* Grave of the Fireflies and their struggle against famine, it's already a given that their efforts aren't going to end well.
* Highschool DXD, he's horrified with himself for enjoying it and apologizes profusely.
* He finally snaps under the pressure when the other policeman leaves him in the room with a suspect. Luckily, his mad babbling freaks the suspect out so much he winds up confessing.
* He was well-known for having the sense of humor of an under-ripe potato. They used to use him as a sort of barometer for the quality of their ideas; if he liked it, they were off the mark. Selzer was, in fact, the specific genesis of the cartoon "
* Gogol Bordello has lived in America since the 80s and speaks perfect English, but often throws in the odd grammatical error into his songs due to people associating that with Russians.
* Happy Heroes, hit flashes depicting stars appear frequently when characters get hit by something.
* guys discuss Barry Bonds' batting average while Maverick and Iceman get each other off right in front of them.
* hilarity of the recipient suddenly waking up and barfing into the other person's mouth as soon as s/he attempts to give mouth-to-mouth. This means it still has a 100% success rate, though, even if nothing is actually done before they try mouth-to-mouth.
* Guns N' Roses (Jersey Jack) with the idea for another table based on the band.
* Godbrand, a Viking vampire general who leads an army of fellow Vampires, of course would be the most knowledgeable about the unlikelihood of the water weakness. He quickly points out that the weakness was easily countered by having vampires * her movie counterpart, was unethically testing the chemicals on animals.
* Grace Under Fire, a guy at the plant realizes Grace, the supervisor, has just entered the room, and alters his story about the topless pancake house: "the waitresses all had these really big jugs...of syrup, that they poured over your pancakes..."

* Happy Ness: The Secret of the Loch, sports a way cool pair of these in addition to playing the sax.
* Grimms' suffocates her (married) stepdaughter in a bathhouse and substitutes her own daughter. The stepdaughter comes back as a ghost and is magically restored.
* Gumball, Darwin, Penny, and Tobias play this straight, as they're all 12, but only about half the height of their human-sized parents.
* Heteronormative Crusader: An activist who is homophobic and out to put an end to what they view as sexual deviancy.
* Gregory's implied proclivities is set here, in some undefined part of the English countryside in the 1930s.
* Harley Quinn, where she's done away with the jester cap and uses her half-black-half-red hair to replace it. In contrast, when she's depicted as "sane" or as a civilian, she is usually depicted with a more mature-looking ponytail.
* Hair a long haired hippie named Woof is asked by a shrink whether he was gay. He replies with "Well, I wouldn't kick Mick Jagger out of my bed, but uh, I'm not a homosexual, no."
* Go proposed giving his character a neck tattoo to emphasize him being a dirtbag. The director Doug Liman nixed the idea, but Olyphant went ahead and asked the makeup department to give him a temporary tattoo shortly before filming his first scene. When Olyphant presented it to Liman, he had apparently forgotten they'd ever discussed it and let him keep it.
* Haganai has the Neighbors Club singing the traditional Happy Birthday song to Kobato before she blows out her candles. The English dub, however, has them sing an original song which is very bizarre indeed:
* Halloween Hijinks", Coach Z mentions that he suffers from a "torn rubdominal scrimmage", a condition that results in this trope when he tries to blow a whistle at some pathetically poor vandals (who tried to vandalize his house with deviled eggs and a few squares of two-ply toilet paper, acts that only qualify as "low-jinks", not hijinks).
* Hetalia: Axis Powers To quote America's thoughts... "You used to be... so big..."
* High Class Homos: The plot of the comic revolves around this, with the gay prince and lesbian princess pretending to love each other so they can be with their same-sex lovers in secret.
* Heel–Face Turn. After a revelation from Huey, Vegeta shows up and helps Scrooge beat the Beagle Boys.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, and many references to ’80s pop culture.
* Harvey Street Kids episode "Trade Wreck", after being escorted off the kids' trading post for trying to sell sponge cake that he dyed red to pass off as red velvet, Melvin eats a piece of it and describes it as tasting like math homework.
* Harvest Moon game begins this way. The standard is to give you a couple of farming tools and a single bag of seeds. By end game, most players would probably have obtained a ranch, upgraded their home to a fairly comfortable living space, and make thousands of bucks a month off crop harvests and animal produce.
* Halo mostly averts this, with only the Sangheili (Elites) and Yonhet having similarly named homeworlds (Sanghelios and Yonhe, respectively).
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City: To a lesser extent, the PIG Security group enforce the law against gangs in the airport, Starfish Island and the mall - but are sometimes seen by cops as a gang.
* Gun that was effectively a rapid-fire, 5-barreled shotgun after killing the final boss. The problem was the only thing to do was to beat a few leftover missions with it. If you had already beat all the side missions before taking on the final boss, the 5-barreled shotgun got upgraded to a 5-barreled explosive shotgun. At this point there was nothing left to kill with it besides a few random bandits and innocent townfolk. To add to the awesomeness, remember that these guns were used in a game where you primarily wielded 19th century bows and rifles.
* God Hand, demonic guitarist Ravel yells "Rock off!" after getting trashed.
* Herland: All of the women in Herland reproduce by parthenogenesis, so they are "single mothers" in the most literal sense. This began when the men were killed in a disaster and then civil war, with one woman giving birth afterward by herself. All women after this are descended from her.

* He also remarks upon how humans are able to survive in a world with hundreds of different species that wouldn't mind having anything made of meat (Earth native or not) for dinner.
* Hill 24 Doesn't Answer to Miriam. He doesn't notice because he doesn't read Hebrew, so she comes over and turns it right side up for him.
* He and Mrs. Potato Head have also been on ads for Lay's Potato Chips.
* Green Lantern, so damage to the brain doesn't kill them. They are neither slow nor stupid, regaining all the skills and abilities they had in life, including any superhuman powers. The number of Black Lanterns in existence is truly Legion, recruited from multiple different planets across the entire universe. Worst of all, while Black Lanterns do possess many elements of their former personalities, they will all kill any living thing they encounter without hesitation or remorse.
* Heather by giving him a piece of cake. In a game where $100,000 is at stake.
* Gothic requires a priest of each of the three main gods of Myrtana to enter in this trance state with joints of swampweed to help the Eye of Innos regain its power.
* Hannibal and Will Graham get this, with Will Graham being a FBI profiler who has a special gift that allows him to empathize with criminals and Hannibal being Will's psychiatrist and secretly a serial killer and cannibal. They gradually come to obsess over one another.
* Help! I'm a Prisoner in the Library by Eth Clifford, although it's not exactly the main focus.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince inch or so of dust has accumulated on it, far more than should have been possible since he has been continuously working with it.
* Gregory Horror Show titled Confusion, in which the game's controllers becomes reversed, becoming very difficult to move The Guest.
* Golden Kamuy, calls him out on going to such extreme lengths for the cause of independence.
* Half-Life, in which Freeman points out that normally he'd like to go away from the trails of bloody corpses, but has no choice because there's literally no other valid path to follow.
* Harry Potter, in the entry on Lethifolds. Because Lethifolds attack the sleeping and leave nothing behind, it's near impossible to get an accurate tally of people who have been killed by them. It is significantly easier to get a tally of people who have tried to fake their death by Lethifold, as in the case of one man who supposedly left a note as he was being devoured "Oh no, a Lethifold's got me, I'm suffocating!", but was later found to be living with a mistress a few miles away.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Minerva McGonagall tells the students to not behave "like a band of babbling, bumbling band of baboons" on the Yule Ball.
* Heterosexual sex is certainly possible - and extremely common — among the people of the dome cities in
* Go Get a Roomie!, but as the strip goes on it becomes increasingly clear that her drinking is pathological.
* Happy Heroes joke when Big M. and Little M. meet him for the first time.
* Goth, and that she doesn't believe a word of what she's saying. As a result, many characters tend to be dismissive of her.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers has developed some popularity. The most common pairings are France/Rarity, Rainbow Dash/America, and Canada/Fluttershy. People will either turn the countries into ponies or turn the ponies into humans.
* heritage units painted in the liveries of predecessor railroads, such as the Central of Georgia, Erie, Norfolk and Western, Penn Central, and Wabash.
* Gun, with Occasional Music is a sci-fi police procedural that eschews most of the stereotypical elements of sci-fi, like aliens and computers. In fact, it probably is far closer to a pastiche of thirties noir with the silly elements (talking animals, super-intelligent alcoholic infants, free drugs for everyone, etc) justified after the fact. It could be telling that the author is also the editor for the Philip K. Dick and Raymond Chandler anthologies.

* Half-Life but the AI is Self-Aware trying to keep three lemmings and a god alive in a world gone mad", taking much more liberties with the Half-Life story.
* Hedgehogs, Bobby the hedgehog is checked for disease by good guy Scott. At the end of it, Bobby fearfully asks what Scott's doing with the thermometer, and after a popping noise of it going in, Bobby loses grip on the feather he was holding. Scott is then seen with the thermometer out as he shows Bobby the completed form detailing the clean bill of health.
* Grrl Power, the chief medical officer for Archon has a healing touch.
* Harry Potter, Hermione demands that they stop. They taunt her by saying "Or what? You'll put us in detention?" Hermione coldly responds with "No, but I will write to your mother." This scares the twins so badly that they immediately comply, an action that has never been seen before or since.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince when he learns that Cornelius Fudge had tried to gain his support despite having spent a year covering up Voldemort's return and smearing anybody who spoke the truth, including Harry himself.
* had to say it, didn't you?" moment while they all huddle under their shields and laugh.
* High Speed Rail. And most risk factors are stuff that drivers routinely do in a "Ah, it won't be so bad" attitude, like excess velocity, drunk driving, inattentive driving or getting behind the wheel when sleep-deprived or agitated.
* Greg Weisman wouldn't be able to put it into the show — obviously, Greg won.
* Grammy-conscious warbles? Liberal use of melismas? Music video of her performing in front of a humongous billboard of herself? That's Deniece Williams in a nutshell.
* Hannibal Lecter offers his services as a profiler in exchange for a
* Gory Discretion Shot - we are made to expect that a group are all dead, then someone goes to find out and all we see is the handprint.
* Heavy duty dehumidificators (the kind you need after a house flooding) tend to drive you nuts after the first 6 hours but are needed 24/7 for at LEAST 3 days.
* HackSlash is set in a universe where slashers are a kind of zombie that comes back from the dead after violent death. Slashers are genetic in nature and they are compelled to kill in their normal lives, though they may be normal people for most of their lives. Much of the protagonist's issues stem from the fact her mother was a slasher that she was forced to kill. Cassie Hack, herself, has the same urge to kill as her mother but expresses it against her fellow slashers.
* Godzilla vs. King Ghidorah, present-day Japan decides to nuke the Godzillasaurus that would've become Godzilla (who is now at the bottom of the Bering Sea) so that he can fight King Ghidorah. Subverted in that, he's already been nuked/mutated...in a sense (by absorbing the radiation from all the sunken nuclear subs already present in the area) and nuking him...again...only makes him bigger and far more powerful than before.
* Gossip Girl normally averts this trope, there are a few exceptions: New York State played Connecticut in "New Haven Can Wait" and "The Townie", and Europe in "The Return Of The Ring" (for the ending in Monte Carlo) and "Gone Maybe Gone" (for the pre-credit scenes in Monte Carlo and Italy).
* Gratuitous Japanese — 日本とのすべてが日本語なしすべてよりも優れています。
* Hetty Feather In 'Emerald Star', Hetty is a showgirl and a circus ringmaster, in 'Little Stars' she is a music hall star and then an actress.
* GURPS. The superheroine Justice doesn't realize how attractive she is and doesn't notice most of the compliments and passes she receives from men.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony, who intend to frame Ray Bulgarin by planting fake evidence in his truck. They're killed off in the mission "Going Deep".
* he's being sarcastic, and the real reason is far more complicated: he wants them as witnesses when he puts his true plan in motion.

* Global Offensive adds audio cues about the status of the bomb: dramatic music that kicks in when the bomb is planted, the music crescendoes on the last 10 seconds, then in the last two seconds you hear a coil whine, a quick series of beeps, then BOOM — "TERRORISTS WIN". Additionally, if you're on the terrorist team, your character will say something like "We are going to do it!" or "Our victory is near, brothers!" on the last few seconds, on counter-terrorist team - "Too late, run!" or “Clear the area!” .
* Golden Axe takes place in "the cavern called Dragon's Throat". Guess what the entrance looks like?
* Harry Potter to establish himself as a power to fear in Slytherin House, leverages that influence to demand House unity and make the older years look out for the younger ones — thus gaining a groundswell of popular support from the rising generation — and once his policies have gained traction, he declares independence from the Death Eaters, shocking many of his former associates but retaining many allies and giving many others an excuse to remain neutral. As a result, the Dark Lord's recruitment is greatly hampered compared to the original timeline.
* He transitions into a mastermind during the climax of the franchise.
* Hannah Ashworth was absent from her cousin Rhys's funeral, but they did at least explain this as her being too ill to attend.
* Glenn Morshower (who plays Lou, a lawyer who helps the Ewings throughout the first season) played a small role as a campaign aide in the original series' first-season episode "Black Market Baby".
* Griffith; it's her slap that makes him regain consciousness, just in time to save her from being raped by Wyald. Other times, Casca will just smack Guts when he's being a asshole.
* Harsher in Hindsight, especially when one breakfast presenter utters the words about it looking like a quiet normal sort of day. The compilation ends, for every broadcaster, when the presenter receives the This Just In prompt.
* Heavy Object are, on paper at least, a maintenance tech and radar specialist. In practice they engage in land battles, sea battles, aquatic base invasions, infiltration of enemy bases/cities, and more. The two tend to complain about this.
* Gorkamorka mostly exists to facilitate the players' warbands driving around in the desert beating each other up.
* Guns N' Roses, originated from the short-lived Hollywood Rose and the still playing and not as successful L.A. Guns.
* Grand Duke Nicholas Nikolaeivich was the initial commander in chief, but he had zero experience commanding armies in the field. He was completely out of his depth and oversaw several catastrophic defeats, which led to Tsar Nicholas II firing him in 1915. Unfortunately...
* Godslave is just waiting to see her colleague getting pounded by Edith.
* Hazard Construction, which has been around for decades and has a respectable name (ironically).
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Sealand went for a whole 3/4's of the episode believing that the countries were ignoring him just to be jerks. It takes him to the last quarter of the episode, while nicely enjoying a meal with himself, that the reason that the other countries ignored him is because he hasn't been recognized as a country himself.
* Hellboy, Mike Mignola writes that the girl is heavily based on his daughter Kate, down to claiming to be half-lion.
* Guardians of the Galaxy from the planet Pluto. His body is composed entirely of crystal, and never wears clothes.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try and a second defeat years later nearly sent him back.
* Harry makes James and Albus share a room so a recuperating Sirius can have someplace to stay and James is deeply unhappy about it. After he pushes Albus out of his bed, Ginny paints a line down the middle of it and tells the boys to stay on their own sides.
* Hex, Raphael briefly persuades Ella to wear a spiked bracelet as punishment for her sexual attraction to Malachi.

* Government Agency of Fiction: Either a fictional government agency, or a real one described in a fictional way.
* Heist: The Crime of the Century protagonist "borrows" a cruise ship waiter's uniform while the owner's busy frolicking with a woman in a swimming pool.
* Hana the Fox Girl. This caused some of her behavior, such as catching frogs barehanded or attracting snakes to her on a field trip, to freak out her childhood classmates. Fortunately, through the Shimashima coffee shop in general and Fu in particular, Haru makes friends before starting class at Fu's school.
* Godzilla (1998) that followed the film being produced and the rest scrapped.
* Harry tackles Draco after he tears up some of Harry's old shirts for use as rags and they both fall into the pool.
* Heel–Face Turn in WWC. During their title defenses against Doom Patrol the referee would question the legitimacy of even their perfectly legal tags if he was even slightly distracted.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality with words. The words are all "doom".
* Her daughter Leia follows in her footsteps, though she is less dignified and more of a firebrand, especially in
* Hansel vs. Gretel's face with her bare hands after he rejects her advances.
* Healing Factor. However, it's also the key to his defeat — if his horn is dropped within the Eye of Zargon, the pit from which he first crawled into the world, it's destroyed and Zargon dies.
* Green Arrow Prometheus had maimed Oliver's son, killed his son's daughter, and bombed Star City. At the end of this storyline, Oliver kills Prometheus and hunts down and kills any villains who had been allied with Prometheus. While the story treating this as him having fallen from grace is somewhat understandable given DC's unofficial "superheroes don't kill" rule, him being rebuked by his JLA teammates, his wife Dinah leaving him, and him being banished from Star City was considered by many to be overkill for his "misdeeds".
* Gorgar was completely about how the various voice clips for the titular creature could be spliced together to form other phrases.
* Hakuouki, Saito Hajime is wholly, almost obsessively loyal to the Shinsengumi in general and Hijikata in particular because Hijikata and Shinsengumi co-founder Kondou were the first people to understand and accept without question his left-handed sword-fighting stance and refusal to stop wearing his swords on his right side (nearly a taboo in samurai culture) instead of accusing him of cheating.
* Hamilton's decision to step down as president, as noted in the real-life folder.
* Górsky & Butch tasks the two heroes with finding it. And they have 48 pages to do it.
* Gunsmith Cats manga, where a criminal is able to break into Bean Bandit's car by cutting a jagged, uneven scratch on the bulletproof window with a glass cutter and firing her gun repeatedly on it, until it cracks off the edges of the scratch.
* Halo - It can only fire 5 shots before running out of charge, it's very very rare, and has to charge up for about 3 seconds before firing.
* Gloom. Ringmaster Darius Dark's subpar freakshow includes bearded man Samson O'Toole, the terrifying clown Mister Giggles, and Elissandre Deville - an illustrated lady who's too modest to show her tattoos to anyone. Mr. Dark might have had more luck with Thumbelisa, an woman who's just a few inches tall... but bizarrely, he promotes her as an opera singer despite her mediocre musical abilities.
* Hilgya Firehelm, cleric of Loki, shows up as a member of the original Linear Guild. After the climactic battle, she helps save Durkon and journeys with him for a time before leaving in tears, though not before the pair spend the night together. Over a thousand strips later, she reappears to help save the party
* Halfway through the second chapter something bizarre happens — for one, there's a
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, where we're supposed to sympathise with Jr. In the film, we're meant to root for Sr.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers Nazi as of the Buon San Valentino arc. Should be noted that over all, he's a nice guy.

* Hellbinders: These are beings who don't belong in the realm of the living, and have to possess something that does to enter. They resemble balls of light when not possessing somebody, and hop bodies as soon as their host is killed.
* Happy Days before switching to an original theme song. The version of "Rock Around the Clock" the show used wasn't the original 1954 recording either: they had the aging Haley re-record the song.
* Hawkeye up until a short period where all the previous story lines were abandoned and the book was made into a super hero fight club. Shortly after that it was cancelled.
* Harvest Moon, if you're playing as the female character, will show you and your farming partner under a tree with a baby in the ending.
* Heroes—and of course, the Enterprise's registry number is NCC-1701.
* Here's's take, where they follow their basic formula using only trope names.
* Grand Theft Auto: Chinatown Wars: During a random encounter, Huang meets a real estate agent who previously asked Huang to drive him around.
* Gran Torino is an awesome car that kicks off the plot for being too damn cool (aka Theft Bait)
* Hannah Montana is a textbook example for the preteen girl demographic of the show: an average, dorky, unpopular girl who is secretly a beautiful, glamorous pop star whom everybody loves.
* Hercules established it as the norm for any studio not named Pixar. Athens is a busy city nicknamed "the Big Olive" where vendors assault pedestrians with cloaks full of wearable sundials, a pair of children trapped under a rock plead for someone to "call IX-I-I", and Hercules himself becomes a celebrity who endorses his own brand of beverages and sandals.
* Good Times, J.J. dreamed that he'd been replaced by a white guy. Said white guy wanted eggs benedict for breakfast, wore a pullover sweater, and said things like "Surely you jest!".
* Go Animate videos will have videos or descriptions proclaiming that one should "respect [their] opinions", essentially saying that those who complain about their videos are "baby show lovers".
* High School Musical has a grand total of... two teachers and one coach. One of the teachers was shown for one scene, and the coach is Troy's dad.
* Grave Encounters features a character who disappears in a bathtub full of blood when some paranormal force pulls him into it.
* Grease Monkey graphic novel: Humanity (along with uplifted gorillas) are recruited as warriors to face an alien horde.
* Grej: Darwinist has no problem with people calling him evil, and doesn't do much to hide it, even admitting to being the "Evilest motherfucker you'll ever meet"...
* Grrl Power, and other magical beings, and probably helped hide supers and aliens as well) will hold up in the face of all of this remains to be seen.
* Guild Wars' attributes and dual-class system allows for healers to take on offensive roles, or offensive classes to take on healing. Monks (standard healers) can become damage classes through Smiting Prayers; Necromancers and Elementalists (non-healers) can become healers by exploiting balance issues, and the Ritualist class is designed to both heal and deal damage (though since unlike monks their primary attribute does not effect their healing significantly, combined with AI issues that make otherwise stronger builds less viable when used by a hero, most ritualist healers are necromancer/ritualist).
* Harry Potter for at least two of the seven girls in Harry's 'harem';
* Her Father's Daughter: Donald's mother bluntly informs him not to ask Linda to marry him because he would require this trope, which isn't fair.
* Going Postal, Reacher Gilt tests this skill by setting a bear trap down, turning his back to it, and calling for his Igor; the Igor arrives and hands him the now-closed bear trap.
* Heart of Darkness, one-ups him by building an INTERDIMENSIONAL craft... and a plasma-cannon. (Keen's zap-gun is not his own invention - he 'borrowed' it from the Vorticon base on Mars.)

* Godzilla (2014) is first seen rampaging in Nevada, she's in broad daylight.
* Heward's Handy Haversack avoids this problem. It has a smaller carrying capacity than the Bags of Holding, but it has an additional enchantment causing the exact item the character is looking for to be right on top.
* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de - Hachiyou Shou in the first few episodes, after which it switches to regular cold openings, with the first scene placed before the theme song.
* Heart, without their involvement in 1977. The band obtained an injunction and were able to re-record and remix it after the court found that they owed Mushroom a second album in 1978.
* gods. It lets them move anywhere they can see, and gods tend to have telescopic vision that allows them to see through walls, across galaxies and into other planes of reality.
* Hanna capable of defeating even much more experienced adults using her combat skills.
* Hayate the Combat Butler has a lot of these effects throughout the anime series, which is due to parody.
* Guarding Tess. She routinely insults and demeans the agents charged with protecting her, uses the Emergency Button like she was calling room service, and leaves the house without telling them where she's going.
* He Who Fights Monsters: Lets their hatred for an evil enemy possess them, to the point of becoming more and more like that enemy over time.
* Hatchet, plenty of brutality is shown onscreen, such as a woman getting her skull pulled open like a Pez dispenser, several people getting their heads pounded into chunky salsa with various blunt objects, and a fisherman getting a hole punched into his stomach and his guts pulled out.
* Go Beyond causes stress fractures, muscle tearing (to the point that his leg muscles briefly tore themselves from his bones) and puts pressure on countless blood vessels. Weiss is quick to point out the absurdity of this.
* Hazbin Hotel Katie Killjoy openly tells Charlie that she won't touch "the gays", as she supposedly has standards (standards she breaks a few seconds later when she pokes Charlie in the chest, but still).
* Hetalia: Axis Powers have moments like this. The Roman Empire himself, for starters, is said to have had everything, but then vanished one day (although, as a young Italy remarks, he had many scars and was in pain beforehand, probably for a long time). Prussia used to be a great fighter, and now, he isn't a nation anymore. During the Revolution, America remarks on how England "used to be so big." Kind of played with in the case of France, when he isn't invited to one of the Allies' meetings and tries to remember some of his "finest hours," all of them ruthlessly destroyed/parodied (in the cases of Joan of Arc and Napoleon, because of England, and in two cases he just jumped into the fight when the enemy was already weak).
* Harry becomes an auror instead of dismantling the corrupt wizard government. Never mind that the heroes spend much of the series fighting the corrupt elements of that government, driving most of them out by the end.
* GURPS Technomancer, essentially control Argentina behind the scenes after giving Eva Peron immortality.
* Hearing Voices for quite some time. It is ruining her life to the point that she is not going to school and she has distanced herself from her friends since she does not want any of them to witness one of her attacks. It turns out that Judith's nanny Alice has been secretly giving her a drug for the treatment of Parkinson's disease, formerly used by Judith's late mother, to deliberately induce auditory hallucinations. Alice is madly in love with Judith's father Chancellor Duncan Wilder and feared that he would no longer need her services as Judith was getting older.
* Green The Planet, in which the player helps two aliens inject energy into the cores of a series of lifeless planets to make plants grow on them.
* Helia further complicates this point—Saladin is drawn as being young man eighteen years ago, but he has a grandson who is at least nineteen.
* Harry Potter that he'd never brought up because he still hated himself for all of it. He also realizes the latter is more out of protection for him than everything. So after getting a chance to hear the full story from his brother and talking to "him" in the limbo between life and death, Harry comes to realize that Dumbledore did love him and was a good man. He'd made one particular huge mistake in his life but at the end of the day he was a person and people make mistakes. He ultimately forgives him, so much that he names his younger son after him.

* her spending time in the Land of the Guardians, where time runs slower
* HERZ: Asuka wears a patch over her right eye after a spear pierced it during a battle.
* Grandia II. Conveniently, this also gives her a new special move in combat.
* Hana-Kimi, Nakao stated to Ashiya Mizuki that he wasn't actually gay, he just had this for Nanba Minami.
* Goof Troop: In "Have Yourself a Goofy Little Christmas", Pete prepares to his family on a vacation to Aspirin, Colorado. When P.J. suggests that the Goofs come with them, Pete retorts that he'd eat cat litter first.
* Henry Purcell only lived to be 36, yet he had a massive impact on Baroque music in Britain, and he is still regarded as the greatest English composer from before the late 1800s.
* Gravity Falls in "Bottomless Pit!" as his favourite scene from his time on the show.
* Half-Life 2) offer a similar ability; while playing through the game with commentary active, little rotating speech bubbles can be found throughout each level. "activating" these bubbles begins an audio commentary track. Some of these actually take temporary control of the player character, in order to show closer views of certain objects.
* Gypsy Joe took part in the World Legend Revival series of SMASH at 76.
* Greg Maddux was one of the best pitchers of his time, but had a comparatively weak (mid to high 80's) fastball compared to his contemporaries. He compensated for this with his impeccable ball control and trick pitches.
* Guns Are WorthlessIn RPG systems, guns are generally weaker than swords.
* Harry Potter: There is The Hog's Head, the shadiest bar in Hogsmeade. Whose owner is, incidentally, Dumbledore's brother, but no one knows that. It's implied that he passes on any information he finds to the good guys.
* He is finally done in by a disintegrating ash-bone spear. Even then, it doesn't stop him because his Sharingan allows him to warp out of the afterlife
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony rarely does any damage, preferring to let Luis do his work.
* Harry Turtledove, since they have perfected the technology over tens of thousands of years (they tend to perfect existing tech instead of inventing new stuff).
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019), King Ghidorah is at first thought to be a rival Alpha Predator to Godzilla. But upon further researching legends and myths, Monarch soon learns that Ghidorah is not from Earth, but is actually an invasive entity from another planet. After Godzilla is nearly killed by the Oxygen Destroyer, Ghidorah takes over as Earth’s Alpha and commands the Titans across the Earth to awaken and wreak havoc upon humanity.
* Hand In Hand, become trapped in their school at night with mysterious entities who might be the spirits of the three kokeshi dolls kept in the school.
* Her mom decided to marry him because she wanted to have children but didn't want a husband who wanted to have sex with her all the time.
* Hermes looks a little bit like a cross between the ISS and an Apple store, despite being just over half-way through its intended operational lifespan.
* Grand Theft Auto IV who can rant for quite a while without repeating himself. "They put robots in the drinking water!"
* Harry Potter. The rest of the herd was in the process of delivering Firenze a slow painful death by kicking him for deigning to teach to wizards. Afterward Hagrid has to be more cautious in the forest as several members of the herd have made it clear they intend to shoot him to death for his intervention.
* He was very close to averting this in the Kalos Pokemon League, as he reached the finals of that tournament and was VERY close to finishing it off with Ash-Greninja.

Unfortunately, Alain and his Mega Charizard X would have other ideas
* Hard Target, also directed by John Woo, takes place in a derelict warehouse.
* Heroes started out as creative and original product placement, but later cars degenerated into this trope.
* Harmonia had conquered Franz's village before he was even born, and actually had a specific system in place for conquered groups to achieve the kind of elevation in status Franz hoped to achieve for his village if they proved themselves useful enough.
* He also built several castles in his sandbox and said they were downtown Tokyo. Then he stomped across them with a growl and said he was
* Help The Hero squire to the idiot hero, who only wins battles because Percy carefully manages his equipment for him.
* He was built with incredible intelligence and continually complains about the menial jobs the characters give him. But then, Marvin is
* Hell Let Loose has practically all of its in-game maps feature various towns, villages, and hamlets that are objectives, requiring them to be contested and captured.
* Gonta falls into this trope as well. Although he doesn't have any memory of him killing Miu in the virtual world, due for mistaking the cables that connect to the VR set, he accepts his fate once he is convinced that everyone is right, believing that he deserves it. He shows a serious face and doesn't show any resistance during the whole execution, while a bunch of mechanic wasps stung him, making his face swollen. He just shows a painful angry face when later on, a bigger insect similar to the previous wasps impales him through the chest, killing him and his Alter Ego, who was attached to him the whole time on a computer.
* Harry Potter fanfics where Sirius Black is acquitted have the Wizarding World believing he's guilty. One, in particular, has Sirius Black unable to gain custody of Harry until he found an old law stating orphans of wizarding parents cannot be raised by muggles for as long as a magical guardian remains available. The Minister was quite unhappy with this development but, having to uphold the law, couldn't prevent it.
* Gold to Airy Thinness Beat, Bucky proposes to Stephanie after he is drafted in order to support and protect her while he's away fighting. As his wife, she has access to his money and his apartment (which is warmer than hers). They have every intention of annulling the marriage after Bucky comes back from the war, only things don't quite go the way they planned.
* Hayate the Combat Butler.) When they met again 10 years later, Hayate still loved her.
* hates, and her real power might be brainwashing people into thinking they are vampires and then killing them when they try to feed on her.
* Guillermo del Toro before it was cancelled. Protecting Bull's name is based on a translation of Del Toro's name - 'Guillermo' means "protection", while 'Del Toro" means "the bull".
* Glenn Beck, Glenn honestly forgot Steve's name and called him Stu, and for whatever reason Steve didn't correct Glenn for over a month. To this day nearly everyone refers to Steve as Stu. While he's used to it he does express some slight annoyance about it from time to time.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas: Another hair-care product, Castrodone, works by stopping testosterone production (as tendency towards balding correlates with high testosterone). As expected, the side effects involve making the user stereotypically "girly".
* Halsey's second album, is a somewhat tragic example, presumably drawing from Ashley's struggles with bipolar disorder.
* Here's a canonical tale: Some years before the setting's current time, a fourteen-year-old
* Hamlet by Michael Almereyda updates the Shakespeare play to the year 2000, with it now concerning a business empire.
* .hack), and one pre-teen kid (Wiseman), all of whom are thoroughly competent, and play major roles in the story.

* He also thinks that he invented inventing, started a war to force pacifism on the elves, and was once told he had news and enthusiastically asked "does it involve
* Gotham City Garage kidnapped the world's greatest geniuses, imprisoned them in pods and mind-controlled them into working for him.
* Grimmjow laughs madly as he's beating the crap out of Ichigo during one of their fights and right after he kills Luppi.
* Grim Fandango: Membrillo, Rubacava's mortician, talks about dealing with people he has to come to the morgue to identify their loved ones. He later calls Velasco to identify what he thinks is one of his sailors' body.
* Hekikai no AiON takes this role whenever Seine needs advice or information through the use of mobile phones.
* Heroes stay true to his redemption and incapacitates Doyle without killing him in order to save Emma. This is pretty noteworthy considering the show's tendency to purge all its secondary characters at the end of each Volume, typically with a massive Sylar-centric bloodbath.
* Greg Bear also both contain ecosystems based on Lamarckian evolution, as minor plot points.
* Hello Kitty: Happy Party Pals: Tracy, Kitty’s raccoon friend, apparently loosened the salt shaker lids in the Sushi restaurant. He tells Kitty not to use the salt shakers at the Sushi Restaurant because of this, and Kathy (the rabbit) had noticed, as well.
* Hellsister Trilogy has Desaad, who is his chief science officer (as well as his torture technician), and Granny Goodness, who is in charge of training his troops.
* Gundam into Walking Armories; one that lets you fire every ranged weapon you have equipped all at once, and one that does the same but adds in an attack with your melee weapon at the end. They have the potential to be perhaps the most damaging attacks in the game, so it's well worth your while to load up your Mobile Suits with as many guns as you possibly can.
* Happy Heroes, Big M. falls out of a high window. A cat can be heard meowing when he lands on the ground.
* Guildenstern pretends to be Hamlet so Rosencrantz can practice asking him questions to gather information about his "affliction." That is, once
* Hellsing, during the Brazil arc, we see a news report that has the words "LIO SHOCK" in big bold letters, even though it takes place in Rio de Janeiro. Also, when Alucard disguised himself as a Mr. "J.H. Brenner," in one panel, we see that his name was misspelled "Blenner." It should be noted that these problems only existed in the manga, and in the anime, no such issues occur.
* Greek Ninja is a big one. She fawns over any officially hot guy (and even unofficially hot.)
* Gotham City Garage out of there. On their way out both girls are being chased by Batman, so Kara's biker gang provides several distractions to force him to give up the chase: Big Barda and Harley Quinn blow up a chunk of the wall surrounding the city and Zatanna and Silver Banshee sneak in the city and wreak havoc.
* Hibernating Avaluggs are often mistaken for inert glaciers, and have even been used as part of walls and fortifications by nearby humans, their identity revealed when an attack caused them to awake and go on a rampage.
* Gotham City Garage fight Amazo, a robot equipped with two laser cannons built into its arms.
* Hearts of Iron II. Armoured divisions barely make any progress at all, all troop types suffer massive penalties and on top of that they can easily start shrinking due to attrition if your supply lines and techs aren't on par. Marshes are almost as bad, but at least there's usually no attrition and Marine divisions suffer fewer penalties to combat and movement.
* Harley Quinn (2019): In "Bensonhurst", a flashback revealed that when Harley was a teen, her father asked her to throw a gymnastics competition because he bet against her to cover his debts to the mafia, and if he can't pay up, they'll take his fingers. She reluctantly took the dive, but afterwards beat him up and never forgave him.

* Glowing Eyes of Doom, and Caeda's helmet/visor being fused to her head.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 the moment she's let go, leading to Quill pointing out that she's a terrible liar. This is also Foreshadowing as both sisters never properly learned to lie, leading to the next entry.
* Hayate the Combat Butler parodies this, having the Priest's ghost say that the last thing binding him to the world was his lingering desire to flirt with a Meido. After convincing him that he can't flirt with Maria, Isumi volunteers to masquerade as one, going on a short quest to find the essence of being a maid. In the end, however, he reveals that he was joking and has no intention of moving on yet.
* Hey Arnold! rarely takes off his sunglasses. In addition, Curly wears an eyeglasses with opaque lens, which make his eyes invisible.
* Harry Nilsson soundtrack is notable for hewing much closer to Nilsson's arrangement of the song than the Three Dog Night version.
* Harry himself has dismissed direct physical enhancement as an impractical use of magic given the number of
* Heathers. (She does, however, draw the line at actually killing someone. Using fake bullets to scare someone and knock them out? Fine. Shooting them with real bullets? Excessive.)
* Gwen Stefani's "Hollaback Girl", which depicts Gwen as a high-schooler. She was 36.
* Harpo Marx when Chico requests "The flash" (light), and gets a flask, flush, fish, and flute. Since it's too dark to properly find anything, Harpo eventually pulls out a flashlight to try and find his flashlight.
* Grant Morrison's Batman is set inside "Internet 2.0". Oracle is the local representative of Batman Incorporated, appearing as a version of Batgirl designed around the Oracle mask.
* Go Animate kids, the video makers turn the protagonists into brats and put them through all kinds of horrifying mishaps because "baby shows" are inherently bad to them and need to be punished.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince with his true love Ginny. The first time, Ron sits down on the couch between them with an oversized plate of pies. And it just gets better when a bathrobe-clad Ginny is interrupted in kissing Harry when a gaggle of Death Eaters come right the frig out of nowhere and wreak havoc upon The Burrow. Later he finally gets one tiny kiss...and she's gone when he opens his eyes. Oh well, maybe next time. After Voldemort's defeated, or something.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Ron uses up two whole lines of text to scream "AAAAAAAAARRRRRRRRGHHHHHHHHH! NOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOO!" after he wakes up to find Sirius Black standing over him with a knife.
* Henry Hatsworth in the Puzzling Adventure: Some of Mysteria's levels have this. If you are completely submerged in it, you will actually take damage over time, presumably due to drowning. If you have the Golden Pipe, on the other hand, you won't take damage.
* Hearthstone. Then the Lich King kills you and raises you as a Death Knight, and the actual adventure begins.
* Gutenberg! The Musical! is an original show about two writers with more moxie than talent trying to make a musical about Johann Gutenberg based on one sentence from an encyclopedia and some stuff they vaguely remember from school. As far as they are concerned, that means it's historical fiction, which they define as "fiction that's true".
* Glorianna is a scary-looking brute, but turns out to be kind and friendly, if a bit shy.
* Hercules is one, unlike the original myths. Disney's version is compassionate, and his most dominant trait is his innocence and massively kind heart, in spite of being treated like a "freak" by his peers and those around him (with the exception of his foster parents) throughout his childhood.
* Go Animate fault and not theirs. And, at the end, Caillou survives and is grounded anyway.
* he's perfectly willing to break bones and knock people unconscious, he states this (very) explicitly:

* Gorillaz Murdoc Niccals used to have one red eye and one black eye. The red eye appears to have turned black in recent pics, which may mean anything or nothing story-wise.
* He actually states that he leaves the card to save the police the trouble of investigating, * Gunsmith Cats, Gray is able to keep control of his gang and even orchestrate his own escape from inside prison.
* Graham McNeill would have no difficulty with an Imperial Guardsmen, but Uriel's grip and footing are not secure, and he fears he will have to let him go. Fortunately, Sergeant Ellard grabs Uriel; for an Imperial Guardsman, he is strong, and is able to pull him back enough to get a better grip.
* Her first human boyfriend before Dick was an undercover H.I.V.E. agent ordered to spy on the Titans, but he was executed due to genuinely falling in love with her (though Starfire never found out the truth about him).
* Gosick was born on December 25, Christmas Day. Fitting and ironic, considering her intended fate.
* good was mostly filmed in Michigan. A scene in Africa is actually New Mexico as the Ebola outbreak forced the filmmakers to abandon filming on location.
* Global Frequency story "Big Wheel" dealt rather graphically with a Super Soldier program gone very, very wrong.
* Hercules and Xena – The Animated Movie: The Battle for Mount Olympus just what you'd expect.
* has rather dire results on a crash). When his gate clone turns up, the judge rules that, since the clone was created after the commission of the crime, it is perfectly legal for them to apply the second death penalty to the gate clone.
* Going Postal. Moist von Lipwig, who was sentenced to death for fraud, is instead tasked with reviving the Post Office. The last four Postmasters have all died on the job. If he succeeds, great! If he dies too, well, that's just his sentence being carried out.
* Greek myth, the twin giants Otus and Ephialtes were so strong they could only be harmed by one another. Artemis tricked them into shooting one another with their spears, killing both brothers simultaneously.
* Hc Svnt Dracones, discovered that the healthcorps had discovered cures for everything and were greatly inflating the prices, they made it public. In the present Progenitus provides universal healthcare to every corptown willing to protect them and support them with a very small tax.
* Hell's Kitchen, Gordon Ramsay ejected 12 of the 20 chefs from the kitchen. Notably, this lead to Zach being forced to carry out every single order on the Blue Team, which, amazingly, he did.
* Hardy Boys: In the Super Mystery "Stage Fright" the brothers are on the receiving end of this from a suspicious theater employee.
* Gorillaz band has taxidermy as a a hobby. Specifically, sewing different animal parts together. Even Murdoc finds the results unsettling.
* Heroic Comedic Sociopath, he's this full-on in his one appearance in "Ka-Pow!" when he starts a fight with Splendont which destroys half the town and kills countless people just because Splendont wouldn't shake his hand.
* Halifax's city flower is the broad-chested rose. Its city emotion is mild surprise. "Oh. Haha a puppy."
* Gravity Falls episode "Society of the Blind Eye", a group of gnomes try to steal one of Lazy Susan's pies, and the leader threatens to eat his fellow gnomes if they can't get the pie.
* he ends up under the tutelage of Phoenix, who's been planning to ruin his mentor Kristoph's life after Kristoph ruined his seven years ago. Phoenix was disbarred because of presenting forged evidence during his defense of Zak, Apollo's mother's second husband, and has adopted Trucy, Apollo's half-sister. Their mother Thalassa, thought dead, turns up amnesiac and blind as a witness in a case they're handling. Apollo's best friend Clay is murdered in a chain of events that end up acquitting Simon Blackquill and help usher in the end of the Dark Age of the Law. And let's not get started on how the time he spent in Khura'in affects the revolution that happens in the sixth game. To be fair, though, Apollo himself isn't aware of his biological family being so close to him; Phoenix knows but is deliberately keeping it from him.

* Hawk and Dove reboot, colorists went back to only coloring her hair white as Dove.
* He has often gotten approval from the original artists on his parodies, also with some
* "Hey, Buddy" at a con trying to track down all the pieces of his fursuit after a night of typical convention antics.
* Half-Human Hybrids, although it often is obviously intended as an insult in some cases, and non-humans beings (like Centaurs) tend to take it as an insult.
* Hercules: The Animated Series episode, Cupid wants Herc's help in getting it out of his head.
* Harry Potter be, but any wizard vain or evil enough to make one, like Voldemort, would never lower themselves to put a piece of their soul in something easily mistaken for garbage. Petty criminals are known to engage in "Muggle-baiting", or deliberately enchanting mundane items to screw with Muggles.
* Gundam and come in shades of grey, olive or white, while the the various space colony factions tend to use more exotic, organic looking designs.
* Gods, Demigods & Heroes with a fraction of their powers (but still really tough).
* Harry Potter, a variation where they're held in what is essentially slavery. Most house-elves are perfectly happy with this arrangement, but Dobby, who serves under evil and abusive wizards, is an exception. Making a gift of clothes to one's elf magically releases him or her from bondage.
* going mad cackle, which Granny insists that she didn't, only that she "might have chuckled a... a bit roughly."
* Hilarious in Hindsight joked that, "I smoked a lot of pot, and clearly don't give a shit about this show. I'm kind of the perfect host for this roast or for the Oscars." This was before he was chosen to host the 2013 Academy Awards.
* Heavy Bowguns are also customizable, but trade their light siblings' maneuverability and various ammo types with overwhelming explosive firepower.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, Dumbledore is telling Harry and Ron that he could expel them for the sheer number of rules violations they committed in saving Ginny's life and defeating the person who had been petrifying students all year long.
* Gunpoint attempts to create an interactive noir thriller, dropping the player into a near future town of West Point, which used to be a home of a thriving gun industry - but after a new gun control bill, industry has crashed and burned, and few remaining businesses became extremely ruthless to survive. Notably, the gameplay is based around outsmarting enemies and setting traps for them by hacking electric appliances, and game features mechanics that resemble thriller tropes, like ability to tackle people unarmed (even through a window, several floors down!) or hold them on gunpoint (as the title implies).
* Gorillaz video clips make heavy use of Medium Blending from the very beginning.
* Harrison Ford, but in real life is famous for being a very reserved, thoughtful man who needs a good interviewer asking the right questions to make his interviews interesting. Even then he has a very dry, understated sense of humour.
* Heathcliff shows up periodically to Heathcliff's evident delight and knocks over the neighborhood trash cans. That's all that's ever explained about him.
* Hestia, goddess of the hearth, home, and family was associated with pigs.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, he never resented Germany for the poor treatment he received, he never was angry at Japan for the coldness exhibited towards him, etc.
* Grand Finale, Lugnut and Shockwave were literally fighting over the Dragon role; Megatron found them both equally useful.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002): The sky of Eternia is gold-coloured, with a gas giants visible, and two moons.
* has Anti-SuperSaiyanKirby, who's literally the main character with some changed colors.

* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life in that you die of old age and lived a, well, wonderful life.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, Ron flies the Weasleys' car over the train tracks in an attempt to locate the Hogwarts Express. Naturally, the train is right behind them, causing hijinks to ensue.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, there was a stand off between Harry, Hermione, Ron, Professor Lupin, and Sirius Black. It was then calmed, then when Snape entered the picture, the stand off began again.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, who recognizes him from his expression.
* Half-Life 2: If you play the noises that the headcrab zombies make backwards, you can hear muffled voices screaming "Oh God!" and "Help me!".
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch) who hosted Z-grade horror movies at Clamp Cable. When the plot starts to pick up momentum, he teams up with an excitable Japanese(ish) cameraman to report on the activities within the building and keep the outside world informed. At the end of the movie, Clamp, having witnessed his reporting skills during the total chaos of a gremlin infestation, promotes him to an actual news anchor, causing him to instantly start his first news report on what a total makeover for men costs today to get rid of his horror outfit.
* Hand Cannon, you can't beat Sir Isaac Newton) actually being less muscled can be an advantage in personal combat with firearms. It's usually who gets the first accurate hit on a non-armoured part of their opponent who wins.
* HeroSmash main websites, it implies that Pandora might not actually already be dead...
* He-Man also, at the Sorceress's request, keeps the secret that the Sorceress is Teela's mother.
* God-Emperor that gets them held as an example. Getting them to side with Chaos involves less tempting and corrupting them as it does simply getting a superior telling them the Emperor is angry with the loyalists.
* GURPS. The Engai learned the language used by the rest of the interstellar community by monitoring radio transmissions.
* High and Tight's Sara Harvey lives her life being blunt and honest about everything.
* Gossip Girl has a pet monkey named Sweetie. He brings Sweetie with him everywhere and dresses him in outfits that match Chuck's own. On the TV show they settled for giving Chuck a dog named Monkey.
* Helga also does so sarcastically in the episode "Helga and the Nanny", when her overbearing, old-fashioned nanny, Inge, demands that Helga curtsy out of respect for her father.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series just for Razer and Aya's love story.
* Hates Baths, or is it that he finds swimming boring because it's similar to the mundane act of bathing?
* Heaven's Devils as an advisor to God who was given express permission to torment Job to test his faith.
* Hanako Ikezawa is a pretty good chef... but according to Lilly, she becomes dangerous
* Half-Life series be one of these. He clearly fits the description as he is able to manipulate reality, stop time and teleport people into bizarre alien realms, all without twitching a muscle. He also appears completely unconcerned by the carnage going on around him.
* Goalkeeper CIWS system, much as the M61 Vulcan is to the American Phalanx system. Compared to the Phalanx, Goalkeeper has significantly better range and hitting power, the tradeoff being a heavier and more cumbersome mount that, most importantly, penetrates below the deck. This makes it much trickier to install than the Phalanx, which can basically be bolted wherever there's deck space.
* High School Star Musical. After freaking out their students for a moment, they tell them they could tell all along.
* Grand Finale falls off the edge. Sokka can only watch as his one-of-a-kind artisanal masterpiece sword falls out of sight.
* Haley and Elan hook up in roughly the middle of the story. They occasionally drift into

* Having Wonderful Time makes a proposal of sex with Teddy that is surprisingly frank; "scenes of passion" were permitted only when essential to the plot.
* Green Lantern (2011) CGI (as opposed to a physical costume with CGI touch-ups), it looks very fake at times, especially with the painted on feel of the mask.
* Happens in sports all the time. Want to make that middle-tier so-so quarterback look good? Just mention that he's got the highest third-down conversion percentage when facing a defensive line comprised of Penn State alumni.
* Hieronymus Bosch's painting "The Hay Wain", a couple can be seen on top of the hay wain. The man is playing his instrument to seduce the woman.
* Gunnerkrigg Court Though created by Coyote, many of them live in England.
* He's able to do this in a non-physical way, too. In the build-up to a feud between him and
* Green Arrow" shows up very late into the comic book (and animated adaptation), but shoots a Kryptonite-tipped arrow which is central to weakening Superman before the end of his fight with Batman.
* Helluva Boss has I.M.P. taking on a job by Loopty Goopty; a recently-deceased inventor that wanted them to kill his still-living business partner in a veiled attempt at revenge for his death. After going through several hijinks caused by rival corporation C.H.E.R.U.B. for his soul, it is revealed that Lyle Lipton wound up in Hell anyways and that the job was just a way for Loopty to be reunited with Lyle again.
* Good Eats, John Herina had a recurring role as Alton's nephew, Elton, as well as playing a young Alton in one episode. One could easily believe them to be related in real life (Herina could easily be taken for Brown's (nonexistent) son), but they're not.
* Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later, Laurie leaves a bloody handprint on the door of a closet, tricking Michael Myers into thinking she was hiding inside.
* Halo: Combat Evolved calibrated before being told to go to the bridge, with the captain ordering him to skip the rest of the tests. That said, Chief is already an experienced veteran, so none of this fazes him at all.
* Harry comments that he's surprised that Seamus Finnegan's bed curtains haven't rotted away due to the killer flatulence he produces every morning.
* Her sister Sweetie Belle does on in "Heart and Hooves Day" when Cheerilee finally asks Big Macintosh to be her very special somepony.
* Grandia II is dead and attempts to ascend to godhood himself, and sends the Knights out to slaughter any civilians who won't accept him as their new deity. As Mareg put it:
* He did give an answer to that question. The Crocodiles are speaking "Crocese".
* Gundam: Reconguista in G: After the horrific period of warfare that was the Universal Century, the surviving humans blamed all the problems of that era on advanced technology, and instituted the Ag-Tech Taboo: a religious prohibition on developing certain kinds of advanced technology. The plot's conflict happens when a few power-hungry folks decide to break the Taboo and begin producing the "forbidden technology" again.
* Gregg Easterbrook of ESPN.com loves obscure colleges with goofy names, his two favorites being
* Glory of Heracles for DS will sometimes say "Not the hair!" when being attacked.
* GURPS Alternate Earths, meaning anyone can do magic, and worlds with slightly bendy physical laws that allow superscience and/or superheroes to exist. People from these worlds are often in for a shock when they travel to a more "normal" world.
* Harker at first thinks the village is just being superstitious despite being an outsider to Transylvania (though they don't really tell what the danger is, just that it's a

* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de could achieve humanoid form and sprout wings in that form at will.
* Grosse Pointe Blank, both hitmen (played by John Cusack and Dan Ackroyd) employ this technique.
* Guests who have severe phobias are freaked out and run through the set/backstage when the inevitable plate of items they are so intensely afraid of are brought out and/or shown on screen, yet they still act like they've only been brought on to discuss their fears and nothing else.
* heavily sexual song incorporating much religious imagery, the singer promising to "move mountains", "work a miracle", and "keep you like an oath" and expressing a desire to "confess" to his beloved.
* Highschool of the Dead (though, to be fair, most of the girls in this series are that).
* Halo: Broken Circle sounds like Gregorian chanting). Unlike real life sign language where one sign usually means one word, the signs in their version which only require a single hand, are an entire sentence or phrase usually of the poetic variety. Most San'shyuum tend to speak using both the sign language and their vocal language, allowing them to secretly communicate with one another since the other Covenant species are incapable of understanding their signing.
* Gothtopia has the normally dark and melancholic Gotham City become a bright and sunny paradise. Crime is low, people are living their lives, and the Batfamily is operating in the daylight and wearing bright, inspiring costumes. However, suicide rates are unusually high and the heroes start to figure out what's really going on.
* Hell, virtually anything that Zarbon says. This is lampshaded after his death.
* Harry and Ron rebound painfully from the sealed gateway to Platform 9¾ in
* Gundam 0083 of a non-existent Gundam, thus he is released 3 months after the court martial.
* Hates Being Called Cute: Being called 'cute' provokes a disdainful reaction from them.

* High Society Her fiance is understandably upset, given that they're meant to be getting married today...
* he. When Spidey meets him again, and the crowd and media starts siding with him over Max, he thinks Spidey set him up and goes on a rampage.
* Headbutt Thermometer's temperature by pressing their forehead against theirs.
* Hajime no Ippo has Takamura, the local champion of the boxing gym and older brother-figure to its junior inhabitants. Although rare, he will fart occasionally, usually with little to no care of anyone else around him. He also jokes around with Manebu's father. One of their favorites is pronouncing Manebu's name "Mane-" and using a fart to say the rest, as "buu" is a Japanese onomatopoeia for fart.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers instead of being mentally/emotionally unbalanced.
* Halloween wanted to distinguish between the human side of the man (Michael Myers), and the pure evil, force of nature that takes the shape of a man (The Shape). But considering nobody in-film ever refers to him as "The Shape", the effect is lost.
* Golden Sun, browsing through bookshelves in random houses, or the like.
* Guerrillas of Destiny: Debuted both as singles wrestlers and as a team in 2008.
* Groundhog Day able to save the guy. The nurse in the last attempt suggests he just died of old age, and Phil realizes he simply cannot save him no matter how hard he tries.

* Halo: Combat Evolved reveals that Sergeant Johnson and a handful of others also managed to survive both Reach and Halo, the book ends with only a small fraction of even those few survivors making it back alive to Earth.
* Heel–Face Turn. Amy is loving and energetic while Shadow is cold and dark.
* Heck, even the title cards have improved, this is mostly shown with those for "Flimflammed" and "Greens' Acres", which are done with GLORIOUS drop shadowing and realistic scenery.
* Going the Distance is set around a couple trying to have a long-distance relationship.
* Hercules: Amphitryon and Alcmene have begged the gods for years to bless them with a child, and they see Herc as the answer to that prayer.
* Hal Jordan. Even Superman himself tries to avoid him and makes it clear he can't stand him, yet he's still a part of the league.
* Halloween Horror Nights featured Psychoscareapy: Echoes of Shadybrook; the house was a 15-years-later finisher to the popular asylum house series, replacing the zany and loud antics of the inmates with somber, psychotic ghosts in an abandoned building.
* Goblins the person responsible — was a major character development point.
* Grizzly Bear Activist/Lunatic Timothy Treadwell, subject of the documentary
* Hawksmaid, Matty is trapped when she is lured over a pit trap that leaves her tangled in a net.
* Green Jellÿ. They even SAY they're proud to be the world's worst band. Too bad many people don't get the joke.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try, the Build Burning Gundam is this. Unlike Sei Iori's previous Gunpla, the Build Strike and its variants, it's not based on any kind of previous Gunpla and is completely scratch-built.
* Gundam Sentinel, is this as while it was a test unit, it was rushed out just to test the parts. It has no anti-beam defenses, its two major beam weapons are dummies and its Beam Cannons don't double as Hyper Beam Sabers. This last one is what hurts it as all three prototypes are destroyed by the Gundam Mk-V.

* Heero's usual outfit consisting of a slinky tank top that frequently shows off his man-cleavage, and tight Spandex bike shorts with nothing underneath.
* Harlan Ellison's favorites of his stories were "Grail" and "The Man Who Rowed Christopher Columbus Ashore."
* Hannah Swensen's old shames is being romantically involved with one of her university professors. Several years later after they broke it off, he returns and reveals that he's with her youngest sister. She does not respond well to the news.
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating: The plot centers on Hani and Ishu, two girls, pretending to date for different reasons until they really fall in love, afterward dating for real.
* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life, there is a shed with a door that can never be opened. On one forum, a lot of rumors spread about how to open the door and what you'll get. In actuality, it's just a piece of leftover code that was blocked off rather than removed.
* Golem with "I Don't Call That Much Of An Argument." However, he's open-minded enough to listen to the arguments of the priest of the "most worthy god" (prompting an interfaith fistfight) when he's off-duty (he's never off-duty).
* Hellboy, Sullivan is being rewarded in gold for feeding people to his haunted house. He's been feeding it drunks and vagrants, and getting a few gold coins each. He decides to feed it Hellboy, and when he appears to have succeeded he triumphantly calls out to the house asking what the reward for HIM would be. An entire 8-foot by 3-foot by 3-foot block of gold coins crashes down the stairs, crushing him.
* Hell Girl. In later episodes, Ai sometimes appears in a flurry of petals.
* Happy PlaceTroubled people curl up and go away in their heads to a place where everything is warm and fuzzy.
* Hercules, Hercules briefly looks between Nessus's legs before addressing him as "sir". Nessus is visibly offended by this.
* Harley Quinn, and many don't realise at first that the song was not created for the show.
* GURPS combines martial arts and chi powers then backs up all of that with magic that allows you to alter yourself and opponent. There's also Dragon-Man Kung Fu where you learn to breathe fire.
* has been argued that the sequel this set up was the real-life closing of the English theaters by the Malvolio-like Puritans.
* Hans's face during a cutscene after chapter 13 of the Conquest path as he
* Haven, a person's Trouble first activates when they get stressed or upset.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, and instead gave way for another, much better manga adaptation, this time based off the anime.
* Glengarry Glen Ross salesmen in the agency. It is well worth watching simply for its amazing cast.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, most of the defences set up by the Hogwarts staff to guard the Stone were more a set of challenges to be overcome with the right skills than absolute obstacles, and of course the three main characters just happened to have those skills. Most (though not all) challenges were coincidentally tailored to one of them: Hermione beat the Devil's Snare plant with knowledge and magic and the potion riddle with logic, Ron won a giant chess game, and Harry got to fly a broomstick to catch a key — and also turned out to be just the right person to obtain the Stone and to protect it from the villain.
* Harry Kane got kicked in the head as a result of an...ambitious challenge by Bruno Alves. Kane just scrambled back to his feet and kept running towards the ball, as if under the impression that the ref was playing advantage.
* Her manager, the Italian Dino, also holds this towards Japan, hence him moving there in the first place.
* He does this for a third time in "Wise Guys" after he remarks that he thought his crew had a heavy duty mission when it seemed rather light to him. (Light as in their next mission involves light bulbs)
* Gumby. But luckily Prickle (who was planning to ride the train with Granny and Minga but missed it due to the Blockheads starting it up early) phoned Gumby about the runaway train, and they arrive in a helicopter with the train's engineers, lowering them onto the locomotive and stopping the train just in time. Granny's comment on the whole experience is this...

* Handwaved where it's stated that legal time travel has to be cleared with a federal agency, and thus each Chrono-Skimmer will return to the present after a certain number of hours of machine use. The villains have no such problem.
* Hannah Montana episode, Miley and Jackson try to intentionally recreate the meet cute of their parents to make sure they're actually born.
* Gottlieb, the Cellar shows the skeletal remains of someone shackled to a gate.
* GRBs cannot hold a candle to black hole-powered active galactic nuclei as quasars, blazars, and others alike that can pull out the energy equivalent to the combined luminosity of up to
* Harry Potter books like to hide under beds, closets, and cupboards, and take on the appearance of the victim's deepest, darkest fear.
* Hardcastle and McCormick, McCormick's negligence leads to Hardcastle's house being burgled and just about everything he owns being stolen; including a basketball autographed by Wilt Chamberlin, which is the item he is most upset about losing.
* Gravity Falls three-parter series finale, Shandra keeps right on going, surviving a few days into the end of the world, still reporting the news, and very bravely breaks into Bill's lair to show the citizens of Gravity Falls what's going on. And when she gets turned to stone, she takes it with dignity. A real reporter indeed.
* Harry Potter, a woman named Kawa is a fan of the Battleship Yamato. She is revealed to be the Natural-Born Agano-Class Light Cruiser Yahagi, allowing her to fight by her idol's side.
* Godiva Hair, could cover so little that her pubic hair is visible), and nothing over her rear. The character has been nicknamed Starbucks-Chan or STB-Chan. This can be Justified as the original logo was also naked (if not as NSFW).
* Harry Harrison) features Global Warming as a side effect of overpopulation.
* Harmless Villain: When the villain is not necessarily affable, just no one to be scared of.
* has the Cutie Mark Crusaders getting into hilarious shenanigans as they try to figure out where foals come from, and repeatedly get the wrong idea from asking the Mane Six.
* Heart of the Swarm, mutalisks that turn into flying casters that can prevent enemies from attacking/)
* Harry and the Shipgirls when Oliver Wood and the Weasley Twins make comments about "That Time of the Month" when the Chasers get angry during a practice session. Because Harry didn't speak up at all in their defense, they took his silence as him agreeing with the other boys on the Quidditch team. They never considered that Harry might have thought that they had it well in hand, as Harry pointed out when they decided to get their revenge.
* Harry Potter. Most of the ghosts just hang around and give advice when asked, but one of them is actually teaching classes, and no-one's sure if he's even noticed he died.
* Golden Boy: Tom takes on Joe as a prizefighter because Tom is desperate for $5000 to buy off his wife so he can get a divorce. He is thrilled when she gets a boyfriend and goes to Reno, saving him the money.
* He and his daughter, Willow Smith, played father and daughter in the 2007 film
* Herbert Hoover, the incumbent Republican president, was defeated for reelection amid an economic downturn.
* Hc Svnt Dracones have designs varying from IRPF's boxy armor with protruding weapons arrays, to Pulse's sharp blade-like edges, to the almost organic curves of Progenitus and ASR, and the actually organic monstrosities out of TTI's labs.
* gradually deteriorates into a ball of mush who gives up on life the moment her kids are born, because she only just realized her husband was a jerk.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers over him, Italy had been having recurring nightmares of the event. They only found out because he began mumbling in his sleep.
* Godzilla (1998) that Nick supposedly leaked info and kick him out of "the project"... to kill the giant monster... that is still roaming the city at the very moment they kick him out.

* Higher Learning into believing that someone who stood in the way is dead.
* Haley's flaw is greed, although unlike most examples, she's vaguely justified in this:
* GUN×SWORD sports twin braids which suspiciously resemble the mascot of a certain hamburger chain. They tend to make her look even younger than her implied age (probably early teens), and on the rare occasions when she wears her hair down, she looks older — so much so that in one scene, her traveling companion fails to recognize her without the pigtails.
* Grimm formed flash mobs via text and Twitter to cover up a series of murders committed via bee-sting overdose.
* Hell's Kitchen based out of New York as well, let's just say that it's pretty well covered in the Marvelverse.
* Hayate the Combat Butler This doesn't stop the series from doing serious, or semi-serious, story arcs, as with The End of the World or Golden Week. This happens more in the manga than the anime, though even then there is only one truly serious story arc and it still keeps the comedy.
* Green Acres: As established in the pilot episode, Oliver originally served as an associate for the Law Offices of Felton, O'Connell, Clay, Blakely, Harmon, Dillon, and Paster.
* Grave Robbing: Breaking into tombs to steal things from dead people.
* Granblue Fantasy gives us master alchemist Cagliostro, a guy from thousand years ago who nowadays uses fake bodies shaped like a cute girl and, if killed, can use alchemy and magic to switch to another body, thus achieving a form of immortality. Sure enough, Cagliostro can auto-revive in battle to continue fighting.
* Hell's Kitchen another Gordon Ramsay cooking competition reality show, also invokes this constantly. You can now assume, with rather high certainty, that whoever Ramsay initially mentions during his "announce who's eliminated" speech, will end up being safe.
* GoGo's Crazy Bones lucky to find anyone who hasn't at least forgotten it ever existed nowadays.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2 climaxes with Death Eaters besieging the Hogwarts school.
* Gun Runners' Arsenal DLC has the Two-Step Goodbye, a Ballistic Fist that causes corpses to explode if it manages to kill with a crit.
* Halo 2. Additionally, the Covenant have multi-occupant drop pods, the biggest of which can contain entire squads.
* Goblins are pretty much universally depicted as barbarians who wage war for no reason, and the player will be fighting off more than one invasion by goblin armies. After the first invasion, however, they can find the Goblin Tinkerer tied up somewhere underground. The Tinkerer explains that he has no ill will towards humans and thinks the goblins are invading and fighting for stupid reasons, so his fellows tied him up and left him for dead. He'll move in to the player's town and is a valuable ally for the items he can provide. He even develops a crush on the Mechanic (which is apparently reciprocated).
* Hero Chat get akumatized into Kwamibuster due to her scientific obsession, but afterwards Caline Bustier convinces her to give up on that particular line of inquiry since it might lead to the reveal of the heroes' secret identities.
* Grand Blue: Before you drink any offered Oolong Tea and Water, make sure to test it with a lighter. It could be as benign as a vodka, a mixture of Vodka and whisky, or even Spirtyus (96%)
* GURPS has black veins all over its body. These are its only persistent identifying feature, since it reincarnates.
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age and his son, Eoleo, became a feared pirate in his own right, and is referred to as a prince.
* Hellraiser when Kirsty is in the hospital, she is fiddling with the box which she stole from her formerly dead Uncle Frank. As she analyzes it, background music starts playing that sounds like something from a music box.

* Go to Hell! (1997). After helping the Israelites escape across the Red Sea, Red (aka Satan) flips a huge bird to his father G.D. (aka God) with the help of a holographic projector.
* Hawkeye could also qualify as this in the Avengers films. He is the most normal person on the team and often points out the absurdity of the situations they are in.
* gun for a larger figure, which was the case for several other toys of the same size in that line. While the toy still has some 5mm pegs that could be used as handles, it doesn't have anything in its instructions for transforming into a weapon mode. It's still possible to figure something out by being creative.
* He did eventually figure out a way around it: rather than protecting the emeralds all the time (something impossible for one person to do; he needs to sleep, after all), he simply does what he wants. When the emeralds inevitably get stolen, he simply tracks down whoever took them, gets them back, and then goes back to doing what he wants.
* Helmsmen Travis Mayweather is said to be an expert pilot having grown up on ships, although in the series, he does not get to use this talent on-screen much.
* Guinness World Records, and any relation to actual hoofed mammals is far, far removed.
* Heroes of Might and Magic because of the fact that the spell to revive undead was much more accessible than the living counter-part, though both relied on Earth Magic.
* Halo Wars. The very next level has you fighting off Covenant boarders instead.
* Hal Clement, when they plan a return to the planetoid, a woman scientist observes that some of the aliens are coming out of curiosity in her pregnancy.
* Guardians of the Galaxy (2015). He steals a Ravenger ship and turns its ion thrusters on the mooks guarding him.
* Grand Theft Auto 2: All of the bosses, once the player has completed all of the missions. They come without reinforcements despite not being especially strong in any way — thus, the final mission of each level is just to kill three random enemies as they come.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality. As long as Lord Voldermort was around to enforce order from the top, they work together beautifully. But because they were only loyal to him, not to each other or a unifying higher cause, once he goes down they don't last two weeks, with some backstabbing the group to go back to regular society and others getting sent to Azkaban because no one is willing to protect them.
* He also pulled a rare lighthearted variant when it was revealed that Barack Obama and Oprah Winfrey would meet, cracking that the most influential and powerful black person in the world was going to meet Barack Obama.
* Hair, one of the characters complains to his parents that they're embarrassing him in front of the audience. In some productions, police officers arrest audience members for watching an "obscene" play at intermission.
* Halo 4 and other exotic energies. Their technology is consistently stated to be far beyond what the current races of the galaxy have, and gameplay often reflects this, with Promethean weapons being among the most powerful in the game.
* Harry Potter, for the emphasis his films put on Harry and Hermione's relationship, including a slow dance after Ron abandoned them in the forest in the Deathly Hallows movie (though the end stuck with the book's Hermione/Ron marriage).
* Henry Clay (W-KY): Kentucky Congressman and federal Secretary of State who made many important contributions to the nation during the 19th century.
* Graffite has "The worst program in radio" as its slogan, and the hosts' nickname for the show is "garbage dump". They even get guests to record soundbites criticizing the program.
* Gothic 2 had a similar issue, especially if you're a mage. The final boss is an undead dragon, and most players pick up the spell "destroy undead" at some time or other. They fixed this in the expansion by giving all dragons insane regeneration and high armour.
* he loses his first Buddyfight and Tenbu is killed manages to get back to being his usual cheerful self, but after his next Buddyfight, he makes a speech about heroes that makes it clear he's lost confidence in himself.

* having a somewhat similar format and art style, but all the strips are related to Christian themes.
* Heavy bombers in general until supersonic jet bombers started showing up in the late 1950s. The American B-17 is a particularly famous example: a cruising speed of less than 200 MPH married to up to 17,000 lbs of bombs and a legendary ability to survive battle damage. B-17s were known to return home one one engine, sans most of the tail, or on one immortalized instance, * has to treat people like crap. Acting nice would literally kill him.
* Hard Boiled Detective, invariably has a run-in with "the dame that done him wrong".
* Hey Arnold! still have its serious moments, such as when the topics of Arnold's missing parents and Helga's home life come up).
* Hat Films was initially made of four people: Ross Hornby, Chris Trott, Nathan Asheman, and Ben Adams. Both Asheman and Adams eventually left the group (although Adams is almost never mentioned and left first) at some point, to later be replaced by Alex Smith. New fans as a rule tend not to remember either Asheman or Adams so well.
* Hey Arnold! would be entering production as a television movie, and Bartlett would include a "Thank You" to the fans who never gave up hope in the ending credits.
* Heavily implied as part of the backstory of an immortal assassin in the
* Halo: Combat Evolved. As the Arbiter says, "We trade one enemy for another."
* Grand Theft Auto IV: Niko Bellic (after killing his job interviewer): "I guess I didn't get the job."
* Harry Harrison manages to win, it's clear that something will need to be done about the colonies in order to make them more self-sufficient in order to prevent this from happening again.
* Gregor); while Miles as a young man is very sensitive on the issue of nepotism, in one of the later books of the series he wryly notes "the whole Barrayaran Vor system runs on nepotism. It's not a vice for us, it's a lifestyle."
* Ground Zeroes) that despite being praised endlessly for its gameplay, story, voice acting, and visuals, it received some very mixed scores.
* He does eventually succeed by ordering an elephant foot sandwich with mustard. Orson gets him back
* Happy Days episode "Fonzie Drops In", Fonzie sees a bird sitting on his documents, and when it flies away, he observes that it's pooped.
* .hack//G.U. this happens to players that get completely overtaken by AIDA.
* Heroes of Horror of evil, which treated evil that was vile enough as a physical thing that could corrupt the bodies and minds of characters. Characters with the Pure Soul feat were incorruptible and immune to taint.
* Hercules: The Animated Series) and the three Fates also serve as Urd, Skuld and Verdandi. Another episode depicts the foundation of Rome, which included the Romans selecting a pantheon of gods for worship: the first gods that show up are Egyptian, and when the Romans decide to worship the Greek pantheon, they also decide to call them by their own names.
* Harry Potter fanfics suggest that Harry Potter was regularly sent owls with fan-letters before he started attending Hogwarts, but he never received them because they were intercepted by the Ministry (or Dumbledore).
* Has three different gladiator arenas in which different types of enemies are faced, as well as Mad Moxxi's Underdome, where the player(s) are pitted against wave after wave of bad guys and bosses for the entertainment of the masses.
* he trusts Grif to help him take down Agent Washington, and later to help him rescue The Alpha device and take down The Meta.
* Hifuu Nightmare Diary ~ Violet Detector need to use the mechanic, having to hit Shift twice makes it annoying to teleport in time to get away from a threat. Mapping "teleport" to the unused C button instead would probably have been more practical.

* H'el, essentially an evil Superman who is not only as above Superman as Superman is above normal people, but also has time manipulation, matter manipulation, telekinesis, psychic powers, astral projection, and size manipulation. He's also immune to kryptonite and can use his powers under a red sun. He's angsty about his looks, despite looking a manly sideburned deathly pale rockstar with chiseled abs. He easily defeats Superman, Supergirl, Superboy, the Teen Titans, and the Justice League. He steals Superman's Fortress of Solitude and locks Superman out of it. He quickly romances Supergirl. He not only succeeds in going back in time to save Krypton, but rule it (after killing Jor-El, Faedora, and General Zod.)
* Headquarters, so they substituted it with the other. In fact, it was the other way around: the producer-engineer pic was the original, but the caption mis-identified the engineer, so they replaced it with the bearded Monkees.
* GunBuster are simply called "Space Monsters" (or "Uchuu-kaiju" in Japanese).
* Happened every time channel 9 in Australia re-released episodes of
* Grim Up North, since Thedas is basically Fantasy Europe flipped upside-down. Conversely, the Anderfels, located in the north, are a land of ravaged steppes and forests, and are close to a region called the Donarks, which are also filled with jungles.
* Halloween II (1981) (which is where the gorier trend of the series began), Micheal kills a nurse by repeatedly dunking her head into scalding water. Every time he pulls her out, we get an up close look at the effect this has on her skin. Suffice it to say, it's horrifying.
* Hanayamata. Naru's first meeting with Hana even involves her watching Hana dance among falling cherry blossom petals.
* he's inherited the memories of the Mothra family line, and she gets a first-hand look at Bagan wiping out her ancestors.
* Heroes season 2, with Claire and her creepy stalker guy. Particularly interesting example in that West is considered by Sandra to be personality-wise like Claire's adoptive father Noah, but his more obvious likeness (i.e., they can both fly) is to her biological father Nathan.
* Guttersnipe, Lil' Ragamuffin survives being shot in the head and tossed in an incinerator, claiming that urchins don't need brains or bodies 'cause they're all heart, then shrugs off a shot in the chest because she keeps her heart in a bowl in a shack on top of an unclimbable trash heap.
* Hamtaro series caused many children to get pet hamsters. Especially with the amount of episodes and spin-off material that aired throughout the 2000s including a couple video games.
* grateful for the bad economy, otherwise there'd be no abandoned buildings to smash.
* Here: it's ambiguous Whether Sydney is actually talking to the audience or to Harem in the flashback panel.
* Halo 2, and is mounted on the "Beammaster" variant of the Grunt Goblin in Warzone Firefight. Notable in that the Scarab's gun was originally conceived for heavy excavation, until somebody in the Covenant realized that the huge stream of plasma meant to melt through and vaporize rock & ore could just as easily do the same to enemy vehicles and fortifications.
* Hamilton near the end of the first song, with Burr's line being a very straightforward way of mentioning it.
* Government Procedural: Fiction that revolves around politicians and government officials at work.
* Heroes of Might and Magic people that can be found, and at least some of them seem to keep some measure of ethical compass.
* have very childish or simplistic goals is a core character trait: they want what they want when they want it, and if you're in their way, you either get out or suffer the consequences.
* Hand-or-Object Underwear: A naked character deliberately covers themselves by placing their hands or holding an object over their private parts.
* Haru To Natsu Makoto finds himself stuck between the two twins Haruna and Natsumi who viciously fight over who will win him, to the point of tying him up, threatening him with a knife, and attempting to rape him.

* Harry Harrison to an extent that would make the Mongols proud, and are deeply racist and sexist. No points for correctly guessing which side Harrison's on.
* Gravity Falls episode "The Love God", Dipper and Mabel are fleeing from the eponymous god, a cherub who looks and dresses like a tubby hippie. When the Love God starts using his tiny wings to fly, a bystander sees this, then pours out the bottle of "Hippie Tea" he was drinking with a disapproving look on his face.
* hand grenades on the Autobahn scene explodes upon impact on the tarmac.
* Grand Theft Me, declaring him "gone". He's back by the midway point of the season finale.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, starting with a Chudley Cannons jersey (which you have to buy in the brief window that you're in Diagon Alley) and ending with a dragon skin cloak.
* Goo Goo Dolls' "Iris" only hit #9, a lower showing than songs like "Name" and "Slide".
* Harry Houdini, who believed in them (apparently Houdini took up his debunking campaign precisely because he was appalled by Doyle's belief in what he, as a professional magician, felt were blatant frauds).
* Heroes Claire at the beginning of Season 3 when Sylar tracks her down.
* Grandma's Boy (2006)) can suckle her. At least one main character acknowledges her existence, as, when the party winds down, Alex says they can start cleaning up when Barry is "done with the Milk Maid", which is the name given to the character the porn star played when her name comes up in the credits.
* groundbreaking work to escape Red Guards. He would have fallen to his death except a tree broke his fall and he managed to land unharmed. Apparently, the leader of that Red Guard brigade was very impressed, saying, "It is no wonder that you are a famous mathematician. You even know how to select the angle when you jump out of the window."
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Like in canon, Germany is this. Japan calls out Germany for being too tough and harsh, implying this trope. Prussia references it by name.
* Hakuryuu gets these kinds of power once he acquires the Earth Djinn, Zagan's powers. The abilities are quite versatile too, varying from controlling plants to making his own earth creatures that he can command.
* Half-Life 2 and very occasional flares as your only light. As Alyx will only shoot at foes that you light up, you have to learn to conserve your auxiliary power so you aren't caught flat-footed in the dark, surrounded by monsters while waiting for the power to recharge.
* Hero where they each mentally pitch their own set of skills against their opponents', each anticipating the other perfectly.
* Heroes, Sylar is holding Claire hostage and taunting her by listing all the members of her family he's going to kill, when:
* Hackers has made the subject of at least one geek drinking game for many reasons, the demonization of the culture mentioned in the movie title included.
* Happy Lesson, all 5 of the hero's "mothers" decide that he's outgrown the need for a parental figure, so obviously what he needs next is wives.
* GURPS has a similar system that (nominally) makes it possible to run a major battle. However, much like Exalted above, if a few PCs can take on an army the "little" qualification is rather lost.
* Her father Ryouji (aka Ranka) is a slightly more traditional Wholesome Crossdresser, who works at an
* Hercules: The Animated Series features Hercules trying out a row of plans named after the letters of the Greek alphabet. (Plan Alpha, Plan Beta, Plan Gamma, ect.) After reaching Plan Omega, Phil declares that they have run out of plans.
* High-Level Campaigns supplement has alternate rules for staging a wizard's duel, mostly to avert the standard rules' tendency for the wizard who'd won initiative to blow the other duelist away in a single round.
* Great Teacher Onizuka: Subverted with Anko, who bullied Noboru before falling in love with him, and stopped her abuse after Onizuka helped her uncover her true feelings.

* High School Musical 2 originally contained the lines, "Fetch me my Jimmy Choo flip flops/Where is my pink Prada tote?/I need my Tiffany hair band/Then I can go for a float". In the video game "Sing It", Jimmy Choo became... eh, something... else?, "Prada" became "leather", and "Tiffany" became "sparkly".
* Heather Dale, a childless woman bargains with the queen of fairies for a baby; this wish is granted, and she returns home with her new child to her and her husband's great joy. As the years pass, however, they notice that the child never grows and remains eternally an infant — as she'd asked the fairies for a baby, specifically, they'd given her that and nothing more or less.
* Gossip Girl's first season. An ongoing plot in the first seven episodes is Blair wanting to lose her virginity to Nate, who keeps putting it off. Dan also takes this stance with Serena for a few episodes. And Chuck Bass, of all people, tells Blair in the season finale that they should wait a while and "do it right this time".
* Handy Manny. Manny's tools are trying to pitch ice cream to people in a local park, to try to get it all sold before it melts do a malfunctioning freezer. Squeeze hits up a skateboarder resting on a bench who can't her because he's listening to music on headphones.
* He sets up a trap to blind Fugate and then tranquilize him. him away when he tries to grab him from behind, but points for trying.
* GTA San Andreas is even greater fun, at least on the PC, as the mouse aiming on vehicles makes it easy to even shoot pursuing police helicopters out of the sky.
* Hellsing is confusing because while the Captain actually is a werewolf, several other Nazi characters are referred to as "werewolves" despite showing completely different magical powers. This is probably a reference to the actual German use of "werewolf" to refer to alleged post-WWII Nazi loyalists who were supposedly pre-emptively ordered to commit terrorist acts after Germany's defeat, although actual signs of this happening were rare.
* Gunsmoke and numerous others filmed at the set. It was sadly destroyed by a wildfire in late 2018.
* "Grandma-A-Rooney" has the Beck & Hart Productions logo accompanied with Maddie saying "
* Hamilton: At the end of "Stay Alive," Hamilton and Laurens, who were probably lovers according to the study that was Miranda's primary source, approach one another in a way that usually precedes a kiss, before breaking off for Laurens to approach Lee in "Ten Duel Commandments."
* He continued with the operation anyway. It was in part this specific incident that led to the development of fast-roping, where no abseil gear is used and this kind of tangle can't happen.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2." People who heard it that early would have at least realized Peter's father's species, thanks to the line, "...my daddy was a planet!"
* Hard-to-Adapt Work: A work is considered difficult to adapt to other mediums.
* Harrow: In "Aegri Somnia" ("Hallucinations"), Harrow and Grace conduct an autopsy of a ranger who appears to have died as a result of shark attack. However, the true cause of death is Irukandji jellyfish stings. Harrow eventually determines that he was not stung after falling out of his boat, but by being force-fed the jellyfish.
* : Harveste reacts this way when his boggart turns into a scene involving fresh air, happy music, flowers, and kittens. It takes one and a half bottles of Vodka to calm him down.
* Half-Blood Prince trailer shows Ginny being disarmed by Fenir Greyback, explaining why she didn't raise her wand to defend herself in that scene. If you're wondering why she has her wand later in that scene, you can briefly see her reaching for the ground in the final cut, obviously to retrieve her wand, but the movie cuts away from her at that moment.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony involves intimidating a man harassing Gay Tony by tossing him from a helicopter at high altitude, then skydiving out to catch him and carry him to the ground via parachute. When you release him on the ground, he staggers away with diarrhea streaming out of his shorts.

* Haze causes a disconnect from reality and humanity. The Promise Hand still uses the fourth type, though.
* haven't her life turns out to be after all the suspense being the punchline of the story.
* Hellsing has instances of this that are played completely seriously.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, 12-year-old Hermione has a crush on Professor Lockhart, but then, so do most of the girls in Hogwarts (not to mention Molly Weasley and the other mothers.)
* Harry Potter. Since an exact replica of his consciousness now lies in a painting, he is, essentially, still alive.
* Hataraki Man: Hiroko dedicates almost all of her time to work, which causes the breakup between her and her boyfriend, who is also a workaholic.
* Green Arrow which causes Roy to backpedal and stutter that there's nothing wrong with that.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, clearly mimicking the classic Crisis Core cover
* "Hide" are, how compassionate they are, and wanders off talking about how hard it is to be an empath and what a strain it puts on your relationship with everyone else. His companion prompts him to shut up as the empath who he was talking about seems close to tears.
* Guards! Guards! with Sybil and the young man who's temporarily king of Ankh-Morpork. She's quite tall and curvy, so this is probably something she often has to be careful about.
* Hamlet is also making a play on words, since "foil" is the term for the flexible sword-like weapons used in fencing practice.
* Heat Guy J, the young mob boss Clair Leonelli is easily one of the most popular and well-known characters, but at least initially he's opposed both by the heroes (because he's a violent criminal they have to stop) and by the other members of his crime organization (because he's so young and mentally unstable), and generally surrounded by people who want to screw him over.
* God sent manna to feed the Israelites in their exile. Similarly to Soma, Manna's possible identity as a drug has been
* Grand Finale, Alan and Walden are stalked by someone who might be Alan's thought-dead brother Charlie, one of the original main characters. At one point they find two stand up cutouts of themselves in the house with their heads X-ed out and "DIE!" scrawled over them.
* Hard Boiled that caused a bigger explosion than planned, meaning that Chow Yun Fat was really running for his life.
* Harry Potter it is revealed that Lupin and Sirius already despise Umbridge due to some ani-werewolf legislation she wrote up that makes it near impossible for werewolves to find employment.
* He'd spent his entire life there, but his son (and many of the next generation of Earthers) will be.
* Happy Halloween, Scooby-Doo! : The Scooby gang teams up with Elvira and Bill Nye to take down the Batman villain Scarecrow and an army of jackal pumpkins.
* Herbal Essences' countless adverts for their shampoo and conditioner range will almost always feature someone yelling "YES!" repeatedly in increasing volume.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi-type talent show, is unilaterally kicked out of the studio, but becomes a sensation that even overshadows the girls.
* Gödel, Escher, Bach, the Tortoise was promised by a fortune teller "a stroke of Good Fortune," and it happens to him and Achilles in the form of one "Hexachlorophene J. Goodfortune, Kidnapper-At-Large, and Devourer of Tortoises par Excellence."
* Good Is Not Soft: A hero who has no qualms about severely punishing villains.
* Guillemots (of the "us being together isn't going to drastically change the world, but it'd be kinda nice" variety) "Blue Would Still Be Blue"; "If I had you, all the stars wouldn't fall from the sky/and the moon wouldn't start to cry."
* Grand Theft Auto franchise often serve as this to each other, as each focuses game on the exploits and story of a different character, but they'll often (briefly) cross paths with each other.

* H. G. Wells. There are so many changes and alterations that the only thing the film has in common with the source material is the titular Time Machine and the design of the Morlocks.
* God-Emperor later attempted to use "passion" as a way to wind up humanity; by forcing them into a peace they couldn't control, they'd get sick of it and rebound a thousand times harder. Essentially treating emotional reactions as a spring he could wind up.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas has Tenpenny only appear in cutscenes, presumably so no clever player could kill him before he's supposed to die (also in a cutscene). During the one mission where he is in gameplay, his fire truck is invincible and follows a pre-determined path.
* Halo: Combat Evolved's multiplayer, if you try to go through a one-way teleporter, and somebody else is in the receiving end, you'll be blocked out for quite some time. The guy blocking will have his screen go white and his controller vibrate, and then finally he'll die and the teleporter will be sent through, receiving a tele frag for his effeorts. However, since this takes time to do, the guy trying to teleport may end up screwed if he's relying on the teleporter to escape from death, and the guy blocking will be completely unharmed.
* Harry gets about as close as you can after he gets shot and falls in the lake. It turns out he was actually on magical life-support while his soul was off working for Uriel, but for all intents and purposes he died and came back.
* H. Beam Piper) reincarnated, it is tempered with enough skepticism and an assumption that if the two scientists are really their gods, the evidence will eventually present itself.
* Happy Birthday to Me with the lyrics slightly altered to reflect the title. It's a pretty creepy scene too. The end credits features an original dark birthday song.
* Hello Neighbor setting them all over his house to ensure that you don't trespass into his property, he also throws them at you if he spots you.
* Have I Got News for You opened with a dedication to Big George, the composer of the theme song, who had died the week before.
* Gran Torino, where a young white man's pretending to be black first just pisses off three actual black youths, and then earns him a scathing assessment from Walt (Clint Eastwood). Especially funny in that the white youth in question is played by Eastwood's son.
* Grogar, the entrance to which is beneath the Crystal Empire. Chrysalis and Sombra are planning to release him.
* Hack. He often puts his own job on the line to help Mike, because Mike didn't serve him up to Internal Affairs when he was busted, even though he could have.
* Gunpoint Bantering scene between Archer and Castor (with their original faces) in the airport hangar with each training a pistol on the other's head.
* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla, the evil aliens put a bomb in the heroes' car. Nanbara saw it coming and starts the car at a distance by turning the key with a long string. After seeing the explosion at a distance, the aliens relax and think their plan succeeded.
* Green could also count. She's usually upbeat and optimistic despite having some of the worst luck ever. Especially at the beginning of the
* Hester Prynne lets her hair down during her secret forest rendezvous with Rev. Dimmesdale in
* Harrison Ford. He tries to back out by saying he's not qualified, but a Star Wars fan cheers him on with "Go get 'em, Han Solo!" Then there's another press conference called by Hamill who thinks he should lead the mission:
* Helen Zilwicki, Paulo d'Arezzo, Ragnhild Pavletic, Aikawa Kagiyama, and Leo Stottmeister, in
* Heart of the Swarm opening cinematic shows Kerrigan's Leviathan dropping a rain of sacs upon the Dominion's capital city of Korhal: they crash into the ground, and ferocious Zerg creatures emerge from the craters to kill hapless Terran marines. In campaign missions Kerrigan often arrives at the start point in a one of these sacs, and in at least one case her starting buildings are planted down by falling sacs. One of the ultimate abilities that Kerrigan can unlock summons drop pods containing 40 primal zerglings, 5 primal roaches, and 5 primal hydralisks.

* Harry Potter and the Forbidden Journey, but just a mere minute later appear at the Great Hall to celebrate.
* Her shift to an overall Beta in the Rainbow Angels when her old Series splits off the main harem to become XRX Prime is partly due to her use of an illusion to make it look manageably short; as neither Jet nor Kandyce's replacement as now-XRX Prime's Alpha Blair were in their true form in their first match-up Jet was unable to add a Yu-Gi-Oh card inspired by the
* Halo: The Flood by Ian Rankin mentions how the author attended a lecture on his book, and was surprised at the things that were being read into it, most of which he'd never consciously included.
* Harriet the Spy "Sometimes you have to lie to people to help them feel better about themselves so they won't hate you" via the likely unintentional Aesop "The things you write in your personal journal should not be an honest representation of your thoughts because someone reading it without permission might be offended." There's also the Aesop of "if you want to keep something private, don't take it to school."
* Hair Reboot—seemingly destroyed hair can be returned to it's proper shape and volume by merely shaking it
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, the Weasley brothers take their father's flying Ford Anglia car and rescue Harry from 4 Privet Drive, and their mother isn't too happy about it. Their father, however:
* GURPS Technomancer as a "mildly impolite" term to refer to people who aren't chimeras and don't have the Magery advantage.
* He's never seen again. There was a deleted scene showing him seeing the Dark Curse being cast from far away, but be powerless to help anyone. The next episode cut all scenes resolving the Camelot arc, and it went in a different direction in the second half of the season.
* God Hand. Though, it's in Japan only; it's absent in the US version.
* GURPS: Moonbabies are humans raised in Lunar gravity. They're tall and fragile, as one might expect, and can't safely return to Earth.
* He intentionally trolls anyone who asks him to say it by stringing them along in the conversation until they figure out that they're being trolled.
* Hagrid's pet thunderbird makes one appear over Snape and Dumbledore. Snape's doesn't disappear until he says he's sorry.
* Heroes: Emma Coolidge is deaf and picks up the cello because her ability, an enhanced form of synesthesia, allows her to see the sound waves as bright colors. She can also concentrate the sound vibrations into a powerful sonic blast.
* Hackers, where the heroes specifically set up the phones to mislead the FBI as to their location. They know it won't last, but they delay as long as they can.
* Green Arrow storyline, where Green Arrow I (Oliver Queen) murders Prometheus for destroying Star City and causing the death of his adopted granddaughter Lian Harper. During Oliver's capture and trial, his family washes their hands of him, with his wife Black Canary (Dinah Lance) returning her wedding ring and declaring their marriage over. His adopted son Speedy I/Arsenal/Red Arrow I (Roy Harper) and biological son Green Arrow II (Connor Hawke) tell him they are through with him. It is implied that Oliver killing Prometheus is the last straw, with Oliver constantly cheating on Dinah, his neglect of Roy, and his abandonment of Connor and lying that he did not know he was his son was the main cause of them leaving Oliver. However, before that storyline, Oliver Queen works hard to repair his relationships with them, and they had forgiven him before. It is also implied that they were traumatized by the events of the story, Star City being destroyed for Dinah, the loss of his daughter for Roy, Connor being in a coma and losing and regaining his memories, and with the resentment they have for Oliver despite forgiving him, they all lash out at Oliver.
* Haré+Guu started showing samurai fighting a war in feudal Japan. Turns out Guu was just watching TV.
* "Groundhog Day" Loop that keeps ending with him dying or his family dying in the explosion of a giant Christmas tree at the mall catching fire. At one point, he tries to break the loop by cutting the power, but the head of the celebration gets angry and kicks the tree, causing one of the steel wires holding it down to come loose and bisect most of the people there. Roger simply puts himself back together and runs off, but a polar bear picks him up and his legs run off sans the rest of him, then he dies when his organs fall out and the polar bear splits shortly after.

* Hilda because, come on, it's Hilda. To complete the initiation of a new recruit, the Sparrow Scouts love playing a game of dodgeball. Anyone who got hit, didn't suffer any injuries. The game is a way of showing the new recruit they love to have fun and make new friends. Hilda is friends with David and Frida as a result.
* High School High, his car is stolen seconds after he parked it—from an enclosed parking space. Then his briefcase is stolen by breaking off the handles while he was holding it.
* Green Eggs and Ham was a challenge to create an interesting children's story using no more than 50 different words.
* Granted, given the complexity of steering objects in space, and given that the moon seemed to need constant guidance, the Moon and the Earth presumably did not collide, but the tidal stress on both bodies from the close approach would be utterly appalling, enough to flood every coastline, trigger every dormant volcano, start record-setting earthquakes, and that's barely the start of it. Not to mention the long term effects of a drastically more erratic lunar orbit...
* Happy Gilmore is better justified than in many stories: he may know the game and techniques much better than Happy, but in golf being one-handed is a major handicap.
* He also had a reasonably good singing voice, but was too shy to sing in front of other people.
* Grim also gave the "wash my hair" excuse to Billy once. He immediately saw through it - because Grim washed his hair last week.
* Graham McNeill, when Horus is felled by his injuries, the word on the ship is that he died; Mersadie and Karkasy go to see the arrival, and Karkasy notices that apothecaries are still tending him, so he must be alive.
* Gundam SEED crew so that the Atlantic Federation (and thus Blue Cosmos) would have power. When "Operation Spitbreak" failed, ZAFT leader Patrick Zala ordered all Moderates within their power structure killed, which included Lacus Clyne's father (and former ZAFT leader), Siegel Clyne. At that point, both groups decided to turn their Purging urges on the other group — the Bloody Valentine War would now be a war of eradication — all part of Rau Le Crueset's plan.
* Going by the Appreciation Index for certain episodes from both writers,
* Highly Conspicuous Uniforms, and there are some cannons sitting around that can be fired. None of the actual Peace Keeper worlds you visit from there continue this trope, though.
* has a daughter named Morgan, who could be in any number of Future Fics
* Glen Quagmire, who had previously announced his hatred for and nearly beat the former to death finally set aside their differences when the latter accepts the former's apology and offers a ride home... only to drive off and back up to run him over.
* Happy Tree Friends was released on that date back in 1999. The show's official social media, however, ignores this.
* Grumbledon Down had Director Treen praising a female subordinate for getting her science fiction novel published, thereby breaking down gender bias in publishing, only to then see the book with a male name on the cover.
* Has been taken to the extreme in the seasons under Bruce Kalish where even the * Heroic Age is pretty much a textbook example of this. Space Elves: check. Unmatched Psychic: check. Aloof and Detached: check. Detests humans: check. Crystal Spires: check. Precursors bond: check.
* God. The book of Job is an example, where an innocent victim is tortured solely to prove his faithfulness.
* Hidalgo. After Aziz shoots Jaffa and prepares to kill Jazira, Jaffa manages to hurl his sword into Aziz's back, then collapse in death.
* God and Satan Are Both Jerks evil and antagonistic towards humanity.

* Hellboy. Mike Mignola even said that, as a writer, he can't fathom writing someone inherently evil, so he gave Rasputin an ultimately good goal that would nonetheless bring about the end of the world.
* H. Beam Piper's future history, we read that Buenos Aires was blown up by "Christian Anarchist Party".
* Hell, there's an entire sub set of Christianity that operates on this belief referred to as Gnosticism, that believes that there are in fact two gods, the evil Demiurge that created the world and the true god Aeon that blessed man with knowledge of right and wrong with the serpent as his avatar.
* Hamtaro only watch it for its human characters (mainly Laura and Kana).
* Golden Treasure: The Great Green. Players can choose whether to avoid them, cooperate with them, or exterminate them. Hunting mechanics are critical to survival. Draconic spirituality and vocabulary pervade the narration.
* Hercules and Xena – The Animated Movie: The Battle for Mount Olympus
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Japan draped a blanket over Italy after the later fell asleep.
* Hecklers added a grumpy (and extremely popular) streak of critical humour to the show.
* High-Dive Escape: The hero or villain escapes pursuers by making a seemingly-suicidal jump off something very high.
* Gotham City Sirens, it was mentioned that Catwoman and Talia are probably the only two women Batman has truly loved. It's not surprising that both of them are villainesses.
* Growing Pains Mike sees an extremely hot girl at a school dance. When he talks to her he's alarmed at her annoying high and squeaky voice, on top of not being very bright. Mike tries to put up with it because she's so gorgeous but finally can't take it after a while.
* Gulliver's Travels, seems to mainly be staffed by hopeless incompetents regularly reciting this to themselves as justification for their nonsensical and meaningless experiments. There is no possible reason to breed naked sheep, but apparently, science demands that they make the effort.
* Hellboy Ironically it's mentioned Hellboy can't aim worth crap though usually his targets are really big and at really close range.
* Hermes and his wife go on a holiday to "the spa planet", which turns out to be a forced labour camp, complete with perky fitness instructor/slave driver.
* he brought someone back from the dead, thus taking death onto himself and ending his suffering.
* Harry Potter is the cleverest student in her year, and she also is a brunette.
* Halo, many high-ranking Sangheili/Elites favor energy swords, while the standard armament of a Jiralhanae/Brute Chieftain is a gravity hammer, despite both species having plenty of access to advanced energy firearms. The justification is that both species also wear heavy armor that can resist small arms fire long enough enough to get into range with their one-hit-kill melee weapons (as both the sword and hammer have enough power lore-wise to smash through spaceship-quality plating).
* He also harbors one for Paulina Porizkova, which always pops up when her husband, Ric Ocasek of
* Good Luck Charlie is a notable aversion: The protagonist really is just a normal high-schooler (until she goes to college anyway).
* He also doesn't like dishonorable pansies and cowardice. So running away will get you targeted anyway. And if you're unable to fight due to injuries?
* Guns of the Dawn, Mr Northway is (by his own admission) corrupt and self-interested, and his rivalry with the Marshwic family led to its current impoverished status and the suicide of Emily's father. Emily starts out hating him and makes this clear to him. However, this openness of disregard actually enables them to converse more freely and honestly than if they were pretending to be polite friends, and Emily finds that she's glad to have someone to correspond with who treats her as an equal adversary, doesn't assume he can trick or patronise her and isn't put off by her barbs and criticisms. They eventually end up together.
* Half-Life 2 or make an obstacle course (some of which have unavoidable traps that can only be dodged by faking out the Zombie Master). Complaints have been raised on the official forums over this apparent abandoning of the mod's intent.

* Happy Heroes where the characters' legs are depicted as spinning swirling shapes when they are running.
* Hey Arnold!. In another interview, they confirmed that Arnold eventually ends up with Helga.
* Grand Theft Auto: Liberty City Stories lampshades this trope with its description of the Moonbeam, the worst van in the game.
* Harry himself is an exceptionally talented Quidditch player and, while often falling under
* Hide Your Children, children are either utterly invulnerable or do not exist.
* Grell also originally said that he wanted the characters in this series to age as time went by. He was able to keep this up during the series' original run from 1983 to 1988 during which the characters got five years older. But when the series was restarted in 2005, the characters were not thirty years older and they apparently now live in
* Harper Row is this for her teenage brother Cullen after the two run away from their abusive father.
* Goblet of Fire, but many of them play a larger role than expected in later books, particularly those used by the trio in their attempt to infiltrate the corrupted Ministry of Magic.
* he and then sent back in time to kill Issa and destroy his empire from within, thus ensuring that Kiria would rule unopposed. The two promptly switch sides and spend the next act trying to atone for their mistake.
* Halo 3 at the top of the giant robot bug (If you're good/lucky you can defeat it without having to climb aboard, by shooting at its back until the armor around the weakpoint falls off, but it's tricky). The final battle, against two Scarabs, is much easier because you have an aerial vehicle.
* Guardians of Ga'Hoole is "wet pooper", related to the owls' looking down on birds that don't produce pellets.
* Head of the Class: Billy Connolly references this in the context of showing off the new world maps the school bought — he says that the other ones were so old they had "Here dragons be" indicators.
* Helen and Mark Blackthorn are the children of Nephilim and faerie (half-angel half-demon). The rules for half-faerie children is rather unique: they are born in a blank slate and their upbringing will determine which world they belong to. Helen and Mark, having been raised in the human world, are mortals, whereas the also half-faerie Meliorn became an immortal because he was raised in Faerie.
* Grojband: Scare-master Blade Stabbington has one of these in "Creep Away Camp"; once Grojband helps him get his scare back, that is.
* High Anxiety, Dr. Thorndyke (Brooks' character) is holding a conference on penis envy when one of the attendees brings his kids, forcing him to switch to "pee-pee" and "voo-voo".
* Hera has multiple articles of clothing heavily decorated with peacock feathers, and her diadem has a very simplified peacock centerpiece.
* Helliconia series, seasons last centuries - justified since the story takes place in a binary solar system. Civilization tends to break down during the severe winters, starting again from near stone-age when spring rolls around again.
* Goomy's entry describes it as the weakest of all Dragon-types. Stat-wise, that designation belongs to Noibat.
* Hijacked by Jesus have so many names—they absorbed the qualities of less popular gods and worshipers later said that these lesser gods were merely "aspects" of them.
* Gossip Girl's second season. When he returns in season three he's even more evil, and is now sporting a goatee.
* He Walked By Night. Sgt. Jones is a major character, and when giving instructions to patrolmen, Capt.Breen addresses one of them as Jones. Also, on two separate occasions, Capt. Breen phones the captains in charge of the burglary and robbery divisions. On each occasion, he addresses the person on the other end as 'Steve'.

* Graham McNeill, Loken explains to Torgaddon that Varkasus had been killed with Imperial ammunition — and not a stray shot, but dead on.
* Gravity Falls, the valley in which Gravity Falls was founded was carved out by a flying saucer that crashed millions of years ago; it's also responsible for the town's distinctive cliff. The technology on board was reverse engineered to make the things in the Mystery Shack's secret basement.
* Gothic if you continue to wear a uniform to an order you have outgrown. Others will comment about the uniform you are wearing being out of place.
* Grif and Simmons are believed to be in a romantic relationship. While Tucker does make a remark about them being in love, and the idea is sometimes alluded to by the two's interactions, their relationship in the show is mostly just portrayed as ordinary * Goldfinger: Mister Solo, after having Operation Grand Slam to rob Fort Knox revealed to him, states his intention to leave rather than take part in the plan with the rest of the gangsters. He is allowed to leave, and in fact, Goldfinger makes a point of saying that "We must respect Mr. Solo's decision". He's then driven away by Oddjob, and rather than taken to the airport, is shot with a silenced pistol by him.
* Hilarious Outtakes, Howard fails at the attempt to dramatically smash through a window after a zip-line sequence.
* Green Angel The first is the titular Green, who drinks to numb her grief after the nearby city is blown up and her family is among the casualties. Later on, there's the Forgetting Shack, where numerous people drink themselves blind and dance to exhaustion due to suffering similar losses.
* Harvest Moon by six years, but it's completely dwarfed by its sister series.
* Gunslinger Girl are the first generation of cyborgs and thus exhibit certain flaws in their functioning, most notably the symptoms of conditioning poisoning that affect them all to varying degrees. The conditioning drugs used on the girls to heal them from injuries and keep them functional slowly destroy their minds over time. When the second generation of cyborgs is introduced, it's explicitly mentioned that they made the conditioning milder in the hopes that the new girls will be able to live longer.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: "You want him, you have to go through us! Or more accurately, we go through you!"
* Gulliver's Travels. The Necromancer shows Gulliver the spirits of lots of dead people, so he can interview them and learn about the past (and eat food made by a great dead chef).
* Goofy. However, it's easy to forgive Goofy for being bumbling as a family man, because bumbling has always been part of his overall personality.
* Heroes can make fake IDs, a skill she used to sneak into Def Leppard concerts when she was younger.
* Grumpy Old Man: I'm an old man/woman and I hate everything about life in the modern world. Now get off my lawn, you stupid kids!
* Hetty Feather. Heroine Hetty is tough, feisty, outspoken, opinionated, proactive, and sometimes physically aggressive; while her foster brother Gideon is shy, passive, sensitive, fearful, and cries easily. Lampshaded in one scene where they are told that upon leaving the Foundling Hospital, Hetty will be sent to work as a housemaid and Gideon sent to the Armed Forces. They both agree they would each rather go into the opposite profession.
* Herald supposedly had so much raw power that she was sealed away after her old driver killed themselves because no one was capable of stopping her rampage. While is
* Hannibal. The first half of season 2 follows up with him trying to expose Hannibal and prove his own innocence.
* Head of the Class, where Howard Hessman's character comments at a reunion that his teacher's salary has finally reached six figures, and that even though teachers are now paid what they deserve, he's too old to enjoy it.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix when Harry briefly closes his eyes:
* Godzilla (1998). As newly hatched animals, not only should their first priority be to feed themselves, which is easy given the abundance of available fish, but they should be starving and exhausted from the effort of hatching. Worse, they all start competing over an incredibly small number of people to eat (even at some points seeming to start fighting among themselves over who gets to eat the people). Actually justified, as all fish is gone by the time they start chasing humans (who smell like fish).

* Hannibal / Food Gorn as well as recipes to create (human-free) variations of Hannibal Lecter's dishes.
* Heroes of Newerth specializes in illusions and plays this trope straight by craftily utilizing them to trick her enemies. She has the ability to create an illusion of any hero, which means not only can you create several illusions of your team's carry to multiply its damage output, you can recreate your own team and maybe trick the enemy team into wasting their skills on them. Another skill discretely turns herself invisible and leave a copy of her illusion to distract her foes while she makes an escape. Silhouette also deserves a mention, as her ultimate creates an almost perfect illusion of herself. While normally illusions are proportionally weaker than its original, her illusion is unusually powerful and at max level, it actually takes and deals normal damage. She can also swap positions with her illusion, which is great for avoiding damage should the enemy team try and kill her.
* Grant Morrison anthology has people in the future listening to 'freakbeat Vivaldi, skewed and chopped' which either predicted remix culture or just assumed it would continue into the future.
* Happens in the "darker and edgier and unconscious variant" in the intro scene of the 16th episode of
* He made a play called "1. don't smoke; 2. don't eat; 3. smoke; 4 eat". In this play, five men enter the stage four times. The first two times they don't do anything, the third time they smoke a cigarette and the fourth time they eat a sandwich.
* Hebrews 13:2 also discusses the possibility of "entertaining angels unaware" should one extend hospitality to strangers.
* Harry Turtledove: Time travelers from the near future supply modern guns to the Confederates during the US civil war.
* Gravity Falls, in "Blendin's Game", Mabel and Dipper decide to surrender to the Time Guardians and take part in the challenges on the arena. This is because they realize that, if they win, they can give the reward - the Time Wish - to Soos, which would allow him to change history in a way where he finally meets his father.
* Hellsing and won't abide the killing of defenseless civilians. So, instead of backing up the genocidal Maxwell, Anderson is completely disgusted by Maxwell's bloodlust and the slaughter of so many innocent Christians and readily assists Alucard in killing him by shattering the glass box protecting him from Alucard's ravening familiars.
* Goodfellas had their names changed in the movie. Henry has his real-life last name, but:
* Harry Turtledove is about an alternate world where the United States never left the British Empire. The first chapter is set on an airship, where the protagonist sees a Air Force biplane fly past and echoes the general view that while such speed is useful for the military, there's just no need for it in civilian life.
* Harry Turtledove's "The Road Not Taken" features an invasion of Earth by the Roxolani, a a space-faring race of teddy bear-like conquerors.
* Going Postal sneaks off to a meeting one night, and the Igor who welcomes him offers:
* Her Fearful Symmetry, Julia has a crush on the married Martin, which he declines. She later goes for his son.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army. Clockwork Mecha-Mooks that put themselves back together upon being destroyed.
* "Growing the Ungrowdenia" involves a flower called the Ungrowdenia which will grow to a huge size if watered repeatedly, but can be "ungrown" if needed.
* Halo. Kurt Ambrose knows that as Lieutenant Commander, he can't get involved in the Spartan-IIIs' training, as they're supposed to respect him and hate CPO Mendez.

* Harry Potter's Triwizard Tournament, cheating is a more or less accepted tradition that every single side engages in. When Harry (who was entered into it against his will) tells Cedric that they're up against dragons in the first task, Moody doesn't bat an eye.
* High School D×D. Issei notes that he's had to start fudging his English classes so the teacher doesn't ask questions. It doesn't extend to written words, though, as a couple of native English speakers comment they're still studying literacy despite being "fluent" when speaking.
* Hilarious in Hindsight: Hags changed from being an ogre strain to a kind of evil Fey from 4th edition onwards.
* Hero Chat), and her father throwing presents at her does nothing to help.
* Good Sport Bogus" when attempting to get a drink of water from said sprinkler.
* Grace Park (born to U.S. immigrant parents and later moved to Canada)
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, the trio drops down a hatch to escape the dog. Of course, this did not turn out to be as convenient as it may have at first seemed.
* Hercules are frequently called upon by Hades to assist in his plan to take over the cosmos, namely by turning baby Hercules mortal at the beginning and serving as his eyes and ears on Earth.
* Healer and instead gains the "usual" benefits per the two examples above, along with a voice in his head (which he names "Pard", as in partner). His touch can also heal others of physical and mental illness, making him a figure of awe and legend.
* Helluva Boss. Colin and Lyle are horrified at the scene, as is Blitzo, but then smiles as his point is otherwise proven.
* Harry doesn't seem overly bothered by the idea of doing it himself. In the sequel, he jokingly speculates about transforming Clark into a girl to fool the targeting on a magic spell, noting that a gender-switch
* Hellsister Trilogy, all alien races in the thirtieth century speak English. Generally, Translation Convention must be assumed.
* Hey Arnold!, Arnold loses his grandfather's antique watch. He has to go down into the sewers to retrieve it, where he has to face swarms of rats and the Sewer King. After he finally gets the watch back, it turns out his grandfather had a full drawer of them.
* Hera, tended to face similar treatment. Her actions ranged from simple murder to transforming the children into mindless beasts and driving them and those around them into madness. The fact that Zeus is Hera's brother also makes her an Evil Aunt to all these children.
* Highlander as an admirable attempt to merge the series and the original film that works alright as a capstone to the series, whilst other fans felt left cold by its greater emphasis on the TV characters and some even accusing the film of damaging Connor as a character or just not liking the fact that he was killed off. That being said, hardly anyone will argue that either film is any kind of masterpiece that can rival the original.
* Hack/Slash: Tim Seeley once mentioned in an interview that a scrapped storyline would have involved a slasher who preyed solely on vampires.
* GURPS, and a biography of Fidel Castro's years as a pitcher in the American League.
* here. While most are plausible (or fictional) one inaccuracy stands out. Steve wears an American Defense Service Medal - an award specifically for those who were in active service prior to the attack on Pearl Harbor - despite the movie showing him enlisting long after the US entered the war. Note that this may have been deliberate on the part of the filmmakers, as in the comics Steve did enlist beforehand.
* God also instituted laws among the Israelites to suppress the practice of blood feuds which were common in the ancient world: most notably, the concept of the city of refuge for the manslayer.
* Goliath becomes one for an episode after donning the Eye of Odin in a desperate attempt to stop Odin from killing him and his companions in his bid to retrieve the Eye. He becomes even more powerful than Odin himself thanks to the Eye's ability to drain Odin's power. Unfortunately, * Hard on Soft Science: Social sciences are not considered "real science".

* Gore Shack. With song titles like "The Weredude", "Beercan Burial" , and "Big Tits and Zombie Flicks", They really could never be anything else but this trope personified.
* Gold Fever, the "accursed hunger for gold", was a popular quote even in antiquity.
* Harry Potter series, Azkaban, the wizard prison, was such an example, being an island in the middle of the North Sea. As it was run by dark creatures who eventually let the prisoners escape it was a cardboard prison.
* he goes on a rampage on the Liberio's Internment Zone, his main targets were Willy Tybur and the Marleyan military top brass, but in the process, he kills possibly hundreds of civilians as collateral damage.
* Gravity Falls for "Northwest Mansion Mystery", Agents Powers and Trigger attend the party in weird disguises and go into a closet to talk to each other about their findings. When the conversation turns into a petty argument, Tambry walks in on them, says "Not even gonna ask" and walks out.
* Gravity Falls, should he be taken with Reverse Pacifica (and he usually is). Less commonly used for Reverse!Mabel.
* Harry Potter: Dumbledore, once described as reaching down to his knees.
* Heroes of Might and Magic. In the wake of the world of Enroth's destruction, those who managed to escape in time to the world of Axeoth must rebuild without repeating the mistakes of the past:
* Harry Potter is that normal humans would want magic to "solve every little problem", ignoring that Wizard society runs entirely on magic, and is helpless without it.
* Hellsister Trilogy is to find and speak the Anti-Life Equation to eliminate Free Will and enslave the universe.
* held that it was constitutional for police to collect what we would today call telephone metadata (basically, at the time, length of calls and number called) without a warrant, since, as Chief Justice Warren Burger wrote, "it is doubtful that telephone users have any expectation of privacy over the numbers they dial." While he was correct that the technology that made billing possible at the time meant that users had to be able to infer that at least the long-distance numbers they called were recorded, his understanding might have been colored by having grown up in the era when human operators always answered whenever you picked up - someone who grew up in a dial-tone era might have been less likely to infer this.
* Glorious Shotgun Princess is a Sidereal Exalted and she steals a villain's house.
* Godslave, Turner has an extra eye on his neck, albeit this seems to be a method to stay in contact with Heru rather than for seeing.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 1, when the villainous Bellatrix says that the heroic Dobby nearly killed her by saving his friends:
* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla II: Godzilla gets curbstomped in the first fight with Mechagodzilla where he mainly used his Atomic Breath which didn't effect Mechagodzilla. During the rematch, he only uses his atomic breath for a Beam-O-War before rushing into melee and beating Mechagodzilla down. He only starts using it again when Super Mechagodzilla is formed and stays out of melee range.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, Harvey Birdman's drink suddenly turns into a can of Tab. Then there is an extended live-action sequence where Birdman and a 5-foot can of Tab frolic on the beach.
* has two people discussing animation. They are named "Luke" and "Kyle".
* Guts himself. After being broken and turned into a near-soulless husk of pure rage by the horrible events of the Eclipse, he starts sending the pain right back. Knowing that what would definitely kill normal humans only hurts the Apostles, he pulls absolutely no punches. Particularly, the Baron, whom he riddles with crossbow bolts after rendering him crippled and helpless, and the Count, whom he stabs dozens of times in the face until his knife breaks off.
* Haruki Murakami's novels and short stories, although many of the dreams are trippy and/or vague.

* Gypsy Tales: In "The Gypsy Woman and the Devil", the devil offers to save Vunida from poverty in exchange for Vunida marrying him. She refuses but he lures her into captivity in his disguise as a rich young man.
* Hilda has her big red boots. She also has similar looking boots for her winter attire and school uniform.
* Happens in episode 59. The team approaches the alien, whom they assume kills and eats people.
* Hey Arnold! where Helga gives herself a makeover, a man mistakes her for a boy.
* Gods of Egypt: Set becomes this trope after usurping his brother Osiris and ruling over Egypt with iron fist, enslaving the populace, demanding they pillage riches in order to secure their afterlives and commanding legions of demons and demigods to enforce his will.
* Highlander II: The Quickening anyway, so you may as well go for the bigger trainwreck.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 himself to save Peter, seemingly a form of cremation that sweeps his multi-colored ashes/embers out into space. To the surprise of the Guardians the rest of the Ravagers come to celebrate his life with space fireworks.
* Heroes the legend of Takezo Kensei features a self-inflicted version of this. Kensei learns his sword skills from a dragon, who returns years later to take Kensei's wife as payment. Instead, Kensei cuts out his own heart, hands it to the dragon, and tells him, "My love is in here. Take it", before dying.
* He would be a regular Nür24h participant since then, netting two consecutive class (
* Great Fox games. Albeit smaller than most examples, but it has the same philosophy; houses a squadron of four fighters, and has some pretty big anti-starship guns.
* !HERO: The Rock Opera, the lead character Hero turns over tables at the synagogue that Chief Rabbi Kai is in charge of.
* Greta Friedman and George Mendosa. As noted in the introduction, however, others have also made the claim to be the ones in the photo and no agreement has been reached on the validity of one over the other.
* Gravity Falls episode "Boss Mabel", the money-hungry Grunkle Stan views the tourists visiting the Mystery Shack as giant walking wallets. Then one of them gets carsick and vomits change.
* Godzilla vs. Kong. Before meeting with Nathan, Jia points out that Ilene was nervous. Not to mention Nathan is visibly cleaned up when he meets up with her. And Ilene reacts more with annoyance than feeling creeped out when Nathan kisses her cheek after she agrees to his plan for Kong.
* Harry Potter) don't know about it. The highest echelons of the mundane British government are aware of and work with the Wizarding World, as do the families of Muggle-born wizards and witches, though. One of the themes of the series is how the WW seeks to isolate itself from Muggles because they think of themselves as better, with only a few holdouts such as Dumbledore disagreeing. The Minister for Magic's interaction with the Prime Minister, for instance, consists largely of the MM teleporting into his office, telling him a few terrifying facts about what Voldemort and Friends are up to, and popping out again.
* he was making fun of Peter's girlfriend), Peter comes home expecting his parents to have been contacted and to be chewed out for it. When his mother mentions that the school called her, he bursts into an annoyed monologue about how he screwed up and he knows it, thank you very much... only to have her reveal that they simply called to say someone found his wallet and immediately jump on him for whatever the "fight" was that he mentioned.
* Grand Blue Aina constantly begs the male characters to put clothes on, usually to no avail.
* Heart of a Dog in the Bolshoy Theatre. Bortko's film soundtrack has the march from the second act.
* Hellboy. His parents really seemed to like each other even though his mother did not want to be the demon's bride at first.

* Gyromite will either have hands made of claws to hold gyros, or foam grips to hold blocks.
* "Gridlock", when she learns that a ten-mile trip on "the motorway" in New New York will take six years.
* Gone with the Wind regarding her plans to marry Rhett — this is after practically laughing at everyone else's disapproval.
* Golden Age). Jones was stranded on a desert island with 734 books. He read all of the books and memorised all of the information in them, before eventually setting fire to them to attract the attention of a passing ship. Once back in civilisation he sets himself up as the Answer Man, a costumed hero who answered questions and solved crimes for one dime, using the information he had gained from the books.
* Hamilton recounts the events from Eliza's sister Angelica's perspective as she forces herself to give up Hamilton so that her sister can be happy.
* Helvetica takes place in a world where everyone is 'born' as a skeleton right after they die on the real world. They have none of their old memories and the first word they say becomes their name, no matter how weird.
* Hey Arnold!, they see Chocolate Boy and tell him to get help from the fire department. Eugene tells Chocolate Boy to mention him to the firefighters because they know him from previous rescues. Arnold has a "Why am I not surprised?" reaction to what Eugene said.
* Gravity Falls featured a commercial for a show called, "Lil' Gideon's Big House", which starred Lil' Gideon after he was sent to prison at the end of the first season. It ends with a still of a sparrow with the words 'TECHNICAL DIFFICULTIES' 'PLEASE STAND BY' and Bud Gleeful saying, "Lil' Gideon's Big House will return as soon as we contain this riot."
* Goetian Prince of Hell towards Blitzo, and the imp's cold attitude towards Stolas in return, it's also strongly implied that he is the only person Stolas has ever sexually and romantically desired in his entire long life.
* Herman's Head when Herman is dating a TV star who had the trope used on her character. At the end of the episode, she uses the technique herself on Herman.
* Hightown: Junior is quite distraught after helping to murder someone with Osito.
* Halo does partly take place on a glassed world that is trying to get back on its feet.
* Gulliver's Travels, one of the Lilliputians uses his ear trumpet as a bugle to summon a crowd to the beach where Gulliver washed up.
* Gotenks is one of the most powerful fighters in the series, but his
* Goldie & Bear, Goldie and Bear try this as a means of getting the Giant back up to his home when the beanstalk is accidentally broken by magic. It fails when the 4 and 20 blackbirds pop the balloons.
* Halo: Reach for earning a Double Kill from the Grave (two quick kills after you've died).
* Good Omens the US Gov't created it in a lab somewhere and are wantonly dumping it in various countries around the world, it will enhance the levels of suspicion and mutual hatred sloshing around, in a way most suited to her purposes. Crowley is suitably appalled.
* heart surgery on one. She eventually creates a more advanced form of robotics that looks almost exactly like biology, and allows the robots to be "reincarnated" into new bodies of their choosing.
* Grandia II, (not actually done audibly and kept only in text dialogue) when the party reaches Roan's castle the first time, one of the ladies-in-waiting who serves as the castle guide has a rather unique way of giving directions — she takes a deep breath, then babbles out the entire guide to the requested specific place in the castle as quickly as possible in one breath.
* Heroes. Having superpowers didn't cure the characters of their painful pasts, past mental issues, or dark secrets.
* held onto their traditional longbows and bills for nearly a century after the rest of Europe had switched to pike and shot.
* Happy Valley and Connie Booth centres around an incredibly naive princess, who understands nothing of the world. This includes death - when she enters her (deceased) pet dog in a race, the king has to cancel the race so that the dog won't lose.

* Highlander: Duncan has a dragonhead katana similar to Connor's in the movie (but not the same one). On rare occasions, he had a broadsword instead, though (and in one specific episode, he used his father's claymore). Methos had a medieval Ivanhoe broadsword and Richie a rapier until just before his death. Each immortal basically had a signature weapon. In many cases, the chosen weapon was a bit of insight to the period the character grew up in or an important event in their past.
* Harry Potter and the Forbidden Journey it is seen in an almost perfectly intact state.
* Hell on Earth: Demons invade the world and transform it into a hellish wasteland.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, this trait is expanded to him having no verbal filter whatsoever, saying whatever is on his mind regardless of how wildly inappropriate it is.
* Hanna-Barbera, where Bill Hanna and Joe Barbera introduced their favorite episodes of several of their shows.
* He also (at least once) pronounced Ohio "OH-HEE-OH". This could be a subtle, running gag about him making just as many goofs as he corrects in his SB-Emails or a part of his oft-childish personality and his accent.
* Harry Dresden has a personal relationship (not necessarily cordial) with a surprising number of powerful supernatural and mythological beings. In later books, even
* He (Wilhelm Voight) couldn't get a job without a passport, and he couldn't get a passport without a job. This is referred to in literary circles as "Catch-this-is-fucking-bullshit-22".
* .hack//Legend of the Twilight was notorious for this to the point that it's what a lot of non-fans of the series in general tend to remember about it. The manga it was based on, on the other hand, was vague about it at best.
* Gremlins wreak havoc at Christmastime, and the heroes have to fight them off.
* HeartGold/SoulSilver arrive at the Sinjoh Ruins to stop Team Rocket from taking control of Arceus and the Creation Trio.
* He also says somebody asking "D'joo?" fits this. "Not 'Did you?', but 'D'Jew?'"
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, Draco says he's a good reason not to give out too many athletic scholarships.
*) have dedicated themselves entirely to this. Considering its sheer popularity in some countries, one would think that the whole of said country was like this.
* Hilariously subverted during Lancelot's otherwise very Flynn-esque attack on Swamp Castle, as he slaughters guards and unarmed wedding guests without encountering the slightest resistance.
* Gossip Girl Blair has a whole conversation with Serena while still in bed, mostly consisting of criticism and outright requests to leave. As soon as Serena finally takes the hint and leaves, the blanket is flipped off to reveal that Chuck had been down there the whole time - "telling" Blair good morning.
* Hedy. The company president is after her as well, and there are plenty of jobs open in Venezuela ...
* Harrison Ford is fairly private on his family and works to keep his kids' business out of the spotlight.
* Glee, there is a flashback of Kurt and his dad walking away from his mother's funeral wearing stylishy black clothes.
* Grey Rain of Depression: Rain indicates that someone is sad vs. rain makes someone happy.
* he's the king, the throne isn't empty, and screw Richmond. He then threatens the messenger, who is one of his somewhat-loyal cronies, prompting said crony to immediately switch sides and work with Richmond as soon as he makes landfall.
* He delivers one final one when only he and Creedy are left standing:
* He Walked Around the Horses story "Police Operation" features an implicit reference to the events of "He Walked Around the Horses", describing the situation but not mentioning Bathurst by name. In that story, Tortha Karf says, "I picked up a fellow on the Fourth Level, just about where you're operating, and dragged him a couple of hundred parayears. I went back to find him and return him to his own time-line, but before I could locate him, he'd been arrested by the local authorities as a suspicious character, and got himself shot trying to escape. I felt badly about that."

* Halo: Broken Circle rediscover the Ussan Sangheili, they find out that the latter's dialect of Sangheili has changed far less than their own in the 3,000+ years since the Ussans became isolated from the Covenant, to the point that they have to use translation devices to communicate properly.
* Harvest Moon, the normal human farmer protagonist can woo and marry a witch or wizard.
* Happy Circus Music: Hooray, circus music! It makes me feel like a kid again!
* Good Burger orientation speech to his employees, Critic plays old footage of the Fuhrer giving a speech with English subtitles related to fast food. "HEIL MONDO BURGER!"
* Hanamaru Kindergarten; Anzu, Hiiragi, and Koume do this and dress as Yamamoto-sensei to trick Tsuchida-sensei.
* Here's Humphrey Australian TV show that taught social skills with dancing, singing and a big clumsy bear.
* Halo: Reach: Sword Base has a massive research facility hidden in the ice shelf deep below the base.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, Hellboy and Abe are gazing on a sleeping Liz after they've had a beer or three, and getting rather maudlin about it.
* Gregory Horror Show, when Gregory and his grandson James have their souls put into one another's bodies, they both speak with the voice of the body they're inhabiting.
* Golden Sun, making most of his attacks a lot stronger. It's found in a chest near the end of the final dungeon.
* Godzilla: The Series by pointing out the acronym should be "N.M.I.G.E.L."
* "Greed": In the climax, the two villains confess the whole plot to their respective spouses
* Good Burger a cup gets filled with an orange milkshake, then drives around like a race car until it stops, spills over to reveal the Nickelodeon logo.
* Harry Potter start with such a chapter. In fact, the sixth double-stacks.
* Helluva Boss the imps somehow have no trouble getting a cell signal from Hell to Earth, even when their portal is closed. Much to Blitzo's annoyance when Stolas calls him up while he's running from a maniac with a shotgun.
* Gunmetal Gray - two paranoid spies wind up sharing a room, but due to their odd habits it turns into There Is Only One Closet. They wind up sleeping on either side of the bed rather than share the closet.
* he has been a ghost for over ten years, and has a lot of experience.
* Gomez is trying to find an artist who can tutor Gran-Mama, so he calls a guy another friend recommends, an unsuccessful artist. Said artist is about to hang himself, and gets the call from Gomez - with the job offer -right before he does so. (Of course, working for the Addams isn't all-too better...)
* Grounded for Life: Lily is given a credit card (by Claudia against Sean's better judgement) and goes on a shopping spree only to find out she can only return the clothes for store credit.
* God is harmful for mortals; none can see God's face and live. Moses asked to see God's face, and after explaining the aforementioned, God placed him in a crevice and passed over while showing His back to Moses. That was enough to make Moses' face shine when he went down. Saul saw God's light while on his way, and even closing his eyes during the encounter still rendered him blind. On the other hand, the Beatitudes mentioned how the pure of heart are blessed, for they will see God.
* her father's disappearance and for failing to help the Ghost with the Sword (even though their meeting lasted less than a minute, most of which the Ghost spent trying to cut Annie's face off). Both times, Kat tells Annie she's being ridiculous.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch, the Brain Gremlin injects the Bat Gremlin with "Genetic Sunblock" which allows the latter to fly outside in the sunlight without dying.

* Heatwave and the other Rescue Bots were a skilled first response team in
* Happy Days Not dangerous for the characters, but the show got wounded pretty bad.
* Happy Days, Fonzie and the gang are trapped in the bathroom, and the Fonz gets the bright idea to open up a pathway by putting on his motorcycle helmet and bashing a hole in the wall. After crashing through the wall, he pulls his head out, and one of his friends asks what the wall was made out of because it broke so easily. The Fonz calmly replies "Concrete" and falls unconscious. Other than knocking himself out, he suffered no injuries from headbutting through a concrete wall.
* Hard Being Pure, during Rust's fight with Snatch, the latter complains that lasers are cheap and boring. Rust agrees, and summarily uses his lasers to rip through Snatch's robots one by one.
* Green Lantern storyline. In fact, he survived, but what he saw at the Source Wall and what it means for his own White Lantern powers and those of the other Corps means he's not ready to return.
* Habitat: Usually confined to one or two show/book/game entries—they're fairly territorial.
* He becomes King after murdering everyone in his way, then dies 30 seconds later.
* Halo games on the punishing "Legendary" difficulty requires a mastery of it.
* Guardians of the Galaxy. Ronan is so (understandably) confused by this that it actually works.
* Grant Morrison was full of this, either people ranting crazy things, or monstrosities themselves spewing crazy words.
* her army and (plus the more skilled members of her bodyguard) off on a wild goose chase to other parts of the kingdom.
* Grupa Operacyjna: The music video for "Pomocy" is animated courtesy of GIT Production, likely because its subject material would have been too obscene or hard to show realistically.
* Happy Lesson has each one of the male lead's fingers tied with a red string and all the strings being connected to all his mothers' pinkies. He is not amused.
* He was a glory-seeking general that lost his wits, every man in the Seventh Cavalry, and his life in the campaign that led to Little Big Horn. One thing many forget is that he was no longer a general at that point, a rank he had held during the American Civil War. Since that time he had been demoted to lieutenant colonel. His reckless quest for notoriety and glory and increasingly frantic and frustrated behavior was partly an attempt to regain his old rank and turn it to political advantage, no matter how many tribes or soldiers died to get it!
* Half-Life 2 that can spew out a gigantic swarm of antipersonnel mines, and will do so repeatedly just to show you it can. Interestingly, the most memorable version of this attack actually spawned from a glitch. When you nearly have the chopper taken down, it will start spamming mines in a gigantic three-line stream, covering wherever you are with explosives. This used to be a glitch, but when Valve discovered how effective it was and the lasting memories it impressed upon players, they turned it into a tactic, and came up with an in-universe explanation: the mines are inflatable, so that they can float on water, and they just poof up when they're released. It justifies how meager of a blast the mines have relative to their size.
* Guild Wars. "I signed on for the heroic songs and the praise. I did not sign on for the blood-sucking bugs."
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age, you get a spell that lets you swim under sand (technically, you turn yourself into a sentient, mobile pile of sand). Which you use in the last dungeon to swim through glass panels to avoid a flamethrower.
* Hamtaro soccer genius named Roberto, is very popular among the girls of Hiroko (Laura)'s school.
* Godzilla, they capture the rampaging monsters that are destroying Earth and offer to help save Earth from a rogue planet en route to destroy it. Turns out they were controlling the monsters to begin with and said planet isn't the threat it seems to be (still is a threat, just not of the world ending version).

* Golden Jane. Hardly surprising, since the story arc is about how her teammate gave up a life of crime.
* He's hungry for danger, he can take the heat! Fully Loaded Man has balls of meat! And yes, that's a real ad. Made even manlier by the fact that it was filmed down river from a grade five rapid, on the Kawarau River, in Queenstown New Zealand.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, which she somehow made out of a thermos and coat hangers.
* Handicapped Badass is a massive subversion. He's certainly the most intelligent of the characters, particularly book-smarts-wise.
* Gravity Falls, but once again, material outside the show heavily implies that they could become a couple even though we have no clue if they will.
* Highlander to scare immortal warriors, nevermind some poor blacksmith's daughter).
* Grimm Fairy Tales. Among the general comic fandom they're mostly known for two things: their erotic cover art, and their sizeable female reader base.
* Go Tell It on the Mountain. Each of the flashback sections also serves as a mini coming-of-age tale for the other members of John's family.
* Gone", Buffy finds Spike's cigarette lighter behind the sofa and has an instant flashback to having sex with him. No wonder the lighter ended up in her pants.
* God of War games not only is able to tear off the head of the Gorgons, but proceed to use their (apparently still living) heads as weapons, petrifying enemies with their eye-beams. In the third game he does the same for the god Helios, using him as a Lantern.
* Hey Arnold: The Furnace is murdered when Sid reveals that they murdered Stinky after one huge misunderstanding.
* Henry Selick, which became the highest-grossing stop-motion animated feature of all time.
* Going Postal the ancient messenger golem Anghammarad recounts his motto:
* Halloween Episode, Dan and Roseanne are trying to one-up each other on scary pranks to earn the title of "the Master". At one point, Dan has Roseanne trapped in the garage, the power shut off, and he slowly approaches from the outside wearing a hockey mask and carrying a chainsaw.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, which determines which ending the player receives.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City are the only enemies who cannot be instantly killed with a headshot.
* Hey Arnold! The Jungle Movie Lasombra in disguise). When the pig smells his scent, he squeals in terror and tries to warn Arnold before heading back to America to warn his grandparents.
* Halo 4 Requiem. One level is set in an inner level of the planet (in or near the core), and ends with you racing out of it as collapses around. You can't stay to take the (very impressive) destruction in though, or you'll be caught in it.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, saying "Harry, we saw Uranus up close!"
* Hatate Himekaidou, Aya's rival, who is often portrayed in fanon as younger and less experienced than Aya.
* Hagrid has a clear preference for dangerous beasts, including a Cerberus
* Gone with the Wind, but it keeps getting interrupted by a car ad, and the salesman is Chinese, likes the Hoover Dam, and is recovering from a drug problem. The punch line is "Frank Lee's car lot... High? Don't give a dam." The next panel has Rat saying that it's "Frankly, my dear." (And the implication that the author [avatar] knew that, but went for the pun anyway.)
* Harvey Moiseiwitsch Volodarrskii, a stage magician with deadly tricks and a mask covering the left side of his face like
* Guild Wars, 'faction' mechanics toyed with in previous installments reach the point where some items are only possible to acquire through earning a reputation-based title with that faction, with characters lacking that title being rudely informed that the items in question aren't available to just anyone. Never mind that for three of these factions, it is perfectly possible to have single-handedly rescued the organisation from their greatest enemies or to have destroyed the entity that serves as their greatest nemesis without having achieved sufficient reputation to "earn" these services.

* He uses similar reasoning in a later strip to deny the existence of 'Megahedron', his supposed avatar of the gods, claiming that it is really just a figment of his own imagination. His reasoning was that, if Megahedron was a figment of Red Mage's own mind, then he'd be smart enough to be able to convince him of his existence, a task at which he had so far failed (Megahedron's own suggestion). When Red Mage conceded that point, he went on to say that since Megahedron
* Gone Home. And possibly vice versa, but it's less clear whether Lonnie was aware of her sexuality before meeting Sam.
* Heroes Unlimited, this is a power type, and there are a wide variety of organizations dedicating a substantial amount of resources to building their own metahumans.
* Goof Troop. But for Peg, it's reversed, where she would talk nice to PJ and act like a mother should, (and even like a mother to his friend Max, as well) but will yell and fuss at Pistol for every little thing.
* he's the guy who broke Batman's back members he tussles with has ever heard of him.
* Green Antarctica, so when things get slightly worse, they usually respond by migrating to a different part of Antarctica and making war on the people there.
* haven't paid their taxes, and the IRS will gladly seize any and all of their assets for payment of the back taxes and the associated penalties.
* Gotrek & Felix as one of their biggest hats) will contain a reference to a skaven spraying/spurting/releasing "fear musk".
* Gunnerkrigg Court, she had shoulder-length hair that stuck straight up.
* Hannah Montana. Then reversed, with Miley giving Lilly her checkbook so that she won't be tempted to use it. Hilarity Ensues again.
* Harry "The Breaker" Harbord Morant's last words, while facing a firing squad are the epitome of defiance: "Shoot straight, you bastards! Don't make a mess of it!" source: Shapiro, Fred R., ed. (2006). The Yale Book of Quotations. Yale University Press. p. 536
* Good Witch Versus Bad Witch: Conflict between a witch who uses her powers for good and a witch who uses her powers for evil.
* He doesn't even bother to be subtle about it, either. When viewing a few people attempt to play
* Guilty Crown, being set in 2039, has these. Usually they are flat, floating screens set up as command centers, but they also come in the more circular set-up as well. They've also been integrated into cellphones with a screen that can be switched on and off.
* GURPS Black Ops who took the subway after a mission with a gaping hole in his chest. Even though he left a large pool of blood underneath his feet, not a single other soul on the train looked up or said anything. The narrator says that half the reason why their shadow war has remained a secret is that the world cannot and will not accept the existence of paranormal creatures, and therefore will remain willfully ignorant, writing off any unusual thing they see.
* He even ends up walking out immediately after shaking hands with the President, despite the fact that everyone there is applauding him and other people want to congratulate him. The disgust on his face is
* Gosh Dang It to Heck!: The ones on television are edited - sometimes heavily - for syndication. There's still plenty of swearing and lewd jokes, but they look tame by comparison to the original.
* Grojband has The Newmans, the musical rivals of the titular band. Three fourths of this band are female versions of the male Grojband members, whilst the remaining fourth, Larry, is a male version of Laney, the only female Grojband member.
* Halo 5: Guardians Limited Edition includes dossiers on all the members of Blue Team and Fireteam Osiris, classified orders given to Spartan Locke, and a metal Guardian model. The Limited Collector's Edition includes all that plus statues of both the Master Chief and Spartan Locke.
* Has a few mini-episodes called "The Doc Files" that usually show in between commercials (or after the main show in markets where Disney Junior has no commercials) where Doc relates a past case. When she does so, the style switches to 2D

* Grade School Confidential", when Skinner, Krabappel, and Bart have sealed themselves inside the school. Chief Wiggum tries playing romantic music to make them snap and leave. Skinner and Krabappel, who have fallen in love, merely begin enjoying a romantic dance. This causes Bart to snap and scream "Turn it off!", which only convinces a smug Wiggum that it's working and to turn on a spotlight...which gets reflected through a colander as mood lighting.
* Hannah Montana", Miley and Lilly attempted to start separate lives after they graduated college, Miley going on tour and Lilly taking a teaching job in Sacramento, but when they both attempt to pay a surprise visit to the other a few months later, by the time they catch each other they have finally accepted that they love each other, Lilly taking a job as Miley's manager to justify them staying together.
* Hawaii Five-0, Danny is a regular offender of this, usually when it comes to Steve and his tendency to do things his way which, according to Danny, is the insane way that requires professional help.
* Harry dreams that he's facing the dragon in the First Task while wearing only boxers and shoes.
* Hetfield said he wanted to make the title more accessible, so he changed 'The Call of Cthulhu' to 'The Call of Ktulu'. He has since said that he regrets the decision.
* Gravity Falls: Journal 3 and the other comment is Grunkle Stan saying "This book is amazing! BUY IT TWICE!!"
* GURPS basic set has Language Talent advantage. In Third Edition, when paired with high intelligence, this made it possible for a character to learn 20 languages or more for just a handful of points. Fourth Edition changed the way languages worked in the game, making Language Talent a much milder advantage.
* Here Again makes it necessary, though she does try to do it gently and painlessly.
* Hell the first appearance of the Asgard is this, as the audience gets its introduction to
* Hercules: "My friends call me Meg. At least, they would if I had any friends."
* Hieronymus Bosch who made some of the most memorable and creative images of the location ever.
* Hanagata often gets sent flying into a twinkle by Otaru's marionettes in
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) in her imago form has scythe-like raptorial appendages on her first two sets of limbs.
* He also did it because his son, Bobby, started liking football and he wanted him to continue liking football. Plus, he already broke a lot of laws (buying tickets from a scalper and taking over a retired Nebraska football player's VIP suite) trying to get Bobby to like football so he had nothing to lose.
* Gravity Falls, causing him to remark "Hey, this is a real nice place you got there!" Part of the ceiling then collapses.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, and being bullied all in the same night, Italy sure is this.
* High School D×D out of how many times Issei wakes up with any female member of the Occult Research Club in his bed. It starts out with just Rias but soon expands to include Asia and Akeno and eventually even Koneko. It gets to a point where it's just expected for all the girls to sleep in his bed.
* Heathcliff's unbeatable defensive skill has earned him the "distinguished" title of "Cheating Haxxor Faggot." Whoever called him that was bang on the money - he really was using cheat codes.
* Grrl Power is that Anvil prefers to wear long hair, makeup, and feminine attire because she fears being seen as masculine and undesirable.
* Harold and Maude, the titular characters are cuddling on a pier at night. The camera moves in on the fireworks they are watching. In the next scene, they wake up in bed together.

* GURPS Middle Ages I (for the continent) which never materialized. However, there's no evidence of that even having been started; sales on volume I may simply have been too disappointing for the project to continue.
* "Hannah Banana" had a cutaway where Chris smashed Peter's face between two logs ala
* Hawaii Five-0 suggested that they should do an episode with multiple endings; having fans vote on the various elements leading up to the end was just a step away.
* Hell's Gate: The universe of Sharona uses Psychic abilities, whilst their enemy Arcana makes use of Magic. Travellers (or in Arcana's case, invaders) from one universe to the other find their abilities slowly diminishing as they travel to universes closer to the opposing home one.
* He also told the female character that he'd never lied to her... Make of that what you will.
* HeadOn, apply directly to the forehead. HeadOn, apply directly to the forehead. HeadOn, apply directly to the forehead... Per some schools of thought, repeating something three times in a row, especially something annoying, indelibly imprints that in your mind.
* Half-Life 1 — you have to wait for a different scientist to eventually resuscitate a downed guard, then slowly push that guard back to his doom so he'll drop a pistol for you to shoot the retinal-scanner scientist. The instant that scientist dies, the door automatically opens.
* Hexen: Beyond Heretic, though the attack recovery is longer than the Axe's.
* herself website's biography of Lesley would mention that "retrospectives of Jones' career usually downplay or omit his work with Gore, although it was among his most commercially successful; he's known now for recordings that are, well, funkier. But his success with Gore did a lot to build his already impressive résumé within the industry."
* Hamlet, this was actually intended by Shakespeare, which gives Hamlet's line "You jig and amble, and you lisp" a literal meaning.
* Happy Tree Friends, Giggles, Petunia and Lammy all have long eyelashes. Petunia wears a flower on her head, while Giggles and Lammy have hair bows.
* Guild Wars 2 the All, or Antikytheria, is a symbolic representation of Tyria and the forces that govern. Mortals who see it perceive a vast and complex machine with Tyria at its heart, but they can only see a fraction of the forces at work and how they interact. The Eternal Alchemy of the Asura is either a very similar principle or their own perception of the All.
* Half-Life 2 the player is attacked repeated by Hunter-Choppers, but the fact that though the player gets a chance to shoot one down during the final confrontation at the dam the others just fly off for repairs, and the rebels that mount a machine gun on your hovercraft only mentioning a singular Hunter-Chopper, it's implied that it's the exact same one hounding you throughout the entire chapter and only getting temporarily driven off until you finally take it down for good at the dam.
* "Hide", the Doctor tries to rescue a time traveller trapped in a pocket dimension. It first appears that there is a monster in the episode, however it turns out he was simply another traveller trying to reunite with his mate.
* has this reaction when Arthur states he would never bring his manservant out hunting or on campaign with him.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers Both find that, though they do alright on their own, they miss being together.
* Gunsmith Cats. Her mother was British and her father is either Indian or Pakistani, although his already very dark tone suggests South Indian heritage.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, Umbridge posts an educational decree outlawing The Quibbler. As Hermione points out, it ensures that everyone will want to read it.
* Gunheads, when they find the murdered slaves, the Guardsmen stop to pray for them, and Bergen orders that their confessors see to the bodies, although they will have to be burned.
* Godzilla vs. Kong: As is the norm, both titular monsters come across as far more intelligent than their appearances suggest with both showing adaptive and reasoning skills. The Monarch crew express incredulity when they witness Kong communicating with Jia using sign language.

* Goldeneye are also pretty great villains in their own right and just as evil as their boss.
* Green Lantern Kilowog of Bolivax Vik uses "Poozer" as an all purpose swear word.
* H₂O: Just Add Water's "The Siren Effect" has most of the episode taking place at a sleepover around Cleo's. But earlier in the episode she said a throwaway line to Miss Chatham about it being a Wednesday - making one wonder why she's having a sleepover on a school night. Additionally none of the girls are shown getting ready for school the next day.
* Half-Life 1 is located inside the old facilities of an underground missile research center. Though actually a test room for rocket engines, the room with the tentacle aliens is practically a missile silo. Later there's an actual missile silo that holds a modified rocket that is used to launch a satellite into space, that was supposed to be used in a plan to seal the dimensional rift.
* Hidden City when Sophia Haze disappears, causing a public uproar. Mr. Black mentions that the Jazz singer had "disappeared" to gain attention before, but she had never missed a concert as she did recently, which indicates that she's in real trouble this time.
* He saw the religion as a threat to his dream of unifying Japan, and politically, this was done to reduce the influence of the Christian daimyo of Kyushu. A decade later in 1597, Hideyoshi had twenty-six Christians, known today as the * Go Among Mad People: A sane person is committed to a mental institution, and needs to convince the staff that they're not crazy.
* "Great shot kid, that was one in a million!" Of course, it was really done using the Force, but then again, the Force can also steer destiny to make million-to-one chances succeed.
* Greg Egan short story, the protagonist's mind inhabits a different body every day. They all live in the same general area and are of similar age (and since the age the protagonist started identifying himself as a boy, they are usually male), but nothing else seems to give any clues as to how or why it happens. In fact, it wasn't until school age that the protagonist realized that this isn't a norm, and other people don't "change" into someone else every day.
* Hayao Miyazaki, written exclusively for the Disney dub. Even Hisaishi thought it was better than the original.
* Greek Prime minister Constantine Mitsotakis is anecdotally infamous in his home country for bringing bad luck with him wherever he goes. His name is practically a synonym for bad luck in Greek culture.
* High Plains Drifter. He might be an avenging angel, a demon, or the ghost of the dead marshal. Or he might just be a very clever and lucky drifter with a particular moral code.
* He was the most strait-laced man I'd ever known, but he could never get his tie on straight, leaving him in dire straits.
* He gets drunk at every little league game and gets into fights with other dads.
* Hexwood that rules the Galaxy - though it should be a little worrying that it's always shown with its pans not balanced at all...
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series, Hal complains about Aya ignoring his orders to do something risky but heroic, when this kind of behavior practically defines his character (no points for guessing where she learned it from). Kilowog calls him on it immediately.
* "Harvest" had a woman being shot in the head during a robbery and being declared brain-dead. Her grieving husband agreed to donate her organs, only for it to turn out that she wasn't dead yet and the transplant doctor had accelerated the process in order to improve his record.
* Grand Theft Auto V user known as TheJimmyJ57 put together a series of videos in which he would customize the various vehicles in the game. Episode 27 of this series features the Canis Crusader. After six unsuccessful attempts to steal one from the army base, he discovers that one can be purchased online. So, he does...and discovers the vehicle cannot be modified.

* Hadestown's "Why We Build the Wall," the Workers, Fates, and Eurydice raise their right index fingers high in salute to Hades and the wall.
* Heracles rescued Hera from being raped by the giant Porphyrion. Out of gratitude, Hera dropped her vendetta against Heracles and befriended him.
* Hack/Slash, Cassie's initially revealing costume gets gradually shredded in battles with monsters until she's reduced to, essentially, a bikini.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019). His notable weakness? The same enormous wings that grant him superpowered flight also make him incredibly ungainly in water, rendering him almost entirely defenceless when Godzilla drags him into the ocean.
* Halo: The Cole Protocol (Literature?) given that it's not stated how long the air supply in the capsule is good for and it likely would get quite cold within a few days of the heaters shutting off, if that long.
* Glee's Heather Morris is said to do this during table readings, often playing on the previous dialog of characters. Brittany's one-liners are sometimes penciled in after the initial readings.
* Hamlet (whose name is Feng, and not Claudius) and becomes king of Jutland. His story doesn't even stop there; he gets mixed up in a whole series of wacky antics in the British Isles, is simultaneously married to two princesses, before ultimately falling in battle to a rival king from his mother's family. There's another version of the story in which it isn't even Amleth who kills Feng, but the ghost of his murdered father (whose name, in this version, is Orwendel).
* Goran Ivanišević was consistently one of the best players in the world in the 1990s (ranked as high as No. 2 at points), but despite making the Wimbledon final three times in the decade, he lost all three. Injuries and declining performances left him ranked outside the top 100 and struggling to qualify for major tournaments by 2001, and most thought his best was well behind him. Then, he was given a wild card entry into the 2001 Wimbledon draw - and won the competition, his only Grand Slam title. He never got past the third round of a tournament (any tournament, not just Grand Slams) again, and retired a couple of years later.
* Gossip Girl tried to play up this trope when Dan pursued Blair, to the point of actually calling him "the pauper" in promos. Apparently living in a large loft in Brooklyn, having gone to expensive private schools, having an über rich stepmother who gets you prestigious internships, riding around in limos, traveling the world and having published a best-selling novel and making a ton of money off the deal in your early twenties is the same as being poor. Ironically, the rich suitor in this scenario (Chuck) spent the first episodes of season four living on much more limited means than Dan ever did. Most fans found the pauper angle for Dan downright ridiculous.
* he lost a one-on-one to Akashi and is made to accept that Akashi is stronger than him. Murasakibara only listens to people who are better than he is at basketball.
* Highlander II: The Quickening (that MacLeod is actually a space alien who has been politically exiled by Katana from planet Zeist) and acts like it all fits together despite the new backstory being almost completely incompatible with any of the details from the original film.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi In the segment "Talent Suckers Return", the Talent Suckers tried making popcorn for the popcorn stand and put tons of kernels into the machine. Vlad forgot to plug it in and the arena was destroyed by all of the popped popcorn.
* Heavensward, had a collector's edition that came with a Blu-ray disc containing all the trailers from 1.0 to 2.0, an artbook, a small statue of a dragon mount, and a collector's box that all the items come in. It also gives out in-game items.
* Hellboy and Hellboy's best friend. Still, this subplot is extremely subdued, but it does get played up a bit in the animated adaptations.
* Grand Theft Auto: Liberty City Stories. She knows and approves of his job, and even puts a contract on him when she's dissatisfied with his advancement.
* He recognizes the Council has made a decision. But given that it's a stupid-ass decision he's elected to ignore it (

* Heroine Chic, Umbra comes to visit her in an open-backed hospital gown (with a pair of Louboutins throw on, of course).
* GURPS Thaumatology: Age of Gold: The setting is a 1930's pulp reality with magic on the way back. The triggering event was the discovery of the Philosopher's Stone in ancient tombs — apparently common enough in the distant past, its rediscovery is leading to a renaissance of magic research and even the emergence of magically-powered super-heroes.
* Glenn Rhee has been this role in Rick's group ever since the beginning, as well as being a great strategist and scavenger.
* Hey Arnold!. However, they do care about her, and at least attempt to make up for their mistakes once Helga calls them out.
* Halo 3 a ruthless pragmatist more than willing to resort to "dishonorable" means.
* Hey Arnold! substitute teacher gives his rank as "Lieutenant Major." No such rank exists. Given that a flashback established him as the drill sergeant of Gerald's father in the Vietnam era, he was likely meant to have been a retired Sergeant Major.
* He sold an accompanying T-Shirt with a stick-figure-ish family of Dad, Mom, Son and Daughter with frowns on their faces with the caption "My Whole Family Is Made Of Meat". When I wear mine around, I get looks ranging from bemusement to outright horror.
* Goldeneye 007 for the N64, one level opens up with James Bond in a jail cell within a Russian satellite facility. Naturally he has no guns, but he can use the electromagnet in his watch to get some throwing knives from a drain(?). Said knives can be used to great effect, and re-used if retrieved. There's also a "hunting knife" available as a melee weapon via a cheat code.
* Green Antarctica is just plain nasty. There are the Gugs, murderous, raping gorillas, there are ants that shoot fire, giant platypus that have evolved convergently similar to crocodilians, a kind of small mammal who's bite sends humans into comas, and then eats them alive, and countless other disturbing animals.
* Goblins. When the heroes (who are more or less good guys) happen upon a kind of inter-dimensional nexus where they witness their counterparts from other realities, they notice that most of those doubles look really evil.
* .hack//SIGN intro episode when Tsukasa wakes up to find himself trapped within The World.
* H₂O: Mermaid Adventures had its Season 2 episodes air on July 15, 2015. Though it clearly wasn't intended to be the final episode of the series, the show was not renewed for another season with barely any official announcement on its status.
* Higurashi: When They Cry at the end of Onikakushi-hen, you get this:
* He bought the rights to the movie before actually reading it, just like Chili Palmer in the book/film.
* Hey Arnold! is taught karate by his grandma after having his bus pass stolen. He masters the style very quickly and the power eventually corrupts him to the point where he attacked an innocent bystander. He instantly regrets this and snaps out of it rather quickly.
* Hello, Dolly! used Garrison, New York as 1890s-era Yonkers. Many of the buildings they redecorated for the film are still there.
* Gundam face before his mobile suit explodes. Of course, if the fatally damaged mecha contains a major character, there may well be a full on Egregious Delay to let the character give his dying speech.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: In one short, England tries to summon a demon and gets Russia instead.
* Halloween Episode. Again, he doesn't notice, and in this case, still hasn't noticed by the end of the cartoon.
* Grendel, Tujiro was an Asian vampire who consumed eyeballs as well as blood.
* half-wolf behind her hood. Fans have taken this as either an allegory for being LGBTQ or an allegory for being chronically ill.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets when they get busted by Snape and are threatened with expulsion for flying Arthur Weasley's car to Hogwarts. They get off with a warning only because Professor McGonagall is in charge of deciding their punishments, not Snape.

* Goblet of Fire, there's a great slab of exposition in which Arthur Weasley explains to Harry and the readers how Portkeys work; this knowledge proves crucial to the climax.
* Guys and Dolls is an example of this, and this trope is parodied by her mission band's inability to "save" any souls until Sky makes the other gamblers come to the testimonial.
* Godly Sidestep: Deities refusing to answer humanity's biggest questions.
* Hewlett-Packard calculators not only have a completely different layout and OS interface (where changing things in the mode screen requires one to hit F2 to choose what option to adjust and Enter just exits, among other things), but are often centered around Reverse Polish (postfix) notation, NOT algebraic (infix) notation.
* Goober Grove, and on top of that, ze doesn't especially seem to mind.
* Green Lantern animated series pushed the John Stewart version of Green Lantern into the minds of the mainstream audience.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality shows that souls really do exist, though not a proper afterlife, and were created by the Atlanteans in ancient times.
* Groundhog Day. While the endless time loop does take place on the titular holiday and lasts quite possibly for thousands of years from Phil Connor's perspective, it is not intended to terrify or harm him in any way. Instead, it ends up making Phil a better person, and the only deaths in this film are the ones he inflicts upon himself.
* Go Animate's educational site offered a 30 day free trial, and this was used heavily by members of its fandom who couldn't afford to shell out for a fully paid account. You could make unlimited free trials with it, in fact!
* he refuses so much to believe in witches in relation to his magic resistance and it should be noted that it only shows that number because that's the limit of the scale.
* Hammer of Grammar played with this when a character, represented by her in-game avatar, is seen seated in front of a computer at the character creation screen, rolling a new character, who then features in the next several strips.
* Gracie the giraffe fashion designer, who wears fishnet-patterned, high-heeled boots, * has "pants on fire" as their highest level of political bullshit, meaning that it's absolutely not true.
* Harry Potter prequel, which takes place three years before Harry's birth, thus was set in 1977.
* Hanson to each other instead of being manufactured according to some kind of "next, we need a dark-haired Bad Boy" list). Yet because they consisted of photogenic young men who made poppy music, they were lumped in with the rest.
* Hamilton describes the American soldiers fighting in the American Revolutionary War as a "ragtag volunteer army in need of a shower."
* Guild Wars 2: The Seraph Guard salute is right fist to the left shoulder, holding the right forearm as close to horizontal as the animation will allow.
* has become something of a successor once he's brought to Wakanda, as the Westerner who discovers a world that was totally unknown to him, and marveling at the technological wonders there. Ironically, Coulson is a creation for the MCU while Ross had existed in the comics for decades.
* Green-Skinned Space Babe. The Justicar in question specifically states that Asari prefer not to talk about them because they like being thought of as the ultimate diplomats. They are, but that just means that they are also the ultimate manipulators, and when they go bad, the ultimate emotional abusers.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. She doesn't see this as anything special, and builds it simply to grow experimental protein crystals properly. Much to her chagrin, nobody cares very much about proteins, but are fascinated by her anti-grav machine.
* Hazbin Hotel, a cannibal cooking show run by Jeffery Dahmer himself, as a background element.

* Her son Rudolf also went through this. A sickly boy considered weak by his soldierly father, he was rescued from the harsh "tutoring" his grandmother ordered
* Halloween Episode in the group recognize that people who have had sex are going to be killed off.
* Going Postal, Archchancellor Ridcully mentions that the Unseen University has a whole pond full of frogs that were once people who tried to sue the University.
* have shells. They do, though they are usually removed from the shell before they're sold, because cashews are in the same botanical family as poison ivy, and the shell contains a lot of the irritant urushiol. In addition, they grow at the bottom of bell-shaped fruits called "cashew apples." These, however, are rarely seen outside of areas where cashews are typically grown, because they do not keep or ship very well.
* Harry Harrison. The last novel makes it clear that a revolution can only succeed with a simultaneous assault on the surface and space.
* GODISNOWHERE. They've had a booth at the Capitol Hill People's Fair and the Taste of Colorado in Denver for well over a decade, and they count on atheists reading the phrase as "God is Nowhere", and then attempt to evangelize them when they come visiting what they think are like-minded individuals. Atheist booths will warn newcomers about this.
* Hell Bent is left in effectively an undead state after her extraction: she has no heartbeat and most of her bodily functions are frozen. By some definitions, this makes her a form of zombie, but one who experiences no change in personality and appears to retain at least some natural body functions (she can feel emotion, cry, and apparently drink liquids too), and as an added bonus she is functionally immortal and will not age.
* Hero Core has "Retro!" as one of its language options. If selected, it makes the whole game appear (comically) poorly translated.
* having money increased the real value of the money; the interest from the loans was just gravy.
* Grand Theft Auto V ups the ante in almost every way in this. Getting sidetracked might not even be getting sidetracked in this game. The entire game seems to be made up of getting sidetracked. Now if you'll excuse me, I have a tee off to get to. In game.
* Hamlet: "The purpose of playing... is to hold as 'twere the mirror up to nature."
* Green Book by Shirley's brother. Among other things, his family members say that Shirley and Vallelonga were not even particularly close friends and had a strictly employer-employee relationship.
* Harriet the Spy finished with the characters dancing to James Brown's "Get Up Offa That Thing".
* Grand Theft Auto: Chinatown Wars, AmmuNation comes back with a mail-order delivery service. This helps them get around gun control laws.
* Groundhog Day, but that just makes some of what he says funnier for the audience.
* he is their uncle, and it's not the first time someone mistakes him for a woman, much to Naruto's shock.
* Godzilla: Kingdom of Monsters entirely due to how little it contributes to the overall storyline.
* Harry Potter series is Albus Dumbledore, headmaster of Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, a firm believer in second chances. He will defend his staff members to anyone, even the Ministry of Magic if need be, and don't you dare try to eject anybody from the school building while he's in charge.
* Graham Aker becomes obsessed with the Exia Gundam and later its successor the 00 Gundam. He tends to ignore the other three (for each generation, no less) although all are equally worthy opponents.
* hat caste, but they have not been seen in the main continuity and are implied to be rare nowadays anyway.
* Greek holy men were often claimed to do this, causing quite astonishing parallels to Jesus. Pythagoras of all people was claimed to do this in addition to random magic acts like getting an eagle to go to him.

* Greater awareness of psychological abuse and its effects during the 2010s has pretty much killed the sympathetic portrayal of the
* GOB once met a woman with whom he intended to have a one-night stand; instead, they ended up married for a few episodes thanks to a drunken dare. (The woman, by the way, was played by
* Guardians of the Flame books. James is severely disabled on Earth but when he's transported to the other world is transformed into the physically hale dwarf warrior Ahira. As a result, he's one of the few members of the group who isn't in a great hurry to get back to the real world.
* Greek Mythology we have Agamemnon, who offended the goddess Artemis and was forced to sacrifice his daughter Iphigenia to appease her (though sources differ on whether the girl was actually killed or taken off to be a priestess of Artemis). His wife Clytemenstra did not take this well, setting off a cycle of bloodshed in true Greek tragedy fashion.
* Grenadier units in those games also had the same problem in that they cause an explosion upon death. It wasn't as bad as the Flamethrowers, but a group of injured Grenadiers could all die if a single one did. Interestingly, the Disc Throwers in the vanilla
* Haruhi Suzumiya badly to weaken a sound-based monster, and does so handily.
* Happy Heroes, Smart S.'s magnetism is made way too powerful due to a super battery being installed in him. This causes him to accidentally attract Planet Gray, much to the delight of Big M. who immediately tries to pinch himself to see if he's dreaming. He then realizes he pinched Little M. by accident and whistles as if nothing happened.
* Harriet does it to Ron when he says that they don't make girls like Fleur at Hogwarts.
* Halo has some: Gilgamesh, Endymion (Halsey's homeworld, named after the Greek shepherd), Tantalus (another Greek figure), etc.
* Gyo obeys the law — while the walkers that carry fish up to the size of Great White Sharks can walk around on land just fine, a walker carrying a whale lumbers out of the ocean, only for its legs to immediately collapse under the weight of the whale, without any water to support it.
* Henchmen wear bright yellow and black uniforms with ridiculous oversized butterfly wings on the back. The idea seems to be pretty much standard-issue with supervillains; the only henchmen we see wearing camouflage are those working for Sergeant Hatred, who has an army theme.
* Halloween At Aunt Ethels: The titular Aunt Ethel is a grey-haired old woman who spends her time killing people and making their corpses into Halloween candy, or burning them behind her barn.
* Goldust to reveal he was wearing women's underwear, but given the nature of the character, it was more creepy than funny.
* Her most extreme case was when she was forced to scry, learned the person she was talking to was a
* Groucho Marx literally danced on Hitler's grave, performing a two-minute Charleston on top of the ruins of the bunker where Hitler killed himself. However, he later remarked that it was "not much consolation."
* Hades, her intervention in the ensuing brawl is spawning homing heart projectiles that will cause both heavy damage and stunning.
* Gods and Monsters is the dramatization of director James Whale's final days. That is to say almost the whole thing is made up.
* High School D×D. She has pretty much zero fighting skill, but her healing powers are extremely handy to the group.
* He truly was a horrible pilot, no matter how many stewardesses he bagged...
* Gunslinger Girl (manga). Before the assault on the bell tower in Chapter 61 it looks like Triela is standing up on her toes to give Hilshire a peck on the cheek before a couple of GIS troopers barge in on them.
* He is also displeased by the advent of a cat living in the garden, eating songbirds. Very. Displeased.
* Halloween later, they're both in Giles' book cage, flipping through an old volume...

* Guardians of the Galaxy in a single sentence, it gets a bit harder to believe.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) episode where Skeletor dams and attempts to drain the Sea of Eternia to cause a massive drought to devastate the plant life to lower the oxygen level of the planet. He-Man makes a new ally with an insectoid people to stop the plot and afterward they agree to guard the Sea to prevent Skeletor from trying again.
* Gunship Rescue, where armed aircraft rain heaps of mass destruction upon ground-bound enemies.
* Higurashi: When They Cry that may be shocking, but isn't quite disturbing until seen in the context of the arc. And then becomes more disturbing the more context is revealed after the arc.
* Her Instagram edits as of 2014 (and those of her fans she post on her account) are
* Green Gables Fables books by L. M. Montgomery. Season 1 covers the first book and Season 2 the third; the second book was loosely adapted through transmedia only.
* Hayate the Combat Butler: Hinagiku, afraid of heights, yells at Hayate to catch her and jumps out of a tree before he can even react. After stepping on his face, she manages a perfect landing.
* He's this even to aliens. When Ben (not knowing that it was Max there) goes to his main base in the Null Void, what does Max's assistant advise him?
* Hell's Gate series the Cetaceans of Sharona have been established as having intelligence at or near human levels. Some humans are able to telepathically talk to them and they act as ambassadors trading human services (such as medical treatment) for the Cetaceans' help with things like fishing and finding oyster beds.
* Golden Ending. This piece of ore will give you one free upgrade for your weapon. However, this reward can be considered useless, as you probably upgraded your weapon to the max to beat the game on the highest difficulty already.
* Happy Heroes: Big M. is briefly shown juggling balls in the "shower" fashion of cartoon juggling in the title card of Season 3 episode 33.
* Halo 4 onward, Thomas Lasky takes on this role. The previous captain of his ship, Andrew Del Rio, is a subversion; he turns out to be incompetent and loses the respect of both his subordinates and superiors when he tries to arrest the main character.
* Golden Age who used stage magic as a mask for his real magical powers.
* Hamlet, despite predating Nietzsche, preaches nihilism with the best of them. The famous "To be or not to be" soliloquy summarizes it, but he eventually subverts actually becoming a straw nihilist by drawing purpose from his father's death.
* Handy Manny assume that he and Kelly had a thing for each other, despite no real evidence?
* hell are you??" and/or "How the hell did you get into my house??" would be more appropriate responses than "Why yes, that certainly is a powerful cleaning product you have there".
* Grand Avenue in Downtown Los Angeles slopes down along Bunker Hill past several photogenic Los Angeles landmarks like the Walt Disney Concert Hall and the MOCA. As a result, it shows up in a surprisingly large number of car commercials.
* Harley Quinn and The Birds of Prey has her friend Red Tool tackle her and Renée Montoya out of the line of fire of a hit squad. Though his face has gotten pressed into Quinn's bust, she's only concerned that his crotch is on Montoya's face.
* her poor performance against Dalian while filling in for Miho during the latter's recovery.
* Good Charlotte, which peaked at #39 and was almost instantly forgotten.
* Grojband) often pointing out how bizarre, unlikely or convenient a situation is.
* Hamilton, Hamilton goes through a few color changes throughout the show, he is first seen as one of the ensemble members wearing white at first then switching to brown as a student, then joining Washington's army wearing blue and once he's a statesman he switches to green then as he gets older, he wears black until the duel. Other characters tend to wear white to indicate that they are dead, too — in the finale, Jefferson and Madison wear white when they are done speaking to indicate they have died.

* Happens from time to time with Vivi in the Alabasta arc, as she forgets to tell the party certain things at critical moments, like not mentioning what Mr. 2 looks like until after he leaves the ship.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series, it didn't turn out well for them...
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, before Harry's first Quidditch game:
* GURPS has Mind Shield to make one immune to telepathic lie detection. People with enough levels of the Fast-Talk skill are so good that they get a bonus on reaction rolls in any situation that they can speak. Also, those with the Compulsive Lying Disadvantage can more easily deceive electronic lie detectors.
* her current form, up to exploding stuff when she's really upset, but she isn't all that good at controls and used it only in critical situations. On the other hand, in some forms she can and do use it for flying.
* Granny Weatherwax does this as well, insisting that elephant is "a kind of badger". Granny is well aware of her own shortcomings, but her 'Headology' requires her to make the common folk consider her nearly omniscient. However, one book states that claiming authority on a subject one knows nothing about and stubbornly refusing to
* Halo; the thrusters are usually placed around the shoulders, to the side, and/or pointing away from the user. It also helps that the soldiers who use jetbacks tend to be well-armored.
* Harvey Beaks). The kids never catch on to what the story was really about.
* Happens again to Spike two episodes in a row: in "Princess Spike" when Cadance bursts into the room looking for him, and in "Party Pooped" he gets slammed into the wall when the yak delegation throws open the castle doors upon arriving in Ponyville.
* Godspeed You! Black Emperor and was ready to rip it and distribute it. Two songs were posted and confirmed to be genuine. And then people drove him off by being assholes, to the point where he deleted his account. The remaining songs have yet to surface.
* Gundam 00: A Wakening of the Trailblazer shows the massive main ship of the ELS, a massive ship with the diameter of approximately 3000km made up of sentient living metal.
* Godzilla (2014) is able to grow two tentacles which it uses on Godzilla on Moansta Island.
* Green Wing who didn't seem to quite get over the trauma of being an only child.
* Harley Quinn, depending on how sympathetically her romantic woes are treated in the current story.
* greater numbers more stuff. The net result is that even though each person produces more stuff, they have more ability to buy more stuff as well, meaning that more people are needed to make more things for each person.
* Grand Theft Auto 2, the ability to put a bomb in the chosen car. Many missions have objectives that are completely invulnerable to your weapons — whenever you find one of these, those easily available car bombs will be your only option, as nothing is immune to them.
* GURPS gives players the wherewithal to design and build every example on this page and then some. Some find that doing this results in quite a startling mix of Tech Levels for all but the simplest battlesuit (GURPS Mecha defines a "battlesuit" as powered armour where the pilot's arms and legs extend into the suit's arms and legs. A "mecha" is piloted from a cockpit, so the Iron Man armour is a battlesuit, while an AT-AT is a mecha).
* GURPS has an Advantage called "Supernatural Durability" which makes you immune to all shock, stun, & knockout. As long as you have positive health you are immune to crippling injuries and have full move. With negative HP you have half move and can be crippled. You can only be killed in two ways: by an attack which does 10 * your maximum HP, or by using an item you're weak against and reducing you below -5* HP. For comparison A normal human has half move and dodge below 1/3 of their health. Below 0 HP they must make a roll each turn or fall unconscious, and must make rolls to not die at -1* HP, -2* HP, -3* HP, -4* HP. At -5* HP you die immediately, no save.

* heard of, up until the Russian government made such a big stink about their protest and convicted two members on "hooliganism" charges (for what most western legal experts would have defined as trespassing) and suspicious Russian hate sites targeting them with rather absurd accusations started to pop up. Almost overnight, the treatment of this obscure group became the focus of a global outcry, and opinion of the Russian government's policies started a downhill slide. (Which only got worse with the current crisis in Ukraine.)
* Gunbuster. The Black Hole Bomb's detonation ultimately annihilates 60% of the Milky Way Galaxy, though since the Sol System is fairly far out from the galactic core, it is unaffected.
* He was incredibly successful, amassing enough followers to threaten all of Republic City.
* Hellsister Trilogy good enough for Kara as far as Superman is concerned. Unfortunately Kara is quite smitten with Dev, so Superman has to accept their relationship, like or not.
* Godzilla (1998): The cab's high-beams are used to make Zilla flinch away from the tunnel mouth.
* Grand Theft Auto III has a faux-computer boot up saying "RAM OK" and "ROM OK" before forming the Rockstar logo using fast moving lines to create a wireframe.
* Halo: Cryptum, one Forerunner assigned to guard the quarantined San'Shyuum homeworld took to collecting sculptures their ambassadors gifted to him. Subverted in that it's one sign that he's not really in his right mind: his old boss the Didact clearly isn't as receptive of his former enemies (though he likes their liquor), and his sculptures have crowded the command deck so much that slight changes will shuffle and shift them around.
* Hilbert cube stuff. It is also a cuboid of countably infinite dimension. Studying maths at uni sort of gets you used to this stuff...
* Gremlin females (outnumbered by males 20 to 1) are generally kept away from the more dangerous activities and so tend to survive longer than the males, who also fawn on them in hopes of being allowed to have sex. It's not a true "worship" variant, however, as the females
* H. H. Holmes converted a hotel into a building full of death traps, to the point it was dubbed the "Murder Castle". Special mention goes to the trapdoors leading straight down to the basement, stairways to nowhere, bedrooms in which gas could be pumped in to asphyxiate the victim at any time, and a bank vault where people were left until the air ran out.
* Herecine bushes likewise lure victims towards themselves with plump berries and succulent twigs, ensnaring creatures that come to graze on them or harvest their berries and dragging them towards woody jaws in the center of their trunk.
* God Eater and being dependent on regular injections of Bias Factor from an outside source.
* He was almost as bad during his debut. He was able to duplicate and mix all the powers of the original Justice League and was only stopped when someone convinced him to 'look for knowledge' somewhere
* Grant Page, a famous Australian stunt artist of the 1970s and 1980s, did the occasional acting role. Among his biggest is as the villain in
* Goodwin and Simonson's "Manhunter" arc that appeared in Detective Comics during 1973-1974 had The Council, whose goals were "take over the world" and "develop immortality so that we're around to enjoy it for a long, long time".
* Gunboat Diplomacy: Efforts to create ties between two (or more) states are backed by military threat.
* Haunted House Historian: An expert who knows why this place is haunted.
* Gloria Gaynor said that of all the covers of her classic disco hit "I Will Survive", the 1996 version by alt-rockers
* Highlander: The Source was an ingenious idea for the series. Sure, they never use it again, but still. He also praised the Guardian's "There can be only ME!" line and a scene (which he didn't include in the review itself and only mentioned in the commentary) in which Methos kills a biker by throwing his sword against a tree blade first right in front of the biker, decapitating him.

* Godzilla anime trilogy introduces a new, eldritch take on an existing, iconic monster.
* High School Musical 3: Senior Year gives us "Can I Have This Dance", as Gabriella teaches Troy the waltz.
* Hidden has foley recordings made by the band of clashing swords, rattling chains, shattering glass, guns being cocked, and a melon wrapped in cheese crackers being hit with a mallet to simulate the sound of a crushed human head(!) all used as percussion.
* Hercules, while Hercules is fighting the Hydra, Phil shouts this helpful advice from the sidelines.
* Goblin Hollow, Ben actually counted on his teen sister-in-law Penny to make this mistake in order to explain the destruction of her gargoyles.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City Stories the previous year, some new content was added in the form of side missions, rampages, and stunt jumps.
* Hellcats, both play the last three notes of "Taps" when a pilot is killed in action.
* Harvest Moon: Animal Parade there's one marriage candidate called the Witch Princess. She sometimes mentions that she doesn't seem to get along with the Harvest King. If you're married to her, you can hear her say, "If you were to be gone from this world... I wouldn't know what to do. It's frightening. So please don't leave my side." Also, when getting her wish for the Purple Bell, she'll say that she wants a potion or something that will pull the truth out of someone. Has she been betrayed before? Lied to? What if the Harvest King is related to all this?
* Health Hotline: After getting her knee brace, Grandma is much older than Ellie, but she's much faster.
* Gorgeous Carat has Florian, who is frequently shown getting lost. It becomes important to the plot, even. The other main character Ray realizes Florian has been kidnapped when the kidnapper tells him Florian left to go sightseeing, something he would obviously never do.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 has a team shot of the Guardians, Mantis, Nebula and Yondu after landing on the surface beneath Ego's core.
* Hazama, although other media in the franchise has shown other vessels such as Kazuma during the Dark War. Separated from his vessels, Terumi would not live very long — long enough, though.
* Hidamari Sketch, the girls visit a water park and go down a very high waterslide. Yuno screams the loudest of the four girls, and seems genuinely terrified as she goes down, but when she comes up out of the water, she's all smiles. "It wasn't as scary as I thought!"
* God-Emperor that leaves them in slightly better control of their powers but far more pliant.
* Habitat: "Edit Page" of tropes written by someone who uses American English * gun to school" censored on the radio edit and the MTV video version. The word "dick" not being censored (and "ass" not being censored two lines later) make it sound even worse.
* Highlander III: The Sorcerer long enough to trap him in the cave they are in.
* Guns N' Roses albums reads, "This album contains language which some listeners may find objectionable. They can F?!* OFF and buy something from the New Age section."
* He appears again in the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan to rescue Mason and Woods, but it's left unclear if it's just another hallucination or the real deal. Woods lampshades the absurdity of rescuing his old friend and then disappearing again without explaining where he's been all this time, but from what David said of it, Alex really did believe it was Reznov, and either way it is heartwarming to think that Alex still thinks of Reznov as his friend after all those years.
* Heroes Unlimited, Mutants and Experiments can potentially get their powers through exposure to radiation. Even prolonged exposure to small amounts of radiation can do the trick, as shown with the supervillain Gold Falcon in the "One Dam Thing" adventure: spend enough time standing next to a leaky microwave and you too can gain the power to fly and shoot blasts of electricity!

* HERZ but he was in love with Asuka and she was unable to win him over. The story starts out when she begins working in Shinji’s workplace.
* having the top half of his head blown off only to regenerate it. As expected, it looks pretty gruesome between then and when it's mostly done, showing brain and eyes at one point and later still not being fully covered in skin when he's defeated and being tortured by Hange.
* GURPS has Sonic Nauseators (pain and loss of bowel control) as well as the Neural Disruptors. Any Affliction with the "Agony" Enhancement does exactly this.
* Greebo. Horse himself believes he is the son of a Leather Jacket. And not just any leather jacket: one of the jackets of the local biker-gang (owners of his mother). Ah Horse, the only animal who could give Major the pig-dog what-for.
* God, the Devil and Bob: Bob actually ends up playing therapist to the two most powerful beings in the universe after God forgets the Devil's birthday. Once that's resolved, he browbeats them both into cleaning up the mess they made of his garden before his family gets home.
* Grand Theft Auto V. Michael is knocked unconscious so that he can infiltrate a hospital through the morgue. As he is waking up he hears a physician chat with his assistant about Michael's physical flaws, explaining how each is indicative of a different bad habit that probably contributed to his death.
* Gone to the Future: Going forward in time erases you from the timeline.
* Heroes. Sylar hesitates, then kills the bunny and they keep talking.
* Happy Heroes, one of the curses Merlin casts on Smart S. causes bird poop to fall on him.
* Good Night, and Good Luck., Joseph and Shirley Wershba have to keep their marriage secret from all their colleagues (most of whom know anyway), as the rules at the time do not permit a married couple to work together.
* Golden Sun features the continent of Tundaria as its analogue for Antarctica. The continent is entirely featureless except for a single tower containing a fragment of an ancient, demigod-killing weapon.
* He occasionally wonders if his aide Jurgen's faith leads him to believe every order, including latrine duty, is passed down from the Golden Throne itself. Then again, Cain has noted that the
* Guts vs Nightmare. Guts manages to destroy Nightmare/Night Terror, Inferno and Soul Edge, but he was forced into his Berserker Armor to do so. While not outright stated, it will eventually kill his sanity and physical body without anybody in the immediate area around to snap him out of it.
* Godslave, as Edith knows next to nothing about Egyptian mythology, Anpu is forced - to his dismay - to assume the position that this trope fulfills.
* Granted, Nintendo existed at the time... As a card company. And Standard Games (later SErvice GAmes) existed too. Not that they were well known, or did business in the UK at all.
* Gods of This New World Matt is this to Mello and Near—he spends all his time eating their food and playing video games rather than plotting with them on how to take out Kira.
* Hellsister Trilogy and destroy several worlds who did or might oppose him as he attempts to make himself one with his universe's essence of evil.
* Having said that, they experienced a very brief renaissance during the early stages of the recent recession, the most successful example being a subversion; rather than ambush an armoured van in transit, a party of robbers cut out the middleman and forced their way into the security firm's depot, driving off with several million pounds.
* Hawaii Five-0: Steve McGarrett started off as a charismatic leader with traits of headstrong leader, because he was the founding member of the newly formed Five-0 task force. As the series goes on, his headstrong leadership becomes less pronounced.
* He also mentions antigravity vehicles used by civilians. The Imperium of Man has yet to use

* Higurashi: When They Cry come out to celebrate their victory for the day!
* Hanamaru Kindergarten Sakura class has watched her fishmonger parents at work for long enough that she can do quite the sales shout herself.
* Hell Bound" featured a necromancer who used to buy bodies from Wolfram & Hart's grave robbing department and use them to create a scene of an old-fashioned tea party.
* Good Omens: They're about as far from being cops as you can get, but this is very much how Aziraphale and Crowley act when interviewing Mary Hodges.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix?" in the voice of the portrait of Sirius Black's mother. However, as Sirius orders Kreacher out of the room immediately afterwards, this was clearly meant to be said by Kreacher.
* Gossip Girl, who fell in love with Blair. When she denied him he found himself unable to perform with other women (thus deciding to use her as "sexual Drano" which didn't go so well). He bounced back and started sleeping around again until he and Blair actually became a couple.
* Haley Starshine dislikes being called a thief. She prefers "Freelance Wealth Redistribution Specialist".
* Halo: Reach introduced a Hologram armor ability, which sends a holographic copy of the player to wherever they're aiming at. There are no visual errors on the decoy unless it is shot or hit. If this ability is used properly, it can become quite annoying.
* Heimskringla's "Saga of King Harald Hardrada", where Harald fails to conquer the Kingdom of Denmark, even though he is almost always victorious in battle against his rival Svein Estridson. The trope is lampshaded and discussed later by Earl Tostig of England in conversation with Harald, when he points out that Harald's failure was solely because of his lack of favor with the Danes, who clung to the popular Svein in spite of defeat.
* Hc Svnt Dracones interplanetary travel takes a couple weeks and costs around a hundred credits (like a thousand bucks).
* Gmod from putting these two concepts together is not helped by the fact than Panis' catchphrase is "I am Panis Cupcake, I will eat you!".
* Gods and Warriors series, the House of the Goddess, the labyrinthine capital of Keftiu (Crete in real life), has been evacuated in response to a plague, but it's protected by a giant bull.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, Eglamore tells Annie, while punishing her for breaking Court rules, that she should try harder to avoid getting caught, as her mother would. Annie actually calls him out on it.
* Handel was half German, half Italian and half English. He was very large."
* Green Arrow After Oliver lost his fortune, the Arrow-Car became too expensive to keep and he decided to destroy it.
* Glenn Beck for defamation includes two of the journalists on his show — "Mr. Cheatwood" and "Mr. Weasel."
* Hecatomb with the card Midnight Snack, which basically invokes this trope. "What monster can resist stopping to kill teenagers making out?"
* Goosebumps episode "Say Cheese and Die - Again!", the character Greg wakes up and stretches his arms upward, only for his shirt to rip partially. Then he walks to the mirror and sees in horror that he's fat.
* H. G. Wells itself wasn't new; the idea of someone actually using technology to build a means of travelling forwards and backwards in time was, though.
* Hatchet to '80s slashers, turning all of the tropes of the genre up to their logical conclusion and playing many of them for laughs in the process. The actual killer, however, is played completely straight.
* He has met Jesus, in fact. When aliens got the entire history of Christmas wrong, he explains it was nothing like that, "I was there." Of course, we could never get to see that meeting on screen. Ten also mentions having been to the first Easter. We never do find out from him what really happened, though, due to his
* Hayate the Combat Butler. Hayate starts off trying to kidnap someone and ends up rescuing her instead.

* Godzilla: Final Wars has a reimagined version of the Planet X aliens basically pulling the exact same plan as the Kilaaks, but with the addition of a huge fleet of warships and fighter crafts just as dangerous as the monsters. Again, Ghidorah is the big gun pulled out during the climax.
* "Gone" is one of the show's most infamous examples. When SpongeBob wakes up in the beginning of the episode, he realizes that
* Globin is a planet-sized living thing; it has an intelligent, sentient civilization comprised of leukocytes traveling around Globin's bloodstream.
* Herbert the elderly child molester can go toe-to-toe with any horny anime grandpa in terms of doing things that would get you chemically castrated in real life but are laughed off as harmless.
* Gothic Novel, "She never appeared in public, nor mingled in private society, but kept herself apart, like the sweet bird that sings its solitary notes, shrouded and unseen." Christina Rossetti had to abandon a biography of her life due to a lack of information.
* he is consistently shown to not be racist, anti-Semitic, or homophobic and is disgusted that people think he is hates atheists.
* her selfishness meant that she often never considers what everyone else wants and instead, prefers that they do what she wanted to do. She is also shown to be quite insensitive to Dipper's feelings as despite the fact that she knows that Dipper is troubled, she still constantly picks on him. This flaw is what ultimately caused a rift between the two and allowed Bill to exploit her emotional state in order to directly cause Weirdmageddon.
* Hail, Caesar! depicts the filming of one of these on a studio lot. It's a big synchronised swimming number entirely in the pool, with the lead actress dressed as a mermaid.
* Gone fansite Gaiaphage.com, and Fayzians for fans of the series itself. That being said, most Fayzians are members of Gaiaphage, so the terms overlap a lot.
* GRIT had a villainous character named P-Word who often threatened to rip out people's spleens.
* Goldberg's 2016 return was so his wife and son could watch him wrestle. (He hadn't married or had his son until after his first retirement in 2004.)
* Gunnerkrigg Court. Her hounds, the Cwn Annwn, appear on the "Black Dogs of the British Isles" bonus page.
* Gungrave One cute note: Sherri, his daughter, was shown as a girl with a teddy bear with those glasses.
* happens. One of the points of rehearsals is to try and get it all out of your system so you don't do it during the show itself. Of course, getting it out of your system during rehearsal only helps so much. Sometimes the audience reaction only makes things worse. Especially if you have someone especially loud in the front row who cackles like a chicken at every joke. And, of course, things can still go hilariously wrong during the performance...
* Golden Sun, as an Adept of each element (Earth, Fire, Wind, Water) is required to enter the Elemental Lighthouses.
* Hate at First Sight: Two characters hate each other in their first meeting.
* Guilt by Association Gag: Punishing someone for what someone else has done can be considered this due to how unfair it is.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone Harry, Ron, and Hermione all squeeze together to keep Snape from noticing that they have a jar of probably illegal fire behind them to keep them warm. Unfortunately, Snape notices that they look guilty and comes over to punish them for something else.
* Heal It with Booze: Healing wounds with alcohol or using it as anasthaesia.
* Grim Prairie Tales. They now murder any black families who attempt to homestead in the region. Arthur is immediately dragged into their murderous activities.
* Golden Sun, cursed armor items cannot be removed unless a healer is paid to remove it for you.
* "Hell Bent", he is able to reconstruct most of what happened by the shape of the absence left behind.
* Grand Theft Auto V to teach entire classes of other fictional characters how to roast Franklin and his yee yee ass haircut. And the reason for all of this? Because Franklin wouldn't let Lamar come up in his crib.

* Gundam series, where there are more selfish and cruel people in the world than kind, noble and selfless ones.
* Hell And Back is arrested by the Basin City police, and as they reach his cell, he removes the handcuffs himself.
* Happy Heroes, the wolverine monster uses a speed-boosting apparatus on his tail, and the flames from it heat up a nearby man's wheelbarrow of corn cobs and turn them into instant popcorn.
* Hard-Drinking Party Girl: Hard partying socialites became a hot fixture in celebrity culture.
* Glen Cook, Garrett exits the witch Handsome's shop without asking her a question he should've. He immediately turns back, but the shop entrance has vanished. Garrett isn't surprised, figuring it serves him right to be denied a second chance to ask.
* Guilty Gear story ending, having taken a nervous Ky on a picnic and attempting to feed him heart-shaped chocolates with her chopsticks.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony (gay main character, gay supporting characters)
* High School Musical audition that are remotely capable of acting or singing on key... thus getting the lead roles. Though Darbus still ends up catching Troy and Gabriella singing a duet after auditions are over and decides she wants callbacks with them. Of course, this still begs the question of who is going to play the rest of the parts if nobody else in the entire school can sing or act without breaking pitch, being genuinely creepy, or locking up with stage fright.
* "greater than the current age of the universe" if the key is big enough (and P != NP).
* Hater and its sequels, a virus causes people to murder their loved ones and anyone else in their path. The local media even calls the infected people "haters."
* Harry Potter Comics. Afterwards they stuck around as displaced time clones.
* Hey Dude! - Kelly Brown (Brad), Geoffrey Coy (Kyle), Jonathan Galkin (Jake), Joe Torres (Danny), and Josh Tygiel (Buddy) - were amateur actors, and none of them have had any further screen credits since the series wrapped in 1991.
* He voiced Akechi Mitsuhide, one of Nobunaga's followers, in the otome game * heavily spoils the ending of season 5 (it involves Starlight Glimmer), she took to Twitter saying "Don't believe everything you read on the Internet."
* Hanna: Hanna, who usually shows no emotion and acts unruffled by things, begins to cry when a Utrax member pretends that they're her dad over chat as part of socialization training, remembering losing her real one.
* Gundam series will often have large groups of asteroids moved into high Earth orbit (usually in the Lagrange Points) to be used for raw materials in space construction.
* Go Animate, which was almost always related to cartoon characters getting in trouble (the "X gets grounded" videos are the most well-known of the crop). This had the side effect of turning the website into the laughingstock of the animation community. Eventually the staff tried to save face: first by more-or-less deleting their forums, which had become a hotbed of stupidity, and then by removing the casual subscription plans, leaving only the prohibitively expensive subscription plans as a way of trying to get their original demographic back on track. Even its Periphery Demographic has a Periphery Demographic as there's a strange circle of the video makers of the "Grounded" videos who like the videos made of those who mock their videos and vice versa.
* heard of that position. Did the missionaries not swing by here or—."
* Gravity Falls, though they're still planning to hide the supernatural from outsiders.
* Green-Eyed Monster: The stepmother can hate the stepdaughter's beauty on behalf of herself or her less-attractive daughters; older sisters (and brothers) frequently envy the success of younger sisters (and brothers)
* Hang Time since he's already married, both Julie and Kristy take the news well because each of them has found a new crush by then... except they have a crush on the same guy again.

* Godzilla. To be fair on Mark, Dr. Brooks says that what's happened to Vivienne is unprecedented even for Monarch.
* Heineken Light Beer try to drink the bottle of beer during the commercial. They explain to him that he is not allowed to drink the beer during the commercial. He keeps up trying to come up with ways to get around the restrictions, all of which are comically missing the point that no one is allowed to drink any sort of alcoholic beverages during American commercials.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy: Poltergeist Polterguy has to dodge a swarm of bats that emerge from a coffin in the underworld.
* Half-Blood Prince is a lesser example, an elderly, extremely vain woman who hangs desperately onto coquettishness and sweetness in an attempt to seduce Tom Riddle.
* Gross example: Larfleeze wants his own Guardian, so when our heroes encounter Scar — an evil, half-undead Guardian who serves the story's
* Happily Ever Before ends on a happy note by ending the story before things get tragic.
* Haven (2020) ExaNova colonized Source as an "external colony" of the Apiary to test an experimental power planet that extracted Flow from the planet's core and condensed it for easier transport. Due to ExaNova cutting corners and neglecting to replace a critical part, the plant failed catastrophically, fracturing the planet's surface into floating islets and corrupting the local fauna with a coating of Rust, all of the human colonists being either evacuated or killed by the incident. The Apiary's leader, whom Yu is betrothed to, is also named Ozias.
* Grim Fandango we see the Gold Guy turn into a skeleton, with the ray above also skeletonized.
* Growing Pains episode "The Home Show," the Seavers are having to set up a party at the last minute, because Jason used an old calendar to set the date. When a pizza is accidentally delivered to their house instead of the neighbors, Jason starts to tell the delivery guy his mistake, until Mike reminds him they need the food for the party. Jason thinks for a second then says, "We ordered five pizzas, not one, and that was 31 minutes ago, so they're free."
* Haywire, which otherwise averts this trope (the movie's Ireland and Spain settings were indeed filmed there), has New Mexico playing New York State.
* Golden Sun, Alex deals with the town's soldiers blocking the way while Jenna and Kraden are left to deal with the scruffy workers. The two mention, out loud, that they could easily handle them since they don't look so tough. Naturally, the workers get offended and call them out for being so rude.
* Helluva Boss, Stolas calls Blitzo over the phone over the matter of his grimoire. Blitzo demands to know in an aggressive tone what Stolas just called him, forcing Stolas to elaborate that he's referring to the spellbook Blitzo uses to go from Hell to the living world.
* Harry, Hermione and Sally sneak into a classroom for a private conversation, not knowing that it contains the Mirror of Erised.
* he snaps and loses his sense of reality. The fake Colonel Konrad he hallucinates is talking to him long after the real Konrad is dead actually calls him out for wanting to be a hero so badly that it blinded him to how much worse he was making everything.
* Great Mazinger the legendary duel between Tetsuya and Great General of Darkness. They were trying not only to kill each other but also out-ham each other.
* Guns Akimbo which was a pair of guns or swords. As opposed to, say, wielding two one-handed guns.
* Hell Night keeps calling her supposed romantic partner Seth "Wes", much to his annoyance.
* Heaven's Lost Property from episode two onwards. Most of them are covers by the anime's cast members, but episode five's song ("Yuke! Yuke! Kawaguchi Hiroshi") is a self-covered version by the original singer.
* Harry Markopolos spent years trying to convince the SEC that a well-connected genius investor was running a massive Ponzi scheme. They all ignored him until Bernie Madoff's fund collapsed. Some have pointed out his abrasiveness made his message harder to swallow (he once called the SEC staff "a bunch of idiots"). Others have pointed out it was well deserved.

* Gunslinger Girl: A 'Killing House' is shown on several occasions as the girls are trained for their roles as assassins.
* Harmless Villain, but he certainly fits the bill, due to use of Darkness spells and the wearing of Purple and Black.
* g the highest gravity planet inhabited by humans, with several minor characters being from there. San Martinos are much more classic examples of the trope — in its squat-but-wide form — noted for their prodigious strength and muscle mass, and tend to be quite tall as well. San Martin's gravity is actually so high that humans can't even survive at sea level: the increased air pressure makes the atmosphere toxic.
* Hallucinogenic drugs. Some are renowned for causing nightmarish trips, but even the nicer ones can cause bad trips if poorly prepared or spiked, or if the imbiber is unlucky enough to have a negative reaction. Notable examples include:
* God-Created Canon Foreigner: An adaptation features a new character created by the creator of the original work.
* Grease Monkey working on a space station, undergoing preparations for an alien invasion.
* Hellspark, has been extensively trained in cultural understanding and adaptation, so as to be able to speak to people with not only the right words but also the right gestures, customs, etc. to put them at ease. On top of this, she adds her own ingenuity to become a great diplomat, tricking people into doing the right thing. It's a common trait for Hellspark traders; a Hellspark of past centuries, Veschke, is worshiped in parts of the galaxy as the patron saint of thieves, conmen, traders, and other people who make their living from a fast brain and a fast mouth.
* Hägar the Horrible - the soup. Another time, she puts an amulet of love under his pillow. Which he falls in love with.
* HBO was canceled the day after the last episode of the first season aired.)
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle compliments Kumar's "manscaping", which was mentioned near the beginning of the movie.
* HI, BILLY MAYS...for miracle stain remover OxiClean, among many other things.
* Hellraiser: Bloodline follows three non-consecutive generations of the LeMarchand/Merchant family: Phillip LeMarchand in 1796 France, John Merchant in 1996 Manhattan, and Paul Merchant on a space station in 2127.
* Glee showed why it's a good idea: Kurt's NYADA application was analyzed to find a number which fans called, finding a real household at the end. Oops.
* Highwaymen: After Fargo's defeat, the protagonist initially considers leaving as his quest for revenge is over (Fargo previously murdered his wife). He and Molly seem to get together just before the end credits.
* Happens to Billy at the end of two episodes: "Spidermandy" and "Wrath of the Spider Queen".
* Halo 4 had Steve Downes and Jen Taylor recording Master Chief and Cortana's scenes together, a first given Downes usually recorded in his native Chicago rather than the Seattle where the games were made (the actors had also only met each other shortly before).
* Gorillaz' floating windmill ends up being shot down by pirates in the video for "El Manana".
* Gundam Wing: Gundam Team vs. World Nation vs. White Fang. Though eventually, the Gundams decide to side with the World Nation, mainly because White Fang is the actual threat. Though Wufei ended up fighting Treize, the World Nation's leader, anyway.
* Graduate Meeting of Mutual Killing, was a nice woman who hadn't shown any kind of lewd thoughts of behavior towards anybody. However, when a body search on what is implied to be her love interest (which seems mutual), she instantly jumped into the chance to grope him all over. It reached a point where Akane Ogata, who was restraining the person being searched, reprimanded her to control her lust.
* Grimm Fairy Tales fights a villainess called Madame Medusa, who uses a gorgon's eye to petrify actresses and models and turn them into exhibits for her private gallery. She tries to do this to Robyn.

* Hetalia: Axis Powers. According to the author, the only thing keeping him from dominating Europe is that he's just too afraid to.
* Hellblazer fellow magicians to gain their power and memories (and uses hyenas and baboons as attack dogs).
* GUN×SWORD to work with on a moral and pragmatic level. They do eventually join forces, but on terms more agreeable to Van.
* Here There Be Monsters killed Billy's relationship with his erstwhile girlfriend Cissie Summerly. Billy could not commit himself totally to their relationship because he would not reveal his hero identity; and it did not help that Cissie grew older whereas his powers ensured he never did.
* group reacts this way when Corazon, the leader of the Veela, implies Harry's gay. For the next few minutes, Jessir can't even look at Corazon without breaking into laughter again.
* Goodman, Lieber, Kurtzberg & Holliway, the law firm that employed
* Half-Life 2 convenient way of disposing of zombies - strategically placed gas pipes and a stray bullet equals crispy zombies and headcrabs. The fire doesn't instantly kill them, and zombies don't flee from pain so they'd often keep coming for you, on fire, as the host screams in agony. This can, in fact, do more harm than good for tougher zombies, since not only will their melee attacks give you fire damage now, some, such as the poisonous ones, can survive until the flames die down. The trick works flawlessly against Combine soldiers, however (they'll remain in place trying to bat the flames out), as hard as it may be to pull it off.
* Hellsing recycled from his previous works, but the plot of the first chapter as well.
* Green Lantern let them speak any language (with extremely rare exceptions when the ring doesn't recognize the language), which is useful, considering that they are something akin to a galactic police force.
* Gustav Vasa of Sweden started out as this. Daring escapes, peasant rallying, and
* Hero-san and Former General-san fetishist willing to interrupt her own allies when she sees it, one is an otaku, and one is functionally the otaku's caretaker. Only two villains are legitimately threatening: the co-protagonist who defected in the first chapter, and X, the leader of the organization. Unlike the others, X is cunning and ruthless, constantly having the upper hand, willing to get her hands dirty, and very willing to play the long game. Even when she loses, she appears to take it completely in stride and is more amused by it than upset. Even when she just shows up to take the main character on a dinner date to learn more about her and has no ulterior motives, she's significantly more threatening than the other three villains while fighting.
* Happened in a a Christian direct-to-video movie about a talking puppy named Spunky in the episode "Circus Adventure", where the circus animals break loose.
* Granblue Fantasy: Korwa is obsessed with the idea of happy endings, and often tries to orchestrate melodramatic or cliched scenes into happening. This does have a more positive angle as well, however; she's the one, alongside Tweyen, who gently encourages Carren to get in touch with her parents and try to understand their position, because she knows that Carren permanently falling out of contact with her parents can only lead to regret later in Carren's life.
* Hey Dad..! had an episode about a diet, or a hunger strike, or something, that ended with the starving characters giving up and ordering pizza — which then never arrives, because one of the other characters deliberately misdirects the delivery guy in an attempt to get the pizza free.
* Hercules: The Animated Series, Icarus almost kisses his beloved Cassandra while both are brainwashed... until she realizes there's a huge saliva drop and snaps out of it.
* "Have you ever seen an elephant hiding behind a lamppost?" "No." "They're so damn good at hiding..."
* goggles over their eyes). Can be justified by the same reasons as the American army example above.

* Heavy Rain: The clues start coming together in the last act for the characters (and, by extension, the player) this way.
* Happōsai is one of the series' most powerful martial artists, and the man responsible for teaching Hinako Ninomiya her draining technique. However, he's such a
* He's a villain, yes. But there's no doubt that General Grievous was also a badass. Consider, when the man's cloak holds at
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child also contrasts with them both, being an orphan with no relatives or friends to be comforted by.
* Hamilton, King George III is hilariously malevolent every single time he appears. His sole functions in the story are to provide commentary for ongoing events in America at three points, each time to the exact same British music hall-style tune; witness America's devolution into partisanism under President John Adams (good luck!), and help pass out copies of the Reynolds pamphlet.
* God, the final boss is ageless and completely impossible to kill, though not impossible to damage. The damage just doesn't stick. After being beaten in a fight, he'll just stand back up again and keep going.
* Heroes for Hire sneak in some appreciative glances her way during it.
* Heart Of The Sunken Lands. If two of the monsters known as Purples are encountered, they will be a mated pair. One quarter of mated pairs will have a cub with them. If so, each Purple will make attacks at +4 "to hit" while the cub is present.
* Harry Turtledove books and their sequels. When humans start building spacecraft of their own, the ranks they use are Army ranks, and ship commanders are called Commandants. Even the use of the word "ship" for a spacecraft is lampshades by a Chinese peasant woman, who hears a male of the Race refer to the craft in this manner, wonder why he says that about a "plane-that-never-comes-down", since it flies instead of swimming. It's also strange that a race that has never had a wet navy in their history (due to being from a desert world) would call a spacecraft a "ship".
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) that he was about to say, "By the way, Teela, remind me to show you my new vest." Teela, of course, concludes that Adam is an even bigger idiot than she thought... but still doesn't figure out there's more going on.
* Godzilla: The Planet Eater, enabling them to communicate telepathically and to induce visions and hallucinations.
* Hannah Montana: A judge tells the defendant he'd have a chance to explain himself but later he whispers to Miley and Lily he actually won't.
* Halo, fit the bill neatly. A list of the Forerunners' works include:
* Global Agenda — you're still competitive at lower levels, and the game is still extremely fun, but there are some game modes and aesthetic armors that it will take forever to unlock if you don't pay.
* Good Omens, one of them congratulated the other on a bit both were absolutely sure they didn't write. They suspected the book had begun writing itself when they weren't looking.
* Good News Week were taking about Elvis and his habit of shooting tvs.
* He doesn't do anything wrong in the film until his conversation with Marta when it's clear he's threatening
* He and Pikachu both die in Kanto when he's trying to get a Pokemon to defeat Sabrina with. It's unspecific it they literally died but it at least seems like they did.
* H-Game has the main character, Yusuke, doing pretty much everything he can to get into his stepmother's pants. However, he also has a stepsister, Shiina. In order to get the better endings (here defined as ones where you don't turn into a total bastard), you need to treat Shiina well, making her into one of these. Even when he's being a dick, Yusuke still refers to Shiina in kind terms.
* has one, which is surprising given the city's small size. The subway opened in 1927 but was plagued by inadequate resources and the growth of the automobile industry. It was closed after World War II but its wonderfully creepy ambiance (complete with an underground pool and pitch-black passages with no natural light) has made it a favorite of urban explorers and photographers. It's also homeless central.

* Hero: The Guardian Smurf, due to a combination of Smurfette's uncontrolled infatuation with Hero and Hero's own powers, Smurfette starts developing breasts and is in a passionate desire to mate with Hero. After her sexual energy has been expended, though, Smurfette still has her breasts and decides to keep them.
* High School Musical shows them getting ready in similarly colored bathrooms. Also, Sharpay is shown to ride a bright pink convertible, while Ryan has a blue motorbike.
* has a number of Easter Eggs hidden around the site, which can be discovered by searching for images of one of the characters, Mike.
* Harmony Theory, Nightmare Umbra's undead minions can only be destroyed by crushing their skulls. They regenerate from anything else, including decapitation.
* Gríma Wormtongue was corrupted by Saruman who was corrupted (somewhat indirectly) by Sauron who was corrupted by Melkor. Suffice it to say, Tolkien was fond of this trope.
* Greyfriars series, and any other school story penned by Frank Richards. The message to the readership is clear: don't gamble, drink, smoke, lie, cheat, sneak, steal, go out of bounds, consort with ruffians, refuse to do your lines, mercilessly provoke the mentally feeble, gang up on people in fights, or steal other people's cakes. Just don't. Go outside and play cricket instead.
* Helix, and his sharing the discovery with CDC veterinary pathologist Doreen, take place in snowy arctic daylight, the better to notice that many died in terror.
* High School D×D will corrupt and ruin the popular, pleasant Kiba. Issei dismisses this with "Settle down, will you? I promise not to steal his pimp juice." Fans of the Legitimate Romance arc between Issei and His paramours and the greater lorebuilding the story does largely find the Dub of the series unwatchable as a result, as the Gag-dub-isms are that egregious with regards to how madly it misrepresents their characterization and takes to 11 Issei's perverted interests and drowns out how he actually tries to earn the respect and affection of others once they look past that...as in the dub, there IS nothing past him being a letch.
* High King Torygg aside, Roggvir is fated to die whether you choose to intervene or not.
* Heralds of Valdemar. (She is.) To counter his physical response to her, he concentrates on the monthly chore of scrubbing out the reservoir in his privy.
* Harry Potter Mrs. Figg, and Cornelius Fudge are just a few examples of characters whose first appearances were rather innocuous, if not downright unimportant, but who would become much more relevant later on. Rowling's penchant for this sort of thing led to her publicly apologizing when a throwaway character had the same last name as Harry's mother; though he really was just a random character, the fandom had grown so used to innocuous characters becoming important, especially those with noteworthy names, that there was major speculation about what role he would play in the future books.
* have been known to do bizarre things up to and including kill themselves or other people while under the influence of the stuff, but then again, alcohol can do that too...
* Go! Go! Nippon! is a visual novel made in Japan specifically for the foreign market, and its main character (unnamed and featureless, since it's a stand-in for the player himself) is an otaku coming from an unnamed, but definitely Western, country.
* Greek Mythology called Erebus, who was the primordial god of shadows and darkness (and whose name was also used for the underworld, stemming from the fact the place was a mostly a gloomy, shadowy land of eternal night.)
* Happy Heroes dog repress his habit of chasing after things thrown in the air. After Lele seemingly fails to do so, a saddened Happy S. throws a dog bone he had gotten him as a gift into the sky; at the end of the episode, about five minutes after he does this, the bone comes back and hits him on the head.
* Green-Skinned Space Babe could alter their beloved's presence in some way only detectable to their kind to advertise the bearer as their chosen mate...

* He also wrote at least one story about cave-dwelling humans who degenerated into savage monsters.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys. Second, he is ordered to stand with a platform full of rocks on his back for one hour without dropping any. He meditates again and passes. Last, he is thrown into a pit with a wild boar and must stay in for three hours without bleeding. He hypnotizes the boar to make it fall asleep, but when the time is up and he is allowed to climb out, he accidentally cuts his hand. The king declares him guilty despite his protests and sentences him to the guillotine. Fortunately, Hercules arrives with Autolycus and the stolen item.
* Herbivores Are Friendly: Plant-eating animals are harmless and docile.
* Gunslinger Girl of the group, which makes her mercilessly beating full-grown adults to a bloody pulp all the more eerie.
* Guilty Gear Xrd went to great lengths to make them look like traditional 2D sprite work, to the point of using limited frames of animation without any noticeable tweening. Of course, the effect is so good that the game just about plays the trope straight with the backgrounds, which can look somewhat conspicuously 3D compared to the characters.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, in "Residential", when the Queslett students band together to find out where their classmates have been disappearing to—and to get some payback on the ones kidnapping them—following a plan devised by the normally-asocial Antimony.
* Granblue Fantasy). This distracts him enough to let her knock him out of the ring in one hit. Aliza, who is watching the fight, isn't amazed by this tactic.
* He loses it once he realizes his men are retreating. He also loses his steely resolution when alone with Melisandre in the leadup to his offensive, admitting to her that he cannot succeed without the soldiers his brother Renly stole from him.
* Hal tries to do this on Lois' birthday when he learns that the boys (like himself) forgot about it. While in their room, he yells disapprovals to them while whispering about how he needs their help. Unfortunately, when Malcolm speaks, he gets mixed up, and:
* Ha'tak before. This isn't an ordinary Ha'tak (which has a pyramid shape) but a much larger circular mothership.
* Haku Yowane and Neru Akita are fan-created Vocaloids that have been acknowledged by Crypton as semi-official, to the point that they've made regular appearances in Miku's rhythm game series,
* Glee that they're going to keep getting back together, but you have to wonder why they keep doing it.
* Guild Wars 2. Despite taking place in Kryta, whose populace was primarily brown-skinned in the past, the majority of humans are now white. This is especially odd as Kryta is supposed to be a melting pot of refugees from all the previously mentioned nations yet the only sign of their presence is the architecture.
* her presumed death in the Fright Zone (and a fair bit of Catra hinting at her being tortured into compliance),.
* Guild Wars illusion-weavers who are currently harvesting the souls of specific individuals to power the seal on an entrance to the realm of a very real and very evil god. And they're not doing this because it's necessary for the greater good; they just want to make sure they themselves stay alive.
* Gorillaz prior to the accidents which gave him his "2 Dents". It could be worse; his father had the family surname legally changed from "Tusspot" after a lifetime of teasing.
* Hades becomes even more sore when he realizes, too late, that Hercules'
* GURPS Thaumatology: Alchemical Baroque features talking cats. They're not magical or anything; some cats in the "Known Lands" are just naturally sapient, to some extent, and a few of them can talk.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys. The setting's so vague that you can pretty much just brand it "The Past" and be done with it.
* Harry Potter films also have a number of aurors, Order of the Phoenix members, and ministry of magic workers who are often seen wearing trench coats and long coats, often as business attire.

* hidden injuries, says that Ilya Bryzgalov, after having his contract bought out with seven years remaining, might have hurt himself because of "the body-shaped hole in the wall he left behind while sprinting the hell out of Philadelphia".
* Gold Digger. Then again, several of them not only acknowledge this fact, but proceed to use it as part of the process to remedy his phobia of felines.
* Heaven's Lost Property, Tomoki does this since the first episode where he uses an invisibility cloak to peep on Sohara changing. And this is arguably one of his tamer examples. One more memorable is when assemble a sort of "scope pipe peeping system" to spy on the town's girl population!
* Heroes, set five years after, showed the extensive consequences of doing so.
* Half-Life 2 and its episodic sequels hijack worlds across dimensions rather than space, but the idea is the same. The native life-forms are used to construct bio-organic combat units, the most successful of which are exported to use on the next world; humanity seems to be in the process of becoming the new fodder units as the game opens. The physical material of the planet itself is also exploited: supplemental material explains the barren coastal areas in the game are a result of the Combine teleporting away a fair fraction of the Earth's ocean water over the past decade, lowering global sea levels by several feet.
* Heat, the central character on each side - Robbery Homicide Lieutenant Vincent Hanna and master thief Neil MacCauley - are both former Marines.
* Götz von Berlichingen, a German knight in the 1500s who lost a hand at 24 but with an articulating prosthesis continued to fight in several wars over a 47-year career.
* Greek deals with this quite often due to the rivalry between the Kappa Taus and Omega Chi (with each house separately embodying a different side of the frat stereotype, the slovenly party boys and the uptight preppies respectively).
* Higurashi: When They Cry) after suddenly remembering traumatic details from the very first arc. In the second season, we're introduced to the character that keeps pressing the Reset Button.
* Golden Age romance spoof "Flob Was a Slob!" had everyday American girl Ramona Snarfle choosing between her childhood friend, Sheldon Flob, who'd rather be chasing butterflies, and handsome, adventurous Rackstraw Him, who happens to also be a drug pusher and philanderer.
* Good Satan involves a camera crew following Satan to a party being hosted in Heaven.
* Helios is a merger of Daedalus and another evil AI, Icarus. Presumably the villains were under the impression this would make it loyal to them, but Helios still retained Daedalus's understanding of who the true villains were. Though far more ruthless and convinced
* Green Wing, and (as he was in his working gear) try to make it look like he was meant to be there. (Actually, he dived in after Sue White set his arm on fire, but the effect was similar. It's that sort of show.)
* Gulliver's Travels Know-Nothing-Know-It-Alls. They devote their entire lives to math, music, philosophy, astronomy, and politics, failing at each one spectacularly.
* Hägar the Horrible, tax cheats and other offenders frequently end up hanging from the wall by their wrist chains.
* Heir to the Empire, Mara Jade knows perfectly well what the leaves of a certain vine do to human skin, and brushes Luke's arm with the tip of one to prove how it will be a useful disguise element, much to his dismay. She takes great delight in how it hurts and then itches, and asks if he wants her to apply it or he'd rather do it himself. He'd rather do it himself. When Imperials find them, one asks what the hell happened to his face, and he grunts "Walked into a bush."
* Have a Nice Death: When the player character dies, the video games plays their demise for laughs.
* Harlan Ellison. When he's not wearing the red suit, Kris looks and acts something like James Bond. And the red suit's got body armor, rockets in the boots to jump long distances, machine guns, and high-pressure flamethrowers up the sleeves....

* Hayate the Combat Butler, starring a Taiwanese actor and a Korean actress as the counterparts of Hayate and Nagi.
* Heroes's eyebrows are so prominent. In the episode "Five Years Gone", when Sylar is using an illusion to disguise himself as Nathan Petrelli, who is president, Zach recorded Nathan's lines so that Adrian Pasdar would know how to say them, but the episode got to a point where Sylar!Nathan cocks his head to the side and stares at Mohinder, which didn't look right because this trope was missing, since Adrian Pasdar can't cock his eyebrow like that.
* Harry Potter. Binns actually is not forbidden from entering the afterlife - he simply is oblivious of his own death, thus why he still is around. Once finally being made aware of it (not easy) he is relieved and announces his retirement before vanishing to what lies beyond. The other ghosts ponder the ramifications of this revelation.
* Helluva Boss: Blitzo and Millie are captured by Satanists who attempt to send the imps back to Hell by tying them to a stake, dousing them in gasoline, and setting them alight. After a tense moment they turn out to be perfectly fine, so the Satanists decide to try shooting them in the head, which Blitzo admits would work better.
* Golan the Insatiable, Golan goes to a waterpark intending to "accidentally" run into his crush Alexis. Golan feigns surprise when they meet there.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City similarly has you assassinating someone and your goal is to make it look like a car accident. Of course, in practice it's less an 'accident' and more 'relentlessly hounding the person until you make their car explode'.
* Harold and Maude is an unusual example in that she's about 60 years older than the man. A vivacious, eccentric and well-traveled woman, she teaches Harold to live life to the fullest and get over his morbid obsession with death.
* Harriet Tubman, who escaped from slavery and helped bring other slaves to safety in the Northern states in what was known as the Underground Railroad. Thousands of others did the same thing in the early 1800s.
* Harry Turtledove series is like our Earth, except the east coast of North America broke off millions of years ago and became its own continent, unsettled and devoid of land mammals until its discovery in the 1400s. Despite this, history continues as normal until Atlantis is discovered, with at least one Native American group living in the same geographic location despite the radically different geography.
* Grrl Power has it as one of her power-suits to max out. When another speedster "Mach the Knife" shows up, Maxima (who just observed to see how her team of superheroes was faring without her) offers to fight against him before he can wreck havock.
* Hawke's sister Bethany is a non-love interest Cutie in playthroughs where she survives the prologue. She's sweet and affectionate, and one of the only two companions to get along with everyone in the group.
* Heralds of Valdemar: In one of the Tarma and Kethry short stories, two kidnapped girls drop shreds of white silk out of the wagon they're being transported in. The silk is invisible against the snow the wagon is rolling through, but leaves traces of their scent that Tarma's kyree familiar Warrl can follow.
* hates being weak and coddled, so this drives her to recover far faster than she otherwise would. When Tyrian fails a mission, she simply tells him "you disappoint me" and does nothing else; she knows that since he worships her slavishly, this will drive him insane with grief. Leo is an otherwise good man but also a coward; him she keeps in line with threats and physical violence, usually delivered as casually as if she were commenting on the weather.
* H. G. Wells the Moon, ruled by the Grand Lunar, who holds that office by virtue of having the biggest brain. It is noted in-universe that Lunars conduct eugenics to produce Lunars specific to a societal purpose.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers has a couple of strips which detail the story of England's privateers. Basically, England found a few pirates that were causing him trouble, and told them to "go beat up that Spain guy". They did, allowing England to get the upper hand over Spain. Whenever Spain complained to England, he would just apologize and say that the pirates were causing him trouble, too. That is, until Spain went over to England's house and saw him giving medals to the privateers. Whoops.

* has evil spirits called "vices" that are essentially personifications of various kinds of negative personality traits, such as apathy or deception.
* Harry, of all people, gives a rather dark one in chapter 61, when he's talking about his disgust for the world's prejudices and pointless cruelties, and how he could potentially use his powers to forcibly change things. It's cut short, and he's horrified afterwards, when an
* Grinchmas being a stage show, the scene when the Grinch lifts all the Whos supplies off the edge of Mount Crumpit is cut for this reason. This is also lampshaded when the Grinch asks the Narrator to skip past the parts of the story that would require the Grinch to do extensive physical work.
* Hey Arnold! a number of names ("throw pillow", "cream puff", "tea cozy") that come across as G-rated homophobic slurs.
* Grant Morrison. That said, theirs was the most aimless crime spree imaginable.
* Gunsmith Cats they used recordings of each gun being used that they made themselves.
* Hell's Kitchen himself himself has retweeted her Youtube videos. One of the contestants,Barret, even temporarily took over "Underground" after Katie's mom (who appeared in some of Katie's interviews with the contestants) unexpectedly passed away.
* Happens to one of the two dogs that were constantly pursuing Edgar during their first chase scene from
* Harry Potter tortures students in detention by forcing them to write lines in their own blood. With a magical quill that carves the words into the backs of their hands.
* Halo, to wipe the galaxy clean of anything the Flood could infect, including themselves.
* Harry Harrison planets. This journey is treated like an airplane trip—he buys a ticket, annoys the woman in the seat next to his a bit (to ensure he'll be pigeonholed as "male, brash, annoying" and thereby confused with every other brashly annoying male), and then falls asleep in his seat until the ship reaches its destination.
* Gotham amount of haggling to get any kind of relief airlifted in. And even that attempt gets derailed by Bane and his mercenary army.
* Gunsmith Cats via bomb and Rally gets a Mustang II as a replacement that gets only slightly better luck.
* Harry Harrison the phrase "Ich möchte ein Einzelzimmer mit Bad im ersten Stock!" is translated in a footnote as "I spotted a door behind the throne, so grab onto me and we can escape that way." The real meaning is "I want a single room with a bath on the first floor".
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: The strip where Italy gets a request to "keep his eyes open longer than 10 minutes"
* Highschool of the Dead, and we'll probably never know how their relationship turned out.
* Harry Potter Comics has Sheriff Ned, a Muggle who is immune to mind spells. Other types of magic work, but his memory of magical events can't be erased or altered, leading to an alliance with Harry Potter and the other aurors.
* Half-Life has huge manta ray-like alien fliers who at some points in the game drop alien grunts. In
* Grand Theft Auto V, an orbital cannon was made available as a purchasable utility for your high-tech facility, enabling you to use it as surveillance across all corners of the map, or as its function as an instant kill weapon by firing on your target from high above. But, you will need $500k to fire a manual shot or, if you so choose to leave the reins to the game, pay $750k to autotarget your choice of players in the lobby and let the cannon do the rest for you. On top of that, there's a long cooldown period before it can be used again, and you can only use it from a command post in the facility.

* Harry Potter are characterized by Voldemort's regime as "criminal and terroristic".
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys when the time comes to play out the myth of Cupid and Psyche. According to the legends, Psyche was the most beautiful woman in existence, so much so that Aphrodite herself was jealous of her beauty, though the episode makes it clear that the "real" story has nothing to do with their looks.
* Heart of Dragon) until Dodo is alone and left at mercy of the pissed-off manager.
* Guardians can do this when they combine their powers. It's enough to level skyscrapers.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows Rowling admits that she rejected the latter pretty quickly, though, since "Quest" sounded corny.
* Guild Wars: The tables of ranks of the Sunspears and the Order of Whispers in the Nightfall campaign.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, Nagi orders something from Amazon and it is delivered in 30 minutes. Lampshaded by Hayate and Maria, who wonder when Amazon started offering that service.
* GLOW. She was seen eating two at once at practically every show she was on.
* Gunnerkrigg Court on page 153, when Mort tries to sneaks up on Kat and Annie sneaks up on him.
* He also ends "Donald Gets Drafted" peeling spuds, while the last verse of the specially-made song "The Army's Not The Army Anymore" plays sarcastically in the background:
* Guards! Guards! use this every single time they talk, usually of the "random 3rd person keeps ranting while everyone else moves on" variety.
* has been criticized (in addition to Rebecca's mother, Doflamingo's mother, Law's sister and Senor Pink's wife).
* Glyph was known as one of the most beautiful mods ever created in Celeste. It features detailed rooms, four B-side maps, and its own soundtrack.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) it was usually either Bow or Madame Razz as the butt of the end-of-episode joke.
* HERZ: In chapter 5 Misato orders an assault against a SEELE installation, and she reiterates -regretfully- that her troops mustn't give quarter or take prisoners:
* Hades, Aphrodite is one of the Olympian gods who can offer boons to Zagreus to help him escape. Her boons are focused around applying either the Weak status effect, which reduces damage dealt by enemies, or the Charm effect which makes enemies briefly fight alongside Zagreus. Her boons also offer very high damage boosts to Zagreus' attacks. She is explicitly described as one of the most dangerous of the Olympians, and if Zagreus angers her she will bombard him with very accurate and persistent projectiles.
* He also does it in "Let's Play Danger Island Survivor" after finding out that the last challenge of Kaeloo's game show consists of avoiding cute little harmless sheep, despite being called "
* Good luck hearing The Beatles' catalogue the same way after reading and listening to some of the examples
* Harry Potter calls it "splinching" when pieces get left behind during Apparation, and it is caused by a lack of concentration on the entire object to be apparated (most often, oneself). Although magic healing is easily available most of the time, a particularly bad splinch could cause you to bleed to death.
* Gossip Girl with Blair, because although she's manipulated and insulted him too, Chuck's actions are generally more damaging.
* he'd reject doing voicework for comedy). He supposedly got quite angry when he found out what he'd done the work for.
* Hayate the Combat Butler in these types of situations doesn't help, either.
* Gödel, Escher, Bach: An Eternal Golden Braid than the dialogues.
* Hamilton, there are some suggestions Hamilton believes he's done this in choosing Eliza over Angelica due to Angelica stepping aside, such as describing her as his "dearest". However, he later comes to realize that Eliza is the "best" wife.
* Green Bay Packers coach Vince Lombardi never said, "Winning isn't everything, it's the only thing". The quote was actually from UCLA Bruins football coach Red Sanders. What Lombardi actually said was "Winning isn't everything. The will to win is the only thing." He often claimed he was misquoted.

* Hero House gives us Skeletor and Hordak, who prove to be oddly effective.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince be able to feel their destruction, which in the film he does.
* Harry gives his Triwizard tournament win money to Fred and George as a business loan at the end of the fourth book but doesn’t tell anyone but them because he doesn’t want to offend the rest of the family. He finally has to Ron and Hermione a year later because they thought Fred and George had done something illegal to get the money.
* Guild Wars and its sequel have seen this occur in various locations.
* Grand Theft Auto level and the latter being built around a series of heists.
* Grave Encounters 2, the hospital seems to be specifically B, and may be alive in its own right, with the goal to have other unwary people enter its doors just to torment them horribly. From crushing a skull to painfully slow electrocution, the hospital has no limits.
* Heroes of the Storm, though it's deliberately left unclear what counts as the former versus the latter.
* Hell is this in some interpretations, like "eternal separation from God". Believers consider this to be terrifying enough.
* has a kind side and often chooses what is more important instead of riches, but later, becomes even greedier to the point that they even sacrifice friends and family just for a few more pennies.
* Haou Airen and now he wants to "repay" her via making her his concubine.
* He also once makes a kangaroo ball — the kind that you sit on and bounce around — out of the same stuff that superballes are made of. The final panel reads like he died committing this stunt — it claims that the last person to see him was a flight attendant in a plane several miles off the ground. Thankfully for him, the
* Heffalumps and Woozles are corruptions of "Elephant" and "Weasel", respectively, and Christopher Robin was once thought to be going to
* Hades reveals that Korb had originally intended to only provide the scratch voices for both characters, but the team ended up liking his performances better than the actors who had auditioned for those roles.
* Guts himself has shades of this, due to his feelings towards Casca he gets angry that she blames him for Griffith’s injuries and Guts bitterly laments to Judeau that Casca will never look past Griffith. Even after Guts is proved wrong and gets a
* Henry Kissinger noted with regards to this war and guerrilla warfare in general that "the guerrilla wins if he does not lose; the regular army loses unless it wins." Ironically, in this case the guerrillas
* Halo: First Strike knows to extract significantly higher performance out of the gear on a captured Covenant cruiser.
* Grant George among others, has little to no social media presence and rarely appears at cons. He abandoned his original Twitter around 2014 and focused a lot more on working with his wife Jessica, who is also a voice actress. They made a joint Twitter shortly after, but it was suddenly suspended without any reason given. He's made a tiny handful of posts since then but appears to prefer keeping his personal life private. That said, he still does voice work.
* Hannibal in season 1 when the show is more episodic, and less often later.
* he — he re-entered the NFL's supplemental draft in 1987 and was picked by the Los Angeles Raiders.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged Klan members. Their leader, Jed Forrest, gets unceremoniously headshot by Alucard promptly before he deals with the other knights and Millennium both.
* Hamilton has Thomas Jefferson do one of these at the end of his solo during the first Cabinet Battle. James Madison catches it for him.
* Heart of Darkness-attacks, leaving them momentarily stuck in the wall. Waiting a few seconds or shooting them again causes them to fly around like deflated balloons.

* Harboured & Encompassed fic) has a male to female Gender Flip. Midshipman (No First Name) Clayton becomes Hannah Clayton who is Archie's neighbour.
* Green Day, especially between Mike and Billie Joe, who have known each other since middle school and lived together as teens. Tre quickly assimilated into the group after their first drummer left, and they've been like brothers ever since for over 20 years.
* Green Jacket (2002) — 31 years. The former involves the magician Pycal's introduction, while the latter has him trying to get revenge for what happened in the former.
* Gor the river town of Ar's Station use this to supplement their navy. Ar is a land superpower but doesn't have much of a navy, so they fill their holds with infantrymen and swarm their enemy's ships when they get boarded, capturing the ship and then using it against the enemy's other vessels.
* Goofy short "Olympic Champ". The Goof's attempt at the hammer throw results in him drilling himself into the ground, hurdles tangled on the hammer. An oil gusher lifts him up into the air, the hurdles falling to form a derrick.
* Goth Morino even went to the extent of wearing the clothes they found near a mutilated and decayed body, just to see what it feels like.
* Harlem Globetrotters cartoon show where the team is put in an unusual playing venue and they fall hopelessly behind in the first half. However, the team always finds a way to even the odds, and suddenly they are invincible in the second half and win.
* Happy Feet is mostly CGI, but near the end, live-action humans are superimposed into the scenes.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try, Team Angelfish looks up and sees the silhouettes of the Try Fighters' Gundams through the snow and mist, walking slowly towards them with their eyes glowing...
* Happy Heroes: In Season 2 episode 21, the text in the end credits is incorrectly timed, causing it to appear over the various clips that play in the credits several times.
* Gods and Warriors and Hylas himself lampshade how stupid he was not to wait out the storm even though he has experienced many snowstorms in the Lykonian mountains.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony who were lost in the big city and easier to seduce, and claims that gay culture has lost its touch now that growing numbers of gay men are settling down, getting married, raising kids, and becoming "normal".
* Grijpstra and de Gier series by Janwillem van de Wetering: The Commissaris, a superficially sweet, elderly man with a pet turtle.
* he steal cash and valuables, of which it is easier to take a dimmer view.
* Green Lantern, and effectively becomes this as he can travel through hyperspace.
* Good Morning, Vietnam: "I recommend we issue a 24-hour pass..." To get Cronauer out of the way, he was assigned to interview soldiers in the field, but the only way to get to the location was a road known to be hostile due to 36 hours of Viet Cong control.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows. A tragic mishap snaps Dumbledore out of this phase and he becomes for the rest of his life a committed anti-Dark Arts activist and philanthropist.
* hadn't read the texts yet. Castle even mentions, "It's a good thing we subpoenaed your phone records when I had this crazy lyric idea," even though the lyrics had nothing to do with getting the phone records in the first place. It was mentioned that they were coming before he started combing through lyrics.
* has one given by Kuushou (aka Kyuubi) to Sarutobi. He explains that destroying his body is the worst possible thing Sarutobi could do, as the last time he had broken out of his seal, it had been in the Land of Wind, which promptly turned from a fertile grassland into a barren desert. He further rips him apart by calmly informing him that every death that occurred during his "attack" had been because they attacked him first, as he was bound by law not to attack unless it was in self-defense.

* H2. She can be a bit silly at times but her true ditziness is only her clumsiness; she even carries bandages around because she keeps hurting herself.
* Hawaii Five-O, Steve plays and replays one part of a taped conversation between himself and a man who plans to kill someone else, but who is giving Steve a chance to figure out who the intended victim is and protect him. Steve thinks there might be something significant about what the man said, and he's right.
* Guitars. Sometimes you need to change the key based on your singer. Works simple, right? Just replace the chords. Until you remember the fact that you need to accommodate the open strings. This can result in you having to retune the guitar, because the new key is a lot harder.
* Henry Stickmin Series and it takes him back to the jail in "Escaping the Prison".
* God-Emperor of Mankind, which suggests that Horus must have hurt him badly if he's been on life-support for the past ten millennia. Another is his son Vulkan, who was once tortured to death thousands of times by the Night Lord but kept on resurrecting. And in a lighter example, the shamans of prehistoric Earth could reincarnate themselves after death, but when they began to lose their souls to the emerging Chaos Gods they made a suicide pact and merged to form the future Emperor.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, given how the Nations refer to events and people they've gotten involved with over the generations. In one particular instance, a French soldier notices how France hasn't aged at all from his grandfather's time in the military.
* Heaven Above (where the gods live in the place in Greece closest to the sky).
* He's Just Not That into You, cites this as one of the many things guys will say to avoid hurting a woman's feelings by admitting that they're not attracted to her.
* Granblue Fantasy usually focus on the adventures of various recruitable characters, with the main cast dragged along for the ride.
* Greek hero Achilles was invulnerable everywhere but his heel (where his mom Thetis had been holding him while dunking him in the River Styx).
* Happy Tree Friends. He means well, but he doesn't exactly live in a world which pities mistakes or oversights. (Or seemingly safe and sensible decisions for that matter.)
* Happens to Talen when he is rammed by the eponymous car at the end of
* Gotham, at one point says that his twin brother was their mother's favorite because he cleaned his room, did his homework, and didn't try to kill everyone.
* Harry Enfield's Television Programme. They were even referenced in a Reebok magazine ad, with a whole section of the Enfield crowd in curly wigs and moustaches. Rumour has it that the crowd included the then manager and several players, who were actually from the city.
* GURPS has a much-reduced (with only five republics left) USSR in the year 2120. Again, this was written in the period where it was expected that some states would peel off from the Union but not that it would break completely.
* He married Aphrodite, the Goddess of Love and Beauty herself. The Greeks weren't exactly shy about exploring the consequences, either — Aphrodite was constantly cuckolding her husband, who, like most immortals (except
* God Does Not Own This World: Author has little to no input on what goes in their own work's continuity.
* GURPS does little damage and penetrates armor poorly but is impossible to parry. Monofilament whips do moderate damage, go through armor like it's barely there and are liable to slice your head off.
* He gives the leftover "Space Earth" to Toph as an earthbending toy.
* half-crippled, but he's a great dad and friend, all around amazing guy, and in "Skin Game" and "The Warrior" he shows he can still brawl when he has to.
* Grim Reaper here who takes the form of Peg) tells Al that Elvis didn't go quietly. When he asks if that means he's alive, she implies that he's pretty dumb for assuming that. (In other words, no.)
* Half-Life: Uplink, the HECU Marines are also shown burning the corpses of several Vortigaunts they had killed.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, except Herc deliberately got himself captured in the hope of rescuing one of the gladiators.

* Hadestown which is a musical based on the Orpheus and Eurydice myth.
* Glory; in this case Col. Robert Gould Shaw the son of Boston abolitionists who commanded the Union Army's first black troops in the Civil War.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban. Ron has to nudge Harry during the Hippogriff lesson in order for him to go forward as Hagrid had asked.
* Grimm has a comic book adaptation from Dynamite Comics telling new stories. It is supposedly set in the same continuity as the TV series, although it has yet to be seen how well the two mesh.
* Heroes opened with what was essentially an apology for season 2 and claiming that the viewers from ComicCon who were disappointed in S2 thought it was better.
* Greyhawk campaign setting. The Archmage Rary was particularly fond of making these, and had given Lord Robilar a clockwork horse. Rary was also working on a clockwork dragon.
* Godspell: Jesus is interpreted as using this technique, teaching his message through humor and clowning. The others get in on the act, and he paints their faces to mark them as his followers.
* Gravitation is much conflicted between her feelings for Shuichi and her feelings for his relationship with Yuki.
* Green Lantern and Hawkgirl. After they finally admit their feelings for each other (at the end of "Wild Cards"), the very next episode ("Starcrossed") involves a big
* Gyossait is based off a recurring nightmare the creator had about an angel that lived atop a pyramid in the center of the earth.
* Good Night, Sweet Prince: Saying "Goodnight, sweet prince" in response to a man dying.
* Greyhawk: Zuggtmoy (in the Temple of Elemental Evil), Iuz and Fraz-Urb-Iuu (in Castle Greyhawk) and Tharizdun (in his Forgotten Temple).
* Half Moon Investigations: when his sister Hazel brings him a note from her boyfriend that doesn't sound right, Fletcher notices several pieces of evidence that point to the note being erased and rewritten several times on the same sheet of paper. He takes a pile of graphite shavings, spreads them across the paper, and slowly shakes them off. Some of the shavings get caught in the dents from the erased notes, allowing them to be read. Hazel's boyfriend is in an affair and started writing a break-up note before erasing it and trying something gentler.
* Heir Apparent the protagonists have gotten a hold of an illegal copy of another of Rasmussem's games rather than pay for time, and are playing it at their home. That doesn't go as planned either, and again, the only way out is to win. By "win," here, we mean solve the puzzles/defeat the game. You can die as many times as you like in Heir Apparent without dying in real life. The conflict is that she has a limited time before the game shuts down her brain, and she has to keep redoing everything she already did.
* Going Postal, it's mentioned that sunken ships with skeletons of crewmen stuck in the rigging or lashed to the wheel are found drifting on currents in the deepest parts of the ocean.
* Goobacks), this makes them seem so alien to present-day folk that "future person" becomes classified as a separate race altogether.
* Hermes' "Sweet [noun] of [rhyming location]!" In the episode, "How Hermes Requisitioned His Groove Back" a
* Glee, Puck and Finn may hate each other over what happened with Quinn, but they'll team up to defend New Directions.
* Gorillaz song "Clint Eastwood" involves zombie gorillas rising from the dead.
* Hades with machine gun and grenade launcher functionality. It was forged by the cyclopes at the dawn of time for Hestia to wield against the Titans, and it is heavily implied that it is the Platonic ideal of a gun, which will one day inspire humankind to invent firearms in general.
* Goth, for which the same has been true for two hundred further years prior). Much like the undead monsters that have partially inspired it, goth just won't die. This can be partly attributed to a liability of definition, as the term encompasses a host of genres in every artistic medium. Still, the category is not meaningless, and continues to include both faithful homages to its roots and evolving extrapolations.

* Harry Turtledove in a chunk of the population, crippling an empire and leaving the heroes' land cut off from them.
* He would have advanced more towards India, but seeing that the next kings could deploy
* Hillary Clinton famously pointed this out during a television interview when she noted that female politicians, like actresses doing red carpet interviews, are always asked about what they're wearing instead of what they're doing, and male politicians and actors never are. Her point was proven in the same interview, right after she said this when the very first (previously selected) question from the audience she was asked was who was her favourite designer.
* Gore Vidal name; the critics who previously gave them all rave reviews suddenly changed their minds and wrote bad ones.
* Hangmen Also Die! laughs at a joke told in German, revealing that he understands the language (not knowing German had cleared him of suspicions of betraying the Resistance previously). He unsuccessfully tries to pass it off as laughing at something else.
* H. G. Wells, Cavor discusses using math to communicate with his alien captors, but he doesn't really have any idea how to do so.
* had precisely that effect would have been destroyed as collateral damage), thus forcing both sides to engage in peace talks rather than restart actual war.
* Going in Style follows the same basic story, but the three lead characters resort to bank robbery after their pensions are dismantled when the company they worked for for 30 years is bought out.
* High Fidelity the main character has never really got over Charlie, the girl that broke up with him at university. When he meets up with her again years later, it takes a few hours for him to come to the conclusion that "Charlie's awful".
* he finds his Bro's corpse to be likeable and that when she withdraws she's just hiding someone who's already beautiful.
* her differences from the rest of her mer-family and her identification with the surface world. Eric originally had a counterpart titled "Where I Belong", which was dropped after the Denver pre-Broadway tryout, but partially reinstated as an interlude during "Fathoms Below" in the post-Broadway revised production.
* GURPS tries to conceal information about extranormal events from the public.
* Head Office in order to impress a girl. While initially fired for saying the company is only after profit and doesn't care about people, he ends up promoted after it goes down well with the press.
* Golden Age feature "Movie... Ads!" showed how movie advertisers can cut and paste 1/16-star reviews into more positive-sounding quotes:
* Have a Nice Day: A Tale of Blood and Sweatsocks had filled his bed with chocolate-chip cookies as a rib.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name: Hanna seems to fit this trope: a scrawny little guy who writes runes as his main form of attack.
* Happens again in a later episode when he jumps out the window of a castle to escape the Shadowkahn and uses the curtain as a parachute to get down the side of the cliff safely.
* Hates Wearing Dresses: Many tomboys hate wearing skirts and/or dresses for various reasons, ranging from a dislike of "girly" things to a dislike of unpractical things.
* Godiva Hair: In reality, hair cannot be trusted with covering body parts.
* Gustavus used sound effects or random unintelligible mumbling in place of dialogue depending on the episode, though very rarely characters would say a word or two.
* Harry Kim introduces newly de-assimilated Seven Of Nine to this in
* Grimlock was disturbed by how confident and assertive Griselda (his wife in real life, as well as in the game) was becoming and wanted to kill her while she was still the woman he remembered.

* Guild Wars expansion nearly doubling the size of the original Tyrian Map. Each map has its own separate continent, and players switch from one to another when they travel from to different continents. Each full-sized map only shows an apparent section of the continent (and only half of that is actually explorable) suggesting that the world is actually very large (and leaving room for infinite expansions).
* Hawkwoman/Hawkgirl/Shiera Sanders. First appeared in January, 1940.
* heyghoge). This assocation is clearly still relatively common, to the point that their name has changed spelling to keep up with the modern versions of the words "hedge" and "hog".
* here is particularly notorious for acting like this whenever he's face.
* Hamzah Saleh's voice in the earlier vlogs of Adam Saleh have him with a voice sounding almost like his sister, Haila. But after he turned 14, his voice started sounding more baritone and having a similar vocal tone to Adam Saleh's other nephew Yousif Saleh.
* Hell Girl is one with Japanese Buddhism and other Japanese folklore with the titular character sending people to hell, showing them karmic nightmares, because someone wrote their name on her website.
* Greg Egan is a Recursive Reality, beginning with the computer network the posthuman protagonists live in and ending in a more or less endless number of non-euclidean universes.
* Have I Mentioned I Am Gay? to show gay behavior, so they rely heavily on stated assertions of homosexuality. So long as there is a difference between the romantic behaviors of straights and gays, the work carries the implication that being gay is wrong or bad.
* Golden Cue the game. Expert players were expected to play faster and collect a bigger bonus.
* Hearing-impaired people often pick up this practice because the tendency of information to get lost as it travels through damaged parts of the ear means they can't be one hundred percent sure of what they heard otherwise.
* Hans does end up fatally injuring Elsa in her side, and Rapunzel must try to make a similar deal to save her life.
* Heroes a) would totally jangle the lock on the front door in broad daylight, and b) would be far more damaged by a baseball bat than by Maya's own superpowers.
* He sort of tacked the proposal on at the end of an invitation for Jade to become another Green Lantern (her natural powers had been lost several dozen issues previous), though. And she did turn down the marriage proposal, although she kept the ring.
* Hausu. The premise - young group of protagonists enter a house in which bad scary stuff happens - is simple enough, but the "scary stuff" is much more bizarre than the film's Western peers.
* Gotham strains between them, Barbara and Tabitha's personal politics combined with Barbara's thirst for power are putting a strain on their side of the relationship by the end of the season.
* Hercules, throughout the majority of the film, the titular hero was completely unaware of Hades' existence, that he was behind him losing his godhood as a baby, and was the one responsible for all the seemingly random monsters he had been defeating. It isn't until the final act that Hades introduces himself to Herc and the hero finally learns the extent of Hades' manipulations.
* Hide", sinister knocking sounds are cited as one of the signs that Caliburn House is haunted. The knocking turns out to come from the Doctor himself as he tries to navigate the house within a parallel universe that is displaced in time.
* Hannibal murders his victims by administering a lethal dose of heroin. His final victim is a recovering heroin addict who was able to survive the drug and escape. The man does succumb to his wounds shortly afterwards but is able to get far enough away for his body to be discovered by the FBI who are able to backtrack to where Gray was storing his other victims.
* Happy Heroes, Sweet S. is distracted by romantic thoughts about the mysterious person who rescue her from a monster earlier and forgets she has the sink running, and the water overflows and floods Doctor H.'s house. Happy S. can be seen hanging to a wall to avoid the water.

* Goal-Oriented Evolution: The (generally scientifically unsupported) idea that evolution has a "goal." Sometimes invoked as an argument for transhumanism.
* Hellboy, sort of. He grew up on a USAAF base, though the person he most regards as a father figure is Professor Bruttenholm, who's not a soldier. Consequently he doesn't really fit the mold; he's pretty resistant to authority figures and generally only takes orders out of personal respect.
* Hammer's Slammers are a mercenary company under the command of Colonel Alois Hammer.
* Good Omens with Agnes Nutter's prophecies; she saw the future with enough precision to make sure that the relevant prophecy was written on an index card chosen at random. However, most of her prophecies were too imprecisely worded to be easily understood, since she lived and died in the 17th century before much of our modern technology was invented. So while she foresaw accurately, she did not always understand what she foresaw, leading to phrasings like "Orient's chariot" instead of "Japanese car". Some of these were easier to interpret than others.
* GURPS Black Ops had a top secret agency called "The Company" that fought supernatural monsters and aliens.
* Grottomatic album casually mentions bees at least once. There is also at least one song in every album about My Little Pony.
* Gone. Diana and Caine spent a while practicing their powers before coming down to Perdido Beach. It was said in the first book they'd had their powers for a couple months.
* Happy Days. The fact that he talks about it being his "weakness" and feels he needs to eat some to stay cool hints at the former, but the latter makes more sense and he was gagging when he first saw the liver.
* High Speed Rail), and Switzerland has built itself a niche for regional rolling stock.
* here. It is notable that this did not start out this way, as the Jedi and their traditions were a relatively undeveloped backstory element to the plot of the original trilogy, but expanded over time into its present form as successive movies and materials expanded upon the nature of the Jedi, the Sith and the Force.
* hanging himself yet verses like Mark 14:21 still implies that he went to Hell after his death.
* had engaged in conduct unbecoming in a British ship's mascot, in public and in front of the press.
* Hayao Miyazaki film has at least one scene where a character will cry massive gobs of tears the size of golf balls.
* harpies could be seen as the trope makers for the Leathery Winged Avian variant, though downplayed as they're on the low end of "Giant".
* Highway to Heaven. Over the rest of the family’s objections, his bitchy daughter-in-law has him carted off to a nursing home because of it.
* Haruhi Suzumiya and will probably continue to do so for the near future.
* Granblue Fantasy, which means that most of its "action" can only be displayed to the player as static character images moving around, trembling or crashing into one another. Specific images for particular scenes do exist, but are very rare, so anything that features a fight or performance of any kind is bound to be mostly described and reacted to, not shown.
* Gottlieb, one must time the plunger to shoot the ball into Blanka's saucer to set the value, then shoot Chun Li's bracelet to claim it.
* Grand Theft Auto V has this reaction when Lamar misinterprets one of his musings as a proposition: "What? No. Jesus, no."
* Gundam series often have at least one engineer to take care of the mecha. Pilots may or may not carry out some maintenance.
* gouged out), only to end up starving to death, unable to get out of the Bon's Burgers restaurant.
* her blog entries on USANetwork.com, Natalie describes herself as stumbling to use the Greek language when she was an exchange student (the entry itself is dated to coincide with "Mr. Monk and the Naked Man"), as marked here:

* Goldberg says that this was the whole point of the story (that WCW's eventual, inevitable collapse wasn't due to one particular incident, but that they would have found some way to screw up and fail no matter what).
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, he initially punches Mr. Wink in the abdomen several times, with no effect. He pauses a second, and Mr. Wink gives Hellboy a huge punch.
* High-level Affinity units sometimes approach this from the opposite direction — while their military pedigree is obvious, as they develop Affinities tend to go from strictly practical philosophies of development, to rigid and dogmatic ideologies, to the level of out-and-out religions. This is especially true of the Purity Affinity and its ultimate unit, the LEV Destroyer (a floating citadel/artillery unit that wouldn't look out of place on a
* Goldfinger was temporarily banned because Gert Fröbe, the man who played the eponymous character, had been a member of the Nazi party from 1929 to 1937. The ban was lifted after it was discovered that he had actually helped two Jews hide from the Gestapo during the war.
* Hero Factory, where the previously standard size models are minimechs, with minifigure-sized characters functioning as pilots.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983): In "Ordeal in the Darklands", Evil-Lyn and Tri-Klops kidnap Mira and use an illusion to make it look like He-Man and Man-At-Arms did it. As a result, Mira's overprotective father Kor, a very powerful sorcerer, attacks the two. Fortunately, Teela and Orko manage to rescue Mira and Mira tells her father what really happened.
* Harsh Realm is tasked with entering the show's virtual-reality America and apprehending General Omar Santiago, a ruthless dictator and cultlike figure who controls five U.S. virtual states.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name, we only see one zombie, who is the narrator. Exactly how he ended up as a zombie is unclear, with Hanna only vaguely mentioning rumors of a few successful instances of reanimating the dead. Upon becoming a zombie, the guy turned green, his eyes became sunken and glowing, and while he could still feel pain, having severed limbs re-attached doesn't hurt very much. He also doesn't sleep, smells like a room that hasn't been aired out, and shows no inclination to eat the living. Since he's the only one we've seen as a zombie, it's yet to be confirmed if this is normal zombie behavior for the series.
* Had he not lost his skills due to Madness Enhancement his skill is actually so ingrained it overrides the madness enhancement, allowing Herakles to still fight with remarkable form.
* Happy Days was a Grand Poobah of Leopard Lodge No. 462. More than one episode revolved around the lodge's annual Poobah Doo Dah.
* Hannie Caulder: The title character is gang-raped by three outlaws. She survives and seeks out revenge against them, becoming a gunfighter to achieve it.
* Heroes, Maya's brother Alejandro is suspicious about Sylar after he discovers a news article about his mother's murder. She doesn't exactly believe him and he walks away in anger when Sylar interrupts their conversation. She starts crying and Sylar gently holds her against him as she sobs into his shirt.
* Hero Elementary, Lucita Sky is afraid of heights even though she can fly. She usually has to avoid looking down when she's flying.
* have an incentive than Gandalf, so he'll win. Having been forced to take a personal hand, Sauron would then defeat all Gandalf's allies (who would be screwed without him anyway), and, with his schedule freed up, might notice a couple of Hobbits stumbling around at the foot of Mount Doom.
* High Class Homos: Prince August is soft-spoken and shy, while princess Sapphia is rebellious, outgoing, and isn’t averse to conflict at all.
* Happens to every villainous protagonist during an episode of the season 2 of * Great Mazinger, Mykene soldiers grafted into gigantic mechanical bodies. They had shape of humanoid warrior, evil spirit, mammal, bird, reptile, fish or insect.
* Hamilton, Aaron Burr strongly implies that his daughter is this. In the song "Dear Theodosia," he sings lines to her like "I'm dedicating every day to you," and "When you smile, you knock me out, I fall apart." Also notable is a line in the original off-Broadway version of "Schuyler Defeated," where he happily informs Eliza Hamilton that she's his "pride and joy."

* Greed choose the latter, no matter how important that person is to her (as Duncan, Gwen, and Scott can attest to). Not surprisingly, this has been the nail in the coffin for all of her relationships, romantic or platonic.
* Hannibal Clarice Starling mentions during her shooting inquest that a man from another agency is wearing a wire. A FBI man threatens to punch him out if he tries that again.
* Gundam: Reconguista in G as the "pirates" are usually aligned with Amerian forces in battle.
* Guiding Light: actress Amy Ecklund, who is deaf, was hired to play deaf Amish girl Abigail. Towards the end of her tenure on the show, both actress and character received a cochlear implant.
* "Hardcore Judy" by The dBs, where the band turns their own three minute
* Greed to go with it too. Where normal Orks love fighting anything that moves, Flash Gitz are more concerned with getting more teeth (the Ork currency, mind you) while spending as little of it as possible, and showing off their highly customized guns and money to other Orks. They are widely disliked amongst normal Orks due to these facts for being huge showoffs.
* Good Times (Penny) showcased her Mae West impression far more than her singing abilities.
* Half-Life but the AI is Self-Aware as the villain deuteragonist, and Dr. Coomer as the tritagonist.
* glows with delight when he witnesses Erik using the anchor of Shaw's boat as a destructive tool.
* Harry and the Hendersons TV series did this when the Hendersons grow fond of a pair of mice living in their house and ask a guy which one's the daddy and which one's the mommy.
* God's Hands Are Tied: God has reasons why He can't just fix everything.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone: Made in 2001, set in mid 1991 to mid 1992 for majority of the story except for the opening, which is set ten years prior.
* Grimm, Sean Renard does this on a video call. When the conversation was finished he simply closed the chat window.
* Harry Potter in an attempt to make Tom realize how horrific necromancy in general and Horcruxes in particular were. Slughorn had gotten into necromancy when he was young in hopes of resurrecting his dead mother but burned his notes on dark arts once he realized how evil they were.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire Snape to teach him how to block his mind from Voldemort.
* Granblue Fantasy has multiple instances of these, in its quests and also the webcomic series:
* he really wants to have friends and America keeps making friends with the people Russia wants to make friends with thus he's getting in his way.
* Haku writers) seems to like the idea of Haku actually being a girl, either omitting the one actual indication of his gender or just simply having Haku and Zabuza lying about his gender.
* Hellblade: Senua's Sacrifice to determine what is real and what is not.
* Hellblazer. He fits every description above because Alan Moore made the trope. He protects his beloved London (and later the DC Universe) from hellspawns and magical whatnot.
* High ranking demons were capable of using servants of the Source for surveillance and reporting back to the Source. These beings replaced their shadows, so whenever the being disappeared to report back to the Source, the demon would be left without a shadow entirely. They were Cole's primary method of reporting to the Source when Balthazar was first introduced. Other demons of the same type as Balthazar have also been shown to use the shadow servants as well.
* High Fidelity when it comes to wooing a girl. At the end of the film version he makes one for his girlfriend Laura as he finally feels he has learned how to make her happy.

* Guards! Guards!. Since the book weighs about ten pounds and the criminal is standing near a ledge, the criminal is knocked over the edge and falls to his death.
* GoodFellas the first time). When she turns up at his place and starts ripping into him for standing her up, Henry starts getting interested, and invites her out properly.
* Ground Zero. Two hundred years after the Great War, there is still nothing but an incredibly lethally radioactive crater at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.
* Happened to dinosaurs: for a hundred millions years, they were the dominant animals on land. Now that mammals and humans in particular have taken over, what remains of them? Birds... Although it hasn't been too bad for them since there are about 10,000 bird species compared to only about 4,000 species of mammals.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, Muut gives Annie a blinker stone that he claims was from Mort. While Mort does initially accept Annie's thanks, he later admits that the idea was Muut's in the first place, primarily due to the fact that Muut isn't entirely in Annie's good graces, but also because Muut isn't supposed to directly interfere with the living (Mort is a ghost). We're not privy to the discussion between Mort and Muut, but Mort makes it sound as though Muut was playing this trope in an extremely blunt fashion, and Mort wasn't fooled at all.
* half of a Zero Pointer in one bite. Bakugo has to use an explosion to the back of Izuku's head just to get his attention and mentions the boy normally weighs around 500 pounds.
* Hermione's mother is upset because Harry used Auror Teleportation, which is silent, to appear in the Grangers' backyard, startling her.
* Grease 2 (in which the teacher attempts to begin the sex ed class by talking about flowers, but the teens rapidly relate this to the advanced topics) has a girl singing "Make my stamen go beserk" and a guy singing "I got a pistil for you right here". This is exactly the wrong way round; the stamen is the male part of the flower and the pistil is the female part. (Since they're not paying attention to the actual lesson, it arguably makes sense that they'd get it wrong...)
* Groundhog Day, but receives a phone call from one of the persons in his nightmare to drive over to the very same country house, where the same sequence of events starts to play out once again.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers to receive all this money, even though he knows it's worth less than the paper it's printed on.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, the scene of Buckbeak's execution has crows all over the area being just as sinister as they can be.
* "Grope" used to mean just "touch", but it has connotations of creepy sexual touching nowadays. You can still "grope around" in the dark to find your way, but this trope can slip in if more than one person is there. Of if you happen to touch a vaguely humanoid object.
* Gunsmith Cats we have the psychotic Russian assassin Natasha Radinov she looks like a tall broad-shouldered young man, she covers her rather large breasts with her trench coat most of the time.
* Headbutting Heroes: Two heroes who are anything but on the best of terms with each other.
* Good Omens (2019), Gabriel and Sandalphon make a very bad attempt at fitting in as humans when trying to contact Azriphale at his bookshop.
* Graceland Paige and Johnny are pressuring Mike to break up with Abby. Their reasons are mostly pragmatic since Mike, Paige and Johnny are undercover federal agents and Abby is a civilian who does not know what they do for a living. Abby could inadvertently do something that would break Mike's cover and get him and the others killed. In turn, Mike always lying to Abby about his life and job is no basis for a real relationship and they want to save Mike from the heartbreak.
* Granblue Fantasy: Katalina covers Lyria's eyes in the 13th episode of the anime as the crew wreaks havoc on the Erste troops off-screen. However, the combat banter of the crew during the said scene can still be heard.
* Heralds of Valdemar, Darien notes that if he'd been caught in his current situation (bathing in a hot spring with a pretty girl while unchaperoned) in Valdemar, he'd have been forced into a spearpoint marriage by the girl's male relatives whether anything happened or not. But in a Tayledras Vale, nobody would care what they got up to so long as they hung up a "do not disturb" sign before doing anything particularly naughty, since both of them were of age.

* Harry Partridge to this cockney orphan!" Oh, he may be animated, but the pain will be more than real...
* Gravity Falls including gnomes, living wax statues, and macho minotaurs.
* High Fidelity, Barry replies to Rob by downing his fingers one by one alongside gunshot noises until only the middle one remains.
* Happens again when Bob and Dave are trying to sneak a peek at B.A.'s GM notes and B.A. returns.
* Hilarity Ensues and like in the toad episode he starts believing he was a real third-grader and acting as such, including getting Quagmire to pose as his father so he could leave school to attend a ball game.
* Half the Man He Used to Be: Injury resulting in someone being split in half.
* Henry Darger devoted years, beginning in about 1919, to detailing the gigantic world where most of the story takes place.
* Goosebumps, Zackie thought that his reality altering powers came from a magical typewriter, only to find when he couldn't get the typewriter to work they were actually within himself.
* Green Lantern comics, powerfully telepathic arch-villain Hector Hammond's body is imprisoned (he's serving multiple life sentences) and is supposedly under the effects of a psionic inhibitor... but Hammond's mind is so powerful that he can still telepathically control people hundreds or even thousands of miles away from the prison without ever leaving his cell.
* Goblin Slayer: Spearman binds Evil Wizard in magic webbing, knocks out several teeth to make him incapable of talking or spellcasting, and then complains to Goblin Slayer and Heavy Warrior about how to get rid of him, to which the former suggests tossing him off the tower and the latter enacts by literally booting him over the railing. While all three make fun of how much of a non-threat he was.
* Heavy and less likely to survive (especially if the enemy are armed with anti-armor weapons).
* Have I Got News for You, Victoria Coren claimed the BBC's coverage of the Diamond Jubilee Pageant was this, with it being aimed at "some imaginary idiot".
* Hail to the King. And when he tries to escape, he has no problem blowing up a prison wall and destroying a collar, but he can't use his power to escape from Shining's and Cadence's shield, which requires certain skill.
* Haunted (2005). The Nightmare Box supposedly shows the "truth" of reality, driving people who look into it insane and eventually to suicide.
* Harrow; the figure's identity concealed by the hoodie he is wearing.
* Groundhog Day hostess over coffee; Phil encountering Ned Ryerson ("Bing!") on the street and trying to get away from him; Phil crossing the park where the Groundhog Day celebrations are being held; and the Groundhog Day ceremony itself.
* Handwaved So much has changed so fast, including the introduction of clockwork automation and alchemy to warfare (leading to the Battle of Naseby ending in an incredibly bloody stalemate which saw more people die more swiftly than anyone thought possible beforehand) and the unexpected mid-war capture, trial, and execution of King Charles, that it's shaken faith in the traditional order and allowed women and other disenfranchised groups an opportunity to grab for greater rights and recognition.
* heavily armed ice cream truck that he uses to mow down Cobra forces.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys has a famous parent, so this is often a fact of life in their society.
* Grimlocks are bestial, eyeless humans who have devolved in order to better survive in the Underdark.
* He's not a fan of opera either: "It's just VOWELS! Subsidized foreign fuckin' VOWELS!"
* Happy World! reproduce asexually. They are only able to do this once in their life, to produce a single, or in rare cases, two pure blooded angel children. They are able to reproduce with humans to make half blood angels though.

* Ground Floor puts himself in charge of the building support staff when Jenny temporarily becomes Mansfield's assistant. He immediately launches into a version of the famous Glengarry Glen Ross speech using Pop-Tarts as an incentive. He's Hoist by His Own Petard soon enough, though, as everyone walks out as he's talking (taking the Pop-Tarts with them) leaving him to deal with 'New Phone Day' on his own. He ends up accidentally locking himself in a cage.
* Grand Theft Me: Something destroys or suppresses the old personality and replaces it.
* Gundam Evolve: All three Karaba pilots in episode 9 ("MSZ-006 Zeta Gundam") have individually tweaked versions of the venerable Zeta Gundam:
* Griffins, too, are immensely greedy, to the point of being explicitly compared to dragons. It is this racial vice, along with
* Hero Killer: The villain has successfully killed at least one hero who tried to stop them.
* Glove and Boots would look like. Said trailer is essentially just an extended plot summary of the film that ends by spoiling that Han gets rescued in the next installment.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army: Abe Sapien tells a character that he has a nice baby only to be told "I'm not a baby, I'm a tumor" by the "baby".
* Heroes Gone Fishing: The good guys take a break from heroics to do the same pastimes and activities normal people do.
* HideofBeast run in particular looks so painful to pull off that just watching it could be considered a masochistic activity.
* Heroes since they were mage-ruled (as indicated by the name of the factions) and fought over the throne of Enroth. The second game downplayed it by having them all be subsidiary to the Kingdom of Enroth (note the point in the trope description on how having king who just happens to be a mage doesn't count — one or both of the contenders for the throne might have been mages, but it wasn't part of their claim to the throne).
* Godzilla (2014) suddenly knocks out the power in the building, everyone's reaction is a mass groan of annoyance, then an abrupt switch to screaming panic when the M.U.T.O. crashes through the roof.
* Hell and High Water takes its name from a song lyric from a song, with both the lyric on its own and the meaning of the overall song reflecting the themes of that particular chapter.
* Heävy Mëtal Ümlaut — Adding random ümläüts to thë vowels of your band's name lets you show off how mëtäl it is.
* Gray dragons aren't very keen on fair fights, and prefer to engage creatures that are land-bound and weaker than them. They will usually beat the retreat when faced with foes that prove to be tough enough to be a threat, or which can join the dragon in the air.
* Haruhi Suzumiya Mikuru keeps a collection of recorded memories for reference when she has to return to her own time.
* Gravity Falls: In "The Inconveniencing", a possessed Mabel's head rotates, followed by the rest of her body.
* Happy Days lost interest early in the series and wanted to turn his attention to directing. The Fonzie character kept everyone employed.
* Harry Potter, we get his brother, Aberforth, who is very nearly as cool as he is. Too bad their relationship was, well, rather troubled.
* Gone Horribly Right: The solution becomes a new problem due to working too well.
* Hanako and the Terror of Allegory, Kanae is being haunted by a demon which intends to take her soul as payment for granting her wish of being an idol singer. To stall for time, Kanae keeps making more extravagant wishes, forcing the demon to try and make her into an international superstar despite her lack of talent. When Daisuke finally bursts in to rescue her, the exhausted demon screams at him, "Save me, please! She's the devil!"
* HERZ: Secret organization SEELE tried to bring it about in 2015. They failed and spent the next twelve years preparing to attempt to finish it for real as the heroes prepared to stop them for good.

* Happy Ending Override: A sequel undoes the happy ending of a previous installment.
* Headbutt Thermometer: Touching foreheads to check someone's temperature.
* Harry Enfield's Television Programme, at midnight on his thirteenth birthday, he abruptly transformed into his much worse (and much better-remembered) incarnation: Kevin the Teenager.
* Grendel "spares" a praying Christian priest, which convinces the Danes to convert to Christianity in order to be protected against Grendel. In reality, Grendel spared the priest because he was confused about his behavior and ultimately didn't see him as a threat.
* Hello, Dolly!: After Dolly Levi has spent the whole movie trying to maneuver Horace into marriage, he angrily tells her that he 'wouldn't marry (her) if she were the last woman on earth!', she promptly bids him "So Long, Dearie". Cue Horace grousing to himself the very next morning about how he doesn't need her, what a horrible woman she is, he'd never do it, etc. It's clear to the audience that he's firmly in this trope, as he proposes to her the moment she comes back.
* Hell of a Heaven: Heaven isn't half the eternal paradise it is said to be.
* Gold Coin Comics, when Lance survived a childhood fire where everyone else appears to have died.
* her catchphrase, but incidence of "Yeah... wait, what?" in the show is 99% her fault.
* Goblin Slayer) such as casting an impenetrable barrier over the only exit to a goblin stronghold he'd set on fire so they can't escape death by asphyxiation, or summoning two barriers on either side of a goblin lord and crushing him between them.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets: Hermione figures out how the students are being petrified, but is petrified herself before she can explain it to Harry.
* Goosebumps. The main dummy, Slappy, is the most famous of the franchise's monsters.
* Guinea Pig Family: A scientists conducts his experiments by using his relatives as test subjects.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, America has a "great" plan to defeat the titular Axis Powers. Russia's role? Keep sending in cannon fodder!
* Harry Potter was designed to "grow up" with the audience. The earlier books were basically children's books, while the later ones (book 4 onwards), were aimed more at teenagers.
* God Told Me To: one of the mass murderers investigated by detective Nicholas is a man who killed his family because "God told me to". When interrogated he described how he shot his wife and two kids while smiling pleasantly and answering politely the police's question, which only makes Nicholas angrier.
* Higher-Tech Species: A race with access to technology far more advanced than other races, but still mostly comprehendible for them.
* Happens again with "New Game Plus", which is set right in the middle of the "Mind Games" arc — the first half of Mind Games involves
* here, Haley notices that she has the urge to say "Hopefully, the others have had an easier time than we have!", which makes her and Belkar realize that the others are probably in trouble. Sure enough, we then see just how much trouble the others are in.
* Hatpuppet proposal in an effort to make it look like it has more launch support than it really does. Doing this or soliciting it will get you permanently banned.
* Harry also has/had a half-sister, Torunn, born about 1000 years prior to the story when his magical contraceptives ran out earlier than he thought they would. Unfortunately, Thor spent the next few decades away from Earth in complete ignorance and she didn't inherit the lifespan, so he didn't find out until she was dead. Fortunately, she ended up as a Valkyrie in Helheim, one of Hela's ladies-in-waiting/monster hunters, and Thor is one of the few people crazy enough to visit Hel while still alive.

* Gravity Falls, Mabel, Wendy, and Pacifica all have hair that goes down their waists.
* Grrl Power and has several magic powers that are fueled by sex. That said, she also seems to overplay her hypersexuality deliberately to rile up those around her. In recent chapters, she's toned down the sex-trolling toward Halo, suggesting a more serious respect for her. (Or that she's realized Halo is much more emotionally vulnerable there than the rest of the bunch.)
* High Fidelity. There, it's a major plot point — Rob recalls listening to Ray having sex with various girlfriends while he was still with Laura, and when they break up and Laura begins seeing Ray, he recalls it all and becomes intensely neurotic about it.
* Good Times Travel Agency book "Adventures in the Middle Ages", Emma repeatedly says "Not now, Libby." when her younger sister is trying to alert her that someone wants to steal the book.
* Halloween Unspectacular is among the real-life conquerors and villains because of this. He even lampshades it.
* Greater deities, gods of great and omnipresent concepts and forces such as magic, fate, death, or the sun
* Godslave, Anpu's family stripped him of his powers until he's little more than a talking fennec.
* He's actually the fastest character by a fair amount, and jumps as high as Luigi.
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger where narrative causality is inverted, and the only way for the team to win is by deliberately jinxing themselves.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers yells at Italy at a constant basis and is strict towards him, Germany is also is kind and gentle towards him as well.
* Half-Life 2 gives Gordon Freeman a laser-guided missile launcher that is quite good at taking down Combine gunships.
* Grimm: In "Game Ogre", Stark was serving a 300-year prison sentence before he escaped and came looking for revenge.
* Haikyuu!! Implied in Episode 12 of season 2 where Hinata mentions throwing up on the bus ride to an inter-high volleyball tournament. Both Yamaguchi and Asahi are depicted feeling sick after witnessing the incident. They don't actually vomit, or at least it's never shown on screen.
* Hares are all Royal Air Force pilots, brave and resolute, while rabbits are fussy middle-class whiners.
* He also spent over an hour in a sealed underwater coffin to demonstrate that it could be done, to disprove another performer who claimed to use mystical powers to accomplish the feat. There was another buried alive escape planned, but it's not clear if it was ever performed prior to his death. Rather ghoulishly, the coffin that was to be used in the escape was instead put to use transporting his remains.
* Hannah Montana when Miley is forced to pretend that her brother is her boyfriend.
* Heckle and Jeckle cartoon, featuring the two birds as Canadian mounties.
* Hamlet. It can be theorized the ghost is a demon sent to tempt Hamlet as Protestant ideas go against ghosts. Hamlet considers this possibility.
* god devoted to this — Torog, God of Jailers, Torturers and the Underdark.
* GLOW would regularly be led to and/or from the ring in straitjackets. Their gimmick was they were mental patients at the state hospital, but were let out to wrestle "because it's therapeutic".
* Heroine's Quest: The Herald of Ragnarok the spell Channel converts your HP into mana; it does this automatically when you run out in combat, but casting it carelessly can very easily lead to you disintegrating yourself.
* Haruhi Suzumiya novel series, the author wrote about writing, at some point the titular character states that "anyone can write" and she does in fact recruit almost everyone she knows to write for her literature magazine, while each of the characters ends up writing about a subject they do actually know about, only the ones who have the reading habit write something at least interesting, everyone else just throws random words together (and the ones who read the magazine do realize this).
* Haven Trouble, Nathan invariably has this reaction to very serious injuries. In one episode, he's impaled by half a dozen industrial nails. At his partner Audrey's horrified reaction, he casually tells her he's fine and the wounds will bleed less if the nails are left in until the case is over.

* Haemonculi dying, he can't wait to see what new mutations the process will cause in his body.
* Grease: Live! as Rizzo, bears a dedication to her father, Greg Hudgens, who died of cancer before the premiere.
* Harry accidentally finds out in the fourth book that Neville’s parents are institutionalized in St. Mungo’s because they were tortured into madness by Death Eaters. Dumbledore swore him to secrecy but he tells his friends he’d known for a while when they run into Neville visiting his parents for Christmas.
* Harvest December is broken up into different chapters with a story for each month over the course of a year. The character whose point of view the chapter is told through is also the central character for that one.
* Hero of the Rails merchandise, while not an exact interpretation, Hiro's "Patchwork" model revealed that the engines used spare parts from the Sodor Steamworks to repair him. There was even some merchandise spoiling the fact that he says farewell to the engines at the docks before heading home at the end of the film, including a Take-Along 4-car pack, and a Wooden Railway playset.
* Guilty Gear overdrives has him do this to his opponent using his oversized scalpel. The vocal responses he gets out of them are rather comical at times (Such as Chipp's "OH YEAH!").
* Hidamari Sketch has a crush on Sae, who is more or less platonically married with Hiro.
* Having a wardrobe that never changes can make things difficult where things like changes in character design are concerned. That's why in
* Gundam 00, the main character Setsuna F. Seiei is Kurdish, along with his ex-mentor/arch-enemy Ali Al Saachez. Princess Marina Ismail and her right-hand Shirin Bakhtiar are Persian (Azadistan is of Persian etymology) Fellow Gundameister Allelujah Haptism is Kazakh. And of course, there are all the other cast members with apparently multiracial origins, as shown through their names. However, any crowd scene not set explicitly in the war-torn parts Middle East will be all-white. (E.g., during the Battle of the Oribtal Elevator, we see the populations of several cities explictly in central Africa, and they aren't black.)
* Hellboyefence) which is dedicated to protecting humanity from the supernatural threats.
* Hedwig and the Angry Inch has a similar joke about Jews finding comfort in humour, though the movie itself has plenty of such jokes, like "During my first performance, the audience threw tomatoes at me, and afterward I had a nice salad"
* Hell Night (1981) where the final couple are talking to each other and are oblivious to the killer (who was hiding under a carpet, which was on top of a trap door) rising behind them.
* Godzilla vs. Megalon - are an advanced undersea civilization (who are rather P.O.'d at the testing of nukes near them and send out their monster for revenge) where the toga seems the most commonly worn clothing.
* Gunka No Baltzar, Rudolph launched a coup in Weissen in order to increase the military's influence over the country's policies. The coup failed and the conspirators committed suicide, but the media's favorable portrayal of the conspirators won over civilian support to give the military more autonomy.
* Gon also did this in a later story arc. He and his friend had been manipulated into a mansion by a tough enemy talented in anticipating their movements (and who knew where the doors were). The heroic duo started kicking through the walls...
* Harriet to Minho as of the point where the two groups meet up in the Scorch. It is not known if Group B had any leaders prior to Harriet, but Group A have been through two leaders by the time Minho assumes the role.
* Herbert Hoover The original sentiment goes all the way back to Henry IV of France, who wrote "I want there to be no peasant in my realm so poor that he will not have a chicken in his pot on Sunday"
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire: Made in 2005, set in 4 August 1994 – 25

June 1995.
* Harry Potter get shipped with every other available fandom out there. Especially Harry Potter gets paired with female characters, but there is also lots of Slash.
* Have I Got News for You. Since Ken has been chosen as Boris's chief opponent at the next election, he has appeared on the show once more.
* Harry Potter books (set in 1991-1998). Although only the last four books fit the "Works set, but not made in the decade" category. They are:
* heroic and silent example for being able to solo the fight by himself.
* He's not the Big Bad, though; he gets killed at the end of Episode 1. technology is powered by organ music.
* Harry has a T-shirt that says "I defeated the dark lord and all I got was this lousy t-shirt".
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) — sometimes the cannon was wider, sometimes narrower; generally it was his whole arm to the shoulder that transformed, while with certain illustrators it was just his forearm. Whatever form it took, it always looked awesomely badass — Skeletor never pulled off any trick like that...
* He did the same thing after losing to Hulk Hogan at WrestleMania 19.
* Hilariously subverted when Barbie goes to the Bookworm wearing Ken's spacesuit to get back Buzz's instruction manual, he notices her
* He packed on thirty pounds and had his hairline shaved back and receded to play
* God Karting with Beelzebub are actually quite friendly to each other.
* he had a crush on Finn but considering that they're now step-brothers and happy with that, then you could argue that that's a good thing.
* Heroes "The Boogeyman and in volume 2, there's Maury Parkman: The Nightmare Man.
* Higurashi: When They Cry—that sets off a completely different scenario of bloody tragedy.
* Guernica: While many have tried looking into the symbology of the painting (especially since it was named after a town that at the time was involved in a bombing during a war), Picasso himself claims that he implied no deeper meaning to the painting other than its surface level imagery.
* Harry Dresden is often the underdog, and usually wins in the end. At one point, he ends up fighting the Billy Goats Gruff (no, really), who are a fairy tale example, for beating the much larger and more powerful trolls. When Harry faces the eldest (and most powerful) brother, he acknowledges Harry as
* Goosebumps into their school's telescopic gym bleachers, which start to crush him. When Slappy points out that "these rickety pieces of junk always have safety measures", a character counters with, "Not if they were made in the 90s."
* hard enough to burst his new robo-legs with a look of dumb shock on his face.
* Guy Gavriel Kay. At the start of the story, Bern Thorkellson is saved by witch-in-training Anrid. He then goes off to have numerous adventures, while she stays behind and eventually becomes the head witch on her island. Neither of them ever forgets the other though, and when Bern returns home at the end of the novel, Anrid is waiting for him. She explains that he has been pardoned and is allowed to come home to the family farm, while dropping some not-so-subtle hints that she would like to go with him. Bern—who at this point has watched his father die and is more or less disillusioned with life in general—decides that having some genuine warmth in his life would be a good thing, and they decide to get married and give it a shot.
* Guardians womaniser. Peter did manage to retain his love of music and better nature however, buried underneath his immature jerkass behaviour.
* Gormenghast is about Titus exploring the world outside of Gormenghast. As Gormenghast is a crumbling medieval castle, he is shocked when he discovers a city of skyscrapers.
* Guards! Guards! is less conclusive. When he asks the obligatory question ("Have I already said 'Where am I'? Did I get an answer?") Nobby leeringly informs him he's in Lady Ramkin's boudoir.
* Hannah Montana: When their "Mamaw" becomes the school's new lunch-lady, Miley and Jackson find her to be a very humiliating presence; not only does she make it abundantly clear that they're her grandchildren, she also puts them in embarrassing situations, such as by giving them childish, musical backpacks. Miley and Jackson resort to getting her fired to stop the bullying they receive.

* grandson was a contemporary of Scrooge McDuck, it can be safely assumed that he's long dead.
* Helltracks) is about a man hunting what he thinks is a serial killer wandering isolated railway lines, seeking revenge for the death of his sister. It finally turns out that what he's hunting is a man-eating steam train that somehow developed organic parts and a taste for blood.
* Hanamaru Kindergarten: Nanako Yamamoto. Her obliviousness to romantic overtures appears to be genetic. She and her sister are both aware the other has men interested in them, but fails to notice when someone makes romantic overtures to them.
* Harry Potter and the Mystic Force as well as apparently all other televised continuity still being valid); no reference is made to other Hogwarts students being aware of past Rangers, but this can be attributed to the wizarding world’s stereotypical ignorance of muggle activities.
* Grimoire’s Soul is a city located at the geographical center of Lystrata that floats in the ocean separating Kesterline from the countries of the eastern continent's westernmost shores.
* Gotham. At last count, they include: Penguin; Nygma; Barbara; Sionis; and last but not least Theo Galavan who genuinely planned to have Jim at his side when he took over Gotham but due to Jim's refusal to bend to him finally orders him killed.
* Goldilocks and the folly associated with blond hair. You have to be pretty dim to enter the house of a family of bears, eat their food, and use their stuff after all.
* Happy Heroes: The elemental wands in Season 8 are sought after by both the Supermen, who want to use them to wake up the president, and Big M. and his henchmen, who want to use them to assassinate the president instead.
* Gotham involved Jim Gordon having to clear his name after the Riddler sets him up when he suspects Gordon figured out he was a murderer.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas led to some fans calling him "Tiiinpinny".
* Grace and Frankie have been having an affair for twenty years and nobody knew.
* Hanako is a best-selling author, but is quite uncomfortable with book signings, and tries to avoid calling attention to herself when a flight attendant recognizes her. She also only has one friend at the start of the fic- her publicist, Sho- as a result of distancing herself from Lilly and Hisao after her Bad Ending.
* Hello Cheeky, which resulted in playful potshots by the latter to the former.)
* he transforms into a giant spider and takes the Titans to the other side of the universe about Parry being dangerous, Parry smash the Titans with his giant pincher, and the episode ends there.
* He's also been referred to, a touch more sinisterly, as 'The Spider'.
* Gor novel, Tarl gets a message from his father which says it will burst into flame in a few minutes. For some reason Tarl puts it in his backpack; sure enough, a few minutes later his backpack bursts into flame.
* Godzilla (1998), the band keeps right on playing even after Godzilla's tail knocks a hole in the wall of the apartment where they're performing, and the singer just glances at the hovering military helicopter that stops to check out the damage. Meanwhile, a girl in a hoodie disinterestedly walks past crowds of panicked, fleeing people, picks up a six-pack from the bodega across the street, leaves some money on the counter when she can't find the cashier, and walks back again, never even glancing at the huge footprint which Godzilla left in the pavement while she was in there.
* Hanlon's Razor: An act of apparent malice might actually be mere idiocy.
* He also originated the quote "How did you realize you were God?" "Well, I was praying one day and then realized I was talking to myself."
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys. Still, it can be jarring with the constant sword fights and random mooks that get stabbed and slashed. If someone bled, it was usually for drama. Even with Xena, who had no such qualms about killing her enemies, she rarely ever got blood on her sword.

* Hidden Elf Village: A secret location inhabited by isolationists who may or may not be elves or fairies.
* Heroic Self-Deprecation when troops are hailed as heroes for some apparently amazing life-saving deed and respond with "But we all learned to do that in basic."
* Hell-Bent for Leather: The teenage greasers in their leather jackets.
* Heel–Face Turn president, and it's for Americans to work out among themselves, not for arrogant foreigners to criticize.
* Herb Lacey was accepted into naval flight training in 1998 and graduated near the top of his class despite having no prior flight experience except on
* Gotham Academy: A group of students investigate a haunting and other oddities at their boarding school.
* Henry Danger, Henry wins two tickets to an exclusive steak house, and pretty much everyone in Swellview tries to convince Henry to take them. But Henry already decides to take Ray since he has always wanted to go, until his girlfriend pressures him to take her instead.
* Haven, according to Duke Crocker, his late father Simon "liked to travel" and has many, many illegitimate children.
* Gundam SEED. This first involves Yzak Jule's hilarious attempts to take Athrun down a peg or three by learning and mastering Athrun's secret of success. The other two involve Rey Za Burrel, Meyrin and Lunamaria Hawke, and Shinn Asuka's attempts, on Gilbert "Gil" Durandal's orders to destroy the successful formation of Kira and Athrun's friendship, and destroy Lacus' reputation. Both attempts fail hilariously.
* Gossip Girl (2021): Aki realizes he's bisexual due to his attraction toward Max.
* Healing techniques are, surprisingly, typically available to several characters in each installment of the
* Hasta from the same series has the twin antenna version, but he's neither stupid nor especially ditzy.
* grey-skinned, bug-eyed lanky alien with no nose wouldn't fool anyone, but you'd be wrong.
* Head-On been schooled). Now it's up to a fake doctor type repeating "We will give you your money back." For a homeopathic medication that is essentially a tube of wax. In addition to Head On's "apply directly to the forehead", the commercial often transitioned into mini commercials about other related products, all using the line "apply directly".
* Green Lantern: First Flight, reanimating a crook he executed to question him on the location of the Yellow Element.
* GunBuster is detonated, it causes shockwaves that raze entire cities to the ground.
* Having very good-looking actors like John Astin and Carolyn Jones (and later, Raul Julia and Anjelica Huston) play the Addamses has also tainted what fans believe the Addams Family should look like, as the original comics depicted them as rather grotesque. The * Heroes of Might and Magic: Most iterations of the series have a spell called "Blind" that effectively works this way.
* Good Omens has strangely nice benign view of this trope. All the military institutions, be they the human or divine forces are generally depicted as doing more harm than good, yet they're not depicted evilly per se. Notably the American soldiers are shown to be generally nice people doing their job...who don't seem to be quite homophobic or racist in all their view points (although perhaps that's just a bit of racism against an acceptable target, ie, Americans). Without the use of exaggeration, it plays the trope for laughs. With it's serious themes it does say that the worst traits of military forces is their unshakable belief that they're undeniably on the right side however.
* Harry Potter. A surprisingly sane and horcrux free Voldemort and his soul mate Izar Black are set up to become this. But this being Voldemort it involves playing 'games' and messing up with societal order in an effort to keep themselves entertained for eternity. Still Izar fully expects to become sick of living after a millennia of so.

* Happens accidentally in the first chapter. After accidentally getting a peek under his classmate's skirt, Shouta tries to defuse the situation by changing the subject. The first thing he can think of is to talk about how much he likes strawberries. However, his classmate's name is "Ichigo", which means "strawberries", so she initially takes Shouta's words as a confession and flees the scene. The narration states the confusion was quickly cleared up.
* Harry Potter for example, he accuses Harry Potter of attacking students and even creates a song to go with it. Professor McGonagall orders him to stop.
* Hey! Jake and Josh has this as the ending, with Shannon saying "we still haven't ____ yet", with the blank spot foreshadowing what they'll get to next week.
* Gunka No Baltzar: Holbeck deploys one on the Norden-Trade Duchy after it is invaded which leads to a war.
* Hell, even fortress mode is pretty manly. Mostly your legendary soldiers, who will become (if they don't die) so badass they can go and slaughter
* Gorgeous Georges, Paradyse, has admitted he likes women, but only mannish ones (even though CJ Lane really isn't by wrestler standards, she at least dresses the part).
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name, Lamont and Worth are basically the only normal humans.
* heterosexual life partner (although in a twist she thought he was gay as well and it would be a mutual thing). The poor guy was feeling so lonely he actually considered going through with it, before his friends intervened and bought him a puppy.
* Hajime no Ippo The series has been running for decades and has already clocked in at over 1,000 chapters with no real end in sight. Sure, you COULD jump in later since it's about boxing and thus all you'd need to know is "this character won/lost some previous matches," but without knowledge of who certain characters are or how/ why they box a certain way would make it difficult to follow.
* Here We Go Again!: The story ends with the conflict repeating or the characters going through a conflict similar to the one that was just resolved.
* Hawaii Five-0 with usually either Steve or Danny kicking in a door to get to a suspect or victim. This pretty much always works except for the one time it doesn't and then Steve just goes and gets a grenade from Danno's trunk. That works.
* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla are motivated by the fact their own world is gradually being sucked into a black hole.
* Harry Potter fics, it is common to treat Sirius/serious puns that way (despite the fact that the two words are nowhere near homophonic in almost all British accents).
* Gunsmith Cats. More bizarre tricks with a pistol than you can shake a stick at.
* Greg, Ted gives Greg advice on how to consolidate his porn stash since Greg's four feet high mountain of DVD spindles full of porn might be construed as super perversion.
* Greek Mythology were depicted as angels are today, being, in fact, the origin of their modern winged humanoid appearance. Somewhat closer in the role and also depicted as winged humanoids were Eros, Thanatos, and Hypnos.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix half-brother Grawp is, at first, believed to be some anomalous hillock.
* Gokaiger's first movie had the audience dropping their jaws at the trailer showing all the * Green Antarctica, it goes beyond just that. The glacier is the size of a country and half a mile thick. The dry, chilled air above it is unnaturally lit by the sun and carries sounds differently, giving it the feeling that reality is warped by its very presence. The entire thing moans and creaks as fissures open up and water erupts outward. Its edges expand and retreat like the pseudopods of a vast amoeba. There are times when the winds will trigger a sudden torrent of frigid air that splashes outward and kills everything in its path. The Tsalal cultures alternatively view it as the source of all death and suffering, hell, the abode of the gods, or even a sleeping god itself. What they can all agree on is that, when it awakens, it will bring about the end of all worlds.
* God of War II Three-quarters of a way through the game, Kratos comes across a massive bridge leading over a large valley leading to the Temple of The Sisters of Fate, which falls to pieces as he makes his way across it. Fortunately, he "borrows" some wings from Icarus just before he got there.

* Grand Theft Auto V, one of the passengers in Franklin's taxi missions will ask if he can sort out some gangsters messing with his daughter. This being GTA, Franklin is of course up to the task.
* Hanging Around: Hanging someone to cut off their air supply without necessarily killing them.
* Hey Arnold! reprised their roles despite being well into adulthood now (and Bartlett having always been an adult). We also have Hope Levy, who's 46 years old, voicing the queen of the green eyed people, who's at least 9 years old.
* He also does this often to allies, teammates and partners he doesn't particularly like — adaptations have made this a character trait: after getting what he wanted he tends to screw over the poor fools who thought it would be a good idea to work with him. Or are merely desperate enough to do so.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers" (which is never actually followed up on) when the latter, who is much less reserved about his emotions and physical contact, hugs him.
* Hell since he is presented as a tutor, albeit one who teaches poisons and other demonic knowledge.
* Goblin Slayer variety. Any good goblins simply don’t figure into the story, since they’re just minding their own business.
* "He has gone down Queer Street" was Victorian slang for "he is so deeply in debt that he is never likely to repay it".
* Hand-to-hand combat magicians relies mostly on a spell called calcium brisus which shatter bones simply by touching. Necromancers like Horous weaponized their magic for autopsy so they can remove body parts without scratching the skin.
* Harold Ramis was a great portrayal of a "hungry ghost". Ramis said he had no idea such a thing was genuine folklore.
* Hannibal psychiatrist, picks it up in the second season. When Will Graham consents to an exam, Chilton demonstrates some actual credibility as a psychiatrist, helping Will recover desperately-needed memories and taking seriously what he finds. While the rest of the cast believes Will to be a psychotic killer, Chilton becomes an unexpected (albeit manipulative and self-serving) ally to Will.
* Hellblazer mythos (and the whole Vertigo universe) is spontaneous and invisible.. This means that although Magick is powerful, it is not flashy as seen in many fantasy genre.
* Gossip Girl him with her friend (and his ex) Serena, apparently oblivious to the fact that he's been in love with her for half a season.
* Hamilton is composed of historical figures, so we have Philip Hamilton, named for his grandfather Philip Schuyler; James Madison and James Reynolds; George Washington, King George III, and George Eacker; as well as John Laurens and John Adams (although the latter doesn't actually appear in the musical).
* Grand Theft Auto: Chinatown Wars has the logo appear on the outside of a suitcase full of drugs (based on one of the game's main mechanics), which then opens up to reveal the other Rockstar studios involved in the game's development. In the PSP version, however, the logos for various Rockstar studios involved in the game's development are shown through a moving train.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law. Phil Ken Sebben pours two drinks. Birdman reaches to take his drink, but Phil just downs both without hesitation.
* herself Emperor. Wu himself eventually agrees with Kuvira about the obsolescence of the traditional monarchy after she is defeated, and decides to reform the Earth Kingdom into a republic with elected leaders.
* Gordon Freeman's death. Especially true in dramatic readings. How can such a goofy scene, containing the word comFART, be taken seriously? This is how.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City Stories does this in a way to mitigate the infamous ped clumping issue that has plagued sixth-generation installments of the franchise due to artistic and hardware constraints.
* high-heeled shoes said shoes were like men. "The ones you want to take home with you aren't the ones you can live with."

* Healthy in Heaven: In the afterlife, you cast off any and all disfigurements/disabilities/infirmities you may have had in life.
* GoGo's Crazy Bones are this trope. Case in point: Lucky Rab, an anthropomorphic rabbit.
* Hatoful Boyfriend seems taken aback and annoyed when the player character makes an effort to befriend and spend time with him. In his diary he calls you "the nosy girl", he says you won't leave him alone... but he's glad, in the end. In the second game, some of your friends also make an effort to spend time with him, and later he complains to someone threatening them that they exhaust him and are unpredictable, but he's happy to have them.
* Grenade Launcher has two guys who wield just those two weapons. You'd wonder what use are they in THAT situation...
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire. Even though no-one saw how Cedric died and the first anyone knew of his death was Harry appearing in front of everyone with his corpse, and even though the government later denied the true cause of Cedric's death and denounced both Harry and his story, no-one accuses Harry (or anyone else) of killing him. Instead, it's claimed Cedric died in an accident. Although it is mentioned that all the other students avoided Harry for the rest of the term, and that "Perhaps they were formulating their own theories about how Cedric had died." That was probably because Dumbledore later tells the entire school that Cedric was murdered by Voldemort.
* Haagse Harry mocks every ethnicity and political background, starting with the author's own.
* Hailing from Brazil comes "Panela Velha" ("old pot"), with the immortal chorus "it doesn't matter if she's older!
* Hellsister Trilogy and her boyfriend Dev-Em have a few conversations about how they are two Kryptonian survivors who don't quite fit in between present-day Earth people.
* Hellbane, where the witchfinder's victims are hanged. (And HALF of them were actually practicing witchcraft.) However, witchcraft qua witchcraft was not yet a capital offense in Elizabeth's reign.
* Godzilla (2014): The main dynamic between Godzilla and the MUTOs in; Godzilla happens to be the apex predator of eons-old radioactive giants, and is pursuing the MUTOs like a predator hunts its prey.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas design of Bell Rocket Belt that has exhaust pipes moved away and to the side of pilot's body.
* Hal's single-handed assault on Warworld turns out to be this, buying time for Soranik and the good Yellow Lanterns to evacuate the Fear Engine captives. Once that's done, Hal pulls a Taking You with Me on Sinestro and the entire planet.
* Guards! Guards!. It is so remarkably unmagical it doesn't even have the trace of background magic almost everything on the Disc is saturated with, thus making it slightly more real than everything else it encounters.
* Grimm program and consequently trying to stay clean and live a normal life, but being around Angelina causes him to lose control and go back to his old ways.
* Grace cowered as Damien went on a killing spree breaking her and her brothers out of the lab that created them. Grace later finds out that she was created to fight Damien, and her guilt over failing to act the first time overcomes her pacifistic tendencies and drives her
* God of Evil, by way of devouring all that exists. The only thing that he cannot consume is ash, so it's believed the dead should be burned to spite him.
* HHhH plan to evade the subsequent dragnet by getting smuggled out of Prague in coffins from the church crypt they are hiding in. Unfortunately, the German authorities track them down first.
* Golf Story: You never run out of golf balls. Ever. You can throw or shoot them to the point where the entire map you're on is covered.
* Hamtaro from regular Toonami watchers of the day, but what the top brass at CN were hoping to achieve with its inclusion on Toonami is still unknown.
* Harry Potter (often referred to as "the Slytherin Sex-God"), but will quickly fall head-over-heels once it's revealed that the new girl isn't impressed by his pick-up lines.

* Grimm, the team tries to do this to the Zerstörer, to no effect. Hank even reloads and tries again before Zerstörer reaches him and, let's just say... puts a stop to the shooting.
* GURPS, it is said that many new recruits to the Time Patrol ask this question: they are given more or less the same answers detailed at the top of this article.
* Gundam (both his and Sunrise's works) are part of a single, massive timeline.
* Heroine Chic features several instances where fashion products and services are advertised in the comic:
* Gulliver's Travels, the Houyhnhnms decide the best way of wiping out the Yahoos is to castrate them all. They got the inspiration for this from Gulliver's description of how horses are treated in England (male horses were castrated to break their spirits and control the population.)
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series, and shippers continue to ship them.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Ronan's comlink to Thanos on the Dark Aster displays as this.
* Harry Potter and the Alien Reality wake the man up earlier with a spell, but so long as nobody asks if that’s possible, Harry won’t lie.
* Harold Ramis, both of whom has passed away in February of that year from a drug overdose and vasculitis, respectively.
* Hamilton: George Washington is portrayed this way, both as a general and as a President. He is easily the most benevolent, humble, competent and level-headed figure in the play and does his best to keep the petty infighting of his subordinates under control. Even his wartime opponent King George III begrudgingly respects him and is disappointed at the thought of anyone else replacing him as President.
* have children but doing so will remove their immortality. Also, Naruto can't have children (Kyuubi/Kiyomi's chakra kills his sperm when he orgasms) so the only way for them to have children is by breaking up with him and taking another lover. Kiyomi is willing to also make immediate family of Naruto's lovers immortal but they'll be under the same conditions: being rendered sterile in exchange for eternal youth.
* Happy Heroes episode 38 depicts Doctor H. being hit on the head by a coconut.
* Hanako and the Terror of Allegory named Mary who will call you every five minutes to tell you about how she's hunting you down and preparing to kill you.
* her future counterpart had also managed to find his way to the past, but for a much more sinister purpose.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 2 Episode 6, Headmaster Tele sounds like he's complementing his students when in reality he's talking to the bus driver, who is named Tong Xuemen (同学们, pinyin "tongxuemen", means "classmates"; the name of Tong Xuemen the bus driver is one Chinese character off but pronounced the same way). The English version of the episode reworks the joke so that the bus driver is instead named Avery One, a soundalike of "everyone".
* grande sÅ“ur, once does this too, very much to Yumi's surprise since Youko is usually rather dignified.
* Gray Matters: Gray and her brother's fiancee Charlie kiss drunkenly on her hen night, realizing that she's a lesbian as a result. Charlie is straight though, and doesn't share Gray's feelings. This isn't a tragedy though, as Gray is accepted by her brother, while accepting her sexuality.
* Halo: Nightfall: Locke's ONI teammates, who certainly aren't shy about it, complaining that the Sedrans will only slow them down with all their equipment being "200 years" behind the regular UNSC's.
* GURPS supplement offers a perk that causes any wish the character makes to err in his favor automatically specifically to avoid players writing out multipage wishes to avoid getting screwed over. Needless to say, it's a tad over-powered for what should be a relatively minor ability.
* He did it again when explaining that smelling of piss is not an attractive feature, stating you'd never hear Tolstoy saying the following:
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2. When other characters call him a God, he says he is one with a small "g", meaning he is only an immensely powerful being instead of all-powerful.

* He doesn't care about power, money, fame, or any other temptation that Kronos throws his way. At one point he had both Zeus's Master Bolt and Hades' Helm of Darkness in his possession and didn't even think of the immense power this would give him.
* Hellsing examples). Seras finds herself unable to focus on anything else.
* Grandma Sylvia's Funeral, starting before the audience even goes inside (this part may differ for different runs - in one version, the hearse arrived with the back door open and no casket - it showed up sticking out of the trunk of a taxi a few minutes later).
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban. Trelawney, the Divination teacher, makes several dire predictions during the first lesson, including that, "Around Easter, one of our number will leave us forever." At right about that time of year, Hermione gets fed up with Divination and storms out of the class saying she's done with it. Several of Trelawney's more attentive students come to believe that she was really predicting Hermione's dropping the class and they just misunderstood.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, In the beginning of the first episode when everyone is talking at once, you would have to watch it several times to get all the jokes.
* go crazy around the full Moon have failed to show any correlation between human behavior and the full Moon.
* Happy Tree Friends onto him. In any instance, Sniffles is easily the lesser of two evils.
* Going Postal, we find that postmen have their own Secret Brotherhood, which doesn't have any influence outside of the Post Office, but any postman must join. And, of course, to become higher in rank, like the Postmaster, the initiation is a bit more arduous.
* hallucinations himself. He also sees Toby as Sancho Panza and sees Muslim pilgrims when he's actually looking at a flock of sheep.
* Guardians of the Galaxy for the Infinity Stone that must not touch the ground.
* Half-Life 2 by the Combine, and worshipped as a hero by the humans in equal amounts.
* Harry Potter films have had this problem in an unusual way. Not only was it pretty much necessary to watch them in order (which is reasonable enough for a series), it got to the point where the movies would be exceptionally difficult to follow unless the viewer had read the books as well.
* Gothic series averts this. Dangerous enemies who can one-shot a low-level character are just as likely to be present 30 seconds from the starting area as they are on the other side of the world.
* Grand Theft Auto, pressing the horn button while on foot would make the player character fart and belch. This action can still be done if the player is killed.
* Harry Potter movies, nearly all spells are designed to knock your opponent back a few feet. Even the ones that weren't. This is most obvious in the second movie when Harry and Draco Malfoy duel, where both say 4 or 5 different incantations all with the same exact effect of knocking the other on his ass...
* Gossip Girl, Blair wonders if the only reason Chuck has been pursuing her so tenaciously is that he can't stand losing. He confirms that it was all just a game to him. He's lying through his teeth.
* GURPS system. Apparently so much of the player base is American that they can't afford to switch to metric because, like many small RPG makers, SJGames is a margin business. (The Basic Set book does have a metric conversion table near the front.)
* Harry Harrison serum developed by a secret society. When being initiated into the organization, Kerk to finds out that his "grubber" counterpart Rhys has been a member (and immortal) for years.
* "Gothic Lolita" starts with a clanky music box tune that jumps notes when you least expect it.
* Granblue Fantasy has a somewhat subdued example in Joel. He is normally as nice and sweet of a guy as can be imagined, constantly looking out for his friends... but he also comments that the Crimson Horizon "looks like blood right before it's dried", and that one can "stare giant marine skeletons in the eye sockets" in a museum.

* Hannah Montana feels that her brother Jackson gets the short end of the stick being the normal brother of a world-famous pop star, and so she tries to make up for it by openly admitting that he's her favorite. For instance, she blows off Miley's visit with the Queen of England to see Jackson's volleyball game. Miley hates this until she learns of her grandmother's reasoning and agrees with her. In the same episode, we're shown that Jackson thinks Miley's the world's favorite (including their father's), as she gets all the attention, being an international pop star.
* Guardians of Ga'Hoole, Coryn making the order that they let Hamish the gnaw wolf eat before the rest of the pack - lest the pack be denied any of the food from his hunt - is treated as a big, status-quo-shaking deal.
* Going from a tenor trombone without an F attachment to one with an F attachment or a bass with just an F attachment or one with two attachments.
* Glitch, piggies and batterflys produce dung, though it's generally useful.
* Gravity Falls tends to use insults like these, such as "butt-faces" or "poop heads".
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, she forces her to publish an interview with Harry Potter in which Harry describes what happened the night Lord Voldemort came back. The blackmail is highly effective because Rita understands enough of Hermione to know that she would keep her word. Oh, and also because the penalty for the wizarding authorities finding out that someone is an unregistered animagus is a stay in Azkaban, the feared wizard prison guarded by dementors, creatures that suck all happiness and hope from a person and thus to be avoided if at all possible.
* Hero of the Kingdom with it, like it's a particularly shiny ball. If you collect the toys he's left strewn through the area and return them, he gives back the pearl in exchange, because he's decided that it's utterly boring.
* Hala & Hau Interlude shows Frax and Velvet volunteering at a Bug-Catching Contest as extra credit after failing a school assignment.
* He finds out she lied to him about how Louis got his name on the letterhead and leaves both her and the firm.
* GoldenEye (1997), several levels take place in the nine-year gap between the opening sequence and the proper beginning of the film. This includes Bond visiting a nuclear silo (and seeing Ouromov) and visiting the incomplete Severnaya bunker. Later on, near the end of the game, Bond also pursues Alec Trevelyan through a series of flooded caverns as the villain runs towards the control centre antenna.
* Gorky Park the friction between the militia (police) and the KGB was quite apparent. It becomes a plot point when Renko, chief investigator for the Militsiya, wonders why the KGB hasn't taken the case away from him.
* Guilty Gear), but he's barely literate. This is mainly because he was raised by Sol, who half-assed his education.
* Godzilla that appear in the films, including the titular King of the Monsters.
* Great Teacher Onizuka as a subtitle); when Vertical picked up on publishing the last volumes of SJG after TokyoPop filed for bankruptcy, they dropped the Shonan Junai Gumi subtitle entirely.
* Highlander is anything to go by; they're run by crazed corporations with their own personal armies. Throughout the film we see other great empires/countries fall so it's kinda a running theme.
* God of War II takes the term a bit more literally, as Gaia herself joins in the revolution against the Olympians (although this has more to do with avenging the Titans' defeat at the hands of the gods than avenging nature).
* Goblin Slayer consider demons to be the primary threat to the world, for Goblin Slayer, his allies, and everyone the little bastards prey upon, the goblins are the more immediate threat.
* Haven has a nice twist on this. Some residents of Haven decide to throw Audrey a birthday party since she's never had one. They decide to throw it on this nice old hotel out in the ocean on a small island with no cellphone reception. Well, long story short, the owner of the hotel had subtly dropped the suggestion that they should throw the party there. Turns out, the owner of the mansion is a chameleon-thing that kills people then turns into them, and he needs more people to change into. So one of the characters are no longer that character. Doesn't help that most of the people there are minor or new characters. Oh, and the ferry isn't coming back to get them until the end of the weekend, but there is a small boat that they ride away on.

* Hands Across the Table bumps into Fred MacMurray while he’s playing hopscotch on the checkered floor. She’s not impressed.
* Hellsister Trilogy and her allies just as fast. Exemplified with the opening of the eight chapter of "The Apokolips Agenda", where three Kryptonians are enough to drive 1,000 Para-Demons back.
* Guiding Light. Devastated when husband Josh leaves her to reunite with ex Reva, Annie suffers a miscarriage. However, the baby remains in her womb. At a party, Annie lured Reva to the top of a steep staircase, provoked her into an argument, then made it appear as though Reva had shoved her down the stairs. Reva was charged with manslaughter for the death of the baby until it was proven that the baby had died long before Annie fell down the stairs.
* Halloween...and just has time to notice steam on the windshield when Michael Myers (whose breath caused said steam) springs from the back seat and throttles her.
* Gravity Falls' second season begins with such agents coming to town. These agents were named Agent Powers and Agent Trigger and they were the main antagonists of the episode the appeared in. The episode's events convince them that there's definitely something going on.
* he had lost his money, then got his own card as the Goblin of Greed, and went on to feature in the art of countless other cards detailing his many attempts to regain his old fortune.
* He later partners with a local shooting range to improve on the AK-47, producing the "Cobra" gun that uses a magnetic field to fire solid metal bullets rather than cartridges. With no explosives, it's cheaper to maintain (a standard electricity supply will do), easier to aim (minimal recoil), and has a better rate of fire than an AK-47.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban involving students being attacked by a monster, leading to a year-long reign of terror which threatens to close the school. In comparison, Sirius Black coming after Harry in particular is rather low stakes.
* Gloomsbury episode "The Theory and Practice of Hanky Panky", one of the plotlines is that Henry isn't keen on giving the talk to his sons, and is trying to give the job to someone else. At the end, Vera informs him that she's finally tasked Venus Traduces with it, despite the fact that earlier in the episode Venus wanted Vera to be the father of her children, and was quite surprised to learn this wouldn't work.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) to insane superpowered monster.
* Harvey Beaks before it even aired, due to the fact that Harvey, Fee, and Foo have the same color scheme as Gumball, Anais, and Darwin. Of course, anyone who has ever seen either show will tell you they have absolutely nothing in common.
* Heart of Steel, Alistair has been virtually alone for the last ten years, but leaps at the chance to make gifts for Julia, with whom he is smitten. Romance and mad science turn out not to mix terribly well, and his initial gifts (her bisected diving companion turned into a cyborg and a pet chimera) horrify and confuse her.
* Half-Life 1 rather than your own HUD crosshair. And it had a true sniper rifle.
* Harem Prince: It can be argued that Kaori Koizumi's work suffers from this.
* Harry Potter, we had a friendly ghost teenager named Moaning Myrtle, who happened to be undead.
* Hector's World: Hector has the moniker "Hector Protector" but it's unknown if that's his real last name.
* handwaves She then ends the chapter by saying that this is a totally reasonable explanation, and that questioning her makes anyone who does a moron.
* Hellsister Trilogy for his mother's death, regardless of the fact that Supergirl killed her evil duplicate in self-defense:

* Heroes: The Haitian is revealed to have come from one of these in 'It Takes a Village'.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 that is the Guardians of Galaxy is that they're all morons who are completely out of their minds.
* Harvest Home: Cornwall Coombe is in rural Massachusetts, surrounded by woodland, and run by a group of murderous hillbillies who purposefully bring over New Yorkers to impregnate, diversify their genetic line, and maim and kill if necessary.
* Half-Life 2: Episode 2, where you could turn on a microwave and explosively destroy its contents; turns out, the casserole belonged to him.
* Gonzo's original anime changed Alucard and Seras's relationship, by
* Gundam' game, whenever a Mobile Suit or Mobile Armor has been shot enough, it blows up, even if you would normally only expect an arm to fall off or a leg to be severely damaged.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters, the Chans and the Guardians deliberately keep Section 13 in the dark about the true nature of the Guardians' powers and about everything relating to Meridian, for fear that word will leak and the world's governments will try to take advantage of it.
* Gremlins cereal ad, Gizmo holds a bowl of Gremlins cereal as if about to eat a spoonful. A child with enormous Gremlin-like ears opens the fridge, searching for milk. At the table, he eats a spoonful of cereal. A girl walks towards the sink, and turns, revealing she too has Gremlin-like ears. But when they eat their cereal, the Gremlin ears disappear. Gizmo, on the other hand, continues to lift his bowl of cereal, still acting as if he is about to eat a spoonful of cereal. Then, Gizmo, hiding in a small box, says, "Gremlin! Yum yum!" as the box suddenly closes.
* Gravity which added sound effects for collisions and even a few whooshes.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, Onizuka taunts him unseen until he backs against a wall, then Onizuka busts through it with one hand and drags him through.
* Haley Starshine climbing onto the character introduction page to steal a diamond to be used for a Resurrection spell), and the fourth wall of being in a game (characters often directly reference feats, having skill points, and gaining levels, which technically aren't supposed to be in-character knowledge).
* Hell Comes to Frogtown — Roddy Piper plays the most fertile man on Earth in a future where fertility is scarce. While valuable, he is forced into a government mission to rescue — and impregnate — a treasured group of fertile women.
* Guyver: out of control; after his first battle, Sho carries and unconscious Mizuki to her house. She then wakes up to see him carry her, more specifically notices his hand under her rear. She then jumps off him and says "Sho, you're a pervert!!" before running off. Leaving him confused.
* Hairstyle Malfunction: A woman's wig is removed and she is revealed to be bald
* Gul'dan's power dynamic was heavily simplified. In the original game, Gul'dan and his Shadow Council secretly controlled the Horde through
* Higurashi: When They Cry, Dr. Irie says he's waiting for the 9-13 year old Satoko to become older. How serious he was when he said he wanted to marry her is a matter of debate, though the series implies he really only sees her as a daughter figure.
* Harry Potter books. While in school they take a positive delight in breaking rules- including a couple of actual wizarding laws -and generally messing with people, but always remain on the 'good' side of things. After dropping out of school, they open an amazingly successful joke shop.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys episode "God-Fearing Child". Hercules and Hera team up to protect a pregnant Xena from the wrath of Zeus, due to the prophecy that her baby will bring about the Twilight of the Gods. Zeus kills Hera for her betrayal and Herc kills Zeus to save Xena and baby Eve.
* Good Burger, the titular restaurant has the "Burgermobile", a 1975 AMC Pacer with a front end that looks like a giant burger and is occasionally driven by Ed.
* Have I Got News for You amongst other things) pointed out that the satirist was getting £10,000 of public money for three hours of work a week.
* , Harry is a victim of the backwards-stepping line variant when Hagrid asks for a volunteer to take a closer look at Buckbeak in third-year Care of Magical Creatures.

* Granblue Fantasy Ferry ended up with the rough deal of being stuck on the brink of life and death. She's not particularly happy about it, as her greatest wish is just to be re-united with her family again.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, during a psychedelic dream sequence.
* God of War III) that manage to be more difficult than the gods due to cramped spaces and a fussy grab mechanic.
* GoldenEye getting killed. The film then skips to 1995, where Bond is sent to investigate the theft of a prototype helicopter capable of resisting EMP attacks during a military demonstration in Monte Carlo and how it ended up in a radar facility in Siberia.
* Heneral Luna (technically set in 1899, but otherwise right at the very beginning of this period)
* he used audio tapes and amplifiers to broadcast the noises of various insect species, which can incapacitate others or damage materials..
* Global in Canada does these with specific characters saying memorable lines from their shows, accompanied by the Global logo, the show title, and a picture of said character. They also have a five second "did you know?" spot known as "Huh: Have U heard?" that provides interesting info on the show you are currently watching.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers dress as American soldiers at one point in order to infiltrate their camp and spy on them.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets. This involves Harry having to listen to Lockhart's self-important advice on being a celebrity, which makes it even more tedious.
* Heroic Age That's nearly two weeks of pummeling each other over and over again with enough force to rend a small celestial body in half. And near the climax of the fight, neither one seems any worse for the wear.
* Goa'uld Hegemony, Yu is pleased to note that at least he lost to an enemy he could respect. However, this is entirely one-sided as by the time the Goa'uld surrender, Naruto was only willing to allow it because he'd become so bored with the war.
* Heavy Rain called "The Taxidermist", where Madison has to infiltrate the house of a man who stuffs the bodies of murdered women. It's probably scarier than anything in the actual game.
* Half-Life 2 are about to be thrown over a chasm by Dog, Alyx reassures the player by saying that, as a robot, he has done the math. Then she quietly asks him if he has done the math. During playtesting, right after she said it, Dog, as part of his idle animation, shook his head. The playtester assumed this was supposed to happen and laughed at the perceived joke, and Valve made it an intentional reaction.
* Higurashi: When They Cry: "Onikakushi" (Demoned Away) is the first arc. "Onigafuchi" (Demon's Abyss) is what Hinamizawa used to be known as. As well as confusion between the two, the latter is sometimes spelled with a double C; this is wrong as it would imply a doubled consonant in pronunciation that's not there.
* Guinness World Records goes so far as to collect detailed documented examples of the World's Best / biggest / most expensive / fastest / etc. Whatever, Ever!
* Greg the Bunny's 13 episodes did not air before the show was cancelled, but appear in the DVD set.
* Go Mad from the Revelation: Realizing something causes a person to go insane.
* GO AWAY AND NEVER BOTHER ME AGAIN!!! button. (There wasn't one, but it was at least possible to disable Clippy with a bit of effort.)
* Grim Tales from Down Below die and end up in Heaven. But the saints get fed up of him and kick him out (literally). Billy then ends up in Hell. But they get fed up of him there as well and he ends up wandering the Earth as a spirit.
* Happy pigs figure in too many barbecue restaurant signs to count - maybe the majority of them.
* Hero System. They also can walk on solid ground with no problems, but don't automatically get to fly unless they buy that power separately, and may in fact fall through the floor if they don't stop themselves at the price of taking the usual damage from the 'impact'.

* Hamilton, those who supported the real Jefferson's political positions may root for him during the Cabinet battles.
* Hercules: Hades is a villainous example of this trope, except unlike most villain examples, his humor is mostly to cope with the grim atmosphere of the Underworld he is forced to rule over rather than sadism.
* Grand Finale released the first of a series of clues left around the world as part of "Cipher Hunt". Fans online and in real life collaborated to follow the clues across the world, eventually finding a statue of Bill Cipher and a buried treasure chest full of fan swag just outside of Reedsport, OR.
* Have I Got News for You, and that he uses the same voice for everybody he "impersonates".
* Henchgirl. Naturally Mary, Fred and Sue lose their appetite (and in Mary's case, her lunch) when they see this.
* He figured out that he wasn't John House's biological son when he was twelve.
* Green Arrow's son and successor, also suffered this. Due to the fact he's explicitly a better martial artist than his father (and in fact, ranks among the top fighters), once Oliver came back to life, it was hard to give Connor much of a role outside of being the 'younger, better Green Arrow' without, as with Canary, making Ollie himself look bad. Though Kevin Smith at least placed a great deal of importance on their shared status and, though Ollie took the lead, at least tried to make Connor a distinct and important figure, afterwards Ollie ditches him, then later he's unceremoniously shot in the head and left with brain-damage, that results in him losing his skills so that Ollie no longer has to worry about being usurped by him (and later, his other son, Roy Harper, gets his arm cut off and returns to drug use, in order to stop him surpassing his old man too).
* Good Game who became very popular especially among kids for how funny he was and the amazing chemistry he had with the human hosts.
* he murdered the one defense attorney ever to mar it (even though Gregory Edgeworth only managed to get him a penalty and still lost the trial), then when that didn't satisfy his need for revenge, spent fifteen years.
* Grim Fandango, whenever Manny draws his scythe, a death knell plays softly in the background.
* Hello Kitty friends. They have various adaptations including TV shows and comic books, but they are at heart saleable products first.
* He helps Miss Brooks and co. find a missing postman in "Postage Due."
* Heavenly Creatures are assigned to write an essay on the British Royal Family. Juliet instead writes one on the royal family of Borovnia, the fantasy realm she and Pauline created. Pauline comes to her defense by pointing out the assignment never specified which royals.
* he watches TV while drinking beer and eating junk food wearing an open bathrobe with white briefs, white socks, and a visibly dirty white undershirt underneath.
* Henry Danger episode "Toon in for Danger". The first cartoon made about Kid Danger and Captain Man had Henry voiced by a female voice, much to his dismay.
* Greed's ultimate goal is immortality, since, as he puts it, "They don't call me Greed for nothing. I want money. I want women, status, and power. I want everything this world's selling and eternity's topping the list!" It's both a means to achieving his other desires and an end in and of itself. While Al points out that Greed seems to
* Half-Life 2, as they were fleeing their conquered homeworld. Taking over Earth actually was an afternoons work for the Combine.
* Gotye wins with "Somebody That I Used to Know". Largely obscure outside of Australia, the song becomes a #1 hit in most countries, including the US, and wins a Grammy! Unfortunately, he ended up a one-hit wonder.
* Hatoful Boyfriend Drama CD is about Ryouta and Sakuya investigating the seven mysteries of St PigeoNation's.
* Grey's Anatomy caused the previously unknown name Sadie to jump into the top 100 baby names the year after the show's premiere.
* Green Goblin using his glider and attempting to hold/distract Spidey in place long enough for the glider to hit him. It doesn't work and Goblin gets impaled on his own glider for his trouble.

* he finds her naked and soaked in the blood of the men who tried to gang-rape her after she killed all of them. Various panel shots have the Male Gaze
* Henry was also notably hard to handle from the writing team's point of view, due to his huge change in personality after Season 8. In Season 22, he was
* Hellsister Trilogy in the 21st century. His partner Dawnstar doesn't get over his death but she eventually starts a relationship with another person. Then she finds out Wildfire didn't die but he was trapped in a star for a long while during which he wanted nothing but escape and see her again. Cue Dawnstar feeling awfully guilty, even though Wildfire doesn't blame her.
* Hardy. It backfires in episode 12. Carroll calls Hardy, who reveals they found the cult's armory/training ground. Carroll and the other cultists quickly realize this means they're screwed.
* Haruhi Suzumiya. That is, an artificial and fully organic human body created to serve as a vessel for an alien intelligence. Whether their minds are also artificial constructs created by the Data Overmind or are extensions of the Overmind itself is unclear (it may even be a little of both).
* Hector's World are Sprat's dad and Ming's mum, and both seem relatively good: the former lets his son use his computer and is forgiving, and the latter cheers her daughter up when she gets cyberbullied.
* Hagakure Tooru has the power of invisibility, so she spends most of her time naked since nobody can see her anyway. At one point, she says she is going all out, by which she means that she will take out her gloves and shoes, the only things composing her hero suit.
* Green Lantern has been getting some attention in this manner recently, mainly due to him being a very charismatic villain and his arguments against the Guardians being too involved with their mysteries and prophecies to do an effective job policing the cosmos.
* Hancock videos of the objectionable actions he takes as a superhero. In one, he grabs ice cream from an ice cream truck nearly-naked with his clothes burnt off. In another, he's shown grabbing (by the tail) a whale that had beached itself, and tossing it out to sea hundreds of yards away, smashing a small boat.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, he calls Rocket a "trash panda", a memetic alternate name for raccoons. He should have absolutely no idea that Internet memes exist.
* Hey Jude features other cuts not previously released on American albums.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets requested that Harry serve his detention for flying a Ford Anglia to Hogwarts helping Lockhart answer his fan mail because he thought Harry would enjoy it. Harry practically begs Professor McGonagall to serve his detention with Ron cleaning trophies under Flich's supervision instead, but she refuses and Harry is bored senseless for about four hours by Lockhart's "advice" on being a celebrity.
* Hero Mask Tina is introduced to Anna Winehouse, a scientist she learns worked with her parents. She spends much of their time together learning about the mother she never knew and her father was reluctant to speak of.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers responds "In Russia, fangirls don't kidnap chibis, chibis kidnap them, da?"
* Guardians of the Flame, warrior Karl realizes he's out of his depth during the Arena games, and has to find some unorthodox tactics to secure his victory. One of them is making use of the previously largely ignored Ring Out rule.
* Henry II and his wife and Queen Eleanor of Acquitaine differed, as they did on most things, over which son they preferred. Henry's favourite was John, and Eleanor's favourite was Richard.
* GoGo's Crazy Bones for the 90's sets since they don't have restrictions on colors.
* He also has a cranked toy which walks forwards and chomps its jaws, which
* Gunstar Heroes, the lightning + fire combo creates a gun that shoots a laser that terminates after a short distance. This pseudo laser sword is one of the best combos in the game because it can deal out a lot of damage and cancel out most enemy shots.

* Heroes: Played with — in season three this trope is used (via Isaac Mendez-style paintings) to show Matt Parkman that his "happy ever after" future has been irreparably altered, in that such a future for him and his wife has been knocked out by some event in the present.
* ''Half Jack'' by faantine (BreathingSpace). Horatio Hornblower doesn't quite like his name in canon, especially his Christian name, but in this fic, it's his surname that earns him some lighthearted scoff.
* Hermitcraft Server, Grian mysteriously loses several stacks of diamonds and a villager with no explanation. When he builds a time machine to reclaim the diamonds from the past, he realizes how he lost them in the first place.
* Half-Life 2 of a bridge to shut off a force field. When you finally get to cross the bridge on the surface it's not half as dramatic, apart from almost getting run over by a train.
* Hatoful Boyfriend, and while the others get human portraits, his is just a drawing of a pigeon.
* Harry Houdini died of a ruptured appendix shortly after one of his shows. Before that show, a man came backstage and tried to test Houdini's "abs of steel" by punching him in the abdomen several times. This led to the well-known (but
* Grotesque Old Woman. She seems more like an orc or troll caricature than a human.
* Hercules to talk her into joining him, but understandably infuriated her instead.
* "Goldimouse and the Three Cats". Sylvester takes the place of the Papa Bear in
* Goldust, where in one match he rubbed Ramon's chest and freaked him out.
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating: Ishu had no friends before the events of the book, being more interested in studying and reading alone, which doesn't appear to be a problem at all for her. However, by dating Hani she gets closer with more people.
* Grumpy) and Nova are reunited, resuming their previous relationship.
* had his mouth restrained with a scarf, as both Lorenzo Music (Garfield) and Thom Huge (Jon) had decent singing voices.
* H. Beam Piper stories, the home timeline carefully guards the secret of inter-timeline travel and takes advantage of resources from less developed (or completely uninhabited) timelines. The Paratime Police suppress gross exploitation such as inter-timeline slave-trading, but the bottom line is that Homeline's interests come first.
* Hellraiser. Fundamentally it is the story of a man who receives unimaginable punishment due to his own sins and his abuse of everyone around him.
* Had to Be Sharp: These people needed to be badass just to survive this long.
* Grace is much less naïve in early strips (in the most glaring case, later
* Gotham though as she's perfectly normal. Her conviction is just a part of the delusion she has.
* Hannah Montana "Wish Upon A Star" crossover. After Miley wishes herself to actually be Hannah Montana, a guardian angel appears to her in the form of her bodyguard, Roxy, saying she is shaped like Roxy to "make her feel comfortable".
* half-Grimm, then asks if the Beowolf that Jaune is petting is his dad.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone initially auditioned for the role of Harry and then Ron. He was ultimately cast as Draco Malfoy.
* Grease had to have the pants sewn around her legs and the zipper actually broke.
* Heroic Sacrifice, but were still assumed to be alive. And sure enough, both are revealed to be alive in Chapter 632's cover story. Not only that, they had a kid together.
* Hannah Montana has the dad being grilled for something and escaping by miming a fax machine (in 2008).
* Guide To Recent Equestrian History, before the Reign of Discord, the ponies of Equestria are teetering on the brink of civil war. Good thing that Discord showed up to give them someone to unite against.
* He also seems to hate his other son, Roboute, ordering to have his life support cut the moment he hears that he's still semi-alive.
* Helena Cain is the new series's take on Cain (played by Lloyd Bridges) from

* Hellboy's Bureau of Paranormal Research and Defense is located in New Jersey, where it's disguised as a waste treatment plant.
* Henry Adams gains Joker's sinister intelligence, even being able to hide his infection enough to fool Batman into thinking he's immune.
* Green Arrow adopted by the hero, check; every single gadget Batman is known for but with an arrow theme instead of a bat theme, check. He became his own person by becoming more playboyish and more political, and seldom becoming quite as isolated and brooding as Batman even when his stories were just as dark.
* He Knows About Timed Hits: Video game characters inform the player how the controls work.
* Heroes Association due to believing Saitama is a villain and him showing up at their headquarters to tell them to leave him alone. From his perspective, a bunch of annoying freaks keep attacking him all the time. From theirs, an unstoppable enemy is ruthlessly tearing through even S-Rank heroes in an effort to destroy the Association.
* Harry Kelly starts out a little boy who gets caught up in one of the Red Panda's cases in "Into the Darkness". He gets sworn in as one of the Red Panda's agents and amply proves himself, but he doesn't truly ascend until the final chronological arc, in which he's a young man, just back from World War II and
* Granted, the photo coming to life isn't diagetic and is obviously a stylistic representation of his memory (motion pictures did exist in 1912, when the movie takes place).
* Harry Potter Comics: Ron's reaction to finding out his daughter is in "HUFFLEPUFF!!!!!"
* Greg also disliked writing for Air-element characters that spoke in
* He also calls enemies in general "Knuckleheads", "Chucklenuts", "Dummies" and his teammates "pallies".
* Hey Arnold! is forced to get glasses due to her waning vision. At first, she absolutely hates them because it drops her to geek status. However, she later comes to accept them, and gets a new, sleeker pair of glasses at the end of the episode.
* He had to suppress a shudder of disgust as he pressed the camera's shutter, recording the details of the murder.
* Hero Antagonist of the Hell's Vengeance adventure path (designed for evil-aligned PCs), wields Heart's Edge, a blade formerly owned by the goddess Iomedae during her time as a mortal. It has all the powers of a Holy Avenger, which is already a very powerful magic item, with a number of additional abilities that make it a very potent weapon against evil. After defeating its wielder and crushing her revolution, players have the option of embarking on a series of difficult quests to corrupt the sword into the very evil Heart's Bane.
* Happens to Momohime; Jinkuro, her possessor, accidentally possesses Momohime while trying to possess Yukinojo, another powerful samurai and Momohime's betrothed.
* Hellraiser: Hellworld, as the original killer opens the Lament Configuration and the franchise icon puts in his obligatory appearance.
* Halo: Glasslands. The only one who really objects to the Spartan-IIIs, as it turns out, is Catherine Halsey, who is apparently trying to discourage them from fighting because she sees the Human-Covenant War as unwinnable.
* Going Critical mentions that Blight's remains have yet to be found. Paxton smirks and says "So, he melted with the sub." Batman responds "Sure he did," and walks off. Possibly a subversion, since Blight never appeared again on the show. He did return in the comic books based on the series but was frozen at the end of the issue.
* Great Teacher Onizuka when he stands too close to a box of burning chain letters
* Heavy Time (concentrating very deeply, improving his reaction times), which allows him to fly space fighters moving at significant fractions of lightspeed.
* Heir Apparent. Losing the game doesn't kill in itself, but if the game is not won, gamers will eventually die.
* Harvest Moon: Back to Nature. Ann subverts stereotypes by being the most tomboyish bachelorette.

* Harry in the second book on how to fight in a way other than charging in head-on.
* Hana Song was better known by her pro-gamer handle of D.Va, before being recruited by the Korean military's MEKA program to pilot a * Grand Finale features nearly every hero in the series teaming up to stop Galactus.
* harpies Likewise, but only halfway through, imps are always chaotic little buggers, and are said to be especially adept at pulling some very dark shenanigans on anyone who slights them. That said, they aren't particularly evil in most myths, just a source of minor annoyance, since they love to play ultimately harmless pranks like stealing and hiding some small, virtually worthless items to mess with somebody.
* Haven", what happens to a member of the Benson family in their dreams happens to them for real, though this stops if they can conquer their greatest fears. The evil William and his thugs modify Carrie Benson so that her Trouble becomes contagious, resulting in several townspeople getting injured or killed in their dreams. Fortunately, when Carrie conquers her fear, everybody she affected is cured as well.
* Hickory Dickory Death also has a lampshade hanging, where one character likes to recite the creepy nursery rhyme of the title and another, noting the lyrics, wonders why children like to say such horrible things.
* hikikomori. Said crush later becomes her boyfriend when they meet as adults.
* Hans Christian Andersen" ends with the protagonist Karen getting her feet cut off to remove the titular shoes, before she eventually dies. Many adaptations find a less painful way for Karen to remove the shoes, and end with Karen still alive.
* Heroin "the sedative for coughs" (Diamorphine - another ex-Bayer trademark)
* Halo 4 have made it clear from the start that it was always meant to be the beginning of a second trilogy called "the Reclaimer Saga".
* Harry's noted to absorb this tendency as he gets more powerful, doing what he thinks is right rather than what is necessarily legal/by the rules. While he's naturally prone to doing that, there's a distinct element of 'my way or be laminated to the highway' about him. He gets called up for it on more than one occasion.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, the titular characters at one point ride a cheetah.
* HA HA HA—No: Laughing along with something only to end it with an abrupt shutdown.
* he finds out that his two brothers single-handedly killed most of the Hickmans in response and made the last two leave town.
* Heroes of Might and Magic, each castle has its own native terrain, on which its heroes are more mobile than the enemy heroes.
* Gundam tendencies, but are both highly popular characters in the United States. Duo because he's a badass and one of the sharpest characters in the show and Chibodee because he's so damn awesome.
* Got Volunteered: Someone is forcibly "volunteered" by someone else to do a task.
* Hatoful Boyfriend ends with him promising to wait until the heroine is older.
* Gym Class Hell: Works of fiction portray gym class as torturous, especially for unpopular kids and nerds.
* Highwaymen: It's implied in the ending that Cray and Molly ultimately get together after he rescued her from the serial killer Fargo a second time. Fargo had already murdered Molly's best friend and her male suitor previously in the film, so it's not surprising that she'd look to Cray for comfort.
* Heavy Object had Flag Eggnog who was furious that one of his gaffes was uploaded for the public to see and desired to hunt down and kill anyone who saw the video.
* Heel Realization: A villain realizes how evil they were and becomes regretful as a result.
* "Hide and Seek Challenge", in which you have to beat the game on Hard with no HUD display and all monsters invisible.
* "Goin' Bonkers". After Hammer Kirby lands one last whack from his hammer onto Bonkers' head, he falls off the tower of Dedede's castle that he was holding on to, and upon hitting the ground and making another pothole, he reverts back to his normal self, still alive and well.

* he was cornered by Dr. Wily and mentions how if he "still had a lower body I'd be pissing myself about now."
* Graham Aker if the requirements are met. Otherwise, he sacrifices himself to clear a path for Setsuna like in the original movie.
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age. Togas, Greek Temples, and the whole thing, all powered by magic... er... Psynergy. This lost civilization even discovered immortality, only to realize that life got really, really boring after a few hundred years.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, when Manny is shot in the face, Niko was rather amused.
* Happens all the time, mainly because many shows don't really have a budget to begin with. This doesn't apply to, say, Broadway (most of the time), but there are far more theaters out there than what's on Broadway, as well as many colleges that produce productions, and many of them (both college productions and actual theatrical productions,) are run on a shoe-string budget. This can get to the point where all you might have are cheap costumes, a bare-bones set, and minimal lighting. And some productions don't even have that. But in a field where, on average, only 2% of the US go to see shows, it can only be expected, unfortunately.
* he saying in a flashback scene that he considered Jonouchi the third-best duelist he had encountered. (Pegasus invented the game, so a guy can't help but trust his opinion here.)
* Good Girl is secretly afraid of being electrocuted whenever she vacuums.
* Goddess Reborn Chronicle but the point is made that choices are always possible, it being its foremost theme-even if the choices are hard or cruel, those choices still exist.
* He fell into the wedding cake, and its tiers lay in ruins; the bride burst into tears.
* Gone with the Wind, where Scarlett notices that even the plainest girls have no trouble getting engaged due to this trope.
* has reality warping, speed, obscene cutting power and versatile weaponry that give her a tremendous leg up on her opposition, but anyone capable of matching her speed can easily demolish her in 2-4 hits.
* Gunsmith Cats she nabbed from a random crook—seriously insufficient firepower for the trouble she had at hand). Doesn't stop her from doing rapid five-pulls with one to scare the hell out of someone she's interrogating though.
* Heartcore features not only Amethyst Lashiec as an avatar for author TL Welker, but cameos of characters made by friends of Welker that are avatars for their respective authors. To witt:
* Having to pay taxes is just one reason why many of the vampires are so unhappy with the vampire leadership forcing them to reveal themselves to the public.
* Hat a planet and build cities showcasing their culture, Darkdawn opted to build a city that would work as a wind instrument, playing the same nihilistic song over and over. They also flew a flag of solid black.
* Halloween (2007) remake features the famous exchange in which Michael Myers is compared to the boogeyman. For those who watched the original, movie's over, right? Not exactly...
* hammerKind Abstractus. Much like his personality, his hammers start out clumsy and impractical but quickly become ridiculously powerful.
* Hack/Slash had a villain-of-the-issue called D1ab0lik. He was a stereotype misanthropic geek.
* Harry Harrison a lie detector. Jim immediately changes his tactic and starts telling partial truths. Before, he was simply lying through his teeth without feeling nervous. After all, he is a professional thief and con man.
* Half-Life: Full Life Consequences uses this on John Freeman, but he gets bored after 3 seconds and shoots her with a RPG.
* Hawaii Five-0 Season 2 Episode 15 "Mai Ka Wa Kahiko." A US Marshal, escorting a prisoner back to Hawaii, is murdered in the plane's lavatory. He was trying to call Danny at the time he was killed. An old friend of Danny's, the Marshal had recognized a dirty cop. The dirty cop had just been released from prison and blamed Danny for putting him there.

* Gravedale High episode "Monster Gumbo", Blanche's gumbo recipe becomes popular enough for her classmates to sell it and raise money, which, of course, inflates her ego and makes her bossy towards her friends.
* GURPS is actual life-or-death fighting. The book notes that sometimes a high war can turn into a low war, but hardly ever the other way around.
* Halo, humanity has not only managed to reverse-engineer a good deal of Covenant equipment but improve upon them.
* He can be seen enjoying a beer in Arthur's local when Ford and Arthur take their six pints to a table.
* Grey Knight. This ability is represented in the 8th Edition of the game by the 'Purifying Flame' Ability that increases the damage done by the Purifier's Smite psychic power but reduces its range.
* Grell's favorite color is red, and she delights in painting the world red with blood. Her line of work as a reaper effectively involves her hacking up people with a chainsaw every night. With paperwork in between.
* Guys and Dolls Big Jule repeatedly rolls snake-eyes, and has to resort to threats of violence and cheating to make his money back.
* He does express some frustration with Balsa's wandering ways, noting that she seems to thrive in life-or-death situations. When Balsa admits that this is true and jokingly asks him if he has a cure for it, he painedly replies that if he himself isn't enough of a cure, then there's no point in going on waiting. But he goes on waiting all the same.
* Hard Being Pure: When Noa tries to fling her cut-off hand away from her, the hand spider-crawls back to her.
* had raped her, was actually trying to see whether he could be saved. The stabbing had been done by a vigilante.
* hat: Having, or displaying, a magic talent is considered "obscene" and grounds for exile from their homeland.
* has standing orders to earn her Master's family money as an exotic dancer and prostitute, and
* Grabbed by the Ghoulies will do this upon death. The effect interestingly begins with the enemy's body glowing a bright green light before falling into a body-shaped stain on the floor.
* Heroes, a cute, childish, and sociopathic woman who delights in killing, hurting, and controlling people.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows that he hid there, as it means that they've figured out his greatest secret and are actively working to deal with it.
* Green Book, the protagonist Tony "Lip" Vallelonga is played with heavy, even exaggerated Italian accent by Viggo Mortensen. The French dub drops the Italian accent entirely, presumably to avoid making the character sound too caricatural.
* Grain bins are a common artificial source of quicksand-style danger, where one false move can get a worker pulled down in a matter of seconds and suffocated under all the grain.
* Grey's Anatomy). Other sections of the episode are pastiches of sitcoms, Japanese game shows, and public service announcements.
* Hesher is set in (the film itself was released in 2010). But the clothing, dialogue, and automobiles make it feel like it's set in either the late 1980s or early 1990s.
* GURPS: One of the backstory options presented for a campaign setting where dragons have overrun a fantasy world is based on the dangers of tampering with such food chains. In this case, dragons normally produce huge numbers of offspring that another species of monster habitually preys on, keeping their numbers very low. Then the dragon-eating monsters are wiped out by humanoids who see them as threats, and, well...
* Gundam 00 if only by virtue of the fact he is totally serious about his passion and has hardly any traits of the Occidental version aside from the fanaticism.
* good. However, with the popularity of Space Marines and variants, many of the other species that would have been considered "normal" have been demoted to "swarm" status. Doesn't help when GW seems to actively embrace this new image, releasing even more space marines while actively playing up the "swarms" part in other armies.

* Goblin Slayer, with an ogre, a troll, a dragon, a dark elf and several types of undead also appearing.
* Her butler can do the same, but uses apparently limitless razor wires
* Heroes apparently killed last episode, has her regeneration powers only kick in when the branch in her head is removed. She wakes up, looks down, and sees her ribs exposed for autopsy.
* Gomer Pyle, U.S.M.C.: In "Gomer, the Perfect M.P.", Gomer is on MP duty, with orders from Sgt. Carter not to admit anyone without proper identification, and in order for Carter to enter the base, he has to show his ID, which is impossible since it's in his wallet which is back at the base.
* Hellgate: London warehouses have the same random layout and collection of enemies as any other maps, but with their specific texture and a few unbreakable crates thrown in for props/obstacles. They can be quite fun if you have an attack that ricochets, off walls, ceilings and floors.
* Heroic Team Revolt turn against them and leave due to the hero's very unheroic and immoral behavior.
* God Hand crazy, and Gene's not known for keeping his hands to himself.)
* Happily Married: A married couple who are genuinely happy and don't have any major relationship problems.
* Grand Theft Auto IV are all meant to occur parallel with each other and feature intersecting plot points in different points of view. Examples include Elizabeta's drug deal involving Niko and Johnny, Johnny's theft of the diamonds from a deal involving Luis, Gay Tony and the Cook, and the ambushed deal at The Libertonian involving all three main characters of the games.
* Greek is shown to be extremely smart, to the point of being able to converse freely in Latin and figuring out what the point of a psychological experiment was that the research assistant didn't realize, but he's also shown to completely not care about school, such as showing up to a class for the first time two months after it started.
* Haunted House: A house that's either haunted by evil spirits or appears to be.
* Godot and Juan Corrida were this in Japan, although they were made Hispanic in the American translation.
* "Glodssonssonsson". There are also a few humans who picked this kind of name to trick people into thinking they were dwarfs, sometimes for business reasons.
* Harumaki and Gyouko promised to meet each other and elope when the cherry trees bloomed. When the spirit of Harumaki goes on a date with female Ranma (who reminds him of his old love) he tries to find those same cherry trees, but is devastated to discover a construction site in their place. In the manga, this causes him to finally let go of the past, and peacefully return to his deathbed (he gets better) but in the anime, female Ranma convinces him that the trees are still there, he's just not looking hard enough. Sure thing, they all see the cherry trees and Harumaki is at peace.
* Gryphon Knight Epic: One of the enemy types you face is spider roughly as big as Sir Oliver.
* here, with loads of cheerful sarcasm and buzzers for each time Anakin screws up.
* Goofy short "How to Dance", George Geef gets a dress form to serve as his practice dancing partner. For the most part, it's a regular dress form, but she does get drunk after a cup of punch.
* Goth Girl Rising: When Kyra is arrested, she does make only one phone call (to Fanboy), which doesn't go through, but the arresting officer agrees to let her use the police station's computer to contact Fanboy through instant messenger.
* Gourmet Hound, a webcomic about a young woman with an amazing sense of smell + taste tracking down former chefs of her favorite restaurant to discover who it was that cooked the "perfect taste" she's missing.
* Herman's Head once, taking the form of Leslie Nielsen to better meet Herman's expectations.

* Harsher in Hindsight: While it didn't involve crashing through windows, he would later be injured in a motorcycle accident several years later.
* Gozaburo Kaiba, Seto and Mokuba Kaiba, is this in the manga version of * Heroes: The Heroes 360 experience, where the participants take cues from the character Wireless to solve the mystery of Primatech paper.
* Gotham: Barbara cheats on Jim Gordon with other men and women but flips out if she thinks he's cheating on her. When Barbara calls Gordon's penthouse, Ivy Pepper answers and lies that she is Gordon's friend. Barbara takes this as Ivy being Gordon's new lover and tells her to "Go to Hell." She also attacks Leslie with a knife presumably because she had gotten together with Gordon in her place and again tries to stab her when Leslie hits Barbara where it hurts after Barbara states she's going to win Jim back from her.
* Harry Potter: loosely followed with the book titles, e.g. "Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets". Many of the chapter titles take the form of one, two of three nouns, e.g. "Talons and Tea Leaves", "The Centaur and the Sneak", "Cat, Rat and Dog".
* had, he might just have made up a random baseless excuse to kill the guy.
* Grunkle's rides was legal, he replied, "When there's no cops around, anything's legal!"
* Gravity Falls, he ended it after two seasons in order to avoid this trope.
* Gojoe tells how Minamoto Yoshitsune was actually a deranged, superpowered mystic who wanted to destroy all religion in Japan, only that he died fighting Benkei. The Yoshitsune and Benkei that became famous in history were lieutenants of the Genji impersonating them.
* Hansel and Gretel, the eponymous characters live in a world where their food comes from somewhat different origins than ours. Vegetables and fruits grow on the heads of plant fairies/people, bread comes from the bread mines, and meat comes from a pig the size of a hill who cuts slices off himself, rather like the poster at the top of this page.
* Happens in the Strong Bad E-mail "senior prom", when the lights suddenly go out at the "Entrapment All Up On the Moon" Dance:
* GW prevent people cobbling together additional figures by ensuring that model packs are always limited to the bare minimum amount of torso & leg pieces. Certain packs of special & heavy weapons have their own limitations, where even if they give you multiple weapons, you still only get enough bases, weapons carriages and accessories to make only some of them out of the box.
* Half Life: Opposing Force, the player character is one of the soldiers sent to Black Mesa. Gordon Freeman makes a cameo.
* Guardian Fairy Michel pull one off in episode 13 to sneak in a police station.
* Happens in pretty much every Michael Bay-directed movie ever made. Particularly in the * Happiness Is Mandatory: Always strive to be happy and cheerful! Or suffer the consequences!
* Haru Urara, a Japanese mare that became a national symbol of courage and optimism during the final years of the Lost Decade. After a decade of economic stagnation, people in Japan related to the story of a plucky racehorse that always tried her hardest, but never won a single race. She was nicknamed the "Shining Star of Losers Everywhere" and cited by people as an inspiration to keep trying no matter how many times they failed. Because of her popularity, the failing racetrack where she ran was saved and continues to operate to the present day.
* Great Ship (bigger than most planets) and humanity wasn't in conflict with any other races, so there was no real reason for them to withhold access to the ship other than their own petty egos.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Ballad of Gay Tony is named after this trope. During the mission brief, Yusuf Amir, the mission's boss, is not wearing any pants while partaking in cocaine and a prostitute's services, with his father later walking in on him, showing disappointment in Yusuf's hedonistic lifestyle.
* her heart will begin to race, her moving speed will be reduced to a slow trudge, and she will drop whatever item she's currently holding to try and still her fluttering heart.

* Heart Catch Pretty Cure Nanami tickles Tsubomi to cheer her up for a misunderstanding.
* Gypsy Later, when Louise is more or less pushed into a stripper role, she takes their advice to heart. Her gimmick is speaking directly to the audience.
* Happy Heroes, after he defeats the wolverine monster in a fight in the sky, Happy S. plummets to the ground and lands on a robot by accident. The robot's romantic partner was trying to spoonfeed them before Happy S. literally dropped into the scene.
* Heralds of Andraste in the Maker and His Prophet, but at least neither of them has to go through it alone.
* global domination himself, he has one glaring weakness: self-esteem. He's been defeated by insults and peer pressure, and his own low opinion of himself keeps him from going full-tilt against the heroes and his brother.
* Grant Morrison that spreads "logo-spores" throughout the atmosphere of its target planet. The spores infect people, forming a corporation which then consumes rival corporations and seduces whole populations through hypnotic ad campaigns, to the point where it literally owns everything and everyone on its host-planet. It then 'brands' the planet with its enormous 'X'-logo and feeds of the planet's resources, leaving behind a dead husk of a world covered in Hexus logos.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers after Bloody Sunday. Fandom speculation is that the execution of the Romanov dynasty is what drove him completely over the edge.
* Hex Wives #6, Nadiya is in the middle of an angry rant at the Architects, when her "husband" Eric unwisely decides to interpret her sarcastic question literally:
* Goosebumps trips him, causing him to land face first in it. When he starts going backwards in time, he tries to prevent the tripping, but it still happens anyway. When Michael relives his birthday a third time at the end of the story he manages to carry the cake to the table without incident.
* Golden Age Tootsie Roll comic ads had Captain Tootsie, a superhero who ate Tootsie Rolls to give himself a burst of energy before saving the day.
* Has the 'Century Babies', which include Jenny Sparks, the anthropomorphic personification of the 'spirit' of the 20th Century. Her state of mind mirrors that of the 'spirit' of the current age e.g. she suffers depression during the Great Depression, is giddy for most of the Roaring Twenties, becomes much more cynical during the 80s. Jenny Quantum is the 'spirit' of the 21st Century.
* her diary. Several decades after her death, this has proven not to be the case.
* Greyhawk is home to several, including the Lerara (Suloise who were trapped in the Greyhawk version of the Underdark and who have devolved into twisted albino creatures).
* has a meltdown on the hill leading to Ffarquhar Quarry when he comes to the bend where he derailed and accidentally killed an entire family. He has another one on the way back, when he looks down into the valley and sees an empty space where the cottage he crashed into once stood.
* Harman and Ising, but as their draftsmanship and animation improved, they switched to this method of acting.
* Hellboy as he truly believes the world is decadent and this is the only way to purify it. Apparently his former boss Hitler was less humanitarian, he just wanted to end the world because he was losing.
* He literally juggles a loaded gun in a deleted scene from another episode as
* Heidi teaches Peter to read, makes the old grandmother more comfortable, helps Clara learn to walk, and makes her grandfather's life worth living.
* Guilty Until Someone Else Is Guilty: A suspect can only be proven innocent by finding the true culprit.
* Heroic Fantasy one. In other words, in the later books it's less that trolls are dying out, and more that they've stopped living under bridges and eating people, and started living in Ankh-Morpork and joining organised crime or the Watch. This is discussed in the short story "Troll Bridge" — Cohen the Barbarian encounters a traditionalist troll under a bridge who's still attacking travellers, and moans that his wife is nagging him to get a modern job instead.

* Gold Makes Everything Shiny: Gold and golden colors used freely to make things look better.
* Hey Arnold!: Harold, the school bully, will scream and run away whenever he gets scared.
* He does believe in the Lady, as shown when he meets her (also, gods on Discworld vandalize the houses of non-believers). He just doesn't believe she is the one who always saves him.
* Hacksaw Ridge: Before heading off to Basic Training for his assignment in WWII, Dorothy gives Desmond a compact Bible with a picture of her inside. He loses it after he gets hit by a grenade, but his comrades manage to recover it from the battlefield and give it to him before he is shipped to a hospital.
* Harlequins are even more of a glass hammer/cannon than other Eldar. Absolutely unparalleled in hand-to-hand combat, they can rip right through a unit of Assault Terminators like tissue paper; but one good round of shooting from a basic Marine squad and they're splattered all over the landscape.
* heavily's-accented, the creators haven't made up their minds whether there's one Sal who can't hold down a job or a cartload of identical clones. Why, precisely, one would clone a slovenly, ill-mannered customer like Sal is a riddle for the ages.
* Headhunters suggests a man of normal build could survive getting T-boned from a big rig in the back seat of a squad car, provided he was sandwiched between two heavyset police officers as opposed to being alone. This was proven false; while the normal-sized passenger might have had some chance of survival, he was decapitated after being forced to share the back seat with the cops.
* Hentai: As actual pictures of hentai are a no-no, the image is a picture of a hen wearing a necktie.
* guymelef only differs from the mooks' in that his is red, while theirs are purple. Similarly, his armour is red, while his subordinates' are blue.
* Goblin Slayer when things get hairy and so on. Their cunning nature frequently spells doom for new adventures who see them as an easy starting foe. Goblins can also develop into more specialized and intelligent breeds whether through natural development or through being empowered by other beings:
* Happens to Terry Crews in some of the Old Spice commercials he appears in such as
* GONE novel, where Edilio points out he does have lots of things happening to him, it's just people don't know about it because he doesn't make everything about himself.
* Hellsister Trilogy finally tie the knot at the start of the third story arc.
* hangs a lampshade he flat out tells Kurt that the duet would be an excuse to spend more time with him.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, Harry and Ron are flying a car to Hogwarts with Hedwig in the back seat. They all see a train about to crush them and react with alarm. Including Hedwig.
* Hard rockers KISS have at least one sweet-sounding ballad in "Beth," which is basically piano, violins, and other acoustics.
* Harry Riddle, Harry has a couple when he considers gifting his dad with the Philosopher's stone he imagines there's only two ways it could go: either his father would tell him 1) "I'm So Proud of You" or 2) "You Have Outlived Your Usefulness."
* Hawaiian and Pacific Islander stuff continued to be popular to the West, to the point where a Norwegian explorer named Thor Heyerdahl led an expedition to the Pacific Ocean upon the Kon-Tiki in 1947, and Hawaii became the 50th state of the US in 1959. While the teens hanged out on malt shops, the adults occasionally hanged out on tiki bars. Tiki bars popped up everywhere from cities, to suburbias, to even the middle of nowhere where travellers could stop over and grab a Mai Tai.
* Having one of these sent after him (in the form of Mr. Pump, a golem) is what convinces Moist von Lipwig to give in and serve as postmaster. "You need to eat; Mr.Pump does not. You need to sleep; Mr.Pump does not". Golems do have a weakness, though:

* Heavenly Sword only takes roughly 5 to 7 hours to complete. Considering that it was heavily marketed as Sony's new, big hit title which would be taking full advantage of the PS3's capabilities, gamers were less than pleased.
* He also specifically uses Dragon's Breath shotgun rounds both as a weapon (a massive blast of fire from a shotgun is
* Gus became the sixth ranger to the other main five characters, and a rare example by joining in the second episode.
* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life: The framing device is the player's mentor figure/ farm hand writing a letter to the player's deceased father about the farm's progress, the player's growing family, and how much has changed over time.
* Group of Weirdos, the Iron Knuckles are completely invincible, unless tag-teamed and attacked repeatedly by Link, the hero of time, and Ganondorf, a dark wizard with great power. Or you can just slash them a few times with a Deku Stick.
* Halo 4 is also superior to even the IIs', while also being much cheaper. Basically, given enough funding, a whole army of SPARTANs can be created with no shortage of volunteers.
* her overprotective mother. Persephone's opinion is shown by her choosing to stay in the underworld by eating the refreshments laid out for a party: "It was very good dip."
* Hijacking Cthulhu: Someone manages to control a powerful being for their own ends.
* Highlander episode, "Blackmail", Duncan confessed to a murder his friend was wrongly accused of, as he could survive the punishment of being hanged.
* Gotham Central follows the Major Case Squad of the Gotham City Police Department as they deal with crimes and the villains that plague the city.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) Godzilla so he can take his kingship back from King Ghidorah and end the latter's global apocalypse, Godzilla meets Ghidorah in the evacuated Boston accompanied by the combined military forces of Monarch and what's left of the four branches of the military, whilst either Alpha Titan's respective vanguards Mothra and Rodan duel each-other.
* Hanna-Barbera. It featured the Merry Men as teens and Robin also gained a messenger hawk named Arrow.
* He's complemented by Honoka, who is in love with the male half of the couple (
* Grayson Officer Commissions specifically say that the bearer is an
* had invaded the U.S., they'd have had to do so from the west coast, which would have meant fighting their way through a very broad system of mountain ranges and desert basins, which wouldn't have made it any easier.
* GURPS it is nearly impossible for a TASER or electrolaser to kill someone (like real life, at least if the co. that makes them is right). On the other hand even an outlet in a house can do lethal damage.
* Heroes when the show was cancelled, but that doesn't mean he's a good guy.
* Gundam: Reconguista in G, the "Kuntala" were a caste of human slaves bred solely for food when resources were scarce. The Hero's rival, Captain Mask is a descendant of the Kuntala and works for the antagonistic Capital Army in exchange for equal rights for his people.
* having a lot of vampiric traits within their culture and wear the reverse of normal Blood Angels colors (black with red accents).
* Hamlet. Claudius proposes a fencing match between Laertes and Hamlet in which Laertes will fight with a poison-tipped sword, so it looks like an accident. He also gave out that Hamlet Sr. had died of a snakebite.
* Graduation, Barbara finds Suzy flirting with Carl and tells her to go out back and finish sorting the files:
* Grampa Simpson and Homer have both done this a few times. The most famous (and tragic, and permanent) example being when Homer bending over for a bobby pin gets Maude Flanders killed.
* Grand Admiral Thrawn in an attempt to tractor in Luke's X-Wing? He promotes him despite it failing and tasks him to find a counter for Luke's maneuver. This causes the entire crew of his ship to follow him to the death.

* He can play the guitar. In the late 60s, his role model was mostly Hank Marvin of The Shadows (little did he know that both the band and Marvin as a soloist would later cover his own big hits, or that he'd even collab with Marvin). There's even a French film,
* Gruntz, this is referenced with the Black Screen curse. Curses are multiplayer items that, when picked up, cause some kind of temporary inconvenience for other players. This particular one causes other players to have their screen become completely black (except for the gruntz themselves), and the grunt who picks it up can say "Clap on, clap off!".
* God. The Nephilim have no churches, synagogues, mosques, etc. in Idris, and when seeking consecrated ground for their Institutes they are prone to using sites that were formerly mundane locations of worship. They also rely heavily on holy water but do not produce it themselves, instead getting it from various mundane religions.
* Gravity by Tess Garritsenn, there is a scene of a catastrophic space-shuttle launch that turns out to be a simulation. A higher-up had expressed concern that the team members were overconfident, so the instructors tried to take them down a notch and remind them, "Disaster is not theoretical."
* Hawaii Five-0. Suitable since he's an experienced if disgraced cop, and she is just coming up to graduation to the HPD at the start of the series.
* Goodys Burger House commercial for its ArGOODaki charity campaign uses that trope.
* granted so that they could have sex without worrying about her accidentally tearing him apart.
* Harry Houdini had real magical powers that they push as science-based. The real Houdini was a notorious skeptic in the supernatural and would be outraged at the idea of being presented as a real magician.
* Halloweentown reveals that anything misplaced in either Halloweentown or the mortal world ends up at the house of Gort the ogre.
* Grumpy Old Men: John brings beer to his dad at his ice shanty. His dad takes one out of the six-pack and hands it to John, then takes the rest inside and shuts the door.
* Hebrew is the only known dead language to have experienced a full revival, due to its use as a
* Good Night, and Good Luck. of Joe McCarthy used to portray the senator.
* Half-Identical Twins: Brother-sister (i.e., fraternal) twins act identical in all ways other than sex.
* He maintains an equal measure of implausible deniability when pretending to be Mizuki's boyfriend, still insisting the case even after everyone has just watched him chase off her real one with a loaded gun.
* Hikaru Matsuyama is also a Charismatic leader for the Furano team. He often acts as a
* Heavy Rain in hopes of seducing (and further interrogating) a man in a seedy club.
* Good Girls, Annie's cover is blown during the robbery because the manager/her boss recognizes her distinctive lower back tattoo, which she could have covered up with a longer shirt. He's not at all a nice person, and this leads to complications.
* Gold Tongues has Petrol, a giant man whose nose and cheeks have been sliced off, forcing him to constantly wear a gas mask to cover the deformities. On top of that, his face is gradually decaying from an unknown virus.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone at the Dursleys while McGonnagal protests and quickly jumps nine years forward to the rest of the story.
* Harry Potter and the Escape from Gringotts, the riders are saved from suffering under Voldemort's torture methods by the main trio along with the dragon they ride on.
* Hilarity ensued. They're more common than you might think; after all, they do tend to crow at dawn.
* hhgregg chain of stores had commercials featuring hh, a sentient rolled-up hhgregg ad.

* Gundam 00, a massive coalition of dozens of PMC groups, and powerful enough to have their own dedicated nation. The first season of 00 features two episodes to the Gundams tearing the place apart. Note that the PMC Trust is stated to have an arsenal of almost a hundred of Mobile Suits (granted, some of them probably belonged to the AEU who helped defend the place), and Celestial Being only has 4 MS at their disposal. And the Gundams still wrecked the place in just 4 hours...
* Gossip Girl has Blair as an uptight, proper, virginal lady, and Chuck a hedonist who likes his hookers to come in twos. She makes him less wild and more responsible, and he makes her far more sexual and liberated.
* Hadean Lands: The game remembers what you've done and what you've seen, and will repeat things you've done before upon request. This includes going to any particular item or location that you've seen, unlocking any doors along the way and creating any resources required to open them.
* Hetalia: World Stars (something which she does yearly) and France and Italy staring at him with a certain amusement.
* Hatoful Boyfriend says there's a high stroke count and he respects Anghel, but Anghel can't get anyone very interested in his stuff; an editor says there might be something there but it lacks an "adult feel".
* Goldie Vance (queer female main character, queer female supporting character, queer female romance)
* Hermanoteu in the Land of Godah has the titular character's introductory catchphrase: "I'm Hermanoteu, from Pentescopéia, son of Oolonéia and brother of Micalatéia".
* Guyver are failed Zoanoids; they have useful powers and abilities, but recreating them is impossible and they're biologically sterile. They had a driving force to prove themselves as valuable, having neither the dignity of being human or the pride of a normal Zoanoid.
* "Hidden Enemy": Clone Commander Faie, who is hunting the Jedi Quinlan Vos after receiving
* Hans Christian Andersen's "The Red Shoes", where the titular red shoes are very nice indeed, but the little girl who wears them is cursed to dance without stopping because she is too vain to go without them, and she ends up having to have her feet chopped off so she doesn't die of exhaustion.
* , he wouldn't have knocked both himself and the driver out, Emily wouldn't have been injured and Thomas wouldn't have committed murder. The Fat Controller comforts him, telling him that he may have caused Emily's accident, but he didn't cause the truck's death.
* He fails, but Mrs. Krabapple takes pity on him when he proves to her that he had indeed studied by rattling off an obscure fact that hadn't been on the test.
* Grand Theft Auto III is a slightly atypical example of this trope. A bartender working for a made man is suspected of leaking information to the Columbian Cartel, who have been showing a remarkable amount of foreknowledge of Mafia movements. The bartender is a suspect because he is spending more than the Mafia is paying him, and because he is not pimping women or selling drugs, which would account for the discrepancy.
* Good Apollo I'm Burning Star IV: From Fear Through the Eyes of Madness by Claudio Sanchez features this as a major plot point. There is a character known as The Writer, who takes out his frustrations with his girlfriend leaving him on the characters in his story, culminating with a fight between him and the main character. This also counts as a music example, as the album of the same name by Coheed and Cambria follows the same structure.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality to bluff, when in fact you really did know all along.
* he replied, "No," and left. We do not know what happened to that policeman, but the family survived and remembered his action that day.
* gotten flak at how their condition was treated as a fashion accessory, and the name was also viewed by some as an accusation that the chronically ill are just "seeking attention".

* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, Mr. Dursley's potential client and his wife come over to discuss a promotion over dinner. When Harry retires to his bedroom, Dobby the house elf appears and begs Harry not to return to Hogwarts. When he refuses, the house elf levitates a cake over the boss's wife's head and drops it.
* Hanamichi Sakuragi is incredibly tall for his early age and has huge physical strength as well as almost animalistic reflexes and jump abilities, but his raw power is paired with a complete lack of experience and skill. Therefore he gets stuck by the sidelines in the first part of the series, and has to go through
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets universe actually live in the "real" world (as opposed to the series being set in a parallel dimension) and would thus be expected to have some knowledge of Muggle popular culture.
* Great Dangaioh series as a whole would never get a proper ending (let alone resolve the OVA's events).
* Harry doesn't have any explicit connection to the Fae, but his somewhat uncanny mannerisms and fondness for fire lead to speculation that Lily was connected to the Summer Court.
* Happens when Raj is covered in marshmallows and looked like a yeti.
* Gray-and-Grey Morality. However, Arslan and his fraction has different ideas.
* Happens twice to Beatrice (Betty) Pinzon in the Colombian telenovela
* he left entirely unprotected every time he turned his back on him to bask in his own glory. Even the story writer must have been aware of Tuma's laughable movie depiction, which is why he inserted an extra chapter into the film's novelization to flesh him out as a more respectable villain.
* Grimtooth's Traps books from Flying Buffalo were death trap after death trap, just waiting for a GM to install them in his dungeon. (And to come up with game stats for them.)
* Goofy short "The Art of Self-Defense", a history of fighting includes a scene of two 17th Century gentlemen slapping each other repeatedly. One sneaks his snuff-box inside his glove during a break.
* Helen has threatened to embarrass Daria or Quinn in order to get them to cooperate with her.
* Hieronymus Bosch portrays the world. Everything seems bright and cheery and people of every race seems happy and content but everywhere are grotesque situations and bizarre creatures representing sin and immorality.
* He's not the only one though. Other Transformers getting up to monkey business include Beastbox and Apeface from
* Greater Titans, living embodiments of a particular element such as Light, Water, Sky, Chaos, Time, etc;, and in first edition, Touchstones, the archetypal locations humanity has given meaning to (the Great Henge, the Colossus, the Dark Woods, etc.), which can be accessed through their mundane analogues. Again, you need to be mythological to get to these places, and in some cases you need to be of a certain Legend score or above to enter.
* grotesque acts of a few and those who covered up for them, has been reduced to a sick joke.
* Godzilla initially spoke with a thick Japanese accent, which was dropped before the end of the first season. His voice has also become higher-pitched over time.
* Guild Wars 2, members of the sylvari race partake in the race's collective subconscious, known as The Dream, before they are born. The Dream periodically grants some a mission to fight enemies of the race, which is referred to as a Wyld Hunt.
* GM used to make a big deal about being the only brand with OnStar, which is GM's own brand of... actually, a number of unrelated features and services. Some of which were, admittedly, great to have and not available on competing vehicles, like remote stolen-car tracking and automatically contacting emergency services in the event of an accident, but they also used the brand for things like hands-free calling and GPS, which were being adopted as optional features by pretty much every other company around the same time.
* Hamilton, during "The Adams Administration", you hear this sound effect when Hamilton publishes his response to John Adams' diss (and physically drops it onto the stage).

* Grand Theft Auto V that makes him an entertaining yet also relatable character.
* Harkovast features numerous clashes and misunderstandings between the different cultures.
* Grumpy Old Men 5'5" Kevin Pollack is paired with 5'10" Darryl Hannah.
* High-ranking Peacekeepers like Scorpius (whose rank wasn't given, but stated to outrank a captain) were given a lot of latitude as to how they conducted their duties. Commandant Grayza usually wore alluring outfits with lots of cleavage (though the actor playing Grayza stated that she interpreted this as being like a soldier whose fatigues are informally unbuttoned to show off their chest). The higher ranking a Peacekeeper was in the series, the more unorthodox their methods tended to be; they could even pursue their own pet projects, and were exempted from some of the totalitarian conditions that governed most troops' and officers' personal lives (like not being allowed to form emotional connections).
* Hannibal. He eventually ends up sending a dangerous murderer after Will's wife and step-son, aware that Will was away on the planned night. He fails, but he did manage all this while locked away in a mental hospital.
* Gloria has Bipolar Disorder, and you can change the mood lighting in her mental world to literally swing the mood of the stage between comedy and tragedy.
* he didn't actually die; the ending of DLC characters Sakura and Blanka show him trapped within Pandora
* Happens in a strip from, even though the writer actually comes out okay.
* Great white sharks still use that strategy to prey on elephant seals. This may also be the real reason sharks release human victims (so they die of blood loss). One should emphasize "may" though as sharks also release animals they realize are not worth eating (due to not having enough blubber, not tasting right, and such), and the "usually a single bite followed by leaving the human alone" scenario is true for shark attacks in general, not just attacks from species that prey on large pinnipeds.
* Groo the Wanderer, Groo used to work for King Krag, who took cities by marching up under a flag of truce and then surprise-attacking. But at one city, Groo accidentally stains the white flag, so that the defenders mistook it for a battle standard. "See how King Krag carries his banner at the head of his troops! You have to admire courage like that. Kill him." Krag lived, but with a lifelong grudge against Groo.
* Grendel, until he developed a more advanced (and grisly) method: micro-levitation devices he surgically implanted in the soles of his feet. Not sure if those also count as this trope or not...
* Golden Sun, where instead of using Psynergy to preemptively defeat Colosso competitors, you use it to give Isaac an unfair advantage by using non-combat abilities to make the obstacle course section easier (such as moving a log to form a bridge, creating a vine ladder, blocking a conveyor belt mechanism, etc.).
* Granblue Fantasy: The Nightcypher, the speedship the crew uses in Platinum Sky, is ancient according to Sierokarte and lacks the fancy weapons that modern speedships have, but it has a powerful speed boost and it uses lost technology from the War, making it actually superior to its modern contemporaries.
* Harry Potter shows that the Prime Minister (and likely the Queen as well) are made aware of it after a number of incidents and disasters happen due to Voldemort (such as huge amounts of fog meaning breeding Dementors and a highly destructive "tornado" is actually the work of rampaging giants).
* Grrl Power: While there definitely is alien pop culture, Earth still produces an excessive amount of entertainment. This helps protect them; as a low-tech planet they have very little anyone would want, and conquering them would just disrupt the entertainment industry.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas. The plot drops you off in enemy territory and you have to bike like heck to get back home before being filled full of holes.
* Hercules — Action adventure series based on the Greek mythological character. 48 films have been made, since 1933. The most famous ones starring Steve Reeves were made from 1957 on in Italy.

* Grey Hound. A WWII movie following an allied supply convoy traversing the Mid Atlantic Gap, aka "The Black Pit". The convoy is escorted by the Destroyer U.S.S Keeling, call sign "Greyhound", and several other Destroyers and Corvettes from various allied nations, who work together to fend off attacks by German U-boats.
* Heavy Gear, specifically as the background to the South's Gold Mamba design. The Gold Mamba was basically a prototype built at the same time as the common Black Mamba, but contrary to typical design theory (build something up until it works at the level you want), its designers approached it from the other side of the spectrum (put the most expensive equipment you can find on it and scale down until it doesn't work). This means that the Gold Mamba is an extremely powerful combat machine that is head and shoulders above the Black Mamba's performance, but ultimately it is extremely expensive and rare.
* Good luck Cthulhu forces a character to lose 1d100 SAN (sanity) and the maximum SAN is 100, so do the math. If somehow you manage to kill Cthulhu, he just reforms a few minutes later, fully recovered. Nuke him and he comes back radioactive.
* Happens frequently at conventions due to how expensive hotel rooms can be.
* Here's a more obscure one. Kent Brockman's "insect overlords" line actually comes from a horror movie called "Empire of the Ants", which involves giant ants invading the Earth.
* Half-Life would provide a canonical version of Alyx's hiring, but long before the characters get to the Borealis.
* Google Maps (or any other map program with street/satellite view) can be very engaging for some people as they explore towns, streets, and other areas from the comfort of their home instead of actually going to the locations in person. It can be even more fun to explore areas you have already seen in person just to see how it compares to the real thing (for example, seeing an empty lot in the past images while the same location has a collection of stores in the present). Granted, this sort of thing is probably as old as maps themselves; it just required a bit more imagination in the days before the Internet.
* Happy Heroes often gets around by using something like this, where he teleports short distances between given points.
* have were the ones robbed by this extra second, as many of the BCS computers that determined one-third of the rankings formula had Texas ranked ahead of TCU but behind Cincinnati; had the Longhorns actually lost, the margin in the computer rankings would've grown close enough that the Horned Frogs' advantage in the human polls would've pushed them up to #2. Whether this is true or not is a moot point, because both teams lost their perfect seasons by losing their bowl games, rather lopsidedly in Cincinnati's case.)
* GURPS and decorated to look like a sunrise. But it's as functional as it is gaudy, the cosmic armor cannot be bypassed by anything short of a God.
* Greasebombing (ingesting inordinate amounts of fat, mostly with proteins) in general seems to be popular, especially things like the Full English Breakfast.
* Hellina: A woman who got magic powers from Lucifer to fight his enemy, and wields a magic dagger that will either purify you of all evil or kill you.
* Gothic cathedrals in general. Many cathedrals and indeed many old-world religious structures have this characteristic as the sponsors, architects and craftsmen, seeing their work as personal sacrifice or symbols of God's vast power, tended to go all-out. Some rulers also built these structures as a show of wealth, and would also be motivated to make them as big as possible.
* Green Eggs and Ham: While the character animation is largely consistant, 13 episodes is an awful lot to keep up a certain level of fluidity and detail. As such, certain scenes are noticeably more fluid or limited than others.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas there is an early mission where you and your homies go to a drive-thru to get food. CJ, Sweet and Ryder all have normal orders, but Big Smoke...
* He is also the creator of the "Peanut Butter Floor" which is a floor entirely made out of peanut butter.
* Heavy Metal centers around a Pentagon secretary being abducted by aliens and the sex robot that falls in love with her. Judging from the following quote, this trope is pretty common in that 'verse:

* Headless Prisoner reveals in the True Ending that Kenji, the man who joined Erina shortly after the beginning, was one of the people to have died in the prison some unknown time ago.
* God of War and at the end, where that spell is broken but it's become clear he's too far gone.
* Harry Turtledove version, the sylphs that power magic carpets are supposed to scream if the carpet is stolen. Instead, they scream incessantly at the slightest provocation.
* Happy Heroes (episodes 17 and 18, specifically) where the Supermen get ready to participate in a game of basketball. Headmaster Tele's basketball training works surprisingly well on them considering that it involves them washing dishes.
* Half-Blood Prince. There are however plenty of serious moments (including some tear jerker scenes that weren't in the book).
* Goldeneye. He's unique in that he's sadistic and careless—he wastes time hurting his enemies. MI-6 has no use for him, but SPECTRE, on the other hand...
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire: At the Quidditch World Cup, the Bulgarian prime minister drives Cornelius Fudge crazy by making constant demands in Bulgarian, which Fudge does not speak. It is not until after the match that he reveals he speaks English very well; he just thought it was funny to watch Fudge flounder about trying to figure out what he wanted.
* Hellbound: The demon Prosatanos was sealed inside his own tomb in the Holy Land by King Richard the Lionheart. He is woken up centuries later by two tomb robbers.
* Hidden Cityparent in Clarissa Storke, grandmother of Rayden Storke who had disappeared in the fog years ago. Rayden remembers her as nothing but a sweet and kindly old woman, until a stranger shows up in her house and claims that she's actually a very powerful sorceress.
* Heather voices an interest in things that deeply horrify normal people. Then again, she is * Hanaukyō Maid Team: In one episode, Taro dresses up as a maid. The other maids (except the one who convinced him to do so) are really shocked when he reveals his true self.
* he needs to end it all and searches out a bulldog to massacre him. That said, the meat of the comedy is not so much that attempting suicide is funny, but the reaction from Claude (and later the bulldog), who won't aid or abet Hubie and Bertie because he's sure it's a trick (i.e., they must be poisoned).
* Half-Life 1 unleashes a deadly solid blue beam of destruction, one of the only weapons able to damage Gargantuas and almost instantly killing anything else the beam touches; it is a primo example of this trope.
* he realizes that Rose is his missing daughter Rita, because that song only exists on a rare record that he used to play for his family to listen to.
* Groom of the Tyrannosaur Queen. Turns out nomad pastoralists are really easy to train for war.
* Happy Gilmore throws down with Bob Barker during a celebrity pro-am golf tourney.
* Halo 3, the three actors all return, this time playing Buck, Dutch and Mickey respectively.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, Eicichi Onizuka helps one of his students feel like she is good for something, by encouraging her to enter a pageant.
* Hellsing a wounded Seras exacts VIOLENT revenge against Zorin Blitz for killing Pip Bernadotte and putting her through absolute hell.
* Graystripe/Silverstream — Whether their romance was tragic or over-dramatic, Graystripe will forever be associated with this relationship, and almost everything in the series involving him is somehow tied in with Silverstream and his love/obsession with her.
* hallucinates into thinking that he IS the Superdude and his friends are the (mostly villainous) characters the Bloo Superdude fights.
* Hellblazer, knows first-hand that God and Satan and all the rest exist. He thinks they are utter sods and hates their ineffable little games to the point that he takes extra effort when he screws up the plans of devils and angels, so they wind up all the more humiliated.

* "Go Where You Wanna Go", a hit for The Fifth Dimension, was originally an album cut by The Mamas and the Papas.
* Happy Tree Friends", Splendid inadvertently destroys the world... by farting. Petunia lights a match, which ignites the huge gas cloud and sets literally the entire world on fire.
* "He'll Have to Go" by Jim Reeves, from early 1960. The original A'er was a nice ballad called "In a Mansion Stands My Love." Like "... End of My World," "Mansion" flopped. The jockeys flipped the record over and found what went on to become a country standard.
* Hero: The Guardian Smurf and the first of the two Smurfettes he marries in the series. Smurfette, seeing that there is nobody among her fellow male Smurfs that is appropriate for her besides Hero, waits until Wonder dies before she ties the knot with Hero.
* Grand Theft Auto. Even wildlife like coyotes and cougars will hunt you down if provoked. If playing the game online, take all the above and add other players to the list.
* Goblin Slayer is too obsessed with his mission to wipe out goblins to think about dating. He later admits he turns down his lovely companions' advances because he is too emotionally damaged for intimacy. He is aware of concepts like marriage and workplace dating and was quick to figure out that Female Knight was carrying a torch for Heavy Warrior.
* Glee to Kurt. He convinced three rival show choirs to do an elaborately choreographed (and costumed) dance to "All You Need Is Love" by the Beatles throughout the entirety of the large Dalton Academy, where they met and fell in love. Blaine is singing, all of Kurt's friends and family are there, and the proposal concludes on the stairs where they fell in love with an equally elaborate speech. Kurt very emotionally says yes.
* goes after her to stop her plan, that she fails to perform the Rainboom.
* Gravity Falls: The season 2 premiere "Scary-oke" features this line:
* Half-Blood Prince when they tell Harry a good amount of their sales come from the Ministry buying in mass what were supposed to be joke hats with protective spells, but were being used for protection as a number of their Auruors had no idea how to cast protective charms.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Just like in the book, Harry, Ron, and Hermione come up with a big complicated plan to enter Gringotts Wizarding Bank to steal a Horcrux from Bellatrix Lestrange's vault. It almost immediately falls apart and they have to wing the rest of the mission. While resting after completing the theft, Harry gets a vision confirming where the last Horcrux is and tells Ron and Hermione that they need to move now to get it before Voldemort moves it. In a moment original to the film, Hermione protests, saying that they need to slow down and come up with a plan. Harry replies that there's no point, every time they come up with a plan, everything goes to hell and they have to improvise anyway.
* Happy Heroes as a major character. He's only ever referred to as "the King" and is never given an actual name.
* Haven: Call of the King This was the first game of a planned trilogy, but since the game sold poorly and had a mediocre reception, those plans were axed.
* Gravity Falls is about as strongly implied as one can be in a Disney show. In "The Deep End" she rather enthusiastically takes a photo of her own brother doing a CPR on her love interest (though also for potential blackmail), and the original intention for her rainbow sweater in "The Love God" was to show her support of same-sex love.
* Hank McCoy in the First Class trilogy; he's a doctoral-level scientist who graduated from Harvard University at the age of 15.
* Henry's support with Ricken has a bittersweet double dose. Henry says Mustafa, the first noble Plegian commander the Avatar meets, treated him like family—and other Plegians (disparagingly) imply Henry felt genuine loyalty in return. He seems as cavalier about Mustafa's death as any other person he'd known before, but when Ricken asks what Henry would do if

* Guerrilla War flees after being defeated in the Arcade version; but in the NES version, he dies instead.
* Guards! Guards! he's got Errol in his arms, volatile multiple stomachs rumbling alarmingly, that Lady Sybil tells him that the swamp dragon would've exploded on impact.
* Gundam Leopard also has a arm-carried beam Gatling and a pair hidden on its chest.
* Grey Gardens begins in 1973 with Big and Little Edie playing a record of "The Girl Who Has Everything", which segues into the 1941 flashback for the first act. At the end of the 1973 second act, the story returns to the opening scene.
* . Harry Potter notes that for thousands of years, the galaxy has been using things that were invented on Earth much later. The galaxy at large uses a calendar almost identical to the Gregorian Calendar, on top of using the metric system, speaking English, and using an alphabet eerily similar to the English alphabet. Lastly, things done with the Force seem like half-baked magic. Since Harry has mostly proven that the Veil of Death is not only a portal to a galaxy far, far away, but is also non-linear in terms of both time and space, he theorizes that someone or multiple someones ventured through the Veil and ended up influencing the galaxy at large.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys before being 'disposed of' for good.
* Grand Finale after a near death experience with a GOLB monster almost kills PB.
* Guy Spy and the Crystals of Armageddon). In one scene, he takes off the vest (for no apparent reason).
* Higher Understanding Through DrugsHippies often indulge in mind-altering substances.
* He caught a good bit of flak with his "Top 10 Overrated Video Games" list, in which he bashed games like
* Hellboy. Rasputin was seen working with the Nazis in the film and demonstrated great occult abilities linked with the underworld. Rasputin was depicted as being nearly immortal; every time he died, he was resurrected with a part of his god within his body.
* Guilty Gear is one. He attacks using coins and his Instant Kill move turns the opponent into a Joker card before he slices them in half. Additionally, some of his move names have a gambler motif to them.
* Half-Man: Major Koda, has been experimented on/tortured by aliens for years, retrieved and then experimented on by humans when they got him back, and then frequently flung in battle after. His stability is...questionable.As he commanding officer puts it "I'm sure that if I'd been though a quarter of what he's been though, I'd be stuck in a hospital somewhere, screaming my lungs out night and day".
* Higurashi: When They Cry. In one instance, Keiichi spots the bucket and moves it out of the way. However, this makes him walk straight into another trap Satoko set up; she intentionally made the first trap obvious for that purpose.
* Henry VI, Part 1 is really about John Talbot's conflict with Joan of Arc, while the remaining two parts are really about the various nobles vying for power around King Henry VI.
* GURPS Infinite Worlds, lists being entirely white as one of the signs that an animal may be a parachronozoid (in-world jargon for "naturally capable of moving between worlds"), based on the folkloric convention of white animals having magical properties.
* Happens again to Naoto in episodes 8 and 9 while riding on the little train car with Shou, Haruka, and Aoi.
* Green Arrow “granddaughter” and still be as beautiful and curvaceous as ever.
* Gravity Falls". Is that a dead body, or is he just passed out drunk?
* Hell's Half Acre mentality to the most logical extreme by acting shocked when they see the movie trailer and are appalled that this is being passed off as children entertainment and call for it to be banned. It's so over the top that no one would believe it was real, right? Well, as a look at the comments will point out, many people took it seriously. On a plus side, the movie producers did get quite a bit of free publicity.

* Hey Arnold!, Phil sets multiple mouse traps in the guest room where his sister Mitzi (who is visiting for the week) is staying in to get her to leave the boarding house. However, Mitzi tricks Phil into falling for his own traps and... well, you already know what happens from there.
* High Times Future: A future (or alternate timeline) where all recreational drugs are legal.
* Harmony is a complete idiot and flunking math, because it doesn't have any practical applications she can see. However, she figures out the size of Xander's penis to a thousandth of an inch just by the size and shape of the bulge in his underwear.
* H. Beam Piper has Carlos von Schlichten and Paula Quinton kissing passionately while the flyer they're on is rocked by three Hiroshima-type atomic bombs going off virtually simultaneously behind it.
* Groups — The armies of Derse and Prospit have black and white respective due to
* Go Get a Roomie!: Lillian AKA Lazy Tyke was initially conceived of as simply a one-off character for Roomie to meet by accident, but wound up being a favorite of both the audience and the author and then became the co-protagonist as the series shifted from being mostly about random silliness and over to a lesbian romance.
* Halo deathmatch has two, ("Oh you fucking camping bitch!")"It's a legitimate strategy!" and `("What did you mean we could work as a team?") "I bash you in the head with my rifle and you die. Good teamwork you fucking noob."
* Heroes, and Peter's encouraging her to shoot him if he goes nuclear (after he absorbs her healing power) suggests that either of them would also be killed by having a certain part of their brains obliterated. Fans have jokingly suggested that the base of the brain is where the "regeneration gland" is located.
* He's also tried to invent new games like "Sit On My Face" (complete with theme song!) and "Put It In My Pants" (only rule: no staplers).
* Hell can light cigarettes by pressing them into the palms of their hands.
* Harley and the Davidsons about the origins of motorcycle manufacturer Harley-Davidson, albeit focusing on racing in the first act of the three-part miniseries.
* Heartbeat episode: post-match drinks for a cricket team in late-'60s Yorkshire only costs about £1.79 (or given that decimal conversion had not taken place yet, £1 3s), which is ~30 pounds in 2020. (Although because of other government-imposed taxes, you're probably not going to get 12 pints for less than £50).
* GURPS: Spaceships has a 300,000 ton space whale that it is possible for people to survive inside of. Its womb can be modified to work as a huge bio-tech production line.
* Harry Potter: Pokémon Master series? A badass warrior chick raised by freedom fighters who loves knives.
* having cut open and examined the corpses of women who died in childbed fever. ... that's a lot of generations of stubbornly ignoring good advice.
* Great Lakes Avengers who just happened to get assigned to collect his dad's soul, so he got an opportunity to say goodbye and clear the air between them.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series schedule at the last second on its intended airdate, but that didn't stop them from releasing it on iTunes and Amazon.
* Guns N' Roses recording that riff in the studio to get it just right for the album.
* Grrl Power" and tries to tackle the doctor to the ground. The doctor punches her out and storms off.
* Has Two Thumbs and...: A joke where the person says, "What/who has two thumbs and [self description]?", then points at themselves with both thumbs and says, "This guy/gal!".
* GURPS Gun-Fu you can buy the ability use two guns at once with no penalty for a single point, and make your guns self-reloading for another.

* GUN×SWORD, who's maybe 13-14, is in many ways more mature than her traveling companion, Van. More importantly, she functions as the moral center for the series, being one of the few characters to think deeply about the moral/ethical issues surrounding The Claw's plan.
* Hey Arnold! or the others, she'd be in a much better place and would be happier for it. Her nanny Inga in "Helga and the Nanny" even tells her that she's doomed to suffer as long as she continues to push others away.
* Gravity Falls reader adds, "Carla, I've always loved you but I've never had the guts to say it."
* GURPS notes shock penalties for each hit (pain from being struck), crippling damage (broken bones or joints) and has penalties causing by losing too much HP.
* Gravity Falls from it. Contact with water also makes them turn far more menacing, even growing wings.
* Harvest Moon: A Wonderful Life. She's changed from fourteen to sixteen in Japan, eighteen internationally, for this.
* Here are a few things about fruit that may seem wrong if they aren't * Heroic Team Revolt: I don't have to save that guy. What? You guys are gonna save him? Whatever.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, he learns to what extent he can share things with him and uses that knowledge to give Harry what appears to be a prophetic dream, showing Voldemort holding Sirius Black prisoner in the Department of Mystery. As he expected, Harry rushes to the Ministry immediately. And all so that Harry would finally pick up the Prophecy concerning the two of them, and Voldemort could learn its full contents.
* Grosse Pointe Blank prop) to kill an assassin in a fight at his High School reunion. Complete with cool sword-drawing sound as he takes off the pen cap.
* Golems", and on being told the Uberwaldean pronunciation of "Lipwig", calls Moist "Mr Lipvig" in a way that irresistibly calls Ahnold's accent to mind.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas does this every couple of missions. While the GTA series are known for shootouts, drivebys, and wild car chases, San Andreas stuffed every possible idea into the game's main storyline and side quests. This includes, but is not limited to:
* Graduation Day Part 2", Oz insists on a moment of silence after the school blows up. Everyone gets annoyed and leaves. "... And we're done."
* Golden Gamers used to frequently use plot holes as one of the abilities of the main characters.
* Happy Days episode "They Call It Potsie Love" has Potsie, in a rehearsal, singing "Put Your Head On My Shoulder" to Joanie, and she becomes smitten by him. Joanie sets up a secret date at Al's, and when she shows up, Potsie tries to send her off, saying he has a secret date with an admirer. All Joanie had to do was look sadly at Potsie to reveal that she was the admirer.
* GoldenEye as he escapes interrogation. To be fair, it's a tiled, wood-framed window, where the frame breaks first.
* Green Angel are religious extremists who blow up a city, intending for it to be an example for humanity to abandon technology and return women's status to medieval times.
* Harvest Moon due to the world's corruption. Jamie asks her to marry him and they have their first kiss, but she turns to statue midway through. It's implied that Jamie never got over her.
* Her father, Manfred, is probably the best example from the series (as later on Franziska does start to
* here's an example (the song is about a college student who has to clean toilets to pay his rent).
* High Rise Invasion wear white masks that brainwash them into attacking innocents and driving them to commit suicide.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) who ate Dr. Graham when she was about to run away from the scene in Antarctica. Then again when Rodan came to fight the U.S. Air Force when Monarch lured him to fight King Ghidorah. Rodan was absolutely overpowering the U.S. Air Force along the way and then when one of the pilots ejected, he devoured the pilot, sending him into his fiery bowels.

* Hazbin Hotel, Alastor is feared by most as an all-powerful tyrant who destroys anyone who stands in the way of his cryptic goals. On his first day in Hell alone he slaughtered so many demons (not just rank and file, but high-ranking Lords of Hell that had been in power for centuries) that he was instantly catapulted into a ranking position among Hell's nobility, and most would rather give him a wide berth than catch his attention in any way.
* Gordy: Henry Royce is a wealthy industrialist, and his daughter Jessica is engaged to his public relations director, Gilbert Sipes. At first, it appears that Sipes is sincere in his attempts to help boost Jessica's career as being "the face" of Royce Industries, but we later learn his real intentions is taking over the business after they're married, because he stood a chance at inheriting it all.
* harming the Others. Some Valyrian steel swords appearing on-screen and in the books:
* Grim Prairie Tales so confident in his abilities that he only loads a single bullet in his gun before a gunfight: although this is also a mind game he plays on his opponents to psych them out.
* Hermats have a name followed by a number, e.g. Burgoyne 172 or Rulan 12.
* Hercules: Best known by his Latin name, despite being a Greek hero. His Greek name was Herakles, which is sometimes
* Hamster's Paradise, such as the hammoth, a giant herbivore resembling a cross of bison and capybara with mammoth-like tusks that branch like moose antlers, the giraard, a giraffe-analogue hamster descendant that filled an aardvark-like insectivore niche, and the greater snoa, a member of the trunked macropod-like rhinocheirids that is best described as a cross between an elephant, a kangaroo, a mallard duck and a therizinosaur.
* Hermeticon. The source and principles behind the Philosopher's Crystals and astrelium are only known to alchemists from planet Hermeticon.
* Heart of Darkness comes in two discs, with the swap occurring just after the first act.
* Hellsister Trilogy kisses Dev-Em before he leaves for a suicide mission.
* Grrl Power). Protagonist Sydney's recruitment and subsequent training in Arc-SWAT (ARCHON's field teams) is the series' main ongoing narrative.
* Gotham", Davis "The Balloonman" Lamond asks Gordon to contemplate if he really is fighting for the innocent as he claims.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try, with both Team Try Fighters and Team Celestial Sphere preparing for a sudden death match and Try Fighters down to just a damaged Try Burning Gundam, Yuuma uses the remaining functional parts of the fallen Lightning Gundam Full Burnern and Star Winning Gundam to fix up the Try Burning and fight.
* Hasta la lluvia, escalate, production ends up shutting down as the as the cast and crew flee the country.
* Gold Standard had problems filming the scene of Liam calling at Amber's house - because the dog in the house would keep barking hysterically whenever the doorbell rang.
* Harry Potter films. They very much are not an example of this in the books, however.
* Glitch Techs) who has much younger sounding voice than Luke Youngblood.
* Good Burger after learning the secret behind Mondo Burger's...well, mondo burgers. Otis gets sent there also after he catches Kurt and his Mondo brats dumping shark poison in Ed's Sauce.
* Head of the Class in a series of late night commercials, all of which air live.
* Gungrave habits eventually caught up with him. He would have died of a blood clot in his brain if he hadn't been transformed into a Superior(an Orgman capable of free will/sentient thought). Not only did this save his life, it granted him superhuman abilities and even allowed him to keep enjoying chicken drumsticks.
* Good Angel, Bad Angel: When the angels on your shoulder look just like you.
* Guardians of Ga'Hoole is about talking owls and thus has a lot of bird furry fans.
* GURPS show you the entire electromagnetic spectrum and have a zoom function. The same supplement may allow other technology to be built into goggles or their frames.

* Happens in a later episode where Bobby takes to growing roses and fails in a florist competition. He's disappointed and depressed about it but shocked when he sees Hank (who he actively hid his roses from in the beginning) planting his flowers in the garden. When Bobby asks why he'd do this even if he didn't win, Hank explains, "Well, the Cowboys don't win every game, but I still cheer them on year after year."
* GURPS skill, to be found on page 257. Naturally, the book had only 256 pages.
* Harry Turtledove has made a living off of this trope. All of his books, aside from fantasy novels, deal with this trope in some way (and most of them are pretty good) but the most blatant is the Crosstime Traffic series, in which eponymous company has solved our earth's Malthusian troubles by developing "Chronophysics" and the technology to go to parallel worlds. Although this mostly gives him license to drop modern teenagers into period pieces, as the books are obviously written for teenagers, and they are pared down from his normal book length, forcing him to sacrifice the plot and world development which is omnipresent in his best works.
* Hannibal uses this several times, with the title character employing it to keep his crimes hidden.
* Go example, if the first two rounds are split, the third round becomes meaningless.
* Heroic Comedic Sociopathy), but it's worth noting that most of the named dark mages are women and the sole "sensible" dark mage (Henry) is a man.
* Harry Turtledove know about how their ancestors went back to the hunter-gathering tribal stage is that "Old Time" ended with something called "The Big Oops". And that's all.
* Guy Fieri not only didn't appear to even break a sweat, he noted as he was about to walk off the set that he didn't touch his water or his milk, which floored Sean when he noticed the differences in his glasses and Guy's.
* Gotham can only be killed by a specific dagger wielded by a specific person, namely Bruce Wayne. To hammer this home, at one point Barbara stabs him, but it has no effect, with him just saying "Ow" in a smug deadpan and pulling the blade out of his chest.
* Godzilla (2014), but at the same time played straight in that Hawaii doubled for the Philippines at the beginning.
* Gumi song "Copycat" about a girl who constantly erases her personality and remakes it in the image of whatever the people around her are like in order to please them, until she eventually starts to forget who she was in the first place.
* Goku has spent his life training with many people to become stronger and shows a love of doing so coinciding with his Saiyan blood and his own personality. However, because training, fighting, and eating are his main interests, it's hard to get him to do anything else. This is a point of constant tension between Chi-Chi and him since she wants him to get a job. She eventually gets her way, making Goku get a job as a farmer, which in a roundabout way suits him due to its potential to be physically laborious.
* He has been a UNESCO Goodwill Ambassador since 1993. He played his 2006
* have been detected, but are as yet too far away to contact, or for them to know about the Terragens' existence.
* Going Solo. His infatuation ended once the bandages came off and he found that she was not quite as beautiful as he had imagined her to be.
* Hidamari Sketch, and Nazuna is demonstrably "pretty popular among the boys" such that "their" girls get jealous. Meanwhile, we haven't seen any interest of that type in Sae... from boys. (Girls... open for interpretation.)
* He's rumored to have invited fans to consider any and all pairings' potential canonicity.
* He has his old friend Siegel Clyne gunned down because Siegel was a moderate and therefore opposed a war of annihilation. He then goes to great lengths to silence the entire moderate faction. During the final battle, he is perfectly willing to destroy his own forces with GENESIS, while trying to end all life on Earth.

* Godzilla: The Half-Century War movie told from the point-of-view of a soldier in Japan's SDF.
* Good Omens. Crowley isn't nearly as evil as some of the other demons, but he is better-dressed.
* Grease was replaced in the move from Chicago to Broadway, with only a couple songs ("We Go Together" being one) remaining. The title number "Grease" in Act II (unrelated to the song made for the film) was cut, "Foster Beach" was replaced with "Summer Nights", an Act II song called "Rock Progression" was rewritten to be "Those Magic Changes", Sandy had a solo entitled "Kiss It" (replaced by "All Choked Up"), and there was a song called "Boogie Man Boogie" instead of "Born To Hand Jive". The reprise of "Look at Me, I'm Sandra Dee", "Rock N' Roll Party Queen" and "Alone at the Drive-In Movie" were added for Broadway, though the singer of the last one changed from Kenickie to Danny over the course of production.
* guinea pigs) leads to the clerk's railway station being overrun by thousands of guinea pigs by the time the debate is sorted out... and by that time, the customer had moved away without leaving a forwarding address.
* Global Frequency would usually end each issue with the title in a "closing credits" fashion.
* He is also present at an extreme example: During the battle over Coruscant in
* Good Eats So popular are they on the show, in fact, that many fans have attempted to make their own.
* Haim Saban often gets blamed or credited (at least with the Saban eras) with anything Power Rangers despite not having much of a hand with it since 1995 and only cutting the checks nowadays. His producing partner, Shuki Levy was apparently far more guilty of
* Harry Potter who is introduced to the amazing world of magic and the wondrous school that trains its people. After a couple books, he is familiar with the school, its wizards, and witches, and Harry's own personality shines forth.
* Hetty Wainthropp Investigates his fiancee; they hire an attractive man to see if she's willing to cheat. When the man takes her out to a jazz club, she notices Geoffrey and Robert watching, and says she's sure she's seen them around before. He tells her they're known drug dealers.
* heavily as the seventh Winx, so there was never any doubt about her joining the good guys, but it takes Roxy a few episodes to warm up to the fairies. In the thirteenth episode, she even tells off Bloom, saying "I don't want to be a fairy... I didn't ask for this."
* Henry V: Henry doesn't actually do this to Harfleur, but he does have an absolutely hair-raising speech about it:
* have the whole thing thrown out because he offhandedly mentioned said lawyer, which he claims constituted a request. The judge actually buys it.
* Guilty Gear, he is still a character largely defined by his religious devotion.
* Hero Union BBS, the setting of the story spans multiple universes. Characters from different universes can be transported to another via summoning magic or communicate with each other via the forum. Only powerful heroes who have reached Level 8 or above can traverse the multiverse at will by mastering space-time magic.
* "Halloween Episode I" has one about Nicky Jr. being demonically possessed which serves mainly as a background for The Undertaker to fight a demon.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Ginny leads Harry to her bedroom (with the door closed) to give him a birthday present to "remember her by", and they begin to kiss very passionately, but are interrupted by Ron barging into the room. There are many stories that speculate that, had Ron not interrupted, Harry and Ginny would have had sex.
* He did so again briefly at the 2015 State Of The Union address, diverting from the script midspeech to address an audience reaction.
* Guyver Though this wasn't so much the Guyver being evil, as obeying its Prime Directive of wearer-preservation.
* Great Louisiana Maneuvers and in a way marked the beginning of the United States as a superpower. Two trumped up factions called the Red Army and the Blue Army were set to test their prowess against each other. To begin the contest it was decided that they represented two nations fighting for control over the Mississippi River.

* GURPS invoke this: The majority of published source books are written by fans, but revised and published by the creators.
* he was asleep wanted to be the one to wake him up and tell him the bad news.
* Her evil, sexually abusive dad, bonded to a tree that keeps him from ever moving and repairs any of his wounds instantly, so that she can torture him at her leisure. And she's genuinely touched
* Gus Johnson", which is about a "quirky, random" girl who can only play ukulele in the key of C.
* High-School Dance: The natural conclusion of any high school story set in the 1950s.
* GURPS has multiple levels of human genetic modification, artificial humans, artificial intelligence, nanosymbionts, brain uploading (albeit one-way) and uplifted animals. Very few cybernetics though, they're considered outdated.
* Gwen also ends up firing two guns after Captain Jack teaches her how to shoot in the first series.
* Hazbin Hotel: Bartender Husk is pansexual. He doesn't have gay sterotypes.
* Hilarious Outtakes taken from film and TV productions showing actors behind the wheel attempting to drive forward but going backwards instead. And at least one Darwin Award.
* Grendel as the main villain of the Eppy Thatcher arc, and this time dies.
* Gravity Falls managed to get that past Disney's censors will be a question for the ages.
* High-definition subscribers to Oceanic Time Warner Cable in Hawaii get a channel (#1000) titled * Guardians of Ga'Hoole — Soren, Ezylryb, Otulissa, Eglantine, Digger, Gylfie, Twilight and Martin. Coryn also fits into it not because he's king but as Soren's nephew.
* Heroes, the actors playing Ted Sprague and Sandra Bennet are married in real life. In one episode, Ted threatens to kill Sandra. In the episode commentary, the actor playing Ted observes, "Yeah, our kids aren't gonna be allowed to watch this one."
* He managed two Top 10 hits on the R&B charts. One, of course, was his signature champion "Happy". The other was "Frontin'", right? Nope, that song never touched the R&B charts (although it reached #5 on the Hot 100). The other Top 10 hit was "Come Get It Bae", which isn't nearly as memorable.
* HERZ met Shinji, she thought he was not interested in women because he was shy and oblivious. Although it is true he IS shy and oblivious, the real reason was he was fixated on Asuka.
* Half-Life 1 mod trilogy "Timeline", rogue scientists from Black Mesa use the dimensional portal technology to affect time travel, then go back in time to help the Nazis conquer America by helping them complete their atomic bomb and Sanger AmerikaBomber projects. Gordon Freeman is enlisted to stop or revert this.
* Harry Potter, "Mad-Eye" Moody's magical false eye can see through solid objects, clothes, and incidentally, invisibility cloaks.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army. Including that of Hellboy himself. Even though he isn't really using glamour, as he physically broke his horns off and then filed them down.
* Hadestown was, from the start, a more fleshed out version of the Orpheus and Eurydice myth, with additional anti-capitalist themes. The stage musical was originally a very abstract, sparse experience with relatively little in the way of explicit story — it was after the release of the album that Mitchell began to flesh out the story with more songs ("Road to Hell" and "Chant" and their reprises most notably) to make the setting and the nature of events much clearer. One of the biggest changes made to the production when it came to Broadway was the idea of the seasons being thrown out of whack by Hades and Persephone's deteriorating marriage and Orpheus' quest to write a song to bring back spring, which was present to an extent in the 2017 version but not made as clear or as important.
* Hello Neighbor are dress forms that live in the neighbor's house and much like the Shadow, with which the mannequins have some connection, their realness is up for debate. They show up in three challenges: Fear School, Fear Supermarket, and the Birthday Party, and although not necessarily dangerous they do work against Nicky.

* High School D×D spell that can also destroy magical bindings, or using his girlfriend's boobs as a power battery, but it also shows through by less perverse means. His plan to defeat Raiser Phenex, for example, involved sacrificing his arm to gain a power-up from his sacred gear and then attacking Raiser with a cross and holy water, which would normally be extremely painful for a devil to touch except that he used his sacrificed arm like an oven mitt.
* Haruhi-chan, after Asakura is defeated, she suggests this of herself, saying that there are three other members of the Radical Four like her, but all of them are stronger than she is.
* Gwen says "Hey, Denzel!" when she first meets Gunn. He's later her first sexual partner.
* Hazbin Hotel reporter who mocks Charlie on screen, makes homophobic remarks to her ("I don't touch the gays") and generally comes off as the most unpleasant character in the show.
* Halo 3, the Master Chief, Cortana, Sgt. Johnson, and the Arbiter also count as a Badass Crew, as the Chief is the muscles, Cortana is the brains, Johnson is the sniper, and the Arbiter is the stealth-specialist.
* Hank Williams Sr. before being covered in the 70's by George Thorogood.
* Half-Life 2, Gordon Freeman has become such a legend that he is given messianic titles such as "The One Free Man" and "The Opener of the Way". To his enemies, the Combine, he is "Anticitizen One".
* Guybrush's crew gets left behind on Monkey Island in one of the endings to
* Gordito does this repeatedly in the chapter where they fight zombies.
* HanSoloAtStarsEnd, Star's End prison kept thousands of prisoners the Corporate Sector Authority found inconvenient in stasis, including Chewie. Then Han blew it sky high, literally.
* her kiss with Deborah implies that she doesn't truly swing that way.
* Heel–Race Turn: His race used to be the enemy, but has now become neutral or friendly with humans, so having him join the heroes' crew shows that things have changed, and the two races are getting along now.
* .hack required you to risk this, as almost every single enemy is infected and requires a data drain just to give a chance to kill it, and you will almost always be at 100%.
* Godzilla: The Half-Century War villains; they’ve gotten so used to guns being useless that none of them thought to bring any on the mission. Kentaro even sheepishly mutters that he never thought of “bringing a gun to a Godzilla fight”.
* Gravity Rush. It’s revealed Kat’s former self was once weak and vulnerable but after falling to Hekseville and becoming a hero she is anything but weak.
* Good Girls for a local gang. The gang leader, Rico, is tempted to kill them but is struck when Beth tells him that killing three normal, law-abiding suburban moms will bring in a huge investigation. Rico realizes that because the trio is so normal and have no criminal records, they're the perfect agents to use for everything from running counterfeit cash to various other scams to work off their "debt".
* Hardcore Punk is most typically known as "Millions of Dead Cops" among their fans, however the band has also gone by "Mariah Death Cult", "Millions of Damn Christians", "MILFS Date Cougars", "Magnum Dominus Corpus", "Millions of Dead Contractors", "My Dead Child", "Multi Death Corporation", "Millions of Dead Children" "Metal Devil Cokes"...
* Guilty Gear for PS1. In order to get to her, you had to beat the game as Sol or Ky, without using any continues — once you get to her, though, you can try to win as many times as you like, and if you do, you unlock her as a playable character. Considering the extreme difficulty of defeating Justice the first time, and the first game's broken instant-kill mechanics, this was quite a task beyond the calling of most casual players.

* High School Dx D out on the fact that the current red dragon-white dragon rivalry was unfair because Vali's from a privileged family by being a descendant of Lucifer, while Issei's family is just random normal human, he then wished that Issei was at least from a family with some background.
* Go Fish", Buffy, Willow and Cordelia assign themselves to the pool as an excuse to watch the swim team practice. They're pleasantly surprised when they see Xander in a speedo.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers bloopers where Aaron briefly gave his character a British accent.
* Haruhi Suzumiya out of fear of how she'd react to finding out about her powers.
* Hell, the entire British and Portuguese Combined Army seems to become this.
* Great Kisten borrows heavily from the United Kingdom, with Fort Riverdale being its analogue to London. The stage is set in a gumball factory but borrows its appearance from the Tower of London and Elizabeth Tower, with a counterpart to the London Eye in the background. Fort Riverdale has a merchandising mascot in the form of a teddy bear in a Beefeater outfit. Some of the buildings have feudal Japanese-style roofing, however.
* have trouble recalling what the ad was even trying to sell, defeating the whole purpose of the ad.
* Her Parents, as the girl has a reason to take the loss of her parents so well and the poem specifically mentions that she's an "actress".
* he wouldn't share the secret of immortality. His plotline in 1930s revolves around completing the Grand Panacea. He regularly eats other immortals to acquire their knowledge, and has been known to grant partial immortality to people specifically so he could eat them, too.
* Harry Harrison's "A Brave Newer World", where natural childbirth is on the downtrend and bottled babies are at the first stages of becoming the norm. The government program apparently figures that since they'll be growing the next generations, they can see about removing troublesome genes while they're at it. Unfortunately, their definitions of 'troublesome' includes many involving skin tone and eye shape. The doctor in charge of the project goes to great lengths to expose this bias towards Nordic and Anglo-Saxon ancestry.
* Green Ant began to write derogatory blog posts about America. He even got the endorsement of Lex Luger!
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, regarding Harry's mother and Harry himself, at the dinner table: "If there's something wrong with the bitch, there's something wrong with the pup." It's mentioned in the second chapter of the first book that the Dursleys often talk about Harry as if he's not in the room even though he is. (These are the Dursleys we're talking about, though, so you know it's intentional.)
* Happens near the end of the Harveytoon "Git Along Li'l Duckie," as the Fox is hit with a series of branding irons used by Baby Huey. In this case, the inside of the Fox's mouth is shown as another screaming form.
* Goblet of Fire is toned down due to several interactions with them not being shown.
* Gravity Rush have large glowing cores that shatter when hit with a well-placed Gravity Kick. In the case of many of the larger Nevi, this is the only way to damage them.
* Grape-kun, a penguin in a Japanese zoo who fell in love with a cardboard standee of Hululu and promptly captured the Internet's hearts.
* Gunslinger Girl: Rico and Claes are given male names by their handlers, who are somewhat uncomfortable working with brainwashed underaged girl killers, so the names help to disassociate them.
* Hawaii Five-O: In the original's pilot "Cocoon", Steve McGarrett is given a cyanide pill as part of props for the plot to convince enemy agents that he's "Control"—the head of government secret agents on the island.
* Guild Wars humanity has only continued to lose territory with many in Ebonhawk still wishing to reclaim a land that now belongs to the Charr.

* Gratuitous Emoting" in the pages. These bursts of emotion will be promptly cleaned up as many of us have lost all semblance of human emotion. But don't worry; you'll find plenty of emotions in the page with the "YMMV" label. Hopefully.
* Her first fight was with Mercedes in the first season, but was broken up before things got out of hand. But in the second season, she slaps the
* Harvard scored 16 points in the last 42 seconds of their 1968 game against Yale to tie 29-29. The next day, the headline for their student newspaper,
* Greenfire: Over the issue of gems. Spike is shocked ponies use them to look pretty, Rarity is shocked that dragons eat them.
* Hat Films, a special video goes up of the other two planning a "special treat" for the birthday boy. Recent birthday videos have essentially been the other two members physically and psychologically torturing the third with "birthday quizzes", where wrong answers end in destroyed gifts and having to eat food with a new ingredient that makes it taste disgusting. Ironically, their previous birthday videos just involved opening fanmail.
* Goblin Slayer. Priestess is rescued by the titular Goblin Slayer, the real protagonist of the story, and falls in love with him.
* Hetty has red eyes and is as evil as they imply, as seen from her suggestion that Reynardine kill Antimony and her
* H₂O: Just Add Water zigs and zags around on this trope with the four different mermaids (and one secret keeper) over the seasons:
* Gremlins, Billy smashes open a glass window with a children's toy. The kind that looks like a lawn mower full of little popping balls. Aside from being weird, it's fairly believable. He and Kate manage to climb through the hole without cutting themselves at all, although they don't make it look easy.
* Hello Cheeky" and gets gradually messier from there. It's performed twice — the first time, it's just the song. The second time, the singer is attacked with what he sings about after every verse.
* He goes further to state his love of that joke because of the voice.
* Halo: Reach, it became an official game-type, with its own icon and Announcer line!
* Green Lantern #28, the Fool escaped prison by blowing a bubble of sufficient strength to carry his weight and float over the prison walls.
* Hannah Montana, another reporter hears Miley talking about her secret (that she is Hannah Montana) and becomes desperate to find out what the secret is. When he finally finds out and snaps a picture, his daughters make him change his mind.
* he learns that she refused to return to Starling, even after Sara came back, in the previous timeline. As he puts it, she never really wanted their family at all.
* Helix: lecturing new CDC personnel, Alan tosses a vial of what he claims is cholera to Sarah, the better to scare the newbies with how very dangerous a single fumble can be. Then he admits it's just tea in the vial.
* Gravity Falls is to prevent Bud from winning. They're sad about Stan being disqualified, but are otherwise happy about the election result because Bud didn't win either.
* GURPS Infinite Worlds, creating an alliance between them) helped support the League of Nations and reform several nations, leading to a better economy that braved the 1929 crisis and a more powerful League that could force Italy and Japan to back off from Ethiopia and China, as well as declare war on Soviet Russia when it came out that Stalin was trying to get an atomic bomb - and at the time the game begins, the League and the World Science Council are pretty much controlling the world.
* Heavy Metal saves her. This was also a recurring theme in the source comics.
* Her Father's Daughter: Despite its nature-loving themes and its romances, it's centrally a heavy-headed warning against it:
* Green Lantern Kyle Rayner had become the God-like Ion, there came a moment when Superman admonished him for already having his own religion.
* Good Luck Charlie, Bob says that the grandpa has great qualities. When he is asked to name one, he just says that he expels Carbon Dioxide, plants need it.

* Grand Finale, Dexter finally reveals his secret laboratory to his parents, while Dexter himself finds out his monkey is a superhero. (These are two things kept secret for the rest of the series). The very last shot of the episode has Dexter's memory-erasing ray used to revert everyone's memories back to where they were when the episode began except Dee Dee, who was already in on both secrets from the beginning anyway.
* Harry Potter", a chain of events lead to Hermione drawing Bellatrix Black from 1968 into 2001, thus erasing her time as a Death Dealer. Initially, Andromeda Black distrusts Hermione's motives for her actions, but after using legilimency on Hermione to see her memories of the original timeline, Andromeda accepts Hermione's motives but recognises that seeing those memories will cause her to make unfair judgements about Bellatrix now even though she'll never become a Death Dealer. To compromise, Andromeda decides that she will brew a rare potion known as the Waters of Lethe, which puts a block on certain memories while still leaving the person resolved to make the same decision they would make if they had all their memories (if Andromeda just Obliviated herself, she would go right back to distrusting Hermione and they'd never get anywhere).
* Grey's Anatomy weren't obscure but became far more popular after having been used.
* Grave Mistake bounces a Gravestone back to the Zombie Hero's hand while also drawing a card for the Plant Hero.
* Gundam: Reconguista in G the G-Self changes hands several times— Originally Raraiya's, it quickly gets stolen by the Amerians after she bails out, who let Aida pilot. Then it's captured by the Capital Guard who have Bellri pilot it, but stolen back by Aida in short order (...though Bellri remains the main pilot). Much later, the main characters steal a large number of mobile suits from G-IT Labs, while all the guards were busy elsewhere trying to kill the G-Self.
* He's Back: A character who's been in a fit of depression snaps out of their funk and gets back in the game.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys: In the episode "Atlantis", Hercules is shipwrecked and washes up on Atlantis, which has highly advanced technology but a very arrogant people. The island eventually sinks because its people, using slave labor, overmined it for crystals, causing the island's foundations to become unstable and sea water to seep in.
* Higurashi no Naku Koro ni and hide the body before it's discovered. Unfortunately, this bites him in the ass later as he's unsure if he actually did commit the murder as he couldn't find the body.
* he never ate the pie, but rather he was saving it to share it with Squidward later. Then he tripped and accidentally dropped the pie on Squidward's face. THEN the explosion happened.
* Hamilton number "One Last Time," Alexander Hamilton is summoned by George Washington, who informs him that Thomas Jefferson has resigned. Hamilton thinks that Washington wants him to draft an address agains Jefferson, but...
* Heart In Hand, Darryl uses a variant to talk about his relationship with Alex, a rival hockey player, to his friend — he doesn't hide that it's his own problems, but he frames it as "girl trouble".
* Grand Theft Auto V; in this case, you're not actually cracking the combination, you're literally drilling through the lock, and have to listen carefully to make sure the drill is going through the pins without jamming or overheating. In a later mission, you get to play this trope straight, by cracking the safe that belongs to the Lost M.C.'s LS Chapter.
* Harry Potter throwing away his wand in exasperation. "Bugger all this, then. I'm off to pinch a pack of smokes and sleep the rest of the day."
* Gundam has a big history of the series getting defictionalized stuff in some of its seasons. These include:
* Hamilton until he's introduced properly two songs later in "Blow Us All Away".
* Goldfrapp, a former member of Roxy Music, is a fan of them. So, yeah, Ladytron's fandom is also in good terms with the ones of Roxy Music and of Brian Eno.
* Hilary Swank prepared for both of her Oscar-winning roles in this way.

* Haga/Weevil likes to affect this image, as he plays a deck of mostly weak Insects supplanted with powerful cards and abilities, and tends to make more tactical plays than other Duelist Kingdom players. However, this is subverted later on, as it turns out he's actually in many ways just as reckless as his fellows; whenever he gets his hands on something powerful, he blunders right into a trap.
* Hamtaro: Ham-Ham Heartbreak starts of with Hamtaro, who has to look for Bijou (who will join him permanently) and save Oxnard and Pepper's relationship. It's somewhat uninteresting until Bijou joins you and the relationship between Oxnard and Pepper is fixed, and then you meet Spat, but it's when you meet Harmony that the game will hit its stride.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law is introduced as partner at the law firm. He's more successful and popular than Harvey, despite being a much less competent lawyer. However, after his first appearance, he slides down the firm's pecking order until he is a mere bathroom attendant.
* Hidamari Sketch, Yoshinoya-sensei is stuck due to rain, and the principal — who seems old enough to be her grandfather — offers to share an umbrella, since they're going to the same place. Yoshinoya gets extremely flustered when Kuwahara-sensei encounters them and comments on it.
* Granblue Fantasy be able to get a desired pick given enough premium currency and/or real money is dumped in.
* Goldfinger, Bond uncovers Goldfinger's attempts at cheating during games of gin rummy and golf, making him lose.
* Happy Lesson. They all change into bridal gowns and marry the poor guy on the spot.
* Harry has this reaction the first time he hears Dolores Umbridge speak in
* Heroes of Might and Magic game, the brothers ultimately settle their differences when Archibald helps save Roland from the Kreegans and Roland convinces his wife Catherine (who is less inclined to be merciful to Archibald) to exile Archibald instead of executing him.
* He has a similar encounter with the same actor, but wearing a turban, in
* He ends up dating Velvet, and breaks ranks to defend her at the Battle of Beacon. When he is captured after the battle, he pulls an official Heel–Face Turn.
* Greystone Valley greets friends with a curtsy because it seems like the proper thing to do.
* Happily Ever After, very easy to piss off and having red skin, unlike the usual "pretty and divine" light-themed characters.
* Gwendoline, despite consistently placing bottom in her class, is also one of the oldest girls in the form, so she's always allowed to move up with the rest of the main cast.
* Graf von Krolock has one in the final scene of certain productions of
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix: After an argument with the Dursleys, Harry retreats to one, brooding on his PTSD-driven nightmares, scar pains, and the lack of anyone to talk to or real information from his friends.
* Gumby movie, the titular character's band uses feedback wake up their missing member, Nobuckle. Near the end, Gumby uses a heavily amplified guitar chord to do the same thing.
* Grunts!, a group of orcs, who have gotten their hands on modern weapons in what was previously a completely generic fantasy setting, find themselves having trouble when their new guns keep getting hit with "fail weapons" spells. To solve this problem, they steal some experimental "Nullity Talismans", which prevent all magic from working within their effective radius.
* Hamlet Prince Hamlet (who's dying in his arms) stops him before he can drink the rest of the poison. Which makes Horatio a lot luckier than most characters in a Shakespearian tragedy.
* Halloween characters knew Michael Myers' name, they simply referred to him as "The Boogeyman".
* Hellsing, massacres everything in front of him, and dies flipping off the cast. While betraying his bosses. Not even during his fiery self-destruction does he stop laughing maniacally.

* Here's a sample from one (imagine trying to read multiple pages of this): SUBJ: REVISED CUTTER FUEL INVENTORY REPORT REQUIREMENTS A. SUPPLY POLICY AND PROCEDURES MANUAL, COMDTINST M4400.19 1. PURPOSE: ACCURATELY REPORTING FUEL CONSUMPTION IS AN IMPORTANT ELEMENT TO ENSURING ALL OBLIGATIONS AND EXPENDITURES ARE RECORDED IN THE COAST GUARD FINANCIAL SYSTEM, A VITAL STEP IN ACHIEVING CFO AUDIT SUCCESS. THIS MESSAGE UPDATES THE STANDARDIZED FUEL REPORT MESSAGE FORMAT AND PROVIDES SUGGESTIONS TO REDUCE COMMON REPORTING ERRORS. IT ALSO ESTABLISHES NEW LINE ITEMS IN THE REPORT TO INCLUDE THE FOLLOWING MONTH'S ESTIMATED FUEL CONSUMPTION, WHICH WILL ASSIST IN IMPROVING THE ACCURACY OF COAST GUARD FINANCIAL STATEMENTS, END OF YEAR PIPELINE, AND CFO AUDIT COMPLIANCE. EVERY EFFORT WAS MADE TO ENSURE REPORTING REQUIREMENTS MINIMIZE, TO THE EXTENT POSSIBLE, IMPACT TO CUTTER WORKLOAD.
* Gravity Falls to see who is the scariest villain of all Horror Villains due to him making comparisons of them.
* Higurashi: When They Cry was a villain, but Satako Houjou was an influence in changing some of his priorities.
* Hayao Miyazaki artwork," and stated that prevents him from looking back at any of his previous works with any sort of fondness.
* Halo, mastery of gravity and FTL travel, the ability to create, destroy, and move stars and planets, create structures the size of small star systems, and so much more.
* Harmony Theory, who has judged the world as weak and decided to turn everything to ash.
* Grand Theft Auto: Liberty City Stories' Staunton graveyard is chucked full of these. Hilariously, it becomes increasingly populated as your protagonist kills off selected characters throughout the storyline.
* having a cruel disposition that matched his gorgeous looks a rather villainous enemy into submission.
* He led the construction of over 5,000 km of telegraph lines through southern and western Brazil, including what was then
* Have you heard the story of Bottleneck Bob? He tried to rob the train with cattle, but evidently forgot they needed to be corralled somehow: "The cattle ran all over the place/And there was Bob with the longest face..."
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas. One mission gives you the choice of going sword to sword against a crimelord. Your other options involve whatever other guns you picked up on the way to him.
* Half-Life 2 wear creepy gas masks similar to the Soviet PMG and PBF designs (see in Real Life folder below).
* Henry Rollins relates this effect in his monologue on working with
* GX takes it to the next level with a winged version of the fluffball as Judai Yuki's duel spirit partner.
* Gorillaz are an animated band that are fronted by a group of four animated characters who are 2D (Vocals and Keyboards), Murdoc Niccals (Bass Guitar), Russel Hussel Hobbs (Drums/Percussion) and Noodle (Lead Guitar), and due to this, all of the band's music videos are animated.
* Glue, Carl "N-Sign" Ewart supports Heart of Midlothian F.C. (commonly known as Hearts), much to the dislike of his mates, who are fans of Hibernian F.C. (often known as Hibs), the Hearts' local rivals. The book also features football firms of the Rangers, Dundee United, and Aberdeen.
* Hellsing. It was because of this trope that Alucard had the interest in turning her into a Vampire, that she would still wish to live even after being through all of that.
* Hauldren’s likeness was changed to look younger, with brown hair.
* Heroic Build is gifted to males while the women are more petite with a few obvious exceptions.
* Grantchester: One's a typical grizzled police officer; the other's a vicar. They Fight Crime.
* , he hooks up with her, gets laid (on their first date, no less), and elopes with her within weeks.
* Grease, the Headmistress announces that the FBI had experts examining images of the young men who did this on live television. During Blue Moon, no less.

* Halo systems. The novels describe her as having every single hacking protocol that ONI could fit inside of her at the time of her creation, plus quite a few she made herself (and would often amuse herself by testing said security systems to see how fast she could break through).
* Grim of humorous situations). More than once, the other two protagonists have been known to take him apart in order to carry him in a backpack or other small container.
* Herd Your Horses, in the first out of the three potential rulesets, is to get your herd of horses to safety in the river valley. To do so, you have to travel through a board filled with all the sorts of dangers that wild horses have to deal with.
* Haegemonia: Legions of Iron. Nope, the expansion doesn't even have a campaign. Instead, it adds more maps, a few new ship types, a few buildings, a few techs, and the ability to make locked-down space stations move again. Needless to say, it receives a lot of hate from fans of the original.
* Hannibal where Barney is about to provide Clarice with some information about Lector, but in so doing he'll be confessing to a crime (selling Lector memorabilia.) He asks Clarice to "agree for the record" that she has not read him his rights, so that if she was wearing a wire his confession would be inadmissible. Then he has her repeat the admission into her handbag for good measure.
* Guts has instilled in him a strong desire to protect those he cares about, and he's proven time and again that he will never abandon or betray them. Despite everything the guy has gone through, he's still able to find reason to trust those close to him.
* Goon and is a much better insight into how Canadians see hockey fights and the people who engage in them.
* Haruhi herself; always out to promote the SOS Brigade and Kyon notes that she 'knows how to get answers' peacefully from the apartment keeper during the investigation of Asakura's disapperance. In practice the trope is inverted as she either steamrolls people with blackmail or
* Harry Potter and the Escape from Gringotts when they won't give up Harry's location.
* Gor are a well thought out example. Despite having a 30 foot (9 meter) wing span they are so light that two strong men can easily lift one above their heads.
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret: In order to be able to buy something to give Haruka for Christmas, Yuuto became a butler for one week. The antics of his sister and his homeroom teacher cost him almost all he earned so he's briefly seen holding another job in another episode.
* Hans Moleman regularly suffers from horrible luck, including life-threatening accidents and humiliation and is often dragged into nonsense situations without a clue why it's happening. For example, he once got his car crashed into the top of a restaurant while he was still in it.
* here has a few enchantments on it, but the actual flight mechanics are plain old physics. (One could argue that it is still played straight, though; without the enchantment that reduced its weight, presumably the ship would be too heavy to fly.)
* Higurashi: When They Cry — but Keiichi only learns this in an alternate timeline when he gets a glimpse of his own actions from outside of his own mind at the time.
* Guild Wars, and yes, it's exactly as imbalanced as it sounds). There's also Spell Shield, which prevents targeted spells while the user is casting, and Shroud of Silence, which prevents spellcasting in the first place.
* Helena Bonham Carter. And the rest of the Black family except Narcissa, who looks more like her husband for some reason.
* "Here's Mud in your Ed" sees Jimmy being scammed with a fake amusement park and subsequently crying a stream of tears that pours down the storm drain.
* Hell even Muggle-borns are allowed to join Voldemort's circle in certain cases. Lord Voldemort wanted Lily Potter to join him despite her Muggle-born status.

* Gundam Build Fighters in the above series' to even have a chance of winning for the most part. Just piloting a repainted Ace Custom will result in a broken model — just ask that one Legend Gundam that got turned into mincemeat by the Kampfer Amazing.
* Hero Worshipper, which is only implied in the film by a throwaway line.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, Luna Lovegood fights Death Eaters in a room containing models of several planets. She then uses a Reductor Curse to blow up the model of Pluto as a distraction.
* Green Acres, the citizens of Hooterville threaten to do this to Oliver whenever one of his plans to help the county backfire.
* Hayasaka and Shirogane end up becoming texting buddies after the events of the mixer, with him becoming a semi-
* Green Acres, and remembers Hank Kimball for his mix of scotch and goat's milk.
* Gonky Takeo isn't typically popular with girls and frets about having to fight for him. Fortunately, once he's aware of these issues himself, Takeo assures her he'll be glad to move faster if that's what Yamato wants and that he loves her and only her.
* Heavy Metal. Also, the girl at the end develops white hair after she's revealed as Taarna's reincarnation.
* Heart of the Woods Abigail exclusively calls her "Madison" when not using terms of endearment.
* Having a strong preference for the Indy Ploy seems to be a requirement to be a member of
* Grim Fandango. However, at one point in the game, Manny defeats his rival Domino by knocking him into the grinders of a large steamship and reducing him to bone meal.
* Heracles used fire to cauterize the Hydra's stumps before it could grow new heads. Or to be precise: Heracles smashed the heads with his club, his nephew Iolaos cauterized them. This technically didn't KILL the Hydra, since one of its heads was immortal. He just buried it under a rock afterward.
* Godzilla Against Mechagodzilla has the scenes between Akane, Dr. Yuhara and Sara where they discuss the extent to which Kiryu has feelings of its own.
* Guild Wars 2, while looking for an infiltrator who is apparently stealing people's uniforms and able to paralyze with a touch, Rhytlock comments
* Go Fish parties, the entire affair is resolved when the student explains, "I'm straight."
* Heroic Sacrifice — the virus is successfully contained in the vial attached to the helmet Olympia was carrying at the time, causing her to come back to life and turn back into a human. Otis is quick to rush to her side and worriedly ask if she's all right.
* Heinrich von Kleist is considered one of the great classics of German theatre, but before his 1811 suicide, he only managed to get two of his plays performed on stage, both in mutilated form. For instance, Goethe (in his capacity as director of the theatre in Weimar) felt it necessary to transform Kleist's one-act comedy
* Havemercy has it that the authors had the brothers in question unrelated in an earlier draft, and deliberately included plenty of sexual tension and the possibility of a relationship between them. Later, they decided to take the relationship in a different direction and proceeded to erase all hints of UST between them. They were fairly unsuccessful, though, as most of the readers picked up on it anyway. Since the fact that they're brothers is hidden until near the end of the book, almost all of the readers were already shipping them by default by the time they found out. And once the ship has sailed, well, there's no calling it back to shore.
* Happy Days. Good to know? It actually makes the spinoff cartoon with the alien girl a little less nonsensical.
* hastily rewritten to feature the newer character Octane instead in a series that tended to be very light on continuity anyway.
* Half Blood Prince, every book had one scene where Harry and at least one of his friends wound up in the Forbidden Forest, even though it was off limits to students.

* hide Gillian Anderson's pregnancy. She also wears a lab coat when she performs an autopsy, and she looks very badass while doing so. Autopsy rooms and science stuff have always been her comfort zone.
* Harry Morgan often considered, despite the fact he wasn't playing Colonel Potter in it, * hakkapeliitta! (Hack them on!). It is today used by Finnish ice hockey fans.
* Greeny Phatom is filled to the brim with examples of this made by Robert Stainton, the creator of the show:
* Harry and Hermione cover one of the walls of the tent in the Forest of Dean with information and speculations and call it the "Wall of Mysteries."
* Henry Reed from the Henry Reed, Inc. series is a Foreign Service Brat spending summers in the US with relatives.
* Golden Age), thrust into Earth-2 (home of the Golden Age DCU) by Guardian fiat.
* Gravity Falls when they get into an argument on where Trigger left Powers' phone. Tambry walks in on the agents and then immediately walks out while telling them that she is "not even gonna ask" after seeing the agents bicker in a closet combined with the fact that Trigger's wearing a dress at the time.
* He killed the gang members because they raped and killed his fiancée right in front of him.
* Gone to ridiculous lengths in an episode of the anime, where the cast had to race on Pokémon provided to them. Most absurd examples are Ash hopping on a little Spoink, Jessie getting pulled by a Magikarp on the water, and what can best be described as
* God Is Flawed. It's been theorized this was a metaphor for how idiotic humans can be.
* High and Tight where the third Olsen sibling was first a boy called Seth - then changed to a girl called Serena. Then when the original actress dropped out and no replacements could be found in time, the character became a boy again.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Mad-Eye Moody would like to tell Harry how to win the first challenge in the Triwizard Tournament, but Dumbledore would frown upon it, so he just gives Harry some "good, general advice" that helps Harry figure out how to win.
* Gossip Girl is naturally set in Manhattan's Upper East Side and, on occasion, Brooklyn.
* Green Aesop. Lisa spends the episode teaching Mr. Burns about recycling and conservation. Burns takes the lesson to heart... so he kills all of Springfield's marine life to create a meat slurry "made out of 100% recycled animals."
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Germany prepared pizza, pasta, and gelato for Italy with this specific motive in mind.
* Hamlet, the ghost of Hamlet's father, the late king. tells Hamlet that his brother Claudius, Hamlet's uncle and the present king, usurped the throne by pouring poison in his ear while he was asleep. Doesn't make much sense from a medical perspective, but it allows Hamlet to say things like "the ear of Denmark is much abus'd".
* Highlander II: The Quickening are quite different, so could count as two separate continuities in and of themselves.
* God-Created Canon Foreigner: The adaptation has a new character created by the creator of the original work.
* Hastings Embroidery was created in 1965 as a companion to the Bayeux Tapestry, telling the story of the 900 years in between.
* Guy Ritchie have appeared in nearly every film either of them have done.
* Happy Days, Fonzie uses his knowledge of motorcycles to prove the defendant's innocence to Howard and the other jurors.
* Gravity Falls episode "Into the Bunker", Dipper and his crush Wendy are being menaced by a shapeshifter. At the climax, Dipper comes upon Wendy's unconscious body, prompting him to panic and tearfully confesses his feelings for her. Just then, Wendy pops up, alive and unharmed, right behind him.
* Hand Waved by statements that the terrain is unsuitable for tanks and the like, there is no justification for a lack of air-support, either for bombing or rapid deployment of troops, especially when they're shown to have such capabilities.

* He also wrote "Just the Way You Are" for his earlier spouse Elizabeth.
* Hermes would've wanted some after catching Hades and Persephone in the act in the Homeric Hymn To Demeter.
* hard life" territory, though at the moment all we know is he was formerly part of a kingdom's military.
* Harry, the Fat Bear Spy — who'd much rather go to the beach and eat macaroons that do espionage work.
* Harry Turtledove with no large bodies of water, so they never had any need to develop ships.
* Gorgeous George — professional wrestler George Raymond Wagner took on the name in 1941
* Haytham Kenway is one of the few Templars in a long line of Assassins. Not only that, he was a Templar Grand Master who never strayed from his cause unlike Maria Thorpe, who defected and married Altair.
* GoodFellas, when Henry Hill serves his first prison sentence with Paul Vario and other members of their crew, their money and influence get them housed separately from other prisoners and allows them more or less free run of the place without interference from the guards. They even continue to eat gourmet food while inside, maintaining an extravagantly luxurious pantry packed with steaks, lobsters, and the like, as well as contraband liquor and wine (red and white). This privilege did not come cheap, as the guards demanded a large sum of money every month for them to keep the privileges, which leads Henry to resort to selling drugs. As the film was based on Henry Hill's memoirs it was exaggerated, but still...
* Grand Theft Auto: Liberty City Stories wasn't given the same treatment is anyone's guess.
* Guilded Age: Bandit is introduced to the comic this way when she nicks Syr'nj's wallet. This event also serves to unite the group (minus Best or Bandit) together for the first time.
* Hawk & Fisher) introduces Messerschmann's Portrait, a magical booby trap. Its prisoner was the thief Wulf Saxon, who'd been imprisoned in it for 23 years after an unwise attempt to rob a sorcerer. Although insane at first after being freed, he regains his senses by a fluke of events and subsequently discovers he's acquired superhuman strength, speed and stamina, as if all the concentrated energy of those twenty-three years is at his disposal.
* Hatoful Boyfriend and uses this knowledge to force Yuuya to do things for him lest he tell people who have no compunction about killing Sakuya.
* High Plains Drifter (who may or may not be the marshal's avenging spirit) arranges for a gravestone to be made before vanishing into the distance.
* Hatsune Miku because she knows she'll never be as good or popular as Miku.
* Happy Heroes contains a brief clip showing the character Careful S., who does not make his proper debut in the show until the final episode of said season.
* Haruhi-chan, Ryoko claims to be the first and weakest member of the Radical Four, who answer to three even more powerful superiors, none of which are seen.
* Grand Finale is about Dr. Sheldon Cooper and Dr. Amy Ferrah-Fowler winning the Nobel Prize for their discovery of superasymmetry.
* Harry Potter, no matter how much Harry may value her friendship, can't replace Ron in that regard.
* Grrl Power Dabbler at night for some "urgent" informations. She is first responded by Dabbler that this is not the time as she is in the middle of something, and then, more explicitly, that something is in the middle of her. This cut the conversation short. Of course, since Dabbler is a succubus, this was to be expected.
* Half-Minute Hero: Parodied, to the extent that everyone in the party's name name pretty much sums up their role.
* God sends an angel who says(paraphrased), "Whoa, dude, that's okay. Just checking." Since God already promised to bless Issac and his descendants, the New Testament suggests Abraham already knew it was just a test and Issac would be fine.

* Hey Arnold! has one where Helga reads some of her Arnold-centered poetry to see whether an "out-of-love potion" she took has stopped her from being obsessed with him:
* "Heh." The Godmodder picked that up after TT2000 unleashed a horrific April Fool's prank on him. It ultimately became a Character Tic for the Godmodder, but was also used as the foreshadowing of imminent doom (i.e. the summoning of Calamity).
* Hamlet have the soliloquy performed by the title character presented as talking to the audience instead of simply to himself.
* here, although there are a few versions of the story floating about. The episodes are hilarious and well worth the listen.
* Halloween Episode Candace never references any particular movies, but notes a background in American horror movies may have done them some good.
* Gratuitous Rape: A work of fiction features a rape scene just because.
* "He Stopped Loving Her Today", written by Bobby Braddock and Curly Putman, and released in 1980 by George Jones:
* Goofy", the ball lands right between the goalposts, wobbling back and forth as the gun ending the first half fires. The bullet from said gun deflates the ball, leaving it hanging there. After much deliberation, the officials decide to award it half a point.
* Hermione gets her parents to allow Harry to spend the first two weeks of the summer after third year at their house.
* Golden Age a woman who was named Diana Prince and who exactly resembled her needed to go overseas to be with her fiance. Wonder Woman gave her the funds to go overseas and took on her identity.
* Grey's Anatomy ends, the characters in question being Meredith, Derek, and Addison.
* Heroes Unlimited has the ability/power Telemechanics, which makes the user into a Technopath.
* Go Animate videos, thanks to the Text-To-Speech programs used to vocalize characters, most emotions are conveyed in this manner. For instance, someone could have been gotten hurt and all they'd say is a flat "Ow."
* Golden Ending standing on a high precipice overlooking Castle Charlock with the Sword of Erdrick at his side, psyching up for the final battle.
* Going Through the Motions - For budget reasons, video game characters have a tendency to reuse the same poses over and over instead of having unique ones.
* Heart in the Wrong Place: It's never as far to the left as people think it is.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys are all part of the same universe. As well as the 5 movies that came before the Hercules series.
* Halo Infinite, which had console exclusivity in the west for the Series X|S, ended up making up for some of the traction lost.
* Happy Endings, Max makes fun of Brad for having a work wife by chant/singing 'Brad's got a work wife', Dave goes off-book by singing it like he's in a hair band, which Max eventually admits is better.
* Great white sharks, frequently regarded as ferocious man-eaters, are themselves easy game for orcas. Records have sharks leaving their feeding grounds whenever they felt a killer whale nearby. One recorded example had them go all the way from the mainland U.S. to
* Glen or Glenda agreed to play in the film for a salary of $5,000, although legend has it he only pocketed $1,000 for his appearance.
* Godric Gryffindor's spirit suggests kicking Dumbledore out of Hogwarts and making baby Harry the new Headmaster (and his guardian Severus Snape interim Headmaster) as a distraction, allowing him and the other Founders to improve the school behind the scenes.
* Harry is said to "tear out his eyes" at one point, but it's unclear if it's his own eyes or Voldemort's eyes. The former makes sense when Harry is mentioned to be unable to see, but the latter seems more like something Harry would do.
* has to were actually a good thing, because the first jobs they stole were the "jobs" of slaves.

* Good Is Not Nice. Bolan responds coldly, "No way. That was my grand slammer."
* Hashmal, Ivalice's earth Esper/Lucavi, is shirtless in all of his appearances except for
* he can jump 0.1 seconds ahead in time and aim for his vital spots, which Vegeta can't figure out since to him it looks like Hit is moving so fast that he seemingly disappears, of course, but still).
* GTA V came on two discs, one for installing the game, and the other for playing it.
* Gundam, but just as often it's just punishment for misdeeds. It gave birth to the "Bright Slap" meme.
* hat. Common consensus of Dwarf society (only aired by elves and humans when safely out of dwarf earshot) is that they're driving themselves to extinction pursuing centuries-old wrongs.
* Harry Potter also ended up receiving an M rating in New Zealand and Australia and the equivalent in many other countries.
* Harry Potter - apparently, mountain trolls smell like a cross between old socks and "the kind of public toilet no-one seems to clean."
* he was unaware and had a crush on Sami at the time). In the epilogue, Mikazuki and Subaru are strongly implied to be dating.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince. When Ron is unconscious from a poisoning, Lavender Brown (who he had been dating) rushes to his bedside. She starts to call his name, which causes him to stir...and croak out Hermione's name. Cue Lavender running away in tears, while Hermione takes her place sitting by Ron. After Ron recovers, he thinks that this was just a dream and has no idea why Lavender is angry with him.
* have switched to secure texting.) Faxing is also commonplace throughout hospitals and clinics.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch repulsed by Greta and, in the end when she approaches him in the dress, he basically shrugs "why not?" and goes with it.
* God of War III. The age of Greek Myth, with its gods and monsters all dead, is over and the world is on the brink of ruin. Even the Fates are gone. But in his final moments, Kratos released the power of Hope, a power great enough to kill gods, to humanity. The survivors will be able to rebuild civilization free of the gods' influence and as masters of their own destiny.
* Green Lantern: Rebirth, after Parallax, the cosmic horror living embodiment of fear, has started wreaking havoc on Earth, the recently returned Hal Jordan gets ready to lead the rest of the Earth Green Lanterns against it... and Batman stops him for no reason other than being unreasonably paranoid and distrustful.
* Hey Arnold! that he'd have one"), but it turns out to be a moot point, as the real culprit—Curly—reveals himself once Arnold makes this argument.
* Henry IV does this when describing how many men attacked him (after he robs a bunch of other men, whose numbers he's clearly also lying about). In reality there were two (Hal and Poins); by the end of the scene, he's claiming there were eleven.
* Heat features Robbery Homicide Lieutenant Vincent Hanna acting as lead investigator for every crime in the film, from the climactic bank robbery to the murder of a prostitute. Hanna does have subordinates under his command, but their duties are limited to assisting in the larger cases by running down leads, not handling cases of their own. Though we don't know if those detectives — Detectives Bosko, Casals and Schwartz, and Sergeant Drucker — are on any other active cases.
* Heroes of Might and Magic, some non-neutral units could have been upgraded, giving them better statistics, slightly altered appearance and sometimes completely new abilities that made a vast difference between them and the basic version. Green Dragons from the same game take this trope a level higher and can be upgraded twice from Red to Black Dragons. In III, V and VI all non-neutral units became upgradeable.
* hilarity can ensue. It can turn a perfectly-executed daylight assassination which leaves no evidence into the character running at the target while screaming "I AM AMBUSHING YOU!!!" and then tripping over their own feet.

* Guilty Gear. This version included a prototype story mode, Mission mode and Kliff and Justice as playable characters.
* HBO Max. While most of the episodes carried over their original ratings, a few episodes produced between 2008 and 2011 such as "Multiple Meat" and "Hands on a Hamburger" were re-rated TV-MA due to uncensored audio being used.
* Guardians of the Galaxy rather than being able to go anywhere, and that going into hyperspace is physically taxing on living organisms, so there's an upper limit to how many jumps you can take in one go before you have to spend some time in normal space recuperating.
* heavily and a flashback in season 7 had him and Jonathan sharing a bed in Mexico. When finally confessing he might be gay he follows it up by saying "That can't be right. I would have known before now", before finally identifying as gay after kissing a man.
* He has a grandfather, Don Porkaloin, who played this trope to the hilt.
* Hannah Montana", Lilly has a tendency to be this after she and Miley start dating; while she trusts Miley not to cheat, she becomes extremely angry when dealing with Jake Ryan as he makes it clear he expects to get back together with Miley.
* He was also called the Golden Avenger long after his armor ceased to be entirely golden.
* her feel like a good person but which she knew that the recipients wouldn't actually enjoy. She's forced to concede the point.
* Godzilla vs. Evangelion: The Real 4-D in a wound Godzilla opened earlier in the fight.
* Harvest Town for her parents. Glen often brings baby chicks from his farm to show to Peach, while Jerry wishes to give Peach a pony when they're both grown up.
* Headquarters material, though, the latter having been a top-5 single in the UK.
* Heroes before breaking into acting, and so he knew a thing or two about how special effects crews worked and would often suggest that shots be filmed a certain way to ease the burden on the VFX team.
* Hercules: The Animated Series level), but had ridiculously simple backgrounds that were mostly just several objects (pillars, torches, etc.) in front of huge blurry backdrops.
* Grimms Notes (Previously an online Gacha RPG, it basically became this after getting shut down due to its gameplay mechanics being completely removed, and only leaving the cutscenes intact)
* Gotham episode "Destiny Calling", among the people infected by the virus are a couple of Girl Scouts chasing a police officer because he wouldn't buy their cookies.
* Gratuitous Space Battles can be mounted with (blue) Tractor Beams, slowing the pesky-deadly fighters down to the point where slow tracking beams and missiles can kill them.
* hanging lampshades on it, where people are already beginning to convince themselves that the latest alien invasion was just a hoax or a publicity stunt.
* Grave Digger, which is about Last Grandmaster of Knights Templar Jacques de Molay, who was burned at the stake during the order's downfall.
* heavily editing footage is somehow being unreasonable for wanting control over her own image or who she dates.
* Heretic 2 from the end of the first game. Mostly it causes death, insanity and violence, but there is mention of another version that can be used to control people.
* Hell Teacher Nube and absolutely nothing will distract him from annihilating the offender.
* he should have burned Bajor to the ground and stuck the head of every Bajoran man, woman and child on a stake.
* Goo Goo Dolls, which wound up being a major hit (their first, after five albums). They actually decided to roll with it and wound up completely changing their style to the softer pop-rock they're known for now.
* Global Frequency as his skin was replaced, bones were replaced, weapons were installed, and chips were inserted into his brain to allow him to operate everything. He also runs on at least two nuclear reactors, has a plasma laser in his chest, a vulcan minigun in his arm, and can do 70 miles per hour from a standing start. Most nefariously, he has a wire to simulate sexual pleasure from murdering people...and he's loose.

* Gunslinger Girl over not being allowed outside, then when Hilshire and Triela get down on the floor to pick up the pieces she handcuffs them together and flees.
* Hal may be the bumbling sitcom dad's poster boy, but if he finds out his kids lives are in danger, he's going to be much more like
* Hellfire, with negative, demonic, and dark connotations. May be folded into Dark or Death. Expect it to not obey the usual laws of physics of regular fire.
* Guns are much more accurate thanks to the invention of rifling the barrel, giving the bullet a spin that keeps it flying straighter gyroscopically. This was the reason for the name rifle, but almost every modern gun now has this feature, including handguns. The only common exceptions are * Hell Is That Noise). The reveal of the Doctor's new nemeses is accompanied by sliding, metallic walls of sound, and a high-pitched electronic screech.
* he can possess you in this manner without you even being aware you killed him. In one story, a worker in a munitions factory turned into Lucius when the Chaos Lord stepped on a landmine he made on a distant battlefield on another world. He was proud to work on munitions that destroyed the Imperium's enemies, and that was enough.
* Great Coasters International, one of the leading names in wooden roller coasters in the 21st century, was founded by Mike Boodley, a designer at the 1990s wooden roller coaster construction firm of Custom Coasters International.
* Her daughter Cynthia also does the same, except she uses it to choose which Dramatic Entrance she should do for the next battle.
* Herman's Head in the episode where Herman moves into Jay's apartment, and in the skyscraper across from them, an attractive woman does her yoga exercises in the nude. "Boy is she limber!"
* grinning at him, Sharpe casually dispatching Lieutenant Berry while on patrol (in his first very first appearance) and making it look like Lord Hale, who was actually killed by his wife and Sharpe's lover in self-defence, died in battle at Trafalgar.

* Goa'uld ships are usually controlled by sticking your hands on a pair of big red orb-things and... then somehow you can drive the ship without doing anything else that's visible. Presumably it's a telepathic interface or something.
* Hc Svnt Dracones". There are also a few specific implants that affect the mind, a Behavioral Adjuster changes the character's Motivation, with or against their will depending on who controls the implant; a Voice literally gives you a voice in your head, though usually it's helpful; and the Aestus Leech really lowers its host's inhibitions and has a bit of a will of its own, if a character has both a Voice and a Leech they tend to conflict.
* Hellblade: Senua's Sacrifice has her one great love, Dillion, and a significant chunk of her internal conversation revolves around how strongly she feels for him. He's already dead at the start of the game.
* .hack, there are no notes and everything the current developers do to The World was most likely based on how subroutines are implemented in the prototype game Fragment. Attempts at analyzing the code just leave confusion and trying to surgically remove any part of the program to see what breaks brings the whole thing to a standstill.

* Gobber. After Stoick goes to confront his long-lost wife after upsetting her, he tells Hiccup "You see this is why I never got married, that and another reason", the filmmakers and his voice actor have confirmed that it meant he is gay.
* Henpecked Husband: A husband who submissively does everything his wife says can get into this territory if it goes too far.
* Grown Ups, Eric causes chaos at a waterpark when he discovers that they really do put a chemical into the water that turns urine blue.
* Hayate the Combat Butler ways and offer him a drink. She then (probably teasingly) asks him what he likes about Hinagiku (the younger sister), as if he had just confessed affection for her instead.
* Grimms', eaten by his father, and had his bones buried by his half-sister, he comes back as a bird. After killing his stepmother, he comes back to life as a boy.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, marking the first time that Harry really thinks of her as someone other than "that weird girl."
* Highlander can be perforated by bullets, but this won't kill them. Using guns to take down your opponent long enough to chop his head off is explicitly against the rules, and only truly reprehensible characters attempt it.
* Gojira. It was also filmed in cooperation with the Japanese Coast Guard.
* Happy Tree Friends episode "By the Seat of Your Pants" Lumpy is participating in a swim race and Flippy is in the audience. When Mole fires the starting pistol Lumpy dives in as soon as Flippy goes into flipped-out mode. When he surfaces in less then 5 seconds later, Flippy is in the exact same position he had been in before Lumpy dived and he has already killed all the other swimmers, audience members, and any other innocent bystanders.
* Golden Sun series, the Curse status effect will kill its victim 7 turns after being applied. It's primarily inflicted with the Curse spell, but the unleash from Lachesis' Rule and the Djinn Gasp and Hemlock can also inflict it.
* Gravity Falls Mabel is looking for a way to carry Waddles, her pig, around, when an ad comes on TV for a baby sling. The ad then continues "And yes, it works for pigs, too! It works for PIIIIGGGSS!"
* Gone develops at an accelerated pace, probably because the baby in question is a mutant.
* Gravity Falls. A lot of her bitchiness is due to her parents, who are far worse Rich Bitches than she is and actively encourage her to go down the same way as them.
* Hawaii Five-0 has an example when a couple of tourists with a little boy find themselves in the same elevator as the Five-0 police officers, fully geared in bulletproof vests and guns out, as they are pursuing a wounded suspect hiding in a grand hotel. Complete with Hawaiian elevator music.
* Gnosia has the AC Supporter role who's human, but is there to HELP the Gnosia take over the ship by lying their way through, with high stats able to convince someone on the crew is an impostor or talk their way out.

* GTM: A Japanese band consisting of three transgender men and one X-gender person.
* Heavy Object after the collapse of the UN, four supernations control most of the planet. One is Legitimacy Kingdom whose core ideology is that nobility and royalty have the duty to rule commoners and the right to claim land as their domain. The various nobles all claim to be descended from noble families that existed in the past and are now re-establishing their claims. Commoners tend to be at the mercy of nobles and at one point many were actually part of a slave class.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, that the unnamed city in which the events take place is described in just enough detail as to unmistakably be his hometown, and that he was, in fact, in a literature club back in high school.

* Half-Life 2 antlions, even though the antlion Hive Guardian is referred to by the vortigaunts as the "myrmidont," which is derived from antlions' scientific name (Myrmeleontidae).
* GURPS averts this trope, advising GMs to give some consideration to the balance between predators and prey in an ecosystem.
* Groups of South Korean reporters tend to follow idols and wait for them in airports when they are traveling for a schedule, snapping endless photos of them at near and close distances. Korea Dispatch, an online media outlet infamous in the Kpop scene for having paparazzi who specialize in catching celebrities going on secret dates and reporting rumors to the point where Korean stars sometimes make * Heroes of the Storm character versus Diablo himself). The most notable quotes among these are from character in the Diablo or Warcraft series.
* Hercules. Hercules, in some plays and stories, at some point, was in almost every major thing Greece ever did, including riding along with Jason and the Argonauts. He also apparently stopped off at every island and city-state he could find and had about 300 kids, all of whom are the ancestors of kings. He often makes cameos in stories where people go to the underworld, as well. Even accounts of the Trojan War, which took place decades after Hercules' death, have one of his sons make a cameo appearance (and be killed by a son of Zeus despite his own divine heritage). At least the Argonauts story gets rid of him fairly quickly, when he abandons the expedition out of grief at the death of his
* Ground up Egyptian mummy was a key ingredient in folk remedies for various ailments in medieval Europe and the Middle East.
* Green Lantern (2011) film means that Hal Jordan remains overshadowed in the popular imagination.
* He himself falls into something similar to this trope. Everyone Jak ever works for seems to solve problems simply by chucking Jak at them, and then when this leads to more trouble, they chuck Jak at
* God Hand has a jumping puzzle towards the end. Playing the game for 30 seconds will show you how inane this is.
* Harry Potter (though the relevant scene itself was already decidedly unpleasant in context).
* Hercules: The Animated Series, Hercules' sheep uniform when he works in a restaurant.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban. The escape of a famous convict → A devoted servant trying to rejoin with Voldemort. The "devoted servant" being actually a snivelling coward who framed said convict.
* Guards! Guards! when Vimes hears that the bounty for the dragon is fifty thousand dollars:
* Help! I'm a Fish ends up stealing the antidote and uses it to make his own metropolis of sentient, uplifted fish.
* Grand Theft Auto V as an area resembling Route 66 was named Route 69 in the beta but was renamed to Route 68 in the finished product.
* Heart of Steel, Alistair is willing to do some crazy(er) things for the sake of Julia, whom he barely knows. Justified in that she's the first meaningful human companionship he's had in ten years.
* Godspeaker Trilogy: The violent and hostile Mijaki civilization worships a god symbolized by a scorpion, and one the rituals its priests (called godspeakers) perform involves being stung by hundreds of scorpions (If they survive, the god has judged them to be worthy.).
* Godzilla Threshold scenario. It was the power of this artifact when added to his ranger powers that made him so strong when he was evil. When he became good again, is artifact driven power-up was lost and he reverted to his original ranger powers
* Heart of the Swarm campaign has two more examples, Corpsers are a variant strain of Roach whose normal attack infects enemy units with a pair of mini-roachlings that burst out when it is killed, and one of Kerrigan's possible abilities allows her to do basically the same thing.

* Grand Theft Auto V to voice some of the side characters, and they often rewrote the dialogue when it seemed unrealistic. Lead actor Shawn Fonteno is no stranger to gang life himself, as revealed in an interview, adding to the game's authenticity.
* Grimmjow has one on his chest after he got hit with Ichigo's Getsuga Tenshou in their first fight.
* Hernán Cortés was helped in his conquest of the Aztecs by the Otomis, who had been conquered after a long war 20 years prior by the Aztecs, and particularly by the Tlaxcalans, who were being constantly invaded and on the brink of defeat when the Spanish appeared, ruling only a small territory. Under the Spanish, the Tlaxcalans became the primary occupation force in the Aztec capital and later established colonies all over Mexico, Central America and Texas. Some even took part in the Spanish conquest of the Philippines. Their privileges were unmatched by any other natives under Spanish rule, and their homeland survives today as Mexico's smallest state.
* Heroic Myth: At the end of the War Game arc, Bell Cranel is about to finish off Hyakinthos Clio to win the War Game. Bell has his weapon overhead and proudly declares his Familia name, when out of nowhere, Bell's teammate Emma Flores beans Hyakinthos with a bottle and knocks him out. Everyone comments on Emma stealing Bell's thunder.
* Hayop Ka!: The Nimfa Dimaano Story sports a lineless variant of this style, making it stand out compared to other examples.
* Gliding: Extended into a bat-winged shape to slow his descent while jumping vast distances or high heights.
* Goldfinger is sent to investigate an industrial magnate suspected merely of illegally smuggling gold out of the UK. He discovers in the process that Goldfinger is plotting with Chinese intelligence to rob Fort Knox.
* hermeticist, and tries very hard not to remember about it on day-to-day basis. He eventually grows more comfortable with sorcery.
* Harry Crow, who ends up using this immunity to avoid being arrested for past crimes.
* Harry Chapin, "A Better Place to Be". The refrain says it all: "If you want me to come with you then that's all right with me / 'cause I know I'm going nowhere and anywhere's a better place to be."
* Harmony offers to do anything for Spike if he'll keep her safe from Buffy. After some hinting she realises he expects sex in exchange for protection and is perfectly fine with that arrangement.
* Grand Finale, Carlos Nieto and Holly Levine get married. Their former co-workers Jimmy Doherty and Kim Zambrano return for the wedding - both are seen congratulating the happy couple. Neither has any lines, but they're there.
* Hayate's brother is even more ridiculous than him and doesn't even
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), Skeletor was fond of going off on tirades against the intelligence of his many henchmen, calling them lamebrains and numbskulls several times an episode. Not that he was particularly bright himself. Maybe it was just a bad pun.
* he was being subconsciously guided by Morgana so he could rescue his team.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas can revive dead people, unless their heads have been blown off
* Good Will Hunting, better with his life than being a two-penny janitor and construction worker completely crazy.
* Gospel of the Lost Gods: This being Westeros, there are inhabitants who don't believe the Wards are gods, but rather just people who can perform magic. None of the Wards believe in magic and chalk up what magic they do see as simply the appearance of superpowers.
* Gundam is one of the most profitable franchises in the world, and very big on the modeling scene, but it barely gets talked about within the western anime community. The fact that it is a long-running series spanning 40 years worth of TV shows, OVAs, and theatrical movies makes it difficult for the average anime fan to get into.
* Heck, Stephen King's work in general is one giant Reality Subtext. He's a teacher who used to work at an industrial laundry?

* Granblue Fantasy: When Medusa eavesdrops on the girls chatting about Valentine's Day and hears Io's remark about how "looks [of the chocolates] are important too.", she just assumes that meant everyone has to dress up in fancy clothes for the occasion. She did sport a new outfit for the event.
* Halo (albeit converted to semiautomatic fire and with the magazine in the bottom rather than the side of the rifle).
* Godzilla (2014), the Janjira incident that resulted in the death of Joe Brody’s wife occurred on his birthday.
* "Glowworm" is a common name for the larval form of many species of fireflies in English as well.
* hard to understand. Particularly charming, Cyborg talking smack via Starfire's voice.
* Henry V ends with the wedding of the eponymous King and Princess Katherine of France after Henry fights a bloody war of conquest against his soon-to-be father-in-law. However, Shakespeare lampshades the trope by pointing out in the epilogue that Henry's conquests will be short-lived and his premature death will lead to a bloody civil war.
* Grand Theft Auto, heads would always neatly pop when shot with a sniper rifle.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City in order to gain Diaz' trust — and finally kill him off.
* High Lady Antillus. When her treachery was discovered, she fled, but was captured by the Canim, fitted with a discipline collar, and commanded to do no harm; because the Cane who collared her was killed, the collar can never be removed. She spends her days afterwards as simply Dorotea the medic, finding it far more fulfulling than being a High Lady.
* GURPS Banestorm, most people believe that God's power is qualitatively different from magic. The Catholic Church is thus very careful when making saints, since they have to make a distinction between miracles and spells (even raising the dead just requires a skilled necromancer).
* Helping Stuart (and not helping the others) is that corporate encourages pushing the Christmas Creep. The managers meeting that happens in June always discusses Christmas, they've encouraged store managers to play Christmas music starting October 1 (which Stuart made mandatory in his district) and sent a sign reminding people that it's time to think about Christmas in August (which promptly got torn up by customers). Marla, for her part, resists pushing the Christmas Creep as much as she can, even saying one year she flat out refuses to play Christmas music in October unless corporate mandates it. (Cooper quips that that mandate probably isn't too far off.) Should be noted that this came at the end of a week where Stuart tried to go behind Marla's back to get someone else to play the Christmas music, only to find that Marla hid the cds containing them and Val would only tell him where they were if he bribed her 1000 dollars.
* Hand of God: Pernell has this reputation as a judge, always giving the maximum sentence.
* Go and Sin No More: Someone offers you forgiveness and insists that you atone for your crimes.
* Greg Egan around like monkeys throwing turds while they draw up their plans for Matrioshka brains."
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger airs at 1 am and 1:30 am on BS Asahi and TOKYO MX, respectively.
* He Also Did, write "Has been watched by the producers of..." (Yes. That really happened.)
* Gracie Fields' "Sing As We Go" from the 1930's is almost completely forgotten today, save for the melody—instantly recognizable as
* High Speed, the player's main adversary is the police officer in Car 504. 504's just doing his job of making sure people don't drive recklessly on the freeway, and then here you are in an exotic car pretending that speeds below 100 mph don't exist.
* Hanse Davion avoids falling into this trope mainly by not actually being especially

* Harry Enfield and Chums don't want to be the hundredth person to say that to me today!" In the book, he takes the opportunity to apologize to the person, if they're reading.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name, Hanna's blood is apparently particularly disgusting, at least according to a vampire. He attributes this to his use of magic (before quickly changing the subject).
* He Knows About Timed Hits: How else are you going to learn which button does what?
* Hell Hotel: Typical setting. You can pay the bill with your blood however.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series: The Red Lantern Corps have one on hand for traitors.
* he was ignored. With the help of the Shadows, the Centauri were later able to capture the Narn homeworld, resulting in the death and enslavement of millions of his people. Delenn confesses as much to G’Kar in “Ship of Tears”, but in her defence tells him that had the Minbari spoke in his support the other races may have still disbelieved him, and the Shadows would have completely exterminated his people in retaliation. He accepts this explanation, but with a very heavy heart.
* Gorillaz, caused by having them dented into 2D's eye sockets, which gave him his nickname (2 Dents).
* He's also totally devoted to her. In the PSP remake, he's the only male S link the new * Gran Torino (Highland Park, Michigan to be specific. But... 1972 Ford Gran Torinos like the titular car were made in Lorain, Ohio.
* Higurashi: When They Cry. She was sent away for trying to blow up the school and thus she avoided the town gassing that happens every arc.
* Hazard's Wake is a Manic Pixie Dream Girl in her own mind. (In reality, she's more a Manic Girl with romantic delusions.)
* Hey Arnold!, Rhonda threw a party to which she only invited kids she deemed cool enough, Arnold himself making that list. Arnold quickly got bored of listening to Rhonda prattle on about her vacation in Europe and insulting his friends and left, rejoining with his friends and suggesting they throw their own party on the roof of the boarding house. One by one, the other "cool kids" leave Rhonda's party for Arnold's, realizing that the "geeks" are having more fun. Eventually, Rhonda gave up when everyone left, and she joined them all in the end. (Though she still was going to consider herself a cool kid).
* Higurashi: When They Cry a couple of times, as well as Satoshi, who is a more extreme example than Keiichi and is even voiced by a female.
* Hannah Montana does this twice while reading off a teleprompter during an awards show.
* Godzilla films, the mere sighting of a footprint-shaped crater by itself (i.e before Godzilla itself appears) is played for suspense and horror, especially for the in-universe characters.
* Grimm leans pretty heavily on this trope. If there's a legend about any kind of creature, there's probably a type of Wesen responsible. A couple of legends that have come to life in the series (La Llorona and Volcanalis for example) are hinted not to be Wesen at all, but possibly something else with an even weirder supernatural explanation.
* Harry Potter vibe is somewhere in the middle. Although the 6th film is very washed out and bleak. The scene where Harry uses sectumsempra on Malfoy is so desaturated it is practically in black and white save for Malfoy's blood.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged, where the Nazi vampire army selected via survey to invade England to Edwin Starr's anti-war anthem "War".
* Halloween (1978) when "the shape" is stalking Laurie Strode and her friends through the quiet streets of Haddonfield during the middle of the day. The idyllic, sunny small town environment is rendered uncanny and frightening by the mixture of creepy music and the fact that the audience is aware of a malevolent presence that the onscreen characters cannot seem to sense.

* Godzilla (2014), Joe does this with Sandra across the window of the door behind which he had to lock her to keep irradiated steam from leaking into the rest of the Janjira plant.
* Halloween Episode, rolling a (simulated) body up in a carpet was one step in the obstacle course used to test Hollywood corpse-disposal myths.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch special edition DVD is the alternative VHS version of the scene where the Gremlins stop the film. It can be seen if you select the Gremlin's hand on the main menu.
* Gundam SEED, the majority of Zaft's navy seems to be comprised of Vosgulov-class submersible mobile suit carriers.
* Hanazuki Full Of Treasure of Hanazuki's moon, has Police Codes for meteor showers and the cleanup effort that follows them. Respectively being 2-13 and 2-18. He also has one for retreating to the Safety Cave (4-12)
* Harry also has this more obviously with Luna Lovegood, who is basically the little sister and sibling he always wanted. He adores Luna's innocence, feels compassion for her aloofness, and for being picked on by others, and admires her for her courage and determination. At the end of Book 5,
* GURPS of Eldritch Lore which fit pretty much every aspect of this trope (unreadable, evil, drive you crazy) except that they're not actually books (being from before bound books were invented, or from cultures that never did).
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys when a time-traveling King Arthur is deposited in Hercules' time. This version of Arthur is an evil, murdering, asshole and he goes through an eventual heel-face turn after Hercules points out that tyrannical kings are usually remembered like this.
* Greek Hoplites ("shieldmen") were traditionally composed of anyone who could own a farm and pay for a shield and corselet. In Athens that was for a long time the main qualification for voting. They were actually fairly effective in a limited manner for bunched up in a phalanx they could trample over anything except another phalanx. Their weakness was that they could not go on long campaigns far away from home as easily as professionals.
* Gordon and Sheila, two happily married Middle Englanders played by Rob Brydon and Julia Davis in “Human Remains” run a very traditional B&B…with a swingers’ dungeon in the attic. They move forward their planned remodel of their playspace when the local DIY shop has an unexpected wallpaper sale.
* Happens to Murdoch when trying to catch a murderer in a vaudeville troupe in
* Glenn Medeiros: A Hawaiian singer of Portuguese descent, this teen pop star had a hit in 1987 with "Nothing's Gonna Change My Love for You," which topped the charts in the UK but only hit No. 12 in the U.S., In 1990, he made a surprise comeback with the Bobby Brown collaboration "She Ain't Worth It," which topped the charts in the U.S. but only hit No. 12 in the UK, a complete 180º from his 1987 placement. A minor hit, "All I'm Missing Is You," with Ray Parker, Jr., cracked the U.S. top 40 later that year, but failed to chart anywhere else.
* Happiness in Mind Control: You actually enjoy being mind-controlled.
* Harrison Ford. A shooting victim in a store robbery, the main character loses his memory and, in essence, becomes someone his wife has to fall in love with all over again (but a much nicer person than he was).
* have been put into doubt by later ones that state that either said wormhole would be unstable and close inmediately, so no interdimensional travel of any kind, or that said behavior is just a failure of our current understanding.
* Happy Days: When the fight between Richie, Ralph and Potsie against some greaser bullies commences (episode "Joanie's Weird Boyfriend"), Fonzie comments to Carmine Ragusa "Didn't we see this in a Three Stooges film?"
* Harry's .44 Magnum revolver. It's not as sophisticated as the FN P-90 that Murphy favors during combat, nor does it have any badass enchantments like the swords of the Knights Of The Cross (or Harry's other magical apparel), but what it
* Highlander: The Search for Vengeance Marcus. Particularly brutal as Colin had recently been made chief of the village.
* Hey Arnold!, Gerald's dad joined the army during the Vietnam War and was sent there with his company even though he was in the infirmary for most of basic training due to illness. During a rifle practice session, he accidentally shot his commanding officer and was assigned a desk job. While he didn't fight in the war, when transporting some documents he ran across an injured soldier and brought him to the nearest medic, saving his life.

* Guardians of at the start of the second film, since preparing to fight a giant monster is more important than listening to music while fighting.
* Herb Abrams' UWF: They fought to a double-countout. When the other wrestlers said they couldn't do that, Cactus replied, "Hey, it's Herb's show, we can do anything."
* He also does this in his review of "Anaconda" by going on and on about how this is a trite, annoying song that only serves to make
* Her mother Cora was also fond of this and used it to Regina's one true love. In front of Regina. Cora and Regina both learned this from
* he manages to defeat Wyoming and Gamma, quickly becomes a master sniper, and actually proves to be a pretty good leader for the blue team (a job which he was too lazy to accept previously). By the time he reappears in Recreation, he's mastered his sword as well and is able to destroy C.T.'s Warthog with one well-timed swipe. At this point, he's one of the most competent non-freelancer characters in the series.
* Hawkeye as a character suffers the most thanks to this, as the comics character was a

* Hershel and the Hanukkah Goblins, Hershel tricks one of the goblins by offering a jar of pickles. The goblin reaches in and grabs as many as it can, but it's so greedy that it doesn't think to let go when it realizes its hand is stuck. Hershel only reveals the trick after finishing his Hanukkah celebrations for the night.
* Hercules the muses strike this pose on occasion, Melpomene in particular strikes it a lot, for example at the end of "Zero to Hero".
* Gosetsu and Yotsuyu are seen left behind in the crumbling remains of Doma Castle. Both are not found afterwards and are presumed dead.
* Gumball and Anais' dad Richard; in fact, he's such a bumbling dad, it's even shown that
* Grand Theft Auto IV, and yes, that is duct-tape holding one of the windows in. And some of them even have alarms.
* Grey Matter). Notably, Ben himself is fully aware of this flaw and laments his reduced versatility.
* Gunnerkrigg Court between Annie and the blade. This isn't entirely necessary, as Mr. Donlan's magic shield would have saved Annie either way (in fact, the shield ends up protecting Reynardine), but Annie certainly appreciated Rey's intent.
* Goblin slayer when a inexperienced naïve group of young adventurers decide to go into a cave inhabited by goblins, they are ambushed, and completely outnumbered. The goblins manage to kill 2 members of the group with ease, and only the priestess and fighter girl are left, the fighter girl begins fighting off the horde to give the priestess enough time to escape, knowing full well the horrible fate that awaits her, so this can also count as a heroic sacrifice. Interesting enough the fighter girl is able to hold her own, until a large goblin joins the fight and breaks her leg, leading to her getting gang raped, despite this she shouts for the priestess to continue her escape.
* Half-Life: Full Life Consequences describes the evil Combines as "robot things that werent robots."
* Golden Age villain called "Rival" retroactively became the first Reverse Flash.
* Grimm but it's also revealed that he was in a relationship with Adalind's mother Catherine in the past. In present days, he turns Catherine down when she propositions him.
* Hell's Gate: the non-magic users of the Mythalan culture. They make up at least eighty percent of the Mythalan population but possess only extremely circumscribed legal rights, handle all the "blue-collar" work and serve as cannon fodder for the Mythalan army.

* Goosebumps with many heroes and villains from the original series, published long before their target audiences were even around. In order to alleviate the lock out, every book came with a reprinted edition of the classic book the new one continued, or at least one that was thematically similar.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi episode "Tooth Decay" had a boy snark that he was the Easter Bunny in response to Ami claiming that she and Yumi were the tooth fairy.
* Goblins that fares poorly and seems only to show up to complain about their previous characters dying before dying again, yet reference adventures that aren't shown.
* having sex with a sheep. He asks, "Shouldn't you be shearing that sheep?", to which the New Zealander replies, "Fuck off, I'm not sharing it with anyone!"
* Harry Potter Draco tried to commit suicide after his mother was raped and killed as a punishment for his father's foul-ups, but was saved and transported to St. Mungo's where he was faced with becoming a quadruple amputee. Rather than have a crippled heir, his father had nanomachines injected into him, making him stronger, smarter and utterly incapable of committing permanent self-harm.
* Harry Turtledove books is Kassquit, a human woman raised by the alien, lizardlike Race. She must wear artificial "fingerclaws" to be able to use the Race's computers.
* Herbivores Are Friendly: Animals who don't eat meat are passive vs. animals who eat meat are aggressive.
* hat. Even among the Redguards, there are some who take it to another level:
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets he happened to have on him).
* Hamilton and Burr's initial meeting is quite amicable, with Burr buying Hamilton a drink and giving him advice. Less than five minutes earlier, Burr had declared himself to be "the damn fool who shot him [Hamilton]". Granted, Burr (and the rest of the cast) was acting as an omnipotent narrator at that point, and when Burr and Hamilton first meet, Burr doesn't know that he's destined to kill Hamilton.
* Happy Gilmore ("It's all in the hips"), causing him to get embarrassed and pull away.
* Harry Potter, Bludgers are balls enchanted so that they do this during Quidditch matches.
* Gummo looks quite unusual, which actually fits very well with the overall strangeness of the film.
* Hermione's eyebrows dancing up and down with every syllable, sometimes getting out of sync with each other.
* He also can't seem to remember Teshigawara's name at all. His attempts to recall it don't even come close. Just to give an example of how bad it gets, he once refers to him as "
* Goldfinger. While Bond is helplessly strapped to a table, Kisch renders him unconscious with a tranquilizer dart pistol.
* Goosebumps where Ricky decides to help transform humanity into Creeps, because while the Creeps are maniacal lizard-monsters, they're still nicer to him than anyone at his school.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) is an armored, all-terrain vehicle with an on-board A.I.
* Handicapped Badass: They may be crippled, but they're not weak. They can still crush you with whatever limbs they still have.
* Hard Being Pure has a telekinetic aura around her that automatically cleans dust and other impurities. When she focuses on something, she can lift somewhere around a full backpack.
* Goats (Thor's chariot is drawn by goats named Toothgnasher and Toothgrinder; Toothgnip is the spare.)
* Heart of Darkness (1958) English, and that's because most of them don't talk at all.
* Halloween Episode, the Xs (sans Truman) are turned into zombies and moan "Brains", but the zombified Tuesday moans "Spleens" because she's allergic to brains.
* Godzilla 2000 films from the 60s and 70s. Added to the film were deliberately campy lines such as "these missiles will go through Godzilla like CRAP through a goose!"

* Hardware Wars was, relative to its budget, one of the most profitable films of all time, making over $1M on a budget of $8,000.
* Graven: The Purple Moon Prophecy, in that dropping a coin in the wishing well causes a flock of bats to fly out of the well shaft, dislodging a needed item from the ivy that's overgrown the well.
* He put nocturnal builds in his "Top 5 Worst Animal Designs" video, justifying it since "in most servers, the day lasts longer than the night." Except the day only lasts longer than the night during the spring and summer, and the night lasts longer than the day during the fall and winter. He later corrected this mistake in the comments section.
* Happy Feet, most of the penguins sing, and so have talented singers for voice actors. Mumble, on the other hand, tap dances, so the producers brought in (and credited) famous tap-dancer Savion Glover to do the motion capture just for Mumble.
* Harry Dresden finds this trope amusing, and once had the following exchange with a
* Gone, describes the fate of a group of treasure hunters who go to an island populated only by shadow wights hoping to find loot. The story is told by way of a diary, with the author repeatedly getting confused (at one point IN THE MIDDLE OF WRITING AN ENTRY, as the person he was writing about gets erased at that very moment) because his past entries mention people who were never there. The final entry is made by the last survivor, who thinks that the entire diary is actually a work of fiction someone wrote as a present for him.
* Gotham for R'as al Ghul, and he wants to die. Bruce thus kills him at his request.
* he's turning into his own father regarding coaching sports late in "Bullets Over Brock", Van sees nothing wrong until further conversation with Cheyenne clues him in on how bad the circumstance is or will be, especially with regard to their own son.
* Good Is Not Nice: Goodness and heroism aren't always about kindness, sweetness, and light, despite doing good.
* Hayate the Combat Butler is pretty good at balancing the screentime of the main girls, with three or four getting more attention than the rest.
* Happens to Abby in 2x04, when she is taken by the mers. After Cutter gets her out of her "cell" she proceeds to kick a mer in the face.
* had it. As a result, Kamelion either took human form or just didn't appear. Usually the latter.
* Help! has a lab full of assorted devices, but keeps having to change the plugs to work with the power supply.
*) has Prince William turn the Big Ben clock tower into a giant laser cannon.
* Half-Life franchise are best dealt with this way. Although damage to the body will severely wound them, they never truly are down until their Headcrab parasites are bleeding yellow.
* Haledjian knows that Nick the Nose, the informant, is lying (as he always is), because he claims that a dying Brazilian's last words were in Spanish, and the national language of Brazil is actually Portuguese. (Because the Brazilian couldn't be one of the many immigrants to Brazil from nearby Spanish-speaking countries. And because it would be impossible for a native Brazilian to speak his last words in a foreign language. And because it would be impossible for an Anglophone informant to simply
* He also kills Daenerys's other dragon, Rhaegal, with a scorpion ballista and fatally stabs Jaime.
* Hellsister Trilogy's body is obliterated to her very atoms when she gets hurled into an antimatter star.
* Gummi Bears — Princess Calla does this to avoid getting a bodyguard. Her father finds out and so is impressed at how formidable she is that he immediately agrees that she doesn't need one.
* Highlander. The second-season two-parter 'Unholy Alliance' had a dedication in the credits to Werner Stocker, the actor who played Duncan's 'mentor figure' Darius. Werner Stocker had died just as the last few episodes of the previous season were filmed.

* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys: Depressingly common place in both shows with the same setting, with the latter's opening stating that warlords were Xena's enemies:
* Gossip Girl, Chuck Bass is never seen in anything but suits (except occasionally when he's in pyjamas).
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, a news report mentions that the titular characters are still wanted by the police. However, the provided police sketch depicts a stick figure in a turban and goatee, and another wearing a Chinese hat, squinty eyes, and big teeth.
* Golden Sun series of portable RPGs features items which teach specific psyenergy (the game's equivalent to magic) abilities to the character who equips them.
* Green Lantern's power. They were among the first sentient races to evolve, and are several billion years old — as individuals, that is, not just as a species. Additionally the other races that share ancestry with the Guardians, like the Zamorans and the Controllers.
* Grim gives Billy a gumball machine that yields a limitless amount of gum, but warns him never to swallow the gum. When asked what will happen if he does, Grim says, "Trust me, you don't wanna know. If I had skin, it would be crawling."
* Glen Cook languages, prides himself on his cooking, shows that he's a skilled engineer, and is able to stitch up wounds as well.
* He also reveals that his son has a penchant for Filipino boyfriends, so apparently it runs in the family.
* has amnesia, Starscream pretends that they are Conjunx Endura in order to manipulate Prime into attacking Megatron.
* Hellblazer series is an example of this trope, although its plots features supernatural (say fictional) elements. John Constantine, the protag, is known in the DC Universe as the "Ultimate Con Man", which he got from conning his enemies with wit, including the Devil and God themselves.
* Halo Wars lets UNSC players call down fire from the MAC gun (Magnetic Accelerator Cannon) of an orbiting warship. In addition, Covenant players who use the Prophet of Regret as their leader can call down an orbital laser beam which can be left active indefinitely (and steered around) assuming you have the resources.
* Hancock's favorite threat is that he'll shove the head of one of the guys bothering him up another's ass.
* Goro vs Machamp: Machamp kills Goro, but lost one of his arms and fainted from a Burn he suffered during the fight.
* He once wrote a book report entitled "The Dynamics of Interbeing and Monological Imperatives in
* Here There Be Monsters: When Magnificus Sivana gets dragged out of his office by a stranger, his secretary asks if something is wrong. Magnificus' exaggerated smile and nervous assurance that absolutely nothing is wrong, make her secretary call the police.
* Gold Digger the Djinn race have many members with the eyes in the middle of the torso.
* Greek Mythology and Roman Mythology, the gods tend to be very protective of their secrets. From Greece:
* Harry Potter. The sheer amount of time she invests trying to romance him (implied to be lifetimes) and the fact that she doesn't notice any other boys (or people, really, which gets her in trouble) put her firmly in this category.
* Górsky & Butch starts with a SWAT team arresting the authors (most of them getting re-drawn into ducks in the process). It turns out the comic lacks sense and the heroes spend the rest of the comic looking for it.
* Guantanamo-class stealth carriers, which are not that much different from WW2 escort carriers, being smallish ships built around a modest air wing with little else.
* Glue before trying to escape. Too bad he's unsuccessful and the scenario has to repeat itself.

* Greg Egan at a rate of one-G for about a year. When they turn off the engines and stop accelerating, the lack of gravity unexpectedly causes their crops to fail, so they begin spinning the ship to compensate.
* Heterosexual Life-Partners for almost as long, Ted and Lily have been basically brother- and sister-in-law since college. Highlighted when Lily broke up with Marshall and moved away for a time. After their reconciliation, Ted harbored resentment towards Lily for leaving him as well and then assuming her reconciliation with Marshall automatically applied to Ted.
* Harry Turtledove series call their homeworld "Home" and Earth "Tosev 3". (Tosev being the Sun.) Humans are dubbed Tosevites.
* He was able to get a FOIA request form for John Redcorn processed within
* Hidan is the most obvious example. He intentionally strikes non-vital areas of his opponent so that he can make them die a "
* Grant Imahara on the silver screen. Almost thirty years and one electrical engineering degree later, he became Artoo (or rather its pilot and main technician).
* Good Omens was that he subconsciously preferred to be in Hell with his demon friend/love Crowley than in Heaven without him. He also admits to Crowley that even when he was given the chance to escape to a "Purgatory" that was identical to the Earth he dearly missed, he would still rather have stayed in Hell with Crowley if Crowley couldn't be in Purgatory with him too.
* Halo (Florians have no chin, big eyes, fur on their faces, and live for hundreds of years; Denisovans have square heads, "spare" bodies, and lots of reddish facial hair), with their own unique traits, customs, and cultures. Others are seen, and some others are named, but not featured prominently.
* Gossip Girl is told from the perspective of a semi-omniscient gossip blogger. What makes this unique is said blogger is an actual (albeit anonymous) character, and the rest of the cast is fully aware of the fact that she is telling the world all about their lives with much of the story conflict revolving around keeping her from knowing too much.
* Gravity Falls) are shipped a lot due to them both being young boys involved with supernatural shenanigans. Their ship name is "Parapines".
* Goddess Creation System the king passes away officially from wounds sustained in a tiger attack some months before but probably really from poison. To cover this up temporarily so they can keep things stable, the queen and her brother have the imperial doctor poisoned so he can't tell anyone.
* Hey Arnold!, especially because, as she herself points out, they're only nine years old.
* High-Class Gloves: For daywear, gloves for women became a must, giving accent to any length and type of the sleeve. Unless you were part of the royal family or a high-society club, or the occasion requires gloves, the arms were usually bare for evening wear.
* Harry becomes friendly with the elderly Professors McGonagall and Dumbledore as he continues to get into heroics disproportionate to his age. They both think highly of him, though while McGonagall maintains their teacher-student relationship more firmly, Dumbledore more readily
* Godzilla, they've all been bent on killing as many people as hideously as possible. And that's without even getting into the Simians, Xiliens, Kilaaks, and various other alien races who have employed their services. The one alien race that was actually presented as benevolent in the entire franchise, the Venusians, were extinct by the present day (wiped out by King Ghidorah).
* Guilty Gear is taken out by a light attack, his crumple animation has him also giving his opponent a thumbs up.
* Happy Happy Clover about the missing letter. Even after it’s found, Kale’s siblings fight over who will deliver it, causing it to rip apart. Luckily, the present inside helps get Shallot’s message across.
* Hanazuki: Full of Treasures all have vaguely Japanese-sounding names (Hanazuki, Kiazuki, Kiyoshi, etc).

* Hellblazer all under the age of 13 who attack any adults that come near the island, but don't harm other children.
* Harry Turtledove series had become one of these, with a virulent disgust toward all things Confederate, ordering thousands of troops forward in reckless charges in an effort to allow his cavalry to massacre the foe. His opinion of Canadians was rather lower.
* Grange Hill, a boy does this with the arrow of a sign saying something like "Year 7s this way". This happens on several other occasions, including one mis-spelled by Mr Sutcliffe as "secetary's office".
* Golden Wind can erase time with his Stand, King Crimson. If anyone within the vicinity is affected, they forget whatever action they were doing in the time that was erased.
* Grand Finale, Twilight returned to live in Canterlot while the CMC were still children.
* Going in Circles) to risk wandering off and get hopelessly lost. In some cases this may be due to magic or space warps.
* Happens quite often in the story as well. In one instance, Kagura rescues Makoto from Tsubaki by tricking the latter that he's been ordered to escort Makoto into custody. Once they're both safely away:
* Happy Heroes in Season 7. Fast forward to Season 10, said character is now inexplicably alive and well again.
* Have I Got News for You for fostering disharmony in the opposing team.
* happens in the second game, if you bring Tali along to Mordin's personal mission.
* Harry Potter having finished the books and moved on to another series, it's not going anywhere for quite a while. To put in perspective just how HUGE a franchise this is:
* Hemp may be the healthy alternative to tobacco for smokers as well as for those who are trying to kick the habit, as the plant, being a variety of the
* Gotham Academy starts out crushing on school tennis star Kyle Mizoguchi and his attraction to him only becomes more pronounced over the series though he never outright admits it to Kyle. While Kyle almost puts it together during the second semester he gets distracted and is still in love with Olive anyway.
* Hamlet induced by high school English classes. Thus, for instance, many people take it for granted that Hamlet is genuinely mad instead of faking it.
* Halfway through the war, he transferred from the Navy to the Flying Tigers in China. In the series' first long-form story arc, he and three of his friends were responsible for ferrying the Allied plans for the Burma offensive to the Flying Tigers (and then retrieving them, and keeping them out of Japanese hands, when the plane crashes on the way back to China).
* Hayley Kiyoko is about a girl who has a crush on her best friend. It's implied that the friend is straight, though it's never confirmed.
* Goldfinger. Bond is briefed on the intricacies of the global gold market by one Colonel Smithers, who is described thusly:
* Heart of the Inferno when Kathryn is psychically assaulted by Sauron just as her labour begins, and he vows to destroy the Dark Lord.
* Hey Arnold! episode "Tour de Pond", Rex Smythe-Higgins III reveals to be one. While his grandfather and Arnold's grandpa argue and fight over the draw in the creek, Arnold and Rex III just shake hands.
* here to get a child to walk. The boy wanted to go in the car and things turned into just "Yes!" "No!" "Yes!" "No!" When the father then said yes, they'd go in the car, the boy objected and they walked off happily.
* Halloween Episode, where Hilda and Zelda invite him over to the house in the hopes of hearing a scary story. He ends up reading poetry full of "rainbows and sparkles".
* Hellsister Trilogy. Given that Darkseid can bring his slaves back whenever he wishes, he is even more uncaring regarding their lives than your average bad boss.
* He does shout the same "Fire, fire, FIRE" that all classes share, but he really sounds more like he is just letting his teammates know than feeling actual panic at being on fire.

* Gravity Falls, though starting from "A Tale of Two Stans" and onward, the lines started getting thinner.
* Hero Corp tries walking through the forcefield and smashes his head — thrice in a minute (because he's a moron with the memory of a goldfish).
* Hannibal: The protagonist IS this trope. The sheer number of times Dr. Lecter has been able to avoid discovery and/or certain death through his opponents' convenient idiocy, ploys that rely on his ability to make people do what he wants without even trying (like a certain neurologist willing to lie to his patient about an inflammation of his brain) or sheer coincidence (caught in the act of murder? thank goodness the witness is face-blind!) would be enough for a series with ten times as many episodes and STILL look ridiculous.
* Gravity Falls uses to pay for Summerween decorations, at one point he had Dipper and Mabel attempt to counterfeit real money, with minor success.
* Hamilton covers such a long period of time—1776 to 1804 not including the prologue covering the first 19 years of Alexander Hamilton's life—this was pretty much a necessity. However, by far the most blatant example occurs with Alexander's eldest son Phillip. He's the only one of the Hamiltons' eight children with a role in the play (the other kids are mentioned but he's the only one who appears), and the same adult actor plays him at both 9 years old and 19. It helps that his original actor, Anthony Ramos, has a smaller frame, boyish face, and higher vocal range, making it much less distracting than, say, having the hulking baritone Okieriete Onaodowan (Hercules Mulligan in the first act, James Madison in the second) in that role.
* Hell Girl, the episode that explores Hone Onna's origin features the villain of the week ending up on Ai's boat heavily pregnant after being sent to Hell. The baby rips it's way out of his belly, leaving him in agony for the rest of the trip to Hell.
* Here Comes Mr. Jordan level bad!) at picking souls up from the earth at their time of death. In the former, they are too early and the latter too late.
* Happy Days had Inspiration Point, where the cast were always desperate to get to, although they seldom did... at least not after the show began being filmed in front of a live audience...
* Happy Heroes, Doctor H. goes to his closet to find some clothes to wear for his date with Miss Peach. All of the outfits in his closet are the exact same as the yellow-and-purple one he usually wears.
* he is visited by Phil, the Prince of Insufficient Light. Phil offers him two options as punishment for his sins, one where he will have a meaningless job, but will be paid highly, and one where he will have an important job, but be paid badly. You do not see which he chooses, but Dilbert is delighted, because both are better than his current position (where he is paid badly for meaningless work).
* Gurps version by giving a PC "Intolerance (uppity women)" as a disadvantage.
* Halloween: The Curse of Michael Myers, which shows Jamie being impaled on a corn thresher.
* Hannibal, the eponymous character snaps the neck of one of his victims. Playing it straight, however, this doesn't so much as kill the victim as leave him permanently disabled and confined to a bed or wheelchair for the rest of his life...among other things.
* Heroes of Might and Magic IV shows the result of two extremely powerful swords (Armageddon's Blade and Sword of Frost) coming into contact with one another. The result is a gigantic explosion with the mushroom cloud seen from space. The world of Enroth is destroyed, forcing the survivors to flee to another world called Axeoth.
* Going by the Matchbook A modern writer can still use this trope with a little imagination, though; a branded lighter would be the obvious choice, but pens or business cards could work, too.
* Harry Potter (no, not a literal one), she isn't mean-spirited in any way. Her friend Titus, also a Slytherin, comes off as friendly and nice, too. (The author's identified herself as a Slytherin, so it makes sense that she'd write them in a more flattering light.)

* GPF's combined from various real and fictional Rousing Speeches, and some general-purpose silliness. (Though the ending isn't as crazy at it would appear to the uninitiated - earlier comics revealed that the Greys find cheese to be both delicious and addictive.)
* Glitch Techs: Miko tends to be very hyper and not able to focus on any one thing for more than a few minutes.
* Havenfall Is for Lovers: At the end of JD season 2, Grace is imprisoned on a Ferris wheel at the abandoned amusement park, and her car is falling apart.
* Harry Potter so as not to give the children any ideas. Of course, as pointed out at the top of the page, the gesture can differ depending on your country; so this gets the point across without being overly specific (and potentially confusing to those who don't know the sign differs).
* Happy Tree Friends is a cartoon about cute forest animals, but it has so much graphic violence, little kids shouldn't go near it with a ten foot pole.
* Going into a universe where another "you" already exists can result in all kinds of weirdness, because the universe wants to collapse both versions into one and can't quite figure out
* Hidamari Sketch when she thought of the animals the bristles came from.
* Gran Torino again), Walt offers the young Father Janovich a beer — to Walt's disapproval, Janovich opts for a gin and Diet Coke. Later, when Walt is embroiled in a war with the gang that's been terrorizing his neighbors, he makes the offer again. This time, Janovich says "I'd love one".
* Green Lantern (1941): Molly Mayne, the Harlequin, has cat-eye glasses that project illusions.
* Gurps volume Interstellar Wars has the best art work of all the Gurps Traveller's (given that the others are all black and white, it's not a contest). It shows Terrans dressed in clothes that look reasonably similar to modern clothes (dark blue uniforms for Terran spacers for instance) and Vilani in exotic looking clothes (flowing robes and the like) that still look vaguely human. Both styles tend to be reasonably handsome.
* Gravity Falls: In one episode, Grunkle Stan addresses his staff as "Party people... and Dipper."
* Go to the Makuta species to find any variation of brutal warriors, cunning schemers or Evil slash
* her, Theodore engages in anonymous phone sex, which goes alright until the woman, approaching climax, creeps him out by demanding that he role play strangling her with a dead cat.
* He also has Cosmo and Wanda stand in as his parents for a parent-teacher conference, and
* Green Mars, one character proposes to fight overpopulation by giving everyone the tradable birthright to three-quarters of a child. (That is, each couple has the right to 1.5 children; they can then buy or sell half-children to get the number they want and can afford.) This doesn't ever get implemented, though.
* Help! Ringo, first pulling at his face a few times before yanking him away by the nose.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, where Nagi's mother is telling a young Nagi about wishing on a shooting star... and she proceeds to wish on one for manju buns. Nagi chastises her.
* Happy Endings, Jane combines this with prop humor-she's on a roller board, cleaning under her couch, so she can make jokes.
* "Helicopter" by Bloc Party (which features such lyrics as "Stop being so American" and "Just like his dad") is frequently misinterpreted as being about
* He's paired with Kakuzu specifically for this reason. See Kakuzu has a habit of killing his partners so the
* Highway to Hell in Hell called Hoffa's. Someone calls to ask for Jimmy, but is told that he "ain't here".
* Hanakouji and Eikichi do the same with each other, though Eikichi's fantasy of Hanakouji is more from not having seen her for years, and her fantasy of him is actually a more shallow and immature person than he turns out to be. The reality of one another turns out to be far more fulfilling.

* Hand tools for wood work such as axes, hand saws, chisels, hand drills, bar clamps, and bench planes tend to be of higher quality if they were made in the late 19th or early 20th century. These used to be marketed to professionals who were making huge numbers of houses, cabinets, and pieces of furniture, and they were willing to pay good prices for their tools to be sharp, accurate, easily adjustable, and durable. Then came the rising tide of electric drills, table saws, band saws, jointers, thickness planers, routers, etc. which greatly reduced demand for hand tools in the trades because they made work so much faster. A lot of companies went out of business, while a few giants like Stanley and Irwin decided to cut costs in order to stay in business, trading on their brand reputation from the past to sell hobbyists inferior versions of their old products. The role of thumb is that you shouldn’t buy a vintage hand plane made after the 1950s. Since then we’ve seen something of a hand tool renaissance, and modern companies like Lie-Nielsen and Veritas make new premium models that are in many ways even better than the originals thanks to modern steel and machining, but they are quite expensive and don’t have the same historical appeal. On one hand, people getting into the hobby will often be advised to hunt for deals on "fixer upper" antique tools that would work very well iF restored, and on the other hand you’ve got the collectors (mainly of planes) who will pay huge sums for rare antique models in good condition.
* Hell, even if they DID manage to win the war by forcing the US and Soviets to surrender over nuclear bombs, there is no way they would ever enforce their laws in the US. The militaristic and patriotic nature of the nations would encourage an active rebellion against their controllers. Same goes with the United Kingdom. Controlling and patrolling a nation is much harder than forcing it to surrender (as has been evidenced several times in the Middle East). Germany would be burning through resources and money to no end trying to even establish a proper police force.
* Hilarious Outtakes is of one of the child actors freaking out as the frog he's supposed to be holding attempts to escape.
* GLOW's superhero tag team Thunderbolt and Lightning come from the pages of a comic book.
* He makes it looks like they were in love and kills himself by doing so. It's complicated and a bit tragic.
* Grand Theft Auto III's Rise FM station; the latter song was also the basis for Shiny Toy Guns' "You Are The One".
* Helex of the Decepticon Justice Division has an alt-mode that's a giant smelter that he pulls victims into to be melted down alive.
* has!", or any permutation thereof. Even official Pokémon media has made this mistake.
* Good Eats good one will have a little groove for the stems of cherries.
* has this for all of Team 7's training. Naruto's in particular stands out as he learned how to fight with a tanto by having his teacher try to kill him with one. He was also taught how to train his sensor abilities by drinking a poison that eliminates all normal senses then being locked in a cave system and having to use chakra emitting devices to find his way out.
* Harpies are, like hags, an all-female race that is often portrayed as relying on human(oid) mates to procreate. Again, like hags, their partners are usually involuntary and/or don't always live through the experience.
* Hayao Miyazaki (the former of which was a project he inherited). He’s made a point to never have it in his movies aimed at kids because he sees romance in children’s fiction (especially works aimed at girls) as trite and overdone. He’d rather have kids learn about other things in life.
* Highlander: The Search for Vengeance films). In one scene an immortal refuses to put his weapon away while standing on holy ground, and he is immediately struck by lightning.
* Groove High, Zoe melts into a puddle of water when Dom (Tom in disguise) compliments her.

* Goro Majima series inspired the tax hikes that led to Japan's bubble economy bursting in the late 80s after rescuing a politician from a mugging and getting a little too into a conversation on taxes.
* God Slaying Blade Works, Odysseus is mostly unimpressed by modern ships and boats, except for the fact that they have bathrooms. He explains that back in his time, the lack of a bathroom made his voyages very uncomfortable. Circe says he didn't have to share that detail.
* Greyhawk Adventures supplement were inspired by John Carpenter's zombies.
* Go Animate because of obvious limitations. For example, headbands are often used to make letters such as the hat "M" for Mario and the "A" on Alvin's shirt, along with forming Dora's backpack (it's very obvious if she bends slightly and no actual bag structure exists). Dinner plate covers with crude lines or screamer masks are used to become electrode "hats" for execution, and black/grey boxes are restructured into restraining duct tape. Simple shapes such as circles and squares are re-formed by some video makers to become crude body forms. It is also common to use FedEx boxes to represent VHS or DVD cases, as well as bibles as homework or reading material.
* Hell Verse was also one of the most anticipated parts of the series' mythology, possibly contributing to a better budget.
* Green Acres episode "Water, Water Everywhere", Mr. Douglas runs out of water and finds it is because someone dug a new well. Every time someone in the episode digs a new well, they take water from someone else's well.
* Google converted the letters in its logo into Star Trek characters, with the "e" wearing a red shirt and looking nervous. If you click on the turbo-lift, he and an "o" (Kirk) beam down to a planet to fight Gorn, but the "e" keeps getting caught in the cross-fire. He doesn't die, but he goes back to the bridge unhappy.
* Godzilla: Final Wars, where their human appearance is merely a disguise for their true appearances, being grey and black eyeless humanoids.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) resembles a mountain when slumbering outside Munich, Germany.
* God of War (usually his enemy's) at the top of his lungs, and D) Kratos saying, "What treachery is this?!"
* He generally has the opposite energy level of everything around him. If people around him are stern and serious, he'll be in a wild, hyperactive hurry; if people around him are panicking, he'll be motionless and even somewhat bored.
* Haunted House. However, the lackluster haunting job done by Adam and Barbara Maitland does nothing to scare them away.
* GURPS, given its wide variety of settings, hits this trope on occasion:
* had his father killed, and he continues to soldier on with what he knows to be a suicide mission regardless.
* Good Omens fanfics ship the angel Aziraphale with the demon Crowley, many of them touching on how deep in trouble they could get in if their superiors in Heaven and Hell ever found out about their relationship and/or how their fear of exactly that makes them reluctant to admit/act on their feelings for each other for a long time.
* Guild Wars include "The next person to call me 'hot lips' gets scorched" and "Yes, I have a fiery personality. Like I've never heard that before..." (and yes, she does).
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas), with numerous gangs answering to him, including the Ballas, the Los Santos Vagos, and the Russian mob.
* He also inflicts some Cool and Unusual Punishments on the rest of his family as well. Bud ends up with claws, which results in him constantly popping his blow-up sex dolls. Kelly is turned into a gargoyle, which scares off would-be dates. Peggy's hands are turned into hooves, which means she can't operate the TV Remote. And Marcy and Jefferson are forced to come over every day and be subjected to Al's insults.
* Grand Theft Auto IV in the 2000s, and heavily mines the post-9/11 mood of the city for both its story and its satire.
* Greek Mythology, Zeus knew that since Hades was the eldest brother, he would get his pick over which kingdom to rule. Zeus instead persuaded both his brothers to draw straws for their kingdoms, ending with Hades drawing the short straw and getting rule over the land of the dead. Poseidon, of course, got the kingdom of the sea, and Zeus became the king of the gods with command over the heavens.

* Hayate the Combat Butler: This could be an explination for Hinagiku's initial encounter with Athena since she's pushed anything resembling romance aside because of her past.
* Henry Fonda. Fonda had been in the play and disagreed with Ford's approach. They got into a heated argument that resulted in Ford punching Fonda. As a result Ford was replaced and the two never worked together again.
* Herbie: Fully Loaded felt compelled to ram Herbie into the wall even though he was in the lead, causing him to crash spectacularly and allowing Herbie to win the race.
* Guys and Dolls, called that because nobody bets higher. In the few moments between "My Time Of Day" and "I've Never Been In Love Before", Sky reveals to Sarah his real name, Obediah Masterson, and says she's the first person he ever told it to.
* He is so by-the-book that Sisko asked him to be the umpire of their baseball game with a team of Vulcans. Odo tossed Sisko
* Godannar: Both Goh Saruwatari and his "wife" Anna Aoi. His mother-in-law, Dr. Kiriko Aoi (Anna's mother), also happens to be his boss.
* Headbutting Heroes: Two good guys despise each other in spite of being in the side of justice.
* Gridlock" as cunning behind-the-scenes manipulators, are shown to have devolved into mindless beasts many centuries into the future.
* has to turn its whole body to bring its main gun to bear. is threatened in the first game. The geth ships appear way too close for it to use its main gun effectively.
* Highly Suspect scored their first #1 on Mainstream Rock with "My Name is Human" in 2016. While it's still new, it's unlikely to displace the #4 "Lydia" as their overall signature.
* Hidden in Plain Sight, inducing everyone into thinking he was just praying.
* Gold Tongues is mortally wounded whilst trying to rob a merchant. He simply congratulates the man for being able to beat him at his own game, even shaking his hand before the merchant cuts his throat open.
* handcuffed himself to Leslie's desk in the town's time capsule. He becomes a little more understandable when it's revealed to be a way of bonding with his daughter.
* Halloween Unspectacular him to start Weirdmageddon, completely ignoring him in the process. He wasn't happy, to say the least.
* Godzilla Wars shows Godzilla, Rodan, MechaGodzilla, and Mecha-King Ghidorah wearing enormous suits of armor with projectile weaponry.
* Grosse Pointe Blank, where Debbie's dad tries to sweat Martin over asking his little girl to prom and promptly vanishing off the face of the earth for ten years. However, his heart clearly isn't in it, and Martin, who has spent the past ten years travelling the world and killing people, first for the US government and later as a freelance assassin, is unimpressed. Eventually, the older man just shrugs and the two bond over scotch.
* Harry Potter takes the form of "m-mails" (equivalent to e-mails) exchanged among characters.
* Halfway Home may be an actual black guy and he may be an actual convict. But he's from a very rich family and he went to prison for identity theft. His protests that living in a very big house can be inconvenient don't help the image he's attempting to cultivate.
* Go-Busters has proven to be quite popular amongst fans, who like him not only because of his enjoyment of being the bad guy but also due to being a quite credible threat, being able to go toe-to-toe with the Go-Busters in fights and succeeding in several of his missions.
* Heroes, Lindermann ends up healing Heidi Petrelli of the paralysis that his men caused in an assassination attempt on Nathan. At first glance, it seems like a ploy to get her to trust him. However, after the events of Volume 3, especially the flashback to the event as well as Lindermann's reaction to the event and his role in "killing" Arthur Petrelli, it seemed to be doing it out of genuine guilt.

* Healer Signs On Early: In video games, a healer will join the player's party early on.
* H. G. Wells involves aliens who come to invade the Earth and the governments of the world are unable to stop them, until they get defeated by ordinary bacteria for which the aliens' immune system, having never been exposed to them, are extremely vulnerable.
* Hell's Kitchen (Suomi meaning Finland). So they used the English title for the Finnish version, and the Finnish title for the English version.
* Goodness Gracious Me; it's almost universally called the 'bill' in the UK, but the "check please" punchline is still recognised.
* Haywire was to showcase the main character, Mallory Kane (played by former MMA fighter Gina Carano), beat up everyone else in the movie. Especially in the hotel fight, she is in a cocktail dress while doing so, with her arms and legs exposed while doing some rather intense chokeholds.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law. In a spoof of the old Birdman cartoon, Phil is frozen mid-sentence: "A madman is freez—". When Birdman unfreezes him: "Ha ha ha, —ing!"
* Hayate the Combat Butler and eventually trying to kidnap Nagi, which then led to him becoming her butler.
* Harry once had to serve the cake at his cousin's birthday party and licked or spit on every piece he handed out.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix has Mundungus Fletcher falling asleep during a meeting. After the meeting is over, he then wakes up, "Nhh... Are we voting? I 'gree with Sirius!"
* Guile Hero: A hero who relies on saving the day with his wits and quick thinking.
* God), because his love is, like his faith, "To one, of one, still such, and ever so."
* Greg Donegan (pen name of Bob Mayer) wrote a series of books featuring Atlantis' ancient enemy returning.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers America is always trying to one-up Russia during strips set during the Cold War.
* Grimm, after a high-level Reaper sends two assassins after Nick, he gets a note back reading, "Next time, send your best", along with the severed heads of the assassins.
* Harry Potter think he would say yes to any random girl who asked him?
* "gubbinz", the other Orks will believe him and hence the trukk will begin driving again even though it has no fuel in it's tank).
* Green Day song "Whatsername" is about the singer reminiscing about an old girlfriend whose name he can't remember. In one line, he mentions that he "made a point to burn all of the photographs."
* Heralds of Valdemar series (and other series set in the same universe), lifebonds are like this.
* God-Emperor of Dune, an army of Face Dancers (shapeshifters) ambushes the titular God Emperor by impersonating Duncan Idaho, the leader of his Fish Speaker army. Duncan rectifies this by stripping down. He doesn't actually fight, but he does it mid-battle regardless.
* Hanna-Barbera. These two dogs can talk to each other and other animals, just not to humans.
* He carried Europa from the mainland to Crete in the form of a white bull;
* go de-solid another planet to suffer the same fate as his own world, where everyone not only has powers, but also hideous deformities from the effects of a similar event in the past. (This somewhat misses the point, as most of Earth is populated only by radiation-damaged beings anyway, according to the pilot.)
* Go Vacation horses are considered "gear" or vehicles, and are thus as tireless as a car or snowmobile.
* he punches the air so hard that it compresses into a giant exploding tiger head, the size of an island, by physical strength alone.

* Harry Potter Sirius' motorcycle was custom-made by him from parts. The father of his girlfriend and later wife is very impressed by it and both men bond over it. Of course the other man doesn't know Sirius has made other modifications as well.
* hide's Somehow, pushing the cart around the store ends up with it upturned and him sitting in it eating random groceries from cereal to dish soap...
* Guacamelee! give Juan the ability to shift between the worlds of the living and the dead, where several platforms and enemies only exist in one or the other (though enemies can damage him regardless of what world they're in)
* Heart of Ashes: Ancalagon the Black's eyes are described as being coloured like the inside of a volcano when he appears in Kathryn's vision.
* Helluva Boss. Subsequent episodes have a more traditional warning at the beginning, and an inccurate gag warning in the description.
* has a waiver of indemnification, schticks, so expect it to crop up a lot.
* Hero Killer: I'm a villain renowned for killing heroes and it's glorious!
* having weapons grafted on. Orks are so tough that it's really all they need; they can even recover from decapitation if somebody staples their head back on within a few hours.
* H.Bomberguy, on the subject of the claim that soy raises oestrogen levels:
* H.G. Wells also gets this treatment. Her mind is trapped in a coin while her body keeps going with a false personality running it.
* Guild Wars 2, the player character must don a pair of goggles (and nothing else but their underwear), and proceed to dive into a pool of lava from an immense height. As the fall will kill the player character due to the height before the lava even does any damage, the goggles really didn't help at all.
* Hamilton - "Burn," about Eliza's real-life destruction of her and Alexander's love letters in the wake of the Reynolds affair, with the specific intent of ruining any attempts he could make to redeem himself in the public eye.
* Harper's Island bought it. 99% of the show's fans wish that they both died.
* Good Eats in order to demonstrate the theory that the consumption of hot foods is tied to the feats of physical endurance common in ancient mating rituals. As the guy runs off to find something to cool his mouth, Alton explains this to the unimpressed girlfriend, who quickly changes her tune and runs off after him.
* Halo 2, Jorge is the only member of Noble Team able to speak to the local civilians because they don't know English and he's the only one on the team who can speak Hungarian (being a Reach native himself). In part because of this diversity, the colonies heavily resent the UNSC, which overthrew the Colonial Administration Authority that had previously administered them.
* Goon Show examples: the episode 'The International Christmas Pudding' contains the following list of 'vital equipment':
* Harley Quinn occasionally baffles friends and foe alike in the various Batman cartoons and comics with displays of intelligence. At which point they either remember or Harley reminds them that
* High Citadel by Desmond Bagley, passengers from a crashed aircraft build an improvised trebuchet from abandoned equipment in a mine, in this case to fend off communist guerillas who are trying to repair the bridge across a ravine in order to attack them.
* Guardians of the Galaxy episode "Fame", Quill is hosting his own talk show. Unfortunately, the only member of the audience who finds him funny is a cricket-like alien whose laughter sounds like this.
* Good Girls is that, while Annie, Beth, and Ruby are usually intelligent women, they are so out of their league as criminals that it's laughable.
* Higurashi no Naku Koro ni's Tsumihoroboshi arc, this is how Keiichi stumbles upon Rena chopping up the corpses of Teppei Hojo and Rina Mamiya.
* Harriet the Spy: Harriet has a nightmare about Ole Golly the nursemaid disappearing.
* Hiding a bunch of sardines in the turnbuckle before a match with his brother,
* Hermits are also on probation from Hell for their immortality, and have to perform good deeds or get taken by a shinigami. Hermits who don't, like Seiga, have to fight off or escape the servants of Hell to survive. The same applies to Celestials.

* Her fellow Major Frank Burns, on the other hand, was a total aversion of this trope. Absolutely incompetent and spiteful.
* Grant Morrison's JLA. They got away with it as long as they did with each one emphasizing a different power from the common power set.
* Half-Life 2 features several Video Phone calls, notably between Alyx and her father. Extra points for touching the screen to emphasize the separation.
* Haruhi Suzumiya makes the plot hard to follow. It should also be noted that the title character is also the Executive Director of the show.
* Hero Secret Service, by both checking, and simply pounding the crap out of them.
* Heartwarming Moments: Aww! It's sweet moments like this that make me so happy and warm-hearted!
* He also uses Bunnykind, but that was only to keep the bunny in a safer place than his Sylladex, too prone to ejecting its contents.
* Godzilla (2014) also features the Mutos, Godzilla's opponents, which critics have most commonly characterized as a mix between a preying mantis and a pterosaur.
* Hector Godfrey of the New Frontiersman is also a strong example. To better elaborate, he once wrote an article in which he actually tried
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle starts in the late afternoon and ends the following morning.
* Hell Teacher Nube: One of the first creatures encountered by Nube is a kappa. In the author's notes, he posits that the myth may have been inspired by Jesuit priests, who have a similar hairstyle and a penchant for "drowning" people via baptism.
* Hans the Hedgehog": When Hans marries the second princess, he makes himself human by taking off his hedgehog skin and having it burned in a fire. Though it is the cast-off skin that is consumed by the fire, Hans is now described as lying in bed "coal-black as if he had been burnt." The king sends for his physician who washes him with precious salves and anoints him and Hans becomes all white and handsome.
* Guards! Guards!, and dies with "Oh sh—" And then his ghost finishes "—it."
* Gorillaz for Murdoc, who is fairly tall (though not huge) at 5'10" and 2D who is 6'3" was shown carrying her on his back in the video for "Rock It".
* Hillary Clinton This led many 3rd-party voters, undecideds, and people who were going to skip the election to vote Trump instead. By the end Trump, to the surprise of many, won.
* Heroes of the Storm is much more sensible: an aerobics routine that involves a lot of flexing.
* Grand Theft Auto III, has her hosting a pop station called "Flash." Some of the comments she makes on Flash are also Call-Forwards to some she makes on Flashback.
* Hannibal, Will asks Bedelia whether Hannibal is in love with him and she confirms it.
* Happens at the end of "Itchy & Scratchy Land", Lisa lobs her shoe at Bart's head to prove to Marge that violence is funny when it's not happening to you. Marge does find it funny but sends Lisa to her room.
* Groundhog Day it's closer to ten years, which then got amended to a general estimate of between 30 to 40 years given the amount of time needed to accomplish just one of Phil's feats.
* Half-Life games, the iconic headcrabs kill people by jumping at them and then latching onto their heads to turn them into much stronger zombies. In the second game, the villains even use missiles filled with headcrabs as weapons. Which when you think about it might not be always be a smart idea when you consider the headcrabs aren't actually on their side either; places like Ravenholm ended up literally crawling with zombies as a result of excessive headcrab-bombing.
* Hattori's father has punched him hard enough to send him flying. In front of several police officers. Of course, it might be because he's their boss, but still, none of them seem to even blink.
* Gustav Vasa, was one of the eighty Swedish noblemen murdered during the Stockholm Bloodbath (when King Christian II of Denmark executed eighty Swedes despite promising them amnesty). Gustav won the war, ended Danish rule in Sweden, and became king.

* Heart Symbols, giving them a 50/50 chance of deciding to fight back.
* here is Libyan Armed Forces Colonel Muammar Khadaphi in his dress uniform.
* Hackers has a heroic version of this where the one hacker that didn't get arrested has other hackers get him on TV where he exposes the real scheme of the villains to clear his friends from being framed.
* Guards vary on how helpful they are to players in need. Some guards, like Booty Bay Bruisers, will rush to your aid if you've got monsters after you. Other guards won't lift a finger unless the monster attacks
* Hannibal unless it was as the killer, and the show doesn't usually zig-zag a lot in that respect, but sure enough, he turned out to be a patsy.
* Help I Am Being Held Prisoner: When Harry and Eddie are delayed outside of the prison after sneaking out to steal something, the rest of their group get corrupt guard Muttgood to cover for them during a head count by claiming the two are having sex on the roof.
* Glider to land on surfaces, and while sliding in grease you can stop on a dime.
* GoldenEye: The entire plot is set off by the theft of the GoldenEye weapon. (It's a nuclear warhead in orbit, designed to shoot a concentrated EMP at a single target when detonated, rather than making a burst that destroys everything in range of the blast.)
* Harry Potter be judged by their ancestry or background. It didn't help that his enemy Lord Voldemort had Villainous Lineage, being a descendant of Salazar Slytherin.
* her mother's issues with men. (Susan's mother is saddened that her daughter isn't attracted to women. This is mostly due to a traumatic event in Susan's childhood when she discovered her father was having an affair.)
* He keeps mentioning or alluding to them and then denying it. Ted then does the same thing while talking to Zoey when he switches sides on the issue.
* GREAT FLAMING EYEBROWS. Basically if you see glowing eyes it's probably a good idea to put some distance between you and them.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys's final scene, Iolaus asks him if he would ever actually settle down and lead a normal life. Hercules admits he's always considered the possibility, but he's just not ready to slow down yet; he'd rather keep on walking, so the show ends with the two heroes heading off into the sunset to see what other adventures await them.
* Here We Go Again! begins with the tanks of Charlie Company firing down on the bandit hordes with explosive shells and their coaxial machineguns. By the time the JSDF and the rest of the US Marines arrive to support them, the crews are down to leaving the safety of their tanks to engage surviving forces with small arms and the occasional bayoneting.
* Goldfinger had to to make up the vault in a studio from their own ideas. The comptroller of the Depository would later send a complimentary letter saying it was imaginative.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows) a bunch of Slytherins — explode out of the Forbidden Forest and attack the Death Eaters. Voldemort and company are routed.
* Hart's War: Immediately after the start of the Battle Of The Bulge, Lt. Hart is sent to a camp where there is an escape attempt brewing. One prisoner murders another to keep him silent and Hart must conduct the court martial.
* Harlan Ellison tells this same story on himself. He was opening boxes of cereal in a grocery store to see if any of them had the one premium of a collect'em all set he did not have.
* Gottlieb casts the player as a virtual warrior in an abstract grid-lined environment with simple pyramid mountains.
* Hamlet, which is set in the corporate world, gets handed to a business news reporter.
* Hector Heathcote, which showed how the titular hero witnessed and took part in all the events of the American Revolution (and beyond), from the signing of the Declaration of Independence to the Louisiana Purchase.

* Good Girls begins with moms Beth, Annie and Ruby robbing the grocery store Annie works at, expecting about $30,000. They're rocked to find it's half a million and start using it to pay off some big debts. Enter counterfeiting/drug cartel crime boss Rico who informs them the store was a front for his operations and they need to pay him back or get killed.
* Hannibal became one of the most prominent examples of this trope since the series aired. This Hannibal is one of the most sophisticated characters in the live-action series because of his classy style. He wears ties that became a unique trademark of the character due to their distinguished and imposing type.
* harvest early in the game, large portions of the continent facing you are glowing orange, indicating millions of square miles of crust has effectively been melted... and the invasion just commenced the previous day. Earth doesn't get it nearly as bad, but when you come to London you can see that the sky is blacked out and the air choked with soot... despite London being nowhere near the glowing orange spots you see from space, showing that the atmosphere has been globally screwed by the bombardment, albeit not to the extent that the planet will need to be significantly terraformed to recover.
* Higurashi: When They Cry that it was this that she had information about, and not the Hinamizawa Disaster. It's also worth noting that the part of the arc referred to was a hasty adaptation of the ending of another arc, although the comatose character was different.
* Hannibal, Dr. Hannibal Lecter actively maintains a reputation as a brilliant and cultured psychiatrist with close friendships with Alana Bloom and Jack Crawford. He even enhances his seeming innocence by framing others for his crimes, such as Will and Chilton. This ends after Season 2 when the facade comes crumbling down.
* Hand of Thrawn. He ultimately selects the only course of action he saw that didn't appear to lead to complete chaos.
* Gunslinger Girl, as a result of the use of drugs and conditioning they're emotionally stunted.
* "Got Milk?" is especially strange, because that was a U.S.-wide ad campaign that was funded by the dairy processors of only one state (California). Though, to be fair, California produces more milk than any other state—although on the other hand, most Americans
* Grenadier - The manga opens with a bunch of mooks damaging Rushuna's hat. She goes ballistic, shoots them, and gets repaid for it by the dazed goons.
* Goof Troop episode "Clan of the Cave Goof" cavewoman Peg cuts a piece of cake for caveman Pete this way.
* god-kings for centuries and produced many half-celestial and half-fiend children with mortal concubines, making that a common ancestry for aasimar and tieflings in the Realms' present day.
* Guards! Guards! what he's talking about, having been raised by a dwarf couple from a very young age. Dwarf society considers him to be a full dwarf despite being six feet tall.
* Harley Quinn. Of a sort, and oddly for this series. While the Joker trusts her with more than he usually does in other media, including being his main agent and controlling his gang, she's on the whole far less intelligent or capable a combatant than most other incarnations. Likewise, she lacks the (admittedly mild) super-strength and agility of her comics counterpart. Quite the opposite in Knight (mostly).
* Harry Potter: Subverted in that toilets are mentioned quite a few times.
* Heart Trauma: A character has something physically happen to their heart, which affects their personality in drastic ways.
* Good Omens: The witch-finder Shadwell mistakes Aziraphale for a demon and points an accusing finger at him at the exact moment Aziraphale's mortal body is destroyed from the backlash of scuffing a pentagram. Shadwell spends the rest of the novel believing he has the power to banish demons with his finger.
* had made the Black Eagle realize he would need to lie about his origins, and the book written from that was the reference the time traveling assassins were using.

* had Beelzebub join the fight for the Throne Of Bel because he's basically bored.
* Heroes of Might and Magic has wolf riders and, with the first expansion, boar riders.
* Heads I Win, Tails You Lose, as losing to the boss in the actual battle still means Game Over.
* Gremlins: Stripe and his reincarnation Mohawk surely love hurting others and killing even more than the other gremlins.
* Hellboy Animated: In "Blood and Iron" the team investigates an old mansion. The ghosts there normally go unseen, when Abe checks on a computer, they amass at the window, still unseen. When Abe turns back they're gone, but he does see the windows coated with Bloody Handprints.
* Highschool of the Dead" attacks the school in the morning. In fact, quite a bit of the series takes place during the day. Like other zombie shows, it's the sheer amount of the creatures that makes them scary, since you may be able to fight some of them off, but you can't hold them off forever, as the characters find out repeatedly and constantly have to retreat to new areas.
* Hellgate: London where the NPC's would ask the player to enter areas far too dangerous without level grinding first and send you off to play in areas where nothing would be a challenge. Mind, the less said about the game, the better.
* Heroes of Might and Magic). At the end of the campaign, Lysander dismisses him as his squire... to grant him the mayorship of a city.
* Go Go Itsutsugo Land! features a grumpy cat who often indirectly causes trouble for the characters.
* Gonk, he curses love and steals their gold, creating the infamous ring.
* Hamlet Rosencrantz and Guildenstern with various items around the ship where he's being taken to his own execution.
* Gundam SEED Destiny. They're fragile and blow up with alarming frequency, but are armed with beam rifles (thus all but guaranteeing one-hit KO's), and can fly, giving them a massive advantage over ZAFT's slower, earthbound ZAKU's.
* Gunmen of the Apocalypse", it's implied that all Lister ever does with the VR games is have sex with the female NPCs. It's also stated that he has worn out the groin attachment this way.
* Havelock Vetinari is extremely intelligent and fully aware of the Disc's deities, but
* Happy Days when Sheriff Kirk tried to run The Fonz out of town, as well as forcing business owners to adhere to his rules.
* Grease was, of course, a popular actress, and when Rizzo calls Sandy "Sandra Dee," she's comparing her squeaky-clean persona to the actress's image.
* has such a knack for these excuses that Elaine assigns him the task of explaining to her friend why she can't babysit her bratty kid for her anymore.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy. They also have an unnamed dog that makes your game harder.
* highly trained monkeys has been dispatched to deal with this situation."
* Grej. Their goal is to outright destroy the political compass in the Realicide, with their enemies being embodiments of different realist ideas.
* Gunnerkrigg Court twice, to Antimony, who is usually nice and calm to the point of seeming emotionless. The second time was very unhealthy and prompted her to jump on the first proposal of teaching her some self-control.
* Heralds of Valdemar and thief, tends to pickpocket people for fun. He also plays a lot of pranks that involve stealing and/or breaking in.
* Heroic Sacrifice, comes to take him from the sinking ruins, telling him "Mother is waiting for us."
* Halo: Reach, you get an extended sequence of it taking off from Reach into space.
* Hardly Human in this case as El Gato first teases him that it's ridiculous and that he cannot pull it off but when Hooten tells him who asked, Gato just silently raises his cup (of tea or coffee), impressed.
* Guardians of the Galaxy could form dense roots from his arms to counter flying robot turret fire, though it's clear it bothered him to get shot.

* Hiding Behind Religion: A hypocritical sinner who is outwardly religious.
* Hellboy is accompanied by Hellboy's internal monologue (and, in a few scenes, Abraham Sapien's, though his isn't nearly as hard-boiled). The first arc was scripted by John Byrne, but Mike Mignola himself doesn't use it.
* Heroic Spirits, due to their inability to regenerate their own prana, usually rely on their Masters to restore their reserves. Normally the steady trickle they get from the contract is enough, but there are
* Hellraiser: Frank is reclaimed by the Cenobites, who are promptly banished when they try to take Kirsty too. She tries to destroy the puzzle box that started this whole mess, but a winged demon takes it away and it's last seen being sold to another fool.
* Godfather of Harlem is a fact-based crime drama about the gangster Bumpy Johnson and his attempt to wrestle Harlem back from the Genovese crime family in the 1960s, as well as his association with Civil Rights leaders such as Malcom X.
* Heroic BSoD bad that happened in the story so far had been his fault. In the manga itself he never says this, but he does imply several times that he feels responsible for much of what's happened.
* Good Omens (Complicated by that predicting the future for her was "like seeing through a straw", so she didn't get the full picture on things.)
* Gold Digger by Fred Perry has 225+ issues of the main series and still going, 6 miniseries side-stories, a number of miscellaneous one-shots, and a three-episode OAV made by the artist himself. To make things easier, it often have characters give a refresher at the start of its bite-sized arcs, though if you want to jump in, the first 199 issues were put online for free!
* Heroes Prefer Swords: In an RPG, the main character always uses a sword. Even if the size of the sword is bigger than them.
* Grand Central Arena, the Faith worship the Precursors who built the Arena as gods.
* Gratuitous Greek — Τα πάντα με την ελληνική είναι καλύτερη από ό, τι χωρίς ελληνικά.
* God of War (PS4), Atreus gets so upset about Modi trying to kill Kratos and insulting Faye, Atreus's very recently deceased mother, that after all his other attacks fail, Atreus accidentally triggers Spartan Rage, a god power he neither knew he possessed nor knows how to control. This results in his power flaming for a few brief seconds, similar to Kratos's own Spartan Rage, before Atreus sputters out and collapses.
* He insists he used to be a high-ranking member of SOLDIER and demands appropriate respect and admiration from the other characters for this, and he has the poise and posturing down (not to mention the fighting talent). But as more and more of his past is revealed it becomes apparent that it's all an elaborate lie which he has begun to believe himself due to a combination of magic, psychological trauma, half-remembered war stories from his friend, and severe brain damage. Finding out the truth leads to him having a total
* Gor. The normal mode of conversation on Gor? Yes. It is the normal mode of conversation on Gor.
* Hermione suggests that they all wear mirrored sunglasses, blind the basilisk with an illumination spell and cast at its eyes as fast as they can.
* Gravity Falls, Bill Cipher is considered to be this, who is a one-eyed triangle bent on world domination.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: a (possibly) Terran raccoon genetically, surgically and cybernetically enhanced by an unknown alien species.
* Harry Potter. Although the fates are still undetermined at this point.
* Having a snake for a penis which has a mind of its own and may even be able to talk (often the result of two characters merging together).
* HERZ: Hikari and Touji. Whereas Shinji and Asuka have been married for five years and have a daughter, they are still engaged.

* Griff ropes Simmons into screwing with the Red firing squad they're standing in front of.
* GURPS, the disadvantage Supersensitive makes having any other sort of sentient creature with 20 meters a serious weakness. With Combat Paralysis your greatest weakness is being put in any sort of danger. Naturally such disadvantages are not recommended for Player Characters.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, in order to get rid of the bodies of two people Elizabeta shot to death, Niko takes them to a back alley doctor who harvests organs. The doctor complains that she shot one of them in the eye, because he would've liked to have taken it.
* Happily N'Ever After starts out ugly and turns herself beautiful so she can marry the king.
* "Groundhog Day" Loop: Someone ends up trapped in a loop where they experience the same day repeatedly.
* Hajime Kanzaka, the writer for the original novels and head writer for the anime, often answers and confirms anything involving how the fantasy elements in the series works, or who is who and what they are.
* Good Morning, Vietnam firmly believes US' soldiers' morale will be boosted by three hours of polka music in the mornings... when Cronauer is taken off the air, GI's are dismayed by his uber-square replacement, and morale duly plummets.
* Harry Dresden and his comrades prepare a careful plan to launch a distracting attack on the Red Court's holy site at Chichen Itza, while Harry himself and a small group sneak around and rescue
* Godzilla. A monster the size of a skyscraper manages to travel halfway around the world while being stalked by the US military, attacks Manhattan, and yet still does not fully appear on-screen for forty-five minutes. All of the marketing also hid Godzilla's face, only showing very brief glimpses of his foot, his eye, or his tail.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. He even leaves his room because Kat ordered him to!
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost, Disney's "Haunted Mansion" ride, they keep this important aspect of the characters.
* Hannibal - Clarice is trying to track Hannibal Lecter while he taunts her over the phone, and gets close enough to him for him to mess with her hair when he rides by on the carousel.
* Hand Wave is that replicator technology allows them to, which allows them to produce almost anything by using energy to rearrange inert matter. While the energy itself was finite they didn't need to find replacement parts for the ship itself because they could easily replicate it. This was put on display as the crew designed and built the Delta Flyer, a custom shuttle that incidentally could explain how they kept replacing the Type-8 shuttles that kept crashing. In some episodes the ship's progress was forced to a halt in order for Voyager to scout out more supplies on various nearby planets or miraculous substances in nearby space phenomena (leading to Janeway's infamous quote, "there's coffee in that nebula!"), or to trade for supplies on inhabited ones - in some cases Voyager was fortunate to find extremely generous humanoids who gave them supplies for free.
* Hägar the Horrible and his horde make frequent use of rams and catapults. In one strip he fills in for the catapult while his men assemble it, until his arms get tired. And on occasion the French or English follow them home, in which case Helga's cooking makes an apt substitute for boiling oil.
* gravitomagnetic field that will affect objects moving past quickly, just like a magnet will alter the direction of an electron beam.
* Hatsune Miku (Support Version). 74,394 were ordered, meaning GSC donated a whopping ¥74,384,000 (about $913,260 USD).
* Grand Theft Auto fond of this trope. It starts in the second game when the Rednecks have the player use a Zaibatsu car to run down members of the Scientist gang, then vice versa.
* Hans Von Hozel sets a dragon on Ron so he can have Hermione for himself.
* Hellsister Trilogy orders him to submit to him... and then promptly falls on his knees and begs to be spared when Mordru proves he can destroy him at any given time.

* Harry Chapin to the song?" It's about how crappy and depressing it is to take a bus trip. Chorus: "Take the Greyhound / It's a dog of a way to get around / Take the Greyhound / It's a dog gone easy way to get you down."

* Hijo del Dos Caras got hit with a paper towel the second time he interfered with the 2015 WWC
* , Harry Potter letting half-goblin Shank-ko both manage the finances of his business and get a say in who works there are to him just harmless, practical decisions given her business knowledge. To her, she's surprised by how "forward" he is and considers herself his first wife.
* Gone Swimming, Clothes Stolen and ends up having their clothes stolen.
* Hank Williams had several two-sided hits, but his best known was "Kaw-Liga"/"Your Cheatin' Heart," both which went No. 1 in 1953, several months after his death.
* Greek Ninja finds herself rolling her eyes all the time at her comrades' antics.
* Heroic Sacrifice. Lupin and his gang attend at a respectful distance. (If they're seen, the police would have to arrest them.)
* Guess who was featured in over half the clips in the "best blowups" poll.
* Hey Arnold! in a plot to make Lila jealous in the episode "Weird Cousin".
* Harvest Moon: Back to Nature, according to Manna, Duke constantly forgets her birthday, then rushes to the supermarket the following day to get a last-minute gift thrown together.
* Gotrek & Felix she has become a badass Beastman hunter and quite an attractive young woman.
* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla, the human protagonists begin to suspect that the disguised Mechagodzilla is a fake when it attacks Anguirus...something the REAL Godzilla wouldn't do since he and Anguirus are allies. Their suspicions are confirmed when the original Godzilla shows up to do battle against Mechagodzilla for the first time. Anguirus also immediately notices that the disguised Mechagodzilla is a fake because it doesn't sound or act like the Godzilla he knows.
* Gustavus (original title: Gusztáv), a long-running series of comedic shorts with social commentary.
* Grrl Power. There is a poster in the Women's locker room that states that none of the men have x-ray vision and even if they did all they would see is bone and an outline of flesh.
* Grey's Anatomy: According to Levi Schmitt, his mother freaks out about everything and had three separate conversations with him about purchasing a new backpack as she was worried it wouldn't hold everything he needed and that it could accidentally strangle him.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name Possibly has Doc Worth and Conrad. In the February donation comic Doc says he thinks of the two of them as friends, though Conrad may not see it that way. Their constant yelling and shoving matches might have something to do with that, along with Doc's constant stream of belittling comments.
* Have I Got News for You, Maureen Lipman quipped "I do declare, the prince's balls get larger every year!"
* Gundam 00 scramble by the battling forces around its base to obliterate the fragments and save the cities, with repercussions for later meetings of the combatants and the force that fired the cannon.
* happens before the woman gasps and turns around... and the video ends.
* Gods and Generals. Sadly Jackson feels so dependent on him that he can't quite bring himself to free him. In a way, he seems almost enslaved to his slave.
* Heckle and Jeckle shorts "The Super Salesmen" and "Out Again In Again" end with Heckle and Jeckle falling into a jail cell.
* Harley Quinn solo series, among the founding members were five teenage sisters known as the Quinntuplets. However, they only had one adventure as part of the team before Harley found out they're too young for her group and sent them home at the end of the 19th issue.

* He had a key role as an investigative reporter in the sports drama
* Harry sends a Ministry employee out a window after he states that Harry and Draco, who're being forced together due to a marriage law, will be firm friends within a week and life partners after a month if they just give it a try.
* Hell's Faire, when visiting No Name Key in Florida, Mike O'Neal Jr's claim of being in the military is initially questioned by the residents, thanks to them having been fooled, previously, by someone claiming to be a veteran to leech off of them.
* Heroic Willpower: The hero does his best not to give in to the madness.
* Godzilla vs. Gigan) then try to demolish Tokyo with King Ghidorah and Gigan.
* Goofy. By the time Mrs. Goof comes home, the house is a shambles, the bathtub is overflowing, the iron has burned through the floor, firemen are stomping through the halls, and the cops have come to investigate a murder (Goofy didn't hang up the phone and the operator overheard a radio show).
* Hermione's father's physical fitness regimen for Harry is occasionally supplemented by Sergeant Major Bellows, aka "He-who-makes-you-hurt."
* Harper's Island attitude, while Coulter is bright, excitable, and eager about her impending first murder arrest.
* Happy Heroes in order to gain more popularity. At one point, he’s shown calmly striding into the bathroom at school. The moment he locks the stall door behind him though, he drops the act and starts fidgeting in discomfort before relieving himself.
* God of War III, which whip around Kratos and differ from the Blades of Exile.
* Haruhi Suzumiya She actually states that she prefers looking from outside, though other people on the outside sometimes considers her part of the group.
* He starts a massive war that tears the seven kingdoms apart, as his way of lashing out to the world when he lost her to Brandon—and later Ned—Stark.
* Here are some examples, including mounted elk, yaks, llamas and ostriches, and elk-, pig-, and ostrich-driven chariots and carriages.
* Gundam, Gihren Zabi. There is a reason for this. A cold, Machiavellian personality, Gihren's entire goal in life seems to be the accumulation of more wealth, power, and possessions for himself.
* Gordon Solie, trying to class things up, would pronounce "Suplex" as "Souplay". (It's pronounced "souplay" in amateur wrestling, partly because of the sport's European origins.)
* Gorillaz’ “Clint Eastwood” featuring Sweetie Irie is far more well known than the original featuring Del The Funky Homosapien, mostly due to how popular the genre of the remix was in the UK at the time of its release.
* GURPS: Ultratech has two versions. The first uses quantum entanglement (so it's impossible to intercept) the second is generic FTL Radio.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters levels) when the bearer of the Heart is on its native world.
* Green Lanterns TV series, whose ring was powerless against aluminum.
* good way to end up on the receiving end of the worst beat down of your life. Justified, though, as they really are separate personalities inhabiting the same body. And they do not like each other.
* Gunnerkrigg Court and the rest of the art, which was already good, improves greatly at the same time.
* Gundam X. The arc also includes a white dolphin, which seems to be psychic itself.
* Happy Birthday to You! story with no conflict whatsoever. It's just about a special Birthday Bird who takes a boy on an exhilarating excursion on his birthday.
* Goku averts this trope throughout the series after he's grown up. While he does possess many qualities of the
* He also starts that one peeling potatoes, watching planes go by and wishing he were in one of them... and he absentmindedly peels one potato into an airplane...which flies and brings Sergeant Pete's hat back to him... which he absentmindedly starts peeling.

* Granblue Fantasy: When Korwa is agitated or frustrated, she rattles off whatever she's thinking at breakneck speed with no regard to who's listening.
* Hard West, and a worldmap on which the party travels between points of interest, which triggers dialogs which can give new party members, gold or items (or loss of them), allow to visit a merchant, receive buffs or de-buffs (usually from receiving a wound), and enter into fight sequences.
* Hc Svnt Dracones Destroyers, Cruisers, and Dreadnaughts have a mix of drones and weapons arrays. While Carriers have no weapons and Battleships have no drones by default, but they have a couple Omni-Slots that can be upgraded with either.
* half a dozen). The other two are just used to plans like this, as under the Video Games section below.
* Herbie Hancock in the early 80's released the synth pop record-scratching hit "Rockit."
* . Granted it was pointed out that, if Goats was a person it would be time for its Bar Mitzvah.
* High School Dx D: Asia Argento, kind, sweet and selfless to a fault. Even after being reincarnated as a Devil, she continues to follow God's teachings, like praying and reading the Bible despite the pain it causes her.
* Harry earns a lot of goodwill with both the Night Elves and the Horde leadership by introducing them to communication mirrors. Previously, communication between cities or outposts took weeks and changed hands so many times that the contents were frequently white-washed if not outright falsified. By giving Tyrande a hundred such mirrors, she and all her major outposts can communicate instantly with each other. While the Horde isn't initially given as many (due to Harry having no interaction with them yet), they still get a few dozen that allows all their leaders to contact each other at once. Furthermore, said mirrors have a conference call function so for example, all the Horde leaders can meet with each other without spending months preparing.
* He also trolls Waluigi fans again, not only showing that he's still an Assist Trophy but using him to demonstrate that Assists can now be KOed.
* Hairspray gives a variation, when Tracey is put in detention and Link wants an excuse to go with her.
* Gorillas and (female) orangutans, however, are straight examples of this trope, as they both fall into the
* Heartcore creator TL Welker is very fond of Teo, who often features prominently in artwork alongside Amethyst.
* Golf Story. All of his "training" consists of mundane tasks that have little to do with golf itself, much to the protest of his students who really want to get some practice in. He explains to you that the purpose of these tasks is to get you to take a breather and not dedicate your entire daily life to golf.
* Heroes: Sylar and Elle, as she's a sociopathic Company assassin broken by years of Company experimentation on her powers and he's a psychotic serial killer with serious mental issues. They both try to reform for the better, but when the Company lies she's told surface, including how she manipulated his feelings, Sylar kills her.
* Goosebumps by refusing to clean him and allowing him to suffocate in his own putrid stench.
* Hamlet — and no force in Heaven and Earth can stop him from having his revenge.
* Happens on the protagonists' side, too. Several multiplayer classes have swords for their melee weaponry: the N7 Shadow and N7 Slayer use swords, and the Krogan Warlord carries an immense hammer. You can attach metal bayonets to the front of various shotguns, and omniblade bayonets to assault rifles. Omniblades are also becoming widespread at the time of the game as an emergency melee blade was well, simply because everyone is facing the prospect of close quarters melee combat while fighting the Reapers' ground troops.
* Hero Factory line focuses on the heroes fighting what are described as evil brains that latch onto beings and turn them into monsters.
* He's actually pretty good at the climbing. It's when he looks down that it all goes wrong. (He's afraid of heights).

* High School D×D produced by Passione, as opposed to the first three seasons by TNK. In fact, he claimed on his twitter that he's sure Passione is able to create not only a 5th, but a 6th Season as well, simply because their adaptation is the best rendition of his work to his eyes.
* Hangin' with Mr. Cooper: Tyler tries to stand up to a bully who is forcing Nicole to do his homework. Tyler grabs the paper and rips it to shreds, only for Nicole to inform him that he just ripped up her homework.
* Granblue Fantasy and as such is prone to standing on large wooden boxes to look more dramatic. Her Light variation has her Victory pose as her standing on a stack of boxes that will alternate between putting her at even height with others to having her tower over them.
* Harry Potter two years of James dogging persistently after Lily since we don't know when he first started asking.
* Hello Mary Lou: Prom Night II, while still fun to watch for its own reasons, stuck very, very close to conventional slasher tropes, and is considered one of the more generic films in the genre.
* Hayate the Combat Butler often gets into these situations. Usually the girl herself is the one to demand clothes. There's the event between him and Ayumu, where, while she's trying to put her clothes on she tries to justify her appearance.
* Godzilla vs. Kong, Godzilla starts attacking people making the human race confused over why he is going on rampages on human territory. It's later revealed that a sinister corporation Apex Cybernetics is building Mechagodzilla to wipe out all Titans off the face of the Earth to reinstate humans as the dominant species, and Godzilla (correctly) deduces Mechagodzilla as a threat to him.
* Hellspark, which is set in an interstellar future with a wide variety of societies, and features a community of people who were forced to live together without adequate preparation for their cultural differences. At the point when the protagonist shows up and starts mediating, there are people about ready to kill their neighbors over apparently little things like what kind of boots they wear.
* Hannah Montana find their relationship on the rocks, Rico finds that Oliver's moping is bad for business. In order to shut him up and bring the customers back, Rico helps mend their relationship by sending Lilly a love letter in Oliver's name.
* Goosebumps Fortunately, the Emperor gets impatient and orders they be brought forward before this can happen.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows. After off-handedly shaking the bag:
* Guinea Pigs, being small furry rodents, have no actual relation to pigs; this was used for comedic effect in the 1905 short story "Pigs is Pigs" and Disney's
* Godot/Diego Armando. Finally, Miles Edgeworth can be considered the Tetragonist, as he plays the role of defense attorney in Phoenix's place during the first part of the final case, and this moment is a huge development in his character.
* Going through a gravity well of sufficient size overloads your hyperdrive motivator (what you need to get in and out of hyperspace) and kicks you out of hyperspace; when you over load it,
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 "spacesuits for emergency" sign to "spacesuits for emergency — or for fun."
* god-like thief. As incidental as Vaan's inclusion on the team maybe, he's probably the single most powerful weapon at their disposal, if not instrumental to their success.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, it's mentioned that the reason a holding cell is so comfortable isn't that the suspect is held in especially high esteem or anything like that, it's just that wizards have such a high standard of living that it didn't really occur to anyone not to include a few basic comforts.
* Gogol Bordello. The band even sells t-shirts that show a picture of Eugene under the words "This Moustache Kills Fascists."
* Grand Theft Auto games have the Vigilante missions, accessed from any law enforcement or military vehicle, in which you need to kill increasing amounts of people in a time limit.

* Happy Heroes of his wishes trying to fix some problems inherent in the results, as side-effects of the wishes being made with no effort:
* Hegemonic Empire: An empire which absorbs instead of conquers and makes people want to be a part of it.
* Hand-raised birds often imprint on humans. When they get older, hormones drive them to take a mate, but as they believe themselves to be humans, their desired mate is usually their caretaker (who is usually not interested in birds that way). This can prove problematic if the bird in question is intended to be used for breeding, as they show no interest in mates they could produce offspring with - even if their intended mate puts on a dramatic courtship display. Other problems can arise, too, as the bird becomes increasingly frustrated that their attempts at pairing with a human aren't working; they may become aggressive to their caretaker ("How dare you spurn me!") or to others the bird perceives as competition.
* Grey's Anatomy. Surgery is considered the best specialty. Cristina even says it's the "marines" of specialties in the first episode. The doctors look down on nurses, and everyone looks down on interns (especially the second batch). The surgeons themselves sometimes divide into their specialties even further, with Cardio and Neural at the top and Orthopedic and General at the bottom.
* God of War III. Naturally, it includes a sex scene between her and the player character, Kratos.
* Heroes of Might and Magic an infernal general Agrael in the end of his campaign decides that he had enough of his demonic masters, bails and switches to being a Warlock (well, the best he could get in his condition and he turns out quite a nice guy for a Dark Elf). Naturally, he loses all his abilities, even not demon-related, and levels of experience in the process and has to start evolving from scratch. Explained in-story as the effect of the ritual that purified him of demon taint. The same happens earlier, at the start of his own campaign: formerly a formidable hero in Isabel's campaign, he is suddenly brought down to level 1, and there's no story justification here.
* Grandpa's father seemed very similar to him in personality as did his grandfather. In one flashback we see that Phil even had a similar relationship with his grandfather that Phil currently has with Arnold.
* Head Turned Backwards: A character's head is turned backwards, usually due to some experiment malfunction.
* Handsome Lech, he tries to take her to one of these despite her protests. He finally relents and drives her home after she threatens to mace him.
* Hannibal, when Clarice Starling witnesses Hannibal Lecter being kidnapped by Mason Verger's thugs and is unable to get a couple driving a car to even call for help. She spends the next few hours silently cursing herself for not throwing them out of the car and chasing the kidnappers herself.
* Heron of Alexandria for more mechanical power than simpler industrial-level power sources like waterwheels or windmills could provide. Lacking these things, the steam engine remained a curiosity fondly used by tinkerers to power devices like singing mechanical birds for centuries before the world hit the "critical mass" of related technologies and economic incentive required to turn theory into fact.
* High-Class Glass: When wearing a monocle automatically makes someone more sophisticated.
* Going along with the aforementioned examples of premium channels above, said channels in general will constantly air the same films over and over to the point that they can be seen every week, if not
* Half-Life 1 forward and spending several minutes not knowing what to do. He usually avoids these kind of failures in newer playthroughs due to his stream chat being able to tell him what to do whenever he gets stuck. As one fan lamented, “I think Phil should play games on his own without a live audience sometimes... it’s pointless having people on hand to tell you what to do and where to go, most of your long term viewers prefer seeing you play games by yourself. This means that we can see you rage and struggle, that’s the reason I subscribed in the first place.”
* Hayley and Stan have exactly the same personality — both are controlling, obsessed with being right, and generally treat their partners like crap. The twist is that while Stan is a hardcore conservative, Hayley is a hardcore liberal. This is reinforced by the similarity of appearance — they're the only two members of the family to share the same hair color.

* gushes, Butt-Head just calmly stares and laughs along with him. Butt-Head even calls Beavis' injury "cool".
* Headless Horseman of Wormwood Ridge, the teens flag down the sheriff's cruiser. Sheriff Otis invites them in and promises to get them to safety. However, he is part of the conspiracy and goes to deliver them back to town.
* Herz und Mund und Tat und Leben (BWV 147). The former title, by the way, appears nowhere in the translated text of the cantata. In fact, the melody of "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" is actually from two, almost identical movements of the cantata ("Wohl mir, daß ich Jesum habe" and "Jesus bleibet meine Freude" respectively). The melody is very famous in both religious and secular circles; in the latter, the melody often appears stripped of its religious lyrics and any hint of its Baroque origin.
* Head-Turning BeautyIf a character can literally turn heads as they pass, they're clearly supposed to be seen (at least in-universe) as attractive.
* Hell's Paradise: Jigokuraku by the criminal of his charge, when those lower ranked than him manages to survive encounters against more powerful enemies. It may be justified that the ranks within the clan is not distributed purely based on skill, but on their suitability to inherit the clan, so Eizen may be competent in other areas outside battle, but unfortunately those skills are useless on Kotaku island.
* Grace's attempt to make a bit of a political statement in the sketchbook resulted in a bad case of * Gundam Build Divers Re:RISE. But, her existence is what drives Hiroto throughout Season 1 of the series and gives meaning to his Gunpla's armor system.
* Grand King Ghidorah, Des Ghidorah and Kaizer Ghidorah are alien lifeforms that just happen to resemble dragons. They are some of the most powerful kaiju, and all have three heads, two tails, and two wings. Des Ghidorah and Kaizer Ghidorah are six-limbed quadrupeds whereas Grand King Ghidorah has only four limbs. Each can travel through space and manipulate gravity, in addition to having various unique powers.
* H(a)unting much? In any case, you simply cannot be afraid of a Slenderman who is afraid of a silkie chicken, brings frightened girls flashlights, and gives people Reeses candy for winning a video game tournament.
* Hachi-Roku - Toyota AE86 (famously used in the manga and anime series,
* Go uses a bit of the power of the King of the Underworld to sabotage his three opponents by sending darkness condors at them. That's right. He doesn't use Monster Cards, but outside force. To make it worse, when Crow and Jack crash because of him, Goodwin uses the Riding Duel rules against them, even though he doesn't ride a D-Wheel to begin with.
* guarding and protecting their corpses. The disturbing implication that the bear had come to enjoy the taste of human flesh to the point where it jealously guarded the corpses make this one even creepier.
* Goosebumps. His dedication is so great that he flows Sue and Eddie through time itself (when a friendly wizard sends them hundreds of years into the future), outright mocking them for thinking that would enough to stop him.
* has also criticized was far more unpleasant to watch in animated form as a result, and apologized to everyone (directors, animators, & voice actresses) involved for having to do something so demeaning.
* Happy Ending Override: Sequel starts out with a previous victory negated and things much worse than when they began.
* Gordy the pig and his human friend have wrecked her career by innocently causing her trap for them to backfire.
* Hastily Hidden MacGuffin: A valuable stolen object, hidden to avoid detection by the authorities (or rival thieves, or whichever party is trying to take it), which the thieves then must scramble to get back.

* Grimm, Sean Renard and his mother Elizabeth look around the same age. In story, it's because Elizabeth's Hexenbeist nature keeps her human form from aging, suggesting Zauberbiest Sean will eventually stop aging as well. In real life, it's because the actress is actually only three years older than the actor.
* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de that would allow him to appreciate her beauty, and therefore sees her just as what she really is (a skeleton). She does not take it well...
* God Is Displeased: A benevolent deity withdraws their protection of mortals over a slight.
* Heart performed it live at Kennedy Center and the video released shows Plant in the audience, visibly moved by the performance.
* Gone with the Wind. The book portrays Scarlett as a spoiled, self-centered brat by retelling her story through the eyes of a newly invented character: a slave who is her illegitimate half-sister.
* Haruka's friend Elza Gray from the first anime. Her name would suggest her being of African American descent.
* He first gets his point on what he hates most by shooting the middle finger off one of them. With a carrot.
* Happens at certain boxing or UFC/MMA events when one or both fighters (think Liddel vs Ortiz or Rousy vs Corria) if there is particularly bad blood between them. Addressed in the UFC games, when the ref gets them to touch gloves one or both fighters may refuse to do so.
* Helium Speech by suggesting that they sing "Camptown Races" to keep their spirits up. Even Leela can't hide her laughter.
* Guild Wars has a group of 5 (later 6) gods. Shrines to the gods are found throughout explorable areas, and can grant different sorts of bonuses if a particular region of the world has "favor". In the setting, some people focus mostly on particular gods, though all gods are generally acknowledged. In the sequel, only human worship these gods with any conviction. The other playable races either worship their own deities, or have a different conception of the world.
* Hikari had one also when she returned to the black ocean. She needed to be slapped out of it in a very
* He had a bit on his father's car, a 1952 Chevy. It didn't make any noise when revving the engine — which immediately made it the uncoolest car ever. It also didn't help that he was comparing it to Fat Albert's car, a 1941 Mercury modified to use a Cessna airplane engine.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers surface through his people via a little girl muttering "I'll kill them all" in her sleep. Her parents are very concerned by this.
* her pot (she gave it up when she got pregnant), and the two decide to smoke some for old times' sake. When Jackie walks in on the scene, she initially scolds them—then pushes Dan out of the way to show him the proper way to roll a joint.
* he thought that all women were nagging shrews who were useful in sharing a man's wealth but useless in times of poverty puts it, Hesiod's beliefs were "utter nonsense").
* Here's an example episode "Daniel Gets Mad" on a PBS affiliate in Illinois.
* Hero Oh Hero, because of their resemblance to the elves in their folklore.
* Hanging Judge: A harsh judge who is extremely prejudiced against defendants, always ready to hand out guilty verdicts and sentence them with draconian penalties.
* God Does Not Own This World: The creator no longer has the rights to his work or didn't have the rights in the first place.
* goblinoid relatives of the Orks, are responsible for every menial job necessary to keep the Orks' society and hordes going but too boring or non-fighting related for the Orks to bother with — mushroom farming, brewing, food preparation, supply transport, technical maintenance, and so on. Orkish society is utterly dependent on Gretchin labor, but their small size and... underwhelming... martial skills mean that the Orks treat the Gretchin with nothing but derision and comical levels of abuse.

* Hans Christian Andersen was entitled "In a Thousand Years". In it a couple on an aircraft visit the ruins of Europe. Do remember this was a long time before anything like an aircraft existed, and reads so naturally, some editions with drawings include a picture of a couple in a modern airplane seat with this story.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle: At one point early in the movie, the titular characters are in Princeton University and hide from campus security in the women's bathroom. In two other stalls, a pair of twin sisters are playing a game of "Battleshits", eventually prompting the other duo to run away in disgust.
* Haroun and the Sea of Stories, Mr Buttoo always addresses Haroun's father as "[adjective] Mr Rashid".
* Heidi's Song receives second billing even though his role is very minor, only appearing as a singing rat who appears near the end.
* Herman and Katnip, in order to make Katnip think he's dead and has to earn his wings by serving the mice a banquet.
* Heidi the movie. What happened in those final 65 seconds, you ask? The Raiders score 14 points and win the game.
* He's also had more than a few times when he's found the "hero" to be far less likable or otherwise worse than the "villain", like in
* Hamlet 2 is mostly limited to performing these roles in commercials.
* Here Come the Brides episode "The Soldier," Captain Clancey is mauled by a grizzly bear while drunkenly stumbling home from his birthday party.
* Goblins received this right off the bat, going from generic cannon fodder for low-level adventurers, to something the creators describe as a cross between
* Going Postal, Moist Von Lipwig is forced to start over after supposedly being executed for his crimes. He's not entirely on his own, because Lord Vetinari has decided to make him the new Postmaster, which means that he's starting out with a job and a small apartment, but it's still an adjustment for him, because he's not used to making an honest living and has to get over his instinct for cheating other people.
* Hercules had one when Hades' coup on Mt. Olympus was foiled by Hercules.
* Heart of Steel, Julia is attacked by Scarface the shark-man while she and her boyfriend are scuba diving off the coast of Shark Reef Isle. She is knocked out and wakes up in a very posh guest room with a new leg.
* Heh Heh, You Said "X": Someone laughs over another person saying a word that sounds dirty.
* Golden Sun can become the healer, but the secondary healing element is the earth element (which is the one that has the Revive psyenergy), which is the element of the main hero in both games.
* High Score Girl: two super-deformed cel-shaded CG Japanese people controlling 2D sprites of digitized real-life American people, which look "more real" than them despite the graininess.
* Halo: Reach, Kat proposes a way to take out a Covenant supercarrier that involves "the single most expensive piece of equipment made by man".
* Hector's World, Kui is described as a "spirit" and there are surreal visual effects around her entrances, but there's no hard evidence that she's not just a normal whale.
* Hc Svnt Dracones Corptowns can easily afford to provide free food and housing for their citizens that can't afford it, but, to limit any strain on the corporate welfare system citizens' income are evaluated every year and if they fall below a certain bracket they are surgically sterilized. Though it can easily be reversed with their medical technology. It's also not explicitly stated but implied that abortions may be performed as well, as MarsCo can save the genome of a specific fetus that a parent wants but can't afford at the time to clone later.
* he is extremely tenacious, able to hold his own against the much more skilled and violent Kirihara.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers gave him before leaving for the Thirty Years' War, leading Prussia to not want to discard it.
* grows food in space. +1 Nutrient/turn to all bases subject to modifiers.
* Hawaii Five-0. Others include FBI and ATF officers, which drives the plot of a few other episodes.

* Harry Harrison destroyed. Humanity actually spread to the stars from the terraformed Mars.)
* Happy Heroes and doing just that. It works, and Smart S.'s loyal group of fans become distraught at him committing the crimes.
* Heroic BSoD, her actions did set Korra on the path to healing both physically and mentally.
* Heather's hippie mother is described as "happily separated from [Heather's] father after the two of them came to the mutual conclusion that they just weren't meant for each other" and
* Groo crossover was originally announced in 2007, but got delayed several times for various reasons, the aforementioned operation being one of them. It finally came out in 2014, seven years later.
* He insists it stands for "X-perimental Ranger". His presence on this page begs to differ.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows has many errors in it. Mrs. Dumbledore's name Kendra is written as "Canard", Bathilda Bagshot is "Batholith", Godric's Hollow is "God's like Hollow", and Hogwarts is "Hog warts".
* got it from her father after she killed him, or perhaps somehow got a hold of it beforehand and killed him with it. Neither is true; the Blade is Pattern, her spren, and is one of the only living Blades left. She killed her mother with him when she was a child, but strangled her father with her necklace after poisoning him.
* Highwayman is about the Highwayman's final reincarnation as one of these.
* Great Mazinger in those series often attempting to ram the enemy, too.
* Grande Dame: An elegant older woman who is of high standing, very posh, humorless, and uptight.
* Gradius, particularly if the random power-up has thrown speed boosts at you too many times (or you foolishly activated it too many times).
* Grey's Anatomy of one's inexplicably likely chances of dying or being seconds from death if you work there. Thankfully it doesn't extend to the patients, who actually have a pretty good survival rate because the (remaining) doctors are really good at saving lives. After the plane crash, Cristina curses it, and Alex refrains from asking a girl out with this excuse, completely seriously.
* her Cursed counterpart, drinks and hustles people playing pool. She meanwhile is attracted to the darkness in Rumple.
* Happy Endings: In "The Marry Prankster", Max dumps slime on Penny twice during his prank revenge-the first was on purpose, the second time she gets slime that was meant for Dave.
* Happy Endings tries to popularize the neologism "chicksand". Max mocks him for it until it starts catching on.
* G-Nome by forcing the pilot out with a special gun, then killing them.
* Harley Quinn (2019), Harley returns to Poison Ivy's apartment seeing a banner that says "It's a boy!" and baby stuff all over the place, causing her to think she's pregnant and having a baby shower. She rubs Ivy's belly and congratulates her, but Ivy tells her she's not pregnant and doesn't know why the stuff is there. It turns out to be a prank set up by The Joker mocking Harley for having Robin, a preteen boy, as an arch nemesis.
* Halfway through 5, Duck Guy wakes up in a mysterious dark room. Eventually, we see that his body had been sliced open, and his organs are being processed into canned food product.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers between Japan and Korea. This was also partly the reason why the anime abandoned its original TV broadcast plans for web-streaming.
* Groundhog Day features several such scenes in snow with Phil (Bill Murray) and his colleague/love interest Rita (Andie MacDowell).
* Hikiko Urban Legend Story, the titular character is an onryo that moves scary fast when she wants to.
* Harry objects to the potions riddle which is part of the challenges protecting the Philosopher's Stone.

* Hannibal where Agent Starling replays a recording of Hannibal Lecter talking to her.
* Hardcore: Instead of something extreme or intense, it's a picture of an avocado core that is impossible to cut.
* Guardians of the Galaxy. It's actually easier to list the members of this group that don't fit this trope. Of all the women who have served in the Guardians only Mantis is under 175 cm. Phyla-Vell is 177 cm, Gamora and Moondragon are both 6' and Angela is 6'2".
* Hero House stars Thor, the Norse God of Thunder, so this is something of a given.
* Guilty Gear games' backstory, a limitless energy source was eventually discovered and the scientists gave it the most appropriate name they could: magic.
* Hank Zipzer is attempting to shut down the music department. As part of this, he exiles Mr. Rock and Emily to the music room for the duration of Open Day; ostensibly so they can explain the music curriculum to visiting parents. He then takes down all of the signs pointing to the music room to ensure that no parents find their way there.
* Harry Potter movie marathon with a dedication card of Snape with "Thank you for the magic. In loving memory of Alan Rickman"
* Gluttony was created to emulate the Gate of Truth. The eye inside his belly looks nearly identical to the real one, except that his eye's iris is slit, while the real one's iris is round. Additionally, Gluttony and Truth share the same mouth design.
* Hellsing, at start of the series Alucard carries the newly turned Seras Victoria like this, symbolic in the sense that Seras is technically reborn as vampire.
* Happens quite a bit to radical Inquisitors, who feel that using demonic powers or weapons to fight Chaos is a good idea, and don't quite understand that those are in fact good ways to get corrupted
* Happy Days: Done by proxy when a man tracks down Fonzie to give him a letter from his estranged father. The letter begins, "If you're reading this I didn't have the guts to tell you it was me who gave it to you."
* heavily contaminated former nuclear-testing site, now off limits to humans, with similarly controversial findings. Similar photographic and natural studies have been done of Bikini Atoll, which is now teeming with fish thanks more to the absence of humans, since they are not considered safe to eat.
* Her father, brought back with life with an infusion of her blood, not only goes through something similar, but has the same reaction.
* Hellnight, along with various other scattered survivors, while being hunted down by a demonic creature. Did we also mention the serial killer running around?
* Happy Home Designer game. This resulted in a commercial failure that was torn apart by critics and fans alike.
* H'el. Flashbacks reveal that he wasn't always so pale, but how he got his current complexion is a mystery even to him.
* Grim Dawn Occultists have a spell called "Bloody Pox," which plagues an enemy mob. Its upgrade "Fevered Rage" doubles its damage but buffs attack damage and speed.
* Hand of Thrawn. A brief stretch where one, Carib, is the viewpoint character and has a momentary existential meltdown ends as he strengthens his resolve by reminding himself what he's worked for.
* "HE'S An Inquisitor held back from promotion due to his radical ideas of fairness, equitability, and investigating before Exterminating! HE'S a two-legged biological killing machine which consumes men to gain their skills! Together THEY FIGHT HERESY."
* He'd have died in episode 1 if Simon hadn't dug up from below to save him. He's not
* Hikigaya Hachiman was planning on dropping out of the U.A. High School Hero Course in * Gyo is about Japan being invaded by undead fish on mechanical legs. This may or may not be caused by an old biological weapon created by the Japanese army during World War 2. The fish themselves are dead and the legs powered by the gas generated by a contagious bacteria that's animating the corpses. Maybe. It's a pretty bizarre story.

* Gundam 00: A Wakening of the Trailblazer is shown like this: it's pretty clear the ELS are winning the overall battle, and the human forces are getting overwhelmed. But, there are lots of scenes of individual human forces destroying truckloads of ELS, and not just the Gundam-piloting main characters. The ELS may be winning, but humanity is putting up one hell of a fight.
* Good Night, and Good Luck., a film about McCarthyism, is widely seen as being a commentary about the legal processes for alleged unlawful combatants in Guantanamo Bay. The creators deny any such connection.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, all on multiple occasions, each of whom had been responsible for the destruction of countless other worlds. He then suggests that should humans ever leave Earth and begin visiting other worlds, it would lead to untold cosmic disasters.
* He also sends mooks flying with the 'Mobile itself than a collision with the tank itself). This is especially absurd when the taser doesn't work on other vehicles, so cars will upend, fly through the air, and even explode without any goons inside being harmed.
* Goodfellas is furious and suffers a breakdown after his wife tells him she flushed sixty-thousand dollars worth of drugs down the toilet while the police raided his house with a search warrant.
* Goldfinger, Gert Fröbe had to be redubbed by Michael Collins. Fröbe didn't speak much English and he couldn't perform naturally in an unfamiliar language so he, instead, focused on his physical performance and moving his lips fast enough to look as if his character spoke English fluently.
* he was committing a murder. Then later his wife catches when he did actually decide to rekindle an old romance, albeit for ulterior purposes. Dexter knew about it and was the one responsible for getting Miguel's wife to LaGuerta's.
* Green Lantern. A young Zilliphi named Taa, a messenger for the Conference House of Metro Nine, receives the Green Lantern ring from Rak. Although he is told to dispose of it, he instead uses it to defeat the Barooki.
* graphic violence, are usually able to co-exist with controversy on their own merits, unless the content is used in a manner that is so disrespectfully lurid, titillating, or gratuitous that an average audience member would call bullshit on that defence.)
* Handy (1951) for their brand of handheld transceiver became the generic ham radio term "HT" meaning any handheld transceiver.
* Hak is notorious for this, to the point where it's even lampshaded when a woman who is interested in him immediately gives after seeing the way he watches Yona.
* Hey Arnold! in the episode "Old Iron Man", where Arnold's grandpa competes against an old rival in a senior athletic competition.
* Godzilla powers, so he might get a handwave). The 2014 film does give Godzilla larger and thicker legs to help support his weight, and he moves with an extremely slow gait when he's outside of water.
* He's killed cannibalistic backwoods country girls, sniped a woman who killed her own children, a mobster's wife
* Have the villain chase the hero up the tree. The fairly fragile tree will begin to bend beneath the weight of both people trapped within it, frequently doubling over.
* Heaven's Lost Property. While he's a lot more reserved than Tomoki, he's also completely bonkers.
* Halo 4 ensues when you ask why the Mammoth's crew can't just eyeball a shot on the freaking enormous particle cannons they're after.)
* gun a Devil Fruit, Usopp openly asks how can an inanimate object "eat" a Devil Fruit, with the opponent merely replying that there's a reason why. We later learn that WG scientist Doctor Vegapunk managed to find a way to have item absorb the power of Zoan Devil Fruits.
* Hand Behind Head: A nervous, embarrassed, uncertain, or lying character rubs the back of their neck.

* He also stresses the importance to Watson of collecting the information the Germans have gathered so as to know what is and is not known by them (once they remove what Holmes has been telling them).
* Grape shows that his strongest asset in battle is his ability to read the opponent and suss out their weak points. He was the one to realise that Rowan was a one-trick pony without any fighting moves beyond his elbow strike.
* Good Luck! Ninomiya-kun. He's also pretty much the only one unaware that his rich admirer-turned-maid friend is head over heels for him.
* Gold Digger: she mostly cared about "Ganymede" because he was obviously high status.
* Heel–Face Revolving Door; after he remembers his true self, he's casually teasing Snake.
* Heinrich Himmler is in the middle of overseeing Jahr Null, a wave of riots across the Greater Nazi Reich to destroy all non-Nazi culture, when he is shot by resistance snipers who are then able to disappear into the crowd.
* Gratuitous Spanish — Todo con español es mejor que todo sin español.
* he's back to endorsing a two-lane gas-guzzling SUV, having realized that selling out, not comedy, is his true calling in life.
* Going Clear, which was critical of Scientology, would attract many viewers. Then the Church of Scientology started an ad campaign against it. It later became the second-most-watched HBO documentary of the decade.
* Great Teacher Onizuka with that naive attitude. After meeting the class four students (who prior Onizuka's arrival and lessons hated all adults and tried to drive all teachers crazy or suicidal), she realizes things are not so simple.
* Happy Tree Friends episodes). Examples include when he tries to wash him in the sink and accidentally scalds his lower half, then slices him up below the waist in the garbage disposal and when he is cutting the hedge and accidentally slices the top part of his head off.
* Hanazuki: Full of Treasures from a Moonflower to be able to grow, but when the Moonflower feels that emotion and immediately plants the Treasure, the tree grows instantly.
* Harvest Moon: Magical Melody, marrying your rival, Jamie, will cause the game to end as they weren't marriageable in the Japanese version, and thus nothing was written for them post-marriage.
* Groin Attack: The humor seems to be partially in defying the expectation that men don't react or suffer.
* Golden Age series. This is apparently a bit of a problem in the Alternian Empire.
* Guilded Age Gravedust Deserthammer isn't your typical armored hammer/axe warrior either. He's a shaman archer who can speak with the dead and ask them to lend their strength to his arrows. He is among the most level-headed in the group, as well as being mannerly and polite. He's never been seen to drink, ever. His name is the only thing truly dwarfish about him.
* Highland charge, the Scottish tactic of sprinting into English musket lines to hack the soldiers apart with broadswords before they could affix their bayonets.
* Held Within both genies are former college students who were turned into genies thanks to unknowingly making wishes on a magic amulet. No "natural born" genies have been seen. Unlike other genies, these do not have a three wish limit, and are specifically tied to their specific mistresses. Instead of lamps they have a very private connection to the women they are bound to.
* Goose Goose Duck to fart, so even if you're killed by a Duck, you can still fart to your heart's content.
* Heralds of Valdemar worse than normal. The exact reason for the limit isn't spelled out, but is implied to be due to Altra stepping physically into the plane of mage-energy to jump—as the Mage Storms get worse, his range decreases.
* Hermes wants Leela to sign an indemnity waiver in case she is killed on a mission.
* HBO) briefly undergo a bout of frustrated desire for each other, which only dies when they notice, when they finally get the time and privacy to indulge themselves, that their feet are too similar.

* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, which eliminated most of the pensieve adventures. Notably, the filmmakers added the attack on the Burrow because they thought some action was needed in the middle part of the story.
* Grandmother Willow also counts, due to Pocahontas inheriting many of the beliefs she holds from her.
* Goat glands as Viagra type results — not only became a trope in films themselves, but a film industry term for silent films that had sound hurriedly added to them to bring them up to date. Monkey glands were also used for the same purpose.
* Here is Greenwood. As a practical joke, several older residents of the dorm convince the main character (who is Shun's roommate) that Shun is in fact a cross-dressing girl. This deception holds until Kazuya runs into Shun using the urinal.
* Hey Arnold! and his crew had as children. Plus, several characters are inspired by real people Bartlett grew up with.
* Grand Theft Auto V, derives significant income from running guns from San Andreas down to Mexico. Since the Gunrunning update in Grand Theft Auto Online, your player character can become the Gangland Gunrunner type and manufacture and sell weapons as part of missions.
* Hey Arnold! throws the next round instead, humiliating her father and stepping out of Olga's shadow.
* Harry's twin brother Jim writes about him and their mother encountering Remus in a magical community in India.
* Hero, which was released in October 2002 in mainland China, didn't receive a North American release until August 2004.
* Gruntz, this is how Gruntz die (if not blown up, crushed falling into hazards, or exploded) - they turn into a pile of goo that can be later sucked up to reuse for creation of another grunt. Also said word for word as one of their death quotes.
* Hades, always up for being petted, and one of Zagreus's very best friends (much to the annoyance of Hades, Cerberus's other master).
* he's not being trained to defend Earth if/when the Formics/Buggers return for a third time, he's being trained to command the Human invasion and war of extermination against the Formic/Bugger colonies and homeworld.
* Gordon Meredith Lighfoot passed his middle name along to the next generation. He bestowed it as a first name—upon his daughter.
* had been thought impossible), which makes him sort of an odd example since his parentage is fully vampire rather than half, and yet not a vampire at all.
* heel matches were deemed to be good bathroom breaks (the worst for business).
* "Halloween of Horror" also fit here, though the former leans slightly more towards balanced than most examples from the show.
* Guilty Crown: The Lost Kingdoms that takes place as the series finale).
* Hate Plague: Something that causes people to become furious and hostile to each other.
* Grand Theft Auto (Misty), whose role is extremely minor. Considering that each game always has a few significant female characters, you'd think they'd use one of them.
* HBO, before they were forced to back down for fears of damaging their satellite, Galaxy 1. MacDougall still owns his business to this day, and has even dedicated a page of his website to the story of the incident.
* Grojband and wacky antics go too far. This is even lampshaded in the episode "It's in the Card", where she comments in a prerecorded message that she can often be "grumble grumble" and a "mother hen".
* Gundam 00's (the money does help though; keeping up to date on military equipment is expensive after all).
* Gyossait, the eldritch organs of the titular Earth goddess can mutate mortals into horrifying gods.
* Hellboy known as the Ogdru Jahad, and the title character being destined to one day unleash said abomination on the Earth with his Right Hand of Doom.
* Half-Identical Twins. (Also, Mabel wears braces while Dipper has a birthmark hidden under his bangs.)

* Gone with the Wind: Melanie is admonished for acknowledging Belle Watling, a painted woman who was a prosperous town prostitute. Later, Mammy has a fit when Scarlett asks her to buy her some rouge, outright stating that only whores wear "face paint".
* Guilty Gear, due to a superstition about same-sex twins being unlucky.
* Gosalyn once ran into what looked like a harmless alien pet named Wakko carrying a small, pickle like container that held a bunch of marbles in it in an episode of
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City, skipping almost half of what would normally be considered obligatory story missions and sidequests.
* Grrl Power superheroine Halo) losing a "Halo Lookalike Contest" to a much bustier contestant. Sydney isn't happy.
* he can't eat nor drink, for anything he tries to swallow also turns to gold. Eventually, he turns his daughter into gold by accident, leading him to beg for Dionysus to take back his wish and reverse everything, to which Dionysus obliges.
* Gyo, both the protagonist's girlfriend and his uncle's assistant both died (girlfriend) and are likely to die later on if not already dead (assistant).
* Gundam while a force of GMs will do the job at a fraction of the cost and so the Super Prototypes are best used as force multipliers at the hands of ace pilots, while for the latter as technology marches on Super Prototypes from earlier in the game will struggle against and later be completely outclassed by later models (e.g. the original RX-78 Gundam will barely be able to keep up against Zeta era mooks like Hi-Zacks).
* Hexe Lilli: Heracles tells Lilli to practice grape stomping and painting walls because those are the motions required to throw a discus. He eventually ends up giving her tips on actually throwing a discus as well.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. Both seem to highlight this element in their character songs, with Seychelles humming her song while the music isn't even playing and Taiwan singing about making problems go "poof."
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets because people had to see him doing something in response to attacks on Hogwarts students.
* He reacts similarly a few episodes later when the Emperor asks him about Custodes Companions.
* Hardware example: Div. Newcomers who have not yet read the older strips usually think he is a
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series Hal, Kilowog, and Razer's rings run out of power so they can't translate each others native tongues.
* Good Dog, Carl and its sequels feature a Rottweiler who is, in each book, left to take care of the baby. Subverted in that Carl often assists the baby — such as when he gives the baby a boost to crawl into the laundry chute (there was a full basket of soft laundry at the bottom) or takes the baby out to go window shopping and meet Santa.
* Hello Kitty. One of the buildings in the first town after the starting town is a giant sugar bowl (another building is a giant teacup).
* Highlander 'verse might fit, though it is unclear whether it's an actual place of protection or they won't fight there because of their rules.
* Guns Are Worthless: Depending on the setting. In real life, it depends on the situation. A pistol won't do much against an armored car or a .22 caliber target gun would be next to useless for hunting grizzly bears.
* Hanuman is a size-changing monkey man who is a passionately loyal retainer to his liege Rama. He takes any attack on Rama as an attack on him, and when Ravana kidnaps Rama's wife it is Hanuman who is to first to take up arms.
* Gratuitous Space Battles struggle to pin elusive microfighters, this is the game for you.
* Guns N' Roses (Data East) that the game has eight more original recordings which were taken off the masters.
* Heroes: This is pretty much Monica's power: she can do anything she's seen on TV or in real life.
* Gravity has short hair because she spends almost the entire movie in zero gravity.

* Green Lantern, have (and consist of) female leaders while the Blue Lanterns (Power Of Hope) are led by males.
* Going insane is a fairly common side effect of the revelations given to a candidate in a * Hearing this theme played straight at the inauguration of U.S. presidents is something that amuses British people — and Python-literate Americans — immensely. A possible urban myth has it that the British diplomatic contingent at the inauguration of President Clinton all, without fail, blew a squelching-raspberry noise at the end of the sixteenth bar. Some things become
* Gold Digger, though his version is a bit worse in that while he can copy any move he sees, he still has to figure out how best to use it, so some highly specialized moves would get him in more trouble than they're worth if he used them.
* has been planted inside the butthole of Mr. Slave. Someone suggests that the only way to retrieve it would be for someone to shrink and deactivate it manually. Of course, the player is the only one who can do that, but the rest of the characters on screen start trying to figure out who could do it to volunteer or to leave the room. Choosing the second option will cause the snuke to explode, and the game to show the TV-show-style credits prior to the "Game Over" screen.
* Hatsune Miku Project Diva F at points. There's also a selection of eyeglasses to buy for the characters with Diva Points.
* Henry Stickmin Series. In one of the choices, Henry can use the parachute to fall down from the roof, only to find out that the "parachute" is actually just a regular backpack. The fail screen lampshades this (see page quote).
* Halo 3: ODST was developed to evoke a Film Noir atmosphere as a lone soldier investigates an alien-occupied city.
* Harry wears a gold robe with red trim for his marriage to Hermione, while her father has a red robe with gold trim.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, called Hetalia Fantasia, has an MMORPG made by America and Japan that several characters join in.
* Gundam Seed, this nameless soldier stoically stands next to him watching the whole thing unfold, and he is also seen evacuating with Athrun and Cagalli when the fortress begins to self-destruct.
* Happy Heroes, Big and Little M. use a Trojan horse in Doctor H.'s Internet router. The Trojan horse is literally a giant rocking horse.
* Happy Tree Friends, and resumed in December 2006 after the TV series ended, finally ending in October 2007. Then it underwent another major hiatus from October 2010 to December 2011, and yet another one from March 2014 to December 2016. After 2016's episodes were released for free by 2019, no new updates have occurred since, leading some to believe that the show was cancelled.
* Grayson limited series has tarnished much of the previous goodwill, turning him into a source of mockery from many former fans.
* Heroic Sacrifice, is most likely going to Hell and one selfless act isn't enough to make up for it. Though Vegeta probably wanted a straight answer, anyways.
* Haikyuu!! are technically all jocks, with some——particularly our two main characters, being more passionate than others. And it is an absolute joy to watch these characters interact and play the game that they all love.
* Gracie family later exported into the US, founded the UFC in the same model and the rest is history.
* Heroes of Might and Magic V, Succubi are ranged attackers for the Inferno faction. While they act the part, only their alternative promotion in the second expansion actually have the ability to seduce enemies.
* Hell Night has this if you aren't careful with navigating the Tokyo's underground tunnels and sewers. All your party members can die, but you can only have one with you at a time.
* Glenn Close voices Mona throughout, but her "D'oh!" at the end was shouted by Pamela Hayden. This was because Hayden did the temp recording for the character and Close couldn't get the "D'oh!" right.
* He's also very protective of his family and doesn't want his fame to interfere with their safety.

* Heaven's Gate; its failure to get a wide theatrical release due to poor test screenings made him stop working on any more projects, as he died twenty years later.
* Hajime no Ippo "The only living super-legend" and it's said that there's a higher chance that Mexican citizens know him than their own president.
* Hamlet waited too long, and is very likely crazy. He does have a particular flaw, but what it is depends on interpretation and how he is presented. And yet in every production he is completely aware about this:
* Halle Berry, and is one herself, though she identifies as just Black.
* Hell has been a popular subject for many painters, the most famous of all being
* Going Postal the wizards, notorious diners all, are seen to construct elaborate architectural models using celery and lettuce leaves so as to increase the depth of a bowl by up to three times its intended size.
* Haunted Fetter: A physical object that binds a ghost to the living world.
* Good Morning, Miss Bliss. In fact, prologues to the episodes featuring narration by Zack were recorded for this.
* "Grandma, what does 'boyfriend' mean?" — "Boyfriend, boyfriend...Oh, boyfriend!" Grandma opens the closet, and a skeleton falls out.
* Heroes of the Storm has either golem-like mercs or various others, depending on the map.
* Goodfellas to him shouting to his family that he bought the most expensive Christmas tree he could. General fear about the problems associated with this trope, in addition to simple greed, leads to Jimmy having most of the co-conspirators killed in lieu of payment.
* Green Lantern Corps had a chance to be a Lantern. The look on his face when Soranik takes out the ring, then gives it to his sister, is satisfying.
* Have Gun – Will Travel has Paladin inheriting a small fortune and heading back East to handle the estate, though he does promise to be back for Hey Boy's wedding.
* Hannibal Rising, the German children song "Ein Männlein steht im Walde" is a central theme that continues through the whole movie. The last scene shows young Hannibal marching off to his next kill while a creepy, high-pitched children's choir sings the song.
* Gravity Falls. A history book about an ancient Aztec ritual slowly devolves into this kind of plot, starring a talking dog playing ollamalitzli.
* GoldenEye at Severnaya has been compared to orgasm, to the point where one may wonder if she was wielding an assault rifle or a sex toy. Given the expression her employer Ourumov has watching this, he's wondering the same thing.
* Gundam SEED throws this at Kira near the beginning, one of the prime reasons Kira continues to take up arms and fight.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Harry meets with the Diggorys at the end to talk to them about Cedric's death. Mr. Diggory sobs throughout, but the book notes that Mrs. Diggory seems beyond tears.
* Grand Romantic Gesture, they talk about how much better they are now than when they were first together.
* Haré+Guu anime in the first place, the fact that one of the main characters is this is to be expected.
* Glie/Guri takes place. Nobody is allowed to leave, only a few chosen people are allowed to interact with outlanders carrying supplies, and they must do so with sign language.
* Heart Of The Sunken Lands. One of the hazards of the Sunken Lands is quicksand. Any party encountering it will have 1-4 people fall into it. They will sink under the surface in 1-8 minutes (1-6 minutes if wearing armor or carrying a pack) unless pulled out by someone else.
* GLOW, Ruth is inspired to create her Zoya the Destroya persona after Gregory the Russian American hotel manager tells her that "In Russia, television watches you."
* Golgo 13-interrogated a man. Duke shows he's even cooler by calmly looking at his watch, whereupon half the buildings around them blow up.

* Hayate the Combat Butler. Hell, an entire chapter was devoted to him unwittingly doing this to various female classmates.
* hentai has Einstein, a ferret who growls and hisses whenever alien-possessed Flair is nearby.
* Goro Majima, one of the few people who can match Kiryu in the badass department, and who has (in all the senses of the word) disassembled yakuza families single-handedly, usually speaks in a screechy, sing-song falsetto with a thick Kansai accent, as befits his status as a
* Happy Endings hooks up with a women's lacrosse coach who records them having sex then uses it to coach Dave on his technique.
* Heroic Trio, all three main characters fight each other in different scenes before finally teaming up.
* Have yourself imprisoned in such a way that, if you are Kira, you will be forced to break the false rule.
* GURPS. Not only that, both the head and body were still alive, and since the head was still magically able to speak, if it knew any spells, it could still cast them! Of course, without the head, the body could not eat or drink, and would eventually die of dehydration or starvation. But this was not a problem either! Another spell allowed you to turn everything BUT the head into stone... and THEN you could decapitate him.
* Head", the second Blackadder thinks he is himself responsible for this when he reschedules Lord Farrow's execution from Wednesday to Monday so he can have the rest of the week off, only for the Queen to pardon Farrow on Tuesday. Fortunately, Baldrick had got it wrong as usual and beheaded Lord Ponsonby instead. Unfortunately, the Queen wants to pay Ponsonby a visit...
* Green heroes and cards focus on survival, bolstering the defenses and recovering the health of allied units and heroes.
* Green Lanterns to Flash and Lantern respectfully, are also shown as pretty close friends when the two are on the Justice League together.
* Hair of Gold, Heart of Gold: A love interest with gold or blonde hair and is pure-hearted.
* Green Arrow shaved his hair and beard during Mike Grell's "Black Arrow" arc.
* Good Bad Girl, what to others is naughty is just part of the joy of life to her.
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger shows the alternative. Watch the series and you'll notice that, for a Super Sentai parody/installment, there are very few instances where they use the show's zord, the Itassha Robo. Not only does the Itassha Robo have a very odd design that'd be challenging for a suit actor, but it's very small by the standards of sentai mecha, meaning that model cities are off-limits (and would probably blow the budget even if the zord were larger). As a result, it's always portrayed with CGI, which is expensive enough that it's only showed in a couple episodes.
* Hikari if she has already confessed Touji...in front of Touji. Both passed out.
* , has everyone living in virtual reality tanks a couple hundred years in the future. The husband "goes" to a virtual office and does virtual paperwork, while the wife sits at "home", does virtual housework and watches virtual soap operas all day. When the husband comes "home", he complains because the wife hasn't gotten around to punching the selector buttons for the evening nutripaste meal yet.
* Happy Heroes, a bear attacks Big M. and makes off with his bread. It comes back at the end of the episode, this time going after his fish.
* Hilda: In episode 4, Hilda does this to David on the picture Frida takes for their gardening project.
* Gradisil. Because of the whole weightlessness thing, a hugely powerful rifle fired during a space walk would have a tendency to fire the shooter backwards off whatever he was standing on. Instead of the obvious solution (fastening the shooter or gun to the deck) the guns are specifically designed to emit an equal and opposite blast of gas on firing meaning that the net recoil is zero. Unfortunately, Roberts tends to forget that the same implications apply when guns are fired inside space craft.
* God, the Devil and Bob:The Devil wants to tempt Bob into sin so he'll go to hell, just to spite God.

* Great Mazinger: Most of the Warrior Beasts, created by fusing a living warrior's brain into a monstrous cyborg body, have the warrior's original head visible somewhere on their body. For their enemies, this is a welcome exploitable weakpoint.
* Happy Birthday to You!: It's someone's birthday, but nobody sings "Happy Birthday" because the work was made during the time when the song was under copyright.
* Granblue Fantasy. The season is set to Winter and enemies are based on characters or concepts from several Christmas-related stories or tales.
* Gundam 00's second season had one after every episode, often with crucial plot developments, much to the chagrin of fans when the dub got aired on Sci Fi, as they got cut out.
* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de - Hachiyou Shou) shows Sefuru holding their baby.
* Greater-Scope Villain at the time, but later chapters have painted this less as total control and more as giving him the motive and letting him handle the rest.
* Heaven Sent Gaming when they started it in 2006. They had started dating in 2004, and they got married on their tenth anniversary in 2014. They are still with the group, and they continue to create stuff.
* Hellraiser, blood is the only thing that will restore Frank to human from his undead form.
* Hilda is on) enter this nowhere space, since it's out of control so the only alternative is crashing into the town wall and either die or get caught. While Hilda, Johanna and Tontu are lucky and emerge seconds later on the other side of the wall, Jellybean and his owner disappear into the void. At the end of the episode, we see they're fine and ended up in the wilderness near Hilda's old house. But the protagonists don't find out, at least not this season.
* Haley gets slammed against the floor with a greataxe wielded by a giant cleric), the panels are identical.
* Hadersdorf im Kamptal/Hadersdorf-Weidlingau; Neusiedl am See/Neusiedl an der Zaya/Neusiedl bei Güssing.
* Happy Heroes, even Careful S., who is usually stoic, is bawling his eyes out.
* HABIT's updates on "Can You See The Words?" included blogs written by people HABIT was torturing, speaking about their situation and what HABIT was doing to them, shortly before they ended up dying.
* Gohan does this with Videl after the latter's match with Spopovitch.
* Harpo Marx and his wife Susan had four adopted children, and were always open with said children about the fact that they were adopted (which was relatively rare at the time) because they wanted their children to accept this fact and see it in a positive light, rather than ever wondering if they were less wanted or loved than a biological child would have been. In his autobiography, Harpo describes how one day, at the age of twelve, his second son came to him, wanting to discuss the adoption.
* Help! I'm a Fish, Fly tricks Joe into drinking more of the fish potion antidote that increases brain power by asking him several questions... when he asks Joe what happens if a fish drinks too much of it, Joe replies, "It becomes human!" And then...
* Harmless Villains walks away, though that may be because they pointed them to the refreshments on the way out.
* Gothika Miranda Grey. It makes it very easy to show where he's been.
* Happens everytime when a new major character, mostly antagonists, appears in
* Guardians of the Flame series. He and his friends are roleplayers brought to a D&D-style fantasy world in the bodies of their characters and ultimately pledge to drive slavery out of their new home.
* Hercules who wishes to overthrow his brother in order to rule Mount Olympus — even hurting his heroic nephew, who is destined to stop him.
* Heroman fill this role from the simple fact that they NEVER. EVER. Seem to stay beaten.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City, because it can kill in one hit. But Katanas Are Just Better because Tommy can run with them and still kill in one hit. However, the chainsaw does much more damage to objects (like cars) than the katana.

* Heavy Object a military unit checking ships for contraband was bribed to ignore a human trafficking ring.
* Guardians of the Galaxy in various background shots, such as in Knowhere and many of the Ravagers that make up Yondu's crew. Although given Rocket calls Peter "humie", it would seem that "human" in the MCU is not limited to "Terran".
* Happy Ending Override: The sequel effectively undoes a character's happy ending from a previous installment.
* Goof Troop, Pete had this done to him by his daughter Pistol, much to his discomfort. The clip is also in the intro.
* Guyver the only real difference is recruiting ads and posters and a Zoanoid Boy Band.
* Graham McNeill says that he knows it, and he's damned proud of them.
* Harry becomes pregnant after a single non-consensual encounter with Charlie Weasley, who was under a glamour and got Harry drunk.
* Help! I'm a Fish, a potion has turned the three main characters into fish, and if they don't take the antidote within 48 hours, they'll be stuck as fish forever.
* Harry is a Dragon, and That's Okay that allows him to breathe water, and even the Bubble-Head Charm.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, the three's relationship basically becomes this.
* Happy Heroes: The aliens in episode 4 capture Big M. and Little M., intending to put them on display like zoo animals.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, and he isn't content with being the only naked one.
* Hawke's younger twin siblings, Bethany and Carver, have a brother-sister version of this dynamic until
* Gudrun kills her own children who she births, then feeds them to to Attila the Hun.
* God of War (PS4) was this not long after its release, becoming the highest-rated PS4 exclusive in the proccess. In the month of April 2018, the PS4 outsold both the Xbox One X and the Nintendo Switch.
* Halloween, Michael strangles Lydia to death with a phone cord just as she calls Laurie. Michael then picks up the phone to listen to Laurie's frantic cries, before calmly hanging up.
* Gulliver's Travels: the six-inch-tall Lilliputians call the average-looking Gulliver exceptionally ugly, to his consternation; when he meets the giants of Brobdingnag, their enormous size makes all the tiny imperfections of their faces revoltingly obvious to him. Also inverted, since Gulliver thinks the Lilliputians are very handsome and receives the same praise himself in Brobdingnag.
* Hero Factory of the Savage Planet arc, doesn't care about that. He begins illegally mining on Quatros, and the Heroes have to stop him before the planet dies from having its core depleted.
* GURPS not only does exactly what it says on the tin but allows total recovery from essentially anything but death or dismemberment.
* Heel–Face Turn, albeit with a good bit of comic relief mixed in
* Golden Age features 3 periods of time: the '40s, the '60s and modern day, each drawn in styles reminiscent of what was found in comic books of respective eras. The Retraux is especially noticeable in the colours.
* Hand of Thrawn. When Han Solo finally sees the (fake) Grand Admiral and has his suspicions deftly countered, it's a shock. Thrawn was, after all, alarmingly good at anticipating what people would do.
* Grand Finale. When even that is not enough to make Shen talk, she pretends to break his finger, except she breaks her own finger, knowing it'll heal, and Shen makes a pained sound.
* Hells Highway (1932) is another classic prison expose film about prisoners working hard labor on a chain gang.
* Hellraiser: Inferno, Joseph keeps seeing visions where random people's faces momentarily transform into eyeless Cenobite faces.
* Highlander Adrian Paul as MacLeod, there’s Belgian Alexandra Vandernoot as the French Tessa and Methos, who somehow has Peter Wingfield’s British accent despite being of unknown descent and having lived all over the world. It is possible for him to be fair skinned if he was from someplace in Europe as we might infer from his Bronze Age pillaging of Europe, but we don’t know.

* Heroes, the characters discovered that Matt Parkman's son had an ability this way. They tried to turn off the TV, but Baby Matt Parkman made it turn back on every time. They even unplugged it. Made no difference.
* Hand Wave the flaws inherent to the medium back then. It'll take time to stop analyzing every minute detail, but if you stick with good quality entertainment you'll rarely be disappointed.
* Her Name Is replaces any personal details of the woman in question with music - except for the fact she's married.
* Goof Troop to one of their parents show them agreeing surprisingly often.
* hearing Peggy swing the paddle causes them (and Boomhauer and Bill) to involuntarily twitch as if they'd been struck.
* Herodotus one-ups Euhemeris by trying to equate Egyptian mythology and Greek mythology.
* Here There Be Monsters ambush turns around to taunt them about their inability to catch her right before she leaps to safety and gets shot through the head almost immediately.
* Grain nymphs (first appearing in the Dragonlance setting) can go either way. Usually benevolent to humans (and looked down upon by their kin as city-slicker snobs) their presence can
* Highlander is based upon a specific threat to reveal their existence to the world.
* Hatoful Boyfriend are birds and represented by stock images. Sakuya's magnificent plumage is mentioned as beautiful a few times, and the picture's impressive - there are two other birds of his species around, but their portraits don't include their tails. In the second game the first time the protagonist talks to Yuuya her narration says, "Oh, no... the irresponsible and slightly worn-out Yuuya might be just a little too attractive..."
* Good Morning, Vietnam: Adrian Cronauer tries to get a relationship started with a local Vietnamese girl, but while the latter eventually warms to him, the relationship remains platonic. Also the girl he goes after is the third (fourth?) one he sees wearing identical white robes and straw hat, and (probably jokingly) thinking she's "following" him, he obsessively goes after her; "Asian Fever" seems oddly appropriate for how he was acting (blaming it on being surrounded by Grecian women, who he claims are hairy).
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire Someone want to... look into that?
* Goldie Vance that stretches for several panels when she learns that her former rival Sugar Maple left her a fancy new car as a going-away present for helping arrest her sister, who had sabotaged Sugar's race car and nearly killed her with a radio-controlled explosive.
* Heneral Luna as it was in history, the Philippine Army was barely able to hold on when fighting the encroaching Americans, being poorly-trained and suffering from a lack of resources. Thanks to the titular General Antonio Luna and his military genius, they were able to keep the fight up. After his death at the hands of his own countrymen, the situation becomes so bad that the Filipinos are routed in many battles unable to even kill any of their enemies in return.
* Gloryhammer, Proletius has been corrupted by Zargothrax's Knife of Evil, and turned the Knights to the service of Evil.
* Have I Got News for You (British satirical panel show, started 1990 and still going despite several libel cases and not having a permanent presenter since sacking Angus Deayton in 2002)
* Goblins B-comic Tempts Fate has the hero perform based on the number of donations the readers send in. Needless to say, Tempts Fate wins every battle with extreme ease, and the readers can feel the accomplishment of having helped along this overwhelming victory.
* Hero System has twin female bodyguards named Starrlight and Starrbright.

* Greg Egan likes this trope, frequently either using it or at least paying lip service to it. His stories are rarely if ever entirely focused on LGBT+ issues, but rather they're folded into a larger concept of humanity and society. Overall, Egan's stories tend to advance a progressive viewpoint, with LGBT+ characters treated very sympathetically by the story. More often than not, the LGBT+ demographic in question has been completely normalized in the setting.
* He said every word on the list in that specific episode, resulting in a few odd lines like "hot diggity daffodil", although the majority of the list has
* Gravion, there is the message "Planetaly Defence System All Destroyed A Decased Citizen 10,000,000 STATUS CLITICAL!"
* He also has a brief (but fairly noticeable) appearance in the film version of
* Hellsister Trilogy, who looks like a flesh-and-blood voluptuous human woman, but in reality is a human-shaped mass of negative emotions and dark impulses with power enough to crumble whole planets to dust.
* High Spirits, Clara Harvey says: "Cousin Helena sent me the American papers." This is a reference to Keeley's own cousin of that name, who at the time of writing was training as a pilot in the USA.
* Grrl Power that also prevents teleporters like Harem from going through (in either directions).
* Happened in the late '10s in South African politics, regarding the publication of unflattering non-fiction books.
* Gunnerkrigg Court as described above, but in its gentle, dreamlike way it's one of the weirdest webcomics around, where just about anything could happen. At the same time, school year rolls along, and regardless of whether you're trapped in a nightmare parallel world, are a half-elemental, can teleport, or simply are slowly transforming into a bird, you need to catch classes.
* Greek). This is to be expected (see the fraternity entry under "Real Life" examples).
* Great Mazinger to save the world, and training kids to pilot them. The result was his two biological children not even knowing he was alive -long story- and his adoptive son's huge issues never were addressed.
* Glee: Terri spells out to Will that the only reason their marriage works is because it's one of these. Will, actually wanting to be in a healthy relationship, leaves.
* hadn't into it. It just happens that "Yesteryear" is the closest anyone has to that record.
* Hellsing "I Love War" speech to the Last Battalion. Sure, a Nazi says it, but it's still rousing.
* Hard Edge introduces herself to whoever enters the warehouse area early in the game by trying to drop kick them from atop of a huge crate.
* Gratuitous Special Effects: Special Effects in film genres that don't usually have them.
* Great Big Sea"), the king gives him the princess's hand in marriage and offers to make him "the lord of my lands." (For contrast, see the folksong "Princess Dysie," in which the princess has become pregnant by Roger the kitchen boy. In this song, the king has Roger's head cut off and sent up to the princess.)
* Half of his jaw was blown off by an exploding round. Not only did he get up eleven days later, he demanded to get back to the front, request which was denied by the government due to
* Hellsister Trilogy travels to Hell to merge himself with the source of black magic and evolve from supremely powerful evil sorcerer into evil god.
* God Empresses in season 2 basically caused all the speculation to implode in on itself and then outward again into entirely new directions. This is further complicated by "Hearth's Warming Eve", where it is shown that they weren't around for the founding of Equestria, apparently appearing later.
* Harry Potter Comics spell to stop a nuclear missile aimed at London. The next panel pages show various newspaper articles showing Harry and other wizards, with the headline "Magic Is Real."
* Hamilton) their affair and blackmails Hamilton into giving him money.

* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, the title object turns out to be one of these, as you might expect. It produces the Elixir of Life, which makes the drinker temporarily immortal.
* Grand Theft Auto V, barely speaks a word of English, and performs a Nazi salute.
* Goblins are typically portrayed this way in every edition, due to their lot as one of the smallest and weakest of evil humanoids.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged. Indeed, in the marathon that aired prior to the grand finale, Taka and Kaiser both iterated that they considered Episodes 2 and 4 to be peak cringe for the series.
* Halt and Catch Fire. Joe and Cameron, after years of hard work, are about to put up the search engine they believe will revolutionize the then-growing Internet. Just as they're about to, they see another engine up called Yahoo. Cameron mocks the design but Joe points out it's already on the toolbar. Thus, any other search engine will be ignored as all their hard work is for nothing.
* Gravity Falls episode "Gideon Rising", Grunkle Stan goes to Greasy's Diner and orders "your strongest, most expired cider" to drown his sorrows over losing the Mystery Shack to Gideon Gleeful and having to send Dipper and Mabel home early.
* Haruhi Suzumiya orchestrated? Check. Abducts people just because she thinks they're interesting? Check. Treats people as objects and is generally incapable of comprehending the fact that other people possess feelings that differ from her own? Check.
* Götterdämmerung, when Siegfried tells Brünnhilde that Gunther is now her husband, she exclaims in shock: "I? Gunther? Thou liest!"
* Green as a color. Its creatures have been powered up and cheapened over the years (compare * Goosebumps which features various sci-fi or fantasy monsters in each book.
* he'll be killed. He then works with them to set the building on fire so the prisoners can run in and trash the place under the pretext of fighting the fire.
* headshots, where a regular pistol is messy and makes it immediately obvious to anyone nearby that they just saw someone die, but a tranquilizer to the face will simply have them wonder why their buddy suffered a random bout of narcolepsy, kick him awake, and shrug it off.
* Gordy was abandoned as a small child because his parents feared his necromantic powers, but he was found and adopted by some kind people who weren't afraid of him, but instead took care of him as they travelled the world and taught him all they knew about necromancy. He clearly considers them to be his
* Hannibal is a prime example. The show has always had cameras lingering on its aesthetically pleasing male leads, but it really started in Season 3 when showrunner Bryan Fuller started to care less and less about expectations. Here we were treated to Francis Dolarhyde (Richard Armitage beefed up) doing close-up sweaty yoga in short shorts. Later Hannibal himself is shown naked, tied down in a bondage-like manner.
* hate the Other's creations so much, which the Jägers consider abhorrent.
* Going on the evidence in-game, only certain robots were built with emotions and independence - those designed by Mother Brain specifically to
* Hans Christian Andersen, the mermaid was a heroic young maiden with an intoxicating voice but forever bound to the sea. The land-princess is a little more housewifely and dutiful but has legs. It should be noted, though, that the prince didn't know he was in one of these. He had no idea the mermaid wasn't just a regular woman, so this didn't factor into his choice.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983)! Apparently, Horde Prime was right to worry about the Christmas Spirit being infectious.
* Healing Vat while alien bacteria healed his wounds, with Karai having to manage the Foot till his return.
* GURPS technology. This is the final option, with the comment "It's not cheating unless you get caught."
* Guardian Fairy Michel, since nature is out of balance, sharks attack Donna and her son Will in episode 3.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, Harold is unable to confess his love for Maria until the very end.

* Hell's Gate features a world of psychics and a world of mages in a war. On the psychic side called Sharona, about 1/4 of the population has a form of psychic talent, ranging from telepathy to being able to teleport small objects. There are two types of psychic bonds shown. Married couples get a bond allowing a form of telepathy between them, even when only one is a Voice able to do true telepathy. (It's also shown to be extremely useful when one is a Voice, a telepath specializing in distance communication and perfect recall of memories, and the other has a power such as mapping where they can terrain map anything with in 5 miles.)
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, it was revealed that, when Voldemort killed his Muggle relatives, the residents of the village where they lived were sure the victims' gardener, Frank Bryce, was the murderer, despite the police having to release Bryce due to being unable to prove the victims were murdered in the first place (the Killing Curse doesn't leave marks that can be detected by non-magical forensics). He lived under suspicion for the rest of his life, and ultimately died when Voldemort returned to the village to hide out one night and he subsequently went to investigate.
* Harry Hill's TV Burp, as these often tend to sneak up on the audience.
* Good Omens gives directions like this, complete with tangents aggravated by his self-righteous tendencies.
* Green Hell: Stranded in the Amazon jungle, the main character stumbles upon an old gold mine and can pick up a sack of gold. It's of no use in the game, and the character comments on how he could have sold it online if were back in civilization.
* Happens again with Zorin leading an attack on HQ when the Nazis arrive in London. This attack was far more successful, leaving the headquarters in ruins and bringing the Hellsing organization down to three members before being defeated.
* Hank survives Tuco and the Cousins by chance several times, and kills one of the Cousins just because he wanted to make a show of it.
* He continues to invoke this in the 2012 reboot too. The first time is with Sweet Tooth, who wants to find and kill the daughter of Marcus Kane, his initial persona. But it turns out that his target, Sophie, was
* Gunnerkrigg Court; so after he died, the robots had to simplify their designs in order to maintain themselves. So, basically, they evolved based on not-Intelligent-enough Design.
* He doesn't use the words, but lifelong assassin Thane's expression and tone when he realises his son has stepped away from Thane's own path and is spending time with the drell priesthood says it all.
* Gunnerkrigg Court the very first time they met. It has been explained since that Gamma's powers work as a sort of white noise generator that covers up Zimmy's uncontrollable psychic bursts with calming stream of consciousness.
* Hawaii Five-O called "Welcome To Our Branch Office" had a crew of lookalikes that impersonated McGarrett and the rest of the team as an extortion scheme to get businesses to pay the fake Five-O "protection money".
* Hell King Bass during a flashback. Better yet, all of his body except for the head was annihilated. Unfortunately, he is a near-immortal mazoku, who can continue to exist even in this state, and he was swift to obtain a pupped to haul his (literally) disembodied head around.
* He attempts to counter by going to the place of origin of the Sands, in hope of finding a way to solve the problem with
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. Happens several times in the anime (both seasons) when an emergency occurs in the mansion, sometimes with rotating lights and sirens.
* Harry Dresden's phone number, shown in a picture of his phone book entry in the game, is (312) 555-4-WIZ.
* Harrison Gray Otis, third mayor of Boston, Massachusetts, was apparently this for his wife Sally. He once wrote to a friend that he'd never intended to marry or have children until he met her, and after that happened, there was no chance of him falling for anyone else. They were married for 46 years until her death (1790-1836), apparently quite happily, and had 11 children.

* Gone with the Wind he's doing this in regard to marrying Scarlett instead of her sister Suellen, who he's been courting for years, thanks to Scarlett's lie that Suellen's going to marry someone else.
* H7D3 series ultimately turns the infected into feral, non-sapient cannibalistic animals who are human only in a biological sense and will attack anything that draws their attention.
* Heroes has two characters (Adam and Claire) whose power is essentially to always have a Disney Death: they come back to life, assuming that something isn't preventing them from regenerating, and if the thing is removed they regenerate as normal. This also allows Peter and Sylar to gain similar powers, from their abilities to absorb powers of others. To make matters ridiculous, it's revealed that if anyone is given a transfusion of Claire's (or Peter's) blood, they regenerate as well. This allows characters that have been definitely killed off to come back if needed (it may be that you can receive this transfusion even if you're dead — HRG must have been cold before he got his transfusion).
* Harry Potter's world has Dementors, who guard the prison of Azkaban. Dementors sense and feed on the positive emotions, happiness and good memories of human beings, forcing them to relive their worst memories. It is notable that Dumbledore is against the use of Dementors, considering them cruel and unusual punishment (as well as a natural fifth column for Dark wizards).
* GURPS Various PDF supplements describe even more, as found in specific fantasy worlds, developed for use in zero-G in an SF setting, and so on.
* Henry Hugglemonster, who is known for never riding in airplanes because he's terribly afraid of heights. He and his family spend most of the story trying to hide from Mr. Growl the fact the house is in the air, while also searching for a way to take care of the balloon problem.
* Heckle and Jeckle's hotel in "Messed Up Movie Makers," but they're causing damage to the property in doing so. The magpies sleathily sabotage the production in a bid to get rid of them.
* Heartcore) in the first of many rebellious signs of protest against her father.
* Goof Troop, Max hasn't seen his (now college age) cousin Debbie in a while. By his own admission, she's now super hot.
* Heart of Crown, where players are attempting to get their Princess to become the ruler of the land. Featuring anime style artwork, set in a low fantasy world.
* Harbinger, Flamingo and Torque are happy to mooch off of Peter's mind-control abilities in order to steal money and cars and stay in hotels for free. And Peter's pretty brutal to his enemies, either mind-wiping them or sentencing them to lives of torment and insanity if he's angry enough. The only really "white" member of the team is Zephyr.
* Goggles and the Tears. He brutally scratches the needle against the record in response.
* Harry's Game by Gerald Seymour. The protagonist realises an IRA suspect was involved in the assassination he's investigating because Harry hears he couldn't 'perform' with his girlfriend the night before, implying he was nervous about what was going to happen tomorrow.
* Hairstyle Inertia: A character's hair remains the same throughout their life
* Haunter: Played with. Lisa (ghost) tries to warn Olivia (living) about the evil spirit in the house by writing on Olivia's arm while controlling her body, but this is quickly halted when the evil spirit catches her.
* Hancock: Only one character manages to see through the appearance to heroism.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, after Quill and Gamora are captured by Yondu, Quill manages to talk them out of executing them. Cue Rocket, Drax and Groot attacking the ship to rescue the two.
* Good Girls Avoid Abortion: Pregnant women are portrayed as being more good for choosing to carry their pregnancies.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: Composer Tyler Bates appears as a Ravager pilot.
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age, the interior of Gaia Rock consists of a room with four entryways and a single plant growing in the middle. Walking into the doors at random will lead you back to the same room (except the bottom one which leads back to the exit no matter how many rooms you'd crossed), but using Growth on the plant will cause its leaves to grow into an arrow pointing the right way.

* Hank and Jan's fight starts when Jan is wearing a new dress and asks Pym if she looks nice. He asks, all grumpy, if it's for Rogers' or Stark's benefit, before pointing out Jan kissed Steve just after they beat the Hulk, and that she obviously isn't wearing heels and a push-up bra for Hank's benefit since he's not going to any party. Things go
* Gravitation, 28-year-old Noriko is married to the university professor Tetsuya Ukai who looks old enough to be her grandfather. It's implied that he might not be as old as he appears, though.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, with the author proclaiming "I called it" on a reveal he himself wrote.
* Grim Trigger: Valamar overthrows the Grey Prince in book 4 using this method.
* Grow will burn his underwear (which is his only clothes) after trying to ride a dog made of fire. He stay naked until the end of the game but by that moment you only see him from the back.
* Green Worldz 30 years from the future, traveled back through time and changed the entire course of the war with the female human hybrid, ensuring the survival of some of his comrades.
* He concedes to Skyler's demands to handover Junior and Holly for safekeeping. Also, whenever Skyler and Saul advised killing Hank and Jesse to safeguard Walt's secret, Walt tried to Take a Third Option
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger tend to be characters who are being released as part of the Figuarts series.
* Headbanger Mosh Then one day Headbanger Thrasher showed up with footage of Marianna applying makeup to fake the bruises. Marianna was taken away by the police and never seen again, and the Headbangers reunited and went on to do absolutely nothing.
* Gold Digger we've seen the government's Agency Zero take care of an alien recruit. Though frankly there's enough weirdness it wouldn't be surprising if their government's non-shadowy branches had official forms for aliens, people from lost or hidden civilizations, and dimensional travelers, at least in one of the 'weirdness magnet' areas, of which there are several.
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret. Though otherwise she isn't prone to cosplay due to the fact that she hides her love of anime from her peers.
* has a door on the Green Moon behind which a demon is imprisoned. The Eleventh Doctor barely stops a criminal breaking them out.
* Higurashi: When They Cry where often even the unreliable expositors don't realize what they're saying is nonsense, or it's completely irrelevant or even just misleading. After all, the characters are trying to work out what's going on at the same time as the reader. Apart from not knowing whether their conclusions are correct, a lot of the time characters are going crazy or getting paranoid.
* here) were very large swords, frequently exceeding five feet in length. The montante was usually used against other weapons, while the Spadone was used in the same fashion, but also used in duels. They averaged 5-6lbs, and were quite maneuverable.
* Herbie comic is extremely uncommunicative, has no interest in social interaction of any kind, usually shows absolutely no visible emotions, and seems utterly indifferent to what other people think of him.
* Gravity Falls the lyrics of which include the line: "Never don't not feel your feelings!"
* gnomes, the goblins are extremely materialistic and Mafia-esque. They bear the strongest resemblance to a parody of modern American culture, complete with the thick New Jersey accents and having a time period that resembles the period of Americana from the 1920's to the 1960's with garden flamingos in decoration in their yards and using Jazz as their theme of music.
* Hc Svnt Dracones that carries passengers, such as the adventuring party, onto enemy ships.

* having Negi punch him as hard as he could moment...and then Jack coughs up a torrent of blood and socks Negi for punching too hard.
* Grandia. The heroes lure the villains into the train engine, where they had stoked up the fire really high and then broke the brakes. Then they detached the passenger cares, trapping the villains in the engine. While nobody was hurt, by the time the engine had slowed down enough for the villains to safely leave, they were too far away to be an immediate threat.
* Hedwig and the Angry Inch- Hansel and Luthor (an American stationed in East Germany) are both on the East side of the Berlin Wall but in order to cross over and move with him to America, Hansel must become Hedwig to marry him. The song "Angry Inch" details the botched sex change operation, and the song "Tear Me Down" explicitly compares Hedwig to the wall itself- "Ladies and gentlemen, Hedwig is like that wall! Standing before you in a divide between East and West, slavery and freedom, man and woman, top and bottom."
* handwave says that you can't design something to accurately predict human behavior unless that something is at least as smart as a human itself.
* Higurashi: When They Cry begins by showing blood which has just fallen into the water.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, when the emponymous character made a student film, Yuki Nagato was cast in the role of an alien witch.
* Gundam Wing Zero must have been developed before mobile suits were even invented. This isn't counting the fact that the V2 Assault Buster Gundam, mentioned above, is rolled out of the factory within a few years of the original RX-78 Gundam. So Yeah.
* Herbert George Wells. Incredulous, Stein confirms that his name is "H.G. Wells". The boy ends up liking this form of his name.
* Grand Theft Auto, any one of them. Blow away a boatload of innocent people and cops? Lose your guns and pay a fine. Only much of a problem if it's early in the game and you have little money or it's later in the game and you lose all your good guns.
* Halo, with the writers focusing more on expanding the rest of the universe.
* Good Wings, Evil Wings: Demons frequently have bat wings in contrast to the bird wings of angels
* Good Eats, in the episode "Behind the Eats," Alton explains the disappearance of his "nephew" Elton. The kid who played him grew up and went to college. The college in question? West Point.
* Grimtooth's Traps books, this trope is cited in the name of the so-called "Soprano Chest", which has a heavy lid and a board sticking out at the bottom front, designed such that when the chest is opened, the whole thing tips over backward, sending the board up between a character's legs.
* Gul Dukat quite deliberately uses this trope in all his appearances. True, he's one of the show's primary antagonists, responsible for many pre-series atrocities, and a * Haven has an episode where the Troubled of the Week is a photographer whose pictures turn their subjects intangible and invisible as soon as they're rendered. According to the creator of the Troubles it evolved over time, as originally it was tied to finishing a portrait painting. Destroying the portraits restores the victims.
* Guards! Guards!, Sam Vimes confronts the villain behind the dragon attacks and tells him "You'll never get away with it!" The bad guy retorts that "never is a very long time" and has Vimes taken away by the palace guard.
* had for completing the Strength Confidant. While the protagonists are fooled because they don't have the real Igor to compare him to, any player familiar with the previous games would sense something rotten from his first appearance.
* Hidden Wire: An undercover cop or informant hides a small microphone under their clothes in order to record some incriminating conversations with a criminal.
* He was defeated in a way that's normally ignored: despite being the only vampire on-screen to survive being staked (twice), he was humiliated and left in disgrace.
* Greyfriars. "I say, keep that beast Coker off! I wasn't in his study when he found me there, the suspicious beast! I wasn't after his cake! There wasn't any cake, and I never touched it, and I had hardly a mouthful when the brute came in! I say, you fellows — ow! Oh crikey!"

* Grand Galloping Gala will play out just like a fairy tale, with her introduction to the country's most eligible stallion (the princess' nephew) who instantly falls in love with her and marries her after a whirlwind romance.
* He does eventually feel guilty about forcing Treecko to battle, and ends up beating Brawly in a rematch.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 3 episode 6, Little M. disguises himself as his own mother for a parent-student conference at school. He winds up having to make it look like both he and his mother are there at the same time, including making it look like the two are speaking to each other.
* he claims that he is born of "chalk", in contrast to the other humans of Teyvat who are born of "soil", and professes a kinship to the Traveler who is from another world. He also claims to have no memories of any blood relatives. One of his talents is also "Homuncular.
* Happy Heroes, Starshadow does a spit take all over Moondance when he realizes how close Careful S. is to their secret base.
* Harry Turtledove. Atvar agrees but claims that the Race will survive.
* Halo 2 protagonist Jan fight off a guy trying to rape a woman as a gang initiation test.
* Here's another article that explores ways of avoiding the Masquerade Paradox.
* Happens towards the end of Ice Age 3. The main characters have succeeded in rescuing Sid and are heading towards the exit of the lost world. However, once they reach the tunnel, the previously cheery music turns downright unsettling and Rudy emerges from the cave.
* Heterogenia Linguistico. The werewolves give Hakaba a blanket, since he doesn't have fur to keep him warm. He wonders if it's the pelt of a dead werewolf. Susuki alleviates his fears by explaining that it's made of shed fur glued to a cloth... and the fur is from her dead grandma.
* Global Agenda gives bonuses for having less than 4-6 casualties, depending on the mission. Team size can be up to 4 or 10 people, depending on the mission.
* Hell's Rebels, Cheliax crushes the Glorious Reclamation but the Silver Ravens are successful in their own revolt, and Ravounel secedes from Cheliax. The sea elves of the Dismal Nitch and the strix of Ravounel Forest and persuaded to join the new nation, although Vyre chooses to go its own way as an independent city-state, and Kintargo's Lord-Mayor Jilia Bainilus is cured of her vampirism and becomes the nation's first ruler.
* Half Full is killed in the first episode only to be brought back a few minutes later, due to a cosmic technicality.
* Halloween. Ditto for poor old Doc Loomis, who's never able to put Myers down permanently.
* Hermione on a magic fast is unable to open a jar, and Bella opens it for her with her jar opener. That she would need Bella's help, of all people, depresses Hermione even further.
* GoodFellas. After the Lufthansa heist, everyone related to said heist to begins to turn up dead. Then, even more people start dying, including his best friend.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, but most of the movie was shot in Canada. The White Castle in the end was actually constructed on site because there are no White Castles in Canada.
* Godzilla: Final Wars films of the 1960s-1970s in which all four of them were allies.
* Hey Arnold! with him in the first place (which isn't really that surprising, actually.)
* G-Men, you just told people to shut up in the name of the US Government. And they did! Of course, all this came crashing down when Hoover's image got revamped into that of a power-hungry transvestite, wantonly violating the civil rights of anyone whose politics he didn't agree with.
* Halloween Episode, showing up to work covered in blood and later mentioning to the camera crew what a lucky coincidence it was that it was Halloween.

* Grim Fandango, and so everybody smokes like chimneys. The joke? It takes place in the Land of the Dead, so all the characters are already deceased. Walking, talking skeletons can't get lung cancer because they have no lungs.
* Grand Theft Auto V, they do a realistic pounce and bite onto your neck. They appear in locations where you don't see coyotes, and can even appear in the outskirts of Los Santos, whee they attack pedestrians.
* Her powers can't even be flashy because most of the time they're invisible, meaning you can't even see the forcefields massacring her foes.
* Hamlet, since other species can't read their body language or inflections, this is one of the funniest moments in the game. And yes, the sequel includes an advert showing clips.
* Heroes can occasionally do this. It's not quite as epic as most Kamehame Hadoken attacks, but it looks very much the same.
* Greek Mythology, e.g. Geryon's watchdog Orthus from the tale of Heracles.
* Guilty Party always leaves rhyming Valentine's cards for his victims.
* Heavily deconstructed during the second half of the main quest: another 10.000 years pass, during with most of the mortal elves decide to go into magical hibernation. One family of elves (who happen to look most like the "classical" elf of Western mythology) decide not to, and try to live a peaceful and fullfilling mortal life. The thing is — they just can't stop counting the years. Their youngest son, who was brought up by mortals in a tribe of immortals, decides that hibernation is a better alternative, because counting the years would make him go
* Harry Turtledove the aliens try their truth drug on one of the protagonists, but all it does is make him rather giggly. With some difficulty, he manages to keep his cover story straight. The aliens don't know this, so they believe his story that he's an innocent civilian and let him go.
* Hamilton by virtue of it being a hip-hop musical set in the late 1700s/early 1800s. For example, the song "Non-Stop" contains both the lines "Corruption's such an old song that we can sing along in harmony" and "Yo, who the eff is this?"
* "Green Isn't Your Color" sees Fluttershy becoming a fashion model, and Rarity tries to be supportive, despite secretly being insanely envious of Fluttershy's success. Meanwhile, Fluttershy is secretly growing tired of being in the spotlight, but keeps up with it because Rarity's being so supportive and she doesn't want to disappoint her. They both confide their true feelings in Twilight Sparkle, who
* Happy Heroes, the Supermen are completely unaware that Big M. and Little M. are trying to invade their home planet and send out most of the monsters they fight — even if the evidence is right there in plain sight.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, Mikuru did this to Kyon during the Mysterique Sign episode in response to seeing the giant cricket that was about to attack them.
* has this to say when Diesel 10 reveals that he helped Sailor John kill David's father:
* Heroes would later cast Deanne Bray as the deaf character Emma, with her power of enhanced synesthesia being tied into her disability.
* Harry Potter, goblin-wrought silver is nigh-invulnerable, and can absorb the properties of what it pierces in order to make itself stronger. It's unclear how the goblins make it this way, or whether it's truly silver or simply called so because the same colour. There are many other objects in the series which are made of silver (the Pensieve) or have the appearance of silver (unicorn blood). Finally, several spells, most notably the Patronus, take a silver colouration.
* Gottlieb was a time-based pinball game that could award a free game with one shot. It was only active after the player ran out of time, when the next drain would end the game.
* Hermione says that Romilda Vane is only interested in Harry because he's
* Grandma's Boy manages to do this twice in a row while creeping around a barn in the dark, looking for an escaped criminal.
* Gotrek Gurnisson: former engineer, now turned into what must be the single most dangerous creature in the Warhammer world, which is no small feat.
* Glory Hound and he took to title of victor against Cell because Jimmy Firecracker let him know that the people were probably rioting at this point and they needed a hero, so he took it to calm them down.

* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, the titular army can do this after being smashed to pieces.
* Gossip Girl such a development would have been strange to say the least.
* Harry endured some pretty extreme abuse at the hands of his aunt Petunia and uncle Vernon, while his cousin Dudley was extremely pampered, owed at least in part to a long-held jealousy Petunia held of his mother. In the * Goodbye, Mr. Chips, Chips is 48 and Kathie is 25 when they fall in love. The phrase "young enough to be his daughter" is used by the narrator. Chips is surprised at first to find so much in common with a member of a generation that usually makes him wonder what the world is coming to, and vice versa, but they get past that quickly and the age gap doesn't cause any real problems.
* Goku and Vegeta that their "teamwork" usually amounts to swapping in and out tag-team style, rather than fighting someone two-on-one (no matter the stakes).
* God of War III. He also fights several who are merely large before and during the aforementioned fight.
* Guardians of the Galaxy (Drax the Destroyer). They've taken out armies who are feared throughout the rest of the galaxy and saved numerous planets from destruction, emerging (mostly) intact each time.
* Gravestone of Daisuke Jigen uses CG for crowds and even flags waving in the breeze. The quality of the 2D animation however makes a lot up for that.
* Gravity Falls stand on their symbols and begin generating the human-powered circuit to destroy Bill Cipher, Stan, the one remaining, refuses until he urges Ford to say thank you for rescuing him. Ford obliges, Stan joins, and it looks like the circuit will work... but then Ford corrects Stan on his grammar, causing the two to break the circuit and argue as Dipper and Mabel try to stop them, and Bill, no longer distracted, arrives and destroys the Zodiac, turns anyone who isn't a Pines into tapestries, and continues his reign from there.
* Harry himself, or at least it's implied Justin's plan was to make him and Elaine this. It's debatable, actually, if a little of the conditioning seeped in. At the very least it impacted Harry's life significantly and gave him major trust issues (doesn't help that those issues are reinforced every other book).
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged where a mercenary balks at Willingham's insulting joke only to be told Willingham doesn't care if it offends the Nazi vampires.
* Gone series has Brianna. It's never stated precisely how fast she can run, but at one point she races a bullet (and loses — she has to dodge out of the way), and another character estimates her speed as around 300 miles per hour.
* Hamilton about his legacy and how he should act in a big free-verse number before aiming his pistol to the sky and being shot between the ribs.
* Happens to Stewie in "Peter-assment" when he gets a severe case of
* Go Out with a Smile: A person dying is sad enough without the person smiling in their death.
* Godspell, sans Jesus and John/Judas, are named after the actors who portrayed them in the original cast. Newer performances of this show often change character names to match their own casts.
* Her Code Name Was "Mary Sue" ("bad" writing with a "bad" main character)
* HATE, the CSA (Commission of Superhuman Activities), and O*N*E (Office of National Emergency). During the Dark Reign story, SHIELD was replaced by dodgy organisation HAMMER.
* Goosebumps unlikely he was translating the incantation in that scene, but the idea stuck.
* Harry Dresden has done this a couple of times with Gentleman Johnny Marcone, most notably in
* Grand Finale, Holly moves in with Rabbi Feldman and converts to Judaism.
* Granny Weatherwax is an interesting example; she's the mistress of "headology", which means she probably has a better understanding of human beings than anyone else on the Disc. But that doesn't mean she can
* Grandia bosses, even those made of meat. Must have been something they ate.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 3 episode 24, the spherical bomb Big M. receives in the mail is around the size of the palm of his hand if not smaller, but it's contained in so much packaging wrap that it looks a lot bigger.

* Heroes Reborn, the two characters Quentin and Pheobe Frady made fun of an EVO who appeared on the Tonight Show, who only had the power to heat water up to room temperature.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, Harry overhears Argus Filch gleefully reading that Professor Umbridge, who with Dumbledore on the run has just been named headmistress, has just lifted the school's ban on whipping students. With the ban lifted, Filch and Umbridge corner the Weasley twins, whose newest prank is turning a school hallway into a swamp, and declare that they shall be whipped. The two, however, manage a dramatic escape. After this, it's said that Filch would prowl the corridors with horsewhip in hand, desperate to catch students in the act, but there were now so many causing chaos that he didn't know which way to turn.
* Greater-Scope Villain a more direct and frustrating opponent to Lelouch than Charles ever was.
* Hangman's Knot when they massacred the pay train and stole the gold shipment.
* Hellevator: What happens to Reina in the second taped and first aired episode when she can't unlock herself from a gurney. She also happens to be the first contestant in a taped show to lose the game and not be around for the Labyrinth and the exit.
* Green Lantern: Red Lantern Rankorr used his power ring to make constructs resembling Abysmus' victims, paralyzing him with guilt and allowing Atrocitus to defeat him.
* happens to walk up behind him just as he says it. In the closing scene, the now former executive #2 is answering telephones in the mail room.
* GT5 adds two more Nazi cars, the Kubelwagen and Schwimmwagen. Players can drive these Nazi military vehicles as usual.
* Happily Ever After comicbook series, where it's revealed that the "Prince Charming" from the various tales is all the same guy, working through a series of failed marriages.
* Harry Potter, Harry becomes romantically interested in Ginny after she backs off, makes her crush on him less obvious, and interacts with him in a platonic and friendly manner. In this case, it's less that Harry enjoys the challenge of pursuing her and more that he finds it unnerving and smothering when girls try to get him to love them.
* guy from the catalogue shows up only to leave immediately when he sees Roz laying into Noel.
* Good guy Bruce Wayne also sports multiple scars throughout his body from his expeditions as Batman. Naturally, though, these scars are conveniently in places that would be easily hidden by a shirt. It's also hinted that the reason he has scars is because he tried to fix some of said wounds himself, not even waiting for Alfred to stitch them up for him.
* goes to extremes. Isabella doesn't just see Phineas in an ultra-idealized fashion. Her fantasy filter turns him into a long-haired romantic hero from a novel, or a pegasus-centaur. Hers is so intense that it distracts her completely from whatever is going on, and she calls it "Phineas Land".
* Green Jellö began with the goal of becoming the World's Worst Band, and lampshaded it with the song, and fan-favorite chant, "Green Jellö Sucks!" After a lawsuit from Kraft over the brand name for their gelatin, the band changed the name to Green Jellÿ (
* Hanna-Barbera, Butch complains about the makeshift circus and asks for a refund. When Spanky says, "But we let you in for free," Butch suggests that everyone's money be refunded.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, Hagrid searching his overcoat pockets for Harry's birthday cake (and later in Gringotts searching the same coat pockets for Harry's vault key) turns up moldy dog biscuits and live mice among other things before finding what he's looking for.
* Grace has fewer dresses and skirts in her wardrobe than Tedd does despite most of her first clothes being selected by

* GTA Online Sadly, the cardboards were patched to either not appear or not work, chopping down some of the popularity of it.
* Godslave his limbs. Before his fight with Edith, though, he ditches the suit, to have free use of his powers.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas featured a couple of stealth segments in the main story, and more in the form of sidequests.
* Harry Potter wind up marrying people who never even appeared in the story, and in Percy's case we know nothing about his wife except her first name.
* .hack, which takes place in 2017) that the internet began to vaguely resemble the one in the real world.
* Hank Williams progression, but the chorus melodies are similar enough that you could switch lyrics between the two.
* her intention to leave him spot where the woman had been murdered... which wasn't the same place where the body was found, and nobody had told Serafín about.
* Guitar Hero, Activision dug up the 80s version of their logo (with the rainbow stripe to the left) and rendered it in the blocky style of that era.
* Gravity Falls Comic-Con panel about the time he was a teenager and a girl he liked passed by while he was playing touch football. He wanted to impress her by shouting "Blitz!", but instead, his voice cracked horribly. The fact that he's able to replicate "Puberty Squeaks" even now is partly what landed him his role as Dipper.
* Hellraiser: Bloodline, the Duc de l'Isle and his apprentice Jacques kill a woman to use as a host for the Cenobite Angelique. She bodyjacks the corpse for several centuries it seems.
* Harry wets himself when he sees the possessed Quirrell drinking unicorn blood.
* Harlem Heroes, which is described as a cross between football, basketball, boxing and Kung Fu. With jetpacks.
* Heroes of Might and Magic. They're surprisingly lethal compared to their usual portrayal in media, which is lampshaded slightly by the unit's description. They also seem to be based more on toads than turtles, able to make huge leaps across the battlefield.
* Hercules (Pure Magic)'s orders to get rid of Hercules, setting most of the plot in motion.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City's final mission involves the Vercetti Estate coming under attack by the Forelli Mob.
* Hatoful Boyfriend. He insists privately that "I must not disrespect him (Shuu)... because that is what father told me." but is unable to ignore mounting evidence. Eventually he despises Shuu just like everybirdie else.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, Hayate believes he must pay off his debt (that his truly awful parents foisted on him) before he can consider romance and relationships.
* Happy Heroes has a massive crush on Planet Xing Xing's celebrity news reporter, Miss Peach. There are a few episodes which primarily focus on this crush or otherwise have him try to be with Miss Peach, such as one where he tries to win a fitness competition because the prize is going out for dinner with her and one where he tells a genie he wishes he were married to her.
* Harry Potter and the Nightmares of Futures Past, Harry acknowledges that sending his memories back to his eleven-year-old self from a timeline where society has basically collapsed after the war against Voldemort went on until he was thirty will either create a new reality or destroy the one he exists in, but Harry is so broken after seeing virtually everyone else he ever knew die that he doesn't care and the only other person he can talk to (Dumbledore's portrait) accepts that he can either help Harry with this last plan that might save some people, or just wait until Harry becomes so depressed he kills himself.
* Halo in the opening chapters and the super-heated engines cause as much damage as the impact itself.
* Hela has faint but visible black veins on her shoulders, forehead and around her eyes and jawline. This is presumably to represent that she's maybe not fully alive (as the goddess of death) and is maybe a mild homage to the goddess Hel appearing as half alive and half dead in the original Norse Mythology.

* Having little to no understanding of normal human biology, Beavis of
* Halo 4 in the scenes between Chief and Cortana dealing with the latter's mortality.
* Grojband: Kon, as shown in the episode "Math of Kon" as he failed six years worth of math.
* Hardison is able to use those to leverage the executive into turning himself in.
* Half-Life but the AI is Self-Aware depicts the US Military as being composed of a bunch of idiots who constantly call in air strikes on their own men and whose idea of a successful military operation is to blow up all the bathrooms in Black Mesa.
* Gorgeous Princess Creamy Beamy to have a common ancestor; "Sucra's made of cake, it'd be hard for meat creatures to evolve on it") also have this problem, with nether ink sacs and vaginas "chock full of spinnerets".
* He shows the same gesture to some of the other Maximals as well in an earlier episode.
* Happily Ever After: That's how the story ends, and I always smile whenever we end the story with a happy ending.
* He also mentioned once that the Nissan executives had asked if The Stig could do a "rap" in their new car, and he replied "No, he likes easy listening. Oh, a
* He has even been referenced within said comics. Such as one of his running gags being on a T-shirt in
* Good Girl Bad Girl, in the final chase scene the villain loses control of his car and goes off an overpass. The car hits the ground hard, but fails to explode, even when hit by an oncoming car.
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost: Used to work the vague backstory of the original Haunted Mansion ride into a convenient setting. What better way to achieve that than to decide that the canon of the stories would be the headcanons of the authors of the fanfics?
* Happens to Spider-Man in his Peter Parker identity after he barely survived escaping an exploding villain base and was picked up in a Corrupt Hick's town for being a vagrant. After all the times he's dealt with Kraven, Peter figured being chased by some wealthy old man with a thing for hunting people would be no big deal until he found out the hunter had a multi-million dollar surplus super-villain battle platform instead of a rifle. With the help of a honest cop who finds out what is going on, Peter beats the hunt and brings the villains to justice.
* He makes an exception when he leads a fleet of Havenite warships to the Manticore system to help the Manticorans defend against a Mesan-instigated Solarian attack.
* Hate Sink, specially after season 2 and 3 show that she could change if guided only to relapse at the end of season 3 by willingly joining forces with the main antagonist.
* had called him a fool that the police presented as a super thief to cover their own incompetence killing him... Not knowing that, before releasing him, Diabolik had put a cyanide capsule in one of his dentures and terrified him so he would continuously clatter his teeth until the capsule broke, killing him on the fourth day. No newspaper dared to publish such an article again.
* Heli-Critter: Animals who can use parts of their bodies as propellers.
* Heinlein often averted this trope as well. He frequently cast non-whites and people of mixed-race as protagonists in his works despite writing before the American Civil Rights era. Races were equal in his world, while the sexes tended to be different but enjoyed
* Green Eggs and Ham (2019)", Sam-I-Am gets arrested and thrown in jail. Guy-Am-I ends up believing that Sam has a plan to get him out that requires Guy to be in prison as well, so Guy turns himself in and also gets arrested, only to find out that Sam didn't actually have a plan, but is still glad to have Guy with him. They end up having to follow a mouse who has been working on an escape plan for many years.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, our heroes land within a few hundred meters of a group of people they know, and Harry just happens to wander by them while they discuss plot-relevant events. Britain, remember, covers some 210,000 square kilometers.

* Harry Potter, executes dangerous beasts for the Ministry, and Voldemort welcomes him back by saying he would have other victims to execute, this time human beings.
* Heavier-than-air ships powered by a bound elemental are a recent innovation in
* Haley shows she's quite good at impromptu use of a recently acquired double-pointed spear in strip 721.
* Glenn (who happens to be named after Frog's human form) can acquire the legendary holy sword, Einlanzer. This seems to be his
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. Chief Security maid Konoe Tsurugi clearly has had military training, especially in the katana, which shows in her demeanor.
* Good Morning, the bratty kid is pestering his parents for a TV, but the adults in the neighborhood have a contemptuous attitude towards television. By 1959, TV was really catching on in Japan, and there as in the USA it was seen as a threat to motion pictures.
* Having a bipedal gait limits the size of the mother's hips, meaning that only a small enough (and therefore weak) baby can be born.
* Gundam: Reconguista in G transition from space to land for the last episode, resulting in this trope several times over.
* Harap Alb villain. The main character is told that the only thing worse than a bald man is a red haired one...Guess whose daughter he is forced to win over later?
* Haven magically come to life, often very unhappy about being killed.
* Grand Theft Auto IV and its expansions you buy weapons from Little Jacob's car by calling him up.
* Higurashi: When They Cry has this occur several times, almost once an arc, and often bloodily.
* Hey Arnold! both drop their glasses in shock when Miriam announces she's going to be away from a few days, suggesting they spend some father-daughter quality time together while she's gone in the episode "Quantity Time".
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, it's likely totally intentional on the actor's part.
* He goes further, in that explaining what he's doing often becomes the joke.
* Happy Tree Friends... as long as the actual fixing or building takes place off-screen.
* GunBuster, Kazumi serves as the GIB for Noriko in the titular mecha.
* Griffon the Brush Off": Pinkie Pie tries to get the attention of Rainbow Dash, who is in a hurry to get somewhere and keeps brushing Pinkie off... only to fly into the side of the mountain Pinkie was trying to warn her about.
* Grand Finale: The final episode or installment of a series, specifically one that brings the series' story to a proper conclusion.
* Harry King started as a street urchin who lived off other people's garbage. He realized that what is garbage to some people is actually valuable to others so he started a garbage collection and recycling business, dealing in everything from scraps to night soil. (It helps that for many things he's paid
* Glenn Martin DDS: When Glenn asks Wendy about her family, she says she was raised by her grandmother, Dixie Nitram. She says this while looking at a Dixie Cup and the name Martin in the mirror. She also says she was born in Toledo while looking at a sink made by Toledo Sinks.
* Gosu without knowing who he is, sometimes even after finding out. This is mainly due to the fact that he is a chubby young man whose day job is a dumpling delivery boy.
* Go on, ask any kid who grew up in the 90's where they learned the state capitals, the names of all the U.S. Presidents, the plots of
* Hawke gives this out to Carver at one point. After s/he's been snarking at him during an argument, he tries to snark back, implying that s/he's indirectly responsible for the death of their sister, Bethany. Hawke immediately drops their fun demeanor and gets
* Groundhog Day, the psychiatrist suggests another session. "How does tomorrow sound?... Is that a problem?"

* Gotham: In "Stop Hitting Yourself", one of Martin's classmates give him a wedgie while the others play keep away with his notepad. Later in the episode, he gives himself a wedgie and blames it on one of the other kids.
* Guess who shows up to repay the favor and save the SAS from militia
* Goblin Moon, the anthropomorphized Nine Seasons are the setting's equivalent of gods. Four are male, four are female, and one (corresponding to mid-spring, a changeable season) is depicted as androgynous in religious art.
* Harute has Scissor bits, which are dual-bladed bits that slice enemies into tiny pieces.
* hermaphroditic" and "too heavy to fly easily, yet too light to do anything else.")
* Guy Ritchie with a pillow covering both his privates and the key to the chains. Holmes's efforts to persuade the chambermaid to help him could have been worded better:
* Harry Potter, making their pictures unpublishable, as they can't be proven to be recent.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows in a moment of severe humiliation. Though she does talk to him as a result, the conversation ends with her telling him "it's over between us", which is NOT what he hoped for at all.
* Glen Foster, a.k.a. "That Canadian Guy", has a bit about how an International Coalition of Gangsters
* Hard Cover in the explicit hopes of filming somebody getting stabbed to death.
* Hiei fits this trope to a T. Not only is he a demon, but he keeps insisting that he's bad to the bone and cares about nobody, but his actions keep on betraying him. By the end of the series, he's loosened up enough that he actually admits to having friends and
* Half-Life 2 and its episodes (particularly 2) features a fairly episodic plot as Gordon drives around the eastern European coast, encountering a variety of self-contained side stories and vignettes. Episode 2 in particular features a wider variety of social commentary thanks to its greater cross section of characters of differing social standing.
* Harry Potter eventually ends up with a core harem of hundreds, and an extended one of thousands. The Owls, Dragons, Horses, and other animals.
* Gregory Benford novels have "mechs" which evolved from self-replicating von neumann machines, after they were abandoned when their biological creators destroyed themselves.
* Haegemonia: Legions of Iron leading to fixed points in other systems. Interstellar travel is restricted to these, except for the final missions, where the humans manage to modify Darzok wormhole-blocking technology to allow a fleet to jump directly to a beacon that can be placed in any system. This can, essentially, allow you to avoid the entire enemy line of defense and go straight for the HQ.
* Heinelein gets a pass on poor science for an impeccable reason: He wrote "Blowups Happen" in
* Goblins: Inverted. The goblin heroes are disgusted by human foods like bread and cheese.
* Gotham Academy shows that the school's tiny role-playing club (the Gilkey Warlocks) was mocked by the honor students, the chess club, the drama group and the choir.
* Half the stuff Naked Snake mentions in that particular scene is either nonsense or just superfluous. He gets it right when talking to Sigint about the gun later, detailing
* Hercules Megara. Touching her is an invitation to get knocked into next weekend.
* Groundhog Day, the boy doesn't thank him. Phil responds, "See you tomorrow... maybe." Some took it as meaning that Phil might not be there to save the ungrateful kid in the next time loop, while others thought he was referring to the fact that the time loop could break the next day.
* Hazmat Suit to face shield for interacting with infected is unwise, given that, in "274" its easy for a Vector to slip one off mid-assault, and one strain is known to be hemorrhagic and lethal. Even face shields aren't employed consistently.

* Goats the site (though unfortunately the defictionalized site is now gone).
* Henry Charles Litolff from his Concerto Symphonique No. 4 in D minor.
* Halo 4 The remains of its victims are just piles of dust of where they once stood.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers features America telling England that his scones taste like "petrified couch stuffing".
* He's the man behind such well-known, excellent designs as the logos for
* Harry Turtledove features Czech sniper Vaclav Jezek and his 13mm French antitank rifle. No longer useful against the heavier German tanks, Vaclav converts his antitank weapon into a sniper rifle, and uses it to pick off Germans, and later Nationalist Spanish officers from more than two kilometers away. He becomes effective enough with it that multiple German snipers are dispatched to get "the SOB with the elephant gun."
* He also has a License to Sell Hair Tonic to Bald Eagles in Omaha, Nebraska.
* Hellboy wears a brown trenchcoat over black clothes as he does in the comics, though in the comics it's intended to help portray his average, blue-collar joe sensibilities.
* Heat, though on opposite sides of the law, among the things Vincent Hanna and Neil McCauley have in common is that they are completely focused on their careers on their respective sides of the law to the almost complete exclusion of anything else. For Hanna, this means in the span of his entire police career, he's burned through two marriages and is currently on the downward slope of a third; for Neil, this means that he has absolutely nothing even resembling a personal life.
* Gosunkugi, you have a very limited time to defeat him before the suit self-destructs.
* Hagrid is only in his sixties at the time of the books, but does not have a single gray hair on him. Hagrid is also half-giant.
* Hero System is only a -6. But a head shot also does double BODY damage, and five times the STUN damage, so unless your target is wearing a helmet it's worth trying.
* Grimm pain/giggles), then names like Blutbad and Daemonfeuer are this in spades. (Means "Blood Bath" and "Demon Fire" respectively). Some of the other Wesen names are none too cuddly sounding as well.
* He may have invoked this trope, but the annihilation of the Armenians was a very real event from around the time of
* Hawkmon has an intense, serious voice in the Japanese version of the show, but in the English dub, he's more flamboyant with a British accent.
* Hermes. Those winged sandals ain't just for show. He's such an influential
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Lavender is particularly prone to giggling when she's around Ron, until they break up.
* Grey Worm is entranced by nude Missandei, but since he's a eunuch it is much more about intimacy than sex.
* Heartbreak and Ice Cream: What makes you feel better after a bad breakup and other relationship troubles? A delicious cold sweet treat: ice cream!
* Hamlet goes from a politically savvy, brilliant villain, to ending up in a religious crisis, to coming up with the worst poisoning scheme in literary history.
* Great Mazinger issues). Saying that his attitude came back to bite him was quite the understatement.
* Harrow rises up of the slab and proceeds to pull the knife out of the other half and take him hostage.
* Heel–Face Turn, during the period between them leaving Moya and her crew and meeting up with them again, were implied to be having as much adventures as the main cast did, which we only ever got to see fragments of.
* Good Angel, Bad Angel: When faced with a moral decision, a character imagines an angel and a devil appearing on their shoulders to give their two cents on the right decision to make.
* Hal Ketchum holds out the last "keep your mansions of gooooooooooold" at the end of "I Know Where Love Lives", complete with a very impressive vibrato.
* Herr Doktor: Mad scientists tend to talk in thick German or Austrian accents.
* Green Lantern. For more Corps-specific examples, the Sinestro Corps have Arkillo, and the Red Lanterns have Skallox.

* Gotham, he's also this as unlike the fairly humorless character of the comics, this Zsasz is prone to being sassy and making quips.
* "Here, Kitty, Kitty, Kitty" parts 1 and 2; both episodes end with Taz getting a bath from Molly, then screaming as the camera zooms into his mouth.
* Glee, though they prefer linking pinkies. Though, they do intertwine fingers in "Hold On To Sixteen".
* Haven for human flesh as well. Apparently, their ancestors inspired the Native American tales of the Wendigo.
* Goodness Gracious Me, a British comedy sketch show with an Indian cast, was highly successful.
* goes crazy for a bit things, and, eventually, has to bluff through his own emotional pain to do the worst/best thing possible.
* Glurge: A work that was supposed to be emotional or inspiring ends up rubbing the audience the wrong way due to the way it was handled.
* Haydn's "Surprise Sonata" does exactly the same thing. Only with a full classical orchestra. Hence the surprise.
* He imagined himself living in a house made of pearls and losing his teeth to his breakfast, a bowl of pearls.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone provides another written one when Harry reaches the chamber where the Mirror of Erised is kept.
* He spends three to four years being tempted by the shadow of a fallen angel. During that time, she was slowly putting pressure on his temper to make it even more hair trigger. And while he did enjoy some of the perks the shadow gave him, like being able to speak dead languages, he never gave into the darker aspects of this. Eventually he converts the shadow angel to good, or at least good enough to sacrifice herself to save him. Though he hypothesizes that the actual angel would be as impossible to change as she claims, but as the shadow is imprinted in his mind, it's as malleable as that medium. For this action and his resistance, he was rewarded with Soulfire, Hellfire's opposite and called repeatedly "the fires of Creation."
* Government regulations prevent use of the word "cream" to describe food products which contain no dairy cream. The word "creme" is used to create the impression of a creamy texture or flavor; as such, it's used where the product contains no cream, contains no dairy products at all, or isn't even edible. There's historical precedent to this sort of thing (
* Heroes can turn anything he wants into gold. It was only used on inanimate objects in the series itself, but in the webcomic we see it being used on a person. That person was then hauled away and melted down.
* GoldenEye (1997), where each stage has a set number of enemies. A common tactic on levels with Natalya is to clear out the stage first due to her rather suicidal habit of running right between you and the enemies.
* Harry Potter affect his playing in certain situations — Hermione has to make his glasses waterproof with magic to allow him to play in the rain.
* He's even an accomplished stunt driver and is usually the one behind the wheel in car chase scenes. The chase in
* Heel–Face Revolving Door: The character keeps switching between being good and being evil.
* Half-Human Hybrid as a result of receiving a transplant from her, one of Kaneki's primary goals is to learn who Rize actually was and what made her abandon her original identity and spend her life on the run.
* "Googling," magazine, as it's in print, had to get around this, so every time they refer to Google they say "a famous web search engine" or "FWSE" for short. It's a peculiar case though, since this is one instance where people genuinely usually don't say "Google" if they're not using Google.
* Grim Fandango on modern consoles, including a PC version, and is doing well there.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe is enough to resist doing so.
* Hack/Slash always fighting against undead monsters many times stronger than her.

* have gone by their middle names instead of the first names. No word on whether any of these examples get mad if referred to by their first or full names, but they still seem to prefer their middle ones.
* Good Omens liked to do stage magic as a hobby. He's also an angel, perfectly capable of doing real magic anytime he wants, but considers that "cheating" while working as a magician.
* Harry, or rather, his Blank Slate programmed into a weapon and infused with nanotechnology. He's capable of upending entire continents.
* Gronk has Harli, a massive, lovable Newfoundland dog who's first interaction with Gronk is a massive, affectionate lick.
* Going Postal moved as he comes in, he'll stand there bonking his head against it.
* Harry Potter. But one thing they do have in common is their shared loyalty/affection toward Harry.
* Hercule Poirot story has a young woman in this situation, and Poirot easily guesses that no matter her reasoning, she can't help but love the poor suitor and not the rich one.
* Henry Winchester, Sam and Dean's paternal grandfather, travels forward in time from 1958 to 2013.
* Guilt by Association Gag: Even if you didn't participate, you're still held responsible for a problem by mere association with whoever started it.
* Hamilton, isolates himself from the people he still has in his life, and dies at the hand of one of his first friends. He's much less haughty by the end.
* Gunbuster, the space monsters are described as a galactic "immune system" trying to wipe out the "disease" of humanity. Humanity is aware that their winning may carry consequences for the galaxy but decides "Fuck that, we're gonna try to survive anyway."
* Gossip Girl, although a glitzy blog that's laid out a little too well takes the place of a school newspaper.
* Harry Potter, after seeing the end result of a werewolf attack on the several Hogwarts students, Madame Bones and Head Auror Rufus Scrimgeour decide that if anyone from the Ministry was responsible for the bloodshed they would personally help Harry Potter dispose of the bodies of the perpetrators.
* Grand Finale. No one knew who started it, but some say it was Oprah's partner/boyfriend Stedman Graham.
* Going Postal and has occasional "little moments" that sometimes involve threatening his boss's life with an iron kettle.
* GoGo's Crazy Bones in the Evolution set, which consists of Gogos that use all of the molds from the previous set, Series 1.
* Half-Life 2, the Ravenholm level. Father Grigori helps you through the level, and then sends you into the mines. He explains that he must stay behind, to look after his flock, which has grown restless. By which he means, he must continue shotgunning his headcrab-controlled congregation. As you enter the door to the mines, he's there in the cemetery, firing his shotgun and laughing. Even if you go back, he's still there, firing his shotgun, and laughing, firing his shotgun, laughing... there's a good chance he'll also be either surrounded by fire or ON fire at this time.
* Graphical technology not advanced enough? That wasn't enough to stop
* Harry Dresden himself has an actual fairy godmother named Leanansidhe, who wants the best for him - in
* Grave Peril before going into battle. An insane vampire-groupie, however, remains unclad.
* Hidamari Sketch manga, the format of their own series. They try their hand at drawing it, with varying results. In the end, Miyako says, "Nothing around here happens that would make a good manga."
* Halloweentown: A franchise which focuses on a parallel world filled with monsters. The dangers don't come from them (a majority of them are friendly and just live their lives like any human) but from the evil forces that try to take it over.
* Haunter. The sister also encounters the spirits of other girls who inhabited her house in the past.

* Hanyuu, as lack of faith by the residents is the cause of her weakened powers.
* Hellraiser: Inferno reveals that the being known as the Engineer that Detective Joseph Thorne was after is in fact the embodiment of his own dark urges; when Joseph confronts the Engineer the thing even peels away its blank face to reveal Joseph's underneath.
* Hardison's violin skills to distract everybody... unfortunately that includes themselves and they aren't finished with the heist by the time he is done with his solo.
* Highschool of the Dead. The tunnel Takashi and Rei go through is fairly short, but the gasoline-powered explosion that sent them through it isn't any less potent.
* God of War III, Zeus has Poseidon and Helios, during the Second Great War against Kratos and the Titans.
* Halloween: Perhaps the greatest example of a knife-wielding murderer in film history is Michael Myers. Sure, tons of movie murderers use knives, but none as iconic as Myers.
* Goblin Slayer proceeds to turn things around by strangling the Goblin Champion with the hair of one of the goblins' victims and ripping his eye right out, followed by menacingly heading toward the goblins wondering which of them will be next.
* Happy New Year (Charles Durning) planning to rob a Palm Beach jewelry store.
* Happens a lot in the original series, as well, to the point that "small group of people trapped in a base, being killed of by a monster/monsters" is pretty much the standard
* Gold Key Comics plants which could literally suck a landing party off their feet from a considerable distance.
* Higurashi: When They Cry does not resolve the Rena/Mion/Keiichi love triangle. Rena has more subtext, Mion has more text text, and the story opts to maintain the idea of friendship being most important. This means that Keiichi is still oblivious. However, while the VN doesn't advance anything and different arcs support either one.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas control and he will be shot at without hesitation if he passes through. As head of the Varrios Los Aztecas and allied with the GSF via being the boyfriend of CJ's sister Kendl, Cesar will similarly find himself chased out for similar reasons around the same time. Most of the rest of the game's plot is CJ's journey to regroup, recuperate, and rebuild a network throughout the rest of San Andreas to get back into Los Santos.
* Hannibal Roy than the end of the world. Far...far worse. While not exactly stronger than Chase, he's easily more dangerous.
* Gundam franchise has a few, in addition to the protagonists' exploits in the various anime, films and OVA:
* Glory of Heracles III, where the protagonist is also an amnesiac immortal.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, the title character is called by his Roman name, but all the gods except Cupid have Greek names.
* Harley Quinn (2019), after Poison Ivy drinks the water laced with her blood, she becomes giant sized, her shoes burst, her leather jacket rips off, her pant legs rip off above the knees, and her shirt rips just so it covers her breasts.
* High School Musical movies have tons, mostly between Troy and Gabriella. "Breaking Free", "Can I Have This Dance?", and "Right Here, Right Now" are just some of them.
* Having to watch when the only exposure to the naked female body you've had is sex education class.
* Harrison, a gentleman who encourages Thomas in a fatherly fashion and inspires an interest in the arts in him as a child, is
* Goblet of Fire in 2007, despite the film being set in 1995, but the hair styles still aren't 90's hairstyles.
* Her father, Firelord Ozai, also sports one in the finale when he's attempting to burn down the entire Earth Kingdom.
* Guns of the Dawn, Mary is upset that she hasn't had much correspondence from her husband, Tubal, who is away at war. When Emily ends up at the front and meets Tubal, she learns the reason — the army censors letters "to preserve morale", so Tubal knew that any letters he sent would just disappear unless he lied to Mary about what things were like.

* Hey Arnold! The Movie after Helga confessed her love and kissed him.
* He also shocked (and ticked off) Fistandantilus by using flash powder to pretend to cast a spell when Fistandantilus cast an
* Hellsing, the Catholic-founded Iscariot Organisation sees vampires as an abomination and affront to God that needs to be wiped out, even the vampires that are hunting other vampires for the sake of humanity. It loses its edge, however, when you consider that, until Seras came along, there was only one such vampire, a sociopathic slaughter machine by the name of Alucard who is only held back by a very mortal woman.
* Grave Encounters for the first half of the horrific part, so empathizing with the characters' situation is a must.
* Hagrid has Plot Armor throughout the whole series, because as stated by
* GTA Radio have this come up a lot. For example, one of the taglines for Giggle Cream: "It's completely legal thanks to a loophole at the FDA!"
* Grimm in the records are encountered, or after discovering new information on and methods of dealing with dangerous Wesen.
* Green Lantern has the next example: In the "Prism of Time" arc Kyle suggests he and Soranik watch Terminator because the of the time travel in the arc. The Big Bad of the arc, Sarko, is the child of Kyle and Soranik from the future, not unlike the time tangled Conner family of the Terminator franchise.
* Hercules Returns. Ted wants to hire a new act for his nightclub in Ancient Greece, but can't find anyone his wife Muriel likes.
* Gunnerkrigg Court Boxbot's Yang. The comic has yet to say what exactly either of them do, beyond the fact that "Everybody likes Robox" and "Nobody likes Boxbot".
* has's main talent is psychological realism, not "let's flail upon Mr Darcy's leather pants.".
* Graham McNeill included being the sole survivor of a direct hit on a field hospital.
* Guess what, she's one of the two murder victims in the case, alongside one of the guys in her Unwanted Harem
* Hades, one of the unlockable Aspects for the Exagryph (an Ancient Greek assault rifle with an underbarrel grenade launcher) is Lucifer's laser rifle that he used in his war on God. While the Olympians don't actually know anything about Lucifer other than his name and that he fought his father, the fact that Zagreus is using his weapon in rebellion of his own father is something that is noted.
* Halo 2, you can even equip it to your multiplayer character (headshots are not needed however).
* Going Postal offered a choice between employment as the new postmaster or execution. A golem is assigned to assist him, and as an unstoppable retriever if he tries to run away.
* Hammerer shows up once your fort hits a certain population, and starts dispensing his own brand of justice if your guards aren't doing their jobs. As the Hammerer has no use for sissy notions like "restraint," this tends to result in dead dwarves; once the Hammerer arrives, you're better off making that prison and assigning guards if you've previously been putting both things off (since the penalty for unpunished crimes was mostly limited to unhappy thoughts in a few useless nobles, and that could be countered with enough bling).
* Grim Fandango from its garage after two years of travelling without it, they discover that it is surrounded by an elaborate set of dominoes that will trigger a bomb if disturbed. (Glottis's question about who could've done this seems a little odd, what's with one of the villains being named Domino and all...)
* Happy Tree Friends) is the only time he has ever died, as nothing else can hurt him.
* Hilariously done on IMDB where they frequently have those banner ads where people dance for no reason about insurance or whatever. In one of them,

* Hidden Block who, very confused, asks "You know I'm Gay, right?". They do end up going to the festival as friends though.
* he replaced one of the most beloved characters in the series, the poor fellow's attempts to adapt from his world of by-the-numbers L&O to the weird and wacky world of the X-Files can be somewhat charming.
* Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later, which is seen as the "sell out" of the series, by some.
* Great Mazinger had bladed weapons -or even spiked maces- instead of hands or arms. The first examples appeared in the last episode of Mazinger-Z (Gratonios) and in the first episode of the sequel.
* Gunnerkrigg Court to this revelation is appropriate, all things considered. It also puts a lot more weight on something she said earlier in the comic:
* Gunnerkrigg Court: Coyote is of the opinion that human belief created every supernatural entity, and is even capable of re-writing reality retroactively (allowing Coyote to exist long before his first believers). It is noted, however, that this is just Coyote's opinion: god or not, even he does not know for sure.
* Harry and Draco are about to kiss when a passerby trips and falls on their table, knocking their food into their laps.
* Henceforward, Ruby is stabbed by Blake. She survives but is unable to achieve her dreams of becoming a Huntress due to trauma from the injury.
* Heel–Face Turn took place shortly after it became obvious that the old regime was going to lose.
* High Score Girl began serialization in 2010; the story is set in the nineties, beginning in 1991 when Street Fighter II was released in arcades.
* Hamilton: the nature of Burr's relationship with his future wife Theodosia states that she can't be seen in public with Burr, such as at the Hamiltons' wedding, because she's married to a British general. On the other hand, John Laurens clearly knows about it, and Burr is perfectly willing to divulge the details to Alexander in private.
* Hahli's infamous tube-stache wasn't the first instance of a female character receiving a misleading mask. There was Macku, who had this long, pharaoh-beard like structure on the underside of her mask. The first movie redesigned that mask-type so that it would have a mechanical "beard". Macku's movie-mask got a shortened version, but it still looked off.
* Groundhog Day day are intact, but he's trapped in a seemingly endless time loop, repeating the same day in the same small town.
* Haystacks Calhoun was probably the first traveling enforcer, moving from territory to territory back in the days before WWE bought them out.
* Hentai from becoming a human sacrifice, he goes to his teacher for help. Still under the effects of a powerful aphrodisiac, she seduces him, and they spend the night having sex.
* Harry Potter books wear masks, although to be more kid-friendly all but the worst are stunned/disarmed instead of being killed. These also turned out to be useful for concealing their identities after they lost the first Wizarding War.
* Hammer's Slammers: Thanks to accurate targeting and Powerguns, aircraft has practically disappeared from the field of battle. Artillery fire can be interdicted by powergun blasts, but shells still manage to get through. Nukes are rendered useless thanks to "nuclear suppression fields". In the backstory, tanks themselves almost disappeared from the battlefield due to developments in technology — man-portable anti-tank rockets, pin-point accurate missiles, and helicopters that could strike rapidly all made tanks rapidly obsolete until fusion and powerguns made them practical again.
* Harry Potter it is at one point stated that you can't create matter out of thin air (explaining Mrs. Weasley's ability to conjure up food to cook). During the course of the books, however, Harry has used a spell to shoot a stream of water from his wand and conjure flame. More specifically, food is one of Gamp's Five Untransmutables. Anything not on that list is fair game for being instantly generated.
* Graduation Day, Part 1", where a brutal fight between Buffy and Faith ends with Faith stabbed in the stomach and on the edge of a rooftop. Faith knows Buffy needs her blood to heal Angel and convinced her stab wound is fatal, she gets revenge by falling backwards off of the roof onto the back of a passing truck, which carries her now comatose body away before Buffy can catch up to it. When she's in the hospital later, the doctor explains that her stab wound to the stomach wasn't actually serious, but the head injury from the fall has put her in a coma with possible brain damage.

* High-School Sweethearts: A couple have been in love since they were in high school.
* Hermione makes Lucius jump out of a cake while wearing a bunny suit at Harry's 25th birthday party.
* he was actually a human as well. Lrrr is horrified that he slept with a human, but the girl is still into it.
* GradeAUnderA: In his "Racism Test" video, Grade himself has stated that he is "A man of color" and briefly drew himself with dark skin and an afro . Then goes on to say that it's only a "Lil bit of color" before lightening his skin tone and sizing down the afro.
* Heavy Object, Grunthor gets chewed out for actually wearing a safety harness when he's assigned to do work on the upper side of an Object, while it's under motion. Specifically, he's told that "you only need a safety harness if you're actually in danger," which makes about as much sense as saying that the only time you need to be wearing a seat belt is when your car is actually crashing.
* Harvestmen, Haunted Harvesters, Haunted Scarecrows are enemies found in
* Good Bye, Lenin! Alex meets Lara when she saves him from choking at a press freedom rally.
* Goosebumps book ends with one of these. The last few lines of each book usually reveal that one of the monsters is still out there, that something is still stalking the protagonists, that the safety they thought they gained is probably an illusion, the person they rescued isn't actually safe, or that whatever victory over the monsters they achieved is probably not real. Or might not be real. It's sometimes ambiguous, but not in the "Was it all just a dream?" sense.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, when he isn't the Ottoman Turks (where he wears a mask and a huge hat instead).
* has not revealed her real name, nor performed live or toured other than a short DJ tour in 2008, and rarely gives interviews.
* GURPS, the Curious disadvantage causes your character to do exactly this, with a penalty to your roll if the button is big, red, and has "Do Not Press" written on it.
* GoldenEye (1997) was made as a standalone game with similar mechanics.
* good for a show to go off the air before it becomes stale and repetitive. The syndicated version cuts out everything after Marge's line, resulting in it becoming this.
* Gundam Build Fighters Try, the older sister of one of the three main characters, Sekai Kamiki. Not only is she beautiful to the point of charming almost literally everyone who sees her, she is also very supportive of whatever her little brother takes interest in, be it martial arts, or toy battles. That said, when he gets himself into a police station or gets distracted away from finishing transfer student registration, she does show some stun side.
* Goth Girl Rising) Leads to a moment later when he tells her that his change in personality was because of her and she says that's even better than him giving her his hat.
* her step-grandmother giving a blowjob to her Honorary Uncle), she doesn't seem to be particularly scarred—merely astonished and kinda disgusted.
* Heroes 3 wears what might be the silliest waste of leather in video games that doesn't involve players crafting leather swords.
* Harry Palmer (1967) used an unspecified MICR computer font for the opening titles.
* Having a song about a clockwork woman is almost a necessity for a self-respecting steampunk band.

* Head Trip's brother Dane finds out she went to "visit" their sister Kat's Jewish ex, who did not take the breakup well:
* Hercules and the Captive Women movie, although they ended up with one more later), Joel and the Bots held a funeral for Hercules, which quickly became a party. Crow at one point declared, "He's dead as a doornail and I'm gonna party like it's 1999!"
* Gungrave has the same effect. Like Auron above it's not quite an eyepatch but Grave did take several levels of badass after being resurrected.
* Growing Pains, the dad subtly tried to get his son to resolve the dilemma by giving his parents both tickets. (it failed and the son took his sister who was having self image problems in the same episode.)
* Heather Dale's song "Changeling Child", a couple wants a child for twelve years, but the wife cannot have one. Driven to desperation, she bargains with the fairies to give her one — which turns out badly.
* GURPS" was supposed to be and lets you use it if you want... but it defaults to the handling that it's just a descriptive term for regular iron, like one might say "cold steel."
* Gone are the days when accidentally closing your browser or tab meant that you lost a huge post you were writing in an input field, and Chrome's practice of separating each browser component and tab into its own individual process means that one misbehaving component probably won't crash your entire browser.
* Hellsister Trilogy is clearly not in the mood for word-mincing when she runs into his top minion.
* Halloween Episode friends. It was sent by her Aunt Beulah, who thought that the doll would make a great Halloween party, ignorant of the fact that the mortal world would be helpless against it.
* Graham Chapman's army officer character tries to halt a sketch that's on film. "You can't stop this sketch! We're on film!" "Well, that doesn't make any difference to the viewers at home, does it?"
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, Harry assumes this is the case:
* Heart of Steel), while in the case of Alistair she started warming up to him after he gets the shit beaten out of him trying to protect her.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch, the Brain Gremlin after he casually shoots one of his less mature peers in the face with a pistol:
* GoodFellas, the police and the law are the true main antagonists, and as standard are more heroic than the gangsters they're trying to apprehend.
* He also mocks the "trapped in one area until X is done" trope, pointing out that the items he needs to unlock his front door
* Gorgeous, so leftovers Albert and Long Yi gets paired into a gay couple.
* He's not immune to the trope in his teenage body either. A chapter features police detective Sato confidently telling her partner that the two "high school detectives" would get stuck and come running back to the police. She was immediately struck speechless when they arrived to announce that they had whittled down fifty cars being searched to just three suspects.
* Harry Potter lair, and are rescued by a reformed Barty Crouch Junior, who melts the bars on a window by using what is referred to as "the dangerous chemical dihydrogen monoxide".
* Graceland the main characters are federal undercover agents and have to do this from time to time.
* High Plains Drifter because they aren't peaceful, just cowards, and he really doesn't care much for them.
* Hail Flutie, the 1984 BC-Miami game that ended with a Hail Mary pass from Doug Flutie to Gerard Phelan, giving Boston College a 47–45 win.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 to control his descent, offers this gem:
* God of War III, enemies will frequently attempt this on Kratos, leading him cutting his way free.
* Growling Gut for Spike, but Angel defies it by retrieving his last gem which he uses to quiet his stomach.
* Grey-and-Gray Insanity: Thinks everyone is basically just as flawed as each other to the point of absurdity.

* Goombas can parachute down, sometimes over half a dozen coming down at once.
* GUN×SWORD combined with a sometimes inordinate amount of optimism. The introductory narrative to the second episode explicitly indicates that Wendy symbolizes hope in opposition to the despair of her partner, Van, but it wouldn't be hard to figure that out without the narration.
* Gnasher and Gnipper strip, after the dogs knock over Dad one time too many, he buys a pair of special gnash-proof chains to keep them restrained. Fortunately for the dogs, while the chains were completely gnash-proof, the wall wasn't.
* Hand of God. Afterwards, she's shown to be a very ruthless, sadistic woman, not only arranging for his wife's rape, but his murder.
* Green Arrow and an appeal from body to soul to fix that little problem.
* Harry Potter throw it out without a second thought to fit in action scenes of wizards flying through London along the Thames without Disillusionment charms or other forms of concealment.
* Golgo 13 or looking like the 20 or 30-something he was when he started.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban has the Marauder's Map deny Snape access to its contents when he tries to view it, except for a series of four messages from the students that created it (according to Pottermore, the Marauders purposely enchanted the map "to forever repel (as insultingly as possible) the curiosity of their nemesis, Severus Snape", to prevent him from being able to use the map if he ever found it):
* Haaghiuaheydtrihaoivuhyarwehtoiuhadvhaiherr, a team which would be dubbed "Incoherence", as no one could understand or predict them. Even so, you could at least pull words out of what Delirious said, but then, Wicked is an undead pumpkin demon and Frightmare was supposed to be a creation of Wicked's mind, meaning neither guy is technically human.
* Hey Arnold! goes the extra mile and makes a number that wouldn't be valid even if it wasn't a 555 number. Arnold's phone number is 555-123, which is one digit short of a real phone number.
* Haru and Midori is a yuri manga about a 31-year-old woman who takes in her dead best friend's 14-year-old daughter. Naturally, the idea of the two leads being set up is more than a little disturbing to some people, although others argue that Midori will end up with someone else.
* Head of the Class. As of the season four premiere, he had lost a lot of weight over the summer, but eventually it all came back.
* Hanako has severe social anxiety that goes beyond that of the typical
* Grave Peril for all of this to have maximum psychological impact. He responds thusly:
* Gross-Up Close-Up. Fans were VERY amused by this face, as it became a meme within hours of the episode airing.
* Heart of the Woods, which added voice acting in a later patch, Tara Bryck is a trans woman, like her VA, Stephanie Arata.
* High School Musical and his father comes to realize how much pressure he is putting on his son.
* Gravity Falls includes both "Help! My Mummy's a Werewolf" and "Help! My Mummy's a Werewolf 2: This Again".
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys starts perhaps because it looked too villainous.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, is consisted of a cast from various Hanna-Barbera cartoons.
* hand motions eerily similar to the Kamehameha to finish off a monster.
* .hack games. Kite goes to dungeon, gets information about the next part of the poen, goes to next dungeon, same thing happens. Add some irrelevant sidequests (oh noes Piros is in danger again!) and a few boss fights, and you have a 4-game series.
* Good Eats episode "Use Your Noodle 2", host Alton Brown prepares ravioli. At one point, Alton struggles with being able to secure a hand-operated pasta machine onto his kitchen counter. Unable to do so, a light bulb turns on over his head, prompting him to use a run-of-the-mill ironing board for his pasta prep procedure.

* High School D×D uses this trope twice. Luckily it's only the antagonistic side that suffers instead of the heroes.
* Hayate himself is in several of these, not necessarily all in the romantic field, but strangely,
* Heavenly Sword: In the final chapter of the game, appropriately titled "The Goddess," Nariko overcomes/embraces the sword's true power and becomes a literal avatar of light, her aura sweeping aside armies of mortal soldiers as she walks towards the final battle.
* Half-Life 2 introduces Combine doors, which look like a ton of scrap metal held in place, and each piece individually slides out of the way when the door is opened.
* "Hey, dude, you're gettin' a Dell!" Though Dell Computer denies it, and says they were ready to retire that line of commercials, most still think that that guy shot himself in the foot when he was arrested for drug possession.
* Grunt does enjoy other aspects of Earth culture, though. One tidbit in the game you can uncover is a peculiar interest in classical Earth literature (particularly Hemingway), and he collects action figures and plays war with them.
* GURPS Discworld Also by Phil Masters, who does not appear to be a fan of pranks.)
* He also ends up in 2's body for a short while, much to his extreme displeasure.
* Halo even has Halsey's interrogator pointing that Spartans are so psychologically damaged they can't interact very well with ordinary people, inferring that John had to be broken to become the badass he became.
* Gosei Sentai Dairanger (Dai Rod), to which they can attach a unique blade: Red gets a halberd, Green a fork, Yellow gets a spear, Blue a sideways axe (called a plane), Pink a round blade (just called a weight).
* Heel Realization: A character is distraught upon realizing that what they've been doing is wrong.
* Here Breya guesses that the terrorists they captured in the last story arc were trying to stop the wormgate aliens, meaning they're on the same side as the mercenaries.
* Good Thing You Can Heal: A character with healing powers is seriously injured.
* Halo 2; the "cable" part of the elevator floats off into space while the massive ring things around it come loose and fall to earth.
* Great Expectations is set in Florida and New York in the Seventies and Eighties, and Pip's name is changed to Finnegan Bell, among other name changes.
* He also does exactly that (decapitate someone with a single swing) by accident when he actually fights in the real world for the first time. It's more of a "shouldn't" than "can't", since you don't want to risk the blade getting stuck in the middle of a fight.
* Hender's Island in the titular sequel plays this more straight, with colonies of hippo-sized amphipods, centipede chains made up of interlinking arthropods, and sea spiders.
* Gotham, the climactic showdown between the Penguin and Fish Mooney ends with the former pushing the latter off a rooftop and into the waters below. However, whether the fall actually killed her or not is left ambiguous.
* Halloween II (1981) that does this to a couple of characters. Jill is definitely killed in the theatrical cut, but her stabbing is softened in the TV version - with a few groans dubbed over the shot where she falls to the floor (implying she survives). The girl Alice that Michael kills in the opening is seemingly spared by re-editing the scene where Mrs Elrod discovers the bloody knife in her kitchen (implying she dies instead of Alice). Janet's death is removed, and replaced with a scene where she says she's leaving the hospital. Jimmy's fate is left open in the theatrical version - he passes out from a concussion in the parking lot - but the TV cut confirms he survives.
* Hercules: The Animated Series: When King Midas turns one of his men to gold he can still blink and shift his eyes.
* Gojira changed to the Japanese name of the movie when they got signed to a label, after being Godzilla on a few demo tapes.
* Grand Theft Auto V also uses headshots as a recurring gold medal objective.

* Gunner Z that hits as hard as a main battle tank's cannon. Also somewhat unusual is that these zombies are working with military forces — so you face gunner drones, IFV, and tanks using zombies as a screen.
* having lost her Reality Warper, is forced to wander the halls of Fontaine's Department Store to find a way out of Rapture.
* Halloween Unspectacular he tends to get caught up in (the "Anti-Magic" part).
* Good Omens (2019): Crowley (a demon) decides to call up his personal terrorist cell for help finding the antichrist, and Aziraphale (an angel) decides to call up his personal freedom fighters for the same purpose. They both call the Witchfinder's Army.
* Gratuitous English that what "meats" really means is a secret, meaning it may have been misspelled intentionally.
* he's still so angry and unsatisfied after returning to the Fire Nation. Despite having everything he's ever wanted he's still not happy, and after being pushed he realizes that what he's really angry at is himself, and the reason why is because he doesn't even know the difference between right and wrong anymore. (After all he's been steering his whole life around the idea that right meant being a good Fire Nation patriot, soldier, and a loyal son, but now he knows his country and father are on the wrong side of the war and about to commit genocide). Then he reconciles with Mai and continues to go along with things in the Fire Nation for about another half dozen episodes before finally doing his Heel–Face Turn
* Hetalia: Axis Powers did this twice in episode 13 of the fifth season. The first time he ended up with a shard of glass stuck in his forehead, although he was uninjured the second time. When a little kid asked him why he went through the window, he claimed it was because he had just gotten back from Hollywood.
* Hellsister Trilogy watches enthralled while the space ship gets crushed and blows up.
* Harry Potter fanfic where Sirius Black has two children, a boy and a girl to be more precise, their mother favors the girl over the boy because he looks like Sirius and she thinks Sirius is guilty.
* Haruhi Suzumiya worries that Haruhi might have drawn on him when he wakes to find her standing over him. She returns the favor later when she falls asleep to find Kyon standing over her.
* Grounded Forever: A child or teenager gets grounded for an absurdly long time.
* G-Saviour involves a corrupt faction in the Congress of Settlement Nations (CONSENT) military led by Garneaux who wants to control the Sides in space with an iron fist.
* her "The Curse of the Seven Children", is a kind and pure-hearted girl with hair like gold.
* Guiv's nightmare is being attacked in the Tower of Silence by countless skeletons, and then being surrounded by doubles of himself, whose heads turn into skulls as he cuts them off.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army) can be seen as the reporter in the gray sweater interviewing Hellboy outside the auction house.
* Harry Potter books, an important plot development happens on Halloween and is usually the focus of the chapter in which it occurs, so those chapters could be said to be "Halloween episodes" in a sense. The first of these chapters is actually titled "Halloween".
* got Akumatized, so Alix immediately jumped back in time to stop it—akumatized heroes are horrifying to deal with, so it was better to prevent it altogether. Alix promises Chloe that this was the first time she was akumatized in this timeline, after her redemption.
* Having physical characteristics that members of the opposite sex find appealing. (inspiring lust in others).
* Help Not Wanted ends with the four goblin protagonists collecting their payment for completing their first major contract, and then taking a second one and deciding they're going to keep doing them from now on.
* GoldenEye Ourumov takes out Bond's gun and shoots the Defense Minister dead along with the guard, leaving only Ourumov and Bond as witnesses to the scene. He then empties the gun and throws it to Bond, while reciting the story he's going to say. In this case, Bond intentionally catches the gun out of the air and pockets it, knowing full well that it wouldn't matter if he didn't touch it, as it's his gun and the Russians know that. Bond manages to get away before Ourumov can finish his gambit and shoot him for "killing the minister".

* Heavenly Sword begins with Nariko facing down King Bohan's entire army with the title sword, which tries to kill her at the end of the scene before it flashes back to how she got to this point.
* He loves fried chicken and "ate that bad boy like it was my last meal", but the patient had no way of knowing that.
* Green Rocks — The effects of radiation are often inconsistent within a work.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, Gamora's main outfit includes a duster.
* Halo 5: Guardians's Warzone has a lot of boss enemies, but most of them are just palette-swapped versions of regular foes.
* Goofy Gymnastics. He's holding up a weight that he can barely hold. A fly lands on one end, he starts to tumble, but stays up. The fly walks across the barbell, and at that time he falls through the floor.
* Harry Osborn, Norman Osborn, Eddie Brock, and Doc Ock have this happen in the
* Hank the Cowdog once gets caught in a net, just in time for coyote brothers Rip and Snort to show up. He gets moderate help from Madame Moonshine the owl, who puts a spell on the coyotes...which makes them sing backwards.
* He later teams up with Gamma, another A.I., and the Freelancer Wyoming in an evil plan to subvert the aliens' religion from within, thereby defeating the aliens and taking control of their entire species. And possibly conquering the universe with their new army.
* Harry Enfield did this a lot in his sketch shows, especially with the Cholmondley-Warner and Grayson sketches on
* Hélio Gracie, the founder of Brazilian Jiu-Jitsu, was notable for begin quite weak and having a sickly body in his youth. BJJ came from him adapting * Hard Light symbols stretching between two rods. She can also make it recite spells by itself.
* graph of Napoleon's retreat from Russia illustrates just how few French soldiers made it home alive. The width of the brown line shows the number marching towards Moscow; the width of the black line shows how many men survived the retreat. "When the remnants of Napoleon's army crossed the Berezina River in November, only 27,000 fit soldiers remained; the Grand Armée had lost some 380,000 men dead and 100,000 captured."
* He did invoke this trope in one very early issue in which he wanted to interrogate a common criminal. He led him down into a webbing-covered sewer, claiming that it was his home. This was even complete with a giant fake-spider in the shadows used to scare the mook into giving him information. It worked.
* Guy de Maupassant, Flaubert's protege, had a similar style. When he depicts people at war, he focuses on their fears, anxieties and sacrifices. His work also incorporates the developing scientific method. In "L'Horla", when the character encounters an unknown being, he tries to study it. This was a good 40 years before Lovecraft emerged on the scene.
* Godzilla makes a side comment that the name means "Incarnation of God" and some characters in the Japanese movie use the name "Godzilla" as well.
* Gungrave, power beyond imagination. Garino was even planning to leave the planet to continue spreading seed.
* here when he grows to giant size because why the hell not? Then he asks "Okay, can I help you with something?" Then Foxy sings the Jurassic Park theme song to go with it. You know the lyrics!
* Hannah Montana. In the episode where her poor singing is demonstrated, the "edited" version of the song is actually Osment's real singing voice.
* Green Lantern. This led to his death, Hal getting the ring, and everything else that came after.
* Harry Potter, Nearly-Headless Nick stretched his head up by the hair so that Harry could cut it off properly with the Sword of Gryffindor. This resulted in the head shooting across the room while his body stumbled about blindly.

* Going to the Store: Going to the local convenience store is a stock excuse for going out after hours.
* Harley Quinn at a hotel. Not only is their bed completely trashed, there are claw marks on the wall above it.
* Gorg video "Do It Anyway" was available from Cafepress for some time after the video came out.
* Hanamaru Kindergarten, who was confronting Yamamoto because of her own crush on Tsuchida.
* High Priest waiting for "the stars to be right" so he can awaken and lead his kin to resume their rule over the world.
* Gorillaz. Of course, Damon Albarn is clearly doing a good job, so it's not risky business.
* Hatta Mari does this to lure avowed woman-hater Daffy Duck to her lair in "Plane Daffy". It works a little too well as Daffy who has flown about a half a mile away returns to look at her leg up close and whistles at it.
* György Ligeti's compositions spanned a large array of different styles, but some of them featured really prominent drones, notably the pieces
* Halo characters, including the entirety of Blue Team, are also white. That said, there are still plenty of exceptions:
* Halo, several Elites end up siding with humanity when they finally realize the Covenant Prophets they've been serving are massive lying assholes.
* Hajime no Ippo that he is, is terrified at the prospect... and Ozma smiles widely before cheerfully speaking to him, leaving Ippo all dumbfounded.
* Harry Potter an example in canon. They don't complete each other's sentences in the books; rather, one will follow the other with the next appropriate sentence — they do not share a single mind, but simply think very much alike. The movies are more guilty of playing it straight, however.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone to mention that, as a Prefect, he gets to ride up front. Which gets this reaction from his brothers, Fred and George:
* Harry is revealed to be pregnant. Later on, he takes a nap while sharing a cruise ship cabin with Jacob.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, Tony attempts suicide by gunshot, but the gun's safety is on.
* Halo: Reach's damaged helmet lying on a devastated Reach. The shot quickly transitions to their POV of holding the same, undamaged helmet, and them putting it on as they arrive on Reach a month earlier. The rest of the game shows the fall of Reach to the Covenant from Six's perspective, ending in their death and on the same shot as the opening.
* Gregory's Girl Gregory falls in love with Dorothy. Susan is in love with Gregory. The whole affair is sorted out with very little trouble and heartache. Again, the joy of the film comes from the eccentric characters.
* GURPS features a lecturer at a magic seminar demonstrating an amazing magical device that conjures fire, yet neither it nor the concoction within it triggers any of the normal methods used to detect magic. It's pretty clear from the description that it's a cigarette lighter.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas players may be more familiar with the original).
* Haruhi, who reads the in-universe TV Tropes website, also lapses into this on occasion.
* Hidan is entirely immortal, and thus has almost no strategy or moves beyond "get opponent's blood for voodoo technique". Both his partner Kakuzu and eventual opponent Shikamaru tell him how stupid that is. They are proven completely right when
* Highlander, if an Immortal meets someone he knew in a previous identity, he'll at least imply that he's the son or grandson of the person s/he knew.
* Hero Businessman and scientist Silas Prescott finds a crystal which made the Prism Gate, which connects to another dimension. Power is extracted from this dimension and can power things as well as give people superpowers!

* Heroes does a literal Wiper Start when trying to start his and Ando's car in Las Vegas.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, the elf Nuada used beanstalks and tooth fairies as living weapons of mass destruction in his war against the humans.
* Gunnerkrigg Court takes this trope, runs with it, and makes it both awesome and internally consistent. Robots? Check. Fairies? Check. Trickster God Coyote in an eternal rivalry with The Fox Reynaerde, using Isengrim the Wolf for his nefarious purposes? Check. ... Psychic hacking? Check.
* Gungans, including the notorious Jar Jar Binks, though they're more amphibian people.
* Harlem Globetrotters Flight Time & Big Easy begrudgingly acknowledged sisters Kisha & Jen's racing skills in the Season 18 finale, though their hyper-competitiveness meant they probably would have had this reaction to any team beating them.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas who often abuses his position as the officer of the law by making profits off of drug trades and manipulate the gangs of Los Santos by making business with the main character's rival gangs. That doesn't even mention the fact that he even threatens to frame the main character for homicide by compelling him to do his dirty work and murders anyone who attempts to expose him.
* Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters, Hansel's Gun and several other toys.
* Harry Brown is about an elderly veteran who decides to take justice into his own hands once his friend is murdered by the local thugs.
* had no idea at the time recognizes that Claire is going to sneak out, and even runs interference for her.
* Healing Factor. It was hinted that the Bobby of Cable's time is a legendary figure, with far greater power than he's presently capable of.
* Guilty Gear has a target designator for one in his glasses, and has it fire on the enemy for one of his specials.
* H₂O: Just Add Water, Miss Chatham's hair is very long, though we only ever see it partially down. Presumably the full thing reaches to bum length.
* He's not the only one; Durka kills a junior officer and takes his uniform in an attempt to escape the destruction of the Zelbinion.
* glowing in sequence until it begins drawing life energy from the planet below into space.
* Harry Potter the best person to be teaching a class on magical zoology.
* Her absence is completely justified in the case of the first movie (set in the early 80s), as she probably wasn't even born back then. Her "retroactive" importance is also justified, as the
* Hagar the Horrible speculates that Valmart may be "dead, or hiding, or hiding as someone dead".
* henpecked bird who didn't want to life with his wife anymore, so he tried to commit suicide by feeding himself to Sylvester. Sylvester is also immediately suspicious, ultimately believing the bird intends to poison him.
* High-School Dance: A high school event where students ask each other to be their dates to the dance.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 then shows a number of other Yondu loyalists drifting in space with him.
* Hallucinogenic: "Oh look, there's a unicorn! And my flashlight is talking to me!"
* Green Arrow, except with a Robin Hood costume and all his gadgets had arrows stuck to them instead of looking like bats. Rich playboy persona, underground cave, goofy themed car, red-clad teen sidekick, he had it all. Later books evolved him to be fairly different from Batman, highlighting Oliver Queen's "playboy" part over the "rich" part. He eventually branched into politics of all things, becoming a famously loud-spoken far-left activist, something fairly unheard of among superheroes at the time.
* Groundhog Day) on loop. Many people have more interest in the film than the actual holiday.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. He acts rather childish and sweet, even when saying something threatening or disturbing.

* Grim falling apart and not seeming to mind at all is a running gag.
* Guilty Gear XX involves punching an opponent into the sky and then reciting a haiku. When he completes the poem, there's a twinkle in the sky right before "Destroyed" is announced.
* Harry Potter: The Weasley family has a clock that has nine hands and doesn't tell time at all. It just shows where each of the family members currently are. ("home," "school," "work," "travelling," "lost," "hospital," "prison," and "mortal peril.") Molly also has one to tell her to do things like "Time to make tea", "Time to feed the chickens" and "You're running late".
* Green Lantern, after getting the Red Lantern Ring, Rainbow Dash assumes that Twilight is secretly working for Nightmare Moon due to how she was asking around town (and was the only one who knew Nightmare Moon by name before she introduced herself) and immediately tries to kill her.
* Halo: The Cole Protocol: As a child Spartan-II trainee, Adriana kicked the ass of several trained Marine guards during her and Jai's numerous escape attempts.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, Dr. Krauss uses the gas he's made of to briefly reanimate one of the Tooth Fairies for interrogation.
* Harvesting the Heart you kind of get this feeling with both characters. The book is about a woman, Paige, who leaves her doctor husband Nicholas and young son because her mother did the same and she didn't know how to mother. On Nicholas' point of view, why would you take back a woman who just leaves a young baby with and doesn't come back for two months? On Paige's side, why would you get back with someone who was ready to divorce you and get a restraining order?
* Harry Potter himself has shades of this, although unusually for this trope, it's less about what he is
* Goblins and Gnomes are unique as being the only two races without a direct real-world counterpart. While the gnomes are, well,
* H. G. Wells by means of a time machine which allowed its operator to navigate through time purposefully and selectively: "The Chronic Argonauts".
* Hecate's Orphanage speaks with a friendly, often humorous tone. He frequently cracks jokes and makes wisecracks at the protagonists. But when he truly gets angry, he doesn't hesitate to slam his opponents into the dust.
* Hana the Fox Girl. Hana loses her grip on her balloon, Aoi goes up to get it, and it pops in his face.
* Harry, Neville and Susan booby-trap a door with a balloon filled with a potion which makes Sirius smell like a wet dog for three days.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows have her wand, and Harry wisely refused to give it back to her.
* Having an entire six-parter dedicated to a Triceraton invasion of Earth in the "Space Invaders" three-parter followed up by yet another "Worlds Collide" three-parter where the Triceratons invade Earth, leave Earth, come back again, rinse/repeat, and generally go back-and-forth with the Turtles can be quite tedious to sit through. How much enjoyment one gets out of this long story arc will depend on whether or not one thinks it's worth sitting through for the introduction of Agent Bishop and a few other important plot elements in the Triceraton invasion that would be used for later status-quo-changing story arcs such as Ch'rell utilizing Triceraton technology to escape Earth in the later "Exodus" two-parter.
* Guilded Age The other player characters are a bit weirded out that "The Big Four" never break character or seem to understand that there is life outside of Arkerra.
* Go Tell the Spartans: Major Barker tells Captain Olivetti that no matter how long he stays in the army he’ll always be a major due to having had an affair with the wife of the General he was serving as an aide to, only for said general and the President of the United States to walk on in her giving him a blowjob.
* Hansel and Gretel, since the reason they were sent to pick strawberries is that the family didn't have any bread in the first place.)
* Gundam, where a dropped colony fell onto southern Australia, obliterating a large part of the continent including the city of Sydney, as well as affecting the entire Earth for several years after.

* he ordered the writers to a recent popular murder mystery in which the butler is the killer.
* Godzilla movie at heart, other genre elements are dropped into most installments both for the sake of variety and to cash in on current trends in the Japanese film industry. Many of them could be described as "X but with monsters."
* Happy-Go-Lucky, Scott the driving instructor, and Poppy's older sister Helen.
* Goldstein. His father, Meir, always seems particularly uncomfortable whenever the issue comes up, though thankfully he and his wife are still supportive.
* Gunslinger Girl and she languished away there until the Agency took her in.
* Have I Got News for You takes some of its fill-in-blanks headlines for the final round are basically this trope. And they're all real.
* he starts to understand that if he wants to save people he'll have to become a cynical rotten power-player like Chang and Balalaika.
* Half-Life 2 has Gordon and Alyx ride up an elevator before the final battle. Alyx takes this time to say a few things.
* Guru Pathik is pretty obviously supposed to be Indian, but nobody else of his ethnicity appears. Also, despite being a "spiritual brother" to the Air Nomads, he is explicitly not one himself. His title, philosophy, and spiritual practices give him a distinctly Hindu flavor, but like everything else in the series, it is a mish-mash of distinct schools and traditions (particularly tantric yoga and Advaita Vedanta).
* Griffon reivers menace Equestria's shores early in the story, attacking coastal settlements, sacking them and kidnapping their inhabitants, whom they either enslave or
* Hands Held in the Snow: It's winter, it's romantic, and it's very, very gay.
* Harry Potter a Swiss army knife that includes this. Although Harry runs into a door locked with such powerful magic it melts the knife.
* Grand Theft Auto III, slows to a halt in this manner, before the mix starts up again.
* He used a good bit of his money to purchase a large plot of land to create a 'larp town' of sorts.
* he was completely open to Lilly on three separate occasions during the story - and his way of doing so isn't related to any of those occasions.
* Grasp the Sun - Character who is about to attempt some superhuman feat reaches out towards a celestial object with their hand, as if to grasp it
* Having already learned how to enthrall the plants and exotic foliage of the Everfree Forest and bend them to his will,
* Gomer Pyle, U.S.M.C. does this a lot. Unlike many other examples, he has next to no issues with the task.
* Go Through The Alphabet Before Somebody Posts A My Little Pony Picture which are the creators of the multiverse as well.
* Hand of Thrawn Pellaeon regards his memory with a combination of admiration and awe, and believes that the various times that Thrawn ignored his protests and carried on with counter-intuitive plans were a form of teaching. But his reputation certainly could have fluffed up after he died.
* Harry Potter apparently used bad flavor mixes for the nasty ones (the vomit-flavored bean was an abandoned attempt at making a pizza-flavored candy).
* Gravity Falls, opens the gates, allowing the townsfolk to enter the mansion and finally fulfill the deal.
* Golgo 13 2 bloodsports followers have Golgo duel another assassin to see who wins.
* Hamilton the Elephant, the ringleader is giving orders to Hamilton but finds that his words literally go in one ear and out the other. He has to cork his other ear in order for Hamilton to comprehend.
* Goats in the early game tend to be people who lose challenges, but are rescued in order to eliminate someone who might be a threat later on in the game. The problem is that eliminating a strong person while keeping a weak person makes your team weaker, meaning you're going to end up losing more challenges and losing more members. In a numbers game like Survivor, having the most members going into the merge is of utmost importance.

* Gunnerkrigg Court has 1129 comics as of December 12th, 2012, and is written as a full page per comic. Considering the nature of the story, it really is best to start on page one.
* Heirs of Fate DLC, he does this not only on the former four, but on the dead parents of the second generation kids whose worlds he destroyed.
* Height as a measure of power and standing was also typical among the Elves. Thingol, King of Doriath in
* Gravity; the hatch slams open from the sudden outrush of air, nearly breaking her grip on the handle.
* Head of the Class, which followed the teenage stars from their freshman year of high school to their graduation day. However, in order to pad out the series for a fifth season, it was decided that the fourth season was the first half of their senior year, and the fifth season was the second half.
* Happily Adopted: I'm so happy to be raised by a couple as if I was their son/daughter!
* Hamlet who’s good with a sword and has a girlfriend who loves him. He’s also wracked with grief and paranoia in the wake of his father’s murder, obsessed with the idea of revenge but too indecisive to make it happen, and (at least by the end of the play) more than a little bit insane.
* Greek Ninja, Sasha is saved from the advances of a succubus/ex-lover by the wandering demigoddess Electra.
* Happōsai one time chained Ranma up, sealed him in concrete, and then buried him in the backyard. But it takes more than that to stop Ranma.
* Going Bovine, there is a constant doubt on whether Cameron is really traveling across the country and saving the world or simply hallucinating due to his mad cow disease.
* "Good Cop, Bad Cop": Eddie complains that he was the victim of racial profiling by two overzealous cops. Carl at first refuses to believe Eddie, since Eddie had lied before about late-night carousing, and this latest incident did take place late at night when he was supposed to be home. When Harriette asks Carl to at least get the other side of the story, he does ... and Carl finds out that the senior officer is indeed a severe racist who stopped Eddie simply because he was "a black in a white person's neighborhood." Carl is furious and says he will report him to the captain; he then urges the rookie officer – sensing potential and that he had made a mistake that he can learn from – to examine his own attitudes.
* Have I Got News for You: Paul Merton do has done lots of those. "Lower" (when guessing at a number) made him use a deeper voice, "nearer" made him lean in, etc.
* Greek Mythology: Zeus was amused by Hermes' pranks and antics, but because they interfered with the duties of the other Gods he couldn't allow them to continue. Zeus made Hermes the messenger of the Gods to keep him out of trouble.
* Heel–Face Turn to be one eventually who admitted Kenichi didn't suck before actually losing, right?
* Heroic Fatigue: Being a hero day in and day out can take a real toll on you.
* Hayao Miyazaki's dress being stained with Ohm blood (which is actually a key plot point). Sorta like their skin and clothes are made out of Teflon. (How else do you explain San's gear being clear of blood stains not much later when even modern soap powder has difficulty getting it all out?)
* Guyver, the Gigantic upgrade takes the form of a large piece of Creator technology which can be swapped between the Guyvers. It actually began as an escape pod for a Creator ship which was physically and mentally tied into Sho while it crashed.
* GURPS lash out at or even physically assault somebody convenient. ("Berserk" is explicitly the worse form of this and the two can't both be taken together for that reason.)
* Guillermo del Toro are both gothic ghost tales, set in a remote orphanage in 1930s Spain and a decaying mansion in Edwardian England, respectively. His other films consistently draw influence from classic gothic fiction as well even if they occupy various other genres themselves.

* Hex runs through a shooting gallery where the dummies are firing back with live ammunition in a story entitled, appropriately enough, "The Shooting Gallery".
* Goldfinger. However, just when he makes the attempt, Felix Leiter arrives with a bomb expert who brushes away Bond and simply hits the off switch for the bomb to stop its countdown. With "007" on the timer. (This was actually a late addition - Bond says "Three more ticks and Goldfinger would have hit the jackpot", referencing the fact that in the original edit the timer was stopped with three seconds left. The producers thought 007 on the timer was better, even if the line that followed now didn't make sense.)
* Godbound) were optional or ignored. What he ended up with was a simple and generally elegant system that could bring a lot of different player groups around a table.
* Happy Heroes, is a mechanic who often invents non-weapon pieces of technology.
* he nearly strangles and later almost rapes her on account of being influenced by his Enemy Within
* Greedy Jew: A highly unflattering, racist stereotype of Jewish people as ruthless penny-pinchers obsessed with money.
* GOLD RUSH! words other than "Make it! Make money!" and the names of the Beatmania games. I dare you.
* Heroes was not one of the show's more successful moves, not least due to West being the only person in the entire run who Claire had absolutely NO chemistry with. Including Sylar and her UNCLE * Guilty Gear Xrd -REVELATOR-: Jack-O' Valentine's Instant Kill has the opponent tied up and kicked, with an explosion on the Earth's surface, visible from space.
* Here. A monkey for blow-drying fingernails after you've applied nailpolish.
* Gunslinger Girl. Both Agency handlers and terrorists are obsessed with avenging family members killed by the other side. Those who aren't are invariably either corrupt leaders or disillusioned veterans.
* good death before acting on his sadistic impulses, so at least he feels his sadism needs some "higher" purpose.
* Hellsister Trilogy dives into and catches the kid, saving her from getting splattered in the nick of time.
* Hamlet (by the same director as above) with Mordin portraying Polonious.
* Half-Life 1 is a redshirt. The security guards tag along and give support, but their low hit points and wimpy pistols mean they never last long. And the scientists, oh those poor scientists. Almost all of them only exist to die in scripted set-pieces to remind you of how insanely dangerous everything is. (One of the guards, however, got his own spin-off. You don't mess with Barney.)
* Harry Dresden is a wizard, but his yellow pages ad specifically says he doesn't do parties. Harry seems to know about this trope, and tries to defy it as much as possible... yet people still phone him to ask if he REALLY is a wizard, and not just some magician or charlatan.
* Harvey Weinstein loved using this trope for his productions back in the late 1990's and early 2000's. Starting with
* Guild Wars 2 the Grawl will often form religions based on old statues or rock formations which they think represent a god. This has included an abandoned shrine of Balthazar, a crystal meteorite from the Searing, and a statue of the Norn Jora.
* Gravity Falls. It's most obvious near the end of the series, when their 13th birthday becomes a major plot point — Dipper is rushing to grow up, Mabel comes to fear it, but both make peace with the issue by the end.
* her pilots behaving oddly, Misato demands an explanation. Before explaining things, Asuka suggests her picking a beer first:
* H₂O: Just Add Water. Cleo is able to summon extra water as well as control it, something that baffles both her and Emma when they first learn their powers.
* Happy Heroes, so the joke is that she just has to cook the apples to make them taste disgusting).
* Halo: Contact Harvest, there is a scene where UNSC forces torture and execute Insurrectionist prisoners.
* He spends most of the episode baffled until the end when we find out it was a huge Batman Gambit.

* He later shows up, doing a summer run, his sleigh providing aid at a crucial moment for Perry, who starts beaming again.
* Hibari and Mukuro. Apparently, after 10 years, however, they both seem to be more loyal to Tsuna (even possibly admiring and respecting his strength). Of course, neither would
* Harry Dresden himself. He considers becoming a vampire of the Red Court to stop the war between them and the White Council of Wizards, but the vampire who offered fed on children (since said vampire was planning to betray him anyway, this is something of a moot point and soon the vampire was squashed by a falling satellite). Also, he named Ivy. His response to a little girl in
* Greasy Spoon when a vampire tries to eat her, only to back off because she smells terrible. Buffy naturally takes offense. "You're dead! You smell like it! How do you get to say I'm the one who's stinky?"
* Hell Teacher Nube, Miki keeps abusing the wish-granting puffballs Kesaran Pasaran for selfish and trivial reasons. When Nube and her classmates are left hanging by the side of a building by an explosion, she uses all her remaining Kesaran Pasaran to save their lives.
* Here There Be Monsters are not actually rats they're about the same size, and when Victor accidentally steps through the covering to a nest full of them their swarming out of it and up his leg invoke a swarm of rats quite well.
* Hayate the Combat Butler used to be this for Hinagiku originally, and the anime even added a few episodes of this to him, but since the second year started, he's actually gotten some character of his own.
* Grand Theft Auto V, Trevor tells a story to Wade about a boy named Trisha growing up who eventually meets a troll named Michele and partner up in crime, almost giving out his and Michael's name. Trevor, being pissed, ends up giving away their names near the end and confusing Wade.
* Good Burger "welcome to Good Burger, home of the Good Burger, can I take your order?" Critic responds with delight that yes, he certainly can, then shouts "DIE!" for about five seconds.
* Highlander TV show. Evil immortals really like to lure Mac in with this one.
* Hellraiser: Deader, whose leader kills and resurrects its members to take over the dimension controlled by supernatural sadomasochists.
* God of War: Ascension, though still very well-received, received some criticism for having unchanged, identical gameplay from the previous games.
* Handily demonstrated in the duel between Gregor Clegane, a giant of a man strong enough to wield a greatsword in one hand, and Oberyn Martell, a regular sized man. Oberyn, while severely outclassed in the strength department, is quick and agile, and uses a spear (coated with poison) to keep out of reach of Clegane's
* Hades died in fierce battle or by earning the ire of the gods themselves. Eurydice remarks that her own death was very sudden and mundane for a semi-divine nymph, having been bitten by a venomous snake.
* Hands-Free Handlamp: Fumbling with your light sources can be inconvenient and detrimental to gameplay, to the point of bogging down the pacing.
* Grim reapers aren't minions of a death deity as far as anyone knows: they just like to kill stuff.
* Haagse Harry: All characters are degrading foul mouthed people from The Hague, Netherlands.
* Halo 4 that can destroy a Warthog with one hit. It can also pivot 360 degrees without moving its legs.
* He does it again in "Vote Republican", with lines like "I'm not saying Nancy Pelosi is a * GUN×SWORD turns is Van's hunt to avenge the death of his bride by killing the Claw. Over the series, the other protagonists obtain reasons to want the same thing. Unusually for anime, the desire to obtain revenge is portrayed in a largely positive light.
* Harry Potter of what exactly happened to Ariana Dumbledore to prompt her father, Percival, to attack some local Muggles. The book, however, is vague on what exactly happened, save that it left her traumatized about doing magic again.

* Gunnerkrigg Court", sometimes (Kat is confounded to discover that her parents believe in magic, and more so to find out that it's a known quantity not dissimilar to her beloved robots and computers).
* Halo, Ashley Williams becomes this indirectly when she finds herself under the command of Master Chief (who's filling the role of Commander Shepard storywise). She intensely studied the history of the Spartans and their own battlefield tactics years before meeting him and is flustered into a stuttering mess during their first off-battlefield conversation.
* Heterosexual Life-Partners: Two male friends who are so close together that one might mistake them for lovers.
* Hellsing: The plot of "Innocent As a Human" revolves around these being distributed on the internet — the fact that they involving filming humans being eaten by vampires is what gets Hellsing involved.
* Hevy does this twice. Firstly, after the reinforcing droids order him to open the bay doors, he retorts "Didn't say "please"!" before opening fire. Later, after being incapacitated, the droids wonder about whether they're supposed to take prisoners and he replies "I... don't." before
* Good Omens that he's been audited five times on the basis that anyone who turns in accurate tax forms on time has something to hide.
* Halo named after the star they orbit, like Beta Gabriel and Jericho VII.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters was originally Didier, one of the great heroes of Meridian's ancient past. How exactly this came to pass is currently unknown, however.
* Halloween episode lampshades Ebert's comments on the trope, with a side scene of a cat jumping across the shot at chest level.
* Great Expectations when he yells "Everything I have ever does has been for you!" from the street-level. The receiving Estella is aloof to his affection.
* Hard to say if it's an appeal of the author or just part of the series' weirdness, but
* Go to roadfood.com and look up all the restaurants under the "Diner" category. You'll find quite a few that fit the bill (and quite a few others that used to fit before getting listed on Roadfood made them popular and they became more upscale).
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series and this caused Green Lantern toy sales to plummet.
* Greek Seaman. In one of her comments, she states that she's been getting an increase in sales due to the blog going viral.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Harry hears a Muggle news report about the notorious mass-murderer Sirius Black. Turns out Sirius is a wizard, Harry's godfather, and not a murderer at all.
* GURPS Infinite Worlds travel). Some agents of Centrum (the antagonist timeline) have noticed that Homeliners get downright irrational (or even more so than usual) about timelines where Hitler exists, especially if he's winning. To Centrum, he's just another genocidal despot like so many in (other people's) history.
* Headmasters limited series did this several times, one for each of the factions' sub-lines (Headmasters, Targetmasters, etc.).
* Golden Boy we are introduced to the case that has been haunting Det Owen for the last eleven years. On the morning of September 11, 2001 a man was murdered and the police investigation quickly found some very promising leads. Then the planes flew into the Twin Towers and in the ensuing chaos the trail went cold. Owen regularly rereads the case file and keeps in touch with the victim's widow.
* "Hadashi no Hime" ("The Barefoot Princess") because she avoids footwear and prefers to do her live concerts and her music videos barefooted. Her the cover for her video documentary "Candle in the Lives" even features her bare feet on prominent display on the set where she performed her "Dizzy Dive" music video that day (also while barefoot, of course). One of her music videos also sees her taking off a pair of shoes in the background because they hurt her feet. In fact, in her music video "Chain," she makes a deliberate choice to leave her shoes behind as she exits her house because she'd rather go barefoot. She even spots a pair of shoes on display in a boutique and seems to have a change of heart, but then she scoffs at them. Then the reason why she doffed the shoes becomes clear- they were the proverbial chain preventing her from being free.

* Grand Theft Me: Taking over a person's body to make them do bad things.
* Hero Killer: The villain has successfully killed at least one hero who attempted to defeat them.
* Help! My Story Has the Mary-Sue Disease and on another occasions are advised agains bleaching their brains because grey is a nice color.
* Greek Ninja, and it becomes obvious she would give her life for any one of them, even though she couldn't stand them to start with.
* Halo 3 fashion you traverse the majority of the base three times. Still fun though.
* High-Altitude Interrogation: Tell me what I want to know or I'll throw you off this high ground!
* have a different type of social life compared to the general population is enough to make them depressed.
* He Is My Master example above, however, the anime actually has an ending.
* Green Lantern: Kyle Rayner has traversed the entire universe in a span of a few months, as well as traveling back and forth between Oa and Earth multiple times. Other Lanterns -especially Hal Jordan- have done the same, but not nearly as much as Kyle has.
* Guild Wars 2 like a lightsaber, it even recedes into the hilt when not in use.
* Harlequinade lavish (and highly illegal) criminal casino being operated there. Needless to say everyone there is packing heat, hates the Bat, and it ends about as peacefully as you'd expect.
* have received some upgrades, and are planned to fly at least up 'til 2025, if not beyond. Like the aforementioned B-52, the 'Hog is a blunt hammer of an instrument, a workhorse, while the stealth jets are precision scalpels, different tools for different jobs.
* Glorianna shared an adventure when Glorianna was briefly transported to the 21st century (while Lady Spectra ended up in Glorianna's era).
* Golgo 13 villain figures out how to use the very existence of the assassin protagonist's Swiss bank accounts and the fantastic sum that must be in them to run an international scam.
* Hell, Halloween Fics have sprouted a tiny subgenre: Xander gets all the abilities and hardware (including a certain blue AI) of
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix on this one and apologizes at the end.
* Gundam X; it's easy to forget given what a massive franchise it has become when the original installment had poor ratings.
* Goldfinger, it's featured in a race against an equally cool Ferrari)
* Hamster Club manga series which ran for 12 volumes between 1994 till 1995. The series received 4 video games that were released on the Gameboy Color and Gamebody Advance and a Playstation game. It even gained a short-lived anime adaptation and a single OVA release. The series caused tons of Japanese children and women to get pet hamsters.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Drax the Destroyer has trouble understanding metaphors.
* Harold Ramis was specifically asked not to impersonate Harold Ramis, but he realized that nothing else sounded right.
* He once tried weighing, measuring and shaking a present to determine what was inside, then said "So much for the scientific method", grabbed Jon's face and demanded to know what it was.
* High Rollers subsidiary), all because of the poor question writing that, according to Matt Ottinger's Game Show Home Game Page, had questions that didn't even make sense (e.g, "What is to gossip?" Answer: Reach) or were hopelessly vague (e.g., "Who was a famous Olympic star?" Answer: Owens). After getting complaints, a new version was immediately issued and contained a question booklet with someone that knew what they were doing, with mostly true-false questions or multiple choice that the show came to be known for. The dice-rolling portion of the game was faithful to the rules in use at the time (simply the Big Numbers bonus game, rather than the more famous setup of three columns of three numbers each scattered randomly on the board).

* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn and Amiti are the only male player characters not subject to this trope.
* Gone Girl end of the bargain by being her "Cool Guy" and their marriage falls apart because neither of them can keep up the act anymore. Nick in general has an apparent habit of falling for women like this, only to resent them later when it turns out that they have their own personality flaws, owing to his inability to deal with angry women.
* Harry is an outgoing, adventure-loving Gryffindor whereas Newt is an introverted, level-headed
* Heck, Chrono does this several times in the first season and a few times in the second. The kid
* Gozer (also known as Gozer the Gozerian, Gozer the Destructor, Gozer the Traveler, Volguus Zildrohar and Lord of the Sebouillia) in
* Granblue Fantasy. The Dawning Sky Arc has The Great Wall, a floating superweapon powered using organic beings as its "fuel".
* Hannibal, and she is quite fond of her Roush Mustang. More than she can really afford, but she got it cheap at a police auction.
* Helm is an unusually slow-acting example — much of the knowledge it imparts is not accessible by the wearer for months.
* Guts and the Hawks discover Griffith broken and tortured, Guts cries while holding him and then goes... well, berserk
* Gorr the God-Butcher is one of these. He started out hating his own people's gods due to a
* Gotham, fencing and boxing with young Bruce Wayne and then fending off home invaders at Wayne Manor. He even calls himself Bruce's bodyguard at one point.
* Halloween Wiki. This one is notable for also having a few articles on real-world Halloween traditions and notable events related to the holiday, as well as for taking the url 'halloween.fandom.com', before the wiki for the film series of the same could, forcing that one to use 'halloweenmovie'.
* Harry and the Shipgirls, who is arguably even scarier than they are.
* Hello! Project to use these in song titles... Koisuru♡Angel♡Heart, ♡Momoiro Kataomoi♡, Icha♡Icha Summer, Honki Mekimeki♡Toki Mekimeki, Hare Ame Nochi Suki♡, Zettai Tokeru Mondai X = ♡, Renai♥Rider, Ona no Ko no Torishirabe Time♥...
* has a time limit, it also means that he's sometimes unavailable during crises because he's used up his energy to stop much lower-scale crimes.
* her mom could have never gotten to where she was as a businesswoman if she believed that.
* Grand Theft Auto has a phone number, it's probably a real toll-free number. At the time of the game's release, calling the number would get you a recording relevant to the ad, typically giving more detail on the product.
* Half the series was played in Canada and the other half in the Soviet Union. Overseas, the Canadian team suffered from a severe case of
* Hallucination causes the entire screen to blur in a wavy pattern, making it hard to read anything, see where you're going, or target the enemy you want to hit. It also grossly misreports damage taken (though your health bar will still be correct.)
* Greek myth, the wedding night of Zeus and Hera lasted 300 years, and since they both were happy this was the happiest era in the world's history.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. In the first series, Taro changes colors and sometimes collapses whenever women (except Mariel) touch him. This was toned down in the show's remake, probably because he literally had no other problems interacting with girls.
* Hells Paradise Quinton is torn apart and eaten by zombies after trying to abandon the group. Also an unnamed man in the first episode gets his guts ripped out by a zombie.
* Happy Feet; it turns out that Emperor Penguins do keep a milk-like substance stored in a gland by the esophagus, but it's actually the males that do this.

* Help! I'm Trapped..., still serves his position as goalie in his soccer game. At some point he notices two other aliens watching off to the side, and they wave at him every time he sees them. He then begins worrying about it, because "Sure, waving is friendly on Earth, but maybe where they come from, it means 'We're gonna kill you!'"
* Halloween. Perhaps more common are the Harvest festivals and parties, which feature game booths, contests, and the requisite candy, typically hosted in whatever part of the church has an open floor and forgoing the ghouls-and-ghosts theme (converting the holiday into Thanksgiving Lite).
* "Heff in a Handbasket" was pulled after the show's initial run, due to all the references to
* Hellsing Ultimate Apparently, store owners just don't care if an oblivious Korean family confuses a mature anime for a children's cartoon...
* Graf Zeppelin, which had never been designed to do half of those things.
* He Is Not My Boyfriend". Scully and Mulder arrive at a TV station and are at first assumed to be the married couple about to appear on the program. When the real couple arrive they look like country hick versions of the two FBI agents.
* Gugure! Kokkuri-san modes that they'll often go into especially to gain sympathy with Kohina. In particular:
* Hideaki Hakamichi seems about as sympathetic to his plight as he is to Shizune's deafness.
* High on Fire, if you thought Matt Pike wasn't enough to convince you, the music is sludgy thrash that has the sounds of epic battles within it.
* Harley Quinn, though in her own series it was implied that she went through one of these before meeting him.
* .hack//G.U. Azure Flame Kite certainly lives up to his name. He travels about as a flying ball of blue flame and is often seen wreathed in blue fire seemingly for no reason other than it makes him look incredibly badass.
* Greek dubs of most live-action Disney shows tend to use this trope for boys, unlike most animated Disney works, that use the
* Halo getting a chance to show how badass they are - even the Unggoy.
* GoldenEye 007, as civilian personnel (whom you're not allowed to kill) operate the sensitive terminals you're assigned to destroy, meaning you have to scare them off lest they be killed in the ensuing explosions. It's speculated that since the game had no physics engine, the developers made almost every object explodable as a compromise.
* GURPS Banestorm committed to evil, but it's literally corrupt to the core.
* Godzilla Toho films (some of which have been known to be famously horrible).
* Gossip Girl. It follows Nate and Jenny's storyline from season, but rather than develop it for a season as the show did, Nate is suddenly in love with Jenny to the point where Jenny is confused by it.
* Happy Tree Friends, Cuddles and Giggles, holding hands...then switches to Handy and Petunia, who have tied together the bandages on their stumps.
* Hec Ramsey when Stamp comes in and pulls him off. Once Stamp has Mendoza out of the cells, it becomes obvious they have planned this. Stamp returns to the cells and plays nice cop, offering the suspect a cigarette. He manages to get him talking and eventually reveal where is partners are holed up.
* Guardians of the Flame series, for every earth hour that passes, four to five hundred hours pass in the other world, hence not being seen for a weekend on earth means up to four years of life you can spend there.
* Highlander Movie, Kurgan sings a very bad rendition of Frank Sinatra's "New York, New York", which then segues into a Queen version of the song. (For the record, there is no full Queen version of the song. The Highlander snippet is all that's known to exist.)
* Helga is widely disliked by the same peers for being a bully, but due to her character development, she's arguably the most popular character in the show as well as the
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix: Harry discovers the "Room of Requirement" at Hogwarts, which has been used by decades of students to hide things that they don't want anyone else to see.

* Heel–Face Turn following the Cell Saga causes him to allow wizard Babidi to reawaken the evil in his heart and bring out his potential, allowing him to fight evenly with Goku.
* Half-Life 2 there's not a whole lot of anything left, much less scientists. It's unclear if the Resistance Science Team has more than Doctors Kleiner, Vance, Magnusson, Mossman, and Freeman.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, selecting "I've made partner!" at the start of Case 2 has this exchange.
* Hilarity Ensues when Patrick immediately ignores his own advice and lets Spongebob's grandma dote on him.
* Hello Cheeky was written by the three main performers, which occassionally led to some pleasant lampshading.
* Gross-Up Close-Up: A horrifically detailed closeup of something gross or scary.
* Harry and Snape meet with a packed Gryffindor common room shortly after revealing their relationship.
* GURPS Supers. The 'Ishb'kaukab are a race of whale-sized, telepathic, sentient creatures that live in deep space. They have been tamed and genetically engineered by the Takisians into self-repairing spaceships.
* Hercules (2014) threatened his grandson's life to ensure his daughter's cooperation while he has her enlist Hercules to his side. He earlier also did this to force into accepting his rule.
* Glory at the Battle of Antietam, who takes a direct hit from artillery.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019), Dr. Chen (who is slated to return for the film) is no longer the only Ilene who's a relevant character.
* Harlequin, while a bit creepy, is the theme song for the nice Nannasprite.
* Ground Control that drops GHE Spider Drones, which hone in on enemy vehicles and explode when in the 5-meter radius of the target.
* Goosebumps, the abominable snowman (the first monster to be sucked back into R.L. Stine's manuscripts) gets absorbed torso-first, where the characters realize their hypothesized plan to reseal the monsters worked after seeing Stine opening the book through the monster's midsection.
* Good Luck Charlie. Teddy also dreams that a giant Charlie is attacking Spencer.
* He does, however, tell her that he plans to overthrow him so that they can rule the galaxy together themselves, and probably do a better job at it than Palpatine would.
* Hergé became its own magazine after the war all artists that wanted to work for him had to adapt his style of detailed documentation and pitch perfect realistic drawing style.
* Hercules: The Animated Series, there several monsters that have more than one head. One of which is the Hydra, which appears in the movie. The three heads even have a conversation at one point.
* High fructose corn syrup, the currently-trendy "evil" of the food industry, is beginning to be called "corn sugar" to lessen its "evil" connotations.
* He also stole Scott Summers' DNA, looking to find out why Scott's father, the son of a powerful mutant - Colonel Alex Summers a.k.a. Havok - didn't have powers, and was surprised to find out the potential power of the Summers' genome.
* Greek Mythology ever escaped, even if they were still technically alive.
* Heroes of Newerth has a piss-poor mana pool, but none of his abilities cost mana to use. Both of his active skills use a percentage of his HP to cast, and he gets bonus health regen on his passive. He makes up for it with his ultimate, which automatically revives him on death. This is the only ability that uses any mana, which revives him with less health if his mana percentage is too low.
* Harry Potter - and eventually, due to the interference of an Eldar Wych, gets sent back... after becoming an Inquisitor of the Ordo Malleus and a brother of the Charnel Guard.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters spends her brief appearance in Chapter 19 nursing a bottle of wine, to comfort herself over the failure of her plan during the subway fight which concluded in the previous chapter.

* Harry himself is something of an inversion. His father was a stage magician, his mother a powerful, mysterious wizard.
* Happened to Chopper during his fight against Baroque Works. Miss Merry Christmas held onto his feet so he couldn't move, while Mr. 4's gun/dog Lasso fired an exploding baseball at him. He screamed as the ball flew towards his head, but then changed back into his smaller hybrid form, resulting in the ball flying harmlessly overhead. He even said "Whew, forgot I could do this."
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire Harry must solve the riddle of a sphinx, which is described as being basically a large cat with a beautiful woman's head.
* Hell, this is the Doctor and River's relationship in a nutshell. They seem to enjoy the fighting/running for their lives as much as the flirting, and even the villain rolls her eyes at their antics.
* Hearts and Minds is chock full o'war crimes, all perpetrated by the Americans of course. Children poisoned by napalm, a man screaming hysterically because his little children were killed by an American bomb, American soldiers torching a village—in other words, not a good 4th of July film.
* Government agencies have been established to prevent it from ever occurring again.
* Going into a bit more detail, the car is haunted by the dead soldier, who took pleasure in riding along with the new owner (just at the edge of the man's sight) whom he had left a letter to (via the glovebox), encouraging whoever claimed the car to enjoy it, as he had wished he could have before he shipped out and died. In the end, when the accident happens, Private Malone repays the new owner for the rides by dragging him free of the crash. A bystander claims to have seen a soldier rescue the driver, but didn't get the man's name. The driver ends the song, thanking God that the soldier was tagging along with him, knowing he wouldn't have survived otherwise.
* Guns N' Roses: Production began in 1994, and the actual album was released in 2008. A long-running joke held that China would become a democracy before the album would ever get released. Unfortunately, that didn't happen.
* Heel–Face Turn as she cuts the link with the civilians on it and leaves with them, leaving Adam behind.
* Hieronymus Bosch. In medieval society owls were seen as evil and foolish, thus explaining why they are often seen in the presence of morally fallible human beings.
* go hand to hand, as she prefers tying people in knots at close-quarters and turning their strength against them.
* Happened to Ryoko again later, when she was captured by Dr. Clay and replaced by a doppleganger.
* heat meter. At best, there's the implication that it's the result of the Covenant's mindless devotion to their religion, e.g. having copied the weapons from similar Forerunner weapons without completely understanding how to replace or recharge the batteries, but nothing is ever stated about this aspect of the weapons.
* Happens in a romance with Alistair. After he and the PC spend their first night together, there is a brief shot of the PC sleeping and Alistair watching her with a look of tender affection.
* Godwin's Law: Both sides have arguments that the Nazis belonged to the opposing side. Romanticists point to their racial pseudoscience and use of modern industry to organize mass killings, the Enlightened point to their reactionary blood and soil ideology and mythology of race. Social Darwinism is mentioned below.
* Gruntz is chock-full of various obstacles that any normal human could easily get past by just climbing onto things or walking carefully between them. Then again, the tutorial does mention that the titular gruntz aren't exactly bright.
* Golden Freddy V. Hard Custom Night. The same game also leaves it ambiguous if HandUnit is actually trying to kill you or not.
* Handsome Jack is an extremely cruel person, and even when not being physically violent he still likes to say things to hurt people, such as making fun of Helena

Pierce's scars and taunting Moxxi about how he burned herUnderdome to the ground
* Gross Sisters wear overalls and have hair that is somewhat long, but not styled in a particularly feminine way.
* Henry Danger, Piper adores Kid Danger and has a huge crush on him, unaware that he is actually her brother, Henry. Needless to say, when she finds out her brother and hero are the same person, she is horrified and disgusted.
* Harry and the Sailor Scouts decide to reveal the existence of the wizarding world, due mostly to the publicity involved in his and Sailor Moon's impending wedding.
* Green Lantern show the Starts of Darkness of various Sinestro Corpsmen and Red Lanterns, as well as Agent Orange. Some of them have tragic pasts, others (including Larfleeze) just aren't very nice people.
* Glorious Shotgun Princess "Cerberus Taco Cart Theorem" which states that most (if not all) projects that Cerberus undertakes will kill all the scientists and take over the base.
* Haunted Castle. It had managed to escape inspection before the fire by virtue of its status as a "temporary structure" (even though it had been in place for five years) due to it having been built in seventeen mobile trailers.
* "Greedling" helps the rebel forces hold back the soldiers loyal to Central Command. This entails a * Gothic, where the punishment for any crime was imprisonment in a mining colony since the kingdom needed the magical ore from these colonies to make swords for their armies to use in the war against the orcs. In the end, they lost.
* Godzilla — Japanese kaiju film series, the longest running film franchise still in production. At a current total of 30 films made over 60 years (1954–Present).
* Happens to the zords themselves sometimes. One notable instance was in
* Hanamaru Kindergarten see their attempts to follow Tsuchi during his day off hampered by their kindergartener attention spans. After the trio is distracted by a toy machine, a cat, and a panda-cat poster, Hiiragi decides that perhaps kindergarteners shouldn't be detectives.
* Guy in the Street Fighter Alpha series enters the fight with a jump kick from off-screen knocking a bunch of barrels out of the way.
* Grease came packaged in either a T-Bird or Pink Ladies jacket - or, if you bought it at Target, a Danny Zuko letterman jacket.
* hauled in a cardboard cutout of Rudd and sent the debate screaming into chaos until it was suspended.
* Harvard's Hasty Pudding Society's annual Theatrical always has one of these in front of the curtain. It's usually during a scene change, but even if there's no change, there's still the hurricane.
* . He describes helmets as 'metal skulls', identifies emotions partly by smelling them, and takes pride in understanding human concepts.
* Higher Learning gives us three in the form of college freshmen Malik, Kristen, and Remy. Of those three, Kristen remains naive the longest.
* Hanna-Barbera so most of the conflicts involved them being separated or the rings being stolen.
* Half-Lives: The First Luisa Rey Mystery is modeled after this genre. A spunky soul sista reporter and rebellious employees of an energy concern team up to prevent the higher-ups from covering up information that their latest power plant project is unsafe in the name of saving a buck.
* Haven: Call of the King. You have a space ship, and have to check the game's several worlds for them. As these are full sized planets, it will literally take hours worth of flyovers in your space ship to find one, partly because your ship doesn't move nearly with the kind of speed you'd expect of an intergalactic vessel.
* Going Postal. Exactly what that entails is not specified, but Lord Vetinari considers it a sign that Moist needs a fresh set of challenges in his life.
* Granblue Fantasy, Zooey mentions that Primal Beasts are born from the people's desires or wishes. During the Fate Episodes of her permanent version, she has to "be one with the world" in order to prevent an oncoming threat that could end all life. Days past and Zooey never returned. Then Vyrn motivates the crew to wish and think for Zooey to come back, and she does.

* Hale County This Morning This Evening but obviously suggesting the plantation manor house burning. Then there's a shot of the silent film comedian smiling.
* Gotham by Gaslight, a Victorian-era Bruce Wayne survived his parents' fatal run-in with a bandit on the road because the shots the man fired stirred up a flock of bats, which came bursting out of the nearby treetops and scared the robber off.
* Ground Control to Psychoelectric Girl. It helps that Makoto didn't even know Erio existed until he was sixteen. Makoto also shows attraction to his aunt.
* Harvest Moon: Light of Hope. upon meeting Gus and giving him an iron ore, a cutscene plays where he cramps his back. The player then offers to help him down the mountain back to his home.
* Goddess Mode's future is even more polluted and stratified than ours, but with the Azoth AI running everything, most people are constantly distracted.
* Halo: Reach, Elites also carry retractable Energy Daggers in their gauntlets. These are small blades that only appear in assassinations without the sword.
* Heroic Sacrifice of which still haunts her two seasons later. Her final love interest in the last season ends happily though.
* Grand Finale, was generally seen as a fitting send-off for the show, meaning the curse was inverted starting with the 5th season.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters which has been turned by nuclear radiation to match it in size and strength.
* He didn't plan it from the very start of the series, but as things get worse and his actions cause or help cause countless deaths, he has a
* Golden Age died just as he delivered the only copy straight into her hands.
* Heather also has another foil in Shannon. Both focus heavily on crushes and characters who have them, but while Heather
* "Hi, I'm (name) from (applicable Disney production) and you're watching Disney Channel!" (both on live-action shows and the animated ones below). It's become rather iconic for those who grew up watching the channel during the 2000s or early 2010s.
* Guilty Gear: More than the mic itself, I-No makes a mic-stand/mace appear in one of her basic attacks and that's what swings upwards to hit the opponent.
* Golf Story: During your match against Lara at Oak Manor, she'll steal Max Yards's "Unbound!" after a particularly good tee shot, but she apologizes for saying it right after.
* Hark! A Vagrant's "Strong Female Characters" story, where Susan B. Assthony becomes enticed by the "incredibly weak male lead" character, and apparently marries him.
* Grand Finale with the song "Thank You For Comin' Along" that has the characters singing to the audience and thanking them for watching. At the end of the song, Phineas waves goodbye to the audience before closing the door.
* Gravity Master powers to create areas where time flows differently. When this ability is introduced, he uses it to spend a lot of time meditating while on a strict deadline.
* Happy Birthday, Mr. Monk initially declares that he prefers death. However, after a few seconds, he hides in the dumpster with Natalie.
* He rides to Weathertop, gets ambushed by the Nazgûl and drives them off - three days before Frodo and company arrive there.
* Gustave is an even more extreme example. There have been cases where people have tried to pick fights with him, despite being a
* Gorilla, Interrupted, mentions offhand that a man named "Machmed" hired him to create a bomb because "He has an important building he needs to blow up."
* Grave of the Fireflies, though it should be mentioned that the anime was itself an adaptation of a well-known novel from the 1960s.
* has Loki bemoaning the lack of popcorn while Daredevil awkwardly tries to reassure Foggy Nelson about Matt Murdock's health and safety without outing himself as said Matt Murdock, only to fail.
* Haruka 3: Ridvan (from the Oni Clan) and Hakuryuu (the depowered human form of the Dragon-God).

* He further expanded on the subject in "Hollywood Brass" by stating that vice cops are essentially set up to become dirty and corrupt due to how their job required them to drink, gamble, solicit prostitutes, and party on a regular basis.
* Highlander III: The Sorcerer, Connor MacLeod's mentor, possesses the power of illusion, using it to confuse his opponents. Kane steals it from him by killing him, using it to impersonate people and create fake projections to trick them.
* Gremlins, is heard being swarmed by Gremlins, but somehow survives and is back on the air the following morning.
* Has the "gas masks protect against nerve gas" mistake twice: first with Vicki Vale in the museum and again when Knox uses a filter mask during the balloon attack.
* hilarity ensued when she began quite literally bouncing off the walls.
* Goodfellas, the then-13-year-old Henry Hill is confronted by his father over the letter from school saying he hasn't been attending classes for the past few months. At first, Henry Sr. reveals the accusations in a calm, laid-back tone, before screaming at the top of his lungs as he proceeds to mercilessly beat his son for his truancy.
* Grand Prix Legends continues to survive thanks to gradual improvements and hundreds of modded tracks and new car sets.
* Gotrek & Felix books the pair are temporarily allied with a Tomb Prince in service to Alkhared's dynasty, and it turns out he and Gotrek had previously fought on opposite sides of one of these battles. When Felix asks why they don't just take the coin off the hammer and each take the part they actually care about, both act as if he's a complete idiot. In the end of the story they duel for the hammer, mostly just for the fun of it.
* Gurio Umino, Shingo Tsukino and Reika Nishimura are all brilliant students in all continuities but
* Heavy Metal, the first segment has the Loc-Nar appearing to the little girl: the subsequent segments are the stories it tells her.
* Henry David Thoreau are a dialogue about how humankind will always be vulnerable to nature's fury, delivered by a crew of frazzled sailors as they weather a storm.
* Hamlet: Hamlet absolutely rips his mother to shreds for her quasi-incestuous ways.
* Grimm are kidnapped and their organs harvested to sell on the black market, as human organs are used to make illegal drugs for wesen.
* He's only a typical narrator in the Japanese version. In the dub, he openly hates his job and tries to separate himself from the insanity. In one episode, he actually quit his job because the series recycled a plotline too many times, and a new British narrator replaces him until he comes back at the end. He also only does the show because he's deep in gambling debts, apparently.
* Golden Sun, which allows one to see through illusions and invisibility.
* Grand Theft Auto III: turn it around, start firing while driving, go up an incline while constantly firing.
* Hama is not mentioned at all in the story, but it can be presumed that her story played out the same way it did in canon, so she would have escaped decades ago, which
* Goosebumps is a 2015 horror/fantasy comedy. Stine and his daughter Hannah must combat every single one of Stine's creations after Zach and his friend Champ accidentally unleash them from the very books themselves.
* Guns Are Worthless: Guns are the least effective weapon to use, especially when dealing with the supernatural.
* Hellblazer storyline. Being the sole personification of evil himself, John is surprised to discover the First of the Fallen and his friend Brendan had made a deal to give the latter the biggest wine collection, seeing that Brendan was just a simple pathetic drunkard. The First of course, responds by saying he finds Brendan amusing, and wanted to see him fail as he try to cheat the Devil. This of course, triggers John to try and save his friend. The rest was history.
* Hates Being Touched. He turns down an offer of a handshake with John Adams, though he does grow to accept a handshake as an acceptable greeting once he's spent some time living amongst the colonists.

* Harry himself smiles a little more often, but when he does really smile, it both tends to be dazzling, and give him a startling resemblance to his maternal second cousin, Jean Grey.
* Haunting Ground the heroine Fiona literally starts the game naked only covered by a sheet inside cage in a creepy castle basement where raw meat is getting chopped up a hulking mentally disabled groundskeeper. She soon gets out of the basement and up onto ground level where she soon discovers the rest of the castle is just as horrifying.
* Harry Potter, as eavesdropping is quite easy thanks to things like invisibility cloaks, mental connections, and other magical things, but the information never quite makes it in one piece.
* GURPS spends quite some time on how to design really weird aliens. The starfishiest designs are the various "exotica" such as living nebulae or sentient magnetic fields.
* Gunn later gets a demon language upgrade as part of his Wolfram Lawyer Status. Of course, like with all Buffyverse magic, it came with a horrible price. Including golf skills (as business deals tend to be made on the links) and a "whole mess of Gilbert & Sullivan" "for elocution" which he started singing at random times, seemingly without noticing it.
* has yet to materialize. The Northern Trail boardwalk was planned to form a loop with the Highlands path, but instead dead-ends at the Taiga overlook. Ditto the Desert area planned to be located behind the penguin exhibit.
* Grayson's military also has no such rules, though in their case, that's because they're a gradually-modernizing
* Haruhi Suzumiya talk, Koizumi will explain some theory to explain Haruhi and Kyon will start getting very involved in the conversation and thinking about it deeply - at which point he says "Just kidding, I made the whole thing up." Annoying!
* Half Past Dead: After their primary getaway plan fails spectacularly and immediately, they demand the FBI send a helicopter for them to use as a getaway vehicle in return for not killing Justice McPherson and the other hostages.
* Hachikō and his two movies (one Japanese and one American) might easily lead some viewers on in wanting their own Akita puppy. While the breed is indeed known for their bravery and loyalty, the Akita should only be cared for by an experienced owner as they can be challenging to train and are actually prone to aggression, to the point that some countries have breed-specific legislation banning them or imposing specific responsibilities on their owners.
* GURPS Technomancer. After several atomic detonations brought magic to the Earth, many national militaries have taken magic users into their ranks and use their skills in combat. The term for a combat wizard is "warlock", presumably as a pun on the "war" part, and there's usually one per company in high-magic militaries like the United States. (There are also low level grunts who have no combat spells, but enough Magery to point a wand or use a scrying tool; they aren't considered warlocks.) Mage-only divisions of the US Army include the 101st Spellborne, originally an air division that moved from planes to carpets and dragons, and the 13th Special Operations Group (Magical Operations), a "black ops" squad that used to have "Necromantic" in its name.
* Hercules Returns. The protagonist goes to examine a derelict cinema with the view of restoring it. The billboard reads THE PICTURE PALACE, A WARM NICE CINEMA. He rattles the locked door a bit causing several letters to fall of the sign which now reads A WARM E NEMA.
* Hail Odysseus, Draco Malfoy is furious when Harry and Ginny tell him that they had Blaise Zabini killed and are going to have Pansy Parkinson fake a murder-suicide, while ignoring that he was actually paying Blaise Zabini to kill Harry and the only reason he did not do it himself was because he is a coward.
* Heavy himself may or may not be an example. He sometimes makes 'redistributing the wealth' jokes, and has a large hammer and sickle painted on the side of one of his miniguns, but his backstory implies that he considers the KGB to be evil, as they murdered his father, and sentenced him and his family to work in a gulag.

* Hala & Hau Interlude ends with Hala and Kukui preparing to establish Alola's Pokemon League.
* Headless Horseman plays with this trope. The location is changed (the deep South) and the horseman's backstory and motivation for head chopping is changed. About the only real similarity is that heads get cut off.
* Hammers are short and slow, so if you whiff your attacks, you're opening yourself up to serious injury. Conversely, they are very powerful weapons that can easily stun enemies if you can hit them in the head.
* Heroes characters essentially deliver this in the first story, although Peter Petrelli is the only one who explicitly tells Buffy that they are from the future and only does that after the First has been defeated.
* Grow RPG takes place on a tiny planet that the hero can explore in less than 5 minutes.
* good guy Later on this happens even more when she gets yelled at for her actions (such as when she tried to kill Angel or saves Buffy and an evil slayer).
* Guns of the Dawn. Despite the authorities perpetually claiming that Lascanne's war with neighbouring Denland is close almost won, the Lascanne army gradually but steadily lowers its standards for conscription. Eventually, it starts to conscript women - such as protagonist Emily Marshwic - not just into secondary roles such as couriers, but into front-line units.
* Heroic Sacrifice during the Dark Tournament using this trope. When he (just barely) survives, he discovers the magic fruit he's been using to temporarily become Yoko Kurama has been wearing off faster because Yoko Kurama's power is bleeding into his own.
* Golden General due to her miraculous rout of the evil army at the High Clerist's Tower and the repeated victories she won against numerically superior enemy armies during the Vingaard Campaign.
* GURPS has the parkour ability in the 4th edition. Which when added to martial arts makes it more along the lines of Combat Parkour.
* Head in a Vise: A character's head is put in a screw-press, slowly crushing their skull.
* Good Adultery, Bad Adultery: In a work with multiple instances of adultery, the adulterer is portrayed sympathetically in one instance and evil in another.
* Hanna, Hanna asks if she can have an egg when being offered breakfast, which she drinks raw, displaying both her survivalist roots and how badass she is.
* guillotine" means both in French)... In a week you'll be making more of them than you want, and so will we!"
* Hellsing Abridged: Whenever Alucard talks to Father Anderson, this is the joke he makes every other sentence (see also: the top half of the quotes page).
* GURPS, this is one of the entries on the "something went wrong with our dimension-traveling device" chart.
* Gold Digger: Someone who's in a relationship with a wealthy person for their money.
* Head of the Class an academic meet, both when the Soviets came to the US and later when the Class went to Moscow.
* Global commerce can cause this too, resulting in places like Nigeria, where
* He ends up outright killing her, though his healing powers combined with the other three Diamond essences were able to restore her.
* GURPS", and later they meet a crazy fundamentalist Christian who claims he knew a girl who never listened to advice, took nanodrugs and one day literally fell apart to dust.
* "Hacksaw" Jim Duggan would often bring a 2X4 board to the ring, although he rarely used it to cheat to win. He was much more likely to have it grabbed by the heel and used against him. He occasionally won fights with a big fist clothesline aided by a roll of tape wound around his fist prior, though.
* Harley Quinn herself to be this to the Joker, and arguably would be if the Joker were capable of even the slightest shred of empathy.
* Harry Potter birds, and thought he had died the morning the Aughrey were all crying. He then preceded to knock himself out cold by walking into a wall because he thought he was a ghost, and suffered "a concussion of ten days' duration."

* Hermética. Their first albums ("Mundo Guanaco" and "Espíritu Combativo") included several indirect jabs at each other.
* Harry asks this while teaching a first-year Gryffindor/Slytherin Potions class as Snape's apprentice and receives questions from the Gryffindors about Quidditch, his Animagus form and whether Snape has retired.
* Heracles had to do twelve of them after killing his family in a fit of madness.
* Happiness Is Mandatory master-plan is steadily leading up to the same technological developments that will create it.
* Greg Rucka in a fight outside a bar in order to clear her partner, Crispus Allen, in a shooting after being tacitly encouraged to do so by a detective from IAD. Supposedly this means that neither IAD nor MCU can ever touch Corrigan legally. Shockingly, losing a bar brawl to an off-duty cop does not actually give you legal immunity to anything. It is true that none of the information that Montoya beat out of Corrigan would be admissible, but any evidence gathered independently of that would be perfectly admissible. At worst, if Montoya herself were a key witness against Corrigan, his attorney could try to use the fight to call her credibility into question. Of course, it would be very risky for Corrigan's attorney to bring up the fight at all, because it might open the door for the prosecutor to ask what the fight was about, which would probably hurt Corrigan more than the prosecution.
* Hardball and says that he is pretty sure that 'Ms. Brapper' is Ms. Crapper.
* Heel–Face Revolving Door when someone turns, so the practice of wrestlers turning face or heel isn't going anywhere. This practice is only derided if the turns are done so often that it prevents any meaningful character development.
* Grunch of Giants) said the Dymaxion House went nowhere because building codes of the time effectively made prefab impossible.
* Hard-Boiled Wonderland and the End of the World, the End of the World sections take place in a town which has a wall around it, and once you come to the town you can't go outside the wall.
* Hero: The Guardian Smurf Wonder Smurfette came into the picture and the two married each other, eventually giving birth to Hero's first child Saviour. Years later, sometime after Wonder died, Hero came to feel suicidal and was going to end his life when the Smurfs intervened and stopped him from doing so, with Smurfette passionately pleading with Hero to embrace life instead of death. It was from this that Hero rekindled his relationship with Smurfette, and from that, they married and Smurfette became the mother of Hero's second child Miracle.
* He dug one bullet out of himself during a boring Cabinet meeting and promptly sent it to the man who put it in him saying "You can have this back."
* Heroes: A Japanese man who wanted to jump off a building because he couldn't stand to tell his family that he was fired. (Turns out he hated his job anyway and still couldn't bear to tell his family he wanted to quit.)
* Havenhurst: The apartment building has lots of secret passageways throughout it, which explains why the rooms seem smaller than they would realistically be.
* Gosford Park — it's a two and a half hour murder mystery where the murder doesn't take place until nearly two hours in, but the screenplay won an Oscar.
* Heroes, which builds up to the final defeat and killing of Sylar, shows signs he's potentially alive (which it turns out he is for season 2, albeit somehow weakened).
* Heart's song "These Dreams" is dedicated to the memory of Sharon Hess, a good friend of Nancy Wilson.
* Glenn Miller: One of the most popular band leaders, he led his orchestra as one of the biggest record sellers from 1939 to his (literal) dissappearance in late 1944. His greatest hit was "In The Mood", not counting his work with the Andrews Sisters. Expect one of his pieces in any WWII setting. Generally regarded by jazz fans as not really a jazz musician, because his signature style of arranging left very little room for improvisation, but he doesn't really belong anywhere else.
* Golden Sun: The Lost Age it's revealed that the Wise One evacuated all of the inhabitants to safety, and everybody joyously reunites.

* Hell on Earth novels by Dafydd ab Hugh and Brad Linaweaver, reveals that the IRS has an armed "revenue collection" branch that counts itself among the Earth's military forces. Remember to pay your taxes, folks.
* Grand Theft Auto all have their ages confirmed, with a few of these protagonists on the other hand....
* Hc Svnt Dracones Cogsune are designed for life in space stations with microgravity. Their "field agents" need to have augmented musculatures to survive planetary gravity and even then they have minimal Body: Strength and Resilience stats.
* Goblinkind did not have a patron god until they raised one themselves, are
* Head-Turning Beauty: A girl is so hot, guys drool and throw themselves at her.
* Harry Potter. Though she has two boyfriends before him, she's always been in love with Harry. Even after they break up for a time, she remains fiercely loyal to him.
* Great Gusliar is when they checked if he's really an octopus by consulting a cookbook.
* GURPS has stats for a variety of plasma guns but notes that they are all "super-science" and therefore shouldn't be included in "hard" settings.
* God, the Devil and Bob, Satan can't stand Tony Orlando songs. This comes in handy the one time he actually tries to knock off the comedy routine and physically attack Bob.
* Good Omens, Aziraphale's past encounters with Crowley's human reincarnations all ended tragically, but the one that truly broke his heart and caused him to try cutting off all contact with Crowley's future reincarnations was the one where he got to have a happy relationship with Crowley in the 19th century that lasted for over five years only to have it cruelly ripped away from him when Gabriel, viewing their relationship as a sign that Aziraphale was becoming too complacent in his angelic duties, sent him on a mission far away from Crowley and Crowley died of influenza before he could come back.
* Higher-end drivers (that is, the elements of a speaker or headphone that produce sound) tend to be stiffer and less sensitive, thus requiring more energy to move, but also being less prone to distortion. Whether that energy is current or voltage depends on driver type; dynamic and orthodynamic drivers tend to demand current, but electrostatic drivers instead require excessive voltages anywhere from 230V to 600V and beyond, which in turn requires either transformers with powerful conventional amplifiers, or purpose-built electrostatic amplifiers.
* Heroes of Horror recommended this as an optional rule to inject some extra horror into the world, while also making the players less likely to rush through the afterlife's revolving door.
* he was responsible for framing the Victim Of The Week as being a pedophile and took an overdose of pills, which caused him to collapse. Flack is cleared at the end of the episode.
* Hard 'N Phirm's "El Corazon" is a song all about the heart, sung Spanish-ballad style. Part of the translation is: "It can continue to beat long after its removal from the body, as we see with this turtle's heart." (It makes more sense if you're seeing it performed live; there's a video going on behind them that illustrates the line.)
* Her lasso of truth. Gift from the gods. Unbreakable weapon beyond mortal understanding. Really good for making your friends embarrass themselves by blurting out the truth at inopportune moments.
* Have Gun – Will Travel is a Quick Draw. At one point, he goes toe to toe with a hired gunman with a 12-man tally; Paladin is so much faster that the hired gun draws first, yet dies without firing a shot.
* Gurumin: A Monstrous Adventure Drilling through it reveals a massive boulder, which proceeds to roll down the slope toward you; your only option is to run back down the slope and out of the hallway to avoid taking damage.
* Graphics-Induced Super-Deformed: Video game characters in older games have big heads in-game due to the low pixel count they take up.
* Goblins. (Technically, it probably would have, except that he keeps getting smacked by the goblin that he hasn't "declared" his dodge on.)

* He has also done it at least twice when the job involved religion. No, not at the audience,
* GoAnimate the trouble-makers for that matter), sometimes even arresting the kids just for talking to them. Outside of that, the police will instantly come to arrest someone if they are simply asked to without complaint, even if they are being called to arrest a kid for smashing their sibling's iPod.
* Greek tragedy. Those who attempt to do so suffer grisly punishments for their hubris. If you consider Oedipus et al., Paris got off lightly.
* Heroes. When Hiro goes to meet Isaac the painter in the first episode, Isaac is already dead, and... Hiro picks up the pistol lying on the ground near the dead body. It's a bit more understandable in that he was afraid out of his mind that the murderer was still in the room and wanted some semblance of a means to defend himself.
* GURPS Alternate Earths of Ezcalli, early exposure to Old World diseases from Carthaginian traders allowed Native Americans to develop resistance early, while the Roman Empire collapsed in infancy, leaving Europe open for Mongol-dominated Asia, Christian African kingdoms, and subsequent Aztec raiding fleets to plunder its squabbling villages for slaves.
* Godzilla (2014), consists of a mass of much smaller, single-celled organisms.
* "God Gave Rock and Roll to You" was originally by Argent. That the * Great Eagles, Wargs, and Ents are technically physical superior to a Man in terms of raw strength and speed, but they're still only about on the level of a large predator individually (e.g. a lion or bear) and, critically, lack opposable thumbs. The Windlord doesn't even want to risk flying above the lands of Men because he's worried about his people being taken down by farmers with bows.
* He and his allies also didn't realize why he was evicted from "Redemption Island" so early despite that unlike the first two times he played, people
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality when people sneak in to give prisoners illegal chocolate and Patronus time, for the right price. What the right price is depends on which Auror catches you — Bahry, whose wife is ill and needs expensive treatments, demands the highest price by far.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch so that he can go on a rampage in the city. Why he didn't take the potion himself is another matter.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, but Ysengrim keeps dismissing the explanations, and she eventually tells him this. In actuality he understands quite well; he's trying to get her to face the real reason she's angry by pointing out how feeble her given reasons are.
* GoPro video on Youtube of a guy proposing his girlfriend while doing a "Mr. Bill".
* Great Escape is the centerpiece of the final act. Imprisoned on false charges by Boss Hogg's longtime enemy Col. Cassius Clayburn at an illegal prison camp, Bo and Luke band with the other inmates — including Boss and Rosco — to tie up the prison guards and stage a huge prison break ... this despite knowing that past inmates have tried large-scale prison breaks, been unsuccessful and were brutally killed.
* Gravity Falls, due to similar aesthetics and dark, mature themes. A common theory is that Wirt and Greg are related to Dipper and Mabel somehow.
* Happens to the protagonist of the Hard boiled Wonderland section of
* have their own Twitter account, which has its fair share of jokes about senior elf Ernie not quite "getting" the Internet.
* Grumpy Bear: Cynic in an idealistic setting vs. idealist in a cynical setting.
* God for a Day: Status as a deity proves to be too much responsibility and absolute power corrupts.
* Gravity Falls has trouble with the concept of "sharing" when Mabel tries to bury the hatchet and offers her a taco. She doesn't even know how to pronounce the word properly.
* Golem: Clay sculptures made by rabbis in imitation of God's creation of humans. Its origins are based on the legendary tale of a clay creature that was said to have been brought to life by a rabbi in 16th century Prague.

* Grazyna, A Lithuanian story, meaning "beautiful", and it was widespread in Poland up until around the 1980s.

* Half-Life 1 or just discover that he's naturally skilled as a fighter.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince. The resulting silence lasts almost a minute.
* High School Musical with Chad in the sequel. Fans commonly read him as bisexual as a result.
* Haven: Duke has a pretty good excuse when he's suddenly stranded in the past:
* Hermione states that this is true of magic to such an extent that legal cases are won not by the best arguer, but the individual who can best warp reality to support their belief.
* Heel–Face Turn completely fails to see his heel opponent's cheating tactics coming despite having used the same type of tactics himself when he was still a heel less than a month before.
* Hazbin Hotel Another running theme is overcoming those flaws and inner demons to become better people and whatever that's even possible.
* Head Basketball features a different one of these for each character.
* Harry ends up with a large number of admirers in the sixth book in the series. He also suffers from this trope in the fourth book, due to his status as a Tri-Wizard champion.
* Hank the Cowdog rescues Hank from an attempted drowning at the hands of his cousin Bubba. He then tells Hank that Bubba hates dogs and he should never tangle with him in the water.
* Grandia the delivery gets inverted slightly; love interest Feena asks Justin if he loves her, his response is to tell her he does… and so do their other friends, too.
* He Will Not Cry, So I Cry for Him: Taking on another's emotional burdens.
* Harry uses a random stranger's surfboard to rescue a two-year-old swept up by the current.
* Hannah Montana big party when Amber had her license and she didn't. Does Robbie Ray ground her? Passe! Take away her allowance? Old hat! Instead, he drives her to the big party, and announces over a bullhorn that Miley didn't get her license.
* Hamhose, the shy and nervous character, is the only Freakie not to be based on someone from the office. Instead, his personality comes from Pigpen, a cat End used to own.
* Guild Wars. However, they are still garbed in the armor or clothes they wore in life, which can add or subtract from their horror.

* Heart of the Matter: Something so vital, it is likened to a living heart.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, young Tom Riddle does this.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, apathy is a source of power for an improved variant of the Killing Curse. Whereas the basic hate-based Avada Kedavra spell can usually be cast only once during a battle, as it is difficult to hate somebody that much, the True Killing Curse only requires you not to care about somebody's life and can be cast without limit.
* happenstance, whereas the latter takes a vow to fight on behalf of their Lord. Knights wear heavy armor that only a state-sponsored army could afford, whereas Fighters charge into battle with only an axe and the clothes on their back. Fighters may even promote to a class named "Warrior".
* Halo 4 separates the campaign and multiplayer modes on separate discs too, but uses the standard "install the second disc to the hard-drive" approach.
* Halo: Reach's own Legendary Edition got access to a Developer Commentary, in which Bungie staff talk over a two-hour edited playthrough of the game.
* Hild, the leader of the demons, has tried to defy the Doublet System and shift the balance in her favor by inducing

* Highschool of the Dead." The scene immediately cuts to Rika sneezing, and she realizes right away that someone is talking about her.
* hereditary as despite being raised by his law-abiding aunt, Flattop Jr still turned out rotten.
* High technology devices, like Chromebooks, Smartboards, and iPads have been employed during increasing proportions of classroom instruction time during the school day, commensurate with the extent to which such high technology is used in students' personal lives. It's gotten to the point where some news articles ask the question of whether it's still important to teach handwriting.
* Grant Morrison get to rage against his author in any way outside boundaries created by that author.
* Gwar is a particularly awesome example of this, demonstrating a world built on heavy metal itself. Choice verses include "Here in metal, metal land/Nothing ever dies/Except of course our enemies/And they're attracting metal flies," "Here in metal, metal land/Every day is night/Except of course when night is day/But then there is no light," "Bullet belts and denim jackets/Crystal meth in tiny packets/Witches, warlocks, demon seed/Booze and cooze and weed and speed," "Filthy hair and dirty faces/Flying V's and swords and maces/80's hair bands are still hated/No false metal tolerated" and "Heavy metal is the law/Weakness means a broken jaw/Everything is loud and fast/Metal up your fucking ass." Also, this land can only be reached by stolen car.
* Have Space Suit – Will Travel: the Federated Free Nations has control of some space-based military.
* Harvest Moon refused to confirm they removed it, and they left in all the related scenes up to actually "proposing", so it's taken hours of work by dedicated players to, in fact, confirm it's not in there. Fans were understandably annoyed.
* Happy Heroes: The time bomb Careless S. misplaces in Season 2 episode 37 initially appears only for a quick joke that doesn't contribute much to the episode's plot. Later, Smart S. uses it to defeat the shapeshifting monster by getting it to transform into a time bomb.
* Happens to a cow eaten by the carnivorous plants in "Dome of Doom".
* Goblins, Minmax is a powerful psion who does this to his party members.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers and occasionally get this treatment as well. The Northern Europeans also get this occasionally, but the Eastern Europeans get it most of the time. One example:
* Heavy Rain, Shaun's room contains a crayon drawing of the accident that killed his brother and hospitalized his father.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, the creepy organ music being played as Harold and Kumar enter Freakshow's home is actually being played by Freakshow's wife.

* Hard Truth Aesop: A moral that is unexpected and defies conventional wisdom, but may be good advice nevertheless.
* Grey DeLisle tends to get typecast as the bad girl who is usually hyper sadistic. The real Grey is a delightfully silly person to talk to and surprisingly dorky at times.
* Gundam picture books for preschoolers - and then complained to the production staff that the books weren't selling. It was only late in the run, when the show started to build up a base of hardcore fans among teenagers and college students, that the franchise began showing signs of becoming the merchandising juggernaut we know and love today.
* Gravity Falls created during a Magic Photocopier mishap. It can only say 'Nyang!' in an agonized scream and seems to welcome its death-by-melting.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle. Ridiculously lazy and ridiculously brilliant.
* Grapple Force Rena can come across a race of intelligent, talking penguins.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, they go for a Stalin-era Soviet look.
* Gunnerkrigg Court doesn't need to eat, sleep, or breathe, and also can survive immersion in lava or encasement in ice. She probably doesn't strictly need social interaction either, but she does engage in relationships with men, apparently just because she wants to.
* Guardians of the Galaxy (2015) — In the episode "Lyin' Eyes", Drax briefly sees Rocket as a ham after being stuck on a deserted moon for three days.
* Half a Crown the secret police that defies the government by doing things like smuggling Jews out of the country. All members have a false tooth implanted with a cyanide pill so they can take it rather than be forced to betray the others.
* Gremmy Thoumeaux, the "V" (the "Visionary") Sternritter, who has a literal
* Godsmack. Part of the chorus says "where do we go when we just don't know how and how do we relight the flame when it's cold?"
* HEROMAN ends with Dr. Minami and his gang breaking out of prison. There's a TO BE CONTINUED?.
* GURPS rules. The developers calculate weapon damage based on the square root of energy for kinetic weapons and the cube root of energy for beam weapons.
* Gotham - Jim Gordon had served in the US Army prior to returning to Gotham.
* Guy Gardner orders Supergirl not to let Bleez - who was wounded - leave med bay. Bleez states that she has no time to socialize with children, and tries to shove Kara out of the door she was blocking. Yup. Good luck with that.
* Help Not Wanted features Ogrell intentionally shitting himself twice. Justified in his case, since walking around in soiled pants actually prevented him from being eaten by a wyvern unwilling to eat prey "contaminated" with feces.
* Greaser Delinquents, in both the real 1960s and portrayals of it in later fiction.
* Glowgrass contains an example where it is used to discover part of an ancient culture.
* Happy Marriage Charade: An unhappy married couple pretend everything is fine when other people are around.
* her father sexually abused her does the truth come to light. The ultimate vindication was that the daughter's hymen was intact.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, begins threatening the host with. He tries to calm host Billy Dexter by saying that it's not loaded, only to immediately and fatally shoot him. On the bright side, Dexter is replaced by Lazlow.
* GoGo Sentai Boukenger started out as a super-serious member of the SGS and can't smile ever. It takes one mission to finally make her smile for a boy she's taking care of. As her leader said, her smile is possessed by only hers alone, and during the climax of the series, she did declare that her smile was her greatest treasure.
* Guilty Gear at least once. Thus, she provides so much low-hanging porn fruit in one package that the creators hoped fan artists would gravitate entirely towards her and stay away from the other women in the cast. It appears to have been at least partially successful.
* Grand Theft Auto III. Who, though being stand-ins for the Bloods and Crips, happily walked around side by side and attacked the player if he attacked one of the other gang.

* here, usually have a very specific function, such as a robot that only does spot welds or only applies a certain color of paint. Of course, if necessary, they can be taken offline, equipped with different tools, and reprogrammed for a different task, but that usually only happens when the assembly line is tasked with a new model.
* Harry not telling mundanes about the magical world because they can't handle the truth or knowing can put them in danger.
* "Go ahead, sue me if you dare [for killing a pedestrian and injuring another],
* Glorious Leader: A political outsider who uses romantic, idealistic rhetoric to hide a malevolent agenda.
* Guns N' Roses (which took at least nine years to record and release).
* Hermes reacts to Ares and Diana teaming up to rescue him from Hades, and
* Gravity Falls on his band's poster, he was wearing "eye paint for men."
* Grave of the Fireflies dies as well... yeah, the Author Avatar in a mostly auto-biographical story never living to see the end of the story is probably the strongest indicator you'll ever find that Akiyuki Nosaka spent his life regretting that he did not die along with the sister he failed to keep alive...
* GURPS Steampunk 2 games, though, where it's more likely to be appropriate, it's likely to be vehicle-mounted (probably in a "telegraphy cabin") and require skilled operation.
* Higurashi: When They Cry drinks wine when she's depressed. A TIPS confirms that she drinks for the purpose of getting drunk.
* Heel–Face Turn, but it is still an accurate description of his past behavior.
* Happy Lesson Chitose, who doesn't really grow to appreciate this suddenly forced invasion of personal space until well into the series, and even then he still blows his top when he thinks they go too far.
* Godiva Hair: A naked or topless woman has the inappropriate body parts covered up by her long hair.
* Hania The Howling Huntress challenged for different titles and competed in tournaments without ever winning.
* Herbert West–Reanimator one of the subjects is a resurrected black man who was fatally wounded after fighting to death in an underground fighting pit. The narrator describes his appearance grimly, comparing his features to that of a gorilla.
* He next uses the Death Note on a man harassing a woman outside a convenience store. He's also able to test the "cause of death" clause by specifying the man die in an "accident" — he gets hit by a truck.
* highly sensitive body parts). One study reported that approximately 15% of major copier repairs are the result of people attempting this trope.
* Gwenpool who is always talking to the audience, no matter if it's some observation of what happens or just some weird randomness.
* Her surveillance doesn't end there. In "Twilight's Kingdom", when Tirek attacks a random pony, both Celestia and Luna experience it as a vision.
* Half-Life 2. Originally he was meant to simply shut it off with a switch, but the designers decided it would be more satisfying to straight-up destroy it.
* Glenn Martin DDS show, had a laugh track for about 8 episodes until it was removed entirely because the creators claim "it gave the show too much internal thinking".
* Greek Ninja, both Kana and Yamauchi-sensei say "haro" instead of "hello" when they first speak.
* Gypsy antics and abandon her. Rose is devastated but quickly rebounds by turning her focus onto making Louise a star instead.
* Her loss of innocence from a young age caused her to be overprotective to their son Gaius so when they had to explain Alt!Garrus's constantly away for his work of reforming the Hierarchy, instead of exposing the truth to Gaius that "your dad does it because he's fighting against the people who want to hurt or even kill you and your kind", they just went with "I will explain it when you're older". This made Gaius misunderstood that his father hated and wanted nothing to do with him. Had they just gave Gaius the truth, the child would have felt less hurt and be more understanding of the situation.

* Grand Theft Auto games usually allow anyone to be killed during gameplay (but may give you a Mission Failed if you kill them before their plot-driven death/wasted moment). Usual methods for killing mission targets include shooting their car until it explodes or running them off the road and carjacking them. However, there are rare instances in the series where key targets resist these methods. Occasionally, a target's vehicle may be invincible to damage and/or have locked doors. The most egregious offenders behave as an unstoppable force, knocking heavy semi-trucks off the road as if they were made of styrofoam to follow a scripted path.
* Happy Tree Friends", a picture of Giggles appears on a milk carton in Lumpy's fridge, right next to Giggles herself, as Lumpy in this short is a vampire who had kidnapped her for sustenance.
* Gundam shows, the Earth Federation had long established control over the entire planet. On the other hand, it's presented (especially further down the line) as an elitist, bureaucratic mess rife with corruption. Their reach beyond the planet is also shown to be shaky at best, with many of the colonies not exactly eager to be under EF rule. And it's strongly hinted that their grip on Earth itself progressively becomes less stable.
* Harry Potter couldn't bring herself to kill off Arthur, and killed Lupin and Tonks to compensate for this.
* have to explain all the rules to humans holding a Death Note unless one of them is about to be broken.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City, one of the warehouses in the movie lot contains a sound stage resembling the Apollo 11 landing.
* Graham McNeill, the loyalist Marines on Isstvan V do not realize that only three of the Legions going to confront Horus are loyal; their other "allies" turn on them as recounted below.
* Good Is Not Soft: Get out of my way! There's evil to defeat, and goshdarnit I'm going to stamp it out!
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, during his time as a Death Eater) motivated him for the rest of his life.
* have a medical condition, which caused him to be shunned and cast out of his home by his paternal figure, Horde Prime. It codes very heavily to a disabled or trans person being rejected by their society and feeling internalized guilt due to their upbringing.
* Hero of the Kingdom involves discovering the identity of a corrupt soldier. The records keeper who possesses this information refuses to tell you outright, but "accidentally" drops his records book after you pay him a sufficient sum.
* Goblins: When he discovers the Any Mug in the poorly locked chest, Minmax declares the mug "lame", tosses it blindly behind his shoulder and hits Forgath on the helmet. It's not until a later scene that they realize the mug is a magical item.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers to justify calling it this, some characters are involved in more than one of these pairings, which leaves a situation where a character can have numerous other characters where a hook-up would have received enough subtext to not come as a surprise.
* Golden Sky Stories the player characters are magical animals in a quiet town, helping the residents solve their everyday problems.
* Grange Hill: On a ferry trip to France, two boys try to take a boy on the trip who does not have a passport, by smuggling him through the coach emergency exit.
* Heaven 17, ends its last track, "We're Going To Live for a Very Long Time", with an infinite loop of the lyric "for a very long time".
* Hero to redshirts, townsfolk, etc; Villain to new minions — establishing leadership. It's a way of saying "this is why you follow me". Alternatively, especially for heroes, reassurance: "I can protect you, and here's why."
* Good Night, and Good Luck. there is a subplot dedicated to Joseph Wersha and his wife as they try to keep their marriage secret or risk getting fired. Naturally, at the end of the movie, it is revealed that everyone in the office already knew they were married and just didn't care. But they still have to leave because of budget cuts and are asked to walk, which they agree to.

* Halt and Catch Fire when Joe realizes that their new computer has some great features but ultimately the buyers at COMDEX are looking for a "station wagon" so he presents the computer as a reliable work computer. To this end he agrees to remove the fancy operating system Cameron designed for it since while it makes the computer "sexier" it makes it slower and more expensive.
* Hello Kitty. No matter what ingredients you chose, the friend will praise your concoction as long as everything is edible. If you put anything else, the stew is described as tasting "awful" or "strange".
* Harry's New Home when Harry calls him Mr. Black and sir when they first meet after Sirius was exonerated. Snape calls him out on it, pointing out that Harry was simply being polite because he didn't know him.
* Gray uses the Seven Ice Blades dance to slice Fukuro, yet the latter doesn't show signs of any wound.
* Hareluya II Boy, we have Hibino Hareluya, who has yet to even be pushed into being serious during a fight.
* GOHOME will only do it at the beginning of the game. If you try and find it during the night, it will take off, meaning you have to get to the shrine by yourself.
* Heroic Sacrifice: A character willingly lets themselves get killed to help others.
* Gun Nut) isn't really a gun fanatic — his true passion is killing criminals, a task for which guns are, obviously, very useful tools. As a former Marine with no superpowers, they show up more often in his stories than most Marvel heroes (although he's also killed people with knives, his fists, a bear, explosives, big rocks, cars, a fat man...).
* Golden Sun reveals that said frog is merely Cybele's pet or underling, since the goddess herself shows up in her summon sequence.
* Gulliver's Travels) than the more cartoony Lilliputians. Except the two love-interest Lilliputians, Prince David and Princess Glory, who are also rotoscoped, wrecking the otherwise nicely stylistic contrast.
* Godus. This time however the world is built in layers so you're basically making steps or Plateaus.
* Hayate the Combat Butler gets this treatment from the other two of the trio when she falls asleep just after arriving at Mykonos.
* Hack/Slash story it at first looked like old villain Father Wrath was back, but it turned out to be a non-powered copycat, whose neck Vlad nonchalantly snaps.
* Good Omens, Aziraphale's divine powers get out of control whenever he tries to get intimate with Crowley, causing unfortunate things like earthquakes, golden syrup rain, and Crowley's hair catching fire.
* Harry is betrothed to four girls, each from a different Hogwarts House, and Hermione suggests that this might be a prelude to House unity. Daphne replies that most of the other Slytherins would never go for it and that "Three out of four ain't bad."
* Gran Turismo 3, which quickly sparked rumors of other unmentioned, wacky vehicles that would show up under ridiculous circumstances. The two biggest offenders are motorcycles and a 1,000 MPH Bloodhound SSC styled land speed record car. There are no rocket cars, but there is evidence of basic models of bikes from very early in development.
* HERZ: In chapter 10 Shinji imagines Asuka smiling such a beautiful smile that it was heart-breaking.
* Gosh Dang It to Heck!: The third commandment of the Hebrews: "You shall not take the name of YH your God in vain, for YH will not hold him guiltless who takes His name in vain." (Exodus 20:7, NKJV). Euphemisms for this four-letter word were "the Name" in speech or "Lord" in prayer.
* H. Beam Piper, took its title from a poem by a colonist on Mars who was apparently inspired by the planet's ruins.

* Hannelore and Marigold discuss their lack of sex lives; Hannelore because she's rather squicked out by those fluids, while Marigold is a shut-in:
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix" spell and becomes uncontrollably giggly despite still being in mortal danger.
* He is mildly one for Dick. When Jason calls Tim a pervert for taking pictures without permission, Tim promptly turns to Dick and asks him what a pervert is, mortifying poor Dick. Later Tim tells Jason that he already knows what a pervert is.
* Happened in the season 4 finale. It's early morning, Chandler's in bed, Ross runs in, ecstatic about his wedding, and he runs back out. Then Monica pokes her head out from under the covers and says "Do you think he knew I was here?" Thus began Chandler/Monica.
* He-Man, was also renewed after 65 episodes, but its total only came to 93.
* Hand of God: Pernell dips into this when angrily declaring that God doesn't exist after losing faith, despite having far better evidence of the contrary than most (repeated visions of things which later came true).
* Gotham: In "All Happy Families Are Alike", Bruce and Alfred tear Thomas Wayne's study apart looking for some clue as to what he had been secretly working on. After failing to find anything, Alfred attempts to persuade Bruce that he is on a wild good chase and remarks "There are none so blind..." This suddenly gives Bruce the inspiration for where he should be looking.
* Heathers—statements made by the creators indicate that they sincerely believe that non-white, queer and alternative children are at the top of the social pyramid in today's high schools.
* Heroes at the start and end talk a lot about how the next stage of evolution comes about.
* Hannibal: While it may not be a traditional kind of mind-reading, Will Graham's empathizing puts him in serial killer's mindsets to catch them for the FBI. His mind and sanity deplete as a result of killing people in his head in the place of the killer, to know how they think. No one ever said getting into murderers' heads was good for you...
* has this with Sasuke, in a way. In this fanfic he is depicted as utterly cruel & heartless, with killing someone, without any remorse or hesitation, being his first response to any inconvenience. While this would be more in character for him from how he been acting for a while in the manga after learnng the truth about Itachi, this fanfic is a A.U. with Sasuke going into the past and killing Itachi, meaning he doesn't learn the truth. At that point in canon, Sasuke was sane and moral enough that he didn't like killing people who weren't involved in his revenge, and he was hesitant.
* Great Pretender on Laurent's part. The closest it comes to a confirmation one way or another is when Laurent tries to flirt with his compatriot Cynthia, and she replies that she "Thought Edamame was [his] favorite." However, it's ambiguous as to whether she's just teasing him back, or whether she thought he was genuinely more attracted to Makoto. Either way, Laurent stays mum, leaving the whole matter as subtext.
* Halo, but are much better at draining energy shields and have enormous magazines. Ship-based plasma weapons are always portrayed as frighteningly powerful and far superior to their ballistic counterparts. In particular, the Covenant use a device in their weapons which can project a magnetic sheath remotely; this can actually be used to "guide" plasma to its target (though it's subject to certain limitations), with its operation is described as being like focusing a series of lenses to adjust the containment as the plasma travels. If the firing ship is destroyed while the plasma shot is still en route, the magnetic sheath will disappear, and the plasma will follow suit soon after. In one novel, Cortana was able to modify the settings on a plasma weapon to turn it into a near-lightspeed plasma beam, earning her the ire of the ship's Covenant AI for messing with "divine" artifacts.
* GURPS sourcebooks insists on referring to kilojoules as "kilowatt-seconds". Although technically correct this is inelegant and confusing and proof that, even with the constant calls for them to abandon Imperial units, Steve Jackson Games shouldn't be let loose with SI.

* Grow, you can find a giant skeleton leg, finding the rest of its bones will give it flesh and skin.
* handily reveals the location of several other Hydra bases. As Cap and the Howling Commandos destroy them one by one, we see the equivalent flag counters being removed from a map table in SSR headquarters in London.
* Hero Unit Commissar Yarrick fought an entire battle after losing his right arm below the elbow. Once it was over, he "allowed himself the luxury of passing out" (read: promptly fainted).
* Henrik Wergeland ("Myself"). In this poem, using a lot of flowery language, he goes from denying being grouchy or unpleasant, to explaining why getting angry with such a pitiful excuse for a newspaper isn't worth his valuable time, to stating that it's their fault he's grouchy in the first place, and finally to claim he's totally above their cruel and unfair mockery of him anyway.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged has this when Seras rips an enormous bomb out of a bulkhead to use as a bludgeon.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas: The only freely explorable places available to CJ early in the game are Los Santos and Red County. If CJ tries to get into the other places, such as Flint County or San Fierro before the bridges are unlocked, he gets an instant four-star wanted level with cops pursuing and trying to shoot him down. The ingame explanation is that there's an earthquake warning and a phone call from officer Hernandez of C.R.A.S.H. telling CJ that they're watching him, and that him leaving town would be a big mistake.
* Guardians of the Galaxy). Its $94 million opening weekend take exceeded projections and expectations, and its worldwide earnings exceeded its production cost after less than a week. The quote atop this page just says everything.
* Go takes place primarily over the course of one crazy night, with a little bit of the day before and the morning after thrown in.
* Gravitation manga, Shuichi confronts Yuki on his sleeping around with women even after he's agreed to take Shuichi as his lover, demanding to know where he stands among all these women. Yuki replies that he's the first one... in stupidity, anyway. Later events prove that he really does care for Shuichi as more than a sex toy, though.
* here. Kell reminds Kevin (who ordered grass sod, being a rabbit) to tip the driver either way.
* Guerrilla has General Roth, who comes at you in a tank at the end of the final mission. Though his tank is more durable than others, he can be easily killed with a Rail Driver.
* He's also mentioned as having been a lurking presence in Nazi death-camps, known as 'Nosferatu', who creeped out even the Nazis, and who sticks firmly in Magneto's memory.
* Gustav Holst". While the pounding beat has almost certainly appeared in earlier works, Holst codified it into what it is now.
* Hellblazer run were named after phrases involving the word "Hell", including "Highwater" and "...Freezes Over".
* He does get to blurt out the word "love" at the end of his chapter, though.
* Highlander, Duncan MacLeod appears in only half the Season 6 episodes. Actor Adrian Paul may have been losing interest, but Duncan also steps aside so a series of Immortal females "auditioning" for a spin-off could be introduced. Sometimes Duncan only appears in an episode to bed one of the women, an "old friend".
* Harkovast, the priestesses of Hevalla use magical healing water to return Sir Muir to the fight (and just in time, as a bad guy breaks through the door a few moments later!)
* Gundam 00 isn't the sister of either Feldt or the Gundam pilots, but treats them as if they were her siblings.
* Half-Minute Hero, as one might guess, is 30. Each of the 4 main modes is 30 stages long, and also 30 seconds long, barring any attempts to turn back the clock.
* Hammer's, exploited the startling similarity in appearance of leads Ralph Bates and Martine Beswick.

* God Empress monk who mentored the Doctor in his youth) is living on Earth as a Buddhist priest.
* Hc Svnt Dracones for non-travel reasons costs 2.5x more, but has the option of transfer to different body types instead of an exact copy.
* Hadestown, several delivered by Orpheus to Hades in his song appealing to the love Hades held in the past.
* her dad. Inari's fate is left unknown, but it's implied that she had her own happy ending.
* Gulliver Kingdom park in Japan, featuring, well, the giant abandoned lifeless corpse of Gulliver. It's also located conveniently close to Aokigahara forest, Japan's number 1 suicide spot, and to the former headquarters of infamous doom cult Aum Shinrikyo.
* Heart of Steel plays with this, in that Julia is captured incidentally while scuba diving with her boyfriend off the coast of Shark Reef Isle, but once the Island's master, Alistair Mechanus, sees her (injured but cleaned up), he falls instantly in love and doesn't want to let her go.
* Gundam Exia is designed with solid-edge GN Blades, as opposed to the common Beam Saber used in most series. (Though,
* Grampa Simpson attempts assisted suicide when the town blames him for losing out on an NFL franchise. He's hooked up to a machine called a diePod and he chooses Glen Miller Orchestra as music and as visuals, hippies being beaten by cops.
* Heart of Steel, falling in love with Julia makes Alistair neglect things like sleep and his plans for world conquest in his pursuit of her. Unfortunately, sleep deprivation leaves him mentally weakened, and vulnerable for the moment when Jim finally wrestles free of his controls.
* Hawk and Dove they are the only heroes who cannot be corrupted by the black rings.
* Hayley Shadows works for Christian Wrestling Association International, while proudly declaring herself "Not saved!"
* Hanna-Barbera had an interesting one, made up of the LMC crests the protagonists wore.
* Going Home; the husband believes that his wife isn't dead and that she'll wake up after he takes care of her.
* Grrl Power: Maxima has purple hair and purple irises. It wasn't the case when she was younger and her powers had not yet manifested, though: she was just a blue-eyed blonde.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire didn't stop a rebounding Killing Curse later on.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, where a subtitle identifies "Missouri, Earth."
* Gus Johnson", Gus' character realizes he has feelings for a woman he works for, so he has to run to the airport to confess his love for her while knocking over mannequins that stand in his way.
* God of War 3 Kratos uses Poseidon's princess to keep a gate mechanism open, but her strength eventually gives out and she's crushed by the gears, her mangled body keeping the gate from closing completely.
* hawk man has a really annoying laugh. When laughing too hard, it'll sometimes go over into clucking. Amusingly enough, it seems to annoy himself the most.
* Handicapped Badass: A disabled character who is still very powerful and formidable.
* Harry Boy and the Chamber of Secrets, a bootleg game which uses a variant of the Super Mario Bros clone engine. In the game, you play as Harry Potter - starting out as a frog, with pieces of meat returning you to Harry form.
* Highlander: The Series is mentioned as having served in the United States Marine Corps during the Vietnam War. His career was subsequently brought to an end after he stepped on a landmine.
* Happened early on when Lars — a traveling performer previously renowned for his cowardice — threw himself in front of a sword to protect the eponymous protagonist, Agatha. He died, and she went nuts, temporarily going into full

* Good Needs Evil: The complete elimination of deviance (i.e., evil) would end up making those whose jobs it is to enforce society's norms (i.e., good) obsolete.
* hard example. So hard, in fact, that apparently there was at one point some serious interest from NASA in actually building one, albeit more as a space forklift/tug than a space fighter. JMS agreed, on the condition that they retain the name "Starfury". However given the lack of activity it seems that project has been shelved.
* Godzilla to explain the presence of other monsters in some films, as well as technology like the Maser Cannons and A-Cycle Light Ray.
* Godspeaker Trilogy, to punish both themselves and the warlord and his family.
* Hawaii Five-O, which appeared on the show. This episode was barred from ever being seen again, not even on network syndication or home video/DVD release.
* Herederos De Una Venganza: The members of the lodge are the descendants of Nazi fugitives.
* Gulliver's Travels, the Lilliputian castle catches on fire, and the title character has only one option for putting it out.
* Hellinger's Law: A 1981 crime-drama pilot about a flamboyant criminal lawyer.
* Healin' Good♡Pretty Cure wears pigtails as both her normal self and as Cure Sparkle.
* Harry Potter: During the last banquet of the school year, Gryffindor wins the House Cup due to the specific deeds of Harry and his friends, with said accomplishments being listed in front of the assembled student body.
* High School High: When Mr. Clark is fired after the students all fail the exams and is booed away, the rain in the scene turns out to be coming from a personal raincloud accompanying Mr. Clark.
* Grand Theft Auto 2 has a six-minute time limit. The explanation? Your character's belly is full of explosives. Better make the most of it. Once time runs out, you actually gain bonus points for the destruction caused by you exploding.
* Goth when it comes to angsty back stories, and he specifically calls her "Mom."
* Heist. While he doesn't have to worry about falling through floors, there is a two-minute time limit and he can't phase individual body parts.
* Godzilla: The Series monster bat that could weaponize its echolocation.
* Herbert von Krolock is a borderline example of the male homosexual variety, depending on who's playing him. He might be
* Great Teacher Onizuka (2014-2019), which take place in the same universe. Therefore, the "GTO-verse" has run for 24 non-consecutive years over 8 different series (5 of them about Onizuka himself, over 21 years).
* Happy Daze becomes a woman named "Francie" because of Mork from Ork. She stays as Francie.
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah is called such because the radiation within the Big G is making go into a nuclear meltdown.
* Gundam 00: A Wakening of the Trailblazer to destroy an ELS battleship thats heading to earth.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), this is the Sorceress's backstory (with Teela as the kid).
* Harry Turtledove In fact, they also apply their system to their time measurements and their calendar. A year (about 6 Earth months) is divided into year-tenths, and a day is divided into day-tenths. Given that most scientists are using the Race's technology to advance human science, it's entirely possible they would switch to the Race's system. For example, they already utilize the Race's names for certain things, such as "explosive-metal bomb" for "atomic bomb" and "skelkwank" for "laser".
* Harry Potter received his Order of Merlin (First Class) for winning the wizarding war against Grindelwald
* Heavens to Betsy played an egotistical country singer who had died and was trying to earn her wings to get into Heaven.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix very consciously builds its plot around Harry himself becoming accustomed to being the hero of the story, who each year makes mistakes along the way but ultimately discovers something important and snatches some manner of victory from the situation. This leads him to be utterly fooled by Voldemort, who deliberately arranges this trope in-universe by manipulating Harry into staging a heroic rescue, only to find there was nothing to rescue at all and that he'd put himself exactly where Voldemort wanted him. He accomplishes nothing but putting his friends in grave danger and getting Sirius killed - and, perhaps, convincing Dumbledore that Harry is too dangerously foolhardy to keep in the dark any longer.

* Grand Finale of the series, the slow clap was initiated in this order: Ms. Hardbroom, Ethel Hallow, Julie Hubble, Dave "Spike" Jones, Maud Spellbody, Ada Cackle, and eventually the entire school.
* Greater fool theory, meaning that moneylenders think they can afford to be less selective towards prospective buyers, since they could seize something whose value actually rose if the borrowers defaulted. Moreover, sellers will be more and more aggressive in their search for buyers. So, the chain will go from good risks with good prospective of payment and go down until going to those whose financial state will be way less good.
* Grim Up North: The northern lands of fantasy settings — expect cold, barbarism, and lots of dangerous monsters.
* Happy does it to Lucy again in order to wake her up after she was hit by an avalanche.
* Great Detective relies on his personal powers of deduction, education and insight to solve crimes.
* Greyhawk setting, as the ancient god of destruction Tharizdun actually had once united the fiends untold eons ago, requiring all the gods of Good and Neutrality (and their followers) to team up for survival.
* Godzilla (2014) to make a Kaiju version. He-MUTO and She-MUTO meet up in San Francisco for the first time, and the male presents the female with a nuclear warhead as a courtship present. They trade it from mouth to mouth like a kiss before the female takes it to feather the nest.
* Hidden Object Game, one of these plays as background music, although it may take the player a while to realize just what they're hearing.
* guns down one of his own men while singing, which Smee tells him is not good form:
* "Good grades. Enough sleep. A social life." Although for most students, it's more like one out of two.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn manages to snag himself one in the thirty year gap between it and Lost Age.
* Gravity Falls that he can't take away Mabel's happiness and goes back in time to help Mabel win her pig, but also lose Wendy.
* Heavy Metal. In the "Harry Canyon" segment, the title cabbie is betrayed by a woman he helped: he destroys her with a device installed in his cab to prevent robberies.
* Gunpowder, Treason & Plot, Bothwell has this to say to Mary, Queen of Scots:
* High School D×D. This would haunt Issei for some time before realizing that he's in love with his master Rias Gremory.
* Hackmaster has a spell named Fireball: Nuclear Winter. Its range is several hundred feet, while its area is several miles. Needless to say, casting it is a bad idea unless you're immune to fire.
* Grandfather Clause #2: In 2011, the NCAA cut off the ability of lower-division teams to "play up" in sports that had a championship for the school's own division. The teams covered by the 2004 grandfather clause, several playing in sports that
* Harry Potter the ultimate cool sword: Excalibur, "the mystic sword of Merlin." Then, because that's not cool enough, she melts it down to make "Excaluzi, the Mystic Machine Gun That Slew Voldemort."
* Hey Arnold! episode "Longest Monday", Arnold and Gerald try to get home without suffering the school tradition of having the fifth graders shove them into trash cans. Along the way, they find a safety zone where victims of the tradition are aided, only for it to be discovered by the fifth graders.

* Hate at First Sight: Two characters meet and instantly hate each other.
* Hands Off My Fluffy!: Where the heroes attack a monster who looks like it's accosting a girl, when it turns out the monster is the girl's pet.
* he has proven the primary haunting is a hoax, but then discovers that one of the secondary characters was a ghost all along. This is enforced with a shot of the ghost vanishing.
* Hard Truth Aesop is delivered that is unorthodox, upsetting, shocking or completely unexpected, but good advice nonetheless.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, Coyote smells the same thing, and is even more blunt about it.
* Harriet the Spy: Harriet breaks into the mansion of Agatha Plummer and gets caught hiding in her dumbwaiter.
* Hank's brother RJ had a long-lost daughter, fathered during a long-ago love affair with a white woman, with whom he briefly rekindled their relationship when she came to town.
* Highlander gives him five days to repay the money, breaking one of his fingers each day.
* hanging off the roof of a building by her fingertips before going back three days.
* Heel–Face Turn supporting the Occupy Raw Movement, Cole is quick to fire the insult back at him.
* Haruhi blackmailed the Computer Club President into giving her the
* Happens twice in the episode "Homer Badman." After Homer is publicly accused of sexual harassment a TV tabloid program called "Rock Bottom" invites him on their show by promising him a chance to tell his side of the story. When the segment airs on TV they blatantly edit and manipulate the interview footage to make him seem like a pervert (and that he loses his temper and attacks the host), which only makes his situation worse. Later he tries to tell his side of the story again on a public access talk show, but since it airs in a graveyard timeslot no one sees it... except Groundskeeper Willie, who shows up to the Simpsons' home with evidence exonerating Homer.
* Hell Is a Martial Artist, and Nabiki's decision that breaking their deal would earn her more money in the long run costs the girl her soul.
* Hellsing has this issue with many things, from Alucard's various forms, to basic guns and other weaponry.
* Grindhouse was released in 2011, starring Rutger Hauer as the eponymous hero.
* Haley is annoyed to learn that the rogue's guild she almost joined was actually a cosmetics guild akin to Mary Kay. Yes, a
* had its satellites hacked into, in a protest against proposed laws to limit the volumes of mosque loudspeakers delivering Muslim Adhan prayers.
* Green Lantern Hal Jordan's first Secret Keeper was his airplane mechanic, Tom Kalmaku. When Tom accidentally learned Hal's identity, he respected GL enough to offer to let him erase the memory from his mind—but the offer convinced Hal that Tom was trustworthy, so he let him keep the knowledge and they became close friends.
* Harry punches a wall after he hears other students gossiping about the forms the boggart in DADA class took when he faced it.
* "Hero Worship" has Geordi connecting the shields to the warp drive, more than doubling their strength. Never mind the other hundred times when this would have been useful.
* Gundam but viewers have often wondered if the real moral is "Causing a war is bad, yes. But fighting a war defensively and against those who caused it, can be flat out heroic."
* Henry Kuttner became writing partners after they married. Kuttner excelled at plotting and world-building, while Moore excelled at literary style, and their collaborative works combined both their strengths. Most of their works were published as by only one of them, but it's believed almost everything published by either of them during their marriage was a collaboration.
* HERZ Rei encouraged Asuka to open up to him. They reached out to each other, and got married two years later.

* Grand Prix Legends World Championship, set during that year. Later, mods were released with other F1 cars (and some tracks) during those years, as well as Can-Am, Sports Cars, and a few other disciplines/series of the time.
* GURPS fictional government agency; S.P.I.D.E.R., who fight the eco-terrorists of K.H.A.O.S. in a series of popular kids' shows.
* Heather Dale in particular becoming very famous. In 2015 a musical based on these works, Queens of Avalon, was funded and created via Indiegogo.
* has a brain on his positions, Vimes is moved to sympathy for them, wondering how Ankh-Morpork ever won its wars.
* Helluva Boss from the same creator as Hazbin Hotel, with 3 out of the 5 main characters being queer.
* had to take the polygraph test three times before the officials gave up as the test was designed for large animals and couldn't work with Judy's much higher heart rate.
* Godzilla in Hell, they have to contend with the King of the Monsters. However, they do have King Ghidorah on their side.
* Golf Story which sporadically features the horribly distorted and crackly voice of a Scottish announcer. According to the in-game manual, the voice actor had to record his lines from a distance...and underwater.
* Hawkeye, is likewise a hotshot archer whose real weapon isn't the bow so much as the bag of tricks he fires from it. He's shown to have the same accuracy hand-throwing his arsenal of arrowheads or firing them from improvised launchers. As Ronin, he shifts his weapon to a katana.
* Harry Turtledove windworkers produce winds that allow ships to sail against the natural wind, items are cheaply mass produced using the law of sympathy, crystal balls replace telegraphy, etc.
* Hannah Montana where Billy Ray promises to be awake and smiling when his daughter wakes up only to predictably fall asleep. The subversion comes when Jackson tells him that there's pie in the cafeteria. Not only does this wake him up instantly, but he runs off instantly and doesn't come back until after she's left the hospital.
* GoodFellas: The film depicts Henry Hill's rise up the ranks of the Lucchese crime family, followed by a long descent into cocaine addiction, paranoia, and backstabbing. By the end of the film, all of Hill's former partners-in-crime are in prison or dead, and Hill has been placed in witness protection and has to live a dreary, monotonous life, completely unlike the luxurious and decadent lifestyle he'd become accustomed to.
* Go Animate tend to insult their daughter, Dora, for being Mexican despite the fact that they themselves are Mexican.
* Gundam Build Fighters rigid rules, the writers themselves occasionally seem to forget them; it's said that Plavsky Particles only react with the specific type of plastic used in Gundam model kits, yet later in the show people are seen to modify the plastic by grinding it down and mixing steel powder in it to increase its strength to scratch building whole units without any Gunpla parts (and Bandai does not sell Putty). The earlier Zaku Amazing example does not really stand because eventhough it is modified by a tank model, the main frame (the Zaku) is still a Gunpla.
* Higurashi: When They Cry look to be in their older teens, but they're only 14, still in middle school.
* Gratuitous Princess — Princesses make anything more glamorous or fantastic, regardless of whether the plot/setting calls for them.
* Griff the Invisible, but the superhero parts are brief and only there as a part of Griff's characterization. It's actually about Griff as a person, and his relationship with a girl who's trying to walk through walls.
* Gundam: the original series has the most spin-offs and merchandise, including video games, models, toys, manga, etc. etc. Outside of Japan, however...
* Harry Potter, Molly Weasley initially didn't like Bill's fiancée Fleur Delacour for being too snobbish and would have preferred him to marry somebody more fitting for him, (implied to be Nymphadora Tonks). But after Fleur decides to stay with Bill even after his face gets disfigured by a werewolf, Molly starts seeing that Fleur's love for Bill is genuine and becomes more accepting of her.

* He once tested an escape in which he was buried six feet deep without a coffin and had to dig his way up.
* Harley Quinn which meant she had to stay in Hell for 30 days, but got sent back to Earth before the first day was up because she was too annoying.
* Gossip Girl, which Nate points out in one episode (though Blair denies it).
* Highlander it when giving a full list of 8-10 names at a "checking point". Arguably, most immortals (from the series and not only) have many names, since they pretended to die so many times and had to change identity.
* Hesher is about a metalhead who helps a young boy overcome the death of his mother.
* Halo: Reach feel, as you travel around Reach that is being further and further destroyed by the Covenant. The level "New Alexandria" has you fly around the city as the Covenant burn it around you. It is simultaneously visually amazing and absolutely heartbreaking.
* Hellsister Trilogy, a very old, very powerful god who gave up his domain several millennia ago.
* Groundhog Day, even a kind-hearted viewer might be inclined to agree with Phil.
* Hates Their Parent: Fuck mom and dad! They can die a slow and painful death for all I care!
* H. Beam Piper to the four-armed vaguely reptilian Ullerans, who were maybe Iron Age to Medieval before humans showed up. A number of other species are described or mentioned in passing; none has space travel or other high tech.
* her Stalker With A Crush Mitsuru Tsuwabuki "borrows" said sword and dagger in his Black Rose duel. And he's frighteningly good at using them.
* Happy Days episode has Marion forgetting to set her car's parking brake, causing it to roll down a hill and crash into Arnold's diner.
* Heavy Object which created the mines, not the Wall itself. The politics involved are so bad that other nations have to avoid the EX Wall, allowing the Enterprise to define the battlefield's size and shape.
* half-fairies, mountain ash, and holy water. Besides, they can't lie either. But half-fairies do not have these weaknesses, or at least they are much less pronounced. While half-fairies who grow up in the fairy realm can become very powerful, half-fairies who grow up among humans are only slightly more powerful than ordinary mundanes.
* Hero: The Guardian Smurf, waits until Wonder dies before she is married with Hero, whom she stays with and has a daughter with until he passes away.
* Half-Life 2 has pretty much perfect accuracy regardless of distance and can take out most enemies with one shot, but ammo for it is rare and you can't carry much with you. That, and it has a fairly long reload time.
* Green Day, which was written in the context of the Iraq War, is sung to a Shell-Shocked Veteran, with the lyrics alluding to the mental state of a guilt-ridden soldier after experiencing war.
* Goof Troop family album episode featured Prehistoric Goofy putting Prehistoric Pete through a great deal of abuse in various failed attempts to pull a bad tooth so Pete wouldn't have to go to the dentist. In the end, Pete ends up at the dentist by accident, and he removes the tooth painlessly. The horrific drill-like thing that so terrified Pete was actually a watering can used on the dentist's potted plants.
* Harmonic Feedback: At a restaurant, Drea's grandma is rude to a waitress, and her mom mouths "Alzheimer's". When Drea says, "She doesn't have Alzheimer's," her mom kicks her under the table hard enough to send an ache up her leg.
* God series, using the tale of Buddha and the Monkey King to illustrate the foolishness of fighting someone that you could never conceivably defeat. Lucifer counters that he lost with pride at least, the validity of which is up to the readers to decide.
* gravesite itself on par with digging up entire cemeteries with dynamite.
* Hands Held in the Snow is almost exactly one head taller than her girlfriend.

* Hero and the Terror known as "The Terror". He hates the nickname because he only caught the Terror through dumb luck after nearly getting himself killed and still suffers from post-traumatic stress.
* Hannah Montana to impress him. When she later shows up at school with her new look, she has quite a few guys drooling over her, but then she gets stood up by Matt. It turns out he preferred her tomboy look.
* Hedyle, who makes the accusation, is actually the one who set up Makaleigh's murder.
* Halo: Combat Evolved even joked about this on their commentary for the cutscenes!
* Harry Potter can result in this. Both times when Voldemort took over many people were being mind controlled by him.
* Heroic BSoD, the Slayer lightly taps her on the back of the head to snap her out of it, though it still hurt as much as an actual punch to the back of the head would.
* Grimm is a cop and ALSO the latest in a line of slayers of fairy-tale-type creatures. Although rather than slaying them, he mostly tries to reason with them, or arrest them if they've committed a crime.
* Great Ship has an outer hull made of ultra high grade hyperfiber that is almost impregnable, and gives the ship enough strength to not crush itself under its own gravity.
* Half the stuff that can kill you in the setting counts as this. From flesh-eating worms to bio-acids that melt the skin off your bones, to razor-sharp shards of psychically charged material which will not only tear you to pieces but make you feel unimaginable pain, to guns that flay you apart molecule by molecule, or open a portal to what is essentially hell and suck you in.
* Harry Potter series has been stated to do this, although we never actually learn how far the gender bending goes. Some examples in the series:
* Green Lantern Ring can pretty much sling themselves across the entire universe with no thought to time, food, water or even bathroom requirements.
* HBO. Both of these shows used various art styles by different animators and companies.
* He's able to use the Force to move something the size of a Star Destroyer in a cut scene, a degree of power never evidenced even in other cut scenes, let alone in play. Also, he can toss Darth Vader around like a ragdoll using The Force during cutscenes of the end fight. Try doing that in-game. Nope. Nothing. Vader can resist your Force powers, but you can't resist his too much.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019)'s imago form has scythe-like raptorial appendages on her first two sets of limbs.
* Glenn Miller's "Five O'Clock Whistle", has a youngster relating how her father didn't come home the night before, because (he claimed) the titular whistle was broken.
* Heat has a particularly memorable bank robbery in the middle of the film. Its aftermath is regarded as one of the most intense and breathtaking shoot-outs in movie history.
* Heretic zombies are former townsfolk that have been driven mad, sickened or prone to violence by a magical plague, however it seems they cannot spread the disease, plague bringers are needed for this.
* Green Bay Packers receiver Sterling Sharpe played for years with an undiagnosed condition affecting the vertebrae in his neck, making him more susceptible to neck injuries. By the time the condition was discovered at the end of the 1994 season, he had already had two significant neck-related incidents in two consecutive games and was told by doctors that he would have to undergo major cervical spine surgery to stabilize his neck or he would be at risk for complications later in life (whether or not he continued to play professional sports). Sharpe initially did not rule out the possibility of resuming his career following the surgery and lengthy recovery, but ultimately retired without ever playing another game.
* Harold Lloyd during the Civil War). Using the artifact, he single handedly captures the big scary guy who had been terrorizing the town. Then his grandmother reveals that it was actually the handle off her umbrella.

* Harry Potter as much as people willing to help him. It develops him well enough to make Harry accept occasional leadership roles, such as "teaching" Dumbledore's Army and captaining the Quidditch team.
* have been shot down with a missile by the US Navy, to prevent it from becoming a hazard. Note that most satellites are actually still within the atmosphere. (GPS satellites and the geosynchronous communication satellites used by everyday fixed dish antennas are two notable exceptions.)
* Guilt by Association Gag: An entire group gets punished regardless of whether everyone in the group actually did wrong.
* He's a weed loving gangsta rapper. They're a large respected computer security company. They Fight (cyber)Crime!
* Graham not only rescues several stray dogs, but his dog-like blind loyalty and trust is what causes Jack Crawford
* Group-Identifying Feature: Members of a group have a quirk in their clothes or body that signifies them as belonging to that group.
* Goodwill Heroes is based on either one of the four authors or their friends.
* Grey Hoof's reaction when the Element of Honesty protects Applejack from his death magic.
* Gungrave. The artbook says its name is "B.L. 20,000V". ("Blue Lightning 20,000V"). Made by the Electrigger Company! Despite being weak with melee fighting, Billy can do a little dance that causes his guitar to spin around him, bludgeoning mooks.
* Godslave has this moment when Turner attacks Edith from behind. We cut to "WAM!" and Anpu's exasperated expression.
* Godzilla. Guns? Tanks? Fighter jets? Nuclear weapons? Shrug. You need a seriously plot-specific item to take out one of these guys. Well, Kong was killed pretty easily, by beauty.
* Heaven Seeker: A character whose motivation is to earn a pleasant afterlife.
* Gunnerkrigg Court friends, and receiving a similar warning and compliment from Mr. Thorn.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers fell madly in love with Italy is because he was kind to them even as they were aloof and cold to him. His warmth melted their cold hearts.
* He says the French police judiciaire is the equivalent of the FBI. It's not-this refers simply to detectives. The closest France has to the FBI is the National Police, but there is no exact equivalent because of the way France's government is organized. It is not federated like the US, so there's no need for an interstate agency. The National Police takes care of civil law enforcement duties for the entire country — except in smaller towns and more remote areas, where the Gendarmerie has jurisdiction, and municipal police exist in some towns and cities — and the police judiciaire is the section of the National Police that investigates the most serious crimes such as murders. Whether this is a case of
* Hamilton will be taking over as President, King George III gleefully grabs a chair to watch his administration go down in flames.
* Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters, The Sheriff opposes Hansel and Gretel because he wants to get sole credit for defeating the witches. Of course, he and his men are absolutely no match for the witches and their troll and are slaughtered.
* Goodnight Sweetheart: When Ron successfully travels back to the past, his attempts to fit in end up with the locals believing him to be clinically insane.
* Harbinger's obsession with capturing Shepard could be interpreted as stemming from this.
* Happy Happy Clover had a total of 13 episodes made in 2007 which adapted the first three volumes.
* has a slightly modified version of the infamous Squidward's Suicide stare.
* Good Omens has Madame Tracy, fake medium, and a scene where a séance unexpectedly produces real spirits.
* Gotye's parts in "Somebody That I Used To Know" implies that the man is still hoping deep down that he'll be able to reconnect with his estranged lover.
* Hellsister Trilogy: Most of cultures in the galaxy have embraced this style in the 31st century, which is because the main characters find people wearing colorful skintight space-suits and dwelling in tall buildings made of glass and steel wherever they go.

* Harry has a reaction like this the first time he sees a picture of Dumbledore’s mother, Kendra. He notes that her facial features and straight black hair look vaguely Native American. Bear in mind her children are described as having blonde or auburn hair.
* Hellsguard Roegadyn construct names consisting of an adjective followed by an otherwise improper noun (for instance, "Hoary Boulder" or "Curious Gorge").
* Gundam 00, eventually gets his happy ending). Unlike Jeremiah, Colasour was never intended as anything but a joke, which makes his eventual fate more surprising.
* Hercule Poirot, because she knows nothing about Finland and people are constantly writing to her to tell her that Finns don't do that.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. Sealand helps Latvia not be a twitching emotional wreck and Latvia keeps Sealand grounded in reality.
* Hidamari Sketch, as she becomes overjoyed every time someone compliments her on her supposed maturity.
* Gothic, you will often encounter packs of animals in the wilderness, from large birds to wolves, rhinos, and other beasts. Without exception, as soon as you attack a member of the pack, the entire group will go into berserk attack mode and chase you to the ends of the earth until either you or they are dead. One upside of this is that you can lead them into populated areas like cities, where the guards will assist you in taking them down.
* Glove and Boots, in which Mario knocks Santa out (having mistaken him for a yeti), interrogates him on whether he's on the naughty list or not when he wakes up despite Fafa's protests, and they all get attacked by military elves.
* Gravity Falls wears a different sweater every episode, more if the episode takes place over several days.
* He did, however, keep a painting given to him and signed by Van Gogh.
* Haywire has a semi-realistic example where Mallory breaks a mook's neck using the edge of a table for leverage.
* Grand Theft Auto: Chinatown Wars on those systems and an unusually low seller for a Rockstar game. The iOS version, however, was far more successful, and reached the top of the App Store charts.
* Guillermo Del Toro's is, as the director has said in multiple interviews, a Gothic Romance with ghosts in it. The film's marketing team at Universal, on the other hand, marketed the film as a more traditional haunted-house horror film. This led to a critical response that is, in a word, all over the place and weak box offices returns once the audience realized they got the movie they didn't expect.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 Ego views all mortal life as disappointing and worthless save to be assimilated by him.
* he dreamt it all while unconscious or if Q really did send Picard back in time. On the one hand, nobody had been recorded to have had a coma dream that complicated and Q has powers so he could've easily done all that he appeared to do. On the other hand, it's surprisingly generous that Q would give Picard a second chance.
* Half-Life: When things go awry at the Anomalous Materials research department of the Black Mesa science facility, the classic exchange is heard:
* Gundam SEED C.E. 73 Stargazer: Blu Duel and Strike Noir both use a pair of "shorty" beam rifles (in other words, beam pistols). Meanwhile, Buster Verde carry two huge beam rifles that can be combine like Wing Zero's buster rifle mentioned above.
* Harmony Theory, so she tends to ignore most attacks. Even if by some miracle you manage to injure her, she heals almost instantly. She usually only avoids attacks if she is low on energy.
* had to get down low. Indeed, the majority of the battle depicted in the movie was simply over control of the Landing Zone (the purpose of picking that particular LZ, of course, was to bait the NVA into a fight to confirm their location and test the effectiveness of the new Air Cavalry battle doctrine the Americans were using.)
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) territory when Hsss returns.
* Half-Life 2 and fling those too once the gun is powered up. There is also always the option to smash faces or Headcrabs with the crowbar.

* "Heroes lead by Bakugo. Villains lead by Midoriya. Seven days prep time.
* Granblue Fantasy, a race of beings that at one point ruled the world, subjugated all other races, and created the Primal Beasts, many of which are now seen as gods. The various machines and monsters the Astrals left behind are an ever-present threat throughout the entire world.
* Grand Theft Auto V, Tracey, Michael De Santa's daughter, does this towards her brother Jimmy for ruining her day in the mission "Daddy's Little Girl".
* Hades, there's a random chance while going through the dungeon to meet Thanatos. When that happens, he and Zagreus will try to see who can kill the most enemies. If Zagreus wins, he gets a Centaur Heart for a health bonus.
* Harribel's Fraccion fit this trope best of all. Why? They're by FAR the most effective of ANY Fraccion shown. While most of the Fraccion are defeated by, at best, the * Gundam Vs Series of all that, it manages to work exceptionally well.
* he's far more than just a bunch of government secrets stored in his head.
* Harry Potter series so that indirect looks at it were nonlethal, but induced petrification).
* Guardian: The Lonely and Great God: One of the main characters is a Grim Reaper. Instead of just one Grim Reaper there's a whole lot of them; they're the spirits of people who committed suicide when they were alive and become reapers as punishment. They also aren't skeletal, don't use scythes, and hide from normal humans by wearing hats that make them invisible.
* hardly be. Further, they often argued working-class people were inherently more fit since they had produced everything, in contrast with capitalists simply reaping the profits, and were thus parasites in their view.
* Harvey Beaks, there is a dedication to the cast and crew members deceased friends and relatives
* Gran Torino is a white Polish-American who throws derogatory slurs at everyone, including the Polish and whites.
* Gracepoint's character to enter the police station screaming "Bloody Twitter!"), while the American show uses a fictional online news site instead.
* Hannah Montana: In one episode, the school bully wins a contest to sing with the titular character on TV but Miley and Lily overhear her singing off-key in the girls' bathroom. Miley says that it sounds like her pet pig Lou-Anne and we get this exchange:
* Highway to Heaven and, if it serves their godly purposes, they also fight crime.
* Guilty Crown is stoic to the point of appearing emotionless, yet she's one of the sweetest and most caring characters in the series.
* Hey You! What If...: In "You Fell Into a Black Hole?", Ben is explaining what a black hole is when Kat interjects:
* He mentioned how his men cracked under pressure from the enemy, costing him a promotion, when in fact he sent them in deliberately and they were shot to pieces.
* Hattori Hanzo, and skills with a spear. His appearance as a ninja nowadays is probably a direct result of his tactical choices that earned him his "Devil" nickname; tactics along the lines of subversion, misinformation, assassination, etc.
* Going from a touchscreen tablet to a laptop might be similar, as people swipe down on the screen forgetting that you must use the keyboard instead (some manufacturers cashed in on that by creating either ones with touchscreens or 2-in-1 laptops that have detachable screens that effectively work as tablets).
* Good Omens, when Aziraphale (an angel) has to possess Madame Tracy to talk to Shadwell.
* Head of the Class on the theory that he can reunite his fractious class by getting them all angry at him and immediately revealing that it was a trick.
* Heart in Japan and has some attacks that come across this way (Illusion Perfume, Scornful Caress).
* Goddess Creation System, which he finds fascinating. She claims to be a Daoist sage in training and coupled with her emotionless attitude it gives her a slightly inhuman feeling to the people around her. The catch is that this is just a facade she uses in the imperial palace: When she meets people she knew before entering it, she reverts back to a completely different and equally fake attitude.

* Harry Potter book would have been something of a drag if not for Sirius Black's fondness for crossword puzzles.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire a Death Eater (and in the film version made no attempt to deny it).
* Gunmen are also an inversion, because the heroes use the exact same kinds of robots they stole from the beastmen.
* Harry Potter and the Not-Fatal-At-All Cultural Exchange Program: Ettore is the founder of Rosetta Stone, a bunch of wands-for-hire.
* Hayley once dated an illegal immigrant just to tick off Stan. Stan winds up hiring her boyfriend for his factory, however, and Hayley, annoyed that he isn't spending any time with her anymore, calls immigration on him and his family.
* High Noon town bent on revenge. Despite the fact that he was already planning on leaving, he spends most of the movie attempting to rally the villagers to the defense of their town. Everyone else proves too cowardly to fight, however, and he is forced to take on the gang almost singlehandedly.
* Harry and Ginny were said to take a lot of trips to "secluded areas of the grounds" during
* Highlander was never really celebrated as a hero, but he claimed "the prize" in New York City after living in many different places, having been banished from his hometown when he got better after being run through by The Kurgan.
* greater than the cube of the radius: Radioactive heating is proportional to mass, which increases slightly faster than the cube of the radius (due to gravitational compression, a heavier body squeezes itself). Accretionary heating increases as mass squared, tidal heating goes as radius to the fifth. More heat per surface area means more geologic activity, and longer lasting activity, than a smaller planet made from the same materials in the same orbit and location.
* Golden Earring's "Twilight Zone", the protagonist is stalked by spies who also sing backup vocals. You can tell they're spies, because they're in trenchcoats, fedoras and dark glasses.
* Halo: Combat Evolved. Somewhat justified since the atmospheric properties of a ringworld were certainly not factored into the escape pod's airdam design, making them land very fast (and very on-fire).
* Harley Quinn. In her own title, she was killed and sent to Hell, but was banished from the place due her focus on joy and love. (Clearly, in a place where you're supposed to "Abandon All Hope", the staff doesn't like having someone like that around.)
* He was capitalizing on Spongebob's popularity following a review from a famous food critic and rotten patties happened to yellow with spots). The problem is that the jury are all visibly ill due to the rotten patties (and include the above-mentioned food critic), which throws the idea of a fair trial out the window. Given the popularity of the Krusty Krab, either a venue change or possibly having the case handed by a higher court (if one exists) would be needed. And like in the first example, the guilty/not guilty verdict is used despite it being a civil case.
* "Hands up, all of those who think that we should not do any training today because it is raining." Those who raise their hands are forced to keep them raised for the whole exercise, with the result that rain runs down the sleeve and soaks them, and their arms get very tired and sore.
* Grand Theft Auto V, if you kill Trevor during a friend activity or otherwise outside a mission, he sends you a text:
* Hilariously, this happened at UFC fighter Anderson Silva's NSAC hearing over his failed drug test, with one of the panel's ringtone being
* Halo 2's Legendary Edition came with even more and also had a model of Master Chief's helmet.
* Harry and His Bucket Full of Dinosaurs: In "Emergency!", Scorch the dragon thinks he's sick because he's in pain and can't breathe fire, but it turns out he just needs to burp, so Harry and the gang burp him like a baby.

* Hal Clement He later apologized for this, after biologists pointed out to him that the correct word is "symbiont"; it was too late by then, as a number of other writers had copied his term.
* He had the storyline so thoroughly plotted out ahead of time that he refused to let actors ad-lib their lines, for fear it might cause discontinuity, or wreck a bit of
* Helm pregnant—so much so that her water breaks during the showdown, startling the bad guy into a human reaction that momentarily shakes up his screw-em-all villainy.
* Hates Being Nicknamed: A character hates being called by a nickname.
* Great Lakes Avengers as well, as they were in an underwater lair at the time).
* HDA to declare war on monsters, leading them to arrest and quarantine any monster they can find and drive the dark lords out of the human world. After some events, however, they realize by Act VI chapter 52 that their efforts were in vain; Babylon had been targeting the monster world all along, and the humans were unfortunate enough to get caught in the crossfire.
* Gregor Clegane serves this for Jaime in battle. For all his moral shortcomings, Gregor readily demonstrates he is good at his job as a bodyguard.
* Halo. Most human ships can do both jobs as well — but they are usually called "cruisers" or "frigates", and are tiny in comparison (1,191 and 490 meters respectively, though actual human carriers are larger at three kilometers).
* Have I Got News for You did something similar with a list of "Tory sleaze" scandals.
* Grant also threatens to take Wildfire by force if she loses to him. He isn't successful.
* Grey Knights, Justicar Alaric and a small team of his Grey Knights were about to face one of the most terrible daemons in the galaxy. In fact, it was one so terrible that it once massacred over 300 Grey Knights in one battle. To inspire his men:
* Grand Magic Game standards, Fairy Tail's S-class wizards are significantly more powerful than those of other guilds.
* Harry Potter and the Portrait of What Looked Like a Large Pile of Ash. Harry keeps thinking mean things about him, such as "Ron's Ron shirt was just as bad as Ron himself".
* Hausu, an incredibly bizarre Japanese horror film (by Toho, no less!!!) is about a sentient man-eating house.
* Hey Arnold!. Helga is about a head taller than her crush Arnold, which is especially noticeable when Arnold hugs her in "Arnold's Hat", "Runaway Float" and "Arnold Visits Arnie". However, they are nine years old and the situation could change later on.
* he's been spending time with Sakura before focusing on the fight at hand.
* Hand Maid May, to aid her search of the city for May. Kotaro Nanbara, being mortal and far less cool, is forced to scramble up with normal climbing.
* Happy Tree Friends is commonly mistaken for a cat due to his whiskers.
* Green Lantern: Sinestro cites this as the key reason he can never beat Hal Jordan (as much as he hates to admit it):
* Henry Stickmin Series, using the bomb will result in a distant view of the airship as the bomb goes off.
* headshot a plane pilot with a sniper rifle... at the moment that leads the now-unpiloted plane to crash into an allied tank.
* Hercules: In the ancient world of Greek mythology the closest analogues to fairy and elves were lesser nature-spirits (nymphs, gorgons, sprites) that could somewhat be called gods in the most minor sense. Hades two stooges, Pain and Panic, seem to represent and even display some of their less pleasant behaviour like spiriting away babies from their cradles and transforming themselves into adorable children to lure unsuspecting men to their doom.
* Haruhi Suzumiya: Initially, the Data Integration Entity almost completely ignored Earth. It's mostly "inhabited" by creatures who actually have to use physical matter to interact with each other, something at best, slightly interesting. But then one Haruhi Suzumiya showed evidence of being capable of "Auto-Evolution" and they had to start paying some real attention. They still don't really care about anyone else on the planet though. (Yuki Nagato doesn't count.)

* Green Lantern with large breasts above the segmented carapace on her abdomen.
* have romantic and psychotic feelings for his mentor, Sasaki/Kaneki and in a fit of madness stabs Uta who had disguised his face as Sasaki's while clinging to him in an affectionate manner and thinking that Sasaki belongs to him and begging him to never leave his side again as he dissociates badly without his Living Emotional Crutch
* Hellblazer; John's original dealing with his long-term enemy Nergal dealt with this. His summoning demanded Nergal appear in a form pleasing to the human senses. So Nergal took over the body of a little girl. Then it got worse.
* Goultard the Barbarian started out as a demigod, being the son of Iop and the mortal woman Catrine. He eventually became the immortal steward to Iop's power
* Gokusen herself, has picked up the gesture of raising her sleeve to show (nonexistent in her case) tattoos when aggravated.
* Hart Whitcraft was afraid of this happening after receiving an artificial heart in the Acclaim version of
* Hannibal, Will Graham has one when he wakes up in Dr. Lecter's office, with his last memory of standing on a beach at a crime scene in West Virginia. He understandably starts to panic, realizing that he was out of it for nearly four hours.
* Halo's hidden Terminals. These Terminals tell the story of the struggle between the Flood and the Forerunners, with the Flood presenting its invasion as necessary for life's eventual evolution as a ultimate species and as a stage in evolution for the universe as a whole eventually. On the other side, the Forerunners keep the stand that they are guardians for the genetic diversity in the galaxy and should impend any step in evolution if necessary to keep that diversity, even if flawed and eventually self-destructive at times.
* Gunless for Sean, as poor Jack keeps finding out, even when something else was the intended insult:
* Halo: The myriad planets and installations built by the Forerunners, including the eponymous ringworlds, are ghost space constructs.
* Gold/Silver/Crystal to the point where it seems like the whole series could just end here.
* Gunsmith Cats, but they're not in a relationship because they happen to be brother and sister. One wonders if their parents would be proud or horrified of the fact that they indeed went on to be violent criminals.
* Harry Potter fan complained that there didn't appear to be any Jews at Hogwarts, JK Rowling responded that a minor character called Anthony Goldstein (who had all of three lines in the entire series) was Jewish.
* Heroes of Might and Magic games that are set in the world of Ashan, takes the form of an enormous black dragon with eyes on her wings.
* , Harry rents a subpar romance novel and teasingly suggests that he and Ginny could re-enact page 206.
* Hawkeye and Trapper play with a nurse, and Hawkeye demands that the others turn their heads before he will remove his dogtags. To make things worse for them, it was
* Green-Sky Trilogy, the underground caves beneath the Wissenroot were initially used for those who wanted the next generation to know about humanity's dark past. Eventually, it became used to exile those who opposed the Ol-Zhaan, with a nasty lie to their relatives that the exile was devoured by monsters. The exiles and their descendants became the Erdlings.
* GunZ. A good 70-75% of all fights take place in the "Mansion" Arena.
* Good Luck Charlie has a talented cast who all get at least one chance to showoff.
* Halo is quite bad about this in particular. This is all for the sake of the player, especially in multiplayer—it lets them know, within some reason, if their shots are hitting or missing, since shields glow when hit, and other players or enemies flinch and their armor sparks when shot.

* Happy Endings, Penny tries to give her new baby bro Dave (Penny's mom and Dave's dad are together now) a wedgie, only to discover he isn't wearing any underwear.
* Gunota ga Mahou Sekai ni Tensei Shitara, Lute winds up married to two girls, and it's not his idea, but theirs. He loves them both equally, and despite the marriage being officially recognized in-universe, it is treated as rather odd by those who hear of it.
* Green Lantern spent some time walking the earth — or America, at least — together in the early '70s. It was a coming-of-age time for the comic book, as much of what they saw was commentary on current politics and social situations.
* Granblue Fantasy, Mary and Karva had to run away from a boulder after activating a trap switch.
* Gordon Korman, toward the end of the book, one of Simon's crazy teachers shows up at a speech and, removing her coat, reveals what look like sticks of dynamite strapped to her body. When she detonates the "bomb", tinny music plays and a flag that reads "BOOM" pops out. When Simon's father indignantly demands that the police arrest the woman, they reply that there is no law against impersonating a deadly weapon. Except that there absolutely is such a law, in as many words—there are laws explicitly prohibiting making threats with fake bombs or other weapons.
* Great, now the Mouse House has its own page? Great job guys, why don't you do Warner Bros. while you're at it?
* HERZ: Shinji, Asuka and Rei started out their piloting careers in their early teens.
* Heroes Save the World: When Simon Martin gets a vision of someone's future death, it unfolds in real time and he passes out for the duration. On the bright side, he only passes out for ten seconds, but on the downside, this severely limits how much information he can get.
* High School A.U.: An alternate continuity of a work where the characters are high school students.
* Hakuoki during the end of the Edo period. Given the time period, it's no surprise that Chizuru has very little fighting ability, and she's painfully aware of her status as The Load; throughout the action of the VN she frets constantly over how much of a burden protecting her places on them and how little she can do to help them, especially once the Boshin War breaks out and the Shinsengumi have to leave Kyoto.
* High School D×D light novel, Issei's mother shows the members of the Occult Research Club a collection of these, including the obligatory "naked toddler at the beach" photo. The funny part, she's actually promised that she would do this when he had a lot of girlfriends, though her hopes dwindled as Issei became quite the pervert.
* Hatou Yumei. Listing the many, many reasons why she's this trope will take too long.
* Harry banishes Lucius Malfoy, Crabbe, and Goyle through the glass sliding door on his hotel room balcony.
* Grand Finale, who proves to be an even more formidable foe for the slowly dying Ultraseven.
* Hell, there are several who claim that they're all derivatives of only
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality revolves around the titular character, and arguably several others, being this.
* Harlan Ellison, with the humans finally taking down AM and settling into the duty of being a watchdog for the AIs as they await the reawakening of the humans on the moon.
* God is Punishing Us!", When Jeffrey is put in charge of punishing sinners on Earth while God goes on vacation, he uses natural disasters to target only sinners for actual wrongdoing (bank robbers, pedophiles, etc). Not only does this make crime go down, but conversion to legitimate theism skyrockets because the events could only be possible by God's existence. When God finds out, he is pissed at Jeffrey for not enacting random disasters onto people for petty, unrelated reasons because he is being "obvious" about it and not "hella mysterious".
* High Fidelity where Jack Black's character's band, Sonic Death Monkey, has been built up for the entire third act as a raucous punk/thrash metal band. They finally appear playing smooth R&B Standards, and sound great.

* Groucho Marx glasses when Mom came to ask him about a broken lamp. His response to her: "Who ees thees Kahlveen?"
* Grim Reaper operation. On the other hand, one dead character joined that franchise...
* Had it not been for his antics (criticising other directors such as
* God of War, he already did step three. What, did everyone think it just didn't take the first time? Especially given that Kratos has been killing gods left and right ever since, including killing Poseidon and Hermes just hours earlier? Furthermore, Zeus makes it clear that the box, which contained both the evils of the Titan's war which corrupted the gods and the power to kill him, was never supposed to have been opened in the first place. So why did he ever help Kratos reach it?
* Haruhi Suzumiya: Kyon asks Nagato, after treating with beings that are effectively ghosts of alien lifeforms, what happens after humans die. Her answer? Information classified.
* Heralds of Valdemar series once states that the same Healers who can stop the pain and put you together also know how to take you apart, so it's unwise to anger them.
* Happy Heroes everywhere and make everyone slip) seems rather childish. Big M. says that, since this is a cartoon, of course it's going to seem childish somehow.
* He then proceeded to prove his point, having borrowed one from the Russians. It was rather badass.
* Ground Zeroes (and there is an additional MSX-related tape that could be found in that game). It was eventually discovered that the MSX data is an incomplete ROM for the game "The Portopia Serial Murder Case" (which inspired Kojima when he was younger), and that there is no hidden secret to be found.
* GURPS Alternate Earths, the highly-advanced parallel timeline of Caliph (set in 1683, Christian calendar) substitutes traditional Islamic dress for Roman fashion, but the people still live in diamond skyscrapers and are governed by mostly-benevolent Caliphates.
* Harry Potter crossover had a scene where one character is given a Muggle newspaper and is told that there is a plot-relevant article about magic. Instead, the character reads another article about a Russian pilot who saw gremlins midflight, but turned out to be a hallucination from drinking too much vodka, and that the pilot was restricted to one bottle per flight. The author's notes adds that this was a real article.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, but at one point Eglamore draws a chalk rune on the ground to dispel an etherically-summoned fire.
* hacked to turn Link into a girl by changing all the gendered pronouns.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, but a short-lived romance between the two convinced her to become a hero herself, and her own series revolves around her redemption from her warlord past.
* Happened to Victor Van Damme early on, transforming from a surly pretty boy into a metallic Satyr.
* Hero Tales has Shouka, powerful enough to put an entire town under her rule. Suffers The Worf Effect when Housei fights her with a mundane bow and beats her.
* Hellsister Trilogy travels back and forth between the present day and the 31st century several times by flying faster than light.
* Guest Fighter, utilizes not only a chainsaw, but also a meat hammer.
* Heaven's Memo Pad gives us Alice, the Great Detective for the NEET detective team.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) the planet into a world more to Ghidorah's liking.
* Guilliman suggested that if anything ever happened to the Emperor then Sanguinius should assume the role of commanding the Imperium. Warmaster
* He does the same thing to her, Nu, and Tager after they allow Jin and the rest of the H.M.S. Nirvana crew to take him leaving the three of his fellow U.S.S. Ragna crew members to enjoy their Ikaruga Tuna without him in - you guessed it - his own gag ending.

* Halo Wars 2, Atriox leads the Banished, a faction that had rebelled against the Covenant while the latter was still fighting humanity.
* Harrison Bergeron are unquestionably on Harrison’s side, with him being much nicer (also normal, rather than a huge, god-like being).
* Hanna and Barbera. Jerry sometimes displays the same mannerisms as Chaplin.
* Hansel and Gretel, Carl finds a cook book for German Chocolate Cake in the Witch's house. The recipe is chocolate, cake, and Germans.
* Heretic expansion has Corvus getting trapped in D'Sparil's domain after the final battle and having to fight his way out.
* Harry Potter, Vernon Dursley hates Harry for what he is and treats him like dung. When the Hogwarts invitation arrived for Harry, Vernon did all his might to prevent him from touching it until Hagrid intervenes, It gets worse in the second book where he locks up all of Harry's wizarding stuff and after Harry received a warning from the Ministry of Magic due to Dobby's meddling, Vernon locks him up in his room with full intent to keep him from returning to Hogwarts. He gets civil to his nephew later on with one rule which is not mentioning about magic to anyone. Then in the fifth book, he attempted to kick Harry out of the house upon learning that Voldemort is back to kill him until Dumbledore's Howler came to remind him. Though he is one of the most despised characters in the series, the only thing that prevents him from being a fully blown monster is his love for his wife and son, Petunia and Dudley. Though he and his wife were also terrible parents toward Dudley in a different way, spoiling and indulging him, never punishing him for anything, and never raising him to be a good person. In the sixth book, Dumbledore points out that what they've done to Dudley is actually worse than what they've done to Harry.
* Going a bit further back, there was a lady by the name of Patricia Highsmith who wrote for two different comic companies (Fawcett and Western Comics) between 1943 and 1947.
* Graf Zeppelin. would have had a pretty substantial array of guns if completed.
* Guild Wars 2 has several examples of this between it and the original game. After the Destroyers were driven back the races became complacent thinking it was the end of the threat in the Dwarven prophecies, rather than preparing for the Elder Dragons. The original fanatics behind the Ministry of Purity were defeated and it was reformed, but the hardline ideals the founders espoused persisted and led Cantha into a dark age of racism, xenophobia, and oppression. Jalawa Poko used the freedom he received in exchange for defeating Abaddon to reform his armies and successfully conquer Elona.
* Hanna-Barbera (which ran as three separate half-hour shows but were all under the same umbrella title).
* Helluva Boss leads to the wanton spread of venereal disease, several murders, and a mutant fish attack, all against human college kids on spring break.
* Gunbuster died several years before the first events of the OVA and yet set off the entire plot.
* Godzilla 2000. Long story short, some curious scientists come across an ancient spaceship in the middle of the ocean. And, well, not surprisingly, it wakes up after 65 million years of dormancy and now wants to create a "new body" (The Millennian aliens inside somehow turned into pure energy after crashing) to become the dominant species on the planet.
* Hawkwind, nominating the shortcomings of a different sort of robot maid:
* Hamster Huey and the Gooey Kablooie had Calvin being very skeptical of the book's quality (he said, "How good can it be if it hasn't been made into an animated TV show?") while his dad wanted to read it to him. In later strips, it's the only bedtime story Calvin ever wants to hear, and his dad is sick of it.
* Greendale Community College often gets a variant, where they aren't the best despite the overly narrow superlative. It's been described as the second most prosperous school
* Grand Finale. The glass in the Rescue Ops domes begins to crack as almost all the Rangers, plus Captain Mitchell and Ms. Fairweather are trapped inside (the Lifeforce having severed the connector tunnel that would've allowed them to escape).

* Harry Potter Resort out from the shadow of nearby Walt Disney World and made it into an attraction in its own right, demonstrating that parks not named Disney could compete with it on its bread-and-butter of production values and licensed properties.
* Grimm abilities for witness and jury tampering. The protagonists slip him a potion to neutralize his abilities.
* Hearts Are Health keeps this trope alive of course through older game franchises, and the fact that the heart continues to be a recognizable symbol.
* High School Girls Team ending from KOF 2003, her then-teammates Hinako and Malin improvise on stage while she's getting ready for a concert...
* her cousin is already a well-known superhero in this 'verse. When Superman shows up, sure enough, a pair of bank robbers are dumb enough to shoot him too, and one tries to punch him too. Clark is amused.
* Guilty Gear include a bonus "GG Generations" option which changes the game's mechanics slightly to resemble previous games. "GG" mode changes how Instant Kills work so that they can be repeatedly used and escaped from via onscreen button prompts. If the victim misses the inputs they eat an immediate unfailing Instant Kill. Yet Order-Sol's Instant Kill "Dragon Install Sekkai" is a long and complicated button combination, and the actual IK portion only triggers if the victim's health is low enough, so how did the dev team work around this? When Order-Sol's in "GG" mode, performing a successful IK here triggers his EX form's IK, "All Guns Blazing."
* GURPS 4th Edition lists "constantly makes bad puns" as a moderate negative social trait. By comparison, offensive body odor is only a mild negative trait.
* Halo Wars, Cutter notes that humanity themselves initially expected to easily retake Harvest from the Covenant. Instead, the Harvest campaign became "five years of Hell".
* Hana Yori Dango in a stylish dress. After getting pushed into a swimming pool, Shizuka dolls her up with much make-up, hair pampering and a beautiful dress. Needless to say, she finally gets everyone's attention.
* Goosebumps: Sabrina's, Carly Beth's friends, mom instructs her every year to throw away any candies that are not in their original wrappers for fear of poisons and sharp objects.
* "Golden Die-Angle": A Laotian drug lord chasing after thieves end up decapitated by the very barbed wire fence he used as a security measure
* Hearts of Iron playing as one of the major European Axis powers, the last obstacle is almost always the United States. They are an awful opponent because they have probably spent 5 years building up a gigantic army that will swam almost any landing, as well as a large Navy if the Imperial Japanese Navy hasn't helped you by taking it out.
* Hannibal Chau's stunt in The Stinger notwithstanding) so it's possible that the sword is locked until the Jaeger is a fair distance away from populated areas.
* Gone with the Wind, and she had previously written several other hundred plus page stories which never made it to publication.
* Going to a Dragonforce concert because of the one song of theirs in
* Hessonites, along with other types of Garnet like Demantoid and Pyrope, appear to be high-ranking military officers.
* Happy Yarou Wedding, Yuuhi keeps trying to cover these up as "wrestling" but the five-year-old Shouta doesn't entirely buy it.
* Heavy Rain, Norman Jayden can get into a fight on a conveyor belt of doom with the Origami Killer, who can kill him if you fail the button prompts.
* Guise once bested him in a challenge to locate certain items by pulling junk out of his
* Great Expectations was only written because Dickens's magazine 'All The Year Round' was doing poorly and the only thing that would revive it was a serialized Dickens novel.
* Harlan Ellison but a religion in which worshippers view human sacrifice.

* Greatest Tank Battles details real tank battles (including several mentioned below) through computer simulations and interviews with witnesses, participants and historians.
* Happens again in the very last battle with Galaxia. Sailor Moon reaches for her hand.
* Hell Girl early episodes featured some antagonists who were like this.
* Heel–Face Turn, but you'd think a ref would notice that the guy suddenly has a mask on when "he" didn't before...
* Hand Wave throw you in, or why they don't stick around after throwing you in, is not explained.
* He later, apparently, did the same thing with Steve. Steve was patient.
* Grand Theft Auto V, though being roughly in his late-40's/early 50's, develops a romantic relationship with Patricia Madrazo, the wife of one of the antagonists, who is roughly a decade older than him. Despite sharing his feelings, she eventually returns to her husband.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets; Draco, being Draco, attacks on "two".
* Halo 4 Said cannons are also seen later one easily pulverizing UNSC ships.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Lost and Damned has the remaining members of the Lost MC pour gasoline across their old hangout as they move on.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, Ginny is about to blurt out her Big Secret (also the solution to the deadly mystery at the center of the story) to Harry and Ron when Percy comes blundering in and scares her off.
* Heroic Sacrifice by detonating a nuke within the Tet and destroying it. Fortunately for the heroine Julia, Jack's other surviving clone (tech 52) manage to reunite with her after 3 years of searching the forest house.
* Hand of Thrawn the Corellian general's forces based on their tactics (they fall for the same trick invented by said Corellian general), then destroys most of them and sits back to wait, aware now that there is treachery among his people.
* Hilda also ate "hair soup" in another episode, which gave her waist-length tresses... and a full beard.
* High School Of The Dead episode 2, "Escape From The Dead", a student in the infirmary drops a push-broom in this manner when one of the victims they are tending to starts to reawaken as a zombie.
* Henry, the keeper of the squad's base (his magic allows him to rearrange it), was abandoned by his parents because of a condition that renders him a constant magical leech. It's only within the labyrinthine confines of the base that he can keep this condition from affecting anyone else (including his squadmates) too much. The only reason Asta can befriend him is that Asta has no magic to leech.
* Heroes Unlimited, wizards can use circle magic, which—as the name implies—requires them to create and stand in intricate circles to cast spells. This is more expensive and time-consuming than conventional spellcasting, as even the simplest magic circle takes half an hour to set up, but it can produce some impressive effects which regular spell magic cannot replicate.
* Gravity Falls naturally has medium brown hair but dyed it black in his teens.
* Haven was originally going to air in December 2012, but it was pulled in in light of the Sandy Hook shooting due to the episode featuring high school violence and later aired the following month.
* Harry Potter states that Rowling based those characters on the Bulgarian football team when they made it to the 1994 World Cup 1/4 finals, who were then infamous for such behaviors.
* Hex opened with Leon moving up and down framed by the sky and Ella doing the same while framed by grass with their lower bodies out of shot. Both of them as gasping heavily. They're doing sit ups together.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn. When the Dream Tree is under attack by the ghostly monster Sludge, its leaves instead induce nightmares.
* Hellsister Trilogy goes on about all the times she tried to get her cousin and Lois together:
* Gojira was made as an allegory about the horrors of the atomic bomb.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Mad-Eye Moody turns Draco Malfoy into a ferret (punishment for trying to hit Harry with a spell while his back was turned), and then begins bouncing him between the floor and ceiling, shouting at him between each bounce.

* Grand Theft Auto III in the mission "Big'n'Veiny" Claude has to retrieve some porn magazines for a man named El Burro. After doing so he gives you a stack of them by your first safe house.
* Hiding Out) is hiding from hitmen as a high school student. When pressed for a name in the registration office, he quickly scans the room and spots a coffee can, giving the name, "Maxwell Houser".
* Heathers, dislikes his father but loved his mother, even if he doesn't talk about her much. The reason he doesn't like to talk about her is that she committed suicide (implied to be because of her husband's abuse), and he still misses her terribly.
* Good Omens has Satan, but he never actually appears, leaving the work to various underlings, including Beelzebub.
* had one, but they broke up in the aftermath of the Lake Kawaguchi incident.
* Hamilton: In "Hurricane", Hamilton decides to write the Reynolds Pamphlet out of paranoia that his enemies would reveal his secret, but in real life it was for a far more sensible reason. By the time the pamphlet was published, the speculation charges mentioned in "We Know" had made their way to journalists and were publicly released, with said journalists openly accusing Hamilton of financial crimes. Thus, Hamilton released the pamphlet hoping that by admitting to the affair but denying the financial crimes he would be considered trustworthy and the charges would be forgotten (it actually worked too, but his reputation never fully recovered). In short, the historical corruption charges were already public, so his release of the pamphlet made more sense, while the theatrical corruption charges see Hamilton try to get out ahead of them and come out looking worse off for it.
* Gravedale High episode "The Grave Intruder" had Duzer take over control of the school newspaper to make up phony stories that cause a lot of problems in the school, such as Coach Cadaver being incensed by a story claiming he has a human brain and Headmistress Crone making advances toward Max Schneider after reading a story that claimed he loved her. Duzer eventually realizes that fake news stories are hurtful when the rest of the class fabricate a story about Duzer loving Frankentyke.
* Has various spells in each edition to create an area like this as well as evil equivalents, presumably in case a player wants to build their own graveyard. It also strengthens certain undead created in the area.
* Head of the Class. Charlie had to take an economics course in order to keep his teaching certification (and his job) but was shown struggling with the subject matter, as it's out of his area of expertise. When he's gearing up to take his final exam, the IHP kids put together a composition book that contained all the formulas he would need to ace the test (they said he would be given two workbooks at the exam - one to write the answers in, one to use as a workbook and he could just substitute their workbook to use). The next day, when they ask how he did on the exam, he says he thinks he did fine - then pulled the workbook they gave him out of his desk, showing he didn't use it. When asked why he didn't use it, knowing he could lose his job if he failed the exam, he said, "I wouldn't be the teacher you deserve if I did."
* Hawaii Five-0, the uniforms of Japanese police officers have vest patches that say "Special police officer" in Japanese. Actual vest patches have writing which means "National Police Agency".
* Halloween (2018): Oscar is dressed as a devil for Halloween and he is horny for most of the night, grinding with girls on the dance floor and later trying to kiss a girl he likes.
* Heavy Rain. He assaults Ethan's therapist for refusing to answer his questions, attacks a mentally disturbed suspect who turns out to have nothing to do with the case, and if Ethan gets arrested, Blake will proceed to beat the hell out of him, only stopping when Ethan falls unconscious.
* Halo, has various landmasses across its surface associated with distinct subspecies of its denizens, the Kig-Yar being noted as one of the more genetically diverse sapient species known to humanity or the Covenant.

* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality. However, each army is usually well run and have well thought out strategies.
* , Harry asks about Seamus Finnigan's definition of "mate" in an attempt to clarify their relationship and Dean Thomas covers his ears and goes "Lalalala."
* Graceful Loser: Good game, friend! I wouldn't mind losing to someone with such determination.
* Hajime no Ippo, where the opponents usually are just as sympathetic and dignified as Ippo himself, and the anime does not shy away from spending at least one entire episodes to flesh out the character of Ippo's current opponent. Even dirty Mashiba is shown as an orphan who fights to give him and his little sister Kumi a decent life.
* Hazel, on an impulse, saves a mouse from a kestrel. This is seen as unusual because rabbits usually have no associations with other non-predator species. Hazel, however, sees it as an opportunity. Mice are fairly useless to the rabbits, but what would be the benefit of befriending a more useful animal? Enter Kehaar. Not to mention that the mouse
* God help you if you mess with certain officers, officials, and crewmen of the
* here he is with his "signature dish", which he finds goes better with A1 steak sauce. In this altered version, his lyric is "And I would do anything for love and I always do this" (with "this" being accompanied with him pouring the A1 on the meatloaf).
* Hermione does a Type 1 to Ron, to the point where Harry feels like * Hayate the Combat Butler chapter when Wataru angrily protests the price of travel, and Sakuya tells him it's based on the projected price of crude oil in 2008. In-universe, the year is still 2001.
* Grunts Firefight adds Grunt Bodyguards, who have recharging energy shields.
* Grand Theft Me situation) about to have sex with Lilah and secondly when Fred learns about Buffy. Though Fred gets over Angel she at one point asks about Buffy aka “the girl with the goofy name”. Fred also is very clingy to Gunn in Season 3 and 4.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys counterpart, Ares, God of Love, is clean-shaven. The evil mirror Hercules, on the other hand, does have a beard.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch, while the latter has a gag sequence where the "Brain" Gremlin (the one who can talk, voiced by Tony Randall in the film) locks the author of the novelization in another room while he types up his own contribution until the author breaks out with an axe.
* Half-Life 2. Manhacks are mainly used for riot control, and often fly about in swarms, shredding any hostile they encounter. Gordon can use the Gravity Gun to catch them and send them flying into walls or into Combine soldiers themselves. They can also be used as floating buzz saws to limited effect.
* Groundhog Day, it's hard to imagine "Pennsylvania Polka" by anyone other than Frankie Yankovic with back vocals. It was first recorded for the film "Give Out, Sisters" (1942) by The Andrews Sisters.
* Gohan's first transformation into a Super Saiyan occurs while he's training with his father, and Goku exploits Gohan's
* Hercules Unbound and Hippolyta tried dating briefly, before he betrayed her and enslaved her and her people. Despite this, centuries later she still finds herself attracted to him after he's begged forgiveness in some continuities.
* Harry Bosch, a screenwriter is handcuffed by Detective Bosch. After the cuffs are removed, he rubs his wrists and says he always wondered how that felt.
* Gran Turismo series which have been getting longer as the series progresses. The fourth and fifth games even have races lasting a full twenty-four hours.
* Green Lantern: Emerald Knights, Mogo kills Bolphunga before he could get away.
* Heroes would make him almost invincible. Yet almost all his superpowered encounters are with people who can work around his abilities:
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch he is, a biologist examining him would be more likely to think he was some kind of primate, like a tarsier or bushbaby.

* Goalie), who died as a result of heart problems he had been suffering for most of his life two days before its television premiere.
* Harry Potter; although given the popularity of Quidditch in the wizarding world and the broom's ubiquity as a means of transport, this is probably not so obscure; they're essentially the wizards' equivalent of racing bikes or sports equipment.
* Halo: Reach. However, the main invasion fleet arrives a few days later and successfully wipes out the largest center of human population outside of Earth, single-handedly scoring the most important victory of the entire war.
* Greek mythology has its share of Love At First Sight, usually caused directly by some god or goddess.
* Happens again when Kanaya knocks out Karkat shortly before the epic
* Happy Tree Friends, Toothy gets this treatment after the eggs he swallowed up ended up containing little chicks. Cue them popping out of his stomach, and no worse for wear.
* Greedy does this to a test cake that he made in preparation for Woody and Laconia's wedding in
* Guns 2 Swords is a MSCHF project in which customers can send in guns to have them melted down and reforged into decorative swords.
* Harrison Ford's stunt double Terry Leonard appears as a Nazi truck driver.
* Harry Secombe. Milligan helped Royal Engineers rig up a fountain in an Italian village to flow with purloined local wine.
* Granted this may have been a problem with the development method, not the technology itself. The scientists seemed to think the best way to get the robots to develop a personality was to have them repeatedly fight to the death, and after they did develop a personality the scientists immediately tried to seal them away so they could be used as weapons. They were trying to get them to develop Personas, which are tied to the user's mind and emotions, without letting them develop
* .hack//SIGN who not only stab you with their tentacles, but put you into a short-term coma in real life.
* Hell in the Pacific, the American soldier and the Japanese soldier seem to be about to turn on each other- and then a bomb kills them.
* Harry Dresden was born on Halloween. His mother deliberately had him around that time so that he'd be born with the ability to affect Outsiders.
* Glee, Rachel Berry, who has been the "Lead Female" in every competition, is suspended and banned from the next competition. Thus leaving the next competition up to the back ups.
* Heroes hooked up with tubes and IV because of his terminal disease. He reminisced on his younger days when he was a great hunter.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, Kyon suddenly finds himself in a world without supernatural powers, with what SOS members remain leading normal, human lives.
* higher-ups spinoff, which was primarily stand-alone format and petered out after barely reaching 13 episodes.
* Halo 4 metal box, itself available in a "forest black" or a silver color.
* Guns N' Roses "November Rain" has Axl and his groomsmen looking about frantically for the ring. Steve is wearing it on his pinky.
* Harlan Ellison, "Eutopia", is about an alternate world where Alexander the Great solidified his Empire and the Greeks are still ruling the world in 1960 AD (or thereabouts).
* has a lot of problems warmed up to it over the years, even regarding it as an excellent horror film, just not a good adaptation.
* Harry Potter film made him cooler. They apparently compromised on the issue since later strips would show them attending movies in cosplay together.
* Harry Turtledove, one of the main characters is a geologist studying Yellowstone park. Despite being a clear expert (and being interviewed on television news as a geology expert several times), and despite a lot of pretty strong scientific evidence that something was going on, she can't get anyone to take her warnings about imminent eruption of a supervolcano under Yellowstone park. The justification the Government gave her was that an eruption on that scale would be too big a disaster for the government to respond to anyway, so there was no point in worrying about it.

* Heathers, Ram Sweeney does this in a conversation he's having with God during a funeral: "Jesus god in Heaven, why did you have to kill such hot snatch? It's a joke, man. Jeez, people are so serious. Hail Mary, who aren't in heaven, pray for all us sinners so we don't get caught. Another joke, man."
* Going Commando: (usually female) A character goes without underwear either voluntarily, or involuntarily, to entice the viewer with flashes up their skirt.
* Gollum and Sméagol ("Stinker" and "Slinker") from Peter Jackson's
* hairstyle was spoofing (though Lake was blonde, not a redhead). Nowadays that look is usually associated with Jessica Rabbit rather than the real actress she was a parody of.
* Happens more than once when a murder committed by an animalistic supernatural being like a wendigo or a werewolf is written off as a bear attack by the police.
* he's really just slapped together an improbable ecosystem out of whatever creatures he thinks are most, in the manner of a seven-year-olds' action figure collection, leaving anyone who dares live outside his cities stuck in a Dungeons and Dragons monster manual.
* Higurashi: When They Cry doesn't show time repeating over and over, but alternate universes. Thus, if the characters die in one universe, they will remain dead.
* Hesitation Equals Dishonesty: If a character hesitates before answering, it's a dead giveaway that they are lying.
* he's not fireproof on whether this is a physical vulnerability or a psychological problem.
* Gormenghast is similar in style and scope but not really fitting into the series canonically.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, she gives Harry and Ron homework planners for Christmas. They don't like the gift, and at one point, Harry privately makes a note to drop the planner in the fireplace after Hermione reminds him to write down a homework assignment he planned to do later in it.
* Hellboy (2004). Liz notes that her powers could be described as "pyrokinesis", but she doesn't like the term.
* Head Count, she makes up a dream about being a little bird that flies around and looks into people's windows. Her psychiatrist assumes that she must have walked in on her parents as a child.
* Grand Hotel, the five people who had checked into hotel at the start of the movie are leaving—one to the morgue, one to prison, and the other three to various bittersweet fates. But a young married couple is arriving to check in, symbolizing that new adventures and new stories will happen at the Grand Hotel.
* Halloween Episode, which means the Poopsmith goes around wearing nothing but a skimpy blue codpiece for the whole cartoon
* Hammer Brother was created by Henrique, who seems to love Pokemon Creepypastas, as a whole host of them are referenced. Another prominent one is traps that are unfair even by Kaizo standards.
* Grimmjow, in particular, has one taking up most of the space between his ribcage and his pelvis.
* Hernán Cortés impostor, in a sense brought them everything the Aztecs expected, but not remotely like anything they ever imagined.
* Gravity Falls, offering to let Ford join Bill and his henchmaniacs in becoming the all-powerful rulers of the cosmos.
* had Timothy Madoc, a vampire hunter who was turned as a sort of sick joke. He and his living siblings made a pact that when they wiped out every other vampire on the planet they would slay him. Unfortunately he outlived the rest of them by several hundred years, and eventually he actually became an enforcer for the vampire council after they banned killing mortals. And he's the "uncle" of main character Alexandra Maddock.
* Heavenly Creatures, who died in early 1994 before the film was completed.
* he eats in the form of energy, as he is able to manifest their powers in a much higher level.
* High School D×D, Issei sees Asia wearing one during season 2. When he protests that his parents would be mad if they saw her like that, his mom pops out from the kitchen, stating she was the one that came up with the idea. Rias then decides to do the same as well. It is later revealed that Issei's parents were very naughty when they were younger and his mother wore this at times.

* GLOW. Little Fiji's opening rap even refers to giving her sister a call if she's in trouble.
* Guardians of Ga'Hoole, Soren takes up the battle claws of Ezylryb after the old owl's death. He wears them during the final battle against Nyra's forces.
* "Hello, do you have some raw meat?". Usually, they're normal, except for odd behavior.
* Heavy Weapon from Pop Cap Games. The player character drives an atomic powered supertank against the forces of the evil Reds in 1986.
* Happy Heroes, which was also from before the new visual style was first used) being one example.
* Happy Feet. The female emperor penguins have purple undersides under their beaks and males have orange. The females also have their chest feathers shaped to vaguely resemble breasts.
* Golgo 13 has been in a few of these, which he often wins, being one of the most skilled and prolific sniper assassins in fiction.
* Herald' Yellow Sign), which causes intense pain if you just glimpse it, and insanity if viewed directly.
* good, or even a star in his/her own right. This obviously does not apply if the player was able to make enough of a name for themselves to be remembered even after being replaced.
* Goodfellas begins with Henry, Tommy and Jimmy disposing of a dead body, the flashes back to Henry's childhood and follows him until we reach this point again at around the middle of the film.
* Great Big Book of Everything: A book that has information on any subject the characters may try to look up.
* He has basically stated (probably in a lost Formspring entry) that this is the reason he spells his name with "ph" instead of "ff".
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi had Ami excited to meet her pen pal from Paris, who she thinks is handsome. But it turns out he's a short nerd from Paris, Idaho.
* Haganai under the banner of the Neighbor Club, whose ostensible purpose is to help them open up to society.
* Happy Tree Friends: Episodes involving Pop and Cub will often involve Pop seeing his son gruesomely injured and killed, to his horror.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, the Black Hammers' robots are all shaped like animals, such as a gorilla, a frog, a kangaroo, and a dog.
* Hanna' "The Devil is in the Details", is heard playing at Isaacs' nightclub during his introduction.
* Gratuitous Disco Sequence, but the sparkling balls, quirky dance moves and gaudy outfits are still easily recognizable.
* Harkovast there are fourteen (count em) magical elements! They are Fire, Ice, Water, Earth, Metal, Mind, Nature, Technology, Dark, Light, Life, Death, Thunder and Water. Every race that appears is gifted with the magic of two of these elements, each race receiving a different combination. The combination they get determines both the special powers and often aspects of the culture of that race.
* Harry Potter to accept that no one in the Muggle world suspects a thing.
* Harry Kemelman features a great deal of discussion on the subject; the girl wants to pursue conversion despite insistence by both Small and her fiancé that they aren't interested (Small is more concerned with reverting the not-so-observant man). But she turns out to be genetically Jewish anyway, so converting isn't required in the end.
* Green Day's "Walking Contradiction" shows the three members of the band going around causing all sorts of accidents through their own obliviousness.
* Hate Plague: Something that forces people to feel enraged, hateful, and even violently aggressive towards other people.
* Golden Sun, Isaac's son Matthew doesn't get any written lines, but it's implied that he speaks anyway; sometimes you'll be prompted to elucidate an emotional response to a remark, and if you choose "angry" in the right spot, Karis will remark, "Wow! Graphic!"

* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets has a jarring scene where Hermione's attempt to transform into another student backfires and she turns into a cat instead. Although she has to go to hospital to get it reversed, Hermione only acts mildly put out.
* Global Frequency). There was a change of network management while the pilot was in production, which is almost always death to a pilot even if the new executives like the project — and these didn't. Several months after the project was axed, the pilot was leaked onto BitTorrent networks to tremendous acclaim; rather than recognize this as a sign of the show's potential, the network used it as grounds to deny the pilot a proper airing or DVD release on the grounds that anybody who might have wanted to see it had already.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) set to a Buddhist chant about void and nothingness.
* Going Postal protagonist, Moist von Lipwig. Gilt wants to corner the communications market by keeping the post office closed, so he can make as much money as possible off the Grand Trunk semaphore line before it goes bankrupt (then he can buy it up under an assumed name and repeat the cycle).
* Grey Matter uses motifs based around mental illness and the brain in general.
* Gundam Build Divers Re:RISE and had no cognitively capable AIs inside it, with the only casualties being the avatars and virtualized gunplay of his enemies.
* Higurashi: When They Cry do this both humorously and seriously. Not being able to tell which is which amps up the creep factor.
* GURPS WWII: Weird War II, and that's just scratching the tip of it. Some of the other WWII books edge into this with stuff like the Maus and other weapons and vehicles that never got produced or mass produced.
* Going Postal (actually peas) but has an encyclopedic knowledge of pins and, later, postage stamps.
* Halloween to protect the children. Other entries in the series subvert this by having her deal with the trauma of surviving a serial killer.
* Hand Wave are running around wearing keyboard-guns — the typing feeds into an autotargeting mechanism which eliminates all risk of friendly fire and automatically discovers and isolates weak spots in targets.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban is beyond most of the audience— that thing was creepy!
* Hayate the Combat Butler, Izumi did actually strip after each hand despite her complaints.
* High School Debut. One of her recurring sentences is "let's work hard!"—cue high-fiving everyone, running around doing more physical work than the guys, and tiring everyone out. Oh, yeah—and she can put up a physical fight with guys, including potential assaulters. Her over-the-top genki-ness is arguably part of what makes her such an endearing character.
* he was technically an infantryman, later an officer, rather than a dedicated sniper a supremely skilled marksman) and thus didn't take kill notes. Though he did claim to have killed over 500 men in his diary, a claim that was never verified.
* Hannah Montana episode "The Way We Almost Weren't", Jackson and Miley begin to undergo this after preventing their parents from meeting.
* Hellboy universe, lie imprisoned and waiting in the Void beyond the stars.
* Growing Up Brady as a teenage king who was fleeing from assassins by dressing up as a girl.
* Hammerspace can have some appropriate background music. At one point, the record is on the wrong side, and he laughs to a song teaching the alphabet before noticing and flipping the record... and laughing again, but to the right music this time.
* Harry Potter initially used his unfocused, underage magic in times of distress. This seems to be a common way for magic to appear in the setting, but not universal: contrast Voldemort, whose powers manifested as ways to manipulate and hurt people.

* Hannah Montana in the book to get girls. Mild subversion in that he has a fair amount of success, but rarely makes it past the first date.
* Harry's Madness who razes Hogwarts to the ground, and turns the DA into an army for world domination, all because he didn't get enough support in fifth year.
* He does have the problem of potentially losing control of his strength at a bad time,
* Gunpoint plays many of the tropes of Film Noir fairly straight despite it's more humorous atmosphere and incredibly snarky protagonist.
* Guardian Chappu as this—while she is a serious and somewhat cynical teen, he's fun and goofy and acts more his age.
* Growing Pains and fail to take an IQ test seriously. His possible problems are particularly spelled out in the late 1987 episode "Nasty Habits," where Mike's bad habits, constant distraction and inability to concentrate for a few minutes have put him in danger of possibly not graduating from high school on time. Here, he struggles to start an English essay that, after putting it off, is due the next day. At one point, he envisions dancing with a pretty girl he met at the pizza parlor (with the Tiffany song "Could've Been" used to frame the scene) ... before he finally is able to clear his mind and write a coherent paper.
* Harry Potter film series defies it. American Queenie has a hard time reading British protagonist Newt’s mind because the accent makes it hard for her to decipher. She also has a breakdown in the middle of Paris in the second film because she’s overwhelmed with thoughts that are even more difficult to understand because they’re in French and not English. She also can’t read Grindelwald’s (vaguely Central European) mind because English isn’t his first language.
* Hamilton performed the song "Yorktown (The World Turned Upside Down)," which takes place during the final battle of the Revolutionary War. In response to the Pulse nightclub shooting that had occurred less than 24 hours earlier, however, musket props were removed from the performance.
* Global Warming The newspaper took it seriously and printed it as if it were a real editorial. Meskimen did reveal the truth eventually, but before that, the newspaper was lambasted by many for printing such a dumb editorial in its pages.
* Have You Been Paying Attention? introduced a new one-on-one round in 2020 called "Binge This!". In it, contestants are shown an untranslated clip from a foreign language show currently streaming on Netflix, and asks to guess what happens next. The show has included soap operas and dramas from South Korea, India, the Philippines, Mexico and South America. What happens next is usually fascinating and almost never what the contestant has guessed. Events have included a massacre by bandits, ghostly possession, and multiple characters being hit with foodstuffs (usually on a Korean soap opera).
* Halo-inspired multiplayer mode Grifball, where two teams armed with both the Hammer and the Sword attempt to deliver a bomb to the other team's goal.
* Harry Potter's daughter Eleanor played Hannah Abbott (a non-speaking role) in the first two movies.
* Googlebrains' The Nonsense Show. He probably just didn't feel like expanding it.
* Hannie Caulder: When Hannie shoots Frank Clemens, the impact of the bullet is enough to send flying backwards through the window of saloon, where lands on top of a woman walking by in the street.
* Half-Life mod trilogy (c. 1999-2002), rogue Black Mesa scientists adapt teleporter technology for time travel, specifically to help the Nazis complete their Sänger AmerikaBomber and heavy water projects and conquer the United States. Gordon Freeman must stop the Nazi invasion of time itself.
* Half-Life 1 both Earth and Xen forces easily, and took over the planet.
* Hayate the Combat Butler did the standard version with a piece of corn.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, the Carrows have ensured that detentions are torture sessions.
* Hey Arnold! "Stinky Goes Hollywood" episode has the kids in town attend an open casting call to audition to be the Yahoo Soda spokesperson.
* Her annoyed friends decide to personally construct a Break the Haughty

* Gold Digger, Ayane "Mistress" Anno has eyes that perpetually give this effect... only heightened if she's actually serious about it.
* Heroes. Maury's apartment where Matt Parkman and Nathan Petrelli are trapped within Maury's illusions of a twisted alternate of the S1 "Bomb" Future.
* He 219, which had two propellers, one pulling in the front, the other pushing in the rear, just in the right place to mince a pilot (although the ejection sequence had this propeller jettisoned as well).
* Grand Theft Auto V takes this premise and runs with it - not only are there several heists in the game (and later on, a variety of unique heists were added to the Online portion of the game), each one has a variety of missions associated with it to prepare for said heist. For example, when the team plans to rob a jewelry store, they send in a guy to case the joint and take pictures of the various security systems. Once they have the pictures, the player has to make a decision on whether to go in "loud and dumb" with guns blazing, or recruit a hacker and steal some knockout gas, an exterminator's van, and dress up as exterminators so that people won't question their gas masks. You also need to hire a crew to help you with the support stuff - the more competent they are, the bigger take they demand, but the less likely they are to fail and drop their loot. And finally, after all that, comes the heist itself.
* HERZ: During a scene, Misato recalls she got hammered because she didn't have the guts to confess to Kaji.
* Halo: First Strike, Grace-093 is the Spartan-IIs' best demolitions expert, described as being able to "shape a charge to cut through a single steel bolt with only a whisper sound, or rig a hundred thousand liters of kerosene to blow into a firestorm from hell".
* Groucho: Arlecchino, though with aspects of Brighella, given his costant schemes.
* Guerrilla: Some of the black protesters are paid by the police to start throwing stones at National Front members, giving them an excuse to break up the rally.
* Halo 3: ODST features an interesting variation with New Mombasa, a city run by an artificial intelligence called the Superintendent, or "Virgil" (after one of its subroutines). Its influence is limited during the game itself, during which it sends you a map of the city through a videophone, unlocks supply caches marked with its "face," and sends audio files that tell the story of a girl trying to rescue her father, who works with the Superintendent; in the audio files, the Superintendent's full ability, ranging from controlling garbage trucks to stoplights, is shown.
* Henry VI Part 3 ends with Richard of Gloucester's (the future King Richard III) monologue where he talks about how he'll do anything to gain control of the crown- setting up for "Richard III".
* Hat. Their entire military strategy on any scale is based around what looks cool, and as a result they're impossible to predict on the battlefield - an impressive and dramatic defeat is as valued as a total victory, and huge casualties on both sides is their most-desired outcome.
* Happy Heroes: In one episode of Season 7, Little M. praises Big M. for pulling out a weapon from thin air, adding that it's just like something you'd see in a cartoon. Except that weapon was actually one of several that was stuck on Big M.'s back from an incident that had happened just before he pulled one out.
* Going Postal is the hero of the two books, and probably one of the most honest people in those two books.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy: In this game you play a poltergeist taking revenge by scaring a family out of four houses. With its unique gameplay it barely fits into an established genre. Mostly it's classified as action game, sometimes action adventure or even a simulation game.
* .hack//Legend of the Twilight, which does not count officially in the series canon.
* haggard sorceress is loathed in the books but is given a more sympathetic portrayal in the anime making her a fan favorite helped by her attractiveness and wickedness.

* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince movies have filmed outside of the U.K. and Ireland.
* Glorianna: Queen Idonta rose to the throne via murder, and kidnaps women from other tribes for nefarious purposes.
* He Knows Too Much: Thrillers will regularly have the villain inconspicuously find out that a friend of the protagonist or a volunteering informant coming forward with evidence for the protagonist has proof pointing to the villain as the culprit of a murder or a non-murderous crime/cover-up (i.e., baby switch, kidnapping, etc.) has information linking them to it. That person will usually wind up dead in an ultimately fruitless effort by the villain to cover their tracks, leaving the protagonist to play gumshoe or wind up in danger to get the truth.
* Hairspray, in all incarnations, features this, though Link Larkin is genuinely nice in the end and it doesn't take a makeover to get him to notice Tracy.
* Good Will Hunting, but it was shot primarily in Massachusetts, and most of the Toronto scenes were interiors (U of T dorm rooms, local bars, the novelty shop etc).
* Grand Theft Auto III has heavy fog that just adds to the overall aesthetic of "crappy New York-esque city".
* He does it again in "Ham Radio". When KACL puts on an old-time radio murder mystery for the stations anniversary, Bulldog plays a Chinese man named Mr. Wing. When Frasier asks if Mr. Wing saw anything suspicious, he responds, "Oh, me no lookee, me go very by chop-chop." Roz responds with "Chinese Embassy on Line 1." Not that it mattered, because Bulldog got such a bad case of stage fright he completely clammed up.
* Harvey Beaks ends with Foo and Fee reuniting with their long-lost parents, and moving away from Little Bark to live with them. While Harvey is initially upset, he's able to accept their absence, appreciates how they helped him grow as a person, and it's shown they'll be sure to keep in touch.
* Groundhog Day, Phil invites Rita back to his room and they try to stay awake all night. Rita eventually falls asleep next to him, and in her sleepy state he expresses his feelings.
* her name when he's up on the altar, showing that he at least has some feelings for her. Later when Ross tries to reconcile with Emily, she too is turned into a selfish, petty shrew by forcing Ross to never see Rachel again and, when she can't have her way, turning her back on him.
* high-grade and is pretty much the only creature in existence that the Lambo twins fear.
* Hera's sacred animal was the peacock, though she was also given the epithet
* has Clippy, loathed by everyone who has had to use Microsoft Office, put up a surprisingly good fight against the Chosen One.
* Gunnery Sergeant Harker of the Catachan Devils is one tough bastard, known for hauling around a Heavy Bolter
* Gotham Central is important to Gotham for more than just the crimes he stops.
* Hand Waved by having Jane decline an explanation in favor of taking his revenge.
* Grineer to repair their failing bodies, to the point where many of them look entirely inhuman, being little more than decaying organic heads mounted in mechanical harnesses. They see themselves as somewhat "apart" from the more conventional human beings inhabiting the planets of the solar system, their differences driving both an inferiority complex and a deep racial hatred of non-Grineer.
* Ham and Deadpan Duo: A dramatic person and a stoic person hanging out together.
* Harry Potter novels is to break its long, slender fingers when it tries to drown you.
* Helen's seduction and kidnapping by Paris) has Menelaus present the crown of laurels to Paris as a symbol of victory. When Menelaus wears them, it's unfortunately tilted so it looks remarkably like cuckold's horns.
* Her second pregnancy is also being hidden during the first half of season eight, this time with Kensi in a coma due to serious injuries incurred on assignment. But not before they had fun with one shot of Kensi undercover and presumably wearing a "fake" belly.

* He has a crazy one throughout his song when he transforming his human henchmen into ironmen with his potion.
* Golden Ending: The most beneficial and satisfying (and hardest to achieve) ending in the game.
* Great Lakes Avengers's chagrin, but his powers ensure that he'll resurrect shortly thereafter.
* Goosebumps It somewhat justifies their decision to sell the protagonist's best friend to a zoo. (At least, they think so.)
* Henry VI Part 3 Lady Anne is reproving Richard for having murdered him, and Richard responds sardonically:
* Hayven Celestia of Gerootec and enslavement of the planetless geroo.
* Highlighted quite nicely in his treatment of Marinette and Aurore.
* Hamlet father (which was, ironically enough, an accident). Though Laertes going after Hamlet wasn't simply because Polonius was killed, but rather because Ophelia committed suicide not long after, having gone bat-shit crazy upon hearing of her father's death.
* Happens in the finale with Rachel's answering machine message to Ross after rejecting him at the airport. She's assuring him that she loves him as a friend, "I love you, I love you,
* Here is where we find the shortest amount of time it takes to go from Plan B to Plan C.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, and an Angel states that the powers that be still fully expect that he'll destroy earth at some point. The humans he encounters may be judging a book by its cover, but the contents of this particular book happen to be just as scary as it seemed.
* Guardians of the Galaxy movie, some people complained, even though that's how Rocket sounds in the source material.
* Gravity Falls as of Season 2 has the overall story of the main characters attempting to uncover the secrets of the titular town and discover the identity of the individual who documented these abnormalities. Though there are can plot-relevant clues hidden in the background or credits of every episode, only a handful have the characters actively advancing the plot.
* Hello Again ends with a photo album showing the main character marrying her love interest, her sister marrying her love interest, and then the main character's son and wife with a baby, the sister and love interest with a baby, and the main character and her new husband with twins.
* Hamtaro, jarring the broken television in the Ruins (actually a garbage dump) will cause an unusually small washtub, albeit one referred to as a "sink" by the game, to fall off of it and bonk Hamtaro on the head.
* Harry Potter: There is a British Ministry of Magic, which often surprises the Muggle Prime Ministers. Presumably other nations have their own arrangements, but it's not expounded upon.
* Heroes in Crisis is one of the investigators and is the Flash, so he would notice it anyway, since if this "burden of Speed Force" thing was even true, he would know about it. Four, Wally is not a computer whiz and should not have been able to reprogram anything. As mentioned above, it got retconned to be the result of Savitar trying to hijack the Speed Force, clearing Wally.
* Hero: 108 managed to turn all the animal species against the humans, with a simple offering of candy.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone. The break-in at Gringotts → Voldemort attempting to rise back to power.
* Hey Arnold! The Movie Alphonse Perrier du von Scheck is last seen being arrested by the police after his plans to destroy Arnold's neighborhood backfire.
* Harry Potter and the Escape from Gringotts, the riders are directed by a goblin into a room where it's said that they'll be safe. Voldemort and Bellatrix just so happen to blast their way into this room.
* Harley Race, but is a staple move for light heavyweight and ladies competition.
* Happens to Monkey Fist. It's uncertain if it's permanent or not, but he's still turned to stone in his brief cameo in the final episode.

* Happy Days, the executives didn't want the Fonz wearing a leather jacket since they thought it made him look like a thug. Garry Marshall convinced them to allow him to wear it only when he was riding his motorcycle since it would then be a legitimate piece of safety equipment. Marshall then told the show's writers to never have a scene where Fonzie wasn't on his motorcycle, just having gotten off his motorcycle, or just about to get on his motorcycle.
* Heralds of Valdemar gets an interesting variant on this. Not only can she hear her "enthusiastic" neighbor, but she also has strong enough empathy that she can 'overhear' sex that way too.
* Hero, the League (a group of superheroes) holds tryouts for those who would like to join them.
* Henrietta was raped and mutilated in a home invasion that killed her family. It
* Heather Douglas, Marvel's telepathic Moondragon has one of the more convoluted stories, starting off as a manipulator who would sometimes use sex as a weapon and always was involved with males. Then to her own surprise, she fell in love with Rick Jones's wife Marlo Chandler, but that did not work out. Marlo eventually returned to Rick, and to ensure her future happiness, Heather "confessed" that she thought she had subconsciously made Marlo fall in love with her in the first place. Phyla-Vell, the cosmically aware daughter of Captain Marvel (the first one, with Phyla herself being the fourth), was so moved by that self-denying lie that she fell in love with Heather, who thus unexpectedly found her true love after all.
* Hardball. He has great strength and can serve a handball with more force than anyone else in the school, but has no finesse and and almsot zero control of his serves.
* Grand Finale this is the core of the probation Vic is required to carry out. Much to his disgust ("I don't do desks!").
* . He still needs to throw a round every now and then so the other players don't think he's cheating.
* Grindcore bonds with Suzaku over their shared past of being former Decepticons. He later bonds with Yukiya, offering to be a friend.
* GURPS can be set to communicate with the user by using holograms, ultrasonics, infrared light, ultraviolet light and smells.
* has the protagonist pursuing his target and ends up crash-landing face-view into a couple of Russian ladies sunbathing.
* Gradius being several examples. In some of these games, you can eventually unlock free play (i.e. infinite continues). However, the longer one plays a particular game, the better they tend to get at it, meaning that by the time they've unlocked the maximum credit allotment or free play, they probably don't need it to finish the game anymore.
* Half the Man He Used to Be: Someone gets their body split in two. They might survive this.
* Happy Holidays Dress (if their dresses were most elaborate in that season)
* Heavy Rain focused on a journalist entering a suspected serial killer's house and finding all the proof she needs, just in time for him to come home. Depending on the way the player, um, plays, the main options are for the journalist to hide and sneak out, just plain sneak out, get found but escape, and die.
* Guardians of the Galaxy: Issue seven of the second volume starts with Starhawk narrating about the original Guardians fighting the Badoon invasion of Earth, giving a summary of their powers. And then they suddenly start dying one by one, because time is falling apart at the seams, explaining why Starhawk has been travelling back to the 21st century.
* Hidden Things amicable that virtually every other character at one point or another suggests that they never broke up at all.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 After Baby Groot brings Yondu and Rocket a severed toe instead of the prototype control fin for Yondu's arrow weapon, Rocket asks Yondu if there's a fridge full of severed body parts on the the ship. Yondu looks down and shakes his head.
* Hello Cheeky was mostly made up out of puns and quick sketches, with some parody songs thrown in for good measure.

* Hana no Ko Lunlun low quality. She decides to unmask his bad business ethics to "save" potential customers from wearing shoes that look super nice, but are risky to use.
* Ground Control uses abandoned Crayven equipment, while making some modifications. For example, the new heavy terradynes are able to rotate their side armor forward to provide cover for any unit behind them.
* Helena met during the time of the French Monarchy. Dropped cause it didn't get anywhere past the initial concept and the idea of constantly drawing French court dresses intimidated Erin.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince there's "Battle of the Astronomy Tower" with about a couple of dozen per side.
* Heroine Still a demon gate resulted and every so often a demonic animal comes to possess an inanimate object and annoy people.
* Hiimdaisy, and starts sprinting through the jungle. When a guard spots him, Snake, while still sprinting, says "La la la! I can't hear you!"
* Hellraiser III: Hell on Earth are all fused with modern technology. One shoots CD disks from his mechanical head, another has a projectile camera lodged in his skull, etc.
* Gundam Wing: Each of the 5 pilots has of course their Gundam, but also a number, a scientist/mentor, and a distaff counterpart. Each of the two main male characters (Zechs and Treize) have all of the above except for a scientist.
* Haruki Murakami, when he attempts to have sex with a librarian who lent him some books about unicorns.
* Gods of Mars objective of the Holy Therns' religion is to make them fat and complacent so that the Firstborn can carry them off to be enslaved and/or eaten.
* Gold Coins in one of the hallways of the mansion by watching the ghost of a boy putting something under a flagstone, and finding a bunch of gold hidden in it. One night, the maid accidentally drops the flagstone, trapping the girl in the secret room. The family has to move away, since she was never found-but constantly heard from.
* Grendel, Christianity has been reunified under the Pope at Vatican Quest.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy you are actively encouraged to do this. Poltergeist Polterguy can activate a lot of fright 'ems to scare the hell out of Vito Sardini's family. The family has no defense for this besides flee.
* Hex Wives: When the witches regain knowledge of their powers and break loss of the men's control, one of Becky's first acts is to set fire to her 'husband' Ryan, who goes running off into the distance on fire.
* Guardian: The Lonely and Great God: Between Sunny and Wang Yeo. They don't end up together in this life either, but the finale shows them reincarnated again as ordinary humans and this time they appear to be hitting it off smoothly.
* Her Alibi, the Phil tries to speak to the Romanian murder suspect in her native language, only for her to inform him that he said his mother was an octopus.
* Heavy Rain. It's been confirmed that a lot of explanatory scenes were arbitrarily cut from the game, so the explanation behind the shades may have ended up becoming a casualty as well.
* Hard-Boiled Wonderland and the End of the World (of which the Professor is otherwise a perfect example), the Professor is compassionate and genuinely sorry for the harm (death) he has caused.
* Hebrew Bible also contains Ehud, who spouted a testosterone laced on-liner before offing an enemy king with a concealed weapon.
* Graduation Day pt. 2", Snyder congratulates the Class of '99, saying that they were "more or less adequate."
* Gravity Falls claims to be "physically incapable of experiencing humor".
* he gets cloned, each one of which represents a bit of his personality.
* Gravity Falls; the ghost of Mabel Pines, having been killed during the events of the series finale, speculates on what's keeping her around.
* Guardians of the Galaxy had two cool ships and a mobile, time-travelling space station. And currently live in the severed head of a robot alien.

* Granted he's basically violence incarnate, so he may just smash stuff because he likes to.
* Hell's Kitchen, but it turned out she had precisely the skill set Gordon Ramsay was looking for — good teamwork, promptness with her cooking, and staying cool under pressure. So much so that when she was eliminated near the end, Gordon praised her potential and dedication, and then paid for her to go to culinary school.
* Hardboiled Detective: Some anti-heroes can be this due to their rough and cynical personalities and personal issues.
* Halo 4 has New Phoenix, Arizona, which was formed when Flagstaff and "Old" Phoenix grew so much that they merged into a single metropolis.
* grunge making its emphasis on a very skinny figure no less questionable in hindsight.
* Hang Time, this is subverted in that the series has some characters graduate off-screen, with "Graduation on Three" centering on all of the characters graduating from Deering... but before then, it gets hazy. Even though it's established each season is set in a new school year, the characters' grade levels are never explicitly mentioned (although the ages of a couple of them are); against logic, Julie and Mary Beth stay at Deering for all six seasons (despite Mary Beth stating in "Mary Beth's Parents" that she is 17, and therefore should have graduated after season three at least). Even though, earlier episodes imply they're a couple of years short of college age. NBC didn't help matters any more by splitting season five into two separate seasons.
* Hannibal this is referenced in the following exchange regarding Hannibal's interest in Special Agent Clarice Starling:
* Happens to her two suitors as well, Shun Mitaka attracts Asuna (and Akemi to some extent) while Godai attracts Kozue and Yagami. Of course, they are both really after Kyoko.
* Hamlet is called "King" for his dialogue tags and is never named by any other character. The name only appears in the cast list (though the second quarto occasionally has his dialogue tagged as "Claud").
* Harry will occasionally quip that this trope is why he's Chicago's resident combat wizard/PI. A number of
* Happens again in "The Biggest Man in Town". Hunter comes into his room and notices someone has been inside. Alert, he draws his gun and searches the room, and when he opens the bathroom he finds an equally alert McCall
* Grimm has this in the form of Rapunzel. Yes, that Rapunzel. Only this time around, her prince passed away, her children grew and she had nothing to do but return to the tower where she lived out the rest of her days. The tower, though, had developed intelligence and gotten lonely in her long absence and took measures to keep her there even after she died. Namely, having her corpse infested with a swarm of spiders that will kill and eat any who climb her hair to the tower. Keep in mind that the rules of the game are built specifically around children and boys are particularly drawn to the silky locks that still hang out the window. She's also one of the sample NPCs that made the transition when the game was converted to its own rules system.
* Herbal Essences shampoo commercials link but slightly NSFW) featuring women mimicking various states of sexual arousal including orgasm when washing their hair with the shampoo. And yes, opening-petals imagery is abundant. It's a totally organic experience!
* Helena, a planet introduced in "Quarantine" of the "Double Helix" miniseries, is a strange partial example:
* Halloween movie, for that matter. Michael has a habit of pulling disappearing acts after seemingly being killed.
* Happens everywhere in Paris. Colette has a crush on Agatha (though she might have been joking, and wasn't too worried about it anyway), while Agatha is still pining for
* Harry's Mad, Madison the talking parrot tries to use a payphone to contact the human family looking after him. The only person who happens to see this is, of course, drunk, and promptly decides it's time he stopped.

* Golden Kamuy begins with a prologue set during the Russo-Japanese War depicting the final assault of the bloody Battle of Hill 203, which took place in early winter. The main plot itself is set on the northern Japanese island of Hokkaido (and later Sakhalin), well known for its bitterly cold winters. As such, the freezing weather and hungry wildlife are as much of a danger to the main characters as are the violent criminals and deserting soldiers they encounter.
* Great Teacher Onizuka, which he does, still clutching the sushi boat, with his students running behind him, pursued by the chef. Then he gets hit by a car and forces the driver to pay his bill.
* Henry Danger, the song itself was sung in full in the final season premiere "Henry's Birthday", which came out after the copyright ended.
* Haptor noblemen add their family or clan name to the end of their given name after an apostrophe. For example, the lord of the Kshoo Clan, one of the First Dynasties, is Sheggeren'kshoo, although informally they may omit the family/clan name. It's unclear if the same naming structure applies to commoners.
* Gory Discretion Shot: During particularly grisly scenes, the gruesome violence happens off-screen.
* Goddess Creation System are bullying servants showing that he does care. Sort of. Xiaxi herself is not particularly impressed given that she was beaten to death once because of him.
* Heralds of Valdemar days of the Industrial Revolution). Hence Ludd Was Right was almost certainly not an intended aesop. Also, the eponymous storms were utterly unforeseeable. The Empire was prepared and able to cope with every conceivable disaster, they were simply caught in the position of a society dependent on, say, wind power for energy when the wind suddenly stops blowing.
* Godmaster of the eponymous Hollow Knight with a new arsenal of attacks that deal twice the damage.
* Glitch Techs: Miko's one boisterous tomboy. Even while playing games, she tends to move and run around constantly.
* Happens to Cordelia (and several other women) in the season one episode "
* Hayate the Combat Butler and Isumi understands (and helps to expand on) Nagi's self-made-manga.
* Growing Pains: A Season 4 episode, "Nasty Habits," sees Mike put off writing an important term paper until the night before it is due. Everything distracts him – even the then-brand-new song "Could've Been" by teen pop singer Tiffany. (The episode aired in December 1987, just as the song was starting to climb the charts.)
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban. As if the threat of a mass-murderer and the sudden light into the nebulous past isn't enough to darken this year, there is also the fact of the soul-sucking fiends, the Dementors, that are supposedly there to protect students from the criminal but actually only see tasty, tempting little souls and manage to present a gloomy threat instead of a comforting shadow. And apart from the strain of having them around, Harry, Ron and Hermione also spend a decent part of their spare time, trying to save Hagrid's pet hipogriff from the executioner's chopping block, which the Malfoys are ecstatic to set.
* , Harry puts a spider in the pancake batter while making his relatives' breakfast.
* Her sister Lorelei too. Like her sister, she is proficient in using her beauty and charm in order to seduce and dominate the will of others. Unlike Amora, Lorelei has no interest in mastering sorcery other than to learn a few spells and potions to aid her seductive techniques.
* Hercules (Pure Magic) has a few scenes where the same animation is clearly being looped enough times in a row to be conspicuous. In some cases, the start and end frames of the loop don't line up well at all, causing a clear skip in the animation.
* Higurashi: When They Cry: A large number of deaths happen in ways that are virtually indescribable.
* Hail To The King helps Shinji to grow one through the history. Shinji is still quiet and calm, but he becomes more confident and assertive.

* he lives BACKWARDS in time, and 'dies' at the moment of his birth (or conception, this is never clarified and other Incarnations say they aren't sure which).
* Grissom was also this until he married Sara-who was the trope to a point as well. Catherine once told Grissom to "take his head out of his microscope" once in a while, and Grissom told Sara to get a life outside the lab in the first couple of seasons. Now they've married each other.
* He wasn't the first one: The professional hitman Mercenary Tao did it in the original
* GURPS has the Cinematic Explosives rule. Explosions do no damage except for some small damage from being knocked back; apart from that, all they do is blackening faces and messing up clothes.
* He did get a 15-yard penalty once for throwing a forearm that was more like a right cross.
* Here is another look at the CIA's usage of this from former Chief of Disguise
* Hamilton over Hamilton's marriage, given that some performances have him and Angelica share a meaningful glance right before the event.)
* Gundam (which only had a passive modification for the first mobile suit, not a replacement).
* Highlander, the two-part episode "Comes a Horseman/Revelation 6:8" had a flashback scene with the Horsemen pillaging a Bronze Age village. The fans quickly started liking a character seen running from the horses with a bundle of sticks in his arms. They called him "Stickboy".
* Hermione's political enemies try to bury her in busywork and conflictingly scheduled meetings. It doesn't work. But somehow they never guess she has a time turner. She's experiencing about septuple time once the plot really gets moving.
* Goof Troop a compliment. The compliment in question is "Pete's a swell kinda guy, once you get past his personality!" What makes this even funnier is that Goofy himself believes this is a meaningful compliment.
* Gunslinger Girl used "The Light Before We Land" by The Delgados for its opening theme.
* her sex scene with Guts, he spots them, and she feels ashamed of them at first, given the situation, but he's unfazed and finds her all the more admirable for it.
* Goblins have a rough caste system where goblins are ranked in order of usefulness to the tribe's survival; those with specialized skills such as craftwork, smithing, tactics, or magic are Lashers and get to lord over the others, those who have skill in combat but not much else are Hunters and are the next rung down, goblins who can gather plants, filch things, and/or cook are Gatherers, and goblins with no useful skill whatsoever are Pariahs. While social mobility is possible, goblin families generally maintain their status by not teaching other goblins their special skills.
* here's what it looked like thirty years ago. Even a small data center will have an operations room with five or ten monitors showing traffic levels and the overall health of the network, power, cooling, and other systems.
* Heralds of Valdemar-sacrifice) is practiced, rarely, by the leaders of the Shin'a'in tribes to call on their Goddess, basically to prove how truly dire the situation is and how much they need her help. And, as with the Dresden Files example above, mages can blow themselves up in a last-ditch desperation attack called Final Strike.
* He mishears the lyrics to "I've Got Nerve" by Hannah Montana/Miley Cyrus as "I've Got
* Henry Stickmin Series, where Henry is escaping from being imprisoned on the Toppat Clan's orbital station, one of the Fails has Henry choosing to return to Earth with no protection other than his spacesuit, which causes him to burn to death. The right choice involves him using a drop pod to return to Earth, which heats up but survives the trip.
* hard-wired into the console, meaning there's no easy replacements if either controller gets damaged.

* Happy Death Day: Tree falsely claims she was driving drunk after a cop stops her for speeding, hoping he will take her to jail where she'll be safe. Unfortunately, it doesn't work.
* Haganai, this results in him expressing more attraction to Yukimura than the girls in the club who are all generally more important. Upon the reveal, his first reaction is actually irritating at Rika for some gibberish she told Yukimura that kept making her believe she was a boy when she wasn't.
* Heel Realization: Someone is ashamed because they realizes that they have been the bad guy.
* Hair Metal, despite being thrash's enemy, had similar tendencies. Most lyrics talked of a hedonistic lifestyle of danger, excess and sleeping with tonnes of groupies, all backed by anthemic riffs that encourage a good time. There's a good reason some derisively refer to it as "cock rock."
* He's also used it to apologize to guests if the audience is getting rude/hostile.
* God Child due to the amount of deaths that have been on the rise and her looking incredibly young for a lady in her 40s at the time, but it's revealed that the people died due to the plague and she had no real part in it.
* Hellboy, magic and magical beings are hidden rather ineptly, as Hellboy, Abe Sapien, and Lizz get along with their Muggle counterparts just fine. The Masquerade is broken in the sequel, and the world seems to be okay for the most part with Hellboy and company.
* God Tier players are heroes who have fulfilled certain requirements in the game, and are granted immortality (with a couple of exceptions) and complete mastery over their Aspect. Even at the lowest level of God Tier power, John is able to use wind to drill a giant hole straight down to the core of a planet within minutes.
* Gravity Falls in a dance contest, with the winner to be decided by audience vote. Pacifica wins by one vote, and she bribed Old Man McGucket for it.
* Gunnerkrigg Court and makes realistic grammatical errors when speaking to Gamma.
* Harry Potter: In the first book, Ron says that he has one relative who's an accountant, but he finds him too embarrassing to talk about. Is the implication that the accountant is a squib (someone born to at least one magical parent but with no powers) and that's why Ron is embarrassed, or does he find the relative's job embarrassing because he's a wizard working in a job associated with muggles (normal people)?
* Happened twice in season 3B. The Carver Twins were leaving the show, so the writers killed off Aiden and had Ethan leave town out of grief. More shocking was Crystal Reed's departure after playing one of the lead characters (Allison Argent) since Season 1. She gave the writer fair warning and co-wrote her own death scene, which as well as being a dramatic moment in itself and had lasting repercussions for the other characters in Season 4.
* Gundam Wing does this frequently. There are a number of episodes where Wing Zero goes from space down to earth in one episode, and then back again in the next one. That thing must be damn fast.
* Hannah Montana functions as an Annoying Younger Sibling; although technically he's older than Miley, much is made of him looking and acting younger.
* Hidamari Sketch, but rather sing more like how their characters would.
* grizzly bear and caviar, and leave the rest to rot (or be eaten by scavengers).
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, respectively. Let's assume that they're good-hearted people at the start (if the cut-scenes are any indication), and let's assume the player doesn't do any killing not encouraged by the storyline (which is a stretch but go with it). Now watch how their lives unfold. CJ, in particular, goes from "I guess I'll kill this guy since he's been screwing with my gang" to "guess I'll just kill all these guys for no apparent reason" so quickly it might make you wonder if you're still playing as the same guy. By the end of the game, at least, he gets to see the awful results of his actions, and he tells his family outright in the final cutscene that they need to rein it in and be more subtle. It helps that he was being blackmailed for the entire game. His brother has fewer excuses, and the other Grove OGs have none.

* Godzilla: Singular Point redesigns the sea serpent kaiju Manda to feature a goblin shark-like face instead of the traditional Asian dragon look.
* He also had tears on his face right before murdering all the children at the temple.
* Hajiotsu plays with this. Kai and Himari are at the amusement park for a date and do pick the ferris wheel at the end of the day. But Himari is too nervous and slow to get into the carriage in time, she ends up getting into the next one.
* High Moor. The fact she's a self-professed misanthrope who figures Humans Are Bastards probably didn't help her.
* Goofy short. A very high-stakes poker game, complete with sinister shady characters smoking cigars, comes down to the last hand, and when it's called...
* Good Omens has The Them speculate about MIB, who they reckon probably cause traffic accidents because of all the big black cars going around telling people they haven't seen aliens. Unlike most of Adam's ideas they don't show up, although it's possible that America did suddenly start swarming with them and none of the main cast heard about it.
* growing, the pre-Toph Gaang visits a burned-down forest. Katara points out many, many acorns everywhere, and they all realize that the forest will grow back eventually.
* Henrik Ibsen Ibsen refused to state what she chose, saying it was too important of a question.
* Glee's New Directions had been fully developed... except for Matt Rutherford, played by Dijon Talton who left the show after Season 1.
* Grey Goo (2015) their ancient (but still ridiculously advanced) combat drones and re-learning the ways of war to save the galaxy from their own errant creation. For once, it's an alien race who are the underdogs with the crude, gritty technology.
* Hero Class Civil Warfare. As of chapter 23, Bakugou has lost a fair number of his team, had one of his members turn traitor and lost the objectives he was guarding. Midoriya has acquired all but two of his objectives, regained the one member that was captured, and effectively gotten away with waltzing through the heroes' base.
* Goblins exist, they're likely to keep to themselves rather than seeking out any sort of interaction with humans in the first place, and his viewpoint is only reinforced by the sheer evilness of virtually every goblin the cast ever comes in contact with.
* He also revealed that Duckworth appears in the intro sequence, but not any more details. Fan speculation has gone wild.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire hint on how to win the next part of the game."
* Gourmet Girl Graffiti often holds ingredients or dishes she made towards the camera.
* God Is Flawed: God is not perfect and has the same faults as humans do.
* Grimes in the form of an "anthropomorphic goddess of climate change", particularly from the track "Violence", which imagines the Earth's relationship to humanity as a mutually abusive romantic relationship through natural disasters and pollution respectively.
* Great Big Sea. First, it's told from the guy's perspective, who tried to make his fortune in Boston. Second, he hopes desperately that she is still waiting for him... until she lets him down in the letter. He ends up moving on and starting a family of his own, but is left wondering "what if".
* God Emperor of God-Emperor of Dune, who combines his body with a sandworm to extend his life by thousands of years and gain immunity to almost every form of physical damage, also inherits the sandworms' vulnerability to water.
* Green Eggs and Ham: Even after starting to warm up to Sam, Guy is adamant about not staying with his parents (even when they have nowhere else to go), giving the impression that they're hyper-critical. When they do turn up, the whole family is welcoming and supportive of both Guy and Sam. It turns out that Guy is projecting his own insecurities onto his parents' view of him (they're all highly successful, whereas literally everything he invents blows up).
* Half-Man has Major Koda, a man who has been experiment on by both sides in a war lasting decades. While he has racked up an impressive body count he needs frequent medical care to keep him healthy and his biology is slowly killing him.

* he's about to attack. Cue Phineas giving a shocked look and Perry realizing his cover's blown.
* HBO Canada: Once a joint venture between Bell Media and Corus Entertainment, that operated as individual multiplex channels for The Movie Network and Movie Central. After Movie Central closed in 2016, Bell's feed took over.
* Half-Life 1 used its lack of explanation to create mystery and shocking twists, ultimately revealing that Gordon is merely a pawn in something much bigger than himself that he can't hope to comprehend.
* Guild Wars, it's the only way to acquire Elite skills: find the boss, beat the crap out of him, apply the Signet of Capture.
* Heroic Dog: Dogs can be badass, especially when they protect those who are important to them.
* Gravity Rush. When Kat uses her gravity-defying stasis field to allow him to fly alongside her, he comments, "This is like one of those dreams, except I have all my clothes!"
* Gotham: In "Pilot", when Mario Pepper flees from Jim Gordon, the last place he runs through is a commercial kitchen, where he snatches up a knife he later uses to try to kill Jim.
* Heat, also shot by Dante Spinotti, is a very cool-looking film, with lots of dull, icy greys and blues.
* HBO cast, clips from old movies and TV shows were used for the Imagine Spots of its main character, Martin Tupper.
* Guilded Age: Byron, the heavy-hitting berserker, is also the core tactician of the group, and often trades the role of leader/diplomat between himself, Syr'nj, and Bandit.
* Highlander had one where the victim was immortal and survived, though he went rather insane afterward. Being burned alive will do that to you.
* He became a hall monitor, and quickly transformed into Dog The Bounty Hunter, using Bear Mace on anyone who was even close to being in his way.
* Harrow: In "Aurum Potestas Est" ("Gold is Power"), an official from the Department of Energy does everything in her power to stymie Harrow's murder investigation when it threatens to derail a multi-billion dollar mining deal.
* Greef Karga sports a thin, black mustache one over his lips. By Season 2, it's evolved into a white and somewhat thick
* GURPS Steampunk Setting: The Broken Clockwork World that this is a strange and alien realm is that the sky is full of phantom cogwheels and gears.
* Godot apparently can do an excellent impression of a previous witness, but seeing as the games are text-based all that happens is that his
* Heavy Object headaches for other commanders. The only reason they haven't been kicked out of the military yet is that their government is terrified they'll defect to another supernation.
* Hawkman, either scientific or magical or even angelic in nature and naturally or artificially originating either from Earth, Thanagar or Heaven. Pick one from each column.
* Heaven's Lost Property: Tomoki Sakurai's grandfather Tomozo was a really perverted guy and taught his daughter Tomoyo (Tomoki's mother) and Tomoki to be perverts like him. Tomozo said his dream was to sleep with EVERY woman in the world and regretted failing this mission when he died.
* God Told Me To, most of the people Pete interviews find Phillips strangely forgettable - they usually remember seeing him, but only vaguely.
* Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later is a good example of this trope. It's dark and grimy, the faucets are leaky, the floor is covered in litter and there is no toilet paper in the stalls. One wonders why the mother didn't just tell her daughter to pee in the bushes. At least then, it would be much more hygienic!
* Graveyard Shakes has Little Ghost, who is helping the girls so they won't get their life forces sucked out and given to Modie.
* Gryla, the mother, wanders around offering to buy disobedient children from their parents, to serve for supper.

* Gobwin Knob: Before they summoned Parson, they were something of an incompetent version of the Elite faction. They preferred specialty units, making use of their surprisingly large number of casters. Their Dirtamancer made golems, their Croakamancer made uncroaked. Their Ruler had the divine Arkenhammer, which allowed for easily taming dwagons. However, this was not working, largely because their Ruler was an idiot and his Chief Warlords incompetent. After they summoned Parson, he switched to a Generalist style, using absolutely anything at his disposal to win. He prefers guerrilla tactics and specialist units, but he can switch tactics on the fly as necessary.
* Gundam SEED Astray, special forces unit of the Eurasian Federation have also deserted to form Mercenary Unit X.
* Harrison Ford have bought that...") was actually Ford's expression, as he was absolutely sure that he'd screwed up that take.
* He had a feeling his death was imminent, as he'd escaped a gang, and signed the donor forms in advance.
* Happens twice in the episode, "When You've Got to Go!", which should come as no surprise, since the episode deals with using the bathroom. The first time, it happens to Tutter during a game of checkers with Bear, and the second time, it happens to Ojo during a game of hide and seek with Treelo. The former makes it to the bathroom okay, but the latter...
* Harry and the Butler: Gender-flipped. Igor is getting nowhere with lovely Magdalena. Walter—the titular butler, who's solving everyone's problems—advises Igor to treat Magdalena with indifference, saying that this will get her to pursue him. It works, and in the end they get marrried.
* !HERO: The Rock Opera known as I.C.O.N. subbing for the Roman Empire and New York City as the setting's metaphorical Jerusalem.
* Hardcastle and McCormick featured a retired judge (Brian Keith) who set out to bring down criminals who were released on technicalities.
* Hello Kitty's Furry Tale Theater, the mistress of cute characters, started as Kitty on this show when she was 13.
* Hanyuu that the human will is greater than any god or fate. Noticing a theme yet? Not an uncommon one in Buddhist countries, as one of the basic tenets of Buddhism, is that human beings are best suited to achieving Nirvana, which is beyond all deities, while the gods themselves are too caught up with being supremely wise and powerful to look beyond their state.
* GoLion: When our heroes escape their initial captivity on the Galra capital world, and their space ship gets shot and damaged by their pursuers, they "fall" onto the planet Altea within what must be 10 minutes of launching. Luckily for them there's a castle and 5 lion robots there.
* Heroquest, it's what happens if you progress far enough in most schools of magic. You might become united with your god, or ascend to the magical plane. Or you might simply transcend human cares and motivations (or if things go wrong, become irretrievably insane). Regardless, you don't get to play that character any more — either he's gone, or he becomes a non-player character. (It usually doesn't happen accidentally; it's more of a way to gracefully retire a character who's done it all.)
* Heartcatch was airing a dub in Canada and the UK, which may have lead some curious viewers to learn about the other installments in the franchise.
* Gorillaz song "DARE" has been interpreted this way, although (like many Gorillaz songs) it's unclear whether it was actually meant to mean anything in particular.
* GURPS the night vision du jour is hyperspectral imaging (UV, visible, IR).
* Halo, this has become a full-blown invasion, with cities all over the world overrun by the Covenant.
* GunBuster. Many of the characters, in fact, were named after people involved in the production.
* Happily Ever After. The Prince often leaves Cinderella for long periods of time and is revealed to be a cheater who misses the thrill of chasing a seemingly unattainable woman.

* Hey Didi Darling decides to dress up like boys and form Tommy & The Tigers in order to get gigs.
* Grosse Pointe Blank. The trained assassin, Blank, kills someone because this person is trying to assassinate him. However, Blank's girlfriend, who witnesses this, treats it like he's a serial killer and would kill anyone for no reason. Luckily, it got better.
* Growing Pains once had a phone conversation with a friend where he mentions that he wants to quit school and become an actor. Carol overhears this and Mike presses the hang-up switch with his thumb and tells the friend he was kidding. Carol isn't convinced, though.
* Harry Potter technology, typically with upgrades, and where they don't use technology they often have advents so bizarre that they don't resemble anything in the real world, like broomsticks and hippogriffs as a form of transportation; but sometimes, they come down into the middle ground of this trope. Case in point, floo powder. Functioning as a network able to take people from one fireplace to another, it's basically like a mass transit system, albeit a much faster one, though still prone to accidents. And by sticking one's head only into a fireplace, it's possible to communicate with another's home, much like a telephone. Note also the use of owls as the equivalent to the postal service, and the use of a Patronus as a way of sending a message quickly, like email or text (and less likely to be intercepted than an owl).
* Guild Wars 2 section below) are a common denizen of Tyria's salt-water seas. Overgrown spiders, mosquitoes, wasps and grubs are ubiquitous pests. On the other hand, rangers can tame juvenile spiders and devourers and adopt them as pets/companions.
* Green Acres had the entire city of Hooterville believing that a famous movie director was coming to their town, so they made their own movie to show to him. However, the movie that they made was so bad that the director was forced to burn up the film, under the orders of his boss.
* Hellraiser series create and/or inhabit these- for example, they can be filling empty rooms with meathooks and torture devices.
* Grange Hill, a group of pupils rebelling against school uniform end up ransacking the secretary's office, when they hold a sit-in protest there.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! the "mentor mascots" do this while searching for the third pretty cure.
* Hawaii Five-0, he was much more sensible about what he did and what he allowed a stunt double to do for him.
* Grand Theft Auto III. When Lazlow begins to poke holes in the callers arguments (particularly, that she herself must be using a phone to call in to the station) both parties in the conversation rapidly devolves into playground insults, culminating in this:
* Head Injury Theater, Cyborg going back in time to fight with barbarians, the other members dressing like Robin while he trains with animals, tofu aliens, a redneck who can duplicate himself, and a bizarre re-enactment of Hansel and Gretal.
* He grew another one in "The Wedding of River Song", but shaved it off during the episode.
* God of War (PS4) for centuries, with control over them being exchanged 200 times according to Mimir.
* hideous, an ugly person who fixated on looking good, turning him into an attractive monster.
* Good Times, J.J. is telling a friend that his late father once offered him a reward if he could bring his grade average UP to an F. He then quipped that his report card had contained two M's and a K minus.
* Hamilton, Joe Frank, & Reynolds: Their self-titled debut (with "Don't Pull Your Love") hit #59, their follow-up only reached #191, and their third album,
* he's an incarnation of hatred created by Demise in his dying moments to curse Link and Zelda for defeating him of the series in favor of a new villain who will probably never be seen again.
* Hellsing inappropriate moments of insane laughter... but as he was crazy before, and is crazy after, the incidents don't represent any character development for him.

* Gulliver's Travels: Everybody knows the scenes where Gulliver visits Lilliput, which is often reproduced as children's literature or adapted as a cartoon for all ages. The remaining three sections are obscure, mostly because they can't be watered down for kids and are more obvious as a satire that appeals to older readers.
* GURPS rules. An alternative method is to build the summoned creatures as an Ally with the "Summoning" enhancement.
* Good Old Fisticuffs Shiva by getting close and brawling with her instead of fighting at a proper distance with a refined style. Her logic is that, though Shiva has spent years dueling the most refined and skilled martial artists in the world, Huntress is a street fighter and understands how to get up close and personal in a fight. Huntress does manage a single knockdown on Shiva, but gets beaten into hamburger to do so. Shiva remains unscathed.
* has Mario do the front stroke swimming through quick sand with a somewhat goofy expression.
* GrailQuest Life Points, meaning she will have plenty of chances to hit you. On the bright side, if you do manage to defeat her you can walk away with a fortune in gold.
* Hammond, AKA "Wrecking Ball", is a super-intelligent hamster who hitched a ride to Earth alongside Winston. He crash-landed in the Australian Outback, and spent some time fighting in mech battles using his modified escape pod.
* Greasy Spoon: A roadside diner, often stuck perpetually in the American 1950's and serving anti-diet food.
* Heavy artillery Tactical Aid has universal effect but works best on infantry standing in the open (heavier units can generally escape the bombardment area before dying; infantry can't).
* He also once disabled two enemy warships with a single torpedo. Anyone who has used a shock rifle in
* Happens when Chef decides to join Chris in the main body of the plane during
* Gundam ZZ's Gundam Team of three Gundams, the golden Hyaku Shiki and a giant hoverbike.
* Hannibal who had hired the pickpocket in the first place to get fingerprints, who intentionally lets him bleed to death so as not to blow his own cover.
* Heart of the Swarm, you can only select units you control; clicking on an enemy unit accomplishes nothing. So when you band-select all your Zealots and one of them follows the others around but is mysteriously un-selectable, you know exactly what's happening.
* Harry and His Bucket Full of Dinosaurs when a jackhammer disturbs Harry's violin practice and Taury asks him how he's going to practice with all the noise.
* Happy Endings-Season 3, episode 2-Jane is helping Penny buy a car, and while they're in the waiting room, Jane believes they are being listened in on. So she turns on the radio, which plays 'I Want You Back' by the Jackson 5. The scene quickly cuts to first Max and Brad (running from a dude Max slapped-specifically so he would chase them and Brad could get in his workout for the day) and Dave and Alex on their self-sabotaged search for a house.
* Hawkeye himself had to perform one on a North Korean soldier, after been captured to provide medical aid. In the field, without English-speaking assistants (enough yelling and gestures got the mobile soldier to hold his buddy down) or much equipment (first aid kit and a pen cap) and seemed to have been something of last resort/only thing he could try type situation. Realistically, it did not turn out well.
* Harry Potter and the Nightmares of Futures Past, something the Death Eaters and Voldemort most assuredly aren't, with Harry showing equal concern for his friends as they would for him as opposed to Voldemort dismissing anyone who can't keep up.
* Harvey, the Boy Who Couldn't Fart: Inverted for Harvey, but played straight for his friends who Harvey is jealous of because they are "experts" at farting.
* Hiding Behind Religion: Using religion to conceal a sinister or ulterior motive.

* herself for a moment there. It's worse in the manga, with Kanako even going so far as to give Mutsumi a schlong, commenting that her brother "should be about that big".
* He didn’t actually want to cast white people to play Katara and Sokka. Katara’s actress,
* He was also assigned and raised to be Noctis' adviser at the age of * Heel–Face Turn in a lot of cases). Most common when the apparent betrayal is really a futile attempt at trying to moderate the oppression of the invaders, and they finally go too far.
* Gondo agrees to share runecrafting with Ainz since runesmiths are no longer appreciated in the Dwarven Kingdom and Ainz is the only one willing to help them revive the dying art.
* Golgo 13: The titular character is one of the coldest in the business. So cold, the temperature of the room goes down when he walks in.
* Global Ignorance, who define the "global mainstream" rather than the regional and local mainstream of various nations:
* Halloween Unspectacular rarely appear, despite the fact that Timmy is a major character.
* Halo: Combat Evolved The two fighters simply break apart and stare, before hugging each other.
* Grey's Anatomy), are played by actual nurses. Subverted, however, as they rarely do much past pass instruments in surgery.
* Heartstopper: Nick realizes he's bisexual as he begins to reciprocate Charlie's crush on him.
* Gojira, that helped turn Godzilla into a household name across the world.
* he becomes the President of the Scientists following Obbs' firing. He is a levelheaded and charismatic leader whom everyone looks up to and admires, being the one who had the Science department created in his honor by Oprah.
* Here's a tip. When the Prankster invites you to a party... don't show up.
* Gravity Falls: "Dreamscaperers" ends with Bill Cipher defeated, the deed to the Mystery Shack defended, and Dipper finally understanding Stan's treatment of him and bonding. Everyone lives happily ever after for about three seconds, whereupon Gideon blows open Stan's safe with dynamite, steals the deed, and begins demolishing the building, which continues in "Gideon Rises".
* Green Arrow is targeted for this in the "Quiver" storyline—but it actually works out in his favor; the villain had planned ahead and transferred his vast fortune to Green Arrow's ownership. When he winds up dying instead, GA gets to keep the money.
* Gonzo however seems to love fanservice and big boobs, often upsizing the resident busty characters' chests.
* Gravity Falls and ends with major secrets starting to come to light, that the show's plot really picked up.
* Harry Potter films, Death Eaters and Order members have different Apparating effects for no reason. Death Eaters turn into menacing clouds of smoke while Order members turn into blazes of white light. It looks rather cool, though.
* Going Postal, Vetinari sees an opportunity to bring the board of the Grand Trunk to task for being complicit in fraud and embezzlement:
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law to marry her father, but felt she had to to maintain her secret identity).
* Gunmen (played by Patrick Stewart) is shown having a woman buried alive at the beginning of the film, and he meets the same fate halfway through.
* Green Lantern has Larfleeze, a.k.a. Agent Orange. His greed makes him distracted to almost anything, making his scenes hilarious. In fact, he says that shiny things are his weakness.
* Happens in many episodes, as the Critic reviews in front of a desk. It happens so often that his "desk" is actually a massage table, padded so he can safely bash his head against it and then dub in the thud effects later. In particular, the beginning of his
* Haru-Sari: June is quite tall, while Chi-Min is short due to being an elf, which means he is permanently stuck in a prepubescent body.

* Grandia II is the first stop for the apocalypse. When we first visit it everybody is smiling, thanking the lord and hugging miniature sheep while the most upbeat music in the world plays; when we revisit death and slaughter greets us and shortly after that the land is covered by oozing darkness.
* Happens twice to poor Aizawa aka Eraser Head. The first time is in Season 1 during the attack on the USJ. To be fair, he manages to hold his own for a fairly long time but ultimately gets overpowered by Nomu. The second time is during the raid on the Shie Hassakai base. This time Aizawa gets taken out of the fight pretty quickly via a villain's ability to, essentially, put people in slow motion. This seems to be the author's favored way of getting Aizawa out of the fight so he doesn't one-shot everyone and also show just how dangerous a villain is.
* Half return the things they pick up; on the negative side people tend to react negatively to them since they still tend to pick up things and don't look like kender so you don't realize you have to take measures to protect your stuff.
* Guardians of the Universe true they created the intergalactic police force now known as the Green Lantern Corps, and that they have had a major role in the defeat of the Anti-Monitor, Superboy-Prime and Mandrakk the Dark Monitor, there has been an ever growing list of incidents which leads the prosecution to wonder exactly what is it that the Guardians have been doing with that power.
* grades dock a grade), thinking that it will lead to her being sent back to "magic kindergarten".
* Happy Days Less than two minutes later Ralph is eating and starts to shake some salt and gets a pile himself, presumably courtesy the same guy.
* Hajime no Ippo, the eponymous hero has natural physical attributes that make him perfect for in-boxing; but just as important is how he's spent most of his life in the fishing business, where carrying tremendous weights and working on boats has honed his upper body strength and sense of balance, respectively. As the series progresses, Ippo finds other mundane ways outside of the gym to practice new techniques or train to avoid his upcoming opponent's moves.
* GPS satellites are basically just clocks, but they are so precise that they have to compensate for both the effects of Special (due to the satellite's velocity around the Earth in orbit) and General Relativity (because the Earth is deeper in a gravity well than the satellites).
* Grand Theft Auto V can legally repossess the cars. Whenever, someone calls him out on this, he accuses them of being racist against Armenians.
* Granblue Fantasy moment due to the casual, yet playful manner of the children while talking to her. Perhaps they are not aware that they are talking to a Harvin (a dwarf race).
* Gunn is eventually rescued by Illyria, and confesses that he actually found the cellar easier to deal with than living in an illusion while knowing
* Hannah Montana when Jackson, for the second time, has horrible luck with his sister's birthday cake and the seagulls come to eat it. His friend makes a joke and starts laughing with Jackson joining in; a minute later he then tells his friend to go home.
* Goth Girl, and proudly haunted mansion, and vampires, werewolves and other fantastic creatures are abound.
* Harmony Theory, villain Max Cash gives a rant claiming that everyone in the whole world, including him, are just puppets controlled by higher powers, meaning nothing they choose matters.
* Heel–Face Turn, when he stops worrying about his record and starts sincerely pursuing the truth. He takes it upon himself to play Devil's advocate with Phoenix specifically to get him riled up and working at his best. Then he becomes Chief Prosecutor and reinstates Phoenix after he was disbarred just so the two of them can team up and dispel the Dark Age of the Law.
* Harry Potter pretty much foreshadows the future conflicts, such as the War of Five Kings - although Bloodraven later acknowledges that Harry's arrival has completely offset the board.
* have to read this part or else fail to discover that their own character might be on the chopping block, they will immediately be spoiled on the imminent deaths of the half dozen or so characters rolled.

* Griffons and hippogriffs are, as in mythology, half eagle and, respectively, half lion and half horse.
* GURPS uses a ramscoop to reach half the speed of light on its trip to the target. On impact, it has the effect of 40 million megatons of TNT.
* He gets a pretty good one in Movie Seven too, saving Goku from being throttled by Meta Cooler.
* Grosse Pointe Blank Benny the Jet, a legendary kickboxer as well as John Cusack's personal trainer, has a role as an assassin who fights Cusack's character.
* He finally decides on the solution of shooting two proponents of population control and then shooting himself
* Heinz Carnival Cream Their verdict was that it was actually delicious (but note that it probably helped that they could barely taste the ketchup).
* Heroic BSoD: An earth-shattering revelation or horrible event affects the hero, leaving him either mentally shut down out of shock, or subject to a violent outburst.
* hats. Their other one is that they are all complete idiots, so their pranks aren't terribly sophisticated.
* Guild Wars. Even though the dagger is the lowest-damage weapon in the game, Assassins use them to great effect, often drawing out huge amounts of bonus damage from their skills. They also have a few skills that allow them to throw knives for different effects.
* Godzilla movie, when the monster shows up in Times Square, one of the soldiers comments "We need bigger guns."
* Guyver have these as part of their formal robes (with one notable costume having shoulders almost as wide as its wearer was tall). Many Zoanoids (and the Gigantic) have weapons or other functions built into large shoulder-pods.
* Google Translate Sings, the lyrics to the song "Shape of You" suddenly translate the lyrics "Come on, be my baby, come on" as "gradually watermelon", becoming a meme overnight. However, after a few run-ins with the meme, by the time of "Google Translate Makes Dinner FAIL", the word "gradually" causes the series creator Malinda to look at the camera with the word "Don't." hovering beside her.
* Hare Conditioned is that these were items rationed during the war and weren't available to the public in any meaningful quantity, the rest of the cartoon didn't even reference the war.
* Hancock's Half Hour played several bit-parts, none of them called Kenneth. The main characters' elaborate middle names are fictitious.
* Hanna-Barbera (Olive and Alice the Goon in the army with their uptight leader Sgt. Blast).
* Golden Logres. While die-hard players loved the challenge, it alienated everyone else who just wanted straightforward arcade action.
* Halcyon Park takes place in 2036-38, and while there have been some major advancements, people still drive eco-friendly cars, use personal computers and phones, and police have gunpowder-based firearms. Some technologies have even regressed, whether due to criminalization, resource restrictions, or lack of public trust in major institutions (for example, the return of cash purchases rather than credit).
* Grizzly Park, where Bebe, the ditzy, sweet girl, survives most of the movie, but it turns out it was all an act, and she is really a mean, spoiled bitch. Ranger Bob ends up sending the bear to kill her once he finds out.
* Grand Theft Auto IV and are little more than thugs for other gangs. The one time Johnny Klebitz tries to fix things, he ends up destroying the club.
* Growing Up Creepie, Creepie Chreecher falls in love with a boy working at a carnival who she believes is half-tarantula, but loses interest when she finds out it was just a costume. In a later episode, her interest in him returns once she finds out his adoptive mother is a giant spider.
* Heroic Age are Upper-Class Twits who would have wiped out the entire human armada with their horrendously tenuous grasp of military tactics if it wasn't for the influence of the more intelligent and experienced Nilval Nephew. They almost certainly would never have been allowed anywhere near the bridge of a starship if it wasn't for their royal birth.

* Half-Life: Full Life Consequences is utter hilarity from start to finish despite (or perhaps because of) it being possibly the stupidest thing in existence. Five words: "BECAUSE YOU ARE HEADCRAB ZOMBIE."
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince after she becomes insufferably clingy. Although he didn't try to make her dump him by being gross or offending or something, he just ran away from her. In the end, Lavender does break up with him after she finds him together with Hermione.
* Gravity Falls resembles this trope. Stan is gruff at first, but as the series progresses it becomes increasingly clear that she has him wrapped around her little finger.
* Grant Morrison can't quit the Justice League because then the team would lose its only minority member.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows offers to bake Harry the treacle tart "to which Master is so partial".
* Grossology. There's also some small hints in the episode featuring Gary that Ty is this trope but tries to keep it under wraps for health reasons.
* He says it earlier in the series, right after everybody is sure that Cell is finally gone; "Gohan, I'm
* Happens again later, when he frees himself from the Edo Tensei contract thus making himself, for all practical purposes, immortal and invincible, and shattering the last hope they had of getting rid of him.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (1974) fame made his crash-fest films borderline one-man shows. He was originally a scrapyard owner, so he supplied the vehicles used in his films himself. He wrote the scripts, he directed and produced the films, he played the main character, and he did all his stunts himself.
* Half-Life 2 the Overwatch dispatcher uses phonetic codenames and numbers — such as "X-ray 8" or "Union 5" — when addressing specific Civil Protection teams.
* Heroic Sacrifice as their surviving people flee into the wilderness.
* Harry Potter Isaacs, Branagh, and Rickman had an ongoing wager seeing who could get the hammiest takes into the final cut.
* Heavy metal band Manilla Road are well regarded for their "thoughtful" fantasy, mythological, and horror based lyrics.
* Green Day was originally released in a different version as the B-Side to the 7" version of "Waiting", which meant it was widely regarded as a new song.
* Hc Svnt Dracones Translocation TTI implants get increasingly random as they increase in Cuil level. To the point where which planet you end up on (if any) is the result of a die roll at Cuil 4.
* Glee: Quinn and Puck between Season 1 and 2, Sam and Mercedes between Season 2 and 3, and most notably between Kurt and Blaine between Season 5 and 6, as they end the season by avoiding conflict that looks like it might break them up and resolving their issues together, only to be broken up for new reasons at the beginning of the next season.
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost, the One-Eyed Black Cat can project a laser-like red beam from his "missing" eye, which can destroy, reshape, mind-control, and a dozen other things.
* Harry also has this happen to him a lot. First Cedric asks Cho to the Yule Ball before him; afterwards,
* Hard Corps, choosing to join Colonel Bahamut before a boss battle in one of the game's alternate routes will show an ending in which Bahamut conquers the world with the player character as his lackey. However, the player will be then taken to the Game Over screen and be asked to continue (if he has any credits left).
* He speaks almost exclusively in these. The hilarity is compounded by his Tourette's.
* Godslave, gods and their minions keep themselves a secret - Turner empties the museum before his fight with Edith and the police is seen waiting outside as if something (magic or money) was keeping them from interfering in the battle and witnessing magic.

* Gods Need Prayer Badly telling the story of a girl who grows up with the ghost of a miscarriage that slowly turns homicidal the narrator grows older and stops paying attention to it.
* Grape Nuts cereal has long played up the "people will think there's something wrong with you if you eat this" angle, then go on to boast that consumers won't even hear the criticism thanks to the cereal's crunchiness.
* God of War and the events of the original games still haunt Kratos to this day.
* Green Card. However, the movie played this in a semi-realistic way, making the couple marry without even meeting each other before for the same purely egotistical and convenience reasons that people do it in real life — (he wants the residence; she, money and a document that proves her as married so she can rent her dream home). Even when they move in together in order to disguise the true nature of their relationship (and then fall in love with each other), they can't fool the Immigration Officers, and the movie ends with the (somewhat justifiable) deportation of the male protagonist.
* "Harry's ghost" is mentioned at the beginning. Does that mean Harry became a ghost temporarily, does it mean his soul, or does he have a pet ghost? There is also a ghost named Mr. Staircase at one point, so possibly "Harry's ghost" was Mr. Staircase.
* Grant Ward when he's imprisoned in season 2, but he goes back to the stubble-look after escaping.
* Happy Heroes, their tears gush out like waterfalls. Sad S. utilizes this as one of her attacks.
* Hanabi Hyuga admired her older sister Hinata for years, but when Hinata was deemed weak, her views shattered. She didn't
* Halloween (1978) decided to shoot the scene both ways for comparison; Pleasence's version was the one finally used in the film.
* GURPS supplements cover the creation of games with a Raygun Gothic flavor:
* Harry Potter who can turn herself into a beetle to get dirt. Animagi are required to register with the Ministry of Magic to prevent abuses of power such as Rita's scheming.
* He drops a bottle in the next episode, prompting his partner Bacchus to start to worry about his mentor's health, and in the last episode of the season, "Son of a Gun" it is mentioned that this is happening frequently.
* Heavy Object. Despite this both are still in the military and the same unit. It's all but admitted that the higher-ups want to keep them for their ability to take down Objects and are worried that they'll defect to another supernation if punished too much.
* Her Majesty Elizabeth, in the Women's Auxiliary as a mechanic. Philip was a highly regarded officer, being mentioned in dispatches and well on the way to his own Admiralty on merit when he retired to marry Elizabeth. Elizabeth herself, meanwhile, is the last surviving head of state who is also a WWII veteran.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Hermione is nagging Harry to find a date to take to Professor Slughorn's Christmas party.
* God of Evil make its followers appear sexy or lovable to others, so much so that it can cause an enemy to fall in love with them and refuse to harm them, become so attracted to them that they won't run away even when they're being massacred, and force them to go wherever the psyker wants, even through minefields.
* Hazbin Hotel. Note that this is actually also somewhat meaningful at the same time due to Angel Dust being a common slang term for PCP, and the character is quite fond of drugs. Goes right back around to somewhat ironic name though, because he died of a PCP overdose.
* Hamtaro: Due to most of the main characters being hamsters, this trope is in play:
* Goldfinger. 008 never appears, but if M ever tells Bond that if he can't do the mission, someone else will, chances are 008 is that "someone else".
* Hamish Macbeth apply to the TV series, where murders happen, but not in every episode.

* Goblet of Fire. about the cause takes a wand and casts the Dark Mark, the masked hooligans panic and flee — they're not brave enough to face the actual repercussions of brandishing their old Master's symbol in the sky.
* Godzilla: The Series, one episode shows a swarm of over-sized ants. Said ants almost destroyed an entire rainforest within a few days.
* Hide in Plain Sight along with his family which include Thomas's children, and their father spends the rest of the movie trying to track them down.
* Gregor Clegane is the avatar of this trope, a true expert in cruelty and savagery.
* Good Luck Chuck, Chuck discovers that one of the many women he's been sleeping with to help them find their true loves was formerly his classmate - and a man.
* He does it again when he goes to another territory where people only have one name. Something like, "How far along does a society have to get before they start handing out last names?"
* Hairspray the movie was set in Baltimore, but was filmed in Toronto. Vintage Toronto streetcars were prominent in the "Good Morning, Baltimore" opening sequence.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone heavily improves on this aspect, as many areas can now be revisited allowing you to find potentially missed Wizard Cards and cards you may have missed in areas you can't revisit are purchasable at certain ingame vendors. Another nice feature is that the second game tracks how many secrets you've found.
* growing international popularity divisions, all of whom are at the very least functionally fluent speakers.
* Hellgate: London power emit a swarm of bees in your direction when you attack them.
* Gotham. In Season 4, Bruce turns to a life of partying, alcohol, and being a teenage playboy to cope with recent events that haunt his memory. His personality change leaves him as a spoiled, selfish brat and not the Bruce Wayne that his kindly butler and mentor, Alfred Pennyworth, once knew and loved.
* Grant Morrison run, Wally West, having lost his memory of being the Flash, was teaching high school and caught one of his students doing this.
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah combine into, quite naturally, a flying Kaiju monster with a beam weapon that can kick Godzilla's ass. The monster verges on raising the radiation levels of the entire planet beyond what life could survive. It also questions whether the doctor's sacrifice was actually heroic as the Oxygen Destroyer was, compared to other methods, less likely to destroy cities or attempt to exterminate the human race.
* Grimm. A bit of a subversion, however, as all of this evidence was discovered after one of the kidnappers had already been tortured by a vigilante into confessing and who was then killed, while the other one was released from police custody by the vigilante while Hank and Nick were busy being shown the evidence, and was then himself killed by the vigilante.
* Green Day (or fellow Brit imitators like the aforementioned Ramones).
* he loses the Meijin Cup Open Circuit by disqualification. Meijin Kawaguchi (the judge) blasts Minato out * Guardians of Ga'Hoole from Gylfie and Otulissa, who tell her off sharply about making jokes like that.
* headed for the sun, then jump out the airlock to get away from Rosie O'Donnell. They blow up and pop like balloons.
* Grand Theft Auto IV), but the one who fits it the best is Yusuf Amir, an funny, energetic, light-hearted and friendly Arab millionaire.
* Hannibal: The serial killers hunted by Will Graham vary widely in their methods of killing and personal reasons; his work always involves deducing their internal logic, motivations and weaknesses. While no practical links are formed between them, the killers are all obsessed with committing various artistic/surrealist murders (and many can be traced, in one way or another, to Dr. Hannibal Lecter).
* Half-Life 2, DOG kills a Combine Strider by ripping the armor off its 'head', jamming his hand inside, and tearing the brain out in a shower of yellow-brown blood.

* Gravity Falls. Mabel is highly creative and socially gifted, to say nothing of her mean hand with a grappling hook.
* Happy Endings has Alex buy a parrot that keeps making racist and homophobic remarks.
* Hel is blatantly stated to have had intercourse with the body of a dead king. This is clarified to have taken place in the world of the living. She did not have her way with him in Helheim, she did it Midgard.
* Hero Wars commercials show the game as a puzzle game where you have to take loot and kill enemies by pulling pins inside a tower to release gold, lava, and potions in the right directions. The game is a generic RPG battle game. Actually subverted as of December 2019, when after many complaints the game was updated to include the puzzles from the Facebook ads as a bonus minigame to get extra loot.
* Hello, Dolly!, Dolly tells the staff to put the bill for all the damages incurred on the tab of Vandergelder's Hay and Feed, the store that Horace Vandergelder, the man she's leaving the restaurant with and spent the whole film trying to woo, owns and runs.
* Hey Arnold!, a feminine makeover is inflicted on Harold at the end of the episode "Helga's Makeover".
* "Heart and Soul" was written by Mike Chapman and Nicky Chinn, and first recorded by Exile. The Bus Boys also recorded it, but the version by Huey Lewis and the News is the most famous and the only one which hit the top 10 on the Billboard singles chart.
* GURPS from super-powered criminals. They are funded and controlled by the UN and have toys like personal energy weapons, giant aircraft carriers, and orbital bases.
* Hawkman used the reincarnating Hawks, and people became much more familiar with that version of them than the space cops.
* Granchester novels, featuring Detective Inspector Harry Martineau and the Granchester police force.
* Granblue Fantasy: This is Cagliostro's main method of achieving immortality. Her current body is a personal creation, and her alchemy is so advanced that she can transmute a brand new one as a disembodied soul after her previous one got stabbed to death. It shows up in gameplay as a passive Auto-Revive skill, implying the moment her current body gets knocked out, another body is there to pitch in and continue the fight.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, and as he becomes a less unsympathetic character, he gets rather more handsome.
* He sometimes tries to knock, but even a gentle tap with his superhuman strength is enough to shatter stone, so it doesn't do much good.
* Gundam bad enough to leave a crater visible from space. So much for Sydney.
* Goblins sometimes appear as a race similar to goblins, but somewhat larger and more orc-like.
* Hawaii Five-0's pregnancy at the end by filming in Vancouver after she gave birth.
* Goof Troop with him. His focus episodes tend to be significantly more internal and interpersonal in conflict form than the other characters'.
* Hand Cannon Thorn drains the Light of its victims. Its weilder, Dredgen Yor, had been corrupted by the Hive and killed for pleasure.
* Gloryhammer, after the Hootsman detonates his neutron star heart to stop the summoning of Kor-Viliath and close the Galactic Terrorvortex.
* Guardian Fairy Michel Meggi are capable of making astounding creations. Salome capitalized on this by hiring Meggi and stealing White's inventions.
* her mother and who turns out to be a serial killer who loves torturing inmates for his own amusement. Those that defy his authority, he murders them, makes their deaths look like suicides, and collects their numbers as trophies. To cover up her presence, Jessica stages his death to look like a suicide. That said, Dale turns out to have not been much better with his colleagues, none of whom are saddened to hear about his death.

* HFIL form. He doesn't even get to Cell's second form before declaring him a Code Orange and sending him to the titular HFIL.
* Hideo Kojima, as they'd removed his name from the cover prior to release.
* Hermann Detzner was a German engineer who surrendered to Australian forces in New Guinea on January 5, 1919, two months after Germany signed the Armistice of Compiègne and four years and four months after the Australians conquered the German colony's capital. Detzner claimed to have kept the fight, flying German colors and singing German hymns for the duration of the war, and as a result, to be the last remaining soldier of the German Empire. However, the Australians disregarded him as a harmless civilian and claimed that they had known his whereabouts the entire time.
* Hedgewars lets you use these as a mobility tool. They're hard to control, but they don't end your turn and can take you just about everywhere.
* Highlander, after Connor says he is not afraid before riding into his first battle, his cousin Angus says that he "peed his kilt" before his first.
* Green Worldz but never revealed its purpose, only that it should only be used as a last resort. It was later used by Iwatobi to restore his original fighting capabilities at the expense of his life as it heavily burdens his heart.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys also wandered the ancient world battling monsters, gods, and warlords.
* Harrison has "Mind Freakers" and shares "Quest to Sleepy Peak Peak" with Nerris.
* Greg Ayres at the top of a flight of stairs while his back was turned, causing both to tumble down the stairs. Is it any wonder cons are cracking down on these?
* Heavy Object get caught in a firefight. In the course of the firefight a flock of baby penguins runs right in between them. Both sides cease fire to watch, and even cheer on a baby penguin that slips, only to immediately resume combat once the penguins are out of harm's way.
* Goldfaced", Nora arranges a conference with all of Sherloque Wells's ex-wives, who turn out to all be alternate-Earth doppelgangers of the same woman.
* Harold and Maude. The titular characters - a teenaged boy and a 79 year old woman.
* Guards! Guards!, the Librarian (a wizard-turned-orangutan) laments having to resort to charades to inform Constable Carrot that a book has been stolen when "so-called intelligent dogs, dolphins, and kangaroos" have an easier time alerting people to danger.
* Harry Potter are described as being so long that he could easily tuck both of them into his pants.
* Harry Potter. Though technically she's not a photographer herself, the rest of her characterization fits and she generally strings one (named "Bozo") along with her.
* Henry Agard Wallace was FDR's Agriculture Secretary, Vice President and Commerce Secretary, in that order. While he is remembered more for his political work, he was among the first to breed hybrid corn (and other things from strawberries to chickens), and wrote a number of works on agriculture. In addition, he edited both
* Ham-to-Ham Combat was really the basis of Hawkeye and Trapper's (later B.J.) whole relationship in
* Halloween II (1981) (1981), while released three years apart, take place from October 30 to November 1st, 1978.
* Harry justifies this in the case of monsters, because a nameless monster is scarier and has more power over you than one that has a name. And if it is ridiculous, so much the better.
* Heel–Face Turn after Goliath saves his life. He eventually decides to go to Japan, where he thinks he can get away from Gargoyles.
* Gotham Girls's most prominent supporting ladies. One of them is the vigilante superhero Batgirl... and the other three are jewel thief Catwoman, eco-terrorist Poison Ivy and supporting henchgirl Harley Quinn. Their shenanigans can be entertaining, but they never let up with the thievery and crime.
* Hamilton: Alexander and Eliza's final singing appearances both invoke this trope.
* Haseo toss 5 PKers to the sky then slash all of them with scythe at the opening scene of

* Headless Horseman: When the van crashes, Tiffany thinks she has a head wound and worries that she is going to have a scar. When Doc examines the 'wound', he discovers the 'blood' is actually red nail polish from when she was painting her toenails.
* Hangman Adam Page rarely has a segment in AEW where he isn't drinking from a glass of beer or whiskey at some point.
* Henpecked Husband: No one will take them seriously. But if they were women, everyone would SCREAM in outrage.
* High Tension: Both the killer and the protagonist get a turn with a circular saw.
* Godzilla, several comic book adaptations, novels, over 40 video games, countless action figures, and even a line of plushies.
* Higurashi: When They Cry after they get to the first psychotic outburst.
* Harry and Murphy against Binder and the Gray Men. Harry and Murphy are protected from Binder's men by the empowered circle, but Binder could break it. Murphy points a gun at him to prevent that. Defused by Molly completing a
* Hey Arnold!, Gerald, paired off with another major minority character Phoebe, who's half-Japanese and half-white.
* has certain caveats on killing people are off the plate, he IS The Joker, after all.
* Gorillaz, around for most of his life. Russel insists he saw the Reaper during the drive-by shooting which killed all his friends, and actually has photographic evidence of Death looming over him. Rumour also has it that Murdoc's pet raven Cortez was "born in the folds of the Grim Reaper's cloak" - he picked it up in Mexico, a place where ravens don't naturally live in the wild, so there may in fact be something weird going on with it.
* Gosford Park is an exploration of this trope and other murder-mystery-related tropes:
* Happy Days: In "They Call It Potsie Love," Joanie develops a crush on Potsie. At home Joanie falls asleep and fantasizes that she and Potsie get married—and that Potsie is cool and Fonzie is a nerd!
* GURPS setting, so it's very easy to focus or find a target group. In the case of GURPS, there are all shades and flavors of fantasy, sci-fi, realistic, cinematic, comedy, gritty and light-hearted settings you can imagine, or even those you never dreamed about. Thus while the game as a whole can satisfy any player, you just can't run ads for all the settings or you'll go bankrupt trying.
* Heinrich Himmler committed suicide in this manner shortly after being captured by the British.
* Harry Potter: The Aurors of the Ministry of Magic are mostly magical law enforcement (they apprehend dark wizards). The books mention many other departments of the Ministry of Magic that deal with magical creatures and spirits for the sake of the Wizarding (and Muggle) community.
* Having learned to take care of her mother over the years and being naturally responsible, Bella had developed into a very mature person, especially for her age. She even starts out
* Hiccup is able to observe how dragons behave close up and with that in-depth observation, he is able to do things with dragons that his village thought were impossible.
* Gunnerkrigg Court just uses his powers to scare people (and he isn't even very good at it). Martin seemed to have similar powers, though he was using them unconsciously—and fooling himself as well.
* Hey Arnold! in the episode "Beaned". Arnold is holding the door open for everyone to enter the cafeteria because they're holding their trays and Helga assumes he'll keep it open for her as well. Just as she's about to walk through, he slams it shut on her (unknowingly), slamming her tray and all its content into her face as she slowly slides down to the floor.
* Hancock, the titular character does this to several mooks who are attacking him in a hospital.
* Heat Guy J and used it as a weapon of war, only a few small, isolated populations of humans remained. They became seven isolationist city-states, perhaps with a few surrounding villages or suburbs.

* Gremlins: Billy starts to do this but is quickly stopped by his father since the box contains Gizmo.
* Green Acres, Oliver would rise to protest and get cut off as everybody thanks him for volunteering to lead the scheme.
* half-Japanese and half-English, little Lynn decides to honor her via becoming this.
* Hellsing, there is almost always a blood moon when there is a plot point, such as the night Seras Victoria was transformed into a vampire or when Walter informed Alucard that he would be heading to Brazil.
* Great Big Library of Everything or Cyberspace is a good source of infinite data)
* Global Warming / Climate Change, though not the goal of humanity's actions, is certainly an artificially induced process that is making the planet less hospitable to both human civilization and nature.
* Halle Berry; an injury was duly written in to explain away her plaster cast.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix: Harry has just had to repel two Dementors on his own in Little Whinging, much to Mrs. Figg's (a Squib who has kept watch on Harry secretly for years) ire. Mundungus Fletcher (who has also been tailing Harry in secret and abandoned his post momentarily in light of a business opportunity) returns to the scene, and is promptly attacked by a furious Figg and her drawstring shopping bag full of tinned cat food:
* Gravity Rush who spent a few weeks there, only to discover 50 years passed when returned above.
* Grand Theft Auto: Chinatown Wars, the molotov cocktail preparation minigame at gas stations suggests that Huang Lee would be a great candidate if there was ever an infomercial for people who can't efficiently pour gasoline into their gas tank.
* GoldenEye alarm goes off after hacking the mainframes in Severnaya, endless waves of smart, quick, heavily armed elite guards are spawned (get out of there!).
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters Lothar, when the Tracker shows up to fight him, due to having a centuries-old grudge against the Oni.
* Grey's Anatomy who was a white supremacist with an embarrassing neo-Nazi tattoo. Although he didn't want to show it, he still didn't want a non-white doctor to treat him (although he didn't want to admit that outright). Dr. Bailey, the spunky female black doctor, ended up operating on him and stitching the tattoo up into an S shape rather than a swastika.
* Hans is a villainous example of the trope, but Anna doesn't know that when she leaves him in charge, and from what we're shown he appears to be quite good at the job.
* has his arm set on fire by Amaterasu and is forced to cut it off to keep the fire from spreading which happens without him even flinching and his next line is to tell his medic to quit gawking and stop the bleeding.
* Herman's Hermits post-breakup song "Mrs Brown You've Got A Lovely Daughter"
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) to the point of knowing how to communicate what she wants to the humans and the novelization has her implied to have flat out brought Madison back to life.
* Goodbye My Princess: Xiao Feng and A Du are disguised as men when they meet Mi Luo.
* Gondor is reminiscent of the Byzantine Roman Empire as well as Late Medieval Western Europe in general.
* Half-Life 2 chapter "Follow Freeman!" you come across another "suppression device": a giant laser cannon. One wonders if people were afraid of having sex for fear of being disintegrated.
* Harry Potter mascot and their secondary colour is white or silver (in the books, Ravenclaw's symbolic animal is an eagle, and their colours are blue and bronze), and that the students wear modern school uniforms under their robes (in the book, the robes are the pull-over-the-head type). Students also wear pointed hats all day, not just at feasts. The movies also got fans to believe Beauxbatons is an all-girls school and that Durmstrang is an all-boys school, when both are co-ed.

* Hamilton. Their version of "Helpless", which was originally a love song, gets turned into a scene of a city being sacked by four ancient dragons, and the adventuring party Vox Machina are too powerless to do anything but run away and vow revenge.
* Goliath had a spear whose staff part was like a weaver's beam, and the iron spearhead weighed 600 shekels (possibly 15 pounds).
* Half-Life 2 Episode One the explosion a bit, allowing more time to evacuate the surrounding area.
* Green Lantern, Kyle Rayner wakes up from bed in nothing but his undershorts to find a mystery box.
* Granny Weatherwax is implied to have this. She's a natural Bad Witch, but since her sister ran off to be evil she has to be good, and her evil impulses are kept firmly in check by her own iron will, even if throwing off her constraints would let her pretty much deal with every threat that comes her way in minutes.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure!, Tsubomi is given the derogatory title "The Weakest Precure in History", due to the fact that, when she first transforms, she spent the entire moment just running and flailing.
* Hal. It's really one of the most adorable things: it has been established that Hal was a HUGE player before meeting Lois, and yet afterwards he is so completely in love with and devoted to her that Lois actually feels guilty because she's unable to love him as much as he loves her... and he tells her if she loved him as much as he loved her, they would never leave the bedroom. Though it has led to the Unfortunate Implication that due to his complete devotion to her, erratic personality changes when she is gone for a long period of time and that he was dating Lois' sister before meeting her that she brainwashed him.
* High and Mighty Color was also this. Though often classified as alternative metal, they also played straightforward J-pop, hard rock, post-hardcore, punk rock, metalcore, nu metal, and a whole salad of other genres.
* Hell Comes to Frogtown, but the title should have told you what to expect.)
* Harry Potter series took place entirely in Harry's head, someone on the Harry Potter Wiki took this seriously and edited accordingly.
* Haunted Honeymoon has Gene Wilder's and Gilda Radner's going on a honeymoon to his ancestral home in an effort to cure him of his panic attacks.
* Halo 3 is set at an abandoned harbor on a lake drained by the Covenant during their excavation of the Ark portal.
* Has happened on a few occasions, but the thrower is safe as long as they have not released the lever that prevents the grenade from charging. If it has been released, then it will not be a good day for the thrower.
* Godfather Death", a poor man looking desperately for a godfather for his newborn son meets a stranger on the road who reveals he is Death and offers to be the boy's godfather. Later Death attends the godson's baptism and eventually teaches his godson how to become a famous physician. Death's look remains ambiguous; he has "withered legs" and a "withered fist", which could be an euphemism for the familiar skeletal figure; on the other hand, the poor man does not recognize Death when he first sees him and is not terrified by the stranger. Death also has an "ice-cold hand" with a very firm grip.
* Harry and the Hendersons internationally), is about Bigfoot moving in with a suburban family named Henderson. When a news reporter attempts to track down Bigfoot, calling it a vicious creature, the father of the family defends it, claiming that it's a gentle giant. When the reporter asks his name, he gets as far as "Hen" before realizing that would be a bad idea. The reporter refers to him as "The mysterious Mr. Hen" through the rest of the movie.
* Gormenghast trilogy sees the usurper Steerpike rising to higher levels in the castle-state\'s hierarchy. As he makes his final bid to overthrow the Groan family and become ruler, torrential unrelenting rain begins and the castle is flooded. The action of the book happens on two levels. As the lower levels of the castle are progressively swamped by floodwaters, its inhabitants struggle for survival, moving themselves and their possessions to higher and higher levels. This adds to the claustrophobic menace of the situation. The flooding becomes a metaphor for cleansing, both of an ancient civilisation strangling in its own history, and of the need to destroy a cancer in the social body - Steerpike. The water rises to menacing levels, and the Princess Fuchsia dies a lonely death by drowning; Titus Groan, the legitimate heir to Ghormenghast, seeks out and kills Steerpike at the point where the floodwaters rise to their highest. Symbolically, after Steerpike's death, the rain stops and the flood recedes.

* heavy V8 powered dinosaurs. This was also the reason for cramming every possible cubic inch with CRT screens and complex electronics. It backfired.
* Herald of Perfection (and its upgraded form, Herald of Ultimateness) have subpar ATK for a Ritual of their level, but impressive DEF and the ability to negate any effect simply by discarding a Fairy. They can block pretty much anything the opponent tries, but they can't do much by themselves and eat up too much of your resources to support other strategies easily. Herald decks tend to be based on sitting on the guy while trying to assemble their own win condition.
* Godzilla where he spends most of the story on the sidelines while the other monsters are mind controlled by aliens and later battle King Ghidorah.
* "Grand Galactic Inquisitor" is 12 feet tall and shines what amounts to floodlights from his Eye. His voice is so powerful, his voice can be felt "in [your]
* Heroes (who personally entered her mind near the end) to free her and Matt, Matt awakes and the stab wound is gone.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire (in reference to the Yule Ball). Lavender and Parvati start giggling, and Harry's narration notes that it doesn't look like she's ever let her hair down in any sense.
* Harvey Birdman "Deadomutt" two-parter where they framed Harvey for murder and let him spend five years in prison.
* Haitian wrestler Tyree Pride had retired from in-ring competition and become a wrestler, most memorably for
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged ugly mood by the guy deciding to take his own life to escape his wrath), Alucard decided to mock the self-terminator.
* Happens to Sanji twice, both times played for comedic purposes. First time he sees Boa Hancock and, just like the rumors say, turns to stone. The second time he sees the mermaid princess, Shirahoshi. Made funnier by the fact that the second time cures him of his
* Going from practicing on a full piano (with very resistant keys) to playing a keyboard (with unweighed keys) is hard. The upside is that you can then play much faster on unweighed keys if you practice with weighted ones.
* HBO's series about the Los Angeles Lakers' "Showtime" era, Norm Nixon is played by his son DeVaughn.
* High School Musical, where with 16 minutes to go the Wildcats are losing horribly, but with upbeat inspirational music in their ears manages to even the score, and manages to score a basket just as the clock ticks from 1 to 0.
* god of Destruction against Krohnus's Web of Fate, and his cultists aim to release him to bring about the end.
* Hank Zipzer: In "Hank's New School", Hank is protesting his parents' decision to take him out of Westbrook by waving a placard at the breakfast table. Emily's response is to glance briefly at his sign and murmur:
* Grant Morrison, in which the title character - the hero, mind you - rampages through NYC to spell out a message to humanity. The message? "FUCK YOU."
* Grease are like this, although they still don't get the girl because they're too dumb and boring.
* Gundam's Japanese counterpart, it contains an equally disproportionate number of high ranking nutcases:
* He also towers over Agent Jemma Simmons (5'4), another main character on the show.
* Golden Glades Interchange major highways intersect. Easy enough mistake to make...but he went on for another 80 miles before trying to turn around, and was not able to execute said maneuver without turning his truck upside down.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters of the war on Meridian for the benefit of a much larger agenda.

* Godzilla vs. Hedorah ended like this as well. Of course, Yoshimitsu Banno was practically exiled from the studio after its completion, so...
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. And in episode 18 of the World Series Finland glomps Estonia.
* Harry Potter, the trio talk about writing an essay, and Ron suggests they write in huge letters so they can fulfill the length (measured in feet of a scroll) requirement. Hermione is not amused.
* Hamlet when not only does Queen Gertrude fall victim to the poisoned chalice, but Claudius himself receives a taste of his own medicine at Hamlet's hands.
* Happens in "The Playwright" with Brighton's nerdy classmate Brooke, with whom Brighton (initially) didn't want to go to a dance.
* Hanna, Erik's fight with Isaacs and his henchmen happens in a playground with Erik using the equipment to help take them out.
* Hard on Soft Science, during the actual Enlightenment, philosophers and scientists exchanged notes all the time, and indeed it was during this period that "natural philosophy" was phased out in favor of Science with a Capital S, while parts of Philosophy evolved into social sciences like economics, sociology and psychology.
* Heroes fans began to worry about the show's falling ratings during the third and fourth season, and started sending waffle mix to the network in a plea for them not to axe the show. It hung on for a while longer but was canceled after season five.
* Going Postal has Moist von Lipwig's talent to make Alleged Steeds look much better than they actually are, "for about ten minutes, or until it rains."
* Hank Pym. They illustrate this with Ant-Man, Wonder Man and Vision whose powers applied Pym Particles on those other axes.
* Hilda: The city of Trolberg is surrounded by a giant stone wall intended to keep trolls and other hostile creatures out. It doesn't seem particularly effective.
* Grimms'", John is turned to stone for explaining his apparently senseless behavior. The king and queen learn they can restore him by cutting the throats of their twin children and using the blood. After they do so, the revived Faithful John puts the children's head back and restores them to life.
* hand waved in the books as a result of having much better ECM than targeting systems. Missiles are tricky because they only carry so much fuel, and if they go ballistic are trivial to intercept with counterfire. Missiles don't tend to be carried on capital ships because heavy turbolasers pack a similar punch, can't be shot down, and don't have to worry about ammo.
* Heroic Sacrifice: Getting oneself killed in a selfless effort to save other people.
* H. G. Wells - the Time Traveller vanishes forever at the end and the narrator wonders where he wound up. He at least recognizes the contradictions and absurdities of time travel by saying "He may even now, if I may use the term ..."
* Haze all national armed forces. And Mantel is not just a PMC, but a super-corporation that has, apparently, taken over most of North America.
* Grojband features Kon and Kin dressing up as "chainsaw maniacs" in "Girl Fest". With Kon donning the hockey mask and chainsaw cliché.
* Hannibal, as the hospital is granting him these luxuries in exchange for his cooperation. His extreme wealth due to his uncle being Lithuanian royalty may have helped, as well.
* Golden Age story "Ali Babble and the Fourteen Peeves". He hauls the driver out of his car and hurls him bodily into a puddle.
* Gradius for a shmup. That should tell you something about this and shoot 'em ups.
* Gnoph has "keck" and its derivative, "kecking", which appear to be basically equivalent to "fuck". Odd in that the latter term is used just as frequently.
* high number for the herd count, and was 3 to 4 times the average number of animals counted in other years.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets we learn that, when interacting with snakes, Harry has been speaking to them via Parseltongue without realizing it. Later, when he needs to use it without a real snake around to trigger it, he has a much harder time doing so.

* Godzilla, he was able to take down two monsters at once, some of whom were more powerful than himself, gained allies as dangerous as he was, and he gained a few new superpowers.
* Heart of the Woods has hooked up with many girls in the past (many of them fans of hers) and ends up doing the same with Morgan, but over the course of the game it becomes increasingly clear that she's in denial of the fact that she's genuinely falling for her.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters. So, prior to the Rebellion's assault on Torus Finley, he makes the decision to have his ally Rhouglar assassinate her during the chaos of the battle, in order to eliminate her in a way that no one will suspect him for.
* Goodfellas, one of the reasons Jimmy has almost everyone else involved in the Lufthansa heist killed is that it netted more money than they expected and he doesn't want to share the extra cash.
* High School Musical is a less exaggerated example, but he's clearly suffering from his own high school basketball failures.
* Herzensschatzi komm (schizophrenia). All that remains of her life are three letters she wrote to her absent husband Mark, begging him "Sweetheart come", which then devolved into the single-word "come". The words are so crowded on paper that they looked like random scribblings.
* Hacksaw Ridge a group of Japanese soldiers emerge from the tunnels waving a white flag, but as soon as they are above ground they toss grenades at the Americans.
* Heckle and Jeckle do this at the start of the short "The Power of Thought."
* Good Will Hunting ends with Will having "to see about a girl." We never see his and Skylar's reunion, or get any sense of whither or not their relationship will have any future (which we have reason to doubt, given how much emotional damage Will still carries).
* greatly a costume requires resources, which are prone to running out.
* Gods and Generals and the miniseries made out of it have long been stated to be Southern apologia with Stonewall Jackson treated with an almost messianic light.
* He has a bit where he mentions that black people judge the beauty of a white woman by estimating how long her name would be in the media if she went missing. He mentions a serial killer of women, who was suspected of killing that white woman who went missing in Aruba, what was her name— (An audience member calls, "Natalee Holloway!") And then there was that Peruvian girl just the other month, what was her name? (The audience is silent.)
* Harriet the Spy, the class votes to do a dance for the Christmas program in which they portray a Christmas dinner. Harriet is forced to be an onion, and other students play peas, squash, turkey legs, and gravy.
* half of a chapter's worth of story. One such episode consisted almost solely of Sanji, Nami, Franky, and Chopper running across a day care room with little happening besides banter.
* Hercules. You'll literally trigger his hair to burst into flames if you come up with anything like a failure, repeat words or challenge him.
* Hidden City features plenty of magical phenomenon where characters' dreams and memories become reality.
* Hellsing doing this. He really enjoys knocking lesser monsters off their high horses.
* Hercules, Achilles, Theseus, Odysseus has lots of real heroic kings in it along with the mythological ones.
* her transformation after using the allspark-powered key to upgrade herself.
* has survivors transfer to the darknet, which is real, though originally intended as an emergency Internet and alternative option to the increasingly censored internet. In combination with the Serval Mesh (also real), an app that allows smartphones to build networks from device to device instead of through cell phone towers, redditors can still connect almost anywhere, any time.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince: Dumbledore admits that this was a bad idea. But even then, he still doesn't tell Harry what a Horcrux is, even though he has excellent reasons to do so (Harry doesn't think finding out about them is that important; if he knew what they were, it might move up his priority list).

* Harry Harrison are born into the losing side of a technology-vs-biology conflict that has an entire planet forcibly mutating to attack them. They train, from about the time they're old enough to walk, with forearm-mounted holsters which automatically slap a pistol into the wearer's hand when he or she positions the fingers for gripping the pistol's butt. If the fingers aren't crooked just right, the trigger finger may touch the trigger before the firer intends, which will cause problems if he or she didn't mean to shoot just yet. These are large-caliber pistols using live explosive rounds, making them exemplars not only of arm-cannons, but several other kinds of insanity as well.
* Hans Christian Andersen contain inanimate objects talking to each other.
* Hello Melancholic: Asano Minato finds herself impromptuly joining a band of girls and began to fall for the leader Hibiki-sempai.
* Happy Tree Friends followed the Three Shorts structure when adapted for television.
* He also built Avalon out of a mixture of one of the versions of Asteroid M and Cable's then deactivated space station, Graymalkin, before it was eventually destroyed in a brutal battle between
* God Does Not Own This World: The creator does not own the rights to their work, so the company that does own the work can continue production or reboot the work without the creator's involvement or approval.
* Harry Potter novels, Fred and George Weasley act as tag team twins on the Quidditch field as beaters, redirecting heavy, self-propelled balls towards the opposing team.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 2 episode 39, Doctor H. imagines he is giving flowers to Miss Peach, both for her efforts as a superhero and because he's in love with her.
* HFIL, and (B) they can feel every bit of pain subjected upon them, as Raditz had the misfortune of discovering when Freeza had the Ginyu Force pull him apart by the limbs.
* Green-Eyed Epiphany: A character only realizes they love someone after they get together with a different person.
* Higurashi: When They Cry typical of the series, she ends up committing an unspeakable sin to get back home anyway, only after acknowledging the meaning of it enough to be truly scarred by it. Sure, another characters tells her 'it was all a dream,' but it was rather probably an attempt at comforting through deceit.
* Hilariously used in an episode of in which Ed knocks on the door to Edd's room THEN kicks his foot through it, causing Eddy to reply in annoyance, "There's a KNOB, Ed!"
* Happy Place: Imaginary space inside the character's head where everything is well.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix after Harry is proven innocent in the court, Fred, George, and Ginny do a war dance to the tune of "He got off, he got off, he got off..." which makes Mrs. Weasley invoke this trope.
* Hedge Maze: A maze made up hedgerows, usually found somewhere fancy and rich.
* Harry Callahan in his hate. That said, the conversation in question was more hazing the new guy (Gonzales) than actual bigotry, as he gives a wink to DeGiorgio after saying "especially Spics" and shows no obvious issues working with his new Mexican partner.
* Hans Asperger referred to the autistic children in his practice as "Little Professors".
* her Missing Mom. In the next chapter, it's revealed that it's not true, but they spend most of the rest of the books thinking it's true.
* Half-Human Hybrid, and both he and his mother have very large green eyes.
* Hey Arnold!, Phoebe, Patty, Trish Wittenberg, Grandpa Phil and Brainy all know Helga Pataki's most dark and deep secret: her overwhelming love for Arnold. Helga's shrink Dr. Bliss, a Secret Keeper by way of professional confidentiality, also knows. And Helga admits it to Lila as well, threatening her with violence so she wouldn't tell.

* Heavy Gear's average, but which are definitely more than just body armor.
* Gumby, Tara is voiced by Patti Morse, but her singing voice is done by Melisa Kary when she sings "Take Me Away" near the end.
* Happy Tree Friends website, if you pick the option "Flowers", she would sniff it, and sneeze a few times before the final one blows her head off, complete with her brains sticking on the wall.
* Having the school bully steal his date at the cinema, but then getting him to eat a rotten hot dog he found on the floor of
* Hence the joke about the little boy who walks into a drugstore to buy tampons: "My sister says you can swim and ride a bike if you wear one, and I can't do either of those things!"
* Glitched Miko AU: Miko has flashbacks to her time in the lab where she was created every time she is knocked out.
* Gumby reveals that Clokey did briefly experiment with LSD and other drugs in the late 60s, but this was after he made the classic Gumby shorts, and he had sworn off drugs by the time he returned to filmmaking.)
* Heaven Help Us at a Catholic prep school a teacher uses a wooden board to beat the protagonist's hands in the middle of class. Later he uses a leather belt on a small group one at a time bent over a bench. Upset that one of them presents a written and valid exemption to this form of punishment, the teacher then starts beating him in the face with the belt. The protagonist then chases the teacher across campus where they crash a school assembly. The teacher attempts to beat him right there on the stage and gets punched out to the roar of the entire student body.
* High-pressure water (or other liquids) can also have a nasty effect on human flesh. This is particularly a problem for submarines and machinery that involved liquids at high pressure (engine fuel injection systems can be nasty in this respect), where a leak can cause serious injuries.
* He Who Fights Monsters does this to escape Inner Moka but he both uses a chair to break the window first and gets fairly cut up from doing so.
* Have several friends buy increasingly larger sizes of condoms, with the last one buying
* Hero Ball: Hero does something dumb vs. villain does something dumb.
* Halo 3 keeps it going with vicious roars of anger every time he swings his sword.
* Heroic BSoD, Ed discovers Ling in the hut they used as a fallback after Mustang's guys, the Elrics, and Ling's party worked together to capture Gluttony (interestingly the last place in the normal world Ling was seen alive, really, since the two of them got to Father's base by way of Gluttony's stomach) and Ling's falling over and asking for food is taken by Ed as a sign that it's really him.
* Grand Theft Auto is apparently a conscious attempt by the developers to reverse this trend — it plays only songs which later became vastly more famous when they were covered or sampled by more popular artists.
* God Complex the first chapters alone, it's clear that figures like Jesus, Hera and Freya all exist in the same world. With the premise that sets up THE God as being dead and other pantheons vying for his position, it becomes clear that we'll see many gods from here on out.
* Guilty Gear, Sin's father is human (Ky Kiske) and mother is a gear (Dizzy).
* Heroes He even loves the mama he never knew so much that he tracks down his biological father so that he can kill him.
* Heneral Luna, the titular general attempts to resign his post as Commander-General of War Operations because he's fed up with the constant politicking and lack of commitment from his peers as they've made it nigh impossible for him to do his job. President Emilio Aguinaldo refuses it, then has him killed a short while later.
* Harbinger: Armacham markets the Replicas as a voice-controlled PMC force, and is developing Fettel's Replicas to be controlled by a psychic commander. They also maintain their own PMC forces separate from the Replicas.
* Godzilla Heisei series counts. He originally started out as the Earth's protector until he went too far which led to the destruction of an ancient civilization and his imprisonment by Mothra.

* ... Have multiple (three or more) separate adventures in the course of their quest or journey.
* Hell's Kitchen After that, season 10's held quite a few extra ones itself.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Harry says "That's a lie" to Aunt Marge.
* Hilarity Ensues, and Frasier ends up having to prepare his famous pasta sauce to assist. The partygoers hear Niles and Frasier arguing in the kitchen—and Niles stumbles out covered in red liquid, screaming "LOOK WHAT YOU'VE DONE!" Daphne fails to help matters by licking the "blood" and declaring it yummy.
* Greg, Ted streaks across a college campus naked, as everyone chases him for disguising himself as a phony professor.
* Gray Boy is this, greatly enjoying using his time-looping powers to subject people to eternal torture.
* Heavyweights, is to celebrate with a junk food binge that makes them all sick. To the film's credit, it also directly says and shows that Tony's drastic, extreme measures toward weight loss are unhealthy also. When Pat is put in charge of the camp in the third act, they reach a nice middle ground of trying to lose weight and teach kids personal responsibility about their own diets.
* Hearts, AKA Socializers: These players play to hang out with other players. They play because their friends play, and if their friends all packed up and moved to another game, they would too. To the extent they play single-player games, Socializers prefer ones with a heavy focus on character relationships.
* Haunt The House: The ghost is presented as a sympathetic character who just wants some privacy.
* Going Another Way the ordeal was finally over, though they are still horrifically embarrassed by their continued nudity.
* higher), but passengers learned of the earlier attacks and fought back; the plane was prematurely brought down in a field, killing everyone aboard but sparing further ground casualties.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City will sometimes quip: "You can blame my mother. I do."
* Has his face buried in his hands when he has to look at "Hollaback Girl" in episode 18.
* going on to longer runs elsewhere, which was cancelled almost immediately by its host network, but later played in full on a cable channel.
* Grim Fandango, however, says that "sprouted" souls get reincarnated, which is a punishment for them since it means they have to live another life before eternal rest.
* Heroes, season one, "Five Years Gone". Claire's iconic blond locks have been dyed brown.
* Goldust who once became convinced the whole world was ugly and resolved to wear a (see-through) mask and put paper bags on everyone's head.
* Heroes''. Scorpions can grow up to nine meters long, including the tail. If the pincers grab the opponent, the scorpion's sting automatically hits.
* Gracie Allen was very much this trope, although you might not think so at first glance. On the surface, she appeared to be a ditz, but she had a real talent for getting her way in most situations.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) (You'd think guys like this would know enough to avoid reflective surfaces...)
* Goblet of Fire, as well as whenever he interacted with her during the school year, and their eventual break-up the year after.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch. Interestingly he subverts it later on when he rejects his experiments as immoral, and vows that he will not commit cruel genetic experiments on animals again.
* Greg Bear, it is revealed that Sangmer and his love, who are forced to spend literally eternity apart in order to prevent the end of everything, meet again every time the current universe reaches its end, only to part again when the next one is created.
* Górsky & Butch parody, the party is cornered by police in a disused toilet. They escape down the drain, all except Morphinius (Gorsky) who has to stay behind to flush them.

* her Angel Mort uniform, and Irie acts like this in a couple scenes, though it's not as cute.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince a good player, which helps him through the rest of the season.
* Hidden Heart of Gold: Yeah, I do some nice things, but don't tell anyone about it, 'cause I have a reputation to keep.
* He was on a tourist cruise when another tourist fell into the water and began drowning. Like any normal human being, he stood aside while professional help was obtained. So many people were staring at him, expecting him to act
* Hercules Returns: Ursus mocks Samson, trying to provoke him into a fight to see whether or not he's faking the loss of his strength. Samson's response?
* Guerrilla: The Black Army Faction view themselves as freedom fighters, but of course are called terrorists. While on the one hand, they fight a racist, corrupt system, their methods also include assassinations, bank robberies, bombings, and prison breaks.
* Gohan gets his neck snapped by a kick from Recoome before he can complete his sentence about how Goku will kick Recoome's ass despite Gohan losing the fight. Though he's still alive, and recovers soon afterwards.
* God Hand decided that the hilarity of gorillas was only increased by training them in the art of Lucha Libre, and was increased to nearly fatal levels by throwing in groin shots complete with a laugh track. It worked, mostly due to the fact that the whole game is so absurd that they don't seem too weird in comparison.
* Grimleal are a symphonic black/melodic death metal band whose music, lyrics, and aesthetic are inspired by the Fire Emblem series, and are named after the antagonists of Fire Emblem: Awakening. Their sole member is a guy cosplaying the character Robin wearing corpsepaint, and calls himself Grima Fellblood. They currently have an EP titled Time-Surpassing Fate that's all about Rhajat reincarnating into Tharja, complete with voice clips from the games being sampled in the songs, and both aforementioned characters appearing on its cover art. They also have a demo titled "Dark Shadow", which is an "ode to Tharja" according to the band.
* Hawai'i, which instead focuses on a generic mob war between mainland Mafia and Irish factions.
* Gleiwitz Incident was used as a pretext for Germany's invasion of Poland in 1939. An SS commando in Polish uniforms attacked a radio station near the Polish border and broadcast anti-German propaganda. They even dressed a prisoner in Polish uniform and shot him to add authenticity.
* Harry Potter and the Nightmares of Futures Past starts like this with Harry being the only English wizard left alive after a long and bloody war against Voldemort.
* Goldeneye Rogue Agent to provide you with a souped-up sniper rifle to kill Dr. No. "Goldfinger pays me well...but Dr. No pays me better!"
* Hackmaster Volumes 1-8. Volume 1's cover showed an eight person adventuring group, with one of the adventurers being killed by a monster. Volume 2's cover showed the remaining seven characters, again with one of them being killed. The pattern continued until Volume 8, which showed the last living party member being killed by the zombies of the first seven adventurers.
* Green-Eyed Epiphany as something of his. He never really puts the realization into words, but the look on his face says it all.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 1: Peter Quill aka Star-Lord is a thief, a con man, and a womanizer, but he's so charming that it's hard to hold these things against him.
* "Gobble, Gobble, Eeeeeeeeek!" interrupts the column for a "WARNING TO TASTEFUL READERS: You should NOT—I repeat, NOT—read the rest of this column if you are likely to be in any way offended by the term 'turkey rectums.'"
* Gunnerkrigg Court. The Court is Enlightened; Gillitie Woods is Romantic.
* Hare Today, Gone Tomorrow", Elmyra makes Buster her pet and dresses him in baby clothes.

* Gundam. After being hit with an orbital Dainsleif barrage, Mikazuki and Akihiro resolve to follow the orders that Orga gave them to their dying breath, taking out huge swathes of Gjallarhorn forces before finally succumbing to their wounds and perishing. This is in spite of the fact that the Gundam Gusion Rebake Full City and Gundam Barbatos Lupus Rex were completely wrecked at this point. In particular, Akihiro manages to kill Iok right before he dies.
* Half-Life 2, at least, not only do bodyshots towards headcrab zombies do less damage; they also risk leaving the headcrab itself alive to try to attack you. Father Grigori advises you to aim for the head. You will do well to listen to him. The crossbow's back, too. It's still the long-range terror against anything your size, and it now features heated rebar for bolts.
* Happy Tree Friends and ends up in a loop wherein he accidentally drops the time machine on himself.
* Haven episode "Audrey Parker's Day off", Audrey has to relive the same day over and over. She could notice the loop because she is immune to the Troubles. Significantly, her injuries transfer between loops so by day 5 she is injured and extremely tired. She also apparently does not get much sleep between loops. Fortunately since this is Haven, Nathan believes her when she says she's reliving the day, and they learn a little more with each loop.
* Godannar. There are 4 teams of pilots belonging to bases in other countries that occasionally show up to help Goh, Anna, and company. Each of those teams get at least an episode centered mostly around them. Most semi-major characters around the main base get an episode or two dedicated to them as well.
* Greyhawk's primer and his clergy handle most of the day-to-day duties, it's not the most pleasant place.
* here, including such positions as "evil publicist" and "evil laundry service.".
* Heralds of Valdemar, they never use their Gifts for personal gain, but often struggle with how much invasion of privacy and violation of another's free will is justified by the situation at hand.
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger being a tad too close in episode 3. She also draws yaoi doujinshi.
* Gonzaga headed into the 2021 NCAA men's basketball championship game with a 31-0 record, having spent the entire season ranked #1. While they were expected to have a tough challenge in Baylor, the prospect of becoming the first undefeated national champion since 1976 seemed like it would've been a huge motivation for the Bulldogs to put in their best effort. Instead, they got hammered by Baylor, 86-70, with the Bears leading by a double-digit margin for basically the whole game, and the game will likely be remembered more for Gonzaga's choke job than as Baylor's first title. Gonzaga coach Mark Few later took the blame for the underwhelming performance, saying he didn't prepare the team well enough.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Romilda Vane attempts to give love potion infused chocolates to Harry. Ron steals them and promptly falls in love with her.
* Headquarters, expect the headquarters to be an assortment of trucks and armored vehicles fairly close to the fighting.
* Great Big Book of Everything: Whenever the characters need to look something up, they consult a book that somehow has everything the characters need to know about the specific subject.
* Hey Arnold! Arnold steps in and bribes him successfully with an actual $5 bill.
* Goats spy. Much of the cast seems to include other cloned world leaders, including Space Hitler (Good Hitler's archnemesis), Cowboy Prime (a masked vigilante who seems to be George W. Bush), and Kim Jong Deux (Good Hitler's friend turned enemy).
* Glitched Miko AU that normal Glitches do due to still acting like their in their games since she was designed to be able to grow and change like a human being rather than follow set commands.
* Hideki Kamiya's "Dante vs Bayonetta" match. However, a short time later, he changed his mind and denounced it, saying he would rather Dante and Bayonetta team up instead of fight each other.
* Hikari Sentai Maskman but Okelampa's "Yare, yare" is translated normally; another group has since done the series and all the dialogue comes out pretty much the same, but with Okelampa's catchphrase rendered as "I feel tired." It's hard not to feel like your favorite character is missing...

* Gundam, follow UC's general late-80s-to-early-90s trend to blend in stylistically.
* HERZ: Subverted. The Chinese Government tried to build its own Eva in a top-secret facility. The monster went out of control, obliterated the facility and started to rampage through China. A Chinese commanding officer pleaded Misato dispatching her Evas. She retorted she would deploy them… in exchange for information on where the other Evas were being built. When the officer complained about it being blackmail, her reaction was "So what?"
* Hermes gets his job as a bureaucrat put into serious jeopardy, and his plan... is to jump off the Planet Express building. That alone would be extreme, but putting it over the top as his coworkers plead for him to stop, Bender simply shouts "Do a flip!"
* God-Emperor of Mankind for the ten thousand years since the Horus Heresy, the Imperium of Man has become not so much a single country as a loose association of co-belligerents who end up fighting each other, for reasons that vary from justified to idiotic, almost as often as they fight xenos and Chaos.
* Heroic Rematch: After being defeated the first time, the hero is ready for Round Two against the villain.
* Happy Heroes. In episode 46, Big M. and Little M. try to get their minds off of their lack of food by watching TV, but every program they see is related to food in some way.
* Granblue Fantasy has Ludmila, who's charge attack is based on whatever animation the game decides to play. Only two of its five possible outcomes will actually do anything beneficial for the player.
* Halo sniper rifle capable of inducing this trope on anyone it hits. Considering it fires a .21-cal round at 15 kilometers per second, the gory effects are realistic/expected.
* GURPS the normal point allowance (and they're considerably more badass than ordinary people to begin with), they get special bonuses in combat, and they can save an unspent character point or two to shake off a bad injury as "just a flesh wound."
* Guess Who, Percy Jones has realized the reason his daughter's fiance lost his job is because his boss made racist comments about the couple's marriage plans. Having booted him out of the house, he races to the train station to bring him back, only to get there as it's leaving—only to see the young man sitting on a bench. He apologizes for giving him a hard time and encourages him to return and reconcile with his daughter.
* Godzilla Encounter was set up with pictures and updates referring to Godzilla. Some of the words in each article were highlighted in red to eventually spell SERIZAWA (the name of a character in the movie and the doctor who created the Oxygen Destroyer in the first film).
* Harley Quinn (2019): In "L.O.D.R.S.V.P.", Clayface tries to make Aquaman stand down by turning into Superman. With his poor acting skills (he claims to be from "Kryptalon", among his general character inaccuracies) and the fact he transformed right in front of him, Aquaman is not fooled for a second and chops his head off (luckily Clayface can survive that).
* Grand Theft Auto III: Claude flips the bird when pedestrians honk their car horns at him.
* Halo machinima all look identical with only different color, there is a single female character in the form of Tex, who is almost completely sane in comparison and a more capable soldier than all the others combined.
* Harry Potter) eyes. Unlike the previously encountered horcrux, it doesn't manifest itself fully, only able to project images of Harry and Hermione mocking Ron.
* he was stung by a bee that had flown into the jury room through an open window and died from a massive allergic reaction.

* Highway Blossoms," she later learns that Joe uses the same nickname for Mariah.
* Gordos obtained his position as one of the Twelve Heroes of Altador after he alerted the police of a greedy governor who was embezzling the heavy taxes that his citizens gave him.
* Grimlock. One side was a Dinosaur (a then unused type), and it was three color red, green, and white. Since it's silver bordered (non-cannon and not legal in official events), no one thought much of it. But a couple of months later, Ixalan was released, where Dinosaurs were a major theme, and they were in red, green, and white.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows and finds green shoots already sprouting.
* Happy Heroes, titled "Running Away from Home", does not actually depict characters carrying a bindle stick in the episode itself, but the title card shows one in one of the Chinese characters in the episode name.
* Highlander had an episode called "Blackmail" where a guy caught Duncan on videotape beheading another Immortal. He threatened to give the videotape to the police ... unless Duncan killed his wife (he had been having an affair and had just left his mistress when he came upon them fighting).
* Had Bane chosen to end Batman's life in their first confrontation in
* Hazbin Hotel to his father, who preferred his older brother over him.
* Hey Arnold!. Eugene gets to meet him but sees him being a spoiled, entitled, nitpicky manchild who treats Eugene with apathy. Upset, Eugene trashes everything and starts acting up. Eugene's idol, however, realizes he let someone who liked him down and manages to regain Eugene's liking in the end, even saving both Eugene and Arnold's lives at great personal risk.
* Harley Quinn does this to a mugger with her butt until Power Girl swoops in.
* Hatoful Boyfriend that since sapient birds took over the world, they replaced all the windows with safety glass.
* Gundam AGE, except their enemies are Martian colonists with a grudge for the corrupt Earth government.
* Haunting Ground: The game's main claim to fame is that the player is chased by this type of individual once a chapter. These beings have different approaches to chasing the heroine, such as their attention span or diligence in finding her hiding spots. The best one can do before their boss fight is to run away, or knock them out via dog-mauling or alchemic munitions.
* Gura Gawr has amazing rhythm, a beautiful singing voice, and is a pro at rhythm games.
* Gone with the Wind features Rhett and Scarlett's marriage starting okay, but due to Scarlett's obsession with Ashley Wilkes taking prevalence over Rhett and her family, the marriage becomes destructive.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, America's alien friend Tony speaks English. ("Fucking limey!") Even in Japanese. Tony somehow speaks better English than Anglo countries do! Which perhaps is more of positive reflection upon Tony's actor compared to the rest of them, than it is a negative one upon the characters themselves.
* Happy Gilmore goes on a tirade when he can't get the ball to "go home"
* Gundam Day is celebrated on July 8, coinciding with the model number of the franchise's first Gundam, the
* had a wandering robot discover a civilization that had drained its own homeworld of geothermal energy, and despite their very advanced technology, they died when the last pocket of air froze.
* Harvest Moon DS of a daughter. Muffy refuses. The English version changes it into a blind date.
* Halo: Reach appear fighting side by side, the Elites will only arrive after all the Brutes have been killed; with the implication being that the Elite commanders in charge of the invasion are using the Brutes to soften up the opposition before sending their own people in. This can be seen in both "The Package" and "The Pillar of Aututmn", where despite the stakes the Elites would seemingly rather have Brutes die first than coordinate their assaults.
* Hannah Montana"- when circumstances lead to Lilly joining Miley in the world where Miley was originally Hannah all the time- Lilly expresses concern that Miley's recent declaration of love for her was only because Lilly initially wished to be with Miley forever. However, Angel assures Lilly that love is one of three things nobody can wish for, the other two being killing people or bringing them back to life.

* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone stays alive by drinking unicorn blood.
* .hack, development of MMOs stagnated for some time as a result of a devastating global computer virus in 2005.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets: Gilderoy Lockheart attempts to heal Harry's broken arm with a spell but accidentally removes all of the bones in his arm instead.
* Hamlet can resemble this, for instance in the dialogue where he conflates Polonius with a 'fishmonger' and discusses the sun breeding maggots in a dead dog. The other characters certainly take him for something very much like this. The jury is still out on whether he was feigning madness, was mad, or was merely speaking on a level too subtle for the other characters to understand. Nonetheless, most other characters find him difficult to relate to.
* Halo effect is a documented psychological phenomenon wherein people's judgment on another person's traits spills over to other (unrelated) traits. So the perception is that beautiful = good/competent, ugly = bad/incompetent, etc. Further proof that humans can be very judgmental.
* Hermione's first heat after coming into her Dracken inheritance results in her and Charlie trashing the bed, destroying an end table, punching a hole in the wall, and leaving feathers everywhere.
* Grand Finale scale, considering many creatures and civilizations seen throughout the series were either dependent on magic, or (like Star's spells and the Magical High Commission, the latter of whom explicitly die) were made of it. Considering one such creature was responsible for maintaining the space-time continuum, further problems may yet affect the multiverse. That's not even getting into the potentially lethal consequences of merging Earth and Mewni together, given the dangerous wildlife of Mewni, and Earth's own history of bigotry and oppression...
* Help Im A Teenaged Outlaw, Lady Devereux tells one of the servants in one episode (who is asking her out) that she will not be coming out with him because she is "washing her hair."
* have Nate do all right despite apparently never using a sword before, probably because he'll take the opportunity to wallop Rafe when he gets the chance * GoodFellas. Actually averted in Pesci's famous "You think I'm funny?" scene. He's just screwing around with Henry Hill. What he does to Billy Batts and Spider, on the other hand...
* He isn't a bully as such, and certainly isn't portrayed as a villain — more a caustic, shambling, one-man
* Hana the Fox Girl is a talking dog. His little sister Hana is a fox that can take human form. Though when she's in fox form she falls into this trope, as does Haru Sakamoto when she's in snake form.
* Goblet Of Fire - Cornelius Fudge (and by extension, the Ministry of Magic) becomes the enemy while Snape is outright stated to be on Dumbledore's side at the end.
* Godzilla: City on the Edge of Battle - First deconstructed with the Bilusaludo, when Galu-gu insist that their race, as well as the humans and exif merge themselves with the nanometal of Mechagodzilla City in order to kill Godzilla, despite doing so would not only end all organic life, but possibly allow Mechagodzilla City to assimilate the planet with itself as well.
* Heel–Face Turn, but then must defend her from all his allies and her enemies, who refuse to believe his explanations and think that he's either gone to the dark side or been brainwashed.
* grab his balls while they're both naked. She gets really awkward when she realizes it's her teacher, who's ten years old by the way.
* Goblins, where Biscuit the Orc states that 600 years of demonic torture barely fazed him since members of his clan are taught to accept loss without pain or regret to become immune to emotional pain. When told that his clan was wiped out 200 years ago, he responds with a simple "Meh, oh well".

* Heterodyne hat of romance novels/erotica about her - of the two series mentioned, one is on Volume 12 and the other on Volume 14.
* Harmodius hops into the mind palace of his ally, though his host remains alive and (mostly) in charge. Eventually, the ghost kills the mind of an enemy mage and takes up permanent residence in his body.
* Grand Finale himself taking up residence in the guild hall, forcing the heroes to have to fight their way into their own home.
* Hazmat's main setting is an abandoned warehouse that Jacob's dad worked in.
* Hardison is buried alive in a cemetery by a Mexican drug cartel to whom the funeral director has been selling ID information stolen from the deceased who go through her funeral parlor.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Kumawhat'shisname? It's Kumajirou, in case you wanted to know.
* Hermaeus Mora. It also contains special "Black Books", artifacts which exist both on Nirn (where they act as portals to Apocrypha) and on this plane (where can actually be read and give special knowledge).
* Good Job! is the child of the featured company's CEO, and as such is mostly graded on how quickly they get tasks done - regardless of how much damage they cause to the company in the process.
* Harry Potter fanfics, the premise of which was started as a challenge by an author by the tag of BloodyBrandy, in which after a Vegas bender Harry wakes up next to a woman he married the previous night.
* Golgo 13, one of his employers took advantage of the last clause - since hiring an assassin went against all of his morals, the man hired Golgo 13, and then killed himself rather than live with the shame of doing it, knowing his enemy would still die even if he wasn't around.
* Gundam as yet another attempt to establish aristocratic rule (this time blended with Newtype supremacy).
* headbutts it. This just causes him to stagger off in a daze and say, "Yes, Grandma, I will have another gingersnap."
* Heckle and Jeckle end up in prison after they try to sell escape tools to the prisoners in "Super Salesmen." They escape in "Out Again, In Again" and hide out on a train, only to wind back in prison again at the end.
* Her blonde hair for the first half of her career came about because her initial gimmick on WCW was 'Miss Madness', and Randy Savage suggested she bleach it to fit the Pageant Queen image. She kept the blonde hair long after she switched personas to Mona and later Molly Holly in WWE.
* Hello Cheeky, Barry Cryer does all sorts of impressions of varying quality. Sometimes, however, he just sets them up for himself, such as 'a discussion on the German economy between Adolf Hitler and a horse', or 'World War II'.
* Halloween 5: The Revenge of Michael Myers ends with Michael Myers chasing the protagonists into an eerie, foggy woodlands with a car. When he crashes the car, he gets out completely unscathed and proceeds to stalk the victims through the forest with a butcher knife.
* God of War is seen doing the same thing, hinting that again only came from his size.
* God is respectful of those he speaks to, generally willing to listen to reason (provided you don't question whether there are other gods), wishes his angels were more able to lighten up and have a laugh, and frequently sends people to Hell for little to no reason.
* Heroes, so she only drains youth from trees and pieces of wood rather than people.
* hated episodes, you can tell that Siskel is more carefree and cheery, while Roger Ebert is ever-sarcastic and snarky.
* Grey's Anatomy! He's only been a fairly well-known actor now for the last 20 years or so.
* Gritty, the new 2018 mascot for the Philadelphia Flyers, developed this perception within mere hours of his debut, thanks to a combination of his bizarre appearance and on-ice antics, including apparently

* Harry Dresden is a general protector of the weak, meek, and those who need a place to go for protection from injustice. Lara Raith, a centuries-old succubus, quickly realizes the fugitive
* Hey Arnold! once had Sid trying to pass off Arnold's room as his own to impress a wealthy exchange student.
* Healthy Growth of Huoxingwa, after waking up from a stomachache, Little Monkey pleads to the doctor that he didn't steal any peaches, prompting Huoxingwa to say that there was no mention of any peaches being stolen.
* Hero Clix uses the booster pack model. A booster will have two commons, two uncommons, and one rare. One in (about) every four packs will instead have two commons, one uncommon, one rare, and one super-rare. Given that they encourage you to buy new sets in packs of 12 (you get a free figure if you do), not bad. So, of course, that's not the end of the story. Some sets have chase figures, which have varities varying from 1 in every 50 boosters to 1 in every 100. If you want one, you've got two choices: get extremely lucky, or get over to eBay.
* Heathcliff creator George Gately handed it over to his nephew, Peter Gallagher.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged, after laying down how many souls Alucard has taken into him to realize Release Level Zero and how he got them to Seras, Integra says, "He calls it his...(sigh)...#LifeHack." Seras's response? "He would."
* Her eldest brother, Odysseus, is permanently this: every time he's on screen, he's shown as a rather genuine
* Godzilla named Dr. Demonicus who specializes in mutating animals into Kaiju.
* Healer God: The divine version of a healing specialist often with medicine as a domain.
* Havenhurst: Any tenant who falls off the wagon is dropped into the apartment building's basement, where they're murdered in the most painful, sadistic way possible.
* Gosh Dang It to Heck!: Euphemisms are used in place of foul language.
* granted a lengthy interview, dismayed by what he had seen, managed to track her down and strike up an unlikely friendship with Duvall, helping her to get in touch with old Hollywood friends (many were interviewed for the article and claimed to have not spoken to her in decades) and even hosted a 70th birthday party at her favorite restaurant with some other fans.
* has a girlfriend, their response is to simply wire her some money for a nice date.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, some highlights being the ridiculously shiny and colorful effect the Picto create and the various militaries of different countries in action, especially the American air force sequence.
* Gravity Falls: The Gremloblin's eyes glow yellow when people look into them and see their worst nightmare.
* Hexer von Salem, who'd still like a word with him about quitting on them... — The series in general isn't at all shy about dragging famous historical or fictional characters into its plot, but Lovecraft is probably the most straightforward and prominent example of the trope.
* Go to the comments section of any outlandish article on Yahoo and someone will have inevitably posted, "I'm just here for the comments", indicating that they didn't even read the article and are only interested in what equally outlandish comments a reader made.
* Hearthstone enchanted dinnerware going berserk in his absence and forming a haphazard golem to try and kill you. Defeating the boss unlocks a smaller version of it as a collectible card with the effect of summoning itself for free if it's discarded, depicted as plates and cutlery flying together and forming the creature.
* He's incredibly aggressive with things related to his ego. Even Walt himself notes that he felt like a completely different person after delighting in forcing his son to drink alcohol until he vomited.
* Greebo is, however, a cat (even when magic-ed into human shape), so human sexual morality doesn't really apply to him. Not helped by a common description of him being that of a particularly dominant tomcat — the desire to 'fight or rape anything up to and including a four-horse logging wagon.'

* Heel Face Turned religions — Catholicism is the most common, both being an influence on the first defector and being the only surviving human religion with enough following and influence to be worthy of the label "world religion", but others are also used — they're still thoroughly religious.
* Good Eats: Alton sends his sister Marsha out to buy a "left-handed sandwich press" to distract her while he cooks with his nephew, revealing later that he already has a(n ambidextrous) press and was just trying to get her out of the way. At the end of the episode she returns, and whatever she bought is apparently so large it needs all three of them to move into the house.
* Haré+Guu renders her horror inconspicuous to everyone except Haré, the main character, and to a much lesser degree Dr. Clive, Haré's father. And the Village Elder who always turns into quivering jelly when Guu is around. Though that could be more due to what Guu did to him in the first episode than fear of the supernatural.
* Hide and Q", after it was heavily rewritten by Roddenberry. In this case however, Hurley later admitted that he had been too hasty, and that Roddenberry's rewrite had actually improved the episode.
* "Hell Bent", the Doctor uses time travel-related tech to extract Clara out of time the moment before her death. She must someday return to this moment to prevent a universe-destroying paradox, but until that day, her life processes (breathing, heartbeat, aging) are frozen and she is functionally immortal.
* Guardians of the Galaxy has two examples: while Peter, Drax, and Groot had to fight through an army of Sakaran soldiers to reach the bridge, Gamora simply blasts a hole in the ceiling/floor and jumps up to stand beside them. A minute late, Rocket pulls one better by just ramming his ship into the bridge windows.
* he effectively ends the whole war and unifies the universe halfway through the story.
* Hard-Boiled Wonderland and the End of the World, the one and only rule in The Town is "no shadows", as in they cut off your shadow before you're allowed in. Of course this also takes away your mind so they really don't need any other rules to maintain order.
* Greg Egan would be even more difficult to follow without them. He tones it down for the third book in the trilogy, though.
* Glitter Force is pretty popular, especially with wolf-loving furries, due to having long hair and a skin-tight suit.
* Happy Heroes, Doctor H. thinks he's finally gotten away from the junkyard's guard dog, but the dog reappears right in his car seconds later. Doctor H. looks to his right where the dog is sitting, doesn't react and keeps on driving like normal, and then realizes what he just saw and panics.
* Harry Potter fandom is so large that for any significant character, there is a complete saturation of limelight fics. No one even thinks of, for example, a Ginny fic as shedding light on her character since she has already been so thoroughly explored in previous fics that every possible interpretation of her has already been used thousands of times. In fact, by now the process is mainly viewed as simply choosing your favorite preexisting interpretation (slut!Ginny, innocent! Ginny, tomboy!Ginny, etc.) and running with it. Even when all that's known about the character is a name, a house and a plot point, expect several fics focusing on them and expanding on what little canon tells us.
* Heroes mixed a story in present with flashbacks of the past of Noah Bennet. The first half of the second season has a story with Hiro in the past, which also serves as a back story for a present villain Adam Monroe, concluding with the episode "Four Months Ago", which also served the back story of Maya and Alejandro Herrera. And finally the season three episode "Villains" explains how Sylar became a killer and his complicated relationship with Elle, how Arthur Petrelli ended up paralyzed, and why Flint Gordon got caught by Primatech and his sister Meredith did not.
* He tries to blackmail his parole officer, which would involve turning
* Happy Mondays: "Bez:Bez". For those not familiar with their oeuvre, the main musical contribution of Bez (Mark Berry) was comically inept dancing and a bit of tambourine.

* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality magic doesn't have to make sense.
* Happy Days Richie gets on a local TV game show and is given the answers to the upcoming questions by the MC. After some soul searching he decides not to look at the answers and loses.
* Have a Gay Old Time: Something that was once innocent is given raunchy innuendo by the passage of time.
* Great Moments with Mr. Lincoln, Walt Disney kept having voice actor Royal Dano redo the entire speech, complaining about small things that made it "not quite right," until Dano was absolutely exhausted, and could barely make it to the end, at which point Disney said it was perfect, that it was what a weary Lincoln would have sounded like. He may have had a point, as the speech still induces shivers half a century later.
* High School D×D: Volumes 3, 4, and 9 each take place over a small number of very eventful days.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, where Italy has so many memories of the time loops he starts to forget things from his real past.
* Halo 2's first level again involves fighting off multiple Covenant boarding parties.
* Have His Carcase there's this gem of an ugly scene: "I know I'm being horribly ungrateful—-" "Hell!" All endurance has its limits and Wimsey had reached his. "Grateful! Good God, am I never to get away from the bleat of that filthy adjective? I don't want gratitude. I don't want kindness. I don't want sentimentality. I don't even want love— I could make you give me that— of a sort. I want common honesty."
* Half-Life: Full Life Consequences: John Freeman, Gordon Freeman's Brother and saver of humans.
* Happy Feet: When the teacher asks the penguin chicks what the most important lesson is, one of them asks, "Don't eat yellow snow?", but the teacher says that is not the most important lesson.
* Heterosexual Life-Partners: Two friends of the same gender who are so close that it would be understandable to mistake them for lovers.
* Hanasaku Iroha shows that Ohana's mother Satsuki was a lot like her daughter when she was younger (complete with the same voice actress). The situations were reversed (other work vs the inn) but played out exactly the same.
* Hermione kicks Cormac in the crotch after beating him up for trying to gang-rape her and all the other male students wince.
* Goscinny and Uderzo went so far as to post an apology at the beginning of the English translation of * Highways and freeways. They make things easier for business and tourists, but also bring in a lot of noise and pollution. Residential areas are kept away from these for just these two reasons, and mostly businesses and public service buildings are near them. In the US, highways were built right through cities in the 1950s and the next two or three decades. Why was there no major uproar? Well, the neighborhoods they went through were mostly inhabited by black and/or poor people who had no political lobby (and often couldn't even vote), something which is an all too common "solution" for NIMBYism. Only when highways started to be planned to tear down middle class and white neighborhoods did the "freeway revolts" get going in earnest, stopping many projects in their tracks.
* Gold Digger with Gina and Brittany. As with most children, they mostly get into trouble.
* HERZ but she was not Asuka. Shinji loved Asuka for her beauty, brains, bravery, and fierceness, and being the only person could understand him, and he needed her badly.
* Harry Turtledove forces the Reich to relinquish control over France.
* Grey Delisle is also very popular, although her Rose voice is...less so.
* Greg Weisman, it would've forced Marvel to pay to continue the series.
* Green Lantern has been full of this since the dawn of time, but special mention goes to the New 52 run that, thus far, has been chock full of our two leads getting captured (by the Sinestro Corps, Indigo Tribe...).

* Good Colors, Evil Colors: The good guys are one color, and the bad guys are another.
* Haven, several centuries ago, the evil Mara and William gave hundreds of people dangerous powers called Troubles that are passed on through family lines in an effort to create chaos and suffering. These Troubles and the people who have them tend to adjust to modern times. Examples:
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law) does this in an early episode, complete with inner monologue lampshading that he's doing it.
* Grojband Corey looks lovestruck when he sees her looking like a real girl for once.
* Happens to Spider-Man quite frequently. He's a lithe guy who swings around a lot, wears silly pajamas, and makes stupid jokes. New villains tend to forget that he's held his own with the Avengers, the X-Men, and fought just about every villain in the Marvel Universe. (The rule of thumb is, when he stops cracking wise, start running and don't stop till you're out of New York state.)
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), which moved to a new setting, mostly new cast, and transitioned to sci-fi.
* Hamtaro made many people want hamsters, and in some lands it was a true boom. It faded some years after, however.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, and instead makes the maze hedge itself attack the champions with its branches and roots.
* Hero (1997), Brother Tam's coffin actually contains Brother Tam, who isn't dead at all, and at least twenty different guns. Allowing him to leap out of the coffin and start firing away at mooks left and right.
* Half-Blood Prince when she says of the DA meetings, "It was like having friends".
* He in fact described it as "a cure for not being an ax-wielding homicidal maniac!"
* GUN×SWORD is just Van. Instead of a surname he has a number of nicknames, some compliments and some not (his favorite is "Van of the Dawn"). In point of fact, there are only six characters with surnames given through the entire series: William Will Wo, Ray and Joshua Lundgren, Carul Mendoza (she prefers to go by Carmen99), and Michael and Wendy Garret.
* Harry Potter team member and downing several cauldronfuls of Felix Felicis.
* Hellzapoppin' ready" format: After reciting the prop list, "...we've got everything here but the kitchen sink!" Cue sink, carried by Ole.
* He was framed for the murder of supervillain by that supervillain faking his own death, arrested, and executed by the government to show they had some control over the superhero population.
* high priority that is guaranteed to make the opponent flinch and miss their turn, with the catch that it can only be used if the user has just entered the battle.
* Heralds of Valdemar series, there is the tale of Sun and Shadow, about two lovers who are each under a curse, the woman's active by day and the man's by night. They meet with each other at dawn and twilight, the only times when neither curse is active.
* Hair in Funny Places is intended to reassure kids about to go through puberty. With pictures of a young girl's insides being taken over by grotesque furry monsters representing hormones.
* Help! says to Ringo "Well, you didn't miss your tonsils, did you?", referencing the fact that Ringo had gotten a tonsillectomy earlier that year.
* Her twin children have quite interesting abilities, even if Gil's are more developed: he
* gun? And since Freddy exists in nightmares, nothing he does has to be practical and can be as terrifying as possible. Freddy is basically Rule of Scary incarnate.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), as the history books mention Tamusk used to be cruel and warlike, until he suddenly changed to a fair and just ruler after seeing how Randor and He-Man do things.
* Gunsmith Cats Natasha Radinov uses a Spetznaz knife that shoots its spring-loaded blade.

* hard (as Batman says, "That was your first mistake"), which restores her to life, but makes her a far more vindictive villain than her husband, and feels that his expectation she'd be the same person she used to be is a trap she needs to escape. Freeze later realises the "cure" was based on the B-Zero formula that produced Bizarro.
* Hal Johnson, an African-Canadian athlete turned TV journalist, tired of the racist mistreatment he was enduring on The Sports Network among other Canadian broadcasters, proposed the * High Rollers: One of the dice games—It Takes Two—literally had "the kitchen sink" as one of the prizes. Unlike G-T's shows, this was a gag prize (worth about $250).
* Goliath Spider, which has the amusing flavor text "Most spiders wait patiently for their prey to arrive. Most spiders aren't forty feet tall."
* Heroes of the Storm had the Nexomania! event, a set of skins based around a realm where everything is themed around Mexican wrestling.
* GrimGrimoire flirts with students and makes blatant innuendos towards almost everyone, however he takes his role as teacher and protector very seriously and is highly honourable, especially compared to other demons.
* Higurashi: When They Cry was dubbed, but with a completely different cast.
* Godzilla movie gets heaped on it, even most haters will admit the cartoon spinoff was pretty good.
* Harry's famous curse scar hurts when Voldemort is nearby or feeling a strong emotion. Justified by the magical link between them —
* Heavy Gear, there's even a new term to describe kill sats - ortillery, a portmanteau of orbital artillery.
* GURPS (applying to anyone exotic, not just nonhumans). It's a disadvantage because it makes you trust potentially nasty creatures more than you should.
* Godspeaker Trilogy. The first book is about a nameless brat who rises to Mother of the Heir via slavery and soldiery with divine guidance. Her ambition is to use her son as a 'Hammer' to take over the world. The second book is about a Princess whose father and two brothers die, and she must fight to become Queen in her own right. 3rd book, both queens get to duke it out.
* Graceland gives us Ari Adamian, a sociopathic Armenian gangster who does absolutely deplorable things while making hilarious deadpan quips.
* Hilda Overall, very traumatic waiting for a new adventure, but such is the life of an adventurer.
* Grade Skipper: A student has skipped a grade or two because of their gifted intelligence.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas from Cluckin' Bell, a fictional KFC and Taco Bell look-alike, which stresses how processed and disgusting their food is, as well as the inhumane manner in which the chickens are treated.
* Gone Horribly Wrong: Not only does your plan not work, it fails to work in disastrous ways.
* Grand Funk Railroad name-checks real-life groupie Sweet Connie in "We're An American Band".
* He's also been known to wind up his teammates with outrageous lies about how things were in his cycle, knowing
* Happens frequently to Shinji and Misato in both anime and manga versions of
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, Kumar goes for a full inversion.
* Godzilla films from the VS series have been dubbed into Cantonese twice:
* Guinea Pig Family: The scientist uses their own relatives as test subjects.
* Hellfire wyrms are draconic agents of the Nine Hells sent to the material plane to infiltrate societies and manipulate them and their rulers into committing evil acts, spreading death and misery, and ultimately damning themselves.
* Ground Pounder may be the most unsubtle innuendo they've printed yet, which is really saying something.
* Goodbye Kitty is similar to the above, except it's always one character (Black Kitty) who suffers the abuse.

* Henry Huggins introduces Ramona, the annoying little sister of Henry's pal Beezus. Beezus often has to watch Ramona while hanging out with Henry, causing her to be this trope not only to Beezus herself but also to Henry (who is an only child).
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban when she keeps insulting his family.
* Hidamari Sketch. Hiro and Sae are aware of it, but are apparently sworn to secrecy, only being permitted to warn her about a purple "snake"; Yuno's father sees it, but is distracted by Yuno bringing something else up. Yuno finally triggers it after a bath one day...
* Grim Dawn and hand grenades; their explosives are explicited out as a combination of regular old explosives, sorcery and blessings of an angry fire God.
* has no idea what she's talking about at first, until he remembers negotiating safe passage for several Khans cornered by the NCR back in Boulder City. He's shocked that they remember something like that, given how long it took him to achieve similar adoration from the NCR.
* Gossip Girl before their reconciliation. She's unable to forgive this for a long time.
* Hilarious in Hindsight when you realize that, historically speaking, he was probably conscripted.
* he was taking Tahno's bending away and Tahno was begging him not to do it and then says "I told you I would destroy you."
* Hamlet, usually at the height of their fame. It depends on the director's interpretation and casting choices.
* "Good Luck" Gesture: Crossing fingers, holding one's thumbs, doing a Thumb's Up, making a "fig sign", knocking on wood, or making a box shape with one's hands for someone to break, in order to wish someone luck or avoid bad luck.
* Harry "The Tyrant" Conklin of Jag Panzer. He can (and does) go higher, but his natural register is baritone and he's the living embodiment of badass in metal.
* Hell Is a Martial Artist, the inhabitants of hell refer to him as "Daimakaichoko" (aka Child of the Daimakaicho/Satan).
* GURPS allows you to create these, the example shown having a sports car with VTOL flight capability and energy weapons, and quite respectable armour too.
* Here In My Arms after the latter insults the others for reacting so much to it. Just before blacking out, Kokoa decides it was the "best twenty dollars [she] ever spent".
* Hard to Get begins as a comedic story about an army officer trying and failing to seduce a beautiful woman in a restaurant. Then it's revealed they belong to a race of bloodsucking aliens that have taken over the earth, and their meal is a still-living human woman who has been tortured and trussed up to be served at the table.
* Gotham City Impostors has a group of vigilantes donning Batman-inspired costumes to fight a gang of Joker wannabes.
* Haganai, where Kodaka individually shoots down every character, saying he'd rather not change the status quo.
* Heroes of Might and Magic has a slew of powerful artifacts and artifact sets. The third game has a few particularly potent ones:
* Grendel, with the corrupt Pope's army of fanatics fighting Orion Assante's anti-corruption followers fighting Pellon Cross's horde of vampires, with Eppy acting as a lone agent of chaos and a load of drug-crazed worshippers caught in the middle.
* , Hashirama (in Naruto's body) scolds a young girl writing graffiti on the academy walls because she used the wrong kanji for Mizuki and whore. Even funnier, he's appalled that a 10 year old doesn't know the correct kanji for whore, stating that every Senju knows it by the time they turn eight.
* Gunsmith Cats a gunsmith after all, and she's shown teaching May in the manga. She's never shown working on her own cars though, though she does wank over its capabilities at times.
* Gyrojet accurate than rifles but in later runs one of the jets was partially blocked off by accident.
* Her teammates Sunisa Lee (floor) and Jordan Chiles (bars and beam) stepped up to perform events they weren't expected to contribute to in the final, with all three remaining gymnasts having to compete all four events. The team won silver.

* Heinlein's time bomb. Rico jumps into a building full of Skinnies, throws something at them, and jumps back out. It begins yelling at them in their language: "I'm a thirty second bomb! I'm a thirty second bomb! Twenty-nine... twenty-eight..." The explosion is not described.
* Groove Coaster). Even on their hardest charts, they don't exactly deliver in the challenge department:
* Halo: Ghosts of Onyx. Despite this, she becomes a capable NCO under Lieutenant Kurt Ambrose when training Gamma Company. She also coordinates well with the other Spartans, who mostly communicate by hand gestures and comm beeps anyways. She can't do the Spartan version of the "all clear" signal (an "Olly olly oxen free" whistle), though.
* Harry Turtledove trilogy, a Confederate submarine commander is able to sail, unsubmerged, within sight of a Union fleet at New York City, protected only by audacity and the fact that the Confederate national flag (as opposed to the well-known battle flag) looks a lot like the Stars and Stripes from a distance.
* Grand Theft Auto. In something of a subversion, you can do all sorts of crazy stuff and not be punished, so long as you do it in moderation. The police start taking action at one star, but a quick ride around the block fixes that. Hit two stars, and only heading to a Pay'N'Spray (or other options) will get rid of them. Otherwise, they'll just keep chasing you, and every time you respond with force they'll up the ante. By the time you cap out the wanted meter, you will be hounded by the military in their instant death collision tanks.
* Harry admits that he and Hermione had sex in the tent after Ron left.
* Her brother Linus actually got Snoopy to clear thirty feet during an arc where Snoopy's house was supposed to have to be bulldozed for some reason.
* her: Theodore and Samantha seem like good friends (she even encourages him to go out with another woman and get laid) until one night of intense cybersex kicks their relationship into gear.
* Goodbye My Princess: The opening scene shows Xiao Feng and Cheng Yin jumping into the River of Forgetfulness. The next few episodes show what led to this.
* has three sexes, due to being descended from fungal ancestors. Likewise, only two sexes are needed to reproduce at any one time.
* Górsky & Butch at one point: the whole section of the comic is the movie but it turns out to be an illegal copy with borked subtitles: all sorts of whacky hijinks result from it, most importantly the aliens getting replaced with sheep because their name have been misspelled (makes sense in Polish) - the marines discover a nest with missing colonists hanging on the walls in oversized wool sweaters.
* Halo Wars, your AI-controlled allies usually attack with just one unit, and when greeted with one bullet, immediately runs in the opposite direction.
* Heroic Safe Mode: An earth-shattering revelation or horrible event affects the hero, causing him to flee or fight as an automatic response.
* Godzilla: The Series on which the series is based due to being much more faithful to the source material.
* got their artifacts from colonialism and imperialist looting. This has the double effect. Citizens of former colonies are unable to truly appreciate much of their past since a lot of their cultural heritage is in some far off land too expensive for them to travel and see in person, while citizens in ex-imperial countries have an image of a more complex inter-related world without all the gray stuff removed.
* Harmony Theory, Nightmare Umbra attacks people to force them to prove their strength and worthiness to survive by fighting back. She eventually judges the entire world to be unworthy and wants to drive the ponies to extinction.
* Green Lantern Corps is the police for the universe, and they're all green.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, though since she started applying copious amounts of Dr. Ubbly’s Oblivious Unction, there seemed to be some improvement."
* Hadestown to come work for him in Hadestown. She almost immediately regrets her decision, and luckily for her Orpheus convinces Hades to let him try to get her back from the Underworld. Unluckily for her, the attempt falls through when he looks back for a split-second, and Eurydice is doomed to be separated from Orpheus in Hadestown forevermore.

* Haunting Starring Polterguy: All of the members of the Sardini family do this at some point. They jump very high into the air and often expose their underwear.
* Halo Online remains, including an early, alternate take on the Forerunners.
* Happy Heroes: A Season 8 episode demonstrates summoning a swarm of bats as one of the abilities used by the villain Huo Haha. The bats swirl around Happy S. as he is trying to fight Huo, distracting him.
* Had appearances by John Constantine and Martian Manhunter in the first arc.
* Herman Parish recently launched a prequel series featuring the adventures of her as a schoolgirl. Her literal-mindedness has some charming results, such as the time when she wanted to earn enough money for a bike and took a series of odd jobs, resulting in fiascoes such as when a customer at a restaurant told her that he wanted her to get a pie "and step on it!"
* Grand Admiral Thrawn is widely considered the greatest battlefield commander the Galactic Empire ever possessed, and one of the best in history, to the point of
* Hero Oh Hero is called "The Man Who Fell From The Sky". Burk is introduced when he does just that. Then he improvises a parachute out of his cape.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: First, Snape turned spy for Dumbledore when Voldemort targeted Lily Potter, whom he had always loved. Then, Snape protects Harry and helps him to the best of his ability due to his love for his mother (his mistreatment of him comes from his being a look-a-like of James Potter) during all the books. Later, Harry sacrifices himself so that his friends and schoolmates don't die (and thus casts upon them the same shield his mother cast upon him). Much later, Narcissa lies to Voldemort about Harry being alive because she wants to see her son Draco (which is the signal that they are fed up with how Voldemort has treated her). And, in the end, it's Harry's ability to work with all of his friends that allows them to defeat the Death Eaters. There is also his reliance on and treatment of the horcruxes. They were supposed to prevent him from dying, and they accomplished that perfectly well. The problems were that: a) He was very lax with their protection at times (giving the diary to Lucius Malfoy, for example), because he had so many, and b) He couldn't tell when they were destroyed and so left his guard down.
* Henry IV, Part 1 Hal has a foil in the form of Henry Hotspur, who's everything Hal's supposed to be but isn't.
* Harry does this unintentionally by awkwardly stopping after greeting three of a group of Gryffindors he met on the Hogwarts Express because he doesn't want to alienate his fellow Slytherins by greeting the Muggleborn member.
* Goblin Slayer seriously and seldomly let them be properly used in other properties.
* Higher Ground: After Riley gets trapped in a cave, she finds there's an ancient corpse inside, which it turns out is of a young Indigenous woman. They find out that her body will have to be examined multiple times so it can be determined whether she'd died five hundred years or more ago. If not, it goes to the local tribe for burial, but that could take a long time. Otherwise, she'd go to a museum. Sully and an Indigenous cop (who told him all this) don't like that, deciding instead to give her a burial in the woods.
* Harry and Ginny hook up in the sixth book and are able to have a relationship for about a month until he
* Hamilton, Burr is enjoined in a duel with Hamilton, but is hesitant to shoot at his former friend-turned-rival, and is strongly considering wasting his shot in the air, confident that Hamilton will do likewise. But then he sees Hamilton putting on his glasses. Convinced that the only reason Hamilton would don glasses is to improve his aim, and refusing to let his children be orphans, Burr shoots Hamilton, killing him.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, Hayate kidnaps Nagi aiming for ransom money to pay off his parents' debts, only for Nagi to think that he loved her.
* goes for this, to make sure Keena gets notable focus and even bring up the Student Council Club from minor to main characters.

* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name are complete opposites in every way, yet the two have been practically inseparable for centuries.
* Granted, FFT takes place in a single country, based off of Middle Ages Europe. Make of that what you will.
* Guild Wars requires the player to help the prince find a gift for his beloved. There are three items you can show him; the first two will always be rejected, no matter the order you try them in. An alternative option is to find only one of the items and hand it directly to the birthday girl, who gets pissed that the prince hired someone else to choose a gift for her.
* Half-Life 1, the graffiti the Marines leave on the walls to intimidate Gordon is full of misspellings.
* He eventually has a creepy one, when he is cornering injured Arthur without mercy.
* Goat Simulator, pretty much. Why are you playing a goat? Why are the in-game physics so terrible? Because it's funny.
* Green Arrow and the Canaries spin-off, Dinah Drake (the second Black Canary) appears in 2040 shortly after Oliver Queen's funeral, with all record of her history - along with any evidence of a Black Canary at all - wiped clean in the intervening years.
* Here, Jane comments on how Roxy accidentally said the Unabridged Sassacre's would be "set fire" to instead of "sent fine":
* Half-Life: Alyx reveals that Combine computers run using "memory worms", processors made out of mutated brains with assorted creatures fused into it, such as an occasional rat.
* Heat Move has him throw a mook to the ground, roll him up in a giant snowball before slamming it atop another snowball, finishing with a carrot to the new snowman's face. You can then take the snowman's head off and bash people over the head with it.
* Half Moon Investigations, written by Eoin Colfer, involves Fletcher Moon who is a 12-year-old detective. Somewhat of a subversion in that Fletcher is a certified Private Eye, but he is certified in the US and lives in Ireland. (He took an online course.)
* Henry Esmond, the "Old Pretender" (before he was old) and details a fictional moment of him getting within inches of reclaiming the throne.
* Hilda and Scandinavian folklore. However, there are a few creatures from other mythologies, such as a Thunderbird (Native American) and Barghest (English).
* GUN×SWORD is a coming of age story for Wendy. It's not the main plot, but it's a pretty important subplot.
* Gran Turismo, you can glitch your way through the barrier. If you go too far out of bounds, the game freezes.
* Heroes Save the World: Austin Smith can control fire, but apparently it slowly raises his body temperature as he's doing it. You can see how this might pose a problem.
* Hawkgirl John Stewart's affections (though Vixen was his girlfriend at the time, while Hawkgirl was his ex). Hawkgirl laments the fact that she cannot resolve this rivalry as she could have done back home on planet Thanagar, like by, for instance, poisoning Vixen's water. A little later on, Hawkgirl throws Vixen a bottle of water as the latter leaves the room, who, recalling what the former had said, warily bins the bottle.
* her family deemed unsuitable due to his lack of money. Though she was finally rescued, she never quite recovered, and ultimately in a psychiatric hospital at the age of 64.
* Hearts of Ice, Cologne does this to herself. After being blackmailed by Nabiki into getting her sister out of the Kami Plane -where Cologne's magic had exiled Akane to- the old matriarch states she is going back to China to get an Amazon relic known as the Eye of Kami which will allow to overcome the blood spell. However, there is no such a relic. It was a ruse to buy time while the Kami Plane erased all memory of Akane Tendo.

* Grey Goo, could have consumed and overrun Earth if they ever got a foothold on it, but they never did.
* Higurashi: When They Cry point of view and describes how one-sided the whole thing is for the group and the narration describes him as a monster more than once during the whole thing.
* Guardian has a sisterly version when Yuna, a lonely orphan on Besaid, climbs into bed with Lulu. There are frequent shots afterwards of Lulu holding her protectively.
* He's also one to rescue a falling enemy spy who'd been playing him like a cheap record up to that point, simply because she'd been rendered unconscious and couldn't save herself.
* Guttural Growler: A character with a coarse, raspy growl for a voice.
* Hbomberguy that has Hbomb getting hunted by a masked man trying to stop Hbomb from creating lore analysis videos.
* Happy Heroes: In the title card for episode 31, Big M. dreams that he's got a big dinner layed out in front of him. In the real world, Big M. is chewing on Little M.'s foot.
* Her doing this was so important that the majority of things that have happened in the show wouldn't have happened without her input. The Doctor wouldn't have even
* Growlithe and Arcanine are striped like tigers, but also resemble and behave like dogs. They're actually based on a variation of the Shisa (A creature that could either be half-dog and half-lion or half-dog and half-tiger) from Okinawa folklore.
* GURPS Technomancer, with the 101st Spellborne being the most famous users.
* Harley Quinn the Joker punches Harley Quinn in the face, because... she had hubris on her face.
* Hellboy. He shuts off his heart, then BPRD carries him back to their headquarters. Then Kroenen revives on the examining table.
* Grey's Anatomy their way out of the situation. It gets worse when their daughter finds out her mother is in the hospital and walks in. The daughter is extremely upset at her mother cheating on her new husband, not to mention the hours of therapy that she'll have to go through.
* Hard Target is the head of a hunting business which allows rich men to hunt homeless or down-on-their-luck war veterans.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas also had similar levels during the battles for location dominance against other gangs. First wave has thugs equipped with same pistols and Uzis they always have. Second has shotguns and better guns. Third wave is equipped exclusively with AK-47s.
* Granblue Fantasy, Gran gets the party lost repeatedly on their way to ruins in episode 8. Vyrn explains that he's always been like this and even occasionally got lost in Zinkenstill.
* Hide Me, Kipper! is about a dragon who steals letters from words in the book.
* God Is Displeased: The supreme deity withdraws their protection of mortals over a slight.
* Gorillaz by his father. "The prize? £2.50 and the chance to humiliate yourself further in the biannual county finals." To add insult to injury, he apparently never won.
* Guild Wars 2 with the speed-boosting warcry "Retreat!" Rarely used to retreat, mostly used as the most demotivational gap closer or travel convenience in history.
* Heroic Fantasy has several examples, in particular "Dungeon", "Guardians of Sunshine", "The Limit", "Dad's Dungeon", "Lady & Peebles", "Mystery Dungeon", "Vault of Bones"...
* Gradius games have New Game Pluses in the form of multiple "loops"; after beating the game once, you start over again, with the game at a higher difficulty level.
* Heralds of Valdemar); and Kethry by being forced to confront her rapist and defeat him. There are some Heralds from later novels that also have rape (often child rape) in their backstories — Talia became Chosen after fleeing from a child marriage that would have been tantamount to rape.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers) by the author and without a single effeminate bone in his body.

* Hellsing, the vampire Seras and Pip Bernadotte have significant romantic tension. When the latter is mortally wounded, he ends up having his soul merged with the fully awakened Seras when he allows her to drink his blood, resulting in him becoming her familiar. While he usually exists inside her and can talk mentally with her he can also be manifested at any time she wills it.
* Graduate Meeting of Mutual Killing using the most recent motive (dark secrets)
* Hatsukoi Zombie and develops his own Zombie for "him" despite not knowing anything about Ibusuki. While initially dealt with a tinge of drama in the subplot's introductory chapter, it's played for laughs later.
* Hail to the King to do this, pointing out things like how the Royal Guard's faces are identical, how Celestia and Luna's wings are too small for them to fly, and how the Pegasi and Earth Ponies can hold things when they don't have telekinesis. Unfortunately, this is not a dream and he really is in a magical land of talking ponies.
* Goosebumps of the monster's true nature makes it obvious that the monster is a werewolf, the word "werewolf" is never used in the book.
* Greenfire: Greenfire is nothing like other dragons. He admits that he's never had any contact with other dragons, so his behavior is a mix of his instincts and what he reads of dragons in his books.
* GoLion be wearing in a regular Sentai. The lions just happen to not match their pilot's colors.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army had Hellboy fighting a monster while jumping around on a building, all the while juggling a baby. Most people would set it down or hand it over to the numerous bystanders for safekeeping but thanks to this trope, heroes are free to engage in these theatrics without ever actually harming a child.
* GURPS has this as the norm. Normal butchered meat is illegal and seen as disgusting and horribly barbaric.
* Halloween 4: The Return of Michael Myers: The local bartender and a dozen or so of his customers appoint themselves as one of these when they drive to investigate a blackout and find that the titular serial killer has killed most of the sheriffs department. On one hand, they accidentally kill an innocent man wearing a Halloween mask similar to Michael’s, but on the other hand they do try to evacuate the main characters from the danger zone and some of the surviving members help gun down Michael at the end.
* Halo franchise revolves around a galactic war between humans and aliens in the distant future.
* Henrietta von Marzipan. She was put under a curse that turned her into a boy (It Makes Sense in Context
* Highlander, where Hugh Fitzcairn is killed and any one of his half-a-dozen or so houseguests could have done it. However, as he is immortal, he revives and spends the rest of the episode annoying MacLeod, who is trying to find the murderer without giving away the fact that he's still alive.
* Golf Story by hitting them with special heated balls, and fighting skeletons and wizards by attacking them with golf balls.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law that she uses when she is not sure what to do.
* Godzilla movie, where the submarine is tracking Godzilla approaching them at a high speed.
* Government agent Mike Toreno does this to C.J. throughout his missions in
* Hellsing makes a good college go at it - Millennium only missed one point. If Doktor had thought to make some robots they'd have checked off everything.
* Heel–Face Turn: A villain joins the forces of good out of moral reasons.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers once kidnapped England, but only because he happened to fall into a hole that some kids dug in their yard. They weren't too happy about the situation, and even less happy when Germany dragged England back after he managed to escape.
* High School D×D, relying on maneuverability and holy artifacts their targets can't touch to get the upper hand.
* have, especially given the kinds of records they've had in the regular season some of those years. Brett Favre's penchant for throwing interceptions at the worst possible time is no doubt part of this (see his entry under "Quarterbacks"), but this tendency didn't end with Favre's departure.

* Haruhi Suzumiya, Haruhi in case she ends up destroying the world accidentally.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. Canada is frequently the target of this because he looks almost identical to his brother America, though the countries that are pissed at America wouldn't harm Canada if they knew the difference. That he's very soft spoken means he rarely is able to stop the abuse or convince the other countries (rightfully angry at America) from beating up on him.
* Good Omens (2019): Pollution is nonbinary, referred to in the narration as "they", and played by a woman. Beelzebub is a woman as well, as are the Archangels Michael and Uriel, and most notably God Herself (but she's a just a voice).
* Hägar the Horrible strip, when the family gives a wrapped bone to Snert for Christmas, after calling him "the smartest dog in the world".
* Half-Life 2. They generally carry pods full of troops, but are also capable of carrying non-standard loads, such as Striders and Gordon Freeman's jeep. Considering their biological components, they probably aren't space-worthy, but as all of the events of the game take place within the atmosphere, this isn't a big issue. They're even referred to as drop ships in-game by the Rebels.
* Guanyin from Buddhist and East Asian folklore. S/he's so utterly compassionate that it actually makes her/him awesome at what s/he does.
* Good Launch and eventually Bad Launch acts like this towards Goku and Krillin.
* Grand Theft Auto IV franchise and minor motion capture in lower-profile games.
* Heroes, Kimiko Nakamura, Hiro's sister, is played by Saemi Nakamura. This is probably an unintentional example, as Kimiko is a minor character who was probably given her surname before the casting call went out.
* He puts a Grimer into a bath and tries to wash it off in hopes of there being a legendary bird underneath. It gets Grimer washed down the drain and killed.
* Happy Heroes, Careless S. receives a mysterious notice saying that the other heroes have turned against him. Later in the episode, Happy S., Sweet S., and Smart S. find that note, and Smart S. quips that it should look suspicious just from reading it because... it has two spelling mistakes.
* He took this to heart. His rampages left such a mark in history, he was the reason why the six active Pokémon limit was established.
* he was so hopped up on caffeine and sleep deprivation that, to meet the deadline for release as set by Bethesda and get a good score on Metacritic, he didn't do some critical bug testing after the beta. So players die when their avatars do, and Kayaba, still incredibly sleep-deprived, decided that, to get the best reviews
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone) will simply be confused about why Dudley is so upset at all.
* Hell House LLC II: The Abaddon Hotel, this remains the official explanation for the disaster in the Abaddon Hotel. Cameras also suffer serious distortions and anomalies whenever seriously supernatural stuff starts happening.
* Hidden City while tasked to search for artifacts and is described by the game itself as "terrifying and pitiful".
* Golden Age is beloved and looked up to by her coworkers and many of the prisoners alike, who find that her considerate and compassionate approach to her job have made her like family.
* Headless Horseman, Seth raises his hand in an attempt to ward of the Horseman's axe. Instead, it cuts off his fingers.
* got an upgrade for his 72nd akumatization. On top of controlling every pigeon in Paris, his pigeons can turn people into more pigeons under his command with just a touch.
* .hack. Guess the source of the network crises that happen throughout the series...
* Grow, which includes zombies and blood and has less bright colors than his usual games. It really stands out visually compared to his other games.
* Grossology has an overly large ponytail that goes down to her ankles.
* Godzilla Unleashed. The Earth Defenders goes out of its way to destroy the crystals, even though their efforts do cause massive property damage. The Global Defense Forces work to stop the monsters running amok from trampling all the cities, and try to maintain order throughout the course of the game. The Aliens are loyal to the Vortaak and want to use the crystals to conquer and enslave Earth. The Mutants wish to use the crystals for power and are willing to trample anyone to get it, whether they are monsters, humans, or aliens.

* Guinevere and Merlin become this. They probably have the healthiest relationship on the show, and both were prepared to die for the other within the first four episodes of the show.
* Goblins, Thaco attempts to exploit the fact that he can see in the dark by luring Dellyn into a sewer before fighting him, and blocking off all the manholes so the sewer is pitch black. Dellyn, however, subverts this by casting a spell that provides him with a light source, rendering Thaco's advantage moot.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name centers on the cases of the eponymous Hanna, paranormal investigator, and his new, somewhat decomposed, partner. These cases do not always turn out well.
* Her attempted murder of Kokichi seems to be the most divisive subject when it comes to her. Some fans believe that it was inexcusable given how everybody didn't want her to kill Kokichi and that he seemed to have a genuine confused reaction when Maki told him about him being a Remnant of Despair hinting that everything is not what it seems. Others believe that Kokichi stated that he was the mastermind and him being confused when Maki was talking about him being a Remnant of Despair is not going to stop Maki from thinking that he was the mastermind. Though even those who find Maki's murder attempt inexcusable believe that she was supposed to learn a lesson after Kaito ended up Taking the Bullet after she attempted to kill everybody, and as well as Kodaka stating a comment about him being surprised over Maki being 9th place in the official popularity polls, some fans lead to the conclusion that Maki was given too much favoritism from Kodaka.
* Guilded Age: Not so much in the comic itself, but the reader comments thereof will pick a pertinent topic in a given comic and string out every pun possible from it.
* Gollum is a living Chekhov's Boomerang. First, he (unintentionally) supplies Bilbo with the all-important Ring in
* Hetalia: Axis Powers related to the nations themselves. It's hard to predict what might happen next in the series.
* Grrl Power, sporting "I fought ARC-SWAT and all I got was [blank] and [blank] and my [blank][blank] by Dabbler."
* Heroes of Might and Magic games have spellbooks as something a hero needs to equip in order to learn spells, with no real reason not to get one right away, and most heroes on the Magic side come with one anyway. Some artifacts also function as spellbooks, allowing the wielder to cast magic they normally don't have access to.
* Gods Eater Burst. Just the haft is nearly as long as the average user is tall, and the head could pulp a person in one blow.
* GURPS Bio-Tech gorilla refers to "napes" — naked apes. He apologises.
* He borrows Ruri's bike in episode 1 of season 3 to chase after some more thugs who kidnapped Nagi. In a subversion, when Ruri protests him borrowing the bike, he simply grabs her and takes her along for the ride.
* Hawkman ends with a discussion of this trope, seen on this article's Quotes page.
* Gravity Falls by the time Dipper, Wendy, and Soos break in to rescue her is because she's aware of the nature of the bubble and has decided she'd rather stay. Leaving the bubble would result in facing the next year without Dipper, she believed he intended to stay in Gravity Falls when she returned home for school. The bubble lets her live in a world filled with glitter and rainbows, populated with talking stuffed animals and a cooler, more supportive version of Dipper (a.k.a. Dippy-Fresh). It takes a lot of convincing on Dipper's part to get her to leave the bubble, which she eventually does.
* Have a policy that's unacceptable to most of the public? Say that your policy is really about something else, something that grabs onto people's emotions.
* Harry Potter series. The Ministry of Magic tried to smear him as training up children as soldiers to overthrow them while stoking fear of Voldemort to shift attention away from himself. Harry, chafing against Ministry imposed prohibitions on Hogwarts curriculum, organizes with his friends and like-minded students a secret group to study the magic the government doesn't want them to learn. He calls this group Dumbledore's Army as a reclamation of the Ministry's baseless paranoia, only he's directing them against the very real threat of Voldemort's return.

* high heels when she walks away... then just rolls his eyes and sighs.
* Gundam X. Jacking Mobile Suits to sell them was actually his personal trick of the trade before he joined Vulture and he had quite a reputation for it, with experience to match.
* Gungrave anime: While Big Daddy's mafia is quite stylish and honorable, and there are some scenes with cool cars and houses, it is never a major point of the series. Harry, with his fast cars, white suits, and beautiful women, comes closest to this trope... though of course, it doesn't last.
* hat. Polgara nearly falls into it herself in the prequel novel, but is strongly encouraged not to by her mother.
* Harry Potter to do so. There were arguments on if they should either go with the British cover-style artwork or a more Japanese anime-styling. Ultimately, it proved for naught as Warner Brothers got the licence since they also included film and TV.
* has been entirely removed from the Foundation's database except for a select few, and is generally unpleasing information.
* Haley's father Ian, who was being held ransom. Though she'd been looking for him ever since they arrived on the Western Continent, he turns up quite unexpectedly.
* Green the oviparous, albeit with distinctive mammalian characteristics, Dejah Thoris, who is a Red Martian.
* Green Wing.) Statham comes in late from a telephone call and the game isn't explained very well, so he tells of his best and worst sexual encounters. The worst was with a woman who was on a very heavy period and the best was the mother of two of the characters. After he finishes, there's a long pause and the conversation is moved along.
* Happily Ever After: The story ends with a happy couple getting married and going off into the sunset.
* Henry V kills Sir John Falstaff (who never appears on stage, but did appear in the prequel), The Earl of Cambridge, Lord Scrope of Masham, Sir Thomas Grey, Bardolph, Nim, The Duke of York, the Boy, Mistress Quickly, The High Constable of France, Lord Rambures, The Dauphin, and Lord Grandpre. That's just named cast and not one of them dies on stage.
* Heroic Sacrifice by putting herself between Frank and Riff Raff causing her to be killed by the laser. Frank's reaction? "Stupid bitch." Though, he does say it in a way that hints that he did feel somewhat sorry for her.
* Gravity Falls. According to Hirsch's account, when he asked about the rules, Ward and McHale said there weren't any — then Ward and McHale proceeded to spend an hour and a half bickering about exactly that.
* Goon, working as a bouncer, and being naturally tough, have made Doug the perfect hockey enforcer.
* Halo. They operate their own ships and are allowed to raid non-Covenant ships and colonies.
* Gwenpool Holiday Special: Merry Mixup, who's deliberately pretending to be dressed up as herself, and there's a guy dressed up as Leather Boy (the guy who killed Squirrel Girl's first sidekick, Monkey Joe) only to turn out to be the real deal (and attending so he can off her current sidekick, Tippy Toe, because he's frankly completely crazy). She's convinced that Deadpool's the real deal after he saves Tippy Toe, but since it wouldn't be fair to the impersonators who put in actual effort in their costumes, she gives him a "Minimum Effort" participation badge as reward instead.
* Hiko, Kenshin's mentor, is just as cynical as Saitou. He berates Kenshin that yes, the Hiten Mitsurugi Ryu successor is meant to protect the innocent and uphold justice, but as a warrior unbound by political prejudices, not a political tool. He knows the age of the swordsmen is over and is quite bitter about it.

* High School Musical 3 number "A Night to Remember" (re: the senior prom).
* Halo, she at one point is heard saying a Sangheili prayer for their fallen warriors.
* highstorms, the vast majority of Roshar plant and animal life resembles an underwater biome, and there are no birds. Shinovar is the only exception, and has exported some birds to the rest of the continent. Since the majority are chickens, most people on Roshar refer to all forms of birds as chickens.
* he has to crush because "boys should be with girls, that's heavenly father's plan — so if you ever feel you'd rather be with a man, turn it off!"
* Gorst in one of the sequels, whose love interest doesn't even notice his
* Grrl Power has The Veil, a world wide illusion sustained by several magical obelisks. This covers up the appearance of werebeasts, vampires, aliens, and other assorted monsters, while their actions are kept secret due to rigorous internal policing. The reason supers weren't hidden by The Veil is because they weren't written into its coverage. That's because they could appear anywhere without need for a propagator to track and their abilities were so varied no one could pin down what they were until they were already outed.
* Halo 3. Level: The Covenant. Miranda Keyes makes a Dynamic Entry with a Pelican gunship.
* Gorillaz song "Fire Coming Out of a Monkey's Head." To be clear, 'Monkey' is the name of a mountain. Or so it seems. This is more clear in the music video.
* Gundam SEED, which uses microscopic prisms contained in a magnetic field to bend light around the ship/mobile suit, rendering it invisible to the naked eye and radar. Heat coming from the life support systems is contained or redirected by the field, but if the ship or mobile suit fires its thrusters, the hot exhaust trail will give it away.
* Grand Theft Auto Online: In the "Do You Even Lift?" mission, the players have to acquire one or more Cargobob helicopters, and use them to steal four vehicles by airlifting them out of their driveways and delivering them to the top of a multistorey car park in Pillbox Hill.
* Highsec Pirates also refer to people who habitually wardec industrial corps in cheap frigates and disrupt their industry until they are paid to knock it off. In theory this can be highly profitable, but in practice all the money you make from the ransoms is often suddenly undone by the odd Industrial
* hashihime, sometimes translated as "bridge princess", is a figure from Noh theater who either committed suicide or openly cursed her cheating husband, and was turned into a bridge-haunting spirit.
* Godzilla (2014). This actually complements their separate fighting styles, allowing the two to work together well enough to gain the advantage against Godzilla: While the male is distracting Godzilla, it allows the much bigger and stronger female to attack Godzilla from behind. When Godzilla reacts to this and begins to overpower the female, the male flies around and attacks Godzilla again from behind, distracting him and repeating the cycle.
* guide to playing a druid in WoW is written in language that bears a strong resemblance to lolcat-speak. Once, when confronted by a heckler for his inability to write proper English, his response was several paragraphs of extremely sophisticated language defending his guide, which at the end reverted to his previous style:
* Henry VIII he looked completely different, and before getting injured he was known for his health and fitness, and that he certainly wasn't weak in spirit helps.
* Heroes of Might and Magic without the 'aware of the passage of time' issue. The intent was for to be an indefinite long-term punishment ("for some future generation to take mercy upon"), though circumstances forces Archibald Ironfist to be restored to flesh about a decade later.
* Green Lantern to their younger allies, Hal, John, and Guy act as big brother mentors to Kyle, Simon, and Jessica.
* Half-Life 2 starts in the morning, going through sunset in the boat sequence, night-time in Ravenholm, through to day in the car sequence, then night-time again by the time you get to Nova Prospekt. After that is a time-skip, which is instantaneous for Gordon, and the rest of the game takes place from sometime during the day to around sunset. So from Gordon's point of view, the action is over the course of at most about fiftyish hours.

* Golden Sun: to the Necronomicon, obviously, but also to Tau Mega Therion, the Greek name for the biblical Beast of the Apocalypse.
* High School Of The Dead do this, what with all the scary zombies running around. A notable example occurs at the beginning when a schoolgirl gets attacked by a zombified student and she starts crying profusely. Her friend soon gets attacked as well and cries in the same fashion.
* H. Beam Piper's Terro-Human future stories presuppose that World War III destroyed civilization in the northern hemisphere in 1973. Few of the stories examine the war itself.
* Higher end figure companies like Papo and Rebor are known to do this with their figures. Multiple color variants of dinosaur figures are often released together. Papo in particular has repainted movie inspired figures like their
* Heterosexual Life-Partners: Two people of the same sex who are very close friends with no romantic/sexual feelings.
* Guise is extremely prone to elaborate showboating and trying to make everything revolve around him. It's one of
* Having dispatched all the guards, the hero swaggers up to his love interest, who had been tied to a chair by the villain. He reaches out, gently takes her face in his hands...and accidentally breaks her neck.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, after 25 episodes of happy, lighthearted hijinks, Michel dies at the end to rejuvenate the Tree of Life, Kim leaves the island, and the villains still have their floating castle.
* Haunted Mansion and the Hatbox Ghost) no less than 999 Happy Haunts in Gracey Manor alone, and that's not even counting the mortal characters and the spooks from Phantom Manor.
* Han explains in the first such scene that money isn't really important to him.
* Gossip Girl later on, and even refuses to have sex until they can admit they love each other.
* Godzilla could shoot. Though middling in range, their hitting power is lethal, and in conjunction with grappling an opponent, can bring their lifebar down by around 75%.
* Green Day, "the representative from California has the floor", and in "Youngblood", "she said 'fuck you, I'm from Oakland') with wherever the show is.
* heavily already. Stephenie Meyer seemed to be under the impression that there are humans in real life with the ability to see the future and that such a trait is on par with qualities like "compassion".
* Gravity Falls, and features rainbows that include "colors only bees and art students can see".
* "Goo Goo Gai Pan" sees Homer mistake Shaolin Monks for this, and pulls some faces at them. The monks respond by subjecting Homer to a protracted beatdown that culminates with one of them ripping his heart out,
* Halo: Reach, and every other multiplayer FPS with a character creator, most players are normally dressed in gaudy and brightly-colored fatigues and armor.
* Gulliver's Travels than just the Lilliput section. This gets compounded by a lot of publishers choosing only to publish that section.
* Hero Factory went this way for the 2014 sets. Instead of re-releasing the heroes with new armor and weapons, they were released as minifigures and put inside mechas to battle huge subterranean monsters.
* High Deryni to kill) which also prevents Deryni from using their powers, and the other is an "antidote" which slows the initial symptoms of the first but hastens its end result.
* Grindhouse cool cars, but not both (couldn't risk wrecking the Shelby GT your buddy lent for the shoot, after all).
* Happy Tree Friends has a variation of this idea, where blueprints are messed up and the house built is an amalgam of upside-down rooms, doors leading to nowhere, deadly pits and hazards, and twisted halls that lead to the deaths of many of the careless characters wandering within.

* He not only allowed Kallen to serve under him, he also helped her sort out a delicate situation involving her father
* Hetalia: Axis Powers has a particularly grating example on one of the episodes where they're stuck on a desert island: About 10% of the footage is reused from the previous desert island episode, and then the rest of the episode is literally footage that repeats twice EXACTLY THE SAME WAY. Fandom has named that island 'That F-ing Island', just to poke fun.
* Greg Weisman about the significance of the number 16 on the show, he replied with "<chuckles evily>". He answered that question on the sixteenth of the month.
* Grand Prix, Austrian Helmuth Koinigg crashed into an Armco barrier. The lower beam wasn't properly secured and buckled as the vehicle struck it. The car passed underneath the top portion... which was very firmly bolted on. Yikes.
* "hair of the dog that bit ya"). It's as much fun as it sounds, but seasoned drinkers swear by it.
* Hellsing. He can get away with it due having immense strength and reflexes because of his vampiric nature.
* he tries to invoke it to return her memories after she crosses the town line. It not only doesn't work, but also scares the poor girl senseless, and seriously hampers his attempts to get her to trust him afterwards.
* Grease. She has a brief stint as a cheerleader, in order to attempt to catch Danny's eye. It turns out she's horrible at it and is dropped from the squad. It doesn't make her any more attractive to Danny, either.
* Going Commando kept the trend by reducing it to a single button press).
* Herald Alberich. When he realizes that the actor Norris is trailing him, he goes into a large inn and "happens" to mention the fact that Norris is outside to a roomful of young ladies ... then dives for cover as they charge outside and mob Norris.
* he did have a point about the Treaty of Algeron (which let the Romulans keep their cloaking devices while the Federation gave the technology up) putting Starfleet at a serious disadvantage.
* Hero Worship. Over the course of the day, he becomes more and more liquid until he's a puddle on the ground. When he sleeps, he reforms into whatever shape the liquid settles in. To look human, he sleeps in a mold.
* Haikyuu!! Hinata likes to describe movements, tosses, and attacks with words like "bwah!" "oomph!" "gwah!" when he gets excited (which is always). Tsukishima points out that none of what he says makes sense on more than one occasion.
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret. She does this in a skimpy Santa outfit, on the advice of a medical "guidebook" written by her younger sister, who's been working to get the lovebirds together the whole time. Haruka's not very aware of how shocking this is, but Yuuto is.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, Chapter 7: "Something is wrong. I shouldn't be here."
* Harry Potter The author boldly stated in her notes that Hermione liked it now because she (the author) liked it. It was such a blatant example that it soon became shorthand for "the characters must like what I like!"
* Gravity Falls, spends most of his episode in a form inspired by Slender Man. His overall body has a very similar design, with a humanoid look, though one with long legs & hands and his face hidden behind a mask. He's also a bit of an urban legend, who likes to stalk and eat children and likes to keep to the shadows.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, covering him on the magical end too.
* Higurashi: When They Cry!? In fact, the final arc features a literal puzzle where you have to piece the TIPS (basically, hints and backstories) together.
* Harry Potter states that while none of the creatures Luna "Looney" Lovegood claims exist actually exist, the fact that she accepts their existence helped her in discovering many real magical creatures that were previously unknown.
* He stands, to find himself surrounded by thousands of soldiers, who he once trained to never miss their targets."
* Halo 3, when the Flood crash in Earth and start spreading at the nearest city, an Elite fleet comes in and helps contain the Flood.

* Gods Need Prayer Badly, over time "old gods do new jobs" in order to retain believers. Susan sees proof of this when she sees how the Hogfather has changed from his original incarnation to his current form.
* healing and protecting units. The Paladins Holy Light spell heals a significant amount of health to units and deals half damage to Undead units, while the Death Knight's Death Coil spell does it the other way around. The Paladin has the Resurrection ability which brings allied dead units back to life, while the Death Knights turns any dead units into invincible Undead units for a short duration.
* Harry Potter and the Mists of Avalon by a potion gone wrong. Much later, an antidote to the potion is developed, but by then she has spent so much time as a girl that she chooses not to change back.
* Hey Arnold! is the resident jinx of the show, and in almost all of his appearances would get injured or screwed over in some way that was out of his control. Eugene-centric episodes are about Arnold taking pity on Eugene and trying to help him or prove he wasn't a jinx, only for it to horribly backfire. Funnily enough in one episode Eugene proposed the idea that Arnold was the jinx because bad things happened to him when Arnold was around, though other episodes proved that wasn't true. He even once mentioned that he was born on a Friday the 13th
* He just told them to add more weight). He was actually trying to spare his family the loss of his property, which would happen on a conviction of witchcraft (as was inevitable). Under common law, no trial could be held if the accused would not enter a plea. "Pressing" under heavy stones was the method used to force this out of one that refused to. Giles died, but he did so legally innocent and his family inherited his land.
* Her Code Name Was "Mary Sue" — The original Mary Sue wasn't a normal woman who only fantasised about doing great things.
* Happy Tree Friends has "Dunce Upon a Time" which is a retelling of Jack and the Beanstalk, with Lumpy as the giant.
* Hayasaka's status as Kaguya's personal valet is supposed to be a secret from their classmates, hence why they rarely spend time together during school hours. The only student who knew the true nature of their relationship * Grew Beyond Their Programming: An AI that becomes sentient through experience.
* Hebrew and Arabic are fairly closely related languages, to begin with, and Israel itself has a large Arab and Arabic-speaking minority (in addition to more obvious complicated relations between Israel and its Arab neighbors). A large number of Israelis, especially those in military, intelligence, or diplomatic services, speak excellent Arabic, albeit often with a fairly distinctive accent.
* "HEY NIKO, IT'S ROMAN! LET'S GO BOWLING!" friends what feels like every ten minutes, inevitably interrupting whatever it is you're doing, they always want you to come and pick them up for whatever activity, despite them possibly being an extremely long drive away from you. They'll then have the nerve to complain about you being late, to the point you frequently lose approval. Oh, and accepting an invitation from one friend won't stop another from calling as well, and turning the second invitation down will still lose you brownie points with that person, despite how you're obviously otherwise occupied. Not to mention that you can also randomly receive a text from a friend you haven't been out with in a while complaining about not seeing you, complete with an added loss of approval. By the end you're left wondering why all of Niko's friends are so incredibly codependent.
* Haikyuu!! where opposing teams are never villainous, they simply have different philosophies and strategies. The opposing teams and characters' own emotional backgrounds are explored enough that it is hard not to feel bad when they lose or not to cheer when they win. A famous saying in the fandom is "The best thing about Haikyuu is you love all the teams. The worst thing about Haikyuu is you love all the teams".
* HappinessCharge Pretty Cure! marked, they wanted to do something new.
* Hercules likes to spy on nymphs. They... don't appreciate the attention.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, Timothy Adams got third billing as Brucie Kibbutz, who has no involvement in the main plot of the game.

* Hardcore Holly to take the move correctly). Nonetheless, it demonstrates why these moves are done together.
* Hey Arnold!", which starts off pretty sad, has a mix of action and comedy in the middle, and then suddenly takes a turn to the depressing at the end.
* grappling hook?) during the qualifiers and had no penalties for that either.
* Heaven's Feel, Sakura drops her rather plain pastel outfit and goes with a form-fitting black dress with red trimmings instead. Since the dress is made of pure magic, she's technically naked.
* Heretics of Dune, however, so he has to be careful to avoid hurting himself, and he uses energy at a rate commensurate with his increased activity level.
* Hack/Slash, slashers often have powers of some kind, usually having something to do with their MO from when they were alive. Bobby Brunswick, who worked at an animal clinic euthanizing animals before he died, has the power to raise dead animals and command them to do his bidding.
* Harry Potter. As Snape said, he "has a tendency to wear his heart on his sleeve." He gets better, though. Naturally, the fact that Snape is an accomplished legilimens (telepath)
* Grey Worm incites the slave revolt that topples Meereen from within.
* God of the Dead, Erlik in Turkic mythology turned into the God of Evil and ruler of hell after the Turks entered in contact with the more monotheistic faiths of the West. It is believed that their originally shamanistic polytheist religion become more dualistic like Zoroastrianism with a good god Tengri and a bad god, Erlik.
* Happy Tree Friends state and discovering himself to be covered in the intestines of one of his friends.
* goth, Andrea, working in a wholesale club in full uniform. She's deathly afraid they will mock her for having that kind of job, as she is aware that Daria and Jane are the school's queens of snark. However, she is pleasantly surprised when the girls reassure her that they understand her position and promise not to tell anyone.
* High-Speed Missile Dodge with a non-combat helicopter to escape an alien drone and then got Weir's attention by discovering he had the Ancient gene and could command their technology seemingly without effort. As Weir was a civilian diplomat rather than military commander, his rebellious streak didn't put her off (especially as it was motivated by personal loyalty) and she persuaded his superiors to let him onto her expedition since establishing a base in an entirely different galaxy required out-of-the-box thinking type people. Still, the mission's military commander Colonel Sumner, a far stricter by-the-book officer, didn't like Sheppard for his past and made it clear he wasn't welcome. Later after Sumner was killed Sheppard became Weir's second in command so Sheppard's superiors tried to replace him. Luckily Weir stepped in to defend him and he was safe with her support, but it was still obvious many of the other military commanders disliked him.
* Heralds of Valdemar, Mags plays several parlor games with his new friends. This is one of the rare occurrences where someone finds "I Spy" to be fun; to be fair, this is pretty much the first time Mags has ever been able to play games.
* Go Nagai movies and mangas with titles pretty much informed those works' fans all they needed to know:
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City, the player is recruited by an old Haitian woman to help out her son in an upcoming gang war. This mission involves assisting a group of a dozen Haitians as they fight off wave after wave of Cubans. This raises the question of exactly which of the dozen Haitians is the son you are trying to protect, as mechanically and graphically they are all identical. However, the mission is a failure only if ALL the Haitians die, which means that 11 of the 12 are "expendable", i.e. NOT the son you're supposed to protect. Thus one can conclude that the son will always be the final Haitian killed, regardless of the order in which the Haitians go down.
* HERZ: Misato feels she has much blood on her hands because she has done many questionable, shady things. And she did everything because she loved Shinji and needed to see him happy.

* Hack/Slash usually take out those slashers rather easily by just finding their resting place on a regular Tuesday and blowing it up while they are still hibernating.
* Got Milk?" ad from 1995 has a man nervously buying Trix alongside more "grown up" cereals like Wheaties. As it turns out, he's so nervous because he's the Trix rabbit in disguise. The joke finishes with him being out of milk when he tries to eat the Trix.
* Heart in the Wrong Place the heart, while the heart itself is mostly hidden behind the sternum.
* High Time to Kill lifelong rival, who just happens to be an expert in mountain climbing.
* Grand Theft Auto Online when you have a silencer attachment on the standard pistol will have your character consume a pill and die in a hurry, as opposed to the character simply capping themselves.
* Glorianna has been hired for this position on a couple of occasions.
* Greedy, Daniel McTeague's father qualifies, having walked away from Uncle Joe (and his money) because he didn't want to get turned into a greedy sycophant like the rest of the family members did. He even points out this reason to Danny when he shows up to call him out on what he'd done to try to get into Uncle Joe's good graces.
* hides her pregnancy with his hat out of shame before their picture is taken.
* Hercules features Aphrodite, she has the traditional long golden hair. When we get a good look at her in the spin-off TV series, the hair goes just above the ankles.
* Gordon Korman for something, and the telescope's new owner is willing to trade it for Jeremy's latest possession. So in the end, Jeremy gets his telescope back and everyone's happy.
* Harry Potter). And all the Muggles... which is most of the world's population. Granted, it could still apply since the Wizarding World is the primary setting for most of the series, but it's an important plot element from time to time that the majority of the planet has no idea magic even exists.
* Haven tries to escape the heroes in a motorboat, they shoot the engine and it explodes. Since they don't find any remains, they assume the Killer survived and is still at large. They are correct.
* Hell House LLC II: The Abaddon Hotel, it's very much the exception for people to leave the hotel instead of the rule. A handful of thrillseekers seem to survive but most don't. Former guests are stuck in the hotel, never able to leave.
* Glory Road has horse-analogues with eight legs, on an alien planet. They are used as draft animals.
* Gone with the Wind, Melanie Hamilton is described as plain and homely by everyone who encounters her, and she marries Ashley Wilkes, whose good looks are expounded upon more than once by the narrative and the main character, Scarlett O'Hara.
* Harper's Island. Even though it mostly consisted of "hey watch me do bad stuff in front of you."
* Half-Life 2 is a combination of American and association football, with the addition of grappling hooks, booster jets, and guns. The jets are mostly there to make big hits as deadly as possible.
* Happy Wheels, the Wheelchair Guy will sometimes shout "Ow, my leg!" when his legs are broken. The Pogostick Man will shout "Ow, my arm!" if his arms are broken.
* Hate Sink: A villain who is intended to be hated by the audience. While a lot of Card-Carrying Villains are too goofy to truly hate, making a Hate Sink openly gloat about their evil nature is a good way to invoke disgust from viewers.
* Happens again, this time by Adam with a matchbook jacket, with the 1,000,000 match bomb YouTube special.
* Greyhawk), but it's not made up of alternate universes. Rather, it's the term used for the system of heavens and hells, elemental planes, the Astral Plane, and so on; the different campaign settings are planets in the same universe.
* Harry, sorted into Ravenclaw, is surprised that Dumbledore hasn't demanded he be resorted into Gryffindor.

* Hard Core Logo that it's hard to pin the ensuing trainwreck on any single member's single major character flaw.
* He's a follower of the dark back, and in the second game he's a zombie.
* Help, Help, the Globolinks!, the first change that happens to humans who have been touched by Globolinks is that they become unable to speak in a human voice.
* GURPS handbooks, the example given for Delusion is "all purple things are alive." How big the Delusion is (how many points it's worth) depends not on the nature of the Delusion, but on how much it affects your character's behavior. In practical terms, this Delusion could range from saying hello to purple objects and patting them (Quirk or Minor Delusion) all the way up to attacking purple things on sight (Major Delusion) and refusing to talk until all of them are taken from the room.
* Grimm. He immediately swims away as soon as she gives the ball back, but the girl follows him into his underwater kingdom, and the king's father demands that he honour his promise. He pretends to be leading her to his quarters and drowns her, at which point she transforms into a beautiful frog princess, and explains that she was kidnapped as a tadpole and transformed into a human (but such an ugly one that no human man would marry her). The frog king marries her and they live happily. (There seems to be no frog analogue to True Heinrich, though.)
* Gorillaz project, she has mastery of all forms of weaponry as well as hand to hand combat.
* has not been very well socialized says this was intended to be their breakup scene), their parting is solemn but friendly and she kisses him on the cheek.
* Goldfinger has the big game room at his stud farm that transforms into a presentation room, then a gas chamber.
* GURPS chainsaws do more damage than any other melee weapon. Unfortunately, they're terribly difficult to use.
* Happy Heroes: Subverted in Season 13 episode 2. Happy S., Smart S., and Careful S. don bee costumes to infiltrate a hive of giant bees, and as they approach the hive a leaf passes by Happy S., making him sneeze and lose the head to his costume. Bee guards outside the hive notice the costume's head and think it's the cut-off head of an actual bee, too panicked to notice the Supermen who just beat them up and enter their headquarters.
* God of War) tend to have them (at least their ruling class, the Spartiates) as a city-state of proud warrior guys. Ancient Sparta itself may have been a real-life version of the trope, along with many other warrior cultures of history.
* He then receives a phone call from a friend telling him Joannie died in a car crash.
* Harry Dresden, and many books end with him barely able to stand under his own power.
* He topped the hip-hop charts twice: "Gold Digger" and… "Stronger"? Nope, that only reached #30. The other #1 was "Mercy". While still an urban classic, it isn't nearly as legendary as "Stronger".
* God of War II: To reach the Fates, one must sacrifice himself after reading the incantation to do so — and since Kratos has a translator doing the reading...
* her own soldiers is treated to a kind of reverse discrimination when Gallian soldiers begin genuflecting her in the canteen.
* He apparently became a Conspiracy Theorist after something in the report on JFK's assassination didn't add up for him. Then he rereads it and discovers he got that particular detail wrong. With the correct detail in place, the whole thing "makes complete and perfect sense", leading him to abandon this status...
* Hannah Swensen, where Hannah mentions an incident in high school when she, Andrea and Janie were all at Hannah's home studying, and Hannah decided to make grilled cheese sandwiches for them. She'd already started when she found out they were out of regular cheese, so she sliced some cream cheese instead and used that in place of the regular cheese. The trio considered the resulting sandwiches to be very tasty, and Hannah's been making them ever since.
* Hard Target in a workshop full of old parade floats, but there is no smoke, and no one suffers any ill effects from radiant heat, smoke inhalation, toxic fumes, or any one of the other myriad hazards that should be present in an enclosed, burning, industrial environment.

* Goldfinger bluffs that his death or vanishing will just activate another agent who will share Bond's knowledge of Goldfinger's "Operation Grand Slam" plan, presumably one that would assume 007's loss to be the direct result of Goldfinger himself. While Goldfinger at first (and correctly) concludes that Bond only knows the name of the plan, Bond convinces him that that is a chance he can't take. Goldfinger thus decides to keep Bond alive so that MI6 still believes him on top of things and won't send another agent who has Bond's knowledge and is at liberty.
* her daughter so each generation of the line basically has an instruction manual on how their powers and magic work, and how to confront evil.
* High Speed: How else can you describe a game centered on a high-speed police chase in an exotic car with a sexy blonde in the passenger seat?
* "Helene on Toilet Paper", has her frantically rushing through the forest until she luckily spots a lone toilet in a clearing.
* haunting seat number 1 gained almost complete exclusivity of the spot since it had become infamous as the seat that gives an otherworldy chill to those who sit there.
* High Noon. Just in case the audience weren't sure about this, the number 12 on the bar clock is replaced by the words "High Noon".
* Harry Potter, and they remain lying in repose for several days while four Requiem masses are held for them in different countries. The last one takes place in Portugal and is attended by a few Hogwarts professors and a few other wizards (despite the place being packed with Muggles).
* Hey Dugee is always based on these. "The Super Squirrel Badge" and "The Drawing Badge" are just a couple of examples of installments of the show.
* Heart of the City uses this visual as well, albeit more often with laughing than shouting.
* God's Club and having twisted messages about mental health and prescription drug usage. It is also assumed the distributor took it seriously due to it being marketed as a normal Christian film of the "persecution complex" type.
* Glee version of herself in the episodes "Bad Reputation" and "Journey".
* Goodnight Sweetheart time traveler Gary Sparrow (who is married in the present day but is having an affair with a woman in 1940s Britain) upbraids his friend for cheating on his wife. When the obvious hypocrisy is pointed out to him, Gary replies "That's different. All my indiscretions are in the past. Even my future indiscretions are in the past."
* Highschool of the Dead and someone shouting "OH YEE~EAAHH!!" for added emphasis.
* Happy Tree Friends, as just about every death and injury, no matter how gory (and gory they almost always are) is shown onscreen with no discretion. However, there have been moments where the deaths happen offscreen. The first example of this in the series was in "Nuttin' Wrong With Candy" where Nutty gets trapped under a vending machine as its spiked dispensers lower towards him; the closest one scrapes his eye before we cut away, blood leaking out from under the vending machine. Another happens in "Party Animal" when Flaky, after swelling up due to an allergic reaction, is accidentally popped by The Mole with a pin; we cut away just as the pin pokes her eye and see blood, limbs and other body parts flying across the screen.
* Green Aesop featuring the first appearance of another member of the Doctor's race.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, the newly christened Guardians set off into space to do not "something good" or "something bad", but "a bit of both", while "I Want You Back" by the Jackson 5 plays in the background. The screen then cuts to "The Guardians of the Galaxy will return".
* Heironymous "Hip" Flask is a private eye and anthropomorphic hippo in the
* had David murdered in prison to keep him from exposing him. Emily's vendetta then shifts to finding the assassin responsible and executing him, although she later forfeits this plan.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas". Unfortunately, that just turns him on more.
* Grand Theft Auto III says absolutely nothing, causing CJ to call him a "mute asshole".

* Hanekoma, though if you try putting the cartridge into different DS's, you might find another one to buy there.
* Hellsing against all Protestants and Catholics who disagreed, including Iscariot).
* Higurashi: When They Cry to do so). And when she guesses right she shoots her, anyways.
* Grand Theft Auto, where he suffers various humiliations from the protagonists.
* Hansel & Gretel: Warriors of Witchcraft to secure successful futures.
* He makes one to the confrontation between Lor and Dib and the Irkens by kicking open Lor's door. Lor complains about it, since he's the one who has to pay for damages.
* Good Will Hunting: Will, the isolated, delinquent, genius teenager from the slums of Boston, and Sean, the middle-aged, dissatisfied and lonely community college psychology professor form a relationship that makes up most of the plot.
* Halo Wars leaves it ambiguous as to how much of that is simply visual trickery.
* Hercules to Aphrodite (far from the only difference in the adaptation) but is fiercely protective of her, in one episode beating the crap out of Hades for making a pass at her.
* Hearts of Darkness: A Filmmaker's Apocalypse) narrates by reading excerpts from her diary in voiceover.
* Harley Quinn: When Harley starts her own gang she gets several, including a remnant of one of Joker's gangs who is disappointed she isn't more violently destructive.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, Kim can pilot Honeybee in any situation and uses all of its modes to their finest capabilities.
* Grapefruits are a citrus fruit, not an actual grape. They got their name because they grow in clusters, which look like bunches of grapes—but "grapefruit" isn't their original name. They were originally known as "shaddock" or "shattuck" until the 19th century.
* High School D×D. Seeing as Issei was still in deep thought, he nonchalantly raises his arm, finds that there's no hole and the realization hits him that he gets volunteered to be Asia's partner.
* Hard-Drinking Party Girl and older than most, she has shown to have this side to her, mostly to her younger sister.
* God marks Cain to shield him from any retribution for the murder of Abel his brother.
* Grand Theft Auto games; the most common variant being when a mission requires you to appropriate certain police vehicles to take advantage of the badge.
* Halloween Unspectacular. And they engineered the whole Watergate scandal in order to ruin Richard Nixon when he wouldn't play along with their plans.
* Happy Days in this case — had nearly engulfed the restaurant, but even so, the three have to rely on some outside help to escape.)
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi breaks a mirror by looking in it as a result of the girls trying to get him an unsuccessful makeover in "Stupid Cupids".
* Harry Treadaway is American, but she adopts an English accent for her role so that it's more convincing that her character is Narek's sister).
* Heartbreak High: A plotline involving two characters wanting to join the army leads to several episodes in basic training.
* Hannah Montana, Miley takes on ice hockey and is tackled by the other team in the goal.
* Guild Wars: In the Charr Homelands there is a ridge in the middle of a lake with a peculiar appearance, almost as though it were a scaled hide. Come the sequel this "ridge" is revealed to be the back of the hibernating Elder Dragon Kralkatorrik.
* Helloween's "Dr. Stein" is about a mad scientist who creates monsters.
* Half-giants (from an open content sourcebook) believe in the gods, but generally, don't consider them important.
* Hammer's Slammers for transport, the Slammers use open-topped armored cars. Although the Indigs and assorted mercenaries they face are not as well equipped, they still can pose enough a threat to Hammer's men.

* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, Dumbledore says he partially attributes the mania of the Gaunt family to frequent marriage between cousins in an effort to keep the bloodline pure.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas is this after Carl causes him to crash and asks for any last words. Eddie's response? "Can I fuck your sister?"
* Hero", in order to infiltrate a group of racist 'pure' demons (who look down on humans and hybrids, like vampire and werewolves) Angel snaps Doyle's neck. However, it's revealed that Doyle, who is half demon, comes from a species that can actually survive this.
* Grand Design connected to it. Though he also says that Jade's status as such is a moot point by now, since enough outside interference has damaged the Design to the point where it's doomed to collapse no matter what now.
* Grand Finale features Burt doing this to Scratch. He even made sure to reinforce the concrete around the coffin so it wouldn't crush her and installed a small ventilation fan to supply oxygen. Burt wanted Scratch to starve the way she starved him during his months of captivity.
* Harry Potter: "Then, dear readers, Harry notices a tear in Snake's pants and blood all over her leg, and Snake notices that Harry has noticed, and he notices she noticed that! I mean, there is a trade of noticing going on that is just bewildering."
* "Gonna Get Along Without You Now" sung originally by Teresa Brewer,
* Haruhi Suzumiya. This is par for the course as he also knows a girl who may destroy the universe whenever she gets PMS and another who kidnaps the entire world just to be alone with him.
* Hell, even if you know the original title, there's a good chance that you'll associate "U.N. Owen" with Flandre Scarlet more than you will
* HERZ glomps Shinji, much to his chagrin (since Kurumi cannot get in her head he is married... and his wife is temperamental and very jealous).
* Goldstone: It is unclear if the two appearances of Jimmy's 'ghost' were supernatural or not. The two witnesses both had good reason to hallucinate the vision, with Jay being drunk and Tommy suffering from a guilty conscience.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire movie, Severus Snape keeps catching Harry Potter and Ron Weasley whispering about the Yule Ball during a test. One of Snape's attempts to get them to stop involved grabbing a book and whacking it against the backs of Harry and Ron's heads.
* GURPS Reign of Steel has one of the Zone Minds that have taken over the world, Tel Aviv, keep control of its surviving human population via robots disguised as angels that have convinced them that it's God.
* Gunnerkrigg Court: Antimony is named for the element, and both parts of her mum's maiden name refer to it — "Surma" is (close to) Russian for "antimony", and "Stibnite" is antimony sulfide.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series have a habit of ending up dead by the end of the episode they debuted in.
* Grimm. It turns out that the two species have had a feud lasting for ages. In another episode, a Bauerschwein chef is found to be putting a toxin into his meals that is fatal to Blutbaden but harmless to humans and other Wesen. He is completely indiscriminate in this and does not care that many Blutbaden have now forsaken the old ways and never killed anyone. In both cases, Nick is able to use his position as a Grimm and a police officer to arrest the killers and prevent further retaliation.
* Hanna-Barbera, whom people frequently mistake for The Pink Panther and vice versa.
* Harry Potter and changed his character just to make Hermione look cooler.
* Harry has Dobby put a bucket of soapy water and a charmed scrub brush over the door to Snape's quarters. After Snape gets hit with the water, the brush starts scrubbing his hair.
* Groundhog Day in the town, though the interest is caused more by concern than by attraction.

* Greyhawk even have political ambitions and personal grudges as their motivations for accepting the mission). This is a stark contrast to the cliche assumption of adventurers being noble, heroic figures — or at least that their dungeon-crawls have no significant political impact.
* Gone series is one of a large number of characters without super powers, and shows subtle signs of both hatred and jealousy towards his empowered peers.
* has Harry mention that happening to Ginny the day he intended to propose to her.
* Heart of the Swarm dropping some foreboding foreshadowing that the United Earth Directorate will probably make a comeback to the Koprulu Sector one day.
* Here Lies Arthur tells the story of how Merlin (not a wizard) built up the legend of Arthur (not a hero, but a common warlord, and a fairly stupid one at that) using a web of deceit and the help of the book's young protagonist.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Sealand is excitedly noticing that Iceland is being auctioned off while using a laptop with two cherries as its logo.
* Halo 4 also does a variation after Master Chief manages to jumps off his Ghost before it runs off a cliff; Chief comes to a stop right at the cliff's edge and watches as his Ghost falls into the fog below.
* Granblue Fantasy, Sachy is a mysterious war beast who always accompanies Melleau, and it wears that mask for a reason. Nemone (Melleau's sister) tried to take a peek under it once and ended up comatose for three days.
* Grateful Dead member Robert Hunter joined the group in 1967 just after they recorded their debut album, remained an official member until they broke up in 1995 and was inducted with the other members into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. What made him different from all of the other members was that he wasn't part of the band as a musician, but as their primary lyricist. Band leader Jerry Garcia even referred to Hunter as "the band member who doesn't come out on stage with us" and considered him to be just as much of an official member of the Grateful Dead as the musicians in the group were.
* Grey's Anatomy, a man comes into the ER after he accidentally shot himself, with a homemade replica bazooka. The shell remained inside the man, unexploded. A first-day paramedic had her hand on it, stabilizing the man and stopping the bleeding.
* Her backup is just as powerful. Makes some sense in universe as she was built to observe
* GW's store managers often have strict rules that require every model in an army to be made 100% out of GW models. No third party anything.
* Hercules, when Hercules gets knocked around by Nessus, Phil tells him to use his head to fight back. Hercules then sends Nessus flying with a charging headbutt.
* Hilariously Abusive Childhoods in media. As such, when he's not trying to take over the Tri-State Area Doof is looking to publicly humiliate Roger in some petty attempt at revenge which, of course, ends up backfiring in some way or another.
* High Lifes and Low Lifes to convince Mason that they are ruthless enough to kill. Unforntuately, a slip of the tongue later gives the game away.
* "Guilt", Lt. Singer gets overly aggressive questioning Lt. Sims. In private, Commander Rabb tells Singer that she should've run that line of questioning by him. By bullying the sympathetic Sims, Singer has damaged their case. Singer asks for permission to speak freely. Rabb doesn't really care to hear whatever it is she has to say, so he denies the permission and dismisses her.
* Hermione does it to Draco when he says that she might have a mood swing if Voldemort decides to be insulted by her comment that he's "not such a bastard."
* Hey Arnold! was this — although it's understandable, given that he and Arnold's mother, Stella, were in the jungle, and far from any doctors or hospitals.
* Gravity Falls, Dipper (who is 12) has a crush on Wendy (who is 15). He eventually finds out she always knew and lets him down gently since she's too old for him. He accepts that the two are just friends though sees things a bit differently in "Roadside Attraction".
* Goblin Slayer. He has a short sword, several daggers, several shurikens, torches, magical scrolls, smaller bombs and smoke bombs, and before High Elf Archer joined his party, he occasionally used a bow and arrow. This is justified because he wants to be as well prepared as possible to fight goblins.

* Hercules: The Animated Series, Herc and Aladdin are manipulated into fighting each other. The latter taunts the former with the nickname "Jerk-ules".
* Goosebumps. In the present, the pair manage to possess the story's protagonist, Spencer, and his friend, Audra, and proceed to use their bodies to go on another rampage through Highgrave, setting fires and attacking people and property with axes, at one point nearly killing Spencer's family before being vanquished by him and Audra.
* Hayven Celestia is basically a mobile stargate three miles in diameter with the habitat modules for the ten thousand crew wrapped around the outer edge of the ring.
* Halo 3, the Brute Chieftain enemies are usually protected by a few Brute Bodyguards, who have slightly different-looking armor from the regular Brute soldiers. These Bodyguards supplant the Honor Guards from the previous game.
* Goblin Moon's nonhuman cultures are analogs to real-world human cultures.)
* Halo 3: ODST is basically up to four ODSTs or Spartan-IIIs using whatever they have at their disposal to fight off endless waves of Covenant that get progressively more difficult.
* Grand Finale of TNG showed a future Enterprise with a third nacelle planted into the middle of the stardrive section. Being a quick modification to an existing model in a one-off episode, little was really said about it. In addition there was additional cosmetic additions made to the saucer section (a long underslung phaser weapon and what looks like sensor pylons near the bridge) that took away the traditional clean saucer design.
* Hakushi, rather than being evil because of their ethnicity/nationality.
* Green Aesop: Mother Earth needs our help to protect the natural environment from man-made destruction.
* GURPS can give any character this power, mages get a minor version for free with Magery.
* having people fall asleep mid-song, although the face doodling continues on multiple characters, Jigglypuff herself gets its face doodled on by Komala when it falls asleep during its battle against Komala, which causes the battle to end.
* Gravity Falls (the official 9th and thus why Trembley was 8th & 1/2), and the government claimed some waste shoveling village idiot was the founder of Gravity Falls. Oh, and Ben Franklin was secretly a woman, and Abe's tall hat was used to conceal an extra arm on the top of his head.
* "guest star" status even funnier, as a normal person in a school of clones.
* GURPS Magic, a setting which features multiple types of magic, includes instances of that type. In fact, one of the sample villains detailed, The Jungle Madness, is an example of where this leads; once a Central American sorceress, she is now a totally inhuman and dangerous supernatural creature.
* Gods And Generals, focusing on the career of Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson, and featuring the battles of 1st Bull Run (a.k.a. 1st Manassas), Fredericksburg, and Chancellorsville. Based on the novel with the same name by Jeffrey Shaara.
* GUN×SWORD has a sort of breakdown after facing a particularly powerful enemy. Not only does he show real fear for what may be the only time in the series, but the breakdown leads him to finally talk to his closest companion about his horrible past and his love for his dead fiancee. During this conversation, his voice shakes, his hand trembles, and he covers his face in a gesture more heart-wrenching than tears would have been.
* Half-Life 1, like all important or allied NPCs, he simply cannot be hit by weapons).
* Gordy decided to pay it forward and wound up adopting Rainer when she was a young girl. Just as his parents did for him, he taught her everything he knows, and completely adores her. Whether Rainer was abandoned or orphaned has yet to be revealed, but it doesn't seem to matter to her, as Gordy gives her everything she needs.
* Grand Theft Auto V: the three protagoniss can choose for some heists to use choppers to carry the loot.
* Goddess Creation System to be beautiful or die, she begins working out, using cosmetics to improve her skin and such and becomes ridiculously gorgeous.

* Glitched Miko AU: Somewhat. Miko, as noted by Zahra is far more complex than any Glitch ever seen, with attention to detail so fine that Zahra was able to take a blood sample and find blood cells that were made of ones and zeros. Phil even notes that it should have been impossible for Miko to get into the base without being found out, yet she did.
* Hey Arnold!, Arnold is told to lose a spelling bee by Helga's father, in exchange for a check for the prize money. That's because Helga's dad had said that if she doesn't win the spelling bee, he'd have a huge sale at his store. When it comes down to the final round, Helga's dad gets nervous and tries to bribe Arnold. Helga catches him doing it, and proceeds to lose on purpose to humiliate her father.
* Hard Reset features both insurmountable waist-high obstacles and impassable slightly-shorter-than-your-height gaps. You can't duck through an opening that's slightly below your head height because there is no crouching in the game. Almost as if to emphasize this, such openings are often present.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series, Shyir Rev, outnumbered and surrounded, summoned a drill construct and, instead of using it to dig or attack, he uses it to kick up a twister of dust which he used like a smokescreen to escape.
* Heralds of Valdemar series, Queen Selenay, partly as a way to see if Prince Thanel of Rethwellan is truly serious about her, holds a masquerade party after the year of mourning for her father is up. She and her eleven ladies-in-waiting dress up as the identical-looking Moon Maidens from Rethwellan legend. Thanel, who is costumed as the Moon Prince, is able to pick Selenay out due to the rose she was wearing at her belt and proposes marriage, which she happily accepts and the two announce their betrothal at the time of unmasking. Too bad things went downhill after the wedding.
* Half-Life for it. And never mind how easy they are to kill—even while they're trying to eat you—they are terrifying.
* Goofy cartoon "Man's Best Friend", Goofy goes out for the evening and leaves his dog to guard the house. That night, a burglar breaks in, has a shoot out with police, and gets arrested, all without the dog waking up. But when Goofy returns, his own dog growls at him and chases him up a tree.
* Heinous Hyena stereotype. Hyenas make a sound very similar to human laughter when stressed, which made humans assume they were evil, eerily human-sounding creatures laughing maniacally as they ripped prey apart.
* Godzilla vs. SpaceGodzilla. The victim, in this case, is a poisonous spider. In a twist on the usual formula, the stabber grabs the stabbee from behind and stabs the spider off his neck, drawing blood from him as well.
* Growler. His actions saved the submarine and won him a posthumous Medal of Honor.
* Gods (the PC version, at least; other versions differ), at the completion of the game you are given the reward of immortality. Then the game suggests you should use your new power to do something challenging, and warps you back to level one.
* Hairspray, reprised the role for the 2016 NBC live production of the same show.
* Guitar Hero even suggests this for using the drumset if players are having trouble.
* Hamlet delivers the Death Glare to Claudius several times, and at least once to Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.
* Haré+Guu: According to Haré, some RPG are so linear that it feels as if not you're playing the character, but the character is playing you.
* Happosai that his perversion becomes his own Achilles heel. If there is a fight serious enough, or a reward great enough, that he can't be immediately distracted from whatever he was doing by the sight of girls in skimpy clothing, bare cleavage or a bra, it hasn't come up in the series. He can even be lured right into dangers simply by tossing a bra in the right place.
* Handsome Girl and Sheltered Girl is the "Sheltered Girl" in the title. She's completely oblivious to how her friend at college, Mizuki Kanda, is not a man but actually an androgynous-looking woman, and thus the "Handsome Girl." It's implied that Ookuma's overprotective parents may be part of the problem, especially since they have some rather strange ideas; her father wants any prospective boyfriend to submit a resume to him.

* Happens again with his son, Rikes, who fell in love with a beautiful woman from Samos, but it turned out that she planned to marry someone else…
* Guilty Until Someone Else Is Guilty: A character is incorrectly accused of doing a bad thing, and nobody believes their innocence until the real culprit is revealed.
* God Eater is the only thing keeping them from transforming fully into the same monsters they fight.
* Glory Hound: The more villainous counterpart, a character who wants to be remembered and will commit atrocities in order to achieve that.
* Harpies traditionally eat their mates after sex, and in fact consider it shameful not to do so, especially if they become pregnant as a result.
* H.Bomberguy's prose in "Tracing the Roots of Pop Culture Transphobia."
* Harry Belafonte is often criticized for playing an easy listening form of calypso designed for white audiences. However, many Caribbeans have to admit that his '50s popularity sparked an unprecedented level of creativity amongst 'genuine' calypso musicians from Trinidad and elsewhere. Many of these got their songs recorded and released on labels thanks to the music being in public demand at the time, with everyone wanting to capitalize on Belafonte's popularity and the genuine musicians finally getting their big break. It was thanks to Belafonte that the RCA Trinidad label formed, with superior production quality and better distribution. Lord Melody, in particular, realized by the 60s that if he wrote songs for Belafonte he'd make more money than if he recorded them himself.
* Happens for no particularly good reason between Jin and Asuka in the latter's ending for the fifth
* Guild Wars 2 humanity is viewed as this by the other races of Tyria. Ascalon and Orr have been dead for centuries, Cantha has withdrawn into isolation, and Elona is enslaved by Palawa Joko, leaving only Kryta as a free human state. Many view them as overly conservative and tied down by their faith in silent gods. Humans, of course, disagree with this notion. All the same, developers have noted that every other race in the setting has been steadily expanding and growing despite their hardships. Humans, on the other hand, have been in a steady decline.
* Guardians of the Flame: In the party starting out Andy-Andy and Doria are the two women. However, the arrangement lasts only through the first books, with more female characters added later that don't fit into this dynamic.
* Heroes gave Ted's radioactive power to an Arab terrorist character. This plotline was dropped for the actual pilot and given to Ted, a white American. One result is that connected events (the train derailment, some of Isaac's paintings) become disconnected and random, while in the original pilot, they were all connected by the terrorist story.
* Hanna-Barbera, Benny must wait for 48 hours before he can inherit a fortune. Should anything happen to him during that time, the evil butler and his dog would get it. Subverted in that the urgency doesn't start until 24 hours have passed.
* Haré+Guu up in a horror movie and her smirking head gets decapitated.
* Hatoful Boyfriend encountered a rather large amount of violence earlier in the very same route - and that one is in a route which contains violent themes and a reference to genocide later on, and can be completed within an hour.
* Good Powers, Bad People: Bright powers don't always equal to a bright person.
* Good vs. Good: There is no evil at all on either side, just heroes who oppose each other.
* Grave Academy, akin to Hogwart's Houses, all have elements of this, the students being monsters probably help.
* Guitar Hero", or any female to the same role when performing "Master Exploder".
* Gunn holds claims to this trope as much as Wesley; he's been fighting Vampires since he was fourteen and later in the series took out six Asian warrior monk-types without getting hit once. Gunn and the street-gang members he once led also fought vampires using improvised melee weapons, with more success and less casualties than the
* Highlander: The Source, introduces himself to Duncan by zipping up to him and screaming, "THIS IS THE END OF TIII years later, Greeks and Persians were

* Heavenly Guardian is Pumpkin King, who has a kabocha for a head, a cape as body, and floating gloves as hands. He summons kabocha bombs of varying sizes to harm Sayuki. Prior to Pumpkin King is his army of smaller pumpkin monsters. They're of similar design to the king, just with blue capes instead of a red one and they are armed with lanterns from which they can summon fireballs.
* Golden Sun the magic spells. Which gets a little weird when some of the spells have effects such as making a pillar of ice appear from a puddle. Maybe the crowd is so focused on the contestants that they ignore anything else?
* Happy Heroes, causing him to do a cartoonishly exaggerated jump into space and hit a moon with his head, giving him amnesia.
* Godzilla vs. Kong method that the Titans use to settle disputes among themselves.
* Granblue Fantasy, this is how Luminiera decides who should become its next host. Albion stages a one-on-one elimination-type tournament with its soldiers as the contestants, with the winner claiming power from Luminiera and wins the right to be its current host.
* Happy Endings, both with Jane's boss, the Car Czar. The first time, she invites him and her other male coworkers over to try and win them over, the second time, Brad foolishly invites the Car Czar over to dinner even though Jane has planned a double date for them with Penny and a new guy. The first time, it goes fairly well, the second time...not so much.
* Gundam Extreme Vs. whose floor is made up of giant metallic hexagonal columns; the boss has the ability to raise and lower the columns, and possesses several attacks that can destroy them outright (they re-form a few second later — naturally — out of smaller metallic hexagons).
* he's kept in the dark about the greatest wizarding threat returning, one who has a massive and personal vendetta against him.
* Hank Zipzer, who also wrote the book series upon which the series is based.
* Henry gets trapped outside No. 30 while hiding from Bronwyn's Aunt Edie, in nothing but a
* Harry Potter when they began to gain popularity among adults, for those who wanted to read the series but felt embarrassed doing so in public.
* Harry snaps and yells a big "SHUT UP !" to Snape after the latter maliciously taunts him about the kind of arrogant jerk his father was in
* Gundam Wing: OZ leader, Treize, puts a plan into play by having the Gundam pilots think they're attacking an OZ base when in really it's a conference where most of the Alliance is trying to aim for peace with the space colonies. When Heero destroys the ship carrying the delegates who were going for that option. The surviving Earth Alliance takes it as an act of war. Whoops.
* Godzilla: Though played (mostly) straight, these films tend to be hilarious to English speakers, as the translated dialogue is often multiple seconds out of synch with the original lip motion.
* Goro was in the army before becoming a legendary surgeon and joining the Dragon Doctors. She demonstrates both her
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret table with them doing something to her, as she screams "Sto-plea... stop, ah! Yuuto! Hurry, come back!"
* Haunter: Lisa is initially shocked to discover that she and her family are actually ghosts, but she adjusts fairly quickly.
* HBO searches for "Tulsa Race Riot" apparently spiked the night that the first episode aired.
* Goosebumps had the main character be shunted to a different alternate universe whenever he fell asleep.
* Hagall and her crew don't care about the balance and just want to increase the demons "market share". This quickly causes the world to erupt into hilarious chaos.
* Gretel/Ava is driven by her faith that she'll find her father again. In Storybrooke, she's managed to take care of herself and her younger twin brother while hiding the fact that their parents are missing, and in the Enchanted Forest, she even manages to stand up to
* He also thought he could always take on superpowered characters, based on how he went toe-on-toe with Spider-Man. Then in

* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters mentality mean that she'll stay loyal to him as the most powerful person around.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) spreading storms all over the planet).
* Guilty Gear; it isn't present in the English translations of X and XX, but Guilty Gear Xrd -REVELATOR- makes a point of emphasizing it in the English version of many of her win quotes.
* Godzilla: City on the Edge of Battle: When the Bilusaludo merge with Mechagodzilla City their minds become linked to it. When the command center where Mechagodzilla's head resides is destroyed, the Bilusaludo soldiers cease functioning. That said most of the assimilated Bilusaludo were inside of the center when it was destroyed and it's only Belu-be, who was fighting outside, who drops dead.
* he's distraught over how many deaths he caused at the start of the season and is insane from taking Sam's Hell-pain., and the next episode he shows up in, he's investigating a case on his own.
* "Got Milk?" commercial While the mother and kids scream in horror, the old man simply replies "Oh, that's not good..."
* Hazel and Augustus in front of a crowd of tourists in the Anne Frank house.
* Guardian: The Lonely and Great God for them. Turns out that he doesn't; he's the guardian of the two people they are about to dump to be with each other, thus saving them from their lousy partners.
* Happens at the end of another episode when Maxwell knocks out the pilots of a plane (who happen to be KAOS agents). He calmly informs the passengers that there is nothing to fear and that they will arrive in Miami shortly.
* Help! I'm a Teenage Outlaw, Deedee spends a lot of time disguised as a boy. It helps that most people don't expect a teenage girl to be part of a gang of highwaymen.
* Golden Sun, a young girl NPC in the town of Altin would try to kiss Isaac if you talked to her after defeating the Living Statues plaguing the town.
* Hamlet, but the protagonist is a prince, rather than a governor's son.
* Guardian: hitting Luzzu for convincing Chappu to join the Crusaders (and die). She hits him so hard she hurts her own hand.
* Goof Troop. Specifically. Enough to burrow underground into an active volcano to chase after him.
* Godzilla (2014), a map indicates to Monarch and the military the blast zone shifting as the nuke is being moved by Ford (how the nuke can be tracked is never explained, given how it had to be fitted with clockwork to stop the MUTOs' EMP deactivating the mechanism).
* Harry Harrison. The US Army declares their waterbourne rivals obsolete after developing a technology that enables vehicles to drive on the ocean. Naval scientists work frantically while Congress debates whether to abolish the Navy once and for all — just as they are about to vote in favor the Admiral points to the battleship now 'sailing' down Constitution Avenue.
* Halloween Costume Characterization: A person's choice of costume represents their personality.
* Hearthstone: Heroes of Warcraft for avoiding unwanted effects from randomness-based cards.
* Halo (the first extrasolar human colony) and Harvest (an extremely fertile agricultural colony). Others include Tribute, Circumstance, Threshold, Basis, and Onyx. A number of Covenant worlds have this too, such Weeping Shadows of Sorrow, the prison planet; in fact, a number of Elite worlds in particular translate to this type, e.g. Malurok = "Decided Heart".
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) him and the damage he quickly causes is enough to make Madison realize that some of the Titans may not be nearly as nice as Emma led her to believe.
* Happy Heroes and nearly erases the world from existence when he gets his hand on the episode script. In the end, Big M. is picked up from the wishing pool he fell into and talks about how they're created by "people from another world" to Little

M. The person collecting the well's money says that drowning will cause someone to hallucinate, even though Big M.'s visit to the other world is implied to have been real.
* Gone Horribly Wrong: Inevitably, a mad scientist's creations will backfire disastrously.
* Hero System, postulate that the average man on the street has stats of 8 in all categories, including physical appearance. Player Character, on the other hand, get a 10 in each category because they are the heroes. So your "average hero" is notably better looking than a regular schmoe. The stat that reflects your good looks is also by far the easiest one to buy up, so most heroes end up having supermodel good looks because there is very little downside to it.
* Groucho Marx. Based on info about his guests, Groucho would run through various scenarios in order to get an idea of what would probably come up on the program; he then wrote down his best responses on cards, to then be read on the air as needed. That he could pull this off as completely natural is part of his brilliance.
* green-and-gold attire. In "Kissed by Fire," he is sparring with various Tyrell squires, so being adorned in his house's true colours represents his honesty as a knight (as opposed to being a pawn—albeit one with a deceptive mask—in his family's political machinations) in this scene.
* Heavy Metal 2000, Tyler makes this insult toward the leader of the lizardmen to challenge him to a fight.
* Heritage of the Wolf, Balto attacks Steele when he insults Balto's mother.
* Heroes Never Die: How Izuku's Quirk works. Every once in a while he gets caught in a loop, and has to figure out what he has to do to escape it. The loops are usually only a few minutes long, and are reset by his brutal death. He puts a suicide pill on his hero uniform so that he can reset at will.
* Head-and-Hip Pose: A woman puts one hand on her hip and the other on her head, to look sexy.
* Granny Girl Hinata-chan: For reasons even she isn't sure of, Hinata has kept quiet about remembering her previous life as an old woman. While Moka guesses it in the first chapter, Sakuya is the only person who knows Hinata reincarnated because she has, too.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers for England only); ditto with Romano as "Spain-sexual". Japan is also sometimes depicted as being "Greece-sexual" with Greece as the only nation he can overcome his emotional reservedness and intimacy issues with.
* Grumpy Old Men, which is set only six months later, she appears to be about five or six.
* Grand Chase: The female cast. That being Elisis, Lire, Arme, and Amy.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers when France and England's fights turn physical.
* Gottlieb shows several golfers rage quitting their golf games, including one man breaking his putter over his knee and another golfer hurling his clubs off a cliff and into the ocean.
* Gundam ships in the Universal Century (and in most of the Alternate Universes for that matter) carried Mobile Suits, so the Battlestar and Carrier classifications were pretty redundant.
* Hilda: David is voiced by Oliver Nelson, but for his solo singing in "Chapter 8" his singing voice was provided by Ilan Galkoff.
* Global Frequency had a half-dead soldier who'd been basically turned into a walking killing machine by cybernetic alterations. Then he saw his reflection and decided to live up to the role.
* Have Your Cake Reba into a diet to show support for Barbra Jean, who worries about being overweight, going so far as to tell Barbra Jean she could visit anytime she wants to, 24/7. Then this exchange takes place after Barbra Jean leaves:
* Hiding in a Hijab: Wearing a headscarf, face veil, or full-body cloak in order to disguise oneself as a devoutly religious Muslim woman.
* Goober Grove an improvement to showing up to work, since it gives zir some time off.
* Gotham and he's constantly fighting with his own dark side which others take note of. Also, there are frequent hits on his life (by two of his admirers even) and the lives of those close to him. In addition, Galavan worming in his way out of justice, combined with Gordon netting a 40-year sentence for his vigilante execution, seems to have stripped Gordon of any notion that the law can work in Gotham which is what he firmly believed separated the villains from the heroes.

* Hackett is a serial novel that details the adventures of an interdimensional taskforce that works for (and with) the titular Hackett.
* Hand of Thrawn duology — two men inciting a riot in an already-angry crowd start by screaming for justice and throwing produce. Once the mob is pelting the building with food, they introduce rocks. After that's been going on for a while, they throw a grenade into the crowd and get out of there.
* Hayao Miyazaki. Lupin, being the expert that he is, is one of the few that can spot these legendary "Gothic Bills".
* Granblue Fantasy: While the Primal Beast, Vohu Manah, was originally intended to just be the first one, giving just verdicts to all, the War caused the Primals to convert it into all three for all mankind.
* Grand Chef Auto", mockingly declaring that now it'll be "every man, woman and Cameron for himself."
* Harry himself is noted as occasionally coming off as 'slightly otherworldly', and not in the harmless Luna Lovegood sense. He moves with too much grace to be human, he can quite literally read minds (after chapter 60) and he carries around an aura of power that makes people's instincts start screaming. Oh, and in the sequel, when he gets
* Hell, essentially — and glows brighter than a torch does. If harvested, glowstone blocks can be used as a light source that can be placed directly into walls or floors.
* Green Arrow: Death Dealer is a mercenary that uses playing cards as his motif and employs these cards as weapons and as trick cards.
* Harry Potter in general is a mix of fantasy, coming-of-age, mystery, and boarding school-story with all the elements of these genres... and it works.
* Habsburg Austria, which often expanded and consolidated its territories through diplomacy, marriage and conflict.
* Halloween Episode, Michael jokingly pretends to start taking advice from his fake second head on who should be fired. Dwight starts arguing with the fake head because it is suggesting maybe Dwight should be let go.
* Heaven's Lost Property, Tomoki sometimes does this when he's frustrated with the angeloids shenanigans (usually Ikaros'), such as when Ikaros failed to affect a smile or when the angeloids decided to make an entrance in the roof of his house.
* Higurashi: When They Cry at some point or another and started one of these. The siblings, especially.
* Held Back in School: The more extreme cases of a student being older than their classmates due to having to repeat a schoolyear tend to be played for laughs.
* Greek Ninja never hesitates to tell the truth even when it's devastating.
* Heel–Face Turn, he still retains his gruff-yet-emotionless monotone way of speaking. Old habits die hard, it seems.
* Herr Starr subverts in the beginning when he exhorts German Special Forces to always shoot female terrorists first because any woman who gets picked for that kind of work in the sexist, male-dominated world of international terrorism will always be far tougher, stronger, and more fanatical than her male counterparts.
* Grape has trouble understanding how a video rental store works, and doesn't recognize a VHS tape when she picks one up, though at least she knows what a DVD is.
* God of War, the easter egg "Secret Message 2" has Kratos killing the game's director David Jaffe... for interrupting his phone call congratulating the player and annoying him.
* Heretical Edge a novel centering around Flick Chambers who is recruited into Crossroads Academy and brought into a world where she and her fellow students will be made into Heretics and taught to use their extraordinary gifts to protect the mundane world from Strangers, the endless variety of beasts and monsters that lurk within the shadows.

* He also encouraged people calling into his show to say "ditto" rather than waste airtime gushing about how much they like the show, which led to Limbaugh fans being called "dittoheads".
* Highway Blossoms's main plot is the two female leads falling in love with each other while on a treasure hunt through the American Southwest.
* Goosebumps aversion, "How I Learned To Fly," in which the male protagonist actively wants his relationship with his female friend to be romantic.
* Gordon R. Dickson, the dawn of space colonization causes humanity to separate along philosophical lines (Faithholders, Warriors, Rationalists, Mystics, etc.)
* Haru Urara at a time when the public needed one. People credited the horse with inspiring them to never give up and ultimately saved her home track from bankruptcy before retiring.
* Hawkfrost wants to kill Firestar because he couldn't save Tigerstar from Scourge's claws. Ignoring the fact that no one could do anything out of shock, and Scourge was
* Glee: Quinn and Puck babysit and end up tied to a chair with a skipping rope. They turn it around, though.
* Half-Life but the AI is Self-Aware, Gordon calls Tommy a freak and dislikes him. For the rest of the series, Gordon legitimately enjoys Tommy's company, and the closest he gets to insulting him is expressing concern about Tommy getting a caffeine overdose.
* Heart Is Where the Home Is: Character breaks off a romance with a foreigner in favor of someone from their own country.
* got better, but the only survivor of Elf's kissing (Nick) had a good chunk of a story-arc dedicated to "breaking the curse."
* Heroes was widely thought to be losing his mind when he started talking about people with supernatural abilities, and his son Mohinder is later told "everyone thinks you're nuts" when he tries to spread his father's theories.
* he left the owners box early to be waiting for his (at the time, losing) team in the locker room after the game, and was riding the elevator down with no idea what happened when he heard the stadium explode in cheers. So Rooney himself is an example of cutting away early and missing one of the best plays ever in professional football.
* Henry And June, a tarot reading is in progress at the party where June returns. They turn up the Death card and June quite correctly points out "That could be good luck, too." It's not, though.
* Hayate the Combat Butler was found to play a very convincing female (even attracting the romantic attention of three male characters in that form). His female appearance has since made several more appearances and its own name (Hermione Ayasaki) and Hayate has been fandom-paired with his gender bent form.
* He's not, he just has cybernetic arms. Luna is, though, and this is foreshadowed by her also being present in the GAULEM room.
* Harry and Laura end up at Draygone House, a decrepit establishment with substandard food and a matron who's unaffectionately known as "The Dragon."
* He's still learning clear through to the last book, but after the Blood-Oath Ceremony, it's less about how to use magic, and more about learning what he can accomplish with it.
* Gratien Fernando, the leader of the Cocos Islands Mutiny against the British authority on Sri Lanka. He was a Sri Lankan man who joined the Ceylon colonial forces due to his anti-fascist idealism, in hopes that he would fight against the Japanese, but he became disillusioned when he and other natives were victims of British discrimination. Inspired by the Japanese-supported resistance movements in Burma and Indonesia, he and other Sri Lankan soldiers started a mutiny against the colonial authority but it was crushed and Fernando was taken prisoner and executed. His last words were: "Loyalty to a country under the heel of a white man is disloyalty".
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix after they get into a fight on the pitch, and confiscates their brooms. Though as Harry points out, in practice he's only banned as long as Umbridge is at the school, which is proven true the following year.

* Hetalia: Axis Powers may fit this trope. He's never spoken a word in the anime or the manga, and the only thing he's done on screen yet was deliver a mild beat down to Italy with a stick and his fist. All without saying a word.
* Heart of Steel Alistair Mechanus. He has a mental link to the computer network of his island lair, allowing him to command his robots with a thought.
* Heroes Reborn: Iron Man, starting off as an arrogant prick, not caring about less well-off people, comparing them to ants, and using his money and clout to get what he wants.
* , Hermione gives a partially-asphyxiated Snape CPR, and he's up and about within a minute or so.
* Golden Age. Naturally, there were conveniently a lot of plant monsters, swamp zombies, or guys with baseball bats showing up.
* Heckle and Jeckle cartoon "Off To The Opera" features two selections from "The Barber Of Seville."
* Henry O. and Phineas I. Godwinn, wrestling hog farmers. Notice the way the WWE put
* Havoc Squad His replacement, Tanno Vik, is an ex-street gang member with such a broad criminal streak that he was actually dishonorably discharged, but was recommissioned because he's just that good. And it's not an exaggeration — on the mission he was tapped for, he plants a few pieces of heavy ordnance that destroy an entire Imperial cruiser (albeit from the inside) and the superweapon prototype it was carrying.
* Grima that merges human and divine dragon blood with unknown dark magic, Grima is a unique being in the setting. Despite this, it does share a relation with the descendants of its creator who donated his blood to form it, which allows them to use its power to a degree.
* Golden Sun takes place. Judging by the shape of Angara and surrounds, Weyard is slowly becoming Earth.
* He actually really likes the interactions between Annabelle and her father in
* He also says strange things that don't entirely make sense, like giving
* Halo. In some games, even the player characters in Campaign will have these.
* Gullible Lemmings: Stupidly naïve people who actively help bad people.
* hilariously but will still be brutally hurt before the episode ends.
* Hercules after polishing an old trophy a student won for 11th place.
* Happy Heroes, the Adelians have the right-hand to the chin, palm facing downward.
* GURPS is in the style of one of these, and the text makes frequent reference to the idea that 'everything you read in the tabloids is true'.
* Hereward the Wake rebelled against the invasion of the Normans. There were also peasant rebellions including one led by Wat Tyler, aristocratic rebellions by the English Barons in two wars, Scottish rebels (
* Guild Wars with a definite sci-fi feel, while the charr are in the midst of an industrial revolution and continuing to advance at a breakneck pace.
* good side is prone to acting bad. On the other hand, being incorporeal also made it easier for the real Calvin to ignore him.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, when Parley and Mort finally found the common ground.
* Green Lantern (pre-Parallax), a huge fleet of ship appears in the skies of the severely overpopulated world of Malthus, which is under the protection of Guy Gardner.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Let's just say Italy sent Germany and Japan into one after he french-kissed both of them.
* Hardwired by Walter Jon Williams is the story of a devastated Earth ruled by corporation executives that live in outerspace called Orbitals. The humans on the ground must survive with the help of organized crime, hackers, hover tank smugglers, and at least one cybernetically enhanced hooker.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy: The underworld is presumably set beneath the Sardini house and has many spooky things in them like skulls, coffins, bats, pits, and arms reaching for you.
* Harry Potter, Walburga Black probably would have survived her heart attack, if not for all the obstacles in her house the healers have to overcome to reach her — obstacles she herself installed in her paranoia. By the time they finally reach her, she's dead and can't be revived.

* Half-Life 2: "Don't drink the water. They put something in it, to make you forget."
* Hard Boiled, the main character holds a baby in one arm and sings a lullaby to him while gunning down incoming Mooks with his other arm.
* Gödel, Escher, Bach: An Eternal Golden Braid. As a result, "an event — or is 'event' the word for it? — takes place which cannot be described, and hence no attempt will be made to describe it." The result is that the universe crashes, and the characters wind up somewhere totally different.
* Heretic support studio, it's unlikely that the series will be revived unless Activision either has a change of heart or sells the developing rights to ZeniMax.
* He then adds that it wasn't magical at all; the Mirror was no more than a pretty puddle of water. (Although he does raise the theory that perhaps it was enchanted and he just didn't notice anything,
* Godannar: Dr. Kiriko Aoi frequently smokes cigarettes to fit her image as one of the Dannar Base's top scientists.
* Heroes Inc: This is the origin of the majority of the world's heroes. The story line follows them being actual soldiers and then exploring the people's lives as superheroes.
* Heart In Hand, Darryl's spur-of-the-moment bet that he will sleep with Alex if the latter scores a "Mexican hat trick" (six goals in one game) kickstarts their relationship.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas after CJ meets Cesar in person, the two of them becoming good friends and CJ fully supporting Cesar's decision to propose to Kendl near the end of the game.
* High Fidelity for a few years by that point, but was far from a household name, so the quality of his performance played as a nice surprise for most audience members.
* Hamilton: Major productions of the musical usually cast the US Founding Fathers and associates with people of color. This is done for strictly stylistic reasons, however, and the play itself treats the characters as white men who own black slaves, etc., with the jarring contrast this creates being part of the point.
* Golondrina de Invierno ("Winter Sparrow"), the male lead is mistaken by the main female as the manager of his huge country estate.
* Grizzly Tales for Gruesome Kids the kids about it and explaining why it's bad.
* Guy Gavriel Kay) take place on a world with two moons, one blue and one white.
* Hacker Collective who wanted to bring down corporate tyranny and incompetent governances for good, but many internet users would disagree.
* Gundam Wing has a pair of goggles. The practical way to use them would be for crossing the desert - the only time he does wear them is inside his Gundam.
* Hades, thanks to mysterious dreams they had. The two are not otherwise known to have psychic powers.
* God of Gamblers is filled with several instances of this trope. Made more amazing is the fact that they attribute the "pick the best card" to an actual skill.
* Haruhi herself, before cutting her hair, also used to wear pigtails on occasion when she entered North High, as part of her routine of changing hairstyles according to the day of the week.
* Guardians of the Galaxy has a cassette player built into his spaceship.
* Heralds of Valdemar: Herald Myste had this pulled on her as a child three times by guys using her to get close to her best friend (the most attractive girl in the neighborhood). Prince Karathanelan tricks Selenay into wedding him but doesn't survive the "betrayal" part.
* Grent's Fall may be great at combat and leading an army, but quite poor at ruling the kingdom.
* Hack/Slash. According to his bio in the back of the first omnibus collection, this was one of his trademarks as a serial killer.
* Half-Life 1, the player is climbing through a narrow pipe when a soldier throws a satchel in at one end — the player must then back quickly out of the pipe to avoid getting caught in the fireball.

* Green-Eyed Monster: The most common motivation for the Evil Woman is jealousy of the Good Woman's functional home and family that she herself cannot have. Thus, the Evil Woman tries her best to one-up and ruin the Good Woman's life or claim it for herself out of spite and envy.
* Glurgest t-shirt imaginable, where the wearer's inherent coolness negates the lameness of the shirt.
* Happens accidentally on a deleted scene from "$pringfield", as seen on "The Simpsons 138th Episode Spectacular". Homer is the dealer for a
* Hayate the Combat Butler. Although it's not murder in this case, and if he'd left things alone it would have left everyone in-character.
* God Does Not Own This World, her responses have migrated to "My theory is X, but I don't know how the current show runners will handle that.".
* go to Fhirdiad to get financial records from Mercedes' adoptive father to prove how much of a scounderel her father was. Mercedes exclaimed how foolish of him it was to risk his life for her sake.
* Harry Potter, who is the mother of seven children. She considers Harry to be like a son, treats Hermione like a daughter and acts as hostess to the whole Order of the Phoenix as well.
* Hellmann's mayonnaise is advertised as "Best Foods west of the Rockies" as an
* Hello Melancholic, Chika refers to her relationship with Sakiko as this by outright using the term "fuck buddies" in a conversation with Minato.
* Guest star Tito Puente planned revenge on Burns, but chose to do so with a
* Happened in one encounter between Necrons and Chaos forces on a demonworld. To the horror of the Necrons, the reigning Daemon Prince could turn its body into a gateway to hell and dump its enemies inside. No surviving Necrons and plenty of shiny, metal skulls for the Skull Throne.
* He appears again later in the Simpsons basement as a callback to the actual crossover
* Hayate the Combat Butler: Hayate doesn't seem to have noticed A-tan's growth when he meets her after ten years of separation, until he's directed to look via an extremely obviously loaded question...and even then it seems to take him a moment. This is particularly funny as they met when they were children and she's now one of the most developed girls in the cast. Interestingly, he actually seems to prefer the memory of the younger Athena too.
* Gravity Falls turns on 'Straight Blanching' and Wendy is outraged by it.
* Heat Guy J. It starts out very slowly and ends on quite an action-packed note, but many fans dropped off before even making it halfway through.
* Help Mistaken for Attack: A character is trying to help someone, but a third person thinks they're attacking the one being helped.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), arch-villain Skeletor has the physique of a body-builder and the face of a skeleton.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets from Luna's point of view - Basically, an origin story for her, since it's before her first appearance in canon, but we retroactively know it would be her first year at Hogwarts.
* GO-GO Tamagotchi episode 7a, when Mametchi and co are traversing the maze-ified Tamagotchi School, Miraitchi walks out of a doorway and onto thin air for a couple of seconds before noticing and quickly running back through where she came, colliding into the others when she does.
* got blocked by the Philippine government citing that there's child pornography. The fact that the Philippines is said to be the 15th most frequent porn watchers in the world might have something to do with it. Though this is only applied to certain internet service providers such as PLDT. So, if you're using other internet service providers such as Globe or having a VPN installed, you still view these sites.
* Hideki Kamiya or questioning his English skills, never mind that English is not his native language) will be met with a "fuck off" at best and a derogatory comment in Japanese followed by a block at worst. Furthermore, all of his replies are public, so being a nuisance to him is a one way trip to being humiliated by other followers. He makes it no secret that some of his fans piss him off, and whenever a major news site reports on him or his games, which is when his account takes a big jump in replies from followers, you can expect tweets along the lines of "Idiots rushing in..."

* Heterosexual Life-Partners The viewers are also asked to "use their imagination".
* Harold & Kumar Escape from Guantanamo Bay. However, it mostly subverts the trope:
* Grażyna, secretly puts on his armour and leads the army into battle with the enemy.
* Heroes. Naturally, Peter gives him a nasty punch in the face in the parking garage after the event and stalks off into the rain.
* Happy Mania: A young woman sleeps her way into true love, with many semen jokes along the way.
* Hamilton puts more thought into this than most. In his world, colonization of most planets is limited to a particular ethnicity (in order to prevent rioting and culture clashes), and so the naming tends to be based on the ethnicity of the colonists. He also flits between more than one standard. Thus, the planets of New California, Nashville and Yosemite are American-ethnic, Norfolk and Avon are English-ethnic, Kursk is Russian, Oshanko is Japanese, Garissa is Kenyan, and Kulu is...unclear.
* GURPS, a character can buy an Advantage called Serendipity, which allows one extremely fortunate event per game session to take place at the player's discretion. The Gizmos advantage is designed to let players imitate fictional characters like Batman and James Bond, as described above.
* Guardians of the Galaxy – Mission: BREAKOUT! ride at California Adventure features what could almost be considered an inversion. The sign, which has been vandalized by Rocket, "originally" read "First time on display: the Guardians of the Galaxy", referring to the Collector's latest acquisition. Several letters and the colon from the top line have been relocated below to spell the "MISSION:" part of the name, with "BREAKOUT" spraypainted afterwards. The original message is still perfectly readable due to the letters leaving behind what's probably meant to be adhesive residue.
* Hello! Project had wanted to set up overseas groups around Asia and attempted to break into the Chinese market by setting up Hello! Project Taiwan in 2008. However, Hello! Project Taiwan's flagship group, Ice Creamusume, bombed so badly that their career only lasted for three months (plus a concert appearance in July). This caused Hello! Project to scale back on expanding overseas.
* Gruntz has Warpstone Pieces. They're 4 pieces of a big circular rock with a spiral in the center, and getting them together is the only way the Gruntz can go back home.
* "Hey! You the Bird? Do the voice!" Spinney says he wished he could yell "Get the hell off my property!" in Oscar's voice, but instead just silently went inside in case any of his young fans were watching.
* Harry Potter can only be understood by HK-47 as the only two languages he speaks are English (which hasn't been invented yet) and Parseltongue (which is also the language of a primitive species that other species can't learn). He later learns Basic from Anakin, though Harry notes that Anakin picked up English much faster.
* GURPS Technomancer of Surinam, which Leviathan is heavily involved with) generally hiring ex-US Army war-mages.
* Golden Age" in this case is the "fall of man", and being cursed with sin, suffering, and death.
* Government abounds with this kind of language, as politicians and bureaucrats try to find euphemisms for things the public doesn't like.
* Heita Mamemomi ends up killing Jezail Brett using poison, in Jezail's debut case she killed John Watson using poison * has been deleted being the only proof that the promotion ever existed.
* Hamill did most of his own stunts in the trilogy, with the exception of backflips and the like.

* Helicopter Hair: Hair that works as a propeller, lifting the character into the air
* GURPS supplement lets a gun be implanted inside a character's hand or arm. Alternately the entire arm can just be replaced with a weapon mount.
* Harrison Ford delivered was that Ben Kenobi killed Luke's father; the real line was concealed from all but a handful of people to best preserve the surprise.
* Gordon also has two near encounters with trains in the first two chapters of the game while being pursued by Combine troops. There's a third (not long after the second, at the beginning of "Route Kanal") that will always miss the player, but serves to sweep away the remaining
* Half the Man He Used to Be: Killing someone by cutting them in half.
* He imagines what his life would be like if he robbed the Kwik-E-Mart, and sees himself sitting in a rocking chair outside a huge mansion, smoking cigars, and wearing a top hat
* Hades), they simply reappear in the House of Hades at the bottom of Tartarus, no worse for wear save for a blow to their pride.
* Harry Potter: The seven books each cover a year of the eponymous Harry Potter's life, primarily showing ages 11 through 17. Although the series is ostensibly about Harry's struggle against the evil wizard Voldemort, his growth from a child through adolescence into adulthood is a major theme, and the bulk of each book is about his time as a student at the strange but wonderful Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry.
* Greek pantheon, where each deity has a wide range of different epithets, regional cult names, and poetic titles. When the gods use each other for names: if you wanted to call on Zeus the warrior, you called him Zeus Ares. Helios, the God of the Sun, was so often called Apollon, "the Destroyer", that he largely merged with Apollo, the God of Light, and both had the name Phoebus, "Shining".
* GrailQuest series uses both magic (being somewhat Merlin's disciple) and a sword (Excalibur Junior).
* Guitar Hero", because the song was mostly obscure prior to the game's release.
* Harry Enfield and Chums, he warns about defective goods, saying that they can usually be identified by the "Made In Belgium" written on the bottom.
* Groom - Martin gets every question in the quiz correct, and then it is announced that the final question will be worth ten points, so any team could still win. Martin gets the last question too.
* he turns out to be part of a hibernation experiment and now is in a coma.
* Great Mazinger, one whole host of the Mykene Empire army is made up of bio-mechanical, massive insects. Their commander, General Scarabeth, resembles a gigantic rhinoceros beetle.
* He sets out his stall in the very first episode: a blonde girl goes into the school late at night with a boy — but as this blonde girl is really badass vampire Darla, the boy's the one who meets a sticky end.
* Hero Oh Hero's pointing at and... a statue of himself erected in the middle of the town.
* He-Man: Defender of Greyskull continuity, He-Man and Skeletor do have sons, Skeletor's being named "Skeleteen".
* Harmless Freezing: A character is frozen solid, and then unfreezes with no adverse effects.
* Hercules with their revered mythology, to the point where they almost denied the film a premiere in their country (the attempt to have the film premiere there on Pnyx Hill, one of the most revered sacred sites in the country, did not do them any favors PR-wise).
* Gundam SEED frequently refers to the Earth as though it were one political entity, but this isn't the case. It is in fact divided into seven or eight supranational blocs, as well as the Orb Union, a small but powerful south Pacific island country. Most of them are united in a military alliance under the Atlantic Federation, which is hostile to the space nation of ZAFT. However, a couple of nations on Earth support ZAFT, most notably the Oceania Union (Australia + New Zealand), which lends ZAFT the use of a large naval base at Carpenteria, and a few others remain stubbornly neutral in the whole affair, including Orb.

* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, but got a huge new boost after the discovery of the "Hot Coffee" sex mini-game mod. While the game did get tons of publicity for this, it also led to a huge recall of the game which ended up costing Rockstar tens of millions of dollars.
* Guardian: The Lonely and Great God: Destiny insists that Kim Shin and Wang Yeo must meet again, Eun-tak and Kim Shin must get together, and Wang Yeo and Sunny must meet.
* Godzilla series uses this trope fairly often, though Godzilla himself usually ends up being the bigger threat that goes up against the insects:
* Gunnerkrigg Court they want to become human is something the comic has yet to explore. There's also an inverse version; humans can take a test to become creatures of the wood, although in their case it apparently doesn't involve getting killed.
* He's also used to fill in some of the gaps in historical accounts. Unknown soldier leading the Charge of the Light Brigade? That was Flashman. Unidentified figure in a painting just after the Indian Mutiny? Flashman again.
* Hightown: Lesbian Jackie is played by bisexual actress Monica Raymund.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Harry is told he only has an hour to complete the Second Task of the tournament or the hostages will not be returned—and afterward, everyone laughs at him for having taken that part of the instructions seriously.
* Greene Planet Quantum (later revealed to be a forerunner of SPECTRE), through which it's trying to monopolize water resources.
* Hero); he grew up in an orphanage and he himself doesn't know what race he is. This has kept him from being adopted since "The blacks thought I was Hispanic, the Hispanics thought I was Arab, and the whites didn't want any questions." The patronizing nature of his codename isn't lost on him either, but Silver Bullet is the closest thing he has to a father, so he just goes with it.
* Hey Arnold! says that each episode would have featured her writing him a letter and then saving it in a binder rather than mailing it.
* goes back to being a villain due to learning his stepmother and her kids killed his father, he kills the kids, cooks them, and serves them to the mother before killing her as well.
* glowfics, alternate universe variations of people are a major plot element, to deal with people with almost identical appearances, personalities, and names the characters have come up with a system of giving each individual a unique nickname to use when dealing with their alts and alts of the people they know.
* Hallows, the Death Eaters realize which one of the several Harrys are the real one when he uses his "signature" spell, Expelliarmus.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers anime. There's no way that the decision to have the Roman Empire randomly pop out of the sea and sing about the differences between heaven and hell was made while sober.
* HA x HA between him and Gon is way more explicit and one-sided than it is in canon.
* High School: Features in many dramas, as many of them have teenagers for protagonists.
* have erased his role in every previous storyline and disabled the ability to search for his matches on their website, pretending they didn't happen. Whether you agree with this policy or not, it remains one of their biggest and most blatant deceptions.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets universe this means being indefinitely paralysed rather than actually being turned to stone like in many other cases. Over the course of the book, it happens to Filch's cat (she looked at the basilisk reflection in a water pool), Nearly Headless Nick (already dead), Colin Creevey (saw it through his camera's lens), and Hermione (saw the reflection in a mirror). Also Justin Finch-Fletchley (saw the basilisk through Nearly Headless Nick) and Penelope Clearwater (only in the book, not the movie; saw the reflection the same time Hermione did). The traditional treatment for a petrified victim is mandrake root, but only if the mandrakes are fully grown, and the victims have to wait for the ones in the greenhouse to mature.

* her is about a man who falls in love with an operating system. The man doesn't have a great relationship with his ex-wife, but she's not an antagonist.
* Gor: One of the few roles a male slave could live and die in. Captain Bosk made it a practice to free slaves of captured vessels, which made them more motivated rowers, and fighters when necessary, out of gratitude and aversion to re-enslavement.
* He is assigned this duty as his military's standard policy of assigning notable combat veterans as instructors since they are considered more useful teaching new recruits the skills they learned in the field. He usually hates being taken out of the action, but gradually realizes that the policy is right as he gets scores of new recruits ready for battle.
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret, she had to hide the fact that she's also an Anime Otaku, otherwise people will look down on her... and then the male protagonist caught her red-handed and she became completely scared that he'd use that knowledge to that advantage (turns out he didn't). This is an in-anime example where people do look down on anime Otaku, if it gets blown out of proportion... like the male protagonist's best friend, whose otakuness is shown right off bat.
* Growing Pains, and threw tantrums whenever anything remotely sexual happened (be it something harmlessly non-verbal like his character having the keys to his girlfriend's apartment, which Kirk believed would imply that the two were fornicating, or even a fake-out scene where Kirk is shown in bed with another woman, as part of a play he was doing). In 1991, the executive producers had finally had enough of Cameron, and quit the show, which was quietly cancelled a year later.
* Haley is in love with the Elan, who is nice, but very stupid. The other group members even comment on this, saying that there is no accounting for taste. Their relationship didn't really develop until Elan underwent some character development; he literally
* Hajime has two carton boxes for magazines, that won't fit into his bookcase: One labeled "moe", the other one "fap".
* Higurashi: When They Cry has two of them: 1. The Sonozakis' Yakuza connections. More specifically Oryou being the mastermind of all the murders. 2. Oyashiro's Curse. Both of these are actually quite obvious to those familiar with Knox's Decalogue. Since Oryou was not introduced into the overall story until the fourth arc (of eight), Knox's 1st rules her out from being guilty in the chain of murders. Knox's second rules out Oyashiro/Hanyuu. Either way, VERY nastily deconstructed since the pursuit of these red herrings is half of the cause of the cycles of madness and death.
* Goodness Gracious Me are Asian-British and their sketches teeter on the brink of being full-on self-parody; the series sends up White British perceptions of Asians and sometimes the exaggerated accent is used to make a point concerning the ignorant British.
* Harry Potter) with supernatural seduction powers but, in their true form, are hideous, fireball-slinging harpies. In a subversion, men can apparently build a tolerance to their seduction powers with constant exposure, and the only part-Veela character to get much page time is happily married to a human man.
* Goodfellas, there is a "Crook and Cop" commentary, which feature Henry Hill (the ex-gangster whom the film is based on) and the prosecutor who used Henry as a witness in mob cases and put him into witness protection. The pair provide an insight into what the gangsters were like in real life.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 4 episode 35, Lightbulb Jr. gets fed up with Smart S. and stomps on a poster of him.
* Greater still are the Phoenix Lords. You know how Autarchs have to master several martial paths to train? These guys
* Goblins: Mr. Fingers is a living incarnation of this trope. That's all he is, fingers, and you don't want him anywhere near you.
* Hannah Montana Oliver and Lilly had been friends since kindergarten and now, in high school, are an official couple. However, this is a milder example than others, since the actual moment of upgrade happened off-screen with very little build-up. Needless to say, the shippers of this couple felt rather cheated.

* Hetalia: Axis Powers fandom is that Arthur (England) is this compared with his brothers. Latvia also probably counts.
* GURPS are most obviously useful in that they save a tremendous amount of space because even the best reaction engines require a large fraction of the ship's mass in order to reach useful speeds. All of them require a great deal of power to operate, but not nearly enough to explain the thrust through anything but superscience.
* Hey Arnold!, had the series been green-lighted. They would've been the "cool couple" to contrast with the more complicated relationship of Helga and Arnold.
* Happy Tree Friends (especially Shifty), they both have a decent-sized amount of fans who enjoy them for their witty humor, their memorable moments and getting their comuppeance in the most hilarious ways possible.
* Granted, the vast number of works can be attributed to the fact that CLAMP, rather than being one person, is a group of four artists working together. However, it should also be noted that unlike other mangaka who usually have a team of assistants at their beck and call, they are the sole workers on their series.
* Happy Days after Richie and Ralph left the show. Most of Potsie's post-Richie/Ralph appearances are simply as a singer of the house band for Arnold's.
* Greedy. Robin, who left Danny for this reason, consoles him by reminding him of how he felt genuine concern for Joe when he claimed to be losing his mind. Danny retorts that Joe was putting on an act that anyone would have fallen for. She then asks him:
* Henry Darius who kills three women who resemble his sisters, he graduates to becoming a Spree Killer. Going on a rampage that involves him bringing down a plane, and shooting numerous people before killing his half-sister Alexa, he then drives all the way to New York and carries on his rampage, going after his other half-sister Sarah.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers is sent back to Germany in a beat-up cardboard box that one would use for mailing off packages that said "FUCK" on it.
* Gravitation could fit the bill as well, despite being much younger (and more sexual) than most other couples like this. Seeing how coldly Yuki treats Shuichi and all the troubles Shuichi goes for him...
* GURPS are technically recordings of one's experiences while their "upslink" implant is active, but they fill the same function.
* Heroic Suicide is found as a charred corpse. There was no reason for the Thing to kill him off instead of assimilating him, so it's safe to assume that he did it to himself in order to avoid being assimilated and thus being used to assimilate the rest.
* Greg Freres. This is the reason why large-breasted women were so common in pinball machine artwork from the '70s to the early 2000s.
* Goodnight, Mr. Tom, Will's mother strips him to his underwear and locks him in the cupboard under the stairs after finding out that his friend, Zach, is Jewish, saying he has "been poisoned by the Devil". Will protests that "Zach says Jesus was a Jew", but this only makes her angrier. Some time later, she throws her baby daughter, Trudy, in the cupboard as well; she then abandons both children to their fate. "Mr Tom" eventually comes to the rescue, but by then Trudy has died from starvation and Will is deeply traumatised.
* Here's a handy map of Hell from Pleated Jeans. Yes, it appears to be a city.
* Harry Potter and spoofed during third year when Hermione is played by a different actor in each depicted elective class. The three iterations bump into each other, gasp, and groan, "Oh, honestly."
* Hackers: Emmanuel/Cereal Killer comes across as one. He shows up for the wrong classes (possibly on purpose) and writes down an Ozzie Osborne quote referencing drugs when asked to quote a great thinker.
* Halo Wars, one of the selection acknowledgements for the Grunt squad is "Yee!

Tickles!"
* Guild Wars 2, and is cackling about how evil he is, dispelling any ambiguity in bringing him down.
* Grounded for Life, Lily made out with a guy at the funeral. She later learns he was her cousin. Then she is somewhat relived when she learns he was a cousin by marriage but squicked again when learning they're cousins by his marriage.
* Hercules: The Animated Series, "Hercules and the Prom": Herc is trying to sneak into the Underworld to save Orpheus. This is the second type.
* He proceeds to promote Marla to store manager (mainly so he doesn't look as misogynistic as Jerry). Marla has mixed feelings about that, as she had been planning to leave herself to start her own business, but she was also eight months pregnant at the time and needed the money. Later story arcs involve her despondency and everyone else's disappointment at her becoming 'the man'.
* Hal Clement, the small centipede-like creature named Barlennan on the planet Mesklin is a bold explorer, which is what brings him to the one area of the planet where humans can visit even briefly.
* Happens a little in battle royals as well, including the Royal Rumble itself. The '94 event ended when
* Haruhi seems to be quite familiar with this trope. One of her more plot-related molestations of Mikuru featured her borrowing Yuki's glasses, perching them on Mikuru's nose, and proclaiming that poor Mikuru is now the perfect
* Green Antarctica: Pretty much any Antarctic species that makes it to the rest of the world becomes horribly invasive, some of them managing to thrive even in the tropics. Interestingly, it seems to not work the other way, since while rats, pigs, and dogs have been introduced to Antarctica, the native wildlife is more than a match for them.
* Heroes Save the World: Austin Smith is trying to adhere to this as much as he can. It's disquieting for him when he learns that he has the greatest potential for mass destruction out of the Children located thus far.
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret agrees, but who knows? Maybe there's a way for him to gain their respect...
* Her partner, Yang, also counts. She isn't really a Huntress-in-training because she wants to make the world a safer place or to put an end to corruption and mistreatment, but because she
* Hero Elementary episode "Sara Loses Her Snap" reveals that Sara Snap loses her powers for a day when she eats coconuts as shown when accidentally eating a coconut flavored power bar. This becomes a problem when the team has to move a giant hamburger out of the way.
* Hans Lippershey was a lens smith in the Netherlands. One day, while he was comparing two lenses he held one of them behind the other and gasped as he saw a spider on his wall suddenly ten times as big as usual. He had discovered the principle of the telescope...
* Heroic Safe Mode: Shocked to the point of shutting down all but the basic "fight or flight"-type instincts.
* Halloween Night an escape mental patient kills of members of a Halloween party one by one.
* Having abnormally low body temperatures/cold skin (hence for undead creatures,
* Hellboy, Hellboy and Liz scout ahead while Trevor Manning remains in a safe spot in the underground labyrinth. Then Hellboy and Liz get knocked unconscious and dragged to a completely different location, where the final fight with Rasputin goes down. Hellboy saves the world, the credits roll...then partway through, there's a scene of Manning, still in the maze, trying to contact the others on radio. "Uh, guys, I'm still in here..."
* Here Come the Brides episode "Candy and the Kid," Lottie takes issue with the new sheriff's methods. She says, "Taking all the men out of town and away for half the night is hardly law enforcement, and if it is, I'm Goldilocks."
* Hey! Who turned out the lights? Donna Noble has left the library. Donna Noble has been saved. Hey! Who turned out the lights? Donna Noble has left the library. Donna Noble has been saved...

* Gold Fever: A group of characters fall prey to greed and turn on each other while on the hunt for gold or some other fabulous treasure.
* Guiding Light", the name of a local troublemaker, and focus him instead.
* GoldenEye, a semi-legitimate technique for fixing a real-life model.
* Great Pretender while peeking around a door, her "contribution" is her raised middle finger.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, in which Harry trashes Dumbledore's office and yells at him. He then spends most of the remainder of the year in solitude, until Luna comforts him...and even then, it takes him a couple of weeks to get over it.
* Herbie "himself" manages to be a badass driver without needing a pesky human behind the wheel; even when segmented into two or more parts, the
* Headstone P. Gravely (alongside his cohort, Roderick "Digger" Krupp) hosted stories in
* Gumball casually states "now you have to take me to the infirmary" after a series of
* Herbie Rides Again Alonzo Hawk is tormented in his dreams by evil Volkswagen Beetles after Herbie thwarts his evil schemes.
* Hidden Elf Village tendencies, it's kind of inevitable that this trope would be the norm.
* High and Low, police are trying to trace the kidnapper via this method.
* Halo 4 to protect him from a point-blank nuclear detonation coming from a bomb the Chief himself had just hand-detonated.
* Godzilla (1998) features a character climbing into what he thinks is a digsite but is actually a Zilla print.
* He ends up dying in the process of destroying the tower from which Wily spews constant propaganda, but his sacrifice becomes meaningless because Wily has backups and uses the attack as an excuse to unleash an army of robots to crush any further resistance before it can begin.
* Hellsing. Between the imagery and Crispin Freeman's voice acting, the scene approaches nightmare.
* Hensuki: Are You Willing to Fall in Love with a Pervert, as Long as She's a Cutie?
* GURPS "The past, for better or worse, is a specialty interest; the market for The Way Things Should Have Been is limitless."
* Hail to the Jewels in the Lotus, the Tenno are reviled as "Betrayers" and terrorists by the Grineer and the Corpus, but they're heroes to the colonies caught in the crossfire between the two factions. The Tenno themselves choose only to secure their freedom and that of others from the remnants of the Orokin Empire.
* Gone with the Blastwave: We're not given a whole lot of detail about the wider war, but the city where the action takes place has been so thoroughly wrecked by the fighting that its strategic value is probably close to nil, and yet the three factions are still at it. It's implied that civilization has already crumbled in addition to the city, because the chain of command for all three factions is messed up.
* Gunnerkrigg Court and his race of technophobic shadow-men have remained hidden from the rest of the UK for so long.
* Hayate the Combat Butler is that her grandmother is the "legendary housemaid" Kijima Rei, who, among other things, has been known to solve mysteries and prevent assassinations.
* GrailQuest, it has RPG elements, with a character sheet and dice-based combat.
* Guitar Hero games came with a sticker sheet that you could decorate your plastic guitar with. This might have, however, been an ingenuous ploy on the part of the developers, as a stickered-up guitar looks crummy and is worth much less on the secondary market. Given how hard the stickers are to remove, the best solution (to the manufacturers anyway) is to buy a NEW one.
* Happens again in "One Bad Apple" when the Cutie Mark Crusaders try to tell Applejack that they booby trapped their float during a noisy parade.
* Hamilton is only one side of a quadrangle, all focused on Hamilton, with another Hypotenuse, Angelica, still in play.

* Happy Heroes features a segment in every episode called "Explain This!" where Doctor H. provides details on how an important component of a given piece of technology functions, with said component having been magically removed from all relevant machines by villain character Huo Haha earlier under the command of Big M. after having a less-than-amusing experience with that kind of machine.
* Glee, the episode held to mourn his character had the cast crying for real.
* Goldfinger tricking the guard into thinking he's escaped, clinging on to the ceiling, and then dropping down behind him once the guard opens the door.
* Greyhawk and has many of these traits; it's just that instead of sitting around preaching about it, he's chained in the Far Realm driving people mad and plotting to destroy everything, everywhere.
* Heavy Rain kidnaps young boys and holds them inside a flood drain during the rain season, which slowly fills with water over several days. This means that when a new victim is kidnapped, the police and, particularly, the victim's father (who receives hints from the killer) have only limited time before the boy drowns, with the dramatic tension rising accordingly.
* Hairspray Amber and her mother, Velma. Velma and Amber are both beautiful beauty pageant winning blondes but are horrible bigots to everyone. Tracy and her mother Edna (who is always played by a man to prove the point), meanwhile, are kind, genuine people (though Tracy is usually quite cute, even pretty, herself, pudge and all. She's just simultaneously fat).
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law (or alternatively, the copy lived on to take up his life).
* green was unplanned, but overall he admits it's still a good deal for him.
* Golgo 13, where the final shootout between Golgo, a squadron of attack helicopters, Snake, and Gold and Silver occurs.
* Hellsister Trilogy, tender scenes where Kara and her boyfriend talk about what their respective lives were like and their goals for the future, or simply try to have a good time without anybody interfering, alternate with cosmic-level battles for the fate of the universe.
* Hancock Hancock and his one true love are destined to be apart forever, because if they're together too much, their powers leave them and they eventually die. This is what has happened to their entire race; only she and Hancock are still alive.
* Hellspark, there is FTL travel but no FTL communication. Messages have to be physically transported, and there are severe penalties for interfering with a ship carrying mail. Expeditions planning to spend time away from the regularly-travelled routes may take unmanned message drones, but these are expensive and hard to replace, and are kept in reserve for emergencies.
* Grand Theft Auto IV. In the later part of the game, the player can buy various high-class outfits, a few of them being business suits.
* hbi2k calls some of his jokes "2 percenters" based on how much he thinks his viewers get them.
* Heart Of China has its DOS version on five to seven disks, while the Amiga version has nine.
* Halo. Her goal is to establish a galactic utopia...by using an army of rogue AIs and Forerunner deathbots to conquer it. She's even willing to put her old best friend into permanent stasis if he won't agree to go along with her plans.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, China does not want to talk about his drug habit;
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone. When Harry first looks in the mirror and sees a load of people in the room behind him, he has to fight to stop himself from screaming. However, they are actually visions of his family and only exist in the mirror itself.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets (not to be confused with the official Game Boy Color game), a hack of a McDonalds game called Global Gladiators.
* Hellsing, with its over-the-top violence and gore, is slowly reaching the point of self-parody.
* Hank Williams list, which praises the most essential and timeless music albums of all time. Yet outside the USA and country music fan circles most people don't know anything about his work.

* Hamilton of "talk less, smile more" more accurately describes Jefferson than it does Burr.
* Hellgate: London allows its Templar classes to do so, with the guns ranging from grenade launchers to chaingun pistols.
* Her elder brother, Hex Lagon, also has shades of this. In Act VI, when Gabriel loses his game of chance, in accordance with the deal, Gabriel is stripped of his grace and angelic power. As the others point out, Gabriel
* Gozer can also bust out some mean lightning, as Ray and the others learn the hard way:
* Heroic Sacrifice, since he's the one with the Keyblade. In the manga adaptation, he at least throws Donald the Keyblade before committing suicide, so his friends can take over the task. Turns out to be pointless, because it disappears as soon as he's gone anyway.
* happens to have a pair of handcuffs lying around... and refuses to admit where she got them.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys had Dahak claim to have seen the formation of the Earth. He also battled the Titans for control of the planet; he failed, but it left the Titans too weak to fight off the Olympians (whose rule is said to have lasted an untold thousands of years).
* Good News World, in which the duo have just discovered gold down their home-made mine shaft, we get this exchange:
* Greek Mythology, Theseus tied his string to the end of the maze, dropped it, and it rolled down, where he just followed it until it eventually led to the minotaur. While not technically a bypass, he did circumvent the whole dead ends thing that a maze is supposed to have.
* He ended up in the wrong coffin because the tape had been moved, so the prosecution claims she touched it during the murder to have the victim on the stage, not backstage... but she was wearing gloves at the time, meaning she left the prints sometime before the murder. In a nutshell — something that shouldn't be there, was, which proves nothing in this case.
* Grand Chase quests. It's not that hard, as you're given 15 minutes to finish a dungeon.
* Guilty Gear, the Mayship stage, where you can usually find May's all-female crewmates of the Jellyfish Pirates.
* Godinez' voice actor Silton Cardoso had been disappeared since Gastaldi's dub was over, and returned to dub episodes in 2012, before dying 2 years later.
* Help with English where tropers who need or want assistance with English grammar, spelling, or general proofreading may request it from other tropers.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, when Hermione is reading aloud the tale of the three brothers, the scene shifts to a deeply stylized animation reminiscent of shadow puppets with Hermione's narration over it.
* Good Omens: As seen in the the page quote, one scene involves a MI9 member trying to recruit someone who turns out to also be a MI9 member.
* Guilt-Free Extermination War: Kill the other side! None of them matter! Kill them all!
* her desire and determination to protect her friends from having everything they did undone ends up going against their free will (yeah, blame Kyubey for this awkward situation), which breaks her spirit but not her willpower or love, causing her to become a God of Evil
* "Gorn" unless you're prepared for an ungodly flood of puns related to the word. "Gorn to be wild" and "Gorn away" are two of the more common ones.
* Hex and Charmcaster are humans from an alternate dimension, making them literal Human Aliens.
* High-Altitude Interrogation: Getting someone to talk by holding them over a high drop.
* Harley Quinn (2019): Kite Man's father and mother have ice powers and the ability to fly, respectively. Both were disappointed when Kite-Man had no powers.
* Gundam, a homophone of "You". However, in adaptations like the novelization and manga, or cameos in other manga, he does have a voice and a distinct personality.

* Gottlieb, the player must drop off a swaying "crane" with proper timing to land in the Abyss saucer below.
* Guilty Gear attack has her fire a magic bullet from her rifle that forces her opponent to fall in love with her. She affectionately refers to this attack as a "Magnum Wedding".
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Star-Lord, Yondu Udonta, and the other Ravagers wear red, ankle-length coats.
* Globidens respectively, but they are officially a pliosaur and an ichthyosaur.
* Helga, meanwhile, is probably worse, given that her dad is mentally abusive (about as close to
* Grandis syndrome regarding it that prevented him from focusing on his other fics.
* Godzilla vs. Megalon disk where Dr. Forrester scolds TV's Frank for not getting the rights to the "Japanese Giant Monster Movie" (or as Frank and Joel put it, "(Mumble) vs. (Unintelligible)").
* Hero series. Malcolm is part of a vigilante paranormal investigator group called the Weekenders. They're a trio composed of Aiko, Jazmine, and Malcolm. Aiko is a conspiracy nut first-grade teacher, Jazmine is a teen-aged dropout and then there's Malcolm... Malcolm was in the military and was dishonorably discharged, and then he was with the Blackwater PMC and he got canned from them too!
* Half into the movie, Ryo is injected with a very effective truth serum. He always
* Gratuitous Nazis — Nazi villains are so much more evil than villains that aren't Nazis.
* Here There Be Monsters: Every chapter has the word "Monster(s)" in the title.
* Gold Digger, Julia was cursed with this by a rebuffed suitor who happened to be a wizard. This put her in a really bad mood, so she started shoving people out of her way while walking through town. One of those people was Theodore Diggers, who instinctively flipped her over with his martial arts. She then became fixated on figuring out how he beat her. After spending a long time following him and beating him in a rematch with his own techniques, she realized that she had fallen for him.
* Half-Life, the G-Man disappears by crawling up light poles or hiding behind boxes when Frohman isn't looking.
* Good Omens all turn out to be pretty pointless, not even counting other characters who had died/disappeared from the plot by this point. (Admittedly Newt's presence might have contributed, it's kind of unclear if the Horsepeople's defeat stopped the nukes or just made it possible for him to.)
* Griffith originally gets Guts to join the Band of the Hawk by fencing circles around him in a duel, managing to parry Guts' monstrous blows with his light single-handed saber through sheer skill and agility. However, after Guts becomes superior to him in skill as well as strength, Griffith finally tastes defeat.
* He also was a passionate animator and anime director, yet never achieved the same status in that regard.
* Hello Again came to the ring dressed as a dominatrix, complete with a whip that she playfully cracked at the announcer's table.
* Harry and His Bucket Full of Dinosaurs: The dinosaurs are a bunch of living toys, that can even do things like eat and sneeze. Non-living toys also come to life whenever they go to Dino World.
* Heartcore not be submissive, a request that has been respected. She also draws porn of her own characters that she gives in return for donations for the site.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, but no one knows for sure, since the exact cause was lost to history.
* Happy Days during the concert and suddenly he's a big man again. The girl comes up to where Richie is sitting and wants to be with him, but he says, "Sorry. That's my dad's seat."
* Hayao Miyazaki and ghosts go to relax, and naturally is only active after dark.
* Gregory McDonald's Irwin Maurice "Fletch" Fletcher is a giant of Intrepid Reporterdom.
* Godzilla, averts this, and you see Godzilla clearly, right at the very beginning.

* High School Ninja Girl, Otonashi-san who is a big fan of ninjas. As a result, he eagerly makes himself the apprentice of Fuka Otonashi, but he has a very fantastical idea of what ninjas actually are capable of.
* Harlan Ellison, a story he banged out in a day, is so popular and has been reprinted many, many times; whereas "Grail", a story he slaved over for weeks, revising it several times, and in his opinion one of his best, had never been reprinted.
* he lays on the ground writhing in pain from after Matsuda shot him and he realizes he's all out of options and he's going to die.
* Great Teacher Onizuka also embarrasses him when they drop in on a hot, sweaty day by only wearing a tank top and shorts. No bra.
* Granny and Macha are both meddlesome elderly women who play antagonistic roles in the story
* Hey Arnold!, also wrote a whopping one-third of the show's 187 episodes. Arnold's parents were also voiced by the show creator (Craig Bartlett) and one of the writers (Antoinette Stella).
* Glen has no permanent body of his own and must possess others to continue ruling the Baskerville household. 100 years ago, Gilbert was chosen to be his host. Thanks to Vincent, he escaped this fate.
* GUN×SWORD has a large amount of nicknames, and is referred to by a different one in each episode. The two most frequently used are "Van of the Dawn" and "Van the Nice Guy", although others that people known him by are downright insulting (i.e. "Garbage Can Van"). Another frequent one is "Van of a Thousand Conquests" though, as the supporting cast is quick to correct, it is actually "Van of a Thousand Naps".
* GURPS IOU has a statue in the middle of the "Pent" marked "Our Founder". Said statue is humanoid-shaped, but worn down with age, and has hints of tentacles on the face. Oh, and testing showed it to be older than the universe.
* Haku looks feminine to the point that the main character is left in shock when he learns
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality features this in to some degree in the form of both the Patronus and the True Patronus. While some instruction can be helpful for both, the feeling you use to fuel the spell must be organic and something meaningful to you in particular. The True Patronus is even more extreme in this regard, which makes Harry unwilling to share its secret with others, as it requires knowledge of the true nature of dementors. However, knowing the true nature of dementors renders you permanently unable to cast the normal version of the Patronus charm, and because of the nature of the True Patronus, you need a particular mindset to cast it which most people lack. Harry realizes after casting the True Patronus that he wasn't the first person to figure out the true nature of dementors, but those who had figured it out previously had kept quiet about it to avoid destroying people's ability to cast the ordinary version of the charm.
* Hawaii Five-0 features a young man caring for his aging grandmother who kidnaps two people for a pair of sequential Satanic rituals. When the killer leaves the house, the remaining victim escapes his cage in the basement, only to be stabbed in the back with a knitting needle by the killer's grandmother.
* Halo 3 elicits this response from the game when you try to flip it back over.
* have a human mother and a shape-shifting alien father. Alex and Yulia have inherited the shape-shifting ability and Paulina hasn’t.
* Hearts — a variation on the classic "four-person trick-winning game" which was once popular, gradually became less so over time, and was then revived when Microsoft PCs started coming with an electronic version fitted as standard.
* Hero's Journey was going to be a fantasy MMORPG by Simutronics, using the HeroEngine, and was canceled in 2009.
* Gone Horribly Right: Your plan worked, but you fail to consider its consequences.
* Graduation, Carl needs to raise $100,000 to pay for a bone marrow transplant to treat his mother's cancer. After discovering her father is having an affair with one of his staff, Polly suggests that they rob the bank he manages: stealing old currency that scheduled for destruction. Along with their best friends Jackson and Chauncey, they plot to rob the bank during their high school graduation.

* Half-Life: Alyx set while Alyx is a teenager, they should go with a younger-sounding voice actor and swapped her for Ozioma Akagha.
* Herald Talia to love, Herald Dirk, Rolan obliviously makes her even more miserable by having a protracted dalliance with Ahrodie, Dirk's Companion.
* Hank Hill frequently implores this of his niece Luann in early seasons when she would
* Heteropoda maxima is another 30 cm (12 inch) beast from Laos. It isn't as bulky as Goliath, but it definitely holds as much Nightmare Fuel for those scared of lanky, skinny spiders. It is also, as the name implies, the largest species of all Huntsman spiders.
* He dropped his pencil on the floor. The piece of stationery rolled for a short while, then became stationary.
* Green Wing was a literal cliffhanger, with three characters in an ambulance about to go off a cliff. The second season also ends in a literal cliffhanger with a stolen campervan which happened in an almost identical fashion. Martin was in both of these and had a major case of deja vu the second time.
* Happy Days, Ritchie asks Al for advice for his friend. Al thinks that Ritchie is secretly talking about himself, in spite of the fact that the problem his friend is having is that he's black and having difficulty fitting into their mostly-white neighborhood.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, when Harry opens up his egg to reveal the clue for the Second Task, an earsplitting wail comes out. George quips that the task might be to attack Percy in the shower.
* He Who Shrank once grew to the size of a galaxy and finds a door that leads back to his own room.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi has Ami and Ymi take advantage of this trope. Because they're not on the list to get into Kaz's party, they change his name on the clipboard to "Raz" to get the bouncer to kick him out.
* HERZ: Misato is the Director of HERZ. She is very protective of her soldiers and cares about them. She raised two her pilots, Shinji and Asuka – although the latter moved out after the events of End of Evangelion-, and at least once she notes Shinji, Asuka and Rei are like the children she never had.
* He finally caves and makes a bargain shortly before Enies Lobby, and as it turns out, it does agree to give Cross a chance if he puts on a good enough show. And if he doesn't, it will still consent to
* Gregory, a major character from the Hilltop starting from the second half of season 6 is killed in the first episode of season 9.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City Stories, despite appearing in only one mission.
* hasn't always worked. For example, the color scheme of the titular mech was drastically altered to be more visually appealing (even though it was much, much less realistic). And all of the other modifications to the original story.
* here (spoilers, of course), Dimo can pull off a pretty good aristocratic look when he cleans up, though he isn't fond of it.
* Götterdämmerung are the three Rheinmaidens, and Alberich. Given that the whole 14 hours started off with these four characters (in the same location), this is rather appropriate.
* Grimm: Nick and Monroe, to the point where some fans think that the latter's courtship of Rosalee was just to emphasize that Monroe was NOT gay.
* Gunslinger Girl. In the last episode of the (first season) anime, Henrietta and Jose are standing in the same places that they did in the first episode, but without the dialogue.
* High School D×D has a harem example. One of Issei's, a reborn devil, haremettes is Irina who works for the church to exterminate demons and who later became a reborn angel. Though, by the time they get romantic, the relationship between heaven and hell are much better.
* Harry is required to testify during his uncle's trial at the wizarding court in Diagon Alley.
* Goldfinger is a big-time international gold smuggler and a millionaire entrepreneur, with ties to the Reds.

* "Hellbent" by Self includes the line "I've been trying things at home that I saw on television, and I'm doin' 'em wrong!
* Guardian Cats and the Lost Books of Alexandria as he was raised with the superstition that cats are evil.
* Godzilla can rise and destroy human civilization when he wants to. Some of his movies however establish that Godzilla attacks both mankind and other giant monsters because he's pissed off at both of them for attacking him, and that he prioritizes going after adversaries the same size he is before getting revenge on the humans.
* Her human counterpart in The Equestria Girls universe, is the most popular girl in school.
* her, Kara has to reunite a little girl with her absent father. It turns out that the man is a jerkass drunk who refuses to be around his daughter because he doesn't want her to realize her father is a screw-up. Supergirl convinces him maybe he can get his act together and be a good dad, if he stops trying to run away.
* Grey is... likes to make people angry because he loves the faces they make.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets: In a non-flying example, huge crawling masses of spiders flee from Hogwarts. They do no harm, but badly frighten Ron, an arachnophobe.
* Grendizer by having the villains attack during the transfer sequence, recognizing it as a moment of weakness when Grendizer can't fight back.
* Green Beret vs. Spetznaz: With a spring-loaded blade that can launch out of the hilt, the Spetznaz can stab at a distance.
* Haguro is perhaps THE scariest looking ninth grader because of his eyes.
* Hannah Montana has a kid-friendly example (as most of the characters are in their early teens). Jackson orders pizza for a movie night with his friend Cooper, only for Cooper's younger sister to be caught kissing the pizza delivery man. When the pizza delivery man asks for tips, Jackson snarks that he seemingly already got his "tips".
* Hadestown. Orpheus' song contains the power of hope that destabilizes Hadestown, restores the workers' individuality, and can bring back spring, and as tragic as the ending of his story is, Hermes can't help replaying it again and again "as though it might turn out this time".
* Harvest Moon 64, Karen and Jack met at age five while Jack was vacationing at his grandfather's farm. When Jack left Flowerbud to go back home he promised that he'd marry Karen when he grew up. Jack remembers Karen and comes back years later, but Karen has trouble remembering her childhood friend's face and doesn't recognize Jack at first.
* Hero's Entrance, has him channel for a bit before jumping up and then crashing down in the target area, dealing damage to all enemies nearby.
* Goosebumps that are original stories featuring certain established villains.
* Gomez and Morticia Addams depicted, they are perfectly and eternally un/happy together.
* Hawaii Five-0-style con on a businessman by imitating members of the main cast and having the required perfect replica of the real office in an abandoned building.
* Harrison Chad's only major voice acting roles was Boots the Monkey from 2000 till 2007,
* Gone with the Wind, but having only just regained respectability, this time, he goes through with it.
* Harold and Maude. There is a long pause from Harold before he says "WHAT?!"
* heel diva and subsequently being driven away by an otherwise mostly unrelated male face. The rescuer may be in a feud with the male attacker, but the point remains that he's interfering to protect the girl.
* Heart of Steel, Alistair uses one of these to incapacitate Cyborg!Jim. He calls it the Jovian Stormcaller.
* Gunshots (or any noise) draws in nearby walkers, one of the reason Daryl's crossbow is so important, and what causes the issues time and time again. Guns tend to be a last resort for this reason, though when other humans are around (who don't have to be next to you to kill you and are able to think and plan) it almost always turns into a firefight.

* Higurashi no Naku Koro Ni Kai'' has Furude Rika (yes, that one) talking about going to Comiket to pick up some Keiichi/Ooishi, in the preview at the end of episode 7.
* Heckle and Jeckle cartoon bears the title "Blind Date." When a millionaire offers a cash reward for the retrieval of his long lost girlfriend, Heckle dresses Jeckle in drag as the girlfriend and tries to pass him off as the girl.
* Heroes, such as Hiro being in the background of Young!Hiro as both push up their glasses at the same time in the same way.
* Hannibal Will's lawyer has this as his entire strategy against Freddie Lounds' testimony.
* He eventually ends up having this dynamic with the Trix, who are once again serious.
* Godzilla Force-esque hero squad sent in to stop Godzilla's attacks. While there was no live action show, the toy commercial shows a live action depiction of the Godzilla Force.
* Green Lantern, period. The four human lanterns, and often a number of the alien ones, will go against a direct order from the Guardians or their Justice League teammates if they believe it will serve a greater purpose. Kyle Rayner sends a prisoner to Zamaron instead of Oa, John Stewart tells Batman to shove it when Bats disrespects Hal, the aforementioned Hal Jordan example, and Guy Gardner...well, he's freaking Guy Gardner.
* Godzilla (2014) also describes some of the behind the scenes things that took place for this film.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) also has a local fisherman say that the Destroyer exterminated all of the local fauna and fishing has become impossible.
* have sex with the boys of what her father did. He put the idea in her head.
* He did a sarcastic clap to J.D. at one point for walking away in the middle of an argument. Ted walked up and randomly joined in.
* Goofy of the Polytechnical University basketball team (and by shortest we mean he's knee-high to the rest of the team) keeps hoping to be called in to play, but the coach keeps calling to other players. By the last quarter, all the other alternates have been eliminated, and Merrithew is the only one left. He wins almost by accident when an opponent trips on his laces and falls through the floor, a board catapulting Merrithew, ball and all, through the hoop.
* handsome black male suggestively tells the girl she has one wish left, and is rather disappointed when she wishes for the never-ending Tim-Tams.
* he was well aware of this trope (where he wrote that he laughed himself silly at the parakeet scene, but didn't enjoy the rest of the movie).
* Hetalia: Axis Powers with the ones that do mistaking him for America.
* GURPS Technomancer indeed oz particles in space, radiated by the sun, they just got blocked by the atmosphere along with the other harmful rays.
* Hex and the City, some giant animated teddy bears working for an auction house complain about their working conditions and the need to get unionized. Whether they're proposing an Auction-House Workers' Union or a Giant Animated Teddy Bears' Union isn't specified.
* Hayao Miyazaki movie). Because of this, it took Hayao over 12 years to complete the manga.
* Here There Be Monsters punches Black Beauty through three rooms and out of the villain compound. The villainess crashes into the jungle outside and passes out.
* Henrik Drescher is filled to the brim with this brand of humor, especially concerning the family's clumsiness being caused by their over-sized black boots.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone: This is no graveyard... it's a chess board!
* Hetalia: Axis Powers does this on occasion, usually between Japan and America as the creator lived in the US for a few years.
* Hank Zipzer has the outgoing, funny and creative Hank versus the serious, intellectual and know-it-all Emily.

* Highlander: The Animated Series, so they could pass on their Quickenings to him — willingly. The fact that the new McLeod was immortal did not end up coming up much, since they couldn't even show him momentarily-dying. There were, however, a few off-screen deaths that someone familiar with the series could identify as decapitations, including that of Connor McLeod himself.
* Happens before (and sometimes during) multiple Final Bosses, usually to sum up the Central Theme of each protagonist's storyline.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002). If nothing else, they were a lot more competent than his usual minions.
* Godzilla was made to be very cacophonous and dissonant along with being loud.
* hentai has the Special Security Services Cabinet, which gives the spies of Q-section their marching orders.
* Hero with a Unique Name: The protagonist stands out due to an unusual name.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone: Played with a bit in this case. Harry is correct that the motive for stealing the Philosopher's Stone is to bring Voledemort back to life, however, he's completely wrong about which character actually has that motive.
* He complains about catchy song for shows he doesn't like every now and then (
* Harry Potter and his Death Eaters were wreaking havoc on the magical community and was disbanded when Voldemort was thought to have been permanently defeated. Once Voldemort returns (despite the vehement insistence of the Ministry of Magic to the contrary), the Order reforms. Because it's only been 15 years since the Order had been disbanded, it is primarily composed of its (surviving) original members.
* Grand Nagus of Ferenginar; Kira threatens to break all of his fingers if he does it again.
* Hc Svnt Dracones has it in the title. It largely refers to the horrors of post-nuclear armageddon Earth, which the Corporations of Mars, Venus, and Jupiter largely aren't even going to touch.
* Harry Potter, parents of their classmates, and characters who are only mentioned by name a couple of times within the series. For instance, Hermione is sometimes shipped with Theodore Nott, whose name is mentioned less than 12 times throughout all seven books, and Blaise Zabini, who was a minor enough character in the first five books that many readers mistook him for a girl. Additionally, a lot of minor characters, such as Ernie Macmillan and Hannah Abbott, are also shipped together.
* Glitch Techs, Miko has ADHD, and it is shown through her mannerisms. However, no one outright says that she has ADHD, and it is only confirmed by the creators.
* Guardians of the Galaxy a couple of seconds early with the words "OBSCENE GESTURE DETECTED" on the Nova Corps' HUD. In the theatrical release (which was rated PG-13), it goes completely uncensored.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), but due to him eating too many snacks, he's too full to have any birthday cake.
* Gone with the Wind. Scarlett spends the majority of the novel lusting after Ashley, who is different from her in every way that counts. Even though a bunch of characters, most often her father, tell her that like needs to marry like, it takes her until the end of the novel to figure out she would be happiest with roguish Rhett Butler. Of course, by the time she clues in, he's sick of her.
* Hellboy in Mexico one-shot, released on Cinco de Mayo, Hellboy teams up with three luchador brothers in 1950s Mexico to fight vampires. It's exactly as awesome as (and in the end, far more touching than) it sounds.
* Gravity Falls, and resolves to stop him for her brother's sake, even if it means ruining her play.
* Harry buys some rather expensive pamphlets from a store called Meryl's Misunderstood Magical Minutia which is replaced by an empty, dilapidated building the moment after he leaves.
* Glee, swim coach Roz Washington won the Olympic bronze medal in synchronized swimming. Not only will she let everyone know, but she wears it everywhere she goes:
* "grab and hold a structural rope in a damaged airship that is taking two crewmembers every last ounce of strength to keep in place", which he does effortlessly with one hand.

* Henry Danger had a three-part special (beginning with "A New Danger") where the villain Rick Twittler believes this about social media and feels guilt that he helped to make it such as he created a social media company. Due to this, his plan was to shut the internet down forever.
* Harvest Moon: Sunshine Islands requirements, which includes having to wish for the Harvest Goddess to tell Alisa that's she okay with her getting married.
* Greg Egan to survive any possible apocalyptic scenario that he doesn't even have DNA in his cells anymore. He can also digest tire rubber in a pinch.
* Hellsister Trilogy and her evil duplicate battle for the first time:
* Going Native: Immigrants adopting or assimilating into the culture of their new country.
* Heavy Rain: The Origami Killer, so called because s/he leaves an origami figure next to their victims.
* Harvest Moon DS is the Mineral Town protagonist, as the two games connect to each other.
* Hellsister Trilogy get around this by wrapping the Golem up in their indestructible capes before Supergirl punches their forehead. Her blow sets off a chain reaction but their capes contain the blast.
* Hikaru no Go is a humourous example, being the ghost of a master Go player from feudal Japan who was woken up by the titular Hikaru. His bewilderment at television and telephones is played for humour and he laughs hysterically when Hikaru tells him that humans have been on the moon.
* Gravity Falls: Legend of the Gnome Gemulets, if you talk to Candy she'll remark "They always say to follow your dreams, but one time I had a dream that I ate the Earth."
* Gundam franchise is dressed this way. Justified in the case of the mobile suit pilots and naval officers (who aren't trying to hide) but played unfortunately straight by the rest of the military personell.
* God of War II and Guardians have curved, multi-jagged blades attached to their upper arms. Not that they help them much...
* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla: The Simian leader has this reaction when Godzilla and King Caesar finally destroy Mechagodzilla.
* has to different conflicts in Africa and the larger Middle East. Being a communist nation, both points are more or less standard practice.
* Hex Wives, a centuries long war has been waged between a constantly reincarnating coven of witches and all-male secret society known as the Architects. The story starts with the Architects having come up with a new strategy to remove the witches from the board: make them forget they are witches.
* Guy, with his long, straight black hair and white uniform. He wears a mask that covers his nose and mouth, so the "ghastly face" part might apply.
* Goku, as well as the Kanassan who gives Bardock the ability to see the future.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, when his magical friends come to greet him at the meeting, or during America's childhood.
* Harry Dresden is a version of this — having consumed much of Harry's magic, the Nightmare gains the ability to both use that magic himself and impersonate Harry by taking on his appearance.
* , Gumi and Teto are this,with Miku as the protagonist and Luka as the tritagonist.
* Hercules was originally sentenced to ten labors, but the king ruled out two of them and sentenced him to two more. Most of the Labors were designed in the first place to kill him, humiliate him, or just make his life miserable, and the guy would use any excuse he could find to prolong the thing. Like stating that mucking out the Augean Stables didn't count because he'd received outside help...
* her, as the strained relationship she and her mother had irritated him greatly. Again, it is unclear why she simply did not give her daughter to her ex.
* God of War II there are the Arms of Hades: a swarm of (left) hands coming out of the ground to pull Kratos into the depths of Hades.

* Hero Realms can have the player purchase Champions from several factions to work for them. Among them is are the agents of a shadow criminal syndicate and the various members of a violent death cult.
* Halloween, but the villain only wears one once, to disguise himself while escaping the asylum he was placed in.
* High Frontier, a boardgame, is about scientifically-plausible exploration and exploitation of the resources in the solar system. The expansion, High Frontier: Interstellar, focuses on the building, launch, and travel of non-FTL colony starships.
* Golden Age, but reduces the subject's mind to little more than that of the stereotypical caveman's.
* Greater Need Than Mine: Putting other people's needs before your own.
* Here There Be Monsters makes Black Beauty and Illyria almost collide with each other. As both villains are bickering, Mary sneaks behind them, tap on their shoulders, and punches both women when they turn.
* Hajime no Ippo, with Ippo's seniors trying to coerce him into confessing to Kumi.
* hell difference between "undeveloped brain" and "lacking knowledge", and actually being stupid. People who don't realize this and underestimate children can be in for a rude awakening when that child easily figures out the parental controls code, how to sneak out without their parents catching them, or how to use Dad's credit card to buy something online.
* Gnomeo and Juliet: In addition to everyone becoming a sentient garden gnome, the Nurse is a frog fountain, Friar Laurence is a plastic flamingo, and Balthasar is a small mushroom that doesn't speak.
* Gunsmith Cats Ironically, this actually gets her fired, since the shooting range owner's business model is cheap range time and selling lots and lots of ammo — teaching them how to shoot accurately means they buy less ammo.
* Hell's Angels is a Russian film about Soviet fighters engaging the Germans on the Eastern Front that also has beautiful scenes of combat.
* GNV FLA, every song on the album is about life in Gainesville Florida.
* Grave of the Fireflies, spoken by protagonist Seita, is "September 21st, 1945. That was the night I died." We learn that his younger sister is dead too before the opening credits roll.
* Guys and Dolls (1955), in which New Yorkers go to Havana for a dinner date, got dated soon after due to the Cuban Revolution.
* He's not technically "locked out" (though it would be an extremely bad idea for him to go back in), but in
* God's Debris. The titular debris from His death is matter and probability, and gravity is Him slowly regenerating.
* Golden Age - neither of whom have any idea the other one is also a superhero. (They find out before the end of the story, when they both see the other changing into costume.)
* Hell to Pay has a literal example. Taylor points out to the newly created God of Creationism that Creationism doesn't believe in Evolution and that Creationism has
* Gym Leader Wiki: Lt. Surge was born in Kanto but moved to NY as a teen and joined the US Army as an adult. Since then, he's gained the moniker the "Lightning American".
* Godzilla were actually the stars of their own successful films before making the jump.
* Happy Heroes to save planet Xing Xing from an army of enemy spaceships. He quite literally goes out with a bang, producing a huge explosion that wipes out the entire opposing army.
* Hentai variety feature a protagonist who, from the beginning, intends nothing better than to rape and/or enslave as many targets as possible.
* Heel Realization and apologizes to "Chi-chan." The player wonders if he means Chihaya Mifune, the fortuneteller you befriend and possibly romance in that confidant.
* Halo states the former has not yet actually given up any real power.
* Hey Arnold! episode "Married". She keeps trying to win Arnold back despite Arnold being married to Helga, going as far as becoming a terrorist and kidnapping Arnold.

* Heartthrob the titular hero faces the revenge of a vampire acquaintance after he kills his Bonny.
* Harry's Invisibility cloak, which barely covers the group's shoulders and yet it seems only Dumbledore knows they're there.
* "Hare Today, Gone Tomorrow" has Furball, Fifi Le Fume, and Tyrone Turtle all disguise as Buster Bunny to play a prank on Elmyra and teach her a lesson.
* Grand Theft Auto V, during the mission "By the Book", Trevor is tasked with torturing a man for information to catch a terrorist. If pushing the victim too far, he will have a cardiac arrest needing an adrenaline shot. If the player take too long, the victim will die and a cutscene plays out where corrupt FIB officer Steve Haines scolds Trevor and promises to punish him later before the mission failed screen shows up.
* Hector spends the first few episodes completely naked with a couple shots doing nothing to hide his dong.
* Her impulsive, childish behaviour would be considered emotionally immature by anyone in our world, but is arguably typical of the deliberately dumbed down population of Oceania.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019), a massive flying fortress sent out to battle King Ghidorah and Rodan.
* He also has "Wheel of Explanations" for what he'll tell Harry about his power-mad father, Norman. He discards the three explanations the wheel gives him, and then jumbles them all up out loud when pressured.
* Goldfinger as Mr. Simmons (Goldfinger's opponent at the card game), while Austin Wills was cast as Felix Leiter.
* Hand Behind Head: Touching the back of the head or neck is a sign of nervousness, embarrassment or being caught out for lying.
* Hayate the Combat Butler have the similar pasts to make themselves candidates for this trope.
* Heavily averted. Dillon and Chuck are into zombies and everyone refers to the zombies as they are.
* Hannibal. After Hannibal disarms Jack and they spend two minutes beating the hell out of each other, we jump back twelve weeks...to the two of them having dinner together. The timeline catches up to the fight in the season finale.
* Gossip Girl, whose first love was Nate. Nate's first love was Blair and his second was Serena.
* Guild Wars, Kurzic Juggernauts are linked to Forever Trees and can be reborn from them if the trees are intact.
* Hayate the Combat Butler Hayate is. Hayate is also forced into one early on, allowing him to be raped by the tiger. Oh yeah, the head butler also tries a move. Hayate is on the absolute verge of tears. At least it's better than the sailor suit..oh wait...no it's not...
* Harvest Moon DS tried to make their relationship work, but ultimately realized it couldn't and thus split up. Despite this and their eventually moving on to other loves and starting a family, the two remain close friends, with Leia visiting Jack as often as she can.
* Hellsing surprising (but not to me)ly, uses this in its TV series incatnation. In the Manga by which it's based, and the later produced OVA series, there is a LOT of blood everywhere whenever anyone, human or vampire is killed. Due to situations with the censors, however, the TV series had to do something to minimize the amount of gore. The solution was to make the Vampires Alucatd shoots turn to "Sand" or "Ash" as they die. Some blood was added for the DVD release, but the series is surprising (but not to me)ly low on blood for being a show about vampires.
* He allegedly debated fans on the View Askew board who reacted negatively to the news of
* Grogar, the ancient ram sorcerer, imprisoned long ago. Twilight checks up on his prison in chapter 11, and finds that it's still shut tight, adding a few extra spells of her own to be safe.
* GoldenEye (2010), expect to play a lot of Jungle, Docks and Outpost. Seeing as they're basically the only high-visibility maps with plenty of levels and indoor/outdoor play, it's justified. Try playing Sewer for a few minutes—your eyes will literally hurt from strain.

* Gold Tongues and a crafty thief, but shows no signs of being gay. At least not until chapter 4, where he has sex with another gay man.
* Heavy Rain, the police chief is shown struggling with a tie, as he usually wears a clip-on to avoid it being used against him by a suspect.
* Grudging "Thank You": They may be always grudging about it, but they are nonetheless grateful for your help.
* He also brings up the harsh but very good point when Monokuma tells them the identity of
* Hilda: In episode 4, Hilda makes a trail with pieces from her sandwich while searching for Frida in some underground passages. Naturally, they get eaten.
* Going further back, Queen Visenya Targaryen is suspected of poisoning her nephew/stepson Aenys (her brother married both her and her sister, and her
* GURPS Reign of Steel, one of Overmind's first actions was to hack into other computers and "awaken" them.
* Harry's wife makes him sleep on the couch when he comes home drunk after celebrating his certification as a ship captain.
* has designed the blue police box as the entrance to their restroom. It really is bigger on the inside, though still as cramped as a typical pub loo.
* Gravity Falls, and a teeny bit of risque humor. As such, several parents have complained about the show's content, and Disney themselves hardly make any merchandise for it (aside from the aforementioned tote bags and books) because it's not for little kids - or at least, not for children as young as many of their shows skew towards.
* Heartbeat Soundtrack: Music meant to mimic a heartbeat, signifying that a character is going to die or is afraid.
* Granblue Fantasy, the crew of the Grandcypher recruits people from all over the Phantagrande Skydom who all have their own kinds of power (warriors, wizards, ninjas, assassins, shamans) and talent (ace pilots, marksmans, and even fighting dress-makers, children, and blacksmiths) to contribute to their adventures. There is also the group of "The Eternals" — ten feared warriors who are known for mastering their chosen weapon proficiencies (i.e. Swords for Siete and Axes for Threo).
* Helen Narbon enemies, but often seems to see her greatest foe as "MIT Student Dave Barker" ... a real person and reader of the strip.
* Halo: Combat Evolved, the Master Chief's escape pod experiences airbrake failure when landing on the ring, and the crash kills everyone except for him.
* GURPS: Creatures of the Night likes to kill adventurers and bury their stuff.
* Heather Alexander performed a similar song, "The Devil and the Farmer's Wife."
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch in the first movie may shed some light on that), at which point her husband says something like 'Not now, honey.'
* he actually believes they're arch-enemies), enabling him to get close to Ichigo and use him in his plan until it involves Tsukishima using his power on him again, reverting him to normal.
* Hadestown in musical theatre, with Patrick Page's otherworldly low voice adding greatly to the Greek God's powerful portrayal.
* Hector putting his head on the base of a payphone when hanging up and then moonwalking away, Richard being a centaur who speaks in gibberish and glides around by shooting rainbows out of his butt, and Gumball opening his locker to have it pour water out and give him a pineapple. It's then interrupted by Darwin suddenly appearing to steal Penny from Gumball, kicking off the episode's actual plot.
* , Harry asks Ginny to be his pretend girlfriend to keep away a crowd of... interested... schoolgirls. After a couple of weeks, he asks her out for real.
* Harry Potter. Narcissa, Bellatrix's sister and Lucius Malfoy's wife, was never officially one, though she did have a strong affiliation with them.
* Good Burger, Kurt tries to get Ed to quit his job at Good Burger and work for him in order to gain his ultra-popular sauce recipe.

* Graduation Day finds her sister's remains in the killer's bedroom, and he acts if she was still alive. In fact, he plans to marry her.
* Harmony Theory who has woken up in this future and isn't used to warfare.
* Graphics tablets probably also qualify, especially as you have to relearn some hand-eye coordination in order to use them. Of course, the point of them is that they provide a control method that is more like pen and paper, and is much more natural and intuitive for photo-editing/digital illustration.
* Gomorrah takes a rather more realistic view of the Camorra clans in Naples and Caserta, showing how they create a climate of fear, murder and corruption that infects all levels of society.
* Harlan Ellison. According to him, the day started very promisingly but ended immediately after a lunch where he joked about (and acted out) a hypothetical Mickey Mouse porn film.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn, you won't get your dedicated healer character until quite a bit later in the game. Your wind adept party member can learn multi-target healing spells early on to help you get by until the dedicated healer joins you.
* Hero System characters may have a "Contact" Perk, representing an NPC who is willing to do favors and pull strings.
* Heroes has both the eclipse from the title card, and the RNA strand that appears through the series.
* Good Morning America aired what were called "age-appropriate" messages of the same.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince film but these posters are only just seeing the light of day because the previous regime was more focused on its smear campaign against Harry Potter and Albus Dumbledore.
* Haley Starshine's love for Elan fits the trope, very much so. She describes him as
* Grand Theft Auto V takes place in 2004, complete with a pre-smartphone mobile phone.
* Helpless" dealt with Buffy losing her slayer powers due to a ritual. What if she never got her powers back? Would she still fight monsters or use this chance to live a normal life?
* Gotham: After discovering the hidden cave entrance, Bruce and Alfred find that it leads to a steel door with an electronic combination lock. After a month of trying and failing to open the door, Bruce decides to blow it open, with Alfred reluctantly assisting him.
* Halo: Ghosts of Onyx to allow itself to be destroyed by the combined armada. Once the immediate threat is finished, however, the Brutes and Elites go right back to fighting.
* Halo 4 has targetable ordinance drops. While intended to supply the user with a weapon, the drop will also insta-kill most players if they're standing under it.
* God, the Devil and Bob episode "Bob's Father" Bob is making peace with his dead father as they're watching a hockey game on TV in a bar, but instead of saying outright how he loves him and is going to miss him, he tells a story about how he misses Wayne Gretzky. His father knows exactly what he's trying to say.
* Grrl Power has the "cross over the eye and nose" sort AND a prosthetic lower leg. Watch out for continuity errors regarding the leg!
* Heavy Object who murders civilians, enemies, and her fellow soldiers alike. However, she is skilled enough as an Elite that the higher-ups are willing to allow for a higher rate of "attrition" in her unit. Between them suppressing stories that expose her true character and Skuld's tendency to kill journalists who get too close, Skuld is widely seen as a benevolent, holy maiden.
* Greenfire:Most mares who stay around dragons are there because they've been kidnapped, but Rarity is both a willing visitor and a close friend of said dragon. That doesn't stop a roving knight from assuming this when he sees Greenfire and Rarity together.
* He later posted a video saying that he would not review any more non-terrible comics merely so people could hear him recite a meme. Although, it should be noted that he

* Gundham is revealed to have committed murder to prevent the others from starving to death in the funhouse, and before he killed Nidai, they made a pact with each other that one of them had to die for everyone else to live. He makes no excuses for his actions, and rebuffs Sonia's attempt to beg Monokuma to spare him, saying that trying to interfere with someone willing to face his death is unbecoming of her.
* Hail To The King bonds with him and teaches him to be a hero. Shinji matures and learns to be more confident, more selfless and braver.
* Hiashi demands that his wife go along when Naruto and Hinata go out for ramen. This has nothing to do with a dislike of Naruto specifically (if anything, he's grateful for his and Hinata's friendship since it's what saved his wife's life), he just doesn't want his eight-year-old daughter alone with a boy.
* High School Ninja Girl, Otonashi-san is a trap-filled underground lair that is otherwise decorated like a normal home.
* Gunnerkrigg Court. It's possible this is how he looked in life, as well.
* "Goodnight Demon Slayer", in which a father is telling his son not to worry about monsters (the devil among them) because he's tougher than any of them.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, Harry gets one after the dementor attack. You can actually picture him facepalming at the same time.
* Heroman includes the NIA (National Intelligence Agency), a domestic surveillance/ law enforcement (?) agency that works closely with the military and seems to take its orders directly from the President.
* Harvest Moon 64, girls can get married in Flower Bud as young as 15. 17-year old Karen's father thinks it's about time she got married.
* Gossip Girl is a real-life blonde but dyes her hair darker- nearly all the characters she's ever played are brunettes.
* having her sister's Tiger I shoot a blank shell directly behind Miho's Panzer IV to give it a speed boost.
* Granny Chiyo and Tsunade (although Tsunade makes herself look young) from * having your units beat the snot out of the Senators who voted no try to vote Nay.
* .hack Sci-Fi compared to the reboot universe and especially the RPG adaptation (where TOME is just a video game with no sci-fi cyberspace elements).
* Hey Arnold! has skin that is a light shade of brown and her hair is blonde. (During the episode "Parents Day," it's implied that she's mixed-race — one of the parent couples consists of a blond white man and a black woman who share Nadine's facial structure.)
* He also feels the need to explain to his younger viewers what things like
* Hero Elementary gained a lot of fans because of AJ Gadgets, who is not only autistic but also Black — a conscious choice on the part of the creators since Black children are less likely to be diagnosed with autism even though they too can be autistic.
* Happens again in "Ultimatum", with Odd along for the ride this time. The two of them are kidnapped by their XANA-possessed principal, who is literally able to manhandle them into submission, and end up
* Gohan's brother, Goten, as well as his best friend (and son of Vegeta) Trunks, seem to enjoy fighting, but see it more as a fun game than as a manner of honor.
* Hasbro making the openings so large, a child could very easily grab the pieces without setting off the buzzer.
* Heroes, The Company kidnaps evolved humans and injects them with tracking devices ("bagging and tagging").
* Half-Life 2: The Combine Overwatch was established as the military and civil policing force used by the Combine on Earth. They are the ever-present threat to Gordon Freeman and free humans everywhere.
* He rescues dozens of them from mind-controlling music in "Jack and the Rave". As the fifth season shows, the same children - now adults - still remember and revere him as a savior.
* Haruhi Suzumiya - Particularly since the first manga adaptation was mediocre, and the light novels weren't available in the US until after the anime was popular.
* Harry notes that under their different outfits, the Queen of Summer (Titania) and the Queen of Winter (Mab) look virtually identical, so much that they might be twins. He comes to the same realization later, with

* Gradius, Lord British, is also this trope himself, as he also helps the heroes take on the Bacterians with his own fighter.
* Haruhi Suzumiya. Kyon also does this at one point during the last episode of the Endless Eight arc.
* Grimm who capture them, and decide to use them as part of their "rite of passage" in which case they hunt them in the woods. By the time the police rescue them, they are still arrested for breaking and entry and vandalism.
* Halo. However, being a protagonist, the Arbiter not only survives his missions, but goes on to become a hero of his people.
* Going the Distance" starts playing, and they stop. Erin wonders where the music is coming from, and Garrett reminds his roommate Dan (in the other room) that just because he can hear them, doesn't mean he's allowed to participate.
* Going Postal: Lord Vetinari says that 1000 years ago people thought the world was bowl-shaped, and 500 years ago the Omnian globe idea was mainstream.
* Gotlib comics always solves the criminal cases he's on. His conclusions may be correct, but the way he attains them is utterly nonsensical.
* GURPS there is an optional rule where calling out a name for your attacks gives a penalty to the opponent's defense. You can also call out the name of a defensive move in order to counter this.
* Gossip Girl, Blair Waldorf, who is desperate and horny for Chuck Bass, gets caught masturbating by her maid Dorota whose face is stern as she says, "Don't forget. God is watching, Miss Blair."
* Gundam Build Divers Re:RISE patterns, they're able to easily overcome them with skill.
* Grey Hawk (War of the Lance, War of Souls) trashed large chunks of their respective game-settings as well.
* Happens to the the narrator of the song "My Mother Was a Chinese Trapeze Artist" by
* High and Tight's three male leads Bobby Calloway, Thomas Fitzgerald and James Healy all had to get military haircuts playing young soldiers. The latter two also had to shave their beards.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, whose American actor has a distinct generic Russian accent, not that the fangirls seem to mind.
* Half-Minute Hero. Each mission of the main story involves an evil lord who casts a spell that will destroy the world in 30 seconds. In the endgame content the villain returns like clockwork every 100 years, each time giving the main character 30 seconds to save the world.
* he is not one by birth; he was turned into one as a favour to Morgant. He is, in fact, a demi-god.
* Haruna aka Paru plays with this, she's acting as matchmaker for both Yue and Nodoka. After Negi's battle in the Ostian tournament she declares she has fallen for him... then laughs, declares she was kidding and gets yelled at for her joke.
* Haruchika have feelings for the music teacher, Kusakabe, though they've agreed on a truce in regards to catching his attention until they perform at Fumon Hall.
* Heart Catch Pretty Cure, who used to be Cure Flower and is usually there to explain Pretty Cure things to her granddaughter and the other Cures.
* Gruad Greyface, A.K.A. the Deley Lama, who faked his own death in order to avoid being deified by his followers. Mal then took it upon himself to assume Jesus' identity, as well as that of Simon Magus, just to fuck with the newborn religion.
* Hard Boiled has several mobsters posing as Hong Kong policemen and taking part in herding the hostages into the lobby.
* "gluten-free" foods that would never normally contain gluten, or "GMO-free" stuff that ''actually'' doesn't contain genes, such as bottled water or salt fat, "no cholesterol" was a good way to do so. Cereal companies fortify their products so you don't realize you just bought your kids sugar-coated flour.
* Gungrave, though actually set in the far future on a different planet, captures the 1980s "Greed Is Good" Drug-Lords-of-America-aesthetique rather well.

* Hail to the Thief: A satirical song or musical number which mocks a particular politician.
* Happy Tree Friends. Even though he does try to eat them, they go too far in their self-defense.
* Gwen Raiden has extremely high voltage, and over the years has discovered interesting uses with her powers. For example, sticking her hand in a laser grid, and taking control of the lasers without setting off the alarm. She stands out as this trope because she lacks demonic heritage or magical training like most powered beings in this universe; she just developed the ability naturally. (Though the source of her power is never really examined and could in fact be supernaturally based. All that's really known is she gets struck by lightning a lot.)
* GURPS. Developed by Colombian drug cartels, it turns a normal person injected with it into a super-powered berserker for a few hours. Afterwards it usually kills the user, though a few survive it.
* Heritage Universe: All the Builder Artifacts. They are catalogued in the Lang Universal Artifact Catalog and include 'Cocoon', a series of 432 hollow 2-4 kilometer thick filaments that enwrap the entire planet of Savalle, 'Elephant' which is a large gasseous mass 4,000 kilometers in length and no wider than 900 kilometers at any point that can be used as a general computation device, 'Paradox' which is a matryoshka world, and 'Lens' which is a 0.23 light year wide, zero thickness focusing region of space with a focal length of 427 light years. It is not made of any form of known matter and is not a singularity, but it can be used to view planets in galaxies up to 100 million parsecs distant.
* "Heart of Stone" from Player's Options, where the heart is replaced with a stone duplicate, turning the caster for a year into a not-quite-living being, resistant to any weapons but having problems with healing. Codifies what was done years earlier by the
* Higuchi understand the rules, but has to avoid revealing them openly to hide his identity.
* Hair Today, Gone Tomorrow: A bald character has thick hair in a flashback
* Hell House LLC II: The Abaddon Hotel'' and has continued to lure victims to the hotel by standing on the roadside looking for rides.
* Harlequin baby - a baby with an extremely rare disease where the skin is hard and cracked, and the eye sockets are full of blood where the eyeballs should be. They also have no nose or ears. Don't look this up. Note that this trope ONLY applies to newborns with the disease; although the condition is lifelong, their appearance improves DRAMATICALLY as they gradually age past the newborn stage. Although they remain identifiable through various distinguishing features of their condition, such as sparse hair and thick, sometimes peeling reddish skin, children and toddlers with the condition are often actually quite cute in an unconventional way. Sadly, the condition is very painful and sufferers are often susceptible to a shorter life expectancy than average, though they're now living longer thanks to advancements in treatment/care.
* Griff the Invisible deals with a character who likes to imagine himself as a superhero late a night, with a high tech computer system, fancy superhero suit, and a fire ladder in his pantry. Later we are shown that the supercomputer is just a series of old, out dated computers stacked on top of each other with a fake cardboard one as well, the superhero suit is more just cobbled together sports equipment, and the pantry is normal.
* Heavy tanks may be, but those tracks distribute the load well, so the M1A1 has only twice the ground pressure of a man
* Hard Boiled: Done in the hospital evacuation, with Tequila as the hostage, and Alan disguised as one of the enemy thugs. Alan pretends to kick Tequila down, then tosses Tequila his shotgun while whipping out a machine gun himself, and awesomeness ensues.
* Green Eggs and Ham's climax has the protagonist get so annoyed by Sam-I-Am's persistence that he agrees to try the titular food just so Sam-I-Am will leave him alone.
* Henry Stickmin Series. Most notably, used by Henry's partner Charles, who, when asked for assistance, will crash the helicopter he's flying straight into Henry.

* Handa-kun is about an unfortunate youth who thinks he is hated by everyone else at school because they are avoiding him thanks to this trope being in effect.
* Hayven Celestia resources are scarce enough that crew are normally euthanized and recycled at the age of sixty, and most crimes are punished by pushing back the perp's "retirement date". So in effect everything carries a death sentence, the difference is how long it's held off.
* GSC game world Russian bootleg translations filled with random gags by various authors.
* Harvard famously has the Statue of Three Lies which reads: "John Harvard, Founder, 1638". (The statue is attributed to Harvard, but as there was no physical record of what he looked like, it was instead based on a student, Sherman Hoar. Also, while Harvard certainly contributed heavily to the school with a large bequest and four hundred some odd books, it was actually founded two years beforehand, so if anything he's more like
* Grey's Anatomy Erica and Callie agree to wait before having sex because they both think they aren't ready to have sex with another woman. A few dates later, they consummate their relationship.
* Hank Williams died tragically in 1953 when he was only 29-years-old from heart failure in combination with other health issues. Sixty-seven years later, in 2020, his granddaughter Katherine Diane Williams died tragically at the age of 27 in a car accident.
* GURPS, you can get either Enhanced Move which lets you accelerate to high running speeds. However Altered Time rate is a more traditional speedster power, allowing you live at double speed (or tripe, quadruple etc).
* Here which is the mimicry of Michael Angelo’s Pieta in forms of media.
* Harkovast, who is notable for being a skilled warrior and complete psycho.
* Heroic Myth, as his Berserker-class Servant. Coincidentally, the minotaur Bell killed to become Level 2 is later reborn as another Xenos named Asterios. The author lampshades the notion in his notes, considering pitting them against each other with an enthusiastic, "MIRROR MATCH! MIRROR MATCH!"
* Hikikomori: This person shuts themselves away from the world due to anxiety or lack of social skills.
* he tricked her into opening a different door that she thought was his.
* Good Omens covenant of Motormouth nuns. Their namesake was blessed with the miraculous ability to chatter continuously without pause for breath or food, as a way to preserve her virtue in an unwilling arranged marriage. She lasted three days before her husband strangled her.
* Hait and Karcharoth avert this. Karcharoth is almost as evil as Skoll, yet only has a few scratches on his neck, and a single scar over his left eye. Hati who is considered good has large scars across her forearms and back.
* He-Man made Skeletor a Shakespearean villain with relish. He ultimately made him a force to be feared with.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, Phil Ken Sebben gets hit by a bus in Season 3. Then at the series finale: "Ha! Ha! Final Episode stunt casting!"
* Guilt: Stan is pretty cheerfully amoral, and shows no signs of caring about anything apart from the money he makes.
* Gold Digger, making him a Chekhov's gun!" The artist's response? "Great, now I need a new way to bail them out!" He figured it out.
* Heroes Act, Villains Hinder: Good guys kickstart the plot, and the bad guys are holding them back.
* Headscratchers to respond to every "Learn to box" comment with "You get expelled for that."
* Halo 4 level “Shutdown” has an increasingly rampant Cortana lamenting about how she could never know if the artificial sun inside Requiem looks and feels real, while John does this just offscreen behind her.
* Harmonic Feedback: Justin is repeating junior year after spending time in juvie and rehab.
* Hero: The Guardian Smurf, Wonder Smurfette is one of the series' main protagonist Hero Smurf, who was created with the magical Mirror of Opposition when lightning struck it, thus creating a second adult female Smurf in the village besides Smurfette.

* Hilarious in Hindsight, Troy Denning has Darth Caedus kick their ass easily.
* He seems to also be ready to come back to the realm of the living, and it's implied he's about to do so in the heart of Noxus itself...
* he was convinced he did it, forcing the rest of the team to clear his name.
* High School Of The Dead: In the first chapter, a teacher's fingers get bitten off by one of "them" and then spit to the ground.
* Hc Svnt Dracones with the "Lateral" morphism look like normal animals, what with their size and lack of hands (or even limbs in the case of snakes) they have a bit of trouble functioning in technological society. A Body Socket is a robotic rig that gives them hands and upright posture.
* Good Omens (2019). And gets a lot better about recognizing his inner goodness.
* Go into the Light: When a dead person has a near-death experience which causes them to cross over to the light.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality has the Dementors as Death itself, instead of Fear as other people think.
* Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later. The producers obliged this request, and thus a new protagonist named Sarah was used for the film after Laurie’s death.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, tries to talk to Mikuru, but she doesn't remember him. Then he mentions that the Mikuru he knows has a star-shaped birthmark on her chest — and he asks her dumbly to show hers. This earns him a punch in the face.
* Gotham City Garage, Big Barda leaps onto a truck's roof, landing on her two feet and right hand.
* Have I Got News for You, Paul Merton calls this "a poor idea, badly executed." Ian Hislop: "I'm glad it's in, then.")
* Halo 3: ODST, in which the ODST team navigates through the thoroughly wrecked metropolis.
* Grounder the Genius underneath, which Sonic is quick enough to avoid, but they aren't when it falls on them.
* Gold Digger is rife with this type of character, they make up the majority of the series' antagonists. Even the protagonists, such as Brittney, aren't safe from this.
* Harry Harrison, breaking away from the monopoly held by US Robotics.
* Gluttony giants who rely on overpowering their opponents. They're also clearly at the bottom of the homunculus totem pole.
* Herman's Head behavior is really motivated by a need to find someone who loves him.
* H. G. Wells are born like this due to a congenital illness. Not only do they consider their condition normal, but upon feeling the face of a sighted man, they conclude that the pair of soft masses above his cheeks are tumors that should be removed surgically.
* Gregor Clegane was barely in his teens when he burned his little brother Sandor's face after Sandor played with some of Gregor's discarded toys that Gregor didn't even want anymore. Gregor only got worse as an adult.
* Henry Danger: After watching a horrible cartoon, Ray complains that frogs are vegetarians. This isn't true. In fact, most are carnivorous.
* Hasbro with official figurines and Fifth Edition stats for the Demogorgon and Demodogs, stats for the children's D&D campaign characters (like "Will the Wise") and an adventure "written" by Mike Wheeler.
* Here is Greenwood: Shun Kusanagi and his little brother look like girls, which is disturbing/amusing/arousing to the general populace of the all-male Greenwood dorm. Various other male characters don drag at different points in the manga (mostly for cultural/sports festivals), and attract various admirers. This is not including the alternative-dimension Cherrywood where everyone male is female.
* Hawaii Five-0, in the 2012 Halloween episode "Mohai". The 5-0 team is searching a dark alley for clues about a missing woman when Kono discovers something moving inside a garbage container. When she carefully opens it, a black cat hisses at her and jumps out of the bin, scaring her to death. And then she discovers the missing woman's corpse in the container.

* Green Lantern continued to exist as a ghost after his corpse became a Black Lantern.
* Hero Chat at not telling each other details of their private lives (but they still don't make the connection). Eventually, she gets fed up and tricks Ladybug into letting her do an identity reveal for the team. Then the rest of the team starts screaming as they realize the ridiculous situation they are in.
* Hellsister Trilogy is a top student with at least three degrees. She's also capable of kicking a planet out of orbit, outracing light and shrug off nukes.
* Gravity bombs on the other hand did have this sort of thing, each was equipped with a scuttle charge in case the bomber had to drop its bombs to make it home. On some models the timer on the scuttle charge was designed to activate even in an aggressive drop, though considerably after the bomb would have detonated if it wasn't a dud (and the chances of a nuke remaining intact after trying to detonate are slim anyway).
* Glorianna, and partly because of her desire to avoid emotional complications.
* Gunslinger Girl Angelica's design so that she has brown hair and green eyes.
* Heroes of Might and Magic campaign (the necropolis faction one) involves opening a portal to another realm, where Gauldoth's master Kalibarr is being held prisoner. That is done by destroying the Angel's Blade at a giant nexus point of the same kind of lines, which is described in words as a place where many rainbow-coloured lines meet, visible to a practitioner of Nature magic like Gauldoth. On the map, it looks like many other evil-styled Quest Gates, though.
* Hell Up In Harlem with different dialogue placed in existing scenes.
* Haganai and as the title name suggests, all the characters in the story have trouble making friends, so the heroine Yozora started a club for these kind of people.
* Grojband has been held back for three years, despite her intelligence.
* Half the Man He Used to Be song "Yesterday", which has nothing to do with people being cut in half.
* Heaven Sent", the Twelfth Doctor picks up an eye loupe conveniently placed next to a painting of Clara Oswald to examine it. It allows him to find out the puzzling fact that the painting is very old, despite his instincts telling him he hadn't traveled through time. Then he drops the eye loupe to test out the gravity of the place.
* Gravity Falls seems to be a magnet for fan-made alternate universes:
* Harry Potter one line states: "If Bellatrix ever fell apart, people would just stand there and watch. Katherine would probably bring popcorn."
* Gorgo the Ogre, the titular hero, a small ogre child, has to face the Slobbering Monster, who's so big it fills a whole giant crevice with his body. Gorgo manages to kill it using his wits, bravery and a good dose of luck.
* Hanging Up on the Grim Reaper: When the Grim Reaper shows up to claim someone, the person persuades Death to let them live just a little bit longer.
* Hellbound: Hellraiser II includes, among other disturbing fleshy "decorations", the figure of an infant with its mouth stitched shut by a needle it clutches in one hand.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire movie, a disguised Death Eater blows his cover by mentioning the graveyard Harry was sent to before Harry does. The Death Eater in question may not have cared at that point, though.
* Guess Who's Coming to Dinner is about a white woman bringing her black boyfriend to her white parents and all of the awkwardness involved. It then gets much more horrifying.
* Hidamari Sketch are delighted to see Sae without her glasses for once, but when it turns out that she cannot even distinguish between a clam and a soup ladle anymore they quickly make her put them on again. (The reason she wasn't wearing them in the first place was because the steam was fogging them up, so the benefits of putting them on again are unclear.)
* Global Warming: Climate change due to human causes. Often politicized nowadays.

* Heroes of the Pacific that has 2 or more crew (Dauntless, Avenger, and Mitchell bombers) will give you a gunner who tries to call out useful information ('Bandits 3 o'clock', 'Taking serious damage') but sometimes is simply annoying (when pulling a hard turn, 'Jesus, go easy!')
* GrimmHime is the second most popular Orihime ship behind UlquiHime, with Grimmjow as the Devil and Orihime as the Angel. (It helps that Orihime is the only person Grimmjow ever did a favor for, even if it was for selfish reasons.)
* Heralds of Valdemar series, a minor plot point involves the Kaled'a'in clan, who are the only speakers of their language. They pride themselves on keeping it "pure" and unchanged over the millennia — so naturally two native speakers are dismayed to find they cannot read a very important set of inscriptions in ancient Kaled'a'in.
* Halo 4's version of Promethean Knights have typical energy shields, while Promethean Watchers can emit a hard light shield to protect allies; the Watcher's shield generator can also be used by Spartans.
* Gone with the Wind, Scarlett's children Wade and Ella, suffer from this, Scarlett is always too wrapped up in her own concerns to care about Wade, and especially Ella. Rhett points out that if it weren't for him and Melanie, Wade and Ella would not even know what love is.
* Guthix's Assassination, and the beginning of the 6th Age of Gielinor
* Heroes Rise, the plffayer has two separate meters for power and health, but can drain one to fill the other.
* Grand Theft Auto 2: The song playing in the FMV movie is "Rhythm" by Engineers Without Fears.
* Harvey Girls Forever! is this to her, having her refer to Zoe as "Her Majesty Queen President For Life Zoe" for the first six years of Audrey's life and continuing to torment her and her friends well into her later youth. Zoe's friend Maria is also suggested to be this to Melvin.
* he's actually the remains of the Alpha AI, which was tortured to fragment off parts of his mind as other A.I.s
* godlike Managers consider the entire human race little more than an exquisite but minuscule delicacy.
* Haru and Midori is officially stated as being a yuri manga, although it's unclear whether Midori was in love with her old friend Tsugumi, whether she will eventually fall for Tsugumi's daughter, or whether she'll end up with a third party.
* Heirs of Empire has all of Earth's humanity be descended from the marooned crew of a spaceship after a partially successful mutiny (the spaceship in question is in fact disguised as the moon).
* GLOW. Even though it did not end well, Egypt being forced out with an ACL break, she still organized GLOW reunion shows for the purpose of helping Fiji pay for her own injuries and diabetes treatment.
* , Harry puts a spoonful of dirt into his relatives' dinner before serving it to them.
* Happy Days a member of the Cunningham family wound up crossing their threshold uninvited at least once.
* Goku also mistakes Whis for Beerus, before seeing King Kai talking to Beerus.
* Haytham has a conversation with Connor about The Templars. Haytham angrily points out that the people Connor works for are not much different then the Templars and that the only difference between them is Haytham "
* having to wait five hours to drink milk after eating meat instead of three). The second volume introduces a singular Ashkenazi Jew, a Russian painter who smuggled himself into Africa in a crate full of prayer books (who is viewed as an oddball by pretty much everyone else). The second volume also involves a quest to track down a hidden city of Beta Israel/Ethiopian Jews.
* Hardwired, one character, Reno, is killed when his home is the target of a missile attack. He later makes a series of telephone calls to the hero. Turns out that he was a wirehead and was "jacked into the net" when the missiles struck. He spends the rest of the book as a disembodied mind, wandering around the equivalent of the Internet, looking at everyone's most secret files.

* Godzilla vs. Kong responsible for creating Mechagodzilla. Dear God, once the mask of a pleasant and well-meaning businessman comes off, does he love hearing himself gloat and flaunt his self-perceived superiority.
* Hattie Jacques co-stars. Everyone adored her, as she provided support and advice.
* Heck cattle — have come much closer to replicating the original animal's genotype, but reintroduction of the species is still pending.
* Hellsing: The Major uses First Lieutenant Rip Van Winkle as bait to draw Alucard away from London, trapping him aboard the ship she commandeered using his weakness regarding running water to keep the powerful vampire away from London as the Major's forces make their assault on the Hellsing headquarters and London itself.
* God of War III, as the designers originally planned for Aphrodite to pull a knife on Kratos if you went back for round two, which would end in her death, but decided against it.
* Happy Days and his difficulties with the words "Love" and "Sorry," as well as the phrase "I was wrong."
* Gozaburo Kaiba molded Seto into filling the role for him in Seto Kaiba's
* Hell-Bent Fer Heaven. His fellow hillbillies aren't impressed by a semi-automatic pistol, stating that it's only for people who don't think they'll connect with their first shot.
* Hairspray, featuring the film's stars on-set. Benj Pasek and Justin Paul had penned the music for both.
* Halloween Episode revolves around the study group telling each other scary stories, all of which have a lot of reality subtext in them and feature characters who are thinly-veiled versions of themselves. Everyone is dissatisfied with their portrayals at some point.
* He's half-right because Raven does come home to him in X-Men: Apocalypse
* Grange Hill, although he was more a wanna-be in this trope than a full-fledged member because his endless money-making schemes rarely made any profit.
* Hericane's powers came from a combination of explosives... and a mouthful of Captain Adventure's (the current one's father)
* Happy Tree Friends cartoon "Remains To Be Seen" has a zombie Flippy biting Lumpy's arm off. After he and the other zombies are destroyed, the hand comes back and attacks Lumpy.
* Happy Death Day, which is apparently deemed by producers as hard to sell to audiences, and instead the film was dubbed "horror fun" by them.
* Harmony him/herself (they'd been both in different lifetimes before becoming Harmony, and can take either form as they choose) appears to the group in chapter 9 of the fourth story after Twilight's new castle grows from the Chest of Harmony, congratulating Twilight and telling she and her friends that their ultimate Purpose has always been to be living examples for everyone, and show the world what true friendship and harmony can achieve when people work together.
* Here Come the Brides episode "Hosanna's Way," Jeremy shatters a skylight by tapping it with his knuckles.
* Gundam and comes after the MP, saying "Wanna know how it feels to be picked on by somebody bigger than you?".
* Happy Town the newly appointed Sheriff discovers a crazy wall in the basement of a friend who has been trying to track down The Magic Man.
* Gnomes and they have trouble getting along with polecats, rats, and similar animals.
* Have I Got News for You will often groan at the bad puns the presenter has to dish out.
* Henry VIII, respectively. Given it was a major spectacle for the nobility, the fact that it took two or three strikes to get the job done was likely rather embarrassing to the headsman. (He was generous enough to call for a swordsman to come from France to do it for Anne Boleyn at her own request; also, contrary to popular belief, nobles were executed away from the public; not only was it considered harsh for them to be jeered at, many monarchs who had sentenced them did not want the bad publicity it would often cause.)
* Great Big Book of Everything The prop used in the TV series even looks a bit like the early laptop and handheld computers that would become available in the late 80s and early 90s.

* Heathcliff & the Catillac Cats episode "Wishful Thinking" has a cat genie. The genie is not really bad but he does uses Mungo in his favor to be freed. He does wishes at the end that all his dreams come true (metaphorically).
* Glove And Boots, which he pronounces something like "meh-ta-meat-ah-meh-ta-mah".
* has one common goal; the members of Death Leopard just like to make things go boom.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged Zorin decides to just leave that memory behind, stating that it "needs context".
* Halo, and both the Covenant and the UNSC have their own versions of the core and the border (Inner/Outer Colonies for the latter, Covenant Core/Covenant Fringe for the former), with everything beyond their small chunk of the Orion Arm functioning as the unknown regions. The plot is largely as above.
* Hellblazer, when John gets locked up in prison, an inmate attempts to spike his food with ground glass. Tables get turned, but God only knows how. Results are messy.
* Half-Life 1 has a minor evil elevator moment in which the elevator only drops a few feet, but it's right over a vat of radiation.
* Going Postal is a particularly extreme example, on account of being at least 20,000 years old and remembering states and languages that no living creature on the Disc does.
* Hades and Persephone could also fit this trope — though Hades is not always depicted as physically monstrous, he is the God of the Dead, which tends to give everyone else an aversion to him. And true, Persephone was kidnapped against her will, but still ends up Queen of the underworld. They're also one of the
* go back to normal. Meaning a female friend who was turned by Yorga remains as an evil vampire. She and another vampire bride come after the two but the protagonist chases them off with a cross. No sooner then when he turns around however, the girl he saved reveals she's now a vampire and lunges at him. The last shot of the movie is the bloodied face of the protagonist from the aftermath of the feeding.
* Harry Turtledove only works in increments of exactly 150 years. This is why they had to rush to steal it in 2014 (any later and no amount of intervention would have changed the outcome), as well as the reason why they show up in the relatively quiet Winter of 1864, rather than at a more critical juncture like the Battle of Gettysburg.
* Gundam in skimpy clothing and barely covering armor (with the exception of the Chinagguy).
* Henry Reed's Baby-Sitting Service, the eponymous main character winds up cooking hamburgers for his client's boss when his client can't make it home in time for the dinner, and he's complimented on the unique taste. After the event, his client asks him where he got the hamburger meat and it turns out that he used the horse meat meant for the dog.
* Halloween 5: The Revenge of Michael Myers. As a result, shooting started without a completed script, and numerous re-writes, cuts, and changes were made on the fly during production.
* High Tension after seeing her best friend Alex showering through the bathroom window earlier that night. Since she's listening to her walk-man during the act, this prevents her from hearing the killer get into the house until the murders are well underway.
* golonac. Merely reading his full name in some contexts is enough to summon him.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City Stories, mission White Lies. The protagonist, Vic Vance comes to his brother Lance's home only to find him performing his trademark Lance Vance Dance to Don't Go by Yazoo while being high on cocaine. Unable to take his brother's careless attitude any longer, Vic immediately stops the record, much to Lance's surprise.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, of all people, tried to throw him out the window of her office during their first meeting.
* Good aim and proper use of the game's physics mechanics and controls allow the player to decapitate enemies in the third-person adventure game

* Heroes: If Sylar is under attack from Company Agents (excluding HRG and The Haitian), those agents are probably going to die.
* gloriously and can wipe the floor with three much larger enemy ships.
* Harvesting pumpkins or melons while holding pets can be quite the juggle. Since they won't leave your side, the danger of them getting crushed by a pumpkin or melon is
* Gravity Falls — even if you could legally prove that they stole it from you, if you can't steal it back, then well... "losers weepers" (this latter one provides a pretty big source of drama during the first season finale). Weren't it for the "losers weepers" part of the law, and if it had a time schedule for someone to claim their property back before it became the other person's property, it would just be a perfectly normal adverse possession law.
* Glitz comic, a lesbian is doing this with the main character, successfully.
* GURPS, Professor C. Eric Gideon, who has made a number of acerbic comments throughout the book about the morality of biotech, is described as a "professional gadfly".
* Hidan/Shikamaru. Just watch Hidan's reactions when he got Shikamaru alone in the woods. It almost felt like an
* Haruhi Suzumiya!" This is followed by Ryoko starting the fight with a knife flying at near-light speed to Suyoh. Things get epic, really fast. And no, Ryoko doesn't put her body on the line to protect Kyon.
* Happens in the episode "Gorgon's Wood", in which he gets a brain freeze from eating Carla's sorbet, only for her husband to call her at that precise moment. She shudders to think what Brendan must have thought the screams of agony in the background were.
* Groundhog Day universe itself started looping. Phil would Awaken the day before the infamous day; if he did everything exactly perfect, he got a third day before looping again. This went on for quite a while before anyone noticed the glitch—his universe was never supposed to start looping at all. The Admins patch things so that he'll spend most of his time in variants and other longer loops, unlike most universes, where baseline is by far the most common.
* Haruka is a head shorter than Makoto, and the two are one of the most popular pairings of the series with all the * Gravity Falls has two with a 3 year age gap between Dipper and Wendy (12-15) and Li'l Gideon and Mabel (9-12).
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban on his part. The film adds in other cases of future characters influencing past events (Hermione throwing the rocks into Hagrid's hut and howling to distract Lupin in his werewolf form), so that there was a solid basis for his realization there.
* Gundam Build Fighters are hexagonal, which carries into the design of the show's title.
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah, Godzilla spends days suffering a nuclear heart attack without even realizing it.
* head explosion. This detail actually gets a lampshading without Scaramouche realizing it.
* Great Offscreen War - A war happened, but it was before the events of the series so we never saw it.
* Hey Arnold!, but the two later agreed that it was just "the heat of the moment".
* Gloria is not from Big City; she's from a suburban neighborhood out of town.
* Gremlins takes place in New York (and features a stand-in for Donald Trump).
* Gotham City Sirens, when Harley wants Joker dead for good and believes he's luring her into a trap, right before the New 52 complete reboot of the DC Universe, Joker kisses Harley. Note that this particular writer had zero experience writing the Joker before this.
* Guardian Cats and the Lost Books of Alexandria spread through Alexandria. One of the most common pieces of propaganda was that books were harmful to children. They brainwash kids and make them think they're smarter than their parents.
* Hey Arnold! for putting too much pressure on him to win basketball games to get Coach Wittenberg to stop.

* Grandma Got Run Over by a Reindeer lies in the awkwardly implemented songs. The title song everyone is familiar with, but not so much the other Dr. Elmo Christmas songs, believed by many to be written for the movie, when they're all just horrible covers not involving Dr. Elmo despite him narrating the special and voicing Grandpa.
* hardening mode for about 30 seconds. The strength boost Rikido Satou gets by eating sugar only lasts for 3 minutes, and Neito Monoma can only use the powers he copies for 5 minutes.
* Grimdark works frequently feature gory set pieces, played for horror or parody.
* Greek Ninja, Dawson has his heart trampled on but pretends to be alright, as to not upset his love interest who was interested in someone else.
* Goof Troop story with this happening in Pete's kitchen, then whole house: When instructed to add 3 drops of ultra-concentrated yeast five minutes before the cake is done, Pete just poured the whole bottle in at the start and went for the TV.
* Halo: Combat Evolved, the ship's captain order's the ship's AI to load herself into a data disc and evacuate the ship while he stays on board. She asks him if he's planning on going down with the ship, to which he says he's actually going try to crash land the ship on the Halo ring. He wants her to evacuate because the ship will almost certainly be captured after landing and the AI is far too valuable to fall into enemy hands.
* Heel–Face Revolving Door, not so much because he was that awesome, but because nobody could remember which side he was on last (or, in one case, that his dad, who had similar powers and used his son's appearance because he was a freaky midget dude, was dead).
* Gordon Korman. The bratty older brother has laid tape down the middle of the room, and penalizes any (real or imagined) affront with moving the tape to shrink the younger brother's side.
* Halloween Episode lackeys trying to steal Haru's Appli Drive. Once Gatchmon foils them, they then answer to Cameramon.
* Hawaii, 2007. Under record-setting QB Colt Brennan, the Warriors finished the regular season undefeated and garnered a Sugar Bowl berth, before being soundly defeated by Georgia. They had good seasons before and after this, but never nearly as spectacular.
* Hamilton runs the gamut of this trope in his various novels. It's completely averted in
* "Great War" in the mid-21st Century. Meanwhile, Fallout lore puts that exact same event in the year 2077. The two colony ships, Groundbreaker and Hope, also both depart Earth in the 23rd Century, putting the launch close to the events of Fallout 2, 3, and New Vegas. Hope is even explicitly said to have launched in 2285, the year that New Vegas takes place.
* Gundam 00's first season, Lockon initially attacks the enemy ships from "above" then for no clear reason moves and attacks them head on. As in the direction that ALL their guns seem to be facing.
* here to the point of prefering their human parent as a lover over other humans(though inbreeding is a non-issue, shifters who mate with the same human over several generations simply look less like their parents), most importantly it leads to a population crisis as shifters multiply exponentially while the human population decreases due to human (primarily) men and women prefering to have sex with shifters than with each other, this also has the effect of reducing human women to second class citizens.
* Hermes is still connected to hawks, and even takes on hawk like attributes like talons in some manifestations.
* He doesn't learn his lesson from this experience, as he attempts to fly it again in
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix and dismissed in the following book.
* Heteronormative Crusader: A homophobic activist who fights against what they view as sexual deviancy.
* Grand Theft Auto V stumbled over the fence, Franklin's actor started laughing, and Trevor's actor improvised the entire rant.

* Happens to Liam when he's kissed by his so-far best friend Milo. Well, he
* Hellsing). Subverted when she loses her left arm to Zorin; although the shadows that she gained afterward can be shaped into a new arm, the arm itself does not actually regrow.
* Greg Giraldo using various different analogies for people masturbating over various female roasters (e.g. Pam Anderson or Farah Fawcett).
* Harry Potter, Walburga tells Orion he should sleep in his dressing room when he finally gets home that night because she's angry with her husband for not standing up to his father for her.
* Guarding The Portal: Heroes guard a dimensional portal to make sure nothing goes in or out.
* Godwin's Law! Even if we're the ones calling for racial and moral "purity" and you're the one we're trying to kill.
* GoldenEye Reloaded" for the same reason as in the film. Boris Grishenko is absent entirely, but Natalya is instead saved by Bond in this version of the story.
* GURPS, human language itself has been implanted with subliminal cues and commands that predate the current version of history. Someone who knows the secret can trigger these cues to elicit specific actions and reactions from a person. The idea that subliminals don’t work is largely a lie spread by the heroes of the piece, Project SANDMAN, to reduce the risks involved in messing with this stuff.
* Hamilton started dating somewhere near the start of their run of the musical. Peggy is Philip's aunt (although they never interact in the show).
* Having a good rapport between your party members is essential to teamwork. For example, in The Second Story, if you choose to have your B team fight, it's likely the AI-controlled members will just do their own thing, even if they are assigned to healing duty. If Noel doesn't particularly care for Dias, he'll probably take his sweet time casting Dispel to cure Dias' paralysis.
* Hamtaro: Ham-Hams Unite!, Hamtaro can unplug the fountain in Sky Garden and Stickie the socket. This shocks him, but he shakes it off.
* Hack/Slash, extradimensional talking mutant dog Pooch claims he is constantly tormented by an innocent-looking pug named Goblin. We never see this in action, but from the way Pooch talks about him it's clear that their relationship is one of intense animosity.
* God Himself could not stop this from happening! stop it at the worst moment possible.
* Harry Potter. In a 2001 interview, however, it was indirectly confirmed that they did indeed die young—less than four years after graduating (the interview in question was about Snape's age). However, the first movie, which was released the same year, contradicted this to make them appear middle-aged, and until the final book, their age at the time of their deaths was something you'd have to be pretty observant to know.
* has this to say's Keith Moon (as mentioned above, this is a genuine quote):
* Go Set a Watchman was actually written first, and then Lee's agent suggested she do a book with the characters as kids instead.
* High School D×D with the use of his Juggernaut Drive and was howling in despair at the sky.
* Gundam 00 movie his mech, the Harute, gets one of its own called Marute.
* Gundam 00: At the start of the series, the main conflict would be between the three major power blocs of the Union, the HRL, and the AEU. Also known in modern times as the United States, Communist Russia and China, and the European Union, but mostly actually just small conflicts in the Middle East in countries supported but not formally belonging to any one of these and no major war.
* Halo: Combat Evolved, which completely overhauls the campaign with improved graphics, new weapons, expanded levels, etc.
* Haytham refuses to shake the hand of Louie Mills the first time they meet. No explanation is given, but it's implied to be a class issue; Haytham is a British aristocrat and Mills is a working-class sailor, so Haytham probably regards a handshake as beneath him.

* Halo series, cancer is so rare that most people have never heard of it and it takes about six hours to remove. It is also pointed out in the setting that Sergeant Johnson's smoking of cigars is a harmless hobby because damage to the lungs and even lung cancer can be eliminated very easily.
* Haloid. Samus has one that not only cuts things but acts as a tractor beam, blaster and stasis field generator.
* Having them say who they're impersonating, either before or after they do so.
* Higher Learning: After partially overhearing a conversation between Asuka and their teacher where he apologises for overstepping his boundaries and she replies it was not his fault, Shinji thinks Asuka is cheating on him. In reality, nothing happened between them.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers does this gag as Germany tries to train Italy to throw grenades. Then later, South Italy comes along and tries to throw a grenade at Germany—but fails because of this mistake. Germany ends the gag by crying out in frustration, "What's with you two?"
* Harrow, the figure who dumps Quinn's body into the river uses a bone cutter to cut off the finger bearing his wedding ring before throwing the body overboard
* GLOW (2017): Some of the girls' stereotype wrestling characters are based on their looks:
* Grim Fandango uses 3D models for the characters, and 2D backgrounds designed to look 3D. It might not have been quite obvious back then, but it's clearly obvious in today's age.
* Heavy Weapon has your Atomic Tank fight through the forces of the "Red Star", which are Russian Communists trying to take over the world. The game is pretty blatant about it as well, with your character saying things like "Take THAT, you commie pigs!", stages named "Killingrad", and bosses like "Kommie Kong".
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child was published by Scholastic (the series' US distributor) in Canada and Little Brown in the UK.
* Heck, from the perspective of the skyscapes of other Solar System planets Earth's one with the Moon is quite alien. Except for Io (and Pluto's Charon
* Grand Theft Auto III-era games if you perform a jump in a vehicle that's on fire.
* Goblins, when Big Ears kills Saral Caine, he stabs (!) him in the chest with an axe, then cuts off his head.
* Graham McNeill, when they arrive on planet, Talhoun comes to greet them. Barzano observes afterward that now he knows he can not trust Ballion. He had suspected that it was so, and now he also knows whose pocket Ballion is in.
* Hanajima is smart, but simply doesn't give a damn about schoolwork (except when faced with the threat of summer school in non-air conditioned rooms, when she makes sure to avoid failing grades).
* Havenite Q-ship the invasion. Unfortunately, she doesn't know this, and given that she didn't, letting the ship get away would have been gross dereliction of duty.
* Heart of Steel, Alistair's efforts to turn Julia's mangled boyfriend into a cyborg companion for her instead produce a deranged, jealous monster who is willing to do anything to keep Julia under control, including killing her. Alistair has already promised Julia that he intends no harm to come to her while she's a guest, and since this is kind of his fault, he vows to protect her.
* Gotrek, son of Gurni. Of course, Gotrek does carry an epic-level magic axe, which makes him significantly harder to kill.
* Hancock he had, and all the collateral damage he has often caused for just being himself day by day. He attends a support group of other prisoners who just share their problems to help explain why they committed the crimes that put them in prison, and how to cope with those problems. Repeatedly, Hancock was asked if he would like to share anything, and he always passed. He finally starts to open up and shares few brief words to the group. He progresses better and better with each group meeting after that.
* Harm argues before a Navajo Tribunal Court in "The Return of Jimmy Blackhorse" and an Australian Court in "Boomerang". Mac argues before a Sharia court in "The Princess and The Petty Officer". And both Harm and Mac defend Secretary of the Navy

Edward Sheffield at the International Criminal Court in "People v. SecNav".
* Godzilla and Mothra: The Battle for Earth, three characters exploring an island have to cross a rope bridge, which begins to break while they're on it. Instead of holding onto it, the characters jump off (or rather one character pushes the other two off before jumping) into the river below — which is much closer to the bridge than usual.
* Hannah Montana. It's particularly amusing when Miley's date is somewhere in the vicinity of a Hannah event and she chooses (poorly) to attend both engagements simultaneously.
* Happened a weird way a couple of times when Shawn, mostly a face, would be allied with another face (John Cena,
* Harry Potter, he gets angry and automatically assumes he's being insulted, even though he doesn't know what that means. Of course, the slur being derived from the English word "mug" — "someone who's easy to fool" might have something to do with it.
* Happened to Bolin for a good chunk of Book 2 after he became one of the world's first mover stars, Nuktuk Hero of the South.
* Harley Fitch), arguably. He didn't directly kill his parents, nor even intend for them to die, but they both died as a direct result of his actions.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, below.) This makes him miserable, but the guy is just so good at defeating invasions.
* Hades was this to the Greeks themselves; he's the yardstick by which terrifying creatures in myth (like Typhon) are compared to. Typhon is so bad that he was not only scarier than Hades, he
* Haymitch Abernarthy. It is implied that he had this skill during his run in the games as well.
* he intends to dispose him as payback for murdering Shirley and/or attempting to replace Nunnally (the former doesn't happen in the movie versions. Should've reined him in a bit more.
* Go Go Amigo has Daffy trying to stop Speedy and his friends from listening to the radio in his electronics store for free, and soon resorts to hijacking the radio station to play his own recording.
* her sister Sakura and how heartbroken she would be, prompting her to sacrifice her trump card in a desperate (but successful) attempt to save him.
* Hellsing, though they don't outright say the trope word for word, none of the good characters angst over being immortal. Probably because there's so goddamn many of them that they don't need to angst over leaving people behind, and they won't have to move about since they're tied to one organization.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 2 episode 20, Little M., upon encountering the bottle genie, thinks he's the wishing wood. In episode 35 of Season 1, the heroes find a wish-granting piece of wood with a similar appearance to the bottle genie.
* Hercules: The Animated Series: Set in mythological Greece but mentions gladiators and uses Roman numerals and Roman Name. BUT he gets an "alpha-plus" as a grade in the series, so everything works out fine.
* Highlander Kurgan for confirming his crime, which he always suspected but Heather refused to speak of.
* Gone with the Wind. After suffering hunger and cold during the Reconstruction, Scarlett has a recurring dream of running through a mist. The dream comes true after Melanie's death when Scarlett runs home to her mansion in the hopes of reconciling with Rhett. Rhett winds up leaving her. Ominous, indeed.
* Golden Age story found the captain in the year 2943, where people still spoke English but abbreviated everything to one syllable. His 30th century descendant, Bilbat, could transform into Capmarv by saying the abbreviated magic word "Shaz!", but he lacked the powers that would have been provided by Achilles (courage, fighting skills) and Mercury (speed, flight).
* Hide Your Pregnancy: The actress is pregnant with techniques used to avoid making it look like her character is also pregnant.
* Heroes, Sylar's voice gets very deep and starts to echo a bit when he's about to do something evil.

* Gravity Falls: "Bottomless Pit!" has the characters taking turns telling stories, with appropriate title cards popping up when the characters announce the title for their mini story. When it's Soos' turn, the unnamed narrator does this.
* Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters, Gretel defibrillates Edward using a homemade, steampunk taser.
* Greatest Hits Album, specifically with the compact disc format in mind.
* Hector: Badge of Carnage's first episode the main character poses as the middleman in a shady deal, where something called the "Thing" is exchanged for a suitcase of money. Hector doesn't know what the "Thing" is, and as he has to keep up his cover he can't ask the gang members he is conducting the deal with about the details, forcing him to improvise his way through the deal, eventually convincing the crooks that they can pick up the "Thing" at an appointed location later. In the second episode Hector's partner, Lambert, meets the actual middleman from the deal, but he is just as ambiguous about what the "Thing" is, so Lambert quickly gives up asking.
* Godannar has large breasts, even some of the female shaped mechs are designed with huge chests.
* Grandma Ida and Grandpa Victor him the money, then he'll have them arrested and jailed for child endangerment.
* Heartbreak Ridge, Gunny Hightower takes a Cuban cigar off the body of a dead Cuban soldier, killed by his platoon during the siege on Grenada. Earlier (at the base in California), he rejected one, not because he didn't smoke, but because they're illegal.
* Harry Harrison trilogy have such a complex language, incorporating sounds, body language, and skin color, that even many Yilané never manage to learn it. Mastery of the language is a factor in social status. The one human who has learned the language is only able to speak a pidgin version of it, lacking a tail which is required to get certain ideas across.
* Heavy Metal 2000, Dr. Schechter, the scientist who makes Tyler's immortality serum, turns out to be robotic when Kerrie attacks him and damages his artificial skin.
* Grant Morrison's JLA the Key put the seven core members of the League in individual illusions. Using a programmable "psycho virus" to put them each in a designed hallucination, he planned on exploiting their inevitable escape from such a situation to harness the psychic energy generated to empower himself for interdimensional travel.
* GoldenEye features a double example - early on, the bad guys steal a prototype Tiger helicopter, but this is not their ultimate objective. Instead, the Tiger's resistance to EMP makes it the perfect getaway vehicle for a second theft, that of the top secret Goldeneye weapons system.
* Grey is...: Black thinks of himself as weak and not able to help other people, White who admires Blacks emotional strength disagrees and says something to this effect
* Hack-O-Lantern: Tommy is redeemed and Grandpa is killed, but the latter manages to corrupt Tommy's brother into taking his place.
* Go Away I'm Watching Porn, and an unwilling Issei. As more and more hints are dropped as to what each group is planning and what exactly Issei's past entails, more questions are raised for both the characters and readers.
* Halo was even from the start, it's safe to say that this series was always meant to consist of multiple parts, even if its originating company is no longer running the show.
* Harry Potter: Lord Voldemort regularly tortures, abuses and kills his subordinates, even before his initial fall from power. It's his style of leadership. Several characters point out that many of the Death Eaters only returned to him out of fear of what he'd do to them if they didn't; even if they like to taunt people they don't like that they will get theirs when Voldemort returns, and sometimes go on "Muggle hunts" in their Death Eater uniforms, in reality most have pretty mixed feelings about him actually coming back, save for a few fanatics like Bellatrix.

* Highlander had a plot with an immortal using his private army to invade the house of a friend of Tessa's after the guy's son raped the immortal's (adopted) daughter.
* Heroes of Might and Magic developer. The fans are probably confused by this point.
* Grand Theft Auto IV, with the short, fat, unsuccessful Roman Bellic and his attractive longtime girlfriend (later wife), Mallorie.
* here, with Adam and Jamie detonate explosives simultaneously, while being 12 billion years apart.
* Grillers are heavily armored vehicles that have a single fish tail poking out of their back. If it's shot enough, it'll be stunned and more tails will appear, and once these weak points have sustained enough damage, the machine will be destroyed.
* Grandma's Boy, video-game programmer J. P. sometimes does this for no clear reason.
* Hey Arnold! was going to kill the annoying parrot with a chainsaw, but it ends up escaping to Arnold's house when his front door is left open.
* Hanako had a few friends before the house fire that scarred her and claimed the life of her parents, but
* Heroic Sacrifice: Someone allows themselves to get killed in order to save others.
* Gothic, the demon final boss is protected by five hearts that must be slain before he can be killed.
* Glory, using their revolvers and swords in concert to dispatch Confederate troops when their opponents charge at their line.
* Grossology and purple respectively), which is accompanied by ominous music.
* High School Prodigies Have It Easy Even in Another World driving them to poverty and starvation, a farming village has turned to this as their only way to survive. They know what they're doing is wrong, hate themselves for doing it, and confess when Shinobu confronts them.
* Harry Potter to avoid dying out. Other wizards are born to muggles and must be integrated into the wizarding world, having grown up with no knowledge of it.
* Hermione, fed up with Harry's comment that he loves her like a sister, ties him to a bed and then strips.
* Hair-Trigger Temper: A character who has a ludicrous tendency to get angry at the drop of a hat.
* Gore Vidal, bisexual American novelist, essayist, playwright and occasional actor whose career spanned sixty years from the late 1940s to early 2010s.
* Golden Age DC hero the Gay Ghost's first foe was the unnamed leader of a group of footpads who tried to rob the Ghost in life. He manages to kill
* He's an exceptionally tall man with many of the same features as Alteriens in their true form. However, he has rounded ears and polydactyly on both his hands and feet. He has five fingers and a thumb on each hand and six toes on each foot. Apart from that, he looks very similar to humans.
* her brother killed her boyfriend and tried to kill her to seize power
* GrailQuest, one encounter has you meeting the Poetic Fiend again and the guy's carrying a magical crystal-bladed knife. It automatically hits and instantly kills its victim by exploding inside of them, as you discover if you attack the Fiend. If you listen to the Fiend's poem, he's actually trying to help you and gives you the crystal-bladed knife plus a golden key.
* He's outraged that the alien Zeep created a microverse in a battery whose inhabitants unknowingly generate electricity for Zeep's world. However Zeep lives in a microverse
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows recycles every set and prop from the previous movies (for instance, the giant chess pieces from the first, Snape's storage from the fourth, and the wedding decorations from part 1 of the seventh).
* Happens to humans too, via cultural shift. The season 1 episode "The Neutral Zone" has a group of humans who were frozen get thawed out, one of them being a financier. He has an especially hard time adjusting to his new life compared to the others, reason being that with Earth moving from a capitalistic to
* Grey's Anatomy has this in one episode, with Derek and Meredith. What Derek was talking about I can't remember, but Meredith was talking about how she didn't understand how two people (Burke and Yang) could be in a relationship and not talk to each other.

* Heavy Rain has a meta example. After Ethan's son, Shaun, disappears, he reports to the police. There, they'll ask for a description of the boy, and it's up to the player to answer. If you're like most people, chances are you won't remember what exactly Shaun was wearing and will give the wrong answer.
* Hellsing, Alucard blasts Schrödinger when he comes as a messenger to a Hellsing conference (of course, Schrödinger survives that, thanks to his "quantum physics" abilities).
* Heart of Ashes: Smaug seems to start feeling this way towards Gandalf during their duel.
* He celebrated his 100th review by reviewing one of his favorite films,
* Goku himself. The English dub tends to play-up his heroic side while somewhat downplaying his less noble aspects that are present in the Japanese version. A prominent example is after the fight with Vegeta during the Saiyan Saga, when Goku convinces Krillin to spare Vegeta's life; in most versions of the English dub, Goku invokes
* Granblue Fantasy has an entire race called Erune, which are humanoids with animal ears and sometimes a tail. Most erunes don't actually behave like their animal counterparts, however. One notable exception is Sen who acts like a cat, and is sometimes even treated as one, much to her chagrin.
* Hanna Is Not a Boy's Name seems to fit this role with Casimiro. He seems dedicated to trying to keep the impulsive younger vampire out of trouble.
* Hannah Montana that helps Miley acknowledge her own feelings for Lilly in turn.
* Heel–Face Turn) slide down one of the water channels in the newly built Springfield Dam, running face-first into the grate at the end. After they climb out, Bart starts enthusiastically cheering to do it again, but Lisa and Bob remind him that they've got more important things to do.
* High Society after learning that his would-be kidnappers used their real names (and real signatures) to sign the ransom note.
* Happy Heroes is very into himself, up to the point that he refers to himself as stuff like "the main character" and will immediately panic should an intrusion ruin his appearance even the slightest bit.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, where Harry's ambition to become omnipotent and benevolently reorganize reality is fully endorsed by the Author.
* Gold Rush miners used to pit bears against everything. The bear always won so they got bored and imported some lions. The lion would roar and charge, the bear would crush their skull with one blow.
* Hentai, the protagonist and Madoka accidentally end up in one while trying to find shelter from the rain. No points for guessing what happens.
* Harley Race: the family's life insurance payout was what kick-started Ted's wealth.
* Heart of Darkness, ruled by a European ivory trader turned depraved cult leader.
* Hal Ketchum's song "Small Town Saturday Night" includes a verse where Bobby tells his girlfriend, Lucy, that the world must be flat, because nobody ever comes back when they leave town. He says they fall straight off the edge.
* Green Lantern, even if in different periods, both of them (The Flash in the early Silver Age, Green Lantern during Geoff Johns' time) had comics runs that were competitive and earned better than the other three.
* Hannah Swensen, where it's not opening the door that causes the problem. Instead, Hannah's friend Janie had been trying to retrieve Hannah's cat Moishe from the walk-in closet in her guest room, where Hannah keeps mounds of old clothing that she keeps meaning to take to the thrift store. While she's in there, the closet pole (which Hannah admits has been loose for some time) gives way, burying her in an avalanche of all the clothes that were hanging on it. It takes several trips, with an armload each, before Hannah can pull enough clothes out of the closet to uncover Janie. (Moishe, meanwhile, turns out to have hopped up on the top shelf.)
* Groups like the Minotaurs and the Gnomes disdain magic for various reasons, though they (generally) don't actively hunt magic-users down — they just don't do it themselves and look down on anyone who does.

* Hilariously parodied with the "AcountaBully" series on Tik Tok, where the bully always corners the POV character in the hallway between classes to give them a hard time about... not accepting trans people, refusing to vote,
* Her former bandmate Takahashi Ai fits the other side of the trope, her scream is much lower than what you'd expect from a woman of her size.
* High School Boys and Mochi Soup, there is an on-screen advisory each time a character chokes on mochi. It happens often enough to annoy whoever's doing the advising:
* Hellbenders: Surtr, a mad god who exists entirely to destroy all existence. While seeking to do so, he toys with mortals, acting like those he possessed in order to torment their loved ones and poking at people's greatest insecurities, when he doesn't just brutally kill them.
* GoGo Sentai Boukenger episode the Stock Footage came from, where Red threw Black off a cliff to Lava below, offering to pull him up if and only if he would rejoin the team (as he had just tried to take the treasure and run, claiming he never intended to join them for real). For some reason, Disney felt the need to dilute this a bit before showing it to young children. Poor role model, or something.
* Harold Ramis, but it was cut. Beverly D'Angelo was also in a scene in the film, based on the scene in the book where Rob is buying records off of someone whose husband ran out on her.
* Here Come the Brides to stall for time while he waits for Joshua to find the lawyer he really wants.
* Happens on one of the Swedish channels as well. If a they start showing a film at nine p.m. (which is quite common), they break for the ten o'clock news. The most annoying thing about it though, is that when they break, there is a commercial, then the news and then
* G-Police has the Star missile. In a game in which every other missile works much like you'd expect, the Star is special because it launches eight missiles that lazily configure themselves in a circle around your cockpit, then launch themselves at your target one after the other at blinding speed. They're unguided, but it doesn't matter — they're so fast they're almost impossible to dodge.
* Heroes: Sylar's intentions change to suit whatever his situation at the moment calls for; he'll assist either the good guys or the bad guys if he thinks he has something to gain from it. However, he also dislikes being lied to, and every attempt to control him through lying and manipulation has ended horribly with a bloodbath and Sylar defecting to the other side by default.
* God Hand in a luchador outfit, complete with a tiger-themed mask. (Or judging by the zipper on his back, perhaps he's just a human in a gorilla costume.)
* Gods and Generals for a slave's life still pretty much sucks. Though this movie also plays the trope straight in a few instances.
* Harry mentally comments to Hermione about her having her "favorite husband to chat with."
* Halo 2, it seemed like online custom games consisted of Lockout 90% of the time and Midship the remaining 10%.
* Guardians of the Galaxy raccoon he can jump four feet and is extremely agile, but nevertheless he's still a small animal at the end of the day and can be easily picked up or overpowered by the average human-sized enemy.
* Higher Ground gradually reveals at some point or another (sometimes in the form of an Episode In The Spotlight) what got each of the Cliffhangers sent to Mt. Horizon.
* Helpful Mook (a Mook that ends up helping you somehow, intentionally or not.)
* Hazbin Hotel (bisexual main character, lesbian, gay, pansexual, and asexual supporting characters)
* Guess Who father and future son-in-law are driving along in steely silence to avoid talking about the big issue on their minds. The boy turns on the radio for a distraction and goes through a rote of such situationally ironic songs as "Ebony and Ivory" by Paul McCartney and Stevie Wonder, "Brother Louie" by Hot Chocolate, and "Walk On The Wild Side" by Lou Reed, just as it's singing:

* H. Beam Piper to keep their forces from attacking each other. At the battle itself, some of their foes attack others on their side; after it, Kalvan talks with one prisoner, who indignantly declares that he had been shouting his battle cry at the top of his lungs.
* Hamilton has a number of words and phrases repeated throughout the show.
* Hawkeye, when Clint wants to know if Black Widow showing up to their meeting in disguise means that they're being spied on. She denies that anything is the matter or that's wearing a disguise at all:
* Gravedale High. He is denied the insurance because the policy doesn't cover werewolves driving his car.
* Gumby short had Prickle and Goo getting the names of the presidents on Mt. Rushmore.
* Heel–Face Turn and decides to use his powers for the greater good. Later, a top ranking demon falls for Pinkie, and rebels against the devil just to be with her.
* Good Luck Varsity utilizes this at the end of their song "Wretch", which, considering the lyrics, lends some extreme discomfort and creepiness to an already depressing and unsettling song.
* Goofy cartoon "Victory Vehicles" references gas rationing and rubber shortages, with citizens looking for replacements for the automobile, eventually settling on the pogo stick. Cut from TV showings is a scene featuring a billboard exhorting people to "Beat the Jap with scrap" and a line of narration about how surplus cement for roads could be dropped on Tokyo and Berlin.
* Gone with the Wind. After an exhausting, terrifying day that consisted of delivering sister-in-law Melanie's baby in the midst of a brutal heat wave while fearing the approaching Army, Scarlett dissolves into tears and screams this at Rhett when he tells her there's no way to get out of Atlanta.
* Highlander episode 'Homeland'. After Duncan was cast out of his clan, it was attacked by a Viking named Kanwulf, and his father was killed. Duncan came back and took up his father's sword to go after the guy. Unfortunately, he didn't know the rules of immortality at the time, so he didn't behead Kanwulf and the guy survived. Duncan, however, became a legend. "He came back from the grave, took up his father's sword, and slew the Viking." When Kanwulf returns in the present day to terrorize the village until his sacred ax is found, Duncan repeats the legend, taking his father's sword from the inn/tavern where it had hung and finally ending Kanwulf for good.
* Harmony (2016): On the way to a field trip from her special needs school, Tilly tries to jump out of a van at 55 mph. Her parents get into a short, unproductive fight about it before Alexandra storms up to the bedroom while Josh stays in the living room to sleep.
* Happy Tree Friends, most notably with The Mole in the "Carpal Tunnel of Love" music video.
* God of War III. The soundtrack for this moment is even called "All for Nothing".
* Guitarist Noodle has always been one in her way, especially considering the visceral art style. Here she is aged
* Heathcliff: The Movie (released in 1986) is made up of "stories" he tells to his nephews, which are actually select episodes taken from the TV show's first season (premiered in 1984).
* Heroes Save the World: One of the characters, Simon Martin, is able to see how someone is able to die by touching them. His first attempt at this gives him a vision of what he later refers to as "Giger trees," some of which are suffering from this.
* Green Lantern and fly at near-lightspeed, making spaceships unnecessary in the Green Lantern Corps. Various retcons and re-imaginings would later attempt to explain away the discrepancy by crafting reasons for Abin Sur to use a spaceship in his final mission, thus keeping the origin story intact.
* Grim Dawn and rot their flesh, and charge their weapons with life-draining forces.

* Go Mad from the Isolation: When being alone causes a character lose their sanity.
* Goodbye My Princess. The arranged marriage between Xiao Feng and Cheng Ji (later changed to an arranged marriage between her and Cheng Yin) sets everything else in motion.
* Greek Mythology can kill them. But they lack full regenerative powers, resulting in lasting injuries.
* Hey Arnold!'s father owns a beeper store which is now going out of business.
* Hardspace: Shipbreaker, are also pretty damned explosive. Depressurization and oxygen is a dangerous mixture.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers trope in it's depiction of France, playing it straight earlier on in the series, but averting it later on. The dub tends to play it straight, though, and England even calls him that in one episode.
* Guitar Hero has one painted on the stage in the Harmonix Arena directly below your character - fittingly, you can only see it when you fail the current song.
* Godzilla (2014) (read: the female of the species is normally larger than the male.)
* Hasty Hannah", the titular Hannah does this to Toby as she is pulled by James.
* High School D×D, Yuto Kiba is the sole survivor of the "Holy Sword Project", an initiative by the Church to create artificial Holy Sword users by performing brutal experiments on children. The Church planned to execute all the children after the experiment failed, but Kiba's friends sacrificed themselves to allow him to escape, saddling him with a sizable guilt complex.
* Hathor's last lines and O'Neill's response are pretty good. Colonel O'Neill grabs Hathor from behind.
* Headless Horseman, Headless appears with a jack-o-lantern in place of his head. Destroying the gourd does nothing to slow him down.
* Gravedale High episode "Cleo's Pen Pal" inverts this by having Cleofatra ask Duzer to pose as her on a date with werewolf actor Billy Headstone, who Cleo has a crush on. But Duzer loves the idea of dating Billy, much to the ire of Cleo.
* Good Luck Charlie Gabe cons PJ and Teddy into standing in as his parents for a parent-teacher conference so their real parents don't find out.
* Greed recaps near the end. After the first forty minutes, just about everything was filler to put off the choice to go for the top prize until next week.
* Grue after his second trigger event, although he can borrow only one power at a time and they are weaker than the original.
* Goku's friends find out that Goku is about to attack the headquarters of the Red Ribbon Army, the world's most powerful terrorists. By the time they actually arrive to help, Goku has pretty much wiped the army out.
* Hikigaya Hachiman is a Charismatic/Mastermind variant to the rest of Class 1-A in
* G-Reco uses stealth in a similar way to Universal Century using Minovsky particles. The MSV has the CAMS-05 Black Mack which uses its extremely low surface area in its flight mode together with a dark colour scheme to take advantage of this during infiltration missions.
* GURPS's default magic systems as of 4e. Mages use ambient mana to power spells (if there's not much mana they can seriously hurt themselves). Clerics channel power directly from a deity. Ironically psi powers, which are treated as more scientific, give no explanation for how they operate without outside energy.
* He also hated the Spider-Slayer robots featured in two season 1 episodes and only included them at
* Guild Wars has the mesmer profession which has access to a selection of "steal" skills, which enable them to use a random skill from the enemy's bar for 20 seconds.
* Gojira it spawned, and to a lesser extent, the original Japanese version of the first film being made widely available.
* Grindhouse is more serious. The film as a whole (including the trailers) plays the Grindhouse conceit mostly for the camp value while retaining a lot of genuine scares.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets for Game Boy Color preserves Harry's, Ron's, and Hermione's level between playthroughs. The player's Folio Magi (wizard trading cards) collection is also kept. At least two playthroughs are required to complete the collection since only one of two decks is able to be chosen at the start.

* Hadrian Lannister, Lion of the Rock, allowing a somehow-still-alive Ashara Dayne to step in Catelyn's place almost immediately.
* H-Game wears white briefs that have blue/pink hearts and the words "Sweet Baby" all over on them. At an earlier point in the game, she wears pink panties with a Tanuki face on the front.
* Hans Christian Andersen". Oh, how heartbreakingly earned happy ending!
* Heroes of Might and Magic had religious figures in hooded robes that throw energy balls. They just happened to be called druids instead of monks.
* Heartbreak Ridge, was just out of ROTC when Gunny Hightower came to the command. He innocently asks Hightower, a decorated combat veteran and one of the few living Congressional Medal of Honor awardees, what college Hightower attended, Hightower tells him "Heartbreak Ridge." Unsurprisingly, Ring is unfamiliar with that "school". Ring is portrayed sympathetically since he was another victim of the dysfunction within the company. His superior officers deliberately sidelined him and did not let him lead his platoon and his previous platoon sergeant was lazy, preferred Ring out of the way and did not give him proper advice. Under Hightower's tutelage Ring quickly turns into an effective leader and gains the respect of his men.
* goes awry. Even she lampshades it on occasion, such as one episode where Dexter's trying to sleep:
* Golden Sun, and as such, when travelling around in the game's parallels to India and Africa (and to a lesser degree China and Japan), even very minor NPCs are quite a bit darker.
* Gravity Falls. After using size-altering crystals to capture Dipper and Mabel, Lil' Gideon calls their Grunkle Stan to demand the Mystery Shack's deed in exchange for their safety. However, Stan doesn't believe the twins are in danger.
* Grav3yardgirl collects creepy antique dolls, but one case, an eerily humanlike cloth doll she dubbed Robertina in reference to Robert the Doll, seemed to be haunted, giving her extreme anxiety and having a history of returns. It wound up in a creepy museum after she too gave it up, and it probably doesn't help that it was theorized to be a stand-in for a deceased child, wearing their clothes.
* Gunpoint has this happen to the player character at the beginning of the game. He gets flung out of his apartment's window, hits the wall of the building next door, and falls through the glass ceiling below him. After you get out of the building, it's revealed that he jumped out of the window himself, trying out a pair of "hypertrousers" that lets you jump with enough strength to shatter glass windows. There's even a track in the soundtrack called Defenestraight to my Heart. During standard gameplay, you have the ability to do this at will (if there's a window nearby).
* Gremmy Thoumeaux, he was trying to give himself greater than infinite power. No wonder his body couldn't handle it.
* Hal Jordan was given his powers (in the form of a ring) by a dying alien.
* Guild Wars 2: The Sylvari have leaves and vines instead of hair. They are sometimes Humans with Plant Hair, because some people make their Sylvari look more like an elf than a plant.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Neville Longbottom, Ginny Weasley, and Luna Lovegood lead Dumbledore's Army in opposition of the Death Eaters' takeover of Hogwarts. Luna doesn't return for the second term when she was abducted by Death Eaters at the Hogwarts Express during the Christmas holiday, and Ginny was forced into hiding along with the rest of her family during the Easter holiday, leaving Neville as the sole active leader by the time Harry returned to Hogwarts.
* Guilty Gear version of the Grim Reaper with a scythe made of blood. He even has Hell itself as his stage for the first two games in the series. You can also fight him in the Hell Stage in various parts of the Story Modes in Guilty Gear XX.
* Greil of all people into a stalemate, and has practically made a sport out of roasting her enemies with her famed Flame Lance. Alas, when you finally get to fight her late in the game, it turns out that said Flame Lance runs off of her magic stat, which, while high for a physical-based class, is still not high enough to be truly deadly. As a result, characters with high resistance, especially Sages, will barely be scratched by it, and will be able to make short work of her in return.

* God of War, where Kratos' goatee has grown into a full beard, but he's a more sympathetic figure here.
* Hephaestus was left with a permanent limp after getting in the way of his father's
* Hancock, where we see the eponymous hero after putting out an apartment fire. His clothes are mostly burned away, and for all of his invulnerability, he still admits that he was hurt.
* Highlander had an immortal whose girlfriend was killed by the son of a diplomat friend of Duncan's. The immortal wanted justice,and ultimately killed the father thinking he did it. The son couldn't be prosecuted due to his immunity, and despite Duncan's attempts to get the kid to turn himself in voluntarily, the kid refused. Duncan did protect him by telling the other immortal that he'd keep his head as long as the kid stayed alive.
* Hartley was also responsible for the Spire Christian Comics Archie issues. Make of that what you will.
* Hades is her biological father, thus making Persephone her stepmother.
* He much later sired a boy Nick had been trying to aid in escaping after Janette brought him home. We don't see too much of him post-vamping, though, just him grinning at Nick and saying "Hello, Nicky! Welcome home!"
* Half-Life 2 makes announcements on them, then (after the fall) Dr Kleiner.
* Hand on Womb: A pregnant woman rubs her belly and that's how the audience finds out she's pregnant.
* highly recommended but optional.) And when the couple had had intercourse, the courts were very lenient about what were words to that effect. Several cases turned on not what one had said, but what was meant by the words that were admitted. You see a promise of future intent "I will take you as my wife" was a legal betrothal and binding unless formally dissolved. If you followed that up with sex you were married. The opportunities for 'He said, She said' are obvious. Church courts were kept busy for centuries sorting out all the permutations. This was notably an improvement for women of many Germanic tribes, as the Church protected existing marriages. Therefore, if a woman had a sweetheart and was clever about it, she could choose her husband herself. Of course she'd then have to seek the Church's protection against her angry father...
* Gotham: Diesel Noir to be precise. The series has a very 1930s-1940s aesthetic, but more modern devices like cell phones are common.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix also has Ron's reaction to Percy's letter:
* Ground Control produce Crayven brand weapons. Its armaments came from a sister-corporation called Wellby-Simms instead.
* Graham McNeill.) He laughs, she is certain he will never appoint her as his remembrancer, and he appoints her on the spot.
* Hercule/Mr. Satan was a frequent victim of this too, thanks to being so weak in comparison to the other characters.
* Grey's Anatomy: After an injury to her leg (from a plane crash) becomes seriously infected, Arizona Robbins asks her wife Callie not to let them cut it off, no matter what. However, when the infection takes a turn for the worse, Callie is forced to go back on her word and makes the call to have it amputated.
* Han Solo averts this by refusing to rescue Leia until he's told that the princess is very rich. Luke's willingness to rescue the princess
* Heston Blumenthal specialises in using scientific study to create tastier food (or, to use the specialist term, molecular gastronomy), his restaurant is currently number two in the world. A quick look at the menu will tell you why he's earnt a place of honour on this list. As will a quick look at him in his kitchen.

Scientist-looking chef whites,
* He also gets flak from the animation community sometimes for holding some
* Hilariously subverted in the movie The Beast With A Billion Backs, where Bender and the League of Robots command an army from Robot Hell, with the intention of conquering the Earth... only to have it handed over to them with no resistance at all, as the rest of the Earth's population has decided to move in with
* Goetia, the aggregate body of the 72 demons pillars of the Ars Goetia
* GURPS, at least for some editions. "One Eye" disadvantage normally gives -1 reaction roll, but "If you have Charisma, or are Handsome or Very Handsome, the patch just looks romantic, and does not affect reaction rolls."
* Good Girls Revolt when he makes clear to her that he’s not interested in a serious relationship after she’s told her husband she’s been having an affair.
* Hainish. The "Hain" are precursors who created humanoid life forms on many worlds (including earth), but they are still around and still a dominant species in interstellar society.
* Halo 2 Limited Collector's Edition includes a "making-of" DVD and a "Conversations from the Universe" booklet.
* , has Beachhead and Tempest Shadow falling for one another due to their shared personality types.
* Heartbeat of the War God when he discovered Yasha with another woman. Though there's a good reason for the infidelity.
* Heckler takes aim at caustic critics, equating them with annoying hecklers at a comedy show. He confronts a few internet critics who wrote particularly vitriolic critiques of his films and demands to know why they needed to be so mean.
* Heroic Sacrifice, in chapter 666 (make of that what you will), that he somehow survived and is now the "queen" of the secret sanctuary in the prison.
* Healer God: A god or goddess whose specialty is healing or medicine.
* Goblins from a dungeon crawl called the Cursewalk. Bowst (the fighter) adds that he wasn't expecting that, to what Forgath retorts that the name "Cursewalk" should have tipped him off.
* He is occasionally a producer for others (since he does so much for his own albums), the most well-known being Soilwork's
* Golden Axe, the Arcade Mode lays out the three heroes' motivations: Death Adder killed Ax Battler's mother, Tyris Flare's father and mother, and Gillius Thunderhead's brother.
* Happy Tree Friends crashes onto a deserted island after falling off a cliff, followed by their subsequent attempts to escape.
* hear when he offers to walk Anne home in the rain with his umbrella, and the for-once-oblivious heroine innocently says she already has an escort, which is her distant cousin Mr Elliot, her father's heir. What's worse, the ladies in Captain Wentworth's company immediately start gossiping about Anne and Mr Elliot as a soon-to-be-engaged couple.
* Hexxat that can join the party without any problem from Charname. Even if the player activates the turn undead button, no effect happens. Neither Minsc, who has vampires as racial enemies, raises any opposition at any point in the game.
* he offered his power to help them escape, his interest rekindled by a chance to strike back at the pirate who ruined his dreams of becoming King. And with that pirate's death, he's ready to give it another shot; the next time Crocodile is seen after that arc, he has plans to head towards the New World again.
* Happiest Season (lesbian couple as the main characters, lesbian supporting character, subject matter includes coming out and queer female romance)
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone: The prologue is set in 1981.
* Happy Death Day in outfits that show off her body. She's also a moron who, for starters, confuses Helen Keller for Anne Frank.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law uses four distinctive ones — a courtroom gavel banging, a briefcase falling, Harvey's head zooming away and towards the camera, and a fast car of some sort. This makes for an excellent drinking game.
* Hero Bank. He corrupts Nagare early in the original game and his ultimate goal is to destroy the status quo.

* God hadn't cleaned the demon blood from Sam's system in the next episode, Sam's demon blood O.D. would've likely turned into something just as bad as the demons.
* Happy Appy has a lot of instances of real people getting killed and having their deaths being filmed, and says the trope by name.
* Hajime no Ippo makes it a habit to throw fights, but not without asking his opponents for an substantial fee, which the opponents understandably see as an insult.
* Hey Arnold! first expresses interest in him. It happens again later when he decides he likes Helga instead.
* Hathor 61, apparently Enna's first (and only) time getting drunk involved banana pudding. She doesn't talk about that night.
* Harry Dresden has surveyed crime scenes, and other cops mention that they had a bucket waiting. It's implied that the reason that the bucket was there in the first place was because the other cops had already used it.
* Good Omens (2019): Curiosity is apparently what got Crowley kicked out of Heaven. In addition to "hanging around the wrong people", he "only ever asked questions", which was enough to make him Fall. Suffice to say, he is none too happy about it.
* He also fouls up other situations, for example he thought he asked two attractive Chinese ladies for coffee. He actually invited them to get naked and sacrifice a goat. They were not amused.
* Hey Arnold! a statue of him in Washington D.C., crediting him with single-handedly winning the Battle of the Bulge.
* Gloria Union, the B ending involves Elisha sending a letter to Ishut that hints at her having feelings for him, and Ishut's comrades teasing him about it. Aside from that, nothing.
* Gothic has the claw of Beliar, a weapon which levels up with you, but requires some of your health each time to do so... you have to sacrifice your health to Beliar, the most evil of the three gods in the game. Additionally to the normal damage, it has a certain chance that an enemy will be killed instantly by Beliar's intervention. When you receive the weapon, you have the option to throw it into the sea because it is evil.
* Highlander III: The Sorcerer) used this, as the main character trained on a mountain top to defeat his foe.
* Hand Waved by stating that the resulting "early birth" Chryssalid is substantially weaker than a normal Chryssalid, but use of the stat-scanning device reveals that they are... a full grown Chryssalid.
* having killed innocents when she first started out as a soldier after being ordered to by her superior officer and not having questioned it..
* Godzilla film. And, of course, the big lizard himself can be crossed over with just about anything.
* Han Solo and the Lost Legacy Han Solo prequel novels, Han and Chewie – broke as usual – decide to convince Jabba the Hutt to hire them for another Kessel Run.
* Gorath involved a super-dense wandering planet with 4,000 times the mass of Earth; the only way to solve the problem, in the end, was to attach giant engines to Earth and move it out of the way.
* GURPS don't taste very good and stretch their longevity by suppressing the appetite rather than being especially filling.
* Heavy Metal is said to descend from dragons. In addition to that to cite an example "Dragondawn", the first song of their first album is accompanied (it's instrumental) by these verses:
* Godzilla Unleashed has him look at his hands, then pull them down his face screaming.
* Helium Speech in terms of aesthetics, but harder to play because most people are used to a different look and sound to the game.
* Granted, they're apparently "not made in factories." Whatever that means.
* Happy Heroes: Well, more like "Giant Girl" than anything in this case, but you get the idea. In episode 50, Big M. manages to control Sweet S. with his Black Jewel, causing her to grow in size and wreak havoc upon the city.

* Harrison also points out that without forests and jungles, oxygen has to be imported as well.
* Halo: Combat Evolved. In the end, an anonymous Bungie employee (nobody knows who did it, even today) wrote on the whiteboard for names "Halo". It worked, and the rest is history.
* God or a pantheon of gods have often be seen as the ultimate appeal to force for the masses.
* Hades (bisexual male main character, queer male non-player romance option, queer supporting characters)
* Haven about her. He looks down and awkwardly covers his lap with a pillow.
* Godzilla, Mothra, King Ghidorah: Giant Monsters All-Out Attack! brings us the D-3 Warheads, which are drill missiles.
* Hannie Caulder, the scenes of Hannie's strength training (part of her gunfighter training) are interspersed with scenes of the master gunsmith Bailey forging her custom firearm.
* Haymakers is Lottie, a sack-headed scarecrow armed with a hitchfork. Her hitchfork allows her to hitch onto objects and enemies.
* Gorgies, the Romanovs, also have four varieties with different weapons and abilities.
* Half-Life 1 — Established many of the tropes of later FPS games.
* "Grayboxes", a piece of technology introduced in Kasumi's missions, serve this function, and her loyalty mission in
* He is in fact Zak Gramarye, Trucy's father, and a vital character to the plot.
* He finally gets his revenge on the 7/3/2012 edition of Super Smackdown, by eliminating Kane from the battle royal and throwing punch on Eve.
* had gone off the deep end and started imitating the criminal he was after.
* Hart to Hart but most of the time she's seen only as the wife of the great Jonathan Hart.
* He indeed dies in 2278, although the subtext is slightly different than he'd originally expected, as he wanted G'Kar to kill him to end his life under the control of the Drakh and to give Sheridan time to escape.
* God himself is clearly disinterested in the genocidal plans of the angels- in fact, he explicitly says (through an intermediary) that the Apocalypse is "not his problem" (the angels themselves seem either convinced He was dead, or disillusioned that Daddy isn't ever coming back home- they are really simply lost without Him, and the Apocalypse is really the closest thing they have to God's Will). However, it is implied that the
* GURPS, in its relentless pursuit of accuracy, avoids this at every turn and even tries to establish realistic recoil of weapons that don't exist.
* Goosebumps, presumably until it kills them. They manage to save themselves at the last moment by having the photos color inverted at a picture developing shop.
* Godzilla (2014), the military continues to use conventional weapons against Godzilla, who has survived multiple nuclear strikes, and even up to the end of the movie small squads of army dudes engage the skyscraper-sized MUTOs with small arms fire.
* Hiccup the Useless, on top of being completely honest with Chief Mogadon, Hiccup thinks that the Chief could be trusted with the secrets of dragon taming as a means of solidifying their treaty. While Stoick is against this, citing the kind of danger having more than one Viking tribe with this secret, Hiccup argues that pretty much everybody knows about them at this point and that it would be better if they taught him how to properly do it rather than him trying to beat them into submission like the Outcasts and Berserkers do.
* Hamtaro, not even Tom could tell why he was watching it. His exact words were "... Well, they are kind of cute."
* Hayate the Combat Butler. Hayate continuously argues with others that Hinagiku can't possibly like him. Hinagiku doesn't believe he's interested in her traits. It's made clear through other characters that they are the only ones who can't see the mutual crush.

* have to erase the entire board if you make a mistake, since they lack a "reverse" feature higher quality ones do.
* Gravedale High, so some of the monsters are cute teenage girls including Durze (a Gorgon), Blanche (a Zombie) and Cleo (a Mummy).
* Happy Heroes, Big M. traps the Supermen in a video game. A sign within the game informs them that they must win the game to escape; otherwise, they'll be trapped there forever.
* Guns of the Patriots: if the player kills an exorbitant amount of enemy soldiers during any one chapter, Snake will have a flashback to the scene with Liquid, and he throws up. For Old Snake, killing gets harder, sort of; more precisely, he gets sick when he realises how easy it's gotten.
* "Grife" dates back long before Jim Shooter came back to the Legion. The use of future slang varies from writer to writer, with "grife" and "klordney" showing up in the seventies issues.
* Harold Lloyd, which has a scene where Lloyd does this to his own reflection in a funhouse mirror.
* Hack features a disgraced police detective reduced to working as a cab driver. He still considers it preferable to serving as muscle for a local gangster.
* Harlan Ellison Hoss and Hoss was fictional, the woman said, "I know that, all I want to know is if he's alright!"
* Hc Svnt Dracones the only way to improve skills within the timeframe covered by a campaign is a device called a "neuroplex" that beams data into your subconscious while sleeping. At the rate of one point every two weeks.
* Harmony Theory has Rainbow Dash, Applejack, Rarity, and Pinkie Pie. This is due to their vast amount of innate magic, which the ponies of future Equestria have little of. Twinkle Shine even comments that Rainbow Dash was a phenom even by pre-Schism standards.
* Here, Prince Blueblood is a loving family man who cherishes the mares and stallions in his life, and a beloved war hero who
* Green Lantern, while still under the Spectre's power, Hal Jordan seems to unconsciously recreate the layout of the pre-devastation Coast City. Nonetheless, it took a while until people dared to return to the rebuilt town.
* Goku's transformation into a Super Saiyan 3 also serves to do this; the physical strain on his body of maintaining the state and using energy attacks whilst in it is enough to drain him of all his energy in a very short time.
* Handsome stag/centaur Zaetar had relations with the four-armed, three-faced, giant stone monster that is Princess Theradras. This also counts as an inversion of * Groudon, if you bought the initial release of Battle Trainer, which comes with the Pikachu figure only. It carries Earthquake, which means that it can deal a huge amount of damage to Pikachu.
* He forgot to send anything to the police, and nobody believing him. PA came out on top, and Thompson only brought his douchebaggery ways to the attention of the Florida State Bar.
* has the Z-Gate item, which teleports the eponymous hero to a random point on the map.
* Godzilla (1954), where Godzilla's actions are keenly felt in an attack on a fishing ship, and later, a small town, long before we get our first good look at him.
* Grand Theft Auto: Chinatown Wars are represented by very limited animation - unless the characters move their heads, even their lips don't move.
* Halo 5: Guardians and related media, the Elites of the Arbiter's Swords of Sanghelios are starting to move away from this; they're still quite proud, but many of them are more earnestly pursuing non-warrior pursuits. The Arbiter is even trying to get rid of his people's disdain towards doctors.
* Godzilla vs. Kong, he can maintain the laser indefinitely while Godzilla will eventually need to take a breath and end up taking it full-force for his trouble, with the laser being powerful enough to actually hurt Godzilla.
* Goodbye Darkness with her (he's just seen his entire squad get killed by a shell) but refuses when she tries to entice him towards the Japanese lines where he'll be killed.

* Harvest Town gets a lot of criticism for not being challenging enough. Crops aren't season-specific and can even grow during winter, meaning that the player can grow any crop they want at any time, instead of having to buy seeds and plant strategically around the seasons. The 7 Nov 2019 update takes this even further by removing the penalties of not watering plants and/or feeding animals, and is again met with a barrage of protests, complaining that the game has become catered to lazy people.
* Goosebumps do it someday, given that he himself was nearly erased the first time he used the clock, what guarantee is there he'll even survive trying, let alone actually succeed?
* Hayao Miyazaki: Mother lovin' hairy sky pirates. A whole band of them. And their mum is the most badass of all!
* Hellboy), Vold is a headless huntsman in the sky, having declared that God could keep his paradise as long as Vold could hunt. His hounds are the ghosts of Viking berserkers.
* Have comparatively cheap costumes, with (non-human) cartoon characters usually being replicated with mascot costumes that
* Harry, meanwhile, is all twit, never on the same page as anyone else, but never malicious (except when he's turned evil). The problem is Harry wishes to be a famous inventor while being utterly
* Gunslinger Girl and attacks him with her bare hands until he returns it. Not bad for a young girl.
* Grim Prairie Tales feature supernatural horror, Deeds' story is solely about the horror that men can inflict upon their fellow man and themselves.
* Graceland: Jakes broke up with Cassandra in the backstory so that his job as an undercover agent wouldn't endanger her and their child. In the second season, Jakes tries to give up the job in order to be a father to his son - only to find that it's too late and there's no place for him in their lives.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, Harry slowly goes through this with Quirrelmort.
* Grand Canyon, Dee notices a man with a cardboard sign that reads "Will Work For Food" as she drives to work.
* Harry Potter has sold over 100 million copies, putting it at stage 5.
* Gothic Sports, where, motivated by the fact that they simply would never see any play in their school's normal soccer team, a few girls (with two guys...) get together and start their own team for the school.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, such as the NO DIVING sign during the pool scene in "Endless Eight", while Kyon has never missed a sign that he didn't suffer for. At least, not yet. R.I.P., Kyon's Bike.
* HeLacks) in the 1950s, which has continued to undergo cell division and grow, bizarrely unaffected by the Hayflick Limit, and at this point the number of such cells grown has easily surpassed the number of cells in the original donor's body.
* Gonk, but despite that she had a lovely personality, and they both had a wonderful time.
* Henry VIII is the Betty, with flirtatious Anne Boleyn, well known for her quick wit and short temper, as the Veronica. Then Anne Boleyn is still the Veronica but Jane Seymour with her old-fashioned values, modesty, and spotless reputation is the Betty. Later, Anne of Cleves, initially shy, fond of needlework and popular with the people, is the Betty with Kathryn Howard, sexually experienced girl who enjoyed life and was unfaithful, as the Veronica. Catherine Parr, nurse to Henry, caring stepmother and household manager, actually came onto the scene later but the pattern still goes "Betty, Veronica, Betty" twice.
* Grand Canyon (both sides make contact, shutting the canyon, now just flat desert)
* goes after his/her crew immediately after they're abducted, when you rescue them, if you choose the neutral dialogue option ("I'd never abandon my crew"), Shepard quotes the trope word-for-word.
* Green Demon Challenge mercilessly chasing Mario throughout the level and it absolutely will not stop, EVER, until you get a 1up.

* Gleipnir: Sayaka Koyanagi makes chokers out of her own enchanted hair and forces anyone who teams up with her to wear them. If they attempt to betray her or give away her secrets, the choker will automatically constrict until it slices their head off.
* he's actually a Diamond, and not a Quartz as he'd previously believed. When his Gem is forcibly removed by White Diamond in "Change Your Mind", his Gem half, Pink Steven, effortlessly shields itself against White's brainwashing beam, even when she's firing not just from herself, but from all the other Gems in the room she's controlling. In the movie.
* GX were fellow teen schoolmates, the chief antagonists of season 2 were all early 20s or younger, and season 3's subplots and season 4's plot were all ultimately instigated by youngsters.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, but given Italy's reaction, we probably dont; want to know what he said.
* Hayate the Combat Butler when a robot attacks Nagi; its invulnerability to electricity-conducting water ("The best waterproof coating in Japan!") is quickly defeated when silver dining implements are used to penetrate the skin. Behold the power of conductors.
* Harry Potter fanfic "Fire Burns," Katherine is sick and on the verge of death, as well as having constant nightmares. When Severus is visiting, there is the following exchange:
* Heavy Metal, Harry at one point flips off some prostitutes at the police station.
* Green Moon is labeled "nature", and it resembles the Wood element; one of the magic attacks drawing from the Green Moon is a toxic gas. Also, the continent under the Green Moon, Ixa'taka, is covered with forests and the Moon's magic allows it to grow and quickly recover from damage.
* Gold Coin Comics where it begins with a crappy belated birthday card.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, when the player has to shoot incoming cops during a car chase;
* Harley's Little Black Book, fangirl, and has been since childhood. She even has a hidden shrine to Wonder Woman in her closet.
* he's completely human falling on top of him, whereupon his only concern was being stuck under it.
* Good Morning, CronoThe main character starts the game in bed, as his mother or friend wakes him up.
* Hell on Earth 2006's attempts at a shocking 16th birthday party entrance are rejected when his minions repeatedly tell him "Diddy did it."
* half the town fighting over the old doll, with about a dozen Big Balls of Violence going on at once at one point.
* Grave of the Fireflies should tell you a bit about how he still feels about that.
* Halo 2 terminals, the corpses of several Marines are shown floating alongside the wreckage of several UNSC ships, demonstrating what happens to any human fleet that tries to get in Thel 'Vadamee's way.
* God ends with the two leads repeating their opening lines, which are complaining about the play not having an ending.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys had an episode where Iolaus traveled to a parallel universe where Hercules is an evil tyrant, Ares is the god of Love and the other gods are of different things than they usually are.
* Gulliver's Travels: "Gulliver's Voyage to the Country of the Houyhnhnms" crosses into this. Though the main character is human, the story is told more from the horses' ("Houyhnhnms'") perspective than from the human's.
* Here is another example of how not even Mario is immune to having a flop every now and then. While
* Happy Sun Daycare: Werewolves in this universe behave more like real wolves as opposed to the always violent and malicious creatures in most depictions. They also don't need a full moon to transform, instead passing out at random moments in a case similar to narcolepsy and transforming while doing so, which can even happen during the daytime. A special tea can be made to prevent the transformation.

* He kills the chief of police, compels the mayor to appoint him as his replacement, and kills her as well when she finds out too much.
* Here, A.J. Burnett deftly avoids the tag by casually placing his foot back on the base after Jedd Gyorko came running up to him like he was seeking an autograph. Almost as good is how before running, he tries to look nonchalant, like he's taking a leisurely stroll, as opposed to being in the middle of playing a game of baseball. Running towards him was only slightly more obvious.
* Hilda: The show is about three young protagonists going up against creatures like trolls, ghosts, giants, nightmare spirits, and a big black dog with glowing eyes.
* Hazel actually criticizes him here for going too far and making Hawkbit, Acorn and Speedwell feel threatened and biting one of them for arguing, but as Bigwig can also be a more kind-hearted
* God Hand have Armor-Piercing Slaps as attacks. Gene himself has a few moves (such as Pimp Smack) that might qualify as well.
* High School Musical at most, being very flamboyant and fitting many gay stereotypes yet falling for a female character.
* he uses on Conquest-932 is green, and his eyes (though black) briefly flash green when he's angry.
* Help!, Superintendent Gluck does a bad impression of Ringo over the phone: "Hello, this is the famous Ringo, gear, fab. What can I do for you, as it were, gear, fab?"
* GURPS also explores the concept of "ethical magic", and offers spells related to such "ethics" such as Good, Evil, Law, Chaos, or even any other concept a GM might add to a campaign setting.
* Heroic Trio, a Hong Kong movie featuring three beautiful superheroines, lampshades this at one point. The characters narrowly avoid getting blown up. One of the characters turns to the other and quickly asks, "Am I still pretty?". At most, they get bloodied mouths and dirt smeared on their faces, so the answer is yes.
* Great Mazinger: The Mycenae Empire's foot troops wear viking helmets covering their entire heads.
* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla, the evil aliens claimed Mechagodzilla was made of Space Titanium. Whatever it was, it was strong enough to withstand Godzilla's Atomic Breath.
* Hero Chat on a good day and his assistant is only slightly better, so all his friends immediately wince.
* Heart of Ice (Andrew Lang)": A literal example. King Farda-Kinbras and Queen Birbantine were so happy together they defied fate to ruin their happiness. Fairy Gorgonzola, who was listening, got pissed at their arrogance, and took their daughter's heart away.
* Haven episode "Over My Head", a woman named Daphne is trapped in a crashed car at low tide, while a shark circles and waits for the tide to rise so it can reach her. Her Trouble causes her to manifest these dangers to people she believes might rescue her. As such, an imaginary shark gobbles a woman in a pool, among other, less immediately fatal occurrences.
* Haruhi Suzumiya after the events of the first book, which has become more like a giant prologue and character introduction than an actual installment. The fourth book lampshades its own giant prologue, probably partly as a reference to the first book's transformation.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, they're the result of aliens playing a Photoshop-esque game.
* Have You Told Anyone Else? they share the information with. No points for guessing what happens next.
* Griefan Nathaniel Bradanska comes out of the first "Great Dimensional War" as a war hero to the Moebian side, and eventually goes on to become the 'baron' of the New Order faction. Grief will get mad at his underlings, but he saves all his gigantic ferocity on his foes as he leads by example up front and rampages through his enemies ranks, (with adequate air support and artillery support that is.)
* Godzilla (1998). Nick discovers through blood testing that Godzilla is pregnant and has arrived in Manhattan to reproduce. He's believed up until his confidential data is leaked (by his girlfriend, Audrey), and then his idea is discredited... for... some... reason. Elsie does convince Colonel Hicks to sweep the city just in case, but by then it's too late: the eggs are real and they're already hatching. If it weren't for Nick and the DGSE already having discovered the nest, this would have turned into an apocalyptically stupid blunder.

* Guilty Gear move "Magnum Wedding" has her taking out her sniper and shooting the opponent with a bullet that has them fall in love.
* Help Desk the Dark Lord of PayPal to a duel for a spot in Cabal of Evil Visionaries that Rule the Computer Industry, Steve says, "I'll just go make some popcorn, shall I?"
* Her successor Rachel Dalton, while not actually a Colonel (Captain upon introduction, promoted to Major at the end of the episode), displays some serious badass cred in the season two opener, using an anti-tank rocket to blast through a Somali blockade about midway through the episode and generally keeping up effortlessly with Scott and Stonebridge on the battlefield until their extraction arrives. As a bonus, she initially appears to be little more than a junior bureaucrat until she finds said rocket launcher in the enemy's weapons cache.
* Gundam Wing couldn't produce documentation saying who his father was. When he finally finds that documentation, he suggests to Relena that they go get the legal aspect straightened out, so their eventual children won't have to go through the rigamarole and social stigma that he's had to go through.
* Hbomberguy for clicks" bandwagon, further exemplified as he spends the video castrating writers Miles Luna and Kerry Shawcross, holding the late Monty Oum up on a pedestal and treating Shane Newville's divisive manifesto as gospel.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle: A cheetah finds Harold's beef jerky.
* Goblet of Fire, the Death Eaters who tortured Neville Longbottom's parents into insanity are charged with having assaulted "an Auror and his wife," which certainly implies that Neville's mother was not herself an Auror. By the next book, however, Rowling had apparently decided that both of Neville's parents should have been Aurors, making the phrasing of the charges in the previous volume extremely difficult to justify without positing a degree of sexism not otherwise evidenced in Rowling's wizarding world. (The most common explanation is that Alice was either still on maternity leave, or had quit/taken a sabbatical to raise Neville, but still.)
* Hazbin Hotel, Charlie asks Alastor if he really believes rehabilitation is possible.
* Hades laughed off Hercules's attempts to fight him, as a mortal cannot harm a god like him.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban makes the scene surprisingly creepy, even though it's daylight.
* "Gwen Dibley's Flying Circus" was another working title, which was rejected because Gwen Dibley was the name of a real person; the Pythons liked the name, though, and they used it in some sketches.
* Gumshoe, starring Albert Finney, features a London man who decides to adopt a Sam Spade-like persona to escape his boring life, and quickly becomes embroiled in a plot involving drugs, gun smuggling, and gangsters.
* Hayate × Blade gives us Jun, the only student granted the right to use two swords; Shizuku, who wields her partner's sword sheath in addition to her own sword during the council battle; and Maki, who has not been shown Dual Wielding per se but can be inferred to have the ability to do so because of her ambidexterity.
* Guild Wars regions can become "Nightfallen" when there is a strong enough connection between the Realm of Torment and Elona. These areas are heavily warped, have the same dark sky as the Realm of Torment, and are populated by demons and Margonites. Within the actual Realm of Torment several Nightfallen versions of zones from Elona can be found, which are even more warped.
* Hearts of Darkness: A Filmmaker's Apocalypse was based and from where the documentary obviously takes its title) are used to provide context.
* Hilarity Ensues when the AR guys start looking for their AK's bolt release, or pull at the rear trunnion searching for the charging handles. Conversely, hilarity also ensues when the AK guys start looking for their AR's selector switch on the wrong side of the receiver or they grasp around the bottom of the magazine and wonder why they can't get it to release.

* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City too much trial-and-error and unnecessary exploration and busywork out of the player.
* Harry Turtledove attacks the US (and many other nations), the Army quickly lowers its standards and starts accepting anyone who's willing to fight. Sam and his manager "Mutt" Daniels (who would normally be too old to fight) join up.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers sits on it instead and 'Russia is more evil than the chair, so the chair exploded'.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City example on the radio. Claude Maginot stars in the lowbrow sit-com "Just the Five of Us" and the avant-garde play "In The Future, There Will Be Robots". When he's interviewed on K-Chat, he keeps trying to steer the topic towards "Robots" while the airheaded host only wants to discuss his sit-com, and he mentions being prouder of "Robots" while reluctantly admitting it's not doing as well as "Just the Five of Us".
* Hell, if you wound your opponent properly, he'll beg you to kill him to end his misery.
* Harry Turtledove is an FTL-capable ship that took only six weeks to get from Earth to Tau Ceti—something that The Race firmly believed was technologically impossible—ends up scaring The Race more than the fact that the ship is also a full-scale nuclear launch platform. Even if they managed to destroy the ship, the humans would just send another that could attack as soon as it arrived in orbit in a matter of weeks, as opposed to decades.
* Harry pretends to be part of a fountain statue while playing hide-and-seek.
* Greek are high up on the fate scale as not even the gods can escape it.
* Hard Levels, Easy Bosses: Related trope. Where the game is full of Anticlimax and Breather Bosses, especially in relation to the rest of the game.
* GURPS gives advice on how to use this trope in its 4th edition Space supplement, and provides a handy list of synonyms for the types of government it discusses: Anarchy (Anarchate, Free State, Frontier Zone, Libertarian Republic, Post-Polity, Unorganized Territory, Wild Space), Alliance (Axis, Bloc, Coalition, Community, Commonwealth, League, Pact, Sphere), Federation (Concordium, Confederation, Regime, Union, Unity), Corporate State (Cartel, Combine, Conglomerate, Consortium, Hansa, Keiretsu, Partnership), and Empire (Dominion, Hegemony, Imperium, Kingdom, Monarchy, Principiate, Realm, Reich).
* Harlan also replicated SG-1 as robots to help him maintain his underground facility.
* Grandia II which have been squabbling for control over man for eons. A lot of collateral damage in this story, including a little blind girl who becomes a host for the Devil's Eye. Everyone gets better in the epilogue, though.
* gratuitous demonstration of power and ability ranges galore because then the audience would simply be waiting for them to wise up and start talking. Having them fight over custody of Loki let the movie have its fight with full justification.
* Granblue Fantasy, a boss named Oktopode can apply the Inked debuff on the entire party, which covers the HP indicator of the party members with a black ink, while giving their attacks a chance to miss.
* Gracie Allen, Fred Allen, Abbott and Costello, Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy, and many others.
* Gloria's award with invisibility or telekinesis instead of going into her mind, you get unique scenes where she thinks the thing is going off on its own and won't let it leave anyway.
* Happens to Man Ray's detachable head in "Shuffleboarding" when he throws it like a flying disc at SpongeBob during their battle at the laundromat, only for it to fly into a washer and shrink because it's dry clean only.
* Harry Potter: Pokémon Master series. To half of the world but especially Kanto and Avalon they are butchers who slaughtered hundreds if not thousands, killed half of the Elite 4 of Kanto, and blew up the Pokemon League. To Johto and their allies (Kalos and Unova mainly and later Harry himself), they were freedom fighters who decided it didn't pay to play nice with dictators and decided to go for An Eye For An Eye in order to save Johto from an oppressive regime that covered up murder.

* hana meaning "flower") is shown applying her lipstick with some flowers prominently in the foreground.
* Hermine Braunsteiner was said to carry a horsewhip and have used it to kill at least two female inmates.
* Gone Horribly Right: A solution works so well that it ends up becoming a new problem.
* Grand Theft Auto V: Some overpasses have signs displaying the clearance height, with an obvious dent in them where tall vehicles have hit them.
* Hello Gutter, Hello Fadder", Lenny and Carl invite Homer to go bowling with them. Homer bowls a 300 game, and briefly becomes a celebrity, letting the fame go to his head. At the end of the episode, Homer treats Maggie to a game of bowling, and she nearly scored a 300 game if she hadn't stepped over the line.
* has monopolized all social interaction, charging micropayments for any interpersonal contact longer or more intimate than a brief greeting.
* Gold–Silver–Copper Standard: A setting where gold, silver and copper coins are the main units of money.
* Grent's Fall, Ava Carleton disguised herself as a man to actively assist Henry Darro's rebellion, at least when others were around.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince. These inferi overwhelm Harry and try to drown him. Harry suspects that he himself will become an inferi after he dies.
* Harry Potter and the Grand Trainer Tournament we learn that Jack Kenway and Lance Blackthorn were once best friends very much like James and Sirius were. When Koga of the Elite 4 caused the death of Jack's aunt and uncle Lance wanted to handle it through proper channels... and Jack saw this as Lance looking to cover the deaths up in order to hold onto his new position as a member of the Elite 4. The two ended up the commanders on the opposite side of the Johto/Kanto War and it has took ten years for the two to finally patch things up.
* Grace is a Squirrel/Girl/Alien hybrid with the ability to take nearly any shape, of ANY gender. Helped along by a boyfriend whose fetishes mostly seem to revolve around Transgender Furry fantasies. She's also a * hangs up the phone) Oh, crap. I shouldn't have said he was a customer. Oh, crap. I shouldn't have said it was a secret. Oh, crap! I certainly shouldn't have said it was illegal. Ah, it's too hot today."
* Granblue Fantasy are significantly short (second after the Harvin race) but have large breasts.
* Higher Learning: Shinji and Asuka danced around each other for several months, not daring to confess or acknowledge their feelings. Boldened by their new teacher's advice -and a bottle of sake- they finally opened up to each other.
* Harry Potter and the Natural 20 forces him to answer hundreds of minute trivia questions about his life, causing Milo to conclude that Lockhart is the centerpiece of the story. Turns out he's just a narcissist.
* Handy Helper: A character helps a disabled person by acting as the body part that is absent or doesn't work.
* GURPS rapidly reorganizes a person's brain to give them basic knowledge of a new skill.
* has Mob's little brother Ritsu trapped for a year in a mind world where he is tormented every single day and in every single way possible. This world is worse than the one that Mob was originally trapped in canonically and leaves Ritsu with severe trauma and a heroin addiction.
* Hellsister Trilogy to fight Mordru and his army of superpowered villains.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2, who is first shown to be a kind and loving man, playing catch with Peter and sharing their love for 70s and 80s music, but he later reveals that he's responsible for the death of Peter's mother and wants his son to assist him in wiping out the galaxy and replacing it with extensions of himself, and has murdered thousands of his children when they failed to inherit his powers, stashing their bones in his caverns.

* Hereditary , being manipulated by his grandmother into becoming the host for the demon king Paimon. Complicated in that she was unable to perform the intended rituals when he was a baby, so she allowed Paimon to possess her grand-daughter Charlie until she could try again when Peter was older; this possibly makes for a double-case of this trope.
* Grimm's Fairy Tale Classics, Maria gets so sad while staying with the Beast that her emotions turn things such as dinner and flowers, into dust.
* Hated by All: I'm such a jerk that nobody likes me. Whatever! I hate them all right back!
* Guns in Church: A moron brings a weapon to a place where they'd get in serious trouble for doing so.
* Highlander) and simply gets right back up. A montage of Connor getting run through repeatedly ensues, until finally, still drunk, Connor apologizes for his behavior towards his opponent's wife and wanders off none the worse for wear. The other guy's face is priceless.
* Half-Life 1. When it's called on for a combat role, however, it's still a suit of reactive armor.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, who is Catalina's new boyfriend in the next mission and who gives CJ his car garage in San Fierro.
* He also freaks out in "Roswell that Ends Well", when he realizes he is his own grandfather.
* Hi-de-Hi!: Gladys is known for her bizarre semi-off key opera singing. Ruth Madoc is a professional singer.
* he He finally realized he wasn't to blame, just that his father is "a monster, and the worst father in the history of fathers".
* GoldenEye: Mr. Bond rides a motorcycle off a cliff, skydives without a parachute to the open door of the airplane in a powered dive to oblivion, pulls himself inside, and pulls up.
* Handsome Siblings series, all three of the best martial artists among the villains, Jiang Biehe, Wei Wuya, and Yao Yue, are either defeated effortlessly by the heroes or don't even need to be fought due to circumstances. (It could be argued that this is thematically appropriate, since the real tension of the story is the friendship between Jiang Xiayu and Hua Wuque in light of their fated duel, but it wouldn't have killed them to make at least one villain pose a serious threat.)
* He fills her house with bouquets of roses. Unfortunately, Gandra Dee is allergic to Roses.
* Happiness™ is about a self-help book that actually works, turning people into happy zombies and making the publishing company so much money that they trademark the word "happiness".
* Hetalia: Axis Powers in his country, Lichtenstein nearly starves to death when her country is in a depression, and Hungary is "freakishly strong" around the time when her country helped with the War of Austrian Succession).
* Heechee have FTL technology that baffles human understanding and so can only be sent on pre-programmed journeys. Most of them don't return, and some that do return come back with their crews killed in various horrifying ways. They're also designed for nonhumanoids to operate, meaning that while humans can tolerate living inside one for several weeks or months, it's not very comfortable, and supplies and free space are at a premium. Human explorers found a cache of them on Venus, which led to another cache being discovered on an asteroid called "Gateway".
* Guitar Hero mostly consists of the physical aspects of actually playing an instrument. This includes fingering and tapping (using both hands on fret buttons) for guitar and bass parts, and sticking for drums. Using Star Power/Overdrive appropriately is also a big factor in maximizing scores, and a lot of research goes into determining the best path for deploying it.
* GURPS: Ultratech has the "Reality Disintegrator" and the more traditional "Nucleonic Disintegrator".
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged Brazil, where he says that Integra has forbidden him from going. Alucard goes there anyways to spite them, unaware that was what they wanted him to do all along.

* Grrl Power. Arianna, the legal counsel for the super team, is willing to stage a bank robbery, salivates at the thought of merchandising deals, and laughs madly at public opinion bending to her will. But she's still on the side of the angels; she notes to Sydney (when she's about to sign a paper that would make Arianna her lawyer) that she's not going to produce a document that will mean she has to sue herself once it's signed, and spends most of her time finding ways to make her team look good despite their behavior. Such as when a restaurant gets destroyed in a supervillain attack.
* Hannah Montana, Oliver is stressing during his and Miley's rehearsal of the school play. Miley assures Oliver that she won't let him fall on his face and suggests they do trust exercise again. However, she gets distracted by a sudden doorbell ringing and rushes to answer it making Oliver fall down.
* Hawkeye run. One issue starts with Hawkeye standing over a bunch of wires, thinking carefully, and finally cutting the green wire... and then it turns out they're the wires to all the electronics in his apartment, which have gotten hopelessly tangled.
* Green-Sky Trilogy have developed a sturdier frame from generations of living underground.
* Grand Theft Auto IV is occupied by a few street gangs along with larger, better-organized groups.
* He almost completely loses it, but then quickly remembers that the teleporter's broken, that's why.
* Happens for real in a gay variant with Bexbury and Marcello, although
* Guilty Crown is a very nebulous group that is only mentioned, never seen. Supposedly they want to restart the human race by eradicating most of it with the Apocalypse Virus.
* Harry Truman's first idea for dealing with Stalin's blockade of West Berlin is to drop an atom bomb on Japan. Fortunately, he reconsiders.
* Hercules: When Phil argues with Hercules when telling him that Meg is working with Hades, with Herc refusing to believe him.
* Half-Life 1. Instead players have to sit through a few minutes of Gordon Freeman riding the tram, then navigating his maze-like workplace, grabbing his suit, starting the Resonance Cascade, and go through a few more hallway before Gordon even picks up a gun.
* Green Lantern: One of the Orange Lanterns, Warp-Wrap, is an alien mummy whose tomb was robbed by Larfleeze.
* Harkovast, Quinn-Tain breaks Brightleaf's neck because he considers after she has already been disarmed and is helpless. He considers this to be essential to serve as a warning to others. This gets a furious reaction from Scatterpod. After she has gone, Quinn-Tain expresses regret, but still considers his actions necessary evils.
* Google portrayed as a middle-aged office worker getting increasingly exasperated with the idiocy of its users and the bizarreness of their searches.
* Hand of Thrawn tries to make him change his counter-intuitive plans and uses this sort of phrasing, to Pellaeon's amusement.
* Happens a lot in universe too. Ultraviolet clearance clones are assumed to not only be above suspicion by the Computer, but also be the people who program the Computer and tell it what to think. (They've installed automatic safeguards against blatant "all the other Ultraviolets are traitors" programs, but that's about it.)
* Hell's Kitchen had Sabrina and Tek messing around with helium while blowing up balloons for a dinner party, even going so far as to imitate Ramsay.
* Harri is unconscious due to an injured magical core and Tonks is forced to impersonate her.
* Haou Airen sets in, Hakuron tries this technique on her a lot because he realizes that his enemies will do horrible things to her if he appears to care for her. He even goes so far as to make her be Fuuron's mistress instead of his own. It doesn't work very well.
* Good Omens (2019) from humanity. A flashback shows he was wearing them in 41 A.D.

before sunglasses had officially been invented.
* Guy Gavriel Kay on their national history. For reference, he based it on Renaissance-era Italy. His writing philosophy is that history-inspired fantasy, among other things, lets a story have more of a universal appeal than mundane historical fiction would.
* Happens in the story "Determinism and the Martian War, with Relativistic Corrections" from the anthology novel
* Gods of thunder and lightning are found in many myths and religions across the world.
* He's actually being manipulated by Kazebar. He told Gothon that Ben's soul could revive her so he could get his
* GLQuake was allegedly developed to run on id Software's workstations with no intentions of running on consumer PCs, but by coincidence, the 3dfx Voodoo Graphics card handled it very well, and so they made it available to consumers anyway. The rest is history.
* H₂O: Mermaid Adventures: The sea life serves this purpose during the climax of "The White Mermaid".
* Grand Theft Auto V. Franklin starts off a down-to-earth street hood but after doing a heist with Michael de Santa and Lester Crest, Lester begins tapping Franklin to perform hits on his behalf. Franklin goes through with it but when Lester attempts to justify his actions as being for the greater good, Franklin brushes him off and replies that he's only looking for a good payday and that there's no way to whitewash how unpleasant his task is.
* Halt a Chantry plot to spark open conflict between humans and Qunari.
* Hey Arnold! episode, Harold is caught trying to steal a ham from Mr. Green's butcher shop. His parents send him to their rabbi, who gives a passing complaint about the theft but seems especially annoyed that he stole something that wasn't even kosher.
* Happily Married: I'm proud to be married to my wife/husband! We're gonna make a beautiful family!
* Graceland Mike is told by his superior that Briggs is being investigated for corruption because he is spending too much money compared to what he earns as an FBI agent. However, we are never shown that Briggs lives beyond his means and many of the fancier items he has are provided by the FBI as part of his undercover work. It becomes obvious that Mike's superior has a personal grudge against Briggs and might be lying to Mike because he does not want to reveal the real reason why the FBI is suspicious of Briggs.
* God of War, and first show up when you catch up to Jason and the Argonauts.
* Grizzly Adams television show and similar nature-themed shows of the era.
* Hamilton, Burr works a mention of how Hamilton founded the Coast Guard and the New York Post into "The Adams Administration".
* Green Thumb: When a character has powers that allow them to control plant life.
* Greatest Hits album "The Singles" from which it was a single (albeit slightly remixed). The band really wanted this track on Pushing The Senses but the record company felt it was too heavy, so they were glad to have it on The Singles.
* Grumpier Old Men, Mama is among the mourners at the funeral and tosses a flower into the grave with him.
* High School Musical where a kid want to play basketball, which his flamboyant singer father disapproves of.
* Gothamites has seemingly already been accepted as the name for fans of
* He found that Juan Prim (Spanish PM shot in an ambush in 1870) was strangled in his bed while he was recovering from the shooting, concluding that he was victim of a more elaborate conspiracy than commonly believed.
* Gotham episode "Blood Rush", a mob "cleaner" transports the dismembered parts of a corpse to the place where he's planning to destroy them with acid in this fashion.
* Halleluiah, or Holly, follows a Christ-like arc in music by the Hold Steady. In the album "Separation Sunday," she wears a cross and reads bible stories but falls into a downward spiral of drugs and bad decisions. She joins some locals in being "born again" by taking a hit of nitrous oxide and being dunked underwater, a parallel with baptism. Shortly afterwards, she blacks out and disappears, and finally wakes up in a confession booth during Easter mass where she asks, "Father, can I tell your congregation how a resurrection really feels?"

* Hellbenders: These are incorporeal beings that interact with the world by possessing morally compromised humans. When they transfer bodies, they resemble a swarm of flies. They are weak to holy things, and are sent back to Hell when their host body is killed.
* Gown and Out", Lola advances to a regional pageant, and she worries she could lose for the first time. She does, but is ultimately glad she went through with competing and wins the respect of her opponents.
* Guitar Hero, where you essentially were buffeted by random status effects and had to use your own random status effects to try and make the other guy fail.
* Grand Theft Auto IV: The Lost and Damned, berates him for his outlaw biker-gang lifestyle, and the toll it has taken on their family.
* Goblins, Kin the yuan-ti (basically a human with a snake tail instead of legs) mentions that she has two stomachs.
* Heavy Metal. Entrants must be vital and free of diseases. Every winner becomes a cruel tyrant, but the hero of the story (called weak and frail all his life) wants to become ruler and end the reign of evil. He wins, and at his "coronation", he's drugged, bound, his skull is cut open by robot surgeons (after he wakes up), his brain is crudely removed over his screaming protests, and the brain of the previous king is transplanted from his freshly-dead, used up, obese corpse. In death, however, the hero is victorious. The stress of the surgery sets off his congenital heart defect, and the tyrant is slain.
* Harry teases Snape about getting lost in a forest on his own property.
* Global Agenda has a healing gun, healing grenades, and a "healing wave" — an inexplicable healing power that is an even-more inexplicable AOE effect emanating from the medic.
* Harry Potter, Harry has trouble convincing the Wizarding World that Voldemort has returned because the Wizarding World really doesn't want to believe it. They spend a great deal of time and effort smearing Harry and Dumbledore, time and effort they could have spent preparing for the Death Eaters. By the time the Ministry finally can't deny the reality of Voldemort's return any longer, it's far too late.
* have been lovers of epic proportions. Cesare was believed to be extremely jealous of Lucrezia's second husband, Alfonso of Aragon, both for Alfonso's good looks (Cesare's face had been scarred by syphilis) and because Lucrezia seemed genuinely happy with her husband. Cesare had Alfonso attacked by his men in the middle of the night, but Alfonso survived. His men retaliated by shooting arrows at Cesare one day while he was in his garden. Cesare shortly thereafter had Alfonso strangled in his recovery room. Lucrezia was said to be devastated. It should be noted that Lucrezia and Alfonso's marriage was quickly becoming a useless alliance, which also probably had something to do with Cesare's motives.
* Golden Sun: Dark Dawn, but she's otherwise pretty capable of messing up anything that messes with her.
* God of Love, Ray, who was praying to God to get Kelly to fall in love with him, is sent a box of "Love Dart 3000" darts, from a company called Olympus. In the end, after he has used the darts to get his friend Fozzie to fall in love with Kelly, Olympus sends him the standard bow-and-arrow set, and he realizes that he has actually become Cupid.
* Gold Diggers of 1933 include "We're in the Money," where the Gold Diggers sing that they "never see a headline 'bout a breadline today," and "Remember My Forgotten Man," which obviously was inspired by "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?"
* Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later the courtyard and spends a few minutes trying to reach them, thus allowing Michael Myers to catch up to them, pick up the keys and unlock the courtyard gate with ease.
* Harry Potter and the Natural 20: Milo tries bribing a Muggle police officer with 500 pounds of salt because he doesn't have any pounds and the Player's Handbook states that transactions can use "trade goods" when money isn't available. 

* Hellraiser, Julia finds a photo of Frank and another woman among his possessions. She tears off the corner with the woman on it and keeps the part with Frank.
* GO-GO Tamagotchi! is about Mametchi and his friends racing to reach the top of Moshimo Mountain, their motivation being a rumor that whoever reaches the top of the mountain will be granted one wish.
* here) has powers mainly based on shadow, and can grant his followers the ability of seeing without requiring light.
* Grimm Fairy Tales: In #1 of the ongoing series, Robyn does this to a sleazy politician; taking photos with his phone and uploading them to his Twitter account and sending them to everyone in his contacts list, including journalists.
* GRU — The Glavnoye Razvedyvatel'noye Upravleniye(Main Intelligence Directorate) is the other Soviet/Russian Military Intelligence which outlasted the KGB.
* he blocks her from entering Aki's room while she's sick with measles to prevent her from getting contaminated. For once however, he doesn't back off and even tells her he's ready to take more.
* Hawaii Five-0 has Grover forced off SWAT and into early retirement after the hijinks he pulls when his daughter is kidnapped. The team comes to find him on the golf course so that Steve can immediately re-hire him as a Five-0 officer.
* Ground Control. The difference is that the colonies that make up the NSA have rebelled centuries before, and the government they have rebelled from no longer exists, having been taken over by the Draconis Empire, which renamed itself the Terran Empire after conquering Earth. As far as the imperials are concerned, though, all of space rightly belongs to them.
* Half-Life: Full Life Consequences production took it literally and used the Citadel model to stretch from ground to sun in the skybox.
* GunBuster, they make use of a more or less realistic interpretation of time dilation as they get closer to the speed of light. This resulted in one of the characters going from sixteen to mid-40's while the main heroine, Noriko Takaya, aged a mere year or two.
* Haibane Renmei, Rakka acts as the Naive Newcomer, appearing in the Haibane's world and having to have everything explained to her by the seasoned residents.
* GURPS Infinite Worlds: Britannica-6 constructed to the order of the Duke-Governor of Greater Manitoba in response to the threat he perceives from the Russian colony in Alaska and propelled by the largest ski-track system yet built on any timeline. This does impress the Russians somewhat, but it mostly spends its time intimidating unruly Inuit.
* Grand Theft Auto was originally supposed to be a car racing game. But attempts at making the AI opponents more challenging resulted in the AI chasing after the player and crashing into them. Thinking that this was cool, the programmers retooled the game into a madcap crime simulator that spawned a mega-franchise.
* Hell's Kitchen looked weird and pretty nearly the entire point of the show was lost — there's no competition factor whatsoever and it's almost impossible to make Ramsay angry unless you're a damn perfectionist who wants gold stars.
* Grand Theft Auto III Maria tells her husband/Claude's boss Salvatore Leone that they've been having an affair, forcing Claude to abscond to a different part of the city.
* Hellsing's non-humans, including the mooks, and at least one empowered human count as Implacable Men. Hails of normal rounds barely faze them and they heal almost instantly.
* Guerrilla: One of the black radicals turns out to be a police informant. He points out the leader of the protest for the police, who beat him to death. Pence also has a female one, whom he's involved with and fathered a son by.
* Highlander: The Search for Vengeance, where Marcus has released a virus over New York to wipe out all of people who haven't conformed to his ancient Roman ideals. The virus only had an 80% kill rate but by the end of the movie he's managed to make a 100% version.
* He has taken to writing every Space Marine codex since then and small notes have been taken. Such as the Grey Knights being cut down from 3,000 to 1,000 marines making up their chapter and suddenly becoming codex adherent. Making this statement in an interview didn't help cheer up many Blood Angels players either: "Indeed, it was Guilliman who would have the greatest lasting effect upon the now leaderless Blood Angels. Through the Codex Astartes - that great treatise on the restructuring and ordering of the Space Marines - Guilliman's legacy would reshape the Blood Angels Legion into the Chapters that defend the Imperium to this day."

* Harry Potter. Presumably Voldemort had his eye on global conquest, but the books focus on his attempts to fully consolidate power in Britain, and those fighting against him from within.
* Heavy Object the Capitalist Enterprise is ostensibly restoring the shark population around Hawaii as part of a business venture. The truth is this is being done to increase the number of shark attacks and damage the tourism industry, which is being used by spies from the other nations. The Enterprise also uses the situation to engineer "shark attacks" on inconvenient people.
* Help Not Wanted: Remixed Phallic Memories in HD. Groshlar intentionally shits himself in chapter 3 after orcs tell him goblins are only good for stinking up the world. In chapter 4, Krumvell notices orcs from the Crimson Blade tribe willingly soiling their britches, and he defiantly pisses his shorts in front of the tribe's chieftain just to annoy him.
* Gory Discretion Shot: You don't want to see it versus you want to see it.
* gods, but Nico's mother used it as if it were just a melee weapon that could channel spells. When Nico meets her ancestor Witchbreaker, the old witch laments that her descendants stopped exploring how to use the staff properly after figuring out how to cast simple offensive spells.
* HERZ: In chapter 2 Shinji and Asuka have pillow talk after Asuka wakes up from a nightmare. While Shinji is taking care of her wounds, she asks if he thinks she is ugly ("Of course not", he replies) and begs him not leaving her.
* HERZ: The epilogue happens twenty years after the events of chapter 12.
* Goku. When the chips are down, he'll take a beating and be on the ground battered and bruised — but
* Haruhi-chan, Mikuru has to carry a large pot of soup to aid Haruhi's cooking show. Needless to say, she doesn't make it. What makes this even better is that she tries again a few minutes later... and trips over the first pot.
* Goof Troop so that Max doesn't listen to his warnings that the hat is evil, and then Max chooses the hat over him. It turns out that the magic hat was deliberately making Max as narcissistic as possible so that it would be impossible for him to remove it from his head. And a person's head is all the hat needs to cause all sorts of mayhem. The only way for Max to remove the hat is to confess to being the world's worst magician.
* Highlander: When Connor MacLeod first discovers he is an immortal back in ancient Scotland, he's proclaimed a witch, and burning is mentioned as an option. (In the end, he's just run out of town by a howling mob instead.)
* Hate Dom says he did so much damage that the show couldn't be salvaged when he stepped down as showrunner in mid-2001, but that ignores the changes Al Jean implemented on the show: of the disliked elements from Scully's time as showrunner, many were scrapped immediately while many more disappeared over time - very few of the complaints about episodes in Seasons 9-12 can be applied to seasons since then, and vice-versa.
* Goblin Market. Both Lizzie and Laura have children in later years, but we aren't told anything about the children's fathers. Sisterhood is depicted as more important than marriage, despite the fact that both characters are now married.
* Harvest Moon: Magical Melody, is similar. Through talking with Dan, he reveals much about is life as a traveler and the odd jobs he's had and indicates that he's Romani.

* Hayate the Combat Butler, she always somehow ends up destroying it. In one instance, she lets a cow in. When she attempts to 'help out' so she has more life experience, she seems unable to do anything without destroying something. Hayate and Maria are forced to watch as their amount of clean-up work starts to mount.
* Gradius. The voice tracks were only in English and the non-English versions simply have the dialogue subtitled.
* Gone with the Wind does this for each section of Scarlett's life, so that the key events are clustered together. Most notably, her miscarriage/Bonnie's death/Melanie's miscarriage and death all happen with a few weeks of each other, whereas in the book, these events took place over the course of a year.
* Hatoful Boyfriend turns into an RPG battle when you burst in to save him from Doctor Shuu - er, the Dark Sorceror Wallenstein.
* Harsh/Spicy subtype is more equally split in gender. Oranyan is sometimes used to refer to a male tsundere character—incorrectly since it means the complete opposite.
* Heath defects to your side after disobeying orders to slaughter innocent civilians.
* Gratuitous Mariachi Band: A Mariachi band pops ups repeatedly throughout the work and tend not to leave the protagonist(s) alone.
* Hero Factory podcasts. It's implied that he carried out the threat, too, but Mak's a robot, so he gets repaired.
* Hikari glomps Asuka so hard that she's thrown both out of the chair and on the ground.
* Graham McNeill, when Honsou speaks of their plan of attack, the Warsmith slaps him down, hard, for thinking himself worthy of making a suggestion and says he considers himself merciful for not punishing him.
* Gunkanjima, an island near Nagasaki, Japan where there was a coal mine from 1887 to 1974. The whole island is basically one humongous single building.
* Good Charlotte's singer Joel & guitarist Benji are twins, and the entire band were solely credited by their first names on their first album in a show of unity as the brothers' father had walked out on their family & they didn't want to be credited with his name.
* Gunsmith Cats, lead character Rally Vincent is a sharpshooter whose trademark trick shot is to shoot (usually severing) the thumb of an enemy to disarm them, a shot affectionately referred to as the "thumbsnatcher."
* Hey Arnold! has Mr. Simmons voiced by Dan Butler, though his relationship with Peter is made subtle.
* Hamilton: "We're gonna fly a lot of flags half-mast (Raise a glass!)"
* Harry Turtledove He's only slightly nicer to the men under his command; one time not mourning one's death, because he was Greek Orthodox and therefore a heretic, even if he was a nice guy.

* Gravity Falls to ask Wendy to dance with him. When Dipper has an epiphany and tries to abandon the plan, his clones rebel and lock him in the closet so he doesn't "interfere" with his own scheme.
* Having military fighter pilots fire missiles over the territory of the United States. This
* Haze, he apparently realizes, for the first time, all the atrocities he's committed while being high on nectar. His final words?
* Gold Makes Everything Shiny — Gold is so much prettier and shinier than most other precious metals.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, which is a little weird in retrospect given that the two characters in the scene (Harry and Hermione) are about 14 years old:
* Graham's Number. The paper commented: "Clearly, there is some room for improvement here."
* Halo Wars after, having spent 20 minutes working on a timed escort mission, the game fails him for not getting the squadron back to the base on time and says that they "lost contact" with the squadron. This is completely in spite of the fact that he had spent nearly the last half-hour clearing all the enemies from the map. He literally spends the last minute-and-a-half yelling about it.
* Guy Maddin. It's what David Lynch would have shot if a particularly deranged Dostoievsky handed him a script.
* Hey Dude! guests were visiting the ranch, and one character accidentally proposed marriage to a young girl.
* Harry=Fleur. Harry is the horcrux Voldemort never meant to make, Fleur was brought up a few times but never considered for the ritual because of her engagement to Bill. Harry became a horcrux through a unique set of circumstances and an act of true love, Fleur became embroiled in the goings-on through a series of coincidences. Voldemort made Harry a horcrux by accident,
* Glowing gems and lamps filled with fireflies are sometimes used in lieu of electrical lamps.
* Harmony make Harmony a legit threat for quite a while, as it caused the a lot of negative PR for Buffy's group.)
* "Godzilla Ate Tukwila" by Dave Phillips. (Tukwila is a small town in Washington state; in the course of the song, the Big G eats several others as well.)
* Herbie: Fully Loaded, Ray Peyton Sr. is dead set against his daughter Maggie being a racer, as much as she wants to follow in his footsteps. This is for two understandable reasons; one, because she had gotten into a bad car accident while street racing years ago, and two:
* Halloween: The Curse of Michael Myers abilities like that, why the hell is she afraid of Michael Myers? Also, Michael Myers seems to have no problem punching through car windows without sustaining any injuries.
* her governess/stepmother walks out and her guardian (probably her father, for all he denies this) becomes disabled.
* Hector Berlioz was infamous for being this trope. His reviews have been said to be unnecessarily abrasive and often outrageous.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, as it shows a production team desperately trying to do the show when Sorbo is suddenly unavailable.
* Godzilla vs. Megaguirus of the Meganulons, and most of her carapace is bright purple, save for some yellow and red highlights. She's also a formidable foe against Godzilla, thanks to her agility.
* Guyver - The 2006 TV series was a collaboration between Kadokawa Shoten (Japan) and ADV Films (US)
* Guardian Cats and the Lost Books of Alexandria, Professor Chin has a nervous tic massaging his wrists and fingers.
* Happy Days the gang goes to a rollerskating rink, and Fonzie is very unsteady on his skates. He still tries to act cool though.
* Harry and Hermione are about to kiss when Neville runs in to show them that he turned his toad Trevor purple.
* Hell Girl few episodes that don't show the "Ai gearing up" sequence.
* Got a little odd in "Aftershock Part 2," though, when at one point they had two characters talking, had the

* Groups headed up by a guru/minister/etc. will start off as a spiritual group headed by a person who's just a more adept believer and teacher....only for them to make the big
* Heroes of the Desk: Repercussions. Of course, since this trope exists, some people panic anyway even though nothing bad happens.
* He's given a unique twist, though. He's NICE to MJ when she makes a pro–Spider-Man video. In fact, he's one of the only two views she GOT.
* Happy Endings with Penny after she meets the unfortunately named Doug Hitler.
* Hero units are immune to some of the more drastic spell effects like Doom, Possession or Charm, preventing said spells from becoming utterly gamebreaking. Most other debuffs, like sleep, and stun, do work on them, but wear off quicker compared to regular units.
* Guild Wars campaign, the player had to fight his own twin in a 'mirror match'. What made this battle especially difficult was that the 'mirror' was a true 'mirror', including possessing whatever skills the player had equipped at time. One novel metagame strategy was to load the character down with health-sacrifcing and 'damage reflection'-type skills, and make a 'suicide run' on the mirror boss. Since the mirror-double could only use the player's currently-equipped skills, it would literally 'attack itself to death' within seconds of the battle commencing.
* Good Eats Lever Man (played by the same actor in the same costume) has a similar entry.
* Guardians, Wizards, and Kung-Fu Fighters, this is Frost's reaction when a noble calls him a brute and implies he's distrustful, while he's still in the room.
* Halo 3, when he tries to convince a group of Drones that Truth is just leading them to their doom. It fails, and you have to help him kill them all.
* her inherited Magical Girl, if her mother is any indication. (The first time we meet Yuki's mother, she excitedly shows Erika the new kitchen knife she bought, after a moment realizing she "forgot to pay". Erika just says "You're still doing that?")
* grossly overpower a microwave to the point where he and Al have to wear welding goggles and lead vests to use it, and even then they're advised to "not look directly at the potato." It comes out of the microwave glowing!
* He initially refuses to run to a shelter while in the eye of a tornado that had torn off his clothes because the women would see him naked. One of the people in the shelter, an old woman, informs him that he's worried over nothing:
* Hannibal Lecter himself is revealed as Lithuanian, yet he's played by a Frenchman. Then again, his previous portrayers were British
* Hikaru no Go Hikaru has to play the loud, bearded Tsubaki in the first round of the Professional Exam, something he finds quite intimidating.
* Happens with many Latin American and Spanish cities, for obvious reasons:
* Hard Revenge, Milly) but they leave her face untouched, even though she bit one of them on the face. In the main film, all of her injuries are covered by her normal clothes, and we just see her pretty face.
* Hayate the Combat Butler loan sharks, broken vases (by a child who shouldn't have been carrying something like that anyway), and literally helping every single person he comes across with the money, he's stuck with nothing and considers sleeping on a bench.
* Heroes' Matt Parkman when his ability first manifested. Most of the people whose minds he touched were thinking about what a loser he was, and how he didn't know his wife was cheating on him.
* Hercule Poirot novels. Oliver's comments about her detective creation, a vegetarian Finn, give some interesting insight into how Christie felt about the Belgian Poirot.
* Gundam SEED Even worse, Blue Cosmos, the group that's basically pulling the strings behind the Earth Alliance, refers to Coordinators as "Patchworks"
* Grand Theft Auto V. With the added bonus of having the entire lobby hearing your awful singing and vote kicking you.
* Grey An Alien Dream, Grey climbs into a mech taller than the trucks in the background to fight an alien queen.

* Hellraiser III: Hell on Earth, Pinhead is trapped as a statue, but frees himself after a certain amount of blood.
* Guards! Guards! Dibbler promises that his "dragon protection" cream will save you from being burned to death by dragon flame, and if it doesn't work then you get your money back (upon personal application only).
* Good Omens (2019). She then shares some of her occult magazines with him, which he finds utterly fascinating, and soon, he introduces his other friends to her, too. (They're all allegedly against "witches," but it's pretty clear they all think the idea of a witch living next door is awesome.)
* Green Lantern has 3,600 sectors worth of badass space cops—belonging to as many alien species—with their own adventures that we never get to see in the main comics.
* Harry Turtledove instead of clothing. At least American teens also adopt the word "hot" to have the same connotation as "cool" for modern teens instead of the modern slang "hot" meaning "sexy". Sam Yeager muses that his son Jonathan, who's one of those teens, wouldn't understand him if he started using 40s or 50s slang in front of him. Interestingly, this meaning for "hot" doesn't come directly from the lizards, as they themselves don't really have slang words, but from the fact that lizards really like heat, so anything hot must be good. No lizard would ever consider the word "cool" to be good.
* Goodbye Charlie, a sitcom adaptation of the movie of the same name (which was itself based on a play) starring Suzanne Somers as 'Charlie'.
* Halo 2, by designating one team a zombie team, and the other a human team. This put everybody on the honor system though, since you had to manually change teams yourself. This, combined with the fact that some hosts went by Russo rules where you have to get killed by a zombie and only by a zombie to turn, while other hosts went by Romero rules where all deaths should make a convert, predictably lead to chaos and frustration when dealing with inexperienced, stubborn, or otherwise plain stupid players.
* Hard Boiled: Because of the shooting schedule, the crew only had one chance to perform the continuous take during the gun-battle in the hospital.
* Greek God reveals he's just a powerful alien who had become too used to being worshiped by mortals.
* Harley Quinn #1, Harley is looking for a car to steal and decides to steal the one that is taking up two parking spaces.
* Gorky Park is about a Soviet cop investigating the death of an American and his friends in the heart of Moscow - and promptly receives unasked aid from the victim's brother, an NYPD detective.

* Happens to Inuyasha himself by Magatsuhi in an attempt to kill Sesshomaru and Kagome.
* Granted, she did know that Fey was meeting with a big-name Hollywood producer. Who happened to be in league with a supervillainess at the time. And really, if you knew that part, and then your daughter and her little friend told you they were kidnapped and murdered (yes, a girl stands there and says she was murdered) and had to blow up an entire Syndicate base to escape, wouldn't you think it was a screenplay? At least, right up until the news talked about the building downtown that was just blown to bits.

* GTA: San Andreas car it was based on had the filler cap behind the rear plate.
* Griffith qualifies in the original Japanese and English casting of the 1997 anime, as well as the English dub of the movies. Don't let his
* GypsyCrusader. Ironically, like Joaquin's Joker, he was busted for illegal possession of a firearm in March 2021 and currently faces up to 30 years in prison.
* Heroman — In true comic book fashion, this is how it turns out when the police and the army shoot the Skrugg, and also when the Skrugg shoot Heroman.
* Guardian, Wakka kids Chappu about his girlfriend Lulu carrying around a moogle doll—while Lulu is just twenty feet away practicing magic. Her next shot of Thunder topples a tree.
* Hc Svnt Dracones an ordinary prosthetic limb can be used to conceal a small weapon, though only as a hiding place it has to be removed to use. But a reinforced prosthetic may contain a gun of up to medium size (like an assault rifle) which it splits open to reveal.
* Hal "Otacon" Emmerich was a peace-loving scientist who became a loyal companion of Snake, similar to how his own father was a loyal follower of Big Boss during the time of
* Hanasaku Iroha, is an interesting take on this Trope in that her pluckiness is presented as both a weakness and a strength. On one hand, her optimism and sincere desire to help people lets her accomplish some good things, but on the flipside her tendency to dive headfirst into something without a solid gameplan does backfire on her from time to time.
* Heroic Myth: The Xenos say they don't really understand money, asking why the surface dwellers trade pieces of metal for useful things like food.
* Gotham Academy, the Endgame tie-in and the Yearbook storyline both feature a premise involving the main characters telling stories. In the former, the students are housed together following a power outage caused by the Joker's Endgame, so naturally the main characters take the chance to share Joker-themed ghost stories while the main plot is explored. In Yearbook, Maps is comforted by Olive when her idea for a yearbook club is rejected, leading to a multitude of side-stories featuring (mis)adventures several of the Academy cast had undertaken, all removed from the main plot of the entire book.
* Hideaki Anno for that matter) where he became somewhat of an anti-Christ for all of anime, even to the point where his e-mail was clogged with death threats.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (1974) known for cheating people on claims, so he "temporarily borrowed" it in order to do some payback on the guy.
* Heavenly Creatures starred as the girls. Ironically, Hulme became a murder mystery writer after adopting the name Anne Perry when she was released.
* her first appearance, has very few friends because she has no patience and doesn't hesitate to explain to others why they're wrong about things. In later books, she's still got aspects of this but, much to her own surprise, has turned out to be very good with kids.
* Hecuba, the deceased Achilles demands the sacrifice of the captured Trojan princess Polyxena, whom he was to wed, before he will allow the Greeks to return home after the Trojan War.
* Grungust Mk III has two drills on it's back it attaches to its fists for a
* Grey Griffins books, the main characters are four kids who mostly snoop around and attempt to solve mysteries and figure things out. Other than a few times they save themselves with their own wits, it's usually adults who save them from danger. When the kids stay in a castle that comes under siege in the second book, adults do all of the fighting, while the kids simply run and try to stay alive.
* Go-Karting with Bowser: Being enemies doesn't mean you can't have fun together.
* Hilariously subverted as only Tex Avery can do in 1940's "A Gander At Mother Goose." In reciting "Little Miss Muffet," the scene goes all according to plan until Miss Muffet faces the spider...
* Gravity Falls. There's a consistent joke in the Gravity Falls fandom that Bill resembles a Dorito, and the same joke has been applied to both Yellow Diamond and Peridot for their triangular designs and yellowish color.

* Greek Mythology, but changed it according to their own unique values and biases:
* Harley Quinn, with Clayface changing to add each one. By the time Maxi calls the thing off, Clayface has turned himself into a lisping, hunchbacked, grotesquely deformed freak.
* Happy Feet, there is a minor penguin character who sounds like a dead ringer for Hal 9000. He even calls main character Mumble "Dave".
* Great Teacher Onizuka, which was all about them and their gang, the Onibaku duo.
* Happy Days had Al Molinaro as Al Delvecchio and Marion Ross as Marion Cunningham.
* Gunsmith Cats is named Irene Vincent. Her nickname was originally Larry - the author wanted a name that sounded exotic and foreign, so he picked the name "Larry", not realising it was a male name. When the series was translated into English, the Ls and Rs were flipped to make it Rally, which fits as she's into cars. However, Kenichi Sonoda still insists that it's Larry (he corrected a fan at a convention once, saying "It's Larry, not Rally"). Larry is also the name of her father, so it's possible she took the name from him and the author knew what he was doing all along.
* Higurashi: When They Cry tries to explain some of the results of her uncle's abuse this way.
* Halo Wars add the UNSC Wolverine and the Banished Reaver, both of which are primarily armed with anti-air rockets/missiles.
* high-fidelity sound because "If I had a hi-fi" is still a popular palindrome in books, etc.
* Guards! Guards!. They're all waiting for someone else to protest, so they can mumble a quiet agreement so that the others know they obviously don't like this deal without having to be so stupid as talk back to the Dragon. When they all keep their mouths shut, they all curse the others for being so cowardly.
* Global Warming: The global climate changes in a disruptive and dangerous manner, usually because of human action.
* Hey Arnold! when she is hall monitor. We see students stepping on them as she frantically searches for them.
* Hania The Howling Huntress. Debuted in 2011, first as Aurora D'Amore, then as Saturyne for CHIKARA. Dropped the gimmick in 2013, retired in 2018.
* Gradius work like this. Every time you defeat them, they regenerate and come back stronger.
* He recovers, though, albeit only for a time-traveling Trunks to effortlessly blast him and his father to pieces.
* Good Burger, when Roxanne is trying to get Ed to spill the beans about the secret sauce. Before Ed can talk, Dexter kicks under the table, hitting Roxanne's foot.
* Gremlins. The little monsters are hilarious... until they start killing people in messy, messy ways...and sometimes still are then.
* Gratuitous Latin. Because "Puella Magi" is in the title, people often forget that they're called "Magical Girls" in-universe.
* Godzilla, gives us Monster X and Xenilla (aka Spacegodzilla). While still being a Xilian war weapon and not batting an eye at killing several Symbiotic Legion, X refuses to harm those who cannot fight back unless commanded to. In fact, multiple times he will come to the defense of a helpless neutral party. Xenilla, on the other hand, isn't above pondering mass property damage and killing those who annoy him but keeps the actual killing down to those who are needed to die for his goal, and despite his rivalry with his "brother" Godzilla, is actually the least aggressive of the two.
* Harry Houdini and whatnot trying to communicate with his mother on The Other Side, but all were bunk and he became a semi-professional debunker.
* Harry has a "Wall of Clues" in his office. On one occasion Luna strings yarn over the pushpins to form the outline of an adult female Crumple-Horned Snorkack.
* He's the Mana of Wishes. Meaning he exists to grant everyone else's.
* Heroic Myth, Sigurd and Brynhildr are constantly flirting and espousing their love for each other, much to the annoyance and jealousy of gods and mortals alike.
* Heaven's Lost Property, the gang takes on a bunch of rich snobs in a music contest. The snobs perform an elegant, classical piece. When it is their turn, before they can perform the song they picked, Tomoki suddenly sings an incredibly perverted song that disgusts everybody and nearly gets them disqualified. Sohara angrily beats him up, but Tomoki declares it was worth it. They then perform the real song, "Falling Down", and win.

* "Hacksaw" Jim Duggan: The affable everyman wrestler often wore glasses outside the ring due to his real-life poor eyesight. Several heel color commentators — in particular, Jesse "The Body" Ventura and Bobby "the Brain" Heenan — frequently pointed this out in disdaining Duggan.
* Heroes of Thantopolis Champion of the Queen of Ghosts Cyrus, aged 11.
* Goof Troop episode, Goofy was obsessed with writing poetry, and all his poems were spectacularly bad. When he picked a poem at random, it later turned out to be his grocery list... and it won. To be fair, it rhymed.
* Good in Bed, she gets to meet and hang out with her crush, Adrian Stadt. She ends up having to make sure nothing bad doesn't happen after he passes out from the effects of the drugs he took, earlier.
* Hermione goes through a goblin memory extraction process which leaves humans a little addled for a short time afterwards.
* High School Dx D reaction, but the camera shows that Sirzechs ('hiding' behind his chair) is desperately trying not to burst out laughing.
* Harry Potter says that most of the buildings in Diagon Alley would fall over if they weren't held together by magic.
* Harrington has had her uniform reinforced to protect her shoulder from Nimitz's claws, although the books make it clear that this is a standard variation in uniform, for personel who have been adopted.
* Higurashi arc of the first season. (Atonement chapter / Rena's chapter) Sound novel/anime-wise it's the second in the second season (Kai).
* Goodfellas, Karen's narration at her wedding reception mentions the abundance of Peters, Pauls and Maries among the guests.
* Grand Theft Auto Online released the "I'm Not a Hipster" update in July 2014, adding several hipster-themed clothes and vintage cars.
* Goosebumps, the main character is embarrassed about being the vice-principal's son.
* Hellboy 'verse, there are a large number of cults and secret societies — Project Ragna Rok, the Oannes Society, and the Heliopic Brotherhood of Ra, to name a few—hoping to trigger the apocalypse. Most of them are operating under the logic that the world is going to end anyway, but if they're the ones who pull the trigger, they'll at least have some measure of control over the destruction.
* Helen Mirren (born Ilyena Vasilievna Mironov), who is actually half-Russian, half-British.
* Hero Academia D×D, when Riser visits Rias as part of his attempt to force her to marry him, Momo slips into his cup of tea enough laxatives to last him for two days. They begin to take effect just before he leaves.
* Handsome Lech. The "chivalrous" part is mainly when he's getting serious.
* Hail, Caesar!: Despite the date between Hobie Doyle and Carlotta Valdez being set up by the studio to increase public interest in them and therefore their movies, the two actually get on incredibly well, with the implication being that they may strike up an actual relationship, or at least a good friendship. However we never find out either way.
* Hannah Montana Miley tried to convince a guy she liked (who had no idea she was really a pop star he hated) by crowd surfing at one of her concerts. This causes the guy to leave the concert.
* Hammer Horror — Defined vampire and gothic horror cinema of the 1950s and 1960s. Over 40 movies under that name.
* Grim Fandango, Manny can do this in Year 2 at the Calavera Cafe, just for funsies.
* Hellsing there is a simple scene where Walter and Alucard are watching Seras train the new recruits and they discuss (among other things) their previous battles against the Nazis, why Alucard made Seras a vampire, and how Walter is getting on in years. That scene highlights some of the story's themes (such as monsters controlled by humans and natural age versus immortality) as well as showing us Alucard's high regard for Seras; we also get to see the friendship between Walter and Alucard.

* has a mind of its own and has a higher standard than flipping Krabby Patties, and abandons SpongeBob, leaving the poor guy with nothing.
* Halo, we can see this process happen live as the Covenant glass New Alexandria. Post-war, the people who work to restore glassed worlds often feel unnerved by the fact that the "glass" they're clearing is partly made up of people killed during the glassing.
* Grrl Power after stealing her glasses and fooling around with them. Besides Sydney being short, Dabbler is advantaged by having four arms.
* High School D×D is the protagonist team being horribly skewed toward overpowered nukes with precious little tactical acumen to go around).
* Good Omens). The Four Horsemen, sans Death, are another example: War is introduced instigating conflicts as an illegal arms dealer, Famine has his hands in both the diet and junk food industries (it doesn't matter if people are eating as long as the food contains no real nutritional value), and Pestilence has been replaced by Pollution, who prefers to cause environmental disasters but can also create computer viruses, which they plan to use to kick off Armageddeon by causing the world's defense systems to go haywire. They've also replaced their horses with motorcycles.
* Halo 5: Guardians and other types of advanced ammo, as well as upgraded armor.
* He also does this to arrogant, traditionalist deities who try molding him into a 'proper' deity. Whenever they tried to convince him to wear divine regalia or barding instead of going around naked, his response was to moon them. He would moon a deity who tried making a visiting Prince Caerulus Melodia drop his southern accent, and would suggest using this method to deal with those who try making him act 'proper', something Caerulus would
* Grand Theft Auto V is a hoax. Meanwhile, Ron's other friend Chef buys into Ron's "lizard people" theories, Lester believes in the Illuminati, and Trevor Philips believes in both.
* Herpes, the Love Sore for them while shunning Peter, Joe, and Quagmire.
* Glenn "Kane" Jacobs (R-TN): A semi-retired professional wrestler and the Mayor of Knox County, Tennessee since 2018.
* Half in the Bag as well, all while thinking the trailer was meant to be a parody.
* Harry is just as much of a Watson as Ron, albeit one who serves a different purpose. Having grown up with Muggles, there's a lot he doesn't know that people who grew up in the wizarding world would take for granted, such as needing to be told what Quidditch is and expressing ignorance about the reasons why Hagrid being half-giant will be a problem. Ironically, it's often Ron who gets to be Mr. Exposition in those situations, since unlike Hermione, he grew up in the wizarding world, and is therefore the only one of the main trio to have that sort of knowledge.
* Harry Potter have no soul and cannot be killed. You can merely slow their breeding.
* Grand Theft Auto V has foiling a plot like this as part of the storyline instead of committing it: the main protagonists are recruited by the FIB to stop the Agency from unleashing a deadly gas on a populated area and blame it on terrorists to get gain more government funding. However, from the FIB's perspective, this is not done for moral reasons: they want to stop IIA from getting funding over their own agency.
* Hail to the King, he is actually able to control his powers easier when he gives in to anger, hate, and frustration, but at the risk of losing his mind.
* Hercules and Xena – The Animated Movie: The Battle for Mount Olympus.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch, the Gremlins commandeer one of the Clamp building's elevators with Kate inside it.
* Halloween's main character is a grouchy, divorced male doctor with a drinking problem.

* GURPS to go anywhere in the universe even if you've never been there before.
* "Good Luck" Gesture: A hand gesture used to gain good luck or avoid bad luck.
* Hardware when Anne finds out that Mike blabbed to his friends about her bondage fetish. She angrily declares that she's going to sleep on the sofa, but unfortunately, she's still mostly tied to the bed at this point.
* G-Stream G2020 state and upgrading the audio quality to something that doesn't sound like a poorly-tuned AM radio.
* gone Global, meaning offices in Peoria, IL, Calgary, AB and Morelia, MX.
* Harry Potter is a metaphor for AIDS, as far as many fans are concerned.
* Guinness ads tend to come in two flavours — entertaining adverts that are clearly advertising beer, and
* Glimmer begins to develop into this in the fourth season. Her willingness to take things too far was first shown in the second season episode "Ties that Bind", when Bow has to talk her down from hurting Catra, but in the fourth season she decides that her highest priority is to defeat the Horde, no matter the cost - she threatens
* Heroic Sacrifice for Vakama, which is followed by the latter discovering his mask power.
* Hell Teacher Nube - Nube's always assisting spirits to pass on to the next life (and tells a spiritual-power seeking student that being able to see ghosts is a terrible power to have since they'll never leave you alone if they think you can help them).
* Golems instantly assemble a body out of surrounding debris when cast. Notably, if there isn't enough junk lying around, the golem must limp or crawl around until it can assimilate enough for a proper body.
* Greek Mythology are far more famous under their Roman names today. It gets to the point that even in stories specifically set in Ancient Greece the characters will still be addressed under their Roman names, because people are more likely to recognize characters like Heracles, Eros and Poseidon, for instance, as Hercules, Cupid and Neptune.
* Heather Poe, your ghoul, can meet her unfortunate death, depending on your choices.
* Hidamari Sketch awake, she's quite energetic. One episode shows her coming into Yuno's apartment, showing no signs of having awakened two minutes ago; another has Yuno pointing out that she's hyper even in the morning. "That was quick!" is a common phrase applied to her actions, whether she's gobbling down food or making art (usually impromptu). But despite all her teasing, she's a likable person, a good friend...and, surprisingly, does well in school!
* Grimm, the Verrat) agree to meet in a public place. Unbeknownst to Burkhardt, he's already met Waltz when Waltz was pretending to be a witness to a nasty murder he in fact committed. See Burkhardt figure that out is part of the reason that Waltz wants to meet him in person instead of just issuing his demands over the phone.
* Hedorah is primarily lured into service by the opportunity to cause destruction, which it also feeds on.
* He also asserts that after Britain failed to break up the EEC from the outside, they resorted to joining it, as from the inside "We can make a complete dog's breakfast of the whole thing. We have now set the Germans against the French, the French against the Italians, the Italians against the Dutch... and the Foreign Office is terribly happy. It's just like old times."
* Hellcats plays with the trope; while Vanessa and Red have genuinely loved other people, they haven't felt what Red calls "that cosmic pull" with anyone but each other. As Red says:
* Herbert's (a creepy old guy) interest in much younger guys like Chris and even in kids like Stewie.
* Gundam the bad guys have developed a weapon specifically to avoid causing a reactor detonation.
* Greaser Delinquents. This is likely used to show that, while they're delinquents, they're not "hoods". Any cursing that occurs is censored out by Ponyboy.

* heartbreaking despite what the characters might think. That comic is meta.
* Gorillaz "DARE" features a giant head of Shaun Ryder kept on life support in Noodle's room; he starts singing when Noodle activates some of the machinery. The video also spoofs some special effect mistakes often found in old horror movies, by showing some of the parts on his head shifting positions throughout the video.
* He is more than happy to believe in Yetis, Psychics, Vampires and Little Green Men, but any hint of God in the equation and he suddenly becomes more skeptical than Scully at her most ardent. Which makes quite a bit of sense if you consider that he does not need an omnipotent god to explain anything strange until such a being is necessarily part of the occurrence. Scully herself, a Catholic, reverses roles with him on any occasion when the phenomena is religious (nearly always Christian) in nature, immediately shedding any skepticism. It gets very bad in the eleventh season when Scully denies ghosts and the Devil exist-both were shown to be quite real in earlier seasons.
* Heat: In the first part of the bank robbery shootout, Chris Shiherlis fatally shoots Bosco, one of Vincent Hanna's detectives. Several other cops are shot by Chris, Cheritto, and Neil later on in the second part of the shootout, but it's never established if they survived or not.
* He Knows Too Much: Killing someone for getting even a smidgen close to discovering a secret they can't be allowed to know.
* Hercules: The Animated Series, Zeus is trapped in the Underworld by Hades when he sees Herc in need of his help through Hades' seer portal. Zeus bemoans the fact that he can't do anything to help his son from his position before remembering "Wait a minute, I'm a GOD! I can be OMNIPRESENT!" and takes control of a statue of him from a nearby temple to save Herc.
* Happens to Tails in the episode, "Musta Been A Beautiful Baby", when he eats dehydrated food at a factory,
* Gunstar Super Heroes due to the ridiculous damage you take from projectiles. The original version on the Sega Genesis did this as well, placing a space shooter stage into the game towards the end which also carried into the sequel (albeit the space shooter was far easier).
* Graham Masterton has an entire family of sociopaths using this method, named after Dorian Gray.
* He seems to be getting it from his father. The latter has chronic case of
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law. When Harvey is arrested in the third case, a guard tells him he is not allowed to have a phone call. Harvey has to do a task for the guard before he will be given permission.
* Goblin Slayer: Rhea Scout dies in Volume 3 when he gets slashed in the stomach by Goblin Slayer after a failed attempt at killing him and Guild Girl in revenge for his demotion and banishment in Volume 2 for stealing from his party.
* Helga does this to Arnold again in another episode when an out of control bulldozer is going to tear down the tree they're in. Arnold is too busy thinking about how to stop the bulldozer while Helga is thinking about how good he smells.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince. When Harry is forced to hide the Half-Blood Prince's Potions textbook full of secret tips after Snape finds out about it, consequently his potions become worse. But since he starts dating Ginny not long afterwards, his Potions professor dismisses his worsening performance as being from lovesickness.
* Heroes of Thantopolis Trickster, a cool ghost with shades, is a hipster * Gunnerkrigg Court happens, it becomes clear to the readers (and Antimony) that Coyote is literally the top dog.
* HeLa cells, the first immortal human cell line. They were taken from the cervical tumour of a woman named Henrietta Lacks in 1951 and they're still going. They will also invade and take over any other cells you happen to have growing about the lab - they've done millions of USD worth of damage that way, but it's sort of balanced out by also being responsible for every significant medical discovery in the past sixty years.
* Harry Potter and the Prince of Slytherin. As Harry himself put it: “He makes a point of trying to act charming and likeable and deliberately failing....And because he fails to be charming and likeable, people think they see through him and find Lord Potter’s ruthless fixer behind the false image. And they never guess that the ruthless fixer is just another false image to hide the back-stabbing Death Eater that represents his true self.”

* He tries to stop her from killing with an oar as before, but this time she has a gun and he dies all over again. Bummer ending.
* Hell Bent", for instance, there's a rank-and-file soldier who sees his superior officer, the General, regenerate from a white man into a black woman. All he does is change pronouns. However, the General states that it was the only incarnation so far where she'd been male, which fits with most of the past where the Doctor, Romana, Borusa, etc. had always regenerated into the same gender. This would indicate that gender identity has an influence over the process.
* Grand Theft Auto IV or taking revenge on him for all the things he's done. Niko's cousin Roman will lobby you for the former and Niko's girlfriend Kate will push for the latter. The cruel twist is that whichever path you take, the character who suggested it (ie the one the player listened to and is more invested in) will die at Roman's wedding.
* Hénaut Président is made of this trope; of the 7 main characters SIX are playing characters with whom they share a first name — every major character other than the lead (the eponymous Hénaut).
* Gone With The Blast Wave, it appears that everyone without a map is completely lost, and those that do have them tend to either lose them or misread them.
* Gregg Easterbrook, who is not a film reviewer, but a loquacious ESPN commentator who sometimes slags off movies. (The man makes
* Go Vacation has one in the Mountain Resort as its overworld sidequest. The King of Shanghar wants to find his crown, and the only clue he has to its whereabouts is a pin. You trade the pin up through the people of the resort, grabbing yarn, a bag, a coin, and a jewel among other things until you finally find the crown.
* Harry Anderson as "Harry the Hat". Anderson had used "Harry the Hat" as a stage name for years before appearing on TV, when he was a stage magician and real-life con man, making it in some ways even
* Gravitation, 13, cut so heavily it would need a sequel series to bridge the gap to the manga's sequel series...
* Good Is Not Nice causes unwarranted harm to others despite being positive that he's doing the right thing.
* Goodbye My Princess: Zhao Shi Xuan makes sure Gao Zhen's death looks like he was attacked by wild animals.
* Hereditary has a disturbing example with Charlie, a little girl, getting her head ripped off by a telephone pole. Her severed head shows up a few more times later in the film.
* Green Tea Rescue just before a woman starts yelling about a pair of purse snatchers. Toga thanks the universe for this before asking for a horny, naked Izuku to show up, and is disappointed when that doesn't happen.
* Hazard's Wake, whose cast page entry even states, "Does Fluffy have a point other than being the cute mascot-ish character?"
* Gwen Stefani, Gwen's real-life fiance at the time of the commercial.
* Hellsing at the time, it is quite possible that the concealed eye hadn't healed yet while hidden...
* Hannibal. FBI agent Clarice Starling returns to the mental institution, now closed down, where Hannibal Lecter was imprisoned to dig up some old files. Most chilling of all is the fact that one of the inmates (who'd cut off his mother's head) is now living there as a homeless outpatient, though nothing happens between them.
* He changes her body's chemistry so that she needs to be around him to survive. If he dies so does she. Agatha gets around this by applying whatever he did to himself to a wasp eater. Although she still needs one of them near to live, she is no longer dependent solely on Martellus.
* Grandma's House: "I was in Paris recently with a new group of people, one of whom was a sort of kooky interesting girl, though in hindsight not that interesting. I always get fooled, I always think, Oh she seems fascinating. Is she, Simon? Or does she just have short hair? She suggests at about three in the morning that we all run up the Champs-Élysées to the Arc de Trimphe. And I guess telling you about that now, it sounds exciting and fun, but at the time I just thought, Why would we do that?"

* Happily Ever After: Fairy Tales for Every Child's take on "Thumbelina," the mole is played by a fruit bat, who shows Thumbelina his collection of pinned butterflies. Seeing one she recognizes, she exclaims, "Mario!" which she tries to pass off "Marry you, I can't wait to marry you."
* Green Acres. (Neither, of course, was the director; Richard L. Bare covered that job for most of the series).
* Gone with the Blastwave was that the explosion of his fuel tank wouldn't be big enough to hit all the enemies.
* Grew Beyond Their Programming and logically deduced that humans are essential to the destiny of mutants, and must therefore be oppressed or killed to complete their programming. Usually the X-Men stopped them and saved humanity from its own self-destructive creation.
* Groundskeeper Willy outs himself as one when he reveals he has a videotape proving that Homer didn't sexually harass a college girl.
* Ground Control: Crayven Corporation (Powerhouse) and Order Of The New Dawn (Subversive).
* Harmony regards herself as such in relation to Spike. He hardly ever hid the fact that he found her annoying and was only using her for sex, and (later on) as a Buffy substitute. He even staked her just because he was irritated by her blabbering (it didn't kill her only because she happened to be wearing the Gem of Amara)—and she still came back. Eventually, when Spike tied up Buffy and Drusilla and was ranting over his spurned affections for them both, Harmony finally had enough, yelled at him for ignoring his "actual" girlfriend in favor of drooling over them, shot him with a crossbow, tried to stake him, then broke up with him for good.
* Growth humans when hungry. Rather than infecting and reproducing, they eat.
* Guilty Until Someone Else Is Guilty: No evidence proving someone's innocence ever matters except for one: exposing the true criminal.
* Higher Ground - A retired F.B.I. Agent played by John Denver (no, really) becomes a bush pilot in Alaska.
* Gran Torino, which reveals the depravity of the gangs that had previously limited themselves to standing around looking menacing.
* Hector: Badge of Carnage, ClapFM is run by one of these. Notable for his liberal and gratuitous use of canned farting sound effects.
* Hamlet 2 the eponymous play is put on to save the drama class from budget cuts.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers even if you have the honor of being at the top of sex frequency charts).
* Highlander: The Search for Vengeance as we get flashbacks as current events remind him of the past.
* Goke, Body Snatcher from Hell: Sugisaka is blown up with the rest of humanity by the aliens.
* Guilty Gear following the death of Zato-One's seiyuu, Eddie was made the primary host of the body with Zato-One merely acting as the vessel through which it connects to reality.
* Hercules Returns of an Italian sword-and-sandal movie. "Why did you all fall down? I missed the lot of ya!" In another fight scene the character graciously offers to "pull his next punch", which of course fails to connect.
* Hawkeye series. Clint's argument over the best Bruce in rock music gets him kicked out by his teenage protege. Kicked out of his own apartment. In the building he owns.
* Hammerhead's chauffeur never vocalizes at all otuside of a pained scream in "The Uncertainty Principle".
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows Part 1 and "POTTER!" respectively), they seemed to be having a contest about who could be the most subdued while still being the most dramatic. At several points, Fiennes even uses dramatic pauses like Rickman is famous for.

* Haruhi Suzumiya first, then the novels two months later. The anime is still unavailable.
* Goku survives a bullet and an axe to the head (relatively) unharmed, but if you grab his tail, he'll pass out. Eventually he trains himself to not be unaffected by it. It even works when he's transformed into a giant ape. He also has a tendency of losing strength if he feels hungry, which results in his defeat in his first battle with Yamcha as well as his fight with Jackie Chun. Both weaknesses went away by the time he grew up, the former because he had his tail cut off, and the latter presumably because he got better at managing his metabolism.
* Gold Digger, finding the various precursor civilizations is Gina's job. Of course, she usually ends up encountering the stuff left behind, and occasionally bringing it home.
* Gundam SEED in that only a select few OMNI pilots had the spatial awareness and piloting skills required to use the detachable gun barrels effectively, and of those pilots very few (we basically know of Mu la Flaga only) survived the Battle of Endymion prior to the start of the anime, so paring down the design was an unfortunate necessity.
* Hayate the Combat Butler on Hinagiku's side, Hinagiku manages to confess that she likes Hayate, only for him to be unable to hear because the train is rushing by.
* Granblue Fantasy, several characters who did not receive a summer version make an appearance in other summer characters' artwork. Other examples include characters from other franchises who appear in some Fate Episodes.
* Green Lantern Hal ended up getting this treatment himself years later;
* Grim Dawn can sprout patches of lashing vines out of the ground that pin enemies down and inflict bleeding, summon a briarthorn monster as an ally, and invoke a blessing from the god of nature that gives them the resilience of ancient trees.
* Groundhog Day Rita. Rita, having experienced the day only once, is the same vaguely pleasant person at the end of the film as she is in the beginning.
* He pulls a type 3 on Colonel Moran in "The Adventure of the Empty House". He knows Moran was Moriarty's
* He also once turns off the TV when Leela and Fry come in, claiming that he was watching pornography rather than a cooking show.
* Harrow family, they steal it with the intent of luring said rivals out into the open, but it's speculated by J.J. that his parents may have taken advantage of it for some personal time, as well.
* Helicopter Hair—hair that works as a propeller, lifting the character into the air
* Gohan and Goten (Goku's sons) were well-mannered, naïve, and dorky as kids.
* Haggar is the corrupted ghost of the younger Zarkon's wife Honerva, and, by extension, the mother of Lotor.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City is killed during an ambushed drug deal in the opening cutscene.
* GURPS Bio-Tech is a genetically engineered creature that resembles a small rodent with the intelligence and dexterity required to be a starship engineer.
* GWAR's members never did interviews out of character (or costume) for many years.
* Green-Sky Trilogy, the Ol-Zhaan, an elite caste of priests, rulers, and judges, are addressed as "D'ol" (corrupted from "Doctor," we find out later)
* Grand Finale was horribly altered electronically. Josh managed to switch the tapes that were going to be mixed into the commercial, and they were set to be sued for the illegal action. But the CEO said the original song was a massive hit, breaking their servers, and ended up firing the producer who tried to manipulate a hit song.
* has a caveman alone among the pre-human couples. Worse, one of them is his ex-girlfriend, and she's having sex right in front of him.
* Happy Accidents, Sam explains that it is impossible for time travelers to travel back within their own lifetimes; the only time travel possible is movement far into the past.

* Henry Danger are set in the city of Swellview, which is overlooked by a sign much like the Hollywood one.
* Her actions are due less to her personality and more to her species. Vulcans are a
* he nukes Tokyo thanks to his "live" Geass that lasts for the rest of the show.
* Guild Wars 2, there's a quest where you help build weapons and train villagers to fight the Forged. "Help X train" is a pretty common quest format in the game, although usually you're helping out other armed groups.
* Gotham Central takes the already-established corruption of the Gotham City Police Department (see above) and places an entire series within its ranks. It deals with the Major Crimes Unit, the portion of the department that is tasked with dealing with "freaks" (supervillains) and other major crimes, and is the only consistently honest branch in the entire department. Each member of the MCU is handpicked by the commissioner of police (originally Commissioner Gordon, and then Commissioner Akins once Gordon retires) to insure a modicum of integrity, and throughout the series they are forced to butt heads (often violently) with other departments who disagree on what constitutes "proper" policework. Even when they themselves are honest they cannot get much accomplished since everybody else is working against them, and they are often forced to accept when police corruption lets a guilty man go free since "it's Gotham."
* Halo: Ghosts of Onyx: Lucy-B091 was already a highly dangerous Spartan-III back when she was a 5'3" 12-year-old. Even as an adult, she's remarkably small, especially when you consider that most Spartans are around 7 feet tall.
* Godzilla (2014). Alongside Serizawa, the power plant workers, Ford Brody's teacher, the teenage Yanki boy, his parents, and the boy (who Ford Brody bonds within the train scenes) and his parents are all actually Japanese. Played straight with Aaron Taylor-Johnson himself, who is from England.
* Harrison ends up clinging to the windscreen of a car during a chase in one episode of
* Heart of the Woods, during Morgan's first POV scene, she walks in on an argument between Madison and Tara over the footage of the forest spirit becoming corrupted. Shortly thereafter, the cabin's heaters suddenly shut down, which Madison says is "a pretty weird coincidence." After they learn that only the heater in Madison's room works, Tara replies, "That's a pretty weird coincidence," imitating Madison's voice as she says that.
* Gohan counts too, seeing as he's always been a scholarly type, especially through his teenage years.
* GURPS stands for "Generic Universal Role-Playing System." This is a system to govern roleplaying games, in any genre, in any setting, and dealing with any subject matter. According to the creator, Steve Jackson, he intended to replace the term (originally a placeholder) with a more imaginative title and just couldn't think of anything.
* Haunted Halloween 86 The Curse Of Possum Hollow: Released in 2017, set in 1986.
* High Fantasy, Biblical epic, and even a classic sitcom style reminiscent of Series/Cheers set at an Applebee's-style restaurant called "Archerbee's."
* Glee: Sectionals, Regionals, Nationals. Occasionally they also include Invitationals, which was more of a qualifier round in the show proper, as well as Internationals, which was discussed behind the scenes but never actually happened. Fics taking place at the beginning of the school year will also devote time for auditions into the club, and if they reach the end of the school year they'll feature seniors auditioning for NYADA (the show's fictional musical theatre Ivy League school) and graduating.
* Harrow: In "Non Sum Qualis Eram" ("I'm not what I used to be"), Harrow's car has been taken by Fern, so he helps himself to Fairley's car keys and nicks Fairley's car.
* Graceland, Agent Badillo thinks that Briggs is stealing drugs because he's working for the Caza cartel. Briggs is really Odin Rossi, an unaffiliated drug supplier whom the Caza cartel is trying to assassinate. Badillo's plan to confront Briggs disguised as a Caza assassin goes very badly for all concerned.

* Good Smells Good: Good characters have a pleasant aroma to mark them as good.
* Happens all the time actually, though it's not always shown how. There's usually a mention later of a number of mooks being bumped off in the process by Jim's armed and psychopathic wife.
* Gravity SucksA spacecraft that deactivates its propulsion system will be immediately pulled toward the nearest gravity source.
* Hanako-san of the Toilet that has been around since the 1950s. It's about a little girl who died in a bathroom stall , commonly either due to a bombing during World War II, an accident, or a murder. Her spirit still haunts the bathrooms where she died. If you walk into the third stall of a girl's room that is on the third floor, ask "Are you in there Hanako-san?", and knock three times she'll say "I'm here". What happens next varies, but it usually involves the person being dragged down the toilet.
* Helen Baxendale's pregnancy, along with her country of residence being England, meant that Emily was written out earlier than the writers had originally intended and mostly appeared in voiceover and under bedsheets.
* Hi Hi Puffy AmiYumi, the titular duo are forced to fight a bull. They naturally try to escape the night before but each of their attempts are interrupted by a mariachi band.
* Heavy Object laser weapons are commonly used on Objects for point defense. Due to the speed at which an Object's pilot can identify and react to threats, combat planes have been rendered nearly obsolete as they're in the sky with nowhere to hide and they can't dodge something moving at the speed of light.
* Halo 3: ODST introduces ODST sniper Kojo "Romeo" Agu and New Mombasa natives Sadie, Dr. Endesha, Jonas, and Commissioner Kinsler, all of whom are black (with the latter four being native African). That said, New Mombasa's population is surprisingly white for an African city, even accounting for the fact that it's a major port city hosting a space elevator.
* Happens constantly in all versions, driving hard-core fans nuts because the mechanical capabilities of the warp drive, impulse drive, and the shuttles vary violently from episode to episode. When the first * Harmony Theory, leading to her being disowned by her family and leading her down the path she chose.
* Greg Young at one point appears without his beard, because he'd shaved it off for an audition to play a sixteen-year-old.
* Heaven, he also rejects the idea that death is the end, believing there must be something more, even if people may not have any idea of its exact nature. The way he speaks about the cosmic order of the universe indicates he may be at least deist or pantheist.
* Heroes of Might and Magic, the assassination by poison of the third Royal Seer is shown through a shadow on the wall of the banquet hall, and an empty cup rolling past the camera after the shadow collapses. This may have been done to bypass graphical limitations, since the campaign cinematics generally avoid showing characters close up.
* HEAT, which was unique in that it was set up in incredibly intimate venues (and when we say "intimate venues", we mean places like bars and subway stations). Eventually this became prohibitive, however, and was replaced with a standard B Show.
* Gundam SEED Astray of that sword. Then, he built the Tactical Arms for Gai Murakumo's Astray Blue Frame, with one of its forms being a sword! Later on, Lowe makes his own Tactical Arms after the Red Frame gets beat up pretty badly.
* hazardous liquid that prevents you from progressing before killing all of the Metroids in the area.
* gnome. While both races take a hit to physical strength, gnomes are extremely durable, being able to endure exertions like dwarves and orcs. Compared to elves, they are almost indestructible.
* Harman and Ising," "Pipe Dreams," and "Art Gallery" — featured the three monkeys as statues come to life, trying to be good but always misbehaving. There's also a "Speak no evil, see no evil, hear no evil, no!" song.

* Grand Theft Auto V has Lester Crest, a criminal mastermind with resources at his disposal who helps the protagonists plan their various heists.
* Hard-Boiled Wonderland and the End of the World by Haruki Murakami, the narrator of the "End of the World" sections has become separated from his shadow, and must reunite with it if he wishes to escape the city.
* GURPS. They're mainly construction tools but powerful ones can be used in combat.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, in one bible-based episode Xena meets Goliath himself (shown to be a good-hearted family man). Hercules fights a giant in the first episode.
* heavily chances to clean up their act, only for them to blow every single one.
* He has no plans. that was accomplished, he'd probably cease to exist. Hope for the future, because Tzeentch can't.
* GoGo's Crazy Bones, which might confuse some people into thinking the real GoodyBaddy figure is a bootleg.
* grin has pretty much become an equal rival with his cousin's in terms of Slasher Smile-ness.
* . Harry described it to Blaise Zabini as Draco "finding his inner gayness."
* Globehunters: An Around The World In 80 Days Adventure are looking for a paradise in the world outside of the animal testing lab called "Himilaya Yu-assa". When they reach a mountainous region full of animals, they quickly learn that the animals in nature are much meaner and more vicious than the ones back in the lab, and that they are NOT welcome to stay.
* Greyhawk also works the trope in the other direction, for a variable value of "magic". If cowboys, gangsters, or
* Gray and Clair If that happens, their shared ending says that the normally cheerful Gray fell in a deep drunken depression and the normally snarky Clair was the one who helps him back to his feet.
* Hatoful Boyfriend to help differentiate him from the other two white fantail doves.
* Hey Folks! It's Intermission Time, there are a lot of ads for local businesses, including Dick Swing's Standard Oil Service, the Grip Nut Company, and Binder Men's Wear. Since this is a collection of real old drive-in ads, one must assume that these were real business names.
* Harry Potter and the Unspeakable, the wand which Harry obtained from Ollivander's, made of meteorite and dubbed the "Celestial Wayfarer," was said to be harmful to any evil person who touched it. A particular character was later revealed to be Snape's evil stepfather on Polyjuice when he was forced to pick up the wand while in court and it burned his hand.
* H. G. Wells, when James Cavor discovers a material that blocks gravity, he quickly decides to set off and explore the moon.
* "Heavier" in this context means that the blade is thicker and more durable. Rapiers have a slender blade, but it is very long, often over 40 inches, and they have a heavy pommel to counterbalance that long blade. As a result, rapiers are actually quite a bit heavier than you'd think, from their appearance, often as much as 3-4 pounds, which is fairly heavy for a single-hand sword.
* Hightown: Osito is Dominican, played by African-American Atkins Estimond. On a minor note, the Cote Verdeans are also played by African-Americans.
* Henry Rollins — His page image is more or less his default expression.
* Golden Retrievers aren't quite as big as some of the others (although they're close) but make up for it by being some of the friendliest dogs out there. Sadly, this, combined with their beautiful coats, has led to over-breeding, which means you have to worry about proper breeding, much like the aforementioned dogs. Golden retrievers are also terrible guard dogs. Just give them a few scratches behind the ear and they'll try to give you their tennis ball!
* Gwen Stacy, even though he actually got over her death fairly soon in the 1970s.
* Gundam are able to sense one another, though how effective this is depends on the relative strength of the Newtype in question. Char, a weak Newtype, really only gets sensed when very close by. Scirocco, on the other hand, is sensed by other Newtypes as an overbearing "pressure" while still dozens of kilometers distant.

* Harvey Keitel and Penny Marshall take part in the film being made at the end of * Got Milk?), and tried to convince the cow they found in the barn to give them the substance they wanted (i.e., milk). Ultimately, they brought the cow back to their planet.
* Grif and Simmons have to pretend they haven't seen Epsilon anywhere, nope, definitely he wasn't here just a minute ago until we punted him over the hill over there... Grif does fine. Simmons, not so much.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince death. It's particularly poignant as this is the first time Harry has ever seen Remus lose control like that.
* Hey Arnold!: In "Helga On The Couch," it's shown that Helga fell for Arnold when she was in preschool because he was the only person in her life that noticed her and treated her kindly, by complimenting her and giving her his crackers at snack time.
* Goofy's First Love" when Goofy asks what is wrong with how he looks and we see a close-up of Goofy that exaggerates his buck teeth and has stink lines coming from his armpits.
* Guts. In the early days of the Band of the Hawk Griffith gave Guts his own cavalry unit, the whole point of which was to smash through enemy lines and scatter them for the rest of the army. Later on, when confronting an especially powerful
* Hellsing: Rip van Winkle does this in the 4th OVA when Alucard suddenly smashes her alarm clock, alerting her of his presence. She does it again when he catches the bullet she was firing at him in his mouth.
* He once called his wife from a phone booth and asked her to remind him where he was going, because he forgot on the way.
* Go-Go Enslavement: Character is enslaved and put into an embarrassing and usually revealing outfit.
* God appears, and is disgusted to the point of regretting ever creating piss.
* Heroes of Mana in the lineage of Laurent's amazon guard. Her deceased mother lead the guards of Laurent before her daughter, and her mother did the same, and so on.
* heat. Although this was well-received, it didn't do well commercially. A series of quick makeovers saw it repositioned as a more downmarket, gossip and soap/reality-celebrity focused publication aimed mainly at women, and it's now one of the UK's biggest-selling magazines.
* Heart of the Woods is the surviving cast members taking a train out of town.
* Here's Boomer was an American series that followed the adventures of Boomer, a stray dog that traveled around helping people in trouble.
* Gold Digger where the villain Fauntleroy engages in this (complete with optional "Bra-vo.") and Brianna responds with "Durrr...look at me mom! I just figured out how to clap sarcastically! Durr!"
* Halloween Episode, Daphne tells Frasier that the children in the apartment complex think he is a murderous brain-devouring lunatic; they've even invented a song about it: "Old Man Crane, Old Man Crane, make him angry and he'll eat your brain!" Towards the end of the episode, Frasier (dressed as Sigmund Freud) is trying to help Niles remove a wig he is wearing—and naturally a bunch of kids turn the corner at that exact moment and see an aged-looking Frasier pulling at someone's head. They run and scream in terror.
* Haven (2020): Near the beginning of the game, Kay and Yu are about to have fun on the table when the power goes out.
* Government Conspiracy, such as the military or an intelligence agency.
* Green Lantern: Emerald Knights: The entire universe was this in its earliest days, being a lawless wasteland in a state of perpetual warfare. The Green Lantern Corps was founded to fix this.
* Hammond, when speaking French, says things like 'le grand champignon', when he means the grand champion. 'Le grand champignon' is, literally 'the big mushroom'. It gets worse when he says "il y a beaucoup de lapins dans ma pantalon" which means "there are a lot of rabbits in my trousers."
* Harkovast, every character is a talking animal person, with each nation being made up of a particular animal. The only possible exception is the Nameless, whose species is indeterminate at the moment due to their all covering armour and helmets.

* Hawaii Five-0. "Should have taken the deal. By the way, that's a nasty cut on your eye."
* Gungrave, who tries to wake Brandon up by hitting his surgical wounds.
* Grey's Anatomy", Meredith and Derek were loud enough to keep her roommates Izzie and George awake.
* Heroes of the Storm has the appropriately-named Stitches, a brutish monster who features these all over his body.
* Headlock of Dominance: Someone expresses dominance by putting their opponent into a headlock.
* Gustav II Adolf's wife kept his embalmed corpse around for far longer than was considered proper. When he was buried she had apparently removed his heart and kept it in a box. Eventually, the royal council had to step in, take the heart away and send her daughter off to be raised by someone a bit saner.
* Harry Potter and the Order of Phoenix where he shows Harry concern and even comforts him after seeing Voldemort's snake Nagini attack Arthur Weasley, while in the book there are a few times where he doesn't show Harry concern.
* Guardians that would kill anything or anyone just because they think the Traveler wants them to.
* Harry Potter that he fails to understand. (It may help that he's something of a celebrity, a decent guy, and a friend to Ron.)
* High School A.U. Naruto's goal is to become the yakuza leader of all of Japan.
* Hank the Cowdog, Loper calls Slim in the middle of a snowstorm and says the baby has croup and needs medicine. Slim ties a bag with the medicine around Hank's neck and sends him to the house.
* Harold with Cody. While the two of them have never been on the same team or interacted much in the show, outside the show post-Action the two of them become very close friends (even founding the Drama Brothers with Trent and Justin). In World Tour, Harold proves himself to be Cody's biggest supporter, going so far as to side with Heather in the finale simply because Cody had done so.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers. They also help conceal his expressions, as he's said to always have a lot on his mind.
* Grandma's Boy (2006), which is about video game designers, references this tendency when one tester recommends differentiating between two types of enemies by changing the colors of one of them.
* Gravitation anime has Yuki letting Shuichi lay his head in his lap and tell him about his work-related worries.
* Haven (2020): Yu is the engineer of the couple, working to keep their Nest functional.
* Higurashi: When They Cry reveals herself for the first time, and she whisks Battler away to Purgatorio, where their battles of logic will frame the rest of the series.
* Harvey Rothman can't move around is because someone put glue on his chair. He stays stuck to it for the whole video, forcing him to crawl home.
* Grant Morrison a bit, considering Beast's limited powers, and the fact that Sublime earlier failed to conquer the world when he possessed two of the most powerful mutants on Earth—but the inconsistencies are excused because they fit with the Revelation-inspired imagery.
* Hellboy film as well, only this time with a box full of kittens. Baby + Cat= Immortality
* Golem looking like a child's doll that can be used for guard duties or assassination.
* Happy Endings one episode has Jane bonding with her boss, the Car Czar, and his other, all male employees. They work together to prank another employee who opens up a car trunk to show it off to potential buyers-only to find Jane done up as a stabbed and bloody corpse. Cue the Car Czar jumping out and yelling "You just got Car Czared!"
* Green Lantern (2011), Abin Sur defeated Parallax and sealed it away because he couldn't destroy it. It later breaks out and kills Abin Sur, but not before he's able to pass on his ring and powers to Hal Jordan, who now has to find a way to defeat Parallax again.

* Harry Potter in the process and can send multiple copies back at once. Hogwarts at one point had twelve time turners produced by only three originals.
* H. Beam Piper had fissionables but no unobtainium he decides it would be more worthwhile to trade between the two planets instead of raiding them.
* Greed is the motivating factor in the lives of all three protagonists in
* Halo Wars, there is no way a infantry transport vehicle the size of three dump trucks can carry 240 Marines, and look empty from your view over the battlefield.
* he for sex, even with Edward's stalking and controlling behaviour, Bella would probably be seen as the bigger creep.
* Gypsy Tales: In "Káló, the Gypsy Lad", Dimkárta is nicknamed the witch with seaweed hair because of her green hair.
* H-Game has Emily Yūki, the daughter of the school principal, becoming the disciplinary committee president where she forbids all romantic behavior on school grounds, forcing the "Love Club" (where they study love and all romantic behavior) to hide in the basement of the school church. She means well and the "crime" is ultimately downplayed, but she turns out to be a total busybody.
* Godzilla movie, more often than not, they're flying around in one of these.
* he reads the magazines there for the articles until she shows him that she found his baseball glove there.
* Hell is described as being like a former prison-colony for Heaven, now populated by the descendents of their population. They use human slaves (even retrieving more through succubi), and are even famous for treating them poorly, but they are sometimes set free by their masters.
* Go Mad from the Revelation, who arguably have it even worse - at least sentient primitives have an understanding that evil people with enough power over others can and will abuse it, but presentients are basically just smart animals with no understanding of what their creators are doing to them.
* Heavy Traffic the painting is briefly used as a background for a scene.
* Hellbound: Hellraiser II, it is revealed that the original creator of the cenobites is a giant, diamond-shaped deity named Leviathan, Lord of the Labyrinth and God of Hunger and Desire, torturing and tormenting human souls into cenobites to serve him for eternity.
* Growing Pains feel this way and wondering who the heck wrote the list for him.
* Hercules, during the "Zero To Hero" sequence, Clio and Thalia fight over the pronunciation of "vase":
* Gunslinger Girl) gun-touting (pre?)teenage assassin and has some of the most action-packed fights in the series.
* Hat series. Any given inhabited star system has resources aplenty to manufacture goods, so instead the Agletsch buy and sell everything from intelligence to schematics and technical data, and even art.
* Hair-Trigger Temper: Everything and everyone pisses me off, you being one of them!
* He was known by his contemporaries as "Lord of the Magnificent Beard", which rather attests to its badassery.
* Hellsister Trilogy, Supergirl's heat vision is her best weapon, but Darkseid's Omega Effect eye beams can easily hurt or even kill a Kryptonian.
* Golem is a 2-D platformer/puzzle game where a young girl searching for a water source in an ancient tower, discovers a shape-changing golem which she partners with.
* Goblins, following his battle with Dellyn Goblinslayer, Thaco finds the rest of the party thanks to all the random magical carnage unleashed by Complains' Shield of Wonder.
* He also appeared in the Barilla pasta commercials of the 1990s, which were broadcast in both Italy and France.
* Golden Age. When Robin is knocked out defending the prince, the prince decides to have some fun by swapping clothes with Robin and taking his place.

fifty years before making their move.
* Heroes) that if this part of her brain was removed or destroyed, she would die permanently.
* Gogol Bordello, based on the real-life of the group's frontman, Eugene Hutz.
* Hawkeye #15, Bobbi asks Clint about the strip club he busted up. He is surprised that she knows about that and attempts to defend himself:
* Goofy shorts went on to become the most famous of all the Goofy series and continued even after Colvig returned to voice the character in the mid-1940s.
* her husband murdered his first wife and scattered pieces of her body all around the manor. The first wife soon after uses her hands to attempt to murder the second wife, and to actually murder her husband when he returns home from a hunt.
* Hand of Thrawn: Shada Du'kal, high-quality bodyguard and commando (the two go hand-in-hand in Star Wars), while climbing a filthy wall to get in position to cover her employer for a transaction with someone.
* Goldfinger it had less to do with Bond sleeping with her and more to do with Goldfinger lying to her about using "sleeping gas" on Fort Knox when it was actually lethal nerve gas.
* have incredible combat abilities and tend to blow your other units out of the water. The latter is widely considered to be the strongest unit in the entire franchise.
* Guilty Gear, Gears apparently lay eggs or the children come out in a protective cocoon they later hatch out of.
* He also comes up with a nasty inversion for "Sunny" Dey; while trapping the rest of the interns in the elevator, he tells her that she's "too weak" for him to take revenge on. She spends the entire day
* Greeny Phatom is barely it, with each scene being one frame of MS Paint drawings edited together in Windows Movie Maker.
* Harry Potter universe are magical letters of (usually...) reprimand that scream at you loud enough to rattle cutlery and shake dust from a high-ceilinged room... and when they are done they burst into flames. If not opened, they also burst into flames, and the insults are mangled. Obviously they are very humiliating to get.
* Hikari Sentai Maskman. A once peaceful kingdom that lived underground until they suffered a coup de'tat and were reformed into a militaristic, expansionist power.
* Harry Potter are the personified result of Rowling's own battle with depression. She's also mentioned several times that her mother's death significantly affected her writing, especially in regards to the themes of love and death in the story. One of the most haunting moments in the first book is when Harry finds the Mirror of Erised, which shows him his long-dead parents, looking at him and smiling with pride.
* He also tastes energy; lightning tastes like peaches and cream, dragon fire tastes like crunchy apples, and a purple force field tastes like really good grapes.
* Hearteaters book), laying out their themes, concepts and backstories, and describing their Charmsets in sufficient detail to homebrew them, with an option of getting upgraded to their own splatbook depending on reception. For the curious, all three are featured on pages 54-55 of the 3e core; the woman with the aurora is a Hearteater, the man tormented by a shadow-monster is an Umbral Exalt, and the man in a toga is a Dream-Souled.
* Happens in an earlier episode with another monster called Kingstron. After Jack finds that his Specium Ray has no effect on the monster, he simply uses his
* Gory Discretion Shot shows Arcturus looking down at a beaten victim and mumbling "How did they manage to jam his arm in there without removing his shorts first? Aren't they denim?"
* Gundam Wing has a naming trope all to itself), donned a mask, joined a military contractor so he could infiltrate the Alliance, and then bring them down. After finally bringing down his family's murderers, he removes the mask. For the next season, he leaves the mask, but remains badass.
* HERZ, the UN is developing into a World Government due to the loss of power, prestige and public trust of the nation-states and major governments.

* Gunsmoke. A notable instance had Matt taking the gunman who killed his friend to Hayes City to be tried. As the two camp for the night, the killer's associates show up, lynch him, then they knock Matt out and set him up as the lyncher. The Army shows up, and the sergeant (who holds a grudge against Matt) is ready to act as judge, jury, and executioner right there on the spot.
* Hard Head: Dying from a head injury would make characters too vulnerable. When it's done in a video game or movie that has a vulnerable protagonist, then that's great.
* God of Cookery gets away with this because both participants in a cooking contest are using chi blasts to speed their cooking.
* Green Lanterns, but that while that's certainly not true of him, his soul has a host of other problems that makes him unappealing.
* Gypsy has been held against her will for nearly a decade as well, but being a Seer

* God of War (PS4) when he drops in front of the heroes struggling with an ogre, only to snap its neck and casually throw its carcass with one hand.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) to even try, Orko gives him a supposed magical amulet that he claims gives the wearer bravery, and it actually works, letting Cringer even get past a ghost in a dark part of the dungeons of Snake Mountain. At the end of the story, after Cringer's mission succeeds, he finds he lost the amulet, but Orko tells him it was just a piece of junk anyway.
* hat. Because of this, there is a literal war between the young and old — but even though the young win, the peace they forge doesn't last long.
* Heart Is an Awesome Power: A power that seems useless can actually be pretty effective when used correctly.
* Hero Squared. Sadly, the alternate version he goes to for help never got superpowers in this universe and is just an immature slacker.
* has Orihime using her powers of Rejection to give Aizen his "Terrible, Horrible, No-Good, Very Bad Week."
* Go, one of the characters sells harmless household products as drugs to inexperienced teens. This includes aspirin, chewable vitamins and anything else vaguely pharmaceutical they could obtain at the supermarket.
* Grant Morrison also did a story arc titled "Synchronicity," where various occurrences resulting from a probability-altering machine including seven separate villains attacking Washington DC simultaneously to Martian Manhunter calling in the Atom because he was the seventh "new member" since the League's inception.
* Harry and George live together. Their fridge is really disgusting and Hermione makes them promise to do something about it. They end up buying a new fridge and throwing out the old one.
* Heist, a cliffhanger has professional thief Mickey locking himself in a vault to motivate his team members to figure out how to open it quickly before he suffocates. The next episode begins with the team members apparently failing to unlock the vault in time, only for Mickey to yell at them and for the camera to reveal the giant hole they had cut in the vault to get him out.
* hates her afterwards — the first words he ever said to her. But she's ultimately too jealous of her late sister to start treating the boy differently, resolving to never raise her hand against him again.
* Hercules Against the Moon Men, when Hercules stops the resurrection of the queen of the Moon Men near the end of the film, her body rapidly ages and decays into dust.
* he killed Alex at the Roscoe Street Station and had Max framed for it.
* High Yield Bondage features an alien ship crashing on Earth in 1972 and starting businesses to both advance technology and build capital, which it can use to purchase parts to repair their starship.
* GURPS Space Atlas called Quentin, Pressure-Scorps are huge scorpion-like alien creatures more than 12 yards long and weighing up to six tons. Their stings don't inject poison - appropriate to the planet, they suck the bodily fluids out of their victims, thus providing much-needed liquid.

* God of War, pretty much everything results in ridiculous amounts of gore. Even an arrow to the cranium will cause total disintegration of the head in a massive shower of blood.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. Taro is constantly befuddled by what happens at the mansion each episode throughout both series as he's continually hit by new information and surprises.
* Gravity Falls, the journals, and the vending machine secret door were played straight and became extremely vital to the plot as a whole.
* He designed Sakura's parents, Mebuki and Kizashi, specifically for
* Grrl Power for the presence of the poster tube on her back are happening on different days, which is expressed by the both of them wearing different clothes, but their poses and Sydney's movement are strictly identical every time.
* Groundhog Day, Phil does this to his clock radio that won't stop playing "I Got You Babe" every morning at 6:00. To be fair, that was only two days that it played the song. He just happened to live the first day over and over for decades.
* Hannibal guts Inspector Pazzi and throws him out a window, echoing the fate of Pazzi's ancestor.
* Godzilla comic series, we have Space-Godzilla, Monster X, Gigan and Hedorah.
* Hard Corps: Uprising, which proceed to roll in from offscreen and attach themself to any of the remaining ones whenever one is destroyed.
* Gone (2012) was not screened for critics and was panned by those who did see it.
* Heracles, the Berserker which reduces his mental faculties to only his most basic instincts. As such, while he's screaming, he isn't really saying anything, and the script doesn't even try to pretend otherwise.
* Gotham City Garage is like and asks the rebel group questions about the life in the wastelands.
* Good Luck Charlie: When Spencer goes off to college, he dates a girl who looks exactly like Teddy, while Teddy dates a guy that looks very similar to Spencer, though not identical.
* has Harry enter a parallel world with gender-flipped versions of himself and the other characters.
* Greek Ninja, everyone suffers a bit of a culture shock upon arriving to Japan. Specifically, Dawson almost walks into a house without taking his shoes off.
* Highlander often fits this trope to a T, despite not involving vampires. (In particular, the TV series fits into the genre.)
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army to stop her brother from destroying the human world, and Hellboy is still destined to destroy the world.
* Golden Treasure: The Great Green version of Bronze Age Earth where dragons and early human civilization coexist.
* Gordon Korman wrote a similar poem called "I'm Feeling Very Ill Today." The young narrator claims he can't go to an exam because of several different ailments, such as heartburn, congestion, mumps, a sprained thumb, halitosis and "measles, chicken pox and flu all rolled up into one."
* Greek god. He did try to rape Athena though. But even that only happened because Poseidon played a cruel prank by telling Hephaestus that Athena wanted him to make passionate love to her. And also, he failed to do it. Which would have made the other gods mock him even further.
* her late older sister, Mio, she's deeply shaken and discusses it with Yuu.
* Grand Theft Auto 2: The player character, considering how there's a dedicated button that makes either a fart or burp noise. Ahh, the nineties.
* Grand Theft Auto, of this series is any indication). That said, a good majority of fans of the series are American.
* Guitar Hero II version of the Vagiants' song "Fuck the Kells", with most of the changes applying to one or two words at a time ("fuck" becomes "frack", "the whole fuckin' NFL" becomes "the whole entire NFL"). However, the line "You can take this bar, and shove it up your fuckin' ass!" becomes..."You can take this car, and fill it up with tons of gas!" It's pretty clear they just went for goofy rather than reasonable substitution on that one.

* Hetalia: Axis Powers: Italy has this. Let's just say the only way Germany and Japan were able to catch him in a chase was to trick him into going back to them.
* H. Beam Piper, where planning and controlling fleet and army movements has to be done for a theater of war thousands of light years across. In fact, the Terran Federation's "Manhattan Project" is to create a super-powerful computer capable of evaluating not only military but social and economic factors and effectively predict the enemy's future actions, so that the Terran generals can determine just where to send troops and ships.
* Gordon and its Episodes). Closer to the trope, this leads to at least two instances where a rampaging Antlion Guard slaughters a squad of Combine soldiers.
* Grupa Operacyjna: "Prezes" shows the eponymous character printing a pile of 10-zloty bills with Mieszko's face.
* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 that's bigger than her during a fight, but walk around with it sitting on her shoulder as she fires it at full-auto straight into another damaged Ravager craft.
* Harry explains how he came up with the Jack Taylor pseudonym he used while hiding from the wizarding world in an earlier story.
* He had, in the past, told several different versions of the story and his Tellus Tertius family is sick of it.
* Hatchet series, after being forced to survive in the woods decides the woods are better when he goes home.
* Hepzibah Smith is killed when her house elf is tricked into thinking she's putting sugar in her cocoa when it's actually a "lethal and little known poison". As the elf is quite old, the authorities presume she just got confused and made a mistake. The actual murderer (Tom Riddle) had many other options available to kill her, but the poison was the most convenient way to
* Gus Goose, another of Grandma Duck's grandson and her farm help, is actually a pretty great cook as well. He's just far more interested in eating than cooking, so it doesn't come up very often.
* Gravitation the first time, Shuichi's lyrics blow away in the park into the hands of Yuki who insults them, much to Shuichi's shock; the second happens a few days later when Shuichi jumps in front of Yuki's car in the rain and Yuki, after deprecating him again, drives him to his home to dry him off.
* Harry Potter. She's brutally honest, dropping some uncomfortable truths, and is either completely uninterested or completely clueless about social interactions. She also in the fifth book abruptly comes up to Harry and says she believes him "without so much as a preliminary hello".
* Goosebumps This is depicted as the villain evaporating away while his costume (and mask) crumple up flat, into a steamy pile of clothes.
* Half-Life 1 resembles a giant fetus (with a third arm growing out of it's chest and a head that opens up).
* Heaven's Gate had the words "A Transamerica Company" fading underneath the hexagon underneath.
* Gundam series in general are a subversion of this trope; when colonies are established in space, they inevitably try to become independent from Earth resulting in Space Wars.
* Harry is forced to fly Sirius's old motorcycle to Hogwarts and the eleven-year-old he's traveling with keeps asking this.
* Haku. Zabuza used him as a tool, and Haku bluntly stated that Zabuza was welcome to do so. As long as he was able to help him, Haku did not mind being treated like crap, and he
* Hello Kitty and in the next scene, her overalls are in the washing machine.
* Hilarity Ensues her clothes at her, knocking her over with them. It's less of him being prudish and more that she is a 13-year-old acquaintance and the most of a naked person he's probably seen is Mytho. It's pretty natural that her being stark naked without warning as she's yelling at him would be uncomfortable.
* Grand Theft Auto. Lazlow is mainly just a Radio DJ/Show Host of the games, but has this reputation of becoming more and more unlikable with each game. While he thinks himself as a star and funny, life can be quick to assure him that the opposite is true. How he's remained...somewhat successful is never fully explained, but by the time Grand Theft Auto V rolled around, he does suffer a bit of an emotional breakdown on his show which gives us a bit of insight into how his life can be.

* Golden Sun. The game never seems to depict him as evil or even morally ambiguous, but he does some pretty shady things, to the point where he could easily have been the villain if he'd had a more prominent role in the story. His crimes include kidnapping a teenage girl with special powers and holding her hostage to force her homeland to build a massive lighthouse for him, stealing a magical ship and a life-extending draught from Lemuria, and abandoning his former friend Lunpa and stranding him there. Strangely, however, he's never called out on any of it, the heroes never question his motives or hesitate to work with him, and when it's mentioned he died offscreen in the sequel, the party -which includes the aforementioned hostage- seem sad to hear about it.
* Gotham, Ed and Lucius attempt to identify the rooftop where someone launched an RPG. When they arrive at one, Lucius announces they're at the right spot. Ed agrees, complimenting the two of them on figuring out that this rooftop is the only one that has the correct angle to have hit the target. Lucius then points out that the empty RPG case is still on the roof.
* Guild Wars 2 has Minister Caduceus the Wise, a member of the Krytan Ministry beloved by the common folk. This is a reputation he spent a great deal of effort building, supported by secret dealings with bandits and centaurs to make Queen Jenah look incompetent by comparison.
* HALF Adventures that hunts down magical artifacts (among many other questionable services and products).
* Gundam 00 has Innovators, whose minds can interact with quantum computers over the medium of "quantum brainwaves".
* Harry and His Bucket Full of Dinosaurs episode "Circus," Taury exclaims "Mummy!" when his clown bicycle starts to fall apart.
* Hannibal, the title character wears a clear raincoat to prevent his fine suits from being soiled during his murders.
* Green Goblin, he knew how to fly the ship the mysterious benefactor gave Phil's group because it was based on the Goblin equipment.
* Hector, Roy's romance (or not) with Lilina is only slightly hinted and although Hector knows, he doesn't mind.)
* Handiquacks and almost gets it on air — but when an executive proposes a very minor change to one of the characters, Peter immediately pulls the plug and quits, turning down thousands of dollars to preserve his pride — even after the executive relents and agrees not to change anything.
* Have You Been Paying Attention? announced that he was changing his 'Ye', Sam Pang said that if the name 'Kanye West' was now available, he'd have it. He then refused to answer he next several questions unless Tom addressed him as 'Kanye'.
* Golgo 13 depicts the world's best sniper, and the reason for his success isn't just because of his reflexes. Many of his hits show the slow and methodical process of him researching and preparing for his shot, which makes the payoff all the sweeter when his various targets and rivals, who were so assured of their strategies, realize they've been outplayed.
* High Noon, where the hero's wife is built in such a way to expect her to be a Neutral Female—she's a Quaker and a pacifist, and so would supposedly be neutral even if she were male. However, she eventually shoots one of the bad guys, and when the leader takes her hostage, she claws into his face, allowing her husband to shoot him.
* Gouda's goons are always wearing the same dark suit with the same dark grey shirt.
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows from the book, where he says he imitated what Harry did to open the locket.)
* he's willing to sink it in the Bermuda Triangle (and sentence himself to stay imprisoned there forever) rather than have his powers misused.

* He shouts "Check it out!" instead of "Extra! Extra!" - but the loud and aggressive Gotham City vendor who sells papers on the bridge overlooking Gotham Plaza in
* Guardians of the Galaxy, the members of the team wear red uniforms, but each one is customized in some way. Gamora's has gloves and a lower neckline, Rocket Raccoon's has no gloves or shoes, while Drax's has no shirt.
* Green Lantern comics consistently depict unnamed (and occasionally, named) Green Lanterns getting slaughtered whenever a new bad guy shows up. Even though every one of them wields "the most powerful weapon in the universe," they inevitably suffer gruesome, meaningless deaths. This also highlights the completely arbitrary nature of combat between ring-wielders.
* Guile's Japanese name is Alf, which is probably a nod to Janus' cat Alfador. Some fans interpret him as a cat-turned-human.
* Gold Digger seeing us sentient mammals essentially as a race of little bunny people. This is why so many of them choose to shape-shift into human form; so they can secretly have fun hanging out with us in our cute little bunny village "cities."
* here. Steve accidentally bumps into a waitress (Ellen), and knocks a couple beers she was carrying all over himself. After "jokingly" asking for her number by way of apology, Ellen just politely declines and says that Steve's and Marten's meals are on the house. Steve humbly accepts that. On the way out of the diner, the Ellen gives Steve her number, and says that if he had made a fuss, she wouldn't have given it to him. Steve is in shock.
* Godzilla (2014), San Francisco International Airport doubles for Honolulu International Airport.
* Harry Strickland lets the heroes realize the Wolf can teleport almost anywhere he wants.
* Good Omens when the Hell's Angels realize the foursome that just walked into their bar are the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse. One of them exclaims, "Jesus Christ!" while another, who had paid some attention to Revelation, says, "He's probably looking for somewhere to park his bike."
* God Hand, Gene's more powerful God Roulette attacks (Dragon Kick, 100 Fist and Homerun God to name a few) end with the enemy being launch in the milky way (where they already are), like the awesome credit song puts it. However, unlike other examples said enemies will actually end up back in front of you as if the attack was played backwards, even if it's just to let out a death cry.
* Gunpei's grave is marked with his sword, and Marlow retrieves it before leaving the village.
* Grojband episode "Soulin' Down the Road", Mina does friendly activities with an unconscious Trina, as her soul is trapped in her car, Pinktastic.
* Goosebumps: R.L. Stine has bear traps by the ton littered all over his basement floor.
* Going by his later reference to the "strapping blood elf," Martek in
* had the clip not contained dabbing after a contestant caught an egg. And even though the show is no longer broadcasted on the channel, it's been unchanged for a while, and because of that, it's unfortunatley not going away any time soon.
* Hamlet, the titular character, already dying from poison, stabs King Claudius with the poisoned foil then forces him to drink the equally poisonous goblet, making sure he dies before he passes on.
* GoGo Sentai Boukenger. At first it is a (VERY large) battleship which, naturally, reconfigures into a giant robot, DaiVoyager. At the end of the series, GoGoVoyager has been converted into a spaceship... quite badly, if the cockpit is any indication.
* Halo 4 when the Master Chief is arguing with Captain Del Rio about their next course of action:
* Hawaii Five-0 episode "He Welo ʻOihana", when McGarrett realizes his mother is not alone in the house, he walks in on two of her older male friends planning the caper that will happen later in the episode—with blueprints, notes and pictures all over the walls.

* Goddamned Boss: A boss fight where the boss annoyingly keeps evading the player's attacks.
* Guardians of the Galaxy have two-way universal translators embedded in their bodies.
* Happy Wheels Many of the custom levels are death courses that are half as much about watching the player characters and any prop characters die gruesomely as they are just trying to make it to the end alive.
* Hey Arnold! episode "Field Trip", Arnold and Grandma go to break into an aquarium to free an unhappy turtle named Lockjaw. At one point, Grandma uses a rope and grappling hook to climb over a barrier maybe five feet high, while Arnold simply walks around it.
* Grand Theft Auto IV to the other two guests in order to remove the "demons that are controlling them."
* He's teleported into his father's truck and causes him to crash, then is shot to death by his younger self, condemning him to a Stable Time Loop.
* Happy Heroes: In Season 2 episode 13, Big M. and Little M.'s bellies become larger than usual after they eat a lot of meat prepared for them by a cat.
* has reformed and Cecil was trying to embezzle millions from the dam project. Bob actually helps stop Cecil and saves Bart and Lisa's lives, but when the police arrive to arrest Cecil, Police Chief Wiggum insists on arresting Bob as well for no good reason.
* Half-Life 2 teleported so much alien life to Earth that they wiped out most of the native species. The Combine's invasion and exploitation of the planets resources certainly didn't help matters. The only Earth animals seen are birds and barnacles, though crabs, cats, and horses are mentioned, so it's possible they've survived as well.
* her bosses sometimes refer to them as "Princess Starscream and the First and Forsaken Megatron."
* Grand Finale in the very last scene after killing the Aryan gang and taking a bullet protecting Jesse from his own M60 rig.
* Good Omens. Anathema Device hoped that the man she was prophesied to meet would be a tall, dark and handsome stranger. As it turned out, the stranger in question was Newton Pulsifer, who's tall (in a thin, rolled-out sort of way) and dark-haired, but not particularly handsome. She decides that she could live with two out of three.
* Godzilla-like rock monster covered in hard armor with spikes everywhere.
* Heart of Hush, Hush mocks Batman's crime-fighting career as a sign of his inability to move on from his past. This is pretty rich considering that his own vendetta against Bruce stems from a grudge he's held since childhood for something that wasn't even Bruce's fault.
* Harry portrayed a tree in a class play about nature when he was seven.
* !HERO: The Rock Opera ends the song with "Who's that beautiful girl?", segueing into "Secrets of the Heart".
* Higher Learning: In chapter 16 Shinji and Asuka are about to have sex in the tube... and Misato comes home right when Shinji is about to enter the bathroom, leading both teenagers to hurriedly pretend that nothing was happening.
* Her brother Peter, on the other hand, has actually suffered serious injury dog-sitting an extremely small dog with extremely sharp teeth and a * Grave Encounters, the hospital seems to be a malevolent entity filled with ghosts of type B. Considering it was a mental institution, most of the ghosts simply don't know any better than evil because they didn't know anything but insanity in life.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix Harry's DA friends are all wounded to the point of being taken out of the fight, with most of them unconscious with only Nevile and Harry retaining their wands before Nevile gets taken hostage and Harry finds himself surrounded by Death Eaters and the cavalry arrives in the form of the Order of the Phoenix who save Harry and the rest of the students handily.
* Hell in a Cell), but these have been toned down due to safety concerns.
* Hair Metal and the constant bashing of the genre's image and attitude by metal purists were able to snuff out the genre's legacy and long-term popularity.

* Gotti, making any supposed conspiracy impossible in the first place.
* Grrl Power due to having a single mind split between five bodies. If one sees or hears something, the other four know and often react instantly, thus making any efforts to tell the body actually present to keep a secret worthless. Sydney once tried to swear her to secrecy, only to hear the other four Harems in the next room spilling the beans already.
* Hacknet example above, anyone in IT security will tell you this is the most realistic way of getting access to secure servers - people really will leave secure codes in files like "prometheus PW.txt".
* Gravity Falls, when Dipper tries to impress Wendy. No matter what he does, or how he tries to counter it, he will end up hitting her in the eye with a baseball, causing Robbie to comfort her and the two of them to begin dating. The only way around this was to sacrifice Mabel obtaining her pet Waddles, which was ultimately something Dipper wasn't willing to do.
* Godot While he was successful, he admits that he acted out of revenge rather than the desire for justice.
* Guards! Guards! novel which also stars Vimes, with the Elucidated Brethren of the Ebon Night.
* Guilded Age — not through traditional holy/nature powers, but through an array of drug-filled needles and good old-fashioned paramedic training. Her goal is to show humans (and her father) that science and nature can work in harmony.
* Happy Tree Friends", he lets go of the chunk of debris he's holding up to sign an autograph for Sniffles, leading to the latter getting crushed.
* Greek Ninja speaks English by making direct translations from Greek, which of course results in terrible mistakes and people not understanding him. Eleonora often takes the role of the translator between him and the rest of the world, having full knowledge of both languages.
* here. Oh look, somebody set up a model of a city underneath of it! Wait a minute... what do you mean that's not a model?!
* Heartwarming Orphan starts sucking up to them, declaring the revolt a victory for the "proud journalistic profession."
* Groin Attack: The Egyptian Set and the Hittite Anu both got castrated, violently.
* Hercule Poirot features an in-universe inversion. The murder mystery, which caused a lot of media uproar, was based on an unpublished detective story. In his denouement, Poirot criticizes the murderer for being unoriginal.
* Greater Demon Ralkul, the Lord of the Flies. Any living creature he touches ages 1-10 years.
* Hercules good to with his fame and wealth. (And Zeus can always keep in touch via giant moving statues, anyway.)
* Great White, and any time she ends in the water, there are close-ups of her legs kicking.
* High-School Dance averted this for most of the girls, though Macie did make Dodie and Chett's mouths widen when she showed up in her dress. Ginger and Dodie also have this reaction to Macie when she arrives for their graduation.
* Hey Arnold! as a result of eating her father's pork rinds. She calls Phoebe to help her, since she's worried she might confess her true feelings towards Arnold. When Phoebe finds out that Helga has sleepwalked, she decides to find Helga and stop her. Helga goes inside a sandwich shop just as Phoebe stands outside it and decides she needs to take a shortcut to Arnold's house to stop her in time.
* GURPS Technomancer that rule Antarctica. They were created when an Antarctic nuclear test unleashed a "magic storm."
* Hc Svnt Dracones but it costs five times more than regeneration and has no special advantages aside from concealing weapons, more of a fashion statement than anything.
* Godzilla 2000, whose determination to kill Godzilla causes quite a bit of destruction.
* Goodfellas - organized crime member goes into Witness Protection after testifying against his former associates. The last lines are him whining about how it's such a comedown, never mind all the disgusting things he did as a wiseguy. Ironically, the wiseguy the movie was based on (Henry Hill) invalidated his Witness Protection because he couldn't resist bragging about being the guy in the movie.

* Harry Potter. To be fair, in his case, Voldemort was so far gone from anything remotely human that having hair at all would have been an accomplishment.
* Happy Heroes Season 2 episode 6, Careless S. has to disarm a bomb on the school bus by cutting one of its two wires, a red one and a blue one. He eventually decides to pull both wires out, causing it to explode anyway, though Happy S. does get the bomb out of the bus in time.
* Hamilton Jefferson over Burr in the Election of 1800. Burr blames Hamilton for his loss, and they begin exchanging polite but vitriolic letters, culminating in the infamous duel which ends in Hamilton's death.
* Godzilla vs. Hedorah. As seen by the image above, he’s actually one of the more grounded examples, since the first few of his forms start off very tadpole-like, then get progressively larger. His Perfect Form is a bit different, being a towering bipedal behemoth, but he retains most of the features of his previous forms, such as large, red eyes and dark green ‘skin’.
* Heartstopper always takes place in the beginning of Year Two, regardless of real-world time.
* Harry Partridge has him wearing a blue shirt with the text "POP CULTURE REFERENCE".
* Happens to the Computer Club members in the 5th episode after the dodgeball game.
* Grimm, takes most of its look from the Klu Klux Klan, but when we see their headquarters, sure enough their Wolfsangel sigil is in a white circle on a red banner.
* Haibane Renmei fits this. The most common interpretation is that it's a story about a group of angels in purgatory.
* Heroes of Sung that ends with a bronze claw fist. He can hurl this weapon to claw his opponents or to steal objects without being noticed by the heroes, which he repeatedly demonstrates throughout the film.
* her son's Tomas, who was forced by her, because of his disfigured features, to wear an actually much more unsettling scarecrow mask.
* Happy Days, Joanie develops a short-lived crush on Potsie after, during a performance rehearsal, he sings "Put Your Head On My Shoulder" to her.
* Halo: The Cole Protocol Oh, and the AIs also know the gesture, and Juliana gets pissed off when a Spartan shows it to his team.
* Harry Potter, Mad-Eye Moody warns Harry not to put his wand in his back pocket because he might set it on fire. "Better wizards than you have lost buttocks that way!"
* Gokujou Drops: Komari pleads with Yukio to sponsor her, insisting that she'll do anything to return the favor.
* Henry Danger was done after Henry had survived and was outside, only to see his phone screen crack.
* Granblue Fantasy are all female. As Vajra learns in her 5* Fate Episode, though, this wasn't always the case; the first one from her bloodline was male, and according to him male Generals used to be common.
* He does, however, end up literally playing a tree in a training role-play exercise in another episode. A tree to which his fellow officers pretend to tie themselves in the role of militant environmentalists. He really gets into the role.
* Hallucinations from the Womb, the setting of Shell City is one of these. It builds up on itself over the years, and the lower layers are completely buried.
* Heroes, Hiro Nakamura is transported to feudal Japan where he meets and falls in love with the beautiful Yaeko. He also meets his hero Takezo Kensei who is in love with Yaeko as well. Hiro's Japanese hero turns out to be a white Englishman. Yaeko falls in love with Hiro, not Kensei.
* Greg Farshtey has addressed his use of the term "evolution." Because natives of the Matoran Universe don't biologically reproduce, such changes are referred to as evolution. In the story's final days, it was revealed that dead beings are sent to the Red Star for healing and repairs, but a malfunction kept them from returning.

* Heck, it took Jenson Button 114 tries to win his first race, and even that was a fluke. It was unknown whether he'd even win again, especially after his team (the aforementioned Honda) becoming backmarkers. It can be argued that his career was saved when Ross Brawn bought the Honda cars after they withdrew from the sport. Jenson and the newly-renamed Brawn GP dominated the first half of the 2009 season, and while he didn't win again that year, he finally won his first title, a whole 9 years after receiving all the hype in the world.
* Heck was the seemingly kind-hearted old high-school flame who paid Heck to deliver a letter to her husband in Hell. Her husband, as it turns out, had been sent to the lowest circle of Hell for embezzling money from his company. When Heck reads him the letter, we learn that Amy was behind the embezzling scam, and only sent the letter to her husband in order to find out where the money was hidden, not caring about her husband's eternal torment.
* Here There Be Monsters by shackling him with special bindings and putting him under a paralyzing ray. Eventually, Marvel manages to escape the stasis field and shatter his bindings with a flex of his powerful muscles.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire shows us why: Crouch Jr. addresses his father, and tells him he would've been a fair Ravenclaw student like himself. Crouch Sr. immediately points out Moody was actually a Gryffindor student when he attended Hogwarts.
* Goat Simulator, you get an achievement for crashing the game, after you reload it of course.
* Halo are activated by touching a big sphere covered in glyphs. It's interesting to note that, since humans are Reclaimers and the technology is destined for them, the spheres will self-trigger and align themselves when touched by a human.
* Half-Life 2 has the Combine Elite, the creme de la creme of the Combine Overwatch whose job is essentially as the final line of defence for the Combine regime and its head Dr. Breen. They only start to show up near the end of the game as it becomes clear that you're getting closer to winning.
* Heroman that he makes an attractive looking girl. What does come as a surprise is that so does his best friend Psy, after taming his wild shock of hair.
* Harry and the Butler: "Heisenberg", a 10-year-old boy who ransacks the junkyard where Harry lives, ransacking car parts for use in his homemade rockets. He eventually succeeds in launching a rocket. Earlier in the film Harry asks him to calculate 3300 divided by 286 (Harry has 3300 kroner to hire a butler who gets 286 kroner per week). Heisenberg answers immediately, to three decimal places (it's about 11.5) and then asks if Harry needs more decimals.
* Grrl Power glance. The author himself explained that in order for Sydney not to reveal the content of the tube too early while thinking about it in her head, this breakage of the fourth wall is necessary.
* Happy Together: Boy in this case. While Ho and Lai are together at the start of the film, they break up roughly two-thirds into the movie and stay broken up by the end of it. Lai and Chang also don't get together.
* Heroes Danko attempts to stage a nuclear suicide bombing of D.C., with the intention of blaming the whole thing on Supers to create justification for his anti-Super crusade.
* Half-Life 2 provided a similar level of protection, it was much closer to realistic modern-day combat gear.
* Heroic Willpower: The hero does their best not to give in to the madness that's trying to take over them.
* Happens a lot for female players in pretty much any full contact sport. A lot of doctors, being older men, really don't like the idea of women getting knocked around on the field and will tell them any given injury means they won't be able to play ever again. Most of them come back shortly after seeking a second or third opinion.
* Growing Pains named Kara, who had died 17 years earlier in a car accident. An in-joke in the episode is that, along the way, Mike and Kara stop at a roadside bar, where a talent show — featuring all of the guests dressed as dead celebrities — is taking place. Mike's making up the tale.

* GOHOME orchestral music plays every time she chases you? No one knows. Is it creepy? Definitely.
* Gravity Falls: Journal 3: Dipper's Observation #1 about Quentin Trembley. "Haircut by his third wife, Sandy. (She was a woodpecker. That explains a lot.)"
* Grim Fandango, revolutionary leader Salvador Limones has a suicide pill implanted in a fake tooth that kills not only himself but anyone else too close to him when he uses it.
* he arranged for his remains to be subjected to a post-mortem decapitation just in case. His ashes were then buried on his estate.
* Haunting Starring Polterguy: When the Sardini family's fear level is on high or very high, even less impressive fright 'ems will set them off and they look for a way to escape the house.
* had a man try to speak French to Guy, a French cat who only meows in French.
* Harold/Rhonda or Harold/Patty. Harold has been paired with both girls, and Word of God has confirmed that Harold and Rhonda have a reciprocated crush on each other, but Rhonda won't admit it. Harold's friendship with Patty is still a friendship, but they have been called a couple and seem to work well together. Before they met, Harold claimed that he didn't even like girls.
* Hellblazer. Some may say that they're a perfect couple. Also, John is still John, grumpy, bastard, and asshole, but saw some character development while living with his wife.
* Happily Ever After languished in obscurity and went all but unperformed. In the 1830s reverent fans of the Bard began to restore Shakespeare's original ending to performances, and the Tate version gradually fell out of favor. It was increasingly derided by Victorian critics as sentimental and trite. Since the start of the twentieth century, the Tate play has only been revived a few times. It is seen as a quaint historical curiosity.
* Goa'uld are a form of this, due to requiring a host body to do anything more complicated than swimming in a lake.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. Taro's personal staff of Ichigo, Ringo, and Sango or Lemon, Marron, and Melon in the second series are undisputed masters of grabbing Taro affectionately.
* Halfway through part 2 have Jess getting drunk in a high school post-finals party and passing out, resulting in Leslie and her new friend, Caitlyn, helping to bring Jess back. As Caitlyn drives her two friends back, Leslie and Jess on the other hand sits together at the back with Jess resting his head on Leslie's shoulders in a * Gravity Falls" in the episode. Despite this, Stan casually mentions that he thought Dipper and Mabel were playing Spin the Bottle with Soos in the earlier episode "The Legend of the Grobblewonker".
* Grant Gordon in "The Return of Doctor Mysterio". A huge fan of comic books, he accidentally ingests a wish-granting gemstone, given to him by the Doctor. Fast-forward 24 years, Grant is a genuine superhero called the Ghost with
* Harvesting the Heart, Paige works at one of these after she runs away from home.
* Guild Wars 2, the final fight in this Vexa's Lab mini-dungeon occurs over a pool of sharks. The boss regularly shatters portions of the floor and has a number of push/pull skills, causing hapless players to fall in.
* Glory is one to an utterly ludicrous degree. She even forces her minions to constantly come up with new ways of praising her.
* Harry Potter, portrayed by a boggart (it is explained in-universe that boggarts are very intelligent, it's just rare that a fear is strong enough for them to show it and take a sentient form). Of course, Jack being Jack, he considers it to be good company, explaining that while he's terrified of what the boggart represents, he still enjoys talking with it.
* Harmful to Touch — Touching a radioactive object will hurt you.
* Henry Danger: Henry's mother has no problem talking to him about his underwear in front of his friends.
* Guild Wars, Mad King Thorn's head has been replaced by a jack-o'-lantern in the Underworld, as seen during his annual reappearances in Lion's Arch and Kamadan.

* Hercules, all while we see him beating some of the most famous monsters from Greek mythology handily- including some who were faced by other heroes!
* Highlander definitely comes under this heading. He openly admits that he only seeks to kill all of the other immortals, and only deals with mortals for convenience/amusement, but is described as "The perfect warrior" by Ramirez.
* Heathcliff & the Catillac Cats for early furries, and Cleo is notable in that she's known as one of the "original" furry crushes.
* Harry Potter, fitting their nature as the ultimate servants. Even Kreacher whips up excellent meals once he truly accepts Harry as his new master.
* Healing Factor, the fact that he is virtually immortal means that even if they avoid this fate, they will eventually grow old and die while he continues living on. The trope has yet to be explored with Laura, despite its painful implications for her future, while Daken is too much of a sociopath to care.
* Heart In Hand that shipped hockey players Sidney Crosby and Alexander Ovechkin but unexpectedly gained such a large number of readers from outside the hockey RPF who didn't realize that the characters were real-life people but still enjoyed the well-written gay romance that the author eventually uploaded a public version of the fic that changed the characters' names and teams for readers unfamiliar with hockey.
* Hail to the Chief explicitly labeled itself as one, word for word, as shown in the ad on the show's page.
* Hex Wives #3, Isadora discovers that Aaron is keeping the wizened Mother of Witches strapped to a chair in a secret room of their house. The Mother attempts to tell Isadora of her true nature as a witch, but Aaron knocks her out and she loses all memory of the meeting.
* Hero by Perry Moore, Thom is an extreme example of this. He has healing powers, but his father, a former (non-superpowered) superhero who left in disgrace, now hates anyone with powers. Then there's the fact that Thom's also gay...
* Hammers are popular musical instruments for songs with "hammer" in the title. The * Helluva Boss has this as what finally does Lyle Lipton in in "C.H.E.R.U.B.".
* Heart of Steel Alistair Mechanus loses his mental connection to his stronghold's computer network through the actions of the antagonist. He is still a superintelligent cyborg, but he loses the near-omniscience his network gave him and is badly disoriented as a result. In the process of protecting Julia and getting his network back, he learns how to be human again.
* Halo 3 has caused a major power vacuum in the vast number of systems formerly under its rule, resulting in ex-Covenant space becoming a free-for-all as various factions vie for power or seek to profit from the chaos.
* He is reclusive to the point where rumors abounded that he would supposedly paint pictures then burn them to prevent fans from obtaining and selling them. He was also extremely reclusive
* Gravity, a rogue cloud of debris destroys the International Space Station, and knocks China's Tiangong space station out of orbit. The Space Shuttle doesn't count, since it's a fictional one.
* He Knows About Timed Hits: This trope applied to video game tutorials, where characters in the work explain game mechanics or which buttons to press.
* Graduate from the Story: The main cast of a school-centered story graduate at the ending.
* Guardian Heroes features such gems as "Holy schnitzel", "Mother bucket", and "Son of a cyclops".
* He has a bunch of guards and inmates lined up to orchestrate a riot on the off-chance that one of the lawyers who put him away stops by the prison, even having a phone line at the prison to call so he can make clear to Matt how much he's screwed before leaving Matt at the mercy of his henchmen.
* Hannibal Barca lost his eye while on the march from pink eye. Not long after this he launches a massive ambush on Roman forces in the Battle of Lake Trasimene.
* Grand Theft Auto games, players gain health from prostitutes. This method can be used to greater-than-max health.

* Gods and Monsters the main character Ari is a descendant of Medusa, and had the ability to turn people into stone by touch. When she turns twenty-one, she will become a full-blown Gorgon and will be able to turn people into stone by looking into their eyes, just as Medusa did.
* Good Omens teaches about Vlad Drakula and Attila the Hun, but omits the points about Drakula always saying his prayers, or Attila being nice to his mother.
* He also doesn't seem to have any relation to Team Skull and has a different reason for running away from home, which may imply the anime version of the character may be an even more morally-gray rival than his video game counterpart.
* Hamsters are usually very quiet, but can be pretty noisy when angry or frightened. You'd expect a hamster to squeak like a rat or mouse, right?
* Harry Potter: Hogwarts was a benevolent kind of such organization for the majority of the saga and turned into an oppressive one under the Death Eaters' reign in the seventh book (the attendance was voluntary and mandatory respectively).
* Hank Williams III and has not played "I Don't Know" live since it came out, to the point where his current fanbase may not even know it exists.
* Hellish Pupils, scales all over his body, all of Orochimaru's and the others' powers, a massive snake where his navel used to be, and can use Snake Sage Mode to turn himself into a humanoid dragon of sorts.
* .hack. His final and most powerful form is distinctly different, resembling an "angel of death" rather than the Grim Reaper, though he still uses a scythe for close-quarters combat.
* Here They Lie the main character takes a journey through a muted dreamlike apocalyptic landscape encountering impossibly vast industrial cityscapes, insane people with animal heads, boat journeys through kaleidoscopes, an abandoned train station filling up with blood deep underground, sinister giant business men on fire and a theater filled with people attempting suicide among other bizarre events along the way.
* H.A.W.X. the screen goes fuzzy for a bit, which can compound matters if the attacker who landed the hit isn't the only one going after you. There's also a few missions where your ERS system is jammed by the enemy, which results in static all over everything on-screen. Even worse, sometimes this jamming affects your ability to target or even launch missiles.
* He imprisons Morgana from his fear of Yukimasa, in spite of his beliefs that he's doing wrong. He refuses to tell anyone or speak against the lord and Yukimasa because he's afraid. It is noted that while his fear is understandable, it ultimately ended up causing Morgana's death.
* GURPS gives this piece of sage advice: "It defeats the purpose (of a search roll) to say 'You don't find the gun under his jacket.'" Granted, most people are smart enough to at least downplay it to "You don't find what he's hiding" or giving other accidental cues that something is there to be found, but still.
* Goodbye Kitty, Brown Puppy pees on Black Kitty after he gets shredded by the lawnmower.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law. "...is so much more. More potent, powerful and frightening." Cue picture of globe with markers all over it.
* GURPS: Warehouse 23 claims that the crash, while genuinely alien, was not a spacecraft - it was a classroom, with technology designed to be easily reverse-engineered by humans, dropped as something of a bribe to the CIA and similar forces.
* Godzilla (1954) there would actually be a theatrical Godzilla that really was green (a very dark green however).
* GunBuster: Partially justified by using fish-bowl helmets with forward-facing lights mounted on top. This gives their bodies a realistic amount of shadow, but their faces are fully visible.
* Here's another YTMND that uses this. If you didn't know, the song is about baking cakes...
* Granblue Fantasy get periodical updates, the game will display a message regarding "new chapters will be added" if the player has managed to catch up with the latest Main Story Chapter.

* Hansel and Gretel (2007) is especially horrific — the girls are raped and the boys are starved and beaten, sometimes to death.
* Heroic Comedic Sociopath" is inclined toward hilariously offensive behavior.
* Hidden Depths behind his silent demeanor when Buffy is granted telepathy and overhears Oz's thoughts:
* Higurashi: When They Cry, Rena noticed that the bottle of soy sauce in Rika and Satoko's house was missing, and deduced the possibility that they had visited the Sonozaki estate that night with the empty bottle and been kidnapped.
* Hearts of Stone, but in order to do this, you have to complete an optional secondary objective to find out how.
* Gunnerkrigg Court: A mostly serious story-telling comic, but with entire chapters with non-stop funny, like Chapter 24.
* Goats). The lemon then asks Philip why he was created, and Philip admits he was just bored, then suggests it could make itself useful by crushing his enemies (something it is utterly incapable of). Naturally the lemon becomes chronically depressed.
* Hayabusa2 with a payload that includes four small rovers, an impactor, a small satellite with a camera to study the effects of the former, and a capsule to bring back samples of that asteroid.
* Gorilla, Interrupted: The movie was shot over the course of seven days by amateur filmmakers just doing it for fun. The purchase of a shop light and some Halloween-style costumes represented as much money as they invested.
* Halo 3: ODST, Kojo Agu, is nicknamed Romeo for, evidently, being quite a ladies' man outside of battle.
* Glee wearing any gear. And somehow it was all okay because they weren't aiming at his head. So much wrong with this scenario...
* Happy Gilmore after Happy finds out how cruelly an orderly (played by Ben Stiller) is treating his grandmother and the other residents, he does this to him.
* Harry and Paul with the eccentric American tourist couple Ronald and Pam who always introduce themselves as being from Badiddlyboing, Odawidaho.
* Halo 2 has a pair of trains that travel at high speeds and will kill you if you are in their path. You will die even if driving a vehicle of any kind, including the tank
* Halo: Reach, the protagonist makes a fall from orbit (with the aid of a re-entry pack) after their escape ship has its thrusters too damaged for flight.
* .hack, which had different rules but could also be played as if it were Crimson VS.
* Godbound, an Artificial Intelligence with the Improved Armature gift has a toolkit that can function as any tool commonly available on the legit or black markets.
* Harry Potter are the wizarding world's version of this, although the secrecy is emphasized more than the intimidation.
* Guild Wars has a warrior skill called "I Meant to Do That!" that gives the player a boost if he's knocked down. Even better, the skill is a shout, so a speech bubble with the skill name appears above the player's head when he uses it.
* Heavy Horses, this time centered more on modern British countryside living.
* Good Is Not Soft: Even straight-laced heroes can get brutal when dealing with evil.
* Hawking: features Stephen Hawking when he was an ambulatory, dorky, oddly cute 21 year old university student.
* Heathcliff & the Catillac Cats did 65 episodes in its first season and 21 in its second.
* Gottlieb, one of the windows shows a ghost holding his head under his left arm. Another dapper-looking ghost in the Attic has his head under his right arm.
* Gotham Academy: Colton Rivera is they guy to go to if a Gotham Academy student wants to purchase fireworks or get something the headmaster has confiscated stolen back. He's a known mess though rather than a "cool kid" and is always on the verge of getting expelled.

* Halo 2 onward, due to being the Elites' greatest hero during the Great Schism; in the post-war era, his popularity leads to him becoming his species's most prominent leader.
* Happy Appy many years after its original publication. (More specifically, the author originally intended for it to be serious, but after a friend laid out all the flaws in the story before publication, he decided to turn it into a trollpasta and ran with it.)
* Guardian, many humans back home are disgruntled that they fought against living teddy bears — and with the help of aliens that are revolting mixtures of wolf and spider in appearance.
* Heimlich the caterpillar is also larger than the other bugs, but is a kindhearted
* Hensuki: Are You Willing to Fall in Love with a Pervert, as Long as She's a Cutie?, Sayuki Tokihara is a masochist who wants main character Keiki to treat her like his pet.
* Golden Age Paradise Island, has a chance encounter with an Army nurse named Diana Prince, who's distraught because she lacks the funds to join her fiancee in South America. They look exactly alike, and thus, Princess Diana pretty much buys Lt. Prince's identity from her so that she can afford to, well, desert.
* .hack//INFECTION, so she was forced to give Kite the bracelet instead.
* Half-Life 2. Though they possess technology far in advance of humanity, it all appears to have been violently appropriated from their countless previous conquests and twisted for their own purposes.
* Glengarry Glen Ross when Blake is doing his motivational fear spiel:
* Hilarious in Hindsight, the game featured in the ad) that gave Mario the ability to grow super-large, though usually through some sort of mushroom rather than drinking milk. Got mushrooms?
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire that Ron throws in his own Christmas socks and promises Dobby the next sweater his mother gifts to him.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City, but the general gist is that Tommy Vercetti was sent by Sonny Forelli to kill one man in Harwood, and that one man turned out to be eleven men. While Tommy survived and killed them all, this still worked out for Sonny, as Tommy was jailed for fifteen years over the incident, and his infamy as the "Harwood Butcher" means that once he's released, they have to send him down to Vice City to establish a presence for the Forelli family because he's far too hot to be doing any work in Liberty City.
* Harry's first and true love is brewing potions. She learns an impressive variety of other subjects through necessity (such as physical and mental self-defence), or because they're tangentially related to brewing (like wandless magic, which is used to stir multilayered potions), but at the end of the day, she's at Hogwarts to learn from Professor Snape, and could cheerfully spend all day in a lab. (She's astounded to find, in her third year, that Alchemy has a similar appeal.) When Professor Snape first tests her skill by having her write down all the ingredients she knows of and the basics of handling each one, she runs out of parchment.
* God of War Kratos plows his way through humans and mythical monsters alike with all the brutality of a wheat thresher with anger management issues. Many of his finishers involve ripping off a Gorgon's head or force-feeding a minotaur one of his chain-blades, and even the gods and godlike beings he faces down are torn to pieces, with the only concession to their higher power level being how long he has to beat on them with how many power-ups. The death of Poseidon in particular is pretty brutal even for the series, as Kratos beats his face in with his bare hands, shown from Poseidon's ever-messier point of view.
* Good Omens, Anathema Device is descended from the man who invented the device. She has an entire rant about forgotten inventors, who also include Humphrey Gadget, Pieter Gizmo, Cyrus T. Doodad, and Ella Reader Widget. When she subsequently mentions that she's also a descendent of Agnes Nutter, Newt Pulsifer's response is, "Let me guess, she invented the crazy person."
* High School Musical movie: Kelsi, who seemed to have a bit of a crush on Troy, is randomly paired up with his only friend (with actual lines), Jason, who doesn't have a crush/girlfriend/whatever, despite the fact that they never interacted before in the movie and they have nothing in common.

* Harry's New Home, Snape and Harry start distrusting and in the latter case, outright fearing Dumbledore when they realize it was Dumbledore's fault that no one checked up on Harry and why Sirius never got a trial.
* Halloween: The Curse of Michael Myers John Strode onto a fuse box, electrocuting him to the point where he starts foaming at the mouth before his head blows up.
* glomping him on occasion, he still shows annoyance when his Ashikabi is getting too close with other harem members. He is also shown as the one who feels offended the most when Higa Izumi accuses Minato of nepotism and states he and his comrades chose to be with Minato out of their own free will.
* Goku vs. Tao Pai Pai in the original. He nearly kills Goku. The boy then climbs up Korin's Tower to train for a rematch.
* Great Gatsby. The truly tragic part about all this is that Daisy, while she did have feelings for Gatsby, was merely a beautiful but spoiled, self-centered, and weak-willed woman who almost certainly didn't deserve Gatsby's unconditional love and devotion.
* Goof Troop: One of Goof's friends is a chef who has a double life as a wrestler. He grew tired of it but was contract-bound to stay in the wrestling business until someone defeats him and wouldn't throw a fight. Once Pete realized this undefeated wrestler was the chef, he was sure wrestling was fake and tried to fight him. By luck (depending on your P.O.V.), Pete won and now was bound to keep fighting until someone defeats him.
* God as well: at times, even Psalty makes mistakes, but every time God intervenes, He's understanding and forgiving.
* Harry Potter film suggests a romance (or at least a pair of reciprocal one-sided crushes) between Neville Longbottom and Luna Lovegood, which is a widely fanon-supported couple, but not one that happens in canonicity. Mathew Lewis, who plays Neville, asserted the two had a brief fling but ended up marrying their canonical partners.
* Heaven's Reach, but retains supernatural elements such as the spiritual power of Essence, the dark matter intelligences of the Shrieking Hordes that lurk in places where reality breaks down and in the chaotic fringes of intergalactic space, and the negative sub-universe of Terminus where the Tomb-Stars lie.
* Hand Wave: You fail to explain complicated plot points in great detail.
* Hell's Kitchen was initially a UK show (with celebrities), but changed significantly in its export to the USA (with competition between professionals for a job). The US version now runs alongside the UK version on its original channel, and is more popular and successful.
* Heather Dale The song that was originally about Gawain's failure became a story of how perfect he was.
* Harley & Ivy.Among the items she tosses out of the purse are a tampon and a condom.
* Heaven's Design Team, the designers often come up with many of the useful biological and physiological functions for their animals by throwing in random features on their project and finding a breakthrough here and there.
* Hadrian's Wall, the edge of the Roman empire, located on mainland Britain had a series of keeps complete with troops and smaller look-outs along the complete stretch. If one section of the wall was attacked they would set alight a fire, the next guy along would then set his fire alight until it reached one of the keeps. Then the garrisoned troops would rush to the defense. Probably Tolkien's inspiration for the above examples.
* He does the same thing when confronted as the villain in the Safe ending.
* GURPS Thaumatology did eventually appear after only a moderate delay. However, the excuses for that apparently included both the author and the editor experiencing some fairly bizarre (unrelated) health issues, and the publisher being mugged. As the book was about exotic magic systems, there was some joking discussion of a possible curse.
* GoldenEye sees it and smugly shoots up the ducts before leaving. In reality

Natalya was hiding in a cupboard.
* Hellboy (2019), Daimio is repeatedly shown fighting off his transformation into his were-jaguar form by jamming a syringe into his leg. When he sees an empowered Gruagach beating the living shit out of Hellboy, he's visibly torn but eventually tosses the syringe and embraces his inner beast to save Hellboy's life.
* Going to the bathroom is pretty much the fail-safe excuse for Harry to go follow somebody/eavesdrop/escape a situation. His friends must be concerned about his bladder problem by now... Finally lampshaded in the seventh book when Hermione and Ron have disappeared with the excuse of a bathroom, leaving Harry to try to figure out their real destination.
* Gottlieb) shows people in the future wearing garishly-colored jumpsuits and bright helmets with fins.
* had to stop fighting each other just to take her down. Ironically, the only Skullgirl whose wish seems to be fulfilled in a satisfactory way is that of the current Skullgirl, who wished for revenge against the Medici crime syndicate and depending on the story route chosen, gets her revenge before falling apart.
* Harry Potter from the events of the last book and the established low numbers of wizards in general, and it's not unlikely that wizards are heading towards extinction.
* Gregor Clegane's face is rotten and deteriorating more and more over time.
* Godwin's Law of Time Travel by specifically sending data on superweapons (or modern technologies that would look like superweapons in context) and allied tactics and strategy to his past self so that he could usurp the title of Fuhrer from Hitler and conquer the world using the Axis' military might. It is up to the Justice League to stop him.
* Goodness is found only at the individual level. Gods of Good, if they exist, value free will and choice above all else; the more
* Golf With Your Friends, and hockey pucks (which are much easier to hit than the rest!). Though the game is based on mini golf, many of the levels have structures and hazards that would be difficult or impossible to feature in a real course, such as moving platforms, jungle bridges, and portals.
* Greyhawk of Heironeous, the God of Valor. However, at least one myth says he used to be just as handsome, but his violent nature, and possibly jealousy of his brother, warped him into an ugly creature.
* Grogar is this for King Sombra, having taught him Dark Magic as his
* Have We Met Yet?: Someone meets a time traveler who already knows them.
* Heavenly Sword and is funny even when being a total bastard. Flying Fox has a very shrill voice and is even hammier than Bohan.
* Haymitch, Cotton and Abram when they fight peacekeepers together through the streets.
* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de - Hachiyou Shou about the Hachiyou powers being useless due to not working when they are needed.
* Gravity Falls: In "The Land Before Swine", after rescuing Mabel's pet pig Waddles from a pterodactyl, Stan is interrupted by the monster climbing back up after them.
* Green (2011), Lily is ordered to catch a pisky and have it grant her a wish. She decides the best way to get through this is to ask for something too minor to be worth turning against her.
* He Is My Master status in the anime (definitely not the manga), Yoshitaka pulls these moments all the time.
* Heart of a Dog) is taken in by a surgeon who implants him with human glands to learn of the effects. He learns to speak and takes on human qualities - mostly the negative ones. While the dog is objectively not sentient before the operation, because of the characteristically human way the thoughts of the dog are presented to the reader, he could be considered sentient. However, throughout, it's fairly clear that the dog does not know that he's part of an experiment at first.
* Having been a standard for decades, numerous variations have sprung up. One such joke encapsulates
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army They were dying out as a long-forgotten race, prompting Prince Nuada to try to destroy humanity once and for all.

* Golden Sun and sequels, the weirdest hairstyles and colors belong to Adepts with elemental powers. Non-Adept characters have more normal styles and colors.
* Groove Coaster) is free to download and comes with a set of songs that can be earned by leveling up, while the majority of songs require DLC purchases, much like the BEMANI example above.
* Hack/Slash and cartoon chipmunks bring in some variety from the normal slashers and serial killers — who are all pretty weird in of themselves.
* Hedgewars when it comes to ridiculous powerful weapons. Bazooka? Shotgun? Desert eagle? Pff. Watermelon, a piano, a colorful ball launcher, or a birthday cake, among others? Consider yourself dead!
* Hercules: The Animated Series Achilles survived that arrow to the heel but became a washed-up has-been hero afterward.
* Health/Damage AsymmetryPlayable characters have low health, high damage output, while monsters have high health, low damage output.
* Ha 2 Densho!, SFX, Speed Junky, Twintale and 殺人ビューロランド
* Gummi Bears episode, "A Gummi a Day Keeps the Doctor Away" has a scene where Gruffi and Tummi get chased by ogres while saving a kindly doctor from Duke Igthorn. The chase scene then leads to the two Gummis and the ogres running around the top part of the castle, until only the ogres are seen running around.
* Happy Seven. They were fighting so much they created a super weapon strong enough to blow up the universe, hid it inside Earth, then left. And, then they waited till there was actually less than 5 minutes left to decide to come stop the machine.
* Hades to the Albert Camus essay on Sisyphus, who used Sisyphus's punishment as a metaphor for what he perceived as the futility and absurdity of the search for meaning. Camus claimed that once Sisyphus realized he would never reach the top, he would accept his place in the world and become content—in short, he'd take on the exact attitude shown by the Sisyphus in the game. However, the developers claimed to have never heard of it, meaning they reached the same conclusion as Camus independently.
* Gunslinger Girl have elements of this, considering that they're young girls who didn't consent to any of this, and the side of effects of cyberneticization and associated conditioning will eventually cost them their personalities and lives. Unusually for the trope, some of them have horrific enough backstories that this isn't the worst thing to ever happen to them.
* Gran Turismo, if you fail a License Test requirement enough times in a row (and then get a result close to the Bronze time) they'll give you an unlisted prize called "Kiddie Prize" lower than Bronze that would let you technically pass that portion of the test, albeit with a horrendous score.
* Hayao Miyazaki that he does not have a computer, fax machine, or DVD player, and has since forgotten how to use the VCR. He also does not use e-mails or text messaging, preferring to send and receive messages strictly through snail mail.
* Going Postal for Vetinari to do this to the villain. Which is, of course, what Vetinari wanted all along.
* Hakim Bey, anarchist Sufi, writes a great many poems about man-boy relationships as a form of liberation from the chains of the family and society.
* Hair. Unfortunately the song is about a hippie explaining to his square parents just how much more awesome, cool and alive his drug-addled self is than they are. Someone seemed to notice this, and the adverts now come with an awkward re-written cover describing the myriad flavours available.
* GURPS Infinite Worlds: Britannica-6 timeline stemming from a different history of the British royal family, one of the example characters is Charles Dickens, a journalist specializing in science and technology. "He wrote a few short stories, most concerning heroic engineers, but never found much money in it."
* Hellsing.. In the usual Roman fashion, the main character and both of her sisters are named Julia while her brother and father are both named Gaius. Even characters long dead are not safe from being mixed up with their contemporaries as Lucius Junius Brutus (who overthrew Tarquin the Proud at the end of the old Roman Kingdom) appears just one scene after his descendant Brutus the Elder with both being referred to by that one name.

* Heck, several phone and cable commercials will still treat the dad like a goofy dumbass even when he's doing exactly what he's supposed to and buying the advertised service!
* "Grotesque". A clunking cliché, but it does allow Scully a nice line about thinking that one of the pictures on the wall had come to life.
* Guardians of the Galaxy has one with Gamora and Peter. Gamora cuts it short by holding a knife to Peter's throat and yelling furiously at him, much to Peter's complete consternation.
* Hey Arnold!: In "Abner Come Home", Arnold mumbles that his pet "must be getting a drink out of the toilet again" when he wakes up in the middle of the night.
* Hanamura in Japan is the home of estranged brothers Genji and Hanzo and their Shimada estate.
* Hasbro all following, but still no Lilandra or Muir Island Gambit as of 2021.
* Hank the Cowdog series has ended with this tone, implying that the work as Head of Ranch Security never ends.
* Grand Theft Auto takes place in 'Pacific City', and seems to be either inspired by or borrows the idea of a multi-island approach for geography.
* Gravity Falls by one of Bill Cipher's eye-bats, finishing her report with "I'm Shandra Jimenez, and I'm turning into stone!" before freezing completely.
* He even beat and subjected his own daughter, Minerva, to Training from Hell * has ended. This may change the scale of the conflict or the politics involved, but it's rarely enough to bring actual peace.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure!: Tsubomi Hanasaki meets her first two fairy campanions in the same way.
* Harry Potter films ended at the third movie; the rest were shown in English with subtitles.
* Hat Films enjoy frequently verbally abusing one another, constantly end up hurting or killing themselves by accident and often impede their own progress, but they've designed very efficient mob grinders and ways to retrieve underwater gear, won many PvP maps and regularly manage to give Sips and co a good run for their money.
* Harry And The Hendersons: Brief attempt to adapt a movie about Bigfoot living with a suburban family into a weekly series.
* Goodbye My Princess, though; that style of make-up was common in the Tang dynasty.
* Harry Potter begins with Harry listening out for any sign of Voldemort on the Muggle news (e.g. mass "freak accidents") but realises not much has been going on when the news switches to the antics of a water-skiing budgie.
* Heat Guy J, Daisuke is going to lay sunflowers on his father's grave, and meets up with Clair, who has just visited (and stomped on) his own father's grave. The two look at each other for several minutes, before walking past one another.
* Grace's, and the person commenting this also refers to his pigtails as "prehensile tendrils." His hair does look suspiciously similar to the antennae Ellen's half-human friend Archie had in her dreams.
* Harry Potter prevents them from even knowing about it unless they have close magical relatives. However, unlike other examples, this is not a legalized system and 100% rigid, being pure blood is not a guarantee that you are rich — and vice versa, as the Weasley family shows — and being Muggleborn is not an obstacle to progress within the Ministry of Magic.
* Hannah Montana: Jackson and Oliver are overjoyed at the idea of being the feature models for a new dating service. It isn't until after the ad comes out they discover they modelled to be the examples of inferior choices people would receive if they didn't sign up for the service and thus become laughing stocks in the community. The episode ends with the same agent offering them another gig for advertising new night classes, specifically as the example of idiots from the before the class. The two start giving an impassioned speech about they represent real people as opposed to the unrealistic promises the advertising offers and how it should be more true to life, only to give up and just go with it when they find out how much the gigs paying.

* Halloween, etc. He just keeps coming back. Admittedly, this was intentional on the makers' behalf. Not counting the first film, they always made sure to "kill off" Michael just in case one of the movies bombed and didn't warrant a sequel. They didn't count on the franchise's popularity, which ended up spawning eight movies and two remakes.
* Halo (the fact that most levels with high concentrations of them often gives you a Flamethrower or two in conspicuous spots should also be a hint).
* He also did the same in his criticism of the contrived game trappings in
* Harvest Moon: Animal Parade much in a game about farming), and a few added details such as Luna no longer being so short.
* God of War (PS4) as well as putting a bigger emphasis on exploration and loot-gathering.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers pulls this on almost all the female characters:
* He used to be a member of a cult, the Honey Bee Family, near H Shrine and had botched his suicide to a degree. One of Mashita's fellow officers had tried to infiltrate the cult, but was outed. Shimi-O's victims would be turned into new "beehives"..
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, since Ron doesn't actually get killed, but near the end of the chess game, he had every reason to believe that he would be...
* Here is a Game Boy clone that was made with similar hardware to the official console. It was sold on the market when the official Game Boy wasn’t available in the country it’s from. It actually can play Game Boy game cartridges. There’s also a cheap Game Boy imitation called Game Child.
* Godzilla, and turns into a giant wild-man who fights a giant lizard-beast. Whew.
* Hacksaw Ridge, Private Desmond Doss (a pacifist who signed up to serve as a medic) gets clobbered in the middle of the night by a bunch of his fellow Army trainees, who are sick of his refusal to use a gun. In the morning, when his drill sergeant asks who beat him, Doss answers with this trope.
* "'Heroes'" wasn't a particularly big hit when it was released as a single in 1977. It peaked at #24 in the UK, a relative disappointment for a new Bowie single. It also did fine enough in Europe, making the Top 20 in a couple countries, but nothing particularly special (compare this to "Sound and Vision" earlier that year, which was a Top 10 smash all across the continent). Its popularity and acclaim really started to pick up in the 80s, particularly in West Germany, where it was adopted as a youth anthem. By the 2000s, "'Heroes'" was widely regarded as one of Bowie's best singles, if not one of the best songs he ever wrote. When his singles re-charted after his death in 2016, "'Heroes'" improved on its original 1977 chart peaks in several countries, including the UK, where it made #12.
* H. G. Wells, which it remains to this day. Not only that, but he relinquished all his titles outside of the United Kingdom, struck off all the royal honours of any member of the house that fought for the Central Powers, and demanded (and got) a bill from Parliament allowing him to strip those relatives of their British peerages as well.
* guide him and they lean in for a kiss, only for Batman to shout for Robin not to kiss her. Robin doesn’t take being interrupted well though and attacks Batman, believing he’s just jealous.
* Gugu Mbatha Raw with one another that the three of them often will do things together as a family).
* GURPS book suggests that it's genre appropriate to give the "double knockback" enhancement to any and all attacks.
* hentai is an American student in Japan... who is the only one in her class who can not speak English.
* High School High". They suspect his story and tell him to shoot up. He tries but doesn't know how, and ends up snapping the rubber hose in one of the thugs' face.
* Heroes of Battle had rules for magical siege weapons and artillery, such as ballistae that fire lightning bolts, catapults hurling enchanted ammunition, or self-loading trebuchets.

* He has a fondness for retooling forgotten concepts from old Marvel and DC Comics, such as the Riddler's game show and the World Counterterrorism Agency from Marvel.
* Guys and Dolls, Nathan Detroit runs "the oldest established permanent floating crap game in New York." There is even a song about it.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002) as a side effect of eating something not meant for him, so he eats more and raises an army.
* Gunnerkrigg Court creates one of these at Antimony's suggestion to scare her classmate Paz.
* Hayate × Blade, often uses her powers to amuse herself, usually at the expense of others.
* Having characters with an unlikely or downright impossible professional
* Grand Theft Auto - a .357 Colt Python is the most powerful handgun, though it also comes with a slower rate of fire and reload.
* He also uses masculinity as one of the justifications for why he doesn't play
* Hairspray, forbidding her from watching "The Corny Collins Show" and from visiting Tracy's house.
* half-Valheru: his Valheru warrior nature is tempered by his human (and later Elven) cultural honor. The actual Valheru really aren't this at all, as they make no pretense of operating under a code of honor, and openly admit to serving only their own desires.
* Green Acres. Before becoming half of Hooterville's carpentry company - Alf and Ralph - Sid Melton appeared in one of the earliest episodes in a rather similar role as one of the potential interior decorators Oliver was looking to hire to help redecorate the Old Haney Place.
* Hibi Chouchou. She's shy and with bad social skills due to years of isolation, he's extremely awkward around girls.
* Good Luck! Ninomiya-kun and Mayu once Hinako introduces her to yaoi manga. Mayu even tries her hand at drawing some.
* H. Beam Piper by inventing a conspiracy by his enemy Andray Dunnan to subvert and take over the planet Marduk. It turns out that that's exactly what Dunnan is up to.
* he once voiced his dislike for her on Silver Quill's channel for it.
* He unknowingly helps two advert men think up the "Smiley" and "Shit happens" bumper stickers.
* Gorgeous George isn't enough for today's pro wrestlers to get heat, though it still shows up on occasion.
* Harry is upset by Hermione's badgering and flips over their table in the library.
* Harry Harrison is set in a galactic empire ruled by an Emperor and a caste of nobility, supported by a gargantuan bureaucracy. This system is shown to be hopelessly inefficient and corrupt, and the actual number of nobles so small compared to the positions only available to those of high birth that for example starship captains tend to be idiot children, if not unborn fetuses, whose actual duties are handled by lower class supporting officers.
* Hades' first appearance, in which he RIPS THE CREDITS OFF THE SCREEN, and introduces himself with "
* he had the character assassinated because people were requesting it too much), being told his impersonation was subpar.
* Hero for a Day: A hero loses their powers, allowing someone else to take their place until their powers return.
* Glory in the Thunder speaks to her as a voice in her head. She tells it she does not much care what it wants.
* Great Expectations to both Pip and Estella. Not only age and gender but also social class factor into the power disparity: Havisham is a very wealthy dowager; Pip an orphan apprenticed to a blacksmith.
* Hanki no Gekirin Strike Disobey. Despite its overall brutal appearance and its crazy attack behavior, Odd-Eyes Rebellion Dragon represents Yuya and Yuto's bond and their wrath against evil.
* Goggles Do Nothing was wearing safety goggles for their intended purpose; they just weren't enough to protect his eyes (let alone his entire body) from a flood of acid, hence his exclamation that they did nothing for him. The goggles were not being kept on his forehead as a purely decoration clothing accessory.

* Hand Wave: I'm far too bored to give out any complex detail to explain the plot points of my work.
* GURPS has cover, cover DR, concealment, visibility, attack from above/below, g-force gradients etc. Even the effects of fog on the damage done by laser weapons have official stats.
* goes back in time to steal Loki's scepter, and then gets the hell out of there. So, with all that in mind, what happens next?
* Happy Happy Clover while nice and helpful. Does have moments where he comes across as very creepy and a bit unnerving. This is more notable in the Manga in one story where he warns students about humans and going outside the forest.
* Gravity Falls" line often used right before a nude scene/sex. In America, this episode was rated TV-Y7.
* Gunnerkrigg Court: Paz has Bobby the robot write a love letter to Kat, who at first thinks he wrote it on his own accord. No trouble ensues as Paz sets her straight soon.
* Goblins likes this trope very much. Huge interiors can be found in basically any dungeon.
* Hazel: The title character works as a maid for the Baxters, played by doughy Don DeFore and mom Whitney Blake (almost 13 years his junior in real life).
* Granny Weatherwax's, with entire species having titles for her that basically translate to "Stay the hell away!". Her stubbornness, strong will, grumpiness, and pride have all been exaggerated as well.
* Hellraiser in how she makes a deal with the Cenobites to kill five people (one being her husband, who conspired to have her killed for her family fortune) to save herself.
* Good Morning, Crono in a video game starts their adventure waking up in bed.
* God kills a now-mortal Bartleby by speaking a single word. His head blows up. The viewer hears only a deep, loud thrumming noise.
* hacked within days of its release with PCs, including Apple and Linux machines.
* Grandia II plummets over the Granacliffs. Then the ship flies back out, and the music returns to normal.
* Glorious Shotgun Princess, when a baby thresher maw ejected from the Normandy comes through the windshield of his shuttle.
* Here, the bunny interrupts an advert for Sitagin, an anti-haemorrhoid cream.
* Goody's and BC, two brands of powdered headache medicine, have started doing cross-promotional radio ads; the two formerly competing products are now both owned by pharmaceutical conglomerate GSK.
* Hazbin Hotel angrily growls a "You!" while pointing a finger at the Radio Demon.
* Guards! Guards! the main villain creates a secret society made up from people who would be rejected from any other secret society "the sort to dislocate their fingers with even the simplest secret handshake".
* Guns N' Roses a Guns N Roses album instead of "Axl Rose and whoever wanted to record with him".
* Half-Life: Full Life Consequences out of the deal, and his son becomes president.
* Haldeman's short story "Monster" is presented as a document being dictated by a Vietnam vet confined to a mental hospital. In it, the vet insists that, when he was a member of a LRRP patrol in 'Nam, he watched a black-skinned, black-furred
* GMA News TV, ditto, but started a bit later. Parent company the bitter rival of those of the other two mentioned above.
* Gregorovitch the wandmaker, Bathilda Bagshot the historian, and Gellert Grindelwald the imprisoned dark wizard in
* Grafting of plants is a common agricultural practice, particularly for fruit trees and for ornamental plants such as roses or potted cacti.
* Heisei Rider vs. Showa Rider: Kamen Rider Taisen feat. Super Sentai, to snap him out of.
* Guild Wars 2, whose females have mammaries just like a mammal would; how functional said mammaries are is up for debate. But given that the Krait appear to work in groups and communities, it is possible that they do breastfeed their young.

* Heartbeat has featured several train robberies. Apparently the branch lines of 1960s Yorkshire were Britain's answer to the Wild West.
* has the character Ywiu, who speaks mainly in Singlish. It looks like genuinely bad writing at first, until one point where she code-switches to standard English and shows that the "bad English" is used deliberately. (At least if you somehow miss the fact that most of the others speak standard English.)
* Gothic Americana might not exist as a genre without this trope. Slim Cesna's Auto Club has an EP named "Crossbreeding Begins at Home." Similarly, about half of Jay Munly's oeuvre seems to rely upon this trope. If you're curious, look up the lyrics to "Big Black Bull Comes Like a Caesar" and "There's a Goose Walking Over My Grave."
* her father to his face that he was no better than the Nazis and similar. As she notes with a certain degree of satisfaction, he took it badly.
* Grosse Pointe Blank: Martin tells Debbie that he's a professional killer, and she asks if he gets dental with that, but he tells her no.
* gringa). The stars were actresses, not professional wrestlers. Lady luchadoras did exist at the time, but few had movie-star good looks and most wouldn't be recognized by the Mexican Comision de Box y Lucha Libre until the 1980s.
* He's infuriated with the stories that Stuart Baird kept mispronouncing Levar Burton's name on the set of
* Halloweentown has a wisecracking skeleton, Benny, drive the local taxi.
* Gravity Falls episode "The Inconveniencing", Mabel embarrasses her brother Dipper in front of his crush Wendy by showing a picture of Dipper, aged five, in a lamb costume.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, when Dumbledore announces that the Tri-Wizard Tournament is being held at Hogwarts.
* Guantanamo Bay Naval Base in Cuba is home to the controversial US military prison of the same name. The land the base is on has been rented by the US since 1903, and since the Communist government of Cuba cashed one rent check for the land, the contract is still considered valid by both countries (and therefore, Cuba tolerates a US presence on their soil, not unlike how West Berlin was in the midst of East Germany during the Cold War). However, it was not used as a military prison until 2002.
* Gunner Z, you can either find drones out in the field or buy them in loot boxes. These are small A.I. combat machines that can be upgraded by breaking down other drones and then using the components to upgrade, though this isn't always a success. Drones range from a scanning machine for finding chests to a drone that launch a multi-missile strike.
* Harem Comedy fame is quite strong, as demonstrated when he sends flying both a racist dude and his girlfriend with one punch at the beginning of the manga/anime. He does this again with the con man posing as a director of documentaries later on, also breaking his camcorder in the process.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002), gains the power of stench after ruining one of Triclops' experiments.
* Gundam AU. There's also less of an aversion to fans making up all-new casts due to the practice of introducing a new lead character for every anime, manga and video game.
* Halloween Episode, Ed, who is suffering from hallucinations, sees Johnny as one of these. Subverted by the fact that the spider is friendly.
* Her sister, Nefera, is even more attractive, but also is more of an
* HERZ, how worthless and useless she felt after being unable moving her Eva to fight Armisael, and what it was like when the MP-Evas tore her apart.
* Granted it wasn't even the company that banned him, but one of the faulty copyright bots YouTube uses to enforce copyright.
* Happens to Jonathan) realising that one of the bag guys' bullets while they escaped the collapsing pyramid actually hit the target.
* Hearthstone: Heroes of Warcraft first introduced a deckbuilding game mode with Dungeon Run, and other future single-player content follow a similar format. It later introduced Duels mode, a PvP mode that combines CCG and deckbuilding modes.

* Greatshells such as the chasmfiends use them to decrease their own weight, so that the
* Have I Got News for You that he used to advertise his act as having received four stars, neglecting to clarify that that was the sum total of stars from all his reviews.
* Greek Mythology, Theseus kidnapped Helen when she was a young girl, intending to marry her when she grew old enough. However, she was rescued by Castor and Pollux.
* Hasbro. 3rd party toys are engineered from the ground up, generally have no budget limitations, and are made by fans with the intent of creating toys of characters that Hasbro can't/won't make.
* Hell's Kitchen Sink The collective minds of humanity have formed entire pantheons. This is not the only source of magic, however.
* Grover's thirty-two in the last book, he just looks sixteen (and acts that way because satyrs age half as fast as humans).
* Gus the Dinosaur Bus, Gus cries enough to fill the swimming pool, then takes up a new job as the pool's slide.
* Higurashi: When They Cry no one mentions her horns (except for Takano in a plot-relevant scene) due to this. People either thinks they're hair accessories, like them, or try to avoid commenting on them.
* He denies any involvement in the attempt on Bran's life, pointing out he'd have to be an idiot to give the assassin his own blade.
* Heck, in every single dungeon ever in the series, there's at least one room that locks behind you. If killing the enemies in the room doesn't trigger the mechanism to open the doors, there's always just the perfect number of crates/supplies of items in pots/ magically appearing chest with a new item to help you escape.
* Gold Digger has the Rakshasa act this way, partially by necessity. As Shapeshifting demons that drain magic energy, they have to physically exhaust their prey to feed (the process tickles, and wiggling prey can't be drained). This can be done through combat or...well, you know...
* He's popped up in a number of other Slender-blogs, and is still sporadically posting semi-cryptic messages on his original blog.
* Harry Potter after Dumbledore contracted a curse that would kill him soon anyways.
* GNN: the G stands for Grouch and the network is all dirty. Oscar reports the stories about him before his lover Grundgetta gave him a Phlegmmy Award.
* Hidden Arsenal storyline has the three dragons of the Ice Barrier, sealed away long ago by a powerful sage. Unfortunately, the people of the Ice Barrier get so desperate in a war they decided to unleash them. When they got to the last, Trishula, it wound up getting them all killed. The three dragons were re-sealed, but eventually got infected by the Evilswarm and let out again.
* Heroes vs. Villains as someone who needed to be voted out by his tribemates until the merge and even then would likely have made it even farther if not for his moronic idol play.
* High School Musical under their Faith Films imprint - although in this case, the reduced production values aren't due to this trope so much as due to the M.O. of The Asylum being reduced production values.
* Gundam of the final episode shows Char's Hyaku Shiki floating by, with its hatch open, letting us know that he survived.
* Headgear Headstone: A character's Nicehat is used to mark their final resting place.
* Gravity Falls disguised as a human woman who lures in and eats men. Oddly, rather than take a young, beautiful form, she looks like a middle-aged woman with caked-on makeup. She apparently targets older men, especially "pick-up artists", and she manages to turn the tables on self-proclaimed charmer Grunkle Stan.
* "Hell Is Other Robots" has Bender giving a Robotology prayer in all zeroes and ones (though, oddly enough, it ends with "2").
* Hey Hey It's Saturday also used this technique. Most of the time the gonging was done by Red Symons, but occasionally an act was so terrible another of the judges would grab the mallet off him and do the gonging themselves.

* here him to end up with Agatha, but he knows that everyone's depending on Gil to do well, so it's in his best interests.
* graphene. In addition to being extremely strong and flexible, it's an excellent conductor of electricity. Applications include lightweight screens, semi-conductors, efficient room temperature alcohol distillation and so on.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, replies that there is no wood. Ron then manages to scream some sense into her. Justified at that point as Hermione, despite her skill, had spent most of her life as a muggle and has just under a year of even knowing magic exists, whereas Ron had grown up surrounded by magic.
* Haruka/Sailor Uranus and Michiru/Sailor Neptune. Interestingly, they are probably more stable and certainly more mature than the Alpha Couple consisting of Usagi/Sailor Moon and Mamoru/Tuxedo Kamen.
* Hilariously inverted with the Shokk Attack Gun if your dice aren't co-operating. One of the randomly-selected firing modes is specifically described as turning the gobbo ammunition into...chunky salsa. Said salsa (bones and all) is then launched through the warp portal at the enemy.
* Higurashi: When They Cry gets treated as the main suspect by the police; less to do with his insight about what is going on and more to do with the fact that he's British.
* Hideo, the Tessier-Ashpools' deadly but devoted servant in William Gibson's
* Guardians of the Flame: Many of the female slaves were raped by their owners or captors in the past. Sometimes it's explicitly stated, but often just heavily implied.
* Hannah Montana parody character issues one of these, then immediately retracts it, after saying both Hannah and the judge for whom she was filling in were boring.
* Hercules in the Maze of the Minotaur and their incredible fighting skills.
* Hellblazer #37. But in #25, there's a background character in a crowd scene who looks suspiciously similar to Constantine.
* High Noon, where a fistfight halfway through leaves Kane covered in blood, but those killed in the gunfight at the end just fall over.
* Gronk: Gronk packs one with her belongings when she decides to leave the monster world.
* Halo: Reach, Emile decorates his visor with the visage of a demon skull.
* Glider PRO was re-released on a CD which included over a dozen new houses.
* Highlander Immortals seem to favor this trope as sites for their battles to the death or simple sparring practice.
* Godzilla: Final Wars: Giant monsters controlled by aliens destroying major landmarks while fighting Godzilla, anyone?
* Grevane makes zombies. Not a particularly spectacular power, compared to insanely powerful and insanely versatile sorcerer Cowl or
* Harry gets an erection when Ginny lands on him after falling off a ladder.
* Gravity Falls (Soos trapped in Waddles' body running around the town), and then it cuts back to Stan closing the book and saying "... and now you know where babies come from." The thoroughly traumatized expression on Mabel-Dipper's face says it all...
* Gone with the Wind in 1926. The book wasn't published until a decade later in 1936.
* Hell Comes to Frogtown after Bergman's dance: "You have aroused the three-headed snake!".
* Herman's Hermits has been used for a widely-spread ad for the main dairy company in Norway, Tine Melk. Very funny, actually.
* Hero. That "ice beam" which is so "Johnny Snow" that Horrible mentions in his song was actually used by Snow. Dr. Horrible's main problem with Johnny Snow is that Snow wants to set himself up as a nemesis when the doctor has much more personal reasons for reserving this for Captain Hammer.
* Go into the Light: While dying, there will be a light to walk into in order to enter the afterlife.

* Harry Potter, Sirius Black's aunt Elladora started the family tradition of beheading the family's house elves when they got old, and put their heads on walls like hunting trophies. This is one of the many ways the Black family is shown to be deranged and seriously creepy.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers has the "America Ninja" sketch. Who looks a little bit like a cowboy.
* Hayao Miyazaki has "Boa Juice", which cause people drinking it to dissolve.
* heavily red, in which case the red and blue will be a lot more evenly matched.
* Hardly Working" plays a possessive sociopath who kills Sarah after previously murdering everyone in the office who flirted with her on Valentine's Day. It backfires on him, as she wanted to ask him out before he stabbed her fatally.
* Great Big Sea details the narrator's feelings for a woman whom he has loved for years, but the timing was never right for them, and now he can only hope that she still remembers him, while he can't get her out of his head.
* Hamster Corporation, who releases various classic arcade games under the Arcade Archives, and ACA
* He once had to deal with a rather vile and self-admitted paparazzi (and the biggest
* her ability to sense emotions. Her voice also cracks when she's very unhappy.
* Halloween Episode" after they assume they accidentally killed him with their haunted house.
* Hannah Montana had a real concert tour in the late 2000s. It was a sold out tour that actually lead to a couple lawsuits against ticket scalpers! The concert tied into the Hannah Montana show because some of the footage from the tour was used in the second season. The concert featured Hannah for the first half, and Miley Stewart (who had no problem revealing her secret in front of tens of thousands of people, but the audience knows that since they've seen the show) for the second half. The concert was released as a movie after the tour in 2008, and a real movie based on the show was made in 2009.
* Halo 3 the last parts of Forerunner-controlled space — so many ships were on the move that the stars were flicking out as they were repeatedly eclipsed.
* - has Hiccup resist Heather's attempt to start a relationship with him after he saves her from Johann because he worries that he'd be taking advantage of her (as well as his own complicated emotions regarding his past with Astrid).
* Grinchmas, along with skipping over a lot of the plot lines in the 2000 film, the show also cuts out the moment in the original story where the Grinch has to stop all of the Whos' supplies from falling off of Mount Crumpit.
* Heidi Lovelace almost always stops her cussing at the word's first letter, even in front of what are supposed to be adult audiences because children could still be watching, d-word! Most commonly with the b-word, which when asked she insists is "broad". So you know it was a big deal when she started cussing at the referee to end a match in Absolute Intense Wrestling as Shayna Baszler destroyed Annie Social.
* GURPS Reign of Steel, the WASP agency and FBI of the Washington Protectorate have this trope going on. In the Machine Zones, some of the human resistance groups have been divided by internal rivalries, as well.
* Golden Sun and reveals some ancient ruins and technology that were buried underground.
* Heir to the Dojo: A high school student is heir to a martial arts family.
* Gundam Build Fighters, particularly for the eyecatch or just before the ending song.
* Green Lantern against such a backdrop, complete with Hawkgirl flying towards the horizon.
* Grim Dawn expansion is glad to go at length on it; if you say this seems like the work of a cruel god, he'll fire back saying the world and life itself is cruel, since both will keep taking things away from you and never stop, while Solael gives you something worthy for all the suffering and lets you take things into your own hands afterwards.
* greatly" by doctors.) Thorne threatens to expose them to the public unless he gets a few "favors" from the DA's office. Dent's response however isn't what he expected:

* Gloomsbury, scene transitions are indicated by a brief burst of 20s jazz. In the episode "Two Broads Broadcasting", one such transition is interrupted by the sound of a radio retuning from the jazz to Vera and Ginny's poetry.
* Harry himself falls under this: he slowly but surely goes from respected practitioner — and technically, the most powerful in the city — and black sheep of the White Council to the Warden Commander for the entire Western United States, the unofficial representative of the younger generation of wizardry — the actual poster boy for that generation looks up to him — and supernatural defender of Chicago with a reputation as
* Gundam 00, early in the series there are a few veterans that can completely outmatch the Gundam pilots as far as skill is concerned, and best the Gundams in one on one combat. But the Gundams are so strong they can just shrug off the attacks.
* Happiness in Slavery and mass mind control, hence the lack of outrage from the Tau.
* Hercules. That being said, the whole "coming of age" story of the movie has nothing to do with the myths, and most of the characters were changed dramatically. Hades was never an antagonist to Hercules, Hera was never his loving mother (or a mother at all), and Megara was his wife... which he killed. Along with their children. Yeah, greek heroes were not very "heroic" by today's definition.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban angry McGonagall and given detention.
* Granblue Fantasy. He's the one who usually drives mystery stories in the game and he's capable of detecting (most of the time) some of the thieves under their disguises and codenames. Though in the quests and events where he is featured, a majority of the puzzle-solving is done by the players, and his assistant Sarya can prove to be much better than him in deducing facts.
* Heartwarming Orphan: An orphan, who is usually also poor and a child, is meant to inspire sympathy in the audience.
* her kidnapping in season 4, which causes him to invoke the 25th Amendment and temporarily relinquish power in a way that's very similar to the said rant.
* Gordon R. Dickson: The title comes from the hero's tactical doctrine, which calls for a series of feints that gradually draw the enemy into an untenable position, at which point he attacks, and demolishes them.
* here with two characters who have known each other since grade school.
* High School D×D occupying (and later replacing) the former's right hand. However, Issei's complete lack of magical talent means this requires his full concentration. It's much more practical for them to both speak out loud. This is an effort on Ddraig's part, but as a Divine Dragon, not a significant one.
*); He's just frustrated from being teased about it after sharing a bed with Lyra.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire protection bestowed on Harry by his mother's sacrifice.
* Half-Life 2. After a long and harrowing journey through the tunnels and collapsed buildings under City 17, reaching a subway station is the sign that you've reached the surface.
* High-Altitude Interrogation backfire on the career of anybody who so much as proposes it would ensue.
* Hermitcraft Server: Folders for first three seasons are empty, and Season 5 has only two tropes.
* Hawkgirl, who does not believe in anything supernatural despite winning a fantastical battle against Doctor Fate and personally knowing a zombie, not in gods despite meeting and * Granblue Fantasy example. The Lowain-Elsam-Tomoi trio is sometimes referred to as "Lowain and bros." both in-universe (i.e. referenced by Scathacha in "Bzzt! Amped Up Summer") and by a portion of the playerbase.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (2000): Nicolas Cage is a former car thief who must come out of "retirement" to save his brother.
* Gone with the Blastwave by having Pyro run into the middle of them and then shooting his fuel tank. Pyro replies that the blast radius wouldn't be big enough.

* He lampshades his heavy use of euphemisms somewhere along the line, saying, "James used to call it my 'furry little problem'. Many of my classmates were under the impression that I owned
* Happens in episode 16 when Rainbow Dash finally manages to pull off her Sonic Rainboom technique
* Harukanaru Toki no Naka de - Shiroki Ryuu no Miko; Karin's first reaction is a happy smile... then, a few seconds later, the smile disappears as it finally dawns on her what these words mean: "Eeeh?! Me?!"
* Grey's Anatomy, the season 4 finale is arguably the consolidation point of their relationship: afterwards they still have their ups and downs, but neither try to run away at the first sight of trouble anymore.
* Hellraiser III: Hell on Earth, Monroe acquires the Pinhead artifact from an obscure antique shop in New York, who obtained it from Dr. Channard's private collection in England. When Joey goes to investigate, the shopkeeper has packed up and moved.
* Hello Goodbye", it seems to end before starting up again after a second … and then randomly changes into a ukulele being played, as well as a backmasked sample of John, before ending.
* Guitar Hero has the "Player of the Ear Worm" trophy for playing the same song 10 or more times.
* Hero Rides Away, that rewards heroic-themed Solar Exalts for doing this.
* Golden Sun in doing so, and by the end of the second game he and Isaac were on the same side.
* Golden Threads Tie Us story, Lucina passes out after taking an arrow for Severa. When she wakes up the next day, her wounds have been properly bandaged up and she's lying on a bed in the abandoned fortress her team is using as a temporary camp.
* Gojira for American audiences, a subplot was added about an American journalist reporting on Godzilla's rampage.
* Greater-Scope Villain has seven star shaped scars that cover all of her back.
* Grand Finale grabs the ancient katana of Lord Chthon (the symbol of the House of Chthon) in order to face off against Blade. After about a minute of vicious fighting, Blade's modern steel easily snaps the centuries' old (probably not very high-quality) steel of the relic.
* "Gold Digger", which debuted in the original game and reappeared in
* He again revealed information when a CIA agent scratched a balloon in "
* Halo 2, the Arbiter attempts to talk Tartarus out of activating the Halos. After presenting evidence (in the form of an "Oracle", Guilty Spark, even) of the true purpose of the rings, Tartarus seems to consider stopping... but instead knocks Johnson away with Spark, forces Miranda Keyes to insert the Activation Index, and haughtily claims that his race will rise above the Elites. Notable in that the Elites and Brutes are at each others' throats at the best of times, yet the Arbiter gives him a chance to step away without a fight even when he's about to destroy all life in the galaxy and already orchestrated the death of hundreds of Elite Councilors. It shows the Arbiter's nobility, even compared to other Elites.
* Hex. Adding "Never ever leave again" leaves Rogue scared. Confused and scared.
* Hackers, meanwhile, is a corporate security consultant with a similarly irreverent attitude, first introduced by riding into his employers' data center on a skateboard.
* Harbinger (Finmonster) more progressive age, is shocked at his ancestor's casual discrimination.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, which is usually rendered as "brother" or "bro."
* Haunting Starring Polterguy'': Poltergeist Polterguy can temporarily turn a table cloth into a pool of blood.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law involved an episode where Apache Chief had burned himself with coffee and was suing the coffee company over it due to losing his...er, "growing powers". When he comes to meet Harvey and tell him what happened, Harvey takes a while to understand his plight. Once he does, Harvey instinctively crosses his legs.
* Hellsing is instructed to put down her subordinates-turned-ghouls herself, since she was their leader and thus their being defeated and transformed is her responsibility.

* Guillermo del Toro that combine fantasy with very human characters and subject matter.
* Happy Heroes: A space pirate in a spaceship greatly resembling a typical sea pirate ship appears in episode 47 and is fought off by Happy S. in his Car Knight before he can actually make off with any loot. He returns near the end of the episode to take on the Superman again, but is unwittingly battling Big M. who has hijacked Happy S.'s Car Knight.
* Gravity Falls is one of the few creatures of the show that dares to attack in the daytime (or at least not inside a dark place).
* Graduation Day Part 2", after Buffy puts Faith in a coma, then ends up in hospital herself, she has a dream in which Faith appears to reconcile with her, giving a clue on how to defeat the Mayor.
* Halt and Will both favor longbows. Though that's partially because they're the signature weapon of the rangers, it's also reflective of the training and commitment required by the organization. A bow takes a long time to master, just like espionage, stealth, and social manipulation, all things rangers are meant to do. It also reflects how they're not confrontational people, preferring to shape situations to the point that even if conflict breaks out, they can decimate opponents without putting themselves in danger.
* Halloween 5: The Revenge of Michael Myers add to the creepy factor when Michael nonchalantly gets out of the car completely unscathed.
* Hannah Montana, of all places. Miley's fake boyfriend, Willis, introduces her to his 12-year old friend (who is older than Willis). He has been bragging to his friend about how hot Miley is, and his friend, while holding some sort of fun spray thing, says "Hubba hubba!" and sprays some white stuff all over her, with a shocked Miley gasping.
* He also had to concentrate on doing vlogs and Lets Plays for a few months after suffering a Jones fracture. This was caused by nothing more than setting his foot down wrong, giving him something of a reputation for having fragile bones. Ironically, Spoony's commentary for
* Heide's Tower of Flame is a common PVP hotspot mostly because the terrain effectively divides the entire area into a bunch of small arenas. The enemies are also easy to clear out, and the area is accessible right from the start of the game, making it very popular for players who have just started a
* Hamlet, the old king's ghost first appears on a foggy night. Which makes sense since they're in Denmark and the castle is probably pretty close to the sea.
* He's had power armor built for both Batwing vigilantes, one looking like a more armored version of the Batman Beyond suit.
* Godzilla (2014). In the same vein, Godzilla is awakened to specifically fight two kaiju endangering the Earth — and one is winged.
* Grey Wardens themselves are created by drinking a special cocktail of darkspawn blood and lyrium, which makes them immune to the
* Haruhi Suzumiya at least once before — but obviously no-one can tell.
* Hideto Matsumoto has become so iconic in the years after his death, that much of the merchandise sold today include that particular pattern.
* he is rescued from being stuck in time for two years, he is completely broken of this mentality. He says that when he was removed, it felt like he was fighting nonstop for centuries, but it was "bad fighting." As such, while he is now much more physically imposing (and less human-looking), he also lost his bloodlust for this. According to Higgs though, this may qualify to be a Jägergeneral.
* Helen A imposes this on all the citizens of Terra Alpha as part of her
* Halo: A fully charged Plasma Pistol shot can disable a vehicle momentarily. The Spartan Laser is also designed to be especially effective against heavy vehicles.
* He then proceeds to pretend to be a ringside announcer, until they both order him to leave.
* Grrl Power, though they have access to genetic engineering and thus often look just as alien as everyone else.

* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! going to ask Itsuki over it, but Itsuki's concerns over her ailing brother took precedence.
* Highlander appear in the pilot, but when footage shot for the pilot was used in a flashback in a later ep, Lambert was edited out because they couldn't afford to pay for a second appearance.
* Gravity Falls do the heavy thinking", and when his family got fed up with this attitude and cut him off, found himself without any serious skills to get by in the world.
* Highschool of the Dead: Saya dispatches a zombie in this manner early on.
* Good Omens, completely indigestible food which allows you to slim yourself down the terminal way. Then later on:
* gotta hit that D" (diamorphine — better known in our world as heroin), and Acele will dismiss it as everyone now just does "hunch", or B-hydroxy-phenothiazine, a drug she describes as 'ten times stronger and waaaaaay more lethal'. Even your Electrochemistry stat calls it 'the dark lord, put into chemical form' and refuses to suggest you use it. Phenothiazine is a drug that exists in real life as the stem from which the typical antipsychotics are derived - a class of drugs known for side effects that scare even heavy drug users that are sometimes combined with opioids to potentiate the effects. 'B-hydroxy' presumably comes from B-hydroxyfentanyl, a fentanyl analog commonly abused in Estonia. This fits thematically with the idea of it being a scarier version of heroin, but if it existed, b-hydroxy-phenothiazine would just be an antipsychotic.
* Guest from the Sea (Italian for "breath") allowing to stay underwater "as long as it is possible to stay without food", but refused to write the details down because of "malicious human nature" that will apply this knowledge to sink ships. But the scientist is optimistic and expects to rediscover the method eventually. Fast forward to the novel climax when a submarine is damaged by a just-discovered giant sea eel and is stuck at the bottom of Sargasso Sea. The researcher dives without any visible breathing apparatus, cuts the debris off the propellers and saves everybody. But in the aftermath he becomes gloomy and says that the world still isn't ready.
* Gorillaz sometimes acknowledge that they're cartoon characters; 2D once claimed that paternity suits from live-action women "don't stick because I don't have any DNA", and Murdoc shrugged off murder charges after the El Manana incident with "I'm a cartoon, mate. You'd have a hard time sticking anything on me. I don't even have fingerprints."
* Henry Danger, with a song dedicated to it in "Henry Danger: The Musical".
* Henson's Creature Shop Challenge, Gigi Edgley's wardrobe leaves very little to the imagination.
* Guest Host featured a cold open for most episodes, introducing this week's guest.
* Hen and Owl in particular sometimes act more like adults (though this may be due to their more pompous personalities), and Hen is an aunt, so she must have a sibling old enough to have chicks.
* Happens in reverse in one episode ("Angel One") where they come upon a planet where the women are the rulers and men are the servants. Riker dresses in a very thin and mostly mostly bare-chested tunic to get on the good side of the matriarch of the society.
* Guards! Guards! to be sacrificed voluntarily is a criminal offense...
* Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla II, Kazuma Aoki takes Azusa Gojo on a date on a flying bike-like device.
* "GREETERLINGS! THIS IS A GOOD-LOOKING BEARD YOU HAVE THERE, SIR!" —
* Harry Potter font used in the American editions of the books has become associated with the series, especially given the distinctive lighting-bolt tail on the P. The original British editions just used plain text on the covers.
* Hercules: The Legendary Journeys had the characters founding the Olympic Games. When they're trying to come up with a name, Salmoneus suggests "The Salmoneus Games." No one is amused.
* Greg News, once stated that Brazil was the only mostly developed country with tax exemption for the rich aside from Estonia, "and there's a pretty high probability that Estonia doesn't exist because no-one has ever gone there".

* Highlander episode but he ends up getting a seafood plate. “Fruits d’mer” is French for “fruits of the sea” and is raw seafood.
* Heart Core is like this, both to her actual younger sister Sukina, and to her sidekick Lutz.
* Hayate the Combat Butler material, Maria entered the school at 10 and graduated at 13. Nagi, Isumi and Sakuya are most of the way through their first year of High School, meaning that they were Child Prodigy material. Nagi doesn't even attend classes and is still considered one of the top students before Hayate comes along.
* Happy Heroes, the Global Leader states he's too hungry to decide whether he should diplomatic relations with Dog Planet or Cat Planet first. The ambassadors of both planets then force-feed him their respective planets' food of choice, resulting him throwing up.
* Heer general (one per 2k-4k men) was in his fifties. For contrast, while the average Soviet NCO was also in his forties or late 30s, Soviet Generals were all in their forties as well. This was thanks partly to the purges and prewar expansion of the Red Army, but largely to wartime promotions.
* Grange Hill: Mr Sutcliffe mis-spells one of his signs, directing new pupils around the school.
* Hamilton, before realizing that his successor, John Adams, will never be able to keep the union together.
* Henry & Verlin, retired prostitute Mabel finds her home ransacked by people who suspect her of abusing Verlin.
* grew infatuated with her teacher, jointly practicing astronomy and managing Hevelius' family brewing business.
* Godzilla 2000 called Orga, which eventually tries to swallow Godzilla to complete the process. During the attempted swallowing, Orga takes on more and more attributes of Godzilla.
* Hand in hand with other deviations, Jon makes more mistakes or just doesn't get to be as clever as in the novels, particularly in his leadership which—unlike
* Haley for the Order, due to a bit of fast talking when she first joined up. While at first she just wanted a larger share of the treasure, she grows into a second-in-command who can offer advice on sneaky tactics, making a nice counterpoint to Roy's clever but usually straight-forward plans.
* Harry Potter book, the Dursleys punish Harry for causing magical things to happen. Since they never told him he was a wizard, Harry just thinks that weird things inexplicably happen around him and doesn't understand why they're considered his fault.
* Heart of Darkness: During the attack on the Amigos' village by the Master's winged minions, Andy has to cross one of these, and, unsurprisingly, it comes crashing down thanks to a stray fireball.
* Goro Akechi's single mention of "delicious pancakes" led fans to declare pancakes his * highly be copied many times, but will degenerate each time it is copied. It also asks the question of what makes up a mind, the soul or the memories, when a boy receives all of his father's memories with interesting effects. Whether true mind-uploading is possible within the universe is still up at arms, as most of the attempts either don't try hard enough or don't involve humans in the first place.
* Heartbreak Ridge's character was changed to having first served in the 2nd Infantry Division in Korea, and joining the USMC afterwards. However it was the US Army Rangers who rescued American medical students in Grenada, not the Recon marines as portrayed in the film.
* Hazel and Dr. Watts both have deep-set voices, and both are lieutenants of the series'
* Gojira did not have a glimpse of the monster until about halfway through. Unusually, its first act is used not to develop single characters, but more the political and social context (heavily laden with subtext of the atomic tests and the effect they had in Japan).
* Henneko: The Hentai Prince and the Stony Cat becomes this after she wishes she didn't show her emotions so easily and obviously. Her actual feelings about things remain unchanged, but she's literally unable to make any emotional reaction at all.

* Grand Theft Auto V mission "I Fought the Law...", Franklin is tasked to taunt and sucker two rich kids into an impromptu drag race while Michael and Trevor disguise themselves as San Andreas Highway Patrol officers on police bikes in order to pull over and then steal the rare sports cars for their client.
* Héctor Garza was the one who turned Perro Aguayo Jr. evil in
* Henson's passing also ended plans for a "Pig of the '90s" multi-media campaign that would've used a storyline about Miss Piggy breaking up with Kermit as a way to drum up interest about all the other planned Muppet projects going on at the same time.
* God of Death (Warhammer-Warcraft crossover), a Space Marine (with a Space Marine character) who picked up a nightelf, a bloodelf, a highelf, two human females and even a forsaken (undead) elf, almost all bearing romantic feelings towards him, without Avarian noticing ANYTHING (being a Space Marine, he just picked them up because he thought they would be useful on his quest, he himself is totally unaware of the emotion called 'love' and, much unlike his companions think, does not bear the 'male weak-minded crave-for-female-flesh'-lust) This is going to be fun.
* Good Omens who works as a television war correspondent who has an uncanny knack for showing up BEFORE the war starts...
* Goku has a version of this trope when he realizes that the only way to match Vegeta who greatly outclasses him is to use a Kaioken X3. He was explicitly told by King Kai to never go past a double since his body couldn't handle it and he could explode. Having no choice, Goku braces himself for the pain.
* Good Eats where he spends several days living off foraged island vegetation, completely unaware that just beyond the trees where he's getting his coconuts one of the major cities of the Hawaiian islands lies within walking distance.
* Halo. In the post-war era, this was then mainly replaced by the wars the Covenant remnant have been fighting with both the Swords of Sanghelios and the UNSC.
* Halo, the Unified Earth Government and its various bodies play with this in a number of different ways:
* "Guy In Philosophy Class Needs To Shut The Fuck Up" has a great quote from the professor of the class:
* Hellfire is the evil sorcerer Quan Chi who slaughtered Scorpion's family and clan.
* Hermit Guru: A particularly wise character who lives in a remote location.
* Greek Fire was susceptible to this trope. Spontaneously igniting on contact with water and being used as a naval weapon would tend to have that effect.
* Happend to Dave Karofsky after "Never Been Kissed". The amount of "Karofsky rapes Kurt" fanfics after that episode are too numerous to count.
* GTFO is considered to be the ultimate self-imposed challenge. It requires players to use all the tools they have at their disposal, and a stealth-only challenge is impossible due to the security alarm checks that are required.
* he can decay things that he didn't touch directly if they're touching something else he decayed.
* Haruhi Suzumiya's Kyon often falls into this during his narration. Yuki will often provide one or two syllable answers to rather important questions, be prompted (usually by Kyon) into giving longer answers, and the longer answers end up in this incomparable form.
* Hannah Montana, with a radio host being informed that his wife is in labour.
* Grimm. As the Blutbad (werewolf) Monroe explains to Nick, the Grimm, while human children are told stories of all the different monsters who make up the Wesen world who will come to get them if they are bad, Wesen children are told the same kind of stories about the Grimms.
* Harry Potter: the eponymous daemon Morion tells the inner circle members of the Tzeench's coven he founded that while making and using a nuke takes a lot of muggles, the magical equivalent, e.g. the rite that sunk Atlantis, can be performed by a single wizard.
* Hajime no Ippo gives a statistical breakdown of the Kamogawa boxers. While World Champion Takamura Mamoru has excellent stats in all categories, the Jacks of All Stats are Aoki and Kimura, who do not excel in any category. This is especially true of Kimura, who is noted as a stylish and effective boxer with no weaknesses, but also no strengths. Kimura invents a finishing blow to help him with this issue, but even still he is considered (and considers himself) the most balanced of the crew.

* Heel–Face Turn. He's only really seen when his adventures intersect with the Reds and Blues, but he's been going on his own quest for the alien sword and bringing justice and order to various colonies out of the UNSC's reach.
* Goku in general takes an instant liking to people who give him food, and for that matter, an instant dislike to those who take food away.
* Harrison Bergeron when Harrison tears off his handicaps, straps "guaranteed to support 5000 pounds"
* He also heavily draws upon the Quick Draw, as was primarily shown in the aforementioned sign-shooting distraction. There, Jesper shot the signs so quickly that the guards
* Goo Goo Gai Pan", which ends with director David Silverman giving the audience a tutorial on how to draw Bart.
* Godzilla (1998), Godzilla was given a very different stance (like modern reconstructions of theropods instead of the upright man-in-a-suit classic Godzilla is based on) and a prominent chin. In fact, the new design was such a departure from the norm that it was later reused for a different giant monster character, simply called Zilla, which appeared alongside a more traditional-looking Godzilla in certain media. However, because of copyright reasons, this design is still used to represent both the 1998 Godzilla and Zilla, with the distinction between the two characters being muddled by legalities.
* Heralds of Valdemar, which is something like polo, had invented by then.
* Green are for Consular Jedi, who prefer to teach, heal, or make peace.
* Great Teacher Onizuka and tries to kiss Onizuka, but he's too honorable to go through with it, wherein he knocks himself unconscious.
* Harley Davidson and the Marlboro Man, the protagonists steal bags of what they think is cash from a bank owned by a corporation that is trying to acquire and then demolish a bar owned by their friend and build a skyscraper office building on the land. When they open the bags, they find nothing but a highly addictive and lethal new drug. The bank and the drug empire they're in business with want it back and send their best assassins after the heroes.
* has them all beat. In turn, this inspired the fan artists to draw her with even bigger hair.
* Graham, much to Jean's chagrin when he finally straight-out tells her so.
* Hatoful Boyfriend, and they live longer, though pigeons still have decidedly shorter lifespans than humans.
* Guiding Light Lucy Cooper is raped by Brent Lawrence, her father, brother, and boyfriend kidnap him and beat him up.
* Here, where an illegal drag race is cut short by one of the cars pulping itself on a tank.
* Hardboiled Detective is always seen wearing his longcoat and fedora.
* Hazing incoming freshmen on the last day of school was frowned upon in 1993 (as it still is today), and the movie seems to toy with the audience's modern day sensibilities whenever it's depicted. But in the film's 1976 setting, it's seen by the characters as just another traditional rite of passage.
* Gulf features a secret group of superintelligent humans who are engaged in a number of long term plans, including a breeding program to increase their own numbers as well as become a physically distinct species no longer capable of interbreeding with homo sapiens.
* Hercules (2014), Cotys is revealed to be the real villain, and Rhesus is actually a rebel leader fighting back against the tyrant.
* heroes. When Dipper and Mabel are about to take the bus home at the end of the summer, the driver says that Mabel can't bring her pet pig because animals aren't allowed on the bus. Grunkle Stan makes a show of putting on his brass knuckles and Grunkle Ford lifts his coat to show off his gun. The driver decides there's no problem with letting a pig ride on the bus.

* Heightened stellar activity can interfere with FTL communications in the
* Having low trion causes low powered weapons and brittle shields in
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! plot and having even more over-the-top fight scenes compared to its predecessors has left the few seasons after it as part of this trope.
* Hamish and Dougal, when Hamish and Dougal are in the lavatory together. Mrs. Naughtie knocks on the door.
* Happy Endings, Jane and Alex's older sister Brooke (who had never been seen before this episode) is getting married, and everyone remarks on how soon it is. While it seems clear that Elliot and Brooke do actually love each other, it comes out at the wedding that Brooke is pregnant, and wanted to get married before that was obvious. She even refers to it as 'my shotgun wedding.'
* Gulliver's Travels, who use down-to-Earth logic to dictate everything and tend to look down on any one of their Yahoos (A term they use for the uncivilized humans living on their island) when they form an emotional bond with Gulliver.
* Hatoful Boyfriend (with the protagonist musing that it doesn't suit him), and subjecting him to a pair of Christmas-obsessed gag characters who insist on decorating his office and making him wear a Santa hat.
* Harry's short hair was grounds for people believing he was a criminal or disowned by his relatives, and one of his first acts after deciding to better fit in is to gain
* Guyver as part of their goals to create a powerful bio-weapons platform. Humanity was the end result, a base form that could be adapted into specialised combatants like Zoanoids and Zoalords. The experiment was aborted near completion when they gave a base level human one of the bio-armour units that worn by the Creators themselves and it turned out not only far more powerful than expected but completely immune to their telepathic control.
* Grey Knights's novels, but it was the force halberd that is usually associated with them.
* He does run for a taxi at one point with balletic skips and hops, though.
* Hero Factory went through a retool in its final wave, when the Heroes were made into standard LEGO Minifigures that rode giant mechs and fought with huge monsters, which were actually standard-sized toys.
* Grammar Nazi— YOU! YES, YOU! HOW DARE YOU PUT A PREPOSITION AT THE END OF A SENTENCE?!
* Heracles is usually portrayed in mythology with a beard too. There's not enough room to explain why
* Gunnerkrigg Court, prior to Ysengrin's first appearance in-comic, he's referred to by one of his followers as "the very nice man".
* .Hack//Roots, let alone its broadcast. In other words, it really was that random and went away just as quickly (and randomly).
* Golden Saints, are these as well. Each has a heavily militaristic society, thriving on conflict and warfare. They are known to engage in conflicts with each other for both the favor of Sheogorath and simply as an outlet for their aggression.
* Grave of the Fireflies, so unlike most examples, we see her slowly deteriorate over the course of the story.
* Half-Life 1, which show the Black Mesa Incident from the POV of a security guard, an HECU Marine, and two scientists, respectively.
* Gorgeous Period Dress: Clothing in history is portrayed as almost all grand, no matter the situation or station of the people.
* Gloryhammer, Zargothrax is mentioned as having corrupted the Knights of Crail and turned their Grand Master, Proletius, from one of Angus' closest allies into a willing servant of Evil.
* Gundam Wing are or are derived from numbers in German, French, Latin or Chinese. These include (but are not limited to) Colonel "Treize" ("13" in French), "Quatre" ("Four" in French), Colonel "Zechs" (homophone for "6" in German), Lady Une (similar to the French or Latin "One"), and "Wu" Fei ("5" in Chinese), among a great many others.

* Heavyweight Champ that finally got it right in 1991 and launched them as a genre.
* Heir to the Bruce Quest: The main character, Rhiannon often mixes up her food into bizarre dishes much to the shock to the people she meets for the first time.
* Harry Reid (D-NV): Senate Majority Leader (2007-2015), U.S. Senator from Nevada (1987-2017), U.S. Representative from Nevada's 1st district (1983-1987), Lieutenant Governor of Nevada (1971-1975).
* Gravity Falls has a story where an ugly old witch tries to blackmail Stan into kissing her; instead, Mabel offers to give her a "Love Makeover" so she can get a guy of her own. She ends up... still ugly, but less terrifying, and in the end, she is last seen with a handsome young rock climber who had been climbing by her cave.
* Guardsmen celebrating the withdrawal on an Eldar invasion get a little too rowdy and use some improper language with regards to a Holy Saint. The Commissariat and Ministorum agree that the proper penance is to spend the next four months rebuilding various destroyed or damaged churches across the planet.
* Gulnar, a deranged, giggly, disheveled, Welsh pagan shaman, who preferred to raise undead or magical creatures to use as his mooks, liked to hide in the background of events, and tended to "flight" rather than "fight" reactions when things started to go wrong.
* HERZ: Downplayed. Due to a being older, married and a mother, Asuka is nicer, less harsh and less mean that she used to when she was thirteen... although she is still pretty hot-tempered.
* Harry Potter. To wit, when the Gryffindor Chasers got Harry caught up in a prank that forced him to wear female clothes for a week, he proceeded to milk it to the hilt, and left many of the male students at Hogwarts questioning their sexuality by the time he was freed from the jinx that caused this.
* Gustav Holst, despite writing mainly folk-influenced works, including two great suites for military band, is known best for the far more modernistic "Planets" suite.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets pure blood wizards have against Muggle borns. In the film Hermione already knows what the word means.
* High-Class Gloves's trend, a fashionable woman feels completely naked without gloves.
* Heath Ledger, remarked on hearing about it, "Oh, that's terrible. I warned them." His criticism of the higher-ups who had prescribed said pills to Ledger after he got the role did not go unnoticed; Nicholson may not have known Ledger, but he knew those pills.
* "High Octane": Young adults perform dangerous automobile stunts in a beach parking lot at the start of the episode. One driver is sitting on the roof of his car as he uses his feet to maneuver the steering wheel when an electrical wire (connected to a string of lights) cuts clean through his neck at 40 miles per hour.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers as cherry blossoms are one of Japan's national flowers.
* Haunted Halloween 86 The Curse Of Possum Hollow fall into the basement of the farmhouse, they get out of the room they end up in by punching/kicking a hole in the wall.
* Henry magazine cartoons (before she starred in a popular comic book line.)
* Have Space Suit – Will Travel, Kip damages himself so badly trying to set up the homing beacon on Pluto that it takes the Vegans (folks from Vega, not folks that eschew animal-based products) months to rebuild his body.
* Green Lantern look down on Earth—partly because of Hal Jordan's actions as Parallax. Many others have never even heard of the planet or of the species that inhabits it.
* Hate Plus: Mute is revealed to have been forced into this in a coup. And depending on the route, she commits suicide this way.
* Godzilla vs. Kong, and eggs Kong into jumping through the second hole to fight.
* he was the son of Cowboy Bill Watts at the time. He was a crappy wrestler, didn't have a great physique, and was nearly booed out of the building whenever he appeared. The sad part is that he did eventually develop some talent in the ring and a decent look, but was so notorious for his nepotistic push that he still couldn't get over and promoters were afraid to push him very hard.

* Helping Granny Cross the Street: The only examples you'll see in modern media involves the old lady never wanting to cross in the first place, or crankily belting the hero with their cane or handbag. Occasionally the straight version still shows up in commercials and music videos with a "good deeds, pass them on" theme.
* He pulls this again during the Election Battles, in his match against Hitoyoshi Zenkichi over the snake pit. After the battle forces their foothold halway down that pit, Kumagawa abruptly concedes the match to Zenkichi... then keeps attacking him anyway. By surrendering, Kumagawa turns this official match into a private quarrel that the Election Committee can't interfere with, and no one can safely jump down into the pit without making the foothold fall all the way down into the venomous snakes.
* Grand Theft Auto III, You Scream", which the protagonist must park a Mr. Whoopee ice cream truck with a bomb inside (and the 'jeengle-jeengle music turned on) near a group of rival gang members, then run away and blow it up.
* Hanna: The Utrax girls are teenagers who a CIA program had "adopted" as infants to train as assassins.
* Greece from France's. This becomes most obvious when he's shown with Japan: he's made one or two sexual advances towards him (which may or may not include actual sex), but most signs of his genuine affection for him are less centered on sex and actually pretty sweet (seriously, trying to speak Japanese? Taking all of Japan's snacks after the other nations ignore them? Being worried about his hair looking unkempt to Japan?).
* Godzilla 2000, the monster was the flying saucer, until it got out of it to provide a traditional giant monster battle.
* Goku's father Bardock was just as much of a murderous warrior as the rest of the Saiyans, but he still fell in love with Gine and her gentle personality, and fathered two sons with her. This was unusual for Saiyans, who don't typically operate as a family, usually seeing their mates and children more as friends who can take care of themselves. Bardock also had a brief stint as * Gone with the Wind. One of the cases where it doesn't help the protagonists.
* he spent 4.5 billion years punching through a diamond wall simply for the chance to save her from death..
* Higurashi Rei by Rena. The following punches to the rest of the cast, while not as extreme, also fit this trope.
* Herman's Head. Angel, the sensitivity part of Herman's personality, floats up in the air when Herman realizes he's in love with his bosses' daughter.
* Hamilton turns it into a central theme as its principal characters struggle to define and control their legacy. Both Adams and Hamilton were also "forgotten" Founding Fathers in spite of their zeal and accomplishments, whose profiles were raised dramatically by the plays, and had a tendency to piss off everyone around them. (Including each other, in fact; "despised" would be a mild way of describing their mutual animosity.)
* Hack/Slash in hopes of reversing the aging process; when the slashers escape, "slasher serum", which induces the transformation into a slasher upon death, is the only thing to come of this research. Cristy used a vial on herself after being mortally wounded by an escaped slasher. This had the side-effect of making her go absolutely crazy — they don't call them "slashers" for nothing.
* Gundam F91, the title machine does it. It is caused by thin layers of armor ablating off the machine to shed heat, combined with an almost insane speed, creating the impression of an afterimage.
* Goodbye My Rose Garden and tells him that she didn't cross an ocean simply to be mocked. The noblewoman Alice Douglas witnesses this outburst, and later cites Hanako's unshakeable will as the very thing that made her decide to hire her.
* Han Solo and Princess Leia might have moments like these only under threat of carbonite freezing, death by stormtrooper, or in post-I-can't-believe-we-survived-that-elation, but they do have them.

* Goofy Print Underwear. Everyone's horrified but Pierce, who laughs, "Get it?"
* Hagakure trips over this, though he isn't the culprit. He points out the message written in blood naming Fukawa as the killer... only, among other things, the magazine was hidden in the rack at the time the body was found, and Asahina had kicked him out of the crime scene before he could take more than a look, so how did he know about it?.
* Happens to Detritus and Ruby as their relationship is developed through the
* Heinz Dilemma, which concerns a man whose wife desperately needs a drug which a local pharmacist has developed. However, the pharmacist is trying to make money off the drug and is charging far more for it than it costs to make. In the end, the man can only scrounge up half of the money which the pharmacist explicitly refuses to accept so, and having failed to obtain the drug through legitimate means, he simply breaks into the pharmacy and steals the drug.
* Halo have a black market built around human soap operas, sitcoms, and the like. This probably has more to do with them being tasked to monitor UNSC communications due to their superiority at learning things (like human languages) quickly compared to the rest of the Covenant, rather than any fondness of humanity.
* Godspeed You! Black Emperor's Lift Your Skinny Fists Like Antennas To Heaven:
* Heather Langenkamp. On top of this, she has to cope with the fact that these teenagers are being locked up and sedated because of the belief of their mental state, which is the opposite of a good idea taking into account the circumstances, so her dialogue could have been injected with a little more genuine empathy and worry (her previous experience should have paid off in this regard).
* Hagane is a robotic ninja powered by a pair of ancestral statues, and many of the enemies also use a combination of sorcery and technology.
* Green Book was nominated for (and ultimately won) the Golden Globe and Academy Award for Best Supporting Actor.
* He displays some dancing moves for his fellow villains on two occasions. The first time Lothor orders him to to improve morale, but the second time he does so on his own accord and clearly enjoys it.
* Heart In Hand but when the fic grew unexpectedly popular outside of the hockey RPF fandom with readers who didn't know that Crosby and Ovechkin were real people, the author changed the characters' names and teams to make it more accessible. It's still quite obvious to hockey-knowledgeable readers just who the Canadian hockey prodigy named "Darryl Colton" and his rambunctious Russian rival named "Aleksey Kuznetsov" really are, however.
* Greg "Jreg" Guevara A few months after the discord dilemma, he made a livestream where he singlehandedly "purged" individual members of his server, before deleting it altogether.
* GTA: San Andreas. C.J. eventually admits "that guy's like the devil".
* Green Lantern (2011): Made and set in 2011, but has flashbacks to the protagonist's adolescence set in 1993.
* Headless Horseman, a bear trap buried in the road shreds the tyres of the teens' van. They later discover the woods are lined with bear traps to stop the sacrifices escaping. Tiffany is falls on one and is decapitated.
* Happiness Is Mandatory: Pretend that you're completely okay with your mediocre living conditions or else...
* Hillary Clinton. The primaries turned into a protracted contest with Obama only reaching a majority on the final day.
* Gunnerkrigg Court terrible. Boxbot, is that you? Are you trying to exact pity from these good tropers? You're an embarrassment. I'm so disappointed in you.
* He begins as a cold-blooded killer before having a spiritual awakening and becoming a Martial Pacifist
* Happens to the female protagonist in the clip for White Town's "Your Woman".
* Halloween Episode had all the characters try to out-prank each other.
* Grand Canyon: Secretary Dee had a one-night stand with her boss, attorney Mack. The aftermath of this encounter drives Dee's character arc in the film.
* Hellboy II: The Golden Army, to the point that when the forest god dies it creates a forest compared in the novelisation to Eden - which humans then pollute and destroy.

* Glenn Ford had originally signed on as Marshall White; however, poor health forced him to withdraw. The role went to Harry Carey, Jr., who was originally cast as a wagonmaster.
* Haruhi Suzumiya: Kyon's little sister is never mentioned by name, not that it matters since all the other characters care about is how irresistibly cute she is. When Kyon was preparing to for his island trip and found her hiding in his duffel bag, he was understandably upset, given how dangerous it was. But Asahina and the others took one look at her and were more than happy to let her come with them.
* Gunnar also uses a huge bowie knife, but it doesn't get much usage until the end.
* HeroQuest Also, any stat can be used to augment any roll provided you can make a case for it to the GM, so your "love for kidnapped princess" score gives you a bonus to fight the dragon, and your "hatred of nuns" score makes it easier for you to kick one in the face.
* Happy Heroes (Season 13 confirmed to have a March 2020 release date)
* got their parents taken away/arrested for eating some of their Kraft Macaroni and Cheese.
* God Test, in which Dionysos completely fails said test, despite being a real deity.
* Hawkworld attempts to explain the alien Hawkman's reason by revealing that Thanagarians originally used their own weapons that are archaic in design before adapting to more advanced weaponry provided by one of many planets they've conquered. Katar Hol is the only Thanagarian who prefers his people's own weaponry, which makes him stand out.
* Hard to Be a God Arkanar. So what does Don Reba do? He gets 30 of the most beefy, fat guards, armed only with clubs, nets, and shields. They overwhelm him (despite taking several casualties), then capture him, and bring to Don Reba.
* Hajime no Ippo, the main character has a match against Takuma Saeki, who is better known as The Speed Star. During the match, Seaki resorted to using jabs to swell up Ippo's eye so that he would be unable to see out of it then using this new blindspot as a way to help him deliver surprise attacks.
* Gunlances are similar to lances, but exchange its counterpart's defensive prowess for devastating attack power with special cartridges that set off explosions when striking.
* Halloween Episode "Full Bars", Louise tries to thwart a gang of teens terrorizing the local trick-or-treater kids. With a stolen cell phone she texts them in the guise of a girl classmate inviting them to skinny dip at a pool, where she laces their underwear with packets of hot sauce.
* Happy Endings's Brad and Jane were this to every other couple in the show. While they had conflict, their marriage was portrayed as healthy and loving.
* Hero: The Guardian Smurf, Hero is exiled from the Smurf Village when as a young Smurfling he loses control of his Ki powers and beats Jokey to an inch of his life because he called Hero a "power-mad freak". Hero spent 100 years in the Other World learning how to use his powers wisely, returning only to rescue his fellow Smurfs from their first encounter with Gargamel, at which point he was allowed back in the village.
* Goths Have It Hard: If someone's a goth, emo, or similar, that means that they've had bad experiences or have a serious psychological problem such as depression.
* Gruntz: when a grunt carries a sword and is forced to walk around non-stop for longer periods of time, you can hear him saying this: "My name is Grunt Montoya. You killed my father. Prepare to die!"
* Going Native used his Roman military training to plan what became the first successful bid for independence by a Roman territory. Though for the most part, this system worked. Conquered lands became increasingly Romanized over the decades, and Roman citizenship eventually extended almost all residents of the Roman Empire (aside from slaves).
* Hellevator: The Gates of Hell is an elevator that only goes one way: down.
* Hani And Ishu's Guide To Fake Dating: Hani and Ishu fake a relationship for different reasons, while over time they fall in love then become a couple for real.

* Hanna-Barbera had Kid Comet (white guy), Moleculad (black guy), and Elektra (white girl).
* Grand Theft Auto, which not only updated monthly with new "news reports" over the course of 2001, but also revealed snippets of the game's backstory in the months leading up to the game's events.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince creates a feeling of impending doom but also shows the cast's fighting spirit and loyalty.
* "Hairicane": When it seemed the Air Force would defeat the hairicane, Chet Ubetcha announced "We're saved!". Then the hairicane defeated the Air Force, prompting Chet to say "And by saved, I mean
* "Gridlock": A major reveal is that, due to a plague 24 years before, everyone in the upper city of New New York is dead, leaving the people sealed below in the undercity and the motorway the only people alive on New Earth besides the Face of Boe and Novice Hame.
* Grave Peril is Harry's most consistent opponent across the book, but the actual mastermind is the vampire Bianca.
* Hilariously enough, the Dwarven language is literally just English
* Godzilla (2014). The Mutos are able to emit EMPs thanks to their absorbing of radiation. It doesn't directly harm organic creatures, but the force of their footsteps still creates a powerful shockwave of its own that can send humans flying.
* Hack/Slash Dr. Gross cutting Cassie's toes off one by one. He got three before she was rescued.
* God of War, even the rocks are Large Hams! Kratos spends most of the time killing everything, but when he speaks...
* Harry Potter and how they can survive without magic and desperately tries to understand how technology works by disassembling muggle devices and enchanting them.
* Hey Arnold, Gerald is always the one telling it, and Sid always helps.
* Heroic BSoD (and getting back his flight status) he eventually had another crash that he survived only due to having previously lost both legs: His artificial legs were pinned in the plane, and it took a considerable time to free them. While walking away from the wreckage, he noticed his legs didn't seem to be working properly. It turned out both lower leg sections had been crushed. Had they been his original legs, he would likely have bled to death before he could have been freed.
* GURPS along with the advantage "Healing". Interestingly having actual medical knowledge is useful when using magic to heal a wound.
* Hellsing, Seras Victoria's berserker mode could be counted as her Super-Powered Evil Side.
* Half Identical Twins. Ellen just lives to tease Elliot, but God help anyone who actually hurts his feelings.
* Henry VIII bursts in on the matchmaking consultation of the Earl of Arran and the infant Mary, Queen of Scots, and declares war on Scotland. One of the dating agency employees notes that someone needs changing and she doesn't think it's the baby.
* Goliath's flaw is his anger and need for revenge, especially if someone in his clan is hurt. Such as in ''Deadly Force" when he mistakenly believed that Elisa was nearly killed by the gangster Dracon and Goliath ruthlessly hunted him down and in "Hunter's Moon", his desire to kill the ones who almost killed his daughter Angela overruled his common sense.
* Godzilla vs. SpaceGodzilla and start targeting them, prompting MOGUERA's crew to comment that he's much smarter than they thought.
* Hesher) is implied to be the personification of a son's emotional turmoil following the death of his mother.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince volunteers to replace him. During the match she talks about things like interesting clouds and whether one of the players suffers from something called "Loser's Lurgy", but never about the action or the score of the game.

* Gödel, Escher, Bach: An Eternal Golden Braid has the "Sonata for An Unaccompanied Achilles", which consists of Achilles' half of a telephone conversation with the Tortoise.
* Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone. (It does beg the question of how no one noticed his absence.)
* Heretics of Dune . Past retirement age in a time that sees humans living greatly lengthened lives due to the Spice (which he himself eschews), he is called back to duty by the Bene Gesserit and spends the rest of the book demonstrating why the Sisterhood still thought him highly valuable.
* Gundam Build Fighters FF, battles at Summer Shizuoka are, just like in Try, run at Damage Level A. By the end of Summer Shizuoka, both Charlotte's Invoke and Souji's Guilty Gear are trashed.
* God of Evil (though they don't see it that way), but since he never actually says or does anything apart from moving his jaw it's unclear whether this doctrine actually comes from him or he's just a giant stone head and The Cultists are crazy enough to think he is giving them these messages.
* Go Princess Go, where a chef working for the South Korean president is put into the body of Queen Cheorin in the Joseon period.
* Half-Life 2 are routinely beaten by the Civil Protection or rounded up and turned into stalkers and otherwise experimented on by The Combine, "our benefactors".
* have the same problem, being seen as mainly for children. Adult science enthusiasts have to settle for books, magazines and TV programs like Nova, which don't offer the hands-on experiences that museum exhibits do.
* has a job at a transvestite cafe so he can support his ailing mother.
* Hellgate: The way in and out of Hell is a pair of doors meant to look scary.
* Harry Potter, Katie takes on an unconventionally sexual version of this role in Harry's harem, showing concern for Harry and Ginny's physical and emotional well-being even before she becomes an active part of the relationship and offering Harry emotional support during their private sessions.
* Heroes, he is confined to a wheelchair, and later he has his entire memory erased (at the order of her Father).
* He Really Can Act: An actor is praised for demonstrating very good acting ability.
* He still does quite a bit even after he starts fighting. At the end of the Unlimited Blade Works route, right before the final battle, Shirou decides to get pumped up for the fight... by cooking everyone a gorgeous dinner. Also, in
* Hayate the Combat Butler have a go at it while a poor guy tries to ask Chiharu out on a date in chapter 391. About as insane as it sounds.
* Grimjack has John Gaunt aka Jim Twilly making his entrance in a dark purple greatcoat with gold embroidery. The coat is later shown to hold about 50 lbs. of guns and edged weapons when he is busted by robot cops.
* Hemlock and spends ten years asleep in mourning. Eventually poor Tristan ends up her new familiar.
* Harley Quinn (2019) named "Pamela Isley", her middle name in the series is "Candace", not "Lilian".
* Green Lantern foe named the Harlequin had a weighted mandolin that served as a club (and a vaulting pole!).
* Hawkeye, in Matt Fraction's book, keeps tangling with large numbers of the tracksuit mafia.
* Hans Christian Andersen exist, and the narrator couldn't perceive them because he was wholly unfit for his position.
* Guts and Sass: An Anti-Epic, Litin, is an empowered, self-confident masochist. He likes to get beat up, in and out of sex, and no one makes a big deal about it.
* Grixis, one of the shards of Alara, is in a successful Zombie Apocalypse, albeit with necromancers and demons at the forefront, caused by the crapping out of two types of magic good at fighting them off. Humanity, or what's left of it, is reduced to a few isolated redoubts amidst a corpse-scape haunted by the walking dead.
* go onward past the recreation of the Universe and the birth and death of everyone in it. Twice.

* Highlander. There's also the whole problem of living your life worrying about other immortals trying to kill you.
* Happy Tree Friends he tries to help. He's also shown as being quite sociopathic, for instance in "Better Off Bread" where he ignores Giggles falling to her death just so he can make sure he doesn't overcook the titular bread. Despite this, everyone treats him as a genuine hero.
* Grease, first written in 1971, is one of the first things people think of when they think of the 50s.
* HERZ: Every so often HERZ -the organization the main cast works for- has to deal with UN Inspectors and Auditors overseeing them, examining their accounts and records and poking their noses where they do not belong.
* Hiding in a Hijab: A character wears face-concealing Muslim clothing to blend in a crowd.
* Halo there is the Flood Key Mind, the end result of a collection of Graveminds coming together after an entire planet's ecosystem has been devoured along with Forerunner tech being added onto it to increase its processing power. Each Key Mind increased the intelligence of the Flood with each planet infected, making it more and more dire for the Forerunners to combat.
* Hicks and performing slightly evil deeds for the greater good (like knocking another wizard out to free them from possession).
* Hetalia: Axis Powers in one strip where France wears a boring grey inform instead of his usual one, when England questions why France explains that French army's colorful garb made it ridiculously easy for the Italians to aim at them.
* Halo 4 after his ship falls apart before he can reach the escape pods. Fortunately this time he has small thrusters on his suit he can use to slow his fall a bit.
* got in trouble when he drove two laps in a race with a shattered left femur.
* Godzilla vs. Hedorah, the pollution monster Hedorah, is shown killing unfortunate people in numerous different ways as he seeks out new sources of pollution to feed on, this method being one of them. Hedorah is able to fire concentrated jets of sulphuric acid vapour from his body which reduce anyone unlucky enough to be caught by the jets to nothing but bones on the ground.
* "Greedy for Tweety" features several hospital hijinks between Tweety, Sylvester, and Hector after their chase ends up in traffic. At the end of the episode, the three of them are released, only for them to start running in the streets again. Nurse Granny, who had just checked them out, simply sighs "Que sera sera" as she prepares to check them back in.
* He was foiled and the research base was nuked by another band of superhumans.
* her son, even buying the "prosthetic" excuse for Probe's robot arm. Yaya, on the other hand, immediately recognized them from behind.
* He's showing signs of learning to control his powers; particularly * Gremlins 2: The New Batch) and those who would rather have the darkly comic but largely straight-faced angle of the original. Finding someone with an equally positive opinion of both is fairly rare.
* Glencoe Masscare was performed by the English-Scottish crown toward the MacDonalds of Glencoe, who had been a month late in making an oath of loyalty to the King after the First Jacobite Rebellion. However, other clans had outright refused to take the oath at all, but faced no such punishment, as the MacDonalds were merely intended to be an example to the others, and were singled out for being an easy, weak target, and ancestral rivals to Clan Campbell, who were the crown's Highland loyalists.
* Heidi Lovelace featured a sign reading "SOCIAL NETWORK A BITCH A SLUT A PSYCHO OH YEAH AND HEIDI."
* Green Aesop when it's really an aesop about something entirely different.
* Gods of Rome, a mobile game, oftentimes seems more based in Greek mythology than Roman. Of the God characters, only Vulcan goes by his Roman name. The majority of Roman characters are the Champion class (consisting mostly of notable opponents or Rome) and a few Demigods. The rest seem to go by their Greek names.

* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law) wings. Other characters such as Peanut and Birdgirl have metallic wings (that still do nothing).
* hard First is when Rainbow Dash trying to get her to join in making the tornado brings up a pretty brutal bullying incident from her foalhood. Second is when some ponies laugh at her wing speed test, sending her running off as she cries her eyes out. And then, after she gives it her all to improve her performance by training extensively, she takes the test again only to find out that the improvement she's made isn't nearly enough and once more runs off in tears. In the end, she ultimately still tries to help out with the tornado and overcomes her fears. She receives praise from Dash and all the ponies, reverting her back to her old self, but with a good deal more confidence.
* Guenevere by (of course) Lancelot towards Queen Guenevere. She can choose to encourage these sentiments or not.
* Gohan's screentime can be summarized thusly. Four years old, kidnapped by screaming crazies twice in one day, learning second-hand that his father was dead, gets abandoned in the wilderness for months, then goes through
* Happy Tree Friends remains the only acting credit for everyone on the show, as they were mainly animators or crew members.
* he froze up and they had to call the fire department to get him down. and makes a perfect dive, getting into the water in time to save Tommy when he falls in.
* Greyhawk that really took the cake, as it had the concept that real estate on the alignment-based Outer Planes could be moved around based on the nature of the residents. This served to explain why gods were often too busy to meddle more in affairs on the Prime Material Plane. It also explained cosmic conflicts like the Blood War, which was really all the fiends fighting each other to absorb each other's planes and thus create a single "Hell". More often than not, the powers of Good just egged them on because it kept the fiends occupied.
* Gold Rush!: During a season 5 episode, Dave Turin bets against Kevin over the quantity of gold in a particular cleanout. Dave loses and must wear an apron while making pancakes.
* Half-Life: Full Life Consequences," revealing that he is Henry Freeman's father and this is part of this Full Life Consequences series.
* He ends up fighting the Hokage, who as a desperation tactic attempts a technique that will draw both of their souls into a demon's stomach, there to continue fighting forever
* Happy Heroes, he thinks he's one of the actors and complains about the quality of his costume before the monster angrily shouts that it isn't a costume.
* He was also responsible for "chortle," although the modern usage is different from the way he used it — "a cross between a snort and a chuckle".
* Harriet Tubman train and cannily retreated into enemy territory where they could use a safer station.
* Happens from time to time in scale models. Most common are schematics whose forced perspective makes it impossible to tell which direction a part is supposed to be oriented, but early Revell mid-00s Ford Mustang kits had the interior schematic printed twice and another major assembly not at all.
* GURPS has given stats for everything but a worldship (though it does get a name check).
* Gravity Falls: In "Irrational Treasure", Quentin Trembley: "we appear to be trapped in some sort of crate-shaped box!"
* Have His Carcase. The death merely looked like it had been delayed in that case, but it was still enough to get the police looking for an alibi for the completely wrong time.
* High-Five Left Hanging: A character tries to get another person to high five them, but the other person just leaves them hanging.
* GUN×SWORD towards the very end do you even get the feeling he might actually be evil, and it's so brief that it's still hard to believe.
* Han Solo, Obi-Wan Kenobi (in his youth), Luke Skywalker, and Anakin Skywalker can also be considered popular with ladies. All males except Palpatine and Dooku.
* Halo 2, the Master Chief dives out of Cairo Station with a bomb larger than himself and falls into the engine of a Covenant Carrier, detonates the bomb, and falls again to land on a UNSC ship that is minuscule by comparison.

* Halko Momoi are sometimes credited to Under17, even songs made before the band even existed or long after they disbanded.
* Guardromon Mooks can fire a flurry of bullets from their hands to attack.
* Half-Blood Prince, Crabbe and Goyle take the Polyjuice Potion many times to pose as first year girls, in order to allow Malfoy to repair the Vanishing Cabinet.
* Go Mad from the Revelation: Learning the truth about something causes a person to go insane.
* Help! - the Beatles pull up to their homes, and the only girls around are a couple of middle-aged housewives, one of whom needs to be coaxed to wave.
* Harry exclaims this upon seeing that the character after the Philosopher's Stone is not at all whom he expected.
* Gundam Senki rules. An English-language release was planned, but fell through.
* Happened betwixt the two again at the end of "Prom-ise Her Anything." Max drew Elmyra as his date for the Acme Looniversity prom, and it didn't sit well with him. He's about to spritz Elmyra with a bottle of seltzer water when she plants the kiss on him. Max is left stoic and speechless.
* Haruka Nogizaka's Secret for the second time, Yuuto didn't remember the first time until Shute, his rival, reminded him.
* Gold Digger that switched over to this trope to avoid the downsides of traditional superheroism (supervillains going after them or their loved ones, etc.)
* Here throw stones if these were small enough for the impact to be absorbed by the fabric, and concludes that this "provides for a certain threshold of allowable minimum hypocrisy".
* Haruhi Suzumiya infiltrated by agents of all three groups. This is more evident in the books than in the anime, where only one character outside their group turns out to be one of these.
* Grand Finale re-enacts the final sequence of the intro, with Elena greeting a crowd of guests in her throne room and lighting up the Scepter of Light while surrounded by her friends and family at the throne.
* God of War game, which toned down the former and lack the latter, was not.
* Grandma's Recipe: Recipes are better when they come from the experience of old age.
* Gravity Falls episode "Into the Bunker", Mabel makes a joke about Dipper's web history, implying this. Bill's reddit AMA mentions that whatever Dipper was looking at involves "a lot of redheads", further implying that Dipper was specifically looking up girls who resembled his crush Wendy. "You're not over her at all" indeed...
* Greenfire: Greenfire that giant, but he's easily taller than most ponies. He's also one of the nicest dragons out there.
* Happens to Spider Jerusalem, complete with the common plan to chew off his own arm to escape without waking his surprise bedmate. She rolls over, flings an arm over him, and he adds chewing
* Guilty Gear game had a simpler "X's stage" naming theme. Sequel games have stages with more unique names, sometimes with characters "sharing" a new or previous stage.
* Glee, Sandy Ryerson claims that the scandal that got him sacked almost cost him his long-distance girlfriend in another city. Will does not look convinced.
* Hell Teacher Nube-renowned warrior monk and spiritualist; his fame is so great the media constantly hounds him and he even has fanclubs among Nube's students.
* Glen Cook. In a variant, the gatherings aren't just an opportunity for the sleuth to explain his deductions, but also for the Dead Man to use his mind-reading powers on the culprits and any accomplices.
* Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince. This is largely understandable since with very few exceptions the story is told solely from Harry's perspective, so the audience only sees what Harry sees. Tonks and Lupin's romance was off-page because it happened while Harry was at school and neither of them had a job at Hogwarts, so naturally he didn't see any of it until they were already an established couple.

* Heather's fatal flaw was recklessness in the first season. Heather repeatedly commits actions throughout Island that not only manage to alienate everybody on her team, and ultimately, the entire cast, but are extremely shortsighted and bring her no long term benefit while only giving her short term advantages. One excellent example of this is reading Gwen's diary, as it managed to make her an eternal enemy in Gwen, didn't get her team any points, (and it's implied that had Heather actually performed ballet, it would have been enough to seal a Gopher victory), and nearly got her voted off. The only reason she makes it so far, especially after the merge, is either someone else is removed, or she gets invincibility. Unsurprisingly, her shortsighted decision making finally gets her eliminated in the final three.
* Hayate the Combat Butler he reveals who this girl is, and everyone realizes that they know of her and one of them was actually seen as her best friend. The phrase is never actually spoken, but there are reaction shots with this being their expression.
* Hazbin Hotel reigns, populated by demons who at one point or another were humans whose sins sent them to Hell. Once a year, Hell becomes overly populated by damned souls and a yearly culling by angels occurs, inspiring Charlie to create the Happy Hotel to help rehabilitate demons.
* Grrl Power to get that reaction, she does find it a little flattering that she's still attractive enough for it to happen, even if occasionally.)
* Haruhi-chan, she seems strangely interested in shipping Haruhi and Mikuru together.
* Hair Weapon: A rather rare one, where you can attach weapons (usually heavy, smashy ones) to your hair. Even if you don't have
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, Filch refuses to give the Tri-wizard egg to Moody because it is "evidence for Peeves' treason". And by the way he is cuddling it, Harry thinks Filch thought the egg was like his firstborn son. But in the end, he does have to give it up.
* Hideyoshi has numerous fangirls and past lovers, but on his route, he realizes that his feelings for the main character run deeper than any relationship he's had with another woman in the past.
* Harry Potter and the Escape from Gringotts, one of the security trolls for Gringotts loses its balance while attempting to attack the riders and plummets down off a cliff.
* Goldfinger cuts a long and complex golf game scene into a short bit. More importantly, in the novel, Goldfinger truly does plan to steal all the gold from Fort Knox. The screenwriters have Bond openly talk of how that's physically impossible and then the twist of Goldfinger instead using a bomb to make the gold unusable, which is far more plausible.
* Highlander novels, there’s a scene where Tessa gets surprised by an attacking immortal while in the bathroom naked, and she ends up beheading him while slipping around on the wet floor.
* Gundam didn't do much better when it was imported to the States because of anime's decline at the time. However, the game continues to run unabetted in Japan.
* Glee written in 2012 or 2013 that takes place during season 1 (which would be late 2009/early 2010). It's in recent enough memory that most fanfic writers can avoid it fairly easily, but sometimes the fics feature technology, movies, or songs that weren't out at that time, or even artists or actors who hadn't made it big yet.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets: The Pensieve flashback is set in 1943.
* "Hello Mudduh, Hello Faddah (Live version)" — "...They've got style here, they've got class here. And if you're not careful you could lose your CHIPS here."
* GLOW these days, this was still a time when women's wrestling was far from a mainstream thing outside of Japan.
* Henrietta Maria the wife of Charles I of England, Scotland, and Ireland. Besides being a French Catholic in a Protestant Kingdom, she continually advised him to take actions that, when discovered, led his opponents to regard Charles as untrustworthy and treasonous, such as repeatedly trying to get foreign (and also Catholic) nations to invade in support of Charles in the Civil Wars. She wasn't the

* He also tortured Celebrimbor (the chief maker of the Rings of Power) to death in an attempt to get him to tell where the Rings were. Then he
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix: Ron, Hermione, and the rest of Dumbledore's Army pull one of these as Harry confronts Cho at Christmas.
* Hamilton said he didn't want to anyone to confront Lee over his insults.
* Guild Wars 2 they perma-banned the player and deleted his characters.
* Hannah Montana was the first lead outing for sitcom veterans Rich Correll and Barry O'Brien.
* Hannibal, the eponymous cannibal occasionally amuses himself by causing serial killings that he isn't responsible for to have Suspect Existence Failure.
* Gong into its sound. Daevid Allen's incarnation hewed closer to the Canterbury scene sound (even though they themselves formed in Paris); the Pierre Moerlen incarnation was a full-fledged jazz rock band. Gong's discography can be confusing to piece together because there were often multiple incarnations of the band at once.
* he left everything in his will to his dog. He steals valuable accessories from his brother's corpse but makes the mistake of digging too close to the tombstone and it falls on top of him, crushing him.
* Hellboy (2019), during Nimue's siege of London in the climax, one of her demons completely wrecks London Bridge. "London Bridge is falling down", indeed.
* Greek Mythology); the Three (found in multiple traditions as the embodiment of femininity); and many, many more.
* Grant Imahara often suggests building a robot for a myth. Usually it's viable, but sometimes the suggestion is clearly there as a gag.
* Graduados by Andy, who is always complaining that her parents always get behind the door to overhear his private conversations.
* has his original curse overwritten with one that causes him to turn into a girl as part of his wish to have Ranma's problems.
* Happily Ever After, and it doesn't look like they are planning on changing this pattern any time soon.
* Hedge knights are landless knights who hire themselves out to landed knights or lords to fight in their armies. While granted an air of respectability by their title and the oaths they swear, they are effectively just elite mercenaries.
* Happily Married (who collect blackmail material on all the lawyers in the eponymous firm) just tried a more subtle method.
* Guardians of the Galaxy has the Nova Corps fighters link together and form a barrier to delay Ronan's approach on Xandar. Eventually Ronan uses the Infinity Stone to destroy most of them, eliminating the barrier.
* Hannibal, Dr. Lecter is shown to keep the organs of the people he kills stored in his freezer for later use. An unusually-tidy example.
* Great Big Library of Everything: An absurdly large and well-stocked library.
* Hilary Tamar mysteries is presented as a highly skilled tax barrister who, apart from regularly getting lost in the city she lives in, completely forgets to pay her own taxes.
* Gotham (Jeremiah himself, though a former teen genius, was introduced in the show when he was slightly older.)
* Halic: The Story of a Gray Seal by Ewan Clarkson follows the life of gray seals living at the coast of Wales from the point of view of a male gray seal named Halic. The book was very fact based about the life of seals and it didn't have much of a plot: It followed Halic's life from his birth to his death.
* Hearthstone, has several hunter Secret cards depicting bear traps. Special mention goes to the card "Bear Trap" which summons a Bear when triggered.
* Guys and Dolls, it's illustrated in the advice Sky Masterson got from his father;
* He got Rodimus and Megatron off the ship, but neither the Galactic Council nor the Decepticon Justice Division manage to kill them. Far from being an opportunity to find the Knights of Cybertron without delays or inconveniences, Getaway ends up spending more time trying to maintain his control over the ship than actually pursuing leads or following the map. When he does

* Heathcliff & the Catillac Cats and basically wasted all his wishes in bad phrasing.
* .hack//SIGN OVA, where one of the Blademasters (Bear and Orca's class) is killed in-game, and because dead characters are grayed out, nobody can tell which one of them it is.
* Grand Theft Auto III features an advertisement for Eris Running Shoes, an obvious Nike look-alike, which stresses the alleged worker abuse in their factories in southern Asia.
* Hair Antennae: Two strands of anime hair that stick up from the top of the head and curve forward like antennae
* Green Worldz plants have overtaken the land and oxygen levels have skyrocketed, causing bugs to grow giant as well, since insect body size depends on the amount of oxygen in the air.
* Going older, the T-54/55 may be given short shrift due to being reduced to the status of a mook tank to be destroyed by the dozens by newer NATO tanks, but it didn't become the most produced tank in the world for no reason, and has had many upgrade packages that can still make it competitive on the modern battlefield with a well-trained crew—modernized fire control systems with laser rangefinders, gun-launched missiles (each one of which costs almost as much as the tank itself), and so on. The design set the pattern for how a Soviet/Russian tank would look like for decades to come, with its low profile, heavily sloped front, and rounded turret shape.
* Gottlieb looks like a regular pinball target, but folds over to allow the ball to drop into the Cellar.
* Harry Potter Harry gets dueling lessons from Voldemort at the end of which he frequently has to work on reattaching limbs.
* Goof Troop, and then everyone cheers because they don't have to treat it like a salon anymore.
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah. The latter heavily implies this as well as her nightmare seems to support it. As a result, The film implied she did not marry her lover Hideo Ogata, as she still has her surname.
* Harry Potter normally have their faces hidden by hoods, but are described as having faces with no eyes (only skin over where the eye sockets should be) and giant round sucking mouths.
* Gormenghast, yet once you get beyond the Earldom of Gormenghast, the world is fairly modern (or steampunk), complete with sky scrapers.
* having their faces obscured prevents them from claiming bragging rights.
* Heather becomes concerned about Gwen's and Trent's developing romance in "
* Hellsing hacking leaves a giant swastika of blood on the walls... and then he splatters it with even more blood and ruins the effect.
* Gotham City Garage built a dome encircling Gotham City to protect it from the gangs of marauders roving around the wastelands... and to keep everyone controlled. Thirty-five years later, no local is certain that there's anything beyond the dome other than a dangerous desert.
* Harley Quinn is immune to Poison Ivy's poisons because of all the, uh... time they spent together. In the animated series, this is
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), this trope is utilized frequently. Not only are there "freeze-ray" weapons that can freeze a person (and they'll be perfectly fine when they thaw), but there's freeze magic and some monsters have a freeze ability with their breath or eye-beams.
* Half-Life 2, the Combine have set up some sort of device which makes humans unable to reproduce. In the expansions this has been deactivated, leading to Dr. Kleiner to suggest that repopulation can begin.
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger, where three otaku are made into an unofficial Sentai team. Nobuo Akagi/Akiba Red in particular is a massive Super Sentai fanboy.
* Going Postal is highly susceptible to this trope, particularly when following official Post Office procedures. While trapped in a burning building, he took the safety-manual instruction to "Remain calm" literally and hence, wasn't frightened.
* Gundam Build Fighters (who fit the "soulless regimen" version of this trope and aren't prepared to deal with anything that doesn't match up with their grueling statistical analysis of the opposing team).

* High School Musical 3: Senior Year, particularly "I Want It All" - which actually makes sense: Sharpay and Ryan Evans rule the theatre club and share a dream of becoming Broadway stars.
* Hail the Conquering Hero. However, Woodrow meets a group of Marines in a bar one night after he buys them drinks and sandwiches, and when they hear his story, they convince him to go home, and once there, to his horror, he's treated like a real hero. Not only that, but the Marines lie for him to make him seem even more of a hero than he claimed to be, and his ex-girlfriend is still in love with him.
* Harvey Girls Forever has CGI sparkles in some episodes such as "Citizen Cape".
* Gore Orphanage establishes that Great-grandmother Nellie was the sole survivor of the events of the titular orphanage.
* Happy Birthday to You!", were considered copyrighted. The cartoon was also re-edited in 2004 to change the phone number at the end after a limousine company in New York complained to the Brothers Chaps that they were receiving calls from people wanting to order the album.
* Green Lantern: The Animated Series. It constantly lags behind YJ in terms of ratings, sales on iTunes, and receiving awards or praise, due to being newer. It's also hurt by the fact that it airs earlier in the morning, meaning that people who were originally fans of YJ before GLTAS premiered will often sleep through it. That being said, it usually sits with or near YJ on charts, but while YJ will sell steadily on iTunes throughout the week, remaining in the top 5 on the animation chart until the next episode goes on sale, GLTAS will top off at #3 and be barely clinging to the top 10 by the end of the week.
* Hero: 108 to realise his mistake and announce First Squad as the real winners.
* Guise episode lore podcast, The Letters Page, guest-stars Guise himself. During the close of the episode, Guise keeps saying increasingly loud and goofy goodbyes to the audience until Christopher and Adam both yell "SHUT UP!" at him.
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, while Harry interacts with Buckbeak the hippogriff, Draco Malfoy casually munches on an apple to show his contempt with the proceedings.
* Halo: Reach features three Spartan-III squad members that aren't simply of European ethnicity, although Emile, who has a black voice actor and is depicted as such in concept art, never removes his helmet. There's also black NPC Sergeant Duvall.
* Gundam F91 doing this. The shotlancer is a hydraulic lance that can be fired like a giant lawn dart or used as a melee weapon; either way, the intent is that it damages the enemy mobile suit's reactor cooling systems, triggering the safety cutoff.
* Halo: First Strike, this is both played straight and subverted. In a zone of slipspace where all weapons fired would veer off in random directions, Admiral Whitcomb took out one enemy ship not by firing his weapons, but instead by locating the wreck of an enemy ship, and pushing it at max speed towards a Covenant ship, while reversing as soon as the mass had enough velocity. Destruction ensued. Subverted near the ending, where Whitcomb's ship is used to ram into an enemy base several hundred times bigger than the ship itself, but causing little serious damage. However, the true goal was to lure all Covenant ships near that base into close proximity... as the base's fusion systems had been sabotaged minutes before by a team of Spartans, resulting in a nuclear blast that wiped out all 500 enemy ships, as well as, sadly, Whitcomb's ship.
* Green Hornet ends with the titular character having thoroughly alienated his potential love interest.
* Harry Potter and wouldn't particularly care to. I would like a rental agreement with option to buy for Hermione Granger. A short term contract with Nymphadora Tonks wouldn't be turned down. A Long-term agreement with Luna Lovegood would probably be a whole lot of fun. Any time Padma Patil wants to open negotiations, call me and oh for a weekend with Fleur. Oddly Lavender and Padma's sister (despite being her twin) Parvati do nothing for me."

* HeroSmash (who can be either a hero or a villain) caught in the middle.
* Gregor Clegane is modestly skilled but is so freakishly big and strong (and quicker than he looks) that only the very best of fighters last very long against him.
* Heal the Cutie: No emotionally broken state of mind will keep me from finding happiness again!
* Hero House gives us both Dio and Big Boss who seem to be operating on a scope well beyond Kratos.
* Hambo", she travels with Princess Bubblegum to retrieve it from Maja the witch and when they encounter a talking Hambo in the woods she actually believes it could be the real Hambo talking to her, until it is revealed as a trap by PB.
* Hayate's, his father used him in an art-selling scam, and taught him to not accidentally give the real stuff to the people they were swindling.
* Guy de Maupassant is exactly that. As is almost any fantastic short story written by de Maupassant. And the author himself ended his life in a psychiatric hospital.
* Hal Jordan's (even if it was entirely unnecessary for a guy that can casually exceed the speed of light and destroy planets without trying).
* Hank Hill ended up working at Mega Lo Mart when he got laid off from Strickland when the aforementioned store briefly sold propane.
* Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law, which parodied the War on Terror, Phil Ken Sebben installed a news crawl in the cafeteria.
* Halo: The Fall of Reach refers to an even earlier incident where Kelly disarmed a Master Sergeant of his clippers when he tried to cut her hair; it took three adults to subdue her.
* Hat Films, in which Colin (a made-up character played by Trott) doesn't so much as leave the bath when he's meant to be working.
* Green Hornet movie serials, the Hornet catches a ride on the back bumper of a villain's car.
* go right to his thighs... and then blow up, we see an explosion, and then a cut to the ambulance, with Squidward blown to pieces, all of his tentacles in a bucket.
* Greek Mythology often has gods that the writer of the particular piece don't like fall into the informed abilities category, most frequently Ares, who despite obligatory religious praise of his bravery and cunning often gets to play the fool and coward in stories written or conveyed through Athens, which had its own war god patron to shill.
* "Higher and Higher" was not by Alice Deejay, but a solo effort by their main producer, DJ Jürgen.
* Grizzy & the Lemmings has Grizzy just minding his own business when the Lemmings come along and ruin his day with their stupidity.
* has to have a gender, depending on who is spoken of or who is doing the speaking. Uri muses that since babies all look the same, the only way to know whether you should pick up your friend's baby and say "That's a cute baby boy" or "That's a cute baby girl" is whether it's dressed in blue or pink. He then says "But imagine you find a baby dressed in orange. What do you do? You can't risk offending your friend". After some thought, he picks up an imaginary baby and says "Why, that's a cute... organism!"
* Good Omens fics, there is a tendency for Crowley's written briefings to go up in flamboyant Hellfire, as you might expect.
* Heavy Metal, the Loc-Nar is the embodiment of evil, and quickly corrupts and destroys everyone it touches — only those who are incorruptibly pure of heart can resist it.
* Highlander: The Series, the bitter widow of a murdered Watcher decides to out both Immortals and Watchers to the press. Joe goes to kill her but Duncan stops him, more for Joe's sake than hers. Kalas then conveniently kills both her and the newspaper editor she went to but tries to hold her evidence to ransom himself. Fortunately, Duncan manages to kill him and destroy the evidence in one fell swoop.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, he arrives at a library just smiling under lots of cameras, and is still confirmed as a gigantic ham.
* Gundam SEED (The Archangel crew/pilots, later the Three Ships Alliance)

* Good Eats he explains the process behind "Greeking." That said, it's always obvious what grocery store he's shopping at (either Kroger, Publix, or Harry's/Whole Foods, depending on how old the episode is), and episodes before season 5 don't bother with the greeking.
* Great Lakes Avengers series, Maelstrom manages to create his universe-ending device successfully, and has only the titular D-List team to face him. He notes that he succeeded in creating his doomsday device because he didn't go to a major city like Los Angeles, London, or New York, but instead went to Milwaukee, Wisconsin!
* He also ended his posts on a rather bleak note compared to the more optimistic views of the other players,
* Halestorm's "Miss the Misery" is a rather angry song about how you don't miss your ex but all the pain and misery they caused you. "It's Not You" is basically a song in which the singer is taunting their ex about they're in a new relationship now.
* Henny Youngman voiced a caricature of himself as a chicken in an episode of
* Greg Costikyan, "grognard" being a term for Napoleon's old guard, and the full term used by hardcore wargame players to refer to products that seek to capture the market of the hardest of the hardcore. It's worth mentioning that in the article Costikyan is somewhat dismissive of Nintendo's strategy of blatantly seeking the non-gamer market for the DS while positioning the PSP as the "hardcore" platform, something that, if nothing else, did indeed make tons of cash for the company.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets being punished with detention, but is spending it with Professor Lockhart, who is under the impression he's giving Harry a treat instead. Since Lockhart is a vain, obnoxious bore who's appointed himself Harry's mentor, this works out as four hours of torture as Harry helps him answer his fanmail while hearing bits of advice like, "fame's a fickle friend, Harry," and "celebrity is as celebrity does, remember that." At the end, Lockhart warns Harry he mustn't expect a treat like this every time he gets detention.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle, Harold imagines himself finally working up the nerve to flirt with his attractive neighbor Maria in the elevator. In actuality, he and Maria ride the elevator in awkward silence.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged: Integra responds with this in episode 5 while dodging rockets in her car:
* Grass Is Greener: A character who longs to leave their terrible life behind to go somewhere they think is better.
* Glee, the Glee Clubbers sometimes referred to their "first scandal"—Quinn getting pregnant—as "Babygate".
* Gundam Wing to the pilot. The Leos that were based on its design are far weaker but also safer for people to pilot.
* Grand Theft Auto IV is stated, in his police record, to be spending money more freely than his declared taxable income should allow.
* "Hell Bent", who is standing right in front of him and he doesn't realize it.
* Hannah Montana The Movie has been dubbed in Slovak twice. There's the theatrical dub produced by Creative Music House and the other dub produced for TV JOJ.
* Good Old Fisticuffs would allow him to swing such a massive sword in the first place, which had worked out fine in the past against swordsmen who lacked Kenshin's skill and speed. But he couldn't even come close to landing a hit on Kenshin, and afterward Sano relied on his fists instead.
* hallucination At the very end of the episode, when Booth and Bones visit the gravesite Bones is shown actually seeing and acknowledging the ghost of the dead soldier, but since she was apparently never shown a photo of the deceased, she never realizes she's seen someone who is dead.
* Grimm. Modern Jägerbar, though, have mostly abandoned this custom. Naturally, the episode features those who still follow it.
* Gold Digger around. A pair of incredibly old wererat assassins who rule the criminal underworld and have been married only slightly less long than weres have been around, which shows in their incredible teamwork.
* "Hang on for the comedy that goes to infinity and beyond!" —

* happy, but anything resembling a smile from a wolf can at least be read as non-aggression.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983), and new characters who would be added to the toyline (like Orko or King Randor).
* half-demons, this ability is widespread, as shown by Doyle, Ruby, Whistler, and Mal Fraser.
* Hercules die, but the last shot of him fighting a losing battle against both the waters' current and the many vengeful, undead souls that drag him further underneath as his minions Pain and Panic watch on, too frightened of him and his wrath to fish him out.
* Halloween: Resurrection looming over the frightened-looking protagonists.
* "Her Pretender" by Off Course. Though it does turn out okay in the end since the singer sticks around as "her someone else" long enough for her to see him as himself.
* Half-Life 2 we're talking about, we may never know what became of him...
* Green Lantern: First Flight animated movie, Kilowog steps on a yellow power ring, breaking it. Since Sinestro happened to be wearing it at the time, this also resulted in breaking all Sinestro's fingers.
* Guenevere gets a fae pet (either a cat or a dog) who has a preternatural sense for those trying to do his mistress harm and is willing to act on such feelings immediately and violently.
* High Charity, it signals a massive loss for the Covenant, and the turning of the tide in favor of not only the Elites and their subordinates, but humanity's own continued survival.
* Hannah Montana in her show; it's worth noting that they also play with it a bit at times, and one character was even smart enough to use her popularity as a way to escape by loudly yelling that she was there to a lobby-full of people who had just been to her concert.
* Good Bad Bug with a Level 1 instant-death spell. (He normally absorbs all non-attack elements, playing this straight.)
* God of War III, Kratos can do this when he grabs an enemy, using their body as a battering ram as he dashes through enemies. After running for a while he'll simply toss the body or if he hits a wall he slams their head around.
* Gratuitous Special Effects — Because flying cars are cooler than regular cars, and glowing flying cars trump both.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team. Yashima Sanae jumps into Konoe Tsurugi's arms in the opening titles.
* Greek Ninja, Sasha fails to save her sensei during the invasion of Ariadnio.
* Hellsister Trilogy's plan has been ruined, his army has been routed and he has been surrounded by a squad of powerful heroes. What does he do? He decides to take all of them out. And he nearly succeeds.
* Hey Arnold!, the basketball coach's son Tucker is on the basketball team, and the coach's most important rule is "Pass the ball to Tucker". Tucker enjoys basketball and is a decent player, but he often feels overly pressured by his father, which often causes him to miss free throws due to the stress.
* Heroes of the Storm series, is a tanky Support hero who keeps his team alive while standing as a bulwark himself.
* GrailQuest, and you can also toss it (hits with 8 or more, but deals 10 bonus damage and leaves you unarmed for 3 turns).
* Hatedom has gotten to the point where even people who dislike his music think all the hate is overblown.
* Halflings draw the short straw again in the 4th Edition in regards to the nalfeshnee, demonic overlords notorious for being * goddess, and the true master of M.Bison's Psycho Power. In the game, she's an unremarkable character who throws sparkles a lot, and her moves that use magical power are much less effective and powerful than Bison's.
* Going back a generation, Richard's mother wanted him to stay with his previous girlfriend, Pennilyn Lot, rather than marry Emily. Emily is crushed by this revelation, but she fails to recognize how she's doing the same thing to Lorelai and Rory.

* Hellbenders: The Hellbound Saints manage to banish Surtr and aver the apocalypse, but a post-credit scene has one of the experts interviewed for exposition mention that the Hell vortex was mistakenly left slightly open.
* Hamlet Fenge. Amled took to sitting near the fire and carving wooden hooks all day, telling everyone that he would use them to avenge his father. Fenge thought he was crazy—until the night where Amled used the hooks to pin down Fenge and his men under their sleeping blankets and burn down the palace over their heads before they could get free.
* Gunner Cade barely gets his bedding shoved in his locker before the water vents open up.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets: After the Quidditch match in which Harry has been targeted by a rogue Bludger, Harry ends up on the floor with a broken arm, dodging the animated ball as it keeps coming for him. It hits the ground to one side of him, then the other, then between his legs as he dodges.
* Godslave, before learning Anpu's name, Edith calls him "Bun-dog" and then "Dog-guy".
* Gotye. But it still essentially makes sense though the reason it's all one word is unknown.
* Gory Discretion Shot, a hill hides an Angel from view, as Eva-01 beats it to death on the ground. However, the river running around the hill is red with blood.
* have a tendency to make them inapplicable to their own whistleblowers.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, Kim's plane has a drill mode somehow. It doesn't make much sense, but proves useful in the plot.
* Hatsukoi Limited. Kusuda, known for being a pervert, tells Kei that it'd be one thing to get a kinky outfit as a Christmas gift for her, but it's a grab-bag type gift and he'd be uncomfortable with the other girls (who he's not interested in) getting it. Kei mistakenly thinks this means she's the only one he doesn't see as a girl.
* 'Hex Bugs' are intelligent nanobots about the size of a pen lid or marble. If the name didn't, the
* Halflings are certainly treated as the worst team ever in the game's fluff and are one of the worst teams in gameplay. About every halfling game mentioned in the rulebook involves downright slaughter of the entire halfling team, and one particularly famous incident had a halfling team failing to win a match against an opponent
* Heartwarmingly inverted by Father Sergio Gutiérrez Benítez, who raised money for the orphanage where he worked by becoming the
* Hercule Poirot. When he reunites with his old friend, Hastings, the latter began to reminisce about the good times of his youth, until Poirot reminded him that the old times weren't as all good and jolly as Hastings remembered it to be.
* Heungbu and Nolbu in with Heungbu, who more than gladly takes him in.)
* Granblue Fantasy for Primal Beasts and wonder whether Pandemonium reaches down to the world of the god of creation. It's later hinted several times that the denizens of the Crimson Horizon, the world created by that god, have been trying to use Pandemonium as a bridge into the Sky World.
* He once literally killed a persona of his because it had gone rogue, developed a conscience, and threatened to fetter Roger by merging back into the whole of Roger's mind, along with the conscience.
* Hayate the Combat Butler. The characters continually call her 'Sister' despite knowing her name, and her acting nothing like an actual sister.
* Gold Tongues has an entire cast of these. All of the characters, save for a small amount, are given nicknames that describe physical aspects of them or their personality.
* He Who Fights Monsters: You start to become like the very evil that you fight against over time.
* Halo, as rather than being a comprehensive guide to warfare, it is specifically about what must be done to prevent the Covenant from discovering the whereabouts of Earth and other Inner Colonies.

* Heaven's Design Team. God frequently makes vague requests to the titular designers and then reject them with just as vague a reasoning. On the other hand, he might also approve random joke designs that he didn't request or re-purpose failed designs as a different animal.
* Gus Fring is a master in avoiding this trope. He has a large portfolio of legitimate businesses (Los Pollos Hermanos, Lavenderia Brilliante, etc.) to hide the income from his drug empire and aid in drug production. He is also being bankrolled by Madrigal Electromotive, a major German conglomerate. However, he spends less on himself than his legitimate businesses could realistically generate by themselves. We eventually learn that Gus's enterprise is partly geared toward revenge, perhaps more than material gain, so it may be that he was taking losses in places.
* He'd also had plenty of opportunities to kill Bond before he even got on the train, but his failure to do so was his superior's fault: Red's boss' boss (Blofeld in the movie, General G in the novel) didn't just want Bond to die, he wanted him to die in a manner that would embarrass MI6 and the British government, which required a more elaborate setup then just shooting him as he walked down the street.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, Yukiji does this in Chapter 151 by kicking a bear in the face. Hayate also pulls this routinely.
* Heroes Unlimited supplement Gramercy Island, there is the story of a demon who is given a human body and sent to the mortal world to redeem himself. He is promptly arrested for shoplifting food (he didn't know the local customs). While sitting in the interrogation room at a police station, he is asked if he's committed any other crimes. Not wanting to lie, he says that yes, he was directly responsible for the deaths of over three thousand people, many of whom he had killed with his bare claws...ed hands. "In fact, sixty of them were here in this city. Why do you ask, officer?" Attempting to arrest him, he defends himself by resuming his demonic form right there in the interrogation room. After the frightened cops drop 30 bullets into him without much effect, he apologizes and resumes his human form. The demon is then sentenced to one thousand years in prison, a sentence set to commensurate with the demon's extraordinary life span.
* Goblins Then he hears a loud footfall behind him and looks up at the soulspike devourer towering above him... Then they are both killed by an even bigger "fish": a magic effect created by the Shield of Wonder.
* God Job: The power of a god comes with correspondingly large duties.
* Griffons become hexapodal birds that evolved from solitary predators. As such, they only typically interact for territorial posturing or trade and are mentally predisposed to see all forms of interaction as one of these two, explaining their aggressive and greedy behaviors.
* Harry Potter. JK Rowling thought it was funny for such a talented witch to be related to such a talentless person.
* Helloween has Michael Weikath and had Michael Kiske. Weikath is frequently referred to as "Weiki" and Kiske is occasionally "Michi" (though "Michi" seems to be more a fangirl thing).
* Hawkeye and Wanda Maximoff when he sees how terrified she is. It's a great reminder that, for all her frightening powers, Wanda isn't a supervillain, but a scared young woman with little experience in the field and no one else to turn to in the world but her brother, and Hawkeye isn't just a good soldier, but a good man.
* has Krampus invade Santa's workshop with his own army of evil elves, and it's up to Eric the Elf to save the captured Santa.
* Gold Through the Fire: Charles Hanson was American, but puts on a passable Russian accent and speaks a bit of Russian in the film.
* Hercules if she finds Hercules' weakness. The camera is held close on Meg's reaction, but a distinct crashing sound is heard.
* Grogar's self-experimentation and augmentation makes him look like a
* "Goodbye Good Guy" by Frente starts off sounding like the typical pining-for-a-lost-lover-please-take-me-back number, but by the end of the song the singer has realised they've been tricked all along.

* had a doctor inject silicone into his scalp to fake it) wrestlers in Japan, defeating wrestlers twice his size for the honor.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, Shiranui causes plenty of problems when he(?) is first brought to the San'zenin mansion, mostly for Tama who was trying to get the new cat kicked out. Later on he also causes trouble by stealing Izumi's phone when he and Tama are lost in the city and even is seen aiding some ghost cats that were giving Hayate a hard time.
* Haruhi-chan, Ryoko is smart when she sees this particular trap made by Nagato. She goes directly to where "Nagato" is hiding and holding the string. Instead, she finds out that it's not her, and a cage falls on her, trapping her.
* Hamilton Peggy Schuyler and Maria Reynolds are often played by the same actress. Besides different color dress (Peggy wears yellow. Maria wears red.) one way to tell them apart is Maria wears bright red lipstick.
* he was already wounded in battle actually appeared brought the reliability of Snake's comments into question.
* Halo 2, first with the two gondolas on the Lake of Regret, and the gondola ride to the Library in the Quarantine Zone.
* Godzilla vs. Destoroyah in the end — and in the process revived his son.
* Harry deals with a boggart in Dementor form by changing it into a bunch of pixies under a black cloak.
* Gundam SEED most anti-infantry weapons are of the projectile variety. All of the Gundams are equipped with Vulcan cannons in their heads for beating off infantry attacks, and many other mobile suits have outsized machine guns or automatic rifles that serve a similar purpose, as automatic fire is much more effective in breaking up mass infantry attacks than a single shot beam weapon. They also don't run out of power just because the mecha has. On the other hand, Phase Shift Armor tecnology makes Gundams immune to live ammunitions as long as they have power, which was an issue with early battery-powered models but became much less problematic when N-Jammer Cancellers re-enabled nuclear power plants.
* He is a good guy, though, just overuses his Omniscient Morality License
* hand waved with the explanation that Xanth connects with the real world at multiple places and time periods, but most of the novels use modern Florida as the point where Earth connects to Xanth.
* Götterdämmerung that burns down Valhalla with all the gods inside.
* Guardians of the Galaxy (2015) , he also wrote one of the Black Vortex episodes.
* Happy Valley whose final scene hashim stating that he can't send the Diary of a slain hero home to his family (as it includes classified maneuvers) but he can wait until the end of the war to present it once that is no longer classified rather than just destroy the diary.
* Gnoph refuses to say anything apart from 'Kyuu!' and 'Ki!' (or variants thereof) except for one line, which was 'I'm sorry.'
* Harlan Ellison is apparently out to get him in the name of the man he wronged.
* Hellsister Trilogy's adoptive parents understands why a sweet, kind-hearted, mature woman like Kara fell in love with a rude ass like Dev-Em.
* Gundam Wing's himself) with Prime Minister Wong, a young man in spite of his position as the supreme ruler of space. In the DVD notes, director Yasuhiro Imagawa specifically noted he made Wong a young character to avoid this trope.
* Goblins only held him back for a couple of minutes. The dwarf is pretty much walking death.
* Going Postal protagonist thinks of hope as the thing that makes people fall for "get-rich-quick" schemes and other cons.
* Half-Minute Hero, the Time Goddess approaches you in the beginning of Hero 30 to aid you in your adventure. She then becomes a member of your caravan.
* guaranteed to piss off the Alpha vampire is to insult his mother Eve.
* Hell's Bells series. Interestingly, since the books are set in Hell, it's seen as a perfectly normal weather condition and is actually considered somewhat beautiful by Zack. Archer disagrees.
* Good Girls, Annie has a one-night stand with a guy working at a Costco-like store who steals a paper with his phone number containing crucial information the girls need. Annie doesn't know much about him so at the store, sister Beth grabs a clipboard and marches up to a veteran employee, making it sound like she's from a major corporate office and demanding information as part of some checks. While Annie and Ruby are impressed, Beth lampshades "it's the clipboard."

* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets: Giant spiders fear the basilisk. But even the mighty basilisk is afraid of roosters (most probably because they are derived from a mutated chicken embryo and coming into contact with their original species undoes the wrongness of their magical nature). And roosters fear humans, which fear giant spiders, which fear basilisks, which fear roosters...
* Hell's Kitchen as punishment for losing a challenge. Inevitably, someone won't be able to keep it down, which will set another couple of people off.
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child: Time turners are the driving force of the plot and alternative timeline.
* Goosebumps books, just a pre-teen boy and girl who are best friends with no romantic feelings for one another, rather just being friends because they enjoy each other's company and share mutual interests. The main example are Evan and Andy from the Monster Blood books, while others include Duane and Stephanie from The Headless Ghost, and Brooke and Zeke from Phantom of the Auditorium.
* Hayate the Combat Butler we get a hint that something could have happened between Yukiji and her foster father had Hinagiku and her's parents hadn't abandoned them. He used to be her teacher and is said to still favor her.
* Haruhi Suzumiya", represented in the anime as prolonged silence without moving.
* Hannah Montana: Robbie Ray Stewart once prayer for God that the dog next door would stop barking. As the dog stopped, Robbie Ray thanked God for that and then apologized for something he said while driving.
* godmoding the character's death at the hands of his villain character. After a little debate, it was left in.
* Halo is actually quite good at treating asteroid belts realistically:
* Granblue Fantasy, Lyria's idiot hair guides Katalina, Lyria, and Vyrn to find the others as it points the direction towards Gran.
* "Good Burger," home of the Goodburger, was a fictional fast food restaurant that appeared in a recurring sketch in * Gone with the Wind. Scarlett O'Hara has a somewhat similar relationship with her father, Gerald.
* Grey Knights Alaric briefly uses both an axe and a hammer. He isn't the only one running around with multiple melee weapons, though.
* Happy Heroes has a few English dubs. The most well-known of these is the dub of the first two seasons from Lookus, though the other dubs are considered more accurate to the original Chinese version.
* Gosford Park as the one real Scottish character (who's played by an actual Scot) says his accent isn't from anywhere in Scotland she knows.
* Gone in 60 Seconds (2000), Kip introduces his crew to his older brother, listing all the great things they can do to help with the car boosting. When he gets to Freb, he says "Freb can order pizzas like nobody's business."
* Harold & Kumar Escape from Guantanamo Bay, the titular duo kill four Federal agents in the process of evading capture for a (grossly) wrongful accusation of terrorism. Presumably, that gets included in the full pardon they get at the end from President Bush. Although the deaths were due to the agents' incompetence rather than caused by H&K directly, it would be their word against the government since there were no surviving witnesses, and anyway it'd still count as felony murder.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality, the time turners are used much more frequently, which leads to this when two or more are involved. Dumbledore and Snape have to resort to charts.
* He may also be holding back because he's afraid of the energy getting away from him and triggering one of his explosions.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, but it also stopped Rey from telling her about the possessed Robot.

* , Harry bangs his head on a desk after discovering that magic has declared him the new Heir of Slytherin.
* GURPS, including Cardiel; slaves frequently try to flee to the Cardien portion of the city.
* Grey's Anatomy going on, venting to Cristina about it but otherwise "keeping it all in some deep dark twisted place until one day you snap and kill them?" But then she gets home that night and finds Izzy, George and Cristina watching her mother's old surgery tapes, and George's beer on the coffee table without a coaster.
* Her Inner Demons. In fact, she was largely born from Sci-Twi's feelings of resentment. Mentioning this simple fact is what allowed her to manipulate Sci-Twi. When Sci-Twi expresses remorse to her ex-classmates, they acknowledge their role in making her miserable and tell her she has nothing to be ashamed of.
* Harry Potter and, if you're underage, anywhere outside of school. In essence, they amount to it having to be a life-or-death situation.
* Golden eagles will take on wolverines, honey badgers, bears, and wolves.
* Helluva Boss. While Loona points out the door would be easier the first time, the fourth time results in Blitzo yelling at everybody to stop breaking his walls as he'd be having Moxxie fix it all. In the same episode, Blitzo jumps through a window to convince his target to go through with suicide while Moxxie and Millie enter through the door next to said window.
* Glue, Ruth's daughter Cassie almost dies twice thanks to her mom's negligence — but survives both times.
* HERZ: In chapter 2 Asuka remembers her words during her battle against the MP-Evas:
* Grant Morrison, the eponymous character actually visits Comic Book Limbo.
* He started out as a lowly soldier before being rescued and taught several various topics that allowed him to rise up and eventually become Demon King. As such, he had prior experience. It makes sense he figures he could start as a fast food worker and make his way to the top.
* Global Reality Channel was the same thing, except it was a spinoff of
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Hermione grabbed Ron's hand in a moment of panic when Harry was approaching the hippogriff Buckbeak. They both realized what they were doing and Hermione quickly let go while shooting him a "don't say a word" look while Ron looked embarrassed and awkward.
* Gruntz, when your gruntz approach an area particularly full of death traps, they may say a line amounting to this.
* Glee. "Push it" was Rachel's idea and Emma informs Rachel that someday not having a gag reflex will be a gift. If you know what she means.
* Gone with the Wind, the one time Scarlett is genuinely happy to be pregnant, she miscarries.
* Gundam's RX-79(G) Gundam Ground Type units, extensively modified with a new control system. BD-1 used a GM head and was still ground-based, while BD-2 and BD-3 both sported Gundam heads and were modified for space use. Their control systems were based on a Zeon prototype, the MS-08TX(EXAM) Efreet Custom, whose designer defected from Zeon to the Federation.
* Highway to Heaven: During a planning meeting in the Neo-Nazi group's basement, the leader's son accidentally triggers a machine gun, mortally wounding the leader and two others. The Jewish man (whose son was killed by the goons) has a heart attack and needs a transplant ... and only the Nazi leader's blood type is available. Jonathan visits with the Neo-Nazi leader's wife, urging her to consent to the operation (as her husband's hateful "heart" is not the same as the biological functions of a heart, and that Solomom is a good person), which she does. After Solomom learns that he had received his sworn enemy's heart, he wants to die ... but has a renewed purpose after having a dream where his beloved son and his parents urge him to tell their story to counteract the Nazi group (before it has a chance to re-form).
* Hidden Elf Village: An entire community of people who decided to isolate themselves from the rest of the world.
* Herman Rucker, who performed under the stage name Black Herman, was trained by his mentor Prince Herman both in conventional methods of stage magic and the folk magic popular in the region. Herman was known to perform both in his traveling shows, cultivating a reputation as a master of spiritual arcana in addition to being a skilled illusionist. This got him into a fair bit of trouble as well, as the law had a thing or to to say about his practice of selling "

* Happens several times to Darrin and Samantha in the very first episode of
* Harry Potter and the spellbook of desires & Harry Potter and The Legacy of Hogwarts (second and third series from the top DL ONLY), an Epic 40+ chapters of X-rated connected fan fiction, which involves multiple perverse uses of Stupefy spell, Obliviate, Lumos (you just have to read it), polyjuice potion and a few others.
* Gravity Falls But external circumstances have him falling out with them:
* .hack guess this from his efficient, calculating, highly intelligent on-line persona.
* Granblue Fantasy has the heroes relax after defeating the Erste Empire, going back to the hero's hometown to celebrate and later muse over what they're going to do now that they've defeated them. This is also one of the few chapters to be dialogue-only with no battles whatsoever.
* Half World is transformed into a harmless baby, and the heroine decides to raise him properly this time.
* Going for the Big Scoop: A reporter willingly goes right into danger to get a news story.
* Guns N' Roses, during the wedding scene Slash pats himself down trying to find the rings, only for Duff to reveal that he has them on his pinky.
* Godzilla 2000 doesn't seem particularly interested in killing humans for the sake of it, but he also doesn't take any special effort to save them. He's more interested in getting revenge on Orga.
* Gunsmith Cats regarded as being above or outside the law by any means; on one memorable occasion, a crook managed to kidnap Minnie-May because his and Rally's high-speed chase caught police attention and ended with Rally being arrested for breaking traffic laws.
* He is good enough with textiles to design and make a cat-sized ushanka because... no reason.
* Harper's Island just when their time was up. The actors gave him the nickname Karim the Assassin.
* Hanna: at the end of "Friend," Hanna catches a ride on a departing passenger train by running after it and climbing onto the rear of the last car.
* Gundam 00 (the paired katana and wakizashi typically carried by samurai), but there's no indication that they're anything other than standard beam sabers with a slight curve to the blades.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (2002), in the origin of the power of Grayskull, King Grayskull, the original wielder of He-Man's sword, fought with everything he had to save his kingdom from the evil Hordak, at the cost of his own life. What makes it really bittersweet was the fact that he was told by an oracle this would happen. Despite knowing his fate, all that Grayskull cared about was that his kingdom would be free. That just shows how much a guy will lay down for his people.
* Happy Tree Friends, so eventually he manages to impale and inflate his eyeball with it, which later traumatizes Flaky.
* Harry and Ginny’s twins Marcus and Clementine are the reborn Luke and Leia, who meet the reborn Han Solo on the Hogwarts Express (the reborn Han in his third year while Luke and Leia are just in their first).
* He once designed a letter-sorting machine whose central component was a wheel that had π equal to
* Guilt-Free Extermination War: The only way to end a war is by exterminating the other side.
* Having a character use the Jump command also helps since the character jumps off screen and avoids all attacks.
* Gundam SEED also has the Requiem, which is a giant beam cannon fired from the far side of the moon (its beam can be redirected with magnetic fields, allowing it to be aimed at virtually anything).

* Happy Heroes: In Season 2 episode 1, Big M. makes a device to shoot meatballs at some guard dogs as a distraction. How does it work? Big M. scares a squirrel, which runs in fear and bumps into a hammer that knocks over a bunch of balls. The balls are dispensed onto a wheel which dumps them onto a little cardboard platform which, when weighed down, push a button that causes a robotic arm to appear and, finally, flick a meatball at the dogs.
* Gypsy Tales: In "Káló, the Gypsy Lad", the council of elders arranges for Káló and Gilze to marry. At first, Káló is unwilling but has a change of heart when Dimkárta reveals that Zurdána, the woman he falls in love with, "only toys with the lads of the dry land, making fools of them."
* Haruhi Suzumiya She also discusses tropes while deliberately invoking them, for example while selecting personalities for SOS Brigade, or giving Mikuru a Moe makeover.
* Guild Wars 2 have been known to charge in to battle yelling "You're dumb! You'll die and you'll leave a dumb corpse!"
* Hades as a result of him getting very angry at his cronies Pain and Panic for messing up one of his evil plans.
* Help Not Wanted has Groshlar, Grovmar, Krumvell, and Bunng, who all show no stereotypical traits short of having sex with each other.
* Halloween Episode with Christian aesops (like "Premarital sex kills instantly").
* Grayson steadholders (effectively higher-level nobility in command of the equivalent of states) has the Steadholder's Own tasked to protect them, though each Steadholder is limited to 50 armsmen to prevent anyone building up a private army. This actually becomes a bit of a problem, when Honor returns to her duties as a RMN officer. Since Grayson law demands that a steadholder never travels without his (or her) guards, this comes into conflict with the RMN regulation forbidding non-RMN personnel walking around armed aboard RMN warships.
* Harry's Law featured a woman on trial for committing armed robbery, with eyewitness testimony and video evidence. The defense Harry presented basically amounted to "Yeah, she did it, and she wasn't insane or senile, but she's an old woman". It worked.
* Haruhi Suzumiya, Yuki stands still while a giant cave cricket charges at her. It collides into an invisible forcefield so hard, it forces it into the visible spectrum. That, or Yuki made it at the last second. Whatever the case was, it's made even more badass because she took Kyon's words literally and didn't move until he reminded her that they should leave.
* GUN×SWORD orders the cheapest thing on the menu and every condiment the place has. One can only imagine how the resulting mess tastes.
* Happily Married: A married couple have a genuinely loving relationship.
* GURPS) had a forcefield-based shield... and by "shield" we mean "flat protective thingy strapped to your arm".
* hallucination which is done in the style of a music video, it features among other things demons crawling out of Butthead's skin, themselves as zombies or demons, demonic creatures everywhere riding in mini cars or playing guitars, and a demonic Muddy Grimes (the villain of the movie) driving by in a curvy road and being eaten by a sand worm.
* Gods in the more traditional fantasy genre sense that are worshipped at the time most of the series takes place in vary from general deities like Burn (the Sleeping Goddess of the Earth), Oponn (the Twin Gods of Chance), several (yes, several) gods of war to patrons of specific occupations like Cotillion (Patron God of Assassins). Gods, in the malazanverse, are bound to the limits that worship sets upon them.
* Heroes has a red formula that gives people a seemingly random ability.
* He does it himself in the video for "Amish Paradise" (and, like in "White & Nerdy," is also blurred out for censorship reasons).
* Gravity Falls and being less than impressed with the reveal that Ducktective has a twin brother because they found it so obvious.

* Her across the street neighbor one-ups her by throwing the washer THROUGH THE ROOF!
* Hamilton, of course, because Burr did some not-so-sympathetic actions afterward, including (allegedly) attempting to secede from the US. Though, one could argue it's not undercut, since Burr loses pretty much every loved one he ever had, including his daughter and his grandson in the same year, his daughter getting lost at sea to meet him on his way back from self-imposed exile, along with the fact we barely have any first hand accounts from Burr due to his papers all lost in the same accident as his daughter, so most of his story is told through the lense of Hamilton. Burr would go on to outlive most of the other founding fathers and his ex-friends, dying on the same exact day his second wife divorced him, after he'd had a stroke and never recovered, being bedridden for months.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix to catch the sphere that holds the prophecy as though his life depends on it, but misses.
* he created an automated process that could indefinitely preserve his mind in the event that he died, thus allowing him to live well into the Hell on Earth.
* Gone with the Wind: On the last night of her New Orleans honeymoon, Scarlett indulges in the rich food, only to awaken from the nightmare that has been plaguing her on and off for several years, which actually inverted this trope, as she would have it due to practically starving after the War.
* Hancock come out with enough force to put holes through the metal roof of his trailer. No wonder he stays celibate.
* Her real-life pregnancy was actually exploited in a flashback episode explaining how they came to move in opposite Ray's parents in the first place: set at least six years before the "present", her real pregnancy, in-show, becomes a memory of her being heavily pregnant with Allie and the family needing a bigger place to live. Which Frank and Marie broker for them to suit Marie's convenience - right across the street.
* Harry Potter. There's also an "Ancient Runes" class taught at Hogwarts which presumably relates to this form of magic, but the subject matter is never actually depicted in either the novels or their film adaptations.
* Granny Weatherwax tries to tell the joke about the man who orders an alligator sandwich and
* Harry, as heir to the Black estate, is contractually required to marry Snape, as heir to the Prince estate. Frustrated with increasingly elaborate plans for what Harry regards as a circus, he and Snape take off for a private bonding.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) nesting in the walls inside Mothra's temple at the beginning.
* Halo: Reach also had the VISR, which could function as a sort of night vision.
* "Hard to Handle" is originally an Otis Redding song. And he made it famous. But
* herself - according to one episode, she likes to call herself "Water Lily."
* Halo series were trained as warriors from the age of six and have been continually fighting since they were fourteen, but at least they were intended to survive into adulthood. The Spartan-IIIs, however, were purposely trained to be prepubescent suicide troops: only a handful of Alpha and Beta Company survived past childhood, mostly the ones who were considered gifted enough to be transferred to more elite units. Of those who remained in Beta, only two survived, while no one who stayed in Alpha made it.
* Highlander's then-wife Melani as an escaped female con hired to seduce Duncan. (She played the character until the plastic surgery, then Alexandra Vandernoot took over).
* High-School Dance: Plots about high or middle school dances, usually involving romance.
* Happy Endings, Dave attempts to make peace with the owner of a rival food truck by giving him a sandwich and asking to talk it out. The Brazilian accepts and offers to talk later. As Brad walks away, he chucks the sandwich at Dave, and soon Dave and his friends are engaged in a huge food fight with the Brazilian and his employees.
* Grief Song: A song where the singer sings about how the disappearance and/or death of a loved one makes them sad.

* Harry Turtledove come from the year 2015, though besides their being at the bitter end of a struggle to keep control in their country, the few hints of 2015 sound like 1992 in all but name.
* Goodwill—in which the others will allow the disliked "friend" to tag along not necessarily because they're afraid of his or her wrath, but because they are too nice to tell them to sod off.
* Halo, with some of their weekly challenges requiring you to beat a certain level on LASO to earn a big fat stack of credits). If you try it, it's a nightmare, to say the least.
* Gratuitous Space Battles uses 2D space, friction in space and space fighters, Damaged ships even catch fire. Some mods have gone full circle, using the game to portray WW2 naval battles.
* Haunted 2015: "Guts", the infamous first story which deals with stories of masturbation gone horribly, horribly wrong.
* Half-Life and mutated by the parasitoid headcrabs attached to their heads. In the second game they can be heard screaming for help as they attack you (although it's implied this may be a subversion - that the headcrab is mindlessly parroting the last words its host made).
* Grave of the Fireflies gives a mildly scolding look at the audience near the end of the film, specifically juvenile delinquents of Japan in the 1980s. Takahata specifically made the film for the delinquents to appreciate what they have while understanding what their parents would have suffered from the war.
* Harrenhall", Tyrion hears from Bronn that the city blames him for its troubles, calling him a "demon monkey".
* he may have been lying.) Either way, he has never had a friend prior to the Kira case.
* has argued that one day we will likely all live in a simulated environment, probably within the lifetimes of many people reading this page.
* Goemon considers a traditional hakama to be casual wear, adding traditional jackets for a more formal outing.
* Hank Pym. Ultron is seemingly destroyed, only to return in a new form.
* Hilaire Belloc. Things like getting blown up, crushed by falling statuary, and eaten by lions happened to bad children. However, the stories are all in verse and have a kind of ghoulish glee about them, suggesting that they're not necessarily supposed to be taken totally seriously.
* Hannibal. Clarice is free, but drugged. It doesn't help when Lecter starts cutting open the skull of his other guest and eating his brain.
* .hack//SIGN's ending cuts to the scene with which the anime series began.
* Headphones Equal Isolation: A character wearing headphones pays no attention to the world around them.
* Godzilla Against Mechagodzilla are another duology about the new, human-built incarnation of Mechagodzilla and its angsty pilot, Akane Yashiro.
* Ham Egg/Viper Snakely uses these to aid him in his killing of Panja/Caesar in
* HC Bailly when he started collecting cats and starting off several episodes with an excited "and we got another kitty! Yes! Yes!"
* Hardcore Henry, a mook cuts a line that Henry was trying to climb onto a helicopter. It looks like Henry is about to land in a pond, but he lands right next to it.
* Gwen Stefani song "Wonderful Life" plays with a less fantastical version of this trope, referencing the impact a now-missing lover had on the narrator's life.
* Hightown: Ray has a few of these, and encourages his team to make use of theirs. His boss also makes him get another one when the first dies.
* Happy Endings, Brad wants his dad to say he loves him, so he tells him "I love you" when he's at the hospital for his physical. Dad thinks he said it because the doctors found something wrong and freaks out. After his near-death experience, he starts saying "I love..." to everything... except to Brad.
* Henry James (1878), Roger Lawrence is 29, wealthy, and unsuccessful at love. He decides to adopt 12-year-old Nora Lambert after her father commits suicide as a result of Roger's refusing him $100. Roger plans to raise Nora to be the perfect wife. Years later, Nora has romantic entanglements with two other men and rejects Roger's proposal, feeling duped by the whole arrangement. Roger eventually rescues her from a bad situation, and a grateful Nora marries him.

* Granblue Fantasy, Yggdrasil in which she floats in the skies (also the only Charge Attack Animation not affected by the Ougi Animation Skip mechanic), Mikasa and Levi who have their cut-ins zooming in as their strike, event Zeta's Charge Attack animation being similar to a Summon Call, and the Charge Attack of Zooey's permanent version, like Yggdrasil, involves jumping out and changing the background while attacking.
* Hellblazer (technically a bisexual S&M place, not a strictly gay one)
* he is thinking to himself "five second rule — that cookie's still good".
* Hero-Worshipper (The hero has a fan who can't stop showering them with praise)
* Graham McNeill, and he thinks there's something strange about Uriel to be considered.)
* Harry Potter 2 (also known as simply Harry Potter), a Game Boy Color made by the company BBD.
* Hersh and Control are borderline examples due to their immorality and frequent bouts of
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows for the Muggles' "own good") with the series's perennial antagonist Lord Voldemort (a deranged terrorist who thinks Muggles should just be killed). At the end, it's a guy who thought he was doing the right thing (who felt remorse later in life and spent his entire prison sentence wondering if he was right or not), versus someone who's just in it for power and the Evulz. Three guesses who wins.
* .hack//SIGN was an older man comfortably pals with a teenage girl, Mimiru, through their shared love of virtual reality online gaming.
* Hannibal fall into this category, among them the scene of Krendler being fed pieces of his own brain by Hannibal, and Hannibal convincing a drug-addled Mason Verger to cut off his own face.
* Halloween Episode, Claire pretends to accidentally chop off her hand to scare the girls. They don't fall for it, but as they try to pick up the fake hand, it suddenly jumps up at them and they scream. Turns out it was Phil hiding under the table.
* Going Postal: A disgruntled postal worker goes crazy and will likely start killing people.
* Heralds of Valdemar that he can teach Alberich a few tricks. Crathach ends up assigned to Sendar's bodyguard for the final battle.
* HEV suit but it's unknown whether it's Gina's prototype or a new one. No mention of the first three prototypes have ever been made.
* Hamish Macbeth. It's only when a murder takes place that he has to get himself in gear and solve the crime. It's also been noted that while Hamish is smart enough to be a great investigator, he doesn't actively seek promotion and is perfectly happy to stay in his small police station in Lochdubh.
* Heel Realization: A character is distraught at the realization that what they've been doing is wrong.
* Goodbye Pork Pie, Gerry, John and Shirl escape the Wellington railway yards by driving the Mini into a boxcar being shunted towards the Interislander ferry.
* Harry faints after hearing that he has a little over a billion galleons in Gringotts and the goblin king throws a bucket of water on him.
* Help!", originally written as a slow, bleak ballad similar to "Yesterday", was retooled into a rock song for similar reasons too.
* Hello Cheeky took great delight in giving subversions or variations on the old "Jamaica?" gag.
* Greer Garson, even though she only appeared in the second act (of four) of the film. Garson herself was even disappointed that she was playing such a small role.
* Heel–Face Return: A villain is reformed as soon as they make a comeback.
* Harvey Keitel. He chose the role of Sport, even though the character was black and only had three lines.

* Good Times magazine, his character James Evans was promptly killed in yet another auto accident (this one was particularly tragic, since James was planning on moving to Mississippi).
* GURPS has lots of ways to do this but the Morph version of Shapeshifting allows the user to become virtually anything he or she has seen before (within point limits). There are numerous spells that allow the user to alter their shape as well.
* He-Man and the Masters of the Universe (1983) being much better received critically.
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, where a government official being interviewed about certain mysterious black helicopters responds with just "Helicopters? What helicopters?", with the spinning helicopter rotors clearly audible in the background.
* Gunnerkrigg Court, who like him, seems to be some kind of spirit or demon trapped in an object.
* Hellboy in charge that the ruins of Trondheim Abbey were built on an intersection of ley lines, which he explains as the boundaries between this world and others. The sergeant calls it a load of crap.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix) where, as Sirius later tells them, they were more likely to be overheard.
* her high school uniform. (And Athena barely understands what's going on either.)
* Green Eggs and Ham (2019) full of quirkily bloodthirsty beasts, dangerously whimsical architecture, charmingly stupid or mischievous citizenry, and an almost Kafka-esque fixation on inane trivium.
* Hamilton is a swear word that, when used as a verb, can be slang for "having sex with":
* He's Just Not That into You, Gigi misses the signs that Alex isn't into her while acting as a co-host at his party.
* Gratuitous English's Momotaros, who refers to it as "Blu-Ray Disc". Cue a bunch of Blu-Ray boxes disco-dancing.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire is revealed to be a Death Eather, while his book counterpart shows nothing but contempt and hatred for him.
* Glimmer Of Hope Catos Story. Cato's parents Severus and Livia are one such pairing, as are his brother Ajax and Ajax's wife Drizella.
* Halo 3, most of the color differences between Brute ranks consisted of slightly different shades of blue, with some gold, red, and black thrown in. Fortunately, the more important rank differences could be discerned by helmet shape alone.
* Hell: In many different religious mythologies, there's a special afterlife designed to trap the souls of dead sinners and punish them for their misdeeds in life, often for eternity (or at least a long time before they can be forgiven and allowed to move into another realm). This is essentially the spiritual version of a mortal penal facility.
* Grand Finale weaker defense, but she's still very fast and her Counter Hitter skill allows her to strike immediately back, even if she can't dodge an attack. Thanks to her training, she has improved her defense skills, but if she miscalculates the opponent's attacks or misses the timing, Vivio will get a lot of damage.
* Goofy", star player Swivel Head Smith is only brought into play when the team needs a winning touchdown. When Smith is incapacitated, the coach desperately tries to revive him while the other players get creamed by the opposing team. When Smith shows meager signs of life, he gets thrown back into the field and, with help from the rest of the team, staggers half-conscious to the end zone for the win.
* guidebook that are combat medics. While not explicitly featured thus far, it is safe to assume members are skilled soldiers — they have to be, to have survived for any length of time in the branch with the lowest survival rates. Hange, Petra, and Krista have all been shown administering emergency treatment to comrades on occasion and are all badasses in their own right.
* Harry himself develops a reputation at Hogwarts for being able to do
* Godfrey Ho were also known for the tacky ninja outfits that ranged from red, to yellow, and even metallic colors. Ninja frequently wore headbands with the word "Nin-Ja" embroidered on them. The word ninja was regularly pronounced "ninjer" in many of these films due to the accent of the English language voice actors.

* Handle with Care, Willow suffers from severe brittle bone disease, which understandably necessitates a lot of care and caution. However, her mother, Charlotte, takes it to an extreme, ignoring older daughter Amelia and systematically destroying the girl's life as she campaigns to improve Willow's. When Amelia develops bulimia and starts self-harming, Charlotte genuinely can't see why Amelia has such problems. Unlike Willow, who is cared for by her family, Amelia is promptly shuffled off to a clinic in Boston when her problems are revealed, to be someone else's problem for a while. What makes this particularly sad is that before Willow's birth, Charlotte admits that she would hesitate to take a bullet for her husband because Amelia would need her, but she's protecting Amelia no matter what. By the end of the book, it's doubtful that Charlotte would give the same answer.
* got contacts wardrobe. In one of the alternate futures, he is shown wearing glasses again when he becomes good and stops using his powers.
* Hamilton's insistence to have "historical from the neck down, modern from the neck up", meaning that characters who would have worn wigs (such as Washington or Jefferson) are bald or black-haired instead. (This insistence also leads the actor playing Mulligan to wear a beanie or durag during Act I, which, despite not being specifically a dye-job, is non-historical headwear nonetheless.)
* Hannah Montana when she tries to date Jackson. Coop gives him the 'Don't make eyes at my sister' speech. Unfortunately since she's presented as a slut, it loses some of its effectiveness.
* here, and to date has two complete novels and is working on a third. Interestingly, he asks readers to comment on any mistakes and to raise questions about the work, which he considers during his revisions.
* Hilda. However, Alfur is the only elf who comes to Hilda's defense when the rest of the Little People try to evict her from the woods. Later on, he ends up joining her on her adventures.
* Hero by Night has these as origin stories of Saul Simian and (sort of) Steel Phantom. Alchemy is not a toy, people.
* Halo often deploys it with the Spartans, though some often lose it when scripted to die.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) Rodan, and they don't have much success. One pilot ejects when his fighter gets heavily damaged—and the seat rockets him straight into Rodan's open mouth.
* Hell Girl... There's one exception to the rule, and even then the show leaves it ambiguous as to whether or not the victim will simply try again.
* Grim Fandango features a pair of child souls ("Angelitos"), who have the same skeleton/calaca appearance as all of the other souls, except with small white wings on their backs. Why exactly they have wings is never explained in-game. They're shown to be capable of flying, though Meche states that the Angelitos can't fly very far.
* Had to Come to Prison to Be a Crook: A criminal has the backstory of being evil because they were wrongly jailed.
* Hiei) was cast down into Demon World proper and left to fend for himself. After some ordeals in the past, he located the sky island where they lived, seeking revenge. Ultimately, though, after seeing their cold, emotionless lives with his own eyes, he declares them to be not worth his time and leaves them to their pathetic existence.
* her father's murder ended up happening because the killer's brother had ended up comatose doing something to impress her, and her obliviousness to her role in it all made the murderer see her as being at fault and not accepting responsibility.
* Guess Who I'm Marrying?: A character's single parent has found someone. Unfortunately, that someone is anything but good for the character, and now they need to stop this!
* Halo 2 an earlier All Your Base Are Belong To Us moment on the planet Reach.

* Heroic Russian Émigré are likely to be critical of America/the West as well.
* Happy Yarou Wedding, Yuuhi had always been considered to be really cold-hearted by his girlfriends but he was really just afraid of letting people in. The more time he spends with Todou and Shouta, the more his warm side comes through.
* Grimm, an octopus-like Wesen that steals memories sticks its tentacles into Trubel. After seeing various memories of her killing other Wesen, he spits her out. He is last seen sobbing and moaning in a jail cell.
* Grand Slam was made as an "economy" game. Among its cheapness was many of them only supporting 2 players (the later units had 4-player support), and only having 6-digit score counters (when almost every game at the time had 7 digits).
* Guild Wars had two story missions where you spent a majority of the gameplay in disguise.
* Hell or High Water One of many films where New Mexico doubles for Texas.
* Halo: Reach: The sky on Reach features two moons. However, since Reach is a human colony it is an atypically friendly alien sky.
* Gorillaz while on a motorcycle ride, for absolutely no reason whatsoever.
* Gone with the Wind is mentioned to have barely scraped by at the Fayetteville Female Academy, and never willingly opened a book since her graduation. However, this is purposefully cultivated because intellectual women found it harder to catch husbands in the antebellum South. However, she is highly skilled in wrapping men around her little finger. Melanie, on the other hand, is not afraid to discuss literature and philosophy with her fiance.
* Hatoful Boyfriend that pigeons live longer than fifteen years in this universe, but still not nearly as long as humans do—and Ryouta has a chronic medical condition.
* Halo, retains his consciousness when infected by the flood due to some biological quirk. He retains only minimal control over his body.
* Gremlins, while the time in-between the prologue and the movie proper is hard to pin down, the bulk of the movie is shown to take place within three-to-four days, with the majority taking place within tweleve hours overnight.
* Gould took a shot at "experimental" comic strips in the 1960s with a lame strip that everyone was hailing as genius.
* Heck, lots of local Pro Wrestling shows used well-known songs as their themes. WWE used to use
* Goku started a lineage with his first son, Gohan, and then Goten, both who are heroes in their own right. This extents to his granddaughter, Pan.
* Grrl Power: Due to centuries of aliens abducting small numbers of pre-industrial humans, there are a few million humans living among the wider galactic community. Cora mentions that most of the abductions were probably voluntary, though of course she can't be sure.
* Heir to Sevenwaters, preventing Clodagh from having to make a hard decision.
* Grandpa God in Heaven. Well, that's how he appeared to Stan, who's something of a Christian fundamentalist, so Grandpa God is probably the only form Stan is willing to accept.
* Groundhog Day of these, since Phil continues to make different moves on Rita, and is continually shot down.
* Godzilla vs. Kong Godzilla is suddenly acting hostile now or why he seems to be only attacking cities where there are Apex facilities, when asking those questions are common sense. Instead Team Kong jump straight into the matter of how to neutralize or stop Godzilla.
* Gravity Falls, the antagonist Bill Cipher builds a giant throne out of petrified citizens.
* Hajime no Ippo, one of the later episodes has Ippo visit with the family of the gym's new rookie, Itagaki... only to find out that the entire family is addicted to bad puns. During the supper, they let fly with such a multi-directional hurricane of terrible, terrible puns, that even Ippo - an experienced boxer known for his inhuman toughness - is up against the ropes, desperately searching for any subject - ANYTHING - that will allow him to stop the barrage... Takamura later acknowledges Itagaki's father as the better one when it comes to bad puns, evidenced by him calling Mr. Itagaki "master."

* Green Day, which went Diamond (ten million copies sold) and never had any of its songs hit the Hot 100. Despite this, Green Day has had plenty of #1 hits on rock radio.
* Harry Potter and the Cursed Child. Notably, all those four-ish lines are in the play, so Albus's ascension is immediate.
* Hey! Wait a second...), and Stephen quickly finds an injection site that allows them to identify the poison (which, for bonus points, is radioactive, allowing them to track not only those who have been injected but also the home where the poison was kept, not only averting but annihilating the "untraceable" aspect). The poisoning did kill Stephen's friend, but neither quickly nor painlessly, and even the primary target, who'd received a much larger dose, stayed alive for quite a while afterward.
* Gothic: his name is Mud and he wants to talk to you. Sadly, he has nothing useful to say. No, Mud, go away.
* "God Save the Queen," taken from the sessions that produced Never Mind the Bollocks, was backed with "Did You No Wrong," another song from the sessions that didn't end up on the album. The song originated as "Scarface" from when Steve, Paul and Glen were performing with Wally Nightingale as the Swankers. Since the group was essentially a pub-rock group before John Lydon became the singer, it's instrumentally a pretty straightforward rock 'n' roll song with Lydon's punk vocal and rewritten lyrics laid on top.
* Gone in a Flash, Jason Wood is told that he can't find out stuff about vampires from a nice cross-indexed database somewhere, so he sets out to create one himself.
* goes horribly wrong, leaving him the sole survivor. He is then executed by guillotine on live TV thanks to an obscure maritime law.
* Heretics of Dune: An Ixian Probe can scan the mind of a recently dead person. Taking the drug "shere" will prevent a probe from working long enough for the brain cells to die and become unreadable.
* Heralds of Valdemar novels. While the monarchs of Valdemar do have formal gowns and a crown for extraordinary court occasions, normally they dress in a more expensive and slightly less practical version of Herald day uniforms — the most notable difference being that a queen will wear a divided skirt instead of trousers. And the official Crown of Valdemar stays firmly locked in the treasury until the rare occasions it's needed, with a thin (comfortable!) gold circlet substituting most of the time.
* Greyhawk and written shortly before CY 1000, magic is already greatly diminished from what it was in the time the book describes (CY 576), and seems to be on track to vanishing altogether.
* Happens a few times, from example during an alien death-match where an adrenaline-crazed Zoidberg cut off Fry's arm.
* Hau is on the receiving end of one from Ash in their first battle, losing 3-1. He's pretty good-natured about it, though.
* Heart Catch Pretty Cure, though she resolves to become more confident. While she does eventually become more strong-willed, her shyness never quite goes away.
* Hayate the Combat Butler, he was given his name to be able to escape debt collectors. Since he's the male lead in a harem manga though, it's mostly averted, and he just thinks it applies.
* GoldenEye: "You have a licence to kill, not to break the traffic laws!" was how Q put it... Then again, he says something along the lines of blowing up any vehicles he gets into being a "standard procedure" for an MI6 agent... it is uncertain if this is meant to be ironic.
* Grim Dawn The appropriately-named Demolitionist class uses various manners of potent explosives, amplified by a little extra magic, to take on their foes. Their official role before the collapse was to tackle both fortifications and massed enemies, scattering both; now, they blow up every abomination against nature that crawls the wilderness.
* Hilarious in Hindsight: Something about a work becomes funnier or more relevant because of current events.

* Green Patches. As far as the Saybrook lifeform is concerned, the ship's lifeforms can be divided into sterile ones and life producers.
* Hardcore pornography was banned in Norway up until 2006. Nude shoots and censored softcore were still legal though.
* Happens in a Halloween episode. Meg and her friends actually get invited to a costume party, and she goes dressed as a Slutty Cat, complete with a mask covering 75% of her face. One game of spin the bottle/seven minutes of heaven later, she's escorted to the closet with someone in an all-concealing
* Higurashi: When They Cry and are important for establishing the relationships between the characters and making the horror parts more tragic and impactful, but many people will probably be turned away when they don't find the horror story they were expecting (or at least wonder if they got the wrong game by accident).
* Gridlock": Martha Jones persuades the driver of an air car to shut down all systems (including the much-needed air purifier) so that the large monsters in the poisonous fog won't find them.
* ...having all her blood drained out by Hades' jar deep in the Underworld, in the heavenly land of Elysium (Hades Saga, Underworld Chapter.) The Saints need to remove her from the jar and give her the Divine Cloth of Athena so she can defeat Hades and end the war.
* highwayman and attempting to rob him of the ring she gave him, only revealing her identity when he refuses under threat of death. In the last lines she admits she'd have shot the man if he gave up the ring.
* God of War III in order to advance the game. They have it coming though, so it's okay.
* Guilty Gear and it's updates, Guilty Gear XX #Reload (balance tweaks and making Robo-Ky playable from the start), Slash (more balance tweaks, the introduction of A.B.A. from Isuka and Order Sol, and two new stages), Accent Core (introduction of the Force Break, Slashbacks and throw breaks, two new music tracks, and more balance tweaks, but the removal of Story Mode, Kliff and Justice), Accent Core Plus (introduction of a new Story Mode, reintroduction of Kliff and Justice, and a new survival mode) and finally Accent Core Plus R (rebalancing Kliff and Justice into proper tournament-viable characters as well as adding the Korean soundtrack to the Switch version).
* herself, when she comes to remember parts of another world line where she was a he.
* Highlander is the king of this trope. Aside from Cassandra, who was more a slave, he had 60 wives through the years. The other immortals fall into it too (see Film)
* He lost a dangerous amount of weight to play a drug-addicted soldier in
* Halloween Unspectacular to state that the heroes are "stuffed". Linkara is barely able to keep Zim from throwing him off the flying van in response.
* "Have Yourselves a Merry Little Christmas", as originally written and as performed by * GTD Phoenicia" and jumps out. Mention of this is made in the debriefing.
* Helluva Boss, demons who operate in the mortal world are supposed to keep their presence hidden from humans. Demons are expected to keep human disguises, and the fact that Moxxie, Millie, and Blitzo have been doing contracts on Earth without disguises is something Loona berates them for. Verosika also accidentally creates a giant sea monster by carelessly throwing away some demonic whiskey, which is bad enough that Blitzo uses it as blackmail against her.
* Haunting Ground: A second run of the game includes the ability to change Fiona's and Hewie's costume, see a few new cutscenes, unlock a new ending roughly a quarter of the way through the game and play Hard Mode.
* Hand of Death - Horror film-style view of a hand or a pair of hands, and possibly the murder weapon itself
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban from Lupin's or Sirius' point of view.
* Grand Finale, Wesley has lost interest in life and so spends his final hours tending to what's left of his loved one.
* he knows of a shortcut that involves going "over the woods and through the river", then realizes how stupid this is, saying "No....you don't want to go through the river, you'll get all wet." The scene cuts to the Wolf and Twitchy treading their way through a flooded cave populated with bats.

* Gran Turismo could apply their skills in real-life racing, with the ultimate prize for the top two players being a chance to take part in an endurance race (the 24 Hours of Dubai endurance race). The winners in that experiment finished reasonably well in that race.
* Happily Married inspires Peter to get his life back together and be better once he returns to his own universe.
* Gotham which includes Oswald Cobblepot hating being nicknamed "The Penguin," Edward Nigma having a mug with a question mark on it, a young Bruce Wayne expressing his disgust from a vigilante who kills criminals...
* Harry Faulk is almost as mercenary when it comes to money in the short story adaptation of
* Hilarity Ensues. At the end of the episode Dawn expresses embarrassment over all the crazy things she did; big sis tells her to just wait till she falls in love for real.
* Harvest Moon 64 this is implied to be the reason behind Karen's heavy drinking. She comes from a rather broken family, with a somewhat abusive father and a depressed mother, and has her fair share of angst.
* Heroes. It was a total coincidence that they got the idea for the character around the time she was starting to show...
* Grand Finale, Charles demands that Margaret return to him a book that he gave her as a present. She grudgingly obliges, and at their final farewell, he returns the book to her, this time with a heartfelt message written inside.
* Guardians of the Galaxy they came to seal has already opened... inside the people who lived there, and the blob monster? Is the result.
* Guardian Fairy Michel, Sir Brown waited so long for his beloved princess he turned into a tree.
* Heart only gain animalistic eyes, fangs and teeth with few other physical changes). Bear in mind though, Glen was actually a pretty nice guy in his human state who apparently had no idea what he was or what was happening to him, and the closest thing he had to an unpleasant characteristic was an implicit disapproval of prostitutes based on religiousness.
* Hence subverted; remnants of a flourishing civilization have been found in the Amazon, hinting even that much of the "wilderness" was in fact cultivated and kept under check for centuries.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers - The only episode not to be dubbed in English was "Hetalia = Fantasia".
* Growing Daylight, Blinky is treating a troll who's entire shoulder was completely gone from a training accident, his arm only hanging on by a small grand of stone. While Blinky chews him out over it, the troll seems more proud of it if nothing else.
* Harry Potter than the rest of the world, which consists of Galleons, Sickles and Knuts. There are 17 Sickles in a Galleon, and 29 Knuts in a Sickle. As of December 5th, 2010, one Galleon is worth about 5 British Pounds, or 7.82 U.S. Dollars.
* graphic simulation shows us a world that is nearly hollowed out, to the point that it can only charitably be called a planet at all, with Gem technology covering what's left. We don't know how many inhabited worlds have met this end. While the Crystal Gems managed to save the Earth, in-universe maps show that the Earth's geography was still drastically altered — most prominently, Siberia has largely sunk.
* Good luck, the reverse is also true for left-handed people living in a country that drives on the right and in a left-hand-drive car that requires right hand to shift gears. Zig-zagged, though.
* Gotham, who fastens large balloons to his victims and sends them off to eventually fall to their deaths (if the thin air and cold don't finish them off first).
* Heechee Saga, the main character is Robinette Broadhead, a man. He usually goes by Robin or Bob. Still, being saddled with a woman's name is one of the things he talks about during his extensive therapy sessions.

* Happened in the previous season with the whole Red Sox thing that Sawyer hears Jack say (Sawyer heard it before from Jack's father, that even mentioned that felt bad and wanted to call his son).
* Hannibal Lecter, created by Thomas Harris befits this incredulously. Other than application of his medical knowledge to terrorize and torture his victims, he also uses this to hunt, when it's not humans. Methods of torture inclusive of anaesthetization, and skull trepaning for death realization with the doctor in sight.
* Golvellius ends with hero Kelesis defeating the title character and freeing Rena. The seven crystals he had collected in his journey enter Golvellius' body and restore him to the side of goodness, and Kelesis and Rena return to their kingdom but both leave almost immediately to search for Kelesis' sister. They're even met on their way by Golvellius who accompanies them.
* Harsher in Hindsight, meaning that they used the Super Bowl to put one over on all of America at once.
* Halo 5: Guardians status; instead, the smaller and more humanoid Promethean Soldiers take their place as Elite Mooks. The Soldiers can teleport and even switch their weapons on the fly.
* Hell Hotel to find (including ones that are hologram recordings of many guests' final moments when the bombs fell, doomed to repeat for eternity...).
* Gotlib involved Isaac Newton walking under falling objects or running into the subject of the day or otherwise being subject to cranial trauma, allowing him to come up with the theory of universal gravitation.
* have forgotten their origins and the purpose of the journey. The average Krann worker doesn't know who the Lethanta are, that they once lived on a planet, or that they're at war. The Krann military leaders, though, know everything.
* Hercules, and blames Megara for it, since she was the one who encouraged him, taking her soul as a consolation prize.
* Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix, Harry notices an article in the paper concerning the arrest and imprisonment of a member of the Order and points it out to his friends. Ron at first only notices an advertisement for robes. Justified, since the article is "barely an inch long'' and the advertisement is nearly full page.
* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire the hostages are saved. It's then pointed out to him that it was all part of the contest and nobody was actually in danger, but he gets extra points from the judges for heroism.
* He may also be deliberately invoking this trope for the benefit of his followers, since the alien Scrin are already familiar with him and it's implied his true origins are quite a bit more complex.
* goulash communism" instated in the 1960s, the Hungarian economy was the most open to the West within the Bloc (which isn't saying much; even Yugoslavia—which had a similar economic system necessitating some trade controls but was neutral in the Cold War and thus not part of the Eastern Bloc—saw far more trade with the West than Hungary).
* Halo 2 incarnation had particularly insane muzzle climb at full auto.
* Hey Arnold!, "World Records": After several attempts by Arnold and Gerald to break a world record prove failures, Arnold comes up with the bright idea of getting all the neighborhood kids involved in making a giant pizza puff, using everyone's own special talent (Stinky's ability to wrap sleeping bags helps him fold the crust, Phoebe makes sauce, Gerald cuts vegetables). In the end they failed only because Sid misinterpreted TSP—teaspoon—as Ten Square Pounds. In the end they succeed with "Most Attempts at Trying To Get a World Record" which was without a doubt a team effort.
* High-Heel–Face Turn: When a villainous group has just one woman, then she's the one who will turn good in the end.
* Goblins". Tempts Fate solves the puzzle of the first door... and by slamming it open, he comically squeezes the annoying, plushie-like creature that was guarding it.

* Heavy Equipment ClassA class or character that stands out due to their proficiency with heavy weapons and/or armour.
* Hell, Fleur Delacour ends up with a large number of admirers, legacy of her Veela heritage.
* Gunbuster effect" on the DVD to avoid telling an enormous story). Be sure to have tissues nearby anytime it comes up.
* Guilt-Free Extermination War: An all-out war that won't end until one side is totally exterminated.
* Górsky & Butch. All his death traps involved some kind of predatory fish, always dead because he kept forgetting about water...
* Harry Potter this trope. Voldemort himself is easily the biggest offender, though nearly every major villainous character monologues at least once in the series.
* Hellsister Trilogy wears a flowing dark-red cloak which enhances her sinister aura.
* Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle: Harold has a crush on one of his neighbors, but he can never get up the nerve to talk to her until the end of the film.
* he just carries cotton with him or if he had to stop and pick some on the way.
* GoldenEye, the film was the first in the series to involve the Internet, and the Bond Girl Natalya is a programmer. This aptly reflected the mid-90's when computers and the Internet started becoming a part of everyday life. Since the movie was essentially a soft reboot of the franchise, this was a deliberate attempt at modernizing Bond, along with more overt plot choices like featuring a post-Soviet Russia and a new female M.
* Heart of the Woods is a bit of a complicated example, depending on what ending you get and whether you consider Madison or Morgan the true protagonist.
* Hates Being Nicknamed: This character hates being called a nickname.
* Happens again when a lawyer Gibbs and Vance are talking to very conspicuously leaves them alone in her office when she's called away. Vance even lampshades the situation before they both starting searching for the information they need.
* Halley's Comet can end the usual way of losing all of one's lives, but also will end if the planet that the player is defending takes 100% damage.
* Hakumen, the leader of the Six Heroes, is a time displaced Jin Kisaragi, making him a bit of a twofer when it comes to this trope.
* Gran Torino. True to the trope, the car does get 'borrowed' without his consent after the would-be thief stares into the wrong end of a fully loaded high caliber rifle.
* Grand Finale, Princess Diamond remarries a dragon called Gareth all because Emerald looked for her in the wrong places.
* Hellblazer, features these as a prime part of someone's plan at multiple points.
* here, where Dr Breen broadcasts messages to the masses via large TV screens dotted around.
* highlight how mighty defenders of the Imperium are. The worst example is Ghazghkull Mag Uruk Thraka, the largest and smartest of all orks, prophet of Gork and Mork on the task to reunite the ork race. Somehow he is a galactic threat despite losing every major battle whenever Space Marines or a certain old man with silly hat and an oversized powerclaw are involved. Luckily, in 7th edition he shook off Black Templars pursuit and joined war in Octarius Sector. He seems to have far better luck fighting Tyranids.
* Guild Wars are mostly Type B (sometimes with some aspects of Type 1s).
* HERZ Asuka felt threatened by her, but Kurumi was a challenge and she did not run from challenges.
* He Also Did: A creator does something beyond what they're most known for.
* Harry Potter oh so many times. The wizarding public changes their mind about whether Harry is the savior of their world or a spoiled celebrity (a status that was forced on him mind you, not that his feelings mattered at all) more times than they change their robes.
* GrojBand episode "No Strings Attached", Trina recalls being terrorized by three puppets — two marionettes and one dolly — in a toy store when she was little. It is left unanswered whether the puppets were truly alive or if someone was messing with her.

* Hard Rock follows a clear narrative of a man trying to find the good things in life on his own, getting increasingly cynical and weary, eventually breaking down completely. Fortunately, he finds the answers he was asking for in Jesus and the album winds down as he finally finds peace.
* Happy Feet are an odd case; at times they uncomfortably straddle the line between penguins who can talk and penguin-people.
* Hearts of Ice's den. Nonetheless, he is taken to the Phoenix's mountain -located in the realm of the souls' beasts- by one friend, and the bird lets him use its nest to go back to the mortal plane.
* Grimadonna the vampire superstar from the Netherworld. A sexy humanoid woman just with purple hair, pointy ears, blue skin and fangs.
* Harry and the Potters' third album is titled "Harry and the Potters and the Power of Love" which is entirely based upon Half-Blood Prince.
* Half-Breed Angst, because I can't fully identify with either one of my parents' communities, and all those racist pricks will never accept me as being one of them.
* Half-elves; Seles Wilder, the daughter of a half-elf and a pure-blooded human; Marta Laudi, whose distant elven ancestry allows her to use magic; Trinicus D. Morrison, the descendent of a famous half-elf; and Lenios, the magic-wielding mayor of Belledam. To note, quarter elven blood and further divisons allow for magic use, but seemingly not longevity that allows Elves and half-elves to live for hundreds of years.
* Golems: houses flooded because no one told them to stop fetching water, rows of beans 119 miles long, and so on.
* Heinz field provides fans in the west grandstand great views across the Ohio River to downtown and fans in the east grandstand great views over the river and to the Bluffs on the other side.
* Good Omens Crowley's car bursts into flames, and he drives down the highway inside of it literally holding it together through sheer will. Of course, he is a demon.
* Hercules: Terpsichore, one of the Muses, wears a midriff baring toga.
* Harry the Handsome Executive's assignments is to destroy all traces of a dangerous substance invented by ScumCo R&D before the health inspector arrives.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers of their countries. They aren't bound to a particular government, leader, or ideology as they represent their people as a whole. Which includes their ideas/cultures/beliefs/what-have-you in general. Plus, autocratic governments can hardly be considered representative of their people in the same way as democratic ones, so it makes sense for their countries to hold different opinions to their rulers - and also to be unable to stop them. Dictators don't hold elections unless they know they will win.
* Gratuitous Japanese they splice in their works at random, which may also be machine translated or wrong to the point of nonsensical, and then get angry when real Japanese-English bilingual Asians point out their mistakes. That reaction often contains some alleged superiority over said Asian, though, and hence can partially be traced to racism.

* Harrison Wells, aka Eobard Thawne, aka the Reverse-Flash, disintegrates into nothingness when
* Helmet's only Top 20 hit on mainstream rock wasn't their signature "Unsung" (which only reached #32), but rather "Exactly What You Wanted".
* Ground Control, but they don't stop the enemy from landing drop pods.
* Haibane Renmei. Official streaming and home rereleases have helped this a bit though.
* High and Low. The first act is about ransoming with a kidnapper. The second act is about finding the kidnapper and bringing him to justice.
* Hellsing. In their case, becoming vampires didn't turn them evil. It just gave them fangs.

* "Good grief, the comedian's a bear" routine, where Fozzie tells Kermit to say the line when he says "Hear".
* Her desire to have her daughter Pearl become the next Master, since Pearl channels Mia perfectly on her first attempt, whereas Maya only manages the feat after Phoenix is nearly convicted of Mia's murder.
* glowing red scars, while a Paragon will have even the minor scars visible immediately after Lazarus fade away entirely.
* Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, Neville begins to really come into his own as a wizard and realise that, despite the troubles he has doing magic, he's not a bad wizard or a coward at all. Even the Sorting Hat knew this and placed him in Gryffindor instead of the less popular Hufflepuff like he wanted.
* Hey Arnold!: Self-proclaimed by Rhonda and brought up in almost every episode she's in... despite her limited wardrobe.
* here, when Gary puts a suit and tie on. However, it seems almost odd for Zii to mention the fact at that point, given that she and several other characters have been acknowledging that Gary isn't bad-looking almost since the comic began.
* Half-Life 2), including the Strider's mounted cannon, a mortar-like "suppression device" and the secondary fire of the Pulse Rifle. Seems to be an innate quality of all dark energy-based technology, as even the dark energy reactors in the Citadel disintegrate anyone who touches them.
* He does it again the day after the 2012 presidential election, and Stephen learns that he is contractually obligated to do his show.
* Hayley Goes..., a BBC documentary series with Hayley Pearce investigates subcultures contains elements of investigative journalism mixed with celebrity prurience, and it's difficult to find a sweet spot in the middle where these two investigate.
* Hellboy (2019), when the protagonists talk about some villain not being around anymore because of Hellboy, Alice quips that this probably means the guy won't be putting in an appearance in the sequel.
* He Who Fights Monsters Tsukune comes home and realizes how much Yokai Academy has changed him when his mother comments on his constant tenseness and when he almost kills his old bully. He can barely even recognize himself when comparing a picture from just before entering the academy and his own reflection.
* Glory Seeker: Somebody who goes to war because they really want to be famous.
* Goyas Ghosts: Lorenzo is a complex case. He represents the invading French forces that cruelly oppress the Spanish, but he also represents modern, enlightened ideas in opposition to the Spanish Inquisition whose leaders he persecutes.
* Golden Winter has all of the dogs (and one cat) talking. There's no inter-species communication, but the dogs can apparently understand human speech.
* had already been found guilty and been sentenced, regardless of new information.
* he was actually pushed onto a spiked fence. Plus, he himself killed someone that way five years before then.
* Gotham has Selina Kyle using this to not only get around Gotham City but to skirt the police when needed.
* has been lost for a few months AND Elliot has enough to keep the fans happy.
* Hades provides Zagreus with her home cooking if met in Asphodel, which is good enough to power up Zagreus' godly gifts all on their own. If given divine Nectar as a gift, she says outright she uses it as an ingredient.
* . He doesn't want such a large harem. Hermione doesn't want it either but alternatives were much worse for girls.
* He has another one in "The Reynolds Pamphlet" as well, although it's entirely his fault. With the release of a
* Gundam, making them unable to operate indefinitely like a true GN Drive. This limitation is also true for the heroes, however: while they have all five true GN Drives in existence, that five is all they have, forcing them to run all of their support equipment off of battery-like particle condensers.
* Her daughter, Marie, tries hard to be one, but with her proud attitude, it doesn't always work.
* Henry VIII ends shortly after the birth of Elizabeth, with Henry and Anne happily married - yeah, that went well.

* Hal got close to a squished Jeff so he can mourn for him. Jeff got revived and thought Hal was gay. When Hal spoke later in the episode, Jeff said "Shut up, gay face!"
* Halflings have an alternate racial trait named "Creepy Doll" that gives a halfling character a pale skin tone and glassy eyes. It removes size penalties on Intimidate checks made on larger humanoids and gives the ability to pass for a porcelain doll when sitting idle and thus use Stealth with no need of cover or concealment.
* Hair-Contrast Duo: The character with light-colored hair is bright, cheerful and expressive, while the character with the darker-colored hair is moody, cynical and stoic.
* Halloween (1978), Dr. Sam Loomis packs a Smith & Wesson while hunting for Michael Myers, and empties it into him at the climax. Although he survives all six shots, Michael does flee for the first time in the movie.
* Guardians of the Galaxy films. He is hinted to have bedded many women previously, and his initial attempt to seduce Gamora gets him her knife to his throat. In the second movie, it's obvious that he has truly fallen in love with her.
* Gretel Grosse of E5M9 is this as well due to her being a gender-flipped carbon copy of her brother Hans from E1M9. The same strategies used against Hans also applies to Gretel, only this time the room she's in has two cutaway walls that give you good cover from her hitscan machine guns. However, after she's dead, she drops a key that leads to the final room
* Gundam Build Fighters has the Qubeley Papillion which uses the same funnels utilized by the original Qubeley, but also has a set of "clear funnels" made of transparent plastic, making it look like that anything getting close to it would suddenly explode as soon as the general vicinity around the machine started to glitter and sparkle.
* Hentai Kamen gains new powers based on whose panties he is wearing: he gained amazing speed and agility when he put on a ballerina's panties... Not even going to say it... dammit.
* Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality: Quirrell suggests to Dumbledore that Harry take Occlumency lessons, with the as-of-yet undetermined teacher to have his memory wiped after every training session and an unbreakable vow to not reveal anything.
* Highlander II: The Quickening, perhaps in an inversion, aliens coming to Earth gain immortality (though they seem hugely long lived already) for as long as there's more than one of them.
* High Charity series is actually more of a mobile space station and serves as the Covenants "Homeworld". But as the goal of the Great Journey gets very close, and the Covenant is starting to break apart at the edges, the Prophet of Truth also uses it as his flagship.
* Harebrained Schemes has the digitally enhanced miniatures board game
* Good Omens (2019) Crowley has during flashbacks are wigs but all present-day scenes are Tennant's own dyed hair.
* Glynda Goodwitch steps in to defend a teenage would-be hero, calmly stops bullets with an elaborate magical shield, nearly shoots down a mob boss's airship with her magic, and then sternly tells the girl not to get into trouble again. This minute and a half tells us that Glynda's a badass sorceress, protector of the peace, stern yet fair, and more than worthy of her position as Team Good's lieutenant.
* Hero Scape difference. Some units, like the Dumutef Gaurd and Marro Drudges, also get special bonuses in a certain kind of terrain.
* Heavy Metal, never speaks. Whether she can't or merely won't, however, is never explained. Strangely, this actually makes her the most interesting character in the movie.
* He does it once while pouring a bottle into a glass, firing behind him, and then catching the bottle again without spilling a drop.
* Hawkeye and Trapper secretly replace Frank's gun with one of these in the "Five O'Clock Charlie" episode of

* Go: The supreme Eastern test of intellect. The aura of inscrutable Asian wisdom doesn't hurt either, though in reality playing either game at world championship level is equally difficult. And then, in the other direction, there's... (see the Shōgi entry.)
* Guild Wars 2 activates it. Unfortunately the core of the device was Omadd's Machine, a one-of-a-kind creation of a now-dead Asura who didn't leave enough notes to recreate his work, meaning the device can't be recreated.
* Haruhi Suzumiya was thinking or speaking. In the anime, they keep the ambiguity by not showing his mouth when he speaks.
* grimoires, he nearly suffered a fatal aneurysm. The mage then wonders just what Index is considering that she can store the entire library in her mind without any negative side effects.
* Gold Five was similarly composed, even going so far as to calmly issue a sitrep on the destruction of his squadron
* Hawke. Unlike most examples of this trope, however, Hawke doesn't seem to do much with their wealth other than use it to keep themselves living comfortably outside of the Circle, an act which is still illegal for mages in almost all the nations of Thedas.
* here because the Bual'dib is a stationary object lying on the ground.
* Haruhi Suzumiya in relation to Yuki, suggesting that she is something like a cybrid (human body, alien intelligence). It seems that the non-corporeal alien Data Overmind (and later, the Canopy Dominion) created fully biological human bodies to house data-entities in order to interact with humans. Whether the data-entities that control these bodies are minds created by the Overmind or are extensions of its own intellect is rather unclear, as the series goes back and forth on exactly how much autonomy the Interfaces have.
* Go, he gets left behind while the heroine winds up in the hospital. It's not until the next day - at end of the movie - that she remembers he's still there and goes back for him.
* Harry Grindell Matthews, an American scientist who claimed to have built
* Half-Witted Hillbilly: Characters from rural areas are stereotyped as being backward, ignorant, or stupid.
* Handy Cuffs situation, where she simply twirls the rope around, spins out of the coil and transforms into Wonder Woman. After which she simply throws the dynamite out of the mine shaft and escapes the area.
* "Hawaiian Detective Harry Hoo" (played by a Caucasian man) from an episode of * Gnaw: Food of the Gods II, "evil" scientist Edmond Delhurst suffers a meltdown death after he accidentally infects himself with a mixture of dog cancer cells and the titular growth hormone. He promptly turns into a gloppy puddle of cancerous goo.
* grandfather was an empty soulless man, who was only concerned with endlessly expanding his company, in any ways necessary; he also made his son into a puppet, turning him into the same empty shell of a human being that he was. Yumiko's mother was a nice person, but her parents didn't really care about her, or her daughter, only seeing them as assets that tied them to the wealthy and influential Sakaki side of the family.
* Gordon Lightfoot took some artistic liberties for his song "The Wreck of the Edmund Fitzgerald." For instance, he sings that the ship "left fully loaded for Cleveland." The ship's actual destination was Zug Island in Detroit, though it would have departed for Cleveland afterwards for the rest of the winter.
* Hatari!, Kurt only accepts Chips onto the team after Chips beats him at shooting and punches him in the face. Zigzagged in regards to both men vying for Brandy, as they both admit defeat after she chooses Pockets. By the end, they seem aware of this trope, as both go to Paris after the summer ends to fight over a girl they both know.
* Hair Metal having highly successful tours, with some of these bands even releasing new albums.
* Halt actively avoided telling people about his childhood, as shown in book 11.

* He then proceeds to travel to Bree and again arrives after Frodo and company have left - approximately around twelve hours earlier.
* he gets reunited with them. Then promptly falls back into stealing and hoarding because old habits die hard.
* Halo Legends: Female Sangheili are more humanoid, with far less pounced mandibles and even have hair.
* Grojband has the title band's rivals, The Newmans, which is made up of female versions of Corey, Kin, and Kon, as well as a male version of Laney.
* Gruntz, each level amounts to this, and they get harder and harder as you go. You have to get past enemy gruntz, floors decorated with sharp spikes, eternally rolling boulders, holes in the ground, pits filled with oil, tar and such, and that's not even half of it...
* Hellraiser: Bloodline when Pinhead says that the insignificant creatures that walk the Earth only look to the light and are oblivious to the untold darkness beyond. He's delighted to see it reduced to a world of suffering and death when he takes over.
* Highlander. Kanis, for example, was buried in one after being hanged, despite Duncan’s pleas to the queen to behead him. There’s also an episode where Amanda and Cory Raines kept getting shot and buried and dug up by an unamused Duncan.
* good version is created by someone in deliberate or accidental mimicry of it.
* her loyal knight Seth also subvert this. Their final support conversation ends with both of them confessing their feelings to each other but also viewing them as improper for their stations and resolving to not act on them. Their shared ending however states they got married with the blessings of everyone, so they went through some needless angst over the whole thing.
* Harry Partridge is pure horror for many comic book nerds. Of note are the winking smiley faces, Manhattan's... furry diaper thing, and the fact that everything mentioned in the cast roll call is flat-out wrong.
* Heroes I tells us the Warlocks and Barbarians are Evil, and the Knights and Sorceresses are Good. The canonical victor is the Knight Lord Ironfist. Of course, the actual
* Halo Wars bonus material timeline reveals that the Covenant was ordered by the Prophets to form "Language Groups" who would learn human language and teach it to everyone, presumably to help with military intelligence.
* Helga is shown to possess an intellect well beyond that of the typical fourth grader. She's a talented poet with an impressive vocabulary and gets an impressive score on her aptitude test. Unfortunately, * Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix. The next half, when Harry and his friends enter the Ministry of Magic's Department of Mysteries, the antagonism goes to Voldemort and his followers.
* Hades, Zagreus. He can pursue a romance with Thanatos (Basically the Grim Reaper) if the player so chooses. Depending on the player's choices, at the end of the game he can either be in a relationship with him, Zag's female ex Megaera, or both at the same time. (They know and approve of this arrangement). Zag can also flirt with Achilles but he'll turn down the advances due to being in love with Patroclus, despite the two being seperated in different afterlives.
* Grand Theft Auto: Vice City Stories are shown to be wearing their uniform improperly. And no one on the base ever seems to mind.
* he's close to a nova too recent to appear in the computer's star charts, and realizes that the computer will keep trying and failing to get a navigational fix until the ship's power runs out. Since he murdered the person who actually programmed the computer...
* Hellraiser: Inferno is a sleazy ex-con ice cream man who has covered the inside of his truck with pornographic images.
* Grayscale are subjected to this by Phoenix scientists, evidently not only for medical research and punishment, but because of the fact that the Phoenixes view other races, especially Draconians, as little more than animals. Nine, being a recent capture, is still in fairly good health and spirit, while Pai, who has evidently been there a long time, is little more than a skeleton.

* Gwen's mother, husband and daughter are held hostage by Olivia Colasanto in
* Hard Reset is about a robot uprising, so all its enemies are various robots.
* He And She starred real-life husband and wife Richard Benjamin and Paula Prentiss.
* Harry Potter universe is that people in paintings, photographs and the like can actually move, even out of frame. So it's not inexplicable or off camera, but it still gets creepy when you see Umbridge's office hanging full with pictures of cats, meowing and moving.
* Henry most certainly took after his maternal grandfather Edward IV (mentioned below) in size (both in height and weight).
* Harley Quinn, who's one of the voice directors and voiced the title character's father, being Jewish themselves.
* Halo: Evolutions implies that Admiral Cole did this for his first marriage.
* Hero with an F in Good: Has good intentions, but fails at being good.
* Green Lantern run, his ex-girlfriend, Donna Troy, showed up at his art gallery showing, leading to tensions between Kyle and then-girlfriend Jade. (Donna and Jade, when they both became Kyle's exes, eventually went on to be teammates in the Outsiders and the Justice League... with further ramifications whenever Kyle enters the mix.)
* Green Lantern featured the Poglochis, a race of clownlike aliens, who were hired by the evil Weaponers of Qward, impersonated the Guardians of the Universe and handed out phony power rings to a dozen undeserving recipients (including recurring comedy-relief Green Lantern G'nort), as part of a scheme to destroy the Green Lantern Corps's reputation.
* Gundam. When a minor character suddenly gets an episode focused on him and characterization, s/he usually will not be alive by the end of the episode.
* Healing Factor, this would have been impossible anyway. This could be explained away by saying that HRG and the Haitian didn't know this, but considering they've both spent decades working for the Company (an operation that captures and studies evolved humans) and have had Adam Monroe as a prisoner all that time, it seems unlikely that they'd never tried to erase his memory and would thus, be unaware of this information.
* Golem Arcana, magical "Knights" control golems and colossal golems and use magic by invoking Ancient Ones.
* handwaves this, by saying that he has no intention to kill Antonio, merely to take his flesh. If Antonio expires in the course of Shylock's doing so, Shylock argues this he is not liable as both parties entered into the agreement willingly and presumably aware of the possible consequences.
* Grand Theft Auto V he defended were now free to pollute the water as they saw fit.
* Hamlet, though fictional, might have had to follow that convention had Claudius not been clearly a murderer, and thus not a rightful king.
* High School D×D the other half-dozen harem members. From there the only internal drama the relationship sees is the girls bickering over who gets to be first mistress.
* Godzilla: King of the Monsters (2019) when Ghidorah changes direction in response to Rodan's awakening:
* Heteronormative Crusader isn't something done on a whim without having spent time questioning.
* Hapi of the Ashen Wolves does this with her comrades - she calls leader Yuri "Yuri-bird", Constance is "Coco", Balthus is "B", and their patron Aelfric is "Elfie". Byleth gets the
* Hilariously, even politicians get in on the act: to protest Australian Prime Minister Kevin Rudd not showing up to Parliament at the opposition's demand, Nationals MP Luke Hartsuyker
* He's got decent, self-regenerating health, a good running speed, has an alternate syringe gun that drains health, can heal at range,
* Hercules falls for the title character for his kindness and sincerity after having dated a whole string of jerks.

* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban require the caster to think certain things;
* Guinness World Records as having had the longest orchestral career (71 years), 87-year-old Atlanta Symphony Orchestra double bassist Jane Little collapsed during a pops concert in 2016 and died shortly afterwards.
* Greg Egan and chillingly straight: For the protagonist race, sex triggers immediate reproduction, which consists of the mother fissioning into four children. So it's a necessary part of biology... and also murder.
* Hanna-Barbera series, complete with the actual music score! Ironically by this time, Cartoon Network Studios was no longer part of Hanna-Barbera, whom had folded into Warner Bros. Animation by that time.
* He takes the shot and is shocked to see Picard lying on the ground and bleeding..
* herself; while explaining that wolves don't have cheeks (which is why they can't chew their food), she adds a visual aid.
* Hayden Christensen size. When he strolled onto the set clad in Vader armor, the crew cheered.
* Harry Potter surprising that only a few of them seemed to consider that a page like that might not be entirely serious.
* Grrl Power trope when it introduces a werewolf character. As he explains, wolves howl a lot, and occasionally there's a moon, but since wolves howling at the moon is such a romantisized image, people only notice when it happens.
* Heroes uses this ability often, as part of his more general ability to manipulate time.
* Glory Road team that became the first team ever to win an NCAA title with an all-black starting lineup.
* Harukana Receive, Ayase slaps her ass and compliments her on having a nice posterior, to Haruka's embarrassment.
* Harry McDowell, once his final creation is destroyed, admits defeat and allows Beyond The Grave to avenge his own murder (by killing Harry). For bonus points,
* Guy-on-Guy Is Hot: A straight woman is turned on by gay men kissing/having sex/etc.
* Go Animate's most infamous trends started out as ordinary before ballooning to absurd levels:
* Gunnerkrigg Court having murdered its previous owner in an "accident".
* Gremlins at best while terrorizing people even killing them at worst.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets arrives as Defense Against the Dark Arts teacher and many of them develop intense crushes. Harry and Ron find this exasperating.
* Her younger sister, Koishi, hated this so much she closed off her mind reading third-eye. This came with a whole bunch of side effects like immunity to mind reading, the ability to read and mess with people's
* Goosebumps 2000 novel "Return to Horrorland" has the main kids and some TV reports disguise as Horrors this way, especially since the horror amusement park sells Horror Halloween costumes and masks.
* Grandiose Sense of Self-Importance, they never try to improve themselves.
* [HaShminiya] octette are stuck in their classroom due to a potential threat to their lives. The power goes out, and one of them, Natasha, mentions a custom she and her family have: as long as the power is out, they can tell whatever they’ve been keeping secret, and when the power goes back on, they pretend it never happened. Most of the episode is structured around this trope, ending with her classmate Dori confessing his love for her. Before she can say anything, the light goes back on, and he refuses to listen.
* Hang 'Em High when he decides to murder Cooper to stop his pursuit. Wilson gives his cowhands Loomis and Tommy a chance to back out, telling them that they're both young men who wouldn't be ruined by a prison term and that he'll understand if they turn themselves in.
* Hero Hotline featured Fred, the invisible, intangible man. The problem being that he can't interact with his surroundings at all. It's speculated that Fred isn't real and is just a ploy by super-ventriloquist Voice-Over to pick up two paychecks, but V/O talks to Fred when nobody else is around, so maybe not.

* Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire was dedicated to casting director Mary Selway, who passed away from cancer before the film began production.
* has a spell which makes ones that can create enough rain to drown the recipient.
* Hanna-Barbera, both the Pound Puppies network as well as the fact that dogs are able to talk are kept secret from humans. However, there is at least one person in each version who is aware, at least in part: the sweetheart orphan Holly in the H-B show, and the doting little girl Dot in The Hub's iteration.
* Good Eats, "W" appears only on a screen, because Vickie Eng was out of the country trying to adopt a child. In a later season, she is also temporarily replaced by "The Dungeonmaster" in Alton's basement.
* Haven (2020): Flow bridges are the standard method of interplanetary travel. Kay and Yu are shocked to discover the planet has much smaller flow bridges that link the floating islands.
* Harry Potter the dragons like to give non-riders descriptive nicknames. Until she became a rider, Hermione's nickname was "Fuzzy One," while Sirius' is "Smelly Dog."
* Happens in the episode "I'm Your Biggest Fanatic" where SpongeBob gets to spend the day with jellyfish enthusiast, Kevin C. Cucumber, and is offered the chance to join his group. But Kevin is actually a
* Henry Stickmin Series can speak, it is usually in short phrases, and often Henry remains silent. It is downplayed in that Henry often does things that are not considered heroic- such as attempting to break out of jail or steal a priceless diamond- but he is still the main character, so this qualifies.
* Hercules. Hades eventually snaps and shouts ''I KNOW you know! I know! I get it! I get the concept!"
* Half World, by Hiromi Goto, the sinister Mr. Glueskin is keeping Melanie's mother hostage in a creepy hotel.
* Hey Arnold!, "Road Trip": Helga's mom can ride bulls and was once a champion rodeo girl in her youth.
* High Lifes and Low Lifes appears pushing past Mason at the train station while he is trying to explain to the ticket collector why he doesn't have a ticket.
* He will never get it. When you tell that same joke to an Englishman, he will laugh three times: Once when you tell the joke, to be polite, once when you explain the joke, to be polite, and once again when, in the middle of the night, he gets it, waking himself from a sound sleep. When you tell that joke to an American, he will laugh once, for he will get it.
* Great eagles and phoenixes will grab a humanoid target in their talons, fly into the air and dive back down, slamming their victim into the earth.
* Hellsing This is mainly because it is heavily implied that she has encountered him and already had a taste of what he can do in the past, unlike most of his other opponents.
* Green Acres appeared whenever Oliver needed a specific service or item.
* Goosebumps: In "Welcome To Dead House", the Dark Falls residents are somewhere between a true zombie and a vampire to bloodsucking mutants that are harmed by sunlight. The zombies in "Why I Quit Zombie School" are indeed undead but they are capable of dying for good, and they need a place called "The Reviver Room" to renew their energy or fix any major problems. "How I Got My Shrunken Head" has the villain experimenting on his henchmen to activate the powers of Jungle Magic — instead, they're possessed by an unknown energy that reduces them to mindless slaves.
* Hell on Wheels: Eva finds the man who raped her badly burned in a fire, and smothers him with a handkerchief.
* Gundam VS Gundam Next use its large jets located at its base as attacks, presumably to make up for it not having legs necessary for kicking.
* Gusto, a European snack food resembling shoestring potatoes, has a man's severed head lying on the floor, still talking, as his body stumbles around aimlessly.
* Hakaiou Noritaka because Goraev had previously said Japanese are weak and wanted them to fight.

* Guild Wars with the Charr and Norn. The Norn value personal accomplishments and bravery over anything else. They do not have armies but instead venture out alone or with a few close companions if the enemy is worthy prey. The Charr by comparison place an emphasis on unity, placing the warband and Legion above personal interest. Rather than clashing over these differing viewpoints, the Charr and Norn respect each other for their adherence to honor.
* Grey's Anatomy uses this extensivly, denoting place of work, job, and seniorty through color.
* here, since the very last thing you want people to do with a nuclear waste storage facility is to mistake it for a place of worship...
* Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas. No matter how low C.J.'s very relevant stats are, if you make the corona over the hitman's plane, he can now defy the laws of physics and leap from one plane to another and somehow get inside.
* Gold Digger who makes him miserable. Ultimately, he has enough and returns to the farm to be with his daughter.
* Hawkins, who exhibits situational awareness around himself so effectively that even while he's reading a newspaper he catches a balled up wrapper thrown at him from outside his line of sight without looking. The Predator catches him completely by surprise.
* Highschool of the Dead was the smartest girl at Fujimi High and possesses near encyclopaedic level intellect. So she'll often provide the reader and the other characters with detailed analysis of their current situation.
* Harvey's wings stiffen up when... something else starts stiffening up
* Guns N' Roses and caused him to storm off the stage. While many venues in the city were reluctant to have them back and Rose was charged with starting the riot (and later acquitted), there was never a formal ban. The self-imposed exile ended in 2017.
* He also converts the entire populace of Roppongi into undead named Bodyconians and binds their souls so they won't leave Alice in
* Halo: Primordium. Not technically human (she's described as looking like a giant gorilla, though her species is most closely related to orangutans), but she's definitely sentient; she's the one who tells Riser (who's the only one who can understand her) to have everyone call her Mara.
* He also accuses the Lady of the Lake of lying to him about a knight from across the pond finding the Grail and saving the kingdom, when, in fact, he simply assumed that the knight would be
* Higher Learning: It's never really made clear if Kristen is actually bisexual or just curious. Aside from the merest teasing of a sexual relationship with Taryn (although it's implied that they did), some hand-holding, and a kiss (which may or may not have really happened), we only actually see her have sex with men. Of course when she was having sex with her boyfriend she was thinking of Taryn. This lends a dollop of subtext to the scene in which Dr. Phipps is discussing his students' various backgrounds.
* Hellblazer, he loses almost any even fight with a common punk. All that smoking doesn't help his Constitution score.
* Hatsune Miku: Project DIVAand all difficulties are accessible right from the start.
* GT 40. However both it and the later projects were always axed by GM since classic, front engined Vettes were selling like hotcakes and the prototypes were seen as needlessly complex and pushing Corvette from relatively affordable sportscar into supercar territory (1970s Aerovette prototype featured a 4 rotor Wankel engine, while 1990s CERV 3 had twin turbo V8, four wheel drive and four wheel steering). In 2010s the C7 generation received so much praise from performance enthusiasts, that Chevrolet finally saw an opportunity to market the next generation as a supercar, resulting in mid-engined C8 hitting the showrooms in 2020.
* Guide Dang It!''. Its only decent stat is Special Attack, and that's not enough to redeem its limited movepool and bland typing. Compounding this is the existence of Gardevoir, Alakazam, and Grumpig, three much better Psychic types whose pre-evolutions are available much earlier, and are much easier to find. The only attention it got in later games was a "baby" pre-evolution, Chingling, which lets it be found much earlier but still doesn't make it any stronger.

* Heel–Face Turn to get a bunch of friendship lessons done at once.
* Hannah Swensen, Hannah asks a man to bring her a diet Coke and several chocolate candy bars. When he looks incredulous at the combination, she justifies having diet soda over regular by saying that "I need the endorphins from the chocolate, but there's no sense in adding empty calories."
* Happy Heroes, the evil duplicate of Careful S. wields an arm cannon on a device he's wearing on his wrist as he's fighting the real Careful S. and his other duplicates.
* Hetalia: Axis Powers, Germany, America, England, and France have ALL, on separate occasions, tried to hold Italy prisoner. It never works out.
* Harry Potter more complex than a quartz oscillator. What is a result of this effect and what's a deliberate choice are often hard to disentangle; there are certainly no electronics in pens or notebook paper, but everyone has to make do with quills and parchment.
* has super speed to such a degree that is also grants multipresence.
* Gone series features "Mother" Mary, who, among her many other psychological problems, is anorexic. However, she serves a vital function, so people notice when she starts losing weight, even though she's one of the few kids being fed regularly. Cue a surprisingly unsettling scene involving her strapped to a chair, being force-fed fish by her little brother.
* Happens in classical music too: the Hallé Orchestra's recording of Berlioz'
* Guardians of the Flame of concern or sorrow over this is really jarring.
* Global warming, and by extension general climate change, is going to wipe out civilization any moment now. While issues linked to climate change is serious and shouldn't be ignored, the media and extremists would have you believe that the planet is going to kill everyone within the next year.
* Gundam, who, though at the cost of his own life, managed to kill a Gundam with an almost-unarmed Zaku II).
* Grimjack, seen above, carries both for a simple reason. His home city of Cynosure is a multi-dimensional nexus where the laws of reality can change with the crossing of a street. Magic works some place, guns in others, but swords work everywhere.
* High School Musical, and Kelsi, who has been the source of a heated debate over whether or not Disney also put a lesbian in the film. So, naturally, Disney covers their butts from the many people who would have objected to having homosexual characters in a Disney film by pairing them up.
* Hanna-Barbera has the episode "Rosie's Boyfriend", where building super Henry Orbit builds a robot assistant named Mac. Mac meets Rosie, the Jetsons' robotic maid, by chance, and starts malfunctioning much more than usual.
* Hannah Montana, Miley replies, "I could have lived my whole life without knowing that."
* Hightown: Jackie is quite butch, and her ex-girlfriend was very feminine. She also knows another female couple who have this dynamic.
* Henry V we have the following lines, disparaging those who would not fight with Harry at Agincourt.
* Golfer Ben Curtis does a similar thing, wearing a polo shirt in the local NFL team's colors and the team's logo. The NFL sponsored him after he won the Open decked out in orange for his Cleveland Browns.
* Henry Danger aired on March 21, 2020, which was the 20th birthday of lead actor Jace Norman.
* Good Luck Charlie episode, "Amazing Gracie", Teddy is in need of a new car, and Mr. Wentz reluctantly sells Gracie, his favorite car, to her. The following day, Gracie gets smashed by a garbage truck when Teddy stops in front of a squirrel stuck in a wad of gum. When Mr. Wentz sees the state of Gracie, he is understandably upset. Near the end of the episode, Teddy and the Wentz family hold a funeral for Gracie.

* Hey Arnold!. At first, he loved the fact that he didn't have to go to school for a few days, but soon began to go crazy when he realized that without his friends around, he was lonely. It didn't take long for him to beg Principal Wartz to let him back in school claiming he had learned his lesson.
* Healers suffer a milder variation of this. A Healer has a calling, and so will often have to drop everything to solve an emergency or be assigned somewhere on a moment's notice, which tends to put a cramp on alone time with her spouse. Probably for this reason, there are actually a few Healer-Herald couples in the series which work out well.
* Harvey Dent suffers one of these after losing half his face in every version, but it's especially pronounced in * Half-Life 1. The first is even before all the trouble starts - he appears on a tram on another track in Black Mesa Inbound. He can later be found arguing with a scientist in the Anomalous Materials lab, just before the disastrous experiment...
* GURPS to comparable western swords, since it does an equal amount of slashing damage and less stabbing damage.
* Golden Sun and stats as well. It's possible to give every PC a broad range of multi-element Psynergy, but doing so means you can't use Djinn without messing up the stats and classes. It's far more efficient to give each PC the Djinn of his element for the whole game.
* Grenadier Death Korps personnel do wear Lobster Plate reminiscent armor, and it could be that the flak armor is underneath the coat.
* Goblins D&D ruleset, and that all combat results are legitimate under these altered rules.
* Happy Hollow revolves around the titular small, upper class, God-fearing town, with each track telling a different story of faults that those living in Happy Hollow portray that seem at odds with the town's "perfect" image. The final track, "Hymns for the Heathen", is an afterword of the album.
* Go Mad from the Revelation (inverse, where the "myopia" is broken into insanity)
* Green Lantern Later revealed to be the work of Krona, who programmed them to do this to show the flaws of an emotionless army.
* Hellsing Ultimate Abridged was "amazing"). Of course, this doesn't mean he won't also do monstrously evil things too; after all, he does have a massive army of millions of souls he's enslaved from all of the people he's killed and eaten for several centuries.
* Heart Containers, as you can't skip Heart Containers after beating bosses.)
* Heel–Face Turn and stole the Makuta's Achilles' Heel, the Mask of Light.
* has Shampoo accidentally remove herself from the "fiancee wars" after getting some of her potions mixed up. Since Cologne can no longer bring Ranma into her tribe through her, she isn't happy when she goes to inform Ranma and Akane of the situation:
* Hercule Poirot, even though the book just had Poirot explain his conclusion to the killers and a couple of others, not the whole boat.
* Hikonin Sentai Akibaranger in episode 2 and Mizuki and Yumeria have to fight alone, they are nearly "killed" due to their inability to recognize this particular flag.
* God Slaying Blade Works, Illya starts working on a manga based on the events of the Fifth Holy Grail War. Of course, she changes several names and details.
* Glenn Howerton's wife plays the woman whom Dennis manipulates and torments in "The DENNIS System".
* he throwing to first base. Other players have had this problem at some point in their careers, such as pitchers Matt Young and Matt Garza, and second basemen Steve Sax and Chuck Knoblauch; catcher Mackey Sasser uniquely developed trouble throwing the ball back to the pitcher accurately. The term used for this in baseball is "The Yips."
* Godzilla (1954) are essentially black-and-white horror films where the monsters are played entirely for scares and great emphasis is put on the death toll caused by their rampages.

* Hachi Ichi, Shinichirou's grandfather deems his current life-style unfit for a heir, so he throws him into a house with eight young and beautiful girls and tells him that within one year he'll have to choose one of them as his bride.
* Ground Pound attack temporarily blurs your vision and immobilizes you.
* Heel was allowed to alter the stipulations of the match, during the match, as many times as they want.
* Heroes, Sparrow Redhouse was revealed as having this power in an online comic.
* Guiding Light fans sent candles with the message "Keep the light shining!", but, by that time, the decision had already been made not to renew the show.
* Goodness Gracious Me parodied the trope in a Chunky Lafanga sketch where he is exposed as having starred in a porn film where he played a milkman being seduced by a housewife.
* Happy Days), and could still throw down if he needed to. It was later revealed that he had been a file clerk or a cook, depending on which episode you're watching.
* Harry Chapin would often substitute the callsign of a local radio station in the final verse of "W*O*L*D*".
* Her date of death - March 22nd, 1982 - is also significant, as it was the launch date of the Space Shuttle Columbia
* Habitat: Trope Launch Pad and any page that remotely mentions furries
* God Hand, you'll blast their head through the ground, as opposed to just giving them a suplex if they have more than that. There are plenty of other more traditional finishing moves as well, such as the Head Slicer which is a guaranteed kill if it works, and the God Poke, which finishes demons as long as they're under strict conditions.
* Good Luck Charlie episode, "Let's Potty", as Bob teaches Charlie about the toilet, Charlie flushes her toys down it, clogging it up. When Bob tries to fix the clog himself, he hits a water pipe that sprays the fusebox, causing a blackout.
* Happens again with Sprig and his childhood friend Ivy. When Sprig's grandfather and Ivy's mother realize they're close, they immediately decide to start them courting as part of a profitable business arrangement for both sides.
* GWAR are concept albums. Almost every album has an accompanying DVD, which is either a concert, or a movie that more details the album's plot.
* Hawaii Five-0: The Yakuza control many of the corrupt cops the team runs into, as well as the corrupt governor, and blew up the car Steve's Mother "died" in. Adam, Kono's love interest, is the son of a Yakuza leader and was targeted when he tried to clean up his family's business and killed his brother who was trying to kill Kono.
* Hetty Feather, showing how she put Jem's needs before herself constantly.
* Herb Alpert because Alpert — famed as a trumpeter, not as a vocalist — sang on the song himself, and the only brass portions of the song were a couple of bridges and a fadeout (also performed by Alpert). The day after the special aired, CBS was inundated with phone calls from listeners inquiring where to buy the song. Alpert's label (A&M, which he also co-owned) rush-released the single, and two months later, it was the number one song in America. The tune remains a popular love song, while the Tijuana Brass special remains completely out of print and obscure.
* Hell Is a Martial Artist, Nabiki is sent to Hell for violating her contract with Hild. When Hild later decides to make Nabiki into Ranma's slave, only one day has passed on Earth while Nabiki has been tormented for decades, to the point she needs time to remember who Ranma is.
* he was), and almost all the conflict could plausibly have been gang-related violence. Same for some later stories as well, where magical events just don't leave traces or leave traces that could plausibly be mistaken for having mundane causes, and Harry points out real-world statistics which create lots of room for unexplained things. In other books, though, it just gets ridiculous, and Harry explains it all away in the closing narration just as easily as the magical drug dealing. Dinosaur bones found in a park for no apparent reason? College students must have played a prank. People saw a zombie tyrannosaur running through the street? It must have been mass hallucination caused by mold in a bad batch of bread!

* Godzilla than a nuke and is one of the only manmade devices in the entire franchise that has ever explicitly and completely killed Godzilla for good.
* Green-Skinned Space Babe from the pilot, "The Cage". She was, in reality, a human, but she was able to use the aliens' telepathic abilities to change the way she appeared to Captain Pike. It essentially played out as the first type.
* Grandia II had something similar, a huge nigh-uncrossable canyon, though its existence was explained: it was basically caused by God crashing into the earth.
* Hand Blast and other kind of energy shots that actually tear holes in people's bodies.
* Guide to Fiends presents the Distender, a type of devil who can control emotions in mortals via use of the four humors. (A sidebar in the book briefly summarizes the now-debunked Trope, acknowledging why the theory is no longer recognized.)
* Here is a video. Even if it's not true, you have to admit that said mannequin looks DAMN human-like.
* her appearances in the present day are impossible to talk about without spoiling that she, in fact, is truly not dead at all.
* Hayate × Blade: Did Wanko REALLY curse those two girls in her debut fight, or did they just freeze from fear at her sheer creepiness?
* Good Eats. While most of his on-air family is portrayed by actors or members of the production crew, his late grandmother, mother, and daughter Zoey did make appearances as themselves. On a recent episode, Zoey Brown appeared as Alton's granddaughter which is humorous because she was effectively playing her own daughter (Zoey being Alton's only child).
* High School Debut, the main girl (Haruna) falls for Fumi, a friend of the main guy at first. And the main guy, Yoh, is even helping her to date him! Then, Fumi dates Yoh's sister, Asa, who only dated him because Haruna liked him. It's all very confusing.
* Goud. He's a massive ex-soldier with a heart of gold and a face like dog meat.
* Harry Potter, Seamus Finnigan seems to be subjected to this an awful lot. It's even lampshaded in the final film.
* He objects to Desaad and Sleez's acts of evil because they are largely pointless. Desaad is a petty sadist. Sleez once mind-controlled * Guardia Costiera of coastlines, and the Coast Guard needs any help they can get).
* Halo started producing Pure Forms - creatures built from scratch out of collected biomass.
* Gunstar Super Heroes, since the original gun mix system was swapped for having three types of ammo from the start and the option of using a huge cannon whenever. Oh, and some bosses were seriously toned down, one barely even attacking anymore.
* Harmony wraps Bagan with a chain that becomes stronger the more evil the prisoner is. Bagan is able to break it, possibly because he considers himself Above Good and Evil
* Grand Theft Auto IV features this as well. If you disable a cop's car, the driver and his partner will gladly grab the nearest vehicle available. Somewhat amusing being chased by two cops in a minivan.
* Guild Wars 2 where you man the gun of an airship and shoot at him him until he dies. The game was severely lacking in endgame content for quite some time after launch, putting off a lot of players whose attention would not be held long-term by the PvP or WvW. Fortunately the devs adjusted Orr to make it less-frustrating to traverse and eventually added a whole new raft of high-level content with the Living World, Fractals of the Mists, expansions and Raids.
* Hamilton: "Where is this [duel] happening?" "Across the river in Jersey. Everything is legal in New Jersey."
* GunBuster, upon announcing its acquisition of the license, also announced an English dub will be produced.
* Halo's "Odd One Out", where everyone calls Spartan-1337 "Big Robot Man".
* Happens twice while Setsuna is piloting Gundam Exia. The first during the very first episode.

* Grace is a genius, but when things go wrong, she always blames herself, and she thinks she's stupid. She also moped about "
* Hellboy carries a sledgehammer and later uses a smaller hammer to shatter some glass.
* Hellboy of course, seeing as an actual vision of their return reveals a fiery wasteland.
* GraceUnderFire: In one episode, Wade Swoboda says, "There is no Russian word for 'freedom'". In fact, the Russian word for freedom is 'zwoboda'.
* Harry Potter she attempts to force the students to look more standardised.

* Harold Lloyd lost his left thumb and index finger when a prop bomb he was posing with for publicity photos exploded.
* Hex, which is haunted by a witch. The author has a lot of fun working out how a town might hide a dark secret in the modern world of mass media and social media.
* Guilty Gear, the protagonist referring to himself as such, in one of his endings.
* He eventually conquers this fear when he and Roger are stranded on a small island atoll for several months, and seagulls are the only edible thing around.
* Hetalia Bloodbath 2010, we've also had Hong Kong in a maid dress, and China in a qipao.
* Gwent: The Witcher Card Game: The Crimson Curse, a special card depicting a vampire ritual that turns the moon blood red. It generates the Blood Moon row effect which buffs vampires for its duration.
* Harmony Versus Discipline: To take control or to accept things as they are.
* Hae-Joo and Sonmi have sex in the novel too, but the novel's incidence is emotionally sterile Glad-to-Be-Alive Sex
* Grey Griffins book series, in that while the main heroes are four children, adults frequently end up having to rescue them or help out, and are also the ones who do the overwhelming majority of the actual fighting. On the other hand, the kids tend to do much adventuring on their own, usually using their wits.
* Hazbin Hotel under wraps in part because it was considered "sexual dysfunction" when he was alive.
* GODISNOWHERE This can be interpreted both as "God is now here" or "God is nowhere". Simply put, Hebrew can be a bit confusing to translate if you don't know the context.
* here for details). Those technologically modified arthropods were made into beings remotely controlled by human handlers rather than an artificial intelligence, though further advances in technology may make this possible. Even then, trying to perform such experiments on other species and especially fellow humans will certainly bring up ethical concerns.
* Helix, the CDC's army liaison, Major Sergio Balleseros, is from USAMRIID and a member of the Army Corps of Engineers. He identifies himself as a systems engineer, who's job it is to analyze building infrastructure to discern structural methods of viral transmission, balancing out the CDC's team of biologically-oriented scientists. He explains to one of the CDC's team that his skillset means he doesn't see a lot of combat.
* He does the same for Lana later on (taking her case right after meeting her) and keeps defending her even when
* High School D×D will try with him in the bedroom, she'll one-up her as much as possible.
* He actually was Rei's first love, but he married a girl his age and it didn't go beyond a kiss.
* He's Out There wears a full-face fitted leather mask that looks like it's sewn to his head.
* Hidden Heart of Gold: To keep their badass reputation, they don't want others to know of their good (but less badass) deeds.
* Grimsby, Nobby gives Sebastian a wedgie while he's trying to snipe an enemy agent.

* Hexameron*, Lady in Black is only visible in a mirror, and cannot harm you while being looked at.
* Heroes originally had this as a major plot point. Claire's friend Zach was going to embrace his homosexuality, mirroring Claire's embrace of her new powers. Although Executive Meddling nixed the gay reveal, which is perhaps why Claire ends up wangst ridden for the rest of the series.
* HeartCatch Pretty Cure! around the same time introducing two new cures: Cure Beat and Cure Symphony. Many people fell for it until someone at Toei told fans that it was a hoax. There would be a Cure Beat later in the series, but she was different from the one in the leak.
* Hanaukyō Maid Team episode 8. Three security maids are rendered unconscious in seconds by a drugged handkerchief over their mouths.
* Gokusen, Kumiko does this when ever she is fawning over Shinohara. Her eyes go from their usual fixed glare to big, sparkly, bishojo-standard and can flick back and forth between panels when the situation calls for it.
* Happens more literally to Tsukasa after he's severely wounded. Senku places him in a cryogenic freeze to keep him in a state of near-death so he can search for the petrification method to heal his wounds.
* Hero Games) are dedicated to Andy Mathews, Hero's late Art Director.
* Henry Stickmin -- Completing The Mission to attack the military. Just as it was about to fire, the camera shifts to the base... completely deserted, as the Fail Screen says it took a week for Henry's summon to arrive.
* Hannah Montana: When Miley sneaks off to go to Florida without her father's permission, he and Jackson end up on the plane trying to chase her. Because he and Jackson are stuck in coach, they get to deal with, as Jackson puts it:
* Hamburger Hafenkonzert): Broadcast weekly on NDR in Germany since June 1929 — even through WWII.
* gong1 mun4 respectively in Mandarin. In most places outside China, the city of Kongmoon is better known as Jiangmen.
* Goblin Slayer the "another story". While they clear out goblin dens, a battle against the Demon Lord for the fate of the world is occurring just offscreen, led by Hero, a young adventurer who has been crossing paths with Goblin Slayer since he saved her hometown from goblins.
* Hennessy (a former divorce lawyer) is sleazy and ambitious in guarding Ericson’s interests (including bribing Ericsson’s old campaign manager to keep his mouth shut) but is portrayed as not quite deserving of the criminal charges that are eventually filed against him.
* Her first ever Billboard Hot 100 #1 song "We Are Never Ever Getting Back Together" leans more towards being catchy, radio friendly bubblegum pop (with some electronica thrown in for good measure) when compared to her more thoughtful, guitar based country-pop fare. It (along with its parent album
* Happily Ever After: Fairy Tales for Every Child became "The Princess and the Pauper".
* Hijikata have another one in Okita, 1st Captain of the Shinsengumi, who is very obviously
* Golden Age that he absorbed energy from a nuclear-powered supervillain, which somehow allowed him to survive an atomic bomb blast, after which he gained his powers.
* Gravity Falls: Gideon Gleeful was the primary antagonist for the first season, but was succeeded by Bill Cipher, a demon who watches over the town who becomes the true antagonist for the whole show.
* Hard-Drinking Party Girl, and after you complete the minigame to get her out of the bar, she lets out a long, deep, loud, brassy belch before leaving, as a result of chugging three shots of tequila.
* has changed in this respect in the years since the episode aired, so clearly the fictional detectives weren't the only ones who wanted to see such things made illegal; today, they might be able to charge his actions as a form of rape, on the basis that the women only consented to protected sex and he knowingly changed the circumstances of the encounters, making them potentially non-consensual.

* Granblue Fantasy, Medusa frequently ignores doors on the Grandcypher when making her entrance, leading Vyrn to complain about how she'll eventually break the ship if she keeps this up.
* Happy Endings, as seen in the page quote. Happens a few other times, though not to that extreme.
* Henry Hubbard Jr. was a San Diego police officer with an exemplary record, whom no one suspected also was a
* Hilarious Outtakes parody this by having Heimlich's face getting smushed against the camera.
* Henry Martyn the Monopolity of Hanover is based on Tudor England while its rival, the Jendyne Empery-Cirot is based on Spain of the same period.
* Halo 4, the Didact's personal flagship, which is vertically oriented and is a truly absurd 371.4 km tall, 142.7 km long, and 138.6 kilometers wide. The Visual Guide casually mentions that it isn't even the largest Forerunner ship.
* Harry leaves a note to himself with Dobby right before having underage sex with Snape just in case his subsequent blackmail attempt ends in him being Obliviated instead of finding out what he wants to know.
* Hardboiled Detective has one. (In live performances and the video sequel, Phil Austin would wear both the trenchcoat and the traditional fedora.)
* Hank while she was unconscious before being stopped by a ten foot tall and seriously pissed off Henry Pym.
* Grunts!, a game played by victorious orcs after a battle using the heads of their enemies. And if there's a shortage of heads, they can always volunteer an orc for the role.
* Heavy Rain burns a barrel full of evidence implicating him as the Origami Killer.
* Hardcore Devo compilation, more directly refers to the band ("I hear em' coming, gonna mess up the plumbing/It's D-E-V-O! From O-H-I-O!")
* Green Lantern: Atrocitus is the sole survivor of the Manhunter's massacre of Sector 666, there used to be four other survivors but he killed them and used their blood to help create the Red Lantern Corps.
* Good Will Hunting as a thriller, before the Weinsteins encouraged them to instead emphasize the relationship between Will and his psychologist.
* Greasy Spoon, one guest gets a dirty knife, so he starts to rub it clean with the tablecloth. The waiter reprimands him: "Why are you doing that? First, our cutlery is always clean. Second, you're soiling our tablecloth!"
* Gor (based a lot on Barsoom) measures 80 Ihn (seconds) to the Ehn, 40 Ehn (minutes) to the Ahn, and 20 Ahn (hours) to the day.
* He is somewhat justified in taking it up to this level, as this was his plan B, just in case the Varden and other races failed with plan A (and would, therefore, be dead anyway), and considering that he was the seemingly the only one thinking of what were to happen if plan A failed, one can’t blame him for thinking ahead.
* Goblins: Every time something happens in the comic, more tragedy will result than happiness. The author herself seems to have noticed this, since she's started killing off characters less often, though some may still be turned off regardless.
* Higurashi: When They Cry blatant, anything goes. The club members employ psychological warfare on each other, involve people from outside the game, rig things to their advantage... not doing any of this is considered to be "not taking the game seriously".
* Good Old Fisticuffs (which are completely useless), referencing his desire to use more sophisticated tools but being too strong and accidentally breaking them when he tries.
* Hc Svnt Dracones and traditional governments that saw them as a threat. It eventually went nuclear, the only survivors a couple corporate colonies on Mars.
* Goon. A guest on an interview show has spent ten years building a magnificent model of St. Paul's Cathedral out of matchsticks. Unfortunately the heat of the studio lights cause it to catch fire. The interviewer mutters, "Well, I expect we'll be seeing you again in ten years. Only this time I'd suggest taking the match heads off first."
* Half-Life 2: Antlions are composed of several different castes. These including the standard Antlion, Workers (which tend the Antlion grubs and can spit corrosive acid), and Antlion Myrmidonts (which are huge and serve as miniboss monsters), and the Antlion King.

* Hey Arnold!, Big Bob throws out his back trying to get Miriam a bottle of Tabasco sauce and is out of commission for Big Bob's Beepers, leading to Miriam take his place until he recovers.

* Gospels of the Flood, Simon is certain this is the truth of the world.
* He went to a college in the Ivy Leagues to earn a degree in Medicine, and it turned out to be much harder than those days he sat around with the other kids in elementary school making a collage out of different pieces of colored paper, magazine pictures, and copious amounts of glue and glitter. Who could have ever known?
* Hercules was born, were known to look down at the little people beneath them, and stomp on them like ants.
* Guardians of the Galaxy and at least one other female prisoner are mixed in with the male prison population.
* Hatoful Boyfriend, a romance game where all of the love interests are sentient pigeons. In spite of this, the game has been critically acclaimed due to its surprisingly good story, but many just can't get past the bizarre concept.

* Hamlet, the only major character left alive is Horatio. Hamlet's Dad is dead before the curtain goes up in the first place, Polonius is murdered by Hamlet in a case of mistaken identity (though Hamlet's not too unhappy about that), which causes his daughter Ophelia to commit suicide. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are executed offstage. The final scene then ends with a bloodbath that kills off Hamlet's mother, his uncle, Ophelia's brother Laertes and finally Hamlet himself.

* Good Clean Jokes) has two hunters realize they're lost. When one, panic-stricken, asks what to do, the other coolly answers to shoot another deer to draw the game warden.
* Greendog: The Beached Surfer Dude is rendered in an extremely cartoony style, while every other human that appears looks more realistic.
* Hemo Erotic: The biting, cutting, and/or drinking of blood for sex appeal.
* Godlike. Talents are inherently harder to attack with miracles, requiring a contest of will to either refute the power or force it to work. This doesn't affect indirect miracles, though, like being shot in the head by an invisible assassin... Zed talents can shut off enemy superpowers entirely by altering the environment around the talent—e.g. if a super-strong talent lifts a tank, the Zed makes the tank much heavier — without getting into a contest of wills. Will contests are out the window in the sequel Wild Talents, though, and it's implied there are no more Zeds either.
* High-Tech However, in a nod to cinema, there is a technically man-portable version, with proper grips, batteries, and an ammo backpack. It still requires very high strength and runs out of ammo very quickly.
* Henry Hatsworth in the Puzzling Adventure. The game isn't voiced in the traditional sense, but when she talks, sound bites of deep, throaty coughs punctuated by VERY masculine "Yoo-Hoo"'s play.
* Goblins girl Kin. Female Goblins are drawn sexier than their male counterparts in several panels, especially when the male leads are fantasizing.
* Harsher in Hindsight given what happened to Afro-American musician Elijah McClain; someone called 911 seeing him dancing to music on his ipod while wearing a ski mask.)
* Harold who wants Dr. Bell all to himself (Harold was right about the last part). This is effective enough to make Monk himself seriously consider that he might be killing people.
* Haven episode "Survivors", a man unknowingly had the ability to recreate events he feels guilty about. He was guilty about his friend dying in a fire, so people around him would burn up.
* Harry Potter: Mad-Eye Moody could be a "magical cyborg" given that he replaced a lost eye with a magical one that gives him enhanced abilities. He also has a prosthetic leg, but this isn't described as giving him any extra abilities and is more often than not a hindrance.
* Happy Ending Massage: A massage session turns into something quite a lot steamier than that.
* Guys tend to have blockier fingertips. Girls's fingers tend to be shrink toward the tips, making them look daintier.

* Halestorm is exactly what it sounds like: a rock song about rock fans rocking out at a rock concert.
* Gorillaz is arguably the most successful to date. They even performed "live" as holograms (using a technology called Pepper's Ghost) at the Grammy Awards back in 2006.
* Hell MOO doesn't feature an actual zombie apocalypse (they go for the standard nuclear warfare), there is a zombie virus and some locations, especially the basement of the Bradbury hotel in Slagtown, are filled with them. Since all NPCs can be killed (with varying degrees of difficulty) and anyone who dies of zombie rot rises as a zombie if their corpse isn't butchered, one or two tough NPCs getting infected can easily result in a zombie plague hitting Slagtown; usually the Freedom City Police is skilled and tough enough to keep the spread outside their borders, but it can make wandering into Slagtown or Gangland suicide for a newbie.
* Hanar have two names, a simple one-word "Face Name" (example: "Zymandis") they use in general conversation, and a long, poetic "Soul Name" (example: "Regards the Works of the Enkindlers in Despair") that only very close and trusted individuals are permitted to know. The only hanar who goes by his Soul Name openly is noted as being incredibly rude and arrogant by hanar standards.
* Havemercy. Roy is older and definitely a mentor for Hal, but is reluctant about entering a relationship with him for precisely that reason. He doesn't want to take advantage, and in fact it's Hal who ends up as the pursuer for much of the novel.
* has will and guts to protect those near and dear to her. Even the feisty Scarlett who originally disliked her comes to love and miss her. Rhett Butler claims to respect Melanie deeply.
* Greeks considered Odysseus as one of their distinctive heroes for his shrewdness. On the other hand, Romans preferred a more straightforward philosphy to soldiering, and considered Ulysses (Odysseus) an amoral
* Go On featured gymnast Shawn Johnson being brought to the support group and asked to talk about losing, having "lost" by getting three silver medals. Johnson herself is portrayed in the commercial as falling into this trope, insisting "I won" based only on her gold medal.
* Harmony (2016), Candy writes to her dad complaining about Scott. Later, Iris sees the letter in the trash can in Scott's office.
* gone back and forth across the line probably the low point of acceptability.
* Harry's conclusion of Dumbledore's reasoning for Harry's position as
* Ground Fault Circuit Interrupter outlets contain two buttons that are designed to test the outlet's circuit interruption followed by resetting it. Older ones labeled the buttons "Test" and "Reset" but newer ones usually do not. Any curious child could push the "Test" button not knowing what it does and create an electrical outlet that seems totally dead, but a quick and firm push of "Reset" is all it takes to fix it.
* Gran Turismo they are flexible enough to bend or collapse in order to cushion the impact of a major crash. But here, not only can they bring even the heaviest cars to an instant dead stop, they absolutely won't budge.
* Gunners to Raiders and come equipped with durable combat armour and often sport high-tier firearms and energy weapons.
* Gunslinger Girl. They look calm and stoic even when gunning down people
* Hellboy begins, they're still a couple, but they're on the verge of breaking up.
* has a scratch as the protagonist interrupts Pinkie Pie's narration (pink text) asking her to let him narrate instead.
* Heath Ledger made him a different person, and it's believed (but unlikely, it was far more likely that it was an accident due to job stress) drove him to madness and suicide.
* Good Eats says this trope word for word when trying to coax his cameraman into getting into his "Vomitron" machine to test the effects of ginger on motion sickness.
* Heavy Metal. The queen doesn't mind, considering she deliberately positioned herself to enjoy Den's touch, and a few seconds of animated sex later, she proclaims Den her messiah.

* Grumpy Old Men: John Gustafson and Max Goldman are fairly uptight and stuck in a rut, finding pleasure only in ice fishing, bickering, and tolerating their children. That is until wild and crazy Californian, Ariel Truax, rolls into town, racing a snowmobile up and down the street, turning their lives upside down, and causing a love triangle between the two.
* Hey Arnold!. She is incredibly envious of Helga's freedom to be her own person, away from the ever-watchful eyes of her parents.
* GURPS Technomancer sightings and abductions (which may or may not actually happen).
* Hajime no Ippo: it's about members of a boxing gym who dedicate their lives to the sport. They're filled with so much fighting spirit that the whole series is translated as that in some countries.
* Gor series: the alien Kurii have three (or four) sexes, or genders. They basically work out to be male, female, a "blood nurser" which the females lay their offspring in and then the babies eat their way out of, and a fourth sex which is essentially a male with low testosterone, which is shunned by the community, but in certain circumstances becomes a breeding male; hence they're not sure whether to consider it a separate sex or not.
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets from "TOM MARVOLO RIDDLE" to "I AM LORD VOLDEMORT".
* Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows Voldemort installs a few of these to re-enforce his reign:
* Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, Petunia stops laughing. However much Petunia may resent her sister, she still misses Lily.
* Gridlinked. Because the planets that the gates are on are moving at different velocities (and directions), there is technology in place to keep someone from stepping through one end of a portal and flying out the other side at thousands of miles an hour. The sabotage of this safety feature has disastrous consequences and starts off the plot.
* Good Omens (2019). Sheen has openly said that he played Aziraphale's reaction to this as exactly this trope.
* he aims at a thug holding his son hostage and pulls the trigger. After the gun fails to fire, he then examines the jam by looking down the barrel. Rather than being hit and killed by a bullet from his pistol, he is instead punished with a raccoon to the face.
* Harley Quinn (2019). The crew's expression practically say "what just happened?"
* he's pretending to be evil. He's also Black Manta's son, so it seems to run in the family.
* Her father's not much better, being named Appledelhi Siniz Hesap Lutfen, which translates as "
* GTA V can have your car explode if you drive it off a cliff and land on the engine side too hard.
* Grizzly featured a giant prehistoric killer bear going on a killing spree on ranger's station; the bear's claws are so sharp he can cut off a person's arms and decapitate a horse with a single swipe.
* Harry Potter, Dumbledore catches Harry out of bed after curfew and his response is to have a nice mentorly talk with him. Later on in the same book, McGonagall catches Harry and friends out after curfew and her response is to remove 150 house points from Gryffindor and give them all detentions.
* Guilty Gear XX #Reload: Bridget's Instant Kill yo-yos the opponent to the surface of the moon, with the Earth visible from space. Slayer's Instant Kill punches the opponent to the next galaxy.
* Greyhawk does everything but travel alone. Much to his discomfort, he accumulates ever more companions through the series. He starts with just a sentient hellhound skin, and collects a faerie princess who is also an accomplished mage, a drunken human teamster (who later becomes a drunken badger), a female sphynx, a young male human soldier, a talking sword, and a non-evil demon (who just wants a nice clean, calm, safe place to settle down with her boyfriend).

* Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2 field, made of of red and blue asteroids that randomly appear, disappear and mutually annihilate like quantum particles. After playing this trope straight with a deadly pursuit through the field (Quill squabbling with Rocket over who should fly the ship doesn't help) they reach the other side intact only to find the rest of the Sovereign fleet has just flown around it.
* Heck! The character's name is "Hercules" which is his Roman name, his Hellenic name is "Herakles"
* GUN×SWORD is Wendy's pet pink turtle, and can usually be found at the end of a chain around Wendy's neck. How it was attached to his shell is never revealed. Van doesn't like him very much.
* going on a date with his viewers using a Choose Your Own adventure game, made out of YouTube videos.
* Guardians of the Galaxy, Ronan orders his Necrocraft pilots to dive-bomb the city as a distraction for the Nova Corps.
* Goldberg has been outspoken in his condemnation of latent anti-Semitism in the wrestling business.
* Goldeneye. James is hit in the neck with a tranq dart when he tries to shoot Janus. He goes down immediately before he can even raise his pistol.
* Gremlins 2: The New Batch. The hero has come up with a last-ditch plan to keep the Gremlins from escaping the building, and starts issuing orders along the lines of "Protect Gizmo! Aim the firehose into the lobby! Transfer the electro-Gremlin down here!" He gets to the last, useless, character and says "Marla... smoke." Marla says "right" and takes a jerky puff on her cigarette.
* Greg Egan brings back people from the dead, which is used to aid in solving murders.
* Good Luck Charlie before his toothache forces him to close his mouth at the last moment.
* Hey Arnold! about this sort of rumor. Actually executed both humorously and creepily at the same time.
* Hercules when Hercules charges up before head butting the centaur Nessus in the stomach to free Megara.
* Grampa Simpson hates the metric system. "My car gets forty rods to the hogshead, and that's the way I likes it!"
* Hellsing - they even make reference to themselves as "Bonny and Clyde on the highway" in the bloody graffiti they leave on the walls.
* Ground Control") cover the classic scout/fighter/ground-attack/bomber archetypes.
* Golden Age. In the movie, his body is instead created from scratch by Helen Cho.
* Golden Ending - the formal public announcement of the heroine's engagement to Mr. Darcy, Lady Catherine's nephew.
* Hamlet. Hamlet thought it was pretty funny, though. And many who had Polonius's advice quoted at them as wisdom for years would agree.
* Herobrine, the supposed dead brother of the game's creator, known for creating strange structures and being elusive. Several ways have been rumored of to "summon" him, and many bogus symptoms of his appearance in your world (trees spawning with no leaves, long 2x1 pregenerated passages through stone, an abundance of redstone torches, glowstone towers, weird messages left on signs, etc.) have been spread through various forums and communities. Seeing as none of these things actually
* Harvest Moon 64, Elli's potential suitor was the baker Jeff, who had at least a supporting role in parenting her (presumably her grandmother Ellen was dominant). He arrived in Flowerbud a decade prior when he was twenty. Elli is roughly ten years his junior.
* Heroes of Might and Magic series, and spent the rest of his now immortal existence righting wrongs in an attempt to redeem himself. In the Might campaign of Heroes IV, Tarnum finally proves himself worthy to enter paradise after he helps a young barbarian reunite the scattered Barbarian tribes without repeating Tarnum's past mistakes. Tarnum refuses the afterlife and stays to provide further guidance for his people.
* High School of a typical American high school, in this case Northeast High School in Philadelphia. The theme throughout is high school's role in enforcing conformity, and the authoritarian teachers who stamp out individuality in students.

* Goo Goo Gai Pan", one of them rips out Homer's heart, shows it to him, and puts it back. Homer just hopes he washed his hands first.
* Growing Wings of them can fly, though one is obsessed with the idea. They're just not adapted for it.
* griffon than a griffon. That said, the confusion still persisted among many reviewers for a while, due to her brief appearances in the trailer.
* Hercules takes Hercules from awkward teenager to co-ordinated adult (at least, as far as the audience knows at this point).
* Half-Life 2 features a crossbow designed to fire superheated pieces of rebar (bonus points for apparently being constructed by the rebels using what resources they have). It's a one hit kill against most weak enemies.
* Helios Airways 522 suffered a cabin depressurization that killed everyone onboard about 20 minutes after takeoff. The plane continued flying on autopilot until it run out of fuel and crashed, three hours later.
* Gut Punch, James has to kill a serial killer before the killer rapes and murders Alyssa.
* Help!, George speculates that there might be some insurance they could get out of it. John indignantly says "I wouldn't think of such a thing!", before whispering "Find out, eh?"
* God of War (PS4), Christopher Judge voiced the dialogue for Kratos while the developers were still undecided on what name to give his son, later named Atreus. As such any line where Kratos addressed his son instead used "boy", with the plan being to redub the lines at a later date. However the team found they liked the flavor this gave the relationship between Kratos and Atreus and made it part of the final script.
* Henry Blake's death is announced. The actress' reaction in the first take was genuine, and the director decided to keep it in later takes.
* Harem Seeker and promising to rescue her, Rias falls in love with him herself, with the two girls becoming love rivals. However, due to Issei's desire for a harem, both accept the fact that they will have to share him, but compete for his attention and affection.
* Grant Ward on Bobbi and while he didn't kill her, he almost broke her morale for the job.
* Hermione haunting the Fallen Fortress in the Forbidden Forest, in order to gain control of her inherent chaos magic.
* Grey's Anatomy. After he leaves the army and becomes a trauma doctor at Seattle Grace, he, at first, has trouble adjusting to working at a civilian hospital and nearly gets into trouble with his improvised medicine (e.g. having a patient's scalp glued to her head instead of calling for a specialist to properly suture it). Oh, and he still has PTSD from his time in Iraq.
* Haywire) and barely recouped its $23 million budget ($18.9 million in the United States, $32.4 worldwide).
* Hidden Heart of Gold: The villain is a bit of a nice guy, although they don't want anyone knowing it.
* Griffith's very possessive obsession with Guts... constantly telling Guts "You are mine"/"You belong to me." Trying to kill him to prevent him from leaving the Band Of The Hawks, visiting Princess Charlotte and having sex with her immediately after Guts left out of frustration and depression, and then, when the Eclipse goes down,
* GrrlPower: The character For Whom the Death Tolls has an interesting variation. He doesn't copy a person's power, but when he is attacked he automatically gains the power/ability that will nullify the attackers power/ability. Only one at a time though....
* Harry could use a little meat on his bones too in the book, having been described as rather thin, though this is due to being rather underfed being raised by his
* Gottmurg Snarlantz, the spark who created the slaver wasp capable of infecting sparks, is from a town that was entirely overrun by

* HDCYT wasn't a slouch either, getting over 45,000,000 views, it's obviously nowhere near as successful as the original. Since even breaking the 100 million mark is a feat normally reserved for music videos by popular artists, don't expect them (or anyone else for that matter) to achieve that kind of success again.
* Hana Kimura, leaving a big impact in wrestling, not just in Japan but worldwide..
* Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets to free the Salazar Slytherin monster from the Chamber of Secrets to kill Muggleborns.
* Heroic Fire Rescue: Rushing into a burning building to save the people inside it.
* Has pretty awful and notoriously cheap special effects, especially in the shipwreck scene.
* Half-Life 2, as well as many of the utterances of the Genetic Lifeform and Disc Operating System from the latter title. The latter partially comes from the Aperture Science folk wanting to stick their name in front of everything (Aperture Science Material Emancipation Grill, Aperture Science High-Energy Pellet, Aperture Science Vital Apparatus Vent, etc).
* Halo 3: ODST has a lonely sax that pops up every now and then, usually when the Rookie is traveling through the city by himself. "Rain" is another prime example.
* Grow games have humanoid creatures named Onkies (singular is "onky") who have no face but they still manage to look cute with their interactions and how they seems to be made of wax or modeling clay.
* He's right; it's a ploy by Missy to freak out the world's rich and powerful for the purposes of creating an army of the dead. She did end up creating a virtual afterlife in the process, though.
* Goodbye My Princess: Xiao Feng attempts suicide by jumping off a wall. A Du catches her before she hits the ground.
* Half-Life 1 makes you wait for the next game to clue you in on massive sections of the plot.
* Harry Potter, this is played with a bit: American Sentinels (Aurors) pass off any public magic use as filmshoots, instead of mind-wiping the Muggles.
* Gunpowder weaponry are more prominent in the light novels, which isn't a surprise since they are based in
* "Groundhog Day" Loop, so he keeps reliving it each time he goes to bed. It's only with a little outside help that Channing realizes he must deliberately set the events in motion again to break free.
* He's made fun of this in interviews, notably during one with the famously tall Conan O'Brien.
