal blue plasma, a rainbow beam which covers the target in hearts and bubbles.
* Hannibal features one of the major characters, Beverly Katz. At the climax of the previous episode, she is seen in combat with the eponymous character. The next episode, it looks like she has been trapped in glass. Then, the camera pans around, and it's revealed he cut her INTO STRIPS, and placed those strips in separate glass cases. Nightmare Fuel indeed.
* Heavy Rain, Ethan's final escape from the police takes him to the edge of a building's roof. It's up to you whether to surrender and go to prison (effectively taking Ethan out of the game), or simply fall backwards, hoping for the best. * Gustav Mahler's Ninth Symphony, his last completed work, is a long slow stretch of mostly strings meant, many critics believe, to represent the finality of dying and silence. Near the very end, the symphony briefly quotes an upbeat earlier work of the composer's. It has been interpreted as suggesting that all this is not final, but essayist Lewis Thomas suggests it also could be read as a last breath escaping.

Then her cousin Makoto Niwa moves in due to his parents having to work outside of Japan, and he brings her back to reality. She slowly starts to reintegrate into human society, and then a strange girl named Yashiro Hoshimiya appears and berates him for causing her to stop believing in aliens. He constantly ridicules her as well, thinking she's got the same psychological issues Erio went through. At the end of episode 13, Yashiro tells Makoto to move slightly from the position he's standing in. Shortly after he does, a meteor crashes into the exact spot he was just standing in, causing him to wonder if she really was telling the truth about being an alien.
* Hamlin Pig is one of the most blatant examples, mostly out of spite toward the Freedom Fighters for having made him a member of the rarely-used backup unit. He uses his position to attempt to make it hard for the Freedom Fighters to act, and is the only one to vote to punish Sally for leading an urgent mission against orders not to (though, granted, he likely wouldn't have been the only one if Sally hadn't threatened to become an Obstructive Bureaucrat herself).
* Green Rider series by Kristen Britain, there's a board game called Intrigue which is considered best played with three players in a Mêlée à Trois type game.

* Guild Wars 2? * Helsinki, Finland also has a reputation as standing in for Moscow in many American films, such as
* Hana-Kimi who dresses up as a guy to get together with her favourite high jumper, Sano. They get close enough that people mistake them for Yaoi Guys and even Shuichi (the loud guy...) starts liking her thinking she's a guy, leading to some odd situations to say the least.
* Grease Luke Skywalker, a senile (and smelly) Obi-Wan Kenobi and Darth Vader renaming his Stormtroopers "White Faggots".

* Harry Potter, a live stage show). With Uni gutting its most beloved attractions left and right over the years while at the same time shoving screens in people's faces, it's understandable why there has been so much backlash over this creative decision.

* Goddess Creation System. Xiaxi knows that Mingyi is a narcissist who can't stand being disrespected or being denied what he wants, so she talks about how great his brother is to him constantly and how much she scorns Mingyi in comparison. He absolutely can't stand it and nearly rapes her at one point.
* .hack//G.U. turns three 20+ hour games into one 90 minute movie each. A lot of the first game made it in, but once they got through with that, they winged it and revamped the plot from there on.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix. Ron mentions that taking powdered dragon claw is supposed make someone clever for a few hours, though he does not seem fully convinced, but whether or not this is true is never examined in series as the individual selling "powdered dragon claw" was actually selling dried Doxy droppings, which are toxic. Luckily Hermione confiscated them.

* hand cannons" serve as one of the primary weapon types, competing right alongside full-sized assault rifles. While most hand cannons do look appropriately futuristic, the Last Word, a special "exotic"-rarity weapon, is apparently single-action, and fan-fired from the hip. In terms of pure bullet damage, it's one of the hardest-hitting weapons in the game.
* Hands Held in the Snow begins with the framing device of a grandmother telling a story to a grandchild. The narrator usually disappears into the story, but sometimes makes side comments.
* Hc Svnt Dracones a cheap bulletproof vest can double your effective hit points, if you dump-statted Body, while riot armor can triple it and a fully upgraded MarsCo Hardcase can quadruple it at the cost of mobility. And that's not even getting into the powered or living armors.

* He does it again in "It Came from Outer Space" when he tricks Melvin the Martian into holding onto an explosive he intended to use on Ace.
* Hayate the Combat Butler brief shot of Athena during the final credits.
* Hanasakeru Seishounen to marry the woman he impregnated, but given who he was, that was never going to be an option.
* Grandma, drives a 1955 Dodge Royal. Near the start of the film, it won't start until a neighbor helps out. During the film, it keeps emitting knocking noises, and later dies entirely while they're driving down the highway. It is implied that the reason it functions so badly is because Elle hasn't driven since Violet died a year and a half back, and may not have been maintaining its fuel and oil levels.
* "Growing Pains": Clayface forms a separate sentient being, in the form of a young girl, to scout for him. She forgets who she is and is found by Robin who befriends her. In the heartbreaking final scene, Annie realizes what she is, and throws herself into Clayface to save Robin, being absorbed in the process. Robin then throws batarangs into the tank of solvent above them, causing streams to pour out onto Clayface as he demands he bring Annie back. Since Annie gaining separate sentience was a fluke to begin with, Clayface can't. Batman catches Robin's arm just as he's about to hurl the batarang that will kill Clayface.

one-sided on Sylar's part.
* Have I Got News for You they touched on the subject of Goldman-Sachs selling sub-prime mortgages, prompting panelist Ian to say some rather... uncharitable things about Goldman-Sachs, prompting this exchange:

* Hansel and Gretel" was roasted to death in her own oven. That was self-defense, though.
* Goblins is built on this trope. It takes place in a universe where the traditionally evil races of D&D are not always chaotic evil, but still have their traditional reputation. Enough fantastic racism is in place that the "good" races are perfectly willing to slaughter them now and cast spells that reveal alignment never. To drive the point home, it introduces members of the "good" races, such as Kore, Dellyn Goblinslayer, and Saral Caine, who are amoral at best and far more vile than any characters from the "evil" races at worst. Kore is a paladin who kills a dwarven child because prolonged contact with "evil" contaminated him, and Dellyn's actions sicken even Min-Max, a brainless fighter who (at the time) had no problem killing monsters.

* Heroic Sacrifice to save their people, however, she is widely lauded as a hero. In fact, at one point a human who is plotting to kill Delenn comments that the Minbari "think she's like the Second Coming", and the reveal of her rebirth after the beginning of season two is accompanied by G'Kar reading a Yeats poem entitled "The Second Coming". Perhaps not a coincidence. The flashforwards mentioned earlier also indicate a similar mythology surrounding Delenn developing in the centuries following the events of the show.
* Grand Theft Auto V hands. Start your criminal empire, build out your crib, and enjoy the high-octane lifestyle with your fellow online buddies at your wing.

* Going the Distance has one after Garrett moves closer to Erin and they re-connect at the concert.
* Great Mazinger and he would look after the Mykene monster. Whenever she managed to shove him off, the War Beast had recovered and she had to begin again. The ironical part is Boss thought he was being chivalrous, charming and kind instead of

* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire is that Bertha has no sense of direction and probably went to Australia when she meant to go to Albania.

* Greek mythology. There's normally conflicting myths about Medusa's appearance, some sources describing her as a hideous monster, others saying Aphrodite ironically made Medusa retain her mortal beauty and others offering a compromise where Medusa was both beautiful and terrible at the same time.
* Gold was very abundant in the pre-colonial Philippines. As in, you could see gold everywhere; decorated on houses, jewelry, etc. But finding gold was just as common as, let's say, getting a piece of candy. Pick almost any spot, dig, and you'd find a nugget of gold. And when Portuguese traders came, natives were willing enough to trade two gold pesos' worth... for a measly silver one.

* Halo 2 placed a rather large note on the musical styles enjoyed by Jersey's father — with clues in both timelines. "Ancient music, jazz and swing, always in the mood..."
* Goblin Slayer has the Adventurer's Guild ranks. All ranks are named after the material used to make an adventurer's ID tag and are:

off, Channel 7 decided to make it a separate series altogether.
* Goblin Slayer's titular character has about as much sociability and charm as a dead fish, a large number of people find themselves drawn to him. It might be because they grow to admire his determination and skills. It might also be because everyone can tell he is in desperate need of a therapist.
* Grace Under Fire" She then reaches under the table they are sitting at and finds an envelope full of money.
* Hannah Montana. "If I still liked a guy, I would have done the same thing." "Really?" "Well, I would have done it a little better."
* God, for that matter), leading the other characters to occasionally speculate that T-Rex is making up those voices he hears.
* Gossip Girl tries to rape two different characters in the pilot episode. As the series goes on, he himself says that this behavior was a common occurrence in his younger years.
* Harry Potter boards the Hogwarts Express at a real train station, but the fictional Platform 9¾.
* Gundam 00: A Wakening of the Trailblazer. The other heroes are... less than thrilled.
* He also does it briefly (complete with eyes bulging out) during his song "Friend Like Me", but it is just a part of his act. It's even literally in the lyrics.
* Harry Harrison has an arrowhead of meteoric iron as a talisman of sorts.
* Gundam works tend to have very Germanic and Axis-inspired aesthetics.
* Good Omens prophecies, and his theory is apparently confirmed as they don't rhyme at all:
* Hell, Scooby himself has been guilty of this several times. In "The Headless Horseman Of Hagglethorn Hall," he hides from a ghostly knight in the gang's picnic basket where he proceeds to woof down a whole roast chicken with absolutely no contrition about it.
* Golden Swallow to prove his innocence after being framed for stealing and eating a goose.
* Gundam Build Divers confronts an old friend of his, the admin Game Master, over the Mass-Diver problem infesting the Gunpla Battle Nexus Online game. Despite these people blatantly cheating, ravaging the digital world they live in and being caught on video doing so, Game Master reveals that, for some strange reason, their data logs do not record this data. To the game, they are playing fairly. This makes Kyoya's friend Rommel feel that the maker of the Break Decal programming the Mass-Divers use to cheat is modifying the code within the main database.
* Heavy Object the city of Lost Angels was originally a normal city but the presence of a nearby Object maintenance base resulted in spies from the other nations infiltrating the city. Said spies created "gangs" to act as covers for their presence, which soon ballooned out of control. By the time the protagonists arrive, all of the civilians have long since left the city; everyone who remains is either a spy posing as a criminal or an actual criminal profiting off their conflict.
* Hey Arnold! often respond to idiocy by using a shortened version of "I'm surrounded by idiots" by saying "I'm surrounded."
* Happened also in Russia in 2010, on a foot fight with poleaxes. A re-enactor smashed his opponent's helmet (and his head inside).
* Hideki Kamiya loves to reply to stupid Twitter questions with "Ask your mom." In a subversion of this trope, this is less "your mother is a..." and more "if you need to learn some good manners, go back to your parents."
* Hangman's Knot unfolds over 2 to 3 days. (It's not clear exactly how long Major Stewart and his men spend travelling after Peterson is killed, but it can't be more than a day or so.)
* Hammer and Sickle Removed for Your Protection: A Cold War film that removes references to Soviet Russia to help the film age better.
* Hans Christian Andersen, Norwegian author. The conversation went somewhat like this:
* Guards! Guards!, where Vetinari reveals he didn't utilize a similar passage in the prison cell where he is being held because it feels too much like running away.

* Gods and Generals, mildly. Mainly because he keeps addressing his brother the colonel by name instead of rank or "sir."
* Heavy Object the Einherjar project is a molecular motor that replicates the effect of rabies, but with a faster incubation rate and increased rate of spread.
* Having military aircraft fly improbably close to the ground: near or below building height or even a scant few meters above the ground for helicopters. This is both incredibly risky and also probably illegal and against regulation.
* Hex has little concern for the affairs of lesser beings. In Act VI chapter 52, when the group chews him out for not willingly helping Complica even though it's in his power to do so, Fang Fang remarks in disgust that even if they are "lesser beings" to him, at least they understand the value of life, to which Hex responds:
* Heroes, has the Fugitive Arc as its entire premise as after Claire's revelation of the existence of powers, there was a huge backlash and anti-power sentiment which got even worse after a horrible bombing in Odessa. It was blamed on powers and Mohinder Suresh, forcing all the surviving specials who haven't been killed to go into hiding.
* Goblin Slayer, she has a crippling fear of goblins as a result of what they did to her back when she was still a rookie, which is what drives her to seek Goblin Slayer's help.

* Higurashi: When They Cry. The unusual circumstances don't make it any less heartwarming.
* Heaven's Lost Property season 2. The gang participates in another festival at the Satsukitane shrine, but the theme this year is professional wrestling. With a ten million yen prize, Tomoki debuts as Mask Du Pants. Using ecchi wrestling holds and finishing moves, Tomoki advances easily through the tournament, and battles the Angeloids in a tag team elimination match. The finals pit him against Mikako in an electrified steel cage match. He gets the advantage until another masked wrestler, implied to be Sohara, interferes and delivers a devastating backbreaker on him. Afterwards, Mikako awards the prize to Tomoki, but he must fight for the World Title against Judas, who was the shooting range man from the previous year.
* Golden Mean Fallacy: Because both options are valid, we will make lame attempts at both rather than do one of them properly.
* Hero Factory somewhat dipped back into the practice for its Heroes (the villains still avoided it). They were built in a factory as variations of the same basic design rather than individual and unique life-forms. The first wave Heroes were recognizable solely by their different helmets, weapons torso armour designs (the three rookies had the same one, however). The 2.0 and 3.0 waves, thanks to the new building style, added subtle differences that made each Hero unique: limbs length, shoulder width, armour size and orientation, colour schemes. By the Breakout arc, though Heroes are still all built off the largely same basic frame, Hero designs are even more varied in height, designs, colour schemes, armour and other elements.

* Guilty Gear: one of Dizzy's sentient wings, Necro, attempts to kill the opponent with a powerful blast. Dizzy manages to push Necro enough so the attack barely * Grossology had Sloppy Joe starting his own fast food chain that sold extremely addictive food in enormous portions that nobody would be able to finish, so that they would have to throw most of it out, thus creating lots of garbage. Although it's a bit of a stretch to call this plan "evil" since he really just wanted to hoard all the garbage for himself. It only crosses over into evil once his garbage stash gets so full that it explodes and causes garbage to rain down over the entire city. Joe didn't intend for that to happen, and was even momentarily distraught over losing his stash, but then he decided an entire city covered in garbage was even better.

* Happens twice during Judy's first bullpen meeting as ZPD's very first rabbit officer. Before the meeting starts,
* Gravity Falls culinary specialty, Mabel Juice. We've seen two variants so far; a pink liquid full of glitter, sugar cubes, and plastic dinosaurs, and a green liquid full of dice and a single troll doll. Of course, the second mixture is only seen in an ordinary glass, not a blender, but since it's referred to as the same substance, it was probably blended first.
* Heavenly Sword the opening scene depicts Nariko's death at the hands of a sword so powerful it kills the user. Throughout the course of the game, it is revealed that the sword slowly drains the life of anybody who uses it for extended periods of time.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince. Maybe mildly funny only once, if you're being generous, but everyone acts like it's the most hilarious, witty thing ever every time she uses it.
* Highschool of the Dead, one of the characters of the group is Zero, a small white puppy whom the protagonists have adopted. Throughout their adventure, the dog has been, in many ways, an advantage and a nuiscance. * GURPS can potentially handle any sort of dwarf — but its writers have mostly stuck to the established standard.
* Grey's Anatomy, April runs away from her wedding to Matthew after Jackson stands up mid-ceremony to confess his love for her.
* Harry Potter, loses his right hand. Not only does this leave him unable to cast spells (since he hasn't had practice channeling magic through his left hand), he's also unable to brew potions, and the disruption to his body's magic flow interferes even with his wandless abilities.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers who comes from West/Central Europe rather than East Asia. She's humble, kind, quiet, deferring yet not completely submissive to her brother Switzerland, very mature for a young nation, and quite competent at housework.
* Gospel of Afranius Judas and his posthumous appearances, with various impostors (one of whom went on to write the Q document).
* Hannah Montana, who, among other infractions, frequently tells Lola, to her face, no less, how uncool she thinks Lola is. This despite being friends with Hannah, who publicly humiliates herself just as often as Lola. Hannah Montana herself also qualifies from time to time.
* Gypsy out of me, Rose." Unfortunately, on the day of recording, the actor failed to show up to do the line, so Stephen Sondheim himself ended up recording it — and he was so pissed off at the actor for not being there that the anger came across as genuine, prompting a similarly angry response from Ethel Merman.

* He goes up against Ogami, and is only defeated because Retsudo secretly tampered with his sword..
* Half-Life 2 are a very interesting example. Though their physical appearances have very little medical influence, they do use a lot of medical jargon in reference to military operations. Enemies are referred to as "vectors", "contamination" or an "infestation", and soldiers undergo "containment" procedures to "coagulate" or "sterilise" them. This clinical language helps to reinforce their robotic, stoic behavior.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City Stories, where in one mission, Umberto, a guy that loves talking about having "balls" but never actually goes into action personally, tells Vic "I'll coordinate the attack from here," and Vic sarcastically replies, "Sure, big man... We really need a coordinator back here..."

* GWAR beneath them, and human life is practically worthless, existing only give them something to enslave and viciously exploit. The song "Slaughterama," for instance, is about a game show that's intentionally designed to "kill everyone that's worth killing."
* Hardspace: Shipbreaker The Grapple you get can double as this when dealing with bigger objects. If it can't pull it to you, it'll pull you to it instead, letting you swing on its beam for faster speeds. It's useful for getting around without spending fuel, just keep a hand on the brakes if you don't want to smack into something too fast and crack your helmet.
* Hawaii Five-O (the original) - Steve McGarrett, the head of the Five-O police unit, is a former U.S. Navy officer and a commander in the U.S. Naval Reserve. Several episodes had references to his past career.

Jane wrote in her autobiography that her father was more open to strangers than to her: "Often I run into people who describe finding themselves sitting next to him on transatlantic flights and go on about what an open person he was, how they drank and talked with him "for eight hours nonstop." It makes me angry. I never talked to him for thirty minutes nonstop!"
* Gung Ho, not the 1986 car movie, but the 1942 movie about the Marine Raiders and the Makin Island raid.
* GURPS All-Star Jam 2004 takes this trope up to eleven. * Harry hides Tom Riddle in the closet of the babies' room at Wools' Orphanage when she hears Edna coming.
* Gunnerkrigg Court forum. He stopped, not so much because people asked the same questions, but rather because other readers would jump in and answer the questions themselves, making it a "Questions for Whoever Feels Like Answering" thread. He took his question-answering to a formspring account. However, when fans began repeatedly asking questions on topics he had stated he wasn't going to answer, and then getting combative over his not answering, Siddell deleted his formspring account. Fortunately, some months later, Siddell decided to give it another shot and reopened his formspring account.

* Grim Prairie Tales of the tiny town where the fourth story takes place. He is not very good at either role.
* Gulliver Tie-Down: A bunch of tiny people tie down their giant opponent.
* "God Bless The Child" involves a variation. The parents at the center of the case were loving, involved parents who took good care of their child in most respects, but they belonged to a religion that didn't believe in modern medicine and therefore didn't seek medical assistance when their daughter became seriously ill, leading to her death from a treatable infection.
* Hayate the Combat Butler makes fun of her. Nagi's had vocal training for years, incidentally, and gets basically a perfect score.
* Hell, the theme song to Carrie and Tommie's dance sequence is even explicitly titled "I never dreamed someone like you could love someone like me." Not exactly catchy but...

* GWAR has a few songs like this: "Sick of You" ("It's just your luck/You really suck/That's all—I'm sick of you") and "Hate Love Songs, which is about, well, hating love songs, among other things.
* Good Omens does a one-sided version with Aziraphale and Crowley. Aziraphale is still an immortal angel, but Crowley — for reasons unknown at first — stops being a similarly immortal demon and instead begins to be reincarnated over and over again as a human who keeps being drawn to Aziraphale despite having no memories of him or their past lives together. It realistically shows just how emotionally taxing such a romance would be on both parties when only one of them is fully aware of what's happening; Aziraphale grows so heartbroken after having to repeatedly watch Crowley die or leave him that he eventually tries to just leave Crowley's reincarnations alone to not break their hearts further, which only makes Crowley feel even more acutely that he's missing something he can't put a name to.

* Hello Mary Lou: Prom Night II, and has a much lighter tone. It could be considered a black comedy, however it also has enough genuine terror to split it about 50/50.

* Hellsing organization and their Wild Geese mercenary replacements fall into this, being near-useless against the enemy vampires in close range (to their credit, the Wild Geese were well-aware of it and took pains to engage the vampires at long-range, but unfortunately were unable to keep it up). The ghouls fall into this category as well since they are little more than vampire-controlled, mindless zombies.
* GURPS notes the variation and its origins; “Some people think this offers a useful distinction between stage trickery and the real supernatural deal; others consider it pretentious.”
* Happens to Firestar in the Ultimate Universe, who tends to burn off her civilian clothing when she activates her powers.
* Goosebumps: In the "Haunted House Game", one of the spots the two kids land on takes them to a house where two old women are playing a game. They're supposed to ask them for something, which turns out to be an amulet that saps the life out of the girl's arm.

When it is used on Luo Hao, she is able to partially dodge it (it hits her in the shoulder instead of the heart). She points out Campione like her screw destiny all the time, starting with being a mortal that killed a God.

* has this trope. Nobody wants to become a vampire, but once you are one, you enjoy it.

* Gunnerkrigg Court. She tries to stay awake for as long as possible for Zimmy's sake, but she can't go without sleep indefinitely.
* Grêmio had this reputation for a period of time going from the late 90s into the 2010s. The last relevant title was a very hard-fought Série B title (in one of the most infamous matches in Brazil's football history, winning with only 7 players and

* Harry Potter has confirmed that this represents the Wizarding version of World War II, and since we know that the British Prime Minister knows about magic it's not inconceivable that the leader of Germany might too...

* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, the Weasley twins describe to Harry one of their inventions — a Puking Pastille. Biting its orange end will make you vomit, and biting its purple end will make it stop. The rest of their "Skiving Snackbox" candies have the same pattern.
* Hardboiled Detective. Still, as a detective working with the police, he needs to keep it secret to avoid getting out of the investigation.
* Guillotines. In fact, that's the whole point; they were invented to make a beheading more humane than an axe, which was rarely
* Hidamari Sketch is an unusual case, as she does it mainly by way of using unusual or made-up honorifics and other suffixes. She almost invariably calls Yuno by "Yunocchi", and on at least one occasion used "Yuno-dono"; meanwhile, she settles on "Norippe" for Nori, except on the occasion that she uses "Norisuke".
* Hawkman and Hawkgirl. If they acknowledge their love for each other
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name. (No one was really surprised by this but Conrad).
* Grim Fandango are skeletons. The rest are demons native to the Land of the Dead.

* Grand Finale. She rebelled against Cavil and saved Hera from being experimented on in an attempt to bring back resurrection. She then returned Hera to Helo and Athena. Boomer then allowed Athena to execute her.
* Hey Arnold! episode where a drill sergeant replaced Mr. Simmons. He punished 3 kids by making them stand in room's corner. He makes Stinky do the same because of "symmetry".
* has some tweaks to the vehicle damage rules to ensure that ramming combat is a viable option between classical Greek-style warships but less useful for Renaissance-style galleys. (Basically, being holed below the waterline becomes a lot less devastating for a more technologically advanced ship.)

* Gundam, where the Minerva's CIWS shreds a Murasame rather viscerally.
* Harper tearfully tries to walk out on Charlie in a jewelry store, only for the alarm to go off because she's still wearing a ring.
* Heart Catch Pretty Cure by slamming their rears into the monster's face.
* Grave of the Fireflies and that the lack of candy is one of the first signs of their impending death by starvation... It's mildly unsettling.
* Happy Days when Milwaukee is in the midst of a bitter garbage strike and Richie is investigating a story about it. Fonzie says he has a source, but since he wants to be anonymous, he will only appear as a silhouette on a window blind standing outside to give yes or no signs to questions. When he steps forward, Richie notes that it is obviously Al, but Fonz insists that Richie plays along. Reluctantly, he cooperates with his questions until Al forgets himself and answers a question by talking. Now with the silliness completely pointless, Richie opens the blind and the two finish their conversation normally.
* Halloween Episode teamed up to chase after Bart and Lisa (who had been drawn into their world via a TV remote powered by plutonium), after Scratchy actually saw the two of them laughing at Itchy's pranks, and they both thought it was mean.
* Hamatora and one detective suggests the late owner's son should burn the contents.

* Gonky, until green onion Chex was eventually brought to store shelves.
* Hellraiser. All while keeping it a secret from her husband and stepdaughter.
* GLOW weren't doing much of anything related to women's wrestling while GLOW was on television.
* Happy Days ended with Fonzie depressed and saddened after losing a young boy who was like a surrogate son to him. Richie tries to cheer him up by inviting him to a new bowling alley that just opened up, only to receive the reply: "The Fonz doesn't bowl". When Richie retorts that the alley has girl "pin boys", Fonzie then states: "The Fonz bowls!" On their way out, Richie invites his other friends Ralph and Potsie to join them, only to get a joint refusal. But when The Fonz mentions the female pin boys, they also quickly change their stance.
* Henry VIII would persecute Irish Catholics and create division by encouraging settlements of Protestant nobility among a largely Catholic peasantry, leading to divisions (initially religious, later national, now ethnic) that persist to the present day. Catholicism was never declared illegal officially, but Catholics in England and Ireland were treated as second-class citizens (albeit better than Jews and other minorities) with restricted civil rights until the 19th Century.
* Harry Potter, an AU in which Harry, Ron, and Ginny travel back in time to prevent the gruesome deaths of their friends and family. Only their minds travel back in time so that they wake up as 11-year-olds with adult minds. Harry and Ginny are married and the fact that they have the minds of sexually-active married adults but the bodies of prepubescent children is a source of great tension (and is a recurring issue throughout the story).
* Hallow Mass No one uses "magic" or casts "spells". Instead, the cultists and the antiquities staff enact various "formulas".
* Gundam Unicorn has two beam sabres mounted in its forearms (on flip-out panels) for use in this fashion, the MSN-06S Sinanju also has a pair.
* Goggles Do Something Unusual: Eyewear that does something other than what their mundane design purpose is.

* He did a lot more than that. Let's begin with the earlier years of his four thousand year life. He rose to power as a talented Artificer in Yotia. Soon he came into conflict with a neighboring desert nation led by his brother. The following war saw entire forests cut down for wood, seas poisoned, deserts burned to glass and the earth blackened. The Brothers' War devastated Terisaire and killed most of the continent's population, all to save those that did survive from his brother, who was even worse. In order to win his war, Urza used the sylex at Argoth, which was pretty much a magic nuke that changed the shape of Dominaria forever. After that the list gets even longer. He unintentionally led the Phyrexians to Serra's realm, which was destroyed. He sacrificed friends as if they grew on trees, all in the name of revenge. In order to combat Phyrexia, Urza began a century-long eugenics project to breed a savior that can defeat them. He built a school for mages only to abandon its students when the academy was trapped in time dilation. Here is a man who sacrifices friends and nations, a man to whom no price is too high to defeat Phyrexia and Yawgmoth. In the end, he even sacrificed himself to that end.
* Goosebumps SlappyWorld finally has a mummy as the primary antagonist of the story.
* he also has a panic reflex, which fires the beams uncontrollably if he thinks there are spiders nearby..
* Half-Dressed Cartoon Animal: Anthropomorphic animals who don't wear complete sets of clothes, usually by wearing either a shirt or pants and not both.
* Gold Fever in nearby units. The "flesh to stone" spell, however, is a defense buff that doesn't harm the target.
* Gundam SEED Destiny features an attempt to drop a destroyed colony on Earth. Despite the efforts of both the Federation and ZAFT, who together actually manage to take out the majority of the thing, enough damage is caused to re-ignite a second Bloody Valentine War.
* Heavy Rain during the junkyard fight if the player doesn't guide him out of the car thrown into the grinder fast enough.
* Hatoful Boyfriend - his reputation gives him a good excuse to be absent as much as he is. If pursued he fears for Hiyoko drawing the ire of his enemies and tries vaguely to dissuade her. If she insists and keeps insisting, he inducts her into the world of espionage.
* Growing with the Audience: A continuation of a children's work from the past that is aimed more at adults who saw the original when they were kids rather than children today.
* Grazerite names, following the formula established onscreen by Jaresh-Inyo (the Federation president during
* has a plaque in his headquarters upon which is engraved the names of every member of Fulcrum who died in his service.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows has Bellatrix torturing Hermione with a combination of the Cruciatus Curse and a knife for information. She seems rather fond of this—as Dumbledore says, she "plays with her food before she eats it". The film managed to make this even worse by having Bellatrix carve the word "mudblood" into Hermione's arm with her knife.
* Going Mobile: A Useful Notes page for issues created by the Mobile Web.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, they're forced to the forefront in the movie, making it seem like they are the most important part of the movie. What's even worse is the fact that by the time they revealed who the Half-Blood Prince was, the audience (at least, those who hadn't read the book) had no clue why it was important. In other words, the romantic plot made people forget what the main plot was. Granted, for some at least, the romantic subplots weren't much better in the book, either.
* Gyro, Brigitta, and many other characters appeared as if they had always been there, and their origins haven't always been explained.
* her freaking grandfather. He creeps the hell out of most people with the way he crawls around grabbing onto Fiona's legs, calling her his "dear Fiona."
* Godzilla and actually cause just as much, if not more, collateral damage. Even the damage caused by Godzilla himself can be blamed largely on the army since shooting Godzilla just makes him angry and causes him to advance and attack, causing worse destruction than had the army did nothing about it.

* GURPS goes perhaps too far in avoiding this. Extensive (and accurate) calculations are available for people who wish to use them. It's made quite clear that with any sort of realistic engine turning it off for most of the trip will almost certainly be necessary. The existence of random debris in the void of space is mentioned but only in that if you spend enough time traveling at a good fraction of lighspeed it will wear away the hull after a few years, there's no way it could slow you down meaningfully.
* Happy Days episode "Hard Cover" has Richie, Fonzie, and pals trapped in a girls' dorm after curfew with much hilarity ensuing.
* Harlan Ellison that he eventually got. However, it was well known that he used that pseudonym to flag up works that he felt were sub-par, and Roddenberry, afraid that people would otherwise go in expecting the episode to suck, was able to tie things up in legal matters until the episode had already aired, by which point it didn't matter. (Though this had the unfortunate side-effect of also preventing D.C. Fontana — who had mostly written the final script — getting a co-writer credit).
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire hero-worships his boss, Mr. Crouch, who always calls him "Weatherby" instead of "Weasley." It's a bit strange because he at least casually knows Percy's father, Arthur; it's possibly he either doesn't know Arthur's surname either, or just doesn't realize that the two are related. Colin Creevey also keeps getting Hermione's name wrong, calling her "Hermy-own" and "Hermowninny".
* Haou Airen, Hakuron's father was an utter bastard who planned to kill him due to a prophecy. A child Hakuron managed to escape from his dad's grasp (his mother wasn't so lucky), was adopted by a Triad leader, and when he was a teenager he faced his father and killed him himself.
* Heracles/Hercules is the strongest and greatest hero of all of Greek/Roman mythology. However, his myths center largely on feats of monster-slaying and reality-defying strength rather than soldiering.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983): Adora's brother Adam doesn't really count. While he is quite active in his He-Man persona, as Prince Adam he's considered lazy and useless by those who don't know his secret. Their father, on the other hand, was implied to be in the thick of things during the Horde invasion of Eternia.
* He also built himself a robotic hand to replace his missing right hand.
* Healthy in Heaven: A character who was ill in life isn't so in the afterlife.
* Harry Potter. This is not surprising, since owning a "pet" bird of prey is essentially letting a small carnivorous dinosaur into your house. On top of that, they are neither affectionate nor particularly intelligent, stretching the meaning of "pet".
* He would eventually return to give it a proper ending and the character reappeared in his cartoon show,
* Harry mentioned that Sirius slept with twenty-two girls at Hogwarts in an attempt to beat an unnamed Ravenclaw's record of thirty-seven.
* Hilarious in Hindsight. While not so obvious at the time, it's pretty easy to guess nowadays that he's the killer.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series ends with Aya coming to her senses when she accidentally hurts Razer, then reversing her attempt to rewrite the universe and destroying the remaining Manhunter army with a virus that also affects herself, then she disappears into the aether. At the end, Razer is convinced that she's still out there somewhere in space and goes off to find her, his hope for doing so causing a Blue Lantern ring to follow him.
* Hellraiser: Hellworld and didn't even attend his son's funeral, so he has no right to claim he cares about his son. The Host ignores this and continues the torment.
* Gyo, Tadashi nearly becomes a victim of this when he lands on a huge group of undead tiny fishes but he was eventually saved off-screen.

* Harry Potter novels. Also, Hagrid's frequent purchases of contraband magical creatures.
* Hannah Montana is also said to have smelly feet, by Hannah/Miley herself.
* Greybeards and, most importantly for the game, nonintervention in worldly affairs. (Getting them involved is a main quest plot point.)
* Gwendoline Christie has it that part of what won her the role of Brienne is that she showed up to her audition done up to look as homely as Brienne does in the books (on top of showing up in an actual suit of armor).
* Guadalcanal Diary was based on the autobiographical story of a journalist who landed with the 1st Marine division on Guadalcanal in 1942.
* Highlander. Even putting on one's shoulder would be more inconspicuous.
* GoldenEye has bloodless deaths as well, most notably when Bond shoots all those guards in the Russian prison.
* has to be spelled out in the normal text rather than getting a objection bubble. The Judge tells him off for shouting his objection so loudly, then Apollo comes up with a legitimate reason for his objection.
* God of War series, when the circle symbol appears above an enemy that you've been giving the beatdown, it's time for Kratos to finish that enemy in exceedingly brutal fashion. Kratos's most brutal and badass kills are reserved for the many bosses he faces.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: During the escape from Kyln in the commandeered control module, a prison guard floating in zero-G smacks against the window before sliding away.
* Great Teacher Onizuka... to the title character, in revenge for taking his students on a treasure hunt they wanted no part of.
* Guilty Gear was a mother before she turned 5. She and her son also look fairly close in age due to her having spent several years in temporal suspension.
* Grimoire’s Soul outside of their Core specialties, is that they'll have lots of sex with pretty much anyone.
* Godzilla vs. Biollante has quite possibly one of the coolest MPAA descriptions ever: rated PG "for traditional Godzilla violence."
* Ground Chuck) for much of Knox's post-season struggles; along with (particularly in his first stint with the Los Angeles Rams) a revolving door at quarterback:
* Gorillaz (his daughter specifically nudged him to work with Albarn). The song revitalized public interest in Womack, leading to his first album in 18 years.
* High Elves and Dwarfs, while the Elves call it the War of the Beard.
* Hey Arnold! had quite a few of these, too. Most notably the Thanksgiving episode where the phrase is uttered during Mr Simmons Thanksgiving dinner. When the girl known as Joy starts choking, Mr Simmons' "friend" Peter dryly states this as he sips some red wine.
* Headhunters is an art burglar specifically to shower his wife with luxuries.
* Happy Heroes: The official YouTube channel has uploaded Seasons 1-3, Seasons 10-14, and the second movie for free viewing. Now the Season 10 and 11 episodes are unfortunately region-blocked outside of China and the playlist containing the episodes were removed.
* Green Lantern: First Flight, and they didn't want to rehash his origin with every new DTV. Ironically, it turned out to be much, much better received than the live-action film.
* Hard Candy. It was filmed in 18 days, in chronological order, in the director's own house, and used a bare minimum of takes.
* Grace Under Fire, a middle-aged dad was staying at his son's house, they have a fight, and the dad storms into his room and starts blasting swing music. The son pounds on the door and tells him to turn it down.
* Glee Reprise is sassy and fashionable, and Rachel immediately pegs him for being similar to Kurt.
* Go, i.e. "best move". Playing them out according to the standard may seem boring to a junior player, but the reason they became standard in the first place is that they provide both sides with usable structures and "fair share" of the area where it is played.

* Górsky & Butch with the other agents and make them stop finishing his sentences for him.
* Hexenringe has B.E.N.T., a mysterious organization supposedly created for good but being used for nefarious purposes.
* Halo universe) is when the clones are aged up to the original person who supplied the DNA. The clone will have the mind of an infant, given that it has zero memories, and the body will deteriorate and usually die within a couple months. Apparently the cloned body's metabolism just can't stabilize itself correctly. Despite this procedure being highly illegal, flash clones were used to cover up the SPARTAN-II project; ONI took the children, and replaced them with flash clones. As far as any of the parents could guess, their children inexplicably went into a vegetative state and died from an unknown disease.
* Grace herself falls into this, as well, as she defeats Damien solely because of her
* Hades, Zagreus can hear and talk to the narrator. A flashback shows that he discovered Persephone was his mother because he heard the narrator call her such.
* Hellsister Trilogy ends with Darkseid surviving the War and plotting his revenge as his enemies believe him dead.
* Hell Bound", there was a ghost who didn't want to go to hell, so he sent other spirits in his place. In the end, he was made corporeal and trapped in (another) box, destined to spend eternity not going to hell, but staring at a brick wall out the small window.
* Hellboy comes to Earth on the same night that Captain America 'dies', and it is later established that his father is Trigon the Terrible (with Raven, his half-sister, being raised as his daughter when she is born a few decades later).
* Good Girls of his dangerous lifestyle, not in spite of it. In one scene, she masturbates while imagining him destroying various objects in her bedroom with a crowbar.
* Gnomes by Wil Huygen and Rein Poortvliet. Quote: "An almost extinct species of the male sex." (Could there be a connection there?) "Height 1 metre 20 cm, often smaller. Can still be found in the middle of inhospitable forests and in the mountains. They dig for gold and silver in extensive mines; they are masters of metalwork. They are good-natured except for a solitary few who are capable of ugly deeds. If a dwarf falls into human hands, he buys his freedom with gold. They do not have beards."
* Guild Wars 2 to find out which method of murder would get him off the most. This holds no matter which of the races the Commander is. And then there are the small, petty things, like critiquing your choice of allies (because he would be so much more fun). Yick.
* Green Lanterns have gone for the Big Green Boxing Glove for a quick KO.
* High School Dx D, it's ultimately revealed that he only joined the Church and became an Exorcist because it'd allow him to slaughter things and slake his bloodlust without consequence; he doesn't even believe in God, and never did.
* Happy Gilmore, Happy's caddy (the homeless man he grabbed off the street) is named Otto. However, he is never referred to as Otto throughout the final film in any way. Seeing as how he has a lot of screen time, viewers will wonder who "Otto" is when he appears near the top of the cast list.
* Guild Wars: In Prophecies, the Mursaat fill this role compared to the white Mantle. In Factions, Shiro'ken are elite mooks compared to afflicted. In Nightfall, Margonites (and torment demons to an extent) act in this role compared to normal Kournan soldiers.

* High School D×D is often portrayed from the enemies perspective as a terrifying, inhuman monster who can rip through everything they throw at him with nothing but his fists.
* God Does Not Own This World: The creator does not own the rights to their work, so the company that does own the rights can continue production or reboot the work without the original creator's involvement or approval.
* GURPS can be used to compel happiness or peace. Ecstasy is a more malicious variant used to incapacitate the target.
* Hercules: The Animated Series episode "The Bacchanal", during Bacchus' song, Hades is shown doing this in the Underworld, dressed in pajamas with a sleepy-looking Pain and Panic standing off to the side.
* God of War halfway across the city by seizing it by the foot, but won't let you break down a wall.

* Hamilton, Joe Frank and Reynolds: A soft-rock trio from the early- to mid-1970s, who hit No. 4 on the Hot 100 in July 1971 with "Don't Pull Your Love." After several years of failing to hit the top 40, they released the single "Fallin' in Love" in June 1975 (ironically, Reynolds had left by that time), and two months later had their only No. 1 hit. While they had another top 25 hit after that, only those first two songs are remembered today.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn characters does mean that Nowell kind of pushes the "child" aspect of this trope, but it fits otherwise.
* Helen Lovejoy is a parody of this kind of character. When something stirs public outcry in Springfield (which is often), she plaintively screams, "Won't somebody
* Hero Clix characters are KOd at the end of their dials. It doesn't matter what you're using on them, from powers named "Blades/Claws/Fangs" or "Big Uzi" or even "Death Comes Swiftly", whatever it is that hits you, it just knocks you out.
* Hanamura was so despised, it was removed from all game modes (except Custom Matches) to receive a major overhaul a mere

* Hal is the INSTIGATOR for most of the madness in the Middle household, and the part of the equation the kids get their mischief from. Lois might be more strict and punishing, but Hal is the one with all the crazy schemes..
* Harry Potter in the late 90s, but the project was scrapped. Note that this predated both the movies and the last three books, meaning that it would have been very different from Pottermore.

* Harry Potter has consistently gone out to point out that Slytherin is not just the "evil house", but it falls a little flat when for the first 5 books everyone who is or was part of Slytherin is a bully, jerk, or outright villain. Apparently Merlin studied there, and the sixth book has Slughorn who's alright, so it's entirely possible to go through Slytherin and end up fine, but most, if not all, evil wizards studied there. Basically ambition is not a guarantee of villainy, but it is a prerequisite for it.
* Harry Potter, Remus' father hits Remus if he's too casual with his teachers or has attitude when speaking with his mother. This is portrayed as a bad thing in the work.

To make matters worse, his children run the risk of developing the same condition and being forced to harvest organs as well.

* Havenfall Is for Lovers goes shirtless whenever he's in his djinn form.
* Gremlins, all of which seemed to put more emphasis on the mogwai than the titular monsters that were involved in most of the film's more terrifying and gruesome moments.

* Hexen II: Portal of Praevius is an expansion pack taking place after the Serpent Rider trilogy, and deals with stopping an evil wizard from resurrecting the deceased Serpent Riders.
* Haroun and the Sea of Stories: Khattam-Shud seeks to poison the Sea of Stories because he can't rule the fictional worlds inside them.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Harry is accepted in the advanced Potions class because the new teacher has lower standards than Snape's. Unlike most examples on this page, however, it's implied Snape's admittance requirements were too high (demanding the Wizarding equivalent of an A on the exam, while the replacement also allowed those with the B grade equivalent). Snape was also unable to apply this requirement to his new class, as this would have left him teaching a one-student class (a student by the name of Harry Potter...).

* Glenn Close, and even signed a contract to appear in more Marvel movies.
* Green Wing were never given scripts for their scenes together as both were professional improv actors. * Gut Punch: A moment in a work that quickly and permanently shifts the work to a darker tone.
* Green has the worst creature removal of any of the colors, instead having to rely on using its own creatures in combination with spells that force creatures to fight each other. * Gravity Falls: At the end of Bill Cipher's introductory scene in "Dreamscaperers", he randomly rattles off conspiracy-theory nonsense ("Reality is an illusion, the universe is a hologram, buy gold, BYE!"). * Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality to students in order to deal with their class schedules is, canonically, due to wizards looking at the hard problem of writing a conflict-minimizing schedule given classes and requesting students and brute-forcing it with magic. Yudkowsky establishes early on that wizarding math basically stops at trigonometry. Presumably, you have a lot less incentive to learning how to work within the laws of the causality when you can just ignore them.

* Glorious Appearing series, during Jesus' judgment of the "sheep and goats", Jesus judges the "goats" (most likely Global Community and Nicolae Carpathia loyalists) for doing nothing good for "the least of My brethren" (contextually talking about the people of Israel), saying that what they didn't do for them, they also didn't do for Him. In other words, they're just as guilty as if they were actively coming against the Jews and Christians themselves, and doing that to the Jews means you're also doing that to Christ.

* Harry Potter was a handsome student, but by the time he is reborn, he is bald, has pale white skin, bloodshot eyes, and slits for nostrils. In a Pensive memory, Dumbledore has of him entering his office to ask to be the Defense of Dark Arts professor after he began dabbling in Dark Arts but before he gained power, Harry notes that he had already lost his good looks by then and was beginning to resemble the pale, snake-like creature he would fully become later on. Even many years before that when Tom Riddle was still pretty handsome, he was stated to have already begun to look a little pale by the time he took a job in a store to get hold of an ancient artifact. This is justified as each time he mutilated his soul to create a horcrux, he became 'less human'.

* Gravity Falls Stan tries to leave the yearly Pioneer Day, but an altercation with the police ends with him stuck in the stocks for most of the day.
* gotten an expanded role scene. This probably has to do with the fact that the film also emphasizes Holmes and Watson's (canonical) fighting prowess. In the sequel, Mary seems like she's getting this treatment as well - as she threatens an assailant with a gun. But she's not in the thick of battle for the rest of the movie (though she does prove integral in the climax).

* Happens occasionally in pro wrestling. Due to the nature of the enterprise being a live performance in front of a crowd, action during the matches can be botched. Often when a botch is noticeable, the crowd will chant "You fucked up!" at the offending wrestler, especially if they didn't like him much to begin with. A heel wrestler who falls victim to this will sometimes turn to the crowd and sneer "I MEANT TO DO THAT," just to play up the fact that he is, in fact, a bit of a dick, for the sake of the show.

* Guns N' Roses Rose, everyone in that lineup left the band by 1997; and besides, the band's style shifted more toward industrial metal than plain old hard rock.
* - Goal: Charlie Brown must fight and overcome his cancer after being treated with chemotherapy. This fight is represented metaphorically with Chuck trying to kick the football Lucy has laid out for him. Seriously.
* Groo the Wanderer focuses on a very large spider that he and Chakaal have to defeat. At some point, he sees something that's unrevealed to the audience that he means to tell Chakkal about later. At the very end, he remembers that there was something he had to tell her but can't recall what. "Oh well," he thinks, "I'm sure it was nothing important." In the same panel, an underground lair filled with giant baby spiders is shown.

* Grand Theft Auto IV-stereotypical characters in GTA than the other way around. He drops it when he gets angry.
* Harry Bosch series, this is a frequent occurrence due to Harry's job as a homicide detective. Harry notes that, despite the hundreds of times that he has done it, it never gets easier and he's never sure that he's doing it right. He also remarks to a new partner that the difficulty of notifying the victim's family is also affected by the fact that they often need to be considered in the pool of suspects until proven otherwise.
* Gorkamorka has the very weedy Rebel Grots, whose big tactical advantage is coming in much larger groups than others can.
* hijacked by disgruntled employee Auburn Calloway, who intended to use the plane in a suicide attack on FedEx headquarters while somehow making it look accidental, as his death in an accident would enable a payoff from the $2.5 million life insurance policy he had taken out on himself. Riding along in the jumpseat, he used hammers to attack the flight crew, hitting each in the head, injuries which would be virtually indistinguishable from those incurred in a crash. Despite severe injuries, Captain David Sanders and Flight Engineer Andrew Peterson retaliated, and a struggle began with the two attempting to pin their attacker while co-pilot James Tucker stayed at the controls. Tucker being a former Navy pilot, he began turning the plane in a wild, unpredictable manner intended to keep Calloway off balance, nearly rolling it on its back and taking it near uncontrollable speed. Eventually Calloway was pinned, and the captain, also former Navy, took control and began an immediate landing. Due to trauma and blood loss, all three were losing strength, and they needed to get on the ground or risk Calloway breaking loose again, so there was no time to dump fuel. They had to land overweight, at a dangerously steep angle, at a recklessly fast speed, but the captain pulled it off. Calloway was arrested and sentenced to life in prison, but the flight crew were forced to retire from flying due to complications from the injuries they sustained.
* Heroes of the Storm: Murky's Spawn Egg is a sort of these. He can lay it anywhere on the map, and quickly respawns from it whenever he dies, unless the egg is killed first. It's kept intentionally vague, but the egg is implied to be magical in some way — and potentially very powerful.
* Hellboy extrapolates Hitler's real life fascination with the occult to astronomical proportions, up to and including an attempt to hire out the vampire Count Giurescu and funding a project to create artificial vampires to ravage Europe should the war's tide turn against him.
* Groundhogs (also known as woodchucks) are rodents, not pigs, but were called that because their burrowing habits were reminiscent to pigs. Their very names are even subject to lingual limbo: "groundhog" is a calque of the Dutch word
* God-Emperor since the Emperor never wanted to be worshipped as a god, wanted the Imperium to be enlightened, secular and free of mysticism, and in fact banned all religions to the point that he personally torched the last church on Terra before taking to the stars. It's generally assumed that he wanted to starve the Chaos Gods this way, but severely underestimated their powers and severely overestimated his own plan's likelyness of success. Now he's been on life-support for 10,000 years while the Imperium around him crumbles into an authoritarian, ultra-religious nightmare and he can do nothing but watch and despair while his soul splinters into fractions of fractions until it will eventually disappear entirely.
* Hanna-Barbera also fell victim of this trope. Long story short: by the time he started believing a plumber would be needed, the zookeeper told him to call the coast guard instead.
* Hellsister Trilogy is fifteen in 1959, yet still she is twenty-nine in 1986.
* Hellboy Animated At the end of the film, when his ghost continues to resent them, Hellboy steps in and tells him to "use his head" because his continued refusal to go back on his word will make sure none of their spirits will find peace, closing with how he'll "never win". That last part is what causes him to finally let go.
* Happy Tree Friends" provides a good example: Lifty and Shifty steal Disco Bear's golden submarine in order to steal treasure from Lumpy and Russell, which they successfully do. When the submarine goes over an underwater volcano, it begins to grow in temperature and fall apart, causing Lifty to get stuck under some debris. Instead of helping his brother, Shifty takes the gold and treasure he was wearing for himself and leaves Lifty to die. However, after having to force himself to walk due to his feet sticking to the hot floor, ripping off the bottoms of his feet in the process, he finds himself too weighed down by all the gold he is carrying to crawl through the porthole leading to the ladder so he can climb up. And then, the gold reaches its melting point, causing him to get rapidly covered by boiling hot molten gold, resulting in him getting turned into a solid gold statue. As for Lifty, he survives the submarine exploding with fairly minor injuries, only to see his brother's golden remains. Rather than swim to safety, he instead tries to drag his golden brother back to shore, entirely out of greed, mind you, only to get his arm stuck, resulting in him drowning.

* Heroes, it's revealed that Bennet, when he first started working for the Company, had been so ruthless on his missions that the Company all but ordered him to get married and build a family life to temper down his ruthlessness. This may also be the reason that he was given custody of baby Claire when the Company saved her from a fire.
* Glee, who throughout the run of the series is only MIA from three episodes, all in season four ("Dynamic Duets", "The Role You Were Born To Play" and "Shooting Star").
* Ground Control, simply calling them "walkers". In the sequel, the Virons call their Hoverdynes "Centruroids", even though they're functionally the same.
* Halo, one Spartan trainee was captured by the OPFOR during a "Capture the Flag" training exercise and became badly injured. His Marine captors claimed he tripped down a flight of stairs... in a one-story building.
* Heroes: This show is normally entirely serialized, but volume three would often put the arc in the background for a one-off evolved human. Examples include the man who could create wormholes and the Haitian's brother.
* Groom of the Tyrannosaur Queen talks about the foods available to people living in the late Cretaceous. Palm starch is pretty tasty, but not so much ginkgo fruit.
* Grey's Anatomy. The characters are surgeons, so they will sometimes eat lunch while working in the surgical skill lab (which typically involves practicing procedures on the corpses of small pigs).
* H’el dips into this with Supergirl as well. He becomes increasingly obsessed with Kara, calling her his “beloved,” and becomes violent in his attempts to separate her from allies, such as her cousin Clark, whom (out of jealousy) he deems “unworthy” of her. H’el claims during his

* He has a college degree in programming, and worked as a programmer before going full-time Youtuber.
* God of Destruction is a semi-example. One of the strongest beings in the entire universe (in fact, the only one stronger is his attendant Whis), no one ever mentioned him until the movie, even though King Kai, the Supreme Kais, Frieza, and Vegeta all knew about him, yet in the series they named many weaker people as "the strongest in the universe". Although this could also be explained by the fact that they were referring to the strongest "people". Beerus is a God and, just like all the Kais, is not factored into mortal power rankings. Beerus is retroactively inserted into backstory with the revelation that he's the previously unknown being that sealed Old Kai in the Z Sword.
* GLOW for sex. Ashley's jaw would drop as she continued reading silently, ending with her tearing up the letter and chastising Tim for his lewd thoughts.
* Hellsing, despite Maxwell being the official head of Iscariot, Father Anderson is far more charismatic and morally right, so most Iscariots tend to follow his word as opposed to that of Maxwell.

* Hercules (2014) drugs Hercules' drink, and when he falls asleep, sends wolves to kill his family. Hercules then wakes up to find himself next to his family's bodies and covered with their blood, making everyone, including him, think that he killed them in a fit of madness.
* Godzilla (2014): When Godzilla arrives in San Francisco at the Golden Gate Bridge, the military start firing on him in an attempt to slow him down even though there are still hundreds of mid-evacuation civilians on the bridge caught in the direct crossfire. Not only that, but it's only after the military's fire hits Godzilla's vulnerable gills that Godzilla becomes provoked into self-defense, smashing through the bridge when there were likely still civilians on it.
* Godzilla (2014) are more or less this, though the female is arguably the bigger threat (and literally the bigger monster) as she carries with her thousands of baby monsters and is the most protective of them.
* Godzilla vs. Mothra also shows she was first created because Battra was too enthusiastic in the job.

* H. Beam Piper, a human kills one of the Fuzzies and claims she was just an animal and attacked him. Then the other Fuzzies gather up her body, dig a grave, and gently bury her. A policeman who arrived in time to see the burial — and took off his beret in respect until it was over — takes this as evidence that the human should be arrested for murder.

* Halla lumber mill in Kotka, Finland, had difficulties on orders in Arabic countries. Finally a whole cargo of premium pine was returned, untouched. * Grand Theft Auto V believe the Illuminati's busy working behind the scenes. Outside Ron's radio show, though, they aren't really mentioned.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: "Yeah, we know who you are." (turning around to Groot, whispering) "Who is she?"
* Heroes was hailed as great, tightly-plotted, and well-written storytelling, with a clear goal in mind. Its second and third seasons, though, were prime examples of the Chris Carter Effect in action — the writing team flailing around, directionless, at war with its own continuity — and it only started to re-establish its arc as of Volume 4. Unfortunately, the writers had envisioned each "volume" to be about a different set of heroes with a different set of problems to solve, but fans just wanted more cheerleader beheadings.
* Hacker required you to send a robot around the world trading items to obtain pieces of a secret document, while figuring out how to avoid the security checks on the system you were "connected to".

* Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters. Their father was a normal human.
* Halloween Horror Nights actually brings the audience into one of the processing plants, though most of the steampunk design was lost in favor of a more traditional Industrial Revolution aesthetic (except for the facade and costumes).

* Higurashi: When They Cry. Keiichi trips and knocks over several motorcycles in the Watanagashi-hen question arc, and Shion comes to his rescue. * Hero Quest early in the nineties. Their reproductive cycle revolved around capturing human slaves for brides, which probably made for some thorny conversations with the parents of younger gamers. They made a return in 2012 as part of Forge World's Monstrous Arcanum release though, albeit with some more family-friendly lore.
* Grand Theft Auto games have some elements that can go either way. The world around the protagonists seems gritty and corrupt, but the radio stations seem reluctant to take themselves seriously, suggesting a somewhat more frivolous world.

The potential problems are self-evident: sites you agree with are more visited and come up higher in search results, while sites you disagree with may end up buried in the search results, even if they bring up a worthwhile point regarding a particular search. Google now has a setting to quickly switch personalized results on and off from the results page.

* Halloween 4: The Return of Michael Myers, which took only the first movie as canon.
* helps companies like Boots, Amazon, Mail Group Newspapers, et c, pay little or no tax in Britain. It seemingly falls over backwards to do so, in fact. The upshot of this is that for every big earner not paying their fair share, everybody else's tax burden goes up, even by a tiny fraction. As of 2021 there is an international push to set up a global minimum corporate tax rate to reduce the viability of tax haven nations, currently being hindered by the objections of some existing tax haven nations.

* Hellblazer has scenes set in a coastal city's flooded-out ruins, and characters mention a "Storm Decade" in which climate upheaval caused hurricanes that contributed to the damage.
* "He bought the time for his friends to escape safely, for even within sight of Dark Forest gates, Rockjaw Grang was a perilous hare."
* Good Omens the Them come to believe that the Ancient Masters of Tibet have a set of tunnels all over the world. It's also suggested that, because the Earth is hollow, it would make more sense to just dig to the centre and then dig up to wherever they wanted. They then try to replicate this and find that it takes much longer to reach the centre of the Earth than they thought. But Adam, with his reality-warping powers, believes in these tunnels through the Earth, and therefore they suddenly exist, complete with (very confused) Tibetans. And even more confused gardeners.

* Glenn Ford does not wind up with victim Lee Remick. They never have a moment, they do not have sex, there is nothing between them. This is the rare example of Truth In Television because it's his job and just being in a stressful situation together doesn't lead to two entirely different people who did not know each other before falling in love and living their lives together.

* Halfway through the Water Temple, you come into an infinite, foggy wasteland filled with ankle deep water and a small island with a dead tree in the center. There's nothing particularly interesting about the room, and when you reach the other side, you find that the exit door is barred shut, and your reflection is gone. Only then will you find that one of the most fun/confusing fights of the game has been waiting, watching you from that tree. It's interesting to note that if you walk backwards to the door, Dark Link will not appear. He will only appear if you turn the camera around so he can't be seen when he appears. When you turn around again, Dark Link will be standing by the tree, just waiting. Even moreso than that, he only appears if you walk over the island in the center, at which point your reflection disappears from beneath you when you step upon the water again.
* Highlander, Amanda once did this while crashing in Duncan's place. Duncan was not pleased by this. (The fans, on the other hand...)
* H₂O: Just Add Water. The analogy is completely incorrect in real life as we often use technology-submarine powers to salvage sunken artifacts and offer monetary rewards, and that's a good thing.
* Gunnerkrigg Court seems to have stopped now that it's been unambiguously confirmed in-comic that the photo girl and Jones are different people.
* Green Acres can't just say "Good morning." He ends up debating on whether it is a good morning and then goes off on a tangent, much to Oliver's annoyance.

* Guardians of the Galaxy, when a group of impoverished kids approach the heroes in the hopes of getting a little money, Groot offers one little girl a blue flower that he grew on his body. The little girl's face practically lights up like a Christmas tree.
* Heralds of Valdemar, in the books by Mercedes Lackey, all wear white. Student heralds wear grey. Bards and Healers wear red and green, respectively, with students having a variation. This coding is commented on in-story, essentially saying that in stressful situation, such as a riot or fire, the townspeople can look for that color uniform. A few characters avert this in everyday wear, and are allowed to because of their teaching duties (weapon use). One character sort of subverts this plain white uniform (or has it subverted for her) by her uniforms being remade with embroidery and other designs, but all in white.

* Good Boys makes it very clear that in spite of having three sixth graders as the main characters, the film's not for kids as they put the R rating in the center with the MPAA's description:
* Guardians of the Galaxy orchestrates a prison break by turning off the artificial gravity everywhere but in the guard tower, then flying said guard tower through the rest of the base.
* goes completely insane, picking up Hatred of the enemy army and Frenzy.

Translation: the bereaved spouse charges directly at the enemy lines and tries to rip apart the bastards that killed their love with claws and fangs.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, enough to smartly (for once) not make another move.
* Hercules and Queen Omphale. He was ordered to serve her for a year as punishment for a crime. She ordered him to wear women's clothes and spin cloth while she had fun strutting around in his lionskin and waving his club. Keep in mind that Hercules did that only because he was forced to and his real personality is very manly.
* Hey Arnold! episode "Arnold Saves Sid" had Oscar Kakashka comically threaten to sue Phil for smacking him on the hand.

* had to be better than the horrendous G-rated schpeel they've gotten nonstop.
* Hack/Slash, the ancient conspiracy known as the Society of the Black Lamp has deliberately created these over centuries of specialized breeding of humanity. Four species are known to exist; the aquatic Poseidons and night-vision'd Hades are only mentioned in passing, but the other two are relevant to the plot. The Artemis strain are humans that have been bred into twisted, vaguely lupine monsters as a result to create a superior guardian and hunting beast. The Venus strain are uncannily beautiful and naturally docile, due to having been engineered as the ultimate race of sex slaves.
* Hellsister Trilogy plans to exterminate their race by scattering lead fragments all across the surface of Daxam.
* Gravity Falls: This is part of Grunkle Stan aka Stanley Pines backstory as, when he was a teenager, he accidentally broke the project of his twin brother, Stanford, that he was set to show for a prestigious college scholarship. When Stanley was found out, their father kicked him out of the household right then and there with nothing but the clothes on his back and his car. Though not so much for ruining Stanford's chances but more for the fact that, according to their high school principal, the scholarship would've allowed Stanford to get a good paying job and make the family rich. Regardless, Stanley never saw his parents again following that, vowing to become rich on his own, pulling a lot of get-rich-quick schemes and illegal shady dealings while bouncing from one town to another when they went bad (at one point shown in a seedy motel and armed with a bat when he thought people he owe money to had found him).
* Harry Potter is a known thief, but his ties to the underworld are valuable to the Order.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City has an amusing example in the mission "Publicity Tour". The band Love Fist's car has been rigged with a bomb that will explode if their limo slows down. The drunken stupor of Love Fist's efforts to cut the wires combined with Tommy's annoyance? Priceless.
* Grand Theft Auto, the boss's daughter is kidnapped. Claude is sent to drop off the ransom, which is picked up by the kidnappers via boat. Unusually for a GTA game, everything goes exactly as planned — the kidnappers take the money and point Claude towards the garage where the girl is being held (in the trunk of a car).

* Hercule Poirot, an English diplomat accidentally kills a young woman's jealous husband while on vacation in Central Europe. The woman's mother knows how things happen around there and is certain that everything can be smoothed over with enough bribery, including a police officer who came by the hotel. However, it's all a scam (including the husband's "death", who was played by the mother): banking on the fact that the diplomat didn't speak the language, she had called the cop about missing jewelry.
* Goldfinger (the real Oddjob was not in any way short), though it's not clear what Mayday is doing in the list.
* Granny Weatherwax doesn't get lost. She always knows where she is. It's the rest of the world that has a location problem. This is actually accurate as of

* High School Story tends to punctuate her dialogue with "Squee!" when she's happy.
* Granola Girl hands on with her students and appears to fancy Mia in particular.
* Heir Apparent rests completely on this idea. Gianine gets trapped in a virtual reality fantasy game when it's damaged, and has to win the game to escape.
* Halo warp-jumping to one of the titular Forerunner installations in order to lure the Covenant away from Earth, with Cortana having secretly used Forerunner navigational coordinates in the hopes that they would point humanity to a potential game-changer against the Covenant.
* Gundam: Reconguista in G that makes any noticeable effort towards acting professional is Towasanga's. And that's the one that has a pilot in an open relationship with his superior. It's suggested that because there hasn't been a war in so long, none of the agencies have much idea on how to even act like a military anymore.
* Hamtaro: When Howdy learns that Boss has a crush on Bijou, he taunts Boss by singing this.
* Half-Life 2 never confirms his feelings - in fact, Gordon isn't really supposed to have feelings separate from the player. But judging by the reaction of the majority of players to Alyx, it worked. This is also an example of a male rescuee.
* Gone with the Wind ends with one, quoted atop this page. And many people sympathized with Rhett, given dealing with Scarlett is a pain.
* Herman Crab, from the DLC case "Turnabout Reclaimed". He behaves suspiciously throughout the case and treats Phoenix Wright with distaste. On top of this, he's the only character in the case who didn't testify during the first day of court - a big red flag for the savvy player. It turns out he
* Grannies Gone Wild. At the end of the episode, after a series of misadventures and some friendly bonding, the four older ladies invite Rainbow to be a Golden Horseshoe Gal herself.
* Good luck finding anyone who views the banishment of the Sirens to the present in
* Hazel Levesque, another daughter of Hades/Pluto, also underwent this trope, though it was because she died and was then brought back over 60 years later. Like Nico and Bianca, she seems to have few difficulties adjusting, although she does feel scandalized upon learning that premarital sex is common nowadays.
* Highlander TV series, Amanda died for the first time during the Black Death. She was not sick herself but she was stealing from houses under quarantine and was clubbed to death because people assumed she was infected.
* Gordon R. Dickson. Five enemy officers willfully (practically) committed suicide by attacking one Dorsai officer.
* Hannah Montana with him, Miley/Hannah, and another love interest named Jesse, where fan vote decided who Miley would choose. The fans voted for Jake, and Miley rejected Jesse after realizing it was Jake she loved. The episode right after Jake and Miley broke up, they reintroduced Jesse as Miley's final love interest. This implies that the writers were always planning on breaking up Jake and Miley (which was the longest-running couple on the show, mind you) in favor of Jesse and were planning on using the special as an excuse to do it, only to scramble for another reason after Jake proved to be far more popular than they thought.

* Hey Arnold!, Helga is often seen drawing love doodles about Arnold whom she crushes on.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try, everyone is expecting Minato to win... not without good reason, as it honestly does look like his "Super Fumina" model took a lot of skill to build. However, Yuuma and his Lightning Zeta Gundam are announced as the winners. When Minato demands an explanation, Meijin Kawaguchi explains that Minato had not received Fumina's permission to use her likeness (evident in her reaction of shock/embarrassment/horror when she saw the model), thus he was disqualified.
* Harry Potter etc. The child actors playing the younger characters such as the main trio started their careers in this franchise.
* Guy live-tweets hospital trip after getting dildo stuck in his butt.
* Harlan Ellison's story about a disgruntled "fan" throwing a cup of warm vomit in Foster's face.
* Harry also never realized / questioned Dumbledore's manipulations until the final book; the only thing Harry ever questioned him about was his continuing vouching for Snape. Newt knows Dumbledore is manipulating him, calls him out on it and demands answers (which he does get in the extended cut of "Crimes of Grindelwald").
* Halloween Unspectacular ignores Morty's suggestions for a more conventional (and relevant) Aesop and claims that the moral of the story is "Christopher Columbus was a jerk".
* Hero System. While the mage's spirit is away from his body, the body is very vulnerable and the mage's spirit doesn't have a magical link to it. If the body is killed the mage will die, and if it is moved the mage will have no idea where it was taken and can't return to it.
* Going Rogue let the players do this: heroes can change into villains, villains can change into heroes, or they can stay somewhere in between as rogues or vigilantes.
* GoldenEye (1997) of unnecessary rooms and characters. The developers have explained the intent was to have rooms that, while unnecessary from a narrative and gameplay standpoint, would reasonably be found in these facilities if they existed in real life in order to supplement the game's focus on impressive AI and make the game feel more real.
* has to, which meant it could specialize in its roles quite well. There could have been an interceptor based on the A-12 (a slightly earlier version of the SR-71). Three prototypes were built and 93 were ordered by the Air Force, unfortunately at the time the Vietnam War ate up so much money that the order was never fulfilled.
* Goshawk Squadron, an officious senior officer is humbled by Wooley and forced to provide the sort of luxuries only issued to General Staff officers far behind the front lines.
* Guards! Guards! almost all the characters realize right away that the dragon can't possibly fly under its own power... unless it's fueling itself with magic. The descriptions specifically point out that its flight looks completely unrealistic compared to a bird's, because it's actually magically levitating itself.

* H. Beam Piper", even though they are pretty sure he's a fake (when he's actually from an alternate universe), the Prussian government official writing to Britain about their prisoner is very delicate about his claims of diplomatic immunity.
* Haré+Guu with her actions, but always keeps ignoring them just because she can have more fun that way, and gets Hale another inch closer to a total nervous breakdown.
* Grand Finale somewhat answer this, with Lee being shown to have repeatedly squashed Dawn's hopes and dreams, to the point where she finally gave up having any dreams whatsoever and settled for the simple humdrum of day-to-day living. Tim's encouragement for her not to give up her dream of being a children's illustrator leads her to finally stand up for herself and dump Lee's worthless hide.
* GTA was advertised in UK gaming magazines using its 18 certificate, a rarity at the time, as a unique selling point. Now that 18-rated games are as common as 18-rated films and the BBFC theoretically uses the same guidelines to rate the two media, a game being rated 18 draws little or no comment.
* Happened the normal way in the same conversation. Xander had previously been possessed by a hyena spirit, so knew a little what it would be like to be a werewolf. His little speech on the subject made Larry think that Xander was coming out the closet, and that encouraged Larry to.
* Goku, when he wasn't defeating armies on his own armed with only a magic pole and a flying cloud, he was transforming into a giant Ape and destroying anything in his path, using air to one shot his opponents, kicking peoples asses with rock-paper-scissors, using his tail to fly like a helicopter, flying into the air and punching holes through demon aliens with only one arm and

* Hand Wave, with the wrestlers preferring to beat the crap out of each other in the ring to settle their differences. This gets flimsier and flimsier every time a wrestler supposedly refuses to press criminal charges for the same reasons, despite being run over, set on fire and/or home invasions.
* gynnan tonix culture that worked out how to distill drinkable ethyl alcohol on a widespread basis went on to name the resulting spirit "water of life"—whiskey, aquavit, vodka, ouzo, eau de vie, etc. (look them up!) * Hey Arnold!: For all intents and purposes, Brainy never ever says anything, just... snores.
* Good Samaritan Law exists to avert this, at least when helping someone who is injured, ill, or in peril. Though laws vary by country, and often by state or province as well, they typically prevent rescuers from being sued for wrongdoing for helping a victim in distress so long as said rescuer obtained consent to provide aid (and a rescuer has implied consent if the victim is unconscious or otherwise unable to respond). The idea is to discourage the

* Heroic Legend: Stories about ancient heroes and their awesome deeds. These are mostly martial in nature and include, but are not limited to, monster-slaying and acts of war. Heroic legends praise warrior virtues like badassery, courage, and loyalty. As in most aristocratic societies the aristocracy identifies itself as a warrior elite, heroes of heroic legend are, with few exceptions, of noble blood. Heroic legends may (but don't have to) be tied to a specific mythology; if they do, the distinguishing line to myths (as mentioned above) can be blurry, as some of these heroes are demigods that are part human, part divine. Heroic legend may be told in various forms and media, but the "classical" genre of heroic legend is

As the series progresses, he gets better at being deceptive, although he still isn't great a straight up lying to peoples faces. Mostly he just gets better at selectively giving out information and talking around the truth rather than lying directly.

* Harrow is arranged to make it look like he slipped on a wet boat dock and hit his head on the step. However, there was no algae in the head wound which there should have been, as the step was covered in it.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets. Quite a few former Death Eaters were revealed to have gained good reputations and work in the Ministry after pinky-swearing they were under the Imperious Curse. * Halloween actually tried to justify this in one of the later sequels by revealing that its killer actually had magical powers the whole time, explaining some of his more improbable feats. Audiences weren't happy, feeling that it was better when it was operating wholly off of this trope, with no justification.
* Gravity Falls, he and Grunkle Stan bond as they guzzle cans of Pitt Cola.
* Hero Material. Sure, the characters saved the world, but none of them really learned anything or became better people through it. On top of that the world they ravaged through is left into chaos and destruction.

He dodged a projectile fired from a rocket launcher literally meters across, then slammed the soldiers into a wall; shrugged off a sniper shot as if it was a pellet from a BB gun, terrifying the sniper; then he kept punching through the ceiling to reach the leader's floor.

He learns that Trollan and Eternian magic works in the reverse to each other. To activate the Sword of Power, he has to speak everything backwards. * Good Omens (2019) for Crowley in 1941, right after Crowley saved Aziraphale's books from a German bomber that killed everyone in the vicinity except for the two of them. Crowley had no reason to save the books, really, except one: It would have upset Aziraphale if they were destroyed. In fact, the expression on David Tennant's face when Aziraphale starts bemoaning the fact that he (Aziraphale) forgot to save the books when he used a miracle to save the two of them, indicates that he saved the books for exactly that reason.

* Harry Potter and the Portrait of What Looked Like a Large Pile of Ash written by an AI, there are a lot of these in the story:

* Hard Choices focuses on Thomas Smith's parents looking for their son, who unbeknownst to them has entered the Dragon Realms. The chapter concludes with them finding the portal and unwittingly activating it, causing them to enter the Dragon Realms.
* Help Desk. That's why they've never had more than one help desk employee authorized to actually help people at any time (and he quit).
* He also compares it being on the last helicopters when Americans were fleeing Saigon at the end of the Vietnam War.
* Headless Horseman, riding around on horseback for all eternity. May often be trying to replace his lost head by stealing someone else's.
* Harriet Conklin. Her motives are always displayed as unselfish or honest, in spite of her father Mr. Conklin being oft unprincipled and her boyfriend Walter Denton being an inveterate schemer and practical joker.
* Hate Plague) was caused by researchers looking for a way to calm down angry persons. It flew the other way. Horribly.
* Hercule/Mister Satan who are immune to all of his special moves. Equipping an item that makes the enemies flinch when hit will pass him into a "usable" category, making him at least a good option to fill a slot in a Dragon Points Battle, since he only uses one point.
* Harriet focuses on this, as Harriet repeatedly travels south to rescue enslaved people and guide them to freedom in the north.
* Gundam franchise seems to have something of a love affair with this trope. Some notable examples include:
* Hawke is treated as this by every faction in the game. This ultimately leads to them getting blamed for causing
* H. Beam Piper stories had an offhand reference to a Paratime agent being unable to use a straight rearrangement of his real name to fit in because his first name, "zortan", is a particularly unpleasant swear word. The phrase "son of a zortan" pops up approximately 75 times over the rest of the story.
* GURPS Space poses this as one idea for a combination autotroph/consumer in their section on creating various alien species.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, Salome uses a smoke bomb to cover an escape in episode 6.
* Heroes who has this very power. Only it's not limited to any spoken language, but hand signs and animals as well.
* H.A.W.X. Artemis. After spending significant capital to get a defense contract with Brazil, tensions flare between that country and a terrorist organization, prompting the United States to assist with military force. Facing loss of profit (a defense contractor loses out when they're not the primary defense force anymore), Artemis makes the illegal decision to switch sides mid-conflict to support the terrorists, who are paying them more. They then go completely off the walls when they decide to attack US forces in retaliation for the loss of their profit margin (and also to hold the country ransom).
* Gloriously averted in the third game, where Ieyasu is shown all grown up after
* Godzilla (1998). The final helicopter is destroyed when Godzilla crouches low to avoid being seen by it before devouring said helicopter whole. During the battle in the Hudson River, while being attacked by three U.S. Navy submarines, Godzilla swims straight at one of the subs, using the dorsal spines on his back to rip open the sub's hull, leaving it dead in the water and helpless as the torpedoes the Navy fired at him smash into the crippled sub, destroying it. When the protagonists are fleeing from Godzilla, he moves ahead of them and takes out the bridge.
* Good Guys Wear Black held by the North Vietnamese. In the film, ARVN Major Mhin Van Thieu is the only Vietnam veteran in the film.
* Grant Morrison, and many other comics. Came out as genderqueer in 2020.
* Grave of the Fireflies, Seita and his younger sister Setsuko are left homeless after the destruction of their home by Allied bombing and the death of their mother. Their aunt takes them in for a short while, but after leaving her house neither the police nor doctors are willing to help them and they must fend for themselves, stealing food to survive and living in an abandoned bomb shelter by a river.

* has a built-in mechanic that, if they thought things were hopeless, would shoot dozens of missiles including a nuclear warhead.
* Groucho Marx talked to the audience a lot (most likely carried over from the
* Harry Harrison, the human occupants of a command headquarters are forced out of their underground base by robot attack, leaving it to be manned by their own robots. On reaching the surface they find the enemy command staff eking out a living as farmers on the war-torn battlefield above — it turns out the robots on both sides find they can conduct the war more efficiently once humans are out of the way.
* Hellsing, issues the order to kill everyone in London, civilian and vampire alike, resulting in the Iscariot forces indiscriminately mowing down everyone.
* Greek heroes seem to have this. Most of the time, it translates into hubris. Bellerophon, for example, wasn't satisfied with getting everything he wanted, defeating every monster he fought, and being hero-worshipped and having a freakin' flying horse. Nope. He decided he wanted to be a god. That didn't end well for him.
* Godzilla vs. Biollante because she had so much mass that she was able to shrug off even his most powerful blasts without taking much damage.
* Golden Sun will join the party as Fifth through Eighth Rangers after a certain point in the story.
* Hiimdaisy of one of her works. She's also vented that she's been tired of her past comics for a long time and particularly annoyed by the memes that have spawned from them.
* hansoku (disqualification) if a wrestler's mawashi (the belt/groin covering that constitutes the wrestler's only garb during a match) comes undone and his genitals are exposed (if the mawashi comes undone, but is caught before any exposure, the match will simply be stopped so the mawashi can be refastened). Despite this rule being established in 1917, it didn't come into play until May of 2000, when wrestler Asanokiri was disqualified in his match against Chiyohakuho when his mawashi came undone. To date, Asanokiri is the only wrestler on record to ever lose this way.
* He calls Daryl “Cowboy”, because of Daryl’s cowboy hat. This seems to be something of a theme among his former peers when referring to Daryl.
* Halo 5: Guardians, will expose big glowing weak spots (or in the Warden's case, a big dark one) once you knock off enough of their armor.
* Haou Airen is a top hitman in the Triads and pretty much the heir to his group... at the very early age of 18/19. His companions are hinted to have been this in the past as well.
* Harry dumps a bucket of water on a sleeping Remus at the beach in Greece.
* Gourry Gabriev is a brilliantly talented swordsman who is otherwise about as sharp as a bag of wet sponges. In the books he's just
* good guys gone bad where Rhinox is turned into a Predacon and nearly takes over, this is what trips him up:
* Heather started as one, and there are still traces of it, but it's less noticeable in later seasons.
* God Never Said That: Fans misinterpret something the creator said or mistakenly believe that the creator said it.
* her first solo book Kara met a bunch of guys. All of them were buff and larger than her. Neither of them could move planets (which she did back in the Bronze Age).
* Harry Potter who is surprisingly considered a thief by goblins, thanks to cultural differences. According to goblin customs, the owner of a magic item is always the maker, not the buyer. When you buy something crafted by a goblin, from their viewpoint, you're renting it until the day you die, and the item should be returned to the maker (or the descendants) after your death. Godric Gryffindor bought a magic sword from goblins but left it hidden in Hogwarts after his death. It was fine according to human customs, but in the goblins' eyes, he was a thief.

* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows character anyone expected to die.
* Heroine Chic. Protagonist Zoe brings up the point that teen hero Spinner wouldn't have as much success with advertisers as her mother, the retired hero Avalanche. If Avalanche were to return to superhero-ing, she could use the "working mother" angle to land lucrative advertising deals with car manufacturers, detergent makers, and cosmetic companies. (All this is fine with Spinner, who never showed enthusiasm for super heroics in the first place, and Avalanche, who is implied to have pushed her daughter to take up the family business to generate ad revenue.)
* Gravity Falls, but it doesn't get focused on that much until the last few minutes of the episode.
* Henry And June is character driven. Each individual is portrayed as complex, with their own flaws and strengths. While June is very unstable, she is a catalyst and not a villain; and the other characters do their own share of deceptive, self-serving things anyway.
* Going Postal. The golem responsible for cleaning the women's restroom was renamed Gladys and given female clothing to ensure propriety. Over the course of the books she starts adopting more and more female traits.
* Gunless, Doc's hobby is taxidermy, and his office is filled with stuffed animals. When Sean wakes up after passing out from blood loss, he finds a creepy stuffed beaver staring him in the face and reacts appropriately.
* Harry Potter and the Portrait of What Looked Like a Large Pile of Ash, all the while going on about how the dark arts better be worried.
* Hamlet himself is frequently considered to only be pretending at insanity; that he is "not in madness/ but mad in craft", i.e. not insane, but angry.
* Graham Taylor was a very good football manager at club level, achieving considerable success with unfashionable clubs like Lincoln City and Watford (forming an unlikely friendship with chairman
* Hamilton, Washington expects Hamilton to want a quiet life after the war, but needs his help building a new government:
* High School Musical end with Zeke trying to give Sharpay a cake, but having Gabriella dance into him, making him trip and spill the cake onto the girl of his dreams instead. Troy even lampshades this, pointing out that this impromptu school singalong is probably not "the time to be giving Sharpay a cake."
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure!, Yuri's on the verge of tearing him apart. However, Tsubomi, who witnessed the action as well, stops her and begs her not to go through with it. It works, and the later-united team is able to put Dune down properly.
* H. G. Wells") in 1913, that the general populace got to play one. Even then, they weren't tremendously popular until Jack Scruby created his line of miniatures, which made the genre burgeon.
* Hannah gives back Colin's engagement ring when Tom nearly concusses himself to be honest with her and tell her he loves her in
* Having said that, the Germans were still afraid (just as they had been about Russia before World War I) that the Soviet Union with its superior population and resources might grow unstoppable if it were given a few more years to build up, meaning that they had to take it on now while it was still vulnerable. Meanwhile, Hitler saw capturing the farmland of the Ukraine and the oil fields of the Caucasus as the only hope for making his resource-devouring empire self-sustaining. The Germans put together the largest invasion force the world had ever seen to accomplish this task, including 3.8 million military personnel, over 6,000 tanks and other AFVs, at least 2,770 aircraft, at least 7,200 artillery pieces, 600,000 other vehicles, and 600,000 horses. The summer of 1941 was the last real opportunity if they were going to do it, since if they waited any longer they would no longer have the fuel reserves to support such a massive invasion. Their entire chance of victory depended on fighting as short a campaign as possible: they didn't have sufficient industrial power or population to win a war of attrition; they didn't want to still be fighting by the time the October rains or winter's cold set in; and since they had to conscript so many of their factory workers to participate in the invasion, the continued functioning of their war industry depended on them being able to defeat the Soviets and send the workers back home to the factories by the end of September. What the Germans were counting on to happen was that their three Army Groups (with the help of divisions sent by their various allies) would advance through the Soviet Union along a 2,900-kilometer-wide front, supporting each other on the flanks when necessary. They would destroy the greater part of the Red Army near the border in massive battles of encirclement, and by the time they captured Smolensk (702 km from their start point, and about two-thirds of their way to Moscow), they expected the Red Army and Stalin's regime to have totally collapsed, leaving them to march the rest of the way to Moscow virtually unopposed; they assumed that partisan activity and attacks on their lines of supply would be minimal. As they advanced they would capture the railways and use them to transport troops and supplies. They would occupy the Western Soviet Union, establishing a defensive line between Arkhangelsk and Astrakhan, and demobilize most of the invasion force.

* Heck, Japanese fans do this to fictional characters too. Probably the most infamous example is
* Green Lantern (2011) can now be added to the list of DC comics that got a live-action adaptation.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 1 but was deemed too gruesome for the PG-13 rating and therefore got cut.
* Gorgar talks like this. Justified in that he has a vocabulary of seven words.
* Harry Potter has Hedwig's Theme. Even though it is never heard from a music box, the instrumentation is heavily reminiscent of one.
* Heir Apparent is a victim of this: in order to advance in the virtual world game, she has to go on quests and help everybody to win their approval; and even though she eventually succeeds in winning the guards' and her half-brothers' respect, she just can't seem to please the queen.
* Happened at the 2009 Women's Field Hockey Champions Trophy in Sydney, Australia. The Hockeyroos, the Australian women's team, were the only team to have attended each edition of the annual tournament since its inception in 1987. The competition pits six of the best countries against each other in a week-long tournament. Due to the format of rules following an Olympic year, the Hockeyroos had to win to qualify for the tournament in 2010. They won all round games, except against Argentina, who they then faced in the finals. In the finals full time ended on a draw, and golden goal extra time ended with no goals, so the event went to penalty flicks to decide a winner. At the end of five flicks each, both teams had scored three goals. It then went to sudden death flicks, Australia missed and Argentina scored. The Hockeyroos now miss the Champions Trophy for 2010, even though they came second.
* Highlander, this was done in large part because Christopher Lambert's eyesight is so bad that he just swung his sword around. His opponents were tasked with hitting his sword with theirs to make it look like a sword fight (instead of a mostly blind guy swinging his sword wildly).
* Hey Arnold!, Grandpa learned to play golf by watching a video presented in rhyme. He could then only hit the ball correctly if he first recited one of the rhymes. When he came to a particularly daunting hole that the video didn't cover, he made up his own rhyme, and was still successful.
* Gravity Falls protagonist. It becomes apparent almost immediately that she's intelligent and can see Soos in the real world. And then it's revealed his computer was unplugged the whole time.
* Good All Along: An anti-hero initially believed to be a villain, but is actually working on the side of good the whole time.
* Groo the Wanderer he kept seeing objects that reminded him of Rufferto's coloring.
* Great Escape (though it can also be considered a reaction to being imprisoned)
* Gotrek & Felix, at the end of the first Skaven assault on the dwarf outpost, the defenders are badly drained and outnumbered after and fight they were unprepared for and are about to be rushed by the regrouped Skaven army, and their lot looks extremely dire — until a flight of gyrocopters arrives, starts bombing the Skaven and sends their army into a rout.
* Healing Factor will render further surgery near impossible. Batman once had to get a sharp piece of kryptonite to cut Superman's chest open to remove the first piece of kryptonite.

* Hair Antennae (also bicolored hair; it's blond with black tips), Damien had a weird mullet-thing, Hedge's hair is basically a bunch of hedgehog spikes... the list goes on.
* Green Lantern (2011). In the comics Thom is Inuit, but the movie keeps it deliberately ambiguous.
* have lost weight. And changed your name, you say? Why yes, I'd love to meet your new siblings!
* has Sir Red, who tries repeatedly to get Esben's brothers executed by lying that they told him they could fetch a wonderful or magical item (a dove with feathers of gold, a boar with bristles of silver and gold, a lamp that shines brightly enough to light seven kingdoms, a coverlet that is the most beautiful in the world, and if touched, sounds loudly enough to be heard in eight kingdoms). Sir Red is Hanged in the end, "for his wickedness... and so he got the end he deserved." The brothers are assholes, but not victims, while the witch's daughters are guilty of nothing more than being her daughters.
* Hazy Feel Turn: A character betrays one group and sides with another, but it's unclear whether either group is good or evil.
* Grandia III Alonso trying to win his ship back from the (female) casino owner who won it earlier in a rigged game. When he runs out of material possessions to bet, he bets himself: if he loses, he'll marry the owner (who has been after him for years, but is quite ugly in both face and personality).
* Gumball and Darwin's mother, Nicole, has a lot of furry fans. That's not to say Gumball himself doesn't have those either.
* He warps reality simply by existing. Being near Him causes physical sickness, with permanent effects, in addition to amnesia, insomnia and insanity. Buildings associated with Him obtain
* Her brother also shows what "trapped in another world" might turn out like if you're not a hero protagonist - you're essentially an illegal immigrant with no records and no legal protection, so you're likely to end up either homeless or drafted into a criminal organisation. Either way, you're pretty much screwed.
* Her completely undiscriminating sense of humor is even a plot point - Chie realizes Yukiko's gotten stronger from her experience inside the television world when she starts laughing her head off around other people; before her kidnapping, that was something she'd
* Good Luck Charlie, Teddy's teacher is handing over the test results. Teddy and Ivy were expecting for an A and D respectively, but they both get a B. Naturally, Ivy embraces the first (real) B she ever got, while Teddy is trying hard to reason with her English teacher to give her an A.
* Head of State method, one of which claims that, because didn't attend a certain rally against cancer, he must be "pro-cancer".
* Grand Theft Auto V pissed mobster and has to rob banks and such to pay him back.
* Gracie Hunter was not an example of this at heart but put up the image, boasting about the might and superiority of professional wrestling during the lead up to his MMA matches. Once he actually got done with his matches, even when he won, he was much more respectful.
* Goof Troop. Unfortunately, due to budget cutbacks in the program, their safe house is right across the street from Pete's house.
* Heroics for Beginners that happens to be relevant to the events of the chapter.
* Hell Is a Martial Artist. Also, she doesn't share human perceptions of gender and masculinity, meaning she is more intrigued by Ranma's power than disgusted. Being a demon, she also has to acknowledge free will, and is thus more understanding of Ranma's choices.
* Good Hair, Evil Hair: You'll know who's the hero and who's the villain from their hairstyle.
* Hey Arnold! funny." To his credit, he tried to look serious and understanding the whole time.
* He's taking dance lessons because she's mentioned being annoyed that he can't dance with her in the past. At the end, it's a CMOH when they dance together.

* Halo: Reach: The introductory cinematic at one point passes through a very dense ice belt. A collision between two ice bodies can actually be seen as the camera moves onward.
* God can best be described as this. Job spends most of the book demanding an audience with God to ask why he is suffering. God’s response is that unlike Job, He has made all of creation and therefore has the wisdom and power to do whatever He wants and deems best. Job is so thrilled to finally receive a response from God that he is completely satisfied with this answer.
* Harkovast, a battle is looking dire for one side until an ally shows up and defeats the enemy with little effort. Of course, unlike the other combatants that were losing their lives on the battlefield, he wields a katana!
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating: Ishu is short-haired and doesn't really care about her appearance, dressing casually (though she will dress up on special occasions) while showing no interest in feminine things. Hani on the other hand has long hair, dresses in a fashionable girly way and shows many feminine interests. They get together, first in a fake relationship but then for real.
* GloryHammer Zargothrax tries to unleash Korviliath the Elder God from the 18th Hell Dimension, which will destroy all life in the Universe.
* Half-Life 1, during part of the training, there's a line of three people on the opposite side of a field firing full-powered maching guns. It's not only possible to die during this part, it's kind of hard NOT to die on the first try. All this just to learn cover.
* God is mentioned in the DMC Anime off hand. Issac, a man who frequents Dante's favorite diner, discovers Dante is a demon after spying on him for weeks. After Dante shows Issac that he's not a bad guy by saving his life, Issac asks Dante what he is, before realizing that sounds rude and dehumanizing and asks Dante who he is. Dante snidely throws it up in the air, saying that Issac should ask God.
* He isn't the killer. The real killer dumped the body at his house, knowing he'd get rid of it.
* He Who Must Not Be Heard: A character who either doesn't talk or only speaks gibberish.
* Hannibal; see above), who uses "pure empathy" to think/feel like the serial killers the team has to find in order to reconstruct their motives and bring about their downfalls.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law This was called attention to at one point; Birdman's passionate use of the insanity defense in the Devlin case actually moves the jury to tears and seems to ensure a win, but Der Spusmacher then tells Birdman that he can't use an insanity defense because it isn't a criminal trial.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, the Marauder's Map insults Snape when he tries to use it. It turns out that these were not a generic response to unauthorized access, but personalized insults specifically placed in case Snape ever tried to access the map.
* He pulled a similar move at the climax of the first Hobgoblin storyarc when he jumped onto the side of an armored van in order to get to the villain.
* Heroes had Scott, the Marine from the last couple of episodes in the third season. Notably killed a few seconds after receiving his first combat assignment.
* Heart In Hand on a regular basis, but he confirms through an experiment that he literally can't get it up to the thought of anyone — female or male — other than Alex.
* Haruna does this on purpose when she creates a fake Negi so that the girls can practice their Pactio kisses.
* Happens in the pilot episode, when Marissa drinks until she is unconscious. Her friends ditch her in front of her house and after they leave, love interest Ryan carries her inside.

* Glee Reprise, one of the things Rachel is trying to avoid with The Reprisals when it comes to Beth - with mixed results.
* Hellsing Ultimate: The wars that Alucard/ Dracula fought against the Ottoman Empire.
* has said that she strongly dislikes the term and sees it as a sexist way to unfairly pigeonhole women with eccentric personalities into a simplistic archetype.
* Hey Arnold! lower version of the solo. Everyone is impressed, and several students fruitlessly attempt to imitate it backstage.
* Hear a story once, where people were playing loud rap music in a dorm. It was keeping people in the next room awake, so what did they do? If you guessed blasted classical music through the walls back to them, then you're today's winner!
* Han Solo and Luke Skywalker both have minor facial disfigurations (due to the real-life actors' accidents) and Luke also has an artificial hand that is almost completely indistinguishable from a real one, at least until
* Heaven Knows What: Everyone who knows Harley can't seem to understand why she's madly in love with Ilya because he's an asshole who is often cruel to her. She realizes that he does bad things, but can't out-think the way she feels about him. She'll always love him. The story was based on the memoirs of the lead actress, and it's her actual feelings about her late boyfriend.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, as the team becomes parents to the growing Baby Groot, and will put aside all to care for him even in the middle of battle.
* Gremlins starts out as a wholesome Christmas movie about a teen boy who receives a mysterious pet called a mogwai for Christmas along with several rules to follow. The horror starts when the rules are broken.
* Hell's Children, are definitely Nightmare Fetishists. Going on the author’s biography, it would seem that he is one of these too, which would explain a lot.
* Her fourth Jesse Quick outfit, while generally seen as better than the previous, is also this. It's basically just a read shirt with her Jesse Quick symbol on it and yellow shorts, gloves and boots. A lot of people derided it for looking like she was going to do the dishes.
* Gundam Wing good, since its speed (and lack of shock absorbers) transferred too much G-Force to the pilot. It takes Zechs a little while to become skilled enough to safely pilot the Tallgeese. He eventually becomes so skilled that the Tallgeese can no longer keep up with his own reflexes.
* Gundam 0079: The War for Earth: During the final battle, Char will land his Zaku on the White Base's bridge. If the player doesn't respond to the quick time event in time, the Gundam will try to fire at Char and hit the White Base's bridge instead.
* Happily Married. They're both quite powerful, and fittingly so considering they the arc villains of the Whitestone Arc.
* Hatsuyume: The first dream a person has in the new year is prophetic.
* Gotham Knights) is a really nice breather issue. Only, of course, being about Batman, it's called 24/7 and it involves him getting up at 8 in the morning, spending his day in meetings convincing big business to be a little nicer, remembering the name of his paperboy, visiting the elderly, and then suiting up and fighting crime (and checking in on the rest of the Batfamily) until 5 am the next morning. It counts as a breather episode because there are no supervillains! (It's actually a really lovely issue. Bruce is practically mellow.)
* Good Omens kill them, you have to use hellfire or holy water respectively.
* Golden Boy dub, one female minor character (who is seen for about 15 seconds in one episode), who is rather fat and unattractive, is voiced, rather badly and for laughs, by a man.
* Glitch Techs in the "Karate Trainer". When Miko tries to help her little sister become better at karate, she uses an over-the-top fighting game that naturally has nothing to do with real martial arts. While Lexi does improve a bit, she is ultimately unable to use what the game showed her in an actual match.
* Gor, Jason Marshall successfully reforms an alcoholic merely by pitying him for falling prey to the disease. Even the lure of the bottle is not as strong as the drive to never be pitied again.

* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas. Sadly, you still dance with girls there (which isn't a huge stretch, but still).
* Grimm: One of the Grimm diaries reveals that the burning of Rome was accidental, caused by Emperor Nero sending an Excandesco to burn the homes of the Christians.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City: At the start of the game, Tommy Vercetti holds this belief deeply, and he expects it of the rest of the family. As Sonny makes it more explicitly obvious how much he's been set up and used, and how disposable Sonny considers him, Tommy reacts with as much anger over his betrayal as the betrayal of this principle.
* "Ha Ha" Aiuppa was a notorious scowler who rarely laughed or even smiled.
* Hidden Expedition 15: The Curse of Mithridates has creeping purple veins.
* Hawaiian-Shirted Tourist: If a ten-gallon hat is too stereotypical, Hawaiian shirts work just as well in showing that a character is American.
* Guilty Gear, his popularity and charisma earns him the position of a king.
* Heat Guy J of humanity has been obliterated, except for seven city-states (with a few small villages/towns clustered around them). Some people still mistrust the Celestials and their technology, and/or mistrust other people.

* Golden Palace, details Rose's efforts to keep their hotel from becoming one of these.
* Half-Life 2, Isaac Kleiner, Eli Vance and Barney Calhoun have obviously had quite a number of adventures and have set up the infrastructure for a rebellion, with Barney even infiltrating the Combine. But those adventures are really never talked about much.
* Harvest Moon: My Little Shop, with Ellen mentioning him on occasion.
* Half-Life 2, though. After defeating Breen, Gordon and Alyx have to face the entire Citadel's compliment of Combine forces, plus off-world reinforcements. Whether they survive, of course, depends on the player's actions.
* Hex after defying his masters. They put him on "a permanent loop through the nine circles of Hell", and one of his punishments is having his eyes sewn shut.
* High School D×D exorcist who gets off on killing devils and does so for the hell of it. He'll also overact whenever he makes his onscreen appearances as well.
* Harry banishes fantasies of a threesome with Hermione and Luna by thinking of his aunt in a towel.
* Herr Starr is, by the end of the series, lacking one eye, one ear, one leg, his genitals, and has a scar on his bald head that makes him a walking penis joke. The eye scar is particularly ominous.
* he'd recently died; it was actually his brother who'd passed away, but somehow the wires got crossed. Nobel decided to see what people had to say in their obituaries of him...and was absolutely horrified to see himself painted as a "merchant of death" because of how armies around the world appropriated dynamite and nitroglycerin for weapons. The inventor was determined to leave a legacy of unquestionably positive change instead and so established a series of annual awards to be given to people who bettered humanity in areas of science, the arts, and, most importantly, peace. You probably know those awards better as the Nobel Prize.
* Highschool DXD: Issei gives one more straightforward confession to Rias at the end of season 4, even after she sleeped with him naked several times (without him ever doing anything).
* Gundam the planet into a new ice age—and they still treat him like he's going to kill them all.
* Harry Potter's author gave up on this question and made it a single recessive gene, explicitly ignoring the canon.)
* Green Wing's hospital room and draws facial hair and glasses on his face in marker pen.

* Hc Svnt Dracones; funds agents known as Beacons who have some sort of show or sport or other spectator event, and then spend their downtime fighting crime or something. They're supposed to inspire the populace (and encourage future Pulse athletes) and make the corporation look good. Though it's also possible Pulse funds villains to give them someone to fight.
* Hidoku Shinaide, mostly, there a few extra chapter crossover that shows a few characters know each other from different mangas.
* Hellsister Trilogy is a woman born with large, feathered white wings.
* Good Luck Charlie the players—thankfully, Teddy and Ivy manage to cover Mel with foam hands when the camera predictably ends up on the scene.
* Heaven's Feel, and the Nazi screwing over an old man still looks like the better guy.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows. Professional in the planning, not so much in the execution (mostly due to the fact that none of them works all that well under pressure). They end up improvising everything on the fly instead. Lampshaded by Harry wondering why they didn't plan anything for after when they get in. It happens again later on when they come up with an elaborate plan to enter Gringotts Wizarding Bank to steal a Horcrux from Bellatrix's family vault. The plan falls apart nearly immediately due to the fact that it revolved around Hermione transforming into Bellatrix and using her wand that they stole earlier as proof of her identity; the trio didn't even consider the fact that word that Bellatrix had lost her wand would have been spread around to Voldemort's followers (and that Bellatrix was essentially under house arrest after her failure to keep them imprisoned earlier in the story).

* hated "The Candy Man". He sang the "Timmy-two-shoes, white bread" song in one sanctimonious, condescending take - you can actually hear him forcing a smile. Upon hearing the playback, he swore the song would drag him and his whole career into the sewer. Whereas Sammy's first big-budget record under the Motown label bombed (leading them to shelve the second), "The Candy Man" spent three weeks at the top of the Billboard charts in 1972.

* Good Night, Gorilla, a zookeeper fails to notice the titular gorilla stealing his keys, letting itself out of its cage and freeing several other animals (including an elephant, a giraffe, and a lion). * Grand Theft Auto V features the FIB and IAA, expies of the FBI and CIA but replace the entire roster of the former with deluded self-serving homicidal spies who love dealing collateral damage more than their actual jobs of fighting terrorism, and the latter's modus operandi is to hook the senate on drugs (as seen in GTAIV) and create vials of an unknown substance, suspected to be neurotoxin for selling to terrorists. Half the game revolves around their gang war and the bank robbers they rope into working as proxies.

* Harry Potter, such as the Lestranges, Blacks, and Malfoys, are rich and influential and take every advantage of it they can (extra material on Pottermore reveals that the Malfoys obtained their current fortune and lands from services to William the Conqueror). Contrast this with the Potters, who despite being quite rich themselves have a history of being a lot more humble and generous, and the Weasleys who are considered "blood traitors" and looked down upon due to being less economically well-off.

* Grant Morrison — he was torn to shreds by a wolfman after getting a case of writer's block.

* Gremlins 2: The New Batch, in which a beaker in a laboratory is labeled "ACID: DO NOT THROW IN FACE". Rather unsurprisingly, a Gremlin chooses to ignore this dictate.

* He believes that any death of non-natural causes was because that person was too weak to survive it and thus all non-natural deaths are deserved. As a result, he comes off as a sociopath, showing zero concern for anyone but himself, as until Saitama, he had yet to encounter anyone better at fighting than him. Because of Suiryu's attitude, he has nothing but disdain for heroes and doesn't understand why they would rescue weak people to the point of self-sacrifice when they should be protecting themselves After being on the receiving end of this merciless philosophy though, and finally learning how it feels to be helpless against overwhelming power, he quickly and irrevocably changes his tune and vows to use his strength to be a hero himself.

* HeartCatch Pretty Cure!, Yuri loses her powers as Cure Moonlight at the very beginning of the series. It isn't until 3/4ths of the way through the series that she gets a chance to regain those powers.

* Hamilton as well: Burr clearly knows and is somewhat friendly with the Sons of Liberty (as shown in "Aaron Burr, Sir", "A Farmer Refuted", and "The Story of Tonight - Reprise"), and Lafayette and Hamilton are both quite close to Washington. They are so close, in fact, that the fact that Hamilton refuses to help France in their revolution (led by Lafayette) in "Cabinet Battle #2" is seen as a huge betrayal of trust by Jefferson.
* Gotenks' Dynamite Kick is actually just a normal kick. But Buu explodes a few seconds later.
* Hayate the Combat Butler they inflict on their son from stealing his hard-earned money, abandoning him to a yakuza and generally messing with his life. The final arc is when they finally get their comeuppance. In their attempt to get money from Nagi and sabotage Hayate's job as her butler, they end up screwing over Hisui's plans for the King's Jewel's power. Their final scenes are the mother watching in horror as the girl rips off the hood of their car, while the father managed to escape into the forest... only to be caught by his other son, Ikusa, who promises not to kill him, but still beats him up which will hurt a lot since he is even stronger than his brother.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers are acknowledged in his bio and some strips. Though God doesn't really seem to like him.
* Greek Mythology and their ancestors, the Titans, had complete immortality, which is why the Olympians did not die when their father Cronus ate them as infants (and they emerged alive and full-grown when he was forced to vomit them up). Likewise, this is why the Olympians imprisoned most of the Titans in Tartarus. Immortal beings could be injured or even indefinitely incapacitated, but were literally impossible to kill, even for other gods.

The implication being the "Things" are gremlins. The gremlins have nothing to do with the automated nature of the building. Their outbreak had nothing to do with it other then the fact that they were leasing to a laboratory and Gizmo got wet initially from a malfunctioning drinking fountain. Further more several of the building's high tech features came in handy such as the pest detectors and their telephone network. The real moral of the story should be "mogwai make terrible pets".

Of course, the beheadings themselves were never shown, but the victor usually came away with very little blood spatter on them.

Hank and Nick know they can't prove that someone is Wesen, but they reason that if the brothers really were cannibals, the surviving brother would have continued the practice all those years with nobody the wiser and that there may be evidence that can convict him and exonerate Ferren. * Green-Sky Trilogy due to her addiction to the Berries. Widespread addiction in the population is also cited as one of the symptoms of the society itself being ill. The "simulation hypothesis", as it's commonly referred to, has drawn a lot of criticism from other philosophers and been dismissed by physicists as an untestable hypothesis, yet does have parallels to common theological threads and is believed by many futurists. Of

* Gorkamorka has the Red Gobbo, the public identity of whoever is leading of the Rebel Grots faction at the time. Unlike most identities on this page, the harsh world and simultaneously squishy and treacherous nature of gretchin mean that the turnover is so fast you randomly determine the Red Gobbo's stats at the beginning of each game.
* Harry Turtledove! All of this in the blink of an eye turret between their probe visiting and the Conquest Fleet arrival (about 800 years, they arrive in 1942). There is also all that biological weirdness. For starters, they're big and ugly, they stand up at too steep of an angle, have no tailstumps and these weird multi-colored strands on their heads. Speaking of colors, their strangely smooth and non-scaly skin comes in as many colors as their head-growths. Don't even get me started on their bizarre mating habits, it took the more liberal members of the Conquest fleet nearly the entire 40 years (20 local years) between the end of hostilities and the arrival of the Colonization fleet to reach a personal understanding that, for them, being capable of mating at all times of the year is just natural (an American Tosevite who has become an expert in Race/Tosevite relations commented to the insanely radical Shiplord Straha that, to him, Straha is "more hidebound than a Southern Democrat with 40 years seniority" after the Shiplord called himself a Radical. This occurred before the end of hostilities in the Local Year 1944). Their exclusive mating agreements are something only such a screwed up race such as the Big Uglies could find enjoyable. Speaking of mating issues, that herb Ginger should be wiped out, it causes nothing but trouble.

This one doesn't get very heavy, though they are seen together on a couple of occasions outside of school, he eventually realizes it can't end well and so, well, ends it. Faye was so distracted that she fails half her classes and has to resit them the following year while also taking her A-Levels, just to catch up, and almost gets distracted again when she spots her ex-bf (now ex-teacher too, having resigned), out on a date with a woman closer to his age.
* Harry Potter, boggarts are creatures that transform into your worst fear. The spell to counter them is "riddikulus," which turns them into something hilarious, and laughter drives boggarts away. Patronuses (Patroni?) do a more solemn, protective version of the same thing to dementors.

* Greg Costikyan's short story "And Still She Sleeps". No one can wake up the maiden who's been asleep for centuries, because no one can truly love her when they can't get to know her. In the end, they put her in a museum until some future wizard can figure out how to wake her.

* Guybrush (the player character) is no slouch, either. Although he is often portrayed as bumbling and foolish (and perhaps a bit cowardly) many of his actions throughout the Monkey Island series involve him tricking or manipulating someone into getting what he wants. Indeed, his lack of physical strength or prowess is the main reason he must resort to such tactics.

* Hello Cheeky. The first time occurs when Barry explains that transmission of the show cut out in some areas, and that they've therefore compiled some highlights of part one, resulting in a stream of orphaned punchlines and setups, at least three of which weren't actually included in part one. The second time...
* Heavy Rain: Madison plays with this one in a weird way. Her encounters along the story tend to be overtly and unnecessarily sexualized, but they play her up to be an abuse victim (a dream sequence where she's attacked in her underwear, being assaulted by an insane rapist/murderer doctor, being forced to perform a striptease at gunpoint) and her successful action sequences are when she's defending herself from those assaults; further, there is an optional sex scene between Madison and Ethan, but the player is controlling him, and not her.
* Hayride: In one scene early on, a worker on Morgan's farm states that he can't find the bear traps they use to keep coyote's away from the hayride. Later, when several customers are fleeing the hayride when the killer attacks, they get caught in said bear traps. One of the people caught is seen trying to free himself.
* Glee: Rachel spent an episode infatuated with Mr. Schuester. It didn't last past that one episode. Suzie Pepper, on the other hand…
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, Harry has a 26-hour sleep schedule. Professor McGonagall solves this by giving him a Time-Turner. Harry is quite unnerved by this...
* Grange Hill briefly featured one of these in the comic book-style opening titles.
* God of War (PS4). Sigrun, Queen of the Valkyries, drops some pretty good loot as well, but she's also the most difficult enemy in the entire game. By the time you beat her, you've probably got nothing left to do. You're certainly good enough to clear the final boss without needing anything she could provide.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Ronan The Accuser's thee-mile wide ship that houses hundreds of necrocraft.
* GURPS, this is the 100-point level of Unkillable. For just 50 points more, you don't even need that one cell.
* Hearthfire, management of the orphanage will be taken by her assistant, Constance Michel. Michel is a much nicer person then Grelod was and is willing to make the orphanage better, allowing you to adopt children from it.
* having the badly injured Gakushuu and Koukin being held hostage by Saji * Heroes of Might and Magic features this on many of the fully-upgraded towns. Of note, Haven has a large wall protecting the inner city and an equally impressive one far on the outskirts protecting the farmland while Fortress gets a fairly silly-looking wall protecting the outside of the city (which is already built on the interior of a volcano).

* her boyfriend's severed head impaled on the car's CB antenna. The tapping sound was his blood dripping onto the roof of the car..
* Hatoful Boyfriend to save the day. It's a parody, but you can still get everybirdy killed by messing up the incantation.
* Goblins Quest 3, Blount wakes up in a dark room being bit by a wolf, and the first thing he sees is his own tombstone. He doesn't fall for it though, and just remarks that somebody must want him to think he's dead.
* Hancock. Also, Hancock was always saving her whenever they were de-powered in the past.
* Harry's Animagus form is a black phoenix with red wingtips and Ginny's is a red phoenix with black wingtips.
* "Golden Eyes" and Her Hero "Bill", gets this in spades. After her ambulance is struck by a shell, she has to crawl out of the wreckage and shuffle through the underbrush in a tattered uniform: yet she's still so beautiful that a German officer who finds her sneaking about can't help but be instantly besotted with her looks.
* Hamlet has an idiom for which the origin is lost though the meaning may be discernible from context. This may have been the punchline to some obscure joke the audience would have understood back in his time:
* Gotham inverts it, with no-longer-a-cop James Gordon hijacking a police car to go help Bruce Wayne.
* Hawaii Five-O, Al Harrington played assorted bad guys in five episodes over the show's first four seasons before becoming a Five-O regular (as Ben) in Season Five.
* Greater-Scope Villain rather than at the drop of a hat as Visser Three does.
* highly in the Jinbe vs. Arlong fight along with unusually cartoonish yellow "pow stickers" whenever Jinbe punched Arlong.
* Gus Goose. First appeared in May, 1938. Adapted for Animation in May, 1939.
* Godzilla (1998) The even sadder irony is that the budget went way over the budget Sony didn't agree on, meaning that the whole screw-up was really meaningless.
* hated his father for giving up his title as a World Noble, ultimately enough to kill him.
* Happy Heroes, have sneaked around while hiding in a bush or similar inanimate object several times.
* Heroes of Might and Magic was ultimately destroyed by the Pride of two leaders: Avlee's hero Gelu and Krewlod's king Kilgor. Their pride was exacerbated by the incredibly powerful swords each wielded, Armageddon's Blade and the Sword of Frost respectively. Gelu was convinced that he would be the one to save Enroth and bring order to it with the power of his blade, while Kilgor was convinced that he could conquer Enroth with the Sword of Frost. When they finally clashed, the colliding powers of their swords triggered a chain reaction that destroyed all of Enroth as well as them. In the end, their pride brought doom to themselves and to their world.
* Hanabi, Hinata's younger sister, actually got a two-episode anime-exclusive arc dealing with how she came to be the heiress to the Hyuga Clan. Parts of the story are actually flashbacks to earlier episodes (such as the Chūnin Exam arc) retold from Hanabi's perspective.
* Haruhi in order to have fun with supernatural powers without causing total havoc.
* Granblue Fantasy as her biggest wish was just to re-united with her family someday.
* Haruki Murakami does this a lot, and it's considered one of the distinguishing features of his popular style from more traditional Japanese literature. It also makes sense, as he lived in the U.S. for much of his life. Examples include:
* He uses it a lot; the three people (well, two people and a talking dog)
* Happens more than once in Sport anime and manga, specially in older series:
* Goof Troop. He also takes verbal abuse and rejection without fighting back.
* HERZ: Asuka is twenty-six years old, has got her hair cut... and she still wears pigtails right like when she was thirteen.

* He was working at Pearl Harbor when the Japanese attacked, then became a flyer for the U.S. Navy and experienced several of the Pacific War's major battles, such as Midway, firsthand.
* Grand Finale to not hit anyone or anything. In fact, all we know for certain is that five guards happened to survive since Cozy Glow dumped them outside to get rid of them, as Twilight only solemnly declares they will "rebuild" after considering all the damage.
* Gulliver's Travels (1939). The kingdoms of Lilliput and Blefuscu are on a path to war. Gulliver must find a way to stop the war before it destroys both countries.
* Hannah Montana make the team. After fighting with another mascot in an effort to pump up the crowd, she ended up kicked off entirely.
* Happy Birthday to You!: Ever since the song entered the public domain in the United States on September 22, 2015, this trope has all but disappeared.
* Goblins: Life Through Their Eyes, he concludes with the classic line, "Hello, my name is Tarol Hunt and I have 24 years of near-constant practice arguing the physics of magic with hundreds of D&D players."
* Gunnerkrigg Court, almost fits this trope, although she's too young for the sex appeal part. Robots fancy her, though.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series, it becomes clear early on that Hal Jordan is the only one who bothers to have one.
* Great Mazinger Ankoku Daishogun wanted to return to the surface world and let their people walk freely over earth and enjoy sunlight, fresh air and clean water, and they thought take over the world was the only way to achieve that.
* Happens earlier that same arc when Jotaro and Koichi try to get the killer's name out of his tailor. Said tailor speaks and moves very slowly, claims that he remembers every single customer's name (but can't give it off the top of his head), and when he goes to read a tag in the killer's coat he struggles with reading the kanji on it. Before he can even get a
* Heroes moments among fans. Even the writers realized this and had both characters significantly weakened for a time.
* Hellsister Trilogy: Satan Girl is a Kryptonian clone and Mordru a powerful sorcerer, so a lack of atmosphere is no trouble whatsoever. Hence Satan Girl takes Mordru out of the planet in the fifth chapter and demands to be taken right there and then.
* Go Animate has Daillou (sometimes others) as a palette swap for Caillou.
* Guyver fans would love an anime that runs long enough to overtake the massive manga lead.
* Godzilla, both of which make use of very frequent (and rarely necessary) splash and double-splash pages, enormous panels containing nothing but character closeups and one-word speech bubbles, and pages dominated by huge patches of literal white space.
* Hayate Immelman's own VF-31J Siegfried is a double Ace Custom: first, it's a Siegfried, which are already manufacture-on-demand Ace Customs, but secondly it is also additionally tuned to perform without the AI system that limits the manoeuvres the regular Siegfried can perform.
* Hellsing more power to a vampire than blood taken from a victim unwillingly.
* HERZ: In this story, Shinji has become more confident and more determined to protect his family. Although he hates fighting and killing he has learnt to use weapons and practices his aim constantly to defend his wife and his daughter.
* Haruhi Suzumiya after Nagato, Mikuru and Itsuki tell him the truth about their nature as well as Haruhi's. Then, Ryoko tries to stab him, traps him in a sealed dimension, turns her arms into energy tentacles, then Nagato arrives, survives getting impaled by twenty spears, chants a couple of spells, and Ryoko dissolves. Needless to say, he's afterwards quick to believe in whatever he sees or hears from these three.
* Hardly Working. The reaction of the visiting Latino relative of one of the employees sends it home:
* Harrisons Flowers decides to go after her husband in war-torn Yugoslavia after receiving news that he is probably dead.

* Gossip Girl. Chuck and Blair are both well aware that the other one loves them, but both refuse to date the other until s/he says those words out loud. Eventually Blair decides to say those words to Chuck but right before she meets up with him Dan tells her she's crazy if she thinks anything good can come out of saying those words to Chuck Bass. So she ends up chickening out, Chuck gets really mad and by the end of the episode they both agree that while the feelings between them are real they shouldn't be together at present.
* Hawken collapsed, triggering a self-replicating nano virus that converts the environment into a labyrinth of patchwork metal—known as the "Giga Structure" and "Hawken Virus." At the time of the game's launch, the virus covered a third of the planet.
* Going Postal. There are chalk outlines of the pieces of someone who walked too close to it. Some of the outlines are very small indeed.
* Godzilla (1993), the monster Radon (from "pteranodon") is called Rodan. Speculation as to why it was changed includes confusion with the element radon and a conflict with the name of a British brand of soap; nobody's exactly sure why.
* has just sent his last right-hand man to the next dimension. This is changed back to the original dialogue of Vegeta bragging about how he was going to kill Goku for the Funimation re-dub.
* Guardians of the Galaxy (2020) The series begins with a kree boy telling his parents he had a dream of the world burning. His father reassures him this was just a dream, since everything's fine outside. One page later, things cut to the world burning at the hands of the Olympians.
* "Highdelbeeren" by Austrian singer Wilfried (although the end sounds less like a single needle scratch but more like DJ scratching).
* High School Ninja Girl, Otonashi-san nature. Getting flustered over her feelings for male lead Arima causes her to sweat the pounds away literally overnight.
* Goldfinger is of the first type. The Chicoms are clearly bankrolling Goldfinger's plan to break into Fort Knox, having also provided the nuclear bomb he's planning to detonate.
* Heritage Universe, has Opal, Quake, Plesureworld, Iceworld, Deadworld and Sentinel Gate.
* Goblin Shamans are capable of using magic after being temporarily possessed by a minor demon.
* Harukana Receive, Ayumi immediately mentions to Haruka that in beach volleyball, there are no aces, and that teamwork is what determines victory on the volleyball court.
* Hermione. He also goes up against Harry, Ron and Hermione all by himself after his partner Thorfin was stunned in a cafe and subdues both Harry and Ron before Hermione body-binds him.
* Heart of Steel, Alistair suffers a psychotic break in his backstory when he discovers that his girlfriend had been taken off life support and subsequently died while he was busy rebuilding himself after the car accident that disfigured him and sent her into a coma. When he recounts the event, he describes it as "when I broke".
* "Guess Who's Coming to Criticize Dinner," when all the restaurateurs and chefs of Springfield chase after Homer after Lisa saves him from eating a dangerous eclair.
* Glissa activates the Soul Traps and sends all of the inhabitants of the plane back to their original homes, leaving only her, Slobad and Geth's head on Mirrodin to act as wardens for the Mirari.
* Harry Potter, Madam Pomfrey tells Hermione that her headache and stomachache are probably signs of her first ovulation. Hermione is embarrassed by this and tries to get her mind off it, but then McGonagall yells at Neville for not including "periods" (full stops) on his work. Then, later, an ingredient in a potion recipe is "Hippogriff's menstrual blood" and she misreads "hippogriff" for her own name.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: Morag, the planet Peter Quill finds the Orb on. At some point there was life on it, but something destroyed them a long time before and left the planet a volcanic ruin. It is strongly hinted to have been the deed of the Power Stone that's inside the Orb.

* Greek tragedies often killed off all or nearly all the main characters, leaving only one or two minor characters to carry on. Example:
* Hamish and Andy managed to snare a date (and later the heart) of Megan Gale, a real life Wonder Woman clone renowned for being one of the most beautiful women in the world (and dating Italian male models) by, in her own words, "being the only boy brave enough to ask me out." Aaaaaaaawwwwww. Curse you, Andy Lee.
* Gorillaz: The videos for "Feel Good Inc" and "El Manaña" feature Noodle on a floating island with a windmill.
* Halloween (1978) had in college touring a psychiatric hospital. Carpenter met a child who stared at him "with a look of evil, and it terrified [him]."
* Halle Berry page was edited with a quote from her that said "this new album will show people that [she] can do more than act". A number of news websites then reported that Berry was branching out into music, which caused Berry herself to report that she had no plans to do so.
* Growing Pains also featured this trope with Chrissy, though they didn't implement it for until a season after the actual birth.
* Happy Tree Friends" is the only example where losing a limb affects the plot, when Petunia loses her hands to a windowsill and falls in love with Handy due to them both being amputees. They later die horribly, of course.
* Harvey Korman as the villain, is pondering his next move out loud and looks to the camera and says "Why am I asking you?"
* He crosses the line with his plan to steal Future Industries from Asami and stage a False Flag Attack.
* He has a particularly bad instance in the short story "Day Off." His girlfriend walks in to find smoking pouring out of his apartment, his pets losing their collective minds, two naked werewolves (in human form) getting it on in the corner, and his apprentice passed out topless with Harry giving her mouth to mouth. Harry assures her that its
* Green Lantern foes the Tchk-Tchk were an insectoid race whose expansion beyond their own planet the Guardians took issue with. When their empire was forced back to their home planet they quickly ran out of resources and only survived by uploading their brains and abandoning their physical forms.
* Headhunter: Michael Slade's serial killer can take a victim's head off with one blow. Possibly justified, as the cutlass-like killing blade is equipped with a sliding weight on its blunt side, which shifts from hilt to tip when the weapon is swung and dramatically increases the force of impact.
* Halo. It's stated all over the special features of the second two games. And the web site. And the promotional material...
* Handicapped Badass: Someone can do action-y things despite being disabled.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: When Spain lets Italy leave him during the Seven Years War, he pulls out a banana and says (how redundant), "nice bananas." Readers are still trying to figure out what that was about.
* Godslave, this is the museum custodian's reaction to finding out that a two-thousand-year-old locked-up canopic jar has a live fennec fox inside.
* Goku's Kamehameha also seems to draw on his energy reserves a lot, as shown in his fight with Perfect Cell; after blowing Cell to pieces with the attack, Goku's power level dropped dramatically. In fact, when the Kamehameha is used in the original
* Harry ends an open letter to magical Britain by claiming, as a prank, that he heard a rumor about Tom Riddle and McGonagall dating each other at Hogwarts. Turns out that they actually did, but the relationship was deliberately derailed by Dumbledore.
* Gretchen's apartment in Season 1 is an absolute terror. It serves as foreshadowing to the revelation she has clinical depression.
* Grandia II included berries that taste like whatever the eater most fondly remembers eating.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged is shown to be quite affable), but mostly handles Alucard like a disappointed father disciplining a violent son. While Alucard has some legitimate reasons to reject His forgiveness, He does not make it a point to press the issue more than He must.

* Halo 3 gives us the canister-like Firebomb Grenades, which if hitting a character, will engulf them in flames, usually resulting in their quick death (unless it's an indirect hit or they have an Overshield) .
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Hermione uses a jinx on Harry to make his face swell up, hiding him from the Snatchers. It doesn't entirely work, though, and he has to rely on Draco Malfoy's sympathy to keep up the disguise when the trio are brought to Malfoy Manor.
* Good Eats; Alton pushes simple "multitasker" tools that can serve multiple cooking or preparation tasks instead of overly complicated (not to mention expensive) "unitasker" devices that do one thing. The only exception he makes is for safety tools such as fire extinguishers (and even then he found a use for a CO2 one besides putting out fires).
* Heroes. Justified in that he's relying on panic and the fact that the guy is new to his powers and won't use them instinctively. By the time the guy realizes this, Bennet's partner gets the drop on him.
* Hidden Disdain Reveal: A character reveals to another character that they always hated them, usually in a falling out.
* Harry finds himself disturbed by how much the goblin Griphook seems to enjoy other people's suffering and actively wishes that they'll have to hurt wizards in order to break into Gringotts.
* Hanamonogatari is something he would never do otherwise. Suruga actually thinks this line verbatim in the books.
* Guards! Guards! a dragon bullying them into doing it, and is utterly appalled.
* Grimmjow to Nel when the latter won't stop crying following Ichigo's 'death'.
* Gordon Ramsay stressful, so a harsh approach is only appropriate to get everyone used to it.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, Hermione hugs Harry right away but has an awkward hesitation with Ron that turns into a handshake.
* Green Lantern, when Kyle Rayner gains the cosmic powers of Ion, when a fleet of crystaline aliens shows up to invade, the JLA scrambles to respond. Kyle keeps his feet on the table and informs them he 'handled it'. They didn't even last long enough to give us an ultimatum...
* Halo: The Fall of Reach, the bodies of the Spartans that "washed out" (read: died) of the augmentation process are launched out of the torpedo tubes of a ship, accompanied by an appropriate military funeral procession.
* Harry Potter, Dumbledore is able to use the Resurrection Stone to help a ghost speak with her estranged mother and find peace, allowing her to finally pass on after centuries of regret.
* Goof Troop, Goofy encounters a criminal who looks just like him. In order to tell them apart, Max sets down a bucket of wallpaper paste and asks his real dad to please step forward. Max immediately knows that the one who manages to clumsily step in the bucket is Goofy.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: When the Nova Corps arrests everyone, one of them, Rhomann Dey, pauses as he notices "Star Prince" among them. Presumably, this is due to a single noteworthy incident rather than frequency, but it still counts.
* Goof Troop ends with a two-family picture at a barbecue. No one notices before the shot, but the kicked-aside grill has set the house on fire.
* Gossamer Commons offer to grant him one boon before he dies. He decides what he most wants is to write a great novel. This is a problem for the fairies, who thought they had figured out all the loopholes in possible wishes. They have no way of making Keith write a great novel, so they're stuck keeping him alive until he accomplishes it on his own.
* Harvest Moon: Animal Parade. Roy is a fun, outgoing jockey (i.e., the literal sort of jock as in he likes riding animals) and is fun-loving.
* Highly skilled mages can cast basic spells without the incantation, but the more powerful ones still require some invocation. Evangeline, as a 700 year old master, is able to cast mid-tier spells without an incantation, but still has to incant the real heavy-hitters.

* Gomenasai in it (it's misspelled on purpose). An English song with a Japanese title by a Russian band.
* H. G. Wells Notable for being perhaps the first example of this trope that attempts to depict the real-life side effects that would ensue, such as the atmospheric friction discussed above.
* Half-Life 2: The invading aliens, the Combine, aim to strip the planet of its atmosphere and water leaving it desolate and uninhabitable in what is an effective reverse terraform.
* Goosebumps aired in reruns on Cartoon Network (during its disastrous CN Real era) and Discovery Family (back when it was called "The Hub"): when the show was on FOX as part of its FOX Kids line-up, the show was rated TV-Y7 for scary content. The reruns on Cartoon Network and The Hub were TV-PG (also for scary content, though there's also other content issues, like kid characters getting bullied and scenes of kid characters in danger).
* Heaven's Lost Property, Ikaros uses a cork-minigun in a shoot-out competition to get rid of a lot of participants. All whilst flying.

* Hatoful Boyfriend try to sneak into the school, get scratched by a fence, and march to the infirmary with great wrath and indignation to point at the minor wound.
* Hack, Mike is an ex-cop turned cab driver cum vigilante. He generally fits into the 'good vigilante' mould.
* Glee's Prom episode, a girl walks past Santana wearing the same dress as her. She rolls her eyes and carries on enjoying the night, the implication being character development in that she didn't start a fight over it.
* Herschell Gordon Lewis, feature blood so bright and thick it could pass as paint. Lewis had it made to order from a local chemist, and reached a point where he labeled his films as "two-gallon pictures" or "three-gallon pictures" based on how much he had to call in for.
* Griffith may be the leader of a mercenary company, and of common birth, but he very convincingly plays the role of the perfect knight. Most people say that the first time they saw him was like looking at a storybook hero come to life. He's
* He has another during the Season Four Finale along with Elongated Man
* He promises his vessel, Jimmy Novak, that he will protect Jimmy's family. He fails, * Helluva Boss who made his fortune by experimenting on poor people, constantly insults and berates what he thinks are small children. After I.M.P. screws the forces of C.H.E.R.U.B. over, the supposed angels go into a racist tirade against imps in particular.
* going upstream the river of time, you're faced with an absolute blizzard of choices, more than in any other route, but the way through is also easier than you might think if you don't "fight the current" of what really happened in the past.

These stories (and accompanying Roman sculpture, which may take a cue from the Greek artistic convention of heroic nudity) may be the origin of the popular notion that fighting naked was a common practice among Celtic peoples in general.

* God's Not Dead is largely considered to be an improvement: It doesn't have straw men, it lets non-Christians present their arguments and even keep their opinions on faith, it calls out the victim complex the previous movies had, it doesn't admonish Christians for having crises of faith, and it acknowledges that the church has indeed a rather dark history of wrongdoings. * Harley Quinn (2019) and gets a girlfriend who has two kids he adores. When he gets turned back into the Joker again he initially is disgusted by the boring and wholesome person he became and dumps her, but then he gets nostalgic for the time he spent with her and realizes that he still loves her in a far more genuine way than the abusive relationship he had with Harley and gets back together with her, but then confirms that he still is unrepentantly evil. * Hangar 17, where a teacher nominated by some of the audience had to sit inside a futuristic cockpit-like booth and answer three questions on the subject they taught, only being told if they had got the answers right (and therefore escaped) at the end. Only one teacher ever escaped the gunging, which was fairly vicious even by British standards, with the stuff being sprayed from all sides of the device before they were finished off with a torrent from above - when this happened, they let him out and put the girl who had nominated him in instead.

The way Drizzt demonstrates he has (to a small extent) learned to think like a drow during his training, is when he challenges his last remaining opponent in a free-for-all between students to an open, honourable single combat. He knows he can win — only to have the opponent step into a trap he has set up. Drizzt proves that he would not do anything so stupid as to issue an honourable challenge anymore.

* Harry Dresden and even horror. However, since Harry is trying to keep himself sane, he will try to make light of these situations and turn it into this.

But after an incident where a berry got squished in one page of the books he was reading. He got angry and left them behind, later he felt guilty and decided to be friends with them. * Hand gestures tend to vary from culture to culture. In the U.S., waving your hand at someone is a way to say hi, but to the Japanese it means "come here". Also, in the U.S., the thumbs up is a signal of approval, but raising your thumb in Kenya is akin to flipping the middle finger.

* GoGo's Crazy Bones series called "Mags" wasn't part of that toyline when it was originally released in Spain, and was instead its own toy series. The Gogo's name was appended to it for international releases, probably to try to boost its sales due to the popularity of Gogo's at the time.

* Going even further back, the second movie, "Legends of Metru Nui", and the 2004 story arc as a whole introduced the faults that "Time Trap" brought to the surface. The story took on a sci-fi bent, contrasting with the Polynesian-influenced fantasy of the previous arcs. The Dark Hunters were introduced in the form of Nidhiki and Krekka, and the Brotherhood of Makuta was first alluded to in the film. Finally, Makuta's plans for the Mask of Time were the first sign of him having a long-term plan. These traits would be magnified greatly in the franchise's later installments.

While everyone loves him and his famous taffy, he's tired of all the attention, claiming it's "the pits". Unfortunately, while he seems to get his wish, he still does not divulge his secret recipe, claiming he cannot do so until he finds a worthy successor. (And after Cubbi, Tummi, and Sunni copy it and nearly blow up the castle trying to make it, one can hardly blame him.)
* Grudge Match has people pull out cell phones to record these two old guys (the protagonists) fighting. This is what inspires a promoter to get them out of retirement for one last match.
* he and his brother Duane, had a "foot-shooting" party. They had a party and when Gregg was good and drunk, they called the EMT's and shot Gregg in the foot (Gregg was originally going to shoot himself, but was so nervous Duane had to do it). When he went to his draft physical, he claimed he accidentally shot himself while cleaning his gun. They bought it and he was rejected.
* Heretics of Dune, which is played for both drama and laughs. Fortunately, he can turn the ability on or off at will.
* Hell March where the Nazis never existed but World War 2 was instead fought against the expansionist Soviets.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets the kind of joke you tell in civilized company. (Well, the punchline is "What do you mean, 'wrong hole'?", if that tells you anything...)

* Gokinjo Monogatari. When she's chosen as the receptionist at the fashion contest and can't move from the hall, she even gets a comment from Yuusuke, that it suits her just perfectly.
* Goldust (itself an example because of the "dust"), Dustin Runnels wrestled as Dustin Rhodes.
* Heavy is the Head by turning to stone, although, given the nature of his powers, it's more of a temporary setback than the death it would be for anyone else.
* Henry Kuttner's character Galloway Gallegher works best when plastered anyway, but special mention to the story "Time Locker".
* Good News Week, but its political satire didn't survive the move to commercial

* Going into Fashion Week on the third season, Mychael Knight was the overwhelming favorite. Instead, he was the first one eliminated.
* Griswold, the commissioner sent to ruin Kirk, has attitudes on the Prime Directive more similar to that of Picard's era (i.e., refuse to lift a finger to help people who are dying, even when there's no real risk). * Gunslinger Girl have their memories or their pre-Agency lives erased in order to remove the pain of past traumas (or make them easier to control, if you're cynical). Rico is unique in that she has full recollection of her time before she was given over to the Agency - which was not in itself a happy experience, with years crippled by birth defects and beset by quarreling parents - and is not at all troubled by years wasted in a hospital bed or being possessed by the Agency and used as a killing machine.

* Goblins on an inn. Prominent and shiny. MinMax is forbidden to smash it. There is exactly zero chance the window will remain intact.

on his index fingers, which he got in the eighties from
* Hannibal. He's tested by a Satan figure (Hannibal), persecuted by Freddie Lounds, betrayed by one of the men he trusted most, and unjustly punished. In his daydreams in season 2, he's shown standing in a stream, as if to invoke the image of baptism. In "Hassun", Hannibal likens himself to Peter and Will to Jesus, telling Jack that he cannot deny Will a third time, a reference to Matthew 26:69-75.

* Grand Theft Auto III: An early mission has you booby-trapping a guy's car. For added irony, he just came out of a restaurant called Ernie's Eat Till You Explode. And later, you can end up on the receiving end of this trick if you're not careful.

* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: One of the title artifacts is a ring that brings back people as a ghost. People went crazy believing the person was alive...
* Goblin teams are treated almost equally badly. Not only are they a complete gimmick team that tends to hurt themselves as much as they hurt the other team, in the fluff the main consensus of the Blood Bowl community is that they're only allowed to play because the alternative (leaving the goblin teams, coaches and supporters with nothing better to do) would probably be worse for society at a whole.

* Grif quits the team. He decides that he's had enough, and that he hates everyone.
* Good Times: JJ and his younger brother Michael share a bed which is the family's living room pull out sofa. Dudes don't even have a private room to themselves.

* Gotham alert) rises up in Gotham after the death of circus performer and serial killer Jerome Valeska. Sort of Juggalo-meets-Charles-Manson. Though they seem to like thrash metal rather than horrorcore.
* Hayate the Combat Butler just about every named female has this happen at some point.
* Green Eggs and Ham. However, good word of mouth about the show's quality made it successful enough to be renewed for a second season and become a hit with not only families, but the animation community.

* Halo: Ghosts of Onyx, Dr. Halsey, who was in charge of the SPARTAN-II program, makes it a point of keeping track of which ones are actually dead and which ones were M.I.A. in circumstances that actually suggest their possible survival. * Heavy Equipment Class: A character or class that stands out due to proficiency with heavier weaponry.
* Heroes Reborn (2021) who truly respected and liked his peers in the Imperial Guard (including a pair of male members that were a couple). Contrast this with the grim ultranationalist, hard-liner that he is today (though he's still nowhere as vicious as Nighthawk or Doctor Spectrum and does occasionally regret killing).

While they do gain outlandish properties in the second season, the particles haven't been shown making objects invisible.

* He nearly got killed early in his writing career in "Nor The Battle To The Strong", when he and Bashir were diverted to assist a Federation field hospital under siege by the Klingons. * Harry Potter series features this in many places. Hogwarts, especially the stairs, constantly rearranges its layout; in the films this was depicted very mechanically, but in the books it was implied that sometimes a staircase would just lead to a different place without anything ever being seen to move. There are also rooms that change size and shape, the Room of Requirement being a prominent example later in the series whose layout and contents depend entirely on what the person entering it needs. There are also examples outside Hogwarts, such as tents which are not just bigger on the inside, but actually contain an entire multi-storey house including furniture and fully-fitted kitchens and bathrooms. Diagon Alley and the Knight Bus are other examples that change size and shape, both inside and out, depending on what is needed at the time or who is looking.

The kicker was that this was a training exercise, and the Spartans did this when they were twelve!

The super-advanced aliens are studying her because even they don't understand her ability to "create data".
* Hellboy has commented on the absence of God/Heaven in the series as revealing too much about the divine order of the universe sort of takes away the mystery in a series. * Happy tends to be this when everyone's caught up in battle, and Lucy's also played this at the beginning of the series.
* Godzilla (2014): While he's not as particularly fast as some of his previous incarnations, Godzilla here keeps true to the Big G's tradition of dishing out various flavors of pain and destruction.
* High Fidelity: the #1 in Rob's list of breakups is a childhood love which lasted a total of six hours through three days. On the fourth, she dumped him for another guy. 20 years later, he calls her... and it's summed up by Rob as this:
* Hand of Fate, the Dealer may note that the card was in the deck from the beginning. Twisted Canyon was the first card created during development of the game.

* here. Lovecraft would be proud. (Or actually he'd probably be nihilistically horrified at the alien, inhuman cosmos revealed by science, but whatever.)
* Goldfinger how to disarm it. With only seconds left and no where to move the bomb it to contain it safely, he desperately grabs a handful of wires hoping to do something...only for the bomb expert to arrive, gently push him aside, and casually turn off the bomb. With "007" reading on the timer.
* Heel. The logic being that if the face was to try to get legal satisfaction against the heel, the heel (being evil) would just use his nefarious resources to hire lawyers designed to drag out the case as long as possible, thus a) bankrupting the face with legal bills and b) the heel would probably win the case due to his slimy, smarmy, fast-talking lawyer. It actually makes sense (well, as much as wrestling can make sense) that the face would just wait until the Pay per View where he KNOWS he will get a chance to rip the heel apart with his bare hands, with no legal repercussions. When the attacker is a face however...
* Greek gods most of them either are not friendly with mortals or demand to be treated like gods and for mortals to act like mortals.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 8 episode 6, Huo Haha has a rancid smell coming out of his mouth and he apologizes to Big M. since he ate garlic earlier. Later in the same episode, Smart S. notices the smell, and Huo Haha apologizes again, realizing too late that he also forgot to brush his teeth. This second instance distracts Huo for long enough to give Careful S. a chance to grab the fire wand from him.
* gonk with scruffy facial hair. Come Johto and he's suddenly in his younger, game-accurate design.
* Hey Arnold!: Rhonda has a tendency to be this, although it's not as bad as other examples on this page.
* Half-Life 2. Only debatable thing is that when she was living in Black Mesa, she was only a baby. But then came the Combine occupation and she became a rather hot tomboy by the time Gordon returned two decades later. Since then, they've been together for most of the time.
* Heaven's Gates and Hell's Flames — are allowed into Heaven, regardless of how good or bad they were in life; everyone else goes to Hell. Indeed, most of the people condemned weren't bad people at all. This is the point; to an Evangelist, simply being a decent person isn't enough.
* High School High, and writes it out on the board. He immediately begins correcting the grammar, to the confusion of the gangbanger who threatened him. After a few attempts to make simple changes, Lovitz gives up and says "This is just poor syntax."
* Great Sabrecubs, the younger versions of the fearsome Great Sabrecats, are essentially just kittens with the same flowing mane as their adult counterparts.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire. The disappearance of a Ministry official → a genocidal maniac planning to return to power.
* He has a villain called the Walrus who claims to possess the same strength-to-weight ratio as a walrus.
* Harry Turtledove novels include world maps showing the political layout of the book's timeline.
* He played fast and loose with the law, often exceeding his authority or making unauthorized changes. For instance, horse theft was a capital offense, but Judge Bean let people go so long as they returned the horses. In one famous instance an Irish labourer had killed a Chinese one, and
* Haegemonia looks like a typical slugfest between ships floating in space and firing at one another without any regard for tactics. While the game gives you the option of targeting engines or weapons instead of just the hull, it doesn't have much of an effect on the battle.
* Half-Life 1: In the Xen segments, there are bio-luminescent stalks which retract and turn off when approached.
* Grimmjow gets royally pissed off when Ichigo challenges him with confidence. He interprets it as Ichigo looking down on him and saying Grimmjow is so weak he doesn't have to worry.
* Graceland. Felix is a low-level drug dealer who is caught by the FBI when he tries to trade a truckload of counterfeit jeans for a duffel bag full of cocaine. His Russian bosses are not happy about this since Felix knows too much about their operations and could talk to the feds to avoid a lengthy prison sentence. They kidnap Felix's family so he stays quiet but Felix realizes that they will have him killed in prison and then murder his family so there are no witnesses. He cooperates with the FBI and Mike is sent in undercover as Felix's brother-in-law. The Russians like to invert the trope by having someone commit a murder for them and then they blackmail the person with the threat of turning them in to the police. Mike offers to kill whoever the Russians pick since this will give them enough leverage over Felix to ensure that Felix never talks and they have no need to keep his family hostage. The target turns out to be another witness who knows too much and it quickly becomes clear that the Russians will not keep their side of the bargain and will instead kill everyone who knows about the plan.

* Hannibal, Lecter stir-fried some guy's brain. Thomas Harris lovingly describes how Lecter prepared it, tableside, fresh from the source (he literally scooped out the slices of brains from the victim's skull at the table, in front of Starling). He gently coated it with breadcrumbs then sauteed it, serving with caper-berries and black truffle brown butter sauce. Just the way that Harris described it is enough to make the reader hungry, especially since he is a foodie and the recipe would actually be delicious (except the obvious part, of course).
* heel - the very first gimmick wrestler to become nationally popular, back in the late 1940s.
* Grrl Power. It heals up within a few hours, but she keeps it anyway.
* Going even further back to mythic times, there are the stories from various cultures about a great battle between good and evil, implied to be an earlier war with
* Gravity Falls", several characters end up in a cavern full of prehistoric life forms trapped in — and recently released from — amber. Soos examines one such life form, a group of pinkish flowers, which produces a powerful acrid smell.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality. Centuries ago, Merlin enacted a worldwide magical interdict that prevents wizards from passing down their knowledge of powerful spells through anything but direct teaching from master to student. One cannot learn how to perform powerful spells from a book. Thus, the most potent spells have slowly been lost over time, as their masters die without successfully passing down their knowledge. This makes powerful magical artifacts created in centuries past better than anything capable of being created in the present.
* Henry: Portrait of a Serial Killer has several neck snap scenes including the disturbing videotape scene of a mother and son getting their necks snapped.
* Halloween Episode We have reached the limits of what rectal probing can teach us!"
* Going Postal notes that such a great amount of respect is gratifying.

* Hex, the main characters are fighting against/fleeing from the forces of the corrupt European Federation.
* Goldfinger deliberately caused it (while in the film it is an accident), supposedly having been inspired by a real-life event.
* Hearst: "Please remain. You furnish the pictures, and I'll furnish the war." Kane: "Dear Wheeler, You provide the prose poems. I'll provide the war." Completely different!

* Goblin Slayer), which makes their numbers more than a little unnerving to think about.
* Helga tries to get over her obsession of Arnold that she tries not thinking about him, naturally she sees images of him everywhere across town. She was able to remedy this when she buys an out-of-love potion, and she stops seeing images of him, but it left her bored and empty.
* Harry Potter) and the polyjuice potion has a different consistency depending on who it turns you into (Crabbe and Goyle's looks like mud, Harry's is gold, we don't see what Bellatrix's looks like but it apparently tastes terrible.) In addition, Boggarts appear as one's worst fear, Dementors cause victims to experience their worst memories, and the Mirror of Erised reflects one's greatest desire. Yeah, Rowling loves this trope.
* Henry VIII of England certainly wasn't happy about his political marriage to the German princess Anne of Cleves, and there are good reasons to think the feeling was mutual. Nonetheless, after their divorce, they actually became close friends, with Henry sincerely calling Anne his "beloved sister".
* Grimm Fairy Tales mini-series, Liesel is attacked by vampires in a bookstore. She drops a shelf full of books on top of one of the vamps, who proceeds to smash her way out.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone decides to make things worse, by flying a broomstick to throw Neville's magical mnemonic device in a tree. * Heroics: Tess Cassidy, who is identified as this by name and uses "Control" as her radio codename.

* Goblin Quest take a different view: "Keep your enemies close and your friends closer. That way your friends are between you and your enemies". This demonstrates a culture where most members of the tribe would cheerfully double-cross any other member in the name of personal survival.
* Gods Need Prayer Badly: The powers of a god require worship to maintain.
* Harry Potter is being threatened by someone (usually Voldemort), and everybody tries to keep him safe. It never works — somehow, for some reason, he always finds his way to the source of the problem to face it himself. This habit comes back to haunt him in the last few books.
* Grand Theft Auto 2 had an approval meter for each of the three gangs in the area. Doing missions for one against another would boost your standing with that gang, and turn your target against you. Them being in a triangle of hate results in you usually being able to max out only two of them with the third shooting you on sight.
* Halo 3: ODST gave Drones a ranking system, that was unsurprisingly also differentiated by color. The game also featured the only appearance of gold-armored Hunters fighting alongside their standard blue-armored counterparts.
* Hamilton, Alexander Hamilton tells his faltering opponent "Don't modulate the key, then not debate with me!"
* HERZ: Akiko is a chirpy, lovable, endearing little kid and Rei is her cool, detached, unemotional aunt. When they are together Rei shows her softer, warmer and more overprotective side and Akiko is more cheerful.
* Gone Girl mentioned this to the book's author, she casually said, "Oh yeah, that is perfect. I was actually thinking of Cape Girardeau when I wrote it." Fincher was dumbfounded for about a minute before stating: "You know, these things don't have to be a fucking secret."
* Hidalgo, one of the character is worried about becoming a fifth wife to her future husband. However, in Islam, you are not permitted to have more than four wives simultaneously, so when it was translated into Egyptian Arabic, the references to fifth wife were changed to fourth wife.

* Heroes Adrift partner Taro. This scene is definitely likely to happen in the next book, seeing as she went into it expecting to get dumped when he finds other women to boink.
* Golden Son is dedicated to preparations for the Siege of Mars, the battle itself, and the aftermath.
* Hellsing has two examples, the first being the mercenary Pip Bernadotte and the second being Integra after her eye was damaged in the final battle.
* Guitar Hero games feature deceased musicians as playable characters, mo-capped by professional impersonators:
* Grand Theft Auto franchise has anything other than short hair. All of the protagonists, from Claude to Luis have either short or buzzed haircuts and even though Carl Johnson can get his hair cut in various ways, you never get anything that would sway in the wind.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters's magic, which is more powerful than that of most other magic users shown, is colored purple.
* had to be the first off the "ship" if anyone else was going to survive.
* Have I Got News for You: Quite often Paul Merton would indulge in this; once having a (seemingly) aggressive shouting match with Arthur Smith over whether or not you should put tomato sauce on baked beans.
* Here Come the Brides episode "The Crimpers," Jeremy is kidnapped by men who plan to sell him into service as a sailor. Joshua sees him being lifted into a wagon and tries to rescue him, only to be kidnapped as well.

* Hate Dom. The poster in question may use this sort of attention to keep posting more content that is sure to get attention no matter how bad or subjective said content is. In other words, the poster will assume negative attention equals popularity and will keep doing it.
* HERZ: When Shinji visits Kaworu's grave, he states that he killed his friend and his death traumatized him.
* Hell, the intro features him tearing apart an entire Blackwatch squad, rather easily.
* Gods Need Prayer Badly, where gods are only born because humans believe in them.
* Harley Quinn is the death of Harley's mother from cancer, which sets Harley off on various frenzied attempts to deny or "fix" it.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: England tries to trick America into sitting on the "Infamous 'Sit and You Die' Busby Stoop Chair. Its evil doesn't stand a chance against Russia's, though, so it's not as cool as it could be.
* Hey Arnold!. It's been shown on more than one occasion that everything in Hillwood would fall apart if not for him.
* Heart of the Woods) do this, with the former carrying the latter across the threshold on their wedding day.
* He's Alive appears to Peter Vollmer in order to help his small, ineffectual neo-Nazi group to grow and gain influence.
* Hamilton at first, his workaholic nature means they spend much time separated, and he ends up cheating on her, never mind the heavily implied attraction he had to her sister Angelica.
* He initially just tries to have Matt killed, but when this fails multiple times, he takes advantage of his status as an informant to the FBI to falsely "inform" them that Matt is a crooked lawyer who worked for him on various illegal schemes; the FBI agents take this at face value and start hunting for Matt, leaving his civilian identity a wanted fugitive.

* Harry Tries to Break the Multiverse": After Pinkie Pie escapes from being imprisoned in a "near-perfect Pinkie Pie ice sculpture":
* Gone with the Wind after the war. Alex Fontaine wants to marry Dimity Munroe, but honor prevents him from asking her until he can support her. Frank Kennedy holds off on marrying Suellen for the same reasons. Scarlett at one point bemoans that there will be a lot of old maids in the South because of this trope.
* half-seriously suggests that if they ever come close to losing the War, they should take a leaf out of the Prothean's book and put Shepard on ice, ready for Round Two in 50,000 years.

* Gundam: Most series are typically set at Exploration and Colonization of the Solar System...and sadly jump into World War III.
* Half-Life 1 can revive teammates and other players for 50 Med points, and a quirk also allowed to revive players that were smashed/blown into pieces
* Harry Potter faces while within the grounds. It's no surprise that Hogwarts' blatant unsafeness is a running joke among the fans.
* Grease: You're The One That We Want, which was a US version of the BBC Musical Search format, which was then imported back to the UK by ITV.
* Heralds of Valdemar turns out to be one of the White Demons of his childhood horror stories.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, Salome makes sure the Black Hammer Gang lives up to their name by pulling hammers from nowhere.
* Grade System Snark: As far as stupidity goes, on a scale of 1-10, you deserve a solid 10. Nobody could top you.
* Harry Turtledove historian from thousands of years in the future is intimately familiar with the life and times of Genghis Khan, but when he is accidentally transported to the twentieth century, he mistakes the cars outside for cows.
* Godzilla, where he was a villainous monster once again, and ever since he has been more consistent as either a Villain or Anti Hero.
* Heathers, this lead to her mother, who while not homophobic herself, warning her about the kind of discrimination she could face if she was openly gay.
* heavy-handedly; every character who has sex, or wants to have sex, or fantasizes about having sex, or is a creepy redneck who has sex with mannequins gets killed. There are a few others, of course.
* GoldenEye, and the Seamaster model featured in the film became one of the most ubiquitous luxury divers in the world over the next few years. The success of that model led to them being able to fund several innovations, such as the Co-Axial escapement. Over the next twenty years, they would come to be one of the most recognizable Swiss watch brands in the world, arguably second only to Rolex (which Bond also popularized back in the 1960s).
* Good Omens features a fast food chain called "Burger Lord," founded by Dr. Raven Sable's (aka Famine) company Holdings (Holdings) LLC, in which all of the food served featured no nutritional value whatsoever. Lest the reader think one particular company is being targeted, mention is also made of the company's mascot, McLordy the Clown.
* "Hello hebrews and shebrews, what a glorious Jewish day..." Also followed immediately by: "Hey, y'know, I went into a store last week and they wanted 800 bucks for a TV,
* Heroes for Hire find themselves in a stolen boat with the Coast Guard about to board them.
* Hearts and Minds, one young man who has been hiding out from the draft decides, against his mother's advice, to turn himself in and make a public statement.
* He can get a cab in New York. Police officers call him "sir". He dances with his thumbs out...)
* Help I Am Being Held Prisoner: The stressful thought of having the prisoners connect his practical jokes inside the prison to the jokes he uses to delay the robbery eventually helps Harry give up on his habitat joking.

* Grand Finale takes over an orchestra concert with a cover of A-Ha's "Take On Me." Morgan grabs the baton from the befuddled conductor and starts waving it around, causing the orchestra to join the song perfectly.
* have an old-fashioned shutter click, what with them having shutters, although the noise is practically inaudible in comparison to a $5 disposable camera. The sound they're emulating is more like the action of the reflex mirror in an SLR camera, with a hint of motor-driven film feeding, which is the stereotypical "taking a photograph" sound.
* Hannibal his own severed and cooked leg. The victim is surprisingly cordial throughout the whole event.
* Helloween (1994). At the beginning of the song, the narration specifies that "fifteen years have passed" since the titular Gentleman was locked in a mental institution because his narcissism led him towards insanity.
* Grows on Trees, an NPR economics correspondent once filed a story on cheese mining. It was set at the Lombardi Cheese Mine in Wisconsin, and the Parmesan Mine in Italy. The reporter quoted one miner: "People just have crazy ideas. Some people think cheese comes from cows! There's only one way to get cheese, and that's to dig it out of the ground." The date of the report was April 1.
* Gundam 0079: The War for Earth media officially released in English, before the franchise had much of a Western presence, and as such employs many romanizations that differ greatly from the standardized ones used in later releases. These include Char Aznable being "Shar Aznabull", "Zakus" being "Zaks" (as in the English translation of the novels) and the Principality of Zeon being the Duchy of Jion (infamously pronounced "John" by the actors).
* Gogo Yubari. A cute Japanese girl who wears a girly school uniform. But she's also deadly as hell. And she can do wonders with her weapon of choice — a spiky sphere on chain.
* Hawaii Five-0 from its previous season, and the show has remained part of CBS' Friday night schedule, until its tenth and final season in April 2020.
* Gossip Girl is the master... er, mistress of averting this trope; the series is set and filmed in New York, the episode/backdoor pilot "Valley Girls," mostly set in LA, was actually filmed in LA, and when Serena van der Woodsen and Co. went to Paris those episodes were also filmed in the City of Lights. Serena spends the end of season four and beginning of season five in La-La Land, and her storyline's filmed there as well. (That said, there are a few exceptions - see above.)
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets : When the tunnel leading to the Chamber of Secrets collapses, Ron Weasley and Gilderoy Lockhart are trapped. Harry must now face Voldemort alone.
* Hawkman is very much capable of this on the rare occasion he is out of costume.
* Heartbreaker using his power (ability to instill extreme emotions in a target) to form a harem is somewhat infamous in the story itself.
* He used the episode title "What Kind of Day Has It Been?" for the first-season finales of
* Gone in 60 Seconds (2000) has a dog belonging to one of the heroes eat the keys they desperately need. They feed the dog laxatives and take him for a walk. The pooch just happens to "go" when a group of people looking to kill the heroes show up, and they're so disgusted by the man digging through (presumably runny) dog poop that they run off.
* Gohan often does this as "The Great Saiyaman" when going up against armed crooks.
* Hank Williams Sr. and the Reverend Ike – was a 1986 No. 1 smash and has since become one of the genre's iconic hits from the 1980s decade.
* GoldenEye rappels down from a helicopter in her final confrontation with James Bond. This ultimately gets her killed when Bond commandeers her AK-47 and blows away the pilot of the helicopter, and she gets yanked off him by her own rope and strangled to death against a tree.
* Gunnerkrigg Court in time. When one of the first generation robots is revived, he's impressed by the design of his descendants, because their simpler parts are more efficient and easier to repair.

* Haruka and Michiru are a straight example, though, as they met when they were both in high school.
* Gromril is a more traditional version of this, although it only falls from the sky depending on what edition you're on. 8th edition's Gromril is a more mundane style of metal — the Thunderbolt Iron there is Glimril, which is so rare that only one * heartfelt tribute to The Boss during the 2009 Kennedy Center Honors.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, the eponymous demon hero does this to a villain (sort of)- he goads the enormous troll into firing his spring-loaded, retractable fist at him and ducks- while standing in front of an enormous pair of spiky wheels.
* Great American Novel that some day some American may be able to write.
* Goldberg was thought to have wrestled his final match in 2004 at the age of 37, but announced in 2016 that he'd be coming out of retirement to have a final run that extended beyond his 50th birthday. He's since been brought back several times to wrestle for big events.
* Harry takes Sirius and Hermione to the Room of Requirement after the Triwizard Tournament.
* Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone, in most of the rest of the world. Supposedly the idea was more "American children would be scared off by the term 'philosophy'" than "Americans wouldn't understand what the title meant." However, it's not like Rowling expected children to get the alchemical reference, as it's clearly spelled out in the text.
* has no notable strengths other than putting out fires. They can use their water cannon to push people around as a fairly unique skill but there is limited utility in that and they have low combat stats which makes such direct approaches to encounters inadvsiable anyway. In addition to this they also have to deal with random people turning into arsonists without warning, except unlike the Comedian's joke ability this isn't something you can control or turn off in any way and is just passively built into the character.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows draws to its end, a defeated Voldemort gradually dissolves into ashes that rise skyward along with his final scream.
* has a better claim to being Addam's descendant than the Tantalese. While he's not a biological descendant (it's unclear if Addam even had any children), Addam founded Rex's home of Fonsett Village on the Leftherian Archipelago. Only Leftherians can bypass Addam's seals, and Rex is pointed out to be very similar to Addam by several people who knew them both.
* Hereditary Twinhood: Twins running in a family to unrealistic degrees.
* Half-Life 2 also uses this for when the player is throwing dynamite around, despite none of the character models being seen with a cigar at any other time. They look exactly like the stogies favoured by Clint Eastwood's character from the "Dollars" trilogy, which is probably not coincidental.
* Happy Endings, Penny gets this twice. First he dumps slime on Penny in her apartment, and then when she comes to confront him about what she thinks is another prank (a fake proposal set-up that turns out to be real), she goes to use his phone, and she gets slimed again-which was meant for Dave.
* Harvest Moon DS. In terms of the Forget-me-not Valley people, they fall in love with previous love interests. However the Mineral Town people don't have feelings for their grandparents' lovers apparently.
* Goode Behavior instead. Producers liked her so much that she was introduced on the second season as Kendra.
* Happy Death Day. There's only one real victim, but she gets killed over and over and over again.
* grew up in that prison. First he just landed there, but then the fucked-up logic of the setting meant that as a three-year-old participating in a prison break, he was sentenced to jail time instead of being put into the foster care system.
* Gossip Girl is the dumbest of the main characters, and probably the sweetest too, especially compared to Chuck and Blair.
* Harpo Does Something Funny: Invoking this by leaving gaps in the script for the actors to throw stuff in.

* He Died with a Felafel in His Hand, the two Detectives who show up during the Shared house 48 arc are blatantly corrupt and try to justify it.
* Gravity Falls monsters and rainbow-vomiting gnomes, it's not like anyone present would have batted an eye if he'd just said "magic".
* Heroic Sacrifice In fact, more friends keep arriving all the time, signifying that the final battle against the Martians is still going on.
* Guinness is a particularly odd example. The original Guinness, also known as Original or XX, is the one most commonly seen in Ireland, and also in the US. The one found in UK pubs and the more common in stores is a less strong, frothier version called Guinness Draught. Standard Guinness in Africa and the Caribbean is a higher alcohol formulation known elsewhere as Foreign Extra. The company also produces a West Indies Porter (which is what Guinness Foreign Extra used to be like when it had to be exported to the Caribbean by ship) and Dublin Porter (which is what Guinness Draught was like before World War I rationing caused the recipe to be changed). Guinness, of course, is seen as the traditional Irish beer, but its other varieties were all developed for foreign markets.
* Grozny, the capital of Chechnya was once called the most devastated city on earth. And for good reason—through two wars it experienced not one, not two, but
* Grounded from well-adjusted and lovable characters to spoiled brats who enjoy causing all sorts of destruction and mayhem. It doesn't help that, at times, their parents are just as bad.
* Happens to Amakawa Yuuto, mostly with Himari. He seems to have mixed feelings on this...
* Harry, thanks to being raised by a Kneazle pride, had a tough time with human idioms, to the point where Hermione commented "Harry, sometime we really need to discuss your literal interpretation of life."
* Heel–Face Turn in "Brother From Another Series", he remarks that he still just might have the urge to kill Bart Simpson, only to quickly add "Joking, joking!" when Bart gets frightened.
* Going Postal, Moist is relieved to hear that a dangerous pass has very little bandit activity nowadays. Then he's told that isn't good news because "We still don't know what killed them".
* Glover: You can cast the frog spell onto witches, but they will reverse the spell right back at you.
* Hepzibah of the Starjammers has a very distinctive manner of speech that combines terse sentences with a structure that places the identifier before the quantifiable, whilst also downplaying multiples. Presumably, it's an attempt to convey in vocal structure the natural "dialect" of her pheromone-based native language.
* .hack//G.U. Games for their special attacks, but their weak regular attacks involve grabbing the pedestal / handle and swinging the whole contraption like a club.
* Happens again in "Munchy's Sinking Feeling" when Flick tells his lame jokes to try to cheer Munchy up.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name. It takes about a day for Dr. Worth to get him to a point where he can explain what happened without mentally checking out.
* Hank Williams III, that when the actress Minnie Pearl met the younger Hank, she is said to have exclaimed "Lord, honey, you're re a ghost!"
* Haytham appears to have acquired this skill during his years in New England, however, as in later sequences he is able to follow Connor through the treetops without problems.
* Hatoful Boyfriend is set in a post-apocalyptic future where a pandemic of a deadly form of bird flu nearly wiped out humanity. In response to this, the humans developed a counter-virus in an attempt to kill the birds that carried the disease. However, this new virus ended up giving the birds it infected human-like intelligence rather than killing them, leading to them becoming the dominant creatures on Earth as more and more humans died from the bird flu. The surviving humans, who developed a resistance to the disease, are forced to live apart from civilisation as hunter-gatherers.

* grandiosity. In all their interactions with others, a pathological narcissist firmly believes themselves to be vastly superior to those around them and (more importantly) expects recognition of this "fact". While capable of faking humility, all narcissists are angered by the mere hint they are being denied the recognition "owed" to them. Likewise, they deeply resent anyone who draws attention away from them or in any way encroaches on their claim of superiority. The "extinction burst" is a well-known phenomenon when someone finally calls them out on their bullshit and makes the narcissist realize that they can no longer control them. The more arrogant and prideful examples are likely to unleash a gigantic torrent of verbal abuse, while the more depressive ones will instead launch into a massive pity party about how much worse the target has made their life. Either way, escalations into physical attacks, scorched-earth revenge campaigns, or even faking a suicide attempt just for the attention are not at all uncommon.
* has no idea what the term means. John's description of it as an occasion "where two people who like each other go out and have fun" wasn't all that explanatory.
* Harry himself is borderline: he's no ditz, but is implied average at best in most of his studies and would be worse if he didn't have Hermione to help him out. He has two areas of expertise: flying (he was the only one in his class to successfully command a broomstick on his first try), and Defence Against
* Heavy Gear actually lampshades how the titular Gears are unstable, easily damaged, and limited in striking power compared to tanks, but so much of Terra Nova's terrain is high mountains, swamps, and soft, sandy deserts that tanks just don't work in that they're worth the effort.
* Hammer's Slammers have anti-personnel mines attached to their armor. Since infantry can still sneak up on a hovertank and take it out with a cheap buzzbomb, these mines are necessary.
* High Rise Invasion, the main villains are a group of individuals wearing white masks who seek to drive the protagonists to commit suicide, or failing that, just kill them outright.
* Helix, Dr. Alan Farragut must work alongside his fellow CDC scientist and ex-wife Dr. Julia "Jules" Walker, during a viral outbreak at a remote arctic research base. In spite of their interpersonal tensions, she has recommended him to head the mission as a personal favor due to the fact his brother Peter is among the infected research scientists.
* Gunnerkrigg Court (her exact abilities are rather vague so far). She also has a mental disorder—she describes it like having static in her head. The worse the static gets, the less control she has to prevent her powers from acting up.
* Gossip Girl's fourth season Chuck declares war on Blair after she drives Eva away, though one might wonder where he feels entitled to declare war over something like that after he sold Blair for a hotel and slept with her nemesis in the previous season. Chuck and Blair are then at war for a few episodes until Nate and Serena sit them down and write an actual legally binding peace treaty. These kids sure do take things seriously...

* Green Dragon versions? Merely a checkmark in your completed missions ledger. Even the gold and XP aren't much help, as you're probably somewhere in the upper 40s, level wise (cap of 50) by the time you're strong enough to beat it.
* Grant Morrison are also set up the same way, with each issue being a different genre based on the setting (time in RoBW and the worlds in Multiversity).
* Happened quite a bit in Australia's history. Originally, it was divided between two separate colonies: Western Australia (formerly the Swan River Colony) and New South Wales. Over the years, New South Wales would fragment into Tasmania, South Australia, Victoria, Queensland, Northern Territory, the state it is today, and New Zealand (The newly-independent Australia offered both New Zealand and Fiji to join in. They refused, but they're still regarded as states on the Constitution). South Australia itself used to occupy Northern Territory, and short-lived states such as North Australia and Central Australia were also established. Later on, the Australian Capital Territory and Jervis Bay Territory also made themselves independent from New South Wales. As the Constitution of Australia allows for new states to be formed, regions such as Riverina (along the NSW-Victoria border), New England (northern NSW) and Capricornia (northern Queensland) have all lobbied for statehood. Just to add to the chaos, Western Australia has been threatening to secede from the rest of the nation ever since Federation became an idea (though their mood changes depending on how well their economy's doing).

* God is Dead operates according to this. The whole society was created by Apollo and Balder, as divine male personifications of beauty, after the world was devastated by the War between the Gods and only allows humans of certain attractiveness to enter the city. The more attractive one is, the more privileges one has in the society, with the most beautiful citizens serving as royal consorts to the gods in charge. Those viewed as unattractive are cast from the city grounds or used as a slave workforce and abused by the recognized citizens.
* Graphically, this is applied quite oddly. Units firing solid projectiles will usually be firing some kind of explosive, and the warhead will detonate an arbitrary distance away from the firer. Beam weapons, on the other hand, simply cut off...and when the beam in question is the Wing Zero's wider-than-itself
* Hawaii Five-0. Despite being in charge, Steve is the biggest wildcard on the team and is known for his inventive interrogation techniques, while Danny is much more by-the-book and civilized.

* Gold Box adaptations of D&D. Given the low graphic quality, single player mode, and limited options for storylines, the license use was essentially down to using trademarked cover art and names for monsters and especially magic items and spells. In first and second editions of the game, it was virtually impossible (and not especially worth the effort) for a magic-user to copy all existing spells into his spellbook; in the Gold Box games, it was not only worth the effort, it made the magic-user the single most important member of the party. When the players whose first taste of D&D was these games tried to join actual tabletop, they found the comparative scarcity of magic punishing, and DMs (and writers) tried to accommodate.

* Henry Darger against an evil empire that horribly tortures and murders them. Many of the illustrations depict the girls naked, and with penises. Since the massive book was only discovered after Darger's death, nobody knows entirely what was going through his head as he wrote it, but judging by his detailed autobiography and diary notes, he'd been badly abused as a kid and the book was his way of working through his experiences.

Lifty manages to escape with only minor injuries, only to notice his now golden brother and, overcome with greed himself, try to grab him. The statue is too heavy for him, his hand gets stuck, and he gets pulled to the bottom and drowns.

It's even lampshaded by the Muses below:
* Half-Life: Opposing Force screen by shooting the asshole at the first chance they got.

It provides +1 to Strength, Intelligence, and Charisma for a minute after eating someone's body—but Aaron Kimball can only be encountered in the second-last mission of the main quest, and he's surrounded by soldiers attending his speech (the mission meeting him involves either preventing or causing his assassination). Oh, and if you've eaten Caesar and House and you're willing to eat Kimball, chances are you're doing an Independent playthrough, in which case killing Kimball fails the quest (you can keep going from there, but you lose the attendant rewards). Chances are that if you ate the corpse of the President in front of his guards and lived to tell the tale, you aren't going to notice some measly stat boosts.

* Gyakuten Kenji 2 - and then they used that as an excuse to hunt down the members of the conspiracy, regardless of their actual crimes or knowledge. The last target was a 13-year old boy who was the son of one of the conspiracy's victims and had no idea about any of this.

* Goof Troop is extremely demanding and is favored by her father. She successfully goaded him into giving her 100 dollars for no reason at one point, despite being kindergarten age.
* god of Sonic, one has to wonder how Robotnik didn't Ret Gone himself as well.
* Hammer's Slammers wear full body armor made of a ceramic that can deflect the bullets used by most of the frontier militaries and insurgencies they end up fighting, so long as it doesn't hit any of the gaps, but are substantially less effective against the powerguns they and other mercenary groups prefer to use. They also inject stimulants or painkillers when the red or blue tab is pulled.
* Happy Days, but he needed to use a certain arm, and so he actually asked the girl to switch places before attempting it.
* High School Musical — Teenage musical series. Three films and one spin-off since 2006.
* Haunted House the doors close behind them. In this case the entire house is just an extension or construct of the vengeful ghost within so presumably he closed the doors even though he was in the basement at the time.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality (all orders come from the top, and subordinates are trained to carry out orders efficiently without questioning them, but this structure tends to be inflexible if the commander is out of touch with the situation). In contrast, Harry James Potter-Evan-Verres of the Chaos Legion uses some elements of recon pull (subordinates are allowed to use initiative to do what they think is right for their situation, and the commander acts as coordinator who concentrates on the big picture).
* Having the Sinister 7 launch the World War III protocol in the 1990 video game adaptation of
* Godfellas" has Bender being worshiped as a God by a tiny sentient culture on a meteor he hits while flying aimlessly through space. While he tries his best to be a benevolent God, the culture ends up starting a holy war and destroying themselves after finding Bender's "nuclear pile".

* Hannibal Lecter, "There is something very moral about Lecter in this film. The behavior of Hannibal is never insane – [I] didn't want to use that excuse. Is he insane? No, I think he's as sane as you or I. He just likes it." Having said that, Scott went on to say that he did think that Verger's objective in the film, wanting to capture Hannibal and subject him to a horrible death by torture, likely made him replace Hannibal as the true antagonist.
* hair works similarly to an eyepatch, as it shows which side of him is fighting. If you can see the right eye, you are fighting pacifist, gentle Allelujah. See the left eye, you are fighting the rather terrifying Hallelujah. See both eyes, you are fighting the infinitely scarier gestalt of the two.
* Half-Life 2 mostly avoids this, shooting Antlions with a revolver or shotgun causes it to explode.
* Grrl Power attacks that would destroy matter on the subatomic level' kind of invincible. He is functionally super strong as well (his invincibility allows him to use his muscles with more strength than a normal human could without injury) but it's nothing impressive compared to people with real super strength.
* Harem Genre on a number of occasions, where the tropes and trappings of the genre are used to tell another kind of story entirely.

* Great White's "Face the Day" was originally by the criminally underrated Australian band The Angels (known in the U.S as Angel City).
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe The Horde had to straight-up brainwash Adora to keep her on their side and still had to hide their evil nature from her. It apparently extends to their animal companions as well, as Beastman's mind control powers had no effect on Cringer when he tried to use them.
* Gomi-man, a mobile pile of toxic trash from Jersey City New Jersey who commits acts of vandalism in
* HeartGold and SoulSilver, the main character has to dress as a member of Team Rocket to infiltrate the building they just took over. It actually makes sense that it works. Too bad your rival shows up and blows your cover.
* Goblins how poorly it lives up to its title (see "Tabletop Games", above).
* Hilarious in Hindsight when you realize how popular Google Chrome has become in the recent years.

* Gung Ho feigns surprise that a not-really risque photo of a woman appears in his slide show about the plant's personnel. The woman in the photo is actually part of the management team.
* Hair Metal rather than a truly evil way ("She'll tear your heart out...She'll tease and please you... she's a heart attack!")

* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, Drax continues to have no sense of how to talk about negative aspects of his friends without at some point sounding horrible.
* Highlander, who has a hobby of passing himself off as various gods, including in the present day, the Biblical one. The priest anxiously questions whether Jesus might have been another Immortal charlatan, but MacLeod points out that neither the existence of Immortals nor the fact that one of them is going around claiming to be a god is any proof that a real higher power doesn't exist in the world.
* Happens especially repeatedly in the Dressrosa arc due to several circumstances. Originally Law, Robin and Usopp would go to Green Bit to give back Caesar Clown to Doflamingo. Nami, Chopper, Momonosuke and Brook would guard the ship. The Monster Trio, Franky and Kin'emon will destroy the Smile factory. Then Luffy joined the tournament, Robin and Usopp get separated from Law and end up meeting the dwarves and coincidentally Zoro and Franky wind up there too. Sanji reunites with Nami's group while Kin'emon gets ambushed by Doflamingo's men. Finally, Zoro and Kin'emon wait outside the Colosseum for Luffy. Franky, Usopp and Robin head out with the dwarves to destroy the factory. Law gets captured by Doflamingo and Luffy chases after him. * Harry Potter readers right in the stomach due to how unexpected it was. Hell, many, if not all, of the deaths were metaphorical punches or kicks.
* Harry Potter that are normally unintelligible to human ears but can be understood via this trope. Submersion in water allows humans to communicate with merfolk in Mermish, and a rare hereditary trait allows certain humans to communicate with snakes in Parseltongue. It should also be noted that some humans can manage to understand and/or speak these languages without the use of translator microbes. For example, Albus Dumbledore learned to decipher Mermish and Parseltongue through study, and Ron Weasley manages to mimic the Parseltongue password to the Chamber of Secrets at one point (though his imitation of the password just sounds like unintelligible hissing to Harry).
* Haruhi Suzumiya concert. Earlier on, the two uninjured ENOZ members can briefly be seen running past in the foreground while the main characters are talking. And, even earlier on, all four members of ENOZ can be seen arguing with the student council representative in the background, as shown up close in the flashback later in the episode.
* Happens again later when the heroes are busting one of their own out of prison. They bluff their way in to talk to the guards and casually talk about cells and security codes. They then knock the guards out while their resident telepath plugs in the code to open the cell, saying "He thought of the number as soon as you mentioned it".
* Hans the Hedgehog": Before the main character sets off into the woods, he has his father get the rooster shod and uses it as a mount throughout the story. This suggests that, despite being part human, Hans is of rather small size, which would justify such a mount, though this point is never made clear.
* Goof Troop is completely oblivious to how much destruction and pain his clumsiness inflicts, especially to his neighbor Pete.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. This lets her effortlessly manipulate etheric devices in ways that astound those around her, though it does come with a drawback.
* Heroes: Matt Parkman can detect people he can't see by hearing their thoughts. In the first episode we meet him in, he uses this to find a little girl who's hiding from a murderer.

* had heavily bid down their total forces to be selected for an Invasion Corridor), and finally defeated the remaining eight Clans in the Great Refusal, essentially killing any chance of the Clans ever seriously threatening the Inner Sphere again.
* Helmed Horror is intelligent enough to understand the difference between an order's intent and its exact wording, seeking to fulfill the former instead of following the latter. For example, if a Helmed Horror was ordered to not let a treasure chest leave a room, it would understand that this includes the chest's contents and fight to prevent said contents from being taken.

* Halo. The Forerunners intended for humans to inherit their technology and accordingly programmed all their facilities to recognize all humans (and only humans) to have full system access. It's also the reason the portal to the primary hub of the Halo network is located in East Africa, right in the region inhabited by early hominids during the time it was built.

* Gundam franchise, numerous Mobile Suits can be seen carrying weapons like these. Many of them were designed to shoot down battleships, but their power is more than enough to pulverize a Mobile Suit with ease. Among them:

* HammerFall's song "Glory to the Brave", as well as a number of others, given that their gimmick is that they pretend to be Templars.
* "Heaven Sent" of years in a mental torture chamber just for the chance of seeing Clara again and hopefully rescuing her from her fate.

* Happily Divorced star/creator Fran Drescher's relationship with her ex-husband, with whom she still works.
* Higher Learning: Unusual example because Shinji did not quit because he was bitter but because he was hopeful. When NERV developed the dummy plug system Shinji thought they did not need him anymore. So that he decided to leave in order to start a new life. When he was ready to leave, though, Zeruel came along and proved the dummy plugs were useless, so that Shinji returned hurriedly to kiss its butt.
* Harry Potter and infamously inedible, with the narration describing them as being exactly like eating rocks (in 6th year, a hungry Harry unwisely grabs one immediately... then stops after hearing 'an ominous cracking noise from one of his back teeth'), and Harry, Ron, and Hermione only eat them in small quantities because they don't want to tell Hagrid how bad they are and thus hurt his feelings.
