* In general, trapping a ball on a raised flipper. Nothing is moving—which, while the least interesting thing to look at if you're spectating, slows the pace of the game down to a manageable level, gives the player time to plan out his or her next moves, and, because the ball will always roll down in the same way once the flipper lowers, improves aim.
* In general, traumatic head injuries can cause significant changes in survivors. It doesn't exactly create new personality traits, but it can lead to things like increased irritability and problems with impulse control, which can make a person seem very different to an outside observer. Severe brain injuries can also impair a person's physical and mental capabilities.
* In general, Valve is extremely supportive of fan works, even going out of their way to release and support tools to help make them, particularly
* In general, vampires become increasingly picky eaters as they age, starting out being able to drink blood from anything, then only human or vampire blood, and then only
* In general, visits to the Good Magician Humphrey are this. He'll answer any question in return for a year of service (or equivalent quest, if you are a protagonist). This answer is the
* In general, well-defined and intuitive technical terms are more important than avoiding scary words; individual cards are far more creepy in any case.
* In general, when a celebrity who either hosted the show or was the musical guest passes on, that episode will most likely be reran along with any new episode that week, or a photograph of said person will be shown after a sketch.
* In general, whenever a Diclonius loses their horns, they cannot use their vectors. This is due to their horns having an organ that is a part of the pineal gland, which controls their vectors. Also, if they endure constant pain, they will not be able to use their vectors.
* In general, whenever there is a unified, undisputed heavyweight champion across all the major boxing championships, that boxer is considered the best boxer in the world. Boxers such as Joe Louis,
* In general, when it comes to the merch, it can be a bit confusing which things are supposed to be targeted towards the primary demographic of preteen girls and which things are aimed at older fans. This occasionally results in oddities like adult sized boxer shorts ending up on shelves next to toys intended for nine-year-old girls. A general rule of thumb is that the kid-aimed products have heavily pink and purple packaging (or
* In general, when Ranma is fighting a new enemy (particularly in movies) he begins with his Chestnut Fist attack, which usually accomplishes nothing.

* In general, while there are unfortunately still bad adoptive situations in some cases, and while adoption can create unique challenges that don't usually occur in biological families, many adoptees are overall happy in their adoptive families. This can be especially true for an older adoptee who spent time in a dysfunctional family situation and/or in foster care, as finding a loving family may be something they had actively wished for.
* In general, while the Romans were slight exceptions, virtually any city before the mid-1900s was this way, due to lack of public sanitation policy. These living conditions were a direct contributor to the various outbreaks of Plague (Especially the notorious Black Death), cholera, and other such diseases. It took centuries for people to brainstorm the idea of public sanitation and waste disposal, and longer still for it to be commonplace.
* In general, within the three games, any mook wearing a SEVA suit or
* In general, Zero could be considered Dr. Wily's real magnum opus, as he is a similar AI being as X, although Wily's version contained an AI-override "virus" which later merged with the AI of series villain Sigma, to create the Sigma Virus.
* . (In general, Zoisite-sympathetic fics turn Nephrite into a bully and a rapist while Nephrite-sympathetic fics turn Zoisite into a giggling sadist.)
* In Generation 1, the Autobot evacuate Cybertron as it has run out of Energon to support life.
* In Generations III, IV, V and VI, there's the Soul Dew, which increases the two strongest stats of Latias and Latios by 50%. The Lati twins can only be found by
* In "Genesis of the Daleks", the Doctor and companions are taken to Skaro (homeworld of the Daleks) by this means. Another Time Lord reminds the Doctor (when he complains of the risk) that this is a simple thing for them, and they learned how to do it
* In genetics, the word "chimera" means an animal which contains genetically distinct cells (rather than all cells having the same DNA). This is actually more common than you might guess, since without genetic testing it's (usually) not noticeable. One case where it
* In Gen I, Ghost types were only found on one tower and required a Slyph Scope to be able to see and capture at all. By Gen II, Ghost types were more common and the scope was
* In "Genius In France", he claims to have gotten a negative number on his SATs.
* In "Genius in France", the singer claims to have gotten a negative SAT score.
* In "Gentlemen, the King!" a group of Philadelphia gangsters are hired to go to a Ruritania and assassinate the king.
* Ingenue and who gets unfairly blamed for all of the collateral damage caused by the people hunting her.
* Ingenue has this effect on people, leading the player character to joke with Penelope's brother Prince Lisle about working out a shared custody arrangement.
* ingenue While Zii shows no signs of active sexual attraction in the ensuing conversation (Ruby may be naive, but she's somehow very obviously straight in every way), she's happy to talk to her as a sexual being.
* In Gen. VI the move Retaliate has pink blossoms follow the attacker after hitting the target.
* In "Geometry of Shadows", the Drazi are undergoing their regular change in government - which involves, rather than ballot boxes, fistfighting. Ivanova, trying to keep peace on the station, decides to lock one of the two groups up for the rest of the "cycle", after which it will all be over - only to be told that a cycle doesn't mean a week as she assumed, but a whole Drazi year - which is 1.2 Earth years.
* In George and Junior's final cartoon "Half-Pint Pygmy", it happens to
* In George Formby's "Our Sergeant Major", the singer suggests this in his insulting song about the sergeant major.
* In "George Goes to Disneyland", George calls Benny out for not taking him to Disneyland when he was a kid and sets out the door to join his family there, saying "I don't anything from you!". Seconds later, George comes in to ask her to drive him there, because Ernie's car is blocking his.

* In George McDonald Fraser's semi-autobiographical tales of Army life,
* In German, "Gottes Blitz" (God's Lightning) became "Potz Blitz". Otherwise, it is averted in general German media. Religious swearing is
* In "German Guy", one of the hobbies that Peter introduces Chris to is stamp collecting. Shortly after they begin, Peter becomes so bored that he shoots himself in the head despite Chris reasoning that they could just stop at any time.
* In German political cartoons, Germany or the German people has been represented as
* In German, the two are distinguished by "friend" being 'a friend' whereas "boyfriend/girlfriend" is
* In German, the word "Diplomatenjagd" exists, but it doesn't actually mean to hunt ambassadors, even if it can interpreted grammatically as such. Chansonnier Reinhard Mey uses this double meaning for good measure in the likewise titled song. (The state secretary gets shot only accidentally, though.)
* In German the word "Leidenschaft" which means "passion" belongs to the root word "leid" which means "suffering".
* In Germany all political parties get guaranteed airtime for political ads on both public and private stations. However, to distinguish them from normal programming and other ads, a titlecard with voiceover is played before and after the ad saying something like "This is an ad of Party X, only the political party and not the station is responsible for the content of this ad."
* In Germany and other areas in Central/Eastern Europe, Saint Nicholas would often show up alongside a creature called
* In Germany, Bernhard Grzimek and to a lesser extent Heinz Sielmann were targets for parodies like that.
* In Germany, every tracked and armored vehicle is actually and correctly refered to as a Panzer, as "Panzer" simply being German for "armour" (in Dutch, it's spelled "Pantser", which somehow manages to look less scary -
* In Germany, exits on a highway are labeled "ausfahrt." Cue a lot of English speakers snickering about how it sounds like "ass fart" everytime they drive by one.
* "In Germany is the one, who points at the dirt, seen as more dangerous, as the one who makes the dirt."
* In Germany, it's quite common for people to be naked on beaches and in parks. This can be shocking to tourists from other parts of the world, who are baffled by all the naked people lying in the sun
* In Germany, memorizing and reciting a few poems during one's school life (even in high school) was still normal in the 1990s (and probably still is to this day). Also, it was quite common until at least the 1980s to make prepubescent children recite a festive song or short poem for their family on Christmas Eve (or for "Santa Claus" during the school Christmas party), before they may open their presents.
* In Germany most anime is broadcast between 10am and 3pm. This includes
* In Germany, NBC Europe kept going strong until 2005, when it was rebranded as Das Vierte, which itself shut down in 2013 after it was bought out by Disney and replaced with the Disney Channel.
* In Germany, Pro7 got the rights to only the first two seasons of the
* In Germany some films are refused ratings from the FSK which inevitably leads to them ending up on the Index which means they mustn't be advertised, can only be sold to persons 18 and up and can only be shown on TV with drastic edits. When 25 years have passed movies are removed from the Index and can be rated again by the FSK which then end up giving them ratings of 18 and sometimes even 16 (e.g.
* In Germany the Leukoplast brand came close to becoming a generic term, in the post-war years one of the small little vehicles produced in the era (a sort of cross between a scooter and a car) was nicknamed "Leukoplastbomber" because you would do small repairs on it with plaster.
* In Germany, the motto was "Cool kids can wait". In English language, not in German, because English is cooler. Same subtext as above, plus "you'll start smoking anyway when you're grown up".

* In Germany, the recording shot up the singles charts when a medium-sized local series used it to contemplate a
* In Germany there is a tradition still practiced today called "auf die Walz gehen" originating to medieval times. After completing apprenticeship as a craftsman, people wander the country for a certain time in a special outfit, carrying all their possessions in a kerchief called "Charlottenburger" attached to a walking stick.
* In Germany, there's been a notable increase in the number of young people wanting to go into gastronomy and hotel management after jobs in these fields were disproportionately frequently given to
* In Germany there's even combat football (or soccer, if you like). Jamming an opposing player's head into a camera is a great way of neutralizing obstacles on your way to the goal. Note that all three, while still incredibly violent, are still not prone to fatalities thanks to the use of durability enhancing cybernetics and advances in medical procedures. The players, after all, are worth a lot of money to the games' sponsors and nobody wants to see a profitable investment suddenly get killed (or sidelined for half a season). Though
* In "Germophobia", Buster has a dream where germs are visible and doing an
* In "Germs", Zim's germophobic antics lead him to McMeaties again, where he discovers that the meat is germ-free. After asking an employee he discovers that the meat was NASA-developed
* Ingested. The band eventually figures this out and confronts the chef over it at the end of the video, but the chef kills the bandmates and griunds their meat to use it for his recipes.
* ingesting Peter's blood. Causing half of her face to melt off and her left eye to go cloudy until she resembles Kaine from Ultimate Spider-Man
* Ingestion of ethylene glycol (antifreeze) initially produces symptoms very much like plain old alcohol intoxication. But the body then proceeds to break ethylene glycol down into toxic chemicals, and death ensues probably within 12 to 36 hours after consumption.
* In "Get That Bigfoot Out Of My Face", Dr. Doofenshmirtz is mistaken for Bigfoot after he falls off the balcony and gets covered in leaves and mud.
* In "Get the Message", Lori accidentally insults Lincoln while on the phone to Bobby.
* In "Getting Ahead", Robb Weller interviews John Doe #6 (calling himself "Dr. C") about "his" sleazy bestseller
* In "Gettysburg", Nicholas Prentice seeks to alter history by convincing Andy Larouche that there is no glory in any war so he will not assassinate the U.S. President on November 19, 2013. He does so by sending him and his friend Vince Chance back to the eve of the Battle of Gettysburg in 1863. For his part, Andy tries to change history by saving the Confederacy as he believes that it would have been a better world if it had won the
* In "Get Whale Soon", Lumpy and Russell are trapped inside of a whale, so they try building a fire. Russell struggles to light the last match they can find, but when he finally does so, Lumpy accidentally sneezes and blows it out. Judging by
* In "Get With the Times", Cool Calm Pete (which is a pretty redundant name in and of itself) advises the listener to "pray for your fake phony facade."
* In "Ghostblusters", after hearing a spooky noise from the haunted house, Margaret jumps into Dennis' arms, clinging to him out of fear. The ending result was Dennis shrugging, thus dropping her in the process.
* In "Ghost In The Attic", Ms. McBrisk's nightshirt gets caught by the thorny rose bushes outside her house. The parts of her shirt covering her breasts, the lower midriff, and around her body in these parts only remain.
* In "Ghost in the Machine", Brody and Sifter finally end up just briefly embracing after a series of confused congratulatory gestures. Contrasting with this is Krumitz's easy high-five with Brody moments earlier.
* In "Ghosts Forge", Jonathan's assistant vanishes from a locked room while investigating a mystery. The solution:
* In "Ghosts In The Attic", Granny names her past boyfriends whose dolls will be burned in a voodoo ceremony. Some of these names return in "Granny's Twin Sister" when she forgives them on the internet.

* In "Ghosts of the Sargasso" Hank speculates that if pirates are real, Santa and the Tooth Fairy could be real. Brock points out that no-one said pirates weren't real.
* In "Ghosts", the person with a Wall of Crazy is a writer. The wall organizes her background research.
* In "G.I. D'oh," Homer hides in the sewers when the Army invades Springfield to search for him. When he pokes his head out of a manhole to see if the coast is clear, a tank runs over the cover with Homer's fingers poking out.
* In "G.I Jessie", Bertram competes with a lunchlady in baking the wedding cake for Jessie's father's wedding. The lunchlady licks the icing of Bertram's cake and remarks: "This icing tastes like dirt". A moment later, Darla gets knocked over the cake and says the same line.
* In Gilmer I's court, he and his consort, Billye, never use any additional names.
* In "Gimme a Break", after Slappy has been caught in a parody of the bus explosion from
* In Girl Scouts (a wholesome, Christian organization), we used to sing a different shark song about losing your leg in a shark attack, dying due to blood loss, and finding out you're going to hell. Really gets the spirits up for a week of camping.
* In "Girls' Day Out", Star is sent to detention for setting the class hamster Marisol free, and Marco is shanghaied into rescuing the hamster. Marco promptly gets his arm stuck in a drain pipe, with Marisol just out of reach. Not only does his crush Jackie Lynn-Thomas see him like this, but he eventually attracts a horde of gawking students, who all take pictures.
* In "Girls Just Wanna Have Sums", Springfield Elementary gets segregated by gender. When Lisa first sneaks into the boy's school, she finds that
* In "Girls Just Wanna Have Sums", Springfield Elementary is segregated by gender. Since the girls' school isn't teaching math properly,
* In "Girls Just Want To Have Sums", while Principal Skinner is publicly speaking to a former student of his, he states that she was good at math for "a girl". This gets him in hot water and he tries to explain himself, but his comments only make him sound like more of a misogynist until finally pleading
* In "Girls' Night Out", the gang accidentally stumbles on the operations of a young crime lord called Tadius Greasenherr or
* In "Girls vs Suits", the cast makes a big deal about the hotness of a new female bartender, though it's ultimately decided that she's hot because she's a bartender, not because she's hot and a bartender.
* In Glen Cook's Petty Pewter Gods, one of the Garrett series, "Nog is Inescapable."
* Inglip" and ordering its followers to have an orgy by using an obscure word for "party").
* Inglip has accumulated a vast mythologic background (which is even canonized by the rule that only Reddit posts with 100+ upvotes are declared canon — if one would add the non-canon stuff, it would become a Doorstopper).
* Inglip wear distinctive red hoods when receiving their master's commands.
* In "Glitch", Dr. Edward Normandy tells the android Tom Seymour that he doesn't dream when Tom learns of his true nature and thinks that he is having a nightmare. He later claims that androids do not have a soul as everything that they are is contained on a personality chip. After escaping, Tom leaves a holographic message for Normandy refuting this.
* In "Glitch", Tom Seymour is horrified to discover that he is an android. He was created by Joe Walker for use in disaster areas so that no humans would be harmed. However, the project was taken away from Walker, who later died, by the US government. The new project leader Dr. Edward Normandy is running tests on Tom to ensure that he is ready for his new purpose: infiltration and assassination. Wendy Seymour, Tom's supposed wife and a member of Normandy's team, helps him to escape as she has come to disapprove of the work that Normandy is doing. They go to see

Walker's widow Sylvia,
* Inglorious Basterds: Archie Hicox instinctively uses the English hand gesture to signal "Three", providing the final proof to a suspicious German officer that he's not who he's claiming to be. A lot of people die because one man raised three fingers instead of two fingers and a thumb.
* Inglorious Basterds: as the besieged sniper scene of "Stoltz der Nation" (Pride of a Nation) begins, Zoller, a Nazi war hero and the subject/star of the propaganda film, goes to the projection booth to flirt with Shoshana (a Jewish woman posing as a gentile theater owner), she rudely tells him to go away. He angrily storms in and tells he's had enough of her rejections. She tells him they can sit and talk, but he has to lock the door behind him, and as he turns around, she pulls out a pistol and shoots him, with Hitler's entourage and the other Nazi guests being none the wiser due to the film's massive gunfight scene. When she ducks down to check on him, he pulls out his side arm and shoots her back, his shots also drowned out by the film's sound effects.
* Inglorious Basterds her or it could be a coincidence because he really just likes milk.
* Inglorious Basterds), Hitler tears off his moustache and puts it on Göring who's sitting next to him.
* Inglorious Basterds implies this. Shoshanna Dreyfuss is only seen briefly at the start but she appears to be a brunette. When she's living under a fake identity in Paris years later, her hair is blonde (and with visible roots to suggest it is dyed). Possibly as an attempt to look less Jewish and more Aryan - as she is hiding from the Nazis.
* Inglorious Basterds, in which every character with a speaking role is played by an actor of the correct nationality.
* Inglorious Basterds. Shoshanna locks herself in the theater with them before she sets it on fire, tearfully tells her boyfriend goodbye (who had the chance to get out but is never shown either way), and never discussed any sort of escape plans. For the Basterds, Donny and Omar strap bombs with timers onto their legs and stay to start firing into the crowd once the building starts to go.
* Inglorious Basterds: The Basterds' preferred tactic is to kill Nazis in such a brutal manner that any survivors give up out of fear.
* Inglorious Basterds, the eponymous Jewish-American soldiers strike fear into the Nazis' hearts by leaving one survivor of every group of soldiers they massacre, branding them with a swastika carved into their forehead.
* Inglorious Basterds to take it off. So he gives them a little something they can't take off...
* Inglorious Basterds, whose first language is German, gets to display his flawless English and French, in addition to very convincing Italian.
* Inglorious Bosh'tets ("horrible fate"), a mineral scanner named the Perkele5000 ("perkele" means "devil", and is generally used as a profanity)...and the list goes on.
* In "Glorious Grandpa", Marge thinks Abe is gay after finding his old wrestling wig in his room, and starts trying to set him up on dates with men.
* In "Glory Days", there's a crate of "Big Bang" brand dynamite visible near a train that was held up, supposedly by Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid.
* In "Glory of Days Past", the Immortal Hero Tarnum and his adopted son Waerjak must unite the scattered remnants of their people and make them into a kingdom. All without repeating Tarnum's past mistakes as Barbarian King.
* Inglourious Basterds: Anyone who joins Aldo Raine's company owes him a debt of one hundred Nazi scalps.
* Inglourious Basterds as an anti-American attack on torture and interrogation methods. Others consider it to be promoting war crimes. The film is morally ambiguous enough that it's hard to agree whether the Basterds were supposed to be heroes or not.
* Inglourious Basterds: As Shosanna flees from the Nazis that killed her family, Colonel Landa levels his pistol at her and aims to fire. She runs in a straight line, making her seemingly an easy target, but by this point she's so far away that it would have taken a miraculous shot to actually hit her with a handgun. After considering a bit, he doesn't shoot.

* Inglourious Basterds attempt to meet a double agent in a bar in a cellar:
* Inglourious Basterds (Babelsberg), was a German/American co-production.
* Inglourious Basterds because, as he told Charlie Rose in an interview, he became "too precious about the page", meaning the story kept growing and expanding.
* Inglourious Basterds. Both are massive Hams stealing the attention of any scene they are in separately, and when they meet at the end there is clear competition.
* Inglourious Basterds, Bridget von Hammersmark, a German spy for the Allies, plays Who Am I with a group of enlisted Wehrmacht soldiers in a bar while waiting for her American contacts. Later, an SS officer invites them to play the same game in order to confirm his suspicions of them.
* Inglourious Basterds, every character except Col. Landa and two Basterds are killed off, including an entire movie theatre full of Nazis.
* Inglourious Basterds features two separate stand-offs in a single scene. In the first, an SS agent and a British spy point pistols at each other's testicles beneath a bar table. Later, a German soldier and the rest of the Basterds have each other at a stalemate, during which time they argue about whether their position could be called a Mexican Standoff.
* Inglourious Basterds gives WWII an alternate history ending with some serious punk attitude.
* Inglourious Basterds has Shoshanna in a relationship with Marcel. Living in Nazi-occupied France, they have to keep it a secret, with Shoshanna telling everyone that he is merely her employee.
* Inglourious Basterds is basically a deconstructor fleet of this entire article. Most of the archetypes are there.
* Inglourious Basterds is witty and articulate in at least four languages, often engages in philosophic debates with his quarries, and prides himself on having a deep understanding of the human psyche. One of the first things he does in the movie is massacre a family of Jewish people.
* Inglourious Basterds, Lt. Hicox gets caught by the Germans in the bar because he orders three Scotches using his index, middle and ring fingers — like a Brit — instead of his thumb, index and middle fingers — like a German.
* Inglourious Basterds. Naturally, the audience expects them to fail but at least it'll be entertaining to watch them try, leading to a gloriously cathartic moment on seeing Hitler's bullet-riddled corpse being shot again and again. Only a few of the Basterds make it out alive, but it was worth it.
* Inglourious Basterds, Nazi colonel Hans Landa has a cordial talk with a French farmer about the Jews he's hunting. The farmer is hiding said Jews beneath his floorboards but keeps up an impenetrable poker face throughout until Landa reveals that he already knows about them, at which point tears start streaming down the poor man's face.
* Inglourious Basterds or "Criminal Detective", not an SS rank, but prefixing "Herr" to his rank was a German Army practice which was strictly forbidden in the SS on Himmler's orders.
* Inglourious Basterds: Pretty much the idea behind assembling the Basterds:
* Inglourious Basterds, Private Zoller, German National hero and star of a propaganda film introduces himself to the owner of Parisian cinema, and waits for her reaction. She looks at him like, "Who the hell are you?"
* Inglourious Basterds. She was pleased with being the "face of Jewish vengeance" and felt he would be happy about it as well.
* Inglourious Basterds. Shosanna fills the theatre with Nazis and burns it to the ground.
* Inglourious Basterds, Smithson Utivitch was rather disappointed to learn that the while the Nazis know his squadmates as Aldo the Apache and the Bear Jew, he is known as "The Little Man" amongst his enemies.
* Inglourious Basterds's plot revolves around a screening of a Nazi propaganda film about a young German sniper killing numerous US soldiers, the sniper himself is disturbed to see his actions glorified.

* Inglourious Basterds: Subverted. The Basterds insist that all German soldiers are Nazis and carve Swastikas in the foreheads of the survivors. In spite of this, many of the Germans they encounter are just regular soldiers with families and loyalty to their comrades. The Basterds do, however, recognize the capacity for some Germans to be allies. They have recruited at least one former soldier and work with a woman from the German resistance.
* Inglourious Basterds sweep for portrayer Christoph Waltz in the year after the movie's release.
* Inglourious Basterds. Tarantino nearly dropped the project after having difficulty casting the role.
* Inglourious Basterds that incriminates her and leads directly to her own death.
* Inglourious Basterds . The Bastards all know that they will almost certainly die in their pursuit of killing Nazis. However they deem their cause to be worth the sacrifice of their lives. This is lampshaded a few times in the film most notably at the end when 2 of the Bastards lock themselves in a burning building with explosives tied to their ankels just to ensure that before they die they can kill as many Nazis as they can. And can personally kill Hitler themselves.
* Inglourious Basterds: The Basterds carved scars shaped like swastikas into the foreheads of Nazis they captured and kept alive.
* Inglourious Basterds: The Bear Jew does this as he approaches a Nazi officer. As he's walking out of the tunnel he hits the bat against the wall as he oh-so-slowly makes his way towards the Nazi officer where he proceeds to bludgeon him to death. Justified as he's trying to scare their prisoners into talking.
* Inglourious Basterds. The "lesser races" were referred to (even in official documents) as "bastards" by Nazi eugenicists.
* Inglourious Basterds to Lt. Aldo Raine and his companions that he isn't about to put any German lives in danger.
* Inglourious Basterds was initially titled "Inglourious Bastards" but was changed due to offending moviegoers. It was censored even further as advertisements for the movie only referred to it as Inglourious.
* Inglourious Basterds watches her family get murdered by Nazis as a child. As an adult running a cinema in France years later, she turns a screening attended by Nazis into a major bloodbath as payback by setting the entire theatre on fire.
* Inglourious Basterds: "We're gonna be doin' ONE THANG and ONE THANG ONLY! Killin' Natzies."
* Inglourious Basterds, who's definitely one of the bloodthirstiest of the Basterds (and that's saying quite a lot).
* Inglourious Basterds whose head is pulped by numerous rounds of bullets.
* Inglourious Basterds who the Basterds recruited due to his reputation of killing 13 officers in their sleep (or waking them up just before he kills them).
* Ingmar Bergman. (Admittedly, the latter is Schikaneder's doing, not Bergman's.)
* Ingmar Bergman revolves around one of these in Sweden around the turn of the century. It involves two men and two women at first, and four of each by the end.
* Ingmar Bergman was based on recurring dreams he had of women dressed in white, walking through a red house and speaking only in whispers.
* Ingmar Bergman went one better on this in a famous 1990s staging of the play. Fortinbras and his army are portrayed as fascists playing heavy metal from boom boxes. When they break in at the end through the back wall, instead of listening to Horatio's explanation, Fortinbras has two of his men take Horatio offstage and shoot him, then finishes the play himself as a press conference.
* Ingmar Bergman with helping him overcome his crippling fear of death. As the film dealt so overtly with that subject, he found it to be a highly cathartic experience.
* In "Goat Song", the population control requires exactly as many children born as decreed, to keep human society human. Harper notes that this means the promise to revive them all in the future must be a lie.
* In "Godfellas", Bender meets an entity which doesn't know if it's God (or, more likely given his other actions, does know but refuses to reveal the answer to Bender). It then sidesteps Bender's implicit questions about whether free will exists with a

* In "Godfellas", Fry and Leela imprison some monks in a laundry room and hijack their telescope. One of the monks pleads through the door: "Let us out! We cooked our shoes in the dryer and ate them! Now we're bored!"
* In "Godfrey and Zeke in: Lost Control", the eponymous zoo animals take a trip to the sewage treatment plant after Godfrey accidentally flushes their TV remote down the toilet. They have an exciting adventure getting it back, but just end up watching TV in a bored fashion after they do so. This inspires Godfrey to flush the remote down the toilet again so they have an excuse to visit the plant tour again, and Zeke even mutters "
* In Godley & Creme's "Under Your Thumb" a woman in the same train car as the narrator screams out the window that she's through being under some unknown person's thumb. The narrator picks up an old newspaper in an attempt to ignore her and finds an article stating that she
* In Godric's backstory, it's revealed that he was turned by a Roman Soldier, and was repeatedly raped and abused. When Godric turned 16 in vampire years, he turned on his maker and killed him. This got him in trouble with the vampire community at the time, and he was forced to go on the run for several years.
* In "God's Equation", Allie demonstrates that she possesses the same ability but she uses it for a kinder purpose than abduction. She creates an image of Dale Watson's late son Luke, who was killed in
* In "God's Equation", Jacob's granddaughter Allie Keys is the goalkeeper on a soccer team and uses her abilities in order to mislead the members of the other team so that they won't be able to score.
* Ingo Kunzi: DJ Tandu, Ayla, Anakin, Intrance, Voyager, Frozen Orange Project, Flatliners, Tantau, etc.
* In Golden Waters that a lot of the seasteads were built with little in the way of safety measures and oversight. Inevitably, this gets a lot of people killed both during construction (mention of dead construction workers is frequent) and after it (when things inevitably start breaking down).
* In "Golem", Willie Watt uses a mind-operated controller for a construction-focused
* In golf tournaments the actual number of strokes is apparently irrelevant. It's what the scorecard says. If the golfer signs a scorecard with more strokes than he actually took, that's his score and if it causes him to lose - tough! If the caddy puts down
* In "Gone Abie Gone", Grandpa Simpson worked as a busboy in New York City in the early 1970s alongside a young
* In "Gone" after Buffy reveals to her friends that she's been turned invisible, she picks up a skull and works the jaw to mimic what she's saying.
* In "Gone Baby Gone," babies Meteora and Mariposa wander through a portal to the Neverzone. Marco and Star aren't sure how long they were gone, but by the time they chase after them, Meteora and Mariposa are teenagers who were raised as sisters and have been fighting to survive in a wasteland for years. They are leery about returning to Earth since they'll revert to babies, but Marco and Star promise that they'll be raised together again.
* In "Gone, Part I", having realized that Matthew Ross has no control over her, Isabelle lifts him up into the air and almost crushes his windpipe as a warning to leave her alone in future.
* In "Gone, Part II", Isabelle uses her ability to induce a heart attack in Richard after he objects to her relationship with Shawn. However, she is hit by a wave of remorse and stops herself before her father can suffer any permanent harm.
* In "Gone to Pieces", Taz accidentally breaks Jean's vase when he plays tiddlywinks with his bottle cap collection. After spending the entire episode trying to put the vase back together, with each attempt breaking the vase even more, Taz eventually sells his bottle cap collection to raise the money to buy a new vase.
* In "Gone to Pieces", Taz's attempts to mend a broken vase end up with the vase stuck to the table, and then Taz stuck to the vase.

* In "Goodbye, Krabby Patty?" it happens first when SpongeBob attempts to give his first tour of the Krusty Krab Museum and again later when Patrick eats the Frozen Patty on camera when filming a commercial and the patty makes him swell up.
* In "Goodbye Stranger," Castiel opens an interrogation by shoving an angel blade through a demon's palm. After screaming appropriately the demon snarls, "I thought angels were supposed to be the good cops." Although rather shocked by Castiel's behavior, Dean does not accept the role of good cop and tells the demon, "Think he's the only bad cop in this room?"
* In Good Company) midway into the movie. The ending hints that they are possibly still romantically interested in each other but did not actively pursue it.
* In "Good Neighbors", Squidward buys a security system with the intention of keeping SpongeBob and Patrick out of his house so he can enjoy his Sunday off. When SpongeBob and Patrick's apology cake falls on it, the machine malfunctions and turns Squidward's house into a robot that destroys Bikini Bottom, and once it's shut down the three of them are sentenced to community service every Sunday for the rest of their lives to pay for the damages. SpongeBob and Patrick are excited to clean up the city with Squidward, but he looks like he's about to have an aneurysm.
* In "Good Ol' Ed", when the aforementioned episode is recalled, Ed brings up the time Kevin bit him on the rear and Eddy demonstrates by biting Ed on the rear as well.
* In "Good Times, Bat Times", the Rangers bring the dakka themselves: The
* In "Good Times With Weapons," the boys pretend to be ninjas, and the show flips back and forth between what is really going on and what is happening in their game. Their game is presented in an anime style, and each boy appears as a musclebound, adult ninja, with vague resemblances to his actual appearance and clothing.
* In "Good Times With Weapons", the kids' imaginary adventures as ninjas have an
* In Goof Troop only a few existed which was a Magic Hat and a Firetruck.
* In "Goo Goo Gai Pan", Homer picks a fight with a group of Shaolin monks during a trip to China - their retaliation concludes with one of the monks ripping his still-beating heart out, showing it to him, and then
* In Goomba Village, Kammy taunts Mario, and drops a Yellow Block on the gate out. Even though Mario can easily jump higher than the nose-high fencing, he can't actually jump over. Same with the fence at the bottom of the cliff the Goomba house is built on: it, too, is blocked with a Yellow Block, and you can't jump the fence. But in both cases, this is a good thing, as if the game didn't force you to get the Hammer, you'd be stopped by later obstacles and unable to harm some of even the earliest enemies.
* In "Goons from the Moon," an astronomer telegraphs the urgent message that Terrytown is under attack from a spheroid housing alien cats. It is broadcast throughout by a mouse avatar of Walter Winchell.
* Ingo Pien, a neonazi sieg-heils in court. The judge reprimands him: "If you ever do the 'sieg-heil' again... do it smartly!"
* in Gordon R. Dickson's Childe Cycle of books, armies uses very simple weapons because lasers and so on are easy to nullify with the right equipment.
* In "Go To Hell", parents imprison their daughter in the attic when they believe she is possessed.
* In Gotoh's case, he was too observant for his superiors liking, so they reassigned him where he couldn't ruffle any feathers; not knowing,
* In go to Kishar, who used to help raise Beast Boy when he was a kid and is now training him. While he goes flying, she uses the opportunity to show Raven a few of his childhood photos... a good number of them having him naked. Beast Boy is scared out of his wits when he sees that.
* In "Gourmet Night", Polly tries to get Basil to put down the bottle he's opening first, but he still ends up dropping it on his foot after she tells him that the chef has gotten drunk right before an important dinner.
* In "Go With Me", Finn and Marceline go to the couples' movie night, but quickly grow tired of the sappy romantic movie playing.
* in grace and stride. His daughter Rose, however, is very much an utter sore loser.

* In "Grace Note", Rosemarie Miletti's beloved younger sister Mary dies of leukemia several days before Rosemarie's birthday. The last thing that she does before she dies is give Rosemarie her birthday present: a locket with Mary's picture.
* In "Grace Note", the operatic soprano Julia Migenes played Rosemarie Miletti, an aspiring opera singer who eventually becomes a star.
* In "Grade School Confidential," Bart sees Mrs. Krabappel and Principal Skinner kiss. In order to prevent the word from spreading, Skinner and Krabappel pull Bart aside and
* In "Grade School Confidential", Chief Wiggum tries his hand when trying to persuade Bart, Skinner and Krabbappel, who have barricaded themselves in the school, to surrender themselves ("Fine, stay in the school! We don't want you to come out!"). It doesn't work ("Okay!").
* In "Grade School Confidential", the entertainment for Martin Prince's party included a Mathemagician who performed long division on a blackboard for all the kids to see.
* In "Graduation Day", after Matthew Ross tries to prevent her from finding the member of the Nova Group who caused Shawn to go insane, Isabelle uses her telekinesis to induce a stroke. This time, she does not stop herself and Matthew dies within seconds.
* In "Graduation Day", Jorge Molina, who disappeared in 1975, can create fire with his mind.
* In "Graduation Day, Part 1," Faith infects Angel with a mystical vampire-killing poison, which can only be cured by the blood of a Slayer; Buffy resolves to drag Faith to Angel to feed on, dead or alive. When she enters her apartment to find Faith lying on the bed facing away from her, the stereo blaring, Buffy, rather than sneak up and cut her throat, turns off the stereo to let Faith know she's there, either out of respect for her former comrade-in-arms or because it's easier to justify killing Faith if Buffy is fighting for her life.
* In "Graduation", Eric and Donna plan to go skinny dipping together, only to get lost and Eric finds his sister Laurie swimming naked while
* Ingrain gradually heals the user each turn, but it roots them to the ground so they can't switch out.
* In "Gramma", it is mentioned that the title character used her powers to burn down several of her neighbors' houses.
* In "Gramma", the title character, an extremely powerful witch, has glowing red eyes. Her grandson Georgie is even more terrified of her than he was before when he sees them. After Gramma
* In "Grampa vs. Sexual Inadequacy", we see a montage featuring hot dogs rolling down a conveyor belt, a rocket taking off, etc.
* In "Grampa vs. Sexual Inadequacy", when Homer and Grandpa get run out of a hick town to dueling banjo-style hillbilly music, Grandpa blames Homer's poor salesmanship, until Homer points out that they only started the chase when Grandpa turned on the "getaway music". He switches it off, and the hicks stop, make disappointed noises, and return home.
* Ingram Prisken and Viletta Vadim were the male and female options for the protagonist of
* Ingram shoots down the R-3 Powered in the middle of transforming into the SRX. Granted, he had the help of Aya suffering psychic backlash.
* Ingram Wilcox's 250k pound question isn't easy at all...but it's been reused no less than
* In Grand Canal, where the Flutter Orbs come fast and furious, Steeler gets his hands on one... only to find out he can't use it while Toadette's Triple Shroom is still in effect. And it doesn't expire until after the last turn of the game.
* In "Granddad's Fight", after Colonel H. Stinkmeaner (who's blind) beats up Robert with a cane, Robert's grandson Riley gives him the
* In "Grandmaster" by David Klass the titular Grandmaster wins by first sacrificing a knight, then a rook and then a kitchen sink. (Wait, no, that's just what an unqualified spectator said in-universe.)

* In "Grandpa Moves Out", Tommy and Angelica wake up a sleeping old man at a retirement center
* In "Granny's Twin Sister", the eponymous character visits the Crumpets with big pile of luggage.
* In "Granpuff", to scare Falcon and Stuart into behaving, Duke tells a tale of a rowdy American engine who often derailed and toppled his goods trains. He ignored warnings over and over ("Who cares about a few spills?"), until eventually the manager got sick of his carelessness and had him rebuilt into a pumping engine.
* In "Graveyard Shift", Squidward tells SpongeBob a ghost story. Instead of popcorn, SpongeBob uses his own arms in an exaggerated form of
* in "Gravity", just as Ironwood is starting to come down and work with people, he finds that Cinder planted a glass queen piece in his office. He flies into a panic, begins second-guessing his decisions, and starts devolving into a paranoid dictator willing to abandon Mantle just to save himself and his forces. Watching events unfold from afar, Cinder smugly notes, "Still afraid, I see."
* In "Gravity", Tuvok and Tom Paris are trapped in a space sinkhole where time moves slower than on
* In "Great Balls of Water", Candace is briefly shown on an actual snipe hunt during her "Extraordinary" musical number.
* In Great Britain, paramedics are trained to shout "STAND CLEAR!" before delivering the current, to make absolutely certain bystanders know what the command means.
* In Great Britain there have been numerous long-running publications featuring licensed comic strips based upon TV series.
* in great detail, which opens with the Doctor describing the physical effects of vacuum exposure. Later in the episode, Bill is exposed to the vacuum of space and loses consciousness in fifteen seconds, but does not explode.
* In "Great Scott", Logan making disparaging comments about Scott causes Jean to rave about her fulfilling sex life, which makes her audience demand a mind-wipe or lobotomy.
* In Great: The Show 5, the opening segment, "Meme High School", has Pizza Frank, who gives the main character- also named Frank, incidentally- a hearty punch in the face for seemingly trying to steal his likeness.
* In Greco-roman and freestyle wrestling holding an opponent's shoulders to the mat is a win by fall, and regardless of the score (yes, Greco-Roman wrestling actually has two point systems, one for individual matches and another for dual meets), the win is awarded to the player who pinned the opponent. Furthermore, in dual meets, winning in this way is worth six points for the winning wrestler's team.
* In Greco-Roman Mythology, it is said that when Cronus/Saturn castrated his father Uranus/Caelus before imprisoning him, the dismembered...uh...
* In Greece conscription is mandatory. For men. Women who want a career in the Army can join a military school (and not waste about a year of their life). This is also the case in Cyprus (which is not part of Greece) and in Russia.
* In Greece, holding out a hand, palm forward, in someone's direction, doesn't mean "stop." It means, roughly, "eat shit."
* In Greece, if someone tells a joke that completely fails to amuse, people are likely to comment "That's an English joke."
* In Greece, it's now typical for the phone bills to arrive 15 days after the SMS that informs you of said bill. This creates a huge problem for some elderly people who are unused - or refuse - to read messages, thus making them miss the deadlines more often than not.
* In "Greece Lightning", Dr. Doofenshmirtz watches a movie about how "
* In Greece, one was officially done in 1998 with the songs dubbed, but in 2009, a Greek TV channel called "Antena" did their own dub with different voice actors and the songs were left undubbed. However, it didn't do well and was thus never broadcasted on TV again.
* In Greece the "V" sign is considered offensive with the palm facing outwards, though it is not as obscene as holding up your hand with all fingers spread with the palm towards the other person. The "V" sign is considered a reduced form of the latter.

* In Greek epics, "Invocation of the Muse": formally asking one of the Muses to help the author live up to the task of doing the story justice, or achieve whatever goal they have in mind for it.
* In Greek mythology, Ares was always the spirit of bloodlust and is portrayed as a vicious brute, primarily a destructive and destabilizing force. The Romans' Mars began as a god of agriculture, and as a war god he was seen as defender of the land, a paternal figure who fights first and foremost to secure peace.
* In Greek mythology, Artemis was the goddess of the hunt, and one of her attributes was her chasteness. A mortal hunter named Actaeon happened to see her while she was bathing the woods. Artemis was so furious that she turned him into a stag, and he was run down and torn to pieces by his own dogs.
* In Greek mythology, dreams are spirits that fly from the Land of Dreams in the Underworld. Depending on which gate they leave through, ivory or horn, the dream they bring can be either meaningless or prophetic.
* In Greek mythology, Orpheus is a musician whose music can charm the forces of nature. He is married to Eurydice, until one day, Eurydice is fatally bitten on the foot by a viper and dies, going towards Hades. Orpheus undertakes an epic journey through the Underworlds and Hades in an attempt to retrieve Eurydice's soul. Hades decides to allow Orpheus to take Eurydice back to the world of the living, provided Orpheus and Eurydice don't look back before they've crossed the threshold. Eurydice, who is recovering from her fatal wound, stumbles as she beholds the sun's rays as she and Orpheus are approaching the threshold of Hades. Orpheus turns to Eurydice to see what's wrong with her, but since they haven't crossed the threshold, Eurydice vanishes away and becomes a ghost. Charon refuses to allow Orpheus to enter Hades a second time, leaving Orpheus to lament the loss of his beloved Eurydice.
* In "Greener Pastures", when Caprice is about to escape from her family, she was about to depart with a purse. She immediately returns to her room and brings out a suitcase and a big bag in addition to the purse. Then she instantly returns to the room one last time and hauls out a boatload of luggage and chests, most of them stacked on two wagons which are strung and pulled along with a suitcase like a train.
* In "Green Isn't Your Color", Pinkie Pie repeatedly hides in places where she can't possibly fit, such as a small apple stand and a basket of sponges.
* In "Green Isn't Your Color", Rarity and Fluttershy are both unhappy about Fluttershy's modelling career, but pretending to be excited so as not to hurt the others' feelings, and confide in Twilight. Twilight realizes that just talking would solve everything, but whenever she tries, Pinkie appears out of nowhere and looks threateningly at her to remind her that keeping secrets is
* In Greenland, Tebow uses a catapult to "throw" the ball over the horizon, based on a vague promise that there's an Argonaut over there to catch it.
* Ingress Adventuring Company introduced himself by performing necromancy in front of the protagonist.
* Ingress community, it is common for players to refer to players of the opposing faction as "Smurfs" (Resistance) and "Frogs" (Enlightened).
* Ingress Game. It uses GPS locations to show what in-game units and resources there are in your area.
* Ingress has a website where people can vote on whether submitted points of interests by other players should be in the game or not. To prevent people from spamming and being lazy by rating everything 1 star or 5 stars, a cooldown kicks in that locks you out from reviewing submissions temporarily if the system catches you falling into a review pattern. Because the submissions you get are randomized, it's entirely possible to get several submissions in a row that would rightfully earn a low rating or a high rating. This creates a situation where you play by the rules and rate the submissions as they should be and risk being hit with the cooldown or you add variance to your reviews (giving something 3 stars for example) and risk your review rating tanking because you didn't agree with the majority of the reviewers.

* Ingress is a mobile app that displays locations in real life as "portals" that XM come out of, and may be the start of a hostile alien invasion.
* Ingress, levels for items and portals are color-coded — yellow (level 1) as weakest, Level 4 (red) as moderate, and Level 8 (purple) the most powerful.
* Ingress story is partly built on this, claiming that the Exotic Matter Scanner program got leaked to the public, and presumed to be a mobile game. Eventually, the game outright claims it "isn't a game" to players. And that the two factions, Enlightened and Resistance, are using the portals and linking them to create mind-influencing fields to sway humanity over to their views.
* Ingress: That one portal. The one located in the middle of nowhere. In that one valley where only one cell phone user in 100 is able to get a useful signal. That person is a member of the other faction and visits that one portal every other day to recharge it and to harvest more portal keys. Portal keys they eagerly and freely share with their opposition faction friends who all keep that portal remotely charged and linked with other cross-aligned portals.
* Ingress: XM fields and Portals impair or outright cancel the abilities of opposite-aligned Sensitives (ej, Jack of the Resistance cannot use his future-sight power while inside an Enlightened field). In some cases it may even prove debilitating/mentally taxing to Sensitives, although this is never shown in the anime. Now consider that XM is literally everywhere and that anyone with the Ingress app can do something about the fields and Portals.
* Ingress: XM fields and Portals impair or outright cancel the abilities of opposite-aligned Sensitives (ej, Jack of the Resistance cannot use his future-sight power while inside an Enlightened field). In some cases it may even prove debilitating/mentally taxing to Sensitives, although this is never shown in the anime. Now consider that XM is literally everywhere and that anyone with the Ingress app can do something about the fields and Portals near them...
* Ingrid and Humphrey have a host of them for baby Natasha, including Snookie Pooks, Pumpkin Pie, and "their little Natasha-pie". They even write a song about the names.
* Ingrid Bergman, among others; in her own words, all people ever wanted to talk about was "that one with Bogart".
* Ingrid Bergman scenes with an original song in place of "As Time Goes By".
* Ingrid Bergman. She was even denounced on the floor of the US Senate. How many victims of this trope can say that?
* Ingrid Bergman spoke Swedish, French, Italian and of course English. She had a thick Swedish accent which she never lost but it added to her "exotic" quality, and she later worked in the Italian and French industries in addition to Hollywood.
* Ingrid Bergman. This saved the film's now-iconic song "As Time Goes By" from the cutting room floor. The film's composer Max Steiner felt that the song didn't work for the film, but replacing it would have required reshoots that Bergman's haircut rendered impossible to do.
* Ingrid Bergman with different music in place, but Ingrid's change of hairstyle made this impossible. The original music "As Time Goes By" is now considered iconic.
* Ingrid Goes West has some sort of mental illness that compels her to act the way she does. She's being treated for it in the second scene of the film and seems to have been prescribed medication, but besides a few requests later on for her to seek professional help and her own admission that something isn't right with herself, the movie doesn't explicitly deal with it further.
* Ingrid Goes West, Ingrid's first attempt to meet her online idol in person results in her knocking over three magazines while trying to blend in. After spending a good fifteen-seconds fumbling over the floor trying to put everything back up, Ingrid decides to leave before her idol notices her, only to accidentally set off an alarm by leaving the store with a magazine in hand.
* Ingrid Goes West it's just her eyes as she desperately looks through the Instragram feed of a girl she's stalking, ignoring the dirty and yellow reality around her to immerse herself in the life of someone she doesn't even know.

* Ingrid Goes West: Played for disturbing effect; on day two of their friendship, Ingrid takes dozens of pictures of her Instagram idol while she's sleeping for no reason but to satisfy her idolatrous love.
* Ingrid Goes West until he reveals his obsession started when he was orphaned and coped by pretending to be Bruce Wayne.
* Ingrid Hoffman is relatively sedate on her English-language show, but watch her in Spanish... it's like Rachael Ray raided Giada's closet.
* Ingrid Michaelson's "Once Was Love" is about a couple breaking up when they realize they don't feel love for each other and that isn't going to change.
* Ingrid's grandfather as well, as shown in the climax of the 2nd book.
* Ingrid the Snow Queen is even more puzzling: a single lady from another dimension gets integrated well enough to own a house, work as a foster parent for orphaned children and file for adoption for one of them. She even does this in-universe when she turns up in Storybrooke, blends into the background and even opens an ice cream parlour without Regina, who has eyes everywhere in town and is aware of the Curse, being the wiser.
* In "Grief", a father kills the man who had repeatedly raped his daughter,
* In "Grief", the mad Jackal unleashes a 'wave of death' outside of the temple in Egypt. While the heroes within the temple that he individually blasted are aged/de-aged rather than killed, outside we see trees crumble into dust, crocodiles reduced to skeletons, and an
* In "Grinning From Ear To Ear", Kate quips that she got her information on the
* In "Gronkowsbees", Peter buys an RC drone that gets raped by a hawk.
* In "Grotesque", a serial killer believes he is possessed by a demon, though it is implied that this is more down to madness and obsession than genuine supernatural drama.
* In "Grotesque", Mulder investigates a particularly difficult case and he sinks deep into its ugliness and madness. At one point, the walls of his apartment are completely covered with gargoyle sketches.
* In "Grounded", Kevin gets pinned down by DNAliens before Ben's father chased them away with his rifle.
* In "Grounded", McGee does this over the phone to Bishop and her husband as he gushes over her efficiency in processing a crime scene.
* In "Grounder the Genius", Dr. Robotnik invents a helmet that uses a microchip to increase his already high intelligence. Near the end of the episode, the chip is swapped out with one that makes him stupid instead.
* In "Growing Up Black", when some relatives of Sirius Black found out he was never allowed to plead his case in a trial, his maternal Grandfather argued at the Wizengamot that Dumbledore's testimony was just hearsay and testimony from muggles was inadmissible. Then, when asked if he wanted Sirius to be given a trial, his Grandfather instead invoked a law stating that, as a pureblood, Sirius shouldn't be forced to stay in Azkaban for more than 30 days without a trial and, because he was, the charges he'd been sent there for should be dropped. People who still believe Sirius to be guilty usually state he got
* In "Growing Up", Kevin cringes when he hears that Dettweiler's daughter is at the party he's attending, as he had found her annoying when they were growing up, but then finds that the girl he and his friends once called "the stick" is now very well-endowed and attractive.
* In Growlanser: Wayfarer of Time, one of the possible love interests, Frayne, first appears to Crevanille, while he is unconscious from injuries he got in a fight.
* In "Gruel and Unusual Punishment", Baloo mistakes a Thembrian prison for a weight loss clinic due to a guacamole stain on the map covering the location.
* In "Grumpy Old Man" Peter thinks that one of the residents of the retirement home is
* In Grunty Industries, there is a seemingly-useless Shock Jump Pad in the Quality Control Room. The pad is in the part of the room where you collect the Jiggy, which you're intended to access while transformed into the washing machine. The designers probably added the pad in case you Leg Springed or glided over the barrier as

Kazooie alone. However, as
* In "G-String Circus" Stan does one when Hayley announces she's taking a semester off, but he didn't hear her. Turns out he was listening to an audio book on how to do a Spit Take. He tries to do a Spit Take again, but ends up dribbling.
* In Guatuso mythology, hummingbirds are attributed a huge strength contradictory to its small size. An example is given in the story about how the Gods decided to exile the Sun from this world, and, since there was no one who could take it to the sky they created a hummingbird to take charge of this task.
* In Guatuso mythology, people who live according to divine will are believed to achieve such a spiritual state that nothing or no one can hurt or kill them (apart from old age or disease), therefore, anyone who dies violently (killed by people or animals) or by accident (drowned, crushed by trees, etc...)
* In Guatuso Mythology, the Gods endearingly refer to humans as "our curassows" (Crax Rubra), since this is their favorite bird.
* In "Guess Who's Coming To Criticize Dinner," Homer gets a job as a food critic but requires Lisa to ghostwrite for him since his writing skills are horrid. Homer's love of food mixed with Lisa's eloquent descriptions sees many Springfielders gaining a large amount of weight due to Homer's glowing recommendations. Near the end of the episode, some are suddenly skinny again while others remain overweight.
* In "Guess Who's Coming to Criticize Dinner", when Homer earns the rage of every restaurant owner in town due to his
* In "Guilt", Mac, as the senior officer present, has to lead the evacuation of the U.S. Consulate in East Timor after an explosion caused by rioting locals (due to a Marine raping a local girl) kills the Marine detachment's CO and blinds the XO. Ironic, given that the skipper of the Amphibious Assault Carrier she was on temporary assignment to earlier in the episode remarked that:
* In "Guitar Villain", record producer Bob Roth demonstrates these views, telling Jagged Stone that he'll be dropped from the label if he remains at #2 on the charts. Jagged angrily points out to him that #2 on the charts is
* In "Gullible Pants", Mr. Krabs goes into the Krusty Krab, only to see SpongeBob, whom he had left in charge, dancing in front of a crowd that's cowering in fear. Then the episode ends without resolution (only Mr. Krabs being demoted to busboy).
* In "Gun Control with Piers and Cenk", Dr. Mac claims to be knowledgeable about firearms because he has a PhD, but when queried further, he clarifies that he's a doctor in "lesbian poetry", and it's also revealed that he, Piers Morgan and
* In Gundam Vs. Gundam NEXT, clearing all of the EX Stages in an arcade playthrough (which requires enough points and generally not losing a battle) will unlock the NEXT FINAL stage where you go up against Kira yet again in a really suped up Strike Freedom with three separate phases (one as his normal self with a stupidly overpowered charged shot, the other being him in his METEOR, and the last being the same as before but with infinite SEED factor).
* In Gundam Vs. Zeta Gundam, if you reach a high enough ranking (RADM or higher), you'll go into an EX Stage. Depending on the route, you'll go up against high-tier mobile suits only who generally outnumber you, and in one particular has one of the openings from ZZ playing as the background music.
* In "Gunslinger", Jim Phelps remarks that he used to be pretty good with a sixshooter and does a few
* In Gustav Schwab's ballad "Der Reiter und der Bodensee", a traveler lost in the snow unknowingly rides right across Lake Constance — the ice wouldn't normally be strong enough but it happens to be an exceptionally cold winter. When he arrives at a village and asks where he is, he realizes what he's done, imagines the cold abyss that was under his horse's feet, and dies of terror.
* In "Guts" several people chop up a Walker and spread its guts and blood on Rick and Glenn, in order to prevent other Walkers from detecting them. Rick makes a point to read the Walker's name from his driver license, muse on the type of man he might have been, and reminds everyone he was a person like them.
* Ingvar made him primitive spectacles, Ingvar spends a while after first putting them on expressing wonder at far-away flags, hay bales, etc. which he could never have seen before.

* Ingway and Mercedes. Although Ingway's official height isn't listed, Mercedes is said to stand at 151cm (4'11 1/2") in her artbook profiles (whether this includes her wings or not isn't stated). During the cutscene where
* Ingway has an important ongoing plot that is as critical to the main story as those of the five playable protagonists. Despite this, his lack of a Psypher (the unique magical weapons that the playable characters wield and that basic gameplay revolves around), and
* Ingwë, and his people (the Vanyar) in general, are noted as the wisest and most holy of the High Elves. They live exclusively in
* In gym class, when everyone has to tell a secret, Snot's is "My therapist says I'm a bad kisser".
* In "Gypsy Eyes", when Admiral Chegwidden learns that Harm and Mac are missing in Russia on Harm’s private quest to find his long lost father, the Secretary of the Navy forbids Chegwidden from going over there, to which the old Navy SEAL courteously replies.
* Inhabited island the gear of an alien guardsman includes fa-abulous pink (!) ski goggles. They almost never put them on, even during shooting practice, obstacle courses (with fire barriers) and actual combat raids against insurgents.
* inhabiting Jupiter in Isaac Asimov's short story "Not Final!" alternate between this and comparing humans to vermin.
* In Haitian Voodoo, Baron Samedi is the Loa (or god) of death. (He also has many other incarnations with that title, including Baron Cimetière, Baron La Croix, and Baron Kriminel.) Seeing as he's supposedly one of the most powerful and wisest of the Loa, it's unclear why he's "only" a Baron or even why he needs a title at all. While most myths about him don't truly depict him as evil, they do tend to depict him as a trickster, who is noted for disruption, obscenity, and debauchery, often at the expense of mortals.
* In Hal Clement's "Iceworld" the aliens suffer a single dose activated addiction to nicotine that will kill them if they are not forever supplied with the drug.
* In "Half-Dead", Gauldoth Half-Dead must find a balance between Life and Death if he is to survive in the new world as a half undead being.
* In "Half-Decent Proposal", Homer and Lenny are working on an oil rig and decide to celebrate by raising their safety goggles to the sky. The sun's refraction shines through them and sets a nearby ant on fire, which then jumps into its mound and sets the rest of the colony on fire, then they decide to cool off by jumping into an oil puddle, igniting it.
* In "Half-Decent Proposal", when Marge arrives home via taxi after her evening with
* In "Hall of Mirrors" an undercover cop who infiltrated a terrorist cell is shot in a drive-by. It turns out to have not been related at all to the cell infiltration but to a love triangle.
* In "Halloween Fairstival", Homsar walks along the entire perimeter of the cartoon window.
* In "Halloween Fairstival", Strong Bad comments on Bubs dressing as one of The Three Most Important People in the World from
* In "Halloween Hotel", The Observer pranks Noah by constantly warping him around as he tries to pursue his stalker through the titular hotel. This includes leaving his hotel room, only to be transported back to that hotel room, and running down a hallway that only brings him back to the start of the hallway. This only ends when The Observer decides to stop
* In "Halloween Potion-ma-jig", choose to do a "Reagan impression" for Bubs:
* In "Halloween", this is the first thing that happens when Beast Boy
* In "Halloween", when a thunderstorm causes a blackout, Fireman Elvis Cridlington is in Trevor the Bus' arms, clinging to him in fear, saying he could "feel the bats flapping!".
* In "Hamburger Dinner Theater", during the series of flashbacks showing Tina's
* In "Hamburger Dinner Theatre", Linda claims that she's going to a stag party at a strip club. Actually, she's going to a dinner theatre performance. Again, this is something Bob is against, because watching dinner theatre performances makes Linda

* In "Hammer Down," the 2nd part of the "CSI Trilogy," the team discover a woman's body stuffed in a barrel that fell off a semi during a traffic accident.
* In "Hammer into Anvil", Number Six takes advantage of the fact that he's being watched to give the impression he's spying and sending secret messages, as part of a
* In Hanako's route, Hisao asks the shopkeeper in the antique shop what his gift will cost (and haggles with him), and he doesn't realize he picked a pricey doll for Lilly. But in Lilly's route, the items in the same antique store have price tags; Hisao immediately knows what each thing he looks at costs, including the dolls.
* In Hanako's route, this exchange between Hisao and Lilly not only takes the scene into a completely different direction (especially in that it forces Hisao to re-evaluate how he sees Hanako), but takes it into a completely direction than the equivalent scene in Lilly's route.
* In Hand and Foot merging parts of the original comic and the 1980s cartoon series.
* In Hand and Foot, the situation becomes so bad that the Defenders and the Turtles are willing to work with the Punisher despite their usual distaste for his methods.
* In Handball the goalie can be pulled just like he can be in Ice Hockey. However, due to a 2010s change of the rules, he can also be replaced in a "flying exchange", making teams much more likely to pull the goalie outside of "down a lot, seconds left on the clock" type situations. It even happens that
* In "Hand-Holding", Robert's reason for having drifted apart from Lyanna's brother Eddard, who was his foster brother, is implied to be that he had trouble being around Eddard after Lyanna's death.
* In "Hank's Dirty Laundry," Peggy tells Bobby to get out of the house after Peggy thinks Hank is masturbating to a porno flick
* In Hans Rotmo's "Førarkortet" ("The Driving Licence"), the narrator
* In "Happily Ever After Party", the Cutie Mark Crusaders seek help from either Applejack, Rainbow Dash, or Rarity in convincing Mr. Cranky to let them borrow an overhead projector for their after-party presentation.
* In "Happy Bake Oven", Marco does a very obvious aside glance to the audience when Captain Murphy says he can't see the squid on the radar.
* In "Happy Birthday, Mr. Monk", they find a dead man torn apart in a trash compactor. Not a household one, mind you, but an industrial-size one.
* In "Happy-Go-Nutty," Meathead and Screwy stop their chase long enough for each to have a bottle of Coca-Cola.
* In "Happy Halfiversary", Oona tells Otis that Olympia won't care about the fact that he didn't gift anything to her for their halfiversary. Seconds later and both she and Otis remark that it'll crush her spirits and break her heart, and work together to find a suitable gift.
* In "Happy Heroween", the second ghost story that Dr Colosso tells had Chloe as a zombie who comes to her family's rescue, have glowing eyes and a demonic voice to scare and threaten Mrs Wong.
* In "Happy Hour", Jerry ends up spending most of his family's money drinking, causes his wife to die after pushing her over during an argument over his drinking, and uses the grocery money on alcohol. Naturally, while his kids think that
* In "Hardhome", Jon bluntly admits to fatally shooting Mance Rayder, which understandably enrages the Wildlings until Tormund explains it was a
* In "Hard Time", O'Brien is having trouble after thinking he's been in prison for twenty years when it's really only been a few days. Then, there's a scene where he tries to commit
* In "Hard to Say Anything", Big Macintosh and his romantic rival Feather Bangs both try serenading Sugar Belle at the same time, Mac with a heartfelt country ballad and Feather Bangs with a catchy boy-band pop song. Their increasingly over-the-top performances just make a mess of Sugar Belle's shop and lead to her getting mad at both of them.
* In "Hare Force", an elderly lady takes Bugs into her house on a cold winter night, with Sylvester the dog tricking him into going outside, and Bugs makes a snow version of himself, which Sylvester Dog brings next to the fireplace. Bugs tells him to hide, leading him to rush outdoors. After the old lady checks on them a few times, Sylvester kicks Bugs in the tail, with Bugs kicking him back, showing him that if the dog hit him like that (which he didn't), Bugs demonstrates various ways in which he would have retaliated, but didn't. After the dog gets wise, Bugs dares him to charge at him, and he finds himself outside again. The conflict leads up to Bugs and the dog taking turns saying "Out

* In "Hare Remover", Elmer Fudd starts flipping out after accidentally ingesting a "Jekyll and Hyde potion" intended for Bugs...who responds by holding up a series of rebus signs for the audience featuring
* In "Hare Splitter" Bugs launches romantic rival Casbah a couple of times, first with a mousetrap to the fingers, then a well-aimed arrow to the butt.
* In "Hare Trimmed", Yosemite Sam first insults Bugs by slapping Bugs with a leather glove. Bugs responds by slapping Sam with a
* In "Hare Way To The Stars," after he finds he's been shot into outer space as a meteor streaks by him:
* In "Harlequinade", Harley Quinn, finally fed up with the Joker, pulls a tommy gun on him; Batman elects not to intervene. The Joker tells her she doesn't have the guts to pull the trigger. She does: "Ratta Tat Tat." She cringes with anticipated retribution, but the Joker, after a moment of cynical calculation, genuine surprise or both, decides to forgive her, and all is well.
* In "Harley & Ivy", the morning after Harley stays at Ivy's place, they are walking around just in shirts, in a manner similar to
* In "Harley and Ivy", three young men pull up to Harley Quinn and Poison Ivy at a stoplight and make cat calls at them. Two of the men are caricatures of Bruce Timm and Eric Radomski, but with their hair color mismatched.
* In "Harm" a cop turned defense attorney tells Casey Novak that the case that ended his police career involved a young girl being buried alive: he had tortured the suspect for the girl's location, and as a result, all the evidence was thrown out in court. However, as the girl was found alive, he makes it very clear he still believes he did the right thing.
* In Harmony with Nature: A character who understands the resources and rhythms of nature.
* In Harmony with Nature: Romanticism is known to idealize nature, and it is a common sentiment in Romanticist works that the best path is through, well, living in harmony with nature, rather than trying to expand and develop civilization.
* In Harm's Way, a Tokyo Rose broadcast is heard. The female lead (Patricia Neal) asks, "Why don't they jam her?" The Admiral responds, "They don't want to. She doesn't scare anyone and the boys like the music."
* In Harm's Way: Characters want excitement and danger in their lives.
* In Harm's Way drama, features the tensions between Rear Admiral Rock Torrey and his son, Ensign Jeremiah Torrey, as one of the running plots of the film.
* In Harm's Way is an A, B and C. It follows three couples falling in love: Admiral and Nurse; Ensign and Ensign, and Lieutenant and wife, during World War 2.
* In Harm's Way, Lieutenant (j.g.) McConnell is the command duty officer aboard a destroyer that is docked as the attack on Pearl Harbor begins. With the captain and first officer are ashore at church, he orders the engine room to light all boilers. When there is enough steam to maneuver, he orders that all lines be cast off and that the ship go to open sea. He refuses to slow down for the captain and first officer (who try to catch up to the ship in a launch) to come aboard, as this would make the destroyer an easy target for the Japanese pilots. (This was based on an actual incident.)
* In Harm's Way, so they just mashed up the names of those bands' respective lead vocalists, Kurt Cobain and Ric Ocasek. "The One On The Floor" got its name because a piece of paper with the chord changes was taped to the floor of their rehearsal space, presumably leading the members to say things like "let's play the one on the floor" - it stuck because they felt the title happened to fit the theme of the lyrics.

* In Harm's Way, the cruiser sailors are sent to battle stations on Dec. 7, 1941 through an announcement, "This is not a drill, this is not a drill, all hands man your battle stations."
* In Harm's Way: Thinks life is boring unless they put themselves in danger.
* In Harm's Way via sex by two steps of separation or less ends up dead by the end of the film.
* In Harm's Way without a second thought. This allows Robb to capture Jaime by surprising him in the Whispering Wood.
* In "Harper's Locket", while showing pre-taped footage of a wooden horse exploding.
* In Harry Dickson's Adventures, the titular hero and his young sidekick have lived over 100 adventures, covering, it seems, the late Twenties and the Thirties. However, the hero is always described as being in his late forties, and his assistant as being a young, hot-headed, immature young man.
* In "Harvest Festival", April tells Andy she loves him and gets angry at him when his response is "That's awesome sauce!" Subverted in that he actually did love her too, but he just didn't realize this was THE
* In Ha seems for the most part just selfish, shallow, and lazy, but then someone says something to set her off and she shows just how insane she is. This often involves physically attacking the people around her, though sometimes it is just shown in her sudden personality change and her inability to be reasoned with. It's never played for laughs.
* In "Hashtag FOMO," Ilana tells Lincoln that cornichons look like micropenises, "all lumpy and shit." Lincoln says, "Come on, don't ruin cornichons for me." Ilana says, "Okay, don't ruin micropenises for me."
* In "Hatchery" Archer becomes obsessed with protecting a Xindi insectoid hatchery at the expense of their mission to save Earth. The MACO's as by-the-book
* In "Hate", Torg and Gwynn split up to examine an abandoned facility thought to contain something like an
* In "Haunted Brothers", a now bad Miles uses his powers to give Louie a wedgie in his really stretchy underwear.
* In "Haunted Duel", the school bully gives Miles and his friend hanging wedgies by a chandelier.
* In "Haunted". Robin's costume is heavily damaged following his battle with Slade's projection. He also damages his costume in
* In "Have Space Suit Will Travel", the main character works as a soda jerk in a pharmacy which also has a soda fountain. It is never explicitly stated to serve malts, but ice cream is mentioned.
* In "Having a Wonderful Time," Lilly ties a red ribbon around her finger to remind her to bring an extra blanket and a snack for the school field trip to Hilltop Park. Grace tells her that she needs more than that, but not to worry because she'll bring enough for everyone. That evening, as she talks with her mama before bed, she has a red ribbon around one of her fingers too. That morning, Lilly has the blanket and extra snack before getting on the bus, so her mama takes the ribbon off, complimenting her on her good remembering.
* In Hawaiian mythology, Pele saw her sister embracing one of Pele's lovers. The pair had bonded over the course of a journey they undertook on Pele's behalf, and the embrace was platonic. However, Pele assumed they were having an affair, and drowned them in lava, which killed her lover. In a dose of pure
* In Hawaii, people try to outrun a tsunami. The only known survivors of it were the family that thought to run into (and then up) a building.
* In "Hawkeye Get Your Gun", Klinger (dressed in gypsy attire) uses playing cards to determine the status of Hawkeye and Potter, who are at a Korean aid station. He deals five cards, one at a time, and then realizes he drew a straight.
* In "Haylias," Stan tries to set Hayley up with the obviously-gay son of a senator. He can't see it, but she can and flatly refuses
* In H. B. Fyfe's "In Value Deceived", an alien exploration starship is searching for a way to alleviate the famine on their home world. They make first contact with a human starship on some barren little world. On a tour of the human's ship, they are thunderstruck when they see the hydroponic installations. It's the key to salvation for their people! But of course they feign disinterest. They ask for one as a souvenir. They don't notice the similar disinterest with which the humans ask for an alien heating unit. The one that produces all that pesky ash. Stuff like uranium and gold nuggets. Both aliens and humans are surprised when both parties make quick good-byes after the trade and take off before the trade is regretted. They both think "gee, the other guys act like they cheated us."

* INHD was a short-lived video-on-demand channel that was renamed to Mojo HD in 2007 and shut down the next year.
* In "Headhunters", Dipper and Mabel find someone has vandalized a wax dummy of their Grunkle Stan by
* In "Headhunters" Stan advertised free pizza in attending the grand opening of his wax museum, which there wasn't.
* In "Headless Lester", Ned has a run-in with the eponymous campfire-story creep and afterwards walks back to his cabin, whereupon his constantly giggling head topples off his body after his worried cabin counselor grabs him by the shoulders. Notably, and a bit ironically, this was in the one episode of the series wherein
* In "Head over Heels", the verse "It's hard to be a man when there's a gun in your hand" criticizes the idea that a man must engage in violence in order to prove his masculinity.
* In "Head Poet's Anxiety", a flashback shows a younger Charles peeing on a younger Luan.
* In "Healer", Jackie Thompson worked for a mob boss named Joseph Rubello in the 1970s. After he botched a delivery, two of Rubello's thugs beat Jackie so severely that he ended up in hospital.
* In "Health Kicked", Lynn Sr.'s too-tight leather pants rip off, causing his two eldest daughters to gag.
* In "Heart of Gold", a rich cowboy got himself an illegally-modified laser pistol, which caused some severe harm, but becomes useless once the battery runs out.
* In "Heart of Gold", the rich guy who runs the world is deliberately keeping the world rustic so he can "play cowboy".
* In "Hearts and Hooves Day", during the musical number where the Cutie Mark Crusaders look for a stallion to be Cheerilee's "very special somepony",
* In "Hearts and Hooves Day" Sweetie Belle reveals to Applebloom that a cure for the love potion that's causing the episode's problems only
* In "Hearts and Hooves Day", the best compliment that Cheerilee can come up with for the Cutie Mark Crusaders' card is "it's so... big!"
* In "Hearts and Hooves Day," the Cutie Mark Crusaders do this to reach a cloud that they need for the love potion that they try to make. As only pegasus can manipulate clouds, Scootaloo is on top and as pegasi are generally assumed to be light, this follows the logical structure rather than comic.
* In "Hearts and Hooves Day", the Cutie Mark Crusaders make a giant heart-shaped card for Miss Cheerilee. They then remark that they need a bigger envelope.
* In "Hearts and Minds", Earth suffered energy shortages for decades, leading to numerous wars, until an energy source called pergium was discovered.
* In "Hearts and Minds", Green Lantern John Stewart yells, "Yeah!" when he manages to
* In "Hearts and Minds", the North American Federation soldiers refer to the (apparent) aliens as "Bugs".
* In "Heat Signature", the backdrop for a big part of the episode appears to be an abandoned and dilapidated old hospital building with a helicopter plate.
* In heaven, God has decided that only the people with the worst death stories may enter. So the first guy shows up and god asks him what his story is. The man says "I came home from a business tripe to finding my wife naked in our bed, with our balcony door open. I knew she was cheating so I ran outside and saw a guy hanging on the balcony. So I took my hammer and hit his fingers until he fell. But he landed in some garbage and survived. So I took our wardrobe and hurled it off the balcony to finish him off. But it was too heavy, and I had a heart attack, so here

I am." God thinks and lets him in. The next man comes up and God asks him what his story is. He says "I was working out on my balcony when I slipped and fell off. But I got lucky: I grabbed on to my downstairs neighbors balcony. But suddenly, this asshole comes out and starts hammering at my fingers until I fell off again. But I got lucky again: I fell on some soft garbage and survived. But this asshole then runs out onto his balcony and throws a damn wardrobe at me, so here I am." God thinks and lets him in. The next man comes up. God says "So, what's your story?" "Well," says the man, "imagine this: I'm hiding in a wardrobe..."
* In "Heaven Sent", the Doctor finds himself in a revolving castle with a mysterious veiled creature that slowly chases him, only pausing when the Doctor confesses one of his secrets.
* In "Heaven's Skate", Dr. Craig and Jackie Wade meet the award-winning figure skaters Randy Gardner and Tai Babilonia at the Aschenberg Ice Rink.
* in heavy contrast to the beautifully detailed art everyone else gets to start matching the rest of the characters.
* In "Heavy Goes Bowling", RED Heavy tries to cheat several times to win against BLU Heavy in their bowling match.
* In "He Followed Me Home", a baby elephant the pups are trying to take care of ends up letting out a monster sneeze that sends the pups and Spot flying and crashing against the side of a farm silo.
* In "Hefty Shades of Gray", Chris remarks that he likes the look of a headless lingerie mannequin. In a
* In "Hefty's Heart", Gargamel traps the smurfs on the table by using glue.
* In Heian Era Japan, court nobles—women and men both—wore their hair long and open, the longer, the better. Longer hair meant higher status, especially for women, where long, perfect hair cascading down to the train of their kimono was not only common but highly coveted and desired.
* In Heinlein's short story "The Roads Must Roll", America has replaced all their roads with massive moving walkways, which have to be maintained by teams of engineers and mechanics for the country's economy to function. Then one of the engineers attempts to use his control over the roads to effect a coup.
* In "Heir To The Demon", Sara Lance is in the same position when her
* In Helen's version of the ending, she finds Jennifer dead at her desk, with a pair of scissors in her back
* In "Helicopter Dad" Blythe's entire school backdrop falls away to be replaced by pink and floating hearts as she looks at her crush Josh Mankey. Josh himself is haloed by soft focus until her father mistakes her
* In "Hellen Keller! The Musical", the kids try to put on a huge extravaganza of a Thanksgiving play based on Butters' seemingly glowing responses to the kindergartners' play. In the end, it turns out that the kindergartners' play was poor and used limited resources, the kids only then realizing that it was
* In Hell. He then shoots and kills his wife's murderer outside the courthouse in a fit of rage, which results in him being sent to prison.
* In "Hell is Other Robots", Bender is subject to many such punishments for his sins in Robot Hell. These include his hard drive being used as a turn table by the
* In "Hell Money", an incinerated man turns out to be part of a grim organ-dealing gambling game.
* In "Hello Gutter, Hello Fadder", Maggie swims into the ocean and pull's her drowning father to shore. Given her age and weight, that's practically toonforcing.
* In "Hello, Mr. Chips," Harriet has a crush on a visiting English headmaster.
* In "Hell on Earth 2006," all the Catholic priests are shown leading around naked boys on leashes. No-one appears to notice or care even when they are in public.
* In "Hell On Earth 2006", Cartman attempts a Bloody Mary-type ritual to summon Biggie Smalls. Just as Cartman repeats "Biggie Smalls" for the third time, Jimmy pops in the door behind him. Cartman is so scared he craps his pants.
* In "Hell on Earth 2006" Satan hosts a huge Halloween party on Earth (marking
* In "Hell's Forecast", the entire song is about a bewildered man waking up to discover that it is raining corpses and blood, only to realize at the end that he has died and gone to Hell.

* In Hellsing ultimate Integra Hellsing manages to deeply stab herself in the finger with a BUTTER KNIFE! it was so deep that she was able to feed Seras Victoria with all the blood that came from the wound.
* In "Hell Week", a college student snaps and builds a bomb intending to blow himself and the school to kingdom come (and just to make it even more dramatic, he happened to place it in the same building as the nuclear physics lab, meaning it would cause radiation to spread). Said bomb has a "mercury switch", which consists of a drop of mercury placed in the very middle of a precariously balanced Petri dish with wires along the edges set to trigger the bomb if the mercury touches them. With no way to get inside the bomb's mechanism without triggering it (at least for the moment), Mac and the kid's emotionally abusive professor father who started the whole mess have to move the bomb very carefully to an elevator so that the explosion is sufficiently contained underground.
* In "Heloise's Rival", a girl named Mean Jean comes to Miseryville and challenges Heloise to a "mean-off."
* In "Helpless", a woman had herself packed into a box and shipped to her lover as a way of generating a sexual thrill. However, because her lover had been murdered, there was no on to let her out at the other end and she died.
* In "Helpless", Blair, one of the caretakers of Kralik, gets killed by him while trying to give him his medicene. When we cut back to the scene after Kralik does the deed, we see the bite marks on Blair's neck briefly before they suddenly close up as he transforms into a vampire.
* In "Helter Shelter", the Simpsons go on the reality show "1895 Challenge" where they have to live like it's 1895. It takes some adjustment:
* In Henry Danger, Rick Twittler, the villain in "A New Evil" uses this tactic, posing as someone being held hostage to lure Captain Man and Kid Danger into his trap.
* In Henry's defense, he wasn't reading from a manual but from handwritten notes taken over the phone from an officer distracted by the big game. And possibly still suffering from an earlier concussion; he still had bandages on his head.
* In Henry Seslar's short story "Examination Day", when a child reaches the age of 12, they are made to take a Government Intelligence Test. To prevent
* In Heraldry, the terms are Dexter (right) and Sinister (Left) They always apply to the shield as if it were being carried, making "Dexter" the viewer's left, and Sinister being the viewer's right. In many medieval recreation groups this is mostly averted by the use of "sword-side" and "shield-side" when giving instructions on the tourney or melee fields. It doesn't work so well for anyone left-handed.
* In her audition tape, Dawn holds up a squirrel in reverence of nature. It gets snatched up by an eagle.
* In her autobiography about surviving the Rwandan genocide, Esther Mujawayo wrote that she associated Classical music with political upheaval since the national radio network used this music
* In her autobiography, Adeline Yen Mah states that her birth mother died shortly after her birth, causing her siblings and father to resent her, but their resentment doesn't fully come to a head until she gains a
* In her autobiography, Venezuelan musician and metaphysician Conny Méndez claimed that, when she was young, one of her uncles decided to make the family immune to cyanide, and convinced them of sprinkling tiny quantities of the substance on their food then increasing the doses little by little. The thing allegedly ended some years later when an apothecary, alarmed with the huge quantities of cyanide bought by the family, sicced the police on them; by then the kids of the family were ingesting without ill effects enough cyanide to kill a normal adult.
* In her bar on Ilium, Matriarch Aethyta warns Shepard against eating the beer nuts in the
* in her bathroom, where she's just emerged from the shower in her supposedly secret and secure home to find the "rich boy" standing there.
* In her battle during the Tower of Heaven arc, Erza has to fight Ikaruga using a katana. The woman destroys every one of her armors, and all her weapons except two. At the end, Erza wins using that pair of weapons. Which weapons did she use? You guessed it!

* in her body her body). For the most part, the two would just 'talk' to each other in her head, but every so often there was sensory feedback. And yes, the nanites in turn could interface with other communication and computer systems.
* In her book about her life with Jim Morrison, the writer Patricia Kennealy refers a lot to "evil fu"...
* . In her case, she's given the choice between getting neuralyzed and sent back to the Air Force, where she'll have to deal with 'the glass gender ceiling'; or she'll be the liaison for the alien race in charge of Earth's porn industry for the next five years, with the proviso that if she does it well, she'll be promoted to second-in-command of their intelligence division, a faster track to branch director than she could ever get otherwise. Both ways, she'll be dealing with sexism for a long time.
* In "Her Chance to Dream", Rebecca meets her perfect man... who happened to be the ghostly captain of a sunken ship. It was a while before she discovered
* In her column, Juliette Frette once wrote: "many people enjoy seeing
* In her countdown of songs about sex, the Chick manages to kill the moment
* In "Hercules and the Circle of Fire", Hercules dreamed of Deianeira before he met her. He also dreamed of it being very cold, with her turning to ice and shattering. This foreshadowed Hera stealing fire from mankind.
* In her début episode Karin apparently held a lengthy conversation with Sasuke's chest. That was where the camera was aimed, anyway...
* In her debut cartoon "Meet Minerva Mink", Minerva listens to her phone messages, one of which is from a nervous Lawrence, asking, "I was wondering if you'd like to go out with me?" Minerva,
* In her debut episodes, Fred looks more like she spent a few days camping than five years in a hell dimension.
* In her debut, Paperinika had some serious problems at using her skating boots, and the first attempt ended with a ridiculous pratfall. Averted for the other gadgets, as her supplier has the common sense to explain how to use the things and provide sensibly-sized user manuals... Or simply provides gadgets that are based on something she already knows how to use (such as her
* In her early days, Corky was clearly meant to just be good-looking and create such pieces to bring in bigger ratings. She did turn into a serious reporter as the series went on.
* In her early days in the X-Men, when she still was a young teenager, Kitty had a few such nicknames, for instance Storm called her "Kitten", Nightcrawler "Kätzchen" ('Kitten' in German), Wolverine "Pun'kin", or sometimes "Half-Pint".
* In her early TV career, Emma Thompson was known mainly for comedy. Her shift to drama started with the 1987 series
* In "Here Comes the Sun", the episode's villain amplifies the Sun's heat which melts the tar road and causes the spies' feet to get stuck.
* Inherent in the System: Societal problems portrayed as being part of the established system, rather than due to the actions of any individual or group.
* Inherent in the System: The way things are in the world is the problem and improving the problem makes them worse.
* inherentlyagree with this premise. Even within Christianity itself, this is debated.
* Inherently Attractive Profession: A job has characteristics associated with it that people find attractive.
* Inherently Attractive Profession: When a job itself is part of someone's appeal.
* inherently bad-ass about having a mook whose entire purpose is to provide you a theme song.
* Inherently Funny Words: Words that are repeatedly spoken due to them sounding funny.
* Inherently Funny Words: Words that are repeatedly used because they sound funny.

* inherently spoilery stuff such as death and the unknown, so finding spoilers on these pages should be expected.
* Inherent Vice, a 2014 neo-noir film based on a book of the same title.
* In her first appearance in "Ice Cream, You Scream" Charlene tells Vanessa that "no one's evil" and that their marriage didn't work because they both wanted "different things." ("Was one of those things being evil? 'Cause he's evil.")
* In her flashbacks, Becca tells Shelby her stepbrother groomed and abused her.
* In her haste to answer the telephone, Hyacinth casually tosses biscuits off a tray as she leaves the room.
* In her intro episode, the Scotsman's wife tells the Scotsman to "shut it!" (which is the Scotsman's catchphrase). He responds with "yes, dear."
* Inheritance, a fortress wall falls over with Roran standing right under it. He survives by standing under a door. The other soldiers are not so lucky.
* Inheritance, after Eragon heals the baby Hope, he says that his hands are too bloody for that type of work.
* Inheritance Backlash: When something undesirable is left behind after its original owner died.
* Inheritance Cycle add another twist to this: the Elves are generally very scientific, while the Dwarves are religious. Note that this has nothing to do with technology: the series is strictly "swords & sorcery." But for example, the Dwarves worship Stone, believing that they came from it and return to it in death, and one of their priests mentions why they know that stone is alive: coral reefs, which grow over the decades. The hero is suitably impressed with this, until he meets the agnostic Elves who posit that there is no evidence supporting any gods or supernatural beings, and that the coral are just the accumulation of billions of tiny dead sea creature fossils.
* Inheritance Cycle: all spells are said in the old tongue, the language that has the true name for anything. Yet, you do not actually need the words for casting, they only help you focus, and they won't get you anywhere if you don't have the innate talent for magic anyway. This wordless magic comes as a surprise for Eragon in Ellesmera, when his opponent, although unable to speak, can still cast.
* Inheritance Cycle, and Arya hypothesizes that it's also fertile and capable of producing seeds that might grow into more golden lilies, though this is never confirmed.
* Inheritance Cycle, an enemy magician fights Carn. Both kill each other via magic at the same time, Carn's corpse left blackened and withered. Carn, however, kills the enemy magician with an especially grim spell that drains all of the water from his body, leaving nothing but a fine grey dust which settles over the water.
* Inheritance Cycle. Angela can apparently also do it but vows not to unless there is absolutely no other option to win.
* Inheritance Cycle are often capable of feats of strength (and speed and magic too) beyond that of most humans, including humans with way bigger muscles. Eragon himself notes this in Brisingr by comparing his muscles to his cousin Roran's much larger muscles.
* Inheritance Cycle (as long as they're not stabbed in the heart, which is the only way to kill them), and are strong enough to immobilize a dragon with their mind and lift an elf off the ground with one hand. Durza's consciousness even continues to assault Eragon's at full strength for several hours after the former's death.
* Inheritance Cycle, because she's a vegetarian on the basis that she finds killing an animal for food cruel.
* Inheritance Cycle: Bridget, mom of one teenager, is the sole female from Carvahall to join the Varden army. She does this to protect one of the main characters so she can have revenge on him for the death of her husband. She is also the sole female fighter in the entire human army aside from the Herbalist Angela and the leader of the Varden, Nasuada.
* Inheritance Cycle, BTW), but he isn't interested. Then she gets nasty...
* Inheritance Cycle, but Eragon has become more of his own character as the series has progressed.
* Inheritance Cycle, but with enough power, one can look as old or young as they wish.

* Inheritance Cycle. Considering that it's featured on the official site, it's probably at least a semi-official adaptation.
* Inheritance Cycle definitely lacked empathy. Ironically, the first time he ever experiences empathy in any way, it gets him killed.
* Inheritance Cycle descended from them due to their longevity and propensity for unspoken magic.
* Inheritance Cycle does this. When Eragon, Arya, Elva, and Saphira enter Galbatorix's throne room, he is well aware of the fact that they have a weapon that can pierce his wards, and that they have a witch-child who can say the things that need to be said to kill him. How does he solve this? He makes Elva mute until she leaves the room, and he brings in two children, and in possibly the most conversational tone a villain can have, he essentially says "You make one wrong move, and both of them will die. You do anything I don't like and they die. Hell, you so much as scratch your nose when I don't tell you to, and they both die." It works.
* Inheritance Cycle. Doing something with magic takes the same amount of energy as doing it without magic, and characters get progressively more tired the more magic they cast. Apparently the character's physical (or mental, or magical) condition factors into how much magic s/he can cast before collapsing.
* Inheritance Cycle: Durza, the shade Eragon faces at the end of said first book. Its downplayed in that he was actually an incredible challenge, leaving Eragon with a crippling injury. But later foes are more challenging politcally or personal, forcing Eragon to learn new skills.
* Inheritance Cycle: Elva talked several enemy soldiers into insanity and suicide, simultaneously. This is despite the fact that she looks like she's 6 and is actually much younger.
* Inheritance Cycle: Eragon is only too ready to give his life saving a girl he met moments ago, who's spent the entire time he's known her in a coma. All he had to work with was a dream of a beautiful woman being held in a dungeon.
* Inheritance Cycle, Eragon seems to assume that Galbatorix has a beard when he mentions him.
* Inheritance Cycle, Eragon was able to cut through a portcullis and then the door behind it.
* Inheritance Cycle eventually learns a technique for pulling energy from surrounding life, generally killing it in the process, but avoids doing so, as it requires experiencing the death of whatever you're taking energy from, which tends to be pretty overwhelming.
* Inheritance Cycle guaranteed that his opponent is dead. If a caster has access to his opponent's mind, however, they can see the magic coming before it is cast, thus counter-magic can be prepared prior to the casting.
* Inheritance Cycle had honorifics in the Ancient language that came after a person's name, such as -elda, -finiarel, -svitkona, and the like.
* Inheritance Cycle has a humanoid species named Ra'zac. They ride big winged creatures, which are the next step in their life cycle (and their parents).
* Inheritance Cycle has both sides employ mages who can snuff out a company with a single word. The Empire's approach seems to be to conceal their mages among the ordinary soldiery and have them protect their fellows, while the Varden hunt down these mages, kill them, and move on to the army-killing.
* Inheritance Cycle has Fadawar, who wears golden armour, although this may simply be a ceremonial dress uniform (although, it says a lot for his strength that he can walk about in it).
* Inheritance Cycle has significant baggage related to her friend/possible lover Faolin, who was killed by Durza and his Urgal thralls at the beginning of the first book. This seriously impairs any possible relationship with Eragon and is part of why she rejects him.
* Inheritance Cycle have outgrown religion; however, Eragon is slightly distrustful of the elves' atheism, and in the third book, a being that's pretty hard to interprete as anything other than a Dwarven god appears to bless their new king.

* Inheritance Cycle, he even goes as far as to recruit people that he knows are out to kill or usurp him because they are particularly efficient at what they do.
* Inheritance Cycle, he thanked one person in particular for "giving me a much-needed kick-in-the-pants early on" and mentions that without which, he would probably still be working on the book.
* Inheritance Cycle hot that the various marks and injuries aren't enough to do so.
* Inheritance Cycle, Inheritance, during Eragon's sparring match training against Arya, Eragon gets the idea to distract Arya during the pre-duel positioning so that she focuses on him, and doesn't notice he's putting his back to the sun. It works well enough to get in a first attack, but then Arya holds him off long enough to regain her vision, and she starts to win the spar.
* Inheritance Cycle is concerned. Dragons are more innately magical than humans.
* Inheritance Cycle is full of these: the hero's kingdom of Alagaësia, an evil emperor/king named Galbatorix, hideous mooks called Ra'zac, brutish orc-like creatures called Urgals, a beautiful elf named Arya and homeland of the elves Alalea.
* Inheritance Cycle is going this route with the Dragon Rider organization. Eragon was a big deal because he was the first such rider in decades, and could lead to many more.
* Inheritance Cycle is named after, and loosely based on, Christopher Paolini's sister.
* Inheritance Cycle is the creation of the world eight thousand years ago by gods from the bones of slain giants. Also, at one point, while drunk, the dwarf Orik claims that all non-Dwarf races are actually giants.
* Inheritance Cycle, it seems that all magic users have the potential to become telepaths. Anyone with sufficient training can attempt to resist an attack upon their mind.
* Inheritance Cycle King Galbatorix was once a Dragon Rider (proper noun), an order of Elves and humans who rode dragons, serving as peacekeepers throughout the land of Alagaësia. Galbatorix was driven mad by the death of his dragon and demanded another one from the Council. When denied his request, Galbatorix convinced himself that the Riders were responsible for the loss of his dragon. Some years later, Galbatorix recruited and corrupted 13 other Dragon Riders later known as the Forsworn, subjugated the Elves, Dwarves, and Humans, wiped out all but a few Dragon Riders who opposed him, and declared himself ruler of Alagaësia.
* Inheritance Cycle, less than two years after she hatched, Saphira was so large that jumping down from her back when she is standing up is a long enough drop to either sprain or break bones, and particularly old dragons (before they were wiped out) were said to be mistaken for hills at a distance.
* Inheritance Cycle (mostly describing life in Carvahall and such) and could have been trimmed or cut to move things along more briskly; the thirteenth chapter in particular consists solely of Eragon angsting about his uncle's death and could easily have been merged with another chapter.
* Inheritance Cycle, most of the magical cast will see each other again, leaving the story open for both C.P. and fanfiction writers to return to if they wish. Really, it just leaves open more questions then it actually answers.
* Inheritance Cycle Murtagh) occasionally call them out for their less than stellar behavior, so obviously some people think of them as terrorists.
* Inheritance Cycle Nasuada plans to impose regulations on the use of magic. King Galbatorix, the big bad, was also planning the same thing.
* Inheritance Cycle never stop growing; some were as big as mountains. They do suffer from a loss of agility, but with their increased strength, it's a net plus.
* Inheritance Cycle requires very careful use of language; Eragon once accidentally cursed a girl because he used the word "shield" as a noun rather than a verb, dooming her to soak up misery and pain from everyone around her.
* Inheritance Cycle, retaining only the ability to communicate via telepathy.
* Inheritance Cycle: Riders' Swords are unaffected by magic. Typically this means that they can pass right through magical shields designed to repel mundane blades, but a side effect that has come up on at least one occasion is that, when lost, the swords can't be tracked or retrieved by magic.

* Inheritance Cycle: Roran is "Roran Garrowsson" and Eragon is "Eragon Bromsson". This seems to qualify for all the villagers in their town (real cultures like the Norse used the same, and is still seen).
* Inheritance Cycle's fourth book, Inheritance, Eragon and Arya are imprisoned in Helgrind by the fanatic worshippers of the Ra'zac. Eragon considers breaking his thumbs to get out of his chains when the Ra'zac's eggs start to hatch.
* Inheritance Cycle, sparking copious mixed opinions from readers. Some find his writing captivating and interesting, while others basically write it off as a load of crap. Either way, you can't argue that he follows this trope to the letter, and younger readers may want to keep a dictionary open while traversing his prose.
* Inheritance Cycle territory when it mentions that the "wandering tribes'" favorite thing to do is "smoke cardus weed."
* Inheritance Cycle than humans are. It runs so deep in this series that non-Elves will regularly point out their own inferiority to Elves (usually along the lines of "We're not as good as you elves at this, but we manage"). The Elf being spoken to always accepts this as indisputable fact, and never disagrees.
* Inheritance Cycle that he'd ever seen. Without reading it himself, said more-famous author told his publishing company, Alfred Knopf, about it and they decided to publish and promote it themselves. And the rest is history.
* Inheritance Cycle that he has no idea how they even manage to speak the human language.
* Inheritance Cycle, the Ancient Language carries the caveat that one cannot tell a lie while speaking it (because anything you say becomes true; this is how magic is performed, though it draws on your life force so the more outrageous, the more likely it will kill you trying to come true). The Elves speak it fluently, and so have the reputation of never telling a lie. Brom warns Eragon in the first book that this means that most of them have mastered the art of being Truth Twisters. Eragon tries his hand at this in the second book; when someone who broke his heart asks him (in the Language) how he is now, he tells her that he is "better than [he] was", referring to his healed back.
* Inheritance Cycle. The eponymous hero has a mark on his hand because he's bound to a dragon, and needs to explain it. He just says he's had it for as long as he can remember.
* Inheritance Cycle: The high priest/ess of the Cult of Helgrind had all of their limbs amputated out of faith but is psychically strong enough to incapacitate a Dragon Rider, elven princess, and dragon simultaneously. When Angela manages to move enough to pose a threat, they begin freaking out. When Angela whispers her true name to them, they’re utterly horrified.
* Inheritance Cycle, there isn't really room for a peace between two sentient races when one is physically required to eat the other.
* Inheritance Cycle the southern kingdom of Surda is hot with dark-skinned inhabitants, while the north, if not cold, is more temperate. The rest of the world, however, stays unexplored.
* Inheritance Cycle, the Urgals slaughter every living thing in the village of Yazuac and pile their corpses in the town's center.
* Inheritance Cycle They were already engaged before the war came to their home village, though.
* Inheritance Cycle, though, in fairness, Eragon really isn't too far off from what his people consider the age of maturity when the series begins.
* Inheritance Cycle to be sure, but if he didn't have brains, he'd be a dead a thousand times with everything he faces. One of the big reasons why he lasts so long and why he gets to promoted to captain is precisely because he's this, even if it does occasionally cause him trouble because he won't obey the orders of some of the rockheads around him. During one otherwise ill-fated battle, he manages to save the majority of his troops from his commander's awful strategy and later accomplishes the siege of an entire town in just days that Galbatorix's Empire had been flummoxing the Varden with for months. He is noted for being bold and willing to take risks but has an uncanny knack of just how to analyze and unbalance the enemy.

* Inheritance Cycle to the list of literature they hate. The website is now curiously defunct.
* Inheritance Cycle, trebuchets are used for a battle in a plain. Considering that your average trebuchet can fire something like two shots per hour (if you're lucky), this isn't the wisest of choices.
* Inheritance Cycle: Urzhad are cave bears native to the Beor mountains, which can grow to the size of a house and are stated to be dangerous foes even for dragons.
* Inheritance Cycle Vanir plays this role, though in this case, the art in question is sword fighting rather than kung fu.
* Inheritance Cycle what the elves have become, comparing them to statues in how much emotion they show.
* Inheritance Cycle, when Eragon realizes he has become immortal. Instead of angsting about it, he decides to look for a wife among the elves because they are all immortal. Good thing he's already head over heels for Arya.
* Inheritance Cycle, where practitioners of a self-mutilating religion do their thing.
* Inheritance Cycle which cause instant death to whoever they were directed at.
* Inheritance Cycle, which consists of a single country ruled by a king.
* Inheritance Cycle which, had he used it, would have let him win easily.
* Inheritance Cycle will likely kill you from either a rebound of magical energy or, more likely, draining your life force away before you can cancel the spell. It's also been said repeatedly in-universe that truly mastering the art of magic takes decades of practice and diligence. For the first book and a half, Eragon's progress follows this trend, as he slowly progresses from struggling to lift a rock with his mind to effortlessly casting fire-based spells. Of course, then he undergoes a crash course in magic with the elves and then becomes half-elf during the Blood-Oath Ceremony, completely eliminating the need for a slow progression.
* Inheritance Cycle with nothing available to allow it to stand out on its own.
* Inheritance Galbatorix, he tries to goad him into fighting him in swordplay. Galbatorix refuses, then says he'll indulge his request - only to make him fight his half-brother Murtagh in swordplay instead.
* "Inheritance" has SWAT deployed to deal with armed kidnappers trying to be the
* Inheritance has the ultimate goal of restricting all magic use, though he doesn't wish to wipe it out entirely. He claims that magic is the great unfairness in the world, as someone either can or cannot use it; there is no learning to use magic.
* Inheritance, might do this to her after she killed her jailer. Instead, he does something so much more horrifying that she likely couldn't eat food even if she was given it.
* Inheritance Murder: Killing someone in order to collect their inheritance.
* Inheritance Murder: Slayer clauses automatically prevent beneficiaries from inheriting anything if they kill the testator.
* inheritance murders, spending it on new houses, luxury cars, and fancy outfits is going to raise the eyebrows of the cops.
* Inheritance Murder: Triggering an inheritance early by means of murder.
* Inheritance Murder with the inheritor being a prime suspect who turns out to be innocent.
* Inheritance. Naturally, this means enemy forces regroup there, blocking Eragon's way and forcing him to fight at three against hundreds.
* Inheritance of Cards and Demons finds out when it turns him into a girl named Sora.
* Inheritance, Sloan believes that this is what Eragon wants when Eragon comes to visit around the end of the book, but he's off-the-mark. Eragon had forgotten Sloan was there until he spotted him and feels so guilty about bringing Sloan's daughter, Katrina, there when he knows that he can't see her that he restores Sloan's eyes, which had been pecked away by the Ra'zac.
* Inheritance Trilogy erodes, leading heretical cults worshiping other gods to appear and later give rise to the "primordialism" movement of people who see no need to worship the gods, instead putting mortals first.

* Inheritance Trilogy has a romance between the human Yeine, and the god Nahadoth, the firstborn of the Three Gods. Nahadoth is not described as a human with powers (like some mythologies do) but as something entirely different than humans, with its own unfathomable motives.
* Inheritance Trilogy), where almost all the major human civilizations are varying shades of dark, with only the Amn being explicitly white (and they- or at least, their tyrannical leaders- are mostly bad guys).
* Inheritance: "You thought I'd be sitting in some rat hole chewing hardtack."
* inherited from her birth-mother, Wanda Maximoff of Chaos Magic are repeatedly underlined. The fact that Hermione persists in treating it like ordinary magic, which is considerably tamer, doesn't help.
* inheriting Horatio's powers, and raised by her to be warriors. They ended being good anyway though, and saved Horatio from the Loomis sisters.
* Inheritors is a superhero web serial about Gabe, a clone of his world's Superman.
* Inherit the Earth - giving them "thinking minds, feeling hearts, speaking mouths, and reaching hands." Before they could teach the Morph the secret of happiness, however, some terrible calamity befell them. Now the Humans have gone - where, no Morph knows - and their furry children can only wonder at the strange things they left behind.
* Inherit the Earth is a seemingly medieval world populated by sentient bipedal animals whose ancestors were uplifted by humanity before a plague wiped them out.
* Inherit the Earth the entire cast is like this, more or less, due to humans being extinct.
* Inherit the Earth. They keep the routine going for as long as you need to explore the next area.
* Inherit the Stars by James P. Hogan, begins with the discovery of a man in a spacesuit found dead on the moon. All that's known about him is that he's not from any nation on earth and he's been there for 50,000 years.
* Inherit the Stars the key to deciphering an alien language comes when someone recognizes a Periodic Table of the Elements in an alien book.
* Inherit the Wind, Drummond objects to Brady's title of Colonel, saying that it makes Brady look more important than Drummond and "prejudicing the case in favor of the prosecution." Drummond ends up becoming an honorary Colonel on the spot.
* Inherit the Wind example above, this is not meant to imply that he is getting special treatment, rather that his normal quarters just suck.
* Inherit the Wind features a scene where Henry Drummond and Matthew Brady, opposing counsels in the trial over evolution, meet and muse over their past friendship. It's stated that their differing views on religion caused them to party ways.
* Inherit the Wind, which was based (loosely) on the Scopes Monkey Trial. The appeal isn't shown in the film, but Cates (the Scopes-analogue) and his lawyer discuss making an appeal.
* in her last moments, Haley pleads with Hotch to tell their son Jack about how he used to be; how he wasn't so serious, how he and Haley fell in love, how he used to make her laugh.
* In her logs to her past selves, Aradia is fond of referring to things that "we will and have already" done.
* In "Hermanos", Gus is called in to discuss possible involvement in
* In her memoir, Maria von Trapp admitted that unlike the happy sequence in
* In her mission to "purge" the SHINE promotion, Leva Bates amassed a following of men in white masks who sometimes physically interject themselves into conflicts, sometimes without prompting on her part. Most wrestlers don't find them hard to beat up but they can often ward off superior opponents through sheer numbers. And despite the implications they
* In "Hermit Ren", after getting fed up with civilization (and his idiot roommate Stimpy), Ren joins a "hermit's guild" and goes to live in a cave. When Ren
* In "Hermit Ren", Stimpy hammers a nail into his own finger while hanging a picture.
* In Her Name. They have to be removed very soon after the creature is killed for them to be gems, otherwise they quickly fade and crack, becoming worthless.

* in her name the youkai was defeated to look up any relevant information.
* In Her Name. They, therefore, take steps to prevent modern (in-universe, meaning futuristic from our point of view) weapons, and especially computer-controlled ones such as missiles, from working. Fighting mostly involves tanks and basic projectile weapons, while space combat frequently results in boarding actions which had been previously unheard of.
* In Herodotus' Histories Herodotus claims Mardonius, cousin to Xerxes, persuaded him to invade Greece. As he put it
* In "Heroes, Part 1", SG-13 is doing a standard recon mission, and the team leader Col. Dixon takes bets on what they're going to find on the planet. One of his
* In "Hero Hamton", a piano falls on Hamton during Porky's Prop Class.
* In "Hero Worship", a little boy emulates Data and says his catchphrases "I am operating within normal parameters" and "That is correct."
* In her personal quest, Glory can potentially reference this trope in dialog, commenting that she rarely feels emotions anymore - most of the time, she's just numb.
* In "Her Pilgrim Soul", Dr. Kevin Drayton and his assistant Daniel Gaddis have developed a holographic projector for Holotechnics, Inc. It has the ability to create objects such as a ball and a chessboard as well as a projection of
* In "Her Pilgrim Soul", Nola Granville's (benevolent) spirit briefly possesses a hologram-projection system.
* in her rendition of — while she's a soprano, at the end of her performance, she deliberately goes below her singing range, resulting in a rather creepy and evil vocal effect.
* In her revancha match on May 5th 2015, Baby Puma attempted to use referee Panda as a launchpad at Tsunami.
* In her second appearance in "Magic Duel", the Great and Powerful Trixie becomes this thanks to an
* In her second trial against Phoenix, she has a more subdued but still angry reaction after
* In her self-titled episode, she tells Steven that, on Rose's request, she designed her sword so that it could only poof a Gem, never shatter. This is what makes him suspicious when
* In Her Shoes tells her sister "I'll let you do my resume if you let me do your hair."
* In Her Shoes, where Maggie informs Rose that she tossed out some unfashionable clothing of hers into the garbage. Rose questions why Maggie doesn't donate them to a secondhand store, the latter answers "Just because someone's poor, doesn't mean they have to be unfashionable."
* in her sleep. Upon waking up she wonders if she got drunk, used the magic mirror, then broke said mirror. She then notes that if such truly happened, no one could ever say she didn't know how to party.
* in her sleep. Which is lampshaded by Ms. Aki in the anime's corresponding episode (13):
* in her underwear while the camera zooms in on her stomach, back, bare shoulders, legs, and feet to a jaunty rendition of "Head, Shoulders Knees and Toes". It's been described as the most upbeat striptease on television.
* In her video for "Mickey", Toni Basil portrays a high school cheerleader. She was 39 at the time.
* In "He's Not Dead, He's My Mascot", the school's cat mascot claws Billy's face off his skull as he tries to take care of it. It later does the same to Grim, but since Grim has no skin, he's just left with a hole where his face was.
* In "He's Too Sexy For His Fat", Lois and Brian have this exchange after Peter gets a lot of plastic surgery accompanied by
* In "He's Too Sexy For His Fat", Peter gets liposuction to lose weight. He later gets additional plastic surgery to buff up in muscle, and becomes a complete
* In hex 2106 the fabric of time is warped and accelerated, causing anyone in it to age 1-5 years for each day spent in the hex.

* In "Hex Games", when Chester realizes Vicky stole Timmy's trick, he says it calls for dramatic music, and summons a record player out of his
* Inhibit begins with a flashback to when Victor first arrived at Urquhart. Chapter five also includes a flashback to Victor's time at Urquhart and how he met some of the other variants his age.
* Inhibit: Julia and Joanne are still good friends, despite the fact that they used to date.
* inhibitor chips, people have an innate distrust of them. Pretty justifiable:
* Inhibit: Victor’s goal is to get a license to live a normal life despite his powers.
* In "Hidden Talent", Kim has some difficulty with consistently hitting high notes. However, a dissonant attempt at a high note proves to be just the thing to
* In "Hide and Then What Happens?", SpongeBob teaches Patrick how to play hide and seek, and while SpongeBob is counting, Patrick just goes home. When SpongeBob begins his search, his first guess is Patrick's house, but he dismisses it because it would be "too obvious", kicking off his long-winded search. Turns out his first guess was actually correct — right after SpongeBob leaves, Patrick comes out of his house.
* In Hideshi Hino's "The Mannequin Room", the son of a mannequin maker enters his father's workshop and by accident knocks over a little girl mannequin. That night, she attacks him while he sleeps and he smashes her head in in self-defense. The next night, he's attacked by the other mannequins in the hallway. His baseball bat saves him once more there. The third night, he's attacks while he sleeps by all the broken mannequin parts and again he fights back. There is the question of how the mannequins got in his room or in the hallway, but it's left up in the air whether the mannequins truly attacked or the boy just imagined them doing so.
* In Hideyoshi's route, a friendly moment between Hideyoshi and the MC becomes heated when Hideyoshi
* In Hideyoshi's route, it's revealed after he and the main character finally resolve their
* In Hiding, they employ pseudonyms, misdirection and mail drops to publish their authoritative works in a variety of fields.
* In High Atlantic society, it is common for witches to make five-year marriage contracts between the major families in order to mix witch bloodlines.
* In higher math and science, particularly in physics, there are multiple correct ways of arriving at an answer. So the people using the math tend to stick with what they're most comfortable with... which is generally the exact same set of math techniques. At a high enough level it gets to the point where people can be identified by the math they use because they will always use the same set of techniques every single time.
* In "High-Heeled Ed", Eddy decides that since Sarah, Nazz, and Jimmy are the only kids around to scam, they need to cook up a scheme with more feminine appeal than their sewer raft ride:
* In "High Hopes", Owen Crawford has Jesse Keys arrested as a spy in the middle of the Cuban Missile Crisis on October 24, 1962. He tells the commander of the Hill Air Force Base that Jesse received secret information from Lt. Wiley and planned to pass it on to the Soviet Union in the hope of turning the tide in the Crisis.
* In high-paranoia games, where every attack might kill and so every attack must be answered with a Perfect Defense,
* In high school and college, this can go as far as the referees declaring the offending team has instantly lost the game. The NFL doesn't allow that, but the refs can award the penalized team with whatever they think is appropriate, up to and including a touchdown. However, Rule 17 does allow the NFL Commissioner to say that a team lost, regardless of the score. The Commissioner may also order the entire game to be replayed, or to be replayed starting from the moment of an unfair act. However, this power has never been used; it's considered unlikely that there will ever be any act of cheating so extreme that an NFL Commissioner would be willing to overturn the results on the field.

* In high school Nitori meets up with her old elementary classmates one day. They're surprised at how handsome she's become, especially a girl who had a crush on Nitori.
* In high school settings, from the late 1990s onwards it has become very rare for the most popular girl in school to be portrayed as a
* In high school, you probably did this to talk about people without them knowing. Alternately, maybe you did this as an in-joke between friends.
* In "High Sea Diving", SpongeBob's first attempt to dive to the surface ends with him plummeting to the ground. Sandy then explains that he needs anti-gravity to dive up.
* In "High Sparrow", Janos Slynt starts crying and pleading when he finally realizes Jon is serious about executing him. Jon executes him anyway.
* In "High Voltage", Julia tells Emily and Lillian of her decision not to stand as a candidate in the provincial election, to her hearers' intense disappointment. After Julia leaves, Lillian says she knows of a bar that serves women, and Emily immediately expresses a desire to go there.
* In "Highway Robbery", a suspect is described as "he had a mustache." This ends up subverting this trope because it actually turns out to be a vital clue.
* In Hikari's case, when the protagonist will inadvertently take it to use as a selling item for the School's Festival Small Item Shop, he will go to great lengths to get it back and give it back to Hikari once he realizes his blunder; and in the Drama CD
* In "Him", Buffy, under a love spell, ends up making out with the student R.J. in an empty classroom and when Xander catch them, she's on top of him but they are both still dressed. Fans debate whether they were interrupted before the act or if
* In "Him Diddle Riddle," one of Him's tasks to the girls is to take their
* In "Him Diddle Riddle", the girls do this again to try to reach a phone. In this case, they had to since one of the rules of the challenge as said by Him was "No flying."
* In Hinamizawa there's a ghost story about an old village ritual (that's used for some of the murders) that involved the villagers disemboweling the victim as torture, and showing them their own guts on the day of the yearly festival. This eventually happens to Rika in some of the later chapters.
* In hindsight, his plan B was "hope the other guys make a mistake." That doesn't work either, but he comes up with a plan C — an
* In Hindu and Buddhist traditions, the elements, or "tattvas", are more like states of being than anything else, forming a ladder from the solid earth to the heavenly light. They're aligned with the senses (earth = smell, water = taste, fire = sight, air = touch and "akasha"
* In Hinduism, especially in the earlier Vedic religion, there's a substance called "Soma", which gives the gods strength and vitality in battle. It has been
* In Hindu mythology, Krishna, as a teenager, used to steal the clothes of milkmaids while they were bathing.
* In his 13th symphony, a work for a huge orchestra with a chorus of 150 or so bass voices singing in unison, the 1st movement uses a somber bell throughout to toll for the victims killed in the massacre at Babi Yar during WWII.
* In his 1956 novelty hit, Jim Lowe never does find out what's going on behind
* In his 1976 how-to-write-SF article "Living the future: You are what you eat!", Gardner Dozois gave a good tirade that culminated with this (cue the author's
* In his account of life with the U.S. Navy Seals, a former senior officer recounts a joint patrol with Afghan soldiers they were training up, who were woefully short of basic field disciplines. He notes that a Taliban unit knew exactly where to set up an ambush because they spotted M&M's packets the Afghans had carelessly dropped, and reasoned that if they waited on this patrol route they'd be able to bump an American unit. Sure enough, the Afghan/SEALS patrol was ambushed on the way back...
* In his afterword in the deluxe edition, Brian Bolland says that he'll address the interpretation that Batman
* In his alternate persona of "Viktor Vaughn", he bases his "character" on

* in his appearance in Ace Attorney Investigations, which he then passes on to his student after his death.
* In his autobiography, Dutch missionary and Bible smuggler Andrew van der Bijl relates how, after obtaining an incriminating mark in his passport book that prevented him from passing through certain Communist controlled countries, he asked a foreign affairs clerk if there was any way he could manage to get a new, un-marked passport. Allegedly, the clerk replied that he could not give him any advice, not even that once his passport book was filled, he could just get a new one.
* In his autobiography, Fogerty states that it was Clifford and Cook's idea to individually contribute to the album, and that they basically forced him to give them greater power in the band's creative process.
* In his "Best and Worst of 2015" video, his explanation for why he named
* In his bio, Jetfire is said to have picked up his accent while stationed on
* In his boss fight in "The Algorithm" mission, the giant robot body of ISIC from
* in his box of Krusty-O's gave him appendicitis. He spends the money to buy an album made by Lisa's jazz mentor "Bleeding Gums" Murphy (who died earlier that episode); she asks why, and he says it's because she was the only person who believed him when he said he was sick.
* In his "Brainwashed by Hydra" arc, Wolverine takes on the like of Namor, the
* in his breast pocket, preventing the round from piercing his lung. He also willed himself to live through a near-fatal case of malaria which ate fifty pounds off his body weight. When he finally did die, peacefully, in his sleep, one contemporary said, "Death had to take Roosevelt sleeping. If he'd been awake there would have been a fight."
* In his capacity as a sportscaster for CBS, Dizzy Dean allegedly described a pair of
* In his case, his exile is self-imposed as he voluntarily depowered and went AWOL from Soul Society in order to save Masaki Kurosaki, another Hollowfication victim of Aizen's experiments.
* In his case, while his correspondence with her never got any further than that due to
* In his comedy monologue "Ten Days in Coronary Care", Wendy Bagwell described his health insurance as covering "Hong Kong flu. Provided you caught it in Hong Kong. From a Siamese cat."
* In his commentary for the TGWTG Brawl, Doug Walker wasn't exactly happy with fan dumb calling him a misogynist for showing a pillow fight between
* In his C-rank support conversation with Nowi, Gaius states that he likes older women because they have a certain degree of maturity.
* In his debut appearance during the Tenshinhan Saga, Chaozu has trouble with basic math and can't tell left from right without pausing to think which hand he holds chopsticks in. Apparently, unlike Muten Roshi, Tsuru-sennin doesn't bother providing his students with basic schooling.
* In his defense, even Arcinas thinks (however mistakenly) that: a) the Director will agree with him that the Bureau can conclude the investigation without the priests' help; and b) the person he framed might actually be the murderer (although the former could just be Arcinas trying to throw the priests off or an attempt to win more glory for himself, and the latter is mostly Jerome's speculation).
* In his defense, he saw her get taken down but was unable to do anything at that point. Realistically, he had no way of knowing that
* In . His desire to see a free Cybertron without a caste system where everyone is free to determine their own path sparks his rise to power as more and more Cybertronians (including the future Optimus Prime) come to his cause, leading eventually to a full-scale revolt.
* In his earlier appearances, Thomas Raith was one, until he sided with Harry more permanently in
* In his earliest cartoons, Porky Pig fluctuated between being a child and being an adult. The latter is easier to relate to, considering his future mild-mannered personality compared to the other

* In his earliest "interview", a journalist turned up at the studio where the then largely unknown Morrison was recording. He had an appointment, which had been timed to a break in the recording work. Having waited around for a time, watching him reading a newspaper, the journalist approached and asked if they could do the interview now. Morrison's reply: "Can't you see I'm busy?!"
* In his essay "A Supposedly Fun Thing I'll Never Do Again" (collected in an anthology of the same name and about a luxury Caribbean cruise he had taken to report on for
* In his expose on warehouses, when talking about XPO Logistics' incident in October of 2017 involving a worker who died due to heat stroke, he brings up that despite coworkers posting about it on Facebook, XPO denied the claim with their own internal investigation, which was delivered verbally, leading John to give us this.
* in his eyes — which looked like a vicious revenge killing. The truth is, he hired his own hitman after being diagnosed with an incurable and fatal illness, whose first symptom manifests in the eyes — and out of spite, he arranged things so that evidence would point to his Teacher's Assistant (and his wife's lover) hiring the hitman.
* In his farewell address to the nation, President Eisenhower warned Americans of the "military-industrial complex" (coining the phrase in the process) and the threat it posed to democracy.
* In his fatal shootout with the FBI, Baby Face Nelson not only withstood 17 close-range bullet wounds (from a Thompson submachine gun
* In His Fathers Shoes features a pair of magical shoes from a gypsy, which allow Clay Crosby to go back in time — and briefly experience life as his father, Frank, when he was Clay's age.
* In his fight with Lucian Bute, he took a shot and put his hands on his hips, mugging for the crowd. Bute was not amused. The next punch Bute landed was a titanic left uppercut that knocked Miranda out. Hilarious.
* In his fight with Sasuke at the Valley of the End, Naruto uses a purple variation of the Rasengan, as a result of the blue sphere of chakra being enveloped and supercharged by his red Tailed Beast aura.
* In his final appearance in the main series, he is face to face with a world destroying demon. This doesn't seem to bother him at all. In the same story, one enemy tells another "Beware this one, he is steeped in blood".
* In his first appearance, convicted murderer Howard Epps convinced the Jeffersonian he was innocent and they tried to find proof of it in time to stop his execution. They found proof he was guilty not only of the murder he was convicted for but also the murder of other people. The execution had to be delayed to investigate the other murders.
* In his first appearance, Crocker makes this offer to Chester and AJ in exchange for bringing him Timmy's dinosaur, which will be proof that he has fairies. It doesn't work.
* In his first appearance, Gangrene Gang memner Lil' Arturo was voiced by Carlos Alazraqui. Tom Kenny voices him in all subsequent episodes.
* In his first appearance, Henry Hawk sneaks out in the night to try and get his first chicken, but runs into trouble with a rooster who is less than impressed with the tiny hawkling. In the end, the rooster runs away, and Henery thinks he finally scared him off. But then he turns around to find his mother, who's come looking for him.
* In his first appearance, he wields a weapon that was once one of Ratchet's medical devices, and Ratchet subjects him to a painful and well-deserved role reversal by reclaiming it.
* In his first appearance, in a flashback, Sakuzaki wiped out an evacuation ship carrying civilians away from a military bombardment operation, just in case one of his targets (in this case, scholars who were researching an
* In his first appearance Madman Murray was the owner of an electronics store, but in his second appearance he's the owner of a used car lot.
* In his first appearance return the car to its rightful owner, but they get the Doctor another one a lot like it.

* In his first appearance, Señor Senior Sr. threatened Kim with ravenous koi because "the piranha have not yet arrived." (this was less than a week after he had started his supervillainous career)
* In his first appearance, the Ratcatcher was keeping the men he blamed for his imprisonment (the judge, the arresting officer, the eyewitness, etc.) as captives in the sewer.
* In his first appearance, there's a snippet with people laughing when he says he walked to that location. He's on a
* In his first appearance, the Spiral King Lordgenome is uniquely drawn in a rough, sketchy style
* In his first appearance, Timmy breaks apart Vicky and Mark by getting Mark's parents to intervene. Notably, they seemed to be fine with it, but they feared Timmy enough to comply.
* In his first battle, the still-civilian Hikaru is on the Valkirye VF-1D trainer variant; when he's finally in the military, he gets the VF-1J ace variant, which itself gets the battroid-only upgrade for a single battle; after Roy's death, he inherits his VF-1S, which is faster and better armed than the standard ace custom, and gets a Super Pack with anti-ship reaction missiles for the final battle against Bodolza's forces.
* In his first encounter with the Shi'ar Imperial Guard, Wolverine's costume is completely destroyed. He mugs Fang, his counterpart on the Guard, for his costume off-panel, mainly for the benefit of his fellow X-Men not having to see him fight in the buff.
* In his first few appearances, Pierce was more of an angry punk, instead of a manic and impulsive
* In his first form, Cell takes the time to tell a wounded Piccolo about his origins and goals after attempting to absorb him. It bites him in the ass when Piccolo reveals he was faking the injury to get him to talk and promptly regenerates his arm. Which Cell should have known Piccolo could do, since
* In his first mission, Trevor Phillips lights the O'Neals's drug house on fire by pouring gasoline throughout it and shooting the trail from outside.
* In his first on-screen appearance in "Homer's Odyssey", Waylon Smithers was dark-skinned with blue hair. The production crew
* In his first playoff appearance in 1985 as head coach of the Browns, Cleveland built up a 21-3 first half lead over the Dolphins in an AFC Divisional playoff game. Miami would come back and win the game 24-21.
* In his first re-appearance, the Cluemaster had hired some goons who, knowing their boss's old M.O., left clues behind anyway. And being stupid goons, the clues were really obvious, too.
* In his first scene, #6 walks into a bank disguised as a mailman, snatches a sack of money, and then races out.
* In his first scene, Willy the Snitch demurs that he's staying away from that whole vampire scene and "living right." ("What's My Line, Pt.1")
* In his first solo series Morbius is able to turn back into a human for short amounts of time thanks to a serum derived from
* In his first three cartoons, Tweety was chased by other random cats, before being paired with his iconic rival Sylvester.
* In his footsteps follows Archimedes, a Greek inventor from the Greek colony Syracuse in southern Italy. He is best known for his work on lever action and buoyancy. While it's not entirely clear what kind of devices he actually invented and how well they worked, he had a massive reputation as an inventor even during his lifetime.
* In his hallucination, Stiles reveals that he feels guilty for his mother's death and believes that his father blames him.
* In his humanoid form of The Clown, the demonic Violator is often drawn with these as an indicator that he's a) not human, and b) evil — whenever he's not just drawn with straight-up fangs.
* in his incarnation as Gold Drive that veers sharply into this territory on a regular basis, as he chuckles in a somewhat subdued yet decidedly eerie manner, his head lolling at odd angles.

* In his introduction, Nick shows his commerce skills in buying one jumbo pop ice cream, which is larger than as his whole body, melting it, using his-size Popsicle sticks to create dozens of tiny Popsicles, selling them to some lemmings, reselling the now discarded red wood to a mouse construction unit. With the costs of $20-$30 from the popsicle, smaller sticks, and gas, he nets over $300 on a single day. And he does it
* In his introduction to a later edition of the trilogy he also describes being a spectator to Graham's first meeting with Lecter, and being surprised when Lecter identifies Graham by smell, suggesting that the character had taken on a life of his own before the author even "met" him.
* In his, it's more justified, ESPECIALLY in the Robert Downey Jr. movie. Instead of using latex perfection, he just disguises his features.
* In his job as a late-night watchman, Martin gets put on the graveyard shift by his boss for not dating the guy's sister. Martin's in his 60s, and it gets so bad he starts suffering mild
* In his last day in office, former Kentucky Governor Matt Bevin pardoned numerous hardened criminals, including one who filmed his gang rape of a teenage boy to share with the Internet, a murderer whose family donated $25000 to Bevin's campaign, and a mom who left her newborn to die. Outrage promptly ensued across Kentucky and the nation as a whole.
* In "His Last Vow", a computer text version of all Charles Augustus Magnussen's blackmail material appears onscreen whenever the audience is seeing his point of view. Sherlock and the audience are led to believe the info is being displayed on the inside of Magnussen's glasses, but in reality,
* In his later years, former Minnesota Governor Harold Stassen, later known as a perennial candidate for the Republican presidential nomination, took to wearing one as seen in a
* In his later years, Wyatt Earp developed friendships with actors, William S. Hart and Tom Mix, who both frequently appeared in cowboy movies around that time. When Earp died, they served as pallbearers at his funeral. Tom Mix reportedly wept.
* In his match with Chael, Jon Jones nastily broke his toe to the point where it was nearly hanging off his foot; he completely ignored it and finished Chael in the first round (acknowledging it would have cost him the match and his title; had the fight made it to the second round, the doctor would have most likely seen it and called the match as well).
* In his memoir he admitted that when he first changed his name to Bob Dylan it took a while to get used to being called Bob. He'd spent his whole youth answering to "Bobby".
* In his memoirs, Colin Powell recalls being incredulous at seeing a departing Lt. Colonel at a change-of-command ceremony in Vietnam being given the Silver Star, Bronze Star, Legion of Merit, and other awards for a fairly straightforward tour of duty. Powell identified this as an example of what was wrong with the Army of that era.
* In his memoirs, DCI Clive Driscoll, a detective with the London Metropolitan Police, recounted a time he went to Sri Lanka to foster relations with the local police. Miffed that he wouldn't offer them cash bribes, police officials decided to take advantage of his offer of a nice meal and ordered multiple servings of expensive items and many rounds of drinks. Driscoll was nervous about what the total would be and wondering how he'd justify it to his bosses in London, but found, to his relief and surprise, that the final total was only £83.50.
* In his memorable return as Chainsaw Charlie, the chainsaw using serial killer,
* In "His Mouse Friday", Jerry dresses in blackface and forces Tom into a pot as he cuts up the vegetables. This cartoon is rarely shown anymore due to
* In "His Musical Moment", he chides Jamal for shirking piano practice to play video games, telling him that playing his video game too much will rot his brain. After Jamal learns that piano practice can be fun, he finds his dad playing the same video game he confiscated from him.
* In his native UK, Ozzy got a #1... by doing a version of Black Sabbath's "Changes" with daughter Kelly. "Bark at the Moon" managed a fairly high #21, but is only his fifth highest-charter.

* In his novel "Planet of No Return", the protagonist is sent to investigate a
* In his One-Hit Wonderland episode on "The Rhythm of the Night", he says that Lee Marrow knew so little about Shanghai that he tried to portray them as reductive stereotypes in his early songs and failed even at that.
* In his "opus", series' recurring character St. Jiub the Eradicator recounts his
* In his original 1980s incarnation, he had a sentient ship with a female persona named Rora, who was previously a living star. Yep, the ship was in love with him. (She once generated a humanoid form to assist him when he was seriously injured.)
* In his original act, Jerry Seinfeld had a bit where he says that women can never find anything in their purses except for their checkbooks. "That thing comes out of a holster."
* In his original timeline, back when True Archer was Shirou Emiya, he foolishly risked his life to try to save Saber from Berserker. In the final battle, he ends up doing it again, sacrificing himself to save her and help her defeat Berserker. He comments on it, but dies without regrets, admitting he would choose to save her every time.
* In his origin story Spider-Man allows a burglar to escape from a pursuing policeman.
* in his own blood he starts writing a letter to "Life in these United States" before passing out.
* in his panda form he ever displayed during the course of the television series, which he had apparently been carrying on his person all that time.
* In his Pistachios commercials, not only is Colbert himself dressed sharply but his eagle as well.
* In his posthumous autobiography, Jack Benny discussed the use of one recycled script (first aired in 1941 and re-aired in 1948 to show how the character of Rochester Van Jones (Eddie Anderson, the first African American to be a regular member of nationally broadcasted radio show) had become wildly popular and beloved by the American public. The script in question was from when Rochester was still a new character and included a scene where he carried a razor blade (a very stereotypical characterization of African Americans at the time). In 1941, the scene went unremarked on by the audience. In 1948, Jack Benny was on the receiving end of numerous angry letters that felt that it was out of character for Rochester to ever be associated with such an ugly stereotype, and especially for Benny, who at this point, had defended Anderson in numerous racist incidents. Other stereotypes (Rochester's drinking, laziness, and gambling) were by this point associated with Rochester because he was Rochester, not because he was a black man.
* . In his quest for retaliation against Osborn he would end up becoming an alternate version of the Green Goblin. After this dream, Peter resumed his life as Spider-Man, his sense of purpose restored.
* In his Reddit AMA, Stefán Karl Stefánsson (who played Robbie Rotten in
* in his regular meetings with Harry. He's unfortunately right, with the first thing Hermione say when she learns of his existence is accusing him of grooming Harry. The aforementioned teenage boy is NOT okay with the slander.
* In his Resurrección form, Privaron Espada 103, Dordonii Alessandro Del Socacchio, can release tornadoes/cyclones from his legs.
* In his review of "Marville #5", he takes one look at the cover and sees that Jemas tried to trick the readers into thinking it was a parody comic by including the subtitle "Originville" to justify its made-up backstory for
* In his review of "The Culling" arc, he notes that Rose Wilson and Caitlin Fairchild pass the
* In his review (or vice-versa) when he noted that Stewart has a talent for making completely ridiculous dialogue riveting.
* In his "Road Rage" TV Special, Ben Bailey relates an incident that took place during
* In his robot novels, Earth has become a planet of underground or domed "

* In his second battle with Zarbon he found out that, even with the recent Zenkai boost, he was still weaker than his opponent. However he was a battle hardened fighter and Zarbon had grown rusty due being around Frieza for years, so Vegeta managed to get around his defenses and land
* in his second form can't be hidden from under normal circumstances. If you possess a special item that makes you invisible, however, and manage to tuck yourself away in the one corner out of his line of sight long enough to give yourself time for that invisibility to activate, he will still have unique lines recorded suggesting you're hiding from him.
* In his segment on the Iran Deal, he responds to a clip of an Iranian leader threatening to topple "The Zionist regime"
* In his self-titled video game, Deadpool dual-wields katanas, sai, and even
* In his sequel appearances he tends to give more people nicknames too, such as calling Fievel's parents "Mr. and Mrs. M".
* In his short story "Breakfast at Twilight", an American family accidentally time-travel to
* In his sketch "The Mailman", another Dutch comedian, Andre Van Duin, had several problems with a prop doorbell. At first the bell doesn't work, so he decides to
* In his spare time, he also acts as a military advisor for first-person shooters.
* In his stupidity, Cosmo sunk Atlantis nine times. He's also apparently responsible for burning down Pompeii and turning Xanadu into Pittsburgh.
* . In his subsequent appearances, Thymon had become a good guy, so this was his one and only outing as an antagonist. Despite being a relatively low-risk mission within the story, it also had profound unforeseen consequences in future stories.
* In his supports with Oboro, Niles at first antagonizes her but as the talk chain progresses, he gets more or less genuinely interested in befriending her. Since the serious and kinda straightlated Oboro
* In "Hissy's Big Day" when a mob of dogs (led by Cupcake and Rufus) were chasing Hissy all over the Dog Park.
* In his third solo series an attempt to cure himself of his vampirism goes wrong and he starts turning into a
* in his time, as used to be held, especially regarding animals like fish (who were once commonly thought of as simply regenerating in the water before their reproduction was discovered).
* In "History 101", Abed has trouble facing the last year of classes, so he retreats to his
* In history, there are both final battles and pivotal battles, but it's rather rare to see a pivotal final battle. Most final battles are lopsided affairs, and tend to be short, vicious, and winner-kills-all affairs with little hope of even survival for the defender, while the fights that actually matter rarely end up actually ending the conflict on the spot. There are some good examples of some wars that end only on the last note, such as the Battle of Alesia, which very well could have ended with Julius Caesar dead and his conquests rendered nil, but instead ended with the Gallic rebellion crushed.
* in his underpants at Agent Scully's, he doesn't quite recollect where he is.
* In his very earliest appearances, Optimus Prime has just a hint of drawl in his accent.
* In his very first appearance, Bertie is forced to face a judge who treats his having pinched a policeman's helmet while drunk the night before as an unforgivable sin and acts as if he's going to pass down a death sentence... before fining Bertie five pounds.
* In his very first encounter with Team Possible, Drakken is shocked and incredulous to see
* In his very first scene, Itona enters the classroom by casually walking
* In his video about the Washington Capitals that the Caps of late have gotten one with
* In his videos on debunking cryptids, he discusses near the end what he believes they hypothetically would realistically be. For example,
* In his wedding photos, where Scully Boxes couldn't be used, he had

* In his younger days Obi-Wan was a master of Soresu, the most defensive form of lightsaber combat focusing heavily on circular motions of the lightsaber to create a nearly impenetrable defense.
* In his youth, astronomer Patrick Moore and his friends delighted in winding-up the editors of crackpot magazines by submitting spoof articles under pseudonyms such as "N. Ormuss" and "Professor Meisenratz".
* In his youth he was a South African shoe-shine boy named Duke Baloney, and Scrooge offered to give him his own #1 Dime
* In his youth, Kappa encountered a kingdom of porpoise merfolk who needed his scales in order to stop a curse that's wiping them out.
* In his youth, Scrooge McDuck was constantly underestimated because he's just a short guy. Poor Argus Whiskerville found out the hard way why Sitting Bull couldn't walk for a week after their knife fight at the Wild West Show, and over a dozen's baker of assorted thugs (and at least one baker) were beaten up as Scrooge trashed the riverboat they were on.
* In his youth, Shawn was still planning on becoming a cop despite his dad's pushiness because he genuinely saw it as a good thing. But complications led to Henry and Madeline Spencer splitting (namely an educational opportunity for Maddie) and Henry took the fall so Shawn would not resent his mother. This led to quite the
* In his youth, the only expression of strength and personal vengeance the mouse-like narrator of Dostoevsky's * in his youth. This, in turn, creeps Harry out, as he looks a bit like him. Rowling loves this trope.
* In his youth, Worf was unskilled when visiting his family in the Klingon Empire, after being raised by humans. He's apparently gotten better as an adult, but is still considered rather uptight and overly serious. When he acts according to Federation values (like mercy, democracy, humility, etc) he tends to get odd looks and confused reactions though. He also learns about Klingon culture largely by reading about it, which shocks him when he starts to interact more with actual Klingons, who are far less noble, honorable, and stoic than he expects. During the Klingon civil war, he has trouble grasping the idea of sharing a drink with the other side's soldiers in the lull between the fighting.
* In his zeal to create a truly free market, Rumsfeld removes almost every environmental regulation, and actively encourages.
* In "Hitchcock & Scully", Charles is being scammed. He was contacted by someone who is supposedly a brother of his adopted son Nikolaj. Jake is like a broken record during one conversation:
* In "Hitman", Jake admits to getting filling for the sandwiches he made from the body of an off-screen character named Meatman. Later in the episode, Jake is seen having a nightmare about Meatman, muttering "No Rainicorn, don't eat him..." Once Jake wakes up from his dream, he can be seen staring deeply into the sun, promising to never eat from Meatman again.
* In "Hitobashira Alice (Alice Human Sacrifice)", the Third Alice is condemned to live forever seeing herself as a decaying body, as a punishment for fooling and using people to become a queen. Whether it was an illusion or if she was constantly decaying until she rotted completely is debatable; either way, both punishments are valid for this trope.
* In "Hits And Missiles," Popeye laughs at his own joke of people living on the moon being "lunar-tics." Olive is not so easily amused.
* In "Hocus Pocus," after SpongeBob mails in an order for a magic kit, a time card reads "4 TO 6 WEEKS LATER" and cuts to him receiving his package.
* In Hoffmann's story, the Mouse Queen is killed when Drosselmeyer's nephew accidentally steps on her and impales her with his shoe's pointy heel. This same mishap transforms him into the Nutcracker. In
* In "Hogatha's Hearth Throb", Gargamel tries to trap the Smurfs in a sticky glue trap, only to end up trapping Hogatha. She demands to be freed from the trap, but Gargamel tells her to get herself out. Hogatha does, but she uses her magic to put Gargamel into his own sticky trap.
* In "Hog Heaven", an undercover cop is killed by a bomb planted in her car. Nick and Greg are standing in the car park when it happens.

* In "Hold the Door", Otto is quick to laugh off Oscar's intentionally quiet remark about the Princess Room being the most dangerous room in Odd Squad. He's quick to change his tune when four robot princesses come marching towards an unsuspecting Ori, who is admiring a birdbath.
* In "Hole in the Wall Gang", Michelle tries to stall Danny by reciting her home phone number. She says 555-2424, but depending on what channel is airing said episode, the first two may be muted out.
* In "Holidays of Future Past", a flight attendant is casually offering suicide pills for customers.
* In Hollywood, Russian characters have been played by Swedish actors on a number of occasions. This has apparently led some to perceive Swedish accents as Russian ones even when they are not intended as such. Examples include:
* In "Hollywood Steps Out," director Tex Avery and financial officer Henry Binder appear briefly. Avery's voice also turns up in many of his cartoons such as "The Sneezin' Weasel," "Hamateur Night" and "The Bear's Tale."
* In "Holy Shit, Jeff's Back!", when Hayley goes through the Blorpher and it shreds her like a woodchipper on one end to rebuild her on the other, she pulls Roger through it along with her. Roger flatly states that it's a very, very deep pain.
* In "Holy Terror," it turns out that Ezikiel, the angel that Dean thought was possessing Sam, is dead. Instead, the far less honorable Gadreel is possessing Sam.
* In "Holy Terror", Sam is possessed by an angel, and Dean needs a way to get it out. Kevin comes up with a ritual that will temporarily give Sam control, allowing him to expel the angel. This doesn't work, but not due to any problem with the spell -The angel merely found out about it beforehand and sabotaged the ritual. One episode later, in "Road Trip", Dean and Castiel capture the angel, still in Sam's body, and need a way to expel him. The only idea they can come up with is a
* In homage to the above, in the second part of the pilot to Generation 4, the Mane Six must cross a rope bridge to reach the castle where the Elements of Harmony lay. Twilight Sparkle goes first but the ropes are severed as she starts to cross. The others pull her up and Rainbow Dash retrieves the bridge, allowing them to retie the ropes and continue on their way.
* In "Home", a teenager meets Chalky White and offers him a business deal. Chalky thinks that this is Nucky's way of testing his loyalty and sends the kid away after taunting him for his young age. The kid reunites then with Lucky Luciano and his business partners, revealing then that he is
* In "Homecoming", Vincent surprises Boone, who is waiting for Ethan to attack. While Vincent is licking Boone's face, Ethan comes up
* In "Home-Cooked Eds", Eddy tries to push the Kankers' trailer off his lawn:
* In "Home Insecurity", Ami gets blasted by Yumi's security system and leaves her charred. After Yumi chases her out of her room, she enters back in only to have the security system backfire and blast her as well.
* In "Home is Where the Heart Attack Is", Uncle Phil has to go on a diet and does not particularly like the idea of giving up his favorite foods cold turkey. He even uses that exact phrasing... only to start thinking about actual turkey ("with pillowy mounds of mashed potatoes... Butter-drenched dressing... Tiny onions swimming in a sea of cream sauce...") He eventually can't stay away from unhealthy foods and has a heart attack.
* In "Home, Like Plank Did", Eddy's obviously uncomfortable working in his rabbit costume.
* In "Homer Alone", Homer attempts to dial a missing child hotline after Maggie disappears. He's put on hold and the music playing is "Baby Come Back" by Player. More weeping ensues.
* In "Homer & Ned's Hail Mary Pass", after Homer does a victory dance which Ned catches on video, it becomes a viral sensation, leading to Tom Brady, LeBron James, Michelle Kwan, Yao Ming, and Warren Sapp asking Homer to show them his victory dance. Later on, when Homer is asked to choreograph the Super Bowl halftime show, he can't think of anything, so he asks Ned Flanders for help, and Ned decides the Super Bowl would be the perfect venue for his halftime show about Noah's Ark. After the halftime show concludes, the Super Bowl audience hates it, accusing Homer & Ned of using the Super Bowl halftime show as a platform for promoting and imposing Christianity on the country with their "blatant display of decency".

* In "Homer and Apu" Lisa has a similar quote on eating a spice-heavy Indian meal: "I can see through time!"
* In "Homer and Apu", when Apu was fired from the Kwik-E-Mart, his various advertising badges were taken and he was ordered to turn in his pricing gun and his back-up pricing gun (which he kept in a holster on his ankle).
* In "Homer Badman", after being publicly accused of molesting a college-aged baby sitter, Homer watches TV in the
* In "Homer Badman", Homer is accused of groping a woman's butt, and the resultant feminist rally on his lawn contains a cheer-like chant.
* In "Homer Badman", when a salesman at a candy convention realizes he can't actually think of a thousand uses for wax lips, he excuses himself with "I'm needed in the basement."
* In "Homer Defined", Mr. Burns calls up the news station to dissuade "rumors" of an impending meltdown. A
* In "Homer Goes to College", Homer gets accepted to a college and celebrates by burning his high school diploma. While it's still hanging on the wall. Homer dances and sings about how smart he is,
* In "Homer Goes to College", Homer has the idea to "prank" the Dean by rolling him up in a carpet and throwing him off a bridge. Bart then comes up with a better idea, kidnapping their pig mascot "Sir-Oinks-A-Lot". Homer excitedly adds "roll it up in a carpet and throw it off a bridge!"
* In "Homer Goes to College", Homer is put in a truck containing a simulator of his work station and somehow causes the truck to suffer a meltdown.
* In "Homer Goes to Prep School" a solar flare knocks out all the power in Springfield. When it cuts off the power to the disco rink, Disco Stu puts a revolver to his temple.
* In "Homer Loves Flanders", Homer fails to win tickets to a football game and angrily hits his radio, which starts playing
* In "Homer Loves Flanders", Homer fantasizes about looking at himself in a mirror wearing a wig shaped like Marge's hair.
* In "Homer of Seville", Homer meets one of the three tenors and says he's his second favorite among them. Homer then remembers about the other guy and changes the position from second to third.
* In "Homerpalooza", Homer has to drive a carpool for Bart & Lisa to get to school, along with Milhouse & Nelson, and tries to "party" with the kids by playing
* In Homer's account, Hephaestus divorces Aphrodite and marries another beauty: Aglaea, one of the Graces.
* In "Homer's Barbershop Quartet", a chicken replaced Homer at the power plant.
* In "Homer's Barbershop Quartet" after Chief Wiggum is kicked out of the titular group, he tries to forget about it by watching TV but all the shows he was watching showed comedians mocking him.
* In "Homer's Barbershop Quartet", after Homer tells Bart and Lisa about
* In "Homer's Barbershop Quartet", Homer gets an idea for a song called "Baby on Board". Pretty much all the lyrics he comes up with are "something something", but he still says "This thing writes itself!" afterwards.
* In "Homer's Barbershop Quartet", Homer rummages through a box at a yard sale and finds an original copy of the Declaration of Independence, the first issue of the
* In "Homer's Barbershop Quartet" Marge explains to the kids that she used to cover for his absence with a dummy of Homer consisting of a coffee can, some balloons, and dish gloves, while playing a tape of Homer's voice.
* In "Homer's Barbershop Quartet", Ned was offering trading cards similar to baseball cards but based on religious figures. Bart, Milhouse, and Nelson were actually a little intrigued and almost fell for it until Ned told them that "learning about religion can be fun", the boys run away.

* In "Homer Scissorhands", after Homer grows tired of being a hairdresser and
* In "Homer Scissorhands", Homer becomes a successful hairdresser, but soon tires of having to hear his female clients going on and on about their lives while he cuts their hair. In an effort to drive away business, he deliberately attempts to cut a client's hair badly...and ends up giving her a spectacular haircut that wows everyone.
* In "Homer's Enemy", Frank Grimes slaps a beaker of corrosive liquid out of Homer's hand to prevent him from drinking it, dissolving a large hole in the wall in the process. When Grimes is called into Mr. Burns's office to be rebuked for this damage, Burns refuses to listen to his attempts to explain the situation.
* In "Homer's Enemy", Frank Grimes tries to humiliate Homer Simpson and show the world how much of a buffoon Homer is by tricking him into entering a power plant model-designing contest for kids. Except Homer wins the top prize. This
* In "Homer's Enemy", Homer gave Frank Grimes the nickname "Grimey", which he hated. Eventually, he was buried under that name.
* In "Homer's Enemy", Mr. Burns hires a dog to fill the job he originally planned to give Frank Grimes.
* In "Homer Simpson, This Is Your Wife", they'll never let Homer near
* In "Homer's Odyssey", Homer loses his job at the power plant, starting a chain of events that results in him leading a protest against the danger to the community posed by the plant. In order to silence the protest, Mr. Burns hires Homer as the safety inspector.
* In "Homer's Phobia", Homer ended up overreacting to many small silly things Bart was doing (such as wearing a Hawaiian shirt, or putting on a ladies' wig and singing the
* In "Homer's Triple Bypass", an impatient Homer rams a truck hauling
* In "Homer's Triple Bypass", Dr. Nick is horrified to learn that an instructional video on how to perform a triple bypass he found at the library has been recorded over by a tabloid talk show about people who resemble ordinary items.
* In "Homer's Triple Bypass", Homer couldn't use the company's health insurance because the employees traded it for a pinball machine.
* In "Homer the Great", Moe says the following about Homer: "He's gone mad with power. Like that Albert Schweitzer guy." (Moe probably meant the German philosopher
* In "Homer the Great", the Stonecutters start the No Homers Society after they get disgruntled by Homer's attempts to do good in his position of power.
* In "Homer the Great", when Homer was kicked out of the Stonecutters for violating their sacred parchment, he had to turn in his robes and Stonecutter underwear, then he was ordered to walk home naked, chained to the "Stone of Shame".
* In "Homer the Heretic", while on the way to church during a winter storm, Maggie gets her tongue stuck to the side of her car seat.
* In "Homer the Moe", Bart inexplicably begins digging a hole in the backyard. When Lisa asks him why, he claims he's
* In "Homer the Moe", Homer tricks the group REM into playing in his garage-turned-bar, and one of its members asks the others to stand around him so that he can pee without Lenny looking at him.
* In "Homer the Moe", when Moe's Tavern gets a hip makeover and the old customers are no longer welcome, Homer starts a "hunting lodge" in his garage (
* In "Homer the Smithers," Mr. Burns pushes Smithers into taking a vacation. Worried that someone might overshadow him, Smithers decides to find someone so incompetent that he'll have to return early (and after 714 matches, decides just to have Homer take over). Unfortunately, Homer is so terrible that Mr. Burns quickly learns how to do everything himself, allowing him to fire Smithers once he returns.
* In "Homer the Vigilante", after the Springfield cat burglar reveals where his loot's hidden:
* In "Homer the Vigilante", Herman shows Homer a "miniature version of the A-bomb" which "the government built in the fifties to drop on beatniks". Homer then goes into a day dream sequence where he
* In "Homer the Vigilante", Kent Brockman's initial report on the string of cat burglaries ends with him asking a professor if the town should panic. He nonchalantly agrees that they should. Later, Kent brings in the same professor after a large number of townspeople start searching for the cat burglar's loot.

* In "Homer the Vigilante" the mystery thief leaves a card behind at each crime scene: "You have just been robbed by the Springfield Cat Burglar."
* In "Homer the Whopper", where Homer plays Everyman, he has to lose a lot of weight for the role, which he does easily, and ends up gaining all the weight back in what's probably just a few weeks.
* In "Homer to the Max", a new police drama airs, starring a maverick cop named Homer Simpson.
* In "Homer vs. Dignity", Mr. Burns wants Homer to throw some pudding at Lenny to humiliate him. Homer protests, "Lenny? But he's a war hero!" Exactly what war Lenny fought in remains unknown.
* In "Homer vs. Dignity", needing money, Homer is hired as Burn's "prank monkey," a position in which Homer does something for Burn's amusement, and Mr. Burns would give him a few bucks. First, he throws puding at Lenny, then he eats a rare first edition
* In "Homer vs. Patty and Selma", Homer has to act as a lackey for Marge's sisters to keep them from telling her that he lost their money on a bad investment. When she finds out anyway, Homer decides he's no longer obligated to be nice to them. Cut to the front door; he throws out Patty, throws out Marge (then realizes what he did, runs out and brings her back in while apologizing profusely), and finally throws out Selma.
* In "Homer vs. the 18th Amendment", Homer dismisses prohibition as something that happened in the movies.
* In "Homeschooling", Victor tries to arrange a slow dance with Nico during the fake prom that she set up in hopes of cheering up Karolina. It fails because the music he chose turns out to not actually be music, and Nico ends up having to pull Karolina off of Chase.
* In "Homestar Presents: Presents", Homestar accidentally forgets to do his
* In "Homestar Presents: Presents", when Marzipan seems disappointed in Homestar's
* In "Homestar Ruiner", Strong Bad accidentally makes it look like Homestar burned down Marzipan's decorations for her victory party. Also, the only way for Strong Bad to beat Pom Pom in the Race to the End of the Race is to
* In "Home Sweet Homediddly-Dum-Doodily" From a parenting seminar Homer and Marge are forced to attend:
* In "Home Sweet Home-Diddly-Dum-Doodley", Bart, Lisa, and Maggie are taken away from Marge and Homer to live in a foster home. We see them driven away from the Simpson residence and taken... next door to live with the Flanders family.
* In "Home Sweet Motel", P.T. and Gloria read Stanley's and Sidney's postcards from Gloria to search for clues. Part of Stanley's reads "Stanley-you think you're such a big, big man. Always smiling! Ha! If you ask me, you're all empty inside." Sidney has a part that says "if you're not afraid of hurting the big, empty-headed man.". They deduce from those lines that Sheila hid the diamonds in the Smilin' Sam statue. So, one night, they go over to it and drill some holes in one of its feet in hopes of finding the diamonds. They don't find any, and get caught by P.T.'s mom.
* In "Home Sweet Pineapple", it takes Patrick 16 seconds after seeing that SpongeBob's house is missing and the latter explaining what happened to it for him to exclaim "Hey, SpongeBob, your house is gone!" Later SpongeBob stays the night in Squidward's house, and it takes a half-asleep Squidward 48 seconds to realize this just happened.
* In "Home Sweet Pineapple", where Spongebob loses his house from a nematode infestation, one of the two houses that he goes is Squidward's. Squidward was asleep by then, and Spongebob just creeps in to his bed and asks for water from him, which he does so. Just as Squidward returns to bed, he wakes up and realizes everything. Cue Spongebob booted out from the house.
* In "Home Sweet Rubble", when SpongeBob's pineapple house begins to rot, Patrick uses Squidward's elastic limbs to hold it together. When the house is remodeled,
* In "Homo Homini Lupis", a criminal is hired to kidnap the family of corporate executive who's been embezzling money.

* in. Honestly, what can be said that the image does not already convey?
* In honeybees, sex is usually determined by males being haploid (one set of chromosomes) and females being diploid (two sets of chromosomes, like humans). Female larvae fed royal jelly become the reproductive "queen" caste, otherwise they become workers.
* In "Honeymoon's Overboard", the night after Fran and Maxwell's wedding, Niles comes downstairs hungover, saying to
* In Hong Kong, it was widely believed that a woman who committed suicide in a red dress could return as a ghost to haunt her tormentors.
* In Hong Kong, the entire section where JC goes to confront Maggie Chow can be skipped if the player sneaks into Chow's apartment via grenade-jumping and steals the Dragon's Tooth Sword early on. Also, the sidequest about Max Chen needing proof of Maggie's guilt can be skipped if the player already knows the code to the police station vault.
* In Hong Kong, there is an assessment called Territory-wide System Assessment, or TSA (no,
* In honor of Earth Day, Stephen participates in a little interplanetary trash talk.
* In honor of the centennial of Naval Aviation, the United States Navy has adorned various jets with
* In "Honor Thy Ed", right as the Eds are about to leave a supposedly haunted house that they were dared to enter, Eddy flicks a spider off the doorknob, causing it to come loose and roll into a hole in the floor. Edd says to tell him that didn't happen, so Ed leans in from offscreen and says "It didn't happen."
* In "Honor Thy Father", Oliver Queen is not happy to find his seventeen year-old sister Thea drunk in a nightclub. Her comment about seeing two big brothers becomes
* In "Hookie 101", when Socks panics and explains to Robot what will happen if they, Cubey and Mitch get caught skipping school, Robot imagines getting spanked by Dad Unit.
* In "Hook Man", loud scraping sounds and deep gouges herald the arrival of a murderous ghost.
* In "Hooky", Squidward lets out an outburst after the customers complain to him:
* In "Hope and Fear", Neelix's universal translator suddenly fails while he is on a trading away mission, rendering him unable to communicate with his trading partners. An alien named Arturis,
* in hopes to prevent the void from corrupting one of the world souls.
* In "Horrificator", Marinette says one line and leans in to kiss Adrien, but gets interrupted at the last minute by a pissed off Chloé.
* In "Horrificator", the class is making a monster movie for a contest, only to be interrupted by one of them turning into an actual monster (
* In "Horror Fiction in Seven Spooky Steps", an example of why getting rid of Genre Blindness isn't always a good thing is provided. After listening to Britta's cliched horror story, Abed objects to the fact that her characters make the classic 'mistakes' of horror movie protagonists and revises the story so that they act more
* In "Horror in the Heights", a police officer fires six shots into the rakshasa but it's completely unhurt. It takes being hit by a crossbow bolt blessed by Brahma to kill it.
* In "Horse Play", Twilight Sparkle is assuring everyone that the play will go well since they'll be helping Celestia.
* In Hosea 13:8, God plans to meet the proudhearted with the fury of a bear robbed of her cubs, tearing their rib cages open and devouring them like a lion.
* In "Houdini Whodunnit", a bank guard is found dead inside a vault secured by a time lock. Oh, and the vault has been robbed of a large amount of money too.
* In "House of 1000 Bounces", Bob has a fear of pigeons stemming from him being attacked by a flock of them in the attic of an old house.
* In "House of Hoarders", a woman whose house is otherwise crammed to the ceilings with junk keeps her daughter chained up in a concealed room, because
* In "House Sittin' for Sandy", SpongeBob spends a good part of the episode in Sandy's treedome without his helmet. It's only when Patrick shows up wearing his and SpongeBob inquires about it does Patrick remind him they can't breathe air and he starts choking.

* In "House Sittin' For Sandy", SpongeBob watches over Sandy's treedome, and spends a considerable amount of time in it without a helmet. When Patrick shows up, SpongeBob inquires about the helmet he's wearing, and Patrick
* In "Houses of the Holy", a fundamentalist Bible show appears on a character's TV, and will not leave how often they change the channel.
* In Houston Texas, there is a Restaurant called Kenny and Ziggy's, on their menu in the à la carte side order section is the item Duckway and for its price it says Ask Your Server! Here is a PDF Copy of the Menu, see Page 4
* In Howard Pyle's late-19th/early-20th Century versions of the Arthurian mythos, this is the default appearance of numerous opponents of the Knights of the Round Table during their adventures.
* In Howard's case, he allows his mother to do this (despite how much it aggravates him sometimes) because his father walked out on him and his mom when Howard was just a kid. Howard decided to always be "her little boy" so she wouldn't feel worthless.
* In "How Hermes Requisitioned His Groove Back", Bender catches Morgan Proctor making out with Fry and threatens to tell her bosses at the Central Bureaucracy, leading her to remove Bender's personality chip and ship it to the Bureaucracy.
* In "How Hermes Requisitioned His Groove Back", Hermes' song ends up having a tongue-in-cheek take on
* In "How Hermes Requisitioned His Groove Back", Morgan asks Fry why he has a cap full of yogurt in his locker. He replies that it used to be milk, but it expired because, as he puts it, "time makes fools of us all". This of course raises the question of why he had a cap full of milk.
* In "How I Spent My Strummer Vacation", after a night drinking, Homer takes a taxi home,
* In "How I Wet Your Mother", Homer finds himself wetting his bed and thinks it's guilt-induced, so he throws a barbecue with a piñata of himself that was complete with a papier-mache heart. Carl removes it and then beats it with the bat that he hit the piñata with.
* In "How I Wet Your Mother", Homer finds the office supply depot door open, and everyone in the plant proceeds to loot it empty. By the time Burns notices, everyone's trying to make off with everything they could grab, from a photocopier to the
* In "How The Test Was Won", during Marge's book club meeting Helen Lovejoy's hair catches on fire for getting too close to some candles, which causes her to panic and run, slipping on Bart's skateboard in the process and causing her high heels to fly across the room and
* In How To Beat Your Friends at Poker, the narrator is a card mechanic skilled at nearly undetectable card marking and sleight of hand. He's a real scumbag, so he spends his career getting invited to home games of wealthy individuals and taking them for what he can before skipping town. He eventually decided to publish his memoir, and called in a favor to
* In "How To Control Freaks", Discord claims that he's having a a baby. He's a
* In "How to Drive Humans Crazy", Garfield and all other cats conspire to annoy humans as much as possible and that humans are too stupid to realize this.
* In "How To Evoke Audience Reaction & Keep Things Interesting Without Being Cheap Or Manipulative", Syera derides this as manipulative as well as depressing, particularly if a marginalized character is on the receiving end of it and finally dies, as it can imply that marginalized people don't deserve happy endings.
* In "How to Interrogate a Unicorn", when Olive, Oscar and Otto are in the Mathroom gathering their interrogation answers into one chart, they ask what kind of food each book character likes. Oscar and Olive both say "carrots", and Otto appears to say "carrots" as well, but it turns out to be "caramel corn".
* In "How to Succeed in Business?" after Mike and Carol find out that Peter had lost his job as a mechanic at a bike shop, Mike assures his middle son that failure and getting fired are a part of life. He states explicitly, "I've lost jobs" — although he was likely referring more to his company losing contracts for jobs they had bid and clients firing his firm. When it came to clients firing Mike:

* In "How to Win Friends and Influence Monsters", a camper wakes up to find himself hanging upside down from a tree while still in his sleeping bag. After he gets eaten, tabloid headlines refer to him as the "human burrito".
* In "How To Write Dark Stories, Settings And Characters", Syera advises not to abuse this trope by repeatedly establishing a lighthearted moment in the story, only to crush it 5 minutes later, as the audience will get bored of it.
* In "How Trina Got In", Sikowitz drinks some bad coconut milk. From the looks of it, bad coconut milk is a hallucinogen...
* In "hremail3184", it's implied that Homestar Runner has been doing his parallel email show to Strong Bad's since 2001, as he's completely drained of hosting vigor. Strong Bad is so frustrated that he yells for several gardening tools
* In "hremail3184", Strong Bad gets an email asking about the coolest explosion he's ever seen. Apparently Strong Bad has seen (and caused) enough cool explosions that he asks Kelly to be more specific, like "the coolest-looking explosion I ever rigged up in Strong Sad's org-ethnic breakfast pouch on a Tuesday".
* In Hueco Mundo, Ishida and Chad fight a strong, slow and defensively powerful Hollow, and a Hollow whose ability is to rapid-fire hundreds of tiny projectiles, respectively. Ishida had
* Inhumanable Alien Rights — should it ever become possible. It highly unlikely, then, that in practice intelligent aliens similar to us would be barred legal rights if the issue ever actually arose.
* Inhumanable Alien Rights, where the civil rights of nonhuman characters, as opposed to humans, are in question.
* Inhuman almost has more scars than regular skin on his body. The main reason it's just ALMOST is because his face is almost unscarred... aside from a huge scar over the bridge of his nose, which admittedly does make for the "cute but deadly" look.
* inhuman appearance, and their own broadcasts become utterly bizarre.
* Inhuman are humanoid - it has been mistaken for a Furry comic, to the artist's great annoyance.
* Inhuman, but so much more efficient (also, they can double as special forces).
* Inhuman eXperience To paraphrase the smoldering pile of ash that used to be federal agent, they were playing with fire in a paper house.
* Inhuman Eye Concealers: A character with recognizably inhuman eyes tries to pass as ordinary by wearing glasses or something similar.
* Inhuman Eye Concealers: A character with recognizably unusual eyes hides them with glasses or some other covering.
* Inhuman Eye Concealers: Sometimes, characters with usual eyes hide them with masks.
* in human form. Being unused to having a mouth, he tends to play with sounds of words and put odd things in his mouth.
* Inhuman Human: The person's soul comes back just fine. The body, on the other hand, is a complete mess, with bad results for both the person and the resurrector.
* Inhuman Human: The resurrected's soul is fine, but the body is not human.
* Inhuman: Invoked word for word, in reference to the treatment Grey has received.
* Inhumanity has this in the use of Twitter in order to tell us what some people think about the new Inhumans. Also, a newly awakened Inhuman, instead of, you know, going to the Avengers or any other superhero, decides to just keep taking photos of herself and posting them to Facebook.
* Inhumanly Beautiful RaceAngels are commonly beautiful beyond human standards.
* Inhumanly Beautiful Race: Angels, gods, and goddesses are commonly depicted as being beautiful beyond human standards.
* Inhumanly Beautiful Race: Elves and fairies are often beautiful far beyond normal human standards.
* Inhumanly Beautiful Race: Elves often possess beauty far beyond that of humans.
* Inhumanly Beautiful RaceMerfolk, mermaids in particular, are often very beautiful beyond human standards.

* Inhumanly Beautiful Race: Similar to the above, aliens being beautiful far beyond normal human standards.
* Inhumanly Beautiful Race: That a species evolved to fit many human standards of beauty.
* Inhumanly Beautiful Race: Vampires who possess beauty far beyond normal human standards, perhaps because of their eternal youth.
* inhumanly strong. This is for various reason which could be due to mastering their own powers, slowly gaining more dark power overtime, or that their long lifespans allow them to learn much more than mortals including magic and improving their mystical gifts.
* Inhumanoids, Eddie "Auger" Augutter, has an auger attached to his exosuit.
* Inhumanoids; even the comedy episodes had more than their share of horrors. One can only imagine how they would have upped the ante had it been successful enough to get more than one season (and toy wave)...
* Inhumanoids) gets critically injured at one point and the Earth Corps save him by building his new armor around his body.
* Inhumanoids is a borderline case, as he/they get referred to as a singular creature, but actually demonstrate two separate identities that argue with one another, even when merged as a two-headed monster. Only when split into two bodies can he/they trap Metlar in a magnetic field, and hence qualify for this trope.
* Inhumanoids. (Maybe it makes sense a little, seeing as he was a giant monster made of living metal.) Even crazier, once he brings Lady Liberty to life, she's surprisingly accepting of it, but nags him relentlessly, working him even harder than his former slave-driving master Sslither did. Eventually, he decides to de-animate her and return her to her pedestal after getting sick of it.
* Inhumanoids, one of the statues in Metlar's army resembles the Colossus of Rhodes.
* Inhumanoids to be picked up for an ongoing series, ended up cancelled after just one season because sales suffered from how expensive the large figures of the Inhumanoids were.
* Inhumanoids, when D'Compose touches people, they turn into giant, ghoulish zombie-like creatures. The only way to reverse the transformation is to expose them to sunlight, which is also D'Compose's weakness.
* Inhumanoids wore Powered Armor designed for subterranean exploration.
* Inhumans Between Medusa's shoulder pads making her look like she has too short a neck, Black Bolt's jacket seemingly having a pillow stuffed in and Gorgon's stylish carpet-poncho-thing, they all look like beginner cosplayers.
* Inhumans: Black Bolt vaporized his parents using the voice ability which he has.
* Inhumans exists in an odd place in the system; he has no powers himself but is protected by his status as the king's brother.
* In humans, it is now believed that infestation with the parasite may change the personality of infected humans, making men more aggressive and less fearful, while making women kinder and more promiscuous. It may also increase the chances of getting into a car accident, and there is some evidence (although far from conclusive) that it may be linked to schizophrenia and increased risk of suicide. It is suspected that between 30 and 60 percent of the population of the world is infected, albeit asymptomatic.
* Inhumans of Medusa's hair only accentuates the utterly laughable scenario of the supposedly dangerous guards run up to her and get lightly smacked into unconsciousness by a completely still Medusa.
* Inhuman, starting after his parents were killed in a planet-wide massacre. His fridge contains only vodka and a clean, folded towel.
* Inhumans that humans are right back to "Kill all mutants" mode. It gets so bad that the X-Men relocate to Limbo. That's right. Life for a mutant sucks so bad on Earth that the X-Men would rather move their entire species to HELL.
* Inhumans vs. X-Men asks if her people are supposed to be the good guys in this situation.
* Inhumans vs. X-Men. Oddly for the trope, the more peaceful characters' refusal to act nearly dooms their entire species.

* Inhumans vs. X-Men which saw the X-Men trying to defeat the Inhumans before the Terrigan Mist, which turns out to be fatal to mutants, kills them.
* inhuman, the Dementors also fit this pretty well, only working for the Ministry of Magic because of the opportunities it gives them to feed off peoples' misery, inevitably joining the forces of evil when they offer more opportunity to cause harm.
* Inhuman, where Cinne is stabbed with an anesthetic to keep him from running away. To be fair, they do note that it won't take effect immediately, and the doctor is using an injector, rather than a straight needle. Played straight, however, as in the confusion of the situation, the doctor only managed to get the needle in at his shoulder blade, yet it is still treated like it will affect him as fast as getting stabbed in a vein.
* In Hungarian, pronouns aren't gender based, leading generations of
* In Hungary, 1 and 2 forint coins are no longer in use, however prices don't have to be rounded to 5 forints, and so prices ending in 99 are common. The rounding is done to the final bill if you pay by cash. However, many high-profile stores won't do the rounding if you pay by card. This means it's possible to choose the payment method to your advantage. Unfortunately you can't make a living by saving 1 or 2 forints on every purchase.
* In Hungary, the film was given two dubs; once in 1961 and again in 1993.
* In Hungary, there's a catch-all term used for all animation: "mese", or "fairytale" in English,
* In Hungary, the series went from an initial rating of 16+ to 12+, and being aired early in the afternoon, then right back to 16+ with a strict night-only time slot. The
* In "Hungry Hungry Homer", while Homer is convincing Sherri to go to a dance with Bart (which he does by dressing up like a kid and infiltrating the class).
* In "Hunted", he's kidnapped and used as bait after Sam just abandoned him in the middle of the night, dismissed him with a "he means well", and didn't even try to contact him until he needed him. And all Dean can come up with is a "You ever do that again and I'll...". Do what, Dean? Grow a spine when it comes to dealing with your family?
* In "Hunters," Tuvok receives a message from his family on Vulcan. His wife assures him they are praying for his safe return. At a temple.
* In "Hurricane Neddy", after Ned Flanders, of all people, lashes out at Marge, Bart immediately jumps to his mom's defense: "Hey, back off, man!"
* In "Hurricane Neddy", a hurricane passes through Springfield. Afterwards, the Simpsons are amazed to find their house intact, which leads Marge to remark "It just goes to show you that everything will work out if you have faith." We immediately pan to the home of the devout Flanders family, which is completely destroyed. Ned gets up from the ruins, muttering "
* In "Hurricane Neddy", an opening for "The Hurricane" plays when a hurricane hits Springfield. This one lacked the
* In "Hurricane Neddy'', Ned Flanders asks Rev. Lovejoy if God is testing him, Lovejoy answers, "Short answer: yes, with an if. Long answer: no, with a but."
* In "Hurricane Neddy", Ned Flanders' home gets destroyed by a hurricane, and Homer leads Springfielders in rebuilding it. But as Ned is touring it, he finds it's shoddily built (e.g. painted dirt rather than floorboards). But afterwards, Homer asks "What do you think of the house love built?", lightly patting it and having it completely collapse. Shortly after, Ned's glasses breaking when he tries to clean them is the last straw that causes
* In "Hurricane Neddy", Ned Flanders yells at a bunch of citizens, then calls Homer the worst human he's met but not yelling. Homer claims he "got off pretty easily". Either Homer
* In "Hurricane Neddy", when seeing his poorly rebuilt house, Ned opens a really tiny door at the end of a hallway and is greeted by Barney. "Come on in! It's your master bedroom!"
* In hurricanes, it isn't the wind that kills people most of the time. It's the storm surge and the flash flooding. And afterward, the infrastructure is messed up because of the flooding, leading to more deaths as vital services are cut off.

* In "Hurt Bike", Nancy says to Bill that he broke Cricket after they see the boy take extreme lengths to keep everything safe, like covering everything in bubble wrap and selling all of Bill's power tools.
* In "Husband and Knives", Homer once got his stomach stapled to slim himself down after Marge becomes a successful business woman and was afraid she would leave him. The rapid weight loss he underwent left him with extra skin which he had to clip up from the back.
* In "Hush" Buffy complains that she has an urge to start babbling whenever she's about to kiss Riley Finn. Fortunately for her, the
* In "Hush," Mac and Stella investigate when half of a crushed body is found on top of a shipping container on a truck. The other half is eventually located in the shipping yard. It turns out that after the murder, the person who helped the murderer clean up placed the body on top of a shipping container, hoping it would be crushed and look like an accident.
* In Hussie's typical "every minuscule detail is going to get a callback later" style, John and Terezi have a brief discussion about "Troll Jegus" long before the existence of the Sufferer is revealed.
* In "Hutchinson for Murder One", Hutch is accused of murdering his ex-wife with his gun in his home.
* In "Hypnos", the narrator and his companion must consume unnamed illegal drugs to astral travel to forbidden dreamscapes. Later they end up relying on drugs to stay awake to keep away the horrors they unwittingly summoned.
* In "I am a Nucleus" by Stephen Barr, a poker game between friends turns ugly because, every time the owner of the flat where the game takes place is the dealer, he always deals himself a king-high straight flush and somebody else four aces.
* In "I Am Furious Yellow", Bart bases his comic book-turned-web series character Angry Dad on Homer Simpson.
* In "I Am Furious Yellow", Ralph doodles on his own face. "I'm called Ralph!".
* In "I Am Furious (Yellow)", when Bart is trying to come up with a comic book character. He sees a bat hanging in the window and exclaims "
* In "I Am Furious (Yellow)", when Skinner is trying to get a better volunteer to talk about their career, Lisa suggests the creator of
* In "I Am George Washington", Yadina keeps blushing around Kid!George Washington. Along with the fact that she constantly gushes about how great he is, this hints that she may have a crush on him.
* In "I am Going!", Gerald and the audience think Piggie is going away for good, but really she's just going to lunch.
* In "I Am Peter, Here Me Roar", Lois is furious to learn that Peter taped over their wedding with
* In "I Believe", Roland Orzabal's emotional vulnerability is expressed by how
* In "I Borg" Geordi nicknames the Borg drone they rescued from a crashed probe "Hugh", a play on the word "you" that the drone keeps saying. Hugh's Borg designation Third of Five is also an example.
* In "I, Bro-Bot", Candace's reaction to seeing robot versions of her brothers running around is to run for the family panic room, shrieking her head off.
* In "I Broke My Trunk", Piggie asks Gerald how he broke his trunk and he mentions that some other animals balanced on it... but that he didn't break his trunk that way; he broke it falling down.
* In Ice Crown, you can mine Saronite. This contains or possibly is entirely the blood of the Eldritch Abomination Yog-Saron, God of Death, drives people who mine it mad, and naturally forms into the shape of skulls when smelted.
* In "Iced, Iced Babies", Roger is angry at the Smiths for not taking him seriously and tells them he's "more than just a clown", right before slipping on a discarded magazine, hitting the wall, spilling all the silverware, pulling on the tablecloth and having the food fall onto him.
* In ice hockey, an agitator (also known as a pest or a rat) is a player who is deliberately annoying to opposing players
* In ice hockey, a team that is down a goal or two near the end of the game or so may elect to pull their goalie to put another attacker on the ice. It gives the possibility of tying the game, at the risk of the leading team having a much easier chance of scoring again. On average, the leading team scores an empty net goal about 1/3 of the time while the trailing team scores a goal about 1/9 of the time — in the long run this strategy is detrimental to the team that pulled its goalie. However, in most cases, what matters is that you've lost the game and not what the margin of defeat was. In addition,

* In ice hockey, the Canadian Women's Hockey League, which folded after its 2018–19 season, had the Calgary Inferno, a counterpart of the NHL's Calgary Flames, and Les Canadiennes de Montréal, a counterpart of the Montreal Canadiens. The CWHL's US counterpart, the National Women's Hockey League, has averted this trope; although all of its teams to date (including the Toronto Six, which joined in 2020–21) are in NHL markets, none have names similar to those of NHL teams.
* In Ice Hockey, there is a specific style of play called the "Neutral Zone Trap", where instead of attempting to attack the opponent's forecheck individually or take the puck in the defensive zone, all five players on a team will sit in the middle of the ice (The Neutral Zone) and attempt to force turnovers, prevent the other team from getting into their end without performing a "Dump-In" (where you shoot the puck behind the net and attempt to get it from there, often in a board battle), and in general prevent offense from occurring. While it had been around since the 30s and was occasionally used off and on by many coaches, it
* In Iceland, from 1625-1683, 21 people were executed by burning after being accused of witchcraft (which could include just keeping magical talismans in their homes). All but one of these people were male, as men were believed to be the only people capable of being witches in Icelandic society. There's an interesting, albeit somewhat cheesy, museum dedicated to Icelandic witchcraft in the 17th century in the town of Hólmavík, in the West Fjords.
* In Iceland, the "pika" part of Pikachu's name was spelled approximately (and pronounced exactly) like the native word for female genitalia. The anime series was localized as well and no one bothered to come up with a new name for the poor thing. Although, since the games and trading cards were already there, that could mean translating the entire franchise.
* In Iceland there is an apartment rental company called "Fagmenn" (it means "Professionals"). You can also go down to the mall and see signs outside Hagkaup advertizing "Krap" (which means slushee).
* In "Ice Moon Enceladus", the kids run out of ice for their sno-cone stand, so they decide to fly to Enceladus to get more. However, the Propulsions need to keep secret that they are aliens, so in order to distract the angry customers, Mindy sings a cute little song of hers while hula-hooping to distract them.
* In "Ice Station Impossible!" Hank, facing possible doom as a human bomb, asks Brock to kill him if the need comes.
* In "Ice Station Winslow", she feels ignored by her family because of her younger cousin Richie.
* In "Icon", the cold war on Tegalus between the Rand Protectorate and Caledonian Federation is disrupted by SG-1's arrival, which allows a religious extremist faction to rise up in Rand, eventually overthrowing the government and starting a war which reduces most of the continent to rubble. The SGC helps the Rand loyalists regain control, but the international tensions remain into season nine's "Ethon", when the Ori give the Rands a
* In "I Dated A Robot", Fry goes to the edge of the universe and sees alternate versions of himself and his friends, all wearing cowboy hats.
* In "Identity", China White is glad to see that the Arrow didn't die in
* In "Identity Crisis", the US military is able to temporarily transfer the mind of a soldier named Captain Cotter McCoy into an indestructible android body. Their long-term goal is to use hundreds, if not thousands, of these androids with human minds on the battlefield. Two other unspecified countries are conducting similar experiments.
* In "Identity" Fiona and Sam impersonate Detectives Cagney and Lacey to get a couple wannabe scam artists to leave town so their boss won't kill them. (This doubles as an

* In "I Didn't Do It", the Princess brings leaves into the house and spills water on the floor. The adults mistakenly think that Scruff brought them in and then peed on the floor.
* In "Idiot Box", Patrick claims that "the inner machinations" of his mind are "an enigma". A thought bubble appears above his head, and within that thought bubble is live action footage of milk spilling.
* In "Idiot Box", SpongeBob and Patrick play pretend in a box but Squidward hears noises related to their games. The neighbours deny making noises and say that it's all in their heads, and when Squidward joins in, he doesn't hear any noises. He then thinks he does, but
* In "I'Doh!-bot" Homer can't build a good robot for Bart to compete in
* In "I Don't Wanna Know Why the Caged Bird Sings", Lisa is awarded the Student of the Millennium Prize. She admits it's not as big a deal as it sounds, as we're only about a decade into the new millennium...
* In "I Don't Want to Go to Bed", the Maid wakes up and screams when she sees that the Princess is not in her bed, because she thinks that the monster the Princess was talking about earlier took her.
* In "I Don't Want to Tidy Up", the Maid screams upon seeing the Princess's poorly-constructed "world" made out of toys as it looks like a mess to her and she's a
* In "I Do", Sawyer barks this (minus the "please") at Kate in while she's changing in the cage opposite him, but not because he didn't want to see her
* In "I'd Rather Read It Myself!", Buster appears in D.W.'s story as a robot named
* In "I Dream of Jesus," when Peter was accusing others of having a motive for swiping his "Surfin' Bird" record, Peter talks this way when he describes his crazy theory about everyone against "the record."
* In "I Dream of Siri", Sarah covers Jazmine's ears again when Uncle Ruckus starts talking about female anatomy.
* In "I, Dude", Jerry gives the spies' a super sticky hair pomade as a gadget. Alex accidentally squirts it on him and he gets his hand stuck to his head. She later uses it on some henchmen as well.
* In IDW's "Deviations" event, we're shown heavy deviations from canon for five continuities:
* In "I, E.T.", the crew crashes on a planet that has never had interplanetary contact. Crichton is able to understand them (which works), but the inhabitants understand him (which shouldn't and isn't really explained).
* In "iFight Shelby Marx", Spencer sings to his friend Socko, "Happy Birthday, buddy buddy buddy!"
* In "iFind Spencer Friends", Carly, Sam, Freddie and Gibby sing "For He's a Jolly Good Spencer" at Spencer's birthday.
* In "If She Dies", Paul Marano gets into a car accident on his birthday. He is uninjured but his young daughter Cathy ends up in a coma.
* In "If She Dies", Paul Marano speculates that the soul of Sarah, who died of tuberculosis decades earlier, has not moved onto
* In "If They Could See Us Now", Trotters Independent Traders has gone bankrupt, and Del has been banned from any business dealings. He then pushes Rodney into realising the company could be reformed if
* In "If You're So Smart, Why Aren't You Rich?" Daniel Mockridge screwed Edward Nygma out of millions in profits from a popular game Nygma created (causing him to
* Inigo doesn't have the Dance command, despite his mother being Olivia, the only Dancer class in the game. It seems the opposite trope, until his Supports with his mother get viewed. Inigo is
* Inigo Montoya, who 15 years earlier raped and murdered his sister and her infant son.
* In II, the Protoss lost the Shield Battery, so no more sort-of healing. Their new unit, the Immortal, gets special hardened shields that reduce high-damage attacks like artillery (as long as they still have shields). Unfortunately, this leaves them open to

* Ini Kamoze charts in 1994 with "Here Comes the Hotstepper". His follow-up single "Listen Me Tic" made it to just #88 and he never charted again after that.
* In "I Like a Boy in Uniform" by The Pippettes, the protagonist likes a boy but it turns out he's gay. She mopes around for a while but then begins noticing that she likes girls who wear school uniforms too.
* In Illo Tempore contains at least two stable time loops across four millennia.
* In "iLost My Head in Vegas", Gibby eats an entire bag of sugar, reacts like he's having a bad trip, tells Freddie he's freaking out and then screams "I'm falling".
* In "I Lost on Jeopardy", Don Pardo taunts Al that he is such a complete loser that he doesn't even get "a lousy copy of our home game," the traditional consolation prize for losing contestants on
* In "I Love Lisa", Bart portrays John Wilkes Booth this way in the Presidents Day show, greeting Abraham Lincoln (Milhouse) with "Hasta la vista, Abie".
* In "I Love Lisa", Chief Wiggum chasing the duck who took his badge.
* In "I Love Lisa", Chief Wiggum uses his loaded revolver like a hammer to crack walnuts by holding it by the barrel and hitting the nuts on the table with the end of the handle. He gets frustrated by a nut that won't crack and shoots it, leaving a large bullet hole in the kitchen table. What's worse is that Ralph was standing right by the table the whole time.
* In "iLove You", Carly torpedoes Spencer's girlfriend of the week relationship with a
* In "I'm Ageless", Diana visits the grave of an American G.I. she knew back during World War II.
* In "imaginary", Strong Bad remarks that kids with imaginary friends have a tendency to give them weird, vaguely-unsettling names like "Rubby Plop-Plop, Sir Zabblepants, Dingy Donger, [and] Real Live Actual Mr. Blangcaster Next Door."
* In "Imaginationland", he finally has Kyle submit to his agreement to suck his balls, however he insists on making a huge ceremony and gloating endlessly in Kyle's face long enough for it to be interrupted three times over.
* In "iMake Sam Girlier", this is Sam's mentality, but it turns out to be an aversion with Pete, who likes a girl who can dress nice and kick butt. For some reason, he's
* In "I'm A Little Bit Country", Cartman attempts to invoke a flashback to colonial times so he doesn't have to learn about the Constitutional Convention by reading. This being
* In "I Married Marge", Dr. Hibbert examines the pregnant Marge via ultrasound, and when Bart turns so his butt is facing the screen, Hibbert remarks, "If I didn't know better, I would
* Ini Miney, a college student majoring in parapsychology, but very unfocused and seems to struggle with basic conversation. Rubs her temples when trying to understand something, and gives the
* In "Imitation Krabs", Mr. Krabs is placed in a live-action box of French fries when SpongeBob thinks he's an imposter.
* In "Immortality", Grissom is sent a limbless body inside a suitcase.
* In "Immortal Wounds", it is mentioned that Orion raiders destroyed a Julthan colony many years earlier.
* In "Immortal Wounds", Spock states that he has considered the undertaking the ritual of Kolinhar, the purging of all emotion. He would later do so in
* In "Immortal Wounds", the Neydans are likewise identical to humans.
* In "Immune To Murder", it takes place at O. V. Bragan's fishing lodge in the Adirondacks, where he has gone to make trout Montbarry for a foreign ambassador at the special request of the US Secretary of State.
* In "I'm No Angel" (1933) Tira sues Jack for breach of promise when he breaks off his engagement to her after finding another man in her apartment who is dressed only in a bathrobe.
* In "I'm No Fool with Electricity", at one point, the fool runs his train set for too long, allowing it to catch fire.
* In "I'm Not the Breakman", Proto Man uses the phrase "we walk the program" as part of his belief that he and Mega Man are both

* In "iMove Out," Carly grabs onto the back of Freddie and pulls him toward her when a loud noise is heard in Freddie's apartment. And again in
* In "Impact", although the story is set around Twenty-Nine Palms, California, the secretive Bradenhurst Corporation test area exhibits many subtropes commonly associated with Area 51, such as:
* In "Implosion", Artie asks Pete to describe a thief he saw walk past immediately after having been basically knocked out by an implosion grenade. All Pete can up with is, "not... female?"
* In "Imprint", the prostitute Komomo is tortured by the madam by getting needles shoved underneath her nails.
* In "Improbable" by Adam Fawer, David Caine is already so good at calculating probabilities in his head that his graduate professor nicknames him "
* In "I'm Spelling as Fast as I Can", Homer sees a commercial for Krusty Burger's new Ribwich, which is made of "
* In "I, Mudd", the androids are apparently "born" as fully functional adults.
* In "iMust Have Locker 239", Freddie negotiates with Sam about getting her half of the locker as Sam mentions that her mom is driving a car to fetch her just
* In in a basketball match and accidentally breaks the net in the process.
* In Inaho's case, Takeru was her only friend as a kid, because her father was strict with her
* In "In Another Life", the project manager Mason Stark impersonates his
* In "Inca Mummy Girl", Xander becomes completely incoherent when he sees Ampata in her dress for the dance. Fortunately, Buffy "can translate salivating boy talk".
* In "Incendium", while contacting BMO to check in on Finn if he's cheered up, Jake gets a good view of BMO about to kancho him. Finn didn't take it well, especially considering BMO used both of his hands.
* In "Incident On and Off a Mountain Road", the primary villain Moonface is a bald albino serial killer.
* In India and Indonesia this is done by fitting 3-5 people in motorcycles, justified in the latter case as people riding this way are
* In India, Clarkson and Hammond find that the air conditioning in May's car still works, so they decide out of "fairness" it needs to be broken. May retaliates by setting the heater in Clarkson's car onto full and pulling the knob out, and setting Hammond's seat all the way forward and breaking the adjuster. They get him back further by wiring the brakes of May's car to his horn, causing him to let out a blast every time he tries to slow down.
* In India, cricket manages to be an SSS to not only any and every other sport, but even billion-dollar corruption issues and state elections!
* In India, it was given a local version named "Gali Gali Simsim", (Street Street Simsim, a literal translation), which sounds more or less close to Sesame Street, the show was mildly popular among young audiences, only Elmo, Grover and the duo of Bert and Ernie retained their names and some screen time, others were either created from scratch. The show ran for five seasons.
* In India, the four seasons are Winter followed by Summer, followed by Monsoon followed by Post-Monsoon.
* In India, the show is a big hit with a large fanbase (primarily consisting of its target audience of children) and countless episodes, placing it somewhere around level 4, if not level 5.
* In individual gymnastics finals, the competition order is chosen by random draw some time in advance, so it's completely down to chance (both in terms of rank positioning and in terms of how tight the competition is) whether the last routine in a given final will be a realistic threat, and for which medals. Which is why many fans found it funny when the draw for the 2019 Gymnastics World Championships randomly had the top qualifier, who is by definition a big medal threat, going up last in four out of five finals, pretty much guaranteeing those finals would end this way.
* In Indonesia, 'Lima' is replaced with 'London' as 'lima' means '5' in local language. Likewise, 'Whiskey' is replaced for 'Washington'

* In "In Excelsis Deo" Toby and Mrs. Landingham go to the funeral of a homeless Korean War veteran. Toby arranged it because he was bothered that
* In "Infamous", a little girl deliberately jumps off a building so Clark will catch her, then kisses him on the cheek.
* In "Infiltrated", a side plot deals with a rape case that it looks like the victim is going to lose because Olivia, the arresting officer, is busy working on an undercover investigation for the FBI. Once Olivia finds out about the trial and makes it to the courtroom ready to testify, the episode ends with no conclusion to how the trial turned out.
* In "Inflexible Logic" by Russell Maloney, the main character assembles six chimps and puts them to work; in defiance of the laws of probability, they instantly start writing out all the books in the British Museum and keep doing so until a scientist goes berserk and shoots all of them.
* In information security this is a pretty common type of logic bomb (not that
* In "Information Stupor Highway", Timmy stumbles across the scene of Crocker being forced to try on a red dress by his mother and records it for future humiliation.
* In "Info Wars", a conservative speaker is beaten and raped at a campus rally after an angry mob chases her off the stage, and the detectives narrow it down to two suspects on opposite sides of the political spectrum; an Antifa member who was carrying the sign she was sexually assaulted with and whose DNA was under her fingernails, and a Neo-Nazi who she rejected the night before. Barba dismisses the indictment against the Antifa member due to the jurors' political biases making a fair trial impossible,
* In in-game lore, malfunctioning SETA drives can supposedly crank up the effect to several
* In in-game mechanics however, the trope is averted by the same vein as
* In "Inheritance", when Data meets his "mother", Dr. Julianna Tainer, the scientist who co-built him, he is pleased. When a cave-in occurs, Julianna is revealed to actually be an android (the real Julianna died years before and her husband uploaded her brain patterns into an android without her knowledge), which Data knew. He tells Riker his attention was caught by Julianna doing complicated math equations on the spot. He then saw that her blinking was the same pattern as Data's own, a formula that made their blinking seem random. The final piece was Data hearing Julianna rehearse for a musical performance then replicate the piece in perfect note and pitch, which was humanly impossible.
* In in his song "Skipper Dan", about a theater prodigy working on a Disneyland Jungle Cruise ride:
* In "Initative", Garfield and Young investigate when fireworks are shoved through a woman's letterbox.
* I Ninja and pulls himself onto ledges that are otherwise just out of reach almost constantly.
* I-Ninja has you repairing a giant mecha, so you could use it to battle another giant mecha in a boxing match for the game's first boss battle.
* I-Ninja was protected by his Elite all female body guards, the Stenchu.
* In "Inner Child", Anne Marie Reynolds dies in an emergency room, having lost all of her brain functions, after being struck in the head with a lead pipe by a mugger. Approximately ten or fifteen minutes later, she wakes up in the morgue. It is later determined that she is growing a second brain on her spine, which contains the personality of her
* In "Innocence", Chakotay relates how on his first diplomatic mission he eagerly studied the aliens culture and made their gesture for "hello", only to accidentally proposition their ambassador, because the symbol had a different meaning according to one's gender.
* In In Nomine fanatics to Reasonable Authority Figures. Their counterparts, the Demon Princes, not so much.
* In "In Plane Sight", the body of the murdered air marshal is stuffed into a suitcase in the cargo bay of the plane.
* In "Inquisition", Bashir goes through a very harsh investigation from I.A.

Deputy Director Sloan, who believes that Bashir is
* In "Insane Clown Poppy", Krusty the Clown announced that he "seltzered" himself when he's introduced to his daughter.
* In "Inspection Detection", a news report detailing what got stolen from the "Wall 2 Wall Mart" comes on right when Timmy is walking by with said items.
* In "Inspiration Manifestation", Rarity turns the streets of Ponyville to gold. The sun reflects off it and blinds several citizens.
* In "InSPONGEiac", during SpongeBob's coffee-induced hallucination, he imagines that he sees a sea troll from a book Patrick read him. He begins to talk to it, but soon realizes that it's just a bush.
* In "Insurance, The White Man's Burden" Grytpype and Moriarty persuade Neddie to take out fire insurance - on the English Channel. This backfires when Coastguard Crun pours oil on the sea to calm the waves during a rescue and then burns it off.
* In intelligence circles, this was known as "blowback", and was one of the biggest reasons behind the decision to catch and deport enemy spies during the Cold War, rather than summarily executing them as had occurred during war-time. If
* In "In Tents Debate", Lori, Leni, Lola, Lucy, and Lily try to convince Lincoln that Dairyland (a milk-themed amusement park) is worse than the beach by having him wait in line to go to the bathroom and then putting a sign saying, "This ride is temporarily closed" on the toilet.
* In "Interdimensional Field Trip", Star is the only member of her class excited about the trip to
* In intergender situations, it's almost always the man as the heel and the woman as the face, even if the woman is a heel as well (see Beth Phoenix).
* In "Internal Affairs", Peter and Ernie start fighting in the streets of Quahog, but are transported to the world of
* In international diplomacy, it's customary for world leaders, when visiting another country, to make references to long-forgotten ties between their nation and the host country. For instance, when visiting Morocco, US Presidents will usually make reference to the fact that in 1777, Morocco was the first nation to recognize America's independence from Britain.
* In International law there is no statute of limitations on genocide, which is partly the cause of
* In international sporting events, climates can vary wildly even in the same country. A team unused to say, the sweltering heat and high humidity of the tropics coupled with the constant rains of a monsoon season, would have a distinct disadvantage.
* In "Intersections in Real Time", Sheridan is being held prisoner by EarthGov and subjected to interrogation. At one point, the interrogator is eating a sandwich with delight and offers it to Sheridan, pointing out that he's eating it with no ill effects. And he assures Sheridan
* In interviews, Al has also noted that his bachelor's in architecture is effectively one, given how seldom it ever comes up for him.
* In interviews on the show's DVD collections, the actors playing Liber8 openly cite the trope as how they play the parts, that the characters never see themselves as the bad guys and Rachel Nichols (who plays Kiera) explains how hard it is to keep Kiera the "hero" when she knows she's in the wrong.
* In "In the Beginning", Frank has to fight Pittsy the mob enforcer for over a dozen pages. The nutcase manages to blow off one of Frank's ribs, then attempts to tear a lung out through the hole. Frank retaliates by throwing him out a fifth-story window onto a metal picket fence. Then jumping out after him and
* In "In the Box," Garrett's stepson Sam has been arrested for scoring oxycodone during an observational buy. Garrett wants to have him released into rehab. However, Frank is suspicious of the circumstances and has his secretary Abigail Baker investigate, discovering that Garrett has used his pull at 1PP to keep Sam out of prison on several prior occasions. Frank confronts Garrett and gets him to see that he's enabling his stepson's drug habit and not helping him.
* In "In the Flesh", having visited a functioning, holographic replica of Starfleet Academy built by aliens, Janeway reminisces about the real academy so she can casually drop in an inaccuracy to see if Chakotay has been replaced by an impostor. Chakotay is the real deal and is slightly offended.

* In "In the Footsteps of a Killer", DI Mooney reopens a 7 year old murder case when a witness comes forward and provides an alibi for the woman originally convicted of the crime (who subsequently died in prison). The witness had left the island before the crime was discovered, and never returned until now.
* In "In the Line of Duty", when Sam/Jolinar gets tranqued twice, the first case with "enough to knock out an elephant," it takes a minute before she's out.
* In "In Theory", a nebula destabilizes the matter within the ship, causing it to warp or become briefly intangible. Some poor crew member ends up falling partway through a floor before it becomes solid again. Not actually teleportation, but the end result is remarkably similar.
* In "In the Wee Small Hours", Goren and Logan discover that their main suspect is innocent of at least one of the murders because a shoulder injury means that he could not have lifted his arm to deliver the overhead blow that killed the victim.
* In "In the Zone", Tanner Brooks undergoes an experimental treatment offered to him by Dr. Michael Chen and gains
* In "Into the Hundred Acre Wood", when Pooh explains why he's using balloons to float, he's shown with a thought bubble depicting him using the balloon to get honey from the bees in the traditional 2D animation style of the older Pooh films.
* In "Into the Mouth of Evil", Jackie and Jade managed to escape the bad guys when Jackie made a cloud with a bag of curry powder.
* In "Into the Odd Woods", Orla calls Opal to tell her that Omar is about to run away to the circus. During the conversation, Orla's voice becomes muffled and Opal is unable to understand her (although to the audience, it can be heard as "Opal, you better get over here
* In "Into the Wild Green Yonder", the Feministas sabotage a sweeper by pouring sugar in the fuel tank and shoving an organic potato (crawling with worms) in the tailpipe.
* In "Into The Woods", Buffy breaks up with Riley, but Xander convinces her to reconsider and she races to stop him before he leaves on a military helicopter, arriving just as the helicopter is taking off. The rotor noise drowns out her shouts and Riley is staring straight ahead, so doesn't see her.
* In introducing the song, ACC host Don Bowman explained that by the late 1960s, record companies were servicing radio stations with vinyl 45 RPM records having the same song on both sides of the records, that is, a specific song the record company and/or artist wanted radio stations to play. (Plus, it allowed jockeys to play the other side of the record once one side became worn or "skipped.")
* In "Intro to Felt Surrogacy" about half the scenes have the main characters as muppets, since the Study Group is recounting a story via puppet-therapy.
* In Inuit religion, the first two humans were Aakulujjuusi and Uumarnituq, and were both males.
* In Inukitut, the Inuit language, new words are formed this way. For example, the word for computer literally means "little artificial brain."
* In "Invasion of the Ferb Snatchers", just when it looks like Candace has busted her brothers, "Linda" turns out to be a little alien wearing a robotic suit so he could learn about the habits of Earthling mothers while Phineas and Ferb repaired his spaceship.
* In "Invasion of the Idiot Dog Brain," GIR goes on a rampage to order food at Crazy Taco.
* In "Invasion of the Moon Creatures", Bill and Tim return from the Moon as giant rabbits. Graham turns on the TV, hoping that the BBC aren't panicking everyone. Cue camoes from science presenter James Burke and astronomer Patrick Moore assuring the public it's not some infectious space disease, whereupon they turn rabbits live on television.
* In "Invasion of the Moon Creatures", James Burke and astronomer Patrick Moore are turned into rabbits during a BBC broadcast, right after assuring the public
* In "Invasion of the Underdwellers", a first edition copy of the collected works of the playwright

* In "Invention Convention", an inventor is shot in the head while accepting an award. The shot came from an impossibly high angle, and there were a dozen or more witnesses who saw no shooter.
* In "Invention Convention", Murdoch realizes they don't need a cipher to read the random string of code—it is actually made of substituted letters. If
* In "Inverurie Jones and the Thimble of Doom", Hamish sarcastically says "Brad bloody Pitt!" when Dougal asks who's at the door. For the rest of the episode,
* In Invisible War, there are also "nanite swells" — clouds of nanobots whose origin isn't entirely clear, but which present a serious environmental hazard and are responsible for the poor health of people forced to live outside protected cities. It's never made entirely clear if these are actually self-replicating or just the remains of weapons or experiments used during
* In "I of Newton", the demon reveals his red eyes to Sam when he removes his sunglasses.
* In "I Only Have Eyes For You", Buffy realises James and Grace are having a
* In Iowa, there is both a city and a county named Des Moines. But while both are named for the river, Des Moines (the city) is not in Des Moines County. The city is located in Polk County in central Iowa while Des Moines County is on the Mississippi River, bordering Illinois.
* In "iParty With Victorious", Carly imagines herself as Mrs. (Steven) Carson, writing "Carly Carson" on the computer in various fonts.
* In Ireland, cinema and video releases have separate ratings systems.
* In Ireland, Coca-Cola is sometimes nicknamed "Red Ambulance" because the caffeine and sugar contained in the drink are considered good for treating a hangover.
* In Ireland, GAA news is divided 60% Dublin Gaelic football, 30% Cork hurling, 10% the rest. Neither is the best team, but they have the highest populations and can thus boost newspaper sales more.
* In Ireland it was still rated 15 as of 2011 (their equivalent to R), which
* In Ireland, laws have to be written in both Irish and English, and if there is divergence between them, then the Irish law is the one that becomes legally binding. In 2016, the constitution was updated as the country had voted in a referendum and same-sex marriage had been legalised. However, a mistranslation in the law in Irish had it written as "Marriage, whether between men or women...", almost outlawing straight marriage!
* In Ireland, the Hallowe'en Barm Brack (similar to fruit cake) generally has an (easily swallowed) ring in it as a fortune-teller, with the idea being that whoever found the ring would be married within the year. Traditionally, it may have included a dried pea, a stick, a coin and a piece of cloth: all small, hard objects.
* In Ireland, the IFCO has a specific '16' borderline category for cinema. Once these films are released on video, they're re-rated '15' or '18'. According to director Ger Connolly, upgrading to '18' happens only in rarer cases - such as
* In "I Remember Melville", Chuckie mourns Melville, commenting he was the best bug he ever had. Phil notes he was the only bug Chuckie ever had.
* In Irish folklore there is a story about Tir na nOg (Land of youth). The story is about Oisin, a chieftain's son who while out hunting with his friends, encounters and falls in love with a woman named Niamh from the aforementioned land. Oisin leaves his friend, saying that he will return shortly and follows the woman to Tir na nOg. Oisin spends 3 years there in bliss but eventually realizes he misses his friends and family and wishes to return home for a visit. Niamh, his now wife, does not want him to suffer alone so gives him a horse warning him not to let his foot touch Irish soil. Oisin agrees and travels to his home only to find his village in shambles and Ireland as a whole 300 years older. Upon realizing his friends and family are dead, Oisin despairs but notices a group of men attempting to move a large rock without much success. Oisin in his haze leans over to help. He manages to move the rock but loses his balance and falls off his horse. In front of the men Oisin turns to dust, aging the 300 years that he missed. He dies and rejoins his clan and friends in the afterlife.

* In Irish lore, a fairy wrapped her identifying cow's tail around her waist in order to pass as a human at a ball. As she danced, her tail untied itself and dangled below the hem of her skirt, catching the eye of her human partner, who realized she was a fairy. Rather than betraying her publicly, he whispered into her ear, "My lady, I fear your stocking has slipped," causing her to look down and discover the real trouble. The fairy was so grateful for his discretion that she rewarded him.
* In Irish Mythology, Ogma is the god of Eloquence, inventor of the Ogham writing system, and the wrestling champion of the Tuatha de Dannan.
* In Irish Mythology, the legendary sorcerer-king Cú Roí Mac Dáire had stored his soul inside the belly of a salmon, which he then hid on an island. As long as the soul remained intact, Cú Roí could not die. Cú Chulainn, his former-friend-turned-rival however, later tracked down and destroyed his soul relying on the intel of Bláthnat, the traitorous lover of the king.
* In Iron Age Scandinavia a person being "black" or "red" referred to their hair color, rather than race.
* In Ironborn costume, men can have as many "salt-wives" (women captured in their raids to serve as concubines) as they want, but they are allowed to keep only one "rock wife" (a female Ironborn native). Salt-wives have lower status in Ironborn society, while rock wives are considered an ironborn's true spouse, whose children are supposed to be their legitimate heirs.
* In Ironforge, the pit part of the forge is only blocked by an invisible barrier from the perimeter, but not pathway going over said pit.
* In "I, Roomate", this cliche's so nice, they did it twice... Interference from Bender's antenna causes TV reception to go out just as Calculon launches into a major revelation on
* In "I, Roommate" Zoidberg brings what appear to be some kind of crab legs to Fry's housewarming. Hermes tries some:
* In "Irrational Treasure", when Dipper and Mabel "break in" the Gravity Falls Museum of History, the woman working at the front door gives them free day passes as well as two balloons; she hands a pink one to Mabel and a blue one to Dipper.
* In "Irregarding Steve", Roger loses his and Steve's money in what he believes to be the Hollywood Stock Exchange.
* In "Irregarding Steve", Steve does this when beating up Beauregard after he insults his father's intelligence.
* In "iRue the Day" the gang have trouble with their webcasts and the perpetrator appears on a video monitor wearing a skull mask. He goes into a brief spiel of how they will fear him only for his mother to call him down and expose his identify as recurring nuisance, Nevel Papperman.
* In "Isabella and the Temple of Sap", a guru the Fireside Girls meet gives them advice then disappears in a puff of smoke. Gretchen points out that he just moved a little ways away.
* In Isaiah 53, it is foretold that Jesus will have, "...no form or comeliness; And when we see Him, There is no beauty that we should desire Him."
* In "iSaved Your Life", Sam puts the idea into Freddie's head that Carly is only into him because of hero worship after Freddie saved Carly's life.
* In "I Second That Emotion", Bender does this when he insults Leela while affected by a chip causing him to feel her emotions:
* In "I See London...", Sierra grabs onto Cody when the Ripper attacks them, funnily, he appears more horrified about Sierra than the actual Ripper.
* In "I Shot The Sherrif" the protagonist confesses the murder of the sherrif, but claims he didn't shoot his deputy. Confessing the murder of the official higher in ranking instead of the lower one will no doubt result in a stronger sentence if he is ever caught.
* In Ishvalan culture, no one uses someone's name without their permission and its considered a sign of friendliness or intimacy to be given someone's name. A batsheva, a seventh daughter of a seventh daughter is special in that everyone is allowed to call her by name, something she doesn't appreciate as it makes her like she doesn't belong to herself alone.

* In Islam, children who have not yet reached maturity are one of the three categories of people for whom "the pen has been lifted" (i.e. Allah does not hold them accountable for wrongdoings). Additionally, it is held that all children who die before maturity go to Heaven, even if non-Muslim children.
* In Islam, green is the preferred color and often shows up in the heraldry of Islamic countries or organizations. Other significant colors include black, red, and white, which derive from the flags of various Islamic dynasties (the Abbasids, Umayyids, etc).
* In Islam, Signs of the End are categorized into Major and Minor: minor signs are quite vague and subject to interpretation regarding what they refer to. However, major signs, like the emergence of the Antichrist (in Arabic "Dajjal") are unambiguous. There are many minor signs but only ten major ones.
* In Islam, the Prophet Muhammad is recorded as saying the following with regards to this trope.
* In Islam, with Muhammad as the Seal of the Prophets, there won't be any more prophets, nor prophecies, nor books nor scrolls after him. Miracles
* In Israel in 2013, before it was officially revealed on the media who the ‘famous singer’ who slept with underage girls was, one reporter accidentally mentioned his name (Eyal Golan) and quickly apologised—‘...er, uh, sorry...’ While it wasn’t a particularly well-guarded secret before, this made it pretty much official and made any attempts to preserve his anonymity laughable. The slip of the tongue and the awkward apology soon
* In Israel in the mid-1970s, an ad that was shown in movie theatres before the feature had a glamorous woman caressing a bottle of Schweppes soda, which eventually pops its cap and a "fountain" of soda gushes out—followed by a shot of about a dozen bottles of Schweppes also popping their caps and gushing soda.
* In Israel it is also common to hear someone saying "Mazel tov," referring to the custom of breaking a cup at Jewish weddings.
* In Israeli youth movements, the traditional "snipe" is "electricity powder".
* In Israel, there was a proposal named the "Law for the Protection of Written Journalism", which would have ordered the closure of any newspaper that falls under certain conditions fulfilled pretty much only by
* In Israel, the word "coke" actually means any type of soft drink. If you order a "soda" you will receive club soda or seltzer. However, there is probably very little Coke/Pepsi confusion because of politics being the way it is: if you do business in Israel, you get boycotted in certain Arab states, and vice versa. Coke picked Israel, Pepsi picked the Arab world. (Historically, at any rate. Today, both colas are equally ubiquitous in Israel and the Arab world, although there might be slight variations in popularity.)
* In Israel where the series was hugely popular, there is a persistent claim that Gargamel is an antisemitic Caricature, and that the smurfs on the other hand represent blue-blooded purity. (Not helped by smurfette making an
* In Issac Asimov's novel "The Robots of Dawn," Gladia apparently felt this for Elijah. When he was in shock from being outside (since Elijah grew up in Earth's underground Cities) and helpless, Gladia found herself quite aroused, and Elijah woke to Gladia initiating foreplay with him.
* In Issue #10 DC’s Supreme Power (Rated 12+), Princess Zarda carries Hyperion as shown
* In issue #12, Loki puts Asgardian truth elixir in the punch at the Valentine's Day ball. He doesn't target it or anything, just counts on that, if everybody says what they really think, he will be able to find if someone has
* In Issue 13, Zim is on the receiving end of this when another group of aliens plan to obtain his newly-created "humungoserum." Unfortunately for them, they've kidnapped
* In issue 15 of the current series, she and two friends take on a god — a weakened god, but still a quasi-deity at least. He naturally trounces them. Whether that counts as a fair fight, which is what has to be waged for it to work, is moot:

* In Issue 16, Zim keeps referring to Gaz as "Gus". She doesn't seem to mind (at the very least, she never corrects him).
* In issue #178, the Blue Ninjas launch an assault on Broca Beach. The head Blue Ninja masterminds the operation from a
* In issue #1, Batman bursts through the window of the Gordon household to capture
* In issue #200, there's a big fight in Paris that includes Colossus getting thrown through the rose window of Notre Dame. This was the big payoff from Marvel having sent the comic's art team to Paris for X-Men publicity and story authenticity.
* In issue 221, Mina Mongoose calls them out on this. When Sally tries to lecture her on being responsible after her songs end up rallying the public against
* In Issue #22, Mega Man does it again when he fails with Roll, Ice Man, and Quake Woman after they make "break the ice."
* In Issue 232, Ixis Naguas ends up restoring Bunnie's former flesh and blood limbs after crystalizing them an issue before, removing the abilities she had as a cyborg.
* In Issue #235, several terrorists shoot Superman. When bullets don't work, one of them clubs his head with his shotgun's butt. Superman lampshades it.
* In issue #238, Superman is encased in a shroud of stone, and he manages to break out.
* In Issue #23, Supergirl tries to overcome a mind-searing telepathic attack. Then she tries the opposite tactic and stops fighting it, focusing on using her other powers.
* In issue #240, a mother and two kids are trapped on the top floor of a burning skyscraper. Superman leaps upwards, falls on the building's roof, breaking it, and lands inside the top floor.
* In Issue #240, though, Superman is so weak than he can be injured by a bullet. Fortunately his costume is still bulletproof.
* In issue #241 Superman bursts through the wall of the Edge's apartment. This time he had not a good cause.
* In Issue 27, Rick and Morty look after the Martian Princess Decoria until she can go home, but she commits a
* In issue #289 (September 1989), an article wondered how the "waiter, there's a fly in the soup" joke would sound as told by different stand-ups popular at the time. The writer nailed the styles of
* In Issue 28, the leader of the stranded Irken science team that Zim encounters is named Floog, but Zim keeps calling him "Flarg".
* In Issue #28, Zavok (who usurped control of Eggman's resources, including the Zombots) arrives at Angel Island, which is now the only safe zone left. Rouge manages to sabotage his ship and cause it to crash, but this just causes an
* In Issue #32, during the final portion of the Physical Fitness competition, Zim and Dib are so determined to win that they do infinite pushups,
* In Issue 35, Lumpy Space Princess investigates the theft of her star at a Princess Conference, and interrogates her friends
* In issue #390, a soldier in a battle mans a high-tech cannon about ten feet long. When a blast knocks the weapon off its legs, pinning the soldier beneath, the Hulk (the really smart version) picks up the cannon, wields it in one hand, and to the enemy says "...let us reason together"
* In Issue #3 Vinyl Scratch's eyes are red like they were in fan-art, rather than magenta/violet like they are in the show. Colorist Heather Breckel
* In Issue #40, a "cosmic mistake" causes Recap Kid (the comic series' omniscient narrator) to get sucked into the space between universes. There, they meet their counterpart the Recap Brain, who shows them numerous other universes in an attempt to get them back to their own. These include one where the basic
* In Issue 40, Finn and Jake's mission to protect a zeppelin full of Fancy Egg People from an owlbear attack is interrupted by Magic Man
* In Issue 45, Finn and Jake have to rescue some of their friends from a Trap Wizard's "hall of mirrors". In a mind-bending twist on

* In issue #4, the Fresco of Baal in Valhalla is done by Nathan Fairborn, who Gillen hired solely for the two panels it appears in. The inking was still done by regular inker
* In issue 59, Sonic and Tails get trapped in a pocket dimension with
* In Issue #5, Gaz mentions she had to look through various alternate universe before finding the one dominated by gamers, represented by a montage of panels showing alternate versions of Zim and GIR in a few of those universes.
* In issue 65, a disguised Princess Celestia finally convinces Twilight Sparkle of her identity by saying she remembers
* In issue 6, Yang gets hit with this when she says "Bumblebee? More like—" before Team JNPR walks in.
* In issues #262-263, Banshee briefly has his mouth removed by the flesh-warping Masque, in order to nullify his
* In "I Stand Corrected", Baboon gets sentenced to 99 years in a correctional facility and Weasel is forced to serve the sentence with Baboon because of a law forbidding judges from being short, hairy, and having beady eyes.
* In "Is There In Truth No Beauty?" Spock dons the red anti-Medusan visor when beaming the ambassador and Miranda Jones off the ship despite there being no in-story reason for it. Why? So they can re-use the expensive red-shifted transporter shot from when they beamed aboard.
* In "iStill Psycho", Nora and her mother sing "Nora's a Jolly Good Person" at her recreated sweet 16.
* In "iStill Psycho", while the gang are trapped by Nora and her family, Gibby attempts to escape through the chimney, but he gets stuck. After Mrs. Benson and T-Bo rescue them and they're safe at home, Carly realizes they forgot Gibby, who is still stuck.
* In "I Swing the Body Electric" the a robot grateful for receiving a sexy new female body engages in sex with entire crew of her ship as part of a plan to save them from an assassination plot.
* In Italian city-states, it was common for there to be a specified spot (a bridge, for instance) to have ritual brawls between neighborhoods.
* In Italian folklore, the Boogeyman (who itself fits this trope) is referred to as the Black Man. Note that, in Italian, a different form of the word for "black" would be used for this guy than for an African man.
* In Italian opera based on source material from other languages, it's common practice for the characters' names to be changed to their Italian equivalents. For example, when
* in italics, being a foreign word used by Easterners to distinguish that particular "wine" from others.
* In Italy, Disney XD, along with Disney In English, shut down on October 1, 2019, though it was done very poorly. Disney XD was airing an up next promo, and Disney In English ended
* In Italy, especially the southern parts of the country, it was customary to replace small amounts of change with small items. For example, if you bought something worth 380 lire and paid with a 1000 lire bill, your change would more likely than not come out to 500 lire, a payphone token and two hard candies. The introduction of the euro and ever-tightening laws intended to stop money-laundering have put an end to this practice, however.
* In Italy it was so diffused that the Italian language has the word
* In Italy, people tend to adapt football club names to refer to their fans: examples include Milanisti for AC Milan, Interisti for FC Internazionale, Juventini for Juventus, Romanisti for AS Roma, Laziali for SS Lazio, Fiesoli for ACF Fiorentina, or Napoletani
* In "I Taw a Putty Tat", Sylvester keeps a tally of all the canaries he's eaten with a bird-shaped stamp. After Tweety gets through with him, he adds a cat-shaped stamp mark to the tally.
* In "Itchy & Scratchy & Marge", after Marge successfully gets
* In "Itchy & Scratchy Land", before Bart dispatches a robotic mascot with a camera flash he says: "Hey mouse... Say Cheese!" He immediately

* In "Itchy & Scratchy Land", the cat and mouse robots have a protocol that ensures that they only
* In "Itchy & Scratchy: The Movie", Bart is impersonating a Bond
* In "Itchy & Scratchy: The Movie", the last scene takes place 40 years in the future. Homer and Bart finally go to see the movie being shown at the same theater, and now two tickets cost $650. (Homer still says "D'oh", complaining about the price.)
* In "Itchy and Scratchy and Marge", Marge is watching one of the kids' cartoons after it supposedly leads Maggie to attack Homer with a hammer. She is left in disgust by the violence, while Homer, despite still suffering from head injuries, is tittering quietly to himself. After she issues a complaint to the studios, they respond by making a squirrel caricature of her being killed by the stars, leaving Homer in hysterics.
* In "Itchy and Scratchy Land", Homer and Marge visit a '70s themed disco:
* In "Itchy and Scratchy: The Movie", Bart has been sent to his room without any pizza for dinner as punishment for fooling around with Grampa's dentures, and eventually feels so hungry he begins to visualize Santa's Little Helper's head as a pizza box, with his tongue as a slice.
* In "Itchy, Scratchy and Poochie", after Poochie's first appearance doesn't go over very well, Homer records a passionate speech for his second cartoon, apologizing to the fans and asking for a second chance. The studio clearly don't go for it, as the scene freezes just before the speech and a different voice over says, "I have to go now. My planet needs me," followed by the cel of Poochie clearly being dragged away.
* In "It Could've Been Great", Peridot screams for 20 seconds straight when riding on Lion, who is going at
* In It for Life. A Gray Guard is a Paladin who swears an oath that allows him to make minor violations of the Paladin's Code as long as it's in the service of Good and their deity. As such, they're able to take more drastic and morally dubious measures than regular paladins, which is pretty much the Grey Wardens' MO in a nutshell.
* In "It Happened 'That Night" Toby showers at Spencer's room because the plumbing at the loft he moved into is broken. When
* Initial D And Bunta is probably the only one that never smoked less (or stopped smoking) for the entire duration of the series.
* Initial D anime, people frequently dared Takumi to be badass when he was challenged to races — and he invariably responded to it with intransigence, only being willing to race on his own terms.
* Initial D Arcade Stage. But that's not where the problems end. To get to the tuning shop, you have to eject your card three times. Not continue three times, you have to pick "NO" at the continue screen for it to count. This means that if you're playing several rounds in a row, then you'll be wasting chances to tune up your car if you continue each time—you have to spend about 2-3 minutes between sessions ejecting your card, putting it back in, and going through all the menus. These sorts of mechanics are contributing to the downfall of the IDAS scene.
* Initial D Arcade Stage, few multiplayer races were played on courses other than Irohazaka.
* Initial D Arcade Stage has the Toyota AE85 Levin, which is basically a crappy version of the AE86.
* Initial D Arcade Stage more expensive than MT cards (and lasted much longer), it also contains up to three cars. Not that it prevented hardcore IDAS players from owning more than one card.
* Initial D Arcade Stage, so you have a hard time to block him from passing. However, the credits will roll even if you lose.
* Initial D Arcade Stage tends to feature a lot of Eurobeat tracks, particularly from Avex Trax's Super Eurobeat collection.
* Initial D Arcade Stage. Whether or not you defeat him, the credits will roll afterwards.
* Initial D. Aside from the fandom holy war of whether grip or drift is faster, the various car modifications are reasonably technically accurate.

* Initial D delivers tofu in an old beater; and in the process, has learned drifting techniques that racers take years to master.
* Initial D distant, but there is occasionally some emotion shown in the manga.
* Initial D feels love is a distraction from honing on his racing skills (to beat Takumi, no less), though he does have somewhat of a love interest.
* Initial D, for the first season or so, doesn't seem to really care that his enemies — and his friends for that matter — are quite envious of his racing skills; this is not helped by the fact that his first race came after five years of tofu delivery runs. His first race has him not caring about the racing aspect of drifting.
* Initial D Fourth Stage uses cel shading to great effect, compared to the very obvious 3D of earlier stages.
* Initial D gives us Takumi and his AE86 Trueno. Although his Trueno pales in comparison to more powerful cars like the RX-7s and Skylines, his skill with the Trueno is what allows him to, to the shock of those who haven't seen him in action yet, hold his own against such more powerful cars.
* Initial D had "Danrep", "Nisno", and the famous "TORENO" (which later became Trueno after they got the license)
* Initial D has a massive one in the form of Mt Akina. The probable best-known part among non-fans is that Akina has five consecutive hairpin turns, which ordinarily would not allow for recovery. This means Takumi has developed a very rare skill.
* Initial D has a race between Fujiwara Takumi and Kogashiwa Kai, whose fathers (Fujiwara Bunta and Kogashiwa Ken) had raced each other years ago.
* Initial D has gonky features (helped by the author's drawing style, though).
* Initial D has Itsuki starting before the countdown finishes during his face with Takeshi Nazakato. Being a casual racer, it doesn't help that much when he crashes.
* Initial D, he sets out in his vehicle, confident he'll win...only for the pair of women to claim victory when they take on the course's most difficult corner without breaking a sweat while the challenger crashes into the outside rail. He's so ashamed of losing to a female racing team that he tells one of his colleagues not to tell their leader about it.
* Initial D. He then drifts past Yuichi, who has the song playing out of his car radio.
* Initial D is an interesting variation on this forthe first couple seasons. Despite being nearly godlike in his abilities, he's often having basic racing techniques and auto facts/mechanics explained to him because he's developed his skills in isolation on his own and has no background. Later on, the racers he's defeated (despite being high-level themselves) often serve as the audience to explanations.
* Initial D is stocked full of these. There are three standout examples however
* Initial D kicked in at the time as Gudicelli was then known more as a professional go-kart racer before transitioning into a full-time actor.
* Initial D levels when his driving passion is awakened while watching his rival's performance during an illegal race. One theory is that the artist was so good at drawing cars, he decided to use the same methods on human beings.
* Initial D, no need to say! "The challenge continues into the far future."
* Initial D, or so he thinks, starts out driving at 4:00 AM as fast as possible while delivering his dad's tofu to the peak of Mount Akina and drifting to prevent the tofu from rolling around, in order to return home ASAP and catch a little snooze before going to school.
* Initial D stand out extremely oddly from the background, especially as the frame rate used for the CG is much higher than that of the 2D animation. This gimmick is so well-known, parodies of it often reproduce this exactly, even if the show is otherwise traditionally animated. However, in this case, it's actually somewhat necessary, as the task of drawing realistically animated and detailed race scenes would very likely break the time restraints (not to mention the budget) of a television anime. Doesn't make it any less jarring, though.
* Initial D, Takumi races against Shingo Shoji of the Myogi Night Kids in a "duct-tape deathmatch" to limit their drifting. When Takumi manages to get the hang and overtakes him, Shingo gets enraged and tries to nudge his car to make him lose control. The race ends when Shingo, trying not to embarrass himself, tries to double-crash their cars so the race ends in a tie, but Takumi evades him and Shingo crashes against the guard rail, not even finishing the race himself.

* Initial D. Takumi's opponents would be smug in their ability to beat a junky 86, they'd be internally monologuing about the superiority of their car and skills, and how after this next turn they'd never see the 86's headlights again. Immediately cue said headlights and eurobeat.
* Initial D, the URL of the racing team Project D is "http://project.d". ".d" is not a valid real-life top-level domain.
* Initial D will sometimes turn off his headlights in the middle of a race (which are always held at night) when overtaking his opponents. This serves to both prevent his opponents from blocking his approach and to freak them the hell out.
* initial explanation is "People may shout 'Lion!' or 'Shark!', but the most common warning is 'Duck!'"
* initial fight with Androids 17 and 18 goes poorly because while he could easily overpower them if he transformed, he also knows they'd rush him the moment he tried.
* Initially, Allison Danger was the only woman associated with The Christopher Street Connection (alongside Buff E, Mace Mendoza, Fun Athletic Guy and Chris Cabana)
* initially and thus a perfect match for Glinda, but it isn't long before his more sensitive, activist side begins to emerge. He never clearly tells Glinda that he isn't the same party animal that he used to be, and as a result, she doesn't (or wills herself not to) see that he's no longer in love with her.
* initially at least) having a cast page split between "spoilers" and "not spoilers".
* Initially averted completely with Fleur, their daughter who inherited her mother's looks, and her fiancé Bill Weasley, who is actually pretty handsome. Later downplayed when he's slashed in the face in battle by a werewolf, and its curse means
* Initially averted: the first victim of a zombie is mauled to death, but did not transform into one himself. However, his body remained infectious, so the people who unknowingly ate his flesh later died and reanimated.
* Initially averted with Kurenai in the first series as she is known as the Jounin teacher of Hinata, Kiba, and Shino without any mentions of her being this status because of the influence of a male. Only for Shippuden to later play this straight as she is demoted from a teacher into Asuma's lover as she retires from her role as a ninja in favor of being a non-action mother with Shikamaru in charge of protecting her. Exactly what her father intended for her to be. Any role she had as a teacher for Team 8 is completely forgotten as Kakashi takes care of them now from start to finish.
* Initially, Bernie Sanders was pegged as the frontrunner and expected party nominee during the Democratic Primaries. After his surprisingly strong performance in the 2016 primaries against Hillary Clinton, many thought that Sanders would win with his populism and class struggle message earning the support of working-class whites, impoverished minorities and younger voters. Furthermore, Sanders was at the time benefitting from expanded name recognition and improved funding compared to his 2016 run. However, despite initial successes in Iowa and New Hampshire, Sanders lost ground to Biden, who made a comeback following the South Carolina primary and later won most of the delegates during "Super Tuesday". Sanders ultimately underperformed in many states that he previously won in 2016, like Michigan, leading to him conceding the election. A post-election analysis revealed that Sanders' support outside of the "ethnic white", "college town" and Latino demographics was much weaker compared to the 2016 primary, suggesting that the pro-Sanders vote among working-class whites and young voters had been more of a reactionary anti-Clinton vote.
* Initially, Conan, stuck in the body of a kid, has to overcome the problem that nobody ever

* Initially, Hector believes that he died of food poisoning (by eating chorizo, which is a Mexican pork sausage and [because of its thickness] Mexican slang for male genitalia, which makes him a laughingstock) until it's revealed that he was poisoned to death by his own childhood friend Ernesto de la Cruz.
* Initially, it looked like 2012 runner-up Clint Bowyer was going to avert this for 2013, as he was second in points for a big chunk of the regular season. However, his central role in Spingate and the subsequent media hounding got him out of sorts enough that his driving suffered in the Chase - although he got six top tens in the Chase, only two of those (third at Martinsville, fifth at Homestead) were better than ninth, and that was enough to keep him from seriously contending for the Cup, ultimately finishing seventh. It also didn't help that, much like Mark Martin, Jeff Gordon and all three of Carl Edwards' letdown seasons before him, he failed to win a single race.
* Initially it seems subverted with Vinsmoke Reiju to her third brother
* Initially Ivy was written as being unapproachable, too concerned with her routine to
* Initially just volunteering herself as part of the ritual because she can't imagine life without Harry, Hermione becomes aware that she’s subconsciously thought of Harry as attractive for years before they finally admit that they love each other in Chapter 14.
* Initially, Natsu is portrayed as this because although the whole guild tends to cause huge amounts of collateral damage,
* initially of a player beating one of the hardest bosses in the game using only that wooden sword and Ryu's kick attack.
* Initially played dead straight in the first manga: Mamiya's deep-seated needs to win at all things and always be the master of her emotions causes her to seize femininity with both hands, literally demanding her classmates regard her as a girl when she returns to school. Deconstructed later when she breaks down in front of her chief rival/best friend Miyoshi and reveals her bravado is just a brave front she put up because most of her male self-image was tied up in being the best at physical things she can no longer do thanks to some concealed
* Initially played straight by Aang himself, having survived inside an iceberg for a full century, but the
* Initially played straight with Drax and Gamora who had near permanent frowns on their faces just like the comics, but thanks to Star-Lord they both brighten up immensely. Drax in particular despite his
* Initially, Ranma completely hated wearing girls' clothes in female form, though he occasionally ended up in them anyway. Eventually, he becomes very quick to dress up and pretend to be feminine, either as part of a disguise or to take advantage of people who don't know his true nature. He
* initially refuses to Ascend due to wanting to show Equestria what a unicorn can do, but eventually he caves due to familial pressure and becomes an Alicorn. The author, Kudzuhaiku, confirms that Shining is immortal - when Cadance ascended him, she put in a sliver of Celestia's soul into her husband.
* Initially rumored by fans before being more or less confirmed by the
* Initially subverted but ultimately played straight with Twilight. While Luna appoints her "General of the Armies of Equestria" about halfway through the story, she's still so traumatized by her time as * initially tasted like urine or toilet-bowl cleaner, until Mrs. Cade suggested adding lemon juice and cyclamate to the recipe.
* Initially, the only product Earth has to offer that an alien species is willing to buy is maple syrup... and for the aliens in question the syrup is like a fine malt whiskey mixed with heroin.
* Initially the White Council distrusted Harry because he killed his mentor with magic, which is against the First Law of Magic. In reality, it was self-defense since said mentor was planning on mind-controlling Harry (as he'd already done to his other student) and attacked with intent to kill when Harry discovered his plan and tried to escape. The White Council was more than willing to ignore these mitigating factors and kill Harry until one of the senior Council members vouched for him; after that, his sentence was commuted to the "Doom of Damocles" which amounts to probation, with a very eager and distrusting probation officer.

* Initially, this is how Shaggy and Velma were envisioned in the earliest
* Initially though, the Goths were allowed to settle in Roman territories by the Emperor in exchange for military service, however they were repeatedly screwed over by corrupt Roman officials until they rebelled.
* Initially, Tyrion fell in love with a girl named Tysha until his father intervened. Later, Tyrion feels this way about Shae until she testifies against him.
* Initially used as a reference to the doomsday clock, the Comedian’s smiley face becomes it’s own independent recurring symbol in the latter parts of the story.
* Initially, with Mr. Hooper, for episodes that aired in the winter and spring of 1983; this included episodes that had been completed prior to Will Lee's final illness, and also episodes that either had reruns of previous Street scenes featuring Hooper from the early 1980s
* Initially with Suzaku and Euphemia, but having their respective masquerades broken allowed them both to genuinely get to know each other.
* Initially, Wonder Woman would lose her superhuman strength if her magic belt was removed from her uniform. Similarly, she possessed no resistance to chloroform, which conveniently made its way into a number of Season 1 episodes. When the show was moved to the 1970s, the former weakness was addressed only once (and only then when she willingly removed her belt, lasso, and bracelets to assure an enemy that she did not wish to fight him), and the chloroform was used far less often.
* Initially, Xavier does not help because of the future mumbo-jumbo, which he did not believe, but because of Raven.
* Initially, you can only terraform worlds within the same climate/moisture range (arid to desert, continental to tropical, arctic to tundra, etc). Researching another tech allows you to terraform between climate ranges. The third terraforming tech allows you to terraform tomb worlds
* initiates a plan so that he can kill off Ryan, Ray, Geoff and Kerry and split the money between himself, Gavin and Lindsay.
* Initiation Ceremony: A ceremony that permits the participant to enter an organization
* Initiation Ceremony with the force of the violence and Champion passed out from his injuries shortly after and died on the way to the hospital.
* Initiation Shepard says that a "a decent sized ship, even used, costs hundreds of thousands of credits" (a credit is roughly to them what a USD is to us).
* Initiation: the Hero learns to navigate the unfamiliar world of adventure.
* In "It Isn't the Mane Thing About You", Rarity's mane gets ruined after Pinkie accidentally covers her and the bakery in crazy string and she ends up using remover potion on her mane. Near the end of the episode, Rarity develops a punk look. When she and Pinkie Pie meet again, Pinkie notices something different about her and asks she got a new hoof polish.
* In it, Ocelot's betrayal habit is played for laughs, explaining that he has an actual disease called Chronic Backstabbing Disorder and needs an inhaler-like device to suppress it temporarily. In the meantime, woe betide anyone who bends down to pick up a penny in his presence (as Liquid Snake found out).
* In its 2009 general election when the DPJ's perceived inexperience (and possibly also the Fukushima nuclear disaster) allowed the LDP to be voted back into power.
* In "It's About Time" she's trying to sneak into a forbidden section of the library and is blocked by the door, forgetting she can teleport. She's then let in by one of the guards, because she
* In "It's About Time", Twilight Sparkle is scanning the skies with a telescope. She accidentally looks directly into the sun and is blinded in one eye. She has to wear an eye-patch for the rest of the episode so her eye can heal.
* In "It's About Time", Twilight Sparkle's dead-serious proclamation of incoming doom comes close to being ignored due to the Groucho Marx glasses she's wearing due to a collision with a metric ton of party-supplies.

* In "It's About Time", Twilight starts panicking when she realizes that she scheduled her next month so thoroughly she left no room to schedule the month after that. By the end of the episode, she learns not to worry so much about the future and just deal with events when they come.
* In "It's About Time!", when Phineas, Ferb, and Candace are lost in prehistoric times, they recreate their time machine's blueprint on a slab in the museum so the Fireside Girls can recreate it in the present. Phineas leaves off the "m" in "time", so the girls end up building a tie machine instead.
* In its alpha days, before becoming the household name it is today,
* In "It's A Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad Marge", Marge suspects that Becky is going to kill her. When she can't get to sleep one night, she is startled by the door opening. She sees Becky's shadow holding a gun, but she's only returning Marge's hairdryer. She also returns her brush, which casts a shadow of a knife.
* In "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad Marge" (originally aired in 2000), each student in Bart's class is given a video camera for a school project to create a movie. As soon as he hands over the cameras, Skinner immediately says he doesn't want to see "30
* In "It's a SpongeBob Christmas!", Plankton invents a fruitcake with a chemical known as Jerktonium, which causes anyone who eats it to become a naughty Christmas-hating jerk. Surprisingly, the Jerktonium has no effect on SpongeBob,
* In its broadest sense, any player who has $0 or a negative cash score at the end of the "Double Jeopardy!" round ends his participation in the show early (i.e., he's not around for "Final Jeopardy!"). However, at least once on the original NBC series — the late 1960s, by most accounts — the trope truly kicked into full effect when all three players had negative cash scores and thus were ineligible for "Final Jeopardy!" No "Final Jeopardy!" was played that day, and Art Fleming spent the rest of the time talking with the contestants and the audience. The standard "game over" is with all three players participating in "Final Jeopardy!" More common than this is when every remaining contestant bets everything on "Final Jeopardy!" and gets it wrong- in these situations, while the game does run its normal length, there is still no winner and the next game is played with three new contestants.
* In its classic form, one episode features a doctor gaining the sisters' powers via blood transfusion and
* In its earlier days, Game Show Network loved this trope, especially for holidays.
* In its earlier stages of development, the Solar System had a lot of debris floating around crashing into each other and eventually forming the inner planets. The Late Heavy Bombardment was the final cleanup of this debris by the inner planets absorbing them via impacts, the craters of which can still be seen on the Moon, Mercury, and Mars
* In its earliest appearances, Eevee was often mentioned to be a very rare Pokémon and was even implied to be extinct in the wild in
* In its early days, one of the initial controversies that arose from
* In its early days thanks to its positive attributes like empathy, creativity, and freedom becoming more prominent, while Blue's sociopathic and deceptive traits and White's dogmatic and tyrannical side are both played up.
* In its early days, TNA played host to a group called The Flying Elvises, a trio of high-risk wrestlers who were also Elvis impersonators. Mind you, the Flying Elvises used the gimmick in the indies as well.
* In its early run, it had some animations that made the characters seem off and other animations that were clearly recycled for when characters repeated a physical action several times. For the former, the animations were limited on the mouth when characters talked but it greatly improved as the series went on. For the latter, an example of this can be seen in the episode "I am Peter, Hear Me Roar" where in one scene, a group of elderly people are watching soft core porn and one of the men punches his crotch several times to "wake up" his penis so it can get erect. One of the ladies next to him glances to the man when he hits his crotch, but her eyes dart back to the TV screen when the man pulls his fist back, and then they fall back to the man when he punches his crotch again. You can see the lady's eyes twitching back and forth between the man and the TV as the punching animation plays over and over. Cases like these faded as the series went on. But as a compromise, everyone became stiffer, stuck in 3/4 view, and their movements looked like they were trapped in an eternal fast-forward and overall lacked the fluidity of the older episodes.

* In its fifth series, Tiswas also had a Scottish circus entertainer by the name of
* In its first appearance, it offers psychiatric advice; after Fozzie deposits a coin, Vendaface asks for another, and then
* In its first three series, the arena featured spikes that would pop out of the floor to attack a robot from below. The idea was to attack robots from underneath, where they weren't always armoured, and mess around with the electronics. In practice, however, many robots
* In "It's Good to be the Queen," Stan is mentioning all the great things that he has in his life, and mentions "a
* In its grand tradition of never doing anything subtle, they're build in sizes that put everyone else on this page to shame, with windows alone being the size of the Empire State Building. Cannons aren't any smaller, though they notably
* In "It's Hummer Time", a cat trying to catch a hummingbird keeps running afoul of a
* In its' later years, it became the Fox Box, which then became 4KidsTV. The former is also notable for airing a short lived English dub of
* In "It's Made of Cheese!", Harry and Charley have one about whether the moon is made of cheese or peanut butter, with Harry advocating the former and Sam the latter. When Sid tells them it's made of rocks, they decide to travel there themselves to find out once and for all what it's made of. It turns out that none of them are right, and that Steggy instead got it right— it's made of chocolate chip cookies.
* In its most popular form, the karambit can be attached to one's hand by means of fitting a finger through a hole in the pommel.
* In "It's My Party (And I'll Cry If I Want To)," the narrator is devastated when her boyfriend Johnny shows up at her birthday party with their classmate Judy. "Oh, what a birthday surprise/Judy's wearing his ring!"
* In "It's My Party", sung by Lesley Gore, the singer's boyfriend steps out during her birthday party to propose to someone else.
* In "It's Not Lupus", a one-shot set before the above-mentioned accident, she assumes that it's her fault that Molly suddenly fell ill, despite the fact that she had nothing to do with Molly's illness.
* in its original state set in the setting's present day, after the devastations of the Brothers' War, the Ice Age, the floods and storms that came with its thaw and various other minor and major cataclysms have caused the continent to fracture into an archipelago, showing the locations of both newer settlements and areas and the ruins of ones wrecked, abandoned or flooded over history.
* in its panic, heads towards the metriacanthosaurs' paddock and ends up destroying a section of its fence, allowing the pack of predators to escape. While the Indominus is attacking the safari truck in which the Mitchell brothers and other visitors are, the metriacanthosaurs attacks a herd and trigger a stampede. Hearing said stampede while she is facing off the mounted grey guards, the Indominus retreats and the riders and the truck are soon caught in the stampede.
* In its second arc, Rosa Ushiromiya does the same thing as her sister-in-law Natsuhi in order to protect her daughter Maria. (Even more noticeable since Rosa is an
* In its second Christmas episode: "The Pharaoh awoke the very next day / Wearing an outfit that made him look — erm — handsome."
* In its second season, Alya and Nino are drafted to aid the heroes on two separate occasions as Rena Rouge and Carapace. In "Catalyst", Ladybug recruits them together, leading them to learn each other's secret identities (though it's implied Alya already knew Nino was Carapace. Definitely counts for Nino, though.)

* In its sequel The Chosen, Caleb has the same handprint engraved right on his
* In "It's spooky month", Skid is introduced sitting in a dark room lit only by a computer screen, slowly swivels his chair to face the viewer with an eerie smile and stare, only for the lights to instantly turn on and he loudly starts goofing off.
* In 'It's Still Billy Joel To Me": "It's a big hit, isn't it, even if it's a piece of junk..."
* In "It's the Wrong Torg, Grommit!" the protagonists have some issues with random dimensional travel, especially when parallel dimensions with parallel events start interacting. At the end, Riff and Zoë have to wonder whether the Torg who shows up through a dimensional portal is really their version of him. At first they think it's not, because he goes to
* In its true form, it appears as a young woman, much like Perpell. There is a reason for this.
* In its unaired and unedited form, Zords were originally called Droids.
* In "It's Your Funeral", some of the prisoners (who call themselves "jammers") invent and circulate nonexistent conspiracies against the people who run the Village, forcing them to waste time and effort sifting through the chaff for any wheat that might exist.
* In "It Takes a Village," the detectives realize that a serial killer is at work when the body of his fourth victim — a young African-American boy, like the others — is discovered. His enraged grandmother suggests that had the cops handled the other cases properly, her grandson might still be alive, while the parents of one boy angrily describe the other cops as insinuating that their son had run off with a gang. Race is never mentioned, but it's obvious that the relatives feel it played a factor.
* In "It Takes Goo to Make a Feud Go Right", Olympia, Otis and Ms. O settle things with Queen Goo and King Berry...just before Ms. O realizes that she invited a
* In "It Was Them", Ben as Rath gets mobbed by mutant ants but Rook saves him with a by slipping free. Right after the save, he gets mobbed again until he pulls a beats them off
* In "Ivan", the Skeleton Key was stolen not by the titular hacker, but by
* In "I've Got You Under My Skin," each line of lyrics is dictated by Freberg to the chorus. When he starts forgetting what the lyrics are, they dutifully sing lines like, "Oh, darn it, what are those words?"
* In Ivy's (banned) "Temptation of Sonata" music video, as a reenactment of Tifa and Loz's fight in
* In "I Want a Surprise", it's a bit unclear whether the Princess pretended to be asleep after waking up in the night and then sneaked out when everyone had gone to bed, or if sneaking out was her plan all along and she didn't fall asleep until afterwards.
* In "I Want My Potty", Princess screams while having a tantrum on getting her potty for the first time, because she thinks potties are worse than diapers.
* In "I Want to Be a Detective", Princess thinks Puss took her cookies because there was a crumb on his whisker, but really it was Scruff.
* In "I Want to Be a Detective", the Princess plays detective to figure out who took her cookies she helped make.
* In "I Want to Be a Pirate", the Princess plays pranks on the adults while pretending to be a pirate, annoying them. She then gets put off being a pirate when the Maid has her "swab the deck" (clean the hallway), the Chef serves her cold fish stew, and the Gardener has her dig for "treasure" that is actually potatoes. They may have been deliberately putting her off being a pirate, but on the other hand, why would the Gardener be doing that, since he wasn't pranked? It's possible that her being put off being a pirate was just a side effect of their
* In "I Want to Go to the Fair", the Princess, due to sulking from her
* In "I Was a Middle-Aged Robot", when Lawrence accidentally gets his memories erased, Perry the Platypus must pilot a suit shaped like his body to take Lawrence's place during a father-daughter sporting event while Carl the Intern works on getting Lawrence's memories back.

* In "I Was a Teenage Gary", SpongeBob is accidentally injected with snail plasma by Squidward to cure his pet snail, Gary. Squidward ensures SpongeBob that he'll be fine, and he believes him. But the next day, he starts exhibiting snail-like behavior, including meowing, eating snail food, and walking slowly. His fears are turned into reality as he goes through the gradual transformation into a snail.
* In "I Was A Teenage Gary", the snail plasma injection causes SpongeBob to turn into a snail-sea sponge hybrid. Ditto for Squidward.
* In "I Was Made to Love You," when Buffy returns from a party at the Bronze, Giles suggests he not watch Dawn alone anymore because he can't take much more exposure to the habits of a young teenager. Buffy remarks that her night didn't go so well either, since it consisted of watching a robot
* In "Iznogoud's Childhood", Wa'at Alahf asks him his motivations for being Caliph in the place of the Caliph:
* In I, Zombie Endless, if the player starts a new streak but they only have 0 or 25 sun or the above case happens, the losing message will say "You made it into the streak of {number of streaks completed}." This is the same as Vasebreaker: Endless if the number of seed packets are not enough to complete a streak or all of them are disappeared. When a zombie reaches the player's house in Vasebreaker: Endless, however, the message mentioned before will display instead of the generic game over message ("THE ZOMBIES ATE YOUR BRAINS!!!") followed by the "GAME OVER" dialog box, and only the game over music will play. The biting sound, however, will not play.
* In "Jack and the Haunted House", Jack encounters a little girl and defends her from a shadow-like monster. He also frees the girl's family and doesn't leave until the monster tormenting her is destroyed.
* In "Jack and the Hunters", there were the Imakandi, the greatest trackers and hunters in the galaxy. After Aku approaches them with the offer to hunt Jack, absolutely nothing the hero does can stop their pursuit or lose them for more than a few seconds. They chase him from a city's sewers to its very highest point until finally bringing him down; fortunately for Jack, they regard it as the greatest hunt of their lives, and as such, refuse to turn him over to Aku.
* In "Jack and the Travelling Creatures", Jack's battle with The Guardian begins as a swordfight. Then The Guardian disarms him. Jack grabs a spear and The Guardian discards his sword for a pair of sai. They disarm each other. Jack grabs a pair of shields and The Guardian answers with a machine gun and grenades. Jack deflects one of The Guardian's grenades and
* In Jack Chalker's "Four Lords of the Diamond" novels humanity discovers a solar system with
* In Jack Finney's short story "Behind the News", a newspaper man uses a melted-down meteor
* in Jack Harkness' first appearance, he and the Doctor have a bit of a conflict around their respective tools — Jack has the very flashy sonic blaster, which can cut holes into walls and do all sorts of cool things, against which the Doctor's sonic screwdriver, which Jack derides as able to "put up some shelves", looks a lot less impressive. Except that Jack's flashy sonic blaster has a very quickly drained battery which, since the factory that produced both blaster and batteries has now been blown up (and replaced with a banana grove), renders it a flashy paperweight when the battery runs out, while the sonic screwdriver is frequently shown to be useful and reliable.
* In "Jack in Egypt" there were the Minions of Set, a trio of implacable demons. They attack swiftly, brutally and relentlessly. They do not tire and can heal from any injuries instantly. They do not stop to gloat; they do not give their victims a chance to gather their senses, power up, or otherwise prepare any kind of counter. They never stop attacking for an instant until their prey is either out of sight or dead. And even if you manage to get away, their super-senses will track you down before you even catch your breath. Jack ends up having to call upon the power of a
* In "Jack in the Box", a man is found dead in his nuclear bomb shelter, locked from the inside. Suicide...except he was arthritic and couldn't hold a gun. The solution:

* In "Jack is Naked", Samurai Jack spends most of the episode chasing after what he thinks is a white rabbit that stole his clothes and sword. After he gets his stuff back, he learns that they were really stolen by an orphan girl with a bunny backpack who only stole his belongings because she was desperate for something she could sell for food money. When the girl states that she figured Jack's clothes and sword were more valuable than robot slug tusks, Jack helps the girl out by retrieving a pair of robot slug tusks. The girl thanks Jack and assures him that now she'll never go hungry again.
* In Jack McKinney's tie-in novels, Earth mecha have a similar system, the Thinking Cap. Said system is not present in the series, as shown in all sagas (where the control systems are seen multiple times) and outright stated in the second saga (when the traditional controls are contrasted with the Bioroid's).
* In "Jack's Sandals", Jack meets a traditional Japanese family, whose children are huge fans of Jack. The son quotes the theme song, even going "Wah-chout!"
* In Jack Vance's short story "We'll Build Your Dream Castle", retreats for the super-rich are built on a few dozen chunks of super-dense matter in orbit near Earth.
* In "Jack Wabbit and the Beanstalk," Bugs takes his gloves off and slaps the giant's face, challenging him to a duel.
* In "Jacob and Jesse", the aliens create an image of the title character of the children's book
* In "Jacob and the Widgets", Teela defeats Mer-Man and ties him up with rope. However, as soon as someone blabs the location of the coridite, which Mer-Man was trying to steal, he effortlessly snaps the ropes and runs toward it.
* In "Jailbreak", Plankton, who is imprisoned after yet another failed attempt at stealing the Krabby Patty Formula, concocts a plan with a few other inmates to break out.
* In "Jake the Dad", Jake and Lady's offspring were born, then became old enough to take care of themselves, going back to the status quo with Jake living with Finn again.
* In "Jake the Dog", Jake has a hot tub party with Prismo the Wishmaster, who transcends time and space, and the Cosmic Owl, a godlike figure who always appears in premonition dreams.
* In "Jakovasaurs", the town stages a fake game show for Jakov to "win" the prize of airfare to somewhere that isn't South Park. The problem is that Jakov is too dumb to win a contest that's rigged in his favor, and Officer Barbrady is
* In "Jalebi's Birthday", after Samosa gives Jalebi the microphone to his jukebox so that she can say something to everyone attending her birthday party, the crowd of attendees cheers her on, chanting "Ja-le-bi! Ja-le-bi!"
* In "James Ernest's Totally Renamed Spy Game" (originally named "Before I Kill You, Mister Bond" before
* In James Patrick Kelly's novelette "Think Like a Dinosaur", reptilian aliens give us teleportation, but insist on "balancing the equation" (destroying the original afterward) or they'll cut us off from the network. Normally the original is unconscious, but one is revived after the teleport is mistakenly believed to have failed, invoking this trope in full.
* In James Patrick Kelly's novellette "Undone", the time-traveling protagonist is trapped by an "identity mine" that keeps hovering five minutes pastward of her.
* In James Patrick Kelly's story "Solstice," one of the main characters does this.
* In James P. Hogan's 1979 novel "The Two Faces of Tomorrow", set in 2028, the (non-sentient but adaptive) computers which do much work in the world start to get a little too unpredictably creative in their problem-solving, and mankind begins to worry about the trend. So as a remote isolated laboratory, they set up their most advanced computer as the nerve center of a new orbiting space habitat, to see what would happen if they pushed it to its limits by constantly thwarting its list of goals. In the course of continually adapting to the challenges, the computer develops sentience, and is scarily efficient at dealing with anything that seems to be an obstacle.
* In James Roberts and John Barber's run, the role is given to Onyx Prime. He's responsible for a great many things that happen over the course of the series, both good and bad. Garrison Blackrock, the Headmasters, Chela, the Talisman, Eukaris, the Axalon and its crew, Galvatron and Arcee, the Dark Cybertron Prophecy, the Torchbearers, Infraspace, and the Beastformer army were all either indirectly created by his machinations or served him directly. Then it's revealed that, through a complicated series of

* In James Robinson's arc, a scientist who calls himself the Quiet Man embarks on a massive plan to tear the FF apart, capturing Reed with the intent of framing him for an alien invasion of Earth. Why? Because the Quiet Man had been madly in love with Sue in college but never got the courage to ask her out before Reed did and had wanted payback ever since. Even Reed points out how incredibly stupid that is.
* In James Tiptree Jr.'s short story "The Screwfly Solution", a mysterious plague spreads outward from the equator, turning male sexual urges into murderous violence against women. The protagonist speculates this is meant to depopulate the Earth so aliens can move in after humanity has died out.
* In "Jane Doe", Torg freaks out after seeing Oasis in a hospital, followed by this exchange:
* In January 1925, when a diphtheria epidemic struck the children of Nome, Alaska, weather conditions made it impossible to fly in the nearest supply of antitoxin. Instead, twenty sled-dog teams relayed it across 674 miles of brutal Arctic wilderness in
* In January 1941, the British aircraft carrier HMS Illustrious was being bombed to destruction by Axis aircraft. Throughout most of the engagement, the ship's resident Admiral stood on the exposed "goofing station" on the ship's bridge, bellowing defiance at the German and Italian bombers and yelling encouragement to the few British aircraft who were up there trying to fight them off.
* In January 1988, a riot broke out in the Tamil Nadu state assembly over who should be the chief minister. It ended when police stormed the legislature and beat up everybody with their batons. On top of that, the state was placed under direct federal control for a year.
* In January 2010, a 28-year-old man ran past security at Newark Liberty International Airport to kiss his girlfriend before her flight took off..
* In January 2010, a group of American Baptists were caught attempting to take 33 Haitian children across the border into the Dominican republic, despite their protests and requests to be taken to their parents and relatives.
* In January 2014, after President Obama's State of the Union address, a TV reporter tried to ask NY congressman Michael Grimm about allegations regarding his campaign financing, but Grimm walked off, refusing to answer. Moments later, Grimm walked back, saying to the reporter "Let me be clear to you, you ever do that to me again, I'll throw you off this
* In January 2018, the state of Hawaii was erroneously given an alert that a missile was headed towards them. It took 30 minutes for them to declare it a false alarm. State officials blame a worker who pushed the wrong button.
* In January 2020, the head of San Francisco's Public Works Department (Mohammed "Mr. Clean" Nuru) and restaurant owner Nick Bovis
* In January 2021, all Discovery-owned channels began displaying a persistent, opaque ad in the top-right of the screen for the Discovery+ streaming service.
* In January of 2018, a display monitor on the Northern State Parkway warned of coming blizzards over the weekend. Unfortunately, the 'B' in 'blizzards' burned out,
* In Japan and Italy, if you pre-ordered them both, you'd also get an Arceus figure. Whilst game shops in the US and UK didn't do this, a special Trading Card Game set was released stateside that contained the Arceus figure.
* In Japan, an exclusive commercial was shown at the end of the premiere of the episode "Pups Bearly Save Danny; Pups Save The Mayor's Tulips".
* In Japan, cases such as these are known for splintering companies. Most famous being Shooto and Fighting Network RINGS out of the
* In Japan, certain martial arts are considered highly compatible with
* In Japan, CGI animation is normally restricted for animating non-living stuff, like vehicles, ships, robots, etc. And sometimes, some animation studios like

* In Japan couples often share an umbrella because it gives them an excuse to get close to each other without making a scene in public.
* In Japanese, 親王 means "prince" (the Emperor's son). 内親王 means "princess" (the Emperor's daughter), with 内 ("inside") having the long forgotten connotation of "a proper lady has to stay inside her room all the time". A 親王's son is also a 親王, but his daughter is specifically a 女王 (which is commonly translated by dictionaries as "queen", but in the context of the Japanese imperial family, it means "princess").
* In Japanese, "Ai" means love but it can also mean "grief/sorrow" when written differently.
* In Japanese, Ashley's voice actress Ayaka Fukuhara gives her a cute, innocent voice (complete with
* In Japanese Buddhism, the bodhisattva Jizo is the protector of the unborn, who rescues their souls from the torments of limbo.
* In Japanese Buddhist folklore, a superstition to prevent children from lying is that if you do so, the King of Hell, Enma (based on the Hindu god Yama), will cut your tongue.
* In Japanese folklore there are monsters called Nukekubi; they seem like normal humans during the day, but in the night their head detaches from their bodies and starts to float around and search for a human victim to devour.
* In Japanese folklore, there is a tale about Urashima Taro who, after rescuing a turtle who was a princess in disguise, he is taken by said princess to her castle, where they spend supposedly three years together there. When Urashima asks the princess to let him go back to the surface to see his friends and family again, she gives him a box that must never be opened. When the young fisherman tries to see his family, he is told that they died
* In Japanese Kabuki, purple makeup is used to identify the character as a royal or a nobleman.
* In Japanese Kabuki theatre, an entire army is often represented by a single actor carrying a banner.
* In Japanese media, paper-flower vendors are stereotypical emblems of hard times, indicating that someone is one step away from beggary.
* In Japanese, she says "Daijoubanai" conjugating the noun Daijoubu (everything is okay) into a negative form even though the word doesn't work that way.
* In Japanese she's very fond of ending her sentences with "janaika" (basically instead of saying "X is Y" she says "Isn't X Y?!")...mostly because its last two kana are "ika", i.e. "squid", "de geso."
* In Japanese, single-panel comic strips were, and in some places still are, known as "
* In Japanese the word "houkouonchi" literally means "directionally tone-deaf", and is used more idiomatically to call someone an idiot.
* In Japan, "Fortune bags" are a common method for retailers to get rid of unsold stock, packaged in mystery bags at a discounted price.
* In Japan Frog Sashimi is served with the heart still beating (also considered a delicacy).
* In Japan, it's acceptable to show a flower falling off its stem or branch as a metaphor for a woman being deflowered.
* In Japan, it's also customary to refer to a barkeep as "master," out of respect.
* In Japan, it's a trend for girls to cut their hair short after getting rejected from a love confession. So they cut their hair as a sign that they got over it and moved on.
* In Japan, it's traditionally believed that one can gauge a person's soul by looking into their eyes. This proved to be a problem after the war, when the American naval officers, in particular General MacArthur, kept wearing sunglasses. This tended to unnerve the Japanese. Naturally, this has changed over the last half a century.
* In Japan it went from Stage 1 to Stage 5 virtually overnight. However, the fad faded and it became some version of Stage 6. Attempts at reviving interest in the anime have been mixed.

* In Japan, most prices end with 80. As in, it's not 1,000 yen, it's 980. (That's about $10 US if you're wondering.) This is probably because the number 8 is considered lucky in Japanese culture, while 9 and
* In Japan, otherwise purely electronics stores also sell ties and umbrellas. In Japan, Britain and probably many other places, it's common for every shop to suddenly start selling umbrellas and furry hats as soon as it starts raining or snowing heavily,
* In Japan, people from Tokyo stereotype people from the Kansai region, such as Osaka, to be this. While Tokyo is a serene utopia wherein
* In Japan, "Pups Save Christmas" aired on September 21, 2019, likely due to the channel airing the episodes in production order like TV Ontario does.
* In Japan, the 1947 revision of the Imperial House Law made all the collateral lines of the Imperial family into commoners — if you're not a direct-line descendant of Emperor Hirohito or one of his brothers, you aren't a possible candidate for the Chrysanthemum Throne. Female children in the Imperial family are also required to become commoners once they marry, so none of their children are candidates. Oh, and that revision
* In Japan, the aforementioned outliers started to get so popular that they solicited cries of "clone" to other series on their own. Dark
* In Japan there are several prefectures that share their names with their capital cities. Osaka, Kyoto, and Fukuoka (the last of which is a clue to the location of the
* In Japan, there are sometimes live shows for children done using costumes that look like the actual anime characters called "kigurumi" or "animegao" that are usually 30 minutes in length.
* In Japan, there's a whole song sung by famous anime singer Masato Shimon devoted to this trope pretty much. "Swim! Taiyaki-kun" is about a fish pastry who comes alive, rebels against the chef who baked him, fools around in the ocean, and eventually is eaten by an old fisherman. It's listed in Guinness 2009 as Japan's best selling single.
* In Japan, the standard character popsicle is one that comes with some sort of sticker or trading card based on the series rather than being shaped like one of the characters.
* In Japan, this is considered a somewhat milder insult than in the West. As a result, this shows up a lot more often than one would expect.
* In Japan, TV Tokyo uses the 10:00AM hour on Saturdays for this purpose, as most children have left to do activities with their families by then. The
* In Japan, UFO Catcher—a specific type of claw machine developed by
* In Japan, Valentine's Day was commercially imported from the West by chocolate/candy companies, where the idea is for girls to give gifts of chocolate to guys they like. This idea is so popular and
* In Japan, video game advertising is far more visible and frequent than the US, with commercials conveying the type of story and music involved, and showing actual gameplay instead of some vaguely funny skit and a title.
* In "Jared Has Aides", the boys fatten up Butters with food from the local Chinese restaurant trying to follow Jared Fogle's fame. Butters gained enough weight to make a deal with the restaurant owner. Butters couldn't lose any weight, so the boys perform liposuction themselves.
* In Jason's backstory, Alfred Pennyworth died of old age. Both of the remaining Waynes at the time (Jason and Cassandra Cain) knew it was coming for a while, which did not help
* In "Jasper Learns to Bake," the other staff of Butterbean's Cafe have to tell Jasper several times that, yes, they will let him learn to bake before it finally sinks in.
* In "Jaynestown", Simon and Kaylee get drunk in a bar and are woken up the following morning by Mal, who finds them in a compromising position. Later, Kaylee is talking about when they made love, causing Simon to burst out with a panicked

"When we did what...?!". It turns out Kaylee was teasing him — nothing happened between them that night.
* inject a microscopic Sniffles and his submarine into Giggles' body so he can try to cure her body for the rest of the episode.
* Injection Fairy Lily is a cute and friendly-looking nurse (albeit one holding a huge syringe). If her Effect is used, her Attack Score rises to 3,400, stronger than Blue-Eyes White Dragon.
* Injection Fairy Lily looks friendlier, but is no less deadly. If the player pays 2,000 Life Points during a battle, her Attack Score rises by 3,000 points, making her strong enough to defeat even a Blue-Eyes White Dragon.
* In "Jeers for Fears", Lynn dresses up in this combo again when scaring Lincoln and Clyde.
* In "Jeeves Takes Charge", the story where Bertie hires him, Bertie is faced with a dilemma: Florence won't marry him unless he steals his uncle's memoirs, to keep them from being published, and he's dependent on that uncle for his money.
* In "Jeffy Goes Bowling!", Mario plans to take Rosalina to the bowling alley for a tournament to win $5,000.00 after seeing a commercial for it on TV. When Jeffy breaks Rosalina's arm, Mario takes Jeffy to the bowling alley, where they compete against Brooklyn T. Guy and his wife, Karen. Mario discovers that Jeffy can make perfect strikes blindfolded, while Brooklyn tries to cheat by hiring a guy behind the pins to knock them over with a broom whenever Karen bowls.
* In "Jeffy's Bedtime!", Jeffy is revealed to sleep in a toddler bed with a Minnie Mouse bedspread (the same one seen in the aforementioned "Bowser Junior's Summer School!" video) and wear matching Minnie Mouse pajamas.
* In "Jeffy's Homework!", When it comes to math, Jeffy thinks 2+2=2 because it makes a baby 2, 8-4=8 because the four is taken away, and 0+0=2 because there are two zeroes who don't love each other. It even causes him to go into a swearing fit and suddenly become more eloquent and curse his diaper, helmet, and pencil, as well as several scientists while claiming that his answers are right.
* In "Jeffy's Stupid Home Video!", Jeffy thinks he's trapped inside Mario's camera after Mario shows him a video he filmed of him swinging from the ceiling fan. In an attempt to get himself out of the camera, he flushes it down the toilet, destroying the camera as a result.
* In "Jeffy's Tantrum!", Mario whacks Jeffy with a belt for throwing the couch and TV off the balcony.
* In "Jellyfishing", SpongeBob and Patrick give a full body cast-covered Squidward a jellyfish as a get-well present, as a way of apologizing for the trouble and havoc they caused him the previous day.
* In "Jellyfishing", Squidward explodes after falling down a cliff on his
* In "Jellyfish Jam", Gary tapping his eyeballs creates a rhythm that calms the jellyfish down. Later the jellies play their tentacles like guitar strings while bubbles, burping treasure chests, chains, dolphins, and clams provide ambiance.
* In Jenna Ni'Fairra's home in Tir Tairngire, there's a painting of her that "felt
* In "Jenny Fromdabloc", Stan repeatedly blacks out after drinking strong martinis, and he becomes convinced that Francine is a witch. During one of his blackouts, Stan dreams of Francine in the title sequence for
* In "Jenny's Chance", Mac organizes a gambling sting operation in order to catch the murderer of a horse trainer, a money launderer for a Cuban drug lord.
* In "Jeopardy," a triple murderer accepts a plea deal for the maximum if McCoy doesn't prosecute his mother
* In "Jeremy", Oswald and Orla attempt to shift the Mobile Unit van from lockdown mode to its regular mode. Oswald begins reading the van's manual to find a way to turn the mode off, but Orla, being the
* In "Jerky Turkey," the screwball turkey dives from a tree limb towards a tank of water. The pilgrim pulls the tank off to the side, but the turkey suddenly stops in mid-air, moves himself over the tank and lands in the water.
* In "Jerome is the New Black" Peter hears Lois telling Jerome it's so hot and moist in a satisfied manner. Peter rushes into the kitchen to find Lois telling Jerome the scones he made are delicious.

* In Jerry Pournelle's science fiction stories, the Line troops of the
* In Jets, Choo-Choos and Cars Derek and Bobby's argument eventually degenerates into this:
* In Jewish custom of the time, marriages were consummated a year later. So, when Mary turned up pregnant, Joseph had every right to consider divorcing her. Fortunately, they both got the news of Who had fathered the child.
* In Jewish folklore, there's Chelm, the town of fools. As tradition has it: "It is said that after God made the world, he filled it with people. He sent off an angel with two sacks, one full of wisdom and one full of foolishness. The second sack was of course much heavier. So after a time it started to drag. Soon it got caught on a mountaintop and so all the foolishness spilled out and fell into Chelm." Chelm was a very popular setting for some of Shalom Aleichem and Isaac Bashevis Singer's parables, to say nothing of
* In Jewish, Russian, and some other folktale traditions, demons and vampires had bird feet which they couldn't conceal no matter what form they took. Even if they covered their feet with their clothes, they can be discovered by their footprints.
* In "Jews on a Plane," Ilana asks a man for his pita so Abbi can use it as a makeshift tampon. He's so disgusted by her description that he gives her the pita.
* In "Jibanyan's Secret", when Nate gets annoyed with Whisper and Jibanyan exercising, he and Jibanyan have an argument which ends with Nate kicking him out. After some convincing from Whisper, they go search for Jibanyan. Little do they know, Kin and Gin send Jibanyan back to the last day of his life as an ordinary house cat, reuniting him with Amy. In the past, Amy's mother becomes verbally abusive due to Dismerelda's presence, and Jibanyan, as Rudy, realizes that Amy did care deeply about him.
* In Jill's case, it began while she and Gary were still a couple. In the Season Nine finale "The Perfect Crime", Jill tries to kill Valene by forcing her at gunpoint to take a bottle of sleeping pills. She survives and, after regaining consciousness in the Season Ten episode "Borderline", accuses Jill of attempting to kill her. However, Gary and pretty much everyone else (bar Pat and Frank) believe that she was only hallucinating, especially since Jill was seemingly in San Francisco that night. Gary, Mack, and Karen do not begin to suspect the truth until "Mrs. Peacock in the Library with the Lead Pipe" when they discover that Jill does not have VD in spite of the fact that she supposedly slept with David Lamb, who thought that he caught it from her. Jill, who drugged David, had used having sex with him in San Francisco as a major part of her alibi. After all of her lies were fully exposed, Jill's bound and gagged dead body is found in the boot of Gary's Jaguar in "Poor Jill" and he is charged with her murder in the following episode "Double Jeopardy". In "Guilty Until Proven Innocent", Mack, Karen, and Frank figure out that Jill had committed suicide by choking on her own vomit after tying up and gagging herself and locking herself in the boot as part of a sick, elaborate scheme to frame Gary for her murder.
* In Jincy Willet's short story "Justine Laughs at Death," an extended parallel is drawn between the
* In Joanna Russ' short story "When It Changed", a planet is colonized by Earth, but all the men die. In a twist, the women don't do a super better job at running things, though they are able to live fairly well on the planet. Unfortunately, men from Earth come and imply they will force the women to mate with them if the women refuse to do so willingly. As the women are all now lesbians (and have invented a way to have children), this does not bode well for them. Arguably
* In "Job: A Comedy of Justice", the main character purchases and then runs one in the epilogue.
* In "Job Day," right before the kids are told which adults they're going to be paired with for Job Day, Luna expresses to the other kids that there's no way she'd want to be paired with Officer Flamingo, whose job isn't creative. Thus naturally when the assignments are given out, Luna is paired with Officer Flamingo, accompanied by this sound effect.
* In "Job Switching" (aka the famous candy factory episode), the candy-dipper that Lucy gets into a

* In Joe Haldeman's short story "A !Tangled Web," the alien !tang (who look like "ambulatory haystacks") speak in a language that consists mostly of glottal clicks, and their native tongue is a thicket of convoluted metaphors and nonhuman concepts. Their equivalent of "I'm sorry" is especially amusing.
* In Joe Jackson's "Is She Really Going Out With Him?", the singer marvels at the "pretty women out walking with gorillas down my street".
* In Joel Schumacher's Phantom of the Opera, a man on a balcony moons Carlotta just before she begins her "Prima Donna" song, to the great amusement of the nearby spectators. Apparently no one likes her much.
* In Joel Shepherd's Cassandra Kresnov trilogy, the title character is a prototype of a new and improved version of the
* In Joe's debut episode the camera flies into his mouth as he's falling when he's telling his backstory on how he became handicapped.
* In "Joey and the High School Friend", as Joey is describing his relationship with the high school friend:
* In "John", Allie disguises herself as General Beers so that she, Charlie and Lisa can escape from the military.
* In John Brunner's "Stand on Zanzibar" the Philippines has been added under the name 'Isola'.
* In John Collier's "Evening Primrose" pretending to be a mannequin is one of the ways in which the people living in department stores maintain the
* In Johnny Rivers's "The Poor Side of Town," the singer is gloating that his love's attempt at social climbing didn't work:
* In John White's "The Iron Sceptre", protagonist Mary begins to "swell like a balloon" after eating from a giant pile of enchanted icecream. She has to vomit a magic mirror to deflate.
* In "Joker's Favor", a guy tormented by the Joker gets back at him by brandishing another of the Joker-faced bombs seen in the episode, only to laugh at J's terrified face when the bomb "explodes" into a BOOM flag.
* In "Joker's Favor", Charlie Collins has lived in terror over what 'favor' Joker will have him, to the point of changing his name and moving across the country (To no avail), so he's a little thunderstruck that all Joker wants from him is to open a door and let Harley Quinn push a cake to Commissioner Gordon's dinner.
* In "Joker's Favor," everyman Charlie Collins has a terrible day and cusses out a motorist who cuts him off in traffic; the motorist turns out to be the Joker. Charlie begs for his life, and the Joker agrees to spare him if he promises to do "a little favor" someday. He then holds this over Charlie's head for
* In "Jokester", it is discovered that humor is a psychological study tool
* In-Joke that led to the character becoming popular for the punchline, or for fuzzy feelings.
* In Jon Barth's "The Sot Weed Factor" two prostitutes trade one-word insults for several pages. Each insult is essentially a variant on the word "whore."
* In Jon Secada's song "Too Late, Too Soon", the protagonist takes an early flight to get back from a business trip. . . only to find his wife in bed with another man.
* In "Joseph Moves In!", Joseph pees all over Junior's pillow. When Junior tells Chef Pee Pee about it, Chef Pee Pee doesn't believe him and thinks he's blaming Joseph.
* In "Josh", Josh Butler is able to bring Allison James back from the dead by touching her.
* In "Josh", the military intends to send Josh Butler to Area 51 for study.
* In Joss Whedon's "Astonishing X-Men" run, Emma Frost simulates a Sentinel invasion as the beginning of student orientation. Without letting the other X-Men know. She wanted to hammer in the point that the world at large will always hate and fear the students for being mutants, and they always need to be ready to defend themselves.
* In "Journey to the Center of Candace", Candace sprays out a massive amount of cereal when Jeremy calls to ask her out.
* In "Journey To The Tower of Omens," the hands-on, field-leader type is exemplified in Captain Tygus, who conducts a one-man assault on a heavily guarded tower powered by a

* In "Joy Ride", Alonzo, his younger brother Greg and their girlfriends Deena and Adrienne steal the classic car owned by the recently deceased Charlie Taylor and
* In "Joyride", Colonel Theodore Harris' first trip into space took place on September 16, 1963. This was the date that
* In "Joyride", the aliens send Colonel Theodore Harris back in time to September 16, 1963 with all of his memories of the intervening 38 years intact.
* In J.S. Bach's "The Art of the Fugue," the final fugue is incomplete due to
* In Judaic tradition, the priesthood is hereditary. Therefore, any Kohen Jew is, theoretically speaking, presumed to be a direct male-line descendant of
* In Judaism, any books with God's name (in Hebrew) must be buried after they are of no use. Sometimes, people sneak their old books into a grave.
* In Judaism, certain sacred objects, such as Torah scrolls, are supposed to be buried in a cemetery when they are no long usable.
* In Judaism the character Methuselah (Noah's grandfather) carried a sword aptly named The Sword of Methuselah, which could kill demons and evil spirits.
* In Jude Deveraux's "A Knight in Shining Armor", the hero and heroine avoid having sex because it triggers time travel, seperately them permanently.
* In "Judgement Day", the widow of a murdered cop kills the wife of the judge who presided over the murder trial, because the judge didn't give the killer the death penalty and she consequently blames
* In Judges 18 the Danites while looking for land massacred the people of Laish and "...burned the city with fire."
* In Judges 4, the enemy commander Sisera is fleeing a losing battle with the Israelites. Jael, wife of Heber, invites him into her tent, waits until he is asleep, and drives a tent peg straight through his temple.
* In "Judgment Day", Declan McMahon was framed for the murder of Caitlin Channing, a former police officer turned guard at Dawlish Security who discovered that he had a criminal record and had him fired from the company. After he learned that his brother Dooley was going to be fired for getting him the job, Declan went to Caitlin's apartment to talk to her but she was already dead. When the police arrived, he was covered with her blood. The true killer was a 16-year-old Championship Pizza delivery boy named Joey. His presence in the building was readily apparent on the CCTV footage but it was doctored by Jack Parson, the producer of the reality show
* In judo, if a contestant is outside the mat for a certain period of time, the match is stopped and restarted with both contestants standing at the center of the mat. Squirming your way off the mat is a perfectly viable tactic for breaking a hold.
* In Julie Orringer's short story "Stars of Motown Shining Bright," the main character — on the road with someone who is trying to drag her into a scheme she doesn't like —
* In "Julius Caesar vs. Shaka Zulu", Caesar opens his second verse with "Ooh, can I be a hyena? Because I'm going to
* In July 1790, after two years of solid enough victories, the commander of the Russian fleet wanted to achieve a critical victory over the Swedes in time for the anniversary of
* In July 1994, a woman in Prescott, Arizona called the police to report a stolen Ryder truck. When police arrived to inspect the truck, they found a freezer with the body of a young woman inside. The body was identified as Denise Huber, who dispeared while on her way home from a concert three years earlier. It turned out that the man who owned the freezer, John Famalaro, had murdered Denise and kept her body as a trophy for the past three years.
* In July 2009 Michael Duvall, a California state assemblyman, was captured on tape describing to a colleague — in graphic detail — his ongoing extramarital affairs with two different women, one of whom turned out to be a lobbyist for a company in a sector (energy) that Duvall's legislative committee was in charge of overseeing. The tape in question was eventually aired by a TV station, prompting Duvall's eventual resignation.

* In July 2010 the FBI sent a letter to Wikipedia demanding the removal of the FBI logo from the page about the FBI.
* In July 2013 it emerged that "Robert Galbraith", author of the crime novel
* In July 2015, Marvel announced that Tim Seeley and Logan Faerber were working on a new
* In July 2017, up-and-coming French singer Barbara Weldens died onstage, after being electrocuted by a faulty piece of equipment she stepped on while performing barefoot in the French village of Gourdon. Making it more tragic was the fact that she had released her first album, to massive critical acclaim in her home country, in February of that year.
* In July 2019, Joaquin “El Chapo” Guzman, the infamous Mexican drug lord, was found guilty of engaging in a continuing criminal enterprise, conspiracy to launder narcotics proceeds, use of firearms, and international distribution of marijuana, cocaine, and heroin. He was condemned to a life sentence plus 30 years in the federal Supermax prison of Florence, Colorado without possibility of parole.
* In July 2020 Representative Ted Yoho (R-FL) was caught by a reporter referring to Representative Alexandria Oscaio-Cortez (D-NY) as a "fucking bitch" after he started an argument with her in which he called her "disgusting" and "out of your freaking mind". Once the news broke, Yoho "apologized" to her on the house floor without apologizing for calling her a "fucking bitch". He apologized for starting with an argument with her and for any misunderstanding while denying he'd ever call a woman such a thing because
* In July 2020, some radio stations, including WBLI in New York and KEZ in Arizona, ran a 2-day Christmas in July event.
* In July 2021 British tabloid culture became facinated with Oli London, an eccentric British person who is so obsessed with Korean pop culture to the extent of feeling he is a Korean who was born into the wrong race and culture, and trying to remedy this by lots of expensive plastic surgery (£175,000 worth...) to restyle his face and skin to "Korean". If Oli eventually gets round to learning to speak Korean, he might be able to confirm what the Korean is for "otaku".
* In July of 1839, a group of kidnapped, enslaved Africans took control of their kidnappers's vessel. They were later captured off the coast of Long Island, and court proceedings were undertaken to determine their fate (either prosecuted for murder, returned to slavery or allowed back to Africa). Thanks to a Supreme Court ruling, the Africans were allowed to return home. The name of the slave ship? La Amistad, which means "Friendship" in Spanish.
* In July of 2015 one student at the University of Akron in Akron, Ohio who was disgruntled at a recent series of cuts made by the university's president and trustee board, posed as the president and put the
* In July, the Germans were in the process of capturing Smolensk. The generals had thought that by this point the Red army would be collapsing, and that they would follow up with an easy March to Moscow. However, to their surprise and consternation, the enemy was somehow still in the fight. At the same time, Leningrad in the north and Kiev in the south were still holding out. During the battle of Smolensk, Hitler stunned everyone by decreeing that the advance on Moscow would not be allowed to proceed until Leningrad and Kiev had been secured, and that the panzer groups of Army Group Center would be diverted to help Army Groups North and South with these objectives. The generals bitterly protested, since they were laser-focused on capturing Moscow, but Hitler thought it too dangerous to advance in the center with the Soviets threatening the flanks, diverting the panzers while temporarily halting Army Group center. Generals such as Guderian and Manstein would go on to write memoirs blaming Hitler for squandering their chance for victory, a claim which ought to be treated with skepticism. The Germans settled for besieging Leningrad instead of trying to capture it so that Army Group North could continue East, and Army Group South eventually succeeded in capturing Kiev.
* In July, when it was filmed, but unpublished until August, the group did a video where
* In "Jumping Rocket Ship" he lunges and uses Fury Swipes on Barry's Empoleon (a Steel type who was

* In "Jump the Shark" Sam and Dean meet their half-brother Adam. Late in the episode, it's revealed that "Adam" is in fact the ghoul that killed their half-brother.
* Injun Country: People commune with the forces of nature, living in tipis, and believe in totems.
* Injun Country: The North American lands filled with folks who were there before the settlers arrived.
* In June 1997, Lela and Raymond Howard of Salado, TX, decided to set off for a festival in nearby Temple, despite Lela's Alzheimer's and Raymond recovering from brain surgery, and were found two weeks later, dead, at the bottom of a ravine near Hot Springs, AR—which is more or less in the same direction from Salado as Temple but is
* In June 2001, Indianapolis PBS station WFYI was about to start airing a PBS Kids program. Instead,
* In June 2007, pregnant woman Jesse Davis disappeared. Her mother stopped by her house and found signs of a struggle and her toddler son abandoned and only able to say, "Mommy was crying. Mommy broke the table. Mommy's in the rug". Several weeks later, her boyfriend — a detective himself — led the cops to her body.
* In June 2013, a Bolivian teenager named Santos Ramos raped and killed Leandra Arias Janco. The local community responded to the crime by getting together and
* In June 2014, Ashton Wood raised $18,000 online so he and 300 people could destroy his car after Jeep refused to pay a full refund for the car or replace the vehicle which he claimed had suffered 21 separate mechanical problems. During a failed settlement between the manufacturer, Jeep, and Mr. Wood, one of the requests made by the car company was for the disgruntled buyer to publish an 'apology' in a national publication. However, because no one would publish the apology, he instead read it out on
* In June 2014, cameras on Raw caught Lawler staring at the backside of a 21-year-old Paige and he tweeted about it later. Fortunately, it seems that Paige took it in stride, and a backstage picture was taken of Paige staring at Jerry's behind.
* In June 2015, Universal filed a patent for an "interactive game floor system", with drawings hinting that a real-life, interactive
* In June 2017, Saudi Arabia and several other countries cut diplomatic ties with
* In June 2019, Filipino actor Eddie Garcia was rushed to the hospital after tripping on a cable wire and hitting his head on the pavement while he was shooting a scene for
* In June 2019, The Ohio State University attempted to put a trademark on the word "The" in relation to its real name of "THE Ohio State University". They were turned down because of the word's frequency of use as a common article.
* In June 2020, in response to the racial protests that occurred following the death of George Floyd,
* In June 2020, video game blog One Angry Gamer composed a list called "Traitors to America", written by site founder William "Billy D" Usher. The list was used to show corporations and people that had voiced support for
* In "June Bride", Walter Denton and the Conklins assume that Mr. Boynton has finally proposed to Miss Brooks, and the two are to be married that same day. In actuality, Miss Brooks had agreed to be the proxy for Monsieur LeBlanc's French bride.
* In June of 2012, an unidentified father beat farmhand Jesus Mora Flores to death after finding out he molested his daughter.
* ''Injun Joe'' (born in the early 1800's), who still goes back to medical school every few decades to keep his knowledge up-to-date.
* In "Junk Junkies", a pizza place charges Rocko with $500.95 in unpaid bills. He has to sell things from his garage to pay them off so he's not forced to pay by making pizza deliveries.
* Injun Trouble 1938" is a Cavalry and Indian story, pitting Porky against Injun Joe, the Superchief.
* Injun Trouble (1969) short to be made by the original Warner Bros. studio, symbolically marking the end of the theatrical shorts era for the franchise.

* In "Jurassic Fart", Deuce is licked by a giant tongue wearing Zack's coat (
* In "Jurassic Park", the narrator remarks that being disemboweled makes him "kind of mad".
* Injured Limb Episode: A character's arm/leg/wing/flipper is injured.
* Injured Limb Episode: An actor suffers an injury on set, and said injury is worked into the show.
* Injured Vulnerability: Attacks and other effects only work on weakened targets.
* Injured wrestlers can usually finish the match they're in (unless the injury is really bad), but they won't be back next week, and if they were in the middle of a storyline you've got a week (if you're lucky) to rewrite it.
* Injuries: The typical double puncture marks for vampires, slashes for werewolves, and swollen rashes from most other infections.
* In just about every other possible ending for the other gamelines humanity is almost wiped out, and much of the planet lies in ruins. Most of the Time of Judgment scenarios for
* In "Just Desserts!", Timmy gets tired of eating healthy, and wishes that all the food in the world (or possibly just Dimmsdale) could be dessert all the time. After a month, everyone in town—including Cosmo and Wanda—has bloated into a massively round ball, to the point where the only way to travel is rolling. This becomes a problem when the sudden shift in weight causes the Earth to nearly fall into the Sun, and neither Cosmo or Wanda can undo the wish: the former has lost his wand in his rolls of fat, while the latter doesn't have enough energy to even lift her arm to cast the spell.
* In "Just for Sidekicks", Spike, the Cutie Mark Crusaders and the pets of the Mane Six embark on a train bound for Ponyville. They all get one when the Mane Six step inside the same car and duck underneath some seats to avoid getting caught.
* In "Just for Sidekicks", Spike, the pets of the Mane Six and the Cutie Mark Crusaders have to hide from the Mane Six when they step into their train car. Spike's
* In "Just for Sidekicks", Spike warns the Cutie Mark Crusaders not to leave the train in the Crystal Empire. In response, they each get one before subjecting him to
* In "Just for Sidekicks", when Spike grabs Opal, she screeches and attacks him while trying to get all the pets together.
* In "Just Friends", during Love Sentence's concert, Star suddenly ends up in this situation, when numerous couples in the audience start kissing, including Marco and Jackie.
* Injustice 2 about their previous crimes, but after learning about them, she promptly turns on them and joins the actual good guys.
* Injustice 2, although she isn't without her share of blood and sins from the previous games. Wonder Woman calls Harley out for trying to do good while having blood on her hands, to which Harley casually admits it while calling Wonder Woman out for pushing Superman into his dictator personality.
* Injustice 2 and gets ousted, his adoptive parents Jonathan and Martha Kent are subject to public scrutiny for having found and raised the alien baby that turned into a tyrant... Despite them having nothing to do with the circumstances that made him turn evil. Their family home is destroyed and they move into the Fortress of Solitude, which has since been abandoned since Superman was arrested.
* Injustice 2, and so dedicates himself to trying to kill Flash even more than he did before.
* Injustice 2) and using her bracelets to prevent Harley Quinn's magnum rounds from hitting her.
* Injustice 2, a possible opening battle dialog between Injustice!Batman and Injustice!Harley is that the latter had a NSFW dream with the Joker.
* Injustice 2 are shot down or repartee'd, this one actually sticks the landing:
* Injustice 2, Batman declares Plastic Man is the only choice to break into Ra's al Ghul's lair. Green Arrow just offers up a "seriously?" but sure enough, Plas pulls it off.

* Injustice 2 dictator. Unfortunately for Supergirl, she is recovered by Regime loyalists who fail to mention this.
* Injustice 2 features the Multiverse, both as a story element and gameplay feature.
* Injustice 2 grabs the minuscule super and tosses them back onto the stage.
* Injustice2 Harley Quinn blows and chews gum a couple times in cutscenes.
* Injustice 2 has at his disposal robots known as "Betas". Several cutscenes in story mode show that they have some exposed bone and flesh, of which are presumably of some of the numerous billions of humanoid species he has collected for use in his robotic army.
* Injustice 2 has Harley Quinn engaging in this. After chastising Wonder Woman for trying to break Batman's no killing rule, Diana asks Harley how much blood she's spilled.
* Injustice 2 has him stitch together all of Braniac's captured civilizations into Earth, then literally eat popcorn as he watches the chaos unfold.
* Injustice 2 in his intros, first drinking from a human skull and then crushing it in one hand.
* Injustice 2 issue #26, Damian thinks he's become nothing but a soldier following orders of his madman of a grandfather. Kara disagrees.
* Injustice 2, pieces of gear or background elements will feature the logo/name "Luthor-Wayne". Since Lex Luthor died in the previous game, it's likely that Bruce Wayne bought out the remains of LexCorp and merged it with Wayne Enterprises.
* Injustice 2 so he could digitally compress stolen cities into head-sized data matrices with some pocket-dimension bullshit involved. Depending on who defeats Brainiac, the cities are restored, destroyed, or kept preserved, for good or evil.
* Injustice 2's opening scene shows the fall of Krypton in all its tragedy. We are put into the shoes of Kara Zor-El as she escapes from Brainiac's deadly forces, watches her mother die, and then is separated from her cousin Kal-El. And to make things worse, this is the Injustice universe, where Superman went evil after a horrible tragedy.
* Injustice 2 views Batman's attempt to restore the old status quo as soft and misguided, while also disagreeing with Superman's strict dictatorship, leading him to forge his own path.
* Injustice 2 will open a fight by telling the Joker that they'll be having the last laugh. This is one of the rare times he doesn't seem amused.
* In Justice, a gentle mentally challenged man was arrested for the murder of a priest and sentenced to death. His lawyers try every last-minute appeal they can think of to delay his execution and they fail. He dies on schedule. Afterward, we see the heroes know who the real murderer is, and are able to persuade his wife to retract the alibi she gave him. If the team continues investigating (a strong possibility give that the hero confronts the murderer in his house) they may be able to find enough proof to get a posthumous exoneration.
* Injustice and is no longer friends with Poison Ivy, so her character trait has been replaced with a completely different ability where she calls her pet hyenas to attack.
* Injustice for All, Pt. 2", the Joker brings out a TV that is showing surveillance of the Justice League headquarters in space, which is where Lex Luthor's hired supervillains planted a bomb in to kill off Batman's friends. He places the TV right in front of Batman, who is being held prisoner.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us Among Us then it was allowed to be released.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us and beating the Joker, Batman finds himself surrounded by police. He slowly raises his hands... then presses a button, emitting a loud screech that disorients the entire force long enough for him to escape.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us and not China. Then he does it back to the other side.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us, Batman can summon robotic bats that either fire themselves forward or circle him in a shield, and Sinestro has the ability to create a fear construct that fires energy blasts directly at the opponent.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us beginning on Issue #17 until the end, lasting longer than it has any right to according to readers and by the fact no matter what happens, the end result of that fight is moot since continuity demands everything will be back to normal.

* Injustice: Gods Among Us construct of one with his lantern ring, suspending his defeated opponent in the air with it.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us Deathstroke special attack has him slashing his opponent with his sword, then throwing it in the air, firing a few rounds with his pistols, then he grabs it and stabs his opponent, and finishing him off with another round of guns.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us from the loser's perspective), then light a match before throwing it.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us gets shot with a machine gun right after being enhanced — and it doesn't so much as affect his clothing.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us getting shot by a machine gun, but gun users can still hurt him in-game. And fights that take place before the characters obtain these pills still happen as if they were super strong: in the first chapter, Batman can kick The Joker hard enough to send him flying upwards through several ceilings and walls of a large building (or have the same done to him), and while this does inflict a good amount of damage, the opponent can easily survive this and still be in fighting shape.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us greatly fleshes out and expands the world of the game, and features a much larger cast of characters.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us he established, and frequently gets condemned by the Insurgency for breaking the no-kill rule.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us. His jokes about mass murder, nihilism, and mocking his opponents' personal pain are also given attention to show how awful he is.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us: In a parallel universe, Superman has become a tyrant leading a Regime and Batman leads a rebellion called the Insurgency against him. In desperation, Insurgency Batman uses a device to summon heroes from the Prime universe to bolster his ranks. The Prime heroes help as best as they can, but eventually suggest that they may need to summon Prime Superman to defeat Regime Superman. Insurgency Batman adamantly refuses, saying he cannot trust any version of Superman. Prime Batman eventually has to beat him in a fight to convince him. When they summon Prime Superman, Insurgency Batman admits it is nice to see a version of Superman who is a friend again.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us is enough to make Injustice-verse Flash turn his back on the group.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us. Meanwhile, Wonder Woman is unquestioningly convinced of Superman's "logic" for some reason, even after it gets clearly obvious she's doing the things he's supposed to be preventing.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us. Neither woman notices this until they've made it halfway down the block on Batwoman's motorcycle and she spots flames in her rearview mirror.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us on Kryptonian durability pills at the time, after all. And where's her gravestone, huh?!
* Injustice: Gods Among Us sees him recruiting members of Superman's fallen Regime to form his own mercenary outfit called the New Titans.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us sees that the Joker retains this habit as he uses a dead cop he killed a puppet as part of his intro and in the main story, he talked to the body of one of the Regime enforcers he killed.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us shows the ruthless monster he's now become, a far cry from the idealistic hero he once was.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us. The Lois of this world died because of that incident, while the Lois of Good Superman is alive.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us, the "main" universe Cyborg infiltrates the parallel universe Regime by posing as his own counterpart. Regime!Catwoman notices something is off with him, and starts acting as though the two of them have been having an affair. When he tries to play along, she knows he's a fake.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us, those that are part of Superman's Regime change their costumes accordingly. Some, like Superman, are subtle. Some, like Wonder Woman and

Green Lantern, are massive (GL's case is that he lost his Green Lantern Power Ring and switched up for a Sinestro Corps ring.)
* Injustice: Gods Among Us. To free his son, Eel breaks into the supposedly unbreakable prison, takes out all the guards, and frees all the prisoners.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us. To suppress this brewing rebellion against his rule, he sends in his forces to Metropolis and Gotham to set an example.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us we're talking about. Still, if you thought at this point he was flipping out, you'd be right.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us when Killer Frost exposes Catwoman to extreme low temperatures in an attempt to learn Batman's location.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us: While not part of an alien invasion or anything like that, Lobo is still an evil alien.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us while the Regime has several superpowered metahumans in their ranks), but mostly because he insists in fighting a war while at the same time adhering to his "no-kill" rule against opponents that can and will kill. Over the course of the comic, he loses several allies and suffers many crushing defeats, and he is unable to come up with a solution against threats that go beyond his ken such as Apokoliptian invaders or Greek Gods. It takes him teleporting heroic versions of his fallen companions to help turn the tide of the war to his favor.
* Injustice: Gods Among Us Year 5, Damian comes into the Batcave singing "Happy birthday dear Alfred/Nothing rhymes with Alfred".
* Injustice: Gods Among Us you've already fought a few battles between characters with wildly divergent powers.
* In Justice: In his backstory, Conti got a suspect to confess that he'd committed rape and murder. The man hanged himself in prison, and it turns out he was innocent. Conti has been haunted by the case ever since, and this inspired him to join the National Justice Project working for innocent prisoners so they can go free.
* In Justice: One case involves a former detective convicted of killing a fellow officer who'd accused him of corruption. It's revealed not only was he innocent of that, but wasn't even corrupt to begin with. Some other episodes however play this straight, with cops willing to frame people who they believe are guilty, or simply so their valuable informant (who had committed murder) is protected.
* In Justice revolved around clearing wrongfully convicted people. In episode 8, they fail to save a mentally disabled man from being executed because the judge feels that they don't yet have enough proof. It's sort of up in the air, since the episode ended with the detective confronting the real murderer (as well as the fact that the rest of the team knows who the killer actually is and persuaded the guy's wife to retract her alibi, meaning that they could have gathered enough evidence to nail him to a wall offscreen).
* Injustice: Year 3 as a powerful spectre is breaking through the room's magical defenses. He makes it most of the way through his transforming chant when the doors are knocked open and his flesh is instantly ripped from his bones.
* In "Just One Bite", Squidward tries a Krabby Patty for the first time and becomes addicted. At the end, he breaks into the Patty Vault and eats all of the burgers. After SpongeBob remarks that they'll
* In "Just One Bite", when SpongeBob asks Squidward if he'd like to try a Krabby Patty for the first time, he responds "If I were trapped at the bottom of a well for three years with nothing to eat but that Krabby Patty, I'd eat my own legs first!
* In "Just One of the Princes", Prince Hugo was voiced by Colin Ford,
* In "Just One Of Those Days", Prince, in a desperate attempt to get to work on time, steals a child's bike and rides away on it, catching the attention of a squad of
* In "Just Our Luck", a sleep-deprived Agent P is too tired to stay awake and stop Doofenshmirtz. Fortunately, Doof thinks his sleeping nemesis is adorable and totes him around for the rest of the episode. (Naturally, Agent P wakes up at just the right moment to thwart Doof's latest evil scheme).
* Ink (2009), the Key Master Incubus has eyes that are pure black and they occasionally flare white with interest.

* In Kabbalah the ten Sephiroths that represent ten different branches of the Tree of Life have the counterpart of the Qliphots which are dark/demonic shadows of the Sephiroths. Needdles to say Left Hand Path practicioners generally work with the Qliphots and not with the Sephiroths.
* In Kaiba's duel with Zigfried, he ends up with no cards in his hand and on the field, while Zigfried has a card called Magical Alms, which allows both players to declare how many Spells they will play per turn and gain 500 LP times the declaration, but if they play a different number of Spells from what they declared, they will take 1000 damage times the declaration. As soon as Kaiba topdecks his card, he declares he will play four Spells. Zigfried asks if he's lost his mind because he only has one card in his hand, but he plays his drawn card, Card of Demise, to draw five cards. The next three Spells he plays ensure his victory.
* In Kaiba's first duel with Aigami, his will power is enough to call Obelisk the Tormentor. He doesn't even have the card in his deck. The card appears on the ground and he picks it up instead of drawing from his deck.
* In Kai Lung's story about the discovery of tea, the Emperor is advised to confess his sins in order to bring an end to a drought:
* In "Kakaki Kabaddi", Samosa wears his Banana Fontana outfit from the episode "Banana Fontana", and Dhokla wears his Doctor D outfit from the episode "Doctor D", both to disguise themselves from a group of townsfolk who are chasing after them.
* In Kakashi Gaiden, Kakashi argues against going to save Rin because he believes that as a medical ninja, she will be treated well as long as she tends to their wounded, and the mission takes precedence at the moment. Obito, however, argues that if the Rock ninjas who captured her are "brainless flunkies", they will simply interrogate her.
* In Kaldheim, people who don't die glorious deaths in battle, including every animal and monsters, becomes spirits in the foggy underworld of Istfell. These ghosts lack the passion and drive they had in life, and spend their afterlives drifting aimlessly like fog, repeating without purpose the motions of the things they did in life.
* In Kalos, Serena decides to go along with her mother's favorite saying: "Go for broke!"
* In "Kamp Krusty", Lisa almost has a nervous breakdown when she receives a B+ for 'conduct'. Hoover did it
* Ink and Incapability", Blackadder is relieved that Dr Johnson isn't angry at him for destroying the world's first Dictionary. Then he sees Baldrick with a dog's head. "Oh God, this is a dream, isn't it..."
* In Kanji's third Social Link event, he invites the protagonist to his house, only to learn that his mother went to the hospital. Once the two of you get there, Kanji learns that his mother actually took a young boy who was injured, and is infuriated at the misunderstanding, but is embarrassed about how he overreacted once he calms down.
* In Kansas City there's a local gardening business called The Grass Pad. Their slogan is "The Grass Pad is high on grass."
* In "Karate Choppers," Mr. Krabs orders SpongeBob to give up his obsession with karate for good, or he's fired. As SpongeBob is leaving the Krusty Krab, contemplating how to break the news to Sandy, Sandy herself comes in and starts attacking him,
* In "Karate Choppers", SpongeBob tries to karate-chop Sandy through the telephone wire, but Sandy redirects his hand through the speaker of her own telephone so SpongeBob hits himself. She then somehow manages to hang up with SpongeBob's arm still threaded through her receiver.
* In "Karate Choppers", SpongeBob watches a TV show starring a live-action fish.
* In "Karate Island", while ascending the "Four Floors of Fear" to rescue SpongeBob, Sandy makes it to the third floor and encounters Filthy Phil, who uses the power of his body odor to defeat opponents. However, it has no effect on Sandy due to her nose being protected by her air helmet, and Phil
* In Karate Shoukoushi Kohinata Minoru Pro wrestling is shown to have moderate to high effectiveness in this series. However, as this manga focuses mainly stand-up martial arts, like kickboxing and karate, it is usually used with or like a stand-up martial art. there have been a few Pro Wrestlers shown in this manga: The first wrestler introduced was a hardcore wrestler, Bad News Shiratori, in a Karate tournament against Minoru. While he was slower and had poor defence, his toughness to injury developed wrestling allowed him to keep fighting. The next wrestler introduced was the Cacao Kid Kurokawa, who is also the prsident of an adult movie company. His first appearance was in a pro wrestling match against Shiratori, where he countered his lariat with a high kick. Later on he showed skill in ground fighting and pinning during a shoot, getting the mount position. He was later shown to be quite durable, being able to take kicks from Minami Hiroki, and set him up for a spinebuster.

* In "Karate Star", Patrick eats a towering ice cream cone, causing him to freeze over, then he karate chops himself free.
* In "Karate Star", Patrick tears off his karate chop arm in order to stop the wreckage he's uncontrollably causing. He grows his arm back, but the arm grows a new body, as is typical for starfish.
* In "Karen," Fisk sends Dex to kill Karen as revenge for her murder of James Wesley. As he fails to kill Karen, only succeeding at killing Father Lantom, Dex is forced to return after changing into his FBI windbreaker to smoke out Karen and Matt, who are hiding in the basement, as the NYPD are conducting their investigation. Matt eventually gets an idea as to get Karen out of the church alive. He has Foggy show up to the church, and announce loudly that Karen will only surrender to the NYPD. There's a bit of back and forth between Brett Mahoney and Dex, with Ray Nadeem (who had served as Dex's getaway driver during the hit) defusing the tension by quietly warning Brett about Dex's treachery. So Brett "arrests" Karen and escorts her and Foggy out of the church, puts them in the back of a squad car, and drives them to a point a few blocks away where they then reconvene with Matt.
* In Karen Traviss' early works, the Mandalorians/Clones were badass and the Jedi were somewhat clueless/misguided. Cue later works where the Mandalorians are
* In Katarina's previous life, she first met her best friend Atsuko after falling out of a tree and the two would end up bonding over their shared love of otaku culture. Her first interaction with Atsuko's reincarnation Sophia happened after she jumped down from a tree and the two would bond over their shared love of romance novels.
* In "Kathy Can't Sleep", a little boy was killed by Kathy's drunk driver father.
* In Katy Keene #45, Sis bring a hula hoop on the ice, and while Katy does it fine, poor Sis falls on her butt again.
* Ink Blot Cartoon Style 'toons of the 1930s, in the form of a shared dream had by Cat and Dog after an argument.
* In K.C. Alexander's SINless books, corporate mercs of MetaCore favoured the Sauger 877 assault rifle (Sauger was a subsidiary of MetaCore). It's 5.56mm caseless rounds aren't that impressive individually but it can dump 500 rounds in only a few seconds, allowing it to shred even armoured targets. This makes it a weapon of choice for leading with cyborgs that have gone "necro".
* Ink City. The City's first major Event involved a large group of residents venturing into the woods only to discover exactly WHY that was such a bad idea.
* Ink droplets dropped by squids summoned by Captain Brineybeard are one of the very few things that don't do damage when they hit Cuphead or Mugman. Instead, they darken the screen for a few seconds, especially around the edges. Getting hit by more of them during this time causes black splotches to appear on the screen.
* In "Keep Bikini Bottom Beautiful", when SpongeBob asks if he can help Squidward, Squidward tells him that "I would rather be beaten to a pulp."
* In "Keep Calm and Flutter On", after Discord brainwashes a colony of beavers behind everypony's backs, he turns to the camera and whispers, "Oopsie!" Immediately afterwards, when he announces he's moving in with Fluttershy, she looks towards the audience and mutters, "
* In "Keep Calm and Flutter On", when Twilight Sparkle sees that Celestia has brought along the petrified form of

* In "Keep 'em Growing", the animals and one scarecrow take over all the farmwork the men who've gone off to fight in
* In Keeping Secrets of Silent Earth: 3: it refers the planet of Silent Earth: 3 (presumably the planet Paris: Earth post-MonStar), and Inferno's Pioneers' struggle to keep themselves a secret, including a character being blinded, drilled through the hand, cut up, burned, and thrown in the streets—and rebuilt.
* In "Keeping Up With Our Joneses", Luann finds out Hank, Peggy, and Bobby are all addicted to smoking, she combines this trope with
* In keeping with her falcon-like appearance, the new bird Silver divebombs her target.
* In keeping with his comedy-themed MO, supervillain the Comedian carries one in
* In keeping with its El Día de los Muertos theme, nearly all of the characters in
* In keeping with Moore's (and Dr. Gull's) view of history as a complex multi-faceted structure that can be viewed and understood from multiple angles and perspectives,
* In keeping with Simogo's motto of not making games of a specific genre if doing so would impede the gaming experience itself,
* In keeping with the Brontë sisters, there are some hints at the beginning of
* In keeping with the Comic Book examples listed above, any video game based upon the
* In keeping with the "gothic horror" vibe of Season 14, "The Valley of Death" is
* In keeping with the Hollywood theme of the series, the names of all of the
* In keeping with their belief as Christians that Jesus was the Messiah, early descriptions of Jesus were of a short, ugly, hairy man with dark skin and wooly hair. Even early icons of Jesus (before 800 CE) show a very scary, angry-looking guy. Early Roman critics of Christianity, such as Celsus, bring up Jesus's ugliness to mock Christians without realizing it was probably they who spread the description in the first place.
* In keeping with the original fairy tale, this is how Hansel and Gretel dispose of the first witch they encounter as children in
* In keeping with the real life author in the Literature folder above, Kōyō Ozaki from
* In keeping with the theme naming trope set by the very thing it's parodying,
* In keeping with the time period they were set/written in, the orphan protagonists of
* In keeping with the trope, you'll have some characters arguing that you can't justify destroying an entire species no matter how much damage it once caused (keeping in mind that the Rachni Wars happened almost 2,000 years ago), and others who argue that it's time to "finish the job". In fact,
* In "Keep Your Paws Off!", when he thinks he's a werewolf, Marty makes a poster intended to warn people away from the full moon festival. At the top it says "Don't Go To The Full Moon Festival! This Saturday at 8:00", with a werewolf (probably Marty) saying "It'll be a wild night!", and below that the words "There's no telling what could happen!". However, before he can photocopy and distribute it, Jerome bites off the "Don't" part, which Marty only noticed AFTER distributing said posters.
* In Keillor's "News from Lake Wobegon" monologues, the editor of the
* In Ken Dodd's comedy routines about the Diddymen of Knotty Ash, the Diddymen worked in a jam butty (sandwich) mine.
* In Kendo forcing an opponent of bounds results a foul, which can be a round or match winning point. However, "unfair shoving or pushing" of an opponent out gets the pusher a foul. You're going to have to do it with footwork and clever offense.
* In kendo, naginata, and similar arts, one must call out the body part one intends to strike as the blow hits, or one does not receive points for the hit.
* In Kendo, part of your score during matches is based on KI - "spirit" or intent - expressed by a yelling out of the intended target (kiai) at the exact moment of the strike. It's not quite like calling your shot in billiards (8 ball, corner pocket), but if you hit the wrist instead of the head and you had intended to hit the head, the strike would not result in a point.

* In Kendrick Lamar’s semi-autobiographical album Good Kid M.A.A.D. City, Kendrick (K-Dot) is present during all of the album’s many skits, but doesn’t ever speak.
* In "Kermit Levels Up", Summer Penguin accidentally pops a balloon with her beak. In the same episode, she later uses her beak to clear some giant balloons from a level of a video game.
* In Kevin "Bloody" Wilson's song about The Front Bar Featherbrain Non-Title Fight, a pool cue, broken off pool table legs and a toilet are all employed.
* In Kevin Long's short story "The Man Who Would Not Be King", Western pop culture needed only a few nudges to be completely different. Our hero, who goes by Aaron (he finds his
* Ink Exchange, Leslie's older brother Ren. He also happens to be abusive.
* Inkheart at one point, thinking that perhaps the things happening to her are just a story and hoping that the person reading it will close the book because it's "so horrible and scary". There is also a point where Elinor expresses a longing for the romantic medieval times and Dustfinger replies that perhaps she was "born into the wrong story".
* Inkheart, Capricorn loves the modern world and gets along in it fairly well; Dustfinger, on the other hand, hates it.
* In Khul, the southernmost part of the continent is home alternately to the savage southern swordsmen of Zagoula, who worship the gods of chaos and evil, the plague-breeding beggars of the foul city of Shakuru, and the petty city-states of the Inland Sea, all of whom engage in constant low-key warfare with one another. Khul is the most
* In "Kicking Bishop Brennan Up the Arse", Ted does just what the title says after losing a bet with Father Dick Byrne. Bishop Brennan is so shocked he cannot process what has just happened until some time later, when he is in Rome for an audience with the Pope. Just as he is being introduced to His Holiness, Bishop Brennan roars, "HE
* In "Kick the Bucket List", Lincoln wants to ride a roller coaster called 'Fly Me to the Moo', but the line is ridiculously long.
* In "Kid-Kart Derby", when Mitchell overhears Sydney while he's in Jet's garage, Mitchell says that he thinks he left the hose on, or the lights.
* In "Kidney Car", after a particularly inane rant from Master Shake near the end of the episode, involving Carl's new car being sucked into a jet engine Shake had affixed on his car (which happened to be Carl's
* In Kid Rock vs. Eminem, Joe C jumps into the ring and eviscerates guest referee Carson Daly, but not before Carson kicks him into the air. He lands on Eminem, and takes control of Eminem's body, which he uses to take out Kid Rock with one hit.
* In "kids' show," Strong Bad describes Homsar as "America's favorite blue midget Homestar."
* In "Kid Stuff", Mordred uses a spell to trap all the adults in the world in another dimension. Copperhead has a panic attack until the others assure him that they are not dead.
* In Kieran Shea's Koko (a.k.a EBK book series), at the insistence of his personal
* In "Killer Chat," an investigation into the murder of several pedophiles leads to a group called Parents Stop Predators, who pose as underage girls on chat rooms and try to get pedophiles to arrange to meet the nonexistent underage girls for sex. When they succeed, they turn over their evidence to the authorities. When the pedophiles avoid doing anything actually illegal, the vigilantes urge them to seek counseling and warn the pedophiles' families about their actions.
* In "Killer in High Heels", the entire team works tirelessly to prove that Maura is not a murderer when her date turns up dead and she has no memory of what happened.
* In "Killer Queen" after finding a boy attending fat camp with them dead Peter wonders who would kill a camper, at which point

* In "Killer Vacation", Stan's attempt to kill a war criminal is botched by a suicidal lemur who tries to get Stan to kill him instead. When the guy tries to shoot Stan and Francine as they're fleeing (using Stan's gun that he was attempting to shoot the guy with), the lemur jumps in front of his bullet in slow motion, then gives a thumbs-up as it dies.
* In "Kill Gill Vols. 1 & 2", Marge has trouble saying no to freeloader Gil and when she finally gets the guts to, he's gone. Which leads to this...
* In "Kill Straker!" The aliens give Paul Foster a subliminal command to kill Commander Straker.
* In "Kill the Alligator and Run," the family stays at a hotel called the Royal Fart Inn, during Spring Break. Some college boys rearrange the sign to read, "The Royal
* In "Kill the Alligator and Run" (the one in Florida), Homer loses a chasing police car by crossing in front of an oncoming freight train, and then, in a
* In "Kill The Boy" Tyrion Lannister and Jorah Mormont ponder this trope as they sail along a canal through the ruins of Valyria, even quoting a Shelley-esque lament on the apocalypse that destroyed the once-great civilization.
* In "Kim Kelly Is My Friend", Nick eats Fruit Roll-Ups, which wouldn't be introduced to the market until 1983.
* In "Kinbaku," picking up from the ending of "Penny and Dime," Matt reenters his apartment, in a love daze after
* In "Kindergarten Kid", Steven doesn't get especially angry himself, but he does begin pelting Peridot with marshmallows to push her to
* In kind of an odd subversion of the trope, however, the use of the Goldion Hammer is almost always
* In "kind of cool", Strong Sad says that Senor Cardgage lived near the Brothers Strong when they were little. Later toons suggest that Cardgage still does live near the Strongs.
* In "King and Brooks", an Indian maharajah proposes marriage to Miss Brooks. Miss Brooks refuses to marry for convenience, it's only a marriage for love that appeals to Connie. However, the fact that Miss Brooks would be the polygamous maharajah's
* In "Kingmaker", the murder of an undercover police officer by the Albanian mob kicks off an investigation into a rising politician.
* In "King of Flan", Eustace and Muriel are hypnotized into craving the eponymous villain's product, and stuff themselves into enormity with "Fantasy Flan". Courage manages to resist the hypnotism until the end of the episode until the bad guy's been beat, 'then' he stuffs himself into a massive pink doughball.
* In "King of the Hobos", Porky does this after being exiled from the treehouse.
* In "King-Size Homer", Homer gains weight (up to 300 lbs) on purpose in order to claim disability and work from home. When there was a fatal problem at the power plant, he literally plugs the problem (unintentionally) with his fat ass. The episode's end averts the trope somewhat by showing Mr. Burns deciding to give Homer liposuction (originally he planned to have Homer work himself back into shape, but got so annoyed by his slow progress that he decided to just pay for the liposuction).
* In "King-Size Homer," when Homer attempts to call the nuclear plant to warn them of an impending disaster (
* In "King Smurf," Jokey giving the title character the Ash Face gets himself thrown into prison.
* In Kipling's "Six Honest Serving Men", the serving men are a metaphor for asking questions to learn things. The narrator notes that although he knows that there are times to ask questions and times to keep quiet, he knows a small child who "keeps ten million serving-men, who get no rest at all!"
* In "Kirby 3D," the 101st episode, Lobzilla's first form also freezes people as well. The only time where the actual victims are in blocks of ice are shown is when Lobzilla uses it on Dedede and Escargoon. The other times that Lobzilla uses his ice breath instantly cut to the next scene.
* In "Kirkman Agonistes", tapes of Kirkman's personal therapy sessions following the death of his wife are released to the public. This leads to concerns about Kirkman's ability to serve and several in Congress are shown to be wary of closing deals with him over this. Lyor is thrown no one in the Cabinet is returning his calls when a secretary tells him they're meeting with recently installed Vice President Darby. Realizing what's happening, Lyor races to the Oval and warns the President just minutes before Darby steps in to tell Kirkman they're invoking the 25th. She adds that she's held off signing the letter as she wants to give Kirkman a chance to prove himself in a hearing and frankly isn't thrilled taking the job. In the following episode, "Capacity", is built around that hearing as Kirkman and his inner circle give testimony to try and prove his worth to hold the office.

* In "Kissed by Fire", Olyvar tells Loras, "I should like to see you spar with a proper partner, ser." They end up "sparring" in Loras' bed shortly afterwards.
* In "Kiss Kiss, Bang Bangalore", Homer tries to find Apu's cousin Kavi, who is "medium height, dark complexion, brown eyes and black hair". The trouble is,
* In "Kiss Kiss, Bang Bangalore", Lenny and Carl—recently out of a job because Mr. Burns moved the nuclear plant to India—comment to Moe that the neon Duff Beer sign he's just plugged in is powered by non-American workers. Annoyed, Moe points out that the beer they're drinking is German and the TV they're watching is Japanese, so they ask if
* In "Kiss Kiss, Bang Bangalore", Mr. Burns has the Nuclear Power Plant outsourced into India, and Homer is picked to train the new employees. After the long flight, Homer says:
* In "KITTEN II", people are using guns on the Satan-spawned kittens not to hurt them but to toss them away briefly.
* In "Kitty Steals the Show", Kitty is slated to soon give a speech in London. A caller on her show wants her to confirm that is indeed where she will be. She notes he sounds like he is stoned and is trying to suppress a giggle as he utters "So that would make you
* In "Kiwi's Big Adventure", a tribe of Kiwis worship the Ranger Plane as a deity and expect it to give them back their ability to fly.
* In "KJEM", Jem took over a radio station so the previous owner wouldn't lose it to a former employee who had started his own radio station for not liking how his former boss ran things.
* In "Kloger", Roger's text messaging creates visible, giant text bubbles. When Francine touches one, it
* Ink Master, when the host implied the contestants would have to tattoo human corpses as part of a challenge. They wound up working on plastic dummies instead.
* In "Knight-mare Hare", a sorcerer turns Bugs into a horse, but Bugs is able to remove it like a costume. Later, Bugs uses the same spell on the sorcerer, but when the sorcerer tries to remove the horse costume, he finds himself wearing an identical costume underneath, which has another costume underneath, and so on.
* In Knights of Fallen Empire expansion Arcann built 6 of these to ensure compliance of conqured planets.
* In "Knock Knock", a group of students rent a house without realising it's infested with strange, woodlouse-like aliens which the Doctor refers to as "Dryads". They escape from the house at the end as the Dryads begin devouring the house and everything in it, with one of them lamenting "Bang goes the deposit!" as she watches the house collapse.
* In "Know Your Fusion", Garnet screams for 16 seconds straight when Smoky Quartz reveals themself and their destructive power. Not out of fear mind you, but
* In Kobar's lab there's a control to activate the sun-orbiting quadrotronic Solar Robot that's titled "Solar Robot Space Station". There's also an alarm to alert him when someone's approaching the solar robot: it's labeled Solar Robot Warning".
* In "Kommando", the Toronto Constabulary clashed with the Army over has jurisdiction over the case of a murdered soldier, with Inspector Brackenried threatening to arrest Colonel Haywood for obstruction of justice at on point.
* In "Komputer Overload", a customer is at the drive thru of the Chum Bucket and keeps trying to order items that the Krusty Krab sells. Plankton angrily tells the customer that they don't sell any of those items, and if he wants any of those, he should go to the Krusty Krab.

* Ink One of the few examples that isn't set in a science-fiction world. At least two scenes are tinted blue, one of which is so saturated, that it nearly drowns out the true colors.
* In, Kong hangs briefly by his fingers off a cliff before being dragged down by the V-rex that grabbed his leg.
* Inko openly reminisces about her own "adventures" with her husband, is not shy about her
* In Korea and Japan, mechanical pencils are commonly known as "Sharp pencils." Not because they have keen tips, but because they were popularized there by the Sharp company, now known for making electronics.
* In Korea, during wartime, Buddhist monks often furnished a large number of fighters, either for government armies, or as volunteers fighting on their own against aggressors. During the 16th century Japanese invasion of Korea, this led to occasional battles where combatants on both sides were Buddhist monks.
* In Korean, it is common and polite to refer to co-workers by their title or profession (teacher, doctor, etc.), especially if they are your boss (principal, chief-surgeon, etc.). Going just by their names could be considered odd.
* In Korean, the equivilant is "ajuma". As with other examples listed here, be careful when using this one.
* In Korea, the Shims and the Yooms. The feud started in the mid 1700's and went on for about 250 years.
* In Kouta's case, the premise is inverted: his grandmother was nothing but supportive about his love for Pompompurin. Kouta forced
* In Kozo Omori's manga adaption, however... it WAS an accident, and the setup and aftermath from Nena's perspective was actually treated comedically, although everything else remained serious.
* In "Krabby Land", SpongeBob pays two muscular guys to tear him in half to please a crowd of kids who enjoy seeing him in pain.
* In "Krabby Land," SpongeBob puts on a domino mask while playing the character of a "Krabby Patty Burglar."
* In "Krabs vs. Plankton", the bulb pops out of one of SpongeBob's pores.
* In Kreese's flashback, we have David—a varsity football player who bullies Kreese for just being a "freak" (as well as Betsy for simpling LOOKING at him). Nobody felt sorry for the bastard when Kreese gave a much-deserved beating him and his henchman.
* In "Krusty Gets Busted", a little girl was having her birthday celebrated at Krusty's show and Krusty offered her a choice: have Krusty sing her a birthday song; or have Sideshow Bob shot off a cannon. She chose the cannon.
* In "Krusty Gets Cancelled", when a passing pickup truck driver drops a Duff Beer can on her road,
* In "Krusty Gets Kanceled", Krusty is trying to get back in shape by sparring with Homer, but he's too depressed to punch. Then Maggie touches the remote, and
* In "Krusty Gets Kancelled", Krusty is forced to briefly replace it with
* In "Krusty Gets Kancelled", Krusty tries to keep children watching his show by offering them forty-dollar checks. A voice then says the checks won't be honored.
* In 'Krusty Gets Kancelled', Luke Perry is fired from a cannon as part of Krusty's Komeback Special. One of the buildings he flies through is the Kwik-E-Mart, where Apu is about to finish off a pyramid of acid jars. Luke rockets through the jars, sending the entire stack to pieces. After a moment of stunned shock, Apu throws the last jar to the ground in frustration.
* In "Krusty Krushers", one of the two wrestling champs rips the other in half as a display of toughness,
* In "Krusty Love" Mr. Krabs becomes enamoured with Mrs. Puff when he saw her in his restaurant. Spongebob encourages him to ask her out, but he is unable to form any real words and needs Spongebob to "translate" for him.
* In "Krusty Love," Mr. Krabs brings him along on his date with Mrs. Puff and puts him in charge of his money to make sure he doesn't spend it all, but he nonetheless keeps demanding that SpongeBob buy increasingly unnecessary items for Mrs. Puff, all while lashing out at him for spending his money when he was the one who asked him to do so in the first place. When Mr. Krabs

* In "Krusty Love", Mr. Krabs is shocked at the cost of the bill ($100) for his fancy dinner with Mrs. Puff. The waiter apologizes and brings him the real bill, which he finds even more shocking (
* In "Krusty Towers", Mr. Krabs is initially shocked at his hospital bill ($15,000) but decides to send SpongeBob, Patrick, and Squidward to med school to get in on the racket. Earlier in that episode, Mr. Krabs turned his restaurant into a hotel after learning how much the last hotel he was a guest at charged for a hamburger. His earlier reaction was getting his claw inside his mouth to retrieve the hamburger and give it back to avoid paying for it. Surprisingly, aside from being covered in saliva, it had no sign of being a previously eaten hamburger.
* In "Krypto's Three Amazing Transformations", a time-traveling Krypto gets turned into a cow (and definitely a female, because she gets milked!) And not just any cow, but
* Ink starts losing his emotions after X-Event!Chara is brought back to life, X-Event!Chara escapes with the Underswap cast, and the Underswap timeline is destroyed, with Underswap!Papyrus staying behind with Underswap!Chara until the very end.
* Ink-Suit Actor — Animated characters made to look very similar to the actors that play them.
* Ink-Suit Actor: An animated character who resembles their voice actor.
* Ink-Suit Actor: Animated characters look like the actors who play them.
* Ink-Suit Actor: Animated characters who resemble their voice actors.
* Ink-Suit Actor child actors would age out of being able to perform their roles by the time rewrites necessitated new recordings, requiring recasts.
* Ink-Suit Actor in their episodes ("Romeo In The Mix", "Static Shaq" and "Hoop Squad").
* Ink-Suit Actor shortly before he passed away. The episode wound up airing eight months after his death.
* Ink, Ted Danson played a star newspaper reporter with his real-life wife Mary Steenburgen playing his ex-wife and editor/boss.
* Ink, the pathfinder is able to cause a car accident to happen despite barely being able to affect the physical world by being in sync with the flow of events. He creates a Rube Goldberg machine made out of people in order to shake up someone who sorely needs it.
* In "Kuala Lumpur", Carolyn roleplays as various passengers (with funny accents) to raise Arthur's stewarding skills from Very Bad to merely Bad. Arthur gets more and more confused and worked up, culminating in him delegating some tasks to the passengers, and shouting for everyone to SHUT UP! Carolyn says that wasn't even slightly the correct procedure ... but it's probably what she'd have done, so he's passed.
* Inkubus Sukkubus' song "Away with the faeries", and potentially a good deal of their other songs as well.
* In Kuja Pirates, Boa Hancock had her sisters, Sandersonia and Marigold, but she
* In "Kung Fu Crabtree", after they fight off a trio of black-clad ninjas, Crabtree notices Wu Chang (the man he was supposed to be arresting) has a deep cut on his arm and takes him to see Dr. Grace for treatment. While there, Crabtree and Dr. Grace get to know Mr. Wu a bit better, including the fact that he isn't one of the Boxers (of the recently ended
* Inkurseans, but still, you gotta wonder why Emperor Milleus couldn't be more pragmatic.
* In Kyoto, four stainless-steel pyramids are found rotating five feet above the ground.
* In Kyousuke's back-story arc, there is a scene where a fighter pilot gets first confused and then annoyed by two (friendly)
* Inkyu Basu, whose student profile notes that she's "rumored to be a vampire
* In "K'Z'K": When Torg needs to inflict pain on the demon K'Z'K to exorcise him, he and Riff manage this by doing a
* In "La capuche mortelle", Marylin and his friends are fed up with their outcast friend Larry supposedly showing up as a hooded ghost in their dreams. During their conversation with Larry outside at nighttime, Marylin and

* In Ladies #4, the Ducote sisters' dog Peanut reacts with hostility to the greedy and thoroughly unpleasant Nathan Gamble.
* In "Ladies and Gentlemen, Meet Max Modem", as Dr. Doofenshmirtz explains his evil plot to stage an alien invasion, spooky
* In "Lady Bouvier's Lover" Mr. Burns' single relative is an old aggressive German officer wearing a pickelhaube.
* In "Lady Starblaster", when the titular villainess shows up, Rippen has one of the "whole lifetime" crush filter
* In "Lagoon of Peril", there is a television news report delivered by the Ape Broadcasting System anchorman Dick Huntley.
* In Lair of the Shadow Broker one of the files states that infertile krogan females at least have garrison roles on their homeworld. All krogan are taught
* In Lake Tanganyika, a species of cichlid fish specializes in attacking other fish by biting off and eating their prey's scales. Individuals of these scale-eating fish will have their long jaws twisted to permit them to attack either the left side or the right side of their victims. One can easily tell whether the right-side attacking population or the left-side attacking population is greater by seeing which direction other fish flee towards when spooked.
* In Lakota religion, the directions are represented by colors; note that, unlike Westerners, Lakota also consider above, below, and center to be directions.
* In La-La-Land We Trust has a private eye investigating a snuff movie operation.
* In "La Machine", the ringleaders of the eponymous criminal organisation are posing as monks and operating out of a monastery.
* In "Lame and Fortune", one of the Bikini Bottomites gets a fortune saying "You will soon injure your legs". Almost instantly, a grand piano falls from nowhere onto his legs. Turns out he is quite happy about it since it gives him an excuse to skip jury duty.
* In "Lament for a Toy Factory", he mentions "babies with buzzsaws, dollies with knives, gasoline-filled super soakers" as the too-drastic toy designs that got him fired... and were later used for revenge against the factory.
* In "Lamps Unlimited", after a business involving turning trash into electric lamps goes awry, Donald is forced to clean up the city. He uses a candle to light his way because, as he explains, he's quite sick of electric lighting.
* In Lancre, the royal army is a noble institution that takes its job very seriously. Unfortunately, it consists entirely of Nanny Ogg's son Shawn, who is also the captain of the royal guard, the royal guard, the royal herald, the royal butler, the royal mailman, and countless others. This means that his battle tactics mainly consist of running off to find the king and queen so that they can give him orders that don't involve fighting.
* In "Land Before Swine", Mabel gives Stan the silent treatment after she discovers Stan endangered her pet pig.
* Inland Empire, being about a film actress, also dabbles in the subject.
* Inland Empire has, among its other myriad plots, a theme of the remake of an atmospheric European thriller that is taking place on an unhappy set, beset with calamities and inexplicable accident.
* Inland Empire, he voices a sound engineer that gets bossed around by the film director character (played by Jeremy Irons), which inverts his own role as the actual director.
* Inland Empire is Laura Dern's face grotesquely distorting as she gazes right into the camera.
* Inland Empire, like most of the movies of David Lynch, starts in a somewhat "realistic" way, but after the first hour, is practically impossible to know what thing is real, a dream, or hallucinations.
* Inland Empire — The first rehearsal with Laura Dern and Justin Theroux, with Justin chasing an unseen spy. Later, the scene with Laura yelling at Justin through the window.
* In Langston Hughes' short story "Thank You, Ma'am," a woman not only apprehends a teenaged purse-snatcher and gives him a

* In "Lard of the Dance", the new student, Alex Whitney shares this trope. She uses valley girl slang, which is mainly used by teenage girls.
* In large cities with very dense populations and perpetual heavy motor traffic, some police officers have taken to traveling around on bicycle, as they can fit into tight spaces easily, are almost completely silent, and, with enough skill, can turn on a dime. They might not reach the blazing speeds cars can, but that doesn't matter when every driver is stuck in gridlock.
* In large fire departments, senior officers (chiefs and deputy chiefs) will show up in major incidents, whether it's during their normal working hours or not.
* In large part because Japan has different narrative traditions and so some of the bits might be rather hard to understand. Then there's the whole thing with the poem...
* In larger police and security departments there will often be a watch commander (who is a sergeant of lieutenant) or even several covering different geographic areas or divisions (patrol, traffic, detectives, dispatch, etc.) on duty at any given time. In the event of a major incident, a lieutenant or captain is usually woken to respond.
* In "Larry the Floor Manager", SpongeBob spits one of Larry's protein shakes out on the radio that was providing the background music, shorting it out.
* In "Laser Light Cannon", Greg and Steven both use Greg's silly proverb "If every porkchop were perfect, we wouldn't have hot dogs" to cheer each other up while looking for
* In "Last Call", a gang of kidnappers start shooting the moment the lift doors open to reveal a suit...on a coat hanger. Cue
* In "Last Exit to Springfield", after Burns returns Homer after abducting him to negotiate the employees' contract, he threatens to crush him, flies off in his helicopter and delivers an
* In "Last Exit to Springfield", a window cleaner is dangling outside of his office after the scaffolding broke and fell from under him, and Mr. Burns, rather than call for help, laughs loudly. He soon gets bored and closes the blinds, while the man screams as he falls.
* In "Last Exit to Springfield," a worker from decades ago warns Burns' grandfather about the rise and fall of unionized America (the latter courtesy of Japan):
* In "Last Exit to Springfield" Homer is caught short during union negotiations at Mr. Burns' mansion and, after failing to find a bathroom in Burns' huge mansion, ends up using a priceless antique vase.
* In "Last Exit to Springfield", Homer mistakenly thinks that Mr. Burns' attempts at negotiating with him and offering a bribe are Burns coming onto him. He storms off, saying although he's curious about it, he doesn't go for these "
* In "Last Exit To Springfield", McBain bursts out of an ice-sculpture of Venus DiMilo:
* In "Last Exit To Springfield", McBain pops out of an ice sculpture, shoots everybody at the table down, and then quips, "Ice to see you."
* In "Last Exit to Springfield", Mr. Burns and Smithers have to get to the nuclear plant's control room by going through multiple security doors and passing various authentication tests such as a face scanner. Upon reaching the control room, Burns has to shoo out a stray dog. A stray dog that had gotten in through the old, broken screen door leading out to the parking lot. Overlaps with
* In "Last Exit to Springfield", when Lisa sees herself in the mirror after having the orthodontic appliance put on and laughs maniacally (spoofing the Joker's scene in the 1989
* In "Last One Out of Beach City" Pearl develops an immediate crush on Mystery Girl (a human who resembles Rose Quartz), who is a great deal taller than Pearl herself.
* In "Last One Out of Beach City", Pearl is in a rebellious mood and tries drinking... apple juice (which is a big deal for her, because while Gems can eat and drink they don't need to, and Pearl doesn't much enjoy the sensation). Then she sees Mystery Girl walk into the Big Donut and spits out her drink.

* In "Last Ride of Bonnie and Clyde", Rufus goes so far as to make a fake driver's license that identifies him as
* In last seasons, Ross has a crush on his gorgeous colleague Charlie who is also a paleontologist and works at the same department. She first dated his friend Joey which also complicated things.
* In "Last Stand", Mac uses the hose on the fire truck to knock a bad guy off of a motorcycle.
* In "Last Train to Bustville," Phineas spots a dodo (created by Doofenshmirtz's newest machine) and produces a list containing everything mentioned in the theme song, then checks it off. Buford then claims that he found Frankenstein's brain in the basket of his balloon.
* In "Last Words", Doc sits in an out-of-control jeep. When it finally stops, he tells the others that the seat will need a thorough cleaning.
* In late 1670s France, an investigation into a forged marriage certificate led to the exposure of a massive network of poisoners, one that reached as far as the inner circle of
* In late 1930s, the USSR started to seek the new heavy tank to replace the aging T-35. The initial design was still multi-turreted - albeit the number of turrets was only three, and even that was lately reduced to two (to improve armor protection). Two different designs, SMK tank and T-100 tank were developed by competing tank factories and prototypes were tested under field conditions of Winter War. Eventually, SMK won the competition and was recommended for mass production... which doesn't started, because single-turret KV-1 tank prototype demonstrated MUCH better characteristics.
* In late 1941 the Soviet Union decided to allow political prisoners and ordinary criminals to volunteer in the Red Army and, if they survived, win their freedom. This contributed to and partially justified the opinion that many officers and combat soldiers had of the logistics troops, which was that they were a gang of food-hoarding thieves, rapists, and murderers. To no-one's surprise, after the war's end the demobilization of the army resulted in a massive crime wave.
* In late 1943, there was a serious mutiny among British soldiers serving in Italy. Men wounded in action in north Africa and in the early stages of the Italian fighting, who had been cleared as fit for combat, were sent to a replacement camp in Italy with the intention they would then be posted on to units requiring men. The issue was that many of these men belonged to parent units that had been redeployed back to Britain in preparation for the invasion of France. There was a sense of injustice, rage and resentment that men discharged from hospital, who had missed being posted back to Britain, were not being repatriated to join their friends, but were expected to go to wholly unfamiliar units to continue the fight in Italy. Many of these men had been in the front line continually since 1940 and firmly believed they had done their bit and it was somebody else's turn. Several thousand soldiers in this position grounded their weapons, refused to go to the front as strangers in unfamiliar units, and demanded to be posted back to their own units now in Britain. While the mutiny was put down and many of these men ended up court-martialled and in the glasshouse, the British army thought again about the issues involved, and conceded men in this position have a right to go back to their parent units. This became standard practice after the Salerno mutinies.
* In late 1944 and 1945, more and more British naval assets were deployed to the Pacific to join in the war on Japan. Hard experience, of trigger-happy American gunners who had never seen British aircraft before, suggested that it would be a
* In late 1944/early 1945, as the US government is transitioning from a 12-year Progressive administration to a newly elected Republican one, the State Department puts a lot of effort into incinerating all the files and records of their illegal support for the Soviets and other left-wing militant groups around the world.
* In late 1982, The Great Game Company (which would later become GameTek) announced plans to adapt seven game shows into video games for the Atari 2600:
* In late-1985, Sheik and Volkoff were in another heel-vs.-heel match, where they challenged then-tag team champions, the Dream Team (Brutus Beefcake and Greg Valentine) for the titles. The fans sided with Beefcake and Valentine, and the match ended in a double-disqualification.

* In late 2003/early 2004, Lloyd Braun and a few other ABC executives were fired because they had greenlighted a strange project called
* In late 2009, unknown grave robbers stole the corpse of former Cypriot president Tassos Papadopoulos for unclear reasons. It was found a few months later in another cemetery, but the case remains unsolved.
* In late 2010, Taco Bell's "beef" was accused of consisting only of 35% beef, with the rest assorted chemicals and filler, and which couldn't legally be classified as beef. The claim is that the chain got around this by using the meaningless word "beefy". Taco Bell says that its taco filling contains 88% USDA-inspected beef, with the rest being water, spices, oats, starch, and other filler ingredients — this is common for almost all processed beef.
* In late 2010 WWE signed 7 ft wrestler Isis The Amazon and advertised her for NXT Season 3. When it was found that she had erotic fetish photos online, she was removed from the competition and later released.
* In late 2011 a New Jersey resident created a demographic map of the state (currently at the top of this page). Thanks to Facebook and Twitter it immediately went viral and made the local papers. A couple of politicians were unhappy with the portrayal, but the vast majority of residents found it to be
* In late 2012 an enhanced edition was released with some new things, some backported things from
* In late 2013, SNL received a lot of criticism for their relative lack of black female cast members throughout their almost 40-year history. They held a casting call and ended up casting
* In late 2017, Grace Mugabe, the wife of the long-time president of Zimbabwe, Robert Mugabe, publicly accused leadership rival Emmerson Mnangagwa of plotting a coup against her husband, who subsequently dismissed Mnangagwa from his position as vice-president and forced him into exile. Reports vary, but most observers seem to agree that Mnangagwa was just biding his time and waiting for President Mugabe, who was in his mid-90s and in failing health, to die of natural causes, and didn't see Grace as a serious threat. The end result of this was that the Mugabes ended up
* In late 2017, Spain is sending the same message to Catalonia. The Spanish constitution is very explicit that secession is forbidden, and Spanish courts held that the Calatan regional government acted illegally by even
* In late 2018, another little girl, Laby, was released as a playable character, and she's as much of a badass as everyone else. Her Sparky Child class path, which refuses to rely on her magic mirror Nisha, can knock the everliving daylights out of huge demons with nothing but her bare hands and feet, and enjoys every second of it.
* In late 2019, California congresswoman Katie Hill resigned after sexually explicit photos of her were leaked on the internet by her ex-boyfriend, and a special election was set up to fill the remainder of her term. Democrats quickly rallied by Assemblywoman Christy Smith, whose seat in the California State Assembly made up over half of the congressional district's population. The party was confident that, with the election coinciding with the Democratic presidential primary that March, she would get over 50% of the vote in the all-party primary and win the election outright. Unfortunately, those plans were complicated when
* In late 60's/70's syndication and original NBC summer re-airings of
* In late antiquity, writers started getting the Titans (originally a group of gods) confused with the Gigantes, adding yet another bunch to the giant menagerie.
* In late January 2008 there was an uproar over a lesbian sex scene in the game
* In late November 2020 Fox News host Tucker Carlson, known for his tendency to promote fringey right-wing conspiracy theories on his show
* In later appearances, Teddy practically becomes a parody of the "boring milquetoast" version of the trope; whenever he shows up, it's made immediately clear that he still carries a torch for Amy, resents Jake bitterly and tries to get her back at every opportunity (to the point where, on one occasion, he proposes marriage to her

* In later arcs of every incarnation, the (weaker) fighters will often smash eighty-meter-high
* In later books, HEX demonstrates he can control the flow of time on Roundworld, speeding, slowing, or rewinding it down alternate different pasts and futures as is necessary.
* In later books in the series, Olaf deliberately inverts this by shortening his laugh to a simple "Ha!"
* In later books, it's mentioned that new fighter designs are being introduced into the USNA fleet faster and faster, and the biggest obstacle to replacing all the fighters is not the number of the new fighters (they're nano-grown from asteroid matter) but the number of pilots with the upgraded neural hardware and software to fly them. The SG-420 Starblades made all the fighters before them obsolete almost immediately, including the still relatively new SG-101 Velociraptors and SG-112 Stardragons. It's nano-hull can flow around the pilot, redirecting enemy kinetic shots and growing weapons in any direction on demand.
* In later books, it's revealed that "bugger" is a vulgar, insulting way to refer to the species, and their official name is "the Formics" (based on the Latin "formicae", meaning "ants"). The term "piggies" is more affectionate than insulting, but they likewise are officially referred to as "the Pequeninos" (Portuguese for "the little ones").
* In later books it's revealed that magic is an ever changing force and it interferes with technology
* In later books, many of the more educated characters have tried to explain big thaumaturgical ideas to laymen; when one of those laymen offers up an analogy, the educated character notes that it's a "very useful metaphor that aids understanding while being completely inaccurate in every respect."
* In later books, Snapping is caused automatically by "mist-sickness", which by design only affects unSnapped Allomancers, and just badly enough to Snap them.
* In later books, the protagonists start using Merlin's cave complex deep in the mountains to house such individuals as a compromise. Those still deciding where they stand, or who can not bring themselves to become allies of the protagonists, can be kept there in isolation and physical safety, unable to be a risk to the Inner Circle, and allowing the Inner Circle to avoid being any more ruthless than absolutely necessary. They even offer their "prisoners of state", the option of cryo-sleep so they can awake after the conflict has ended if they so wish.
* In later books, the same bond is used between husband and wife (and wife and wife).
* In later books, the Solarian Office of Frontier Security and the Gendarme fill this role on paper, but the are far too corrupt (along with the rest of the Solarian League) to serve as anything but imperialistic thugs.
* In later books this is largely subverted and it just took Harry a very long time to realize it. He
* In later books, you need only to say "Riddikulus" to beat a boggart. The whole "make it funny" part is abandoned after the third book.
* In later chapters, the creators have started adding cameo appearances for fanmade characters, further expanding the named cast. Some of the "cameos" went on to become fairly important characters.
* In later editions, it's not just the High Programmers who get to escape this; one of the perks of Red clearance is that you get to eat a
* In later editions of the book, Tolkien specifically goes into detail about the incorrect notion of his books being an allegory for
* In later editions of the game, the gargantuan froglike slann were the original servants of the Old Ones, now the ancient leaders of the
* In later editions of the game, the Propulsion & Repulsion Cannons became capable of killing things with "crash" damage, either by using the Propulsion Cannon to lob objects at other creatures (or bash smaller creatures against walls) or by using the Repulsion Cannon to smash creatures against the environment until they die. The Drill Arm became a powerful melee attack weapon capable of repulsing even Reaper Leviathans. Prawn Suits were upgraded with the ability to punch enemies in melee. And, finally, Torpedoes became an unlockable weapon for certain submersibles. The result was that players could now more aggressively defend themselves — or brutally stalk down and massacre aggressive creatures.

* In later editions, the book lists half a dozen weapons as "the only truly honorable ones for Samurai". In due fairness, however, it then proceeds to list exceptions by clan, and the katana is not an all-purpose superweapon in this game (heavy weapons are more useful against opponents with carapace, bows can be devastating if used right, etc.). Nearly all of the powerful magical weapons in the setting
* In later editions, this changed (to much fan outcry), with the Knights not only being allowed to use daemonhosts and other unholy relics, one of their characters actually uses a daemonsword under the pretext that only he has the mental fortitude to avoid falling to its whispers.
* In later editions, units can voluntarily take being pinned down as a tradeoff against casualties. Essentially, infantry units can "
* In later episodes, a random classmate developed the ability to sense the spirit world, after showing no such ability before.
* In later episodes, it's no longer a lie, as the Emergency Command Hologram subroutine is added to the Doctor's programming. After most of the crew is taken and mind-wiped to be factory workers, ECH not only repairs the ship but also manages to defeat two alien ships with a single photon torpedo by accessing his enormous tactical database and recalling an old Romulan
* In later expansions, the developers go through a good deal of work to create a few "unique" creatures for each expansion (especially the alien planet Outland). Still, you're unlikely to hit a zone that doesn't have at least two or three models you've seen before.
* In later expansions, you are able to build police cutters to protect trade sectors from
* In later films, more hybrids appear, and they are all immune to silver.
* In later games after SAO, Kirito's experience with dual wielding carries over, despite there being no dual wielding feature implemented. Though he's managed to find loopholes to make it work effectively, such as activating individual singlehanded Sword Skills separately on each sword to imitate his dual wielding in SAO. Though he doesn't typically make use of this unless he gets
* In later games, dark mages (who are mostly villainous and tend to be played for
* In later games, Jill Valentine, Claire Redfield, and Ada Wong play this straight despite their waif physiques with all three women are able to
* In later games many of the early boss monsters would eventually show up later with a palette swap as a
* In later games, the AI-controlled civilizations will remember your actions and be more wary in their dealings with you.
* In later games, the movement penalties are mitigated somewhat by the units' own terrain ratings - a unit with an overall S-rank in a terrain isn't as bogged down - or their movement types.
* In later games, you can kill a number of enemies with precisely-timed actions. Essentially, when Ezio is killing a guy, you can give the strike command with a direction, and he will almost instantly rush towards another guy and stab him, and so on. Needless to say, seeing a dozen well-armed soldiers slaughtered by one guy in under 10 seconds can drop the morale meter faster than a rock.
* In later generations, the color of your trainer card changes as you meet certain achievements and gain stars. While the number and colors have varied a bit, it always begins as red and ends with black. Of course, the main things that come with this change are a few bits of dialogue change and bragging rights.
* In later incarnations of the character, the victim would be turned to Bronze.
* In later in-game cutscenes, Geralt can climb and jump huge gaps (typically
* In later installments in the series (namely Rogue and Black Flag), the player characters are employees in a subsidiary of Abstergo Industries called Abstergo Entertainment, which uses the Animus to gather material for various entertainment products, such as documentaries, historical dramas, and, you guessed it, video games. In Black Flag and Rogue, various games and other media under the Assassin's Creed IP, and indeed the IP itself, are portrayed as the property of Abstergo Entertainment, and the studio is portrayed as an in-universe version of the series's real-world development studio-Ubisoft Montreal-in order to be used as a mouthpiece for the real-world development teams' thoughts about where the series should go. The executives and creative directors of Abstergo Entertainment, in email threads accessed by the player character, frequently invoke Rule of Fun and

* In later rereleases of the game, Mew Mew actually becomes a physical character via
* In later seasons, characters read out real phone numbers that could be dialed. Fans of the show have reported dialing the phone and speaking to various cast and crew members.
* In later seasons, Daenerys' long silver hair has grown to just above her waist, which provides an interesting parallel to the Dothraki tradition of undefeated warriors having uncut hair.
* In later seasons, Daniel tries to tell a village that there is no such thing as magic; it is ineffective because no sooner has he finished saying this than he and the rest of his team are beamed away in a flash of light, leaving the villagers baffled. Daniel hangs his head and complains at the timing.
* In later seasons Dexter regularly screws up. He only gets away because he is good at
* In later seasons, it's trying to become America's Favourite, especially if it's a showmance, because people who the viewers like seem to get
* In later seasons, largely starting when Chase Young enters the picture, Omi in particular begins to call his nonmagical attacks as well, since
* In later seasons, often occurred at the end of any episode featuring the Wonder Twins and Gleek the monkey or, more rarely, Robin.
* In later seasons, Quinn. Unless the writers plan to crush the dreams of most of the fans, it's just not going to work out between her and Barney. The finale of season 7 revealed Barney's bride to be
* In later seasons she was often subject to the Legion of Doom's machinations.
* In later seasons, the original pairings' comparative dynamics and focus change only a little. Owen and Izzy break up with the same ease with which they once got together, while the other three do go through some rough patches: Geoff/Bridgette have mutual infidelity and jealousy issues, Leshawna backs out of romantic commitment with Harold, and Lindsay's lesser mental capacity means she only remembers Tyler as a concept. However, they all work through it wholesomely (while Harold and Leshawna don't officially get back together, their feelings don't diminish), with the semi-volatile Geoff/Bridgette in particular being confirmed as stable in
* In later seasons, there are several episodes which only a few characters appear, including the aforementioned episodes. Another prominent example is "How to Save a Life" in season 11, where only Meredith, Bailey, Owen, April, Amelia, and Derek appear; this is the same episode where
* In later seasons, when the current game in the series allowed for customized pieces of armor, this cleared up a bit.
* In later seasons, Willow, Tara, and Anya filled this role sometimes, especially if Giles wasn't around — Willow and Tara would exposit about magic, Anya about demons she met in her
* In later seasons, Zoey and Dawn had a noticeable fumble early on as Zoey constantly appears to be flirting with Dawn (especially in the Japanese version). Dawn's reactions don't help (blushing in response in one instance), and neither does the "Prince and Princess" motif of their Contest clothing. Numerous fans thought that they were intentionally writing in a lesbian pairing, or at least a heavy
* In later shows, after Marshall's dad died, his mother hooked up with Mickey, Lily's dad. At first, they were just "relatives, with benefits," but later were together during the year in Rome, implied to be married. (This made Marshall and Lily step-siblings.)

* In later stories by Poul Anderson, the various miners of the Asteroid Belt form the Asterite Republic after a full-scale Asterite War Of Independence against the Earth. (The story draws heavily from the US Revolutionary War.)
* In later stories, Humanity itself, as well as our sometimes-allies the Silver Ghosts, are this to everyone
* In later versions they then decreed that the silver that worked against supernatural beings wasn't
* In later wars, the Israeli leadership tried to exploit this to gain international support, but it was less effective after the Six-Day War, and especially after the Yom Kippur War, when Israel's conflicts shifted from being against numerically superior foreign armies to against Palestinian militants. Some Israeli politicians and foreign supporters have framed Israel's conflict with Iran this way.
* In later years, it happened many times that pictures of upcoming Games Workshop releases (both for
* In later years, there have been a number of "free — roaming space whales" collectively known as
* In late season 1, Kate plans to take the identity of a survivor who drowned on day 6. She never got to do it, though.
* In late season 3, Eddie has a vision that warns him of one of his friends pulling a
* In late Season 5, Roxana keeps Saphir from doing a quest that impacts the game story and may have the side a effect of making Saphir's guild outrank Roxana's once it's done. The reason the quest could have been singlehandedly enough to significantly uprank Saphir's guild? It would bring a big blow to the
* In late season one, Brutus feels only betrayed by Caesar and gives in to his mother, going along with the plot to kill the dictator. He goes through with it, but then Antony comes in and they share a look where Brutus' guilt is written all over his face. He then cries out in agony over what he's done. However he seems to get over it rather fast, and stays allied to Cassius to the very end.
* In late Spring 2006, Hampton Inns ran a commercial featuring a rewrite of "Wouldn't It Be Loverly" from
* In late Summer of 2011, a group of food bloggers were invited to a lasagna dinner they were told was prepared by celebrity chef George Duran. After dinner, which the diners presumably enjoyed, it was revealed to them that the lasagna was actually a frozen dinner by Marie Callender. The diners, after spending part of the dinner railing against processed foods on a hidden camera, were
* In Latin America, it simply became Fox Sports 3 or Fox Sports, depending on the country.
* In Latin America, some productions have multiple dubs because of different distributors. These dubs may be made in different
* In Latin America, this trope is often coupled with the old wives' tale that if you don't satisfy the craving, the kid will be born with a physical symbol of that unsatisfied desire, giving this trope a bigger sense of urgency. In one old
* In Latvia, a country hard hit by the 2007-9 economic crisis, the Kontora loan office is lending people money at high interest rates if they agree to use their
* In "Launch", this gets inverted: Entrapta, a woman of 25-35 years old who is also the shortest of the Princesses alongside the aforementioned 12-year-old Frosta, is the one who has to be kept on a child leash by the other Princesses lest she wander off into danger.
* In Laura Anne Gilman's Retriever novels The Council is the association of 'current' users who become progressively more ... persuasive about making everyone join them
* In Lauren Child's Clarice Bean novels (not picture books) Clarice is a fan of "Ruby Redford" books about a schoolgirl super-spy. Due to reader demand, Child has since written several Ruby Redford books.
* In law, a "dying declaration" may be considered an exception to the rule against hearsay evidence
* In "Lawmen", Greg and Ed are furious with their sons, Dean and Clark respectively, for disobeying their orders, leaving the police car and putting themselves in danger at the scene of a crime.

* In "Lawnmower Dog", Rick and Morty enter the dreams of Morty's math teacher to incept the idea that Morty should get an A in the class. As they wind up in trouble, they escape to the dreams of people in the dreams until they hit "dream bedrock."
* In Lawrence Block's Evan Tanner series the "sleep center" of the narrator's brain was destroyed by shrapnel during the Korean War. As a consequence, he never sleeps
* In "Lazarus" a suspect keeping Scully hostage calls the FBI to demand a ransom. Mulder keeps him on the line long enough, but the suspect was smart enough to use Scully's cell phone, making the trace useless.
* In "Lazy Little Beaver", the wolf is knocked out of his fur and overalls and left in a union suit.
* In "Leader of the Pack", Max messes with a bully named Duke after being asked how he can win the love of Max's cousin Debbie by tricking the brute into dressing up like a baby — and it's all downhill for Duke from there in a
* In "Leadside" the eponymous art thief is robbing a gallery. His minions bring him a painting, a statuette and a round object like an abstract art piece. He orders the last one to be left behind, because it's actually a cuspidor (spittoon).
* In "Leaf It Alone" at the beginning when Bugs is raking leaves he mentions that his fingers hurt and he needs an extra pair of hands, we then see a closeup of his hands with his fingers covered in blisters.
* In "Leanne's Saga" Bill begins dating Luanne's mother. When she falls off the wagon, she resorts to her abusive ways and Bill takes the brunt, leading to him showing up in the alley with a black eye. When asked about it, he explains:
* In "Leap of Faith", Granny Smith reveals that she used to be an aqua-pony in her youth, doing synchronized swimming and high-dives. After taking the Flim-Flam Brothers'
* In "Learn About Strangers", Papa's story where a goose gets eaten by a fox gives Sister nightmares.
* In "Learning Curves", Tuvok administers a battle simulation test to a group of Maquis crewmen. The attack ends with the simulated
* In "Learning Curve", Tuvok is ordered to train the Maquis crewmembers who are having trouble fitting in. Instead of giving them a crash course in Starfleet procedures to show why they are necessary, he acts like a Hollywood
* In "Learning to Be Me", children are fitted with a "jewel" — a small solid-state computer that monitors all brain activity and emulates it, guiding (or forcing) a slaved AI to be a mental clone of the growing child. As middle age approaches, it is traditional to have the failing grey goo scooped out of your skull and let the jewel take over. If you
* In Lebanon in the 1980s, a terrorist group once kidnapped a Soviet diplomat, then cut off his finger, which was sent to the Soviet embassy in Beirut as proof that they had him. The Soviet response, after a short KGB "investigation", was to send a box to the terrorist leader containing his beloved brother's
* In "Le Big Switch", the French chef that Mr. Krabs got as part of an exchange program gives him a massive bill for his services after Mr. Krabs has been forced into bankruptcy due to the chef's extravagant demands.
* In "Leela's Homeworld", one of the photos that Fry, Leela, and Bender discover is of them at "Space Mardi Gras".
* In "Leela's Homeworld", the professor's nose-making machine is later used to translate the message that was with Leela when she was abandoned as an infant.
* In Lee's story ending from Tekken 5, he's seen lounging at a tropical resort while a lady massages him, when his adoptive father Heihachi arrives as his personal servant... wearing the same type of skimpy swimsuit Lee would probably wear, along with a bow tie strapped with a bomb as a means to humiliate him.
* In Left 4 Dead 2's The Passing mission, Ellis and Francis both agree that if there are zombies there are probably vampires, mummies, and all sorts of other supernatural phenomena out there, completely ignoring the actual nature of the infected.

* In "Left Behind", a flashback scene shows Oliver's first attempt at this while working for ARGUS in Hong Kong.
* In "Legacy", Leo has a sword fight against his commander, both using their respective
* In "Legend of Satchmo", the babies search for a Satchmo (from a story Grandpa Lou told them during a camp-out) and mistake a dark figure (who is really Stu checking up on the kids) for the aforementioned creature.
* In "Legend of the Gobblewonker", Grunkle Stan criticizes the counterfeit money made by Dipper and Mabel, saying "You call that Ben Franklin? He looks like a woman!" Then six episodes later in "Irrational Treasure", Mabel finds a secret historical document proving that Ben secretly
* In "Legend of the Gobblewonker", Mabel imagines spending her half of the prize money for a monster photo contest on a human-sized hamster ball. Later, Dipper imagines himself becoming famous and getting interviewed on TV for catching the Gobblewonker on film... only for Mabel (still in her hamster-ball) to barge onto the set and demand an interview.
* In "Legends", after the heroes find their first main clue that something is off about Seaboard City, they start noticing smaller imperfections. The local heroes always work with the same two cops, and the exact same ice cream truck is constantly roaming the city without ever stopping.
* In "Legends", it had the team realize they were in some sort of illusion, and not a timewarp. A lot of little details to the seemingly 1950's town didn't add up. None of the books had words, the ice cream truck never stops, all the subways were boarded up, and the newspapers reported things that hadn't happened. They note that the world of "heroes" seems a little TOO ridiculous, even for them, such a random bus full of nuns somehow losing control and driving towards a pile of dynamite that just happens to be lying in its path. That and the fact that these random outlandish crisises kept popping up whenever they were about to make any progress figuring out where they were tipped them off that something was amiss.
* In Legends, the ISB could take over entire Star Destroyers at a whim, run the Navy through illegal tests of character without telling anyone, and killing anyone who failed without going through any procedures until Vader himself cracked down on them. They do all of those things in
* In "Le Giovani Marmotte e il ritorno del Giocattolaio" (The Junior Woodchucks and the return of the Toymaker) by
* In Legoland in Windsor near one of the toilets, there are two Lego men doing this.
* In "Legs of an Ant", Tezuka draws himself as a passer-by warning Mitsuo about a forest fire on the road ahead. Amusingly, he has "Why am I here anyway?" written on the back of his shirt.
* In "Lemon of Troy", this was the cause of Jebediah Springfield and Shelbyville Manhattan's split:
* In "Lemon of Troy", we see a number of Shelbyville residents looking like mirror-universe versions of Springfielders.
* In "Lemon of Troy" when Homer steals Flanders's RV away from the impound lot the lot's owner and his son (Homer and Bart's
* In length order, Mikan's choppy hair reaches the top of her legs, Ibuki has masses of knee-length Avril Lavigne-esque hair to fit her punkish appearance, and Sonia is shown in some incarnations to have ankle-length hair when it's untied (fitting for a princess). Akane once had waist-length hair too, during her time at Hope's Peak.
* In Leo Kessler's pulp-fiction about SS-Batallion Wotan, Sergeant-Major Metzger (the Butcher) is the evil sadist charged with turning Waffen-SS recruits into fighting soldiers, supported by the sadistic gay Colonel (the Vulture) who sees his men only as a disposable means to getting medals. Metzger is an overbearing crude and ignorant bully with no redeeming features; a disgruntled recruit, Schulze, gains revenge in several satisfying ways, including seducing his bored and bovine wife, passing an STD on to her in the bargain. Appalled that he is going to war with the Batallion, Metzger disgraces himself with an act of craven cowardice and is busted to Private.

* In Leon's opening cinematic, a female zombie prone at Leon's feet does this just before waking up and latching onto his ankle.
* In "Le Petit Tourette" Cartman fakes having Tourette's Syndrome as an excuse to swear as much as he likes. However, as time goes on, him saying whatever he likes at any time causes him to lose his ability to filter what comes so out of his mouth, so he starts to involuntarily blurt out embarrassing things about himself, like how he wets the bed, how he and his cousin once touched wieners, and that he was lying about having Tourette's Syndrome.
* in lesbians with Ryuko? Will Gamagoori finally confess to Mako? Who knows!
* In Les Exilés de la Terre (Exiled from Earth) by Paschal Grousset involves a trip inside of an iron mountain in Sudan that has been converted into a magnetically driven vehicle (1887).
* In "Lesser Evils", Sherlock determines that a hospital patient died of an overdose not natural causes. He starts looking at the hospital records and the morgue and determines that many of terminally ill patients died in such a manner, revealing the presence of an "angel of death" (i.e. someone who performs
* In "Lessons" Buffy tells Dawn that "vampires [and] demons" are "nothing compared to what's coming". Dawn notes that she "can't believe it's back" and Buffy tells her that there's "only a few more days 'til it starts. Then we'll never know what's coming next." "It" being
* In "Lessons Learned", Gideon invokes this technique as a way of finally breaking down the UnSub. He notes that since the CIA had already roughed him up, he thought that by being the nice guy and allowing the UnSub his daily prayers that he would open up to him.
* In "Lessons Learned", the first and last shot of the scene of Winter tutoring Weiss is of a caterpillar, which acts to identify the progress Weiss is making in developing her Semblance. The scene starts with Weiss's lack of faith in her Summoning ability while the caterpillar crawls alone in view of the camera. The scene ends with the caterpillar being stopped by a tiny summoned sword as Weiss and Winter depart, unaware that Weiss has started to manifest her ability.
* In "Lesson Zero", an unhinged Twilight casts a "Want-It Need-It" spell on her old Smarty Pants doll so she can fabricate a scenario for her friendship report to Princess Celestia. It ends up with
* In "Lesson Zero", Twilight Sparkle (who's desperate for a problem to solve so she can write a letter to Princess Celestia about it) sees Rainbow Dash tearing apart one of Applejack's barns:
* In less than a decade, the SGC goes from special ops guerrilla tactics, and firing missiles through the stargate, to commanding a fleet of Earth-built interstellar starships. Most of this advancement happens after season 6 or so when Earth's first starship, the
* in less than an hour, because Serpentor had led one crushing defeat after another until Cobra had nothing left.
* In "Let's Get Dangerous!", Darkwing Duck reluctantly agrees to investigate the disappearance of Gosalyn Waddlemeyer's grandfather, who was build the R.A.M. Rod device for Taurus Bulba. Bulba claims that Waddlemeyer was dissipated into another dimension when he turned on the device, convinced there was a flaw that Bulba himself assured was non-existent. However, when Gosalyn steals the key to the R.A.M. Rod in an attempt to bring her grandfather back, Taurus claims the device isn't stable enough to search the dimensions for him. Darkwing quickly realizes something is amiss, and points out Bulba said that he told Waddlemeyer the device was perfectly fine, which Bulba hesitantly claims is the case. Darkwing and Gosyaln then decide to use the R.A.M. to find Waddlemeyer...and it's at this point that Bulba shows his true colors...
* In "Let's Get Dangerous!", Launchpad comments that "This is like every dream I've ever had!
* In "Let's Go Fly a Coot", upon hearing that he'll never have a birthday again, Bart

* In "Let's Kill Hitler", Rory automatically knows how to drive a WW2-era motorcycle simply because "it's that sort of day".
* In "Let's Kill Hitler", we learn that when they were teens, Amy Pond regarded Rory as a close friend but nothing more. She told Mel, "He's gorgeous, he's my favorite guy, but he's, y'know,
* In "Let's Kill Luma", Mario craps his pants after the Comet Observatory crashes on his front yard and he declares that he needs to take another shower.
* In "Let's Play Babysitting", Stumpy forces Quack Quack to eat spinach by using a funnel and pushing the spinach down said funnel with a baseball bat.
* In "Let's Play Time Travel", when Mr. Cat calls the time machine company so that he can order a time machine, only he can be heard speaking coherently while the person on the other end of the line can only be heard as sped-up gibberish.
* In "Let's Stick Together", Donald gets angry at Spike the bee's girlfriend and searches for her. Spike then decides to dive right into his rear, causing Donald to literally jump out of the greenhouse screaming in pain.
* In level 8, meddling with another artifact once again summons the same monster.
* In Level 8, Robespierre observes, reluctanctly, that Cube does have a knack for getting the best out of the team.
* In Level 8, the "8-bit 8-ball" is quickly identified as an artifact. What does it do? Artifacting, Dirk muses. Indeed, the comic's picture all around is getting low-resolution, as in an 8-bit picture. Which in computer parlance is called... artifacting.
* in Lex Luthor's body points out the flaw with the Doomsday program: they're trying to make someone strong enough to beat Superman rather than something that can take advantage of his weaknesses. All they need is someone strong enough to be in roughly the same ballpark as Superman with some powers he doesn't possess (such as telepathy). Or as Xander puts it, "If you drop a naked Green Beret in the forest with orders to bring you a dead bear by Sunday, what will you get on Sunday? A dead bear, two if he gets hungry."
* In Lex the action team is very strongly supported by a remote mission control hub and extra field assets if needed, even though they don't really need it because they're good at what they do.
* In "Liberties", a judge learns that his son was not, as he had believed, murdered by a serial killer, but had instead been kidnapped and raised by a pedophile. He promptly drags the pedophile to his house and savagely beats him.
* In "Lication," the moral is to never share anything. This is followed up by Cyborg saying
* In "Lies", this happens two times between Kagami and Adrien, first during fencing practice and when the two finish school, in their cars, respectively.
* In lieu of fisticuffs, this is one of the forms of combat/information-gathering in
* In Lieu of the One I Love: Lilly and Alex's relationship starts out commuting by wand between their respective universes' New York and Malibu.
* In life, King Doomsnarl was colossal, far larger than regular lizalfos get.
* In "Life of Crime", when SpongeBob and Patrick are keeping warm with a fire, Patrick questions how they have a fire when they're underwater, and it immediately goes out.
* In "Life Serial", Spike takes a rather drunk Buffy out to a demon bar. The demons are appropriately grossed out by his taste in women, particularly
* In life-threatening survival situations (such as fights between colonists and Native Americans), some men have been reported as maintaining this trope,
* In "Life Time", Charles is giving surgical instructions while donating blood to the patient and passes out right after saying, "There's one other thing. It's very important— You mustn't forget—". It's a parody, though, as it's already been established that everyone involved with the surgery knows what to do, Charles is just...being Charles.
* In "Lifetime Piling Up", Brooke does this to Nathan when she intrudes on him showering.
* In "Lighthouse Keeping Loonies", the fog is closing in around the Jolly Rock lighthouse. Graeme switches on the foghorn, startling an over-sensitive Tim who yells at him to turn it off. Graeme does so but the foghorn continues to blare, even after they

* In "Lighthouse Loonies", the QE2 sails so close to the lighthouse they see the
* In Lightin' Hopkins' song "Bring Me My Shotgun," the speaker calls for his shotgun and proclaims that he's going to shoot his woman for sleeping around. She dares him to try it. Relenting, the man insists that the only reason he's not shooting her is because his shotgun is broken.
* In Light Novel Vol. 17, Touma and Index's plane gets hijacked by mundane terrorists, leading to a
* In Light Novel Vol. 4, the heroes at one point have to deal with a
* In light of recent world events, the opening of this episode has been heavily censored out of respect for all involved", followed by 90% of Rich and Josh's dialogue getting bleeped out.
* In light of the above, what prevents Guardsmen from deserting first chance they get? The local
* In "Lightspeed", Jinx remarks "I don't know why I hang around with you nitwits."
* In "Light the Way," Elinor's father falls asleep after eating marshmallows. After being disturbed by Olive trumpeting after accidentally stepping on a stick, he murmurs "Uh, more marshmallows? Why yes, please." Later in the episode, after being disturbed again, he says "That's the biggest marshmallow I've ever seen."
* In "Like A Virgin", dramatic music plays as Dean tries to yank out a
* In "Like Father Like Daughter", Alexis tries to prove that Frank Henson, a man convicted of murder 15 years ago and scheduled to be executed in three days, is innocent of the crime. She and Castle ultimately discover that Frank had confessed to the crime to protect his brother John, whom he saw standing over the body. Alexis and her father prove that both Frank and John were innocent, and Frank is exonerated.
* In Like Flint, after shocking a guard's heart back into beating, Flint does some mild chest compression on him and he revives.
* In Like Flint. Derek Flint falls onto a conveyor belt and is almost carried to his doom inside a document furnace. Later, a man falls from a height onto the belt and suffers that fate.
* In Like Flint: Derek Flint has apparently been cremated and his ashes are brought (in an open urn) to Lloyd Cramden's office. Cramden's assistant absentmindedly drops the ashes from his cigarette in the urn.
* In Like Flint: Derek Flint has such a device in his trick cigarette lighter - the grappler is the size of a small fishhook and the line as thin as dental floss, but he can still tightrope walk on it.
* In Like Flint. Derek Flint uses a "sonic amplifier" to maneuver in space. Did I mention he's IN SPACE, which is a vacuum?
* In Like Flint: Flint's girlfriends are put in cryogenic freezers with no preparation. After he defrosts them, they're completely O.K.
* In Like Flint. Flint storms the Z.O.W.I.E. missile base with an army of scantily-clad women. Their plan: "Operation Smooch". They overcome the male guards by seducing them with sexual flirtation, when that doesn't work, beating them up.
* In Like Flint has Lloyd Cramden electrocuted again, this time by a malfunctioning electronic bugging device. No aftereffects.
* In Like Flint - in a government document-disposal complex, Flint (actually the guy he was fighting) is put into the incinerator and reduced to a pile of fine ash, riding there on a conveyor belt of doom.
* In Like Flint. In the end, the three leaders of the feminist conspiracy assure the President that they accept that the world is better in male hands. They then turn to the audience and give knowing looks, indicating that they have no intention of giving up on their plans of world domination.
* In Like Flint. While on a mission in Moscow, Flint is pursued by Soviet agents. He jumps onto the top of a tower and fires a line to the top of another building using his multi-function lighter. He then slides down the line to the top of the building and safety.

* In "Lil' Griffins", the characters appear as kids bearing a resemblance to
* In "Lilith Needs A Favor", Daphne, her mother, Roz, and Roz's daughter Alice go to Canadian Fun Country, touted in something Niles read as being one of southeastern British Columbia's best amusement parks.
* In "Lilith Needs A Favor", Niles demands the Cafe Nervosa waiter use Brain Bleach to forget about what Niles thinks is a picture of Daphne's nipple.
* In Lilly's Act 1 ending, Hisao does this when Lilly responds to his asking about her being depressed over Akira's departure by saying that "Akira's taken."
* in Lilly's Good Ending, Lilly stays with Hisao after he pulls an almost fatal Race for Your Love
* In Lilly's route, Hanako falls asleep on Lilly's shoulder as the two and Hisao take a train tide back to Yamaku from Hokaido. Lilly lets her nap as she and Hisao make small talk.
* In Lilly's route, her older sister Akira asks to meet with Hisao, and ends up talking a little about their family. The subject then turns to Akira and Lilly's recent visit to their parents' house in Scotland, and after mentioning that Akira's parents want her to come to Scotland and work for them, she says the following line, which indicates that Lilly's coming with her.
* In Limp Bizkit's music video for "Eat You Alive", police dogs are shown sniffing out the scent of the woman the band has kidnapped, and they give chase.
* in Lincoln County makes this funnier), to continue to be labeled as such.
* In "Lincoln Loud: Girl Guru", when Lincoln and his friend Clyde are baking pies to sell, as part of a class project, Lincoln goes to pantry for the chocolate they'll use as filling only to find it missing. Lincoln then tells Clyde that his ten sisters are known "choco-holics," cue montage of the sisters with a contented expression on their chocolate smeared faces.
* In "Lincoln Lover", when Stan and Steve go to a Republican convention, every visitor must pass the "gay check". This usually includes things that look for this trope, such as asking the visitor to look at his nails (according to Stan, a "real man" does it palm up, while bending fingers, while a homosexual does is the feminine way - palm down and stretching out the fingers), asking what "ERA" stands for (once again, a "real man" would say "earned run average", a baseball term, while a homosexual would say "Equal Rights Amendment"), or saying a few words from a musical (a homosexual would sing the rest).
* In Lincoln's nightmare, he mistakes Martin (a redhead) for Clyde (a black boy) from a distance. Then again, it was a dream.
* In "Linc or Swim", baby Lily gets kicked out of the local pool for taking off her
* In line with historical practice around the time of the French Revolution, this features some fancy uniforms, especially on the lead character. Even the "dregs of the army" (the French Guard, which Oscar commands at the end of the series) gets their share of bling.
* In line with the many examples of the "baddie pulls himself up the spear to fight" subtrope,
* In line with this trope, Cadillac has unveiled a new concept car which uses a nuclear generator powered by thorium, the
* In Linux, when a parent process spawns a child process it must either hang around to watch the child die or declare that it has no interest in doing so. If a child dies when the parent has done neither of these things it cannot pass on and instead becomes a zombie, an empty shell of a process which does nothing more than barely exist until the system gets around to bashing its head in with a spanner. Linux technical documentation has much to say on the subject of ensuring that you do not turn your children into zombies.
* In Linux, you can copy and paste by selecting the text you want to copy and middle-clicking where you want to paste. Attempting this on Windows results in nothing happening. On the flip side, middle click is usually pan on Windows regardless of what app you're using, which is extremely useful if you need to scroll horizontally, but Linux is a complete toss-up between whether it also pans or pastes your clipboard.

* In "Lion's Den", Peter Shotwell was one of the stars of the hugely successful Lewisborough High School wrestling team from 1976 to 1979 but he tore up his left knee, ending his chances of a professional career.
* In "Lion's Den", the Lewisborough High School wrestling team become champions after taking Neuroflex 500 which is laced with the DNA of a big cat.
* In "Lisa Gets an 'A'", when Lisa's dishonest exam result pushes the school's average into the boundaries of acceptability, the school is awarded some money which is spent on, among other things, a
* In "Lisa on Ice", Bart is angry at Lisa, and darkly announces that as vengeance, he tore the head off a stuffed animal named Mr. Honey-Bunny. Lisa then reminds Bart that that was
* In "Lisa On Ice", Lisa is afraid that a failing grade in gym class will not only lead her to be rejected as President of the United States, but lead to her
* In "Lisa's Date with Density", Lisa is punished by writing on the chalkboard in detention, resulting in her saying...
* In "Lisa's Date With Density" Nelson beats up Milhouse, who is then carried away on a stretcher. We get this exchange:
* In "Lisa's Date With Destiny", after the "H" on Superintendent Chalmers' new Honda is stolen, the students are gathered in the hallway; Nelson, Jimbo, Dolph, and Kearney are snickering to each other:
* In "Lisa's Date With Destiny", Lisa asks Milhouse to pass Nelson her note due to being too nervous to ask him out. During class, Milhouse discreetly passes the note on to Nelson, which reads, "Guess who likes you". Nelson turns back and sees Milhouse waving to him from the back row. Cue off-screen beating and Milhouse being carried to the ambulance via stretcher.
* In "Lisa's First Word": After an unsuccessful attempt to physically pull toddler Bart away from his crib, Homer tries the psychological route ("Ok, Marge, let's leave the little
* In "Lisa's First Word," after Marge is discovered to be pregnant with her and Homer's second child (i.e., Lisa), the couple goes house-hunting for a bigger place. One of the homes they consider is full cats—when Homer says, "Once we get the cats out of the way, it won't be so bad," the realtor helping them explains that, according the will of the cats' previous owner, the cats are the ones who own the house and that if the Simpsons were to move in, they would technically be the cats' "tenants."
* In "Lisa's First Word", Bart has one during the time he intends to run away from home.
* In "Lisa's First Word", during a flashback we see Homer and Bart watching a Krusty commercial advertising his Olympics promotion by biting into a Krusty Burger, cut to the studio saying the shot was finished... and Krusty immediately spitting the burger now that he is not live.
* In "Lisa's First Word", the first flashback features Homer singing "Girls Just Want to Have Fun" as he returns home. After that scene, the instrumental of the actual song begins playing as it cuts to a montage of toddler Bart doing all sorts of mischievous things.
* In "Lisa Simpson, This Isn't Your Life", Lisa discovers that Marge used to be a straight-A student like her until she fell in love with Homer, leading her to throw out anything that could be a distraction in hope that she won't go down the same path as her mother.
* In "Lisa Simpson, This Isn't Your Life", Lisa discovers that Marge used to be smart like her until her senior year of high school, around the time she started dating Homer. She finds an old scantron where Marge filled in the bubbles in the shape of a heart, with the phrase "Screw it! I'm in love!" written inside it.
* In Lisa Smedman's "Storm of the Dead", a high magic ritual erased drow deity Kiaransalee's memory from existence. With the goddess now devoid of followers, the Ret Gone effectively killed her.
* In "Lisa's Rival", Lisa gets into an epic saxophone duel with Allison Taylor during an audition for First Chair in the school band, culminating with them blasting a long note until Lisa faints.

* In "Lisa's Sax", during Bart's first day of school, Skinner introduces himself to the new intake of students as "Principal Sinner", and, when they burst out laughing, mutters, "Oh, that does it, I've lost them forever."
* In "Lisa's Sax", Homer's story of how Lisa got her saxophone turned into a story about Bart starting kindergarten, which ends early in the episode.
* In "Lisa's Sax", when Homer realizes that he can't afford to send Lisa to an independent school, he walks past a music shop:
* In "Lisa's Wedding", Lisa is told of her future relationship with Hugh Parkfield. Before the ceremony he expresses frustration with the rest of the Simpson family and slips that he really doesn't expect Lisa to ever see them after the wedding; Lisa, stunned, chooses to call everything off.
* In "Lisa the Beauty Queen," Skinner is faced by the Blue-Haired Lawyer and his goons, claiming a copyright infringement by the school fair saying "The Happiest Place On Earth." He then proceeds to beat them up with frightening efficiency, before adjusting his tie and saying "Copyright expired."
* In "Lisa the Beauty Queen", the school fair used the tagline "The Happiest Place on Earth", which is copyrighted by Disney. When confronted by the lawyer, Skinner mercilessly beats him up.
* In "Lisa the Greek," Homer enlists Lisa to help him bet on football games, and Marge gets suspicious about the extra money he's been spending.
* In "Lisa the Simpson", Homer, Bart and Lisa watch a documentary series on spontaneously exploding buildings.
* In "Lisa the Simpson", Lisa probably doesn't intend it as an insult, but at one point, she says
* In "Lisa the Skeptic", after discovering a skeleton of what looks like an angel, Lisa postulates via
* In "Lisa the Vegetarian", Homer notices Flanders hosting a family reunion in his backyard, and is introduced to Lord Thistlewick-Flanders, Flanders' aristocratic British cousin. He looks just like the rest of his family, but doesn't share their
* In "Lisa the Vegetarian", just as Bart was explaining Lisa that cartoons are just about hilarious stuff like people getting hurt, he gets hit when Homer opens the door.
* In "Lisa the Vegetarian", there's Story Time Village, which is "a theme park for babies", as Bart describes it, which they go to for Maggie; the place has animatronic characters act out well-known fairy tales, but most of them are broken and malfunctioning. The place also has a petting zoo, however, and it's rather nice.
* In "Lisa vs. Malibu Stacy", Lisa, disgusted by the questionable messages that the Malibu Stacy doll (a parody of
* In "Little Big Girl", Bart and his girlfriend (who is fifteen and pregnant) are driving to Utah to get married. She demands that Bart pull over and get her strawberries while they're driving through a desert.
* In "Little Big Thing", Granny Frump is stubborn about getting glasses and claims that she doesn't need them because she looks better without them, a point she finds proven when a mirror she's looking in shatters after she's removed one of the pairs she's trying on.
* In "Little Brother", a short story and an episode of the miniseries
* In "Little Dipper", Dipper and Mabel smash the size-changing crystal after getting returned to normal size. Then they realize they forgot that Soos had been shrunk as well.
* In "Little Dipper" Gideon abducts a miniaturized Dipper and Mabel, then calls Stan for ransom. Stan doesn't believe him.
* In "Little Dogs Lost", this first happens to Gina when she walks a dog named Garabaldi. This later happens to Dennis when he takes up a job walking dogs, and the dogs chase Margaret's cat.
* In "Little Gift Shop of Horrors," a witch takes Stan's hands. Similar to the Justice League example above, Stan says he needs them back because he has a gesture to show her.
* In "Little Girl in the Big Ten" as Homer makes his parenting rounds, Bart is in his bubble, Lisa is missing and Maggie is fending off a crazy raccoon.

* In "Little Joe", the singer thinks someone stole Joe, his pet caterpillar, and then later replaced him with a butterfly.
* In Little Nezha Conquers The Dragon King (1979) a little girl is snatched away by the Dragon King's minions and we later find out that his son Ao Bing has eaten her, later to stop the dragons from laying waste to China, Nezha commits suicide by slashing his throat with his fathers sword, he is later brought back to life by his master.
* In "Little Orphan Hero" the episode ends with Captain Hero date raping his parents
* In live-action, giant transforming and combining mecha have been a staple of the
* In "Live and Let Dynamo", the Dynamo (which, for some reason, Professor Utonium never had the sense to dismantle) is on a rampage again, after an unknown villain steals it. After the Girls spend the entire episode trying to stop it
* In "Livewire", Kara refers to Alex telling her mother that she works for the DEO as "coming out." This turns out to be
* In Living Color! are getting too old for the movies. Captain Kirk calls for Bones to come to the bridge, only to find he really lives up to his name this time.
* In Living Color! because it had too much fighting and no romance between the two lead characters. Given the terms he uses, Blaine is clearly describing this trope. Although co-reviewer Antoine Merriweather, also Camp Gay, felt the violence made the movie more arousing to him, he agreed with Blaine that having this sort of relationship between the two main characters would have been great. Notably, it's the only sketch to feature the duo that had anything to do with this trope.
* In Living Color!, he then recalls a regular dialogue he shares with customers:
* In Living Color!: In the skit "Lil Miss Trouble at the Museum", Edea randomly gives Parnell a wedgie.
* In Living Color! involved an idiot high school hall monitor (David Alan Grier). At one point, a student (Jim Carrey) comes in with a model of something that took him weeks to build and represents 80 percent of his grade for a class — Grier wastes no time in accidentally breaking it.
* In Living Color! involving women (especially attractive ones), they had the same response:
* In Living Color! made use of the trope. In one sketch, it lampshades the trope as one of the quintessential types of stand-up comedy, along with "Old Guy Who Complains About the Present", "Self-Deprecating Woman" and "Crazy Prop Guy".
* In Living Color!) parodied Michael Bolton's overly-emotive singing style by having his head explode after one too many tensings of his face while singing "When a Man Loves a Woman."
* In Living Color! shows off impressionist skills with such characters as Tweety-pie and Lucy Ricardo, not changing his voice in the least for his lines.
* In Living Color! sketch "Men on Film." The stereotypical characters played for laughs might make some PC types wince, but Damon Wayans and David Alan Grier were surprisingly accurate in some areas of portraying gay black men, like referring to women as "fish."
* In Living Color! skit has a businessman say it after his blind date Grace Jones cut an alligator's tail off.
* In Living Color! spoof. Dracula has spent the skit wooing her, only to rue his success once he gets a good look at her. Desperate to leave he tells her he can't stand mirrors, and since there's one in her room, well...Ugly Wanda tells him she can take care of it. Staring into it, she recites "Mirror, mirror on the wall..." and it cracks.
* In Living Color!, that while not a ratings behemoth still managed to last for five seasons.
* In Living Color!. The "Club Bouncers" sketches had two bouncers (played by Jamie Foxx and Tommy Davidson) telling people they weren't on the list and couldn't enter.
* In Living Color). There's also a cut on the season five sketch where Jim Carrey's Fire Marshal Bill tries to look for safety hazards at a magic show. After the magician assures him that his magic is safe, Fire Marshall Bill says, "That's what they said about the World Trade Center, son. But me and my friend Abdul and a couple of pounds of plastique explosives showed 'em different!" While the DVD version left this line intact, the FXX version cut it (as the line, which once referenced the World Trade Center's bombing in 1993, can now be applied to the September 11th attacks that happened eight years later), though the cut was a sloppy and obvious one, as the part where Bill laughs and says his catchphrase, "Lemme show ya somethin'" was also cut.

* In Living Color!. The Wayans brothers (Shawn and Marlon, in particular) are the only other cast members to have made an impact since the show ended.
* In Living Color!, though that show didn't have a predominately African-American cast.
* In Living Color!, to run out of the wedding after her husband angrily asks why the baby is White.
* In Living Color! uses this mercilessly in a first season sketch about a new ambassador to an obscure African nation. Her translator, Mr. Mubutu, tends to say more of what she's thinking than what she's saying.
* In Living Color!. When Sammy Davis Jr.'s ghost tells the medium to relay to his wife he loves her, the wife says "Sammy would never say it like that". When faux-Whoopi tells her "Sh-Boing-Boing-Boooooiiiing", his wife instantly knows his spirit is there.
* In Living Color! (who had guest-starred on two episodes that season prior to his untimely death) and the show's hairstylist Troy White.
* In "Living Next Door to Alice", most successfully covered by Smokie, the narrator has been in love with his neighbor for 24 years, but couldn't tell her. And now she's moving away.
* In "Living Next Door to Alice", most successfully covered by Smokie, the narrator has been in love with his neighbor for 24 years, but couldn't tell her. And now she's moving away. The last verse also reveals that the narrator has a second neighbor of 24 years who's been watching him and Alice and now, that she sees that he's missed the chance to tell Alice his feelings for her, decides not to make the same mistake and finally confesses to him.
* In LLF, had both Dark Angel and American Angel. And both were unmasked to reveal they were
* In Lloyd Biggle, Jr.'s short story, "Wings of Song", an eccentric collector in the far future stumbles across a priceless antique violin, made of actual wood. He's never even seen any before, as apparently Earth is a completely barren wasteland due to war.
* In L. Neil Smith's Confederacy novels, there is an uplifted coyote named G. Howell Nuahuatl (the G. stands for Greenriver). He wears a vocoder collar, synced to the impulses in his cybernetically augmented brain, and a custom motile collar equipped with twin guns and ear pads to protect his hearing. In later stories, he uses a backpack that has a cybernetically-controlled hand.
* In "Lobsterfest", the kids try to convince Bob that they are looking at porn when actually, they are studying a pamphlet for the lobster festival - Which is something Bob is against, since seafood festivals take away attention from his burger restaurant.
* In "Loch Ness Murdoch", Crabtree absently eats ice from the morgue icehouse during a heatwave, then realises what he's doing, and Emily has to reassure him that the ice is fresh. Later, he uses the icehouse to make himself and Emily snowcones.
* In "Loch Ness Murdoch", Inspector Brackenreid has a very unusual moment and insists he saw a
* In "Lockdown", a woman inadvertently spreads a deadly disease with her powers, but then her mundane, abusive husband takes center stage by holding everybody hostage with a gun. In fact, the woman's anguish over her abuse was what triggered her ability.
* In "Lockdown for Love", Mr. Krabs accidentally loses the secret formula and it rolls over to the Chum Bucket. But since the Chum Bucket is under lockdown, Plankton can't immediately get to it. He manages to melt a hole in the wall just big enough for him to reach through and grab it. But when Plankton grabs the secret formula and tries pulling it through the hole, he points it upright and it continually hits the wall instead. Thus, Krabs steals the formula back in time. If Plankton had rotated the bottle facing forward, he could have fit it through the hole and secured it for good.

* In "Lockdown", T.J. Kim, who disappeared in 1998, has the ability to drive men into a homicidal rage with a high-pitched frequency. During her quarterly checkup at the Seattle NTAC headquarters, she uses her ability on all of the men in the building. They immediately begin fighting each other over trivial matters, resulting in Nina Jarvis being shot by Agent Park and several people being killed before Marco manages to find the frequency that counteracts its effects.
* in loco parentis powers, ruling that college students couldn't be expelled without due process.
* In "Log Date 7 15 2", Peridot asks Steven about the two characters making out in the video they are watching (
* In Lois Bujold's "Borders of Infinity" novella, hundreds of POW's are trapped in an always lit dome. They lose all hope and civility. The only order is the ‘women's area', which women cooperate to guard, to remain safe from rape. The (male) protagonist, Miles, must appeal to their leader to start his uprising.
* In "Lois Comes Out of a Shell", Stewie's evil turtle Sheldon is screwing up everyone's lives. One of his plans was to switch out Meg's cyanide pill with an Alka-Seltzer tablet.
* In London in the late 60s, a young man fresh off the boat from America made the audacious request to jam with
* In London, Madame Tussaud's wax figure of John Lennon begins to bleed from bullet wound stigmata.
* In "Lonesome Lenny", Screwy Squirrel escapes the titular Lenny by running out of his house to the woods. Lenny then sticks his arm down a hole on the ground, and the camera follows all the way to where Screwy is, wherein Lenny's hand emerges from another hole and pulls him all the way back.
* In "Lone Star", there is "Lone Star", sung by Jet, playing the titular Lone Star.
* In "Long Distance Caller", a phone keeps calling despite being hung up on and then being ripped out of the wall. Later on, a girl gets chat messages that continue to show on her screen, even after turning it off.
* In "Long Live Walter Jameson", a charismatic and deeply knowledgeable history professor proposes to marry one of his students, but her father (a colleague on the faculty) objects to the match. It turns out that the professor
* In "Long Road Home", a body is stuffed into a gear box containing a set of drums and dumped in an alley.
* In long track speed skating, the mass start competition pits at least 12 skaters competing at once in a 16 lap race. There are three designated sprint laps during the race, where the top finishers of each lap accrue points that count in the standings. This means that winning these laps affect a racer’s cumulative standing during the World Cup circuit, and during Olympic qualifying races can affect which racers qualify for the finals. However, the top three finishers at the end of a race get far more points than anyone who won a sprint lap but didn’t end up in the top three. As a result the mid-race laps are completely irrelevant for deciding who wins a medal in the Olympic final.
* In Lon'qu and Cordelia's supports, it's revealed that Cordelia often cooks dinner for the army with this trope in mind.
* In "Look at the Princess", John is pointing Braca's gun at different parts of his own body. Including, at one point, his hand:
* In "Look Before You Leap," Daphne protests the accusation that she's whiny with a high-pitched "I don't whiiine!"
* In "Look Before You Sleep", one of the sleepover activities on Twilight Sparkle's checklist is scary stores. After some
* In "Look Into My Eds", Kevin is hypnotized into a monkey and bites Ed on the rear end.

* In "Looniversity Days", the title card for the "What's Up Nurse?" segment shows Elmyra about to take Plucky's temperature rectally, much to his distress.
* In Loop 202.12, Filthy Rich's marriage to Spoiled Milk was an arranged one, but Filthy wound up having a one-night stand with Applejack, whom he admitted was the one he really wanted to marry, after being told.
* In "Lord Bafford's Manor", the two-story high atrium. It gives the archers clear, protected shooting, though.
* In lore, Source magic could achieve miraculous feats of healing before it became
* In Lore this is completely averted, powerful people with abilities are only a few.
* In Lorwyn "the sun never quite dips below the horizon". This is because Lorwyn is the "Day" in a really messed up Day-Night cycle, while
* In "Los guardaespaldas", the woman Mortadelo and Filemón have been tasked with protecting plans to travel around the world... and the two agents have to help her carry her absurdly massive luggage. Mortadelo snarkily comments, "Hey madam! Maybe you forgot the piano?", then we get a
* In "Los mercenarios" the main characters obtain 100 000 "percebos" (fictional coin of Percebelandia) They think they can get more than one million pesetas (a fortune in the moment of the album), but thanks to a sudden devaluation only obtain 17.50.
* In "Lost and Found", Jenny Templeton is visited by two 22nd Century time travelers in her dorm room in 1986. In the short story by Phyllis Eisenstein, Jenny's native time is 1979.
* In "Lost!", Arthur oversleeps on the bus and ends up at the edge of town. He then waits for the next bus at a diner, where the waitress responds to his order of a glass of milk by hollering "squeeze me a cow."
* In "Lost Canary", Felicity dares Black Siren to kill her if she really is irredeemable. Dinah and Sara also follow suit. This is a variation because, rather than genuinely wanting to see if she is evil, Felicity wants to prove that there is still some good in her that can be saved. It works and Siren undergoes a full
* In "Lost City," when O'Neill has the Ancient database loaded in his brain, the second time, the knowledge "unspools" far enough that he is able to do this after Bra'tac is stabbed by
* In "Lost Our Lisa", Homer finds Lisa after she gets lost on a museum trip. She says she'll never take another stupid risk again, and Homer suddenly stop the car to say stupid risks are worth taking and how he found her downtown. Then Lisa points out he let the brake go and the car is rolling downhill into a river.
* In "Lost Our Lisa," Homer takes Lisa out for a wild drive to show her the high and exciting life.
* In "Loud As A Whisper", a mediator beams down to a planet that has been at war for hundreds of years with his interpreters (he's a deaf-mute). One of the Mooks on one side is against peace talks and kills the interpreters. You have to question the intelligence of this move. The only reason the peace talks don't dissolve completely is that other delegate from his side shoots him on the spot.
* In "Love, AD Style", Roger, who has fallen madly in love with Hayley, kidnaps her and plans to flay her and graft her skin onto his own so they can "become one".
* In "Love and Cheese", Arnold goes on the Tunnel of Love with Lila. Helga sabotages their swan boat by drilling holes at the bottom.
* In Love and War's character, a Red Cross nurse in WWI Italy, says that Italian men "respect their wives. They spoil their mistresses. But the only women they love are their mothers." We immediately cut to an Italian soldier screaming for his mother as he dies horribly on the battlefield.
* In "Love! Anger! Kvetching!", the episode ends with the burial of Duckman's horrific uncle, featuring a balsawood coffin and a song specially composed for the occasion:
* In "Love Birds", Walt the canary has a crush on his neighbour Mr. Grouse's plastic flamingo. When he realises it's fake, he goes into a funk, so his friends try to find him a proper girlfriend.

* In "Love Handles", the police are tracing an e-mail account the Killer of the Week uses to send his threats. Said account, which turns out to belong to a grad student and part-time library worker named Matthew Hoffing (whom Chloe and Lucifer catch watching porn at work), is apparently "dman69".
* In "Love Hurts", Dr. Chase is revealed to be into bondage and to be acquainted with a dominatrix, and while he's occasionally ribbed about it, no one thinks he's a weirdo for it. The patient of the week that keeps sneaking his dominatrix lover in to choke him, which turns out to be part of the problem. She isn't being excessive, but his condition makes him more fragile than should be expected. House goes to forbid them from doing it again and they seem to be ready to fight him, thinking he'd be a
* In "Love in the Time of HYDRA" this happens again, this time Agent 33 vs Talbot. To be fair, Talbot realizes very quickly and notifies Coulson "The nanomask is in play", and assembles all female staff workers, even telling his security not to let anyone disturb him, even if it is him. He even knows a lot about his staff, knowing which lines to say and how they should respond. However, he fails to realize that 33 can adopt either gender; or believed they were restricted to one gender, as when he himself was impersonated, it was by a man whom he knows is in custody.
* In "Love is a Many Splintered Thing", Marge kicks Homer and Bart out of the house and they go to a hotel full of men whose wives have left them. In the pool, Bart finds the skeleton of a guy who drowned himself by tying a cinder block around his neck.
* In "Love Is a Many Strangled Thing", Homer has a nightmare based on his therapy sessions addressing his abusive behavior towards Bart, dreaming of himself as different people with
* In "Love Is a Many Strangled Thing", Homer, trying to make Bart look happy on the Jumbotron, tickles him. Big mistake.
* In "Love is in the N₂-O₂-Ar-CO₂-Ne-He-CH₄", Professor Frink dismisses his idea bulb because it wasn't eco-friendly, with a fluorescent bulb appearing in its place afterwards.
* In "love poems", Homestar attempts to write an acrostic poem about Marzipan, and uses foodstuffs to begin each line. He tries to get away with "inchiladas" for the "i" and completely fails to come up with anything for the "z".
* In "Love's Labors Lost in Space", Zapp Brannigan is trying (and failing) to seduce Leela. At one point Zapp says "erotic" so loudly that
* In "Love That Pup", Spike warns Tom that if he messes with his son Tyke one more time, he'll skin Tom alive. Cue Jerry framing Tom for messing with Spike's son once again. In the final scene we see Spike, Tyke and Jerry sleeping on Tom's fur, while elsewhere Tom spies on them wearing nothing but a
* In "Love the Way You Lie", Frankie complains that a health drink tastes like "Sweat and rotten celery".
* in love with. As it turns out, s/he's an even worse monster than the stalker and by getting them alone, the stalker has ensured that no one will be able to hear him/her scream. The stalker is never seen again.
* "In Love with a Straight Girl", Ally advises other lesbians to "let the straight girls be" because if they aren't queer they won't reciprocate.
* In Love with Love: Being more enamored by the idea of being in a relationship than actually loving someone.
* In Love with the Gangster's Girl loves a dangerous man's girlfriend.
* In Love with Your Carnage: A villain is turned on by watching a hero kill or inflict extreme violence.
* In Love with Your Carnage: A villainous or morally ambiguous character falls for someone because of their violent tendencies.
* In Love with Your Carnage because of his refusal to fall prey to her advances and determination to maim and kill her.
* In Love with Your Carnage (Not the Symbiote!) by having the entire supervillain community obessed with Spidey's carnage.
* In "Lrrreconcilable Ndndifferences", Fry leaps in front of Leela and takes it when she was about to be shot by a vaporizer.

* In Luan's nightmare, she yells, "SHUT UP! SHUT UP AND GO AWAY!" to her rude dummy.
* In Lucha Libre, it is fairly common to make elimination tags with large numbers of participants into a
* In "Luck Amok," when Tigger decides to leave the Hundred Acre Wood so that bad luck won't come to anyone anymore,
* In "Luck of the Draw", both Rembrandt and Wade get involved with people in that universe. (Or rather, someone from that universe gets involved with Wade.) Rembrandt's interest would rather die (she's looking forward to it) than slide off, and is looking forward to his joining her; Wade's interest helps rescue them and slides off with them — though, since this was a
* In "Lucy Gets a Paris Gown", Lucy wants to get a new designer dress while in France. Ricky reads a letter Lucy wrote in Hollywood, promising Ricky if he'd buy her a Hollywood designer dress, she would NEVER ask for another designer dress. The note is dated 2/28/55 — The broadcast date of the episode "The Fashion Show" in which Lucy gets said dress. Extra coolness points awarded when you realize the writers had no idea that anyone in the future would create episode guides, listing airdates.
* In "Lucy's Mother-in-Law", Lucy tells the assistant of a mind reader that her birthday is August 6th, Lucy's actual birthday.
* In "Luna Eclipsed", Fluttershy tries to flee back into her house after Twilight Sparkle tries to drag her into her attempts to help
* In "Luna Eclipsed", Princess Luna tries to be regal and gracious in Ponyville, using the patterns of behavior and speech that she remembers from over a thousand years ago. She
* In "Luna Eclipsed", Twilight ends her friendship report saying it was "the best nightmare night ever".
* In Luna's route, when Luna appears outside the AB room late in the route despite seemingly having been murdered earlier.
* In Luna's route, when you access the GAULEM database and Luna's picture comes up, revealing that she's a robot.
* In Luna's route, you deduce that, contrary to what was first thought,
* In "Lure Of The Orb", Poet yells "QUIET!" out in the forest when its ambient noises become too much for him while he's trying to compose a poem.
* in luxury conditions) becoming the preferred option for dealing with rival claimants.
* In Lynsay Sands' Argeneu and Rouge Hunter Series, this is the most common reason for the vampire-like immortals to "turn" others. It is occasionally played for laughs when it turns out that the danger they were "escaping" was all in their heads, though other times it is a serious matter as the turnee is brought near death by some outside force, such as a crazed geek with an axe, or a rival immortal seeking revenge by hurting the one closest to them.
* In Mabeland, a frustrated Dipper talks to Wendy, who says that if Dipper were older, she might have wanted to date him. At first, Dipper gets really happy at the thought, until Wendy yet again gives him a wink, a Call-Back
* In "Machismo", the BAU travels to Mexico to assist the local police force in arresting a serial killer that is targeting elderly women. They find that the killer is also a previously unreported serial rapist, and that he is killing the mothers of the women he raped, because each of the elderly women's second surname is the same as the younger women's first surname. In Spanish naming customs, every person has their father's first surname as their first, and their mother's first surname as their second—the opposite to what happens in the episode.
* In Mac OS' Finder, Cmd+D creates a duplicate copy of a file. In Windows Explorer, Ctrl+D
* In "Macrocosm", when negotiating with a culture where body language is as important as words, Janeway almost caused a diplomatic incident by
* In "Mad About the Toy", a flashback reveals that Abe once tried it but the woman he kissed punched him for it and said it's already been two years ever since the war ended.

* In "Mad Dog Hoek", during a rant, Stimpy's tongue stretches and snaps off.
* In "Mad Dogs and Aliens", Drakken instructs Warmonga to get rid of Shego, first saying "Show her the door," and then (after she
* In "Madeline and the Forty Thieves", the viewers are presented with a pair of magpies briefly flying across the screen.
* In "Made of Honor", Steven tells Bismuth that they're planning a wedding for Ruby and Sapphire, and he wants her to attend. Bismuth tries to sound enthusiastic, saying "This is gonna be
* In Madison, WI, a victim of burglary had to call 911 three times in order for police to be dispatched.
* In Madison, Wisconsin, there are the Mad City Mitsubishi Mad Men. Highlights include turkey costumes around Thanksgiving and disembodied floating heads wearing sailor hats for Memorial Day, and the 'Nickel Pickle Sale', which naturally involves gherkin outfits, inflatable props, and a chainsaw.
* In "Mad Love", Batman apparently bursts out in hysterical laughter at the thought of Harley Quinn actually winning the love of the Joker. In this case, he was deliberately doing it to
* In "Mad Love," Harley Quinn devises a plan to kidnap and kill Batman based on one of the Joker's old schemes—put the Caped Crusader in a straitjacket and throw him in a tank full of piranhas. The Joker discarded this plan because
* In "Mad Machine", a father and a son go to a facility described to treat alcoholism. The father's told that he'll like it there, but he says that * in "Madrigal," Mike invokes this by not bringing an attorney when he's summoned to the DEA office to be interviewed by Hank and Gomez about his potential involvement in Gus's drug operation. Before they start the questioning, Gomez asks Mike to affirm that he is waiving his right to have an attorney present, and has Mike say this directly to the video camera so that it's on the official record. Being a former cop who's conducted many interrogations himself, Mike is able to sit through the interview and doesn't crack at all, even when Hank drops the reveal that they've found out about an offshore bank account in Mike's granddaughter's name in an attempt to get Mike to let his guard down.
* In "Magical Golden Singing Cheeses", Stimpy had earlier given the cheeses to a giant to use as shoes, but needs them so he and Ren don't starve to death and attempts to get them back while the giant is sleeping. After pulling on them, he gives up and tries a new idea: he takes a crowbar and accidentally jams it into one of the giant's big toes, ripping off one of his toenails in the process.
* In "Magical Mystery Cure", Twilight does one towards the end of "A True, True Friend".
* In "Magic Carpet Ride", Perry enters his lair to find Monogram all disheveled and asleep. When he wakes up, he yells out, "Wrong pants!"
* In "Magician's Code Part 2", Quinn redecorates everything in Barney's apartment pink as punishment for Barney sneaking off to Atlantic City with Marshall.
* In "Magic Man," Gus has to do damage control after Werner is tricked into revealing some details of his secret construction project. He confesses that Werner was directing the construction of a new chiller, when he learned about the drug business and stole some product. Gus claims he'd tried to hide the theft to conceal his own failure. Juan Bolso is pacified, but Lalo doesn't buy it for a second.
* In "Magic Meatball", Ed Bighead manages to score a promotion thanks to a Magic 8-Ball parody called the "Magic Meatball" helping him make big decisions. When the meatball gets broken, Ed has a nervous breakdown to the point of
* In "Magic Mourns", Cerberus is sent from Hades to retrieve the stolen corpse of a Greek pagan priest. He's described as a three-headed dog the size of a two-story house with a barbed tail. Thanatos mentions offhandedly that he owns several of Cerberus' puppies.
* In Magiranger vs. Dekaranger, he and Hikaru have to cross-dress again, much to the shock of Urara. Jasmine, however, is not surprised.
* In Mahler's 2nd Symphony, the opening chord of the last (5th) movement. Nicknamed the "Resurrection" Symphony, the work was intended by Mahler to initially portray states of despair and happiness here on earth, followed, in the last movement, by a portrayal of the resurrection into the afterlife. The 4th movement illustrates the longing for relief from earthly woes and ends quietly. This mood is rudely interrupted by a shrieking, dissonant chord in the whole orchestra at the very opening of the last movement. This has sometimes been described (including by its composer) as portraying the state of the damned after death, although, as the symphony progresses towards its triumphant ending, this portrayal of the damned is shown to have apparently been only an illusion believed in by people while still on earth. All ends in peace and love and all humanity is included in that.

* In mainstream canon, Captain Stacy dies become of falling debris caused by Dr. Octopus's tentacles going crazy and his daughter
* In mainstream Islam it is forbidden to kill or eat frogs. This comes from a Hadith in which Muhammad states that when frogs croak they are saying tasbeeh/praising God.
* In mainstream popular music, over the decades some of the best-known teenage girls who rose to fame... and most of these averting the trope due to genuine singing ability:
* In "Maintenance", history repeats itself when Owen's 21-year-old son Eric blackmails the US government into putting him in charge of the project by threatening to go public with his late father's extensive files on everything that has happened since the crash of the alien ship in Roswell.
* In "Maintenance", Marty Erickson tells Eric Crawford that his father Owen had him obtain a car for him from the Groom Lake motorpool on October 28, 1962, the night that
* In "Maintenance", the aliens create an image of Jesse from Charlie's memories in order to lure him to Morgan's Junction, Missouri so they can abduct him.
* In "Major Boobage" Kenny's hallucinations after he gets high on cat urine are animated in the style of
* In Major League Baseball (or baseball in general), there is a trick play called the "hidden ball trick" that relies on base runners and their coaches failing to spot that an infielder has the ball, allowing said infielder to tag out said base runner as soon as he steps off the base. This does not happen very often, however.
* In Major League Baseball's American League, the designated hitter is optional. However, since the DH was implemented, teams have elected not to use one (over letting a pitcher hit) only four times, the last being in 1976. There have been several cases since where a team has forfeited its DH spot during a game due to using the player who was DH into the field.
* In "Make Love Not Warcraft," Clyde is distracted by a three-page centerfold.
* In "Make New Friends and Keep Discord", Discord attempts to hijack the Grand Galloping Gala with standup comedy. Similar to Pinkie, he references the trope when it doesn't get the response he wants. Even worse, it's Maud Pie's deadpan heckling of him that gets the laughs.
* In "Make New Friends and Keep Discord", Discord's guest at the Grand Galloping Gala is the Smooze, a
* In "Make New Friends But Keep Discord", Spike finds himself sharing his (Very small) bed with Discord when the Spirit of Chaos is looking for Twilight. After Discord teleports away, Spike curls himself into a
* in "Make New Friends, but Keep Discord," the courier who travels into Discord's dimension to deliver him his invitation then gets snatched up by some winged monster in the background and lifted off screen. He is never seen again.
* In "Make New Friends But Keep Discord", when the eponymous Discord attempts a terrible stand-up routine. Maude Pie one-ups him with a quip, and Pinkie Pie
* In "Make Room for Lisa", when Chief Wiggum sees what he thinks is litter in the ocean, he is upset that people dump their trash... without a permit.
* In "Makes Zen to Me", Buttercup takes up meditation as a form of anger management, but her master tries to encourage her to take up fighting again after he gets attacked by Mojo Jojo.
* In Makina's ending, she joins Yuuji as his support agent, and is included as agent "V-9029", and naturally inherits the attitude.
* In "Making Babies", Sweetie Belle says "I can't go back to prison! They don't have any soap, it's friggin' unhygienic!"

* In "Making It Fun," Zak gripes "Are we there yet?" after the gang spends a really long time painting a path for a race and starts to get bored. Cassie gets the group back on track by having them all take a "fun break" playing on bouncy mushrooms.
* In Makoto's route, Makoto goes through huge efforts to keep him in the dark about
* In Malaysia, Chatime attempted wrest control of the stores from the franchisee of the time in 2017 due to usage of ingredients that are from suppliers instead of from Chatime themselves, as well as the franchisee not paying the royalties in licensing for the rights to use the name. The franchisee's response? Immediately cutting ties and rebranding to Tealive. Although Chatime did try taking the franchisee to court (they lost the case in Malaysia, although they tried again in Singapore and the battle is ongoing). Chatime opened their own stores in Malaysia a year later in 2018, also making this a case of
* In Malaysia, it can also mean the final exam you take in high school (it's the local equivalent of the British GCSE O Level exams) before you move on to college.
* In Malaysia, it's also Clorox- they were the first brand of bleach to become generally available to consumers in the country, and so the name stuck.
* In Malaysia, Katy Perry's song "I Kissed a Girl", after playing uncensored for a couple of weeks, had the word "Girl" censored out of the title and the song. The first thing that comes to mind after hearing the beep in the chorus are certain...erogenous parts of anatomy, which makes the song sleazier than intended.
* In Malcolm Jameson's story "Bullard Reflects", a spaceship crew plays Dazzle Dart, where the players wear mirrors and try to reflect a beam of light into a goal.
* In "Mall of Duty", Lincoln and his younger sisters are waiting in line to get one of Lincoln's books signed. The girls are very bored, and Lincoln tries entertaining them with smoothies and
* In "Maneuvers", the Kazon use a shuttle with a modified bow to smash through Voyager's hull so they can steal some of Voyager's advanced technology, much to the surprise of their
* In Mansion Of E, second stage Framebreaker blooms attract doombees.
* In Manticore's case it's stated that the only terraforming that was needed was the introduction of a few Terran plants, and that the unusual compatibility of the native life allowed a hybrid plague to develop. And it's probably no coincidence that the most populous planet in the Manticore system is the one that doesn't have high gravity or turbulent storms.
* In "Man Up!", Bother rips his father's pants with a shaving machine to expose his buttocks, which is accidentally seen by Fynartz.
* In many 3D animated movies, film grain is added into the film. The audience is so used to seeing the artifacts of film grain that when it isn't there the image seems "unnatural" to the viewers. Ironically film grain is something that the industry has been trying to reduce for years to get better image quality.
* In many 90's films, you can see Ed O'Neill trying to squeeze himself in the cast as Cop #1 or Cop #2. (In fact, his breakout role was as an undercover FBI agent who commits suicide in
* In many accounts, an incubus can not produce sperm to impregnate women in their sleep, so he gets it from other human men while in the form of a succubus. This explains when a child looks nothing like its father but comes a lot after the neighbors sons. Damn these rapist demons!
* In many adaptations, Glinda is treated as the head of Oz after the Wicked Witches are killed. This is because she's the sole "Good Witch" and authority figure in the MGM film. In the books, not only is there another witch but the
* In many anime dubs from the early 2000's, it was not uncommon to have
* In many Arab fairy tales, reflecting common practices, a woman is normally expected to marry her first cousin. (One example of such a couple is found in
* In many areas, religions based on evil deities were officially forbidden because of the death and destruction their worshippers tended to cause. Chief among them is the worship of Tharizdun, due to him being an

* In many armed forces, such as those of the US, the officers are expected to be generalists. Highly educated and (
* In many blocks, Nicol Bolas takes this role. While he himself rarely appears, his minions (such as Sarkhan Vol) often do. In the Khans of Tarkir block, he briefly appears in the backstory, killing the
* In many Caribbean cultures, the wake that is held before a funeral is indeed like one great going-away party—music, food, dancing (and people often show up dressed as if they're going to a nightclub), etc. Ironically, this does nothing to take away from the solemnity of the funeral itself.
* In many cases, as seen in the "update" episodes, the owners revert the changes Ramsay has made after production completes on the episode and Gordon and the crew leave to work on another restaurant... and in many of those cases, they lapse back into their previous behaviour, and the restaurant is mentioned is having closed shortly after the episode aired.
* In many cases in US law, a hung jury (which can result from a single dissenter) doesn't result in automatic retrial, meaning that in theory a rogue juror can result in a
* In many cases it came down to character motivations. In the evil universe, humans would toady up to any power that came along whether it was good or evil and would continue to be corrupt and self-serving. In the good universe, Owlman discovered his alternate counterpart's father was dead and found he couldn't keep fighting because there was no one left to hurt.
* In many cases it's as simple as changing a letter. There are quite a few players saying "crop".
* In many cases it's considered better to take a kill then risk even a small chance of an enemy getting away because you were trying not to still a kill, as one enemy escaping a death does more harm then multiple situations of the wrong member taking a kill. However, this won't stop some players complaining about kill stealing no matter what the situation, sadly.
* In many cases it was predation by introduced rats, dogs, and pigs, not hunting as is commonly assumed, that led to the extinction of the dodo and many other flightless birds native to islands. Special mention goes to the Stephen's Island Wren of New Zealand, which was supposedly wiped out in the space of a few weeks by a lighthouse keeper's cat.
* In many cases Patrick displays far calmer and control than seems sane in tense situations.
* In many cases, radio contact with the detectives monitoring her wire is lost just as things gets tricky, leaving her without backup in a dangerous situation.
* In many cases raid bosses will be released harder than intended, either because of
* In many cases, the character has superpowers that circumvent some of these issues (such as
* In many cases there is significant room for ambiguity as to whether historical people may have been transgender or non-binary, in large part because trans and non-binary issues were frequently not well understood. The French writer
* In many cases, the subject seems compelled to not only tell the truth but to talk, period. Simply shutting up and not speaking, which isn't a lie, never occurs to them — or, if they do try to shut up, they are physically unable to do so.
* In many cities, regular police officers often do the same thing for overtime money in which they are essentially acting as security guards with full authority to make arrests. In San Francisco, there have been disputes between the SFPD and Patrol Special Police over this issue.
* In many countries, national media will nonetheless focus on the local stories from the city where the paper itself is made, even if they are aimed at basically everybody in the country. Then you have national Argentinian networks going on a special report about how
* In many countries the provinces or even the individual municipalities have at least some of those too.

* In many discussions of dating dealbreakers, perspective paramours being fans of anime or manga will often come up. These people seem to think that liking anything animated at all is a sign of immaturity.
* In many early arcade racing games, any collision at any speed results in an explosion of fiery doom (but presumably not too much doom, as you generally get returned to the track with a shiny new car three seconds later.) Pole Position is probably the most well-known example of this, but other games like Sega's Turbo and Hang On do this as well.
* In many email clients (such as Hotmail and Gmail), if you type "attached is/are..." in the body of the email without actually attaching a file and then hit "Send," the client will point this out, then ask if you want to attach anything before the message is sent. The client may also point out if you left the subject line of an email blank, since many spam filters block emails without a subject.
* In many end times novels based on Christian eschtalogy (especially Darbyist varieties), like
* In many episode "Psych-out"s the cast assembles for a song. Season 7 will have an episode titled "
* In many families, people are expected to always refer to their parents as "mom" and "dad" or similar nicknames. Referring to your parents by name may be seen as disrespectful. Stepparents are often referred to by their first names, especially if the children knew them for a while before marrying their parent. In-laws can be another exception, and it can be uncomfortable deciding when and if one should make the transition into referring to them as mom and dad.
* In many farms, due to the lack of use of male chickens (who don't produce the meat and eggs that hens do), almost all male chicks are killed when born, with only a select few being spared from the slaughter to mate with the females when they reach adulthood to keep the eggs fresh and fertile,
* In many fictional works, archers have the capability to draw out their bowstrings for what is considered unrealistic amounts of time.
* In many forms of racing, slipstreaming is a huge factor, to the extent that, in the most extreme circumstances, only the final section of the race can matter
* In many games, there are sequences where progression is either halted or slowed down, such as unskippable cutscenes and
* In many games, the venerable "Gespenst Mk-II, Mass Production Type" fills out the bulk of Earth's
* In many games with sets of pop bumpers in an enclosed space that can bounce the ball around for an indefinite amount of time, any timed modes going on will either briefly pause the timer, or add an extra second or two, for each bumper hit.
* In many governments, the power is often divided up into three branches, with the idea being that no one branch can get all of the power because it has to compete with two other branches. Apart from America, many Commonwealth countries like the United Kingdom and New Zealand have separation of power where the government is split into 3 branches (parliament, judiciary, and executive). Many
* In "Many Happy Returns", a short story by Kathryn Cave, a girl's brother gives her a football as one of those 'really for myself' presents. Then she meets another girl with the same birthday, whose brother gave her a 'really for myself' Lego set. They end up trading presents, to their mutual satisfaction and the considerable annoyance of their respective brothers.
* In many H-doujinshi featuring rape, the men are mostly featureless, which includes making them bald.
* In many high school sports (usually besides football, which requires too long a recovery time to make it feasible),
* In many Hong Kong action films, there will be a fight in an abandoned industrial plant with a lot of pipes. This is actually a desalination plant that proved not be economically viable and is now used as a location for filming.
* In many instances, there doesn't seem to be any weight classes, or everyone is seemingly a heavyweight. Anyone can seemingly fight anyone, you rarely see someone cutting weight.
* In many jurisdictions, destroying evidence is a crime. In the United States, both states and the federal government have laws against this; however said laws requires both intent and knowledge that the evidence would be incriminating. A mob boss destroying papers detailing his tax fraud or a

* in many jurisdictions, legally obligated to label the label maker itself right off. And everything else around them. For about a week.
* In "Many, Many Monkeys", Nurse Claire Hendricks' blindness is psychosomatic, having been caused by her guilt at
* In many massed melee battles in history, the amount of movement and the proximity of a writhing, stabbing, pulling, punching, slashing, and hooking masses of men can actually cause certain fighters in said battles to come out completely naked and covered in cuts. This is one of the reasons why armor of any kind, despite the numerous amounts of armor-piercing weapons, exists. Ironically enough, this is one of the reasons a number of ancient warriors
* In many Mesoamerican and Southwestern Native American cultures, the gods often come in male-female pairs. Whether they're intended to be different aspects of the same god, brother and sister, husband and wife, or this trope is not always clear.
* In many Middle Eastern cultures, physical contact between friends, especially male ones, is much more common than in the West. Young men walking around holding hands or even hugging is completely normal and not in any way sexual. Similarly, most Middle Eastern societies have
* In many military organizations, the color of one's hat or beret is synonymous with where they sit on the hierarchy. Traditionally, this is either a black or red beret, signifying airborne or special forces groups (in many instances, wearing a beret at all is a mark of a special unit, so these are
* In many missions and cutscenes of campaign mode Zerg use "Sacs", which are basically organic drop pods released by their Leviathan capital ships. The
* In many modern legal systems, courts can order the media not to report certain facts that emerged during cases, such as the identities of witnesses who may be in need of protection - an order known as an injunction. It emerged
* In many music ensembles (especially those with a more relaxed group dynamic), this is rather similar to what it sounds like when the director cuts off the band unexpectedly — the people who didn't have an eye on the conductor keep going, and the sounds gradually deflates to nothing.
* In many Native American tribes, hair is cut only as a sign of grief or disgrace. Because of this, the students at
* In many Native American tribes warriors had to earn their eagle (or other high-status) feathers.
* In many newspaper comics, the title panel of Sunday strips are often different in some way. Some strips, such as
* In many North American Native traditions, the figure of Coyote, and Raven a bit further north.
* In many of Phoenix Reece's fics, his characters tend to break the fourth wall during the Author's Note to physically assault him for what he makes them do. The ultimate example, however, is
* In many of the illustrations on Wikihow, the brand names are usually "Wikihow".
* In many of the Our Gang-Little Rascals film series, the kids' pet dog would not hesitate to even the score with any bad person with a well-placed bite to that person's tush!
* In many of the works of Zenna Henderson there's a group of humanoid aliens living on Earth that refers to themselves as "The People" in so many words. They arrived here around the turn of the 20th century, when their home planet exploded. They look human enough to pass for human, provided they're not flying at the time, or doing one of the many other wondrous feats they're known and loved for by generations of SF readers. While some isolated groups on Earth attempt to suppress and deny their heritage, others continue to use their powers discreetly. While continuing to call themselves "The People", they refer to the inhabitants of Earth as "Outsiders", and there's a distinct sense that they continue to call themselves that as a way of reminding themselves that they are not human.
* In many other episodes as well, K.I.T.T. confuses and scares the crap out of random bumbling petty criminals who try to steal/sabotage/damage him, more for the entertainment value than for anything related to the plot.

* In many parts of the Empire exists an "Ear Tax". A penny per pointed ear, to be paid for being an elf. On pain of removal.
* In many pieces of Sonic related media, Sonic is shown as almost literally being able to
* In many police forces, a cop about to fire his Taser is trained to shout
* In many political ads, this is the implied consequence of voting for anyone other than the person who paid for the commercial. The most famous example, and perhaps the trend setter, is Lyndon B. Johnson's 1964 presidential election "Daisy" commercial, which essentially said that voting for Barry Goldwater would cause everyone to die in a nuclear war. See it for yourself
* In many public restrooms there are hand dryers with instructions on them, and the first instruction is inevitably "Push Button." And 99% of the time, the last two letters are scratched off. The second instruction has almost invariably been altered to read "Rub hands gently under
* In many recent commercials for IBM, the people being interviewed are not shown on camera.
* In many retail stores, thinking you'll be funny by making a ridiculous statement, unreasonable demand, or just acting stupid will almost always elicit an entirely serious response from cashiers and customer service associates ("Can someone help me carry this carton of eggs to my cart?" "Can I pay in monopoly money?" "I'd like to speak with the CEO of this franchise."). Odds are
* In many roleplaying games, this trope can haunt a GM. Magic is often supposed to be rare, yet few PC groups abstain from taking a wizard along. When a game system then posits that magic can only be effectively countered with magic, the GM is hard-pressed to explain why the opponents of the day do in fact have access to their own spellcaster or magic items unless he wants the magically boosted party to plow through their enemies effortlessly. This is also the reason most systems are rather stingy with handing out powers that fundamentally change core aspects of the system, like immunity to common damage types or flight.
* In many schools of thought in Hinduism all of the physical gods are simply fragmentary manifestations of a
* In many sports and martial arts, an individual has to pass through a curious phase where they have to surrender their natural athleticism in order to learn how to execute the movements of that art or sport. Consequently, a beginner performs better than someone who was just initiated because the beginner doesn't suffer the
* In many sports there are (sometimes extremely detailed) rules for what happens when a player is injured, feigns injury, bleeds or is otherwise incapacitated. The fact that these rules exist
* In many strip clubs in the United States, exotic dancers earn all their money from tips and from commissions on drinks ordered for them by their customers. Therefore, it's standard practice for them to flirt with their customers whilst "in character" in order to encourage them to spend more money.
* In many typewriters, the ribbon will have the shape of the letters typed clearly visible where ink was pushed off for the letter that was printed. Unrolling the ribbon would allow someone to see what's been typed.
* In many US states, there has been a conflict where laws allow people to marry at lower ages than they can have sex. The Colorado Supreme Court once ruled that a 14 year old girl could get married, but having sex with her husband would count as statutory rape. Following this the legislature raised the age of consent to marry so it would match that for having sex. While many state laws have a specific exception in the age of consent statutes for marriage, that's not always the case.
* In many versions of the classic fable, they have until winter to build shelter or they will freeze (or starve, interpretations vary). The ant survives and the grasshopper doesn't. The audience is supposed to conclude "Grasshopper bad, work good." It may also occur to some listeners that even with preparations, winter is terrible to live through. Your best case scenario if the grasshopper did work is 6-9 months of hard labor (rarely is the length of "winter" or "summer" specified) 3-6 months of hiding under a rock in misery, then death anyways. "Eat drink and be merry for tomorrow we die" takes on a whole new meaning.

* In many wargames, after having bought the books, you have to buy large quantities of miniatures in order to play (and paint them if you want to play in a sanctioned tournament). For many people collecting and painting miniatures is the main appeal, not an added cost.
* In many ways the closest resemblance to anything from the original
* In many ways the film is itself the film version of the meme rather than the other way around. Upon release actually watching the film itself was unnecessary and probably best avoided.
* In many western Navies the always crowd pleasing close in gun systems like the
* In many white-collar professions (e.g. law, medicine, architecture) the sheer amount of education, practice, and accreditation required mean that it's difficult or impossible for a young person to be preeminent in their field.
* In many Witches books, the act of temporarily occupying an animal's brain is called Borrowing.
* In Maoist China, one of the critters targeted by the "four pests" campaign was the sparrow, which was believed to eat too many grain seeds. Some of the birds were killed with guns and slingshots. Crowds of people would make noise to prevent the sparrows from landing, causing them to die of exhaustion. It worked and the birds became nearly extinct in China. Unfortunately, the sparrows also controlled the locust population, and millions of people were killed by the resulting famine. China ended up having to import sparrows from the Soviet Union.
* In "Maps and Legends", a female Trill scientist (in her only appearance) spots Narek and is immediately intrigued:
* In "Maps and Legends", while the "Nameless" patient is still under anesthesia, Soji whispers to him in an alien language, "You're free now, my friend."
* In "Marathon Mensch," when Jay went missing during the New York marathon and was presumed dead.
* In March 1995, Tony George, head of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway (home of the Indy 500), announced the formation of the Indy Racing League (IRL; now known as INDYCAR), ostensibly to make open-wheel racing in America less Euro-centric and give more direct control of the sport to track owners. Oh, and the majority of the drivers at the Indianapolis 500 (25 out of 33) would now have to be from the IRL. The existing sanctioning body, CART, responded with a blanket boycott of all IRL races and scheduling the new US 500 to run at the same time as Indy. The split remained for thirteen years before the sport was reunified under the banner of IRL and its
* In March 2009 New York Radio station WXRK changed from a rock format to Top-40. They then immediately positioned themselves as the
* In March 2014, Colbert drew the ire of social justice online advocate, Suey Park, who started the
* In March 2014, Dennis Munson Jr. died during his amateur bout. The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel put together a ten minute
* In March 2014, Utah resident Andrew Wilcox lost a bet to his brother, and had to dance on a busy street intersection for 30 minutes to whatever music his brother chose. He quickly started a dance party which became an internet sensation and got a date out of it.
* In March 2017, the AI app SimSimi was banned in both the Republic and Northern Ireland after numerous reports of cyber-bullying cases regarding the program. While the app can still be purchased from stores, attempting to send a message will prompt a brief message regarding the ban and a quote against bullying.
* , in marches General William Sherman, who proceeds (with the full backing of the Army) to arrest the whole convention for treason, establishing himself as Acting President for the duration of the emergency situation. He's hailed as a hero for this.
* In March of 1989, Buffalo Sabres goalkeeper Clint Malarchuk was involved in a goal-crease collision with another player, which resulted in his jugular vein sliced open via errant hockey skate and blood pouring out onto the ice. The paramedics were racing him to the hospital when Malarchuk asked them, "Can you have me back for the 3rd period?"

* In March of 1998, eight pounds of cocaine worth $800,000 was stolen from an evidence room. Rampart CRASH officer Rafael Pérez was arrested for the theft, suspected to be an attempt at framing Frank Lyga in retaliation for Gaines's death; the cocaine stash was evidence in a prior arrest made by Lyga. Pérez was also suspected of knowing about the illegal activities of fellow CRASH officer David Mack, who'd robbed a bank his assistant manager girlfriend worked at in November 1997. When Pérez got a mistrial, he took a plea bargain and pled guilty to cocaine theft in exchange for providing prosecutors information about two "bad" shootings and three other Rampart CRASH officers engaged in illegal activity. Ultimately, over 4,000 pages of sworn testimony came out of Pérez, which resulted in more than 70 officers being implicated in serious misconduct. Worse, the scandal led to the Police Chief, District Attorney, and Mayor of Los Angeles all eventually being not re-appointed or re-elected (after allegations arose that the chief had tried to censor the lead investigators in the Rampart case, and one of these detectives resigned as a form of protest). Over 100 criminal convictions were also overturned as a result.
* In March of 2001, YTV's "The Zone" block had a subplot involving "Yokomites", literal bugs that would show up at random points in the show.
* In Marc Laidlaw's non-canon Episode 3 ideas, the G-Man makes one with
* In "Mare in the Moon", when Twilight Sparkle is annoyed by the overly-friendly reception she's been getting from the citizens of Ponyville.
* In "Marge Be Not Proud", when Bart is caught shoplifting, Marge tells the security guard who caught him in the act that he's no shoplifter; he's "just a little boy". He takes this to mean she's downplaying how serious the crime was and his logic extends as follows:
* In "Marge Gamer," Lisa joins a soccer team (with Homer as a ref) and "flops" her way to victory. When called out on it, she watches a documentary about flopping. The documentary detailed one game which caused a riot that lasted for
* In "Marge in Chains" Lionel Hutz tries to give a fake verdict to Judge Snyder: "This verdict is written on a cocktail napkin! And it still says guilty! And "guilty" is spelled wrong!"
* In "Marge In Chains", Lisa compares Lionel Hutz to lawyer Clarence Darrow, whereupon Hutz asks: "Was he the black guy on
* In "Marge on the Lam", Ruth with Marge brakes and stops in time before driving into the chasm, but Homer and Chief Wiggum fail to stop and fly over the cliff until they are saved by a landfill mountain.
* In "Marge Simpson in: Screaming Yellow Honkers", Bart is surprised that
* In "Marge's Son Poisoning", Homer is doing curls with a dumbbell. He starts counting normally, before randomly skipping through numbers, and then including 'banana'.
* In "Marge vs. Singles, Seniors, Childless Couples and Teens, and Gays", there is a riot in the form of a wave of angry babies at Roofi's concert, who converge on police officers and are beaten off with batons.
* In "Marge vs. the Minorail", Marge speaks to Homer, who is on a runaway monorail, and brings a scientist from North Haverbrook up to help him shut it down.
* In "Marge vs. the Monorail", C. Montgomery Burns was given the Hannibal Mask treatment once when he was dragged into court for illegally dumping radioactive waste around the city.
* In "Marge Vs. The Monorail", Lyle Lanley is ultimately revealed to have kept most of the money the citizens of Springfield entrusted him to build a monorail with, thus endangering its citizens when they go on the monorail's maiden voyage.
* In "Marge vs. the Monorail", Mr. Burns stores nine drums of nuclear waste in a single tree, causing some of the tree's branches to turn into purple tentacles and a squirrel inhabiting it to gain
* In "Marge vs. the Monorail" when Lyle Lanley is doing a presentation in Lisa's class.
* In Marge We Trust" has the "Mr. Sparkle" ad for a Japanese dish soap which begins fairly normally, but quickly descends into madness, with underwater go-go dancing girls who change into dancing sumo wrestlers when the mascot breathes on them, and a reporter interviewing a two-headed cow which then disintegrates.

* In María Luisa Bombal's "La Última Niebla" (The last fog), the most striking feature of the unnamed protagonist's sister-in-law Regina is her gorgeous long black hair.
* In Mark 16:7, an angel tells the ladies visiting Jesus' (empty) tomb to "tell his disciples
* In Mark 4:35-41 and Luke 8:22-25 we see Jesus calming the sea and questioning faith of his disciples. Why?
* In Markarth, the Dragonborn gets involved in a conspiracy that could very well end with a prison riot and the
* In Mark Dinning's "Teen Angel", the girl dies by going back across an active railroad crossing to grab the class ring she'd dropped, and the narration goes "they say they found my high school ring clutched in your fingers, tight".
* In marked contrast to Stephanie, Ranger, an ex-Special Forces "primo bounty hunter" and security consultant, and his employees are uncannily competent and professional. Fortunately for Stephanie, Ranger and his "Merry Men" tend to clean up after her. Ranger jokes that his company's budget has a line-item for Stephanie's misadventures, listed under "Entertainment".
* In marketing copy for audiobooks, "dramatized" usually means that different people perform the voices of different characters when they're speaking.
* In markets where hockey has a huge following (Canada, Michigan, Minnesota, New England, etc.) basketball usually fits this trope. For a while, the Minnesota Timberwolves could only be heard on a 9,100-watt station that only reached the northern suburbs of the Twin Cities. The Minnesota Wild, on the other hand, was on 50,000 watt WCCO.
* In "Married to the Blob", Kimiko compliments Comic Book Guy's snark during their first date. Then they decide to "go walking and mocking in the rain" — Comic Book Guy then says he's in love, yet still a little bit bitter.
* In "Married To The Blob", there is a sequence spoofing Studio Ghibli films. In addition, Kyary Pamupamu's "Ponponpon" plays at one point.
* In "Mars University", Professor Farnsworth produces a hyperintelligent monkey:
* In "Mars University", the characters meet Gunter, Professor Farnsworth's talking monkey. Fry asks if Gunter can talk because he was genetically engineered, but the Professor laughs and tells him that genetic engineering
* In "Martha Fails the Course", Martha has a nightmare where she is balancing on a rocky ledge and
* In "Martha in Charge", Martha cites drinking from the toilet as a perk of doghood.
* In "Martha Runs the Store", Skits wanders into the ladies' bathroom at the mall and drinks from the toilet.
* In Martial Arts, it is often said that the most dangerous belt is a White Belt —
* In "Martin Does It His Way", Aunt Louise's ashes get blown back at Frasier and Niles. Frasier is still pouring her ashes out of his shoe at the funeral, and at the end, a janitor sweeps them under the rug.
* In Martin Gardner's "Thang" the titular being starts eating the solar system but is interrupted by an even larger being scooping him up and swallowing him.
* In Marty Robbins' "Ballad Of Bill Thaxton" the titular character is revealed to have a handicap which actually assists him in defeating his opponent.
* In Marvel Comics, Belasco pulls something like this a couple of times. Trying to kill a surrendered enemy puts a black mark on your soul that puts you in his power. Stopping when he surrenders lets him get you again. Being good enough to boot him elsewhere lacks something in the way of permanence. (Of course, given the nature of Limbo, killing him might too.)
* In Marvel Comics, Odin and Friga conceive another child. Unfortunately, because they conceived her in a dimension where Surtr's essence was scattered, she inherits
* In Marvel Comics, the real-life MI-5, MI6 and the Joint Intelligence Committee have all appeared in MI13 stories written by Paul Cornell. MI6 previously ran superhero operations in

* In Marvel Comics - whether it's being an Eternal, a god, a Herald of Galactus, etc. if a character has immortality then a total immunity to disease is also part of the package.
* In Marvel, Rick Jones is a lot like Jimmy Olsen. But then, he's always partially blamed himself for Bruce Banner being turned into the Hulk, and tries to help him (both Banner
* In Marvel's early Generation 1 comics, Megatron considered himself to be one of these, as seen by his distaste for killing an easy foe like
* In Marvel there were two instances of heroes being this for a vampire, similar to Superman example above. One are
* In Marv's first story, he wakes up in a hospital after receiving several bullets to the chest. He complains that, in order to kill him, the bad guys should've shot him in the head — and enough times to make sure.
* In "Mary 25", the Innobotics Corporation programmer Melburn Ross disables the fail-safes of the android nanny Mary 25 which prevent her from harming humans so that she will kill his boss Charlie Bouton, who regularly beats his wife (and Melburn's old girlfriend) Teryl.
* In "Mary's Child", the heroine's hair extends to the ground. Since she uses it to protect herself from the elements after her clothes fall apart, it also counts as an example of
* In Mary Stanton's novels, Anor, a demon in horse mythology, is a red horse with feline eyes, claws, and fangs, and an appetite for red meat.
* In "marzipan", Marzipan sings a song about Strong Bad... with the lyrics "Oh yeah yeah, and I really don't like him at all".
* In "Marzipan's Answering Machine 11.2", Strong Bad prank calls Marzipan posing as Bob Statesman, who's running for "Elected Official".
* In "Marzipan's Answering Machine 4", Homestar's tries to tell a "TV joke" he heard.
* In "Marzipan's Answering Machne 17.2", Bubs leaves a message announcing that, in response to
* In Massachusetts Bay Colony, Puritan soldiers often took their guns to church in case of attacks by hostile native tribes while they were attending services.
* In Massachusetts one Medflight team has instituted an "MVA Jar" due to the preferred terminology for referring to a car crash shifting from "Motor Vehicle Accident" to "Motor Vehicle Collision" and have to put a quarter in every time they say MVA. It's gathered quite a bit so far.
* In "Masters of Disasters", he frets that if the teens drown in the locked submarines, his show will be cancelled, but is relieved when they manage to escape. However, in reality, the show would've been cancelled anyway due to the near-death of 9 kids (not that anything else they have to do on the show is much better). The only difference being that if they did happen to drown, Chris would have been arrested rather than simply fired.
* In "Matchmaker," Clover discovers all the girls at Beverly Hills High are dating the same guy. The guy, Eugene, was using a hologram device to change his appearance and planned to dump all the girls at once as payback for how his ex dumped him on Valentine's Day (instead of getting revenge directly on said ex). Eugene briefly uses the device to make himself look like a sumo wrestler to fight Clover. Apparently, the holograms are
* In "Matchmaker", Marco tells Star to "dance around the issue" while asking her mother for help, and Star eagerly responds "I'm a
* In mathematics, Boole's rule is a method of numerical integration. It's also known as Bode's rule, after a widely propagated typographical error.
* In "Mathmagic", Star bursts out laughing in math class when Janna tells her the
* In "Mathmagic", Star tries to get out of trying to solve a problem in math class, but keeps going back in a time loop. She thinks her wand might have something to do with it, but as Omnitraxus Prime explains, it's actually because out of all the

* In matters of national security, or if the person's life will be in ongoing danger because of their testimony, the FBI may go as far as staging a closed-casket funeral for someone who is going into the Witness Relocation Program.
* In Matthew Good's song "21st Century Living," which comments on how our society wants to make everything bigger and better (i.e. supersizing it all), Matt wryly notes that we should just supersize everything. Voiceover says: "I'd like to supersize death. Can I have a supersize of death? I'd like to supersize a death with a Coke."
* In Matthew, Jesus goes back to Nazareth, where he grew up. His frigid reception causes him to
* In "Maud Pie", Pinkie's sister Maud flatly states that Applejack's mulled apple cider "tastes like apples".
* In "Maud Pie", Pinkie's sister visits town and the cast has a horrendously difficult time attempting to get to know her better due to her extreme
* In Max, B block wears a light pink, C block wears navy blue, and D remains in khaki.
* In May 2012, Jericho stepped on and kicked a Brazilian flag during their first show in Brazil. Flag desecration is a misdemeanor offense in Brazil and he was legitimately forced to leave the country immediately or face arrest.
* In May 2015, American mathematician John Forbes Nash, whose life was dramatized in
* In May 2017, "Just Friends" was pulled from Disney XD's schedule and site, most likely due to
* In May 2017, Qantas CEO Alan Joyce was pied in the middle of speaking a business conference, by a local Christian farmer who was protesting Joyce's support for marriage equality.
* In May 2018, both Steam and the above GOG.com gave away the original
* In May 2019, US Senator Ted Cruz (R-TX) claimed that the threat of space pirates justifies the formation of a space-bound branch of the US military. After much ridicule on social media (complete with billionaire tech mogul Elon Musk
* In "Maybe-Sitter", Hector forgets to wear pants when trying to dress up formal for a party.
* In "Mazel Tina", we have Bob's reaction to Tammy being a control freak at her bat mitzvah.
* In ME3, it's entirely possible for most of the former squadmates and other important characters from the first two games to have already died, or who die during this game, leaving you with a potential squad of only three members and the NPC roles to be filled by other minor characters or missing entirely.
* In "Ménage à Troi", DaiMon Tog presents a bouquet of pericules (aka zan periculi) to Lwaxana Troi while attempting to court her. Lwaxana tosses them in a nearby lake.
* In "Meanwhile in the Dimension of Pain", Terribus pretends to be the Demon King in a disguise that involves his standing atop Quixxle.
* In "Meapless in Seattle", Meap is shown to have a collection of back-up mustache translators, each of which gives him a different goofy accent.
* In "Measure Twice", a young Jehovah's Witness is found kneeling over the
* In "Meatballs or Consequences", the Grim Reaper gets one after being clouted by the Warners.
* In "Meatloaf Surprise", Phineas gives one with a giant fan blowing for added effect.
* In "Meat", two rural men are driving a truck and talking about what to do with the
* In "Mecha-Streisand", the only person in the whole town who reacted to Barbra Streisand positively was Sheila, who's intentionally characterized to be as annoying and unrelatable as possible.
* In Mechtanium Surge Dan and Mag Mel (Barodius) create energy swords with no handles!
* In Mechtanium Surge Dan and Mag Mel (Barodius) have an energy sword fight but it ends in a draw.

* In Medias Res. It starts at the typical midpoint of the episode, with the suspects in question having been arrested and arraigned on murder charges. Although there are never any flashbacks, the dialogue serves to fill in the investigation that usually happens in the first half of the episode.
* In Medias Res: Many works throw the audience into the story just like the characters are thrown in.
* In Medias Res: The story doesn't start at the beginning; it's either in the middle or at the end.
* In Medias ResThe story doesn't start at the beginning; it's either in the middle or at the end
* In Medias Res: The story starts in the middle rather than at the beginning.
* In Medias Res: The story starts in the middle rather than the beginning.
* In Medias Res where the Rangers are already active, leaving backstories to be covered in later episodes:
* In medicine, doctors or EMTs will assess a patient's mental status by asking four questions: Who are you, where are you, what day is it, and what were you doing (as seen in the Advertising example above). If they answer all four questions appropriately, the patient is alert and oriented times four (A&Ox4). (Sometimes "what did you have for breakfast this morning" is asked, accounting for a lot of the food-oriented examples.) If they answer any of the questions inappropriately, then they have to start looking at reasons for the patient to have an altered mental status (head trauma, shock, blood sugar, drug intoxication, etc.). In short, in real life this trope isn't funny at all, as it implies that the victim may have
* In medicine, the doctor orders an injection. A nurse or orderly uses a syringe and a special pulling needle to draw the medicine from the bottle. The syringe and bottle are then, still connected, shown to a doctor or nurse, so they can confirm the medicine and the dosage. The syringe is then attached to a needle intended for injections, and the medicine is injected.
* In medieval and early modern times, it was assumed there must be a vast mysterious southern continent — "Terra Australis Incognita", the Unknown Southern Land — in the southern hemisphere to
* In medieval China, the only way to enter the civil service was to take multiple, incredibly difficult exams. Pu Songling took his first test at 19 years old and succeeded, but got no higher until he was 71. In the meantime, he collected folk tales and mystic stories, which remain with us now as his
* In medieval Christian canon law, getting married was a matter of saying "I take you as my wife" and "I take you as my husband" — or words to that effect. (Witnesses were
* In medieval Eastern Europe, villages would often hire the services of a "dhampir" to rid them of vampires who were giving them bad luck. These vampires were invisible to normal people, but a dhampir was able to see them by looking through the sleeve of his coat. He would then grapple with the invisible vampire and eventually succeed, inspiring fanfare, food, and income from the villagers. It is highly unlikely that they thought "How cool, a dhampir who comes to save us," since dhampirs were rumored to die horribly young due to not having bones, or suchlike. There was also the "Your mom slept with an undead" thing, which was more likely to bring pity and repulsion than admiration. The job was often done by a traveling man who'd move on soon enough.
* In medieval Europe, serfs who lived in a free city (or at least avoided being found and brought back to their lord's estate) for this period became free. Among other literary references, this is noted in the
* In Medieval Europe the hour of Noon was seen as just as dangerous as Midnight. Noon bore the danger of heatstroke, and there were several evil spirits and demons that specifically appeared under the midday sun. One of these was the Corn Mother, a evil spirit that ran through wheat fields, abducted children and killed them by nursing them with her breasts, which either lactated poison...or made out of hot iron and smothered her victims.
* In Medieval Europe, this was the popular perception of Muslim philosophers and scientists, partially due to cultural bias and partly due to the belief that

* In medieval heraldry, the number of heads of enemies can sometimes signify this. A theoretical variation can be from
* In medieval Korea (during the reign of Goryeo Dynasty), there was an official army faction of Buddhist monks, with the badass sounding name of 'the army of Demon repellers'('Hangmagun' in Korean), which fought against Jurchens and Mongolians. The succeeding Joseon Dynasty (which disliked Buddhism due to its Confucian nature) banned these 'Monk Armies'('Seung-byeong', which means the same as Japanese 'sohei'). But later during the 1592 Japanese Invasions, many Buddhist monks took up fighting again as Seung-byeong, and some famous monk-generals such as
* In medieval times, masons needed a way to know whether other masons really knew their stuff, since they traveled a long way on jobs, failures of skill could be disastrous, and it was really hard to check with those who taught them. Their solution was
* In "Meeting of Ruby Eyes", Zim and Tenn jump out a window to escape
* In "Meet the Demoman", the Demoman has more stickies deployed than he currently is able to by default (to be fair, though, at the time of the video he really did have that ability — then it was nerfed). He also tricks a Sentry into tracking his grenades instead of him, which in-game Sentries never do.
* In "Meet the Heavy", the Heavy exaggerates the firing rate of his minigun and in the "gameplay" scene, nobody seems to be shooting at him while he rains bullety death on everyone. (And in "Meet the Sandvich", the exact scene is replicated, except this time the Heavy is munching on said Sandvich, and yet BLUs can be heard dropping dead left and right.)
* In "Meet the Sniper", the sniper goes over a few of his professional standards: "Be polite. Be efficient.
* In "Meet the Sniper", the Sniper uses his default rifle to shoot two targets at once (he can only do so with a much later unlock) and indirectly cause some barrels to explode (not an in-game feature).
* In Mega City One, racking up ten misdemeanour convictions gets you a mandatory lobotomy.
* In Megaton, we have Moriarty's Saloon as this when compared to The Brass Lantern.
* In Melanesian mythologies it is common for there to have always been day before night was introduced. For example, in the Banks Islands there is a myth where the folk hero Qat retrives night from its land for the benefit of our world, because everyone was tired and bothered by the heat.
* In "Melanie and Merrick", Nurse Katie Heller, who has Munchausen Syndrome by Proxy, uses her medical knowledge of medicines to kill off patients, sometimes even swapping their prescribed medicine with a deadly substance. Her ultimate plan to kill off the Elephant Man fails heavily, and her ass is kicked hard by the hospital's scrubber,
* In Melissa de la Cruz's Blue Bloods Universe, vampires are fallen angels expelled from heaven by the Christian God. In the same universe, witches are in fact ancient nordic deities that come from the nine worlds of the known universe and sometimes they attribute themselves the creation of Midgard (earth).
* In "Melodies of Murder", DI Mooney has to reopen a 30 year old cold murder—originally investigated by Commissioner Patterson—when the husband of the victim announces that he has new evidence regarding the murder, and is promptly murdered himself.
* In "Melora," an alien Starfleet officer from a low-gravity world is able to lower the artificial gravity in her quarters, allowing her to leap about as she is used to, when she normally needs a wheelchair to get around in the Earth/Bajor/Cardassia-standard station gravity. She later takes out a bad guy who had taken her and other crew hostage by turning down the gravity on the runabout they're on, disorienting him long enough for her to beat him up. (She was originally planned as one of the series' leads, but repeated low-gravity scenes would have been prohibitively expensive, so she became a one-off.)
* In "Memnoch the Devil", vampire anti-hero Lestat actually meets the title character (apparently "Memnoch" is his original name and he dislikes being called

"Satan" or anything else) and learns that while he is indeed a rebellious angel thrown from heaven, he's not at all evil (although he's
* In Memoriam contained within are solved by anyone, he will let his victims go free. The game also required for the player to submit a valid email address to receive clues from fictional other players and many of the puzzles in the game required the player to search online for the solution (usually contained in some fake website constructed for the game). The US version's box art was made up like a post office missing persons poster, the angle being that the investigators needed gamers to help solve the puzzles and find the kidnapped people.
* In Memoriam: The work features a dedication to someone who died before the work was released.
* In Memoriam: The work gives a dedication to someone who died before the work's release.
* In "Memories Fade", the chorus spells out that it's a failed friendship which is causing the narrator so much pain that he questions whether it's possible for him to love another person that deeply again.
* In "Memories of Bobby", Kelsey reminiscences about the time she helped the Horse Girls pull Mackenzie out of "
* In "Memory Donk", the guy driving the rocket bus can't remember how to fly and bails out...
* In "Me Musical Nephews", Popeye can't sleep because his nephews' musical rehearsals are keeping him awake. He pulls the iris out within the screen, pulls his bed in then shuts the iris. Does no good as his music-playing nephews have followed him.
* In "Men II Boyz", Stan gets the right half of his face burnt in an explosion. He doesn't notice.
* In "Men in Black," Jamie and Vinny arrest the previous mayor's daughter and her friend after catching them in the act of smoking pot on a park bench. When preparing to arrest them, said daughter tries to invoke this:
* In men's gymnastics at the Olympics, the Americans have a trend of performing very well in qualifications only to crumble in the final; in spite of finishing in 1st place during the 2012 London qualifications and 2nd place during the 2016 Rio qualifications, they turned in error-riddled routines in both finals to end in 5th place.
* In "Menyus and Foxi", Menyus agrees to look after his friend Kriszta's dog, Foxi, while she joins some friends for ice cream. He is quickly dragged all over the park as Foxi chases after cats, birds, and various other animals - although this ultimately proves even more exhausting for Foxi than for Menyus.
* In Mercedes and Lorenz's B support, when Mercedes asks Lorenz if he thinks his duty as a noble is more important than his feelings, he says, "Naturally."
* In "Merlot Down Dirty Shame", Roger buries Francine alive to keep her from telling Stan that he kissed her when they were both drunk. Near the end, when Roger decides to tell Stan himself, he buries
* In "Mermaid Man & Barnacle Boy IV", Squidward is cut in half by a pair of scissors when SpongeBob uses Mermaid Man's utility belt on him while trying to bring him back to normal size.
* In "Mermaid Man and Barnacle Boy III", while looking after the Mermalair, SpongeBob and Patrick find Mermaid Man and Barnacle Boy's enemy Man Ray preserved in frozen tartar sauce until Patrick frees him because SpongeBob
* In "Mermaid Man and Barnacle Boy IV", one of SpongeBob's attempts to return a shrunken Squidward to normal size with Mermaid Man's utility belt results in Squidward being set on fire.
* In "Mermaidman and Barnacleboy VI: The Motion Picture", after SpongeBob learns that his heroes will be played by actors in the new movie his reaction is presented using live action footage of someone's mouth placed over a sponge.
* In "Mermaid Man and Barnacle Boy VI: The Motion Picture", the movie that SpongeBob and the gang make turns out to be terrible and full of
* In "Mermaid Man and Barnacle Boy V", the scene when the News Reporter says Every Villain Is Lemons, Villain is misspelled "Villian".

* In "Messages from Earth", one spaceship evades another by hiding in the atmosphere of Jupiter. The pressure on the exterior of the ship as it descends is given in "gravities", although gravities are a measure of acceleration and not pressure, which is very different.
* In "Metal Attraction", Fenton Crackshell hires the "Singing Chocolates" for Gandra Dee. They're a troupe of singers dressed in giant valentine's chocolate boxes. Presumably, Gandra gets to keep all the chocolates they bring:
* In Metal Gear Solid, the character Sniper Wolf gives Hal "Otacon" Emmerich her handkerchief, which he later passes on to Solid Snake.
* In "Metal Mental", an explosion at the end leaves Ami and Yumi blackened.
* In "Metal Urgency," Pumadyne designs an experimental tank for them called the Behemoth. It seems impressive, since it is protected by a force field and (for whatever reason) all of its armaments are said to be thought-controlled. But after being stolen by Hard Drive, it's taken on a rampage so brief it never even leaves the facility where it had just been built before the SWAT Kats manage to take it out by frying its electrical systems, which results in the thought controls becoming disabled. And apparently there is no backup conventional control for it because once Hard Drive loses the ability to operate it with his mind, the million dollar prototype promptly drives itself into a wall and crashes uselessly.
* In "Metamorphosis", Kirk wonders about Cochrane's "antique" equipment before learning that he's actually warp-drive inventor Zefram Cochrane, who had disappeared 150 years previously.
* In Mettaton's quiz, one question ask you what type of monster a Froggit head comes from. The answer is Mettaton, who is wearing a Froggit T-shirt.
* In Mexican culture, there is the story of La Llorona, a woman who drowned her two sons in a fit of rage after learning that her husband cheated on her. Realizing what she'd done, she killed herself in despair, only to be barred from entering Heaven because of her crimes.
* In "Mexican Joyride", Daffy uses this on a raging bull. The bull, oblivious that he's arguing with Daffy himself, insists that the black duck is hiding under the Mexican hat lying on the ground. Daffy initially states that Daffy isn't under the hat, then uses this trope to make the
* In Mexican soccer games, people frequently score GOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOO-AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAALLLLLLLLLLLLLLLLLLLs!
* In Mexico, couples that are not too intimate will often be jokingly referred to as
* In Mexico, Lucha Libre facilitates this with a stricter weight class than say,
* In Mexico many people tend to finish any phrase with Chihuahua, the name of a Mexican state, when not intending to use the real word: chingar, which is used as "fuck". Many Latin American dubs or subs used to replace every swear word with a family-friendly slur. This can range from saying "damn" to ludicrous painfully outdated words that sound weird even to 50-something adults.
* In Mexico, the chaneques (chaneque in singular, from nahuatl “those who live in dangerous places” or “the owners of the house”) from
* In Mexico, the creator and animator Rulo Barrera has made several web shows and shorts in the past years, but none else compared when he made "El Consultorio del Dr. Goku" an flash animated show were Goku and Vegeta answered questions of real people e-mailed to him in many hilarious ways. With the 9th episode the series were definitively over but any subsequent series or short got the boot from fans and were not as half as popular like Dr. Goku was forcing a short sequel named Dr. Goku 2012 where he ran as president of Mexico, then he got other special in the holidays, then another shorter special after, after that due to high demand and poor reception, Rulo made a new
* In Mexico, the premier example of the 1970s and 80s was Dr. Wagner. His son started out the same way but eventually switched to a black mask and
* In Mexico, there is a famous actress and comedienne named "María Elena Velasco". She has been cast a Danza in everything she has been in. Specifically, she plays "La India Maria", a character she herself created.

* In Mexico, there's a very specific word for this kind of behaviour, and it's named
* In Mexico, these are known as "extremos" and are mostly associated with independent circuit promotions such as X-LAW, NGX, RevoluXion Hardcore, DTU and GLC due to
* In Mexico, the signs read "TOPE" and may have a picture of the device. They tend to be very large and very steep, often enough to damage a car going much faster than 20 MPH. Residents of rural areas may build their own by felling trees.
* In Mexico, where the major promotions don't demand nearly as much exclusivity as their North of the boarder counterparts, El Hijo Del Santo's
* In Michael's case, his position as branch manager and his soft-hearted nature means everyone
* In Michael Shea's story "The Pearls of the Vampire Queen" Queen Vulvula rules over a human nation and rejuvenates herself yearly in a ceremony called The God-Making Of The Year King, where she devours her human husband. Apart from that, she is depicted as an effective and benevolent ruler.
* In "Mickey's Fire Brigade", Mickey, Donald and Goofy are firemen trying to put out a fire. The flames sprout legs and act as if alive, forcing Donald to chase them down, closing a window to keep the water from the hose from coming in and even nabbing Donald's fire axe and chasing him around with it.
* In Microsoft Word (or the Office software group), sometimes people may find that the text to the right of their cursor suddenly gets eaten up by whatever they're typing next. This is because the Overtype mode often comes on without them knowing they accidentally hit the Insert key, which is right next to the Backspace key. Good thing at least one keyboard type doesn't have an Insert key just to the right of Backspace (There's also the zero key on the number pad when Num Lock is off).
* In mid-2011, Rebecca Watson, known for writing on the popular science blog Skepchick, had one at an atheist conference in Dublin. A man asked her if she'd like to have coffee with him... in his bedroom. It was four in the morning and they'd never met before. She made
* In mid-2012, due to a temporary ban on his Brogue Kick, he added another move to his finishing sequence - the Four Leaf Clover, his own variation on
* In mid-2016, Antarctica was declared the most LGBT-friendly continent. This probably has more to do with the nature of Antarctica (
* In mid 2019, Gamer Girl/ Instagram model Belle Delphine sold her bathwater. Predictably, people got sick from drinking it.
* In Middle Eastern and North African cultures, there is a local belief in a kind of spirit possession called
* In Middle Eastern legend, genies are powerful and independent spirit beings; stories of
* In "Middle Man," the team had a case in an Indiana farming community and their profile suggested that the UnSub was local and worked in agriculture. A local police officer then points out that half of Indiana is farmland.
* In "Mid-Life Crustacean", Mr. Krabs hangs out with SpongeBob and Patrick because he feels old. They end up going to the laundromat, reading at the library, sitting in a kiddie pool, et cetera. Of course this is subverted at the end when they suggest a panty raid. But it turns out to be Mr. Krabs' mother's undergarments...
* In "Midnight Rx", Bart tells Lisa that Mr. Burns is one of the nicest men he ever met. When Lisa asks how many men he knows, he says it's basically Burns and Homer.
* In "Midnight Rx", Ned Flanders meets a knockoff of himself while in Canada. The two hit it off well until the Canadian offers him some "reef-a-rino".
* In "Midnight Towboy", Flanders comes to Homer to pick up the church bus he towed...with the children still in it!
* In "Midsomer Rhapsody" a motorcyclist is decapitated by a length of piano wire strung across the road at neck height.
* In "Mighty Pups", Everest sneezes, releasing a stream of ice that freezes the fallen meteor, discovering that she has ice powers.
* In Mika's "Lollipop", I always have to wonder if he really wants to sing it, or if it's just what he had to sing it as:

* In "Milhouse of Sand and Fog", Homer gets Krusty to perform at his pox party, but only pays for 20 seconds. Krusty begins telling a joke ("Moishe caught the chicken pox, he scratched all night and day! He asked the rabbi what to do, and he said—") before a timer goes off and he leaves.
* In military aviation, there is an equivalent to sinking a lifeboat: shooting pilots or crew who have ejected from an aircraft and are attempting to save their lives by parachuting to the ground. Once they abandon their wrecked plane and pose no threat, they are effectively non-combatants.
* In military sectors that track kills (and most of them don't), they usually go out of their way to avert disputes for kills. For example in the WWII USN any plane shot down by multiple attackers would be awarded as a "1/2 kill" to anyone involved and if a ship was sunk, all vessels that damaged it would be awarded the kill.
* In militias and paramilitaries, usually this is averted for enlisted personnel, especially noncombat ones, but often in full effect for officers as well as for people with specialized skills. You see, due to
* In "Milk", Ted has a moment like this for Robin. He gets the oppurtunity to go on a blind date with his dream woman, but he realizes that his lingering feelings for Robin are stronger and cancels it. This is visualized by Ted imagining a marriage ceremony between himself and a
* In Millea Kenin's short story "Scarlet Eyes," protagonist Den-Tyren Scorry
* In "Million Dollar Cat", not only does Jerry pull on Tom's sheets, but he also shoves Tom out of bed.
* In "Million Hare", Bugs and Daffy compete for a box that contains a "million bucks". When Daffy wins, he finds out that inside the box is a million small
* In "Mind over Murder", Peter talks about some of the "crimes" he's committed in his life, like
* In "Mind Share", after alien criminals swap minds with the kids in order to escape from jail, Phineas and friends have one hour to swap minds back before the device used to do so self-destructs. The aliens lampshade this trope when setting up the timer, pointing out that it increases the drama.
* In "Mind Stealers from Outer Space - Part 1", Wonder Woman leaps onto the hood of a car being driven by possessed teenagers leading to capturing one of them.
* In "Mind Stealers from Outer Space", the alien Skrill use them for multiple purposes including attacking Wonder Woman and leveling a building.
* In "Mind Your Manners," Cowbella invites Apollo and Squacky to one, but neither want to play because they're busy playing a space game involving alien ducks. Then Sweetpea Sue walks in with cookies, saying that their mom made for the tea party. Suddenly both race over to join, Squacky saying that they love tea parties and asking when it starts.
* In "Mindy's Mystery", Mindy is kept up at night by a mysterious sweet smell, and the gang has to find the source of it.
* In "Mindy's Mystery", the kids try to infiltrate Mitchell's backyard in order to find the source of the mystery smell. In order to distract Mitchell, Jet and Sunspot stop him in his tracks and perform circus tricks while Sean, Sydney, and Mindy search Mitchell's area.
* In "Mine Your Own Business," Fred comes up with a plan to catch and trap the ghostly Miner '49er haunting the
* In "Ming's Household Helpers", Zuffy freaks out when Rick brings one of the robots with which Ming plans to enslave humanity via hypno-beam into Monitor.
* In miniatures game Legions of Steel, the eponymous Machine Empire captures humans and other sentient beings and keeps them in a dream state while holding them in a pod (similar to the Matrix, but five years before the movie). Machines, having no truly creative or lateral thinking abilities, use chemical torture on their captives, read their thoughts - nightmares - and search through them for new ideas. While the Machines searched for ideas with technological application, the side effect was to incorporate horrific images into the design of new fighting robots.
* In "Mini-Golf at the DSA", Sean tells Jet that he needs to use the right amount of force to get his golf ball to move properly and not bounce all over the place.

Jet says he loves force, only to ask a second later what force is.
* In Minnesota in 2016, a U.S. Army veteran named Jason Galvin did this to rescue a bald eagle that was found dangling from a tree with its foot caught in rope, but not quite so elegantly. With windy conditions and only four inches of rope to work with, it reportedly took 150 shots with a .22 caliber rifle and almost 90 minutes to trim away other branches and eventually whittle away the rope.
* In Minnesota the seasons are known as Winter, Mud, Road Construction and Still Road Construction
* In Miracleman, Kid Miracleman is subjected to this after he reverts to his human form, John, for the first time in 20 years. The staff are caring, but like most schools of the time ignore bulling between the students. As a result, John quickly becomes targeted by a series of bullies. Co-currently he finds himself having to constantly fight off Kid Miracleman screaming in his ear to let him out. John holds out until the head bully tries holds him down and assaults him. John
* In "Miracle on Evergreen Terrace," the car the family buys with the $15,000 from the townspeople blows up from just
* In "Miracle on Evergreen Terrace", when Homer walks into the living room and sees everyone from town in his living room, some Christmassy music can be heard. He then barks at Lisa to stop playing it on the piano.
* In Miranda's case, she hooks up with Steve after their first break-up which leads to them rekindling their relationship, and again after their second break-up
* In "Mirror," a thief (disguised as Kahlan via a magical mirror) hatches a plan to steal Richard's
* In "Mirror, Mirror", Evil!Spock does it with Dr. McCoy so he can find out what's going on.
* In "Mirror Mirror", the Terran Empire has female uniforms based around
* In "Mirror of Regret", Bulk has Skull for company, and they end up on the floor.
* In "Misconduct Game", Susie Chang is murdered and evidence planted to make it look like she had been falsifying evidence. Maura recuses herself from the case, and the rest of the team works to clear Susie's name and save the reputation of the forensic department.
* In "Missed Connection", Bobby wants to tell Lori a story, but then Lori says, "Not another one!". She quickly explains that she thought she saw a baby snake, but it was only a scrunchie. Bobby then says, "That was a dumb idea", offending Lori, but he was talking to himself about accidentally making his dog throw up.
* In "Missed Connection", Lana says she likes "eating butt". She means that she thinks it's funny that the pizza was shaped like a butt (it was meant to be a heart).
* In "Missing And Murdered", Mari and Jasmine point out that for all Canada's ragging on the USA, the former is just as bad when it comes to treatment of indigenous people.
* In "Missing And Murdered", two different drug users who went to the police to report a serial killer were dismissed because the cops thought junkies couldn't be trusted.
* In mission 10 of the Allied campaign, General von Esling tells the player during the campaign in Kiev to destroy EVERYTHING in the Soviet nuke base. "Scorched Earth!" Though, when you play the mission, this turns out to be impossible as the Soviets end up launching nukes during the mission and von Esling hastily changes your objective to instead capture the Command Center and send a commando force in to remotely deactivate the nuclear warheads before they hit their targets.
* In Mission 1, where you have to rescue Miller, Ocelot tells you he only has about 3 days to live. If you wait 3 days, either by using the Phantom Cigar or simply by taking too long, he will be unresponsive when you trigger his cutscene, and when Snake lets go of his face, it will stiffly lull to a downward position, causing Snake to scream in agony and Ocelot to solemnly inform you that Miller has died from extensive blood loss due to his severed limbs. This also results in a "Time Paradox" message.
* In Mission 1, you have to cut a time bomb by cutting the three wires in the correct order within the time limit. At Level 1 difficulty you have 15 seconds, but at the maximum Level of 16 you have only

* In Mission 3, you have to make your way through a field of claymore mines. You defuse them by
* In Mission 5, you enter a building at the end of an alleyway, and immediately exit into another alleyway. An indoor factory area was designed for this section, but left unimplemented.
* In "Mission O Possible", the Mobile Unit and the Little O go to Jimmy Jam's apartment to steal his signal jammer, only to find that he can't hear them due to the jammer emitting a loud whirring noise and him having headphones on. This proves to be to their benefit, and they simply drag the jammer out of the apartment without him being the wiser.
* In "Mississippi Hare", riverboat gambler Colonel Shuffle holds five aces - and Bugs beats him with a hand of
* In "Miss PCA," Zoey and Lola walk in as Chase is folding his white briefs.
* In "Miss Teacher Bangs a Boy," Hall Monitor Cartman finds Ike's picture of his teacher in the school hallway, and discloses this as he returns the picture to Ike in front of Ike's entire class. The other kids mock Ike, laughing and chanting "Ike has a crush on teacher! Ike has a crush on teacher!"
* In "Miss Teacher Bangs a Boy" the only reaction that the titular news gets out of various adult men, including police, is a quiet "...nice!"
* In Mister Midshipman Easy—a sea story set in the Napoleonic wars, by Captain Marryat, first printed 1836—the eponymous hero, Midshipman Easy, newly joined to the frigate Harpy, quarrels with two of the warrant officers, and insists on fighting them on the same day. The officer charged with arranging the duel, fancying himself a mathematician, places the three men at the points of a triangle, with instructions that each is to fire at one opponent and receive the fire from another. Easy realizes his advantage at once.
* In Mist of Pandaria Wrathion conjures a projection of Azeroth, proving that it is indeed supposed to be spherical. This has apparently escaped the attention of all of its inhabitants as all travel between Kalimdor and the Eastern Kingdoms always involves crossing the larger of the two oceans separating them and dodging around the deadly Maelstrom in the process. Traveling in the opposite direction ought to be faster and safer, with access to many unguarded fronts.
* In Mists of Pandaria Patch 5.2, there is a bonus boss at the end of the Throne of Thunder raid, Ra-den. He is only accessible after you have defeated the previous 12 bosses. On
* In Mitsunari's route, Mitsunari and the main character's feelings for each other are so painfully obvious to everyone else that Hideyoshi and Ieyasu repeatedly make excuses to leave them alone together
* In MMORPGs a guild of players can easily approach a version of this. Although you will never actually meet them in real life, you become emotionally attached to those people and are willing to go out of your way to help them in-game and even outside the game. When one of them leaves the guild, it feels like a betrayal.
* In MMORPGs, plenty of cases existed where male players pretend to be girls to get free things. A common joke was that any female character is likely a GIRL (Guy In Real Life).
* In "Mobile Homer", while Marge and Homer are looking through a holiday album (
* In "Mobius Dick" there is a flashback to fifty years earlier when Zoidberg was popular enough to use this joke on the captain of the first Planet Express Crew.
* In "Mockingbird", Brienne and Pod debate the fork in the road leading either north to the North or east to the Vale. Ironically, they choose the Vale but end up heading north in the next season anyway.
* In modern air and naval warfare, this is effectively all there is as the odds of seeing an enemy have massively decreased with the advent of more modern missiles. With naval vessels this has been true for several decades but for aircraft it is only since around Desert Storm that this has become true.
* In modern combat, if a plane/ship/tank has no more ammunition left, or has sustained too much damage to properly operate weapon systems,
* In modern Continuously Variable Transmissions (C.V.T.s) the car does not have traditional gears. C.V.T.s have some form of cone, belt, chain, or "universal gear" which smoothly transitions to the appropriate power ratio among a seemingly infinitesimal progression of available states. However, many people feel that the lack of discernible gear changes made the car feel underpowered or flawed. This led many automakers to incorporate the option of simulating the bump of gear changes that aren't really there.

* In modern (especially Western) Civilization, serial monogamy is so common that some evolutionary psychologists think humans evolved to favor such relationships.
* In modern expression theater, it seems to be an unwritten rule that all actors
* In modern Hebrew, shaphan is used for rabbit much more often than in the original meaning.
* In modern military weddings where the groom wears his sword (traditionally on the left side), he will stand on the left so that the sword doesn't
* In modern productions, he is often intentionally portrayed as sympathetic and sometimes even as the victim.
* In modern slang, "lithosexual" and "lithoromantic" are occasionally used to describe a feeling of attraction, without the desire for that attraction to be reciprocated. Folks who would describe themselves as one or both of these terms span an entire spectrum of feelings about actually
* In modern times, concern about snipers using this very tactic has led to the phasing out of identifying marks for officers, with inconspicuous rank insignia, and salutes by soldiers of lower rank expressly discouraged. So,
* In modern times, if you call it in, you're likely to be a suspect. By all means, call it in or get ready for some heinous consequences, but protect your rights, get legal counsel, and in the US, do NOT answer questions ANY questions, EVER, to the police without legal counsel. If they don't have anyone else to pin it on,
* In modern times, Jews have taken to replacing YHWH with HaShem (The Name), when they read the text aloud.
* In modern times, many military installations will have a public address system that is used to warn of imminent attack or natural disaster, in a
* In modern times, National Guardsmen typically are equipped with the same gear as their "Regular" Active Duty brethren, although up until the later years of the Cold War, it wasn't unusual for them to use obsolete equipment that had been cast off by the regular service, particularly for the Air Guard, since military aircraft are considerably more expensive than an infantryman's kit.
* In modern times, Norwegians are apt to do the trick on themselves: The less urbanized you are, the more "savage" you become. And there is always another country to suck up to.
* In modern times, official organizations exist to fill some of the requirements of this trope, such as the Army & Air Force Exchange Service, a Department of Defense owned and operated corporation which operates restaurants, stores, barber shops, etc. for American military personnel, both in garrison and in deployed locations. Indeed, one of AAFES's slogans suggests this trope: "We Go Where You Go".
* In modern times, the Civil Air Patrol paints its fleet of single-engined propeller planes (mostly Cessna Skyhawks and Skylanes) in a
* In modern times, the Lennon/McCartney writing partnership tends to be oversimplified as 'Lennon wrote all the
* In modern Western culture, premarital sex is accepted, and even considered normal. Couples can live together without being married, and even raise a family like that. One can go home from a nightclub with someone he/she has just met and have sex. But go to a conservative country or region with deeply-entrenched traditional values regarding marriage and sex, and such behavior is frowned upon at best, and (in some cases) a
* In modern whaling, the Nisshin Maru functions similarly to this, though technically it is a factory ship. Smaller faster vessels are needed to catch the whales, but these lack the ability to process the meat and retain their mobility. These ships instead bring it to the mothership, which does have the facilities to properly process and store the massive amount of whale meat and organs.

* In "Moebius", Daniel takes what appears to be a small commercial camcorder on a time-travel 5000 years into the past. When the team screws up the timeline, he leaves the camcorder in a buried Goa'uld jar to be unearthed in the 21st Century. The
* In "Mog and the V-E-T", the vet has a nightmare where his office is full of wild animals.
* In "Mog on Fox Night", Mog has a "cross dream" where Mr Thomas her owner has thrown out all the eggs in the world.
* In "Mog's Christmas Calamity", Mog thinks that a snake is spitting on the fire, while we know that it's only a firehose.
* In "Mog's Christmas", Mog thinks the tree is moving around, but we know that it's only Mr. Thomas moving it.
* In "Mog the Forgetful Cat", Debbie has a nightmare where a tiger wants to eat her.
* In "Mog the Forgetful Cat", the "dark thoughts" Mog is thinking involve "nobody will let me in or give me my supper". Unbeknown to
* In "Moist Vessel", Ensign Rutherford firmly states that he doesn't need to eat more, but then he suddenly wants to eat Ensign Tendi's pudding.
* In "Moist Vessel", Mariner is promoted from Ensign to full Lieutenant (skipping a rank!) as part of an attempt to force her to resign or request a transfer (due to the bureaucratic monotony her higher rank entails).
* In "Moloch", our heroes have to land on a planet covered by a highly advanced defense screen. Since they can't teleport through, they just teleport Tarrant and Vila onto a transport on its way to the planet.
* In "Moment of Truth", Entrapta tells Catra that going through with Hordak's plan to open an interdimensional portal would cause the universe to collapse, just as Adora said. This leads to one
* In "Mom, Lies, and Video Tape", when their camcorder breaks on the day of the Mother's Day pageant, the kids tell their own wildly-exaggerated versions of the pageant to Linda, who missed it due to illness.
* In "Momma's Boys", Hank stumbles across the phrase "doll withdrawal". He realizes it's not only funny-sounding, it's pretty hard to say.
* In "Mo Mommy, Mo Problems" Spencer, the guy running the open house, warns the kids to stay out of the third floor, and they hear a creepy old woman shouting "LEAVE!" from there. It turns out to be Spencer's mom Ethel, and she isn't really crazy (outside of her weird hobby of making taxidermy squirrels), she just doesn't want her son to sell their house and is trying to scare away prospective buyers.
* In "Mona Leaves-A," Homer's mother Mona dies and bequeaths gifts to the Simpson clan. Marge gets a hemp purse, Bart receives a Swiss army knife...and Lisa gets "Mona's rebellious spirit," which she complains about. Later, the family members
* In "Moneybart", Lisa tries to apply this trope to Bart's baseball team, ala the Oakland A's, but it doesn't quite work.
* In "MoneyBART", when Lisa wants to practice fencing, she tries it with Maggie, who defeats her spectacularly.
* In "Money Talks", Mr. Krabs sells his soul to the Flying Dutchman in exchange for the ability to talk to money. When Mr. Krabs' money talks him into spending them (specifically, on things he doesn't want, like corn dogs, fairy princess outfits, and diapers), Mr. Krabs tries to get his soul back from the Flying Dutchman, only for the Flying Dutchman to claim his soul anyway. The Flying Dutchman soon finds out that Mr. Krabs has already sold his soul to various monsters, as well as SpongeBob, who tells the Flying Dutchman that Mr. Krabs was five dollars short on his last payday.
* In Monica's series Smudge (Cascão), the title character asks why he's been kidnapped and the answer is "Because of the hero of this comic book. If I had kidnapped Robertinho or someone else, there would be no fun.".
* In "Monkee vs. Machine," when Peter gets flustered in a job interview, the computer identifies him as "Notwhat" and "Nitwit."
* In "Monkey See, Monkey Do", his step-sister Nutsy utters another phrase from him used during the third series; "Careful is my middle name!" Blinky wonders where he heard that.

* In "Monsieur Murdoch", the hotel owner and brother-in-law of the missing woman turns out to have married for this reason. His wife tells Murdoch and his French counterpart that she knew what she was getting into when they married.
* In "Monster Fred", after being hit on the head with a bowling ball Fred says "Duh, can you tell me a story, Mommy?"
* In "Monster Movie" the Winchesters find themselves up against a demon who's a fan of old monster movies. Sam goes to kick open the heavy double doors of a
* In "Monster Reunion", Steven tries to communicate with Centipeedle through writing, but she only writes incomprehensible squiggles, to his dismay. Later, after they've warped to the wreckage of Centy's ship, the other Gems manage to find them. When Steven asks how, they show him a stack of Centy's drawings - and explain that the squiggles are written in the Gem language.
* In "Monster's Legacy", a coach raped at least one of his players in the past and blackmailed him with the video of them "having sex", which then
* In "Monster", the US government is conducting experiments with people possessing telekinetic powers, whom they employ to assassinate foreign leaders who pose a threat to the United States and its interests.
* In Monster X's heartbreaking backstory, his masters put him in cold storage until he is needed. Unable to break free, he starts repeating his name and the name of his wife and parents over and over again in an attempt to not forget but fails.
* In "Monstory" Dexter gives Dee Dee what he thinks is a silencing potion, but instead mutates her into a monster. The only way to get her to shut up? To become a giant monster himself and have a knock-down, drag-out kaiju battle!
* In "montage", Strong Bad's reaction to an emailer asking him to "creat" a montage is to say, in a mocking, high-pitched voice, "Oooohhh! Why don't you 'creat' an alternate reality where you don't have to spell correctly? (
* In Montreal, there was an ad campaign run by a gum company whose gum came in round shapes instead of the usual square shapes. The ad said, "100% of people who chew square gum die."
* In "Monty Can't Buy Me Love", Homer offers an unusual version of the
* In "Moon Farm", Doofenshmirtz tries to get a green thumb by dumping green paint on himself and paints everything but his thumbs due to the way he was holding the can.
* In "Moonlighting", Frank broods over a quote from Donald Rumsfeld regarding the Iraq War ("the known unknowns").
* In "Moonvasion!", Donald is revealed to have been stranded on an island for approximately a month, and at some point during that time, he made a friend out of watermelons which resembles
* In Moore's case, though, the use of initials was not to conceal her identity from editors or readers, but from her boss at the bank she worked at. She began to write during the Great Depression. Jobs were scarce, and she believed that if the boss knew she had another source of income, she'd be canned.
* In "Mooselvania Saved", Boris and Natasha manage to steal several goods that were donated to Mooselavia, putting them all on a raft. They get to Fearless Leader's ship, and Fearless Leader rewards Boris with a small medal. Unfortunately,
* In Mordor's case, the problem is that its borders are mostly a series of large mountain ranges, leaving few routes through them that are heavily guarded. One could wander in around the backside of Mordor (relative to Gondor), but that leaves one quite far away from Mount Doom, which is where Frodo and company are headed. In the end, Frodo, Sam, and Gollum end up circling Mordor, climbing a huge mountain, going through a cave
* In more chivalrous times, officers captured in war would be given the opportunity to give their parole, which was usually a sworn promise that they would not fight against the capturers' troops. Mediaeval nobles often ended up as guests of their capturing lord, and many made great inroads in impregnating the local womenfolk. Later on, the fortress-town of Verdun was the go-to destination for British POWs in the Peninsular War. If they were enlisted, they sat it out in freezing, wet cells. If they were officers, they lived in the town and formed the Officers' Philosophy Club, which did precious little philosophy and quite a lot of drinking and whoring.

* In more classic first-person shooters, the main character says "hop" or grunts with every jump which is rarely the case in real life.
* In more modern cases (from Legion to the time of writing in Shadowlands) the damage healers can do in Mythic+ dungeons is extremely important when it comes to the endgame. There is also a whole spec that does most of it's healing by converting damage done to enemies to healing.
* In more "modern" mythology/conspiracy theories, some have expressed the theory the so-called "Greys" are not actually extraterrestrial but the cetacean convergent evolution to humanity. Such theory obviously has more than its fair share of counter-dialog but is an example of this trope applied probably beyond its real-world boundaries.
* In more modern times, playing "Cowboys and Indians" has been a long time kids favorite.
* In more of a case of paying attention to detail than a case of Rewind, Replay, Repeat, the Marvel
* In more of a lateral example, Gowron originally came to power during a civil war crisis in
* In more old-school news, PC-98 character Orange is frequently portrayed as a baton twirler due to carrying a baton in canon.
* In more practical terms, South Korea won in the long run by staying out of North Korean control. While South Korea has grown into a fully modernized nation with access to proper utilities and services, North Korea has been left behind technologically and militarily; this wasn't the case for the first three or so decades after the war, as North Korea was being held up by Soviet subsidies while South Korea was always the poorer part of the country even before the war. But it became the case as South Korea's capitalistic economy and export model began to tell by the late 1980s while the centrally planned North Korean communist system, unable to rely on handouts anymore, rapidly collapsed following the Soviets cutting off the money. Today, 97% of the GDP generated in the Korean Peninsula belongs to South Korea. Satellite images of North Korea during the night show the country as a nation shrouded in darkness compared to the city lights that come from the neighboring countries of coastal China and South Korea. It's so bad that North Korea is considered a "failed state" by a few political science textbooks. In essence, by simply surviving, South Korea won by being able to gain more amenities.
* In more recent ads the kids have also been subject to bizarre hallucinations, which can be defeated by manifesting objects made of the red glow.
* In more recent cosmology, the Seelie Court, ruled by Queen Titania, are often shown arrogant elitists who refuse to consider non-Fey people. The Unseelie Court, ruled by the Queen of Air and Darkness, are simply
* In more recent decades, Muslim immigrant gangs may also make an appearance throughout Europe (though mainly in the west). Broadly speaking, they're likely to be Turkish in
* In more recent games, there's the option to disable experience gain, allowing for traditional in-game Low-Level Runs.
* In more recent history, the human empires of Netheril, Imaskar, and Illefarn flourished before they disintegrated in nasty ways.
* In more recent interviews, he has stated his favorite to be Reiner.
* In more recent stories, part of Bruce Wayne's public persona includes a fondness for extreme sports. That would plausibly explain some of the scarring.
* In more recent times, though, Swift has garnered quite a bit of controversy for allegedly "dating too much," though this has died down as
* In more recent years, a lot of veterans from the Yugoslav wars (mainly Serbs) joined the Legion.
* In more recent years, however, the show has taken mostly to bringing in superfan applicants over recruits (excepting usually one or two minor sports stars). While this has fixed a lot of the problems, there's always one or two people who still seem to be suffering from this. And the superfans can themselves can often get stuck in problematic patterns because of their fandom.

* In more recent years, there have been several events that have become
* In more recent years: the Western intervention in Yugoslavia in the early 1990's saw a race between NATO and Russian troops to control a strategic airbase. The Russians got there within minutes of the British, who were ordered by the American general officer commanding to capture the airbase, whatever it took. Fortunately the British officer leading from the front was General Jackson, a man with the clout to take the radio, point out to the Yank that odd-numbered world wars tend to begin in Yugoslavia, the next world war would be number three, an odd number, and he wasn't going to go down in history as the man who started
* In more recent years, Tony Stark usually wears something along the lines of this under his regular civilian attire.
* In more sophisticated systems, visitors select the nature of their business upon their arrival and are issued a ticket with a letter and a number (such as B-53). A computer tracks the order of arrival and the selected purpose of each visitor. When a staff member becomes available, the computer selects the next person in line and displays their number alongside the counter or station they should proceed to. Since the order is tracked by the computer rather than simply counting upwards, it is impossible for a visitor to determine when their turn will come up by looking at their number.
* In more than a few incarnations, Zelda is shown to be a capable fighter and in all incarnations she is strong-willed. Many fan-works tone her down into a generic
* In more traditional societies, like some in Latin America, the Mediterranean, and South/Southeast Asia, this is ubiquitous. Extended family are almost universally considered close family in those cultures. In many of these areas, extended family either lives under one roof or near one another. The Arab Gulf states, for example, are notorious for having cases of three or four generations living under one roof, with
* In more ways than one, this Trope is a driving force behind the events of
* In "Morituri Te Salutamus", Finn is ordered to fight Jake at the behest of the Fight King, and Finn says "I can't kill my best friend... [...] without a bigger sword!" The Fight King rather unwisely hands over his
* In "Mors Praematura", Root and Shaw break into a room which turns out to be a CIA "Pick-up site". Root begins to eat an apple and tells Shaw there's a CIA agent behind her. They get into a fight with Root watching and eating her apple all the while Shaw is beating up the agent until Root decides to simply use her taser and end the fight quickly.
* In "Mortal Recoil", we get to see what the world looks like to the Ice King for a few seconds.
* In "Morty's Mind Blowers", it's revealed that Rick frequently erases Morty's memory. Usually it's at his request after a particularly horrifying or disgusting event, such as accidentally killing people or masturbating an alien, which fits this trope.
* In "Mosquito Time", Hank says that the human brain can only hold so much information, and we are treated to a
* In most Android apps, pressing the "back" button at the bottom exits from the currently selected option. In the e-book reader app EBookDroid, pressing the button while using the "go to page" function doesn't close the window to let you read the selected page—instead it brings you back to the page you've been reading before. A lot of times you scroll to a given page, only to immediately accidentally go back to where you were.
* In most armed forces, it is standard for lower ranks to address their superiors by their rank, or occasionally by their function. Calling a superior by their surname, e.g. "Sergeant Smith" may net the answer "I know my own name." Unless, that is, you are addressing a group of sergeants, in which case just calling, "Sergeant" will get you a pack of "What kind of idiot are you?" looks because you weren't specific.
* In most bodies of water there are swimming schools of fish that serve as decoration. In undead territories, they're fish skeletons.

* In most cases, it's actually a reverse of the standard version. One law enforcement jurisdiction will often try to foist murder cases onto another to avoid having their numbers go down when the case inevitably goes unsolved. The city police actually go
* In most cases, Japanese swears ARE this trope already. Words often translated as "bastard/son of a bitch, etc" ("temee, omae, konoyaro, koitsu", etc.) literally just mean "you/him/her/that guy", etc. but with aggressive/hostile implications. Sometimes a "dirty mouth" in Japanese is defined by HOW something is said, not WHAT is said, (compare "nani o yatte ru no?" to "nani yattenn da?" Both lit. "what are you doing", but the latter implies an intent closer to "... the fuck you doin'?") These words and turns of phrase occupy the same position in the Japanese vernacular as harsh swear-words in English, but due to the lack of sexual and religious expletives, they lack the taboos cursing does in the West, and hearing them in manga and anime aimed at kids is pretty common. This creates a dilemma for translators, as these expletives are used very liberally in a media where their rough English equivalent would not be considered appropriate. Some words, such as "kuso" (lit. "shit, crap") do directly translate, but are not treated with the level of taboo seen in the West.
* In most cases Ling Yao is a perfectly good example of this serving. He keeps a cool head and is slow to anger and he notices things that others don't.
* In most cases, Link is usually destined to be the one to save the day and is the only one who can use the Triforce of Courage and Master Sword since he is chosen for it. In
* In most cases of shock or awe, he exclaims "By the Great Worm Spirit".
* In most cases, the above crimes were done using silicone masks manufactured by the now-defunct
* In most cases, the other star would be bright enough to see by, but not enough to affect the planet's temperature significantly or allow photosynthesis.
* In most Christian Denominations, insanity reduces or outright eliminates someone's responsibility for a sin he commits.
* In most college-level communications classes, teachers are required to show a movie and ask their students to apply communications principles to it. Popular choices include
* In most comic book continuities though, the advantage humans have over the other races is that earth will have a ridiculously high concentration of humans with superpowers. There may be a whole planet of hawkmen, or a whole planet of shapeshifters, but humans are the ones that spontaneously mutate superpowers through random accidents or X-genes. Aliens with superhero level abilities will almost never have any variety in powers and conversely will have common weaknesses. And then there are the many humans, both good and evil, who will use their scientific abilities to create weapons and armor to even the odds when they fight their alien foes. The likes of
* In most commercials for Big Red chewing gum, in addition to all of the couples kissing regardless of what's going on around them, there is a scene where at least one of them usually has the guy tearing themselves away from their significant other in order to catch a train, or a bus, or have to rejoin a parade, etc.
* In most competitive martial arts sparring, 95% of the points are scored with the most basic moves.
* In most computer programs, if you try to quit with unsaved work, it will ask you if you want to save before quitting. Saying Yes will save first, possibly pulling up a Save As dialog box. Saying No will quit immediately. But in Microsoft SQL Server Profiler, an
* In most continuities Hippolyta is friends with Aphrodite and on occasion calls on her for help with things. In Diana's
* In most continuities Hippolyta retains her mythological parantage of the human queen who was the founder of the Amazon tribe and Ares, though it often takes a while for the full reveal.
* In most diamond mines, alongside the select few diamonds that are the most desirable colors (clear, yellow, pink, green and blue) there tends to be a large number of undesirable diamonds that are only able to be sold as industrial diamonds (such as for diamond-tipped power tools) because they have a dirty brown color to them. Industrial diamonds are far cheaper than diamonds for jewelry, so to try to push them into the more lucrative jewelry market, there's been a push to marketing them as "chocolate diamonds." This had been done once before, in the '70s, when they were marketed as "cognac diamonds" and pushed as the more masculine alternative to white diamonds and better suited for men's jewelry. Now the target audience is women, and anything called chocolate supposedly feels more feminine. The irony is, brown diamonds can be

* In most dubs, Jet is voiced by an adult woman. However, in the Korean and Arabic dubs, he's voiced by an adult man, which can be unnerving if you're used to his prepubescent, androgynous voice in the English dub.
* In most editions, arcane spellcasters (i.e wizards and sorcerers and the like) suffer a chance of their spellcasting not working when wearing armor - the heavier the armor, the higher the failure chance. Most likely, this is done for
* In most editions, ghouls have an overwhelming hunger for dead flesh but suffer no ill effects for not consuming it. (In the Fourth Edition, however, a ghoul that doesn't eat for too long might turn into a ghast, an even stronger variant.) The same applies to some other undead creatures.
* In most editions, when evil mortals die, Lawful ones go to the Nine Hells (or Baator) and become either lemures or nuppuribo; Chaotic ones go to the Abyss and become manes, dretch, or rutterkin.
* In most English translations of the Polish folktale "The Two Babies Cast into the Water", the father of the two babies (who have been put through the
* In most episodes, Crow will respond to an obnoxious comment from a movie character with: "Ha ha... SHUT UP!"
* In most gender-based languages of European origin, words for people are generally masculine by default. Feminine words are modeled on the masculine ones, by adding or replacing suffixes. For example: German
* In most human societies, Elves are barely tolerated: segregated to
* In most if not all of the series, The Grim Reaper cannot cross water. This means that a player can keep their Sims alive by simply surrounding the house with a moat; any Sims on the property inside the moat is protected from Death itself. This method even still works if the moat has stairs on both the inner edge and the outer edge - Sims cannot die while they are in the property, and generally only leave briefly when going to work or school, when Death cannot get to them.
* In most Judeo-Christian Art, Eve is often portrayed as a passive waif who was easily fooled by the snake into partaking in the Fruit of Knowledge. In
* In most large national parks, hiking off-trail is ill-advised (even for short distances) simply because the chance for you to get lost is huge, and several hikers have starved to death not a hundred feet from a major trail.
* In most Mexican and Latin American amusement parks, it is common to find
* In most militaries, doctors, chaplains, and others with similarly specialized training will be officers, but will have fewer command responsibilities than other officers — in fact, international law now circumscribes doctors and chaplains from commanding combat units under any circumstances.
* In most monotheistic religions, God is an omnipotent, invincible being who can do anything.
* In most of Namco's arcade games, the number 7650 will pop up somewhere.
* In most of the DVD cases for the movies released in the US there's a small leaflet with merchandise you can buy, like replicas of the wands.
* In most of the Dynasty Warriors games that they appear in, War Elephants pretty much live this trope. While they have attacks that can be performed with button pushes, they can also simply trample their way through mooks just by getting up to full speed.
* In most of the games, each character can unlock a version of one or both swords — in
* In most of their '80's appearances, it was heavily implied that they hadn't been entirely successful with the removal of emotion. While this was never used to its full extent, it was recurring enough to not just feel like bad writing, and some of their defeats can, partially, be attributed to emotional Cyber Leaders. Excellent, indeed. In

* In most of their early appearances, the Thom(p)son are attempting to arrest Tintin and/or his allies for any assortment of supposed crimes. The only problem is,
* In most of those types of stories on that site and similar ones, the customer 'flips' when the other person refuses to help them, refuse to believe them, and then complain to the management (or even, in one case, to the management of the store where the person did in fact work at). These stories can get dark awfully quickly;
* In most pantheons, unless gods are explicitly said to die, a state of complete immortality may be assumed, for at least the most powerful beings and perhaps several more besides. Even in some pantheons in which gods do die, their "death" may be more a matter of ritual or spiritual significance than an actual cessation of life or even particular loss of body.
* In most party-based RPGs, the player character and his crew of supporting characters are adventurers, children, or otherwise unemployed, making the party's characters being exceptions to their various social norms somewhat justifiable. After all, it's not the typical, productive members of a civilization capable of settling down and learning the racial trade that are going to tend to hare off into the sunset looking for magical fairy treasure.
* In most police departments, Detectives may get increased pay and different duties compared to patrol officers, but they're both still at the same level in the chain of command. Basically, senior detectives can give directions to junior detectives in their own squads, but not even the most senior detective can lawfully issue orders to even a junior patrol officer. Detectives still fall under the "chain of command" of the supervisory ranks from Sergeant on upward. Still, both Detectives, and regular Officers, are eligible to take promotional civil service exams for entry into the supervisory ranks. There are rare exceptions to this: for example, in the LAPD, where the Detective Bureau is part of the Office of Special Operations, detectives are considered specialists, and therefore are seen as separate from the uniformed line of command. The senior-most detective is therefore permitted to take charge of an incident when it is necessary for investigative purposes, superseding the chain-of-command of other higher-ranking officers in attendance.
* In most pop/rock bands, the lead singer is usually this because they are front and center during performances. In groups with
* In most productions anyway. In Hungary it's less "he wishes his cousin returned his romantic love for her" and more "he's so obsessed with her that he thinks
* In most recountings of the 1986 People Power Revolution that toppled
* In most rhythm games, getting a "perfect" rating simply requires you to clear the stage with a perfect score. In
* In most role-playing games that focus on combat, the player characters are the top dogs in most or even all their fights. If they weren't, an honest game would not be possible. Even if the player characters were even money to win, the campaign would be over after four battles in 93.75% of cases. Thus, the villains and monsters of just about every combat-centric RPG have some serious chutzpah going up against your Murder Hobos.
* In most routes, when you enter the AB Room for voting the first time around, you find a dead body. This in itself creates its own wham shot in the Cyan set of routes, when you enter the room expecting the body to be there but it's completely empty. Unless you have played the Cyan routes first, in which case you only experience the first whammy.
* In most RTS games, siege equipment with a huge range needs another unit or intel of a building being there to fire at said spot. However, when a unit fires from outside the
* In most rules for casino-level Blackjack, the house has a few edges to ensure more wins. If the player busts (exceeds 21), regardless of the House's hand, the House wins. This compensates for the increased payout for a player's 2-card 21 and various other moves the player can do (such as double down, split, and stand on hands less than 17).

* In most series, Cybertron is a city planet. Many series, especially
* In most settings, it's part of druids' work to hand out Gaia's Vengeance in measured portions when there's demand.
* In most Silver-age Superman stories, if the Man of Steel travels to a time, past or future, where he exists, that other version gets tossed back to the "empty slot" he started from. This normally occurs in
* In most states, the building housing the legislature (and often other branches of government, as well) is also called the capitol building.
* In most superhero universes, a kind of balance applies, in that while superheroes rarely lose, villains keep coming back (or are replaced by new ones.) One would think that villains would just
* In most Tarot decks the seven of coins (pentacles) depicts a bored-looking farmer tending a plant growing gold coins.
* In most US jurisdictions, neither embalming nor an autopsy are required for the majority of human burials. Only about 20% of US deaths are even subject to investigation by coroners or medical examiners. Of those, less than 25% are subject to autopsy. State laws and FTC rules prohibit the requiring of embalming. The FTC rule says, "Except in certain special cases, embalming is not required by law." A "special case" would include a funeral with viewing .
* In most US/UK fan-fictions America at one point or another has to carry England Bridal style. He's also seen doing this to Japan.
* In most versions of the Hindu goddess Kali's origin story, she gets drunk on demon blood and starts dancing the universe to destruction. The god Shiva counters this by essentially challenging her to a dance-off. In some versions of the story, Shiva wins by putting one foot on top of his head and spinning in place. Kali can't imitate the move without flashing the entire pantheon, and so yields the contest. In most versions of the story, Kali couldn't give less of a f*ck about that if she tried, and tramples Shiva into the ground, only relenting when she realizes he is her destined husband.
* In most versions, Selina is an amoral jewel thief who is mostly sane. Here, she's a revenge obsessed and mentally unstable vigilante with an even more sadistic streak.
* In most versions the Kryptonians are presented as a caste society with an all-powerful oligarchic High Council.
* In most video games with guns, cars will explode if you shoot them enough. This makes them absolutely lousy as cover in the firefights that will inevitably ensue.
* In "Moth and the Flame", a female moth sees a flame on a candle, which comes to life and tries to grab her. The flame soon sets fire to the costume shop, leading a male moth to try to put out the fire himself, then call in reinforcements when his efforts turn out to be futile.
* In "Mother Simpson", Abe Simpson does this on his own initiative when the FBI raids the house to arrest Homer's long-lost mother. No one is totally sure if it was a distraction or senility, least of all Abe himself.
* In "Mother Simpson", Homer is enraged when he finds out that the tombstone he thought belonged to his mother Mona really belongs to
* In "Mother Simpson", Mr. Burns is seen in the post office trying to send a letter to "the Prussian consulate in Siam", exasperated as the clerk cannot find any mention of Prussia or Siam in his geographical index. This isn't a joke about ignorance so much as part of the
* In "Mother Simpson", when in a tank, Mr. Burns plays an audio tape of Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries"... but it turns out that Smithers took that tape and over-recorded it with his favorite song: "Waterloo" by
* In MotoGP, one race had to be decided via a tiebreaker because the first two riders crossed the finish line in
* In "Motu Ke Clones", Dr. Jhatka clones Motu to give him help renovating his house.

* In "Mountain Glenn", there's a bit where the girls sans Ruby are discussing their reasons for becoming Huntresses after a round of
* In "Mouse Divided," this is how a horde of cats attempts to access Sylvester's house. He answers with
* In "Mouse Trapeze", Herman tricks Katnip into drinking from a hose connected to a fire hydrant, which makes Katnip swell several times larger before he pops off and flies across the room.
* In "Moustache Confidential", Olive (the bad cop) and Otto (the good cop) interrogate numerous agents of Precinct 13579 in order to find out who stole Obfusco's moustache. While Olive asks meaningful questions and is more straightforward in nature, Otto is more laid-back and asks questions that are of little help. At one point, Olive asks Ori how many cases he solved last week, and when Ori can't remember, Otto decides to bribe him with a puppy, much to Olive's chagrin.
* In Movie 9, Chopper does a similar thing to Sanji while they're fighting Wapol, Chess, and Kuromarimio, even saying the same dialogue to trick him.
* In movies and TV shows, scenes or dialogue containing language that is religiously profane or mocks religion is censored.
* In "Movin’ In (Principal Shepherd’s Song)", Principal Shepherd
* In "Mr. & Mrs. Stewie", Penelope gives a kid a piece of taffy that superglues his throat shut and kills him when he picks on Stewie.
* In "Mr. and Mrs. Stewie", Stewie and his new girlfriend, Penelope put a bomb in Mort's wallet, which will explode when he opens it. Two weeks pass, and Mort is still okay.
* In "Mr. Boynton's Barbeque", Miss Enright transfers a sick student to Miss Brooks' class so Miss Brooks would catch a cold. That left Miss Enright a clear field with Mr. Boynton.
* In "Mr. Chaney", Eerie chooses a Harvest King every 13 years to ensure good luck and low taxes. The tradition dates back to 1914. Marshall has the dubious distinction of being chosen as the seventh Harvest King in 1992. It turns out that the previous six Harvest Kings were sacrificed to the werewolf Mr. Chaney. The town authorities claimed that all of them moved to
* In "Mr. Conklin Plays Detective", Mr. Boynton gets into trouble for using Mr. Conklin's telephone to make the long-distance call his mother told him to make.
* In Mr. Dinkleberg's first appearance, he and Mr. Turner turn their cars into giant robots and do battle with them.
* In "Mr. Greg" Pearl talks about Rose, mentioning she'd had plenty of human lovers before, but none of them connected emotionally (
* In "Mr. Greg", the workers at Le Hotel, along with Greg, Pearl and Steven, sing the titular "Mr. Greg", but when Greg tries to dance with Pearl, she backs up and yells “NO!”, ending the song. A staff member then
* In "Mr. Griffin Goes to Washington", a parody of the intro sequence of
* In "Mr. Harrigan's Phone", Craig, a teen, befriends an old man, the Mr. Harrigan of the title, and eventually gives him his first iPhone. When Craig finds Mr. Harrigan dead, he takes his phone out of some strange instinct, then feels guilty about it and slips the phone into Harrigan's pocket at his funeral. He soon starts calling the phone just to listen to Mr. Harrigan's outgoing message and leave voicemails about whatever's on his mind... then he starts getting cryptic text messages
* In "Mr. Krabs Takes a Vacation", Pearl is excited as Mr. Krabs drives up to their surprise vacation, and they go towards the teenage boy museum. Cue museum being demolished and Pearl being heartbroken.
* In "Mr. Lisa's Opus", an adult Lisa claims that rhinos are extinct, alluding to the fact that rhinos are (were?) endangered. This is a bit of a stretch considering there are some rhino species which populations have been recently increasing. At least the southern white rhinoceros, the south-western black rhinoceros, and the Indian rhinoceros would still be extant in Lisa's adult years.
* In "Mr. Monk and the 12th Man," a serial killer has struck and killed ten random people in random gruesome ways. Disher informs Stottlemeyer that the FBI has sent a psych profile down. Stottlemeyer promptly puts the file to his head and makes a blind guess:

* In "Mr. Monk and the Airplane", Brooke plays Leigh Harrison, a flight attendant who is driven crazy by Monk's antics. She is later interviewed by James Novak in "Mr. Monk's 100th Case", where it is shown that she has developed a fear of flying and also was driven to drinking, which was also implied by her final appearance in the former episode.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Airplane," Stefan Chabrol has had his wife killed and replaced with his mistress. Unfortunately, a family friend of Barbara's happens to be on the plane with them, and figures out she's not who she supposedly is.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Airplane", Stefan Chabrol's mistress poses as Stefan's wife Barbara on the flight after shooting the real Barbara in an airport bathroom.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Bad Girlfriend," the killer tried breaking a pane of glass to make it look like she broke into the house where the murder happened.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Big Reward", a woman keeps coming in to confess to comically small crimes (such as stealing a pen from a bank). During one of her "confessions", she admits to getting rid of a body by flushing it. It turns out the "body" was her hamster's.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Birds and the Bees", sports agent Rob Sherman has made it look like he shot and killed a burglar who apparently broke into his house and killed his wife (the trick is that he shot the "burglar" with a semi-automatic and the wife with a revolver, then planted the revolver on the "burglar", making great use of a
* In "Mr. Monk and the Bully", Monk and Natalie walk into a bar while trying to retrace Marilyn Brody's footsteps:
* In "Mr. Monk and the Candidate," Monk's clue that the campaign manager is responsible for hiring the assassin who has killed two people is that he knew where the shooter was firing from and even pointed at said apartment though balloons were blocking his view and the gunshot created an echo through the skyscrapers in the area.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Captain's Marriage", a corrupt police sergeant named Ryan Sharkey, Jr. kills a smalltime drug dealer scheduled to testify against the racketeer that Sharkey works for. However, during the fight leading up to the murder, one of Sharkey's teeth is knocked out, also causing him to leave some of his blood at the crime scene. Due to a homeless guy witnessing the murder and flagging down a passing patrol car, Sharkey is forced to flee, change into his uniform, and then return to the scene. Once there, he covers up the evidence he'd left behind by provoking Captain Stottlemeyer into punching him.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Class Reunion," Captain Stottlemeyer interrupts Monk's reunion dinner to ask the attendees for information on his homicide case
* In "Mr. Monk and the Class Reunion", the murder of a retired college nurse leads Monk to discover a murder plot involving Trudy's freshman roommate.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Dog," the victim is found rolled up in a rug that's dumped in the hills.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Employee of the Month", it wasn't the Mega-Mart store itself, but the parking space reserved for the employee of the month that provided easy access to a bank, thanks to a well-placed manhole. The scheming cashier killed her rival to get the space, parked her van with a modified floor over the manhole, and every day during her shift her two flunkies would dig, filling the van with dirt.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Employee of the Month", when Joe Christie is giving Monk the background on all the Mega-Mart employees, he describes the shift manager as the "by-the-book, married-to-the-job" type employee.
* In "Mr. Monk and The End Part 1", Stottlemeyer and a squad of policemen were staking out at a train station for Kazarinski to capture him alive and find out what product he poisoned Monk with, as well as which poison he used. Disher arrives at the control tower after their odd lack of an announcement for a certain train. He goes up and finds that Kazarinski has killed the announcer in the control tower and stolen the announcer's uniform. Unfortunately, Kazarinski left something else besides dead bodies at the tower, as he also left the mike on, causing the staff and passengers to hear Randy attempting to report to Stottlemeyer.

* In "Mr. Monk and the Foreign Man," where the characters are covering their mouth due to the stench of a corpse that has been decaying in a house for two weeks. Except for Randy, who tries to act indifferent to the stench to impress a CSI tech.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Kid", Brooke plays Abigail Carlyle, whom Monk and Natalie interview after her son, violinist Daniel Carlyle, is discovered to have been kidnapped and the kidnappers amputated one of his fingers to send back to them as a message.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Kid," it's read in the form of a bedtime story. And it really works.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Leper," Natalie finds some photos of Randy in Dr. Aaron Polanski's waiting room, and comments, "Oh, my God, that is so funny! Not funny in a 'ha-ha' way, but funny in a 'Oh, boy, this'll really embarrass him!' way." She does tell Randy about the pictures, and he attempts to deny it, eventually admitting that they were from
* In "Mr. Monk and the Magician", Monk's upstairs neighbor Kevin is killed by Karl Torini the night he debuts as an amateur magician = discrepancies in Torini's airline receipts that were evidence of Torini's involvement in a drug trafficking ring.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Marathon Man," when Monk and Sharona stop by a crime scene they happened to see while driving by, Stottlemeyer asks Monk if he's chasing ambulances.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Miracle," Monk and Natalie disguise themselves as actual monks to sneak into a monastery to rescue a converted Captain Stottlemeyer. It's funny because they actually have to harmonize their voices to blend in the summation. You get your usual flashback shots, but Monk and Natalie are speaking in emotionless bass voices. Natalie sounds like she's trying to do a bass.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Miracle", Monk tells Natalie that her getting gravy wouldn't have been necessary as the bums, their guests, make their own gravy. When Natalie asks how they do it, Monk simply responds with "You don't want to know..."
* In "Mr. Monk and the Missing Granny", he plays Ron Abrash, a former radical who Monk and Captain Stottlemeyer question as a person of interest in a kidnapping. Which makes the part where Monk says, "I've been smoking THE TRUTH, man!" that much funnier when you consider just exactly who Tony is speaking to.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Missing Granny," though the police set up a wiretap when the guys who kidnapped Julie Parlo's grandmother call to give their ransom demand (free turkey dinners for all the homeless people in the Mission District), the kidnappers apparently know about the 45 second trace rule and hang up partway through.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Paperboy", the investigation on who killed the paperboy who delivered Monk's paper led him to find out the plan of a girl to play
* In "Mr. Monk and the Rapper," Monk has just accused a major rap producer, but his crew isn't willing to shut up and let Monk give the summation, so
* In "Mr. Monk and the Rapper", Stottlemeyer, talking to Murderuss after circumstances implicate him in a rival's death, mentions having known him before he made it in music and reminds him that he tried to flush drugs several times to prevent Stottlemeyer from busting him.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Really, Really Dead Guy," the 'Six Way Killer' calls the police station to taunt them. Stottlemeyer tries to stall the guy, but midway through the phone trace, though, wires get crossed because Monk is intercepting an email from one of Julie's friends. This results in the SWAT team accidentally busting a slumber party instead. Naturally, Agent Thorpe is furious with Monk for this mistake. In real life, switching a few cables would not cause a mixup in a phone trace.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Red-Headed Stranger," Randy is chasing down a streaker who's been disrupting police press conferences.
* In "Mr. Monk and the Red Herring", when Monk first meets Natalie, he blurts out that she's taking birth control pills in front of her daughter Julie, and upon realizing the implications tries to claim he was mistaken and they were really "adult tic-tacs". Natalie later tries to have Monk pose as an expert on fish during an argument with one of Julie's teachers, which doesn't go any better.

* In "Mr. Monk Bumps His Head", Michael plays Ned, the beekeeper whose farm Roger Zisk crashes his car into when trying to cover up bee stings that he'd received the night before when dumping a body.
* In "Mr. Monk Buys a House," Monk, Natalie, Stottlemeyer and Disher visit private nurse Cassie Drake's house, intending to get information from her on her killing of Joseph Moody. Unfortunately, "Honest" Jake Phillips has already stabbed and killed her to keep her from talking. Stottlemeyer and Disher try knocking on the door for about a minute, then Randy pulls on the knob and finds that the door is unlocked. They pull the door open and find the body.
* In "Mr. Monk Buys a House", the death of a wheelchair-handicapped man
* In "Mr. Monk Gets a New Shrink," Monk, Dr. Kroger, and Harold Krenshaw end up finding the dead body of Dr. Kroger's cleaning lady in the shrink's office when they notice that the door to the office is slightly open.
* In "Mr. Monk Gets Drunk", Adrian has to find a missing body in order to prove that the killing happened in the first place; the body is found in one of the wine barrels.
* In "Mr. Monk Gets Hypnotized," Sally Larkin fakes her own kidnapping, making it seem like her husband is responsible. After starving herself in a remote cabin for a few days, she breaks into her own house and kills him, then rolls his body up in a rug from the cabin and drives the body back there. Unfortunately, she incriminates herself when Monk finds that while she was rolling the body, she stepped on a piece of homemade gum that Stottlemeyer had spit out while they were questioning Sally's husband that got stuck to her shoe.
* In "Mr. Monk Gets Married," when Monk and Sharona have to impersonate a married couple to investigate a man who's married Randy's mother, there is an eyebrow-raising tender moment where Sharona thanks Monk for letting her wear Trudy's ring to carry off the ruse.
* In "Mr. Monk Goes on Vacation", Sharona's son Benjy is the one who witnesses a murder, and only Monk believes him. The hotel manager in particular chalks it up to the boy's imagination. Eventually, when Monk figures out the true culprits, they made sure that they clean up all the evidence to continue making it look like Monk is a loon and Benjy is crying wolf.
* In "Mr. Monk Goes to a Rock Concert", singer Kris Kedder kills Stork Murray, a roadie who had threatened to expose him for copyright infringement, stuffs his body into a port-a-potty, and makes it look like he overdosed. Except he finds a pin and realizes that Stork has been off drugs for seventeen months. Aware that nobody, especially not Stork's girlfriend Kendra Frank (who is also Stork's Narcotics Anonymous sponsor), will believe that Stork overdosed after being clean for so long, he waits until the next morning, then dons Stork's bandanna and a pair of sunglasses (to hide his eyes) and visits an acupuncturist, making sure she hears him claim he's gotten over a fear of needles and he wants to find some heroin to get high, to give the appearance that Stork relapsed. He then plants a map in the real Stork's jacket pocket so as to validate that "Stork" really went to the acupuncturist. However, the impersonation falls apart after Monk recalls the acupuncturist stating that Kedder blew up a girl's beachball after his appointment and also recalls that Kedder suffers from asthma, requiring him to use a unique mint-flavored inhaler.
* In "Mr. Monk Goes to a Rock Concert", the clue that suggests to Monk and Natalie that a roadie did
* In "Mr. Monk Goes to a Rock Concert," when Monk, Natalie and Kendra Frank are searching Stork's trailer,
* In "Mr. Monk Goes to Jail," Sharona does the Summation instead of Monk.
* In "Mr. Monk Goes to the Dentist," Lt. Disher is half-conscious with laughing gas while in a dentist's chair and witnesses a murder; the victim keeps shouting "Barry Bonds, Barry Bonds!" When Disher awakes, there's no body in the room and the dentist denies it, so everyone thinks that the cop was hallucinating. It isn't until later in the episode that Disher and Monk discover that the dentist and victim had worked together to steal a huge amount of

* In "Mr. Monk Goes to the Dentist", there is an episode-length use of this trope: Randy is undergoing a dental operation at Dr. Bloom's to remove an infected tooth. During the operation, a bald man barges in and furiously demands that Dr. Bloom tell him what he's done with Barry Bonds, who is worth $13 million. A fight breaks out, with Dr. Bloom and his assistant Terri ultimately killing the intruder. When Randy comes around after his operation is over, he looks around and sees no signs that a fight ever happened,
* In "Mr. Monk Goes to the Theater", Monk tries to bribe a doorman for information on Jenna Ryan's whereabouts with three dollars; when he refuses, Monk ups it to four. Finally, Sharona makes him talk with $40. After, Monk asks for his four back; when the doorman refuses, Monk informs Sharona that "we have a four-dollar credit on any future bribes."
* In "Mr. Monk Goes to Vegas", Daniel Thorn strangles his wife Sheryl in a private elevator. Then he has his identically dressed mistress Teresa Telenko switch places with the corpse so that photographers waiting at the bottom think Sheryl strangled herself on her own scarf when getting on the elevator to go back up to the penthouse.
* In "Mr. Monk Is At Your Service", Natalie is uncomfortable being around old, obsessive boyfriend Paul Buchanan who stalked her in high school. To ward off his advances, she
* In "Mr. Monk Is on the Air," the jockey's mistake in hiring a dog to rig his wife's death was that the dog took one of his shoes.
* In "Mr. Monk Is On the Run" (both parts), Monk is framed for a shooting by a dirty county sheriff. Once Monk escapes, he finds the shooting tied to a plot to assassinate the governor.
* In "Mr. Monk Is On The Run," Parts 1 and 2, Sheriff John Rollins is in the pocket of Dale "The Whale" Biederbeck, and was responsible for framing Monk for a murder.
* In "Mr. Monk is Someone Else", Monk goes on yet another undercover operation, in which he's
* In "Mr. Monk Is Someone Else", the FBI have Monk pose as a recently deceased hitman named Frank DePalma, who turns out to be Monk's identical doppelganger, to thwart a potential mob assassination.
* In "Mr. Monk Is the Best Man," a cop can be seen dry-heaving when facing the sight of a dead man that had been shot once, then burned.
* In "Mr. Monk Is the Best Man", Michael is the minister who presides over Leland and T.K.'s wedding ceremony.
* In "Mr. Monk Is Up All Night," Monk is walking in the middle of the night, and hears an argument behind a diner window. He peers into the kitchen and sees an apparent drug deal that's turning sour as two of the men are arguing about whether the third guy, an Asian is a cop. When the Asian suddenly flashes a badge and pulls a gun to arrest the others, a fight breaks out, and the Asian is shot dead by the drug dealer, who hustles a bald man to a car outside and drives away. Monk runs to a payphone to call the police, but the scene is spotless.
* In "Mr. Monk Makes the Playoffs," Monk ends up getting press box tickets for himself and Mel Stottlemyre to sit with
* In "Mr. Monk Meets Dale the Whale", the crucial mistake is that the killer, who was supposed to be a fat and heavy man, did not break the chair he stood on to disconnect the smoke alarm despite his weight.
* In "Mr. Monk Meets Dale the Whale", the eponymous Dale tries to avoid blame for ordering a murder by provoking a witness report that seemed to indicate he had done it personally, knowing full well the police will determine he couldn't have done it because he weighs 804 pounds and is bedridden. In this case, it was his physician (over whom Dale has blackmail dirt) who committed the murder and wore a fatsuit for the benefit of eyewitnesses.
* In "Mr. Monk Meets the Playboy", when Sharona asks him if he actually saw the photos of her posing nude; he hesitates for a long time, tentatively says "No,"

* In "Mr. Monk, Private Eye", a dent car case leads Monk to a murder of a woman caused by the person who dented the car.
* In "Mr. Monk's 100th Case," the second killer, trying to frame a serial killer for the killing of his girlfriend, made the mistake of strangling the victim from
* In "Mr. Monk Takes a Vacation," Benjy sees a woman being murdered, but there's no evidence of any crime when Monk searches the room in question with the hotel's head of security. Monk quickly pieces together who was responsible, but realizes that no case can be made against them without the body. That is, until Monk figures out from a picture he, Sharona, and Benjy posed for on their arrival, that the body is being hidden in a trunk that's part of a public advertising display, with some quicklime being used to mask the odor of the decaying flesh.
* In "Mr. Monk Takes a Vacation", they first find a body stuffed into an arcade machine. Later on they find the body has been moved; this time it was stuffed into a crate as part of a display.
* In "Mr. Monk Takes His Medicine", the investigation of a drive-by shooting in which Stottlemeyer gets shot in the shoulder turns out to be tied to an upcoming armored car robbery.
* In "Mr. Monk Visits a Farm", Brooke plays Sheriff Butterfield, a county sheriff. All of a sudden, the scene where Monk is roped into going square dancing very terribly with her (while looking visibly uncomfortable for the entire scene) becomes a thousand times funnier, especially since he brings up Trudy during the scene. In her first crossing paths with the leads (while Monk and Randy are looking at Randy's uncle's old pickup truck), she even winks at Monk, though it's hard to see if this is her quickly breaking character.
* In "Mr. Monk Visits a farm" Monk goes undercover as a Mexican worker at the farm of murder suspect Jimmy Belmont. Belmont quickly becomes suspicious of Monk, approaches him and asks him a question in Spanish (which Monk isn't that fluent in). Monk just replies
* In "Mr. Monk Vs. The Cobra" one of the gravediggers who helps exhume Sonny Chow's body is played by
* In "Mr. Moonlight," Paul is singing with John's voice on the opening of the song.
* In "Mr. Nice Guy", the girls are trying to teach Jonesy how to act nice in front of a date, and when Cailtin suggests that one of them should be a pretend date for Jonesy to practice on, Nikki says that she would rather watch someone eat her hand.
* In Mr. Ping's first scene, Po comes downstairs with a shadow resembling a panda on the floor in front of him. The camera then shows that the shadow is from Mr. Ping holding a bunch of pots and bags in front of himself, which he puts aside to reveal to the audience that Po's father is actually a goose.
* In "Mr. Plow", Barney goes one step further and confuses the actor with the
* In "Mr. Plow" Barney is reduced to handing out baby supply store flyers wearing a diaper, and concludes "At least I can't sink any lower", then the wind blows his diaper off. He runs after it around the corner shouting "Come back, diaper!" then, off-camera "...hi, Mom."
* In "Mr. Plow", Homer is driving in a blizzard and can't see, ending up crashing into the back of a car. He looks at the bright side that he got the other car just as bad, only to discover it's
* In "Mr. Ratburn and the Special Someone", Muffy makes a love letter to trick the librarian into thinking that Mr. Ratburn is in love with her. She gives the letter back to Muffy with markings indicating several spelling errors she made and also gives her a book on how to write a poem to help her improve.
* In "Mrs. Al", recurring character Al is searching for a new apartment. The one good place he finds won't rent to singles, so Samantha agrees to pretend to be his wife. Of course, as the landlord had already met her, she invokes
* In "Mrs. Davis Reads Tea Leaves", Miss Brooks overhears a conversation between Mr. Boynton and Harriet and jumps to the conclusion that Mr. Boynton is finally going to marry her and move with her to honeymoon cottage on the edge of town.
* In "Mr. Spritz Goes to Washington", Mayor Quimby redirects airplane traffic away from the motel where he conducts his affairs so he can hear his partner's (Miss Springfield) voice. When he discovers that she falls under this trope, Quimby laments "Now I regret buying you that opera house!"

* In "Mrs. Puff, You're Fired", when Mrs. Puff gets fired for being unable to teach SpongeBob how to properly drive a boat, SpongeBob's new teacher, Sergeant Sam Roderick, is this. He takes his rules very seriously, such as not eating snacks in class (he even threw one student out of the classroom for eating bonbons he offered), and he makes SpongeBob crawl through the obstacle course blindfolded. Eventually, SpongeBob gets used to driving the course blindfolded, which is what leads to
* In "Mr Strang Accepts a Challenge" by Bill Brittain, Brittain's logic teacher detective solves a six-month-old crime without leaving the classroom, to demonstrate the practical uses of logic to his students.
* In "Mr. Younger Man", Echo, while filling in for school bully Slab, gives several nerds atomic wedgies.
* In much of the series, special physical attacks (which do not involve simply using the 'attack' command) take a small chunk of the caster's HP to use. Of course, when enemies use the same attacks on the party,
* In "Mud!", Bertie has a nightmare about playing soccer with a team of
* In "Mudd's Women", it states that Mudd's responses are "INCORRECT" when he gives a false name, claims he has no criminal record, and states that he is licensed to operate a spaceship. It's possible that the computer identified Mudd's face and then compared his statements to records, as it immediately provides the true answers.
* In "Mudd's Women", where Kirk asks the computer to describe the effect the title women are having on the crew, and it starts to describe the male crewmen (except for Spock) as having increased perspiration, respiration, pulses and so on. Kirk has it struck from the record in an aside.
* In "Mud Men", Andy and his dad end up trapped naked outside and covered in mud.
* In "Mulcahey's War", Catholic priest Father Mulcahy must perform an emergency tracheotomy by the side of the road in Korea using improvised equipment. He's given instructions over the radio by the doctors back at the 4077th.
* In "Mulcahy's War", Father Mulcahy has to perform a roadside tracheotomy with a pocket knife and an eyedropper.
* In multi-player, diving through a window into a prone position, then offing an opponent within 2 seconds or so will get you a gamerscore achievement.
* In multiplayer games, however, most players won't content to sit in cover and wait for death, so without some mechanic to ruin players under heavy fire, assuming the other guy is suppressed can be a costly mistake.
* In multiplayer games where the enemies are human, and therefore too smart to simply chase anyone who walks up, attacks once, and then runs away, a genuine attempt must be made to appear weak or show that an ostensible plan has failed; This more difficult distinction is called "Baiting". MOBAs such as
* In multiplayer, hosting a dedicated server lets you, among other variables, set jump height much higher than in normal gameplay. This doesn't really let you go anywhere you couldn't normally get to, as pretty much every prop in the game even half as tall as a player character has an invisible wall around the top.
* In multiplayer, krogan and vorcha characters tend to howl as they tear enemies apart while using
* In multiplayer, military planes have little use beyond griefing other players. Yes they carry an impressive amount of firepower but at the same time they're ludicrously expensive, very fragile, and unusable for any mission taking place in urban areas. Helicopters are more useful in that they can land anywhere, carry same amount of firepower, and have much better protection. Likewise, armored cars and tanks are also more useful for being bulletproof.
* In multiplayer mode, two of the Orbital Command building's energy-using abilities involve drop pods.
* In Multiplayer, the gangs can take protective measures to prevent chunky salsa (bomb defusal suits and hard helmets), but if the player is too hurt to survive an armored explosion or armored headshot they're as good as dead.

* In multiplayer where the only victory comes as Total Annihiliation of the other side, yes, abusing this is a good backup in case you're gonna make a last ditch effort and just lost the Kbot facilities, meaning no more suicidal spiders. Simply load your commander onto a carryall and park it in the center of the enemy base.
* In multiple books Rincewind makes it damn clear to everyone he meets that he just wants to go home, hang up his things and never leave again. Everything he does to help them is purely by accident. (
* In multiple episodes, Joey and Chandler have conversations about completely innocent subjects that sound
* In multiple episodes of the Goliath Chronicles, Angela is missing (including the intro).
* In multiple episodes, the witches lose their powers, every time resulting in wiping the Book of Shadows completely empty. The scripture returns once the witches regain their powers.
* In "Muppet Island", Scooter and Skeeter play the respective roles of the Millionaire and his wife in an
* In "Murder at the Zoo", Haledjian meets with a zookeeper after a doorman working at the zoo is found killed. The zookeeper claims to have been alerted to the murder when he heard the scream of a giraffe, since one of them had been caught in the crossfire. Instantly Haledjian declares him to be the real murderer, because according to him, giraffes have no vocal cords. In reality, giraffes have vocal cords so large that they usually make sounds too low in pitch for humans to hear. This is why biologists for a long time thought that giraffes made no vocalizations. While adult giraffes usually seem silent from our perspective,
* In "Murder by Magic", the killer uses the sound of gunshot being used in a magic trick to mask the sound of the gunshot they used to kill one of their victims.
* In "Murder on the Links", Giraud's dialogue is completely looped over. This causes a bit of a clash in audio quality as the episode uses on-set audio for the rest of the cast and Giraud's looped lines causes the ambient sound to cut out.
* In "Murdoch Air," Constable George Crabtree is devouring a hot hamburger in a morgue, and Dr. Emily Grace is horrified that he is eating hot meat with bread. Later in the episode, she's enjoying a hamburger, too, while presenting a body and post-mortem results to Detective William Murdoch—who is mildly disgusted by the idea of a hamburger.
* In "Murdoch and the Cloud of Doom", Murdoch is ordered to investigate a film of a man killing a dog with a lethal gas. Investigation of the site where the film was shot turns up a large area with dead plants; Murdoch and his consulting expert discuss how powerful the gas appears to be based on the size of the affected area.
* In "Murdoch Au Naturel", Brackenreid and Murdoch are discussing the difficulties they're having with getting information from a group of naturists (whose private nudist colony is where a corpse turned up). They have the bright idea to send someone undercover, and since the naturists have already met Murdoch, he and Brackenreid turn to Constable Crabtree, who objects.
* In "Murser on Mosquito Island", the team investigate the death of a survival instructor. He was found dead in the woods while giving a training course on a small deserted island off the coast of Saint Marie.
* In "Murtaugh", when Robin asks Ted if he thinks Barney can accomplish everything on the list:
* In "Muscle Beach Tom" Tom puffs Jerry up with a beachball, sending him to zip away deflating in mid-air like a balloon. Towards the end of the short Jerry retaliates by overinflating Tom's swimsuit with a helium tank, at which point he punctures it sending Tom to deflate away in the same manner he did.
* In "Musclebob Buffpants", a referee at an anchor tossing contest keeps getting hit by anchors. At one time the shadow actually follows him around as he scrambles for cover.
* In "Muscle Tussel", a body builder makes good on his threat to knock Daffy's head so far down between his shoulders "you'll need to unbutton your vest to eat". Daffy does so, and mutters, "One cheeseburger, hold the onions."
* In mushroom biomes, the grass and various mushrooms glow almost as brightly as torches. Surface-level mushroom biomes are

* In music, EVERY RAP GROUP, CREW OR LABEL EVER. Every solo album one member does, you can almost guarantee the others won't be far behind. This is particularly prevalent in the somewhat self-insular rap groups the
* In music in particular, just learning the instrument can involve this type of thing. For example, wind instrument players often spend time doing breathing exercises or practicing embouchure while not touching their instrument. Singers make a lot of strange noises while warming up. And so forth.
* In "Mustard O' Mine", SpongeBob, Patrick, and Squidward are sent underground to
* In "Mutton For Nothing", Taz is glued to a target as punishment for trying to steal sheep.
* In "My Best Friend's Wedding", Jordan and Perry decide to sleep through Carla and Turk's wedding ceremony and arrive the reception, Jordan suggesting to Perry that he should just say the ceremony was beautiful. Because of this, they don't know that Turk missed the ceremony completely, so when Perry compliments Carla for the ceremony, she gets offended believing Perry was joking about it.
* In "My Buddy", Animal has a stuffed rabbit named Buddy, whom Fozzie becomes attached to when bad things happen to him.
* In "My Dinner With Rataxes", after the children get lost in a dark tunnel, Basil discovers a "document detailing the diverse detours within those dark, dank dungeon depths."
* In "My Fair Ed", Kevin ties Edd's hat into a bow and threatens to do the same to his legs if he doesn't keep his friends under control.
* In "My Fair Ed", the kids hold Edd responsible for the trouble Ed and Eddy cause, saying if he doesn't stop their shenanigans,
* In "My Fair Laddy'', Bart stores Lisa's saxophone in the freezer and then hands it to her. Her tongue gets stuck when she attempts to blow it.
* In "My Fair Mandy", Mindy makes her feel bad by calling her ugly, and she looks sad over the thought of losing a beauty pageant.
* In "My Fair Nanny", as Fran is trying to pass herself off as cultured at the party:
* In "My Father Punished Me When I Talked To Ghosts", the blind protagonist is punished by his father whenever he attempts to talk to girls who sometimes appear in their house. His father will slightly change the environment so he can't trust his senses and, during a particularly worse case, he is let go on the street in front of the house, forcing him to return on his own.
* In "My Girl" by Chilliwack: "I hope she's doing alright/I got no way to know/Unless she gets to hear this song/Hear it on the radio"
* In "My Heart Will Go On", Fate is trying to kill the Winchesters with freak accidents. As the brothers walk nervously along the street, they're alarmed by skateboarders zooming past them, pedestrians walking large dogs, and street performers juggling sharp objects, despite a sign forbidding all of these activities.
* In "My Heavy Meddle" JD hears from his mother that his favorite former schoolteacher Mr. Peters has died. When
* ''In my ivory tower, life was just a Hostess snack/ But now I've tasted chocolate, and I'm never going back!''
* In My Language, That Sounds Like...). (Helped along by poor pronunciation in the second case.)
* In "My Mother The Car", the family organizes a birthday party for Lucille. They discus if they should invite George-Michael and Maeby. Michael replies "This is a Bluth family gathering. This is no place for children."
* In"My Musical" Carla also told The Todd that the Spanish for "man meat" was "Pincho chiquito" (tiny penis).
* In "My New Helper!" Zodiac nervously tried to walk away before Seira noticed her, but failed.
* In "My New Wand!", Star's mother tells her that in order to "dip down" and use magic without the wand, she will have to put "everything you have" into it. Star interprets this as meaning she should load everything she owns into a catapult and launch it at the door she was trying to open. Also, this exchange from the same episode:

* In "My Own Eyes", one of the disturbing sights that the narrator wishes he could unsee is a pair of drag queens shoving crackers up each other's noses.
* In "My Own Private Rodeo", Hank, Bill, and Boomhauer don't figure out that they're at a gay rodeo till they hear an announcer say so, despite seeing only men in attendance, people dancing along to the
* In "Mypods and Broomsticks" Lisa gets a bill from electronics company Mapple charging her $1200 for downloading 1,212 songs to her Mypod. To pay back Mapple, she is forced to wear a Mypod costume and hand out pamphlets on the street corner saying "think differently" over and over.
* In "My Pretty Seahorse" Squidward again gets sent flying off his bike, falls off a cliff and explodes. Later, Scooter mistakes Mystery for a kiddie ride and attempts to insert a coin into her. After he
* In "My Pretty Seahorse", while observing the wild seahorse SpongeBob considers a number of names for her.
* In "My Purity Ball and Chain", some characters build a water slide in the backyard so high that it kills a man named Kyle when he rides it. They get rid of Kyle's body, but
* In "Mystery Mask Mix-Up", the wall the door was in turns out to be movable, leading Shaggy to quip, "Wouldn't you know he'd be coming through the wall..." Also averted in "Spooky Space Kook" where Shaggy realizes a pile of chairs isn't going to hold the monster back and suggests that Scooby should try something else. It was played straight previously in the episode though.
* In "Mystery Spot" the Trickster (Gabriel) killed Dean over and over again, and then brought him back as if nothing had happened following an excruciatingly funny
* In mythic times, the rampages of Rovagug, god of destruction, led every other deity in the entire pantheon to
* In mythology involving the Amazon River dolphin seems to portray them as similar to the
* In Mythos mode, giants are largely similar to their Truth Behind the Myth counterparts, being still oversized humans wielding colossal weapons, but have scaled legs (a reference to the mythical Gigantes, who had serpent tails instead of legs, although they're not otherwise beings on the near-divine level of the actual Gigantes).
* In "My Three Suns", while delivering a package to the emperor of Planet Trisol, Fry drinks from a random bottle. Then it turns out that the Trisollians are a water people, and Fry drank the emperor! Luckily, natives practice
* "In My World" and "Inspector Dan Rather" seem to take place in the same over-the-top-ridiculous universe, although they are told from very different points of view and rarely overlap.
* Inna becomes the sun of its biggest world, watching over it and all the other Earths.
* In Nahuatl, it's especially noticeable when comparing modern colloquial Nahuatl to Classical Nahuatl, because Classical had a style rule that limited compounds to two elements plus endings, while modern Nahuatl will just stack on strings of elements. Modern Nahuatl would probably sound very rambling to the pre-Columbian Aztecs, who probably instituted the "two element" limit precisely to avoid that (as in most cultures, rhetoric was an important part of their conception of statecraft, and rambling tends to make for bad speeches).
* In "Naked in Death", Roarke mentions that DeBlass used to buy guns from the black market. When Eve asks why he didn't tell her before, he says she didn't ask.
* In "Naked to the Limit, One More Time", a guy in a flashback rips Jeff in half at the waist after Jeff protests him wearing a fur coat, and in the present, he's showing Roger the scar where he was sewn back together. Later in "The Devil Wears a Lapel Pin", he's bisected again by a roided-up Bullock.
* In Name Only: An adaptation that is so different from the source material that the title is pretty much the only thing the two works have in common.
* In Name Only: An adaptation that's completely disconnected from the original.

* In Name Only and harem elements to make it even more popular with anime fans. The brothers are however unable to keep up appearances and revert back to their original forms.
* In Name Only and was noncanon). The Nameless One had made a deal with a Baatezu: "Save my village, and I will fight in the Blood War". So it did, but The Nameless One reneged on his deal. It took the Baatezu a few centuries to figure out how to make a potion from the River Styx (which normally wipes your memories if you drink it) that would PREVENT The Nameless One from losing his memories the next time he died; all part of the Baatezu's gambit to get The Nameless One to fulfill his end of the bargain. In the game itself, however, none of this is mentioned and the Baatezu in question had never met that particular Baatezu prior to the game's start. The reason the current incarnation of the Nameless One no longer lost his memories in the game was never explained.
* In Name Only character in Season 1, played by Sage Brockelbank. In Season 5 he's recast with Wes Brown, bringing his characterization back to what Disney fans are more familiar with.
* In Name Only, fans can argue about why adapting/rebooting something popular to profit on the existing audience, but don't deliver something that connects to them.
* In Name Only, has received condemnation from fans — Asian and non-Asian — as a betrayal of her comic incarnation, who's seen as one of the best Asian-American superhero comic characters. Both the director, Cathy Yan, and the writer, Christina Hodson, are of Asian descent themselves.
* In Name Only imaginable. It had many Mieville fans absolutely furious until they noticed that it wasn't on an actual IMDB web address.
* In Name Only institution after radical socialist revolutionaries toppled the government in London. Canada (now the home of the exiled British monarchy), large parts of the Caribbean, Australia and New Zealand (now united as the “Australasian Confederation”), and a democratizing rump of British India continue to identify as parts of “the empire”, but in reality they are a coalition of independent states.
* In Name Only killed himself because Maida married another man, not for love, but for his money.
* In Name Only Squash Match. Said one reviewer, "Winner — Big Daddy V, via murder".
* In Name Only: The adaptation differs so much from the original work that the shared title is the only indication that the work is an adaptation.
* In Name Only, there's an interesting twist on this—the Dwarves seem to be the only race that can survive a single headshot with a sniper rifle.
* In Name Only. They both fall deeply in love, but the only problem is that his current wife, Maida, won't give him a divorce.
* In Name Only, which likewise reached a wider viewership thanks to the channel's availability.
* In Name Only, with it having less scripted promos, but in physical action she still seemed pretty automated when doing anything other than wrestle, such as her referee stint.
* In Nami's flashback, her adoptive mother Bellemere made it back to her home island, Cocoyashi, with a baby Nami and young Nojiko through a raging storm. When the citizens found the three, they wanted to treat her first, but she insisted the girls be looked at before her.
* In "Nanarchy", when Kryten explains to Cat and Kochanski that Lister wouldn't be able to use one of Kryten's spare arms as a prosthetic because it would be so heavy that, "with the strain and extra weight, it would be impossible for Mr. Lister even to
* In Naoto's eighth Social Link event, the two of you encounter a man with what looks like a knife, and you can choose whether to protect Naoto, flee together, or fight the man. Naoto knows that the "knife" isn't real, but says that if it was, you might have been in danger if you'd offered yourself as a shield.
* In National Treasure 4: Baby Franny: She's Doing Well: The Hole Story, Steve convinces Francine to prove her worth by solving one of the Millennium Prize

Problems in mathematics. After an intense mathematics montage, Francine goes up to a professor at a college lecture and announces that she solved the Yang-Mills existence and mass gap problem. Her solution? The number 6. The professor informs her that the answer wouldn't be a number, but rather an entirely new concept in mathematics, and she frowns and walks away.
* In "Native Son," we meet the Tiger Clan and Tygra's father Javan, and as it turns out pride was their downfall. The tigers and Tygus were too proud to join Leo when he rebeled against Mumm-Ra and split from them. When a plague was killing them, they were too proud to seek aid from Thundera and sought help from the Ancient Spirits (of Evil) instead. The Spirits agreed to cure everyone if Javan killed Tygra, but when he saved Tygra instead, the spirits cursed the tigers, letting the plague kill them all and forcing them to haunt their home as undead ghosts, only able to pass on if one of them could overcome their pride and show humility. Tygra's father even tries to keep all this a secret and drive Tygra away rather than have to admit what happened when Tygra becomes bitter about being sent away, all out of pride. Even in this case Tygra's pride gets in the way of seeing that his father was trying to save him from the plague, and it's only when he finds out about the curse that he forgives his father, which ends up lifting the curse. As you can see, pride causes a lot of problems.
* In "Natural Born Kissers", Bart and Lisa find the alternative happy ending of
* In "Natural Born Kissers", Homer and Marge try to have sex at a mini-golf course and end up
* In "Natural Born Kissers", Marge and Homer run through the rain and go to the nearest barn to escape the storm. Their excitement leads them to have sex.
* In "Nature of the Sandbeast", during Omar's and Orla's tellings of how Dr. Dry got the eponymous creature's egg, they imagine the
* In "Nature Pants", Patrick causes this when he throws aside the pile of SpongeBob's old phone books.
* In "Nature Pants", Patrick mentions to SpongeBob that even Squidward misses him. Cut to Squidward throwing himself a "Goodbye, SpongeBob" party.
* In "Nature Pants", SpongeBob gives away his possessions to his friends before he leaves to be a jellyfish. The only thing he leaves Squidward is a (non-electric) can opener which he sarcastically remarks "And I thought this friendship would never pay off." Patrick initially didn't do much better getting a jar of mayonnaise and a stack of old phone books (although he genuinely appreciated the presents) until SpongeBob also decided to give him
* In "Nature Pants", SpongeBob gives up his life and friends to live in the wild with the jellyfish. At one point, he stumbles upon a picnic set up by Sandy and Patrick in an attempt to convince him to come home. When SpongeBob refuses:
* In "Nature Pants", SpongeBob runs away from Bikini Bottom and Patrick starts chasing him. SpongeBob runs behind a supposedly big rock to hide from him, but the "rock" turns out to be a gigantic snail.
* In "Nature vs. Nurture", the first of John Kreese's backstory flashbacks opens in a 1960s diner. We're given the impression that Kreese was a high school jock, especially as the man holds the same "no mercy" mentality as adult Kreese, bullies a busboy, gets offered a chance to serve in Vietnam, and most importantly is played by Martin Kove's son Jesse. Then the manager yells at the busboy, "KREESE! Those tables are not gonna bus themselves! Get back to work!"
* In "Nature" where he gets progressively drunker and at one point of sorrow, screams "WHY DO YOU STOP WORKING ON ME?" at the bottle.
* In "Naughty Nautical Neighbors", Patrick does CPR on Squidward by inflating him like a balloon and letting the air push the fork out of his mouth. He also mentions needing to wash his hands first but then shrugs it off.
* In "Naughty Nautical Neighbors" Patrick saves Squidward after he accidentally got a fork stuck in his throat by performing a cartoonish CPR which consists in blowing Squidward up and having him deflate to spit the fork out.
* In "Naughty Nautical Neighbors", SpongeBob and Patrick get bloated from drinking too much soda. They are back to normal once they burp it all out.
* In "Naughty Nautical Neighbors", SpongeBob is revealed to be absolutely terrible in playing the double bass, so much so he doesn't even know what it's

* In naval use (especially for submarines), flying a broom on returning to port signifies a "clean sweep", the vessel having sunk all targets it engaged. It can also be used to signify fully passing sea trials.
* Inn Between the Worlds: Another impossible place that's almost always stumbled across rather than deliberately sought out, but at Inns the payoff for visitors is usually decent enough drink and/or food, good company and good stories rather than material trinkets. Disclaimer: where you wind up after visiting is not necessarily the proprietors' responsibility. Check the rules of the establishment carefully.
* Inn Between the Worlds: A pub, inn, bar or other watering hole that serves as a travel hub between dimensions.
* In NCAA Division I ice hockey, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute has decided that Clarkson University is their main rival, while Clarkson focuses primarily on its rivalries with St. Lawrence University, its main mutual rival, and Cornell University. Ironically, Clarkson is somewhat an unknown rival to Cornell, which believes its true rival to be Harvard, another Ivy League School, although, unlike RPI students, Clarkson students generally realize that Cornell does not consider them a rival.
* In NCAA Football the Marshall University Thundering Herd plays this to the West Virginia University Mountaineers. Marshall fans consider this an important heated rivalry and the "Friends of Coal" bowl to be a must watch event. WVU fans consider their annual meeting a pointless game against a mediocre, obscure team.
* In NCAA Football, the University of Michigan Wolverines, the team with the most wins in college football history, has fallen into this role in recent times. The Wolverines have lost almost every game against a top-10 ranked opponent in the since 2012 (a current 1-14 record). Sportscasters will note the team’s storied history, but their opponents and rivals will use their eventual victory as proof of their program’s strength. This has increased with the hiring of Jim Harbaugh as head coach; a Michigan graduate and former quarterback who was brought in to bring the team back to its glory days and secure marquee wins.
* In Neal Asher's Cowl, futuristic humans have advanced physically to the degree where they are superhumanly strong, fast, and intelligent compared to the "current" humans when they travel back in time. A "current" human has his body and mind, re-engineered, so that he can even operate when he is brought forwards in time.
* In nearly 80% of all kung fu movies made in China in the 60's and 70's from Run Run Shaw or Golden Harvest, the villain was always the old guy with the white beard.
* In nearly all media featuring the Rutles, rhythm guitarist Stig O'Hara is portrayed by South African musician Rikki Fataar. However, when the characters made their debut (on
* In "Necklace and Calabash", one court lady claims the reason the Third Princess has remained unmarried for so long is that the Emperor has an unnatural fixation on her. Dee shakes it off as rumors spread by eunuchs.
* In "Necklace of Glass," Casey Jones, played by Beverly Garland, goes undercover as the socialite Beverly Cazwell.
* In "Negative Reaction," Paul Galesko makes the standard ransom note with newspaper clippings in order to fake the kidnapping, then uses the cut-up newspapers as part of the frame job by leaving them in Deschler's hotel room. However, this proves to exonerate Deschler, as the maid tells the police she came through and cleaned earlier and saw no newspapers. Paul argues that the maid must have lied, but Columbo counters that that doesn't work either, because if the maid never came into the room, extra clippings from the newspaper would have to be on the floor.
* In neighbouring Bretonnia, the official position is that only the state religion, venerating the Lady of the Lake, is an actual religion, everything else is peasant superstition to be wiped out when the local lord deigns to notice. However, the majority of peasants worship Shallya, goddess of mercy and healing without interference from their overlords, anyone from outside the kingdom is permitted to worship any non-Chaotic gods as they wish (on the grounds that "foreigners don't know any better"), and the coastal towns and cities worship Manann, god of the seas as a pragmatic defence against storms and tidal waves.

* In "Nemesis", Commander Kaaj refers to himself as the son of Torg. In
* In "Nemesis", the Klingon commander Kharg threatens to destroy the major population centers of the Temazi homeworld from space.
* In "Nemesis", the Vori Defenders use bullpup assault rifles including the British SA80, while Kradin soldiers use a Kalashnikov model that's been modified with plastic coverings. This is meant to invoke the gung-ho action movies of
* In "Nepenthe", Dr. Agnes Jurati binges on two big slices of cake, takes a bite out of a third, and accepts chocolate milk when it's being offered before she throws up (although that might be more from
* In "Nepenthe", Elnor kicks Narissa so hard in the face that she falls down, yet she doesn't have a broken or bleeding nose, a black eye, a loose tooth, or any kind of bruising or blemish
* In "Nepenthe", it's lampshaded by Rios, who believes Elnor is out of his mind for staying on the Artifact, which is crawling with Tal Shiar (the
* In "Nepenthe", Kestra continuously asks Soji questions about her android abilities, much to Soji's annoyance.
* In "Nepenthe", Narissa persuades Elnor to sheathe his sword and to fight her unarmed when she instigates the customary
* In "Nepenthe", the latter part of Narissa's interrogation of Hugh and the scene where Elnor and Hugh are forced to confront Narissa and her lackeys are saturated in blue light.
* In "Neptune's Spatula", after SpongeBob wins a cookoff with King Neptune and now has to live in his castle, Mr. Krabs is crying. SpongeBob thinks it's because Krabs is going to miss him, but it turns out that Krabs bet all his money on Neptune.
* In "Neptune's Spatula", King Neptune accidentally shows SpongeBob live action footage of a man taking a shower when he tries to show him Atlantis.
* In "Neptune's Spatula", when Neptune sees the less-than-impressive results of making Spongebob a god.
* Inner Circle) and its #13 follow-up "Sweat (A La La La La Long)". The group are also two-hit wonders in the UK, with "Everything Is Great" (#37 in 1979) and "Sweat" (#3 in 1993)
* Inner Circle), MJF admitted that he'd only ever joined the Inner Circle to try and destroy it from within- and had failed.
* Inner City Blues starts when two low-rent brothers in crime steal a car that belongs to one of the mob bosses in the city. Their fence immediately recognizes it and calls the boss to explain what happened. The two thieves end up given a job as "debt collectors", as the boss was impressed by their skill.
* Inner City Blues: The comic starts when a pair of car thieves bring back what they believe to be the biggest haul of their lives... except that when they bring it to the mechanic, he identifies it as belonging to a powerful mob boss. Who calls him up a few seconds later to ask that they return it. Surprisingly enough, the mobster doesn't have them killed, instead putting them to work for him as enforcers.
* Inner City School: An impoverished city school where the teachers have given up, and students are on the fast track to prison.
* Inner City School: Education tends to be abysmal in poor urban neighborhoods.
* Inner City School where Miss Peters teaches English has at least two gangs, one of which is the Furies, who frequently get into knife fights with each other at the slightest provocation.
* Inner Dark over his actions and by the end is more or less dead inside.
* Inner Demons. He knows just about everything about the Queen of Darkness prophecy and ends up explaining everything to the protagonists.
* Inner Demons II, Diamond Tiara also begins ominous dreams about the future around the same time as Twilight did.
* Inner Demons of Scootaloo and Sweetie Belle is regarded as this, given the severity with which they abandon their old lives and the high unlikelihood of such a thing happening.

* Inner Demons plan). In all three cases, it's the younger one who's evil.
* Inner Demons. She makes a scene at her husband's funeral when Diamond Tiara's friends try to comfort her, then demands to leave before the ceremony's even over.
* Inner Demons, Shining Armor, after she gets consumed by her darkness and becomes Queen!Twilight. This is hammered home when he rejects her advances and decides to rescue Princess Cadence instead.
* Inner Demons: This is an apparently inherent ability of Queen!Twilight's zombie soldiers.
* Inner Demons to every damn problem she faces, regardless of whether it makes a situation worse or not.
* inner demon that only they can see. Since healers back in the day had virtually no damage capabilities, the stats for + heal and + spell damage eventually got merged into a single + spell power. Since healers' attacking abilities are either Holy or Nature spells, the Inner Demons in that fight were made particularly vulnerable to Holy and Nature spell damage.
* Inner Dialogue: The inner monologue has blue text in order to distinguish it from the main character's dialogue.
* In Nergal's chapter, Dracula is completely helpless against him and has to lure him to his castle so he is able to fight him on equal ground. If Nergal manages to catch Dracula, he will then grab him and throw him in a portal to Hell.
* Inner Genius / Inner Spirit —. Sometimes all of these at once.
* inner Hollow, falling into despair after he obliterates Ulquiorra and almost kills Uryuu. Gin tells him to run away as he's no longer in any state to fight Aizen. However, Isshin encourages Ichigo to train one last time, which allows Ichigo to confront and reconcile with his inner spirits. Upon returning to the battlefield, Gin acknowledges Ichigo has regained his fighting resolve, and Ichigo then proves it by curb-stomping Aizen.
* Inner Hollow. In Chapter 196, Rukia drags him off and gives him this:
* Inner Moka has been shown to do this fast enough to leave an afterimage for her opponents to attack.
* Inner Monologue Conversation: Characters can hear each other's thoughts without being psychic.
* Inner Monologue. He goes on about how this is the night, he must do this to survive, how he's coiled and ready to strike...cue jaunty music and pull back to show him in a t-shirt holding a bowling ball.
* Inner Monologue is, essentially, an expression of the character's "inner self" speaking about his actions as an observer.
* Inner Monologues drowning in a pool in the same manner as the intro.
* "Inner Ninja" by Classified was used in an ad for Tim Horton's Iced Caps. Not as ironic as some examples, but it is using a song about overcoming struggles in a commercial about refreshments in summertime.
* In NERO there are the Elemental Lords, each of which except one has an opposite: Light and Dark, Death and Life, Order and Chaos, Reason and Dream, the four traditional elements and Time which is the most powerful.
* Inner Power. It's a common spiritual idea that inner strength equates physical strength. This is often used as a justification in universes where
* Inner Sanctum Mysteries — Based on a popular radio horror series. 6 films between 1943 and 1945.
* Innerspace, after Tuck's pod is injected into Jack, he starts trying to figure out what's going on while Jack is ringing up items at his job. His attempts screw with the scanner, causing the items to ring up at hundreds of dollars each.
* Inner Space averts this... but since the areas you play in are kinda small, you're more likely to slam into something than coast for very long.
* Innerspace ends with the hero and his love interest getting married.
* Inner Space has a literal example. Tuck in his tiny ship literally stimulates Jack's adrenal gland. But the harrowing adventure he has gone through cures him of his nervous hypochondriac tendencies and turns him into a full-on Action guy ready to take on the bad guys without hesitation.
* Innerspace has a very limited supply of oxygen in his minisub, so Jack must get him (and the chips) back to the lab before it runs out.

* Innerspace has this happen to Igoe after Tuck lets the pod drop into Jack's stomach fluids.
* Innerspace, Jack tells his doctor about his nightmare about an old lady with a cigarette lighter gun and the high prices of her groceries. The scene then comes true the same day.
* Innerspace — long story) can increase the power of his muscles during a confrontation with an evil henchman. He can't, but that doesn't stop Jack kicking his ass.
* Innerspace — Mild-mannered hypochondriac Jack Putter (Martin Short) finds himself mixed up in a war between the evil corporation and the US government. Mind you, the original reason he took matters into his own hands was the prospect of having a tiny little corpse rotting inside of his body. At the end of the movie, though, when he realizes that a life of adventure is more fun than what he originally had, he grabs onto it with both hands.
* Innerspace. This results in him freaking out, which causes his head to expand and distort greatly looking like it could explode. Luckily, it didn't, but his cover is blown wide open when this reverts his face back to normal.
* Innerspace) tries to talk to Jack who believes some hospital patients are talking to him.
* Innerspace, Tuck, a former pilot, gets into an argument with another pilot after drunkenly telling the story of landing a crippled plane in a storm.
* Innerspace, Tuck is running out of air in his pod and needs to get out of Jack's body soon or he'll die. Currently he is in Jack's lungs, but can't get to a handy orifice in time. Somebody remembers that a human sneeze travels at roughly 300 miles per hour - leading Jack to induce a sneeze by huffing hairspray, as he was diagnosed with an allergy to the same at the beginning of the movie.
* Innerspace, Tuck shuts a cab door with his foot. The pain makes him jump around while clutching his foot.
* Innerspace, Tuck uses a procedure on Jack to reshape his facial features to disguise him. He warns him beforehand that it will hurt, and it certainly does. (And hurts even worse when it wears off prematurely and his face snaps back to normal.)
* Inner Sphere factions are also quite diverse, and on a grand scale are more Subversive than the Clans.
* "Inner Tube Antics" has a donkey dealing with a leaky inner tube buried in his yard that tends to snicker as its air leaks. The donkey keeps trying to yank it out of the ground for the neighborhood rubber drive, resulting in his uncovering a huge pile of tires and rubber tubes.
* In "Nerves of Steal", Buster steals a toy from the toy store and tries to take his mind off it. First, the shadow of a fence makes his sweater appear stripy like a prison uniform, then he overhears people talking about "stealing" bases in a baseball game.
* inner voice box comics speaks up to compliment him after he admires how Spider-Man's tights fit him, and he thanks it.
* Inner Workings centers around a conflict between the strait-laced, safety-conscious, stoic Brain and the fun-loving, impulsive, emotional Heart of an ordinary office worker named Paul.
* Inner Workings in theaters) depicts the struggle between the pragmatic Brain and the fun-loving Heart of a bored office worker.
* Inner Workings pees in the water at the beach when he sees a big wave.
* inner world, he says, "I suppose that makes sense, now that I think about it."
* In neutral settlements, such as Booty Bay, the guards will attack any player that picks a fight with a player from another faction. Unfortunately, if the latter fights back, they will attack him, too.
* In "Neutron Star", UN Agent Sigmund Ausfaller did this to Beowulf Shaeffer's ship. Well, it wasn't actually Shaeffer's; it was the Puppeteers'. Ausfaller (correctly) suspected
* In "Never Ape an Ape Man", this happens with Scooby, with the villain

* In "Never Kill A Boy On The First Date", Buffy has to run off and save Giles from a vampire,
* In "Never Kissed A Girl," a wrongfully-convicted man holds Ed and a security guard hostage to demand the evidence that would exonerate him.
* In "Never Letting Go" Samara seems to be nervously enjoying the view of Emily as her
* In "New Challengers", after Team SSSN secures victory through some
* In New Donk City in the Metro Kingdom, there are no enemies out in the open whatsoever and the whole place feels more like a
* In New England, early spring is known as "Mud Season." However, the weather tends to be so erratic in New England that at times the label "seasons" seems to be a stretch. Even in winter, it can go from -10 degrees and blizzard conditions one day to 45 degress and sunny. In the summer, it's not unusual to use both your air conditioning and your heater in the same day.
* In Newfoundland, Canada, it was a common practice for people celebrating Shrove Tuesday (Pancake Day) to put items in the pancakes — usually coins, but sometimes thimbles, rings, or needles. Obviously this necessitates eating the pancake very carefully — you don't want to bite into a coin, not to mention the needle.
* In "New Gym Instructor", Miss Brooks is given the opportunity to choose the new gym instructor. Mr. Conklin tries to get Miss Brooks to choose his brother, Sam Conklin.
* In "New Jacket Required", Mr. Lightning ends up destroying the guidebook to Otis's new jacket as a result of Olympia
* In "New Kid on the Block", Homer watches a dating game show where a guy says he loves a girl who makes bacon on the beach. Homer imagines himself literally doing that.
* In "New Kids on the Blecch", when Bart, Milhous, Nelson and Ralph start a boy band, the band’s manager, L.T. Smash goes to New York to destroy
* In "New Kids on the Bleech", after Lisa discovers the Navy's conspiracy to recruit people via
* In "New Kids on the Bleech", the Simpsons watch a documentary about the history of the
* In "New Leads" Andy and Erin are at the dump looking for the new sales leads that were accidentally thrown away. Andy is cold and Erin takes off her coat and puts it on him claiming she has "warm blood". This leads to them having their first kiss.
* In "New Life," the Chronicoms use the information they took from FitzSimmons' minds during their captivity to seize control of the Lighthouse. They then assault the facility, killing all the agents they can find and forcing the remainder to flee.
* In New Phyrexia, the interior of the completed Lumengrid is covered in pulsating, organic tissue.
* In New Phyrexia, three of the five Phyrexian factions are this to varying degrees. Jin-Gitaxias of the Blue faction is one to the greatest extent (the name of his faction, The Progress Engine, is saying something). The leaders of the Green Vicious Swarm, Vorinclex and Glissa, are all about "encouraging" natural selection instead, via extreme predation and survival of the fittest. And the White Machine Orthodoxy wishes to either unite all beings into one
* In news, this is also known as "throwing out the rundown" (i.e. the plan for that night's show), usually (but not always) in light of breaking news. Fox News anchor Shepard Smith has said that he and his team draw up a rundown every day with the hopes of throwing it out completely by five minutes into the show, because his favorite thing about the job is covering breaking news that takes everyone by surprise.
* In "New Student Starfish", Patrick hands SpongeBob a crude, unflattering drawing of Mrs. Puff. She then takes the paper from SpongeBob out of curiosity and assumes he drew it.
* In New York and Washington DC, scalpers do this on big-headline news-days.

* In New York City and other jurisdictions, there are laws requiring that public places (like stadiums and theaters) have a 2:1 ratio of female to male toilet fixtures. So there are typically larger, though not necessarily nicer, bathrooms for women. This is mainly because, on average, women take twice as long as men to use the bathroom. While men can just unzip their fly and use the urinal, women have to lower their pants or skirt and sit down or squat no matter what. Men also don't have to worry about tampons or pads, and are less likely to be watching over and changing the diapers of small children (though the latter is changing). While men's rooms can easily serve large numbers of men quickly, the same number of women using a bathroom the same size will typically produce a line and overcrowd it. As a result, many women, when pressed, will often opt to duck into the (single stall) men's rooms if there's a line in front of the ladies' room. Such laws are designed to prevent this from happening.
* In New York, there is a store called "Just Bulbs." They sell nothing but lightbulbs.
* In New Zealand, a court case ruled that the fine print on their TV ads was unreadable on a normal TV, and thus not legally binding.
* In New Zealand, all seasons on DVD is rated R16 (except Season 4 which was rated R18).
* In New Zealand in the early 2000s, Tararua Milk ran adverts featuring a 'macho-looking bloke' describing himself engaging in decidedly un-manly activities: "I wear a pink shirt, but not at the rugby... I'll ask for directions, but only if I have to!"
* In New Zealand since 2006, the smallest coin has been the 10 cent. Prices ending in .90 are the most common, but there still are .97, .98 and .99 prices out there.
* In New Zealand, there is a brand of chips called "Bluebird". However, there's no bluebirds in sight. Instead,
* In "Next of Pin", when Stan admits that he stabbed Steve in his leg to end his bowling career, he stabs himself 10 times to show that it's not that painful. He doesn't flinch during any of them, but he quickly passes out.
* In NEXT, the heroes suspect every strange magical effect they hear of to be caused by a Claire Bible manuscript, indicating that even the mundane fragmentary copies can have weird properties.
* In "Next Top 11 F*ck Ups", he was less obnoxious, shutting up whenever the Critic yelled at him, and more pathetic, being shown to
* In Nicola's second episode, Malcolm lets her have it again after a very trying day ends with Nicola accidentally blabbing the details of the latest DoSAC scandal to an on-the-record journalist. For good measure, it was because of Nicola's claustrophobia.
* In Nico's notes, it's mentioned that emotion is what makes demons stronger, with love and resolve (emotions unknown to demons) being the two greatest factors, which explains why the half-and-quarter-demon Sparda family can be so powerful.
* In Nigeria in the 1970s, obesity was still a sign of great wealth. Polynesia also had positive connotations to fatness.
* In Nigeria, the Yoruba people believe that a person has at least three spiritual beings. One of them, the Ojiji, is a shadow that follows its owner and awaits his return in heaven when he dies.
* In "Nightcrawlers", Price is a traumatized Vietnam veteran who has the ability to
* In "Night Light", SpongeBob develops a fear of the dark after reading a scary book. He imagines he sees a monster's hand tapping on his window (actually a coral branch) and a giant brain monster in his room (his chair).
* In "Nightmare Logic", a djinn gets into Dean's head and tries to feed on his nightmares, only to back away in fear. Given that by this point Dean's spent time in Hell and Purgatory, been a demon,
* In Nightmare Mode all the melee characters become much less useful due to friendly fire, forcing the party back to a warrior for tanking, a ranged rogue for opening chests, and two wizards for stunning as many bad guys as possible while you deal with the enormous hordes of powerful enemies.

* In "Nightmare on Goof Street", a couple of con artists pose as house renovators and steal parts of Pete's house. After getting the parts back, Pete and Goofy rush to put the house back together before Pete's family finds out. They succeed, but Pete still gets caught when it's shown that the kitchen is upside down.
* In "Nightmares and Daydreams" Aang has a daydream about Appa and Momo as samurai fighting each other.
* In "Nightmares and Daydreams", most of Aang's nightmares (and later, hallucinations) are merely funny. However, his last nightmare before he decides to avoid sleep altogether (leading to the hallucinations) is downright terrifying, even making Momo (Aang's
* In "Night of the Doctor", this trait came back to bite him when ignoring the universal war throughout time and space in the background that he caused by visiting a planet accidentally 7 lives ago ends up indirectly killing him and leaving him distraught, depressed and alone.
* In "Night of the Living Duck", Daffy dreams he's about to perform in at a nightclub where the audience, is made up of famous monsters, mostly the
* In "Night Of The Living Goomba", Luigi says he needs to change his pants after hearing the roar of a zombified Goomba.
* In "Night Of The Living Goomba", when Mario and Luigi are exploring the underground tunnels:
* In "Night of the Living Pharmacists", Isabella is trying to earn a new
* In ''Night Of the Living Pharmecist" the opening animation plays with this, showing ordinary foot prints turn into Doof's foot prints. And then showing Perry's foot prints turning into Doof's foot prints.
* In "Night of the Weremole", early in the episode, when he sees a snarling Muriel raiding the refrigerator, he starts screaming, then clutches his chest with a yelp, and collapses. Then it cuts to an ambulance racing across Nowhere, followed by Courage recovering in Dr. Vindaloo's office. Of all the insane things he would go through during the series, that is the one thing that literally gave Courage a heart attack.
* In "Night Owl", a greedy radio host freezes Mordecai, Rigby, Muscle Man, and High Five Ghost in liquid nitrogen. A few thousand years later, they unfreeze and find themselves in a futuristic museum, though fortunately they escape by using a time machine.
* In "Nightsong", Ace Campbell refers to his fellow DJ Andrea Fields as "the Midnight Queen" because she hosts a show from 12 to 4 am.
* In "Nightsong", Andrea Fields is visited by her ex-boyfriend Simon Locke, whom she has not seen for five years. She later discovers that he is a ghost when he shows her his skeletal remains and crashed motorcycle at the bottom of a cliff. Simon tells her that he has returned in order to convince her to let go of her feelings for him and get on with her life.
* In "Nightsong", the ghost of Simon Locke appears to his ex-girlfriend Andrea Fields when she plays his single "Nightsong" on her KGRR radio show. He initially does not tell Andrea that he was killed in a motorcycle accident five years earlier but eventually shows her his skeleton. Simon explains to Andrea that he has returned because she has never been able to move on from their bumpy relationship and the memory of it is keeping her from living her life. He then disappears, having seemingly moved on to the afterlife. In the final scene, Andrea again plays "Nightsong" and dedicates it to Simon with love. Although she will always love Simon, she is ready to move on with her life.
* In Nihilus's case, while the mask itself still technically has no powers,
* In "Nikki Heat" Beckett finds herself embroiled in a teeth-grindingly awkward conversation (from her point of view) with Natalie Rhodes, the actress portraying the character based on her, about how Rhodes needs to sleep with Castle because of the relationship Castle wrote between Beckett's character and his own
* In Nikolai Teleshov's story "Zoren'ka" ("Little Dawn" in Russian), a king is foretold that the man who will marry his titular daughter will take over his entire kingdom within a year. So at first, when three suitors come, he tells them to fight until only one remains (the survivor is left too badly disfigured to be worthy of a king's daughter). The next group is smarter, so the king's challenge is to make them draw one of two rocks from a jar - one is white, one is red, with the first one meaning the princess' hand, and the other being drowned in a river on the spot. Of course, the king puts two red stones in.

* In "Nine Thirteen," the victim lands on a parked cab after falling off the 10th floor balcony of the episode's eponymous building.
* In "Ninety Pounds of Trouble," an underage girl tries to order a drink from Huggy Bear.
* In "Ninja Twilight", the unleashed combined might of the Shadowkhan tribes quickly seize control of Section 13.
* Innistrad, as part of its gothic horror theme, houses a lot of direct Frankenstein expies dabbling in the creation of monsters, usually by sitiching corpses together. Named examples include the visionary
* Innistrad-esque mad scientists (called stitchers) hellbent on making the perfect zombie.
* Innistrad has cathars, which generally dress up in trenchcoats but occasionally show up in more classically medieval armor.
* Innistrad has the symbol of the archangel Avacyn on nearly every human-related card. It fits better if you imagine it in the place of a Christian cross.
* Innistrad uses this as the distinction between black zombies, which apply the rotting-reanimated-corpse model, and blue zombies, which are the product of blasphemous Frankenstein-style experimentation rather than blasphemous rituals.
* Innkeeper, the initial viewpoint character Manuel actually died years ago. His mother Nanay developed a split personality to avoid facing the reality of his death. Building the inn was Manuel's dream before he died, so Nanay works herself to exhaustion trying to fulfill it. It's only after the inn becomes a success that she is finally able to accept Manuel's death. The game is really about helping a grieving mother move past the loss of a child.
* In "Nobody Doesn't like T.J," Gordie spits out the brownie T.J offers him after finding out that it has nuts in it, which Gordie is allergic to.
* Innobotics Corporation Arc: includes the episodes "Valerie 23", "Mary 25", "In Our Own Image" and "Resurrection" in chronological order. It deals with robots created by the Innobotics Corporation with Valerie 23 and Mary 25 being direct sequels. It's possible that "In Our Own Image" and "Resurrection" take place in an alternate universe or alternate timeline.
* In "No Brain, No Pain", he assists Eunice Danforth capture her husband Charles Furnell and thereby gain access to the Brainalyzer. She gives Dash $1,000 to look the other way while she fries Charles, Marshall, and Simon's brains. However, he has a change of heart when he remembers what Marshall asked him earlier: how would he feel if he was the one who needed help?
* In "No Brakes", the heroes battle White Fang mooks and mechas on a train inside a Grimm infested underground tunnel.
* Innocence": “It’s a mission-statement show, and one of the ones where I first found out what we could do.”
* innocence, also possibly because families in those days tended to be large and cloth was more expensive, so parents wanted clothes that would only be worn for a few months to be useful on all their children.
* Innocence And Experience has Robin using a very distinctive slang word in front of Tim Drake, who's familiar with Dick Grayson and heard him dropping this very same word. Whoops.
* Innocence And Experience plays a villainous variant: when he learns how a grown-up Tim Drake utterly humiliated and one-upped him, Ra's concludes he would rather have such intelligence serving him and arranges for the abduction of seven-year-old Timmy. Alas for him, the Justice League disagreed with little kids being groomed as villains.
* Innocence, believing Matt's son Peter would be awed to learn his parents are superheroes doing their utmost best to protect people. The narration itself leans more towards Foggy's argument.
* Innocence", but she also never uses it against Caleb or his minions.

* Innocence, features a multitude of ghost-dubbed dolls manipulated for the purpose of freeing the enslaved children used to dub them. It raises the question of whether, being imparted with some aspect of human consciousness, the dubbed dolls cannot be considered alive, and thus victims themselves in the film's violent plot.
* Innocence is upgraded to a BFS, it works this way against Noah, hurting only the Noah part of the victim but leaving the human part intact.
* Innocence Lost: A character loses their childlike innocence due to a tragic event.
* Innocence Lost and other victims we see X kill either in her final rampage to escape the Facility, or over the course of her missions.
* Innocence Lost: An innocent character is exposed to true evil, or the uglier side of the world, for the first time.
* Innocence Lost as he does take it with a rocket-powered toboggan and keep going.
* Innocence Lost, in the event she was unable to tell her about her origins herself. Unfortunately, that's exactly what ended up happening. Even worse, because the letter was so badly fouled by Sarah's blood, Laura was never able to read it herself until she was given the copy Sarah had the foresight to also send to Wolverine just in case.
* Innocence Lost son from the affair) because his lover was going to confess, and Rice wanted total control of the X-23 project. X kills the parents but spares the boy. When X then reveals to her creator/mother the truth of what happened, it convinces Sarah to rescue X from the Facility.
* Innocence Lost's training scenes with her sensei is the color of her belt. The first time we see her train she's wearing a white belt. We then see her progress to yellow, then brown, and finally, by the time she kills her sensei, she's wearing a black belt.
* Innocence Lost. They were only a few weeks along when they were destroyed along with the whole place.
* Innocence Once Lost: Alt!Fluttershy lost a leg during the war due to Alt!Rainbow Dash acting reckless and the latter feels guilty about it.
* Innocence Once Lost the alternate Rarity is blind but it hasn't damaged her dressmaking skills one bit.
* Innocence Once Lost the alternate Twilight invented a spell that fetches a book from her library based on author, title etc. but mentions she gets every book that fits the criteria unless she picks them carefully. In other words, she created a search engine spell.
* Innocence Once Lost, the ponies and humans signed a peace treaty after the war, but there are extremists on both sides trying to restart the conflict.
* Innocence says that he didn't want anyone in the audience thinking it was a fake-out.
* Innocence seems unstoppable, until the Scoobies realize that the trait is descriptive, not prescriptive, and weapon technology has come on a bit since that was written. Missile-launchers are rarely "forged". Even so, Buffy flat out stated they couldn't take chances but he was introduced as a collection of limbs, a head and a torso that had to be collected and assembled together, and he exits as a very similar collection, without anywhere near the army that was once required to be sacrificed in battle to do it.
* Innocence", when Xander and Cordelia talk their way into the (rather less than) secure munitions storage on the local army base to steal a rocket launcher (partly by telling the guard he wants to show her weapons to get her excited):
* Innocent: After strangling his sister-in-law Emel, Taner buckles her into the passenger seat of his car and, with the help of his father, sends it rolling over the precipice. This serves a double purpose, as it also appears as though Taner has died.
* Innocent Bigot: A person who acts bigoted without realizing that what they're saying or doing is considered bigotry.
* Innocent Bigot: Character doesn't realize what they're saying targets a certain culture.
* Innocent Bigot for much milder related tropes. These have the same Obliviousness but less severe actions.

* Innocent Bigot: Prejudiced, but only because they genuinely do not know any better.
* Innocent blatantly favors older son Taner over his younger brother Tarık, to the point of dismissing the latter's mental health struggles. Her husband Cevdet, who cares for his sons equally, calls her out for her disproportionate concern.
* Innocent Blood, a recently-vampirized mob boss wakes up at the morgue. He is quite disgruntled to find a thermometer sticking out of his stomach and a man standing over him with a bonesaw.
* Innocent Blood Marie decides to have sex with cop Joe Gennaro, she allows him to cuff her hands behind her back so she can't harm him. During sex she vamps out and breaks the cuffs, but just continues having sex without killing him.
* Innocent Blood. Undercover detective meets... vampire (no points for guessing that).
* Innocent Blue Eyes: Blue eyes are used to portray a character's innocence.
* Innocent Blue Eyes who wants to be an astronaut, despite having claustrophobia, acrophobia, and an easily-upset stomach.
* Innocent Bystander: Character unluckily thrust into peril with no prior intention to do so.
* Innocent Bystander Series: A series that focuses solely on citizens rather than the superheroes or villains.
* Innocent Bystander Series: A story that focuses solely on ordinary civilians rather than the heroes or villains.
* Innocent Bystanders. Everywhere Batman goes to dispose of a bomb in the third act, a new group of innocents appears to prevent him from disposing of it. Whether it be a convent, a group of tourists, a family of ducks or a restaurant full of people, it looks like some days you just can't get rid of a bomb.
* Innocent Cohabitation: Opposite-sexes living together without getting involved in sexual activity.
* Innocent Cohabitation: Two people live together like a married couple would, but without any sex or romance involved.
* Innocent Fanservice Girl: A character who goes naked because they are unaware of other people, including their love interest, finding nudity taboo.
* Innocent Fanservice Girl: A character who goes naked or dresses provocatively because of ignorance of the nudity taboo.
* Innocent Fanservice Girl: A character who goes naked or wears revealing clothing due to being oblivious of the nudity taboo.
* Innocent Fanservice Girl. Fans exploit the potential for perversion there.
* Innocent Fanservice Girl has no qualms about strutting her stuff in front of others; she doesn't see a problem in it and is often unaware that she may be causing trouble. This can range from flat-out nudity to posing in skimpy outfits when asked.
* Innocent Fanservice Girl; while all three generally end up exposing a lot of skin, the first two do so willingly, while the last only does so because the Universe conspires to leave her naked at the worst times.
* Innocent Flower Girl: A sweet girl who makes a living off of selling flowers...and has a high mortality rate.
* Innocent Flower Girl: A sweet shy, reserved, girly girl whose profession is making artificial flowers or growing real ones.
* Innocent III sanctioned the Albigensian Crusade, in which 20,000 people died; the Fourth Crusade, which ended up sacking Constantinople (though he was personally opposed to the crusaders' actions); and presided over the Fourth Lateran Council, which decreed laws discriminating against Jews and Muslims, forcing them to wear different clothing from Christians.
* Innocent Inaccurate: A child or naive person has a clueless interpretation of adult stuff.
* Innocent Inaccurate: A naive character mistakes a dark or adult scenario for an innocuous one.
* Innocent Inaccurate: A naive or misinformed character tells what they think is the truth.

* Innocent Inaccurate: A serious situation seems all the more serious because a naive character (often a kid) thinks it's not.
* Innocent Innuendo: A scene that deliberately looks or sounds naughty, but is actually more wholesome than it seems.
* Innocent Innuendo: A scene was meant to be an innuendo, but there's nothing sexual actually going on.
* Innocent Innuendo: A situation seems erotic, but is actually completely innocent.
* Innocent Innuendo: A situation seems erotic, but is actually harmless.
* Innocent Innuendo character to interpret something as lewd, but it turns out to be totally innocuous.
* Innocent Innuendo remarks that sends Niles' mind off to fantasy land. Frasier brings him back down to Earth with the phrase "Grandma in a teddy."
* Innocent Innuendo: The work depicts a scene that deliberately looks or sounds naughty, but is actually more wholesome than it seems.
* Innocent in this manga. The story centers on how he gradually accepted his profession.
* Innocent Life: A Futuristic Harvest Moon takes place 16 years after release, in 2022.
* Innocent little penguins, origami birds, rolling barrels, and ceiling tiles even after they've fallen in * innocently hung on the wall. Unless you like Jill Sandwiches, you'd better have a replacement for that shotgun or Barry to save your butt.
* Innocently Insensitive: A character who is unaware of their insensitivity and means well.
* Innocently Insensitive because she blurted her parents were cheating towards each other.
* Innocently Insensitive by the Iron Queen, they continue to keep Nicole in power at New Mobotropolis and don't even bother coming up with any failsafes to prevent her from being compromised again. In the very next issue, Sally herself admits that she can see where Mina is coming from and wishes she handled the previous confrontation better.
* Innocently Insensitive: It's okay, my friend. It's not your fault you suck.
* Innocently Insensitive: Oh! Did I say something to offend you?! It wasn't meant to be offensive!
* Innocently Insensitive on the entire city council, especially when Horton's actions inadvertently endanger everyone.
* Innocently Insensitive: Saying stuff without realizing that your statements could anger or offend certain people.
* innocently rub herself on his hand, since it apparently felt so good. Cue Kouta's cousin walking to the room.
* Innocent Means Naïve: The innocent are unaware of the world's evils.
* Innocent Means Naïve: The innocent are unaware of the world's evils. Can also be a cynicism trope, depending on the story's cynicism.
* Innocent Prodigy: A child acts prodigal only for certain purposes and otherwise behaves their age.
* Innocents Abroad is a nonfiction account of travelling through Europe, and his observations of Americans travelling with him, in the late 1800s.
* Innocent Sin, after having a flashback about her father, Maya Amano broke down and Tatsuya can opt to have her cry on his chest.
* Innocent Sin, and the rest of the cast have. To add to this, Tatsuya is the protagonist of this part of the duology.
* Innocent Sin. In Greek myth, two male deities share that name, one being a love god and the other the primordial deity of procreation, but in this game, she's female.
* Innocents is about children fighting allegorical monsters for fun topics like child abuse, kidnapping, and molestation.
* "Innocents of Ryloth" Numa, clone trooper Boil suggests that he and Waxer are going to be stuck polishing R2 units.

* Innocent Soprano: The ingenue heroine is almost always a soprano in musical theater.
* Innocent Soprano: The innocent romantic lead in theater sings with a high voice.
* Innocents Shounen Juujigun, Hugo doesn't give the kids a shadow of a chance at recovery.
* Innocents Shounen Juujigun, set in 13th-century France and focusing on the Crusades.
* Innocents Shounen Juujigun, while Furuya very much took the story in his own direction, Etienne, the shepherd boy who claimed to be God's chosen child, actually existed. According to author's notes at the end of the manga, though, most of what's known about said story was likely heavily exaggerated to begin with. The fantasy elements and historical inaccuracies are what really earn the "loosely".
* Innocents Shounen Juujigun who is genuinely kinder than most humans are even capable of.
* INNOCENTS universe averts this, where most characters are given surnames. The Wolkenritter and the three Unison Devices are given the name Yagami, the five Numbers around Scaglietti are given the name Scaglietti, Rynith is given the name Lanster, and each of the three Materials has her own surname. Arf so far is the only exception.
* Innocent Swearing: Swearing on accident, oblivious to the offense of the words.
* Innocent, Tarık suffers from auditory and visual hallucinations. He lapses into believing that he is still in the military, salutes an imaginary officer, and follows imaginary orders. After Emel's death, he sometimes hallucinates that she is alive and even has conversations with her. He is prone to manic episodes and physical outbursts. He is described by another character as being unable to stand the pressure of responsibility and crumbles under the stress, though he excels at tasks he pursues at his own volition. He is acknowledged as mentally ill, but the narrative never assigns him a specific diagnosis.
* Innocent UK. In both series, after the original suspect has their convictions for murder quashed, the police end up having to reinvestigate the crime all over again.
* Innocent UK is all about this trope. Two series so far have had their protagonists having their convictions for murder quashed after new evidence comes to light, and the police having to reopen the original investigation to find the real killer, whilst the person wrongly convicted tries to rebuild their life.
* INNOCENT universe when she stops Vivio from revealing that she's Nanoha and Fate's daughter because it might cause a time paradox.
* Innocent Until Caught unless he can pay his back taxes within 28 days.
* Innocent Venus. Sana is afraid of him at first because of his reticence, but it turns out that he's the nice guy of the group.
* Innocent Venus: unfortunately, because of some bad pacing, the middle was painfully slow while the later episodes felt too rushed.
* Innocent: When Detective Yusuf follows his ex-wife's new boyfriend and accosts him on the street, the latter films the encounter while proclaiming police brutality, and uploads the footage to the internet. The viral video not only causes trouble for the police department but also lands Yusuf in hot water with his ex.
* Innocent Yusuf is a doting dad to preteen daughter Elif, who runs off to join him after fighting with mom Feride and wants nothing more than for her parents to live together again.
* In "No Chris Left Behind", Stewie briefly becomes a ruler more powerful than
* Innocuously Important Episode that subtly sets events in motion that lead to a big payoff later on.
* In "No Exit", the ghost that Sam, Dean, and Jo are hunting turns out to be H. H. Holmes.
* Inn of No Return: Accept hospitality from this man, and he'll kill torture and kill you.
* Inn of No Return: A place for accommodation that kills the people who stay there and steals from their corpses.
* Inn of No Return where guests have a worrisome tendency to never check out alive.
* Inn of Peyrebeille) was the site of an alleged criminal affair. The two owners, Pierre and Marie Martin, helped by their employee Jean Rochette, supposedly murdered a traveller and threw his body in a river nearby. They were also accused of up to fifty other murders, as well many rapes and cannibalism, but none of these were considered seriously at the trial, and some scholars have expressed doubts that any crime happened at all.

* In "No Free Rides", Mrs. Puff becomes horrified at the consequences of her giving SpongeBob an undeserved driver's license, imagining him ruining the town and decides she'll have to change her identity and start fresh somewhere else...then she resolves "...no.
* In "No Free Rides," Mrs. Puff dons a black balaclava and thick gloves while stealing SpongeBob's new boat. SpongeBob puts a lampshade on it when he catches her in the act.
* In "No Free Rides", SpongeBob accidentally hits the narrator with his boat. He's shown from the waist down as a live-action human in a diving suit.
* In "No Free Rides", when Mrs. Puff enters the house during the surprise party held by Spongebob's parents, there's a picture on the wall that depicts the exact same situation of Mrs. Puff entering the house. And there's a picture on the wall as well, which also shows Mrs. Puff entering the house the same way...
* In "no good deed" an X-Men Evolution episode Lance saves a handicapped elderly lady for no reason other than it being the right thing to do. When he's praised for it, his friends in the brotherhood get the bright idea to orchestrate disasters and then 'save' people to get good press. Predictably, they create a problem too big for them to solve, and all of them leave except Lance who helps Jean Grey and the X-Men save the day. Lance ends the episode brushing off comments on his heroism and firmly stating that was the last good deed he'd ever do. Come the finale, Lance and the brotherhood join the X-Men in an
* In "No Good Deed", Matt's first face-off with Benjamin "Dex" Poindexter is while he's trying to infiltrate the hotel where Fisk is on house arrest. He gets stopped by Dex (who is screening those coming to and from the elevator) while trying to follow Fisk's lawyer Donovan to the parking garage. This is three episodes before they meet again, this time with Dex sporting a Daredevil suit procured by Fisk.
* In "No Guts, No Glori", Cliff the cat keeps pooping outside his litterbox.
* In Noh’s story in the first game, she has a variation of the Honnonji Incident where she betrays Nobunaga at the same time as Mitsuhide. As such, the two of them end up fighting each other as they attempt to be the one to personally assassinate Nobunaga, only for him to escape in the confusion, while his army stays behind to try and stop the two would-be assassins.
* In "No Hat for Pat", Mr. Krabs gives Patrick a job holding a sign directing people to the Krusty Krab, but Patrick directs a guy to the Chum Bucket instead. Shortly after, it's implied that the guy died from eating
* In Nolan Thomas' 1984 video "Yo Little Brother", Thomas (who was about 14) appears with his sibling and friends: kids dressed up as
* In "No Laughing Matter", Kermit tries to prove to Fozzie that he can still be funny without his Great-Uncle Schnozzie's lucky joke book by having him slip on a banana peel. When Fozzie tries to do so, he ends up kicking it into Piggy's face.
* In Nomine, all Angels, Demons, and other supernatural creatures have to hide their presence from humans. This is ordained by the Almighty in order to preserve secrecy on a case-by-case basis, and to allow humans free will.
* In Nomine. All of the angels of Heaven oppose the demons of Hell in their own way, but the hosts of angels led by the Archangels Lawrence, Michael and David are the closest to being a heavenly army. Of the various types of angels, Malakites (regardless of which Archangel they serve) are most often involved in anti-demonic combat.
* In Nomine, an angel with the Ofanite of Jean attunement may travel as lightning along any suitable conductor, including telephone lines. They cause damage at their entry end exit points, though....
* In Nomine and driving their hosts to do things of escalating levels of evil every day, and the host thinks it was their idea in the first place.
* In Nomine and some of them actually reached the status of pagan gods back in the day.

* In Nomine. Angels and demons have to have "Roles" crafted for them to fit into society, get a driver's license, etc. Role creation is an equal mix of metaphysical miracle (a powerful superior convincing the universe that you "belong there") and of having celestials in their own Roles (in the DMV, Social Security Office, etc.) manipulating records to make this possible.
* In Nomine. Angels who follow the Archangel Michael have been known to take the weapons, insignia or even body parts of defeated demons as trophies. A few of them have necklaces of demon ears.
* In Nomine, angels who must speak the truth at all times, often take refuge in this trope.
* In Nomine (an ongoing War between Heaven and Hell), it is possible for a demon to redeem and join the ranks of the angels, fighting to undo the evil they once supported. Just remember that old habits can be hard to break...
* In Nomine, a particular 'band' of demons, the Shedim, do this; unlike other demons who are given specially created bodies to inhabit while on earth, they enter the bodies of humans and manipulate the unlucky individual into doing evil things, which the host believes were his own idea. They can only stay in a certain host for so long at one time, as the host's resistance increases over time and the demon MUST force their host to perform acts of escalating evilness each day or suffer. Their angelic counterparts, the Kyriotates, act similarly, only they can possess multiple entities (which do not have to be human), can totally take over the host's body (the host's mind is kept in a dreamlike state and will remember nothing about the possession) and may stay within a host as long as they like, as long as their host is not in worse condition than it was originally found. Needless to say, they don't force their hosts into depravity.
* In Nomine are able to impose anger, hatred, depression, love/attraction, fear, or nearly any other emotion upon others, they can also impose "emptiness" which is essentially a state of total emotionless apathy. However if the target successfully resists the emotions will sometimes backlash upon the demon, who can either accept them, and be affected by their own power, or absorb them and eat dissonance. If the demon is subjected to his own emptiness, though, there is a small chance that he may instantly realise he is a demon... since Habbalah by default are deluded into thinking they are angels.
* In Nomine are, for all intents and purposes, Anthropomorphic Personifications. They all but embody the concepts they and their servants try to promote and see reality through that lens. There are also lesser angels and demons that personify concepts that fit under the sphere of influence of the Archangel or Demon Prince they serve, for example the Archangel of Lightning (which also encompasses technology in addition to its literal meaning) is served by the Angel of Networks, and the Demon Prince of Fire is served by the Demon of Explosives, who is served by the Demon of Unexpectedly Short Fuses.
* In Nomine as a Destiny attunement. Angels with this ability can send a question to the "vaults of Heavenly Omniscience" and get an answer if it can be answered in three words or less ... and if the angel pays a lot of Essence up front.
* In Nomine: Beleth is the Demon Princess of Nightmares. She and her demon underlings try to get humans to choose the path of evil by sending them terrifying dreams. Blandine is the Archangel of Dreams. She and her angelic servitors send pleasant dreams to inspire hope and ease stress, thus encouraging people to act in a positive manner.
* In Nomine can recognize them if they're perceptive enough, but are otherwise just as vulnerable as anyone else to their lies.
* In Nomine. Even religions that do believe in Heaven and Hell rarely have more than the vaguest idea of what's really going on, and both sides have explicit orders to keep it that way.
* In Nomine features Kobal, the Demon Prince of Dark Humor. There is also his "blood brother" Haagenti, the Demon Prince of Gluttony, who also holds purview over torture and sight gags (which many consider to be a form of torture).
* In Nomine has Memory Pearl artifacts which are pearl-like objects that can be used to remove/store memories, often used (especially by demons) to remove inconvenient knowledge from a temporary employee/associate often as part of the terms of employment.

* In Nomine has the Celestial Song of Light, which creates a supernatural laser beam.
* In Nomine has what are called songs, which are functionally equivalent to spells in D&D. The songs of Numinous Corpus allow for bodily transformation. The Book of Songs says that the Demon Prince of Lust "is known to share several "ornamental" Numinous Corpus that are best left to the imagination . . .".
* In Nomine) have the ability to temporarily convert their enemies into stone, the unfortunate victim remains aware, but unable to do anything until it wears off (which for weaker foes could take a while).
* In Nomine, Hell is detailed in multiple books, being a game about the secret War between angels and demons. The exact nature of a damned soul's afterlife depends on what they did (and therefore whose principality they wind up in). Those who furthered the Word of Lust can maybe hope to be considered a sort of favored pet in a Hellish brothel. Those who furthered the Word of Media can look forward to an eternity where watching some mindless entertainment (a spinning top) is the focus of their existence. It also includes the classic fire and brimstone Hell for those who furthered the Word of Fire itself.
* In Nomine). If cast upon the same being repeatedly, it can age them to death in a short space of time.
* In Nomine includes a (possibly) more benign use of the trope. The Cherub Tariel, assigned to protect the mortal woman Patricia, has to drive out to meet a contact but doesn't dare let harm come to his charge — so he binds and gags her in the passenger seat next to him so he can keep her safe (making sure she's carefully seat-belted, of course).
* In Nomine. In Nomine is a game about an actual conflict between the angels and the demons where demons are just fallen angels, and yes, capital G God the Almighty exists but chooses not to just end it. The angels (fallen and otherwise) are not sure which religion is true - Laurence is a Catholic, but Gabriel (Jibril) did in fact deliver the Qu'ran to Muhammad. It's played for laughs. The inside cover says, "Satanized for your protection. Do not play this game backwards."
* In Nomine instead, and exactly three connect The Marches to either Heaven or Hell.
* In Nomine is "An ancient evil breaks its bonds." One of the possibilities for fulfilling this is Magog, Demon Prince of Cruelty, who was sealed in an ancient Egyptian tomb exactly one day after falling from Heaven.
* In Nomine is enforced, mostly to preserve secrecy on a case-by-case basis, and to allow humans free will.
* In Nomine is The Old Guy, a warrior angel in Austin, Texas, who's old enough to remember dinosaurs. He's away from the front lines and drastically weakened from what he used to be, due to the poisoning of a tree his life is bound to, but he hasn't lost any of his cunning or his skill, as he'd be glad to remind any demon stupid enough to come onto his radar.
* In Nomine, it's the favored weapon of Michael, Archangel of War, the local incarnation of badass. In fact, even though the game has rules for adding miraculous powers to angels' weapons and entities of Archangelic power levels are kept deliberately vague, Michael's axe is explicitly statted in a player supplement: its only power is to teleport in on command. He doesn't need any others.
* In Nomine' job is to stop them from succeeding. If they fail, Armageddon will occur.
* In Nomine. Mammon's demons aren't allowed to give away anything...even the time of day.
* In Nomine. Michael is the classic version of the trope, the Archangel of War who's older than every being but Yves and could kick the ass of anything in creation. Yves is the quieter one, the pleasant old man whom everyone loves (except Michael) who looks like a harmless old man but as Archangel of Destiny possesses the secret knowledge of the universe and is feared by most of Hell because they don't understand him.

* In Nomine, one class of angels, Kyriotates in the service of the Archangel of Lightning, can possess inanimate objects.
* In Nomine players tend to happily gut this trope alive in order to play "Bright" Lilim which are canonically extremely rare (Lilim are a race of demons that was created out of whole cloth rather then coming from Fallen angels). Players just like to be special. Also depending on your group and the preferred style of play actual demons may or may not be particularly evil. Some groups prefer "Bright Low Contrast" in which neither side is really evil and the game is played for shenanigans.
* In Nomine: Probably best summed up by a quote from its discussion list, in which GM Neel Krishnaswami describes the problem of getting PCs to properly fear the Devil Himself: "IN amplifies this effect, too. Take a standard starting PC. Straight off at bat he (or she) can kick butt, take names, and chew bubblegum — all at the same time. And after they're done icing the bad guys, they can stiffen the spines of the meek, bring hope to those on the brink, and win the hearts of all the cute girls (and cute guys, too) — all because they're angels, on a divine mission from God Himself. And just for icing on the cake, for pure overkill of cool, he (or she) has got Ray-bans, a flaming sword, and a fast motorcycle. Now, do you seriously expect this PC to freeze up and kiss a$$ just because the Prince of Darkness has shown up?"
* In Nomine roleplaying game from Steve Jackson Games, many topics are what the Line Editor officially refers to as matters of "Canon Doubt and Uncertainty". Each individual DM is supposed to come up with their own answers to such questions as 'Was Jesus Christ really the Son of God?', and the official game material has never and will never address the issue directly.
* In Nomine's angels sometimes look bizarre or alien in their true forms rather than beautiful, Falling almost invariably results in an uglier or darker form for the new demon (with the exception of the vain Lilim and Impudites, the latter of which still have the classic horns and bat wings).
* In Nomine Satanis. Interestingly, Eli's angels in In Nomine can also power up by having sex. Also, all Impudites can suck out your soul from any friendly contact, including sex.
* In Nomine Satanis / Magna Veritas behaves like normal medicine/surgery for the first three levels (level 3 heals 3 HP in four hours), then switches to magical healing that works in one minute or even one second.
* In Nomine Satanis / Magna Veritas completely averts the problem by having angels and demons incarnate into an existing person. Demons incarnate when a person dies with few enough witnesses, while angels incarnate in very pious people who donate their body. Archangels' (and demon princes') Avatars just pop into existence, but they vanish within a few minutes so it's not a problem either.
* In Nomine Satanis / Magna Veritas, has the demons take possession of freshly deceased corpses. The angels use bodies of wiling believers who accept the possession to support the angels' side in "the big Game". Anyway, the entourage of the possessed will notice a sudden shift in the behavior of the aforementioned possessed, who is likely to leave for a group of fellow angels/demons.
* In Nomine Satanis / Magna Veritas has you playing either demons (INS) or angels (MV). It is a subversion of Christianity in that devils are not all bad, and angels...well, there is an Archangel of the Inquisition, and you would not want to meet the Archangel of the Sword, either. Kinda short on the tolerance and all-inclusive love, these guys are. Anyway, Satan is either your Big Bad, or the boss of your boss. A campaign revolves around him getting depressed and wanting to quit his job.
* In Nomine Satanis / Magna Veritas isn't a straight adaptation, more a remake) children of a demon and a human can be either normal kids, demons, or official creepy children. You gotta love the illustration on that chapter in the rulebook.
* In Nomine Satanis / Magna Veritas, Jean-Luc, Archangel of Protectors, grants his servants the power "ultimate sacrifice", allowing them to magically redirect any harm from a single target to themselves, with some damage reduction at high levels.

* In Nomine Satanis / Magna Veritas, players play angels and demons who borrow the body of humans, and the body they get is basically the one that are available when they get incarnated, so there is no relationship between the abilities of the angel/demon and the appearance of the body. This skinny blonde can be a warlike angel and master swordsman able to cut through legions of demons, and that cute little boy can be a powerful demon that will casually break your neck the first time you look away.
* In Nomine so sweet and helpless five minutes ago is now anything but when a Shedite of Death is in the driver's seat...
* In Nomine, the Archangel of Purity, named Uriel, took his role a bit too far and tried to "purify" the world of a race of beings called Ethereals which included most of the creatures of myth and legend. His "Purge" was largely successful with most Ethereals fleeing Earth for the dream-world; however, God himself eventually intervened and Uriel has not been seen since.
* In Nomine, the Cherubim of Jean have the ability to call the nearest phone to any person or object they are attuned to. If there is no nearby phone, they can spend 1 "Essence" to cause a cell phone to materialize for 10 minutes within seven feet of their attuned.
* In Nomine, the Demon Prince of Theft, Valefor, stole a Book from the Library of Yves, the Archangel of Destiny, which is located in Heaven. As a demon, he wouldn't be able to enter Heaven without being destroyed instantly. However, this may just raise questions as to whether he's as demonic as he claims to be...
* In Nomine, the Demon Prince of Theft, Valefor, was promoted to Demon Prince after he apparently stole the Word of Rapine from its previous owner. Words, in this context, being abstract concepts that grant semi-phenomenal, nearly-cosmic power to those bound to them.
* In Nomine, the Kyriotates (angels) and the Shedim (demons) are Body Surfers by necessity; they MUST possess the bodies of other beings while on Earth (unlike most angels and demons who are given special bodies to use in the physical world) and they can only possess their hosts for a limited amount of time, the Kyrios have a "hard limit" of anywhere from a day to a week or so as to how long they can borrow a given body continuously, and Shedim are required to force their hosts to perform evil acts each day, and the host becomes more likely to resist the longer they have been possessed, so the demons don't usually stick around for more then a few days at a time because the host gets too hard to control.
* In Nomine, the Marches, the land of dreams separating the corporeal realm (Earth and the rest of the physical universe) from the celestial realm {Heaven and Hell) is populated by the power of human imagination with pagan gods and creatures of myth.
* In Nomine, the Shedite leaves and the host is left teetering on the brink.
* In Nomine. The Song called Projection allows the singer to send their consciousness elsewhere, leaving their corporeal vessel unconscious. The vessel can be attacked while they're away.
* In Nomine, the worst of all possible occurrences is the Archangel Novalis responding to something you've done with a frown and the quietly uttered phrase "Oh dear". Because when you get to the point where the Archangel of Flowers, heavenly incarnation of peace, love and forgiveness, decides that something has to be done about you, then you have really messed up.
* In Nomine", this is a plot by the Demon Prince of Media, to completely separate what people think of as "Christmas" from anything to do with goodwill to all men or the Son of God.
* In Nomine to soften his image. This more or less worked for a large portion of the fandom.
* In Nomine uses "mundane" to refer to normal humans that don't possess Symphonic Awareness and thus the ability to consciously use Essence.
* In Nomine, Valefor, the Demon Prince of Theft, has stolen some impossible things like a book from Heaven's Library. One of his prizes is Tesla's electrotherapy cure for cancer. To the simple question of why Tesla couldn't just recreate it, fan theories range from Valefor stealing the physical laws that permitted the device to work, to an elaborate social engineering scheme that meant Heaven had to suppress it lest the device's net effect be infernal, leaving Valefor with the only one. Your pick which would be more impressive.

* In Nomine while on Earth, or, especially in the case of demons, because they like it.
* In Nomine with anybody calling Songs "magic", and some will also get annoyed about using that term for Sorcery. Also you don't "cast" Songs, you perform them.
* In Nomine, with no sapience, or ability to interact with the world, others end up as poltergeists, non-sapient but able to interact tangibly with the physical world, or apparitions, with intelligence, but not the ability to affect the physical world directly, true ghosts with both intelligence and the ability to interact with the physical world are quite rare, partially because they are the ones most likely to complete their unfinished business or resolve whatever attachment kept them from moving on. Of course, all types of ghost can also simply be banished, with a ritual or by destroying their anchor, or destroyed outright.
* In "No More Bunny Business", Candace finds a seemingly innocent bunny rabbit and adopts "Mister Cutie-Patootie" instantly. In fact, his name is Dennis and he's trying to infiltrate Perry's home to find his lair and hack into the O.W.C.A. mainframe. Unfortunately, his
* In "No More Bunny Business", Doofenshmirtz is upset when Perry the Platypus doesn't show up on schedule, and creates a new nemesis by putting a
* In non-English-speaking parts of Europe, it's not uncommon for English-language
* In non-humorous examples, the mother having a bizarre craving can be a sign that
* In "No One Can Hear You", Finn wakes up in the abandoned hospital wing of the Candy Kingdom, only to realize the only one in the whole area is Jake.
* In "No One Comes to Lupisville", Egon notices that their "hosts" don't have reflections.
* In "No Pain, No Gain", Akira attempted this after Rasta said that they have to exercise.
* In "No Pffuture", Pfff unknowingly unravels his rug by foot, leaving behind its red thread everywhere he walks in his house and his neighbor's and setting off chaos in both houses and between.
* In "No Questions Asked", Barney calls in a 'No Questions Asked' from Marshall after crapping his pants.
* In Nora Roberts' Sign of Seven Trilogy, Fox and Layla are both telepathic and even have a steamy sex scene where they are psychically linked.
* In Norbert Wiener's biography, he says that when he first met Bertrand Russell, he was talking to someone that he presumed was an undergraduate. He later found out that it was in fact G. H. Hardy, one of Britain's foremost mathematicians.
* In Norbert Wiener's short story "The Brain", a gangster costs a doctor his family with his driving (they
* In normal I, Zombie levels, if the zombie is killed and the player has 25 or 0 sun, the message will display "You ran out of zombies!"
* In "Normal Man", a de-powered Magic Man teams up with Finn and Jake to rescue his brother Glob from the top of Wild Trap Mountain.
* In "Norm Unleashed," Phineas and Ferb build a colony of remote-controlled
* In "Norse by Norsewest", Hercules and Balder both dream of the latter's possible death, which the former has to prevent.
* In North Africa during World War II, many armies mounted light cannons on trucks. Not Italy. They mounted
* In North Alabama there's an attorney whose jingle is, "Charles Pitman is the way to go! Call five-three-three five-oh-oh- oh!"
* In North America and Asia, a somewhat simplified contrast between big cats and bears could be applied in this style. Big cats are generally more on the "elven" side of things than bears. They are lithe, agile, fast, and stealthy. They are highly specialized predators, with pretty much all species of big cats being dedicated carnivores. Bears, on the other hand, are more "dwarven". Large and stocky, bears are omnivores that make use of physical prowess over speed and agility, though they can be faster than their sheer bulk would let on. Big cats often make homes of trees, tall rocks or alcoves with open areas, while bears—though capable of climbing trees—tend to favor enclosed dens and caves, especially in regards to bear species that hibernate. In almost all ranges where they interact, bears and big cats compete for resources and territory, occasionally leading to direct conflict.

* In North America, episode 20 of the anime was a ghost-themed episode that aired in October. In Japan, the episode aired in August.
* In North America, expect to see black clothes and either a ski mask, a flat cap (sometimes called a newsboy cap in the US) or a tuque/beanie. Gloves, a heavy coat, and a crowbar are optional, but there's always a ski mask or a beanie. This is perceived as being more "realistic", since it actually covers the face.
* In North America, psychiatrists and psychologists use the DSM-5 (Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders) system to classify mental illnesses which is overall similar to the ICD, but has a few quirks of its own. Examples:
* In North America, some of the First Nations of the Great Plains allegedly believed that mutilating someone's body after death would bar them from entering the afterlife, so they'd be forced to wander the earth as a spirit.
* In North America, the PlayStation was originally going to have a mascot named Polygon Man who appears in the early marketing of the console, but was completely absent in the console because Ken Kutaragi was disappointed with his design so he's absent in the final release and fell to obscurity. He returned unexpectedly in
* In North America this device is incorporated into the firefighter's breathing apparatus and the motion sensor activated when the air supply is turned on. That way, users cannot fail to arm the device in hazardous environments.
* In "North and South" by John Jakes, many prominent figures of the Civil War (both military and political) are mentioned. Especially any of those who attended West Point.
* In "North by North Quahog" when Peter decides to spare the world from seeing
* In Northern and eastern Europe (and Russia), pickled herrings with onion/cukes (AKA rollmops, Bismarcks, Matjes) are downed for the same reason, often along with sour cream or yoghurt, and black bread. That these are also commonly eaten during a neat spirits binge is not coincidental.
* In Northern Europe, the effect of the black death was so severe it held the population down for centuries. It didn`t help much that the disease showed up time and again all the way to 1650. In Norway especially, people came to see the plague incarnate as an old hag, clad in dark clothes, wearing a broom and a rake. Her face was either a skull or made of decomposing flesh. Tradition has it that she usually saved some if she used the rake. On the other hand, if she used the broom,
* In Northern Ohio, if you needed aluminum siding, it was "Garfield One, Two-Three-Two-Three; Garfield One, Two-Three-Two-Three!"
* In North Korea, from what little intel can be gathered from defectors, this is quite pervasive. Those in prison camps are so starved that the inmates must regularly break rules and otherwise steal and hunt for food to survive. However, breaking rules in the camp means you don't even get the normal rations. The general philosophy in the camps is "break enough rules that you get enough food to live, but if you ever get caught you die".
* In Northrend, the Dragonblight is an ancient dragon graveyard littered with the skeletons of wyrms and other creatures. Icecrown Citadel appears to be a glacier at first, but on closer examination you can find corpses frozen in the ice, including Frost Wyrms being excavated by Scourge forces.
* In Norway, a role-player had lost a note he'd written in first-person during a Modern Day game on the bus in Trondheim, and was pulled out of class in Olso by policemen who wanted to know why and how the hell he was going to do with a list of explosives, weapons and a plan to blow up an oil platform, and who he was working with, and who he was working for...
* In Norway, Axe has a yearly contest where contestants submit home-made Axe commercials (the winner will be shown in cinemas). While some of these are (well-made from a technical standpoint) appeals to sex, many of them are parodies. Of special notice was one where a hunter is in the middle of a forest and decided to apply deodorant. Since there are no women around, well...

* In Norway, "sodd" is an archaic word for soup, and has named a major label of canned vegetables. It doesn't have much of a foreign market. Except on
* In Norway the smallest coin is the 50 øre. Prices often end on .90, and for cash purchases prices are rounded to the nearest whole or half krone. The 50 øre was finally taken out of circulation in 2012 after having basically served as the equivalent to a penny to Norwegians for the longest time (as in, it served no purpose in the economy).
* In Norway, this is done by the NRK, the Norwegian State Broadcaster, every October. The money goes to different good purposes each year, which is promoted weeks in advance. In addition to being a telethon, volunteers go door-to-door and ask for donations on the same day the telethon is held.
* In "Nosebleed", after Butt-Head breaks Beavis' nose, the former remarks that the latter's heavy nosebleed is the coolest thing that Beavis has ever done. Beavis agrees, though.
* In "No Second Prances", after Starlight Glimmer saves the Great and Powerful Trixie from a dangerous magic trick at the last second, Trixie mutters "Behold,
* In "No Sex Please, We're Skittish" Niles goes to the sperm bank to ask if his "deposit has earned any interest". The nurse replies "Sir, I've worked here twenty-eight years. Think you can tell me one I haven't heard? Go ahead, try me." Niles backs down.
* In "Nosy Neighbors", Donald's fire hydrant disguise backfires when he gets chased by a dog.
* In "Not a D'Amata", Vince, Michael, Teddy and Danny discuss taking Vince's little brother Nicky out camping to get him in touch with his "inner D'Amata" when he comes back more cultured. Michael talks about to doing guy stuff: "we'll build a fire! get dirty! eat bugs!" He loses the other guys with that last one, then suggests they'll bring pizzas instead.
* In "Note Blocks", SC is awoken by his friends' late night jam session, so he turns the volume on the computer from 50 to 0. After he goes back to sleep, Green turns the volume up to
* In note to the two examples above, on both occasions the "lies" managed to slip past the Magatama due to a flaw in the Magatama's system. The Magatama isn't a pure lie detector but rather tells it's user when a person "is holding a secret in their heart". To this effect, a person can themselves believe a lie to be a true and the Magatama wouldn't react to it. This is what happened in the first example; he believed his statement of "I never killed anyone" to be true because he's an evil
* In "Not OK Computer", O'Beth and O'Seth find out that they can get a feather from the Feather-inator gadget Oona keeps in the lab to replace the one that's fried in their server. However, while O'Seth walks to the lab, Otis informs O'Beth that whenever Oona's absent from work, she protects her lab with a force field. Sure enough, O'Seth runs right into it and topples over in considerable pain.
* In-N-Out Burger has a "secret menu", items not normally listed which can be ordered if you know the right lingo, for example, "Protein Style" means a burger wrapped in lettuce rather than on a bun. A full list can be found
* Innovated by Mando Guerrero, the most common form of the moonsault lands this way, at least when done to a downed a opponent. Jack Evans has since done a double rotation "720" moonsault, and Ricochet has been doing double moonsaults regularly.
* Innovators have the ability to transfer their consciousness to Veda after
* In November 1978, Congressman Leo Ryan led a delegation of aides, journalists, and concerned relatives to investigate conditions at the Peoples Temple's "Jonestown" settlement in Guyana. It ended with members of the Temple murdering Ryan and about a dozen of his party on an airstrip shortly before the mass poisonings at Jonestown.
* In November 2011, the Australian Labor Party managed to get Liberal Party member Peter Slipper appointed as the Speaker of the House of Representatives because doing so would effectively neutralise Slipper and increase Labor's "wafer-thin" majority in the House. The Party's motives turned out to be the least of their problems with Slipper, who was forced to take a leave of absence in April 2012 when he was investigated from misuse of cabcharge vouchers, before eventually resigning as Speaker in October over sexual harassment allegations by James Ashby, a member of his staff. His Deputy Speaker who eventually succeeded him was Anna Burke, a Labor member.

* In November 2013, New Jersey legalized internet gambling, partly to try to reverse a long decline in gambling revenues for the state with the rise of casinos in New York and Pennsylvania drawing away would-be tourists to Atlantic City. Radio ads advertising this always add that would-be gamblers can only take advantage of this in the state of New Jersey - the law stipulates that you must be physically present in the state (enforced by GPS) in order to partake in addition to being 21; needed since said radio stations are located in New York and Philadelphia.
* In November 2019 aimed at curbing foreign election influence (obviously targeted at China), which was then signed into law in January 2020 by the president.
* In November 2019, during a game between the Cleveland Browns and the Pittsburgh Steelers, Browns defensive end Myles Garrett ripped the helmet off of Steelers quarterback Mason Rudolph, then
* In November 2020, Green Bay Packers quarterback Aaron Rodgers told the media that he believed Detroit Lions quarterback Matthew Stafford "doesn't get anywhere near the credit" he deserves, hinting that the general ineptitude of the Lions' franchise (which led two other stars, Barry Sanders and Calvin Johnson, to retire in frustration due to the team's apparent inability to make needed improvements) might be holding Stafford back and making him seem like a worse player than he really is. It's worth noting that the Lions and the Packers are historically rival teams — you know it's a big deal when your
* In November 2020, UK Home Secretary Priti Patel was accused of breaching the government's Ministerial Code after allegations of bullying during her time in government (across three different departments). She later said she was "sorry that people had been upset by her behaviour".
* In November, Kanji meets Naoto's grandfather. While the elder Shirogane quickly realizes that Kanji isn't detective material, and Kanji isn't looking forward to asking him for Naoto's hand in marriage, he concedes that the outcome was a good one.
* In November of 1915, First Lord of the Admiralty Winston Churchill resigned from the government to take a commission as an Army officer on the Western Front. Churchill had previously served in the British Army from 1895-1900.
* In November of 1933, they picked up his tail but a disagreement over whether to capture Dillinger by himself or with the rest of the gang led to a dramatic car chase allowing Dillinger to flee.
* In "Now and Then, Part Four", Pike and Kirk observe that sometimes
* In "No Weenies Allowed", immediately after SpongeBob is finally admitted into the Salty Spittoon, there is a cut to the ambulance and it is revealed he slipped on an ice cube and got covered in boo-boos.
* In "Nowhere Man" and "Exposure", a woman inadvertently causes people to become invisible and intangible like ghosts when she takes their picture. According to Mara, the Trouble she gave to the woman's ancestor was to turn the victim into a ghost when she painted their portrait.
* In "Nowhere TV", Courage comes across a piece of the antenna that Le Quack cut off the roof and shows his owners the damage. Eustace thinks Courage was the one who broke it and throws him out of the house.
* In "Now Who's the Dummy", Hank threatens to kick Dale's ass for destroying Bobby's ventriloquism dummy. Dale promptly chloroforms
* In NPHC Greek fraternity and sorority probates, new members tend to conceal their identity with masks. New fraternity/sorority members only unmask themselves when they are introduced.
* Inn SecurityWhenever the plot requires a stay at the inn, you will always wake up in the middle of the night for a plot event.
* Inn the Eastern Bloc in general, due to constant eonomic shortages and lower living standards, anything from the West (consumer goods, culture etc.) was seen as better, more durable and shinier.

* In "Nu comme Hervé", the loose thread of Cassandra's yellow skirt gets caught in an elevator door. She breaks the thread before it could disintegrate her skirt, which is now short.
* In "Nude Beach", the kids make a business out of letting other kids peep on the nude beach from behind the bushes on a nearby clifftop.
* Innuendo features heavily here. It isn't unusual to find work outings booked to a Panto with nary a child to be seen. Frankly half the people there with kids have only dragged them along as cover.
* innuendo have almost entirely clean translations. Presumably for reasons pertaining to this trope, these translations also have several (very) occasional PG-level swear words - enough for the ESRB to complain about, but used sparingly enough to market the games towards general audiences.
* Innuendo is seen by this by a lot of fans, containing some of the best songs of late-era Queen, including the aforementioned "The Show Must Go On", the title track, "I'm Going Slightly Mad", "Headlong" and "These Are the Days of Our Lives".
* Innuendo, many of the songs can be read as Mercury's final messages to the world, ranging in tone from frightened ("I'm Going Slightly Mad") to affectionate ("These Are The Days Of Our Lives") to courageous ("The Show Must Go On").
* Innuendo's health, despite the famous story behind the one-take vocals for "The Show Must Go On" on that album.
* In "Nuggets of Stupidity", Edgar and Ellen find gold on their property and become even bigger
* In Numbers chapter 25, Phinehas son of Eleazar took a javelin and pierced through the bodies of Zimri son of Salu and Cozbi the Midianite woman as they were alone in his tent together, thus stopping the plague God sent upon the Israelites for their idolatry and sexual immorality by joining themselves with the Midianites at Baal-Peor.
* Innumerable fairy tales. In his analysis of Russian fairy tales, Vladimir Propp described the basic functions as revolving about a quest. Some of these include:
* Innumerable ordinary heroes. You probably know a couple personally.
* In numerous Frozen Pop Tarts commercials, there was a yeti who would try and tell kids that they should freeze their Pop Tarts. He gave an explanation as to why in his own incomprehensible language that was translated with subtitles for the viewer. Only after he finished talking did the kids (who didn't realize he was a friendly yeti offering them advice since they couldn't understand him) freak out and scream, scaring him away.
* In numerous other episodes, scenes depicting sinister activities, such as
* In "Nuthin' Special," Buttercup calls all the routines in trying to find her individual power only for Bubbles and Blossom (whose respective special powers are bilinguistics and ice breath) to match her each time.
* In "Nuttin' But the Tooth", Nutty has his jaw and teeth pulled out, but lives.
* In "Nuttin' for Christmas", the chorus ("I'm gettin' nuttin' for Christmas!") is sung to a variation of "Nanny-Nanny Boo Boo", and is punctuated with an instrumental version of "Nyeah-nyeah!"
* In NuWho, the Doctor saves River and her archeology team by uploading them to a planet-sized computer.
* In NXT Dakota Kai turned Heel by brutally assaulting her friend Tegan Nox. Kai revealed she turned on Nox because she was mad that Nox didn't support her in joining Rhea Ripleys Wargames team and in general not having her back. While the vicious knee assault she gave Tegan was
* Ino and Sakura do this after becoming rivals as well, with Sakura calling Ino "Ino-pig" and Ino calling Sakura "Billboard Brow" for her big forehead.
* Ino and Sakura's relationship has some of this. There's even a section of
* Ino began as this to Sakura, protecting her from bullies and helping her to realize her potential. However, Sakura came to believe that
* In object-oriented programming, a class whose constructor takes an instance of the same class as an argument would not be able to be instantiated (unless it's nullable

* In "Objects in Space," Mal expresses worry about River grabbing a gun that's been left out and shooting it, which would rupture the hull and kill everyone. Jayne replies that a bullet from a pistol is too small and the lead is too soft and that it would barely breach the hull at all, let alone make a rupture large enough to kill anyone.
* In "O Brother Where Art Thou?", Homer's half-brother, wealthy auto tycoon Herb Powell, hires Homer to design the car that will break Powell Motors out of its slump. In part, this was because Herb thought Homer was the "average American" who knew what other ordinary Americans wanted in their cars, but Herb also doesn't give Homer any supervision or feedback. The results
* In "Observer Effect", Trip and Hoshi are infected with a lethal disease when they go literally digging through garbage without so much as wearing rubber gloves, or even using tools. The episode later confirms that an environmentally sealed suit would have protected them when Doctor Phlox is able to examine them without apparent risk while wearing a hazmat suit.
* In "Obsession", Ensign Garrovick tries to knock out Captain Kirk with a
* In "Obsoletely Fabulous", Bender meets an outdated cartridge robot that carries a bag filled with individual cartridges for responses and conversations.
* In "Oceans Unmoving", Captain Blacksoul does a variant when Bun-bun pulls an
* In "Oceans Unmoving", he told another character: "I thought there was something about you that I liked. Now that I have the opportunity to
* In "Oceans Unmoving", there's the equivalent of Space Pirates in Timeless Space, flying around on old Teknokon ships, kidnapping people to store in their holds to maintain their time aura so it doesn't run out. Turns out they choose to act like pirates and use such an antisocial means of getting people to join with them because the usual way to end up in Timeless Space is via failed experimental time travel, so the pirates tend to be former nerds.
* , Ino comes to believe that Deidara and Naruto are her half brothers fathered by Inoichi due to misinterpreting a conversation with her mother, and continues to believe this due to her mother forgetting to correct her. Eventually, this belief spreads to all of Konoha and everyone believes Inoichi cheated on his wife.
* In October 1944, The U.S. began the liberation of the Philippines, staging their own amphibious assault. They pushed the Japanese out and provided yet another iconic photograph of the war when General Douglas MacArthur came ashore after the main assault, fulfilling his promise to the Philippines that he "would return". Also of interest, is the fact that, unlike other Pacific amphibious assaults, the liberation of the Philippines was handled exclusively by the U.S. Army, not with any help from the Marine Corps, due to the Philippines being much
* In October 2006 protesters in Budapest, Hungary,, which protesters were celebrating, conveniently located near the parliament building. They successfully used the tank against riot police, but it quickly ran out of fuel.
* In October 2011, this happened to two world leaders for the price of one. At a G20 summit, French President Nicolas Sarkozy called Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu a liar; President Obama responded "You're fed up with him, but I have to deal with him every day!"
* In October 2013, Alice Munro was revealed to be that year's laureate. Six months later, she was still a top ten paperback bestseller in Sweden.
* In October 2013, Billy was introduced to his female cousin, Wilma "Billie" Whizz; who turned out to be about as fast as him. The first thing that they decided to do was challenge each other to a race. Surprisingly enough for a speedster race, it did not end in a draw.
* In October 2013 the actress for Ms. Krabappel, Marcia Wallace, sadly died.
* In October 2017, William Francis (the former lead singer of Aiden who was performing as the solo act William Control) abruptly dropped out of a tour and returned home, citing a desire to cease his relentless touring and producing schedule to focus on his family and record company. Around that time, a (now deleted) Tumblr blog had posted evidence and accounts from various women and young girls stating that he had been luring mentally-ill women into abusive BDSM relationships in which he ignored boundaries to rape, beat, and extort them. This blog remained virtually unknown until June 2018, when he publicly addressed the accusations and suddenly shut down Control Records while going dark on all social media. This only attracted further attention to the blog as fans Googled the accusations, with his victims also posting screenshots of messages from Will threatening them and saying that they'd never be believed (along with accusations that he was actually making his money through pimping and extortion and using his merchandise business as a legal cover). The blog even reposted statements from his wife explaining that she had knowledge of the offenses and divorced him over it. This resulted in a police investigation across two continents; while he faced no charges due to lack of evidence and has restarted his music career, most of the top Google results for him as of January 2019 are articles on his sexual predation and both his personal and act Wikipedia pages include the information, ensuring that any potential new fans will see it as soon as they look him up.

* In October 2020, Canadian National introduced heritage liveries of their own, with a rebuilt freight locomotive displaying their pre-1960 livery, and newer locomotives painted in the liveries of railroads that were acquired by Canadian National; including Grand Trunk Western, BC Rail, and Illinois Central.
* In October 7, 2008, while analyzing the "stupid" vote, John Oliver broke it down into twelve sections: paste eaters, numbskulls, nitwits, fucktards, people whose hands get stuck in pickle jars when they eat pickles, people who lose arguments to babies, douchenozzles, tiger petters, people who jump up and down on frozen lakes, shaved gorillas who've somehow managed to acquire a driver's license, the voluntarily lobotomized, and
* In October-November 2013, she quote mined Alex Trebek for his "audition tape" for the lead role in film of
* In October of 2010 The Gap, a very well-known clothing retailer in the US changed its logo from the iconic blue box which became well-known when the brand established itself nationally, to a Helvetica-styled "Gap" with a small blue box in the corner. The logo became so hated by fans of the brand that the retailer reverted back to the old logo in less than a week.
* In "Odd Beginnings: Part 1", Opal and Omar escape the Odd Squad Museum, but in the process, they find that the Sticky Sisters have gotten away, something that Opal begins to vent about. Omar attempts to cheer his partner up, but fails, and she goes off on him as she rants about the two of them will be stuck working at the Arctic Odd Squad precinct forever and how the world will end when the Sticky Sisters get their hands on the
* In "Odd Beginnings: Part 2", Opal wonders how the van, given to her and her teammates as part of the newly-created Mobile Unit department, is
* In "Odd, Odd West", Timmy's dad constantly speaks of his fond childhood memories of spending time in the Old West town of Dimmsdale Flats, and Timmy goes through the trouble of
* In "Odd Outbreak", an agent who has just come down the tubes asks O'Callaghan if he's wearing a wig. O'Callaghan responds with an accusatory "No!" not even a
* In "Odds On Evil", the team use special contact lenses to enable them to read marked cards.
* Ino develops the Mind Fragmentation Jutsu, which enables her to insert a part of her mind into her teammates' to relay instructions to them and see and hear whatever they do.
* In "Of Feline Bondage", Jerry uses this trope to tell his fairy godmother about his cat troubles.
* In "Officer Down" a patrol officer is mortally wounded when she blunders into the path of mafia-affiliated diamond thieves while coming back from lunch.
* In official art, its inactive form looks more like an oddly-shaped wand or whip.
* In official context, most states in the USA are officially called "The State of [insert State Name here]" with exception to four, which are "Commonwealth of [insert state name here]." Expect this to come up only on official documents issued by the state in question. "District of Columbia" might also count, but there is a distinction in that it is not a state, but does have some limited voting rights (namely, it can vote for the president, and a non-voting Representative in the House).

* In Off the Record, Frank West delivers even more of these than Chuck did.
* In "Off The Unbeaten Path", there is a Pokemon competition that both Jessie and James enter separately. Jessie cheats while James is determined to play fair. As is typical of this trope, Jessie loses while James is actually the winner, which goes to show that even someone from Team Rocket can win if he doesn't act like a criminal.
* In "O for a Day", Orla and Omar volunteer to be co-Directors at the Seattle Odd Squad precinct in place of Seattle Mr. O, who has accidentally turned himself into a creature known as a Fearly after eating odd mustard. Due to their inexperience in leading a precinct, they believe it's easy at first, but when department heads threaten to quit over not getting the office supplies they want, tensions begin to rise.
* Inogo Bridge, the first stop on the path to Zora's Domain, is where Link first meets Prince Sidon, who is looking for a shock-resistant Hylian who can help save the Zora.
* In "Oh, Brother, Where Art Thou?", after infiltrating a meeting of villains and killing every last one of them, he quips, "Meeting adjourned." A sexy woman shows up and he adds, "And now I am thinking of another meeting. In bed."
* In "Oh Brother, Where Art Thou?", Homer reunites with his long-lost half-brother Herb. Herb was a
* In "Oh Brother, Where Art Thou?" the orphanage director drops some hints as to where Homer might find his half-brother Herb.
* In Ohio Valley Wrestling there was an ongoing effort by security to keep a trespasser who called himself
* In Ohio Valley Wrestling there was the Jersey Shore Crew, Danny Inferno,
* In "Oh, Mercy!", the Gator King asks the audience if he knows his Bible.
* In "Oh No! Yono!", Ron shows his parents baby Hana's karate skills, and he borrows the phrase they use whenever they drop a life-changing bombshell on him.
* In "Oh No! Yono!", Ron's showing Hana the "Flippie Dance" gives her the agility and acrobatic moves needed to beat Yono and Monkey Fist. And little before that, Ron teaching Hana how to
* In Oil Ocean Zone Act 2, entering a submarine and then exiting it will reset the ring-stealing toxic fumes. Additionally, the fumes mechanic is removed completely for the boss fight.
* In "OK Dendy! Let's Be KO", Dendy's transformation into KO is done in the style of the last few seconds of the intro.
* Inoki Genome Federation, which became the largest MMA promotion in Japan, continued to happily showcase pro wrestling matches in between MMA bouts.
* In old adventure games that contained unmappable mazes of identical passages, players often resorted to leaving a trail of objects to find their way around.
* In Old Chicago: After the final open break between Jack and Dion, Jack issues a subpoena to Dion's lover Belle. Dion then reforms, saying he'll help Jack clean up the Patch (a Chicago slum), and asks Belle to marry him. Jack performs the ceremony, and as soon as he pronounces Dion and Belle man and wife, Dion starts laughing. It was all an act designed to make sure Belle can't testify against him.
* In "Old Dogs, New Tricks", Eliot's animation teacher is visiting and keeps trying to take over. His more "old-fashioned" style gives everyone
* In older editions, Celestine the living saint had an ability which means that she can never be killed — rather, if you do, she would get back up. Players found multiple ways to kill her permanently using specific rules phrasing. In 7th edition, Celestine can be revived only once per game.
* In older sources, they were known as "Tohunga," so it inverts this a little.
* In older versions of D&D, "Lawful" implied good and "Chaotic" implied evil. "Old School" D&D derivative
* In "Old-Fashioned Dade, Dade gets frustrated when Fee and Foo monopolize their friend Harvey because he (Dade) wanted to spend time with just Harvey and himself at the annual Old Fashioned Days festival which is
* In "Old Fogey Froggy", Ed is disappointed when his boss tells him that he's too old to work in the hot tub department. He spends the next two days having a mid-life crisis. By the end of the episode, Ed gets his confidence back and fells young again. However, Ed's boss than tells him that he's too young to work in the hot tub department, and Ed is depressed all over again.

* In "Old Man Patrick", SpongeBob helps Patrick remember who he is by re-enacting the opening theme.
* In "Old Money", the family drags Grandpa to a safari park, and at one point he sarcastically asks "Are we in Africa yet?"
* In old RPG lore (that has since then become non-canon), Azeroth was named after the ancient human tribe called the Azotha. Now, the only Azeroth creatures that are named after the planet are the Azerite
* In "Old Stan Of The Mountain" after Stan gets cursed for mocking the elderly causing him to turn into an old man, after misunderstanding a conversation between Steve and Hayley he thinks they want him to die, he then becomes paranoid and repeatedly tries to kill them but keeps falling asleep in the process of doing so.
* In old Swedish novels translated from other languages it used to be very common to find someone traveling so or so many miles, and there would be a footnote telling that this was an
* In "Old Yeller-Belly", a group of dogs show their contempt at Santa's Little Helper for not rescuing Homer from a fire.
* In "Ollie and Frank", Ollie gets a brain for his Frankenstein monster dog Frank by removing part of the brain of an ordinary dog. The ordinary dog goes through the procedure just fine.
* In omakes and anime, it's revealed that Hanatarou's zanpakutou is this,
* In Omar Little's very first appearance, he briefly gets angry at his boyfriend Brandon for accidentally revealing his name during a robbery, implying that none of the Barksdales had ever heard of him before that point. By the end of Season 1, however, it's well-established that he's an in-universe
* In "Omens Part One" King Claudus has a sword fight with Lion-O to show off the Sword of Omens' power.
* In "Ominvore", Hotch believes it's all his fault for one of his actions. What does Rossi do? Offers his gun.
* In Omniverse, Vilgax comes to earth to challenge Ben only to turn tail and leave at the sight of Ma Vreedle.
* In "On a Clear Day, I Can't See My Sister", Homer comments, "Sir, I am disgruntled! And up until this point I was relatively gruntled!" He makes a similar statement in one episode where he wonders to himself if anyone ever gets
* In "On and On," Mariah and Tilda are preparing to flee in light of Bushmaster killing Piranha and bankrupting them. They're cut off by Bushmaster and his men barging their way in, tying them to chairs, and Bushmaster deciding to give Mariah the same fate that Mama Mabel gave his mother 30 years ago in Jamaica, and burns down the brownstone, leaving Tilda untied with the challenge of rescuing her mother. They are only rescued thanks to Luke being tipped off about the fire by D.W. and rushing into the flames to grab them before Mariah can pass out.
* In once case Craftworld Iyanden was getting swamped by Orks, so they call even more Wraithguards/Wraithlords in desperation. Then two Kabals of Dark Eldar came in and aided the Eldar fight off the Orks, their reason they were amused enough of Iyandens angst ridden desperation in calling the dead to fight.
* In "Once More With Feeling", Giles' first line in "I've Got A Theory" turns out to be spot-on, even if he doesn't believe it himself at first:
* In "Once More, With Feeling", Sweet sings "Something's cooking, I'm at the griddle/I gave Nero his very first fiddle!"
* In one '80s story, the Hellfire Club attempts to take the X-Men down by having the White Queen switch bodies with Storm. Turns out that controlling the weather without causing a disaster is much, much harder than Storm makes it look.
* In one, a boy says he "wants to do it with you no matter what!" to a
* In one, a (CGI) child's sore nose flees around to the back of its head, to avoid being assaulted by an ordinary
* In one a child was singing that he's rather glad he's not an Oscar Meyer wiener, because he won't be eaten. The other children turn and glare at him until he starts singing it the usual way.

* In one, a couple talks about the house they just bought. They mention a number of positive things but admit it has a clogging problem. Cut to a family clog dancing through their daily routine.
* In one actual strip, Lt. Fuzz noticed that he never saw Beetle's eyes, so in order to get a look at them, Sarge snuck behind him and yelled "BOO!" making it fly off his head. Unfortunately, Beetle was wearing sunglasses.
* In one ad. A fiddler rises from behind the counter and the representative does an intricate dance exactly as requested.
* In one ad, McGruff the Crime Dog is driven to this by his colleagues, who only baby-talk him.
* In one adventure with Arsenal, Batman shielded them from an explosion with his cape -which was made of
* In one adventure you lure some Red Legion mooks into an ambush by impersonating the Fallen and mocking their commander. The taunts your Ghost uses change depending on whether you’ve done the main campaign yet; either he insinuates that Dominus Ghaul is a
* In one advert, a stagehand accidentally walks in on a naked Ms. Green in her trailer.
* In one Aesop and Son segment the story of the dog who dropped his bone because he was trying to steal the one his reflection had was changed to the story of a dog who attacked his shadow for the same reason. He ends up knocking himself out and his shadow simply steals both bones and walks off. When he realizes that he no longer has a shadow he has to buy one off the black market. His new shadow once belonged to a man named Charlie who, it's implied, met a rather sticky end. Charlie's shadow refuses to mimic his new owners actions and the two of them don't get along very well. After they both learn to work together, it's reveled that
* In one alternate Marvel future (may have been published in Epic) all of humanity save one man has gained super-powers resulting in his being ridiculed for it, only for the reveal that the Celestials now come to 'harvest' humanity for some unknown purpose (all of humanity including the normal guy goes with them except for Aquarian, as his null-field power means it's impossible for him to be moved beyond a certain slow rate of speed leaving him the last living sentient being on Earth).
* In one alternate universe, after Jason Todd was killed Batman went ...a
* In one Amalgam comics storyline, an anti-mutant cult uses a magic ritual to summon a dragon-like creature, who they order to kill all mutants. The dragon immediately roasts them, justifying it by pointing out that all human DNA has at least some mutations.
* In one American folk tale, it's said that the Chinese used to give extravagant names to their firstborn sons but very plain names to their younger children. So when Chang, the second-born, sees his brother, Tikki-tikki-tembo-no-sa-rembo-chari-bari-ruchi-pip-peri-pembo, fall into the well, he tries to tell his mother... only to be repeatedly told to give his brother the proper respect by saying his name
* In one arc Agatha decides to cure one of her love interests and herself of a deadly disease by killing and revivifying themselves.
* In one arc, Boy Blue steals the Witching Cloak and the Vorpal Blade to invade the Homelands by himself. When he returns safely, with important intelligence for Fabletown, his "punishment" for the theft is to be sent to the farm, where Rose Red just has him help her out with her daily work.
* In one arc, Dilbert unwisely signs a contract that gives a company the right to harvest his organs. The company lawyer advises him to get a sworn affidavit from attractive female coworkers to prove he has cooties. (Much to his regret, he gets enough signatures rather quickly.)
* In one arc he buys a tax program for Windows... because there's a window right there in the office.
* In one arc, Jason accidentally makes Eileen Jacobson fall in love with him
* In one arc, Keiichi notices that his friend Satoko is being abused by her uncle,
* In one arc, Linus gets a new hobby, drawing on air. Simply put, he traces things on air with his finger, and being a

* In one arc, Ranma and Nabiki become engaged, instead of Ranma and Akane. After Ranma finds out that Nabiki's been playing him this whole time for a profit by saying she loved him, he wants revenge. So, he decides he'll make her feel weirded out by pretending to be in love with her. He invites her on a date, and eventually, Nabiki ends up being chased by Ranma in a maze. Ranma's determined to see it through, so he pulls her through a hedge and screams that he loves her. To his great distress, it turns out to be
* In one arc, Robin escaped the Joker by deliberately misidentifying the source of just such a quote; the Joker thought it was more important to argue and convince him he was wrong than to just go ahead and kill him, which was the whole reason he'd captured him in the first place.
* In one arc, Tedd (disguised as his girlfriend) is persuaded to do this to experience how things are different, with some suggestion he does this anyway to test that sort of thing out. Elliot is forced into a little of it, and his
* In one arc, the Authority discovers that some experiments the government did caused a dimensional distortion and the end of the world is one week away... and what they do is
* In one arc the crew encounter a small STL starship with a solar sail that "you could giftwrap planets with."
* In one arc the kids accidentally destroy the computer and only fess up after about a week of Roger being blamed for it (as he was the next to use it).
* In one arc, the title cat kept snapping back and forth between hallucinations where the house had been abandoned and hallucinations that Jon had come back with food only to switch back to the "abandoned" one. While the entire thing was
* In one arc, the Yorozuya gang and others decide to play a MMORPG called
* In one, Ashley is afraid that she won't make any friends at her new school. Phil says that she has a great personality. Her response? "Great! Now I'm ugly."
* In one, a teenage girl discovers that her father bought her a car and talks about it with excitement. Her scenes are intercut with a businessman who's discovered that his own car has been stripped. The scenes with the girl and the the scenes with the businessman have the same dialogue delivered in different tones.
* In one, a woman learns the younger employee she's been sleeping with is actually her nephew and is violently sick. Said young man doesn't react as much, because he's still under the shock of learning that he's the product of
* In "One Bad Apple", we find the spot under the lamp is often where the CMCs go to think.
* In one bad ending Shirou is reduced to a torso and head suspended in a liquid that has left him drugged into insensibility. When Rin finds him she shatters the container, letting Shirou die.
* In one banter between Isabela and Aveline when asking about Aveline's new husband, Isabela is either providing a glimpse at her rather odd attitude to sex or pulls a rather mean prank on Aveline:
* In one baseball story arc, Peter is standing at home plate as a hallucination of Roger reciting batting advice hovers in front of him. In the final panel, his teammates' reaction suggests he is swinging the bat at the hallucination to get it to shut up.
* In one battle during the Clone Wars, in which the Republic was laying siege to the Separatist shipyard-world of Pammant, a Republic battlecruiser suffered a hyperdrive malfunction and collided with Pammant at hundreds, maybe thousands of times the speed of light. Pammant was reduced to some radioactive chunks.
* In one BBC modern-day adaptation, the quote is "pigs will fly"; Macbeth is stabbed after the police land on the building in a helicopter.
* In one Bolo story, the eponymous tanks, which are referred to as planetary siege units, and are easily capable of dueling with starships in orbit, are used as plowing equipment.
* In one book, Aximili lampshades the trope, complaining that Star Trek aliens are completely unrealistic and make no sense. He's particularly confused by Worf (they apparently saw

* In one book, Dean crushes the glass in his hand after Harry kisses Ginny.
* In one book, for example, you need to choose between whether you should run back into a burning building after a friend or escape. If you return then you live and get a relatively happy ending (
* In one book, Han and Leia (who'd had an almighty row a couple of chapters earlier) run into an old acquaintance of his, and when Leia asks him how they met he names the trope all but word for word. Leia was
* In one book, Harry specifically notes that involving the general public in supernatural conflicts would result in an escalation into global chaos. However, in a later book, when fighting an enemy faction that refuses to adhere to any of established rules, he seriously considers the option of getting the government to attack them under guise of them being terrorists (which is what they are anyways). Calling in mortals is seen as something of a "nuclear option" in the supernatural world. Normal humans may not know what's going on, but they can keep throwing bodies, guns, and potentially actual nukes at a problem until it goes away. Consequently most supernatural creatures keep a moderately low profile, though the mortals'
* In one book, Rachel helps Cassie retrieve a paper she doodled on with things like hearts, "Cassie + Jake," and cupids. The ensuing conversation:
* In one book, Ramona overhears her mother talking in a serious voice. She only hears "I don't think", "I think we could", her name, and the words "teacher" and "school", so she believes that she is in trouble with her teacher.
* In one book, there's a mild version involving a school dress code. The kids adopt obnoxious new fashions, and due to an escalating power struggle between the acting principal who keeps making new rules and the kids using
* In one book, there's Rolls-Skoda, specialists in the production of luxury armoured cars.
* In one book, the writers make clear that the Masquerade doesn't actually mean that anyone
* In one book, they cut up Marco's shirt to make armbands so that they can blend in among the
* In one book they have to deal with a large number of alien corpses but since they don't know what their burial customs are they settle for sending them into the sun as well in order to show respect.
* In one book they use "atomic ray guns" that apparently boil the blood of any organic thing hit until it explodes.
* In one British legal case, the defendants tried to use this defence. Because a crime must have both an action coupled with an intention (or recklessness/negligence etc), two individuals tried to argue that, because the man they had decided to beat to death was not quite dead when they threw his "body" off a cliff to dispose of it, the Crown did not have the necessary convergence of action and intention (they did not intend to kill him when they threw him off a cliff, believing that he was already dead). The judge told them, essentially, to bugger off.
* In one Build Team wager, a cameraman was drafted to hold the money until the bet was resolved (Tory won).
* In one Butterfinger commercial, Bart Simpson buries Homer in the sand at the beach so firmly that Homer can't move. Bart takes this opportunity to steal Homer's candy bar, while in the background Homer is being menaced by crabs... and then the tide starts coming in...
* In one campaign, commercials for Capital One credit cards featured rampaging Barbarian hordes, who would mercilessly attack anyone not bearing the correct card. Because Barbarians are more interesting than shoppers, they quickly became the main characters of these commercials, using the cards themselves to stock up for their various acts of mayhem.
* In one cartoon, after the Coyote has been hit by a falling piano, he gets up with a mouth full of piano key "teeth" on which he is able to play a couple of bars of Taps before collapsing.
* In one cartoon, Daffy is lost in the desert, dying of thirst, and hallucinating.

He finds a
* In one cartoon he decided to play hard to get himself. This consisted of him chasing Penelope around shouting "I am hard to get! You cannot get me!"
* In one cartoon, Pepe sees Penelope on a cruise boat and runs after it. As he sinks he calmly tells the audience, "Silly me, I forgot I cannot swim."
* In one cartoon starring Hippety Hopper (the baby kangaroo Sylvester keeps confusing for a giant mouse), a man sees Hippety jumping down the street, throws away a flask from his coat pocket and walks away.
* In one cartoon, two detectives are summoned to solve a murder — at a butler's convention.
* In one cartoon, Woody passes by a poster detailing the villain in the episode. "Yuck!" he says, "who'd want that?"
* In one case, a criminal tried to use it to get away with insurance fraud but the cops told him the clock started running not when the crime took place but when they started investigating it.
* In one case, all three actors in a play attempt to murder another actor in the play. One attempts to switch a fake rapier with a real rapier, one attempts to put real poison in the cup that is used a pretend poisoned cup for the play, and a third attempts to electrocute another actor.
* In one case, as he's riding on the hood of a car he sees an NYPD patrol car next to him. He cracks a joke about what he's doing probably
* In one case Edgeworth fills in for Phoenix as a defense attorney and, accordingly, becomes one of these as well. He comes away with a new respect for his friendly rival; after all, Edgeworth knows that after this case he can go back to his cushy, everyone-loves-me job of being a prosecutor, but Phoenix puts up with this bullshit every day,
* In one case, he openly admits that there is absolutely no connection between the sceheme (sabotage a pretzel festival) and the goal (to take over the Tri-State Area), and even makes a Venn diagram that proves this. He brushes this off with a "But I'll work it out, you'll see."
* In one case, he says "Let's do this!" before Rachel can because he
* In one case, Morris has some good news and some bad news: "For one thing, I'm almost positive that your troubles here are not being caused by a poltergeist, or any other kind of resident spirit". When asked for the bad news, he says that
* In one case, several weeks of strips forewent business as usual to have the characters go on strike for a larger panel size.
* In one case, someone was cleared of murder during a burglary but discovered to be guilty of
* In one case, the culprit's alibi was that, when he walked past the victim's house, he heard the electric clock (which was unplugged when the crime was committed) ticking, the contradiction being that electric clocks don't tick. When this was first written, (back in the 1970s), this was
* In one case, the head of an orchestra had two skilled violinists and had to decide which would play a solo on opening night. He picks A about five minutes before the performance is meant to start. When he goes to get A, he finds A has been killed, and then has to pick B. Haledjian decides that it must have been B who did it, because B walked onto the stage, sat down and began to play, when he should have tuned his violin and rosined his bow first. Like it's totally unthinkable that someone with an equal chance of getting a part would get themselves ready to play it, especially if the choice wasn't going to be made until about five minutes before it was meant to begin.
* In one case, the "how did that stuff get down there" question was answered: a fashion designer decided the best way to publicize his new line was to dump the
* In one case, the main characters even twigged that they could use this time to rescue the 'mons.
* In one case, the prosecutors give a plea bargain for a short prison sentence to a woman who helped kill her boyfriend kill her sister. However, near the end of the episode, they force her to confess her entire role in the crime in front of the judge, including

* In one case, the question of whether or not a ring bearing a very valuable jewel was stolen or legally bequeathed comes down to the accusing party's testimony. She says that when she saw the deceased for the last time (when he supposedly bequeathed it to her), he was reading a book and wearing the ring on his right hand, so when he turned a page the gem flashed brilliantly. Haledjian figures that the 'witness' is lying because the dead man was reading a book written in Hebrew before he died—and Hebrew is written right to left. The man would have been turning the left page with his left hand, not the right page with his right hand... But most people turn the page with their
* In one case, Trebek decided to just pick a clue from the category "Foreign Flicks", but Connery immediately buzzed in and responded with "Ursula Andress". After being asked for clarification, he then responded with "Ursula Andress, Catherine Deneuve, and Charo, twice", after which Trebek emphasized that it was "FOREIGN
* In one case, when the "Eco-Warriors" subline (which included main cast member Flint) was worked into the book, Hama added a line about how the team's special new uniforms were made out of
* In one celebrity series, the "fastest finger" round whittled down the contestants until only Norm Macdonald was left. His question: "Put the following letters in order to spell a popular man's name. (A) N. (B) O. (C) R. (D) M." Macdonald took just over 9 seconds to get the answer.
* In one challenge, they have to rescue Hammond on a snowy mountaintop and Clarkson/May are given American pickup trucks. Traditionally, they have had very poor views of trucks, like in the challenge with driving cars to Louisiana and constantly mocking Hammond's Dodge truck. In this challenge, they fall in absolute love with their trucks with Clarkson remarking that they "were properly besotted" with the vehicles. Clarkson adored his Ford Velociraptor because of its insane horsepower and mentioning how even a base line vehicle is exceptionally cheap for its horsepower rating (mentioning that for the price of a Vauxhall diesel one can get a truck with a 350HP V8) and May loves his diesel Chevrolet Silverado because of its high torque at low RPMs and being a general workhorse.
* In one chapter, after Senbei and Arale rehabilitate a bear that was raised in captivity and release him back into the wild, the bear's
* In one chapter, Bayonetta hijacks a motorcycle and starts it using her middle finger.
* In one chapter, he puts his hand over hers and says he'll "teach [her] something no
* In one chapter, Jade is at a shrine, going after a Shadowkhan tablet version of a
* In one chapter Keroro flips out when the chapter's ruckus ruins his Gunpla models. He lights something that looks like a candle claiming it can blow up the Earth. Disaster is averted when Fuyuki reminds Keroro that he can just buy more models, and Keroro casually douses the candle in a pail of water.
* In one chapter of the manga, a mirror image of girl-type Ranma come-to-life tries to seduce the original Ranma wearing this outfit. Nabiki hangs a lampshade on the trope and its popularity in Japan on this occasion.
* In one chapter of "The Phantom Reboot", this occurs when Jazz passes by Danny's room when he hears Danny and Sam attempting to meditate.
* In one chapter she vanishes without explanation. He is heartbroken and cries for her to come back, not to mention goes to great effort to find her. When she leaves for a space ceremony where she might get married to another man, he borrows Ten's very small ship and goes to interfere.
* In one chapter, the end of a page shows a boy with a flushed face, and then Shitara making a face pretty close to an ahegao, with her
* In one chapter the titular character's failed attempt to control his
* In one classic Ernie and Bert sketch from 1969, Bert sneezes his nose off. Ernie proceeds to stick it back on in various wrong places.
* In one clip, a divorce lawyer breaks into a man's house to help his ex-wife retrieve belongings she claims belong to her; upon kicking in the back door, Mike

Britt inquires if this lawyer is from the firm of Gangsta, Gangsta, and Gangsta. When the clip is over, Billy Kimball puts on a fake informercial for firm of Kimball and Kimball, the firm that doesn't handle actual
* In one Clone Wars comic Anakin tries to revive a dead jedi by force-gripping his heart, implied to be one of his first experiments with the dark side. It doesn't work beyond creeping out everyone present, and gets him a lecture on how the Force can't be used to solve every problem.
* In "One Coarse Meal", Mr. Krabs discovers Plankton has a phobia of whales and begins using such to his advantage, disguising himself as Pearl and tormenting his rival to the point of attempting suicide by being run over by a bus. SpongeBob, despite being rivals with Plankton as well, is not happy at Mr. Krabs's plot and calls him out for it, but he doesn't listen.
* In "One Coarse Meal" Mr. Krabs disguises himself as Pearl to scare Plankton. The flaws in the disguise don't appear until he takes it off.
* In one cold open, Batman and Mister Miracle are strapped to a rollercoaster full of death traps, and escape at the last second.
* In one comic after the "Judge Cal" arc, the Judges are trying to figure out how to clean up a district that had become totally lawless. The council wants to send in a small army of Judges. Dredd decides that they need to send a different message and convinces them to just send one. Dredd went into the district with nothing but his gun and a dump truck. He left, totally unharmed, with a dump truck full of criminals.
* In one comic, a paladin discovers the titular party has killed a dragon. She then accuses them of possibly killing a creature of benevolence and wisdom, and asks why they thought it deserved death, to which Roy Greenhilt replies, "Erm... its scales weren't shiny?" which placates the paladin. Elan then breaks the
* In one comic, Batman takes Zatanna on a mission but bans her from using magic due to trust issues. Zatanna ends up shot and encased in water. She heals the wound but Batman has to give her CPR because she can still drown like any other human. The comic cuts away to Zatanna fine later, albeit with a hoarse throat.
* In one comic, Calvin lets out a sneeze so strong that it blows him off the planet and sets him into orbit, but he luckily lets out another sneeze that sends him back to Earth.
* In one comic, Calvin tries to pull this excuse on his dad, saying that he's a pawn of unfortunate influences and the culture is to blame. Calvin's dad responds that that means he needs to build more character and
* In one comic, Daisy bets Donald that he couldn't go a day without eating anything. Cue a guy handing him a fresh hot dog (he can't take it with him on the bus), Grandma Duck nominating him as a judge in the local bake-off, and a college roommate dragging him into a restaurant as a celebration of their reunion and ordering everything on the menu. In the end, Donald is undone when Daisy catches him eating a chocolate bar, but he cheats by re-adjusting his wristwatch to trick her into thinking that it's already past midnight. The next week, they go on a date at a luxurious mountain hotel known for its all-you-can-eat buffet, but Donald gets into an accident which injures his mouth, rendering him incapable of eating anything besides soup.
* In one comic (during the John Byrne years) Superman was deputized as a police officer so Lex Luthor (
* In one comic, Garfield claimed he's going to cut back on sleeping by taking only 2 naps per day instead of 4. However, he specifically meant 2 four-hour naps when he originally did 4 two-hour naps.
* In one comic in which Grace, in squirrel form, is being scratched and petted by Sarah, both Sarah and the commentary point out that it is a very unwise idea to attempt to do this to a real squirrel. Grace can be trusted not to scratch and bite; actual squirrels cannot.
* In one comic Jeremy's dad uses the phrase "That's what I'm talking about", causing Jeremy to shudder. According to Jeremy, when his dad uses slang that's the least bit modern, the world feels out of balance and weird. Cue his dad using VERY outdated slang that even confuses his mom, which relieves Jeremy who states that things are back to normal.

* In one comic, Jeremy's girlfriend finds Amy sobbing all by herself, talking like Rich left her or something. In the last panel, Rich comes out of the men's room and Amy glomps him, sobbing "Don't leave me like that again!"
* In one comic, Jon insists on eating 2 cookies and Garfield only have one. Garfield complains that's not fair. Camera zoom out so we see that Garfield's cookie has the radius of a bicycle wheel while Jon's two are miniature (at least compared to Garfield's cookie).
* In one comic, Jughead as Captain Hero faces a courteous villain who left his own car via ejection seat, while the car is in motion.
* In one comic, Miny discovers a box of grenades that she believed were
* In one comic, not killing him. (Of course, the comic has a reference to this page).
* In one comic Petey says he can't pronounce the native name of a planet, "my arms don't bend right and the clicks don't sound right above water." He needs a genetically modified squid to act as an interpreter.
* In one comic, Scrooge is supposed to face Flintheart Glomgold in a game that resembles an absurdly complicated version of chess. He goes out to seek a retired champion in that game to teach it to him, only to find out that the man isn't a good player, he's just so good at glaring at his opponents that they can't play properly against him. He does help by following Scrooge back home and glaring at Glomgold so badly during the game that he immediately makes a suicidal move.
* In one comics it was revealed that a wizard Merasmus took his eye, after a sentient book possessed the eye for the lols. In one of the Halloween maps, the players fight Merasmus, and the Demoman seems really eager to kick his ass.
* In one comic, Spidey is facing Kraven the Hunter in the jungles of Africa. Kraven uses a blowdart to drug Spider-man, making him lose most of his strength and his spider-sense, then tricks him into falling into quicksand.
* In one comic, Susie is happy with the smiley face sticker she got on her test. Calvin, however, is less than thrilled. When she asks what he got, he refuses to tell her, leading her to accuse him of getting a frowny face sticker. Calvin denies it, then comments to himself that he never knew they even
* In one comic, there are two scientists. One is explaining some complex math that shows that those many wrongs equal a right. However, if you do the math described, it equals 0. 0 wrongs make a right.
* In one comic where American special forces are trying to capture Castle, one of the injured soldiers who is told that Blackwater (a real life PMC) won't hire him now.
* In one commercial, a dentist is going around a store humiliating people who are thinking of buying soda. He then attempts to
* In one commercial, a kid is getting his first paycheck from the fast food restaurant manager, who starts to wax philosophic about when he joined the work force. The kid notices that the check is exactly enough to buy the game console advertised and promptly says, "I quit!" (Too bad the kid forgot about paying for other stuff (like tax, electricity, rent,
* In one commercial for a website called Homeaway that gives you discounts on hotel rooms, a test room's family fighting eventually causes the father to trip and land on a tray causing the fake 'test baby' to get launched all the way to the other side of the room and do a
* In one commercial for Bridgestone Tires, they coated a bowling ball in the roll-surface of their tires, allowing it to be rolled down the lane in a perfect line for a strike. Actually, the main difficulty in aiming a bowling ball is the fact that it's heavy, has a polished or just very smooth surface, and that the floor you'll be rolling it on is also heavily polished and oiled, and therefore slippery. Coating a bowling ball in
* In one commercial for Glade-scented candles, a woman tries to pass off her new candles as fancy foreign candles. She removes the label and attempts to throw it away, but struggles with the adhesive and it ends up sticking to her skirt in the vicinity of her rear end. After she responds to questioning about whether it was a Glade candle with, "No, it's, uh, French.

* In one commercial for Shoppers Drugmart, a man sees his wife coming home with a bunch of Shoppers bags. When he asks what's inside them, the wife says that they're Christmas gifts. The husband then imagines his family opening gifts on Christmas morning, with him getting toilet paper, his daughter getting mouthwash, and his son getting soap.
* In one commercial for Trident gum that takes place at a movie theater, a guy sits down next to his girlfriend with a
* In one commercial, he's complaining about his plight in a diner and claims that no one else there knows what it's like to be killed for food. Then he notices that the seat next to him is occupied by a turkey.
* In one commercial, one teenage boy forces his younger brother upstairs so he can spend time with his girlfriend. The younger brother then uses the TV to show the girlfriend a slideshow of pictures that indicate he's cheating on her.
* In one commercial, the young son of a family was filling the tub with water in preparation for a bath but then went away and forgot about it; at the end of the commercial the bathroom door pops open from the water pressure and a wall of water starts to drain out into the rest of the house. The son has a slightly evil grin on his face.
* In one Cool Wall segment, Clarkson is joking around with the audience and gets to a rather attractive young lady with an American accent. Asking about her accent, we get this exchange:
* In one deleted scene, readable in the novelization, Buford "Mad Dog" Tannen and his gang ride toward town for Buford's showdown with Marty. They are stopped by Marshal Strickland and his son, who have shotguns trained at Buford and are intending to stop him. Buford shoots the marshal's shotgun out of his hands, then orders his son to put his gun down as well, before giving the Marshal a stern order to ride out of town for a few hours and leave him alone while he deals with Marty. Marshal Strickland and his son start to trot off, with Buford training his revolver on the Marshal's back. Suddenly, Buford shoots the Marshal in the back. As the Marshal collapses, Buford shouts, "I lied, Marshal!" then he and his gang ride off. With his dying breath, the marshal tells his son, "Remember that word, son: discipline," to which the son replies "I will, pa." This scene was cut because it was too dark for the content of the rest of the franchise. Had it been retained in the movie, this would be the crime for which the deputy is arresting Buford after his duel with Marty. It also explains why Strickland's deputy is arresting Buford, and not Strickland himself. Also,
* In one Disney Comic featuring Donald, Donald goes back in time and accidentally makes a second moon explode.
* In one Dodge truck commercial, the guy wakes up to the sound of a cricket chirping, in the middle of the night, across a babbling brook, and silences it with a single accurate shot with a compound bow in between chirps.
* In one Don shoves a stick of dynamite down a telephone, the audience can see the natural conclusion coming from a mile away: It's going to blow up in Donald's face. However, there is such a long delayed reaction that it makes the audience put their guard down, so when the inevitable explosion happens we're taken aback.
* In one dungeon, Fei comes across a door that he says is locked from the other side. Much later in the same dungeon, Fei finds himself on the other side of the door, and announces that he still can't open it. Moments later, the door opens, and the characters walk out. One of them calls him stupid: the door wasn't locked,
* In one Duracell battery ad, a woman keeps insisting that the game controller she's wielding gets "more life" from its batteries, even as her rear end is sinking deeper into the gaps between her couch cushions. By the end of the ad, her head, hands (still playing her video game) and sneakers are all that remain visible.
* In one earlier anime episode, Kinnikuman is fighting a sea monster for publicity, only to find said monster FAR larger than he is and gets swallowed whole. As a funeral is held in his honor, the sea monster stomach makes some unpleasant noises...and Kinnikuman crawls out from under it. It's not hard to figure out how Kin escaped.

* In one early comic, Spidey tries to save his then-girlfriend, Betty Brant, from
* In one early draft of "The Star Wars", Princess Leia's mother, Queen Breha of Aquilae,
* In one early draft, "What a Joy to Be Young" was to be given several reprises. It was dropped during tryouts, despite one recording implying that it made it into New York.
* In one early episode, a girl kills a man on the bus because she thinks he's about to rape her. It's turned into a cause to celebrate (she's white, he's black, it's thought she assumed he would rape her because of his race) when it turns out that
* In one early episode, he bursts through a window... and later gets a bill for it.
* In one early episode, Mrs. Quinn (Dr. Quinn's visiting mother) explains how things work to Colleen. Poor girl just got her first period and thought the bleeding means she's gonna die.
* In one early Foghorn Leghorn cartoon, Henery Hawk is left in the dark as to what a chicken really looks like (his grandfather made up all kinds of lies about it to dissuade him from accompanying him to get a chicken, as he would get in the way). When he sees Foghorn, he doesn't think that he is a chicken, but rather a "loud-mouthed shnook". The rooster spends much of the cartoon trying to convince Henery otherwise. Eventually, Henery throws a lit stick of dynamite into the barnyard dog's doghouse, and Foghorn tries to stop the dynamite from blowing up, fearing he will get blamed for it. Naturally, of course, he fails; the dynamite explodes, and the dog slams Foghorn against the ground repeatedly as punishment, after which he calls him a "no-good chicken". That's all Henery needs to hear — he knocks out Foghorn with a shovel and drags him off, not caring whether he is a chicken or a shnook, only that he would be good in his oven.
* In one early season 1 episode, the NYPD is put on high alert for a bomb threat by homegrown Islamic terrorists.
* In one early short, Popeye is in the jungle and he's approached by a lion, who roars and shouts, "I am king!" Popeye just replies, "Well I'll crown ya! WHAM!" and bonks him over the head. A bump then appears on the lion's head taking the shape of a crown.
* In one early Social Link conversation, Yosuke will ask if the killer will be found guilty. If it's done after a certain point, he'll refer to the current suspect by name.
* In one early storyline, Johnny "Human Torch" Storm attempts to pull off a secret identity. It lasts less than an issue, before he remembers that he was already a celebrity and thus it's pointless.
* In One Ear, Out the Other's right ear we hear a sound like someone blowing across the top of an empty beer bottle and the hair covering Kathy's left ear billows in the breeze.
* In one edited-for-TV version, Jules's line "English, motherfucker! Do you speak it?!" is changed to "English, little sucker! Do you speak it?!"
* In one edition, an individual strongly implied to be Jesus (and an odd resemblance to
* In one election ad for Mayor of Rio de Janeiro, there was a TV ad featuring a woman asking a neighbor for directions. After the neighbor gave overly complicated directions, the woman asked for some easier way and the suggestion was voting for Cesar Maia for Mayor. Note: That was the election where he won his first term as Mayor.
* In one e-mail, Strong Bad asks Coach Z if his skin is green or if he just runs around wearing footy pajamas all the time. Coach Z responds with "Oh, I've got footies all right.
* In one ending, Crono and Marle return home only to discover that people in the castle are strangely "ribbiting" like frogs. They decide to check some old tapes and find out that their ally Frog married Marle's ancestor, Queen Leene, resulting in Marle (and many other people distantly related to her) are now part frog, although they generally look and act exactly the same.

* In one ending, Makoto begins sleeping with Ai. He assumes she knew that the relationship was just about sex while she assumed they were dating. She has no real ending, largely as a result of constantly being screwed over by Otome and Karen.
* In one episode, ‘Ello Gov’nor, they watch a movie about a taxi cab that gets possessed by its old driver and kills everyone who was involved with someone that killed him and then eats a man who was just walking his dog after running him over.
* In one episode, a 12-year-old girl is found to be sexually abused and her brother is suspected when his semen is found on her nightdress. He gets interrogated harshly but can't stick up for himself until Nick quietly takes him to the side and tells him that there's nothing wrong with masturbation. The brother then admits that the nightdress was the closest thing he could grab to clean up after himself but that he was too ashamed to tell the police this.
* In one episode, Aang has a sleep-deprived hallucination that Appa (a six-legged flying bison) stands up on his back legs and wields no less than four swords, one in each of his other "legs". (And has a samurai fight with Momo the flying lemur, who only has one.)
* In one episode, a bomb went off in Darkwing's face as Negaduck declares "This town is toast!"
* In one episode, a business card is shown with 555 as the area code, but the prefix itself is 123.
* In one episode, a businessman sitting next to the Warners, who pester him and want him to be their "special friend", tells them that "I'd rather be stranded on an island and be eaten by cannibals than be your 'special friend'!"
* In one episode, a cardinal hires ISIS to protect the pope under the assumption that their
* In one episode, a character attempts CPR on his subordinates, but only succeeds in breaking their ribs, and is later taunted with the true statistics of CPR.
* In one episode, a character says that the story of a princess who could control ice is fairly well known in her area, and in the episode where Olaf is a guest star, Olaf mentions that he was just hanging out with Princess Anna just a while ago. Sofia has no idea what either of them are talking about, meaning that she's unfamiliar with the story of
* In one episode, a cleaning spell goes wrong, resulting in the black-furred cat Salem turning white. The response:
* In one episode, a comment is made about Starfire making the Titans watch a documentary about hot dogs in the past, to which she promptly responds she's amazed that humans ate so many "pigs... and insects."
* In one episode, a conversation between Rachel and Monica about the fact that Monica has been shopping with Julie (Ross' girlfriend at the time) sounds exactly as if Monica has cheated on Rachel. Of course,
* In one episode, a dead man is found handcuffed to a bed. It emerges the hotel has branded cuffs available for just that sort of thing.
* In one episode a deathly ill villain manages to capture Data and download his own personality into the robot brain. He is rather pleased with his new super-strong and immortal body, but when he offers to do the same for his girlfriend, she breaks down crying, finding the idea monstrous.
* In one episode, a defendant decides to do this to delay his trial, giving him a chance to escape from custody.
* In one episode, a demonic tree drains people's body-fluids with its vines, but it becomes poisoned when it tries this on Angel, who is a vampire.
* In one episode, a dominatrix is thought to be a murderer because she asks for a lawyer in the middle of questioning. When she turns out to be innocent, it's decided that she insisted on a lawyer simply to be unhelpful in a show of dominance...and because she was a former lawyer herself.
* In one episode, a drunken Stewie crashes Brian's car into the front of
* In one episode a falling Bender is heard yelling for "someone fat" to get in his way from off-screen while the camera focuses on an obese man and skinny blonde. Bender lands on the skinny blonde.

* In one episode, a football player has to have his leg amputated. Feeling angry and bitter about it, he contemplates suicide, thinking that playing football was the only thing that he was any good at. But as he and Radar reminisce about a tough game he played, he remembers the importance of not giving up, so he leaves with the resolve to at least try.
* In one episode, a former abuse victim refuses to have anything to do with his infant son for fear of this trope: the older boy who raped him was in turn being abused by a sports coach, and the victim was terrified that the abuse had left him with "a switch waiting to flip" that would make him become an abuser the way his own abuser did. The detectives help him to see that what he fears is not inevitable, and at the end of the episode, he holds his baby for the first time.
* In one episode, after countless attempts to fix the roof (making it worse in the process and falling off several times) he actually succeeds in fixing it
* In one episode, after Cyborg loses a match against Atlas and fails to rescue his friends, Cyborg then decides to give up, until his reflection in a mirror gives him a rousing speech.
* In one episode, after feeding Garfield, Jon slumps in front of the television:
* In one episode, after Rygel ran off to sell the others out to the Peacekeepers D'Argo hails him over the comm and throws a string of unintelligible but very menacing Luxan words after Rygel. According to Chiana he said "Something about [Rygel's] corpse, and a...body function."
* In one episode, after Winchester has deftly saved a patient's leg from being amputated, Colonel Potter says that Winchester has "A silo full of smug", but definitely knows which end of a scalpel is up.
* In one episode, after yet more rivalry-fuelled chaos and humiliation, when the two gather to lick wounds and bemoan their competitiveness Frasier has a realization and points out that, contrary to the usual purely-negative implications of the trope, their rivalry has actually had some positive effects in their lives, as it's also spurred them on to greater success and happiness.
* In one episode a government agent is trying to bully Michael so he has Barry set up an offshore account in the agent's name. They then move the same few thousand dollars in and out of the account repeatedly to make it seem like the agent is receiving payoffs through the account. Michael then blackmails the agent with this to have him back off.
* In one episode, a guy ends up fricasseeing himself by firing a bazooka from inside an extremely enclosed area.
* In one episode, a guy walks into a police station holding a gun claiming to have shot a doctor. He turns out to have been taking the heat for his wife: the guy had a terminal illness and the doctor had conned the couple out of their savings with a quack treatment involving leeches leading the wife to shoot her. He wanted to be sent to jail in her place seeing as he didn't have long to live.
* In one episode a hacker tries to defend himself from Section 9 by saying that he's the son of the Canadian ambassador.
* In one episode, a health inspector visits the Krusty Krab. Mr. Krabs and Spongebob "kill" him with a bad Krabby Patty (thinking he was the fake inspector mentioned on TV) and try to bury him, but he's still alive.
* In one episode, a high school wrestling coach is found dismembered, and there is evidence that he sent child pornography to his team. As the investigation goes underway, it's revealed that
* In one episode a human male is discovered frozen in a block of ice, dating from... a few years ago. He's totally fine once he's thawed, but he has some trouble returning to his former life after his unexplained absence.
* In one episode, a Jaffa tried to telepathically influence the symbiote in her body and convert him to good. It didn't work, and the Goa'uld killed her as soon as he found a new host.
* In one episode a Jerk Jock graduate appears and is killed by the very goal post being put up in his honor. The episode focuses less on revenge, however, than exploring characters' reactions to his death.
* In one episode, Alan accidentally ignites a grease fire in Hooper's Store while trying to make fried chicken. It doesn't help that he leaves the stove unattended to talk to Maria and Elmo.

* In one episode, Al invites over a friend who Peggy despises because he stole her mother's cigarette lighter at their wedding. Al defends the guy, claiming that "he probably thought it was in the folds of a couch" (a
* In one episode, a man had 'spread his seed far and wide'—you could hardly turn a corner without finding one of his bastards. One couple didn't meet until they were both in graduate school in Canada and got married, only later realizing they were half-siblings; she was squicked, he didn't mind. It's also been used in several other episodes.
* In one episode, a man receives an email from his uncle where the uncle confesses to killing his wife. That investigation is fairly straightforward, but then they learn the email was sent as part of a program designed to send out messages in the event of the Rapture, but the system was inadvertantly activated when one of the men behind the scheme was murdered, and
* In one episode a man suffering financial difficulties fakes his suicide to look like a hunting accident so that his wife will still receive his life insurance.
* In one episode, a man takes his bride-to-be back to his hometown, which is slightly different than he remembered it. No one recognizes him. Someone else is living in the family home. He finds out he's
* In one episode a man was killed at a local university and the forensic evidence destroyed using information gained at a lecture given by one of the cast. After discovering that the
* In one episode, a morbidly obese man is stuffed in the trunk of his own car for several days. The decomposition and the sheer size of his body makes it impossible to get him out of there in one piece.
* In one episode a murder makes no sense... until near the end, Castle realizes this about an important participant in an event that took place 20 years earlier:
* In one episode an ancient Japanese sorcerer gets summoned and starts threatening the Turtles in English. One turtle says, "If he's from ancient Japan, why is he speaking English?" Another replies, "Because we can't afford subtitles."
* In one episode, an attempt to cheat didn't help them win, but it did get them a bonus to their score for
* In one episode, and educational video segues into a porno "now that we've solved the garbage crisis, doctor, perhaps you can help me with my sexual inhibitions" "With gusto." (Because the video was on the Internet and in the future, just as today,
* In one episode an Earth Kingdom soldier mentions that one way the Fire Nation deals with war prisoners is dressing them up in military uniforms and sending them to the front lines without weapons.
* In one episode a newscast announces that the Bible's dedication page and "work of fiction" disclaimer was discovered.
* In one episode, a news crew film a postal worker on a killing spree, knowingly not stopping a customer from going inside and defends this with "journalistic integrity".
* In one episode, "Angelica's Worst Nightmare", Charlotte believes she's pregnant at the start only to end the episode by stating she isn't. It's never clarified what occurred. Did she jump to conclusions, get a false reading, miscarry, have an abortion, or what?
* In one episode, an Internal Affairs investigator firmly, yet fairly, investigates Sergeant Ed Brown when a composite sketch of a man who fatally beat a known criminal bears a resemblance to Ed. Ultimately, it turns out that the culprit merely resembled Ed, and there are no hard feelings on either side.
* In one episode, an intern for the Black Panthers was sentenced to death for the murder of a cop despite the real killer leaving the gun with the receipt attached, his prints on the gun, and shouting to everyone around that he was the murderer.
* In one episode, an invention turns Johnny into a hot girl for about 5 seconds, then overloads and turns him into a hulking female monster. She turns back to normal a few seconds later.

* In one episode an old puppet maker Chris befriended turned out to be a
* In one episode, another guy buys the engagement ring Chandler picked out for Monica, and he and Phoebe actually go to the restaurant where the guy is proposing to convince him to trade rings.
* In one episode a nurse with the rank of sergeant is given an unofficial, honorary field promotion to 2nd Lieutenant for the last three weeks of his tour of duty. Major Houlian donates her old Lieutenant bars to pin on him.
* In one episode, a pair of drug dealers, knowing the narco detectives are close to finding them, try hiding their bags of high-grade heroin in the gas tank. One of the bags ruptures, turning their new automobile into
* In one episode, a pair of unsubs are determined to replace their deceased son. They try to do this by kidnapping women, raping them until they're impregnated, and then forcefully providing prenatal care until the captive gives birth. Female newborns are discreetly placed in the foster system and the process is repeated immediately, resulting in the death of the women.
* In one episode, a particularly huge one is used by the cast to actually bathe in.
* In one episode, a planetoid was so small you could see grazing sheep on its surface from orbit. For unexplained reasons, it had Earthlike gravity.
* In one episode, a police psychic was able to see the real Sam after a while, meaning she is either insane or the real deal.
* In one episode a psychiatrist murders a child who had murdered the doctor's son and then tricked him (the victim's father) into pushing for leniency, which it's now too late to retract. The psychiatrist is acquitted on an insanity defense, but later admits that it actually was planned and not a fit of grief/rage as had been claimed. Since he's already been acquitted, there's nothing they can do about it.
* In one episode, Aquaman is trapped in the distant past with Apache Chief. He decides to bury his communicator under the future site of the Hall of Justice and set the emergency signal. The signal isn't detected until after his and several other teams get trapped in different eras and the rest of the team has begun looking for them.
* In one episode, a rapist calls his victim's mother to taunt her about how the victim cried for her mother.
* In one episode, Arnold's grandpa believes he is dying of a "curse" that causes men in his family to die at the age of 81...
* In one episode a robber breaks in and the family is tied up while they're all in bed asleep and brought to the living room. Lisa looks at Homer drooling. "Oh, no, dad's been drugged!" Marge: "No he hasn't."
* In one episode, a rogue overhears Darwin "talk" and assumes the dolphin really can communicate in English. He captures Darwin when he goes out for a swim and tries to persuade him to reveal where the center of the universe is. When he is later allowed to talk to Darwin using the device, the dolphin tells him that the center of the universe is "inside [him]".
* In one episode a serial arsonist is on the loose. Mr. Kotterman, owner of a liquor store which gets repeatedly robbed, decides to use this as an opportunity to torch his store for the insurance. Unfortunately for him, just as he arrives at the 12th Precinct (to use as his alibi when the fire occurs) he discovers that the arsonist has been caught; so he quickly exits the place in order to stop the fire.
* In one episode a sex scene between Peter and Lois is represented by
* In one episode, a squatter describes someone as having a crescent-shaped scar on his face. Beckett doesn't buy it because it sounds like he's just trying to make up a stereotypical thug. Later they find the scarred man (dead), and when Ryan is reading off his file, he starts it out by saying "Not one to waste such a sinister-looking scar..."
* In one episode, a suspect's alibi was that he had been having sex with the victim's wife when the victim was murdered. This is verified by talking to the neighbors who recalled hearing it (it was a warm night and the windows were open).
* In one episode, a Wall Street trader is on the phone to his company relaying some important information about the state of the stock market and is hit on the head by a stray golf ball causing him to say: "...so be sure to buy lots of

* In one episode a woman kills her lover in a fit of rage after learning he's been unfaithful, and her mother attempts to take the fall to spare her daughter from jail. Mark, however, finds the mother's confession difficult to believe, as she has a terminal illness that has left her physically incapable of carrying her own bags, let alone swinging a blunt instrument with enough force to kill.
* In one episode a woman sneaks a large block of dry ice into a guy's room, so that the CO2 fumes would make him sick. He and a woman that he sleeps with in the room die. She protests that she carefully calculated the amount of CO2 be non-lethal. She didn't anticipate that they'd be sleeping on the floor. Since the fumes are heavier than air, the concentration near the floor was high enough to be lethal.
* In one episode, a woman who'd been in a coma for five years turned out to be pregnant. One of the suspects was a security guard who'd been fired from a funeral home for unclear reasons, though those reasons became a lot more clear when the detectives tracked down a hooker who said the guard had asked her to lie in a tub of ice water before engaging in... relations. After that, it was discovered that the funeral home caught him on camera. The funeral home previously thought he was a grave robber. For the record, he didn't do it, as apparently comtatose is still too alive for him be turned on. (Like
* In one episode, a woman (who was eating human organs to fight off a rare disease) used dogs to attack her victims, so that the deaths at first simply looked like dog attacks. She used the dogs because a gun or knife wouldn't be "natural"; the organs might be "contaminated".
* In one episode, Baby Bear's grandma visits and thinks he's a literal baby, so she puts him in a bonnet. She wants to put him in a diaper, too, but he stops her.
* In one episode, Barney hurts his foot and has to scream into a nearby mail box to conceal it. Soon after, a mailman opens the mail box and gets a loud scream right in his face, and then he remarks "I gotta stop eating at those cheap restaurants." This joke occurs several times on the show.
* In one episode, Barney is subject to a series of three or four nasty injuries based on an
* In one episode, Barney is trying to keep his hookup with Robin secret, but Ted's dialogue makes him think he already knows and is congratulating him on it. Then Marshall and Lily talk about how
* In one episode, Barney says that it's impossible for a man wearing overalls to seduce a woman. He then vows to do exactly that. In this case, it's because his own statement leads him to realize it would be a great challenge.
* In one episode, Bart breaks into a blind man's house to get his dog back. When the man comes downstairs, Bart attempts to flee.
* In one episode, Bart questions what the babysitter sees in Jimbo. "What do you like about him? He's just a good-looking rebel who plays by his own rules."
* In one episode, Bart's newfound interest in law enforcement sees him team up with Principal Skinner to rapidly become a fascistic hall-monitor, at roughly the same time that Lisa, disillusioned after being told she'll never be a jazz musician, becomes the school rebel. In order to save Lisa from being expelled after she steals the teacher's copies of all the school textbooks, Bart reverts to his old ways.
* In one episode Bart went to an auction to mess with the bids. When he won, he snickered and bolted for the door. At which point the auctioneer awarded it to the second highest bidder... who also snickered and bolted for the door. It is revealed that
* In one episode, Bart wins a $500 cash settlement from Krusty after a jagged metal O
* In one episode, Bender the robot inherits a castle that turns out to haunted by robot ghosts because their graves are inadequately grounded.
* In one episode, Bender tried to get Fry to take a dive against Zoidberg in a fight to the death. (Fry declined.)
* In one episode, Bill adopts a dog to participate in a dog dancing competition, which turns out to be highly vicious and corners Bill in his shower. Bill attempts to grab some sleeping pills from the medicine cabinet using a wire hanger and get the dog to swallow them. He is out cold within seconds.

* In one episode Bill, a sergeant, takes orders from a random corporal and calls him “sir.” Though it might just be to show how unassertive he is and how pathetic everyone else sees him.
* In one episode, Binky has a dream where everyone speaks in rhyme. They are threatened by a monstrous "purple orange". It is even lampshaded at one point that it "has no rhyme".
* In one episode, Blackadder is attempting to win General Melchett's favor and orders Baldrick and George not to talk unless given explicit permission. They take this
* In one episode, Blake and Reid definitively declare an old rape accusation was false based entirely on the "inconsistencies" in the victim's statement. Said inconsistencies are purely grammatical (she said she was "really, really scared" when he "kind of" put his hands on her, so she's both overselling and underselling her experience). Because it's not likely that teen girl who's been through a trauma is going to be at all confused about how she's feeling, especially when the person she's accusing is her boyfriend, who she might be afraid of getting in trouble. Sure, it raises the
* In one episode, Blanche goes on a date with a coworker and winds up going back to his apartment with him. Believing that he brought her back for something else, she tries
* In one episode, Blanche is excited to date a man in his early 20s, and Rose's visiting mother relates that she too once had a romance with a younger man after Rose's father died. But as Blanche spends more time with him, it becomes clear that he wants her to be a
* In one episode Booth and Brennan go undercover as married circus performers.
* In one episode both Riker and Picard fire phasers at a human possessed by alien bugs, causing
* In one episode, Brackenreed worries that his son might be gay because he wants to play a female part in a play. This leads to the boy getting hurt badly in rugby trying to impress his dad. While the boy's ultimate reasoning for wanting the female role (she had more lines) is later revealed and accepted, it doesn't come before Dr. Ogden has to talk Brackenreed into accepting his son's possible sexuality. In an episode set nearly
* In one episode, Brass even (kinda sorta, but not really) jokingly says that when people die in motels like these, it's generally not reported for quite a while, because the owners keep renting out the room until the smell of the corpse has gotten bad enough that it can no longer be ignored.
* In one episode, Brian warns Stewie not to say anything about Tom Tucker's son's facial deformity (it's upside down). While they are talking, Brian inadvertently says "This whole thing has really just turned Chris' life
* In one episode, Briscoe is huddled by the door of a courtroom with some cops and is providing whispered commentary so as not to interrupt what's going on inside. The scene was written this way because
* In one episode, Bubbles is trying to prove that she's as hardcore as the other Powerpuffs— and takes Mojo Jojo's Agony Device up on its
* In one episode, Buffy gets turned invisible. She decides to get into all sorts of mischief, including having sex with Spike. When Xander walks in, Spike says he's just doing pushups naked, and demonstrates with a few more...pushups.
* In one episode, Buster worried about getting an "F" on an assignment he did wrong and Arthur quipped that he could even get a "G" or an "H."
* In one episode called "A Star Is Born", there are auditions for a commercial about karate. Bulk enters the audition and shows of his "incredible karate skills" (read: making random movements while shouting). He passes the audition, but at the end of the episode we see the finished commercial; Bulk is the "
* In one episode called "The Bicker, The Better", Ash and May get into an argument and argue for almost all of the episode. Not only that, but Jessie and James ALSO get into a fight! But being beaten by

* In one episode, Cam gives Manny advice over the phone on what to say to his date. Out of context, everyone around Cam assumes he is talking to a child he met on the internet. He
* In one episode Cam is delivering pizzas for a place with this policy, and has to make a delivery to a frat house that makes pledges throw obstacles in the way of the delivery guys so they get free pizza. Making one wonder why the restaurant hasn't blacklisted that campus.
* In one episode, Carl sees Bart Oates appear in front of him and asks him to do favors, except nobody can see Bart and turned out to have been caused by a B.B. that was lodged in Carl's head.
* In one episode, Cartman freezes himself and is thawed out 500 years in the future. He then makes repeated calls to Kyle via a phone that reaches back through time, which makes changes to his time. He and everyone else 500 years from now only know the world the way it is after the changes. However, when he makes one more change at the end that
* In one episode, Castle has his character Nikki Heat tied to a chair and can't figure out how she will escape, so he has Alexis tie him up for research. He ends up knocking over a garbage can and using a broken soda can to cut free.
* In one episode, Castle remarks, "a wife and fiancée catfight? Please tell me we can stop for popcorn along the way."
* In one episode Cedric's attempt to track down Elyon resulted in the Guardians losing their powers (
* In one episode, Cerreta and Logan interview a murder victim's family, and the son tells them that his mother
* In one episode, Chandler and Monica agreed to make each other presents for Valentine's Day. Monica ended up giving Chandler a sock puppet Phoebe had made. Chandler gave Monica a mixtape he had lying around in his closet (and it transpired that the mixtape had been made for him by Janice for an earlier Valentine's Day).
* In one episode Charlie dates a real estate agent who dresses, acts, and belittles everyone exactly like his mother. She even has two sons who act exactly like the titular two brothers as kids, and meeting them is when Charlie realized it, as before he had been in oblivious denial despite everyone else trying to tell him.
* In one episode, Charlie figures out that he can get free lap dances if he claims to be a crippled war veteran after breaking his legs in a previous episode. He adopts a costume straight out of
* In one episode Chief O'Brien was temporarily and against his will put on medical suspension; as he took the turbolift away from Ops, he tore off his combadge and threw it at the ground. Less dramatic, but even more powerful in its way.
* In one episode, Chris becomes the towel boy for the high school basketball team and picks up some slang and mannerisms from the black players. His father Peter investigates their heritage, with the intention of familiarizing Chris with their Irish roots, and discovers a black slave among his ancestors. Then Peter starts trying to act like a black man and goes entirely too far; wearing a dashiki, insisting that he be called Kichwa Tembo, and demanding reparations from his father-in-law. Hilariously, he discards his new identity the moment Carter whips out his checkbook:
* In one episode, Chris got arrested for stealing a car in order to chase a bad guy.
* In one episode, Chris has a crush on his substitute teacher who is very buxom.
* In one episode, Cindy won a spot on a college bowl-type quiz show for elementary school kids. Sure enough, the show was broadcast live, and Cindy froze up when the red camera light came on. And the light was on
* In one episode, Clark does the same thing to protect a young boy from a meteor. The flames engulf both, but since the boy is "shielded" by Clark, he's unharmed. This is particularly strange, as the meteor in question is a
* In one episode Cleveland and family were stupefied that Junior, a short fat nerdy boy, was able to get Cecilia, a gorgeous Mexican girl, to be his girlfriend.

It turned out that it was because he was the spitting image of her father (with the exception of a thin moustache).
* In one episode, Cookie Monster has a nightmare where there are cookies floating around and he can't catch them.
* In one episode, Cortez kills Cheif Montezuma, whose ghost appears as a
* In one episode, Cosmo begins uncontrollably shapeshifting into harmful objects due to an organ going bad. The only way to cure this condition is to surgically switch the bad organ with the respective good one from Cosmo's Anti-fairy, who is uncontrollably turning into good things because of it. Timmy, Wanda, and Cosmo have to break Anti-Cosmo out of prison so they can get the surgery done to cure them both.
* In one episode, Cricket uses his first tip from working at Big Coffee to buy a singing fish plaque, but only he loves it while the rest of the Greens are annoyed. It's not until Barry gets destroyed out of the blue that he becomes upset, and when he finds out his entire family are the culprits, he is livid with them.
* In one episode, crooner Mel Torme helps the Sliders with their mission, only to apparently die in a car bomb. He inexplicably resurfaces at the end, though, to wish the Sliders well on their way.
* In one episode, Dale enters Bill's army base as an exterminator, then dresses as an officer, then back to an exterminator in order to check on Bill's medical records.
* In one episode, Dan and Roseanne perform a Halloween ventriloquist act with Roseanne playing "Mortuary Snerd". After "Deadgar Bergin" (Dan) informs her that Jackie is now a truck driver, she says "That's funny. Jackie. In the front seat of a truck. With
* In one episode, Dangle hosts a murder mystery dinner, telling the other deputies it's a "dress-up" party. Junior misinterprets this as you'd expect, and comes to the party in a
* In one episode Daniel jabs Osiris with a tranq dart, and she pulls it out, looks annoyed, goes and activates some transporter rings, then leaves in a spaceship. The last shot of her shows that she's just a tad off balance, and that's about two minutes after getting hit. He's using a Goa'uld-specific sedative.
* In one episode, Danny & Flack go to interview some guys at a frat house. The only one sober enough to talk has a severe case of
* In one episode, Daphne finishes Fred's sentence and swoons that they know each other so well, they must be soulmates. Velma, Shaggy, and Scooby all finish Fred's next sentence, causing Shaggy to observe that all five must be soulmates. Both sentences are Fred's
* In one episode Daphne gives Martin a sweater just because. Martin gets irritated as now he feels he has to get her something in return, even though she insists otherwise. He eventually buys her a massive basket of bath items which is worth far more than the sweater. After a brief argument they agree to keep their gifts because they were both just trying to be nice.
* In one episode, Daphne is flirting with a coffee shop waiter near Frasier and Niles's table. When she says she likes a coffee that "keeps its body on her tongue", Niles spills cream all over the table.
* In one episode, Daphne mistakenly clobbered Shaggy with a vase in this context.
* In one episode Daru states about Luka in drag "Balls or not man, I would so hit that."
* In one episode, "Day of Judgement, Day of Wrath", the Balance of Judgement argues with Rommie that their emotions are only programmed for the benefit of the humans, but she responds that emotions for them are as real as they are for humans.
* In one episode dealing with a OCD Unsub upon entering her room to find the walls plastered with hand copied religious material Morgan quips, "OCD? I'm thinking more OMG."
* In one episode, Deanna Troi remembers a man coming onto her, but getting her name wrong, calling her Diane.
* In one episode, Demona summons a Fae whose schtick is to serve the one who holds "the first ice of winter" as long as it lasts. Demona

* In one episode, Dennis Day praises Jack's finer characteristics to the heavens... then asks to leave, saying, "I can't keep reading this stuff! It's making me sick!"
* In one episode detective Jake Peralta goes undercover wearing a ski mask to try and find out who hired the hitman he's posing as. He's slightly taken aback to find that when he meets the employer, they're both wearing the exact same ski mask.
* In one episode Det. Kirkendall goes undercover as a call girl to get evidence against a suspected murderer. The operation is portrayed as unusual and risky (since there is good reason to suspect that her customer will try to kill her), is not undertaken lightly, and is not played for
* In one episode Dib learns that irkens are horribly allergic to water, and tries to kill Zim by pushing him into a puddle. Then he challenges Zim to a water balloon fight. Naturally, Zim takes the rational approach to this challenge... and builds a space station that sucks all of the city's water to make a water balloon the size of a large asteroid and drops it on Dib, obliterating the entire city.
* In one episode DJ says her name is "Janet Abdul" after seeing posters of Janet Jackson and Paula Abdul. Then Stephanie says "And I'm Barbie Dollenbear" after seeing a Barbie doll and Mr. Bear.
* In one episode, Doctor Doofenshmirtz hits Perry the Platypus with a device that slows him down to a crawl, and a comically slowed-down version of Perry's theme song plays.
* In one episode, Doctor Zoidberg tries to re-coil a slinky after Bender has straightened it into a straight wire. It goes down two steps, falls over and then
* In one episode, Dom and Caitlin disguise themselves as a Catholic priest and nun respectively to get inside a Latin American prison. For some reason, they also put on awful Italian and Irish accents respectively. Seriously, just because your surnames happen to be Santini and O'Shannessy...
* In one episode, Donatello accidentally creates an evil clone of himself who then joins forces with a mob boss and clones thousands of rats to take over New York City.
* In one episode, Don Ramón is assisting Profesor Jirafales' class, at first as an excuse to escape from Doña Florinda, later, she and Profesor Jirafales agree to allow him in class, as he could use some good education.
* In one episode, Don Ramon entered Professor Jirafales' class claiming he wanted to learn. (He just wanted a place where he'd be safe from Doña Florinda) When El Chavo first saw him there, he believed it was an old kid who looked like Don Ramon. When Don Ramon stated something like "I am, idiot!", El Chavo said they had even that in common.
* In one episode, Dorothy's son is engaged to an older black woman (and she's pregnant). Dorothy's notes that she's in her 40s, black, and in her 40s. The woman's mother objects to a white son in law. Then later all the women: Dorothy, Sophia, the woman's mom and aunts, Rose, and Blanche gather for cheesecake. Sophia asks about if it's true what they say about black men and the white Southern Blanche blurts out "Yes!" and then
* In one episode, Drake and Josh get un-invited from their friend Thornton's birthday party after he catches Drake kissing his (unbeknownst to Drake) girlfriend. Drake then gives him his autographed copy of
* In one episode, Dr. Doofenshmirtz yells this when he uses the ejector seat on a robotic dragon vehicle and its computer tells him that
* In one episode, Dr. Kelso describes how he and his crippled obese wife had sex the previous evening. Dr. Cox then suggests to the rest of Kelso's involuntary audience that they forget about what they just heard.
* In one episode, Duckula threatens Nanny and Igor to accompany him on a carnival ride by threatening to start singing.
* In one episode, due to rising gas prices, he buys a small, economical Japanese car. His pride in his military service clearly took a back to his habit of stretching his dollars as far as possible. "The last time I was that close to something made in Japan, it was shooting at me."
* In one episode during a filming a woman asks her where you can try on clothes she answers: "Is in the producer's office, but he makes you try a lots of different clothes".

* In one episode, during one of Terry Gilliam's animations, a man grabbed a bunch of balloons and floated away. He was then attacked by a bird with a cannon where its head should be, which was trying to burst the balloons.
* In one episode Dwight discovers a box full of his grievances against Jim for this that he thought Toby had been sending to corporate. As Michael read through the list, Jim commented that these didn't sound nearly as funny back to back. Since then, he has occasionally been shown being nice to Dwight, or having his pranks backfire, or even being the victim of the occasional prank by Dwight. He takes it better than most Screwy Squirrels do.
* In one episode, Earl makes up for stealing a fast-food worker's honeymoon fund, by sitting in for him
* In one episode, Ed drinks an experimental and highly volatile soda Double D created. Double D tells him to stay completely still so he doesn't set off the mixture, but Eddy forces him to start moving around by tickling his belly with a feather.
* In one episode, Elaine thinks the guy she's going out with is black, but she's not quite sure, and spends the episode trying to find out without directly asking. It turns out he's white and had
* In one episode, Elizabeth, an enigmatic creature/alien in the anime
* In one episode, Elmo and Abby try to get their minds off waiting for their tricycles to be fixed. However, they see everyone riding tricycles.
* In one episode, Ensign Barclay is raised to literally godlike superintelligence by an alien probe. He starts out by using it to indulge various personal desires and do his job with superhuman efficiency, then goes off on a power trip to where he hijacks the Enterprise and takes it to meet some nigh-omnipotent aliens — the probe makers — who revert him to normal human intelligence. But at no time throughout his several days of apotheosis does it occur to him to devote
* In one episode everyone thinks he is being a jerk for refusing to share a giant box of chocolates he got from home. Turns out he's giving the box to a local orphanage but doesn't want anyone to know because it is his family's tradition to do anonymous acts of charity at Christmas.
* In one episode, Excel finds herself trying to defuse a bomb in a restroom, while at the same time Il Palazzo questions what a bomb was doing in the
* In one episode, Fabian tries to change the hallway clock to find a clue behind it. When one of the hands breaks, he panics and hides. Alfie comes out seconds later, picks up the broken clock hand, and is caught by Victor, who assumes
* In one episode Father Mulcahy receives a shipment of new bibles full of typos. This was a direct reference to the "Sinner's Bible" listed in the Real Life section below.
* In one episode, Finn tries to make everyone happy by fixing all their problems for them, but discovers it's impossible, because there's too many problems to fix and solving one always means making a different one worse. Then Jake asks, "What do YOU want, Finn?" and of course the viewer expects Finn to have an aesop and realize that he can't please everybody all the time. There's a pause, then Finn proceeds to fix everyone's problems and make everyone happy anyway.
* In one episode, Fitz deduces that someone is the murderer, as they claimed to be a student and "you don't dress like a student" (because obviously, all students dress exactly the same way).
* In one episode Francine goes to her 20th-anniversary high school reunion, where they get the ballot box from Homecoming out of a time capsule. Inside they discover two uncounted votes which show Francine's rival should have been homecoming queen. Francine handles it admirably, simply saying "How about that?" and giving her tiara to the other girl. Stan, however, has a
* In one episode, Francine joins a womens' society but tries to get out when they expect her to cheat on Stan. Just as they prepare to kill her
* In one episode Frasier becomes obsessed with a popular miniseries and has to duck spoilers when he's prevented from watching the newest episode. Roz teases him for indulging in "trashy" media when he's usually so high-brow and implies he's only watching because one of the actresses is very attractive. We don't hear much about the plot but Daphne lets slip that one woman had a baby and it's unclear who the father is.

* In one episode, Fred and Barney are enjoying the new pool they had built (half in Fred's yard, half in Barney's), and they both take huge jumps from diving boards on opposite ends and smash right into each other in mid-air....twice.
* In one episode, Fred goes to Mr. Slate's office after attending a masquerade party where he thinks he was schmoozing up to Slate, expecting a pay raise. Instead, Fred discovers that Slate was the guy at the party to whom he was bad-mouthing the boss, and as Slate hurls back the insults Fred gave him, Fred gets
* In one episode Fred's accidental discovery of a poem dedicated to Wilma, as well as Wilma's strangely secretive behavior, make Fred suspect that Wilma cheats on him. The catch is in the fact that the poem was actually written by Fred himself when he was still a high school student, while Wilma was secretive because she wanted to surprise Fred for his birthday. It doesn't help that a man calls wanting to talk to Wilma, and she acts strangely like she doesn't want Fred to hear. He becomes suspicious and goes to another phone, to hear her say, "...that's right, Darling, not the only man I ever loved, the only man I ever will love." Fred thinks he's about to lose Wilma to another man. It turns out he didn't get to hear the beginning of the conversation, where the man said to her before she responded, "This is the jeweler calling, on your husband's watch for his birthday, you want the engraving to read 'Darling...'" It was at that point Fred picked up the phone.
* In one episode, Fred took ballet lessons to improve his bowling skills, and then finds that he can only bowl perfectly to ballet music.
* In one episode, Fry is fed up with suffering this trope from Farnsworth (technically Farnsworth is
* In one episode Fry refers to The Hustle as "[his] people's native dance." Leela looks it up in a book called "Dances of the Ancient Bronx".
* In one episode Fry walks in on a support group for cryonically frozen people. He doesn't really care about anything but the buffet, unlike the guy who lived in a time when man was ruled by sentient carrots, the executive from the 1980s who missed out on the implosion of "merger fever", and the caveman who found his wife in a museum.
* In one episode, Fuu is forced to work off her debt in a brothel. While "on display," she deliberately contorts her face into Gonk Mode to discourage customers from choosing her. Unfortunately, that face happens to catch the eye of another Gonk...
* In one episode, Gambit travels to Washington, D.C., which apparently is located in the state of Washington.
* In one episode, George and Harry — his announcer — are in the living room when Harry says, "I understand you're about to rerun a few episodes, George." George says, "Yes, why tonight we're doing the one in which Gracie tries to get me to invest in the Ballet. In fact, it's coming on right now, let's go watch." They get up, and we fade into the first scene of said episode.
* In one episode, Gibbs is chasing a suspect through a mansion, and bursts into a closed room with gun drawn... only to find DiNozzo Sr. (Tony's father) and another minor character having a romantic bubble bath. It turned out that the suspect jumped off a balcony, only to be cornered by Bishop when he tries to get into his work truck.
* In one episode, Gibbs stops a computer by shooting it. When the computer boots back up again, Gibbs
* In one episode, Gil Grissom's crime lab kit was stolen while he was up in the middle of nowhere alone investigating a murder. Instead of filling out a form with the local police or requesting a new one from the lab in Vegas, he uses items he buys at a home maintenance supply shop as a makeshift kit.
* In one episode, Gir dons a human-like robot disguise to save Zim, uttering the words: "I am government man, come from the government. The government has sent me."
* In one episode, Gonzo tried to do a dancing chicken act and got a real-live hen on stage. The chicken didn't dance, much to his annoyance, but it did do an okay split at the end.

* In one episode, Gordon is helping Oscar do his shopping at a story run by grouches for grouches. The store owner makes him take a number, 19, then goes through all the numbers starting at 1, even though Gordon is the only one waiting. When he finally gets to 19, other customers appear with the
* In one episode, Grandma Minka brings over some borscht that she made (a cold soup made from beetroot). Grandpa Boris quietly comments that it tastes like glue, but he's also been eating it for 60 years, so he can't really say anything.
* In one episode, Green Arrow and Speedy confront Gentleman Ghost, who says they have no chance at stopping him. Speedy says "
* In one episode, Green Arrow gets jealous of Black Canary's relationship with the much older Wildcat. In actuality, the two have a father/daughter relationship since Wildcat was teammates with Black Canary's mother.
* In one episode, Greg Sanders' replacement eventually cracks from the pressure to be just like Greg and quits. Nick forks over a bill to Warrick, who really
* In one episode Hank and Peggy (who've been trying for a second child for a long time) are helping Cotton and his pregnant wife shop for baby supplies and furniture.
* In one episode Hank Hill and his friends are playing guitar and singing in the alley. Bill suggests that Hank play "Puff The Magic Dragon", whose lyrics are famously considered to be a drug metaphor. Hank replies, "Bill, do you know what that song is about?" (Pause.) "It's about a dragon. We're grown men."
* In one episode, Harold gets up to make fun of Phoebe for a previous incident in which she accidentally farted into a microphone in front of the whole school.
* In one episode, Harper (after having an entire library downloaded into his head), is running away from an agent of
* In one episode, Hawkes watches a Jennifer Lopez video during his lunch break. While admiring her, um,
* In one episode, Hawkeye and Frank were arguing during triage, over a badly wounded Chinese soldier Hawkeye wanted to treat. They had the following dialogue, directing their words to the corpsmen carrying the soldier on a stretcher:
* In one episode Hawkeye refuses to leave to work for a general because the men come first. He demands that the general admit it, and the general, with a sigh, does.
* In one episode Hayley accidentally reaches into his chest and takes out his pancreas (
* In one episode, Hayley has Roger become her life coach and Roger gets her a job. Roger then encourages her to get with a co-worker she meets. Turns out the man is married and his wife can get his money in a divorce only if he is caught cheating. Of course the wife is another of Roger's personas.
* In one episode, he and Peter are having a conversation in Spanish, which ends with him letting out a Big "QUE?!" instead.
* In one episode he claims he is inspired by his grandfather (who apparently had the nickname "Grandpa Hook" because of this).
* In one episode, he fires Earl for getting injured on the job, after being sued for 80,000,000 dollars and after Earl comes by to show off (and jokingly warns him to be careful or else he'll sue him again) uses the opportunity as an excuse to fire the other employees and raise prices, putting the blame on Earl. Later on, Robbie talks Earl into giving him back the money in exchange for hiring back all the laid off employees and lowering prices, which he refuses, and
* In one episode, he found himself up against his own former boss, who
* In one episode, he helps Chief O'Brien find a much-needed graviton stabilizer through a
* In one episode, Helen lets Josh pet her hamster, but tells him too late that it bites.
* In one episode, Hera Agathon horrifies her mother, Sharon, by drawing pictures of the Eye of Jupiter, yellow-haired women, and the number 6. Sharon, meanwhile, had been having dreams of Cylon Number Six (a blonde woman) taking Hera away from her, and walking into the Opera House on Kobol.

* In one episode, Herb starts flirting with a woman who claims she knew him in high school. While making out with her, he learns he did know her in high school...
* In one episode, he's in the lobby when the Major casually walks past him carrying an enormous shotgun. Made even funnier by the fact that he's got it to kill 'Basil'.
* In one episode he's using an actual payphone that turns out to be a
* In one episode he visited the United Nations building, was surprised to find that Africa wasn't represented as a country, and refused to believe the guide's explanation that many African countries were represented.
* In one episode he voluntarily shakes hands as a sign of friendship with an ex-colleague of his, who was accused (even by Monk) of being in the drug-business (which he wasn't, which was proven of course).
* In one episode, Homer changes his name to Max Power. Marge comments that that poses a problem, as she has the name "Homer" tattooed on her..."you know". Homer's cheerful response: "Oh Marge, they have harsh acids that can burn that off!"
* In one episode, Homer claims to be a Vietnam vet in order to get free admittance to the State Fair.
* In one episode, Homer falls asleep in church and dreams that he and Marge are
* In one episode Homer has one dollar which is enough to buy a candy bar or lottery ticket he has found is a winner (by holding up to the light). He agonizes for a moment but then buys the candy.
* In one episode, Homer orders a gun. He has to wait an entire week before getting his gun, but all he can see during the week are targets (a truck bearing the Target logo, a row of ducks, his sisters-in-law, Ned Flanders... Ned Flanders again...).
* In one episode, Homer spots a bunch of cops beating up on Snake and stops them.
* In one episode Homer's vision is distorted when he starts wearing a pair of glasses he found in the bathroom at work.
* In one episode, Hook carries Emma this way. Justified since she was freezing to death and too weak to walk to a hospital.
* In one episode Howard, desperate to get out of a fishing date with his father-in-law, claims that he and Bernadette already have "a thing" for that day.
* In one episode, Hyde has a sexual relationship with a popular girl who demands it be kept secret and refuses to even speak to Hyde when she's with her friends. It probably should have been a parable about the importance of keeping your self-dignity in a relationship, except that Hyde was perfectly okay with the arrangement.
* In one episode in G1, Spike had to climb the Insecticon Shrapnel in order to keep him from exploding.
* In one episode, in regards to Marge, Milhouse says "She's HOT! ...sorry that just slipped out."
* In one episode, Internal Affairs investigate Ironside after he's framed for corruption. Ed works alongside them to make sure that they either vindicate or convict Ironside based on the facts.
* In one episode, inveterate gambler Nick comes in crowing about a big score he had made: he picked all the bowl games, then bet it all on a hockey game and won there too. Then his bookie comes into the detective squad room and turns himself in for illegal betting: turns out
* In one episode in which a new comic shop opens, Lisa is revealed to be a fan of
* In one episode it comes out that Bev was already pregnant with Roseanne when she got married; she and Roseanne's father had always lied about their anniversary, and Bev was hurt and ashamed when the truth came out.
* In one episode, it is revealed that Bender would always whisper "except one" after he said "kill all humans". His best friend Fry was that one.
* In one episode, it seems that Niles has adjusted to his new apartment, but when Martin says its the kind of place he'd live in, Niles tearfully shouts "Get me out of this hellhole!".
* In one episode it's mentioned in passing that Bart has allergies to butterscotch, imitation butterscotch, and glow-in-the-dark monster makeup.

* In one episode, it's revealed that Lois accidentally (or simply unconcernedly) humiliating him in front of other people all his life with her wisecracks, rants, and aggressive confrontations has caused Francis to become totally immune to hazing.
* In one episode, it was mentioned that Doc Hogg is fond of pie, his favorite being apple pie with nutty-crumb topping, served with a whole mess of whipped cream.
* In one episode, it was revealed that Archer's nickname during his prep school days was "Swirling Archer", which was given to him by his former
* In one episode, Ivanova tricks one alien into believing that a strange dance (with nonsensical chanting)—which seem to be an abbreviated script for a one-night stand—and rubbing of hands was
* In one episode Jack is shown weaving a new hat, and reminiscing on his mother teaching him how, to explain where he gets all those hats.
* In one episode, Jack trains wearing heavy boulders; when they are finally removed, he is able to
* In one episode, Jane quickly convinces the cops that a notoriously stingy millionaire is the culprit because he offered a reward for info on his employee's killer. After 48-hours, with no actual evidence or success at interrogation, they are legally required to release him. But as the guy is leaving the building, Jane tricks him into correcting a mis-quoted line from Shakespeare, contradicting his earlier claim that he neither liked nor knew the material (relevant because the victim had been killed by someone she met in a chatroom on the subject). This single slip is treated as a decisive victory and the cops immediately take him back into custody as if they now have enough evidence to make an actual case against him.
* In one episode, Janeway and Seven of Nine don't exactly have a fireball to outrun, but they still work in the classic dive-away-from-the-exploding-doors shot at the end.
* In one episode, Janeway and Seven play Velocity, which is best described as competitive skeet shooting combined with dodgeball... using phasers.
* In one episode J.D. gets exposed to Hepatitis. The Janitor appears humming Chopin's Funeral March and speaking through a puppet made out of a Hazmat suit.
* In one episode, Jeremie creates a robotic dog named Kiwi 2 who is so lifelike, it needs to be walked, and "pees" oil if it isn't.
* In one episode, Jerry convinces George to do the opposite of whatever his instincts tell him to do ("If every instinct you have is wrong, then the opposite would have to be right"). This causes him to use "Hi, my name is George. I'm unemployed and I live with my parents" as a
* In one episode, Jesse pretends to be a delivery guy in order to gain access to the security room of a bank. At the same time, Madeline, who's just opened a new account, goes into the vault to access a safety deposit box and lights up a cigarette, setting off the alarm. The whole point of the ploy was for Jesse to be in the security room to see how the security team reacted to situation, since he was planning to
* In one episode, Jim is hiding in a car from Karen. Karen does not see Jim but does notice the camera in the car with him. Jim pushes the camera out of sight and shoots an angry look above the camera, at what is assumed to be the cameraman.
* In one episode Jim is taking a shower and the water suddenly turns red. It looks like one of the paranormal manifestations typical to this show. Then Jim apologizes to Melinda for knocking rust into the pipes during a plumbing repair.
* In one episode, Jimmy and Cindy are forced to work together for a science project — find the sunken ship
* In one episode, Jimmy cheats in a parent-child contest so that he and his father win the earlier rounds. Cindy discovers his ploy, neutralizes it, and then
* In one episode Joel gives Gypsy an expensive doll, Tom a racecar, and Crow... pants. Turns out that this was a Very Special acknowledgment of his greater maturity, qualifying him for an "adult" gift. (In a
* In one episode, Joel is about to be crushed by a giant robot. His last words?

* In one episode, Joe Swanson falls down a hill and temporarily regains the use of his legs. He loses them again a second later when his son plows into him.
* In one episode, Joey does a print PSA for STD awareness, and then has trouble getting dates afterwards, while his own family bans him from coming home for Thanksgiving dinner for fear of getting sick.
* In one episode Joey is making ends meet by giving acting classes. Then just as gets an audition for a boxer role, he learns that one of his students is also up for that, and decides to give him the advice to play the role "supergay". The next class has Joey lamenting that "they liked the stupid gay thing and cast him".
* In one episode, John and Sarah are watching a chess game. When Sarah asks him to "explain what she's seeing", John replies that one of the players has just captured the other's queen, causing Sarah to demand "English, please!" Apparently, basic chess rules are far too technical for the average woman Sarah Connor.
* In one episode, Johnny convinces a store clerk that Dukey's presence in the building isn't real, but just a hallucination. Dukey helps this along by talking. The clerk pours out his
* In one episode John Stewart ends up in the future and meets his son, who he fathered with his (currently) ex-girlfriend. Upon returning to the present with the knowledge that he's going to get back together with this woman and have a kid, he steadfastly refuses to do so, just to... y'know... screw destiny (though it's more that he won't get back with her just because of seeing the future, he wants his future to be what he wants and intends to just see how things play out).
* In one episode, Jorah Mormont gets into a fight with a dothraki named Qothor. Qothor uses an arakh, which are incredibly good at slicing flesh but are worthless against armour. At first, he puts Jorah on the defensive by swinging at his unprotected head, but then goes for a body shot which would have sliced an unarmoured foe in half. Since Jorah is wearing full plate he is completely unharmed, traps the blade against his side and stabs Qothor dead.
* In one episode, Jordan gets her face Botoxed so much that she isn't able to make facial expressions. At one point, another character accidentally hurts her and she says with a straight face (and a fairly monotonous voice): "I think you separated my shoulder. The pain is excruciating."
* In one episode Josh claims the scene he, Sam and Toby are currently in is similar to the one in
* In one episode, Julia is impressed by one of Brackenreid's landscape paintings and enters it in a contest. After the painting is stolen for its frame and recovered, Brackenreid sells it to a young man who identifies himself as
* In one episode (just after he's "lost" another one), the Doctor starts babbling to thin air, and then stops because he realizes no-one's listening.
* In one episode, Katara comes across an elderly waterbender named Hama who teaches her on how to improve her Waterbending skills, albeit through questionable methods. Her last lesson is Waterbending's ultimate technique, Bloodbending, where under a full moon the Waterbender can take complete control of their opponent. Katara, of course, is horrified at such a practice and vows not to use it. But when Hama takes control of Aang and Sokka and nearly forces them to kill each other, Katara has no choice but to use the technique to stop her. Hama laughs at this while she's being carted off by the officials, as she succeeded in making Katara use the technique much to Katara's dismay.
* In one episode, Kelso responds to JD that "he can do whatever he wants" and proceeds to draw a mustache on him. Cue Turk asking JD if he invited Kelso to "Mustache Sunday".
* In one episode, Keroro is watching a movie where a hero jumps through a window into the villains' lair. He actually thought it was open, though.
* In one episode, Kick gets wrestling lessons from a former wrestler, whose wrestling school was taken over by his own Big Brother Bully, who in turn is teaching Brad as well.
* In one episode, Kirk tells Apollo (or at least a being who claims to be Apollo) the following: "Mankind has no need for gods. We find the one quite adequate."
* In one episode Klaus asked what people think of when they hear Germany.

* In one episode, Klinger tries to invoke this trope to describe a potential problem in the unit, very badly, to Colonel Potter (claiming, just for starters, that the alleged friend is stationed at a MASH unit in Cleveland). Potter just tells him to spit it out and Klinger admits that he found the newest nurse in the unit passed-out drunk in the mess the night before.
* In one episode Kouji could not use Mazinger-Z since the Pilder was destroyed. So he destroyed one of the
* In one episode, Kramer eats an ancient hot dog from the concession stand of a really old movie theater, to which the cashier responds "Are you out of your mind? That hot dog's been here since
* In one episode Kramer's phone number is 555-3455, which is one digit off from Moviefone, 555-FILM (3456). Moviefone's actual number is 777-FILM; presumably, the writers wanted to spare the actual 777-3455 from a flood of prank calls, since they (like Kramer) were presumably already getting lots of wrong numbers.
* In one episode, Kryten meets a female android (played by Kryten actor Robert Llewellyn's own girlfriend.) She turns out to be a hideous artificial lifeform, but he keeps the relationship going until she leaves the ship so as not to hurt her.
* In one episode, Kryten performs an internal scan of Starbug and detects two pieces of Bombay Aloo Lister dropped down a service duct several millennia earlier. They have since evolved a rudimentary intelligence and formed a progressive folk duo.
* In one episode, Leela flies the Planet Express ship directly into a giant advertising screen — exactly like she does in the show's opening credits. Fry comments that this is the second time this week she's done that.
* In one episode, Leela is fighting for mutants to gain equal treatment. When giving her demands to the mayor, she gives most of the ones that would be expected, capped off with
* In one episode, Lemon and Pete are discussing how old Tracy's alleged son is.
* In one episode Leon starts making changes to the restaurant when Roseanne isn't there by persuading Nancy and Jackie to agree to said changes. Nancy and Jackie inform Roseanne that they all voted in favor of uniforms and breakfast in her absence. Then...
* In one episode, Linda is inadvertently drugged and, in a misguided fit of appreciation, steals a baby so she can claim it as her own by writing her name on it.
* In one episode, Lindsey uses a botched search to argue for the release of a nun-killer.
* In one episode, Ling-Ling and Lung-Lung use their Dance of the Great Fire Dragon technique which leaves Ranma and Akane charred black.
* In one episode, Lionel and Leona pull a magical popcorn popper out of a book to make popcorn; however, they lose the instructions and don't know how to turn it off, resulting in a popcorn flood.
* In one episode, Lisa and Bart are fighting over being able to sit on a certain part of the carpet.
* In one episode, Lisa finds a crankiness cure and gives it to Grandpa. They try to isolate out of a drop of his sweat by giving every chemical in it back to him one at a time. One reaction was "I taste music."
* In one episode Lisa says that Springfield has the highest rate of heart attacks, cuts to a scene showing Moleman clutching his chest, and then Nelson clutching his arm before falling.
* In one episode Liz dated a black lawyer, who believed the only reason any white woman would want to break up with him was because they were racist. Or gay.
* In one episode, Lois gets Clark's powers and spends the episode as Ultra Woman.
* In one episode, Lois gets splashed on by a car driven by her rival, who constantly beats her for the award for best piano student. Needless to say, This Means War.
* In one episode, Lucy convinces some neighbors to install a shower for her. Instead, they hire a professional plumber, introducing him as a handy friend. Lucy spends most of her conversation with the plumber commenting on professional plumbers, and how he looks nothing like a professional plumber, even when he says it point blank.

* In one episode, Lucy sneezed while she and the other main three were in a cabin. They think that the sneeze will cause an avalanche, but it doesn't. Lucy goes outside to check: when she comes back inside she slams the door, which does cause an avalanche.
* In one episode, Lucy uses the alien computer to Skype the outside world but finds that nobody believes her story about the alien invasion. The computer says it would back her up, but people would think it was just an actor putting on an alien computer voice.
* In one episode, Major Burns won't operate on a CID officer because regulations say this Trope makes it is a risk (he might say something that shouldn't be said while under anesthesia), and you aren't supposed to do so without another present,
* In one episode, Major Colvin is going for a late-night cruise around the Western District in uniform and driving an unmarked police car while spotters announce his presence to everyone in earshot. In spite of the warnings, a kid named Justin tries to sell him drugs. Colvin lets out a bewildered "What?" The kid asks again, so Colvin turns up the volume on his police radio. When that doesn't work, he puts on his peaked cap, and the kid finally gets the message and backs off while his friends break out howling in laughter.
* In one episode, Malcolm has to work with another child genius who's
* In one episode, Malcolm is taken to the hospital to treat a serious head injury. The first thing the nurse says when she sees Francis, Malcolm, Reese, and Dewey come in is, "Oh, for God's sake, you kids again?" According to Malcolm, the boys have a history of ending up in the hospital for stupid and dangerous stunts: Reese tried to drive a nail through an aerosol can, Francis tried to flip a knife and catch it, Malcolm fell asleep with scissors pointed at him and Reese tried to wake him up by popping a balloon, and Dewey tried to put his teeth on a bike wheel as Malcolm was spinning it.
* In one episode, Marceline's Dad (the Ruler of the Nightosphere and Lord of All Evil) was talking to Gunter, calling him the most dangerous and evil being he's ever met. Gunter slapped him in the face.
* In one episode Marge decides to apply for a job at the nuclear plant, but the only experience she has to list on her resume is homemaker. Lisa helps her pad it with work experience like "chauffeur", "seamstress", "worked for the Carter administration" (she voted for him twice), and "curator of large animals" (Cue a bulging, hairy Homer).
* In one episode, Marge is spending too much time at the casino, and Homer decides he's going to make dinner for the family. He puts cloves and Tom Collins mix into a frozen pie shell, digs in and takes a bite, and says very calmly:
* In one episode, Marshal gets mugged by a small monkey. (Or not. He never
* In one episode, Marshall and Skye end up getting tangled up together in a jump rope. When Ryder calls the pups, Marshall heads to the lookout carrying Skye on his back, but before they get to the elevator, Skye somehow flips over and carries Marshall on her back the rest of the way.
* In one episode, Marshall is worried about "reading a magazine" at work. Barney answers that he (Barney) "reads a magazine" several times at work. Barney was talking about masturbation, whereas Marshall was talking about taking a deuce at work.
* In one episode Marshall mentions that their mailperson hates him because Marshall genuinely mistook him for a pregnant lady.
* In one episode Marshall says he's been using made up words to avoid lying to Lily. "Are you going to quit and work for the NRDC?" "Absatively!"
* In one episode, Martha gets addressed as "Martha Lorraine" and in another, she's addressed as "Martha Mutt". She says in the latter episode that her name is "just Martha", meaning she has no surname.
* In one episode, McGee advises Gibbs to cut one wire, but Gibbs cuts the other one. With only seconds left before the timer would hit zero, it stops and McGee comments that apparently Gibbs was right. Cut to the next scene, and Abby reveals that actually, cutting that wire should've instantly detonated the bomb. It's just that an error was made in mixing the explosives, rendering bomb inert.

* In one episode, Megavolt tried to think up some way to torture his prisoners, one of them was "Make them watch Game Shows".
* In one episode, Meg is dating a nudist. Her mother slips "Now, Meg, no need to get so testes… testy! Nuts! I mean crap!".
* In one episode, mention is made of a Breen lullaby. With nonsensical but catchy lyrics, apparently.
* In one episode, Michael gets fired after making some demands and Dick gets promoted to producer of
* In one episode, Mick is about to leave for a sports tryout and is packing his bags. Jerome and Alfie decide to go and swap out his sports gear with Amber's clothes, only to get caught by Mara as they're leaving. She looks at the swapped clothes, picks some of it up, and is caught by Mick, who immediately assumes
* In one episode, Miki's piano teacher is hinted to have a less than savoury interest in him, and he's inappropriately touchy-feely with him when they talk.
* In one episode, Miki's piano teacher is hinted to have a less than savoury interest in him, and he's inappropriately touchy-feely with him when they talk. Kozue has clearly noticed, as it later turns out that she'd previously
* In one episode, Misty is cooking while Brock is sick, making a stew that even she finds "unique".
* In one episode, Mitchell believes he's guilty of a murder with all evidence leading toward him. A mind-reading device shows the murder from his perspective to investigators,
* In one episode, Moe of all people does this: After hijacking a one-man propelled flying machine to save Homer from being beaten to mash in a boxing ring, he says goodbye to the Simpsons, telling them that he needs some time to think over everything and then takes off with said flying machine. The epilogue reveals he is doing charity work all around the world. This is all the more surprising considering we're here talking about... well... Moe.
* In one episode, Moe starts dating a "Little Person". Moe at one point claims to need to prepare a "car seat". Turns out he took out the passenger-side seat to save on petrol. When Moe later brings said little person to the Simpson house, Homer says that he wants to ask her a "mechanical question". Moe gets nervous, but it turns out he
* In one episode, Mojo wallops Bubbles with an I-beam, which causes her to have amnesia and act like
* In one episode, "Monday Misery", Garfield mails himself to Samoa hoping to escape a bad Monday. Because of the time zone difference, he arrives in Samoa just as Monday is starting.
* In one episode, Monk has to wear a wire in his tie, but he ruins the transmission by trying to clean a stain off the tie.
* In one episode, Mordecai and Rigby barrow Pops' car. Pops asks if Mordecai knows how to drive stick, which he does. Mordecai does ask what the
* In one episode, Mork accidentally serves a native Orkan food called Flek. For humans, eating means you start acting as silly as Mork. Now, imagine
* In one episode, Moseby tells his midget older brother that he was given special treatment from his mother. Why? Because he was
* In one episode, "Motherboy XXX," this bit of dialog occurs while Buster is trying to make a dramatic escape:
* In one episode, Mother Goose's decision to fly the coop leaves all the nursery rhyme characters in a muddle, and Humpty Dumpty starts referring to himself as "the egg formerly known as Dumpty."
* In one episode, Mr. Cat gets an outbreak of acne on his face, and the audience gets a
* In one episode, Mr. Cat opens a restaurant that is clearly designed to be a
* In one episode, Mr. Fischoeder also gets a chance to sing when he acts as Gene's voice double for a school play. Kevin Kline, who voices Mr. Fischoeder, has appeared in several Broadway productions and won two Tony Awards for his performances.

* In one episode, Mr. Garrison is brought before a disciplinary committee for his actions from a previous episode. When they review just what he's done for the 3rd grade education, one of them notes he hasn't even taught the kids about Samuel Adams, leading a confused Garrison to ask "Well who cares about a guy who makes beer?!",
* In one episode, Mr. Krabs and Plankton switch places. Krabs attempts to steal a Krabby Patty and is foiled, but as he leaves, he says, "I'll be back tomorrow! And the next day! And the next day! And the next day..." Once he's too far away to be heard, the phone rings.
* In one episode, Mr. Krabs gives his daughter Pearl control of the restaurant. She promptly flips the place upside-down and changes the target demographic to vegetarian teenagers, much to SpongeBob's dismay. She was actually making horrible business choices so that her dad would take the restaurant back as she didn't want to run the place.
* In one episode, Mr. Krabs offers SpongeBob and Squidward a Caribbean vacation as a prize to whoever can be the friendliest employee. SpongeBob, already friendly with all the regular customers, seems to be winning. But Squidward spots a new customer, and asks him his name. The customer rudely replies "What's it to ya?!" and angrily storms out. Squidward chases him all over Bikini Bottom, causing a fair amount of damage along the way, but finally catches up to him. Squidward yanks the wallet from the customer's pants, looks at his driver's license, and the customer's name is...Whatzit Tooya. Squidward is then imprisoned for the aforementioned city damage, but it's all right with him, because once he's out, he's got a Caribbean vacation to look forward to! That is, until Mr. Krabs visits him in jail and says
* In one episode, Mr. Krabs starts selling hot dogs instead of Krabby Patties and forces Squidward to stand outside in a hot dog suit, so he decides to team up with SpongeBob to get Krabby Patties back on the menu. In the end, they succeed, only Squidward now has to wear a Krabby Patty suit to advertise the patties' return.
* In one episode, Muriel doesn't understand what he's trying to warn her about since she can't "hear" him without her glasses on.
* In one episode, Murphy must eulogize a rival with whom she exchanged pranks.
* In one episode, Naru panics when it appears that Keitaro is dragging her towards a love hotel.
* In one episode, Nate invokes this on himself, after he pisses off some arms dealers. While at gunpoint, he points out that they'd spend all afternoon getting rid of the body, and he wasn't significant enough to be worth the trouble.
* In one episode, Ned has taken Bart, Lisa and Maggie to the river to baptize them. Homer and Marge are searching for them.
* In one episode, Nina is trying to study a strange clue she and Fabian had found and hides in a bathroom stall to do it. Then it turns out Amber was in the stall next to her; she rises over the wall to ask Nina what she's up to and threatens to tell Mr. Sweet that Nina is "doing something weird and (she) doesn't know what it is" if she doesn't.
* In one episode, Nog invites Jake Sisko to spend their day looting and pillaging a city in the holodeck.
* In one episode, Numbuh One is transported to a future where he has a son named Shirley who wants to be known as Vego. Nigel tells him to stick with Shirley.
* In one episode Oberon puts almost everyone in Manhattan to sleep for several minutes, during which he also conjures a freezing rain storm. Yes, a couple of traffic accidents are shown when everyone falls asleep, but nobody calls him on it when he claims everyone will wake up just fine. Unless he put far more thought into his spell than it looked like (and judging by what he seems to think of the rights of anyone aside from
* In one episode, O'Brien is bringing his baby son Kirayoshi to work because if he sets the child down, he'll start wailing. At the end, the baby grows out of this, falling asleep in his carrier. Sisko tells O'Brien to take a few days off, then reminds every female officer in Ops (including Dax and Kira) that they have jobs to do. Not even Worf can resist the kid for long.

* In one episode of DJ Kenny Everett's science fiction spoof "Captain Kremmen", the eponymous hero is forced to take off on a mission without his crew. Fortunately, his sidekick, Carla, has remembered to bring a packet of Dehydrated Crew for just such an occasion.
* In one episode of Gordon Ramsay, though it's meant to be serious as Ramsay cannot stand bad food, the way he said that even if the food is given to a mannequin for free but refuses makes it funny.
* In one episode of L&O, a diplomat who refused to turn over records to the D.A.'s Office had his car towed. He protested that he had immunity from all parking fines. Jamie Ross argued that while that may be true, they could tow his car for illegal parking at every occurrence, and would until he cooperated. Presumably giving up the evidence was less hassle than finding a legal parking spot (this is a real issue with diplomats at the UN in New York City-while they can't get fined over illegal parking, cars
* In one episode of season 3, Doug Stamper's niece and nephew are played by
* In one episode of season 4, Sam was only onscreen for forty seconds because Padalecki was busy filming the
* In one episode of Season 5, Paige's love interest of the week Nate Parks was introduced as a straight-up
* In one episode of season eight, Sam calls Kevin "Special K", despite nicknaming usually being Dean's domain.
* In one episode of, Stan proclaims "Official CIA business" to do this to a woman and her sports car. He grabs her and tosses her out of the car, then drives off. A moment later he returns and throws her wheelchair out next to her before driving off again.
* In one episode of the anime, Naru was temporarily a singer idol; possible a reference to the fact that Akamatsu's wife was a former singer idol.
* In one episode of the anime, Soun Tendo intends to use a magical gourd to swallow up and imprison Ranma's shadow, which has come to life and has started making trouble (long story). The problem is, it only works if he can call out the Shadow Ranma's name... and he doesn't know it. This is a reference to
* In one episode of the Bandy Papers novels, then-disgraced WWI fighter pilot Bart Bandy joined a Canadian Bicycle Infantry Company on the Western Front during the last German offensive, which broke through the trenches and deeper into France. Every man of the company carried a
* In one episode of the first season, the campers were divided into boy/girl teams and were handcuffed together. The challenge was one member had to piggyback their partner across Skull Island. Geoff and Gwen were a team. At the start, Geoff carried Gwen, but about halfway, the two of them had a nice
* In one episode of the new (2010) series, the crew travels in time and Prof. Farnsworth takes a stop to
* In one episode of the original series, Ayeka on seeing Sasami's adult form in Tsunami bemoaned the fact that her sister's beauty would soon surpass her own.
* In one episode of the show, Krusty and Sideshow Mel host an Ice Capades-type show; they slip behind some flats and two obvious skate-doubles come out to do an ice dance in their stead. When they finished, they were crushed by the scenery, revealing that Krusty and Mel were watching TV and slacking off.
* In one episode of the TV series, Pooh believes he has accidentally destroyed the "Wishing Star" by wishing for too much honey. So he sets about to grant all the wishes his friends had already made, and later fashions a star costume and suspends himself from a tree branch for when Christopher Robin comes out to make a wish again.
* In one episode of the US version they were doing a game show and the final round was "worth one million points, making all previous rounds pointless".
* In one episode of this Canadian teen sitcom, Tater says he asked someone if they'd seen a Fryers chicken head, then pulls out a poultry chart and says he thought he meant a medium-sized frier chicken, as opposed to the slightly larger grosser and the slightly smaller boiler. in a later episode, Adam says his mom's "giant man eating chicken" scam doesn't seem very believable, since "chickens are not carnivores, and according to this poultry chart, even a grosser doesn't weigh more than 7 pounds". It turns out to actually be a

* In one episode one of Arthur's friends is talking through a ventriloquist dummy as he paints and tries to find a rhyme for "orange". After Arthur reminds him one does not exist, he moves on to yellow.
* In one episode, one of the detectives inspects a hanging corpse and deduces that it must have been murder within seconds: "He is wearing a watch on his right wrist, which means has must be left-handed, but the noose was tied with a right-handed knot". This has a couple of problems. First, not everyone wears their watch on the side that they are supposed to, and second, tying a noose is a complicated action needing both hands, and it would be unlikely that someone had worked out a "usual" way to do it.
* In one episode, one of their gadgets is a "literal" catsuit, a skintight black suit with cat ears on the hood. It was specifically designed to give the wearer the nimbleness of a cat.
* In one episode, Oscar and Emma are having another one of their arguments over who owns $90, with Brent and Wanda eating chips on the sidelines.
* In one episode, other main characters remember Gibbs's rules through flashbacks, note that some of the numbers get taken more than once, or that two different number rules say the same thing, and start wondering if Gibbs just makes them up on the fly.
* In one episode, Otto and Twister go out into a hurricane to retrieve Twister's video camera. When Raymundo tracks down and rescues them, Ray grounds Otto forever, to which Otto replies sincerely, "That's cool."
* In one episode, Paige has a charge who possess the power of super speed.
* In one episode (parodying the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina) where Stan and Cartman break a dam, which everyone blames on various things from global warming, to terrorists to
* In one episode, Patrick disguises himself as a woman and becomes part of a
* In one episode, Pee-wee says, "I wish I knew what to wish for." Jambi grants him
* In one episode, Peggy loses her job as a real estate agent, and Bobby lampshades the trope with the trope namer.
* In one episode, Penny got a new chair that she had found thrown out at the curb.
* In one episode, Penny slips in the shower, dislocating her shoulder, and Sheldon has to help her put some clothes on. She insists he do it without looking, which leads to:
* In one episode, Peter accidentally changes the course of history when he goes back in time and blows off a date with Lois. In the new timeline, Lois married Quagmire, and thus Meg, Chris, and Stewie were all fathered by him.
* In one episode, Peter donates sperm, which results in a lesbian couple giving birth to Bertram, the same kid Stewie met when he went into Peter to prevent them from having more kids. In the course of apparently no time at all, Bertram ages to about Stewie's age (about age 1). Either that, or a year passed and nobody but Bertram changed.
* In one episode, Peter enters the rodeo. A few seconds later, he gets thrown off the bull, and literally raped by it. In front of everyone. No one does anything. It's then treated as though he's in an abusive relationship with the (anthropomorphic) bull.
* In one episode, Peter gains shapeshifting powers. At one point, he turns into Britney Spears and gets Justin Timberlake to kiss him,
* In one episode, Peter gets a prostate exam and thinks he was violated. He tries to watch TV. He sees
* In one episode, Peter gets his fingers blown off by a stick of dynamite.
* In one episode, Peter Griffin encounters an angry bear while on a hunting trip with his son, and his life flashes before his eyes. Twice, Peter sees himself being told by the principal that he'll have to repeat 4th grade, then his final memory before catching up with the present:
* In one episode, Peter, has a protracted conversation with an actress on his TV, with her giving appropriate responses to everything he says. Cut to Bruce watching the same show at his home, "This is a weird episode".

* In one episode, Peter makes Carter announce from the Eiffel Tower: "People of France, a good-looking depressed guy smoking a cigarette is not a movie!", to which the French took some offense.
* In one episode, Peter tells the family that their tax refund will let them buy something they've always wanted. Chris suggests a cat and gets dope-slapped by Brian. Meg suggests a stereo and gets dope-slapped by Stewie. Then Lois says "A pool?" and gets dope-slapped by Peter, who then realizes what she said and responds "Oh, sorry, it
* In one episode, Phoebe and her identical twin Ursula date the same guy, who is very confused.
* In one episode, Phoebe and Rachel start taking karate classes, and Ross tried to prove that they weren't as good as they thought they were by pretending to attack them. When they easily overpower him, he goes to their instructor for some pointers:
* In one episode, Phoebe found a lost police badge, which she then starts flashing around to intimidate people. Eventually she tries to pull it on a real cop and tries to bluff her way through his questions, like which precinct she works at. After a while he seems to believe her, then he asks "So where did you find my badge?"
* In one episode, Pinkie has been entrusted with guarding a delicious cake that the Cake family is planning to enter in a contest. Early in the episode, Applejack tries to take a bite of the cake but is stopped. Later on, the cake has some bites taken out of it, which Pinkie takes to mean a deliberate act of sabotage by the other competitors. Predictably, given Pinkie's wild accusations, the other competitors turn out to be a red herring. However, Applejack is
* In one episode, Pretty does this to the audience after she and Stumpy become victims of an internet scam and are sent a
* In one episode Principal Skinner makes a PA announcement requesting a student volunteer, Lisa raises her hand. Skinner pauses and says, "Can I assume the only hand raised is Lisa Simpson's?" then pauses again, then says, "Thank you Lisa".
* In one episode, Professor Dementor responds to Ron's comment about the "dress" he's wearing by
* In one episode, Professor Utonium creates a new pet called B.E.E.B.O, telling the girl that he only needed to be fed one time in his life. Unfortunately, the girls each fed him without the others knowing, resulting in B.E.E.B.O going on a ravenous eating rampage.
* In one episode, Prue, Piper, and Phoebe rescue three chimpanzees. Near the end, Phoebe reveals she's taught them to do this pose whenever she says the word "evil".
* In one episode, Quagmire has his penis bitten off by a shark in a motorboat accident, and at one point, attempts suicide through a ventriloquist routine where he has the puppet threaten him with a pistol. His friends hastily stepped in before he could ultimately pull the trigger.
* In one episode, Rachel meets Joey's sister, Dina, who, like Rachel, got pregnant unmarried. When Joey finds out, he kidnaps the guy who knocked up his sister and tries to marry them.
* In one episode, Raj has Howard and Bernadette babysit his dog, only for them to lose it. Raj manages to find the dog and decides to make Howard and Bernadette squirm for a few hours. When the pair calls Raj to cover up they lost his dog, Raj reveals he found it a few hours ago, resulting in Bernadette getting on his case about making them worry sick about the dog, resulting in
* In one episode, Raj is excited about appearing on People Magazine and brags about it to a random guy seated with his back to him at a bar. But the random guy turns out to be
* In one episode, Reese comes home pursued by the police. When his parents notice the sirens, Lois decides to start making coffee. Then Hal notes that the policeman is a guy called Hank, who only drinks decaffeinated coffee.
* In one episode, Rick Castle mentions a group he once researched for a book that roleplays fairy tale characters, although none of them appear in the episode, which revolves around women being murdered and found dressed up as fairy tale heroines.

* In one episode, Ricky Gervais as Brent sang the song over the closing credits.
* In one episode, Ripely acts exactly like an upper-class Victorian woman would act towards the homeless, accusing them of being lazy, yelling at them that pull themselves together, and confiscating what little items they have in case it "undermines their self-respect."
* In one episode "Rm w/ a Vu", when in 1946 where Maude met her demise after she finished
* In one episode Robert Rothman was a geekier archeologist when Daniel was temporarily unavailable.
* In one episode, Robin looks at the bill and the pepper shaker on the restaurant table and claims that the man she slept with was called "Bill Pepper." Lily, not fooled, inquires if she had a three-way with "Fork Napkin."
* In one episode, Rob was watching a boxing match on TV when Laura interrupted him, finally turning the TV off. Rob turned it back on only to find out that he missed "the punch of the century." Laura apologized, and a miffed Rob said, "That's OK, the century's young yet, there'll be another punch." Then Rob realized that he might be able to catch the instant replay, which he did - he caught the replay of the announcer saying it was the punch of the century.
* In one episode, Rochester and a friend are cleaning in Jack's house when the friend asks Rochester what Benny's name was before he changed it. Rochester says he's forgotten. The friend looks down at the towel he's holding and says, "It wasn't Conrad Hilton, was it?"
* In one episode, Roger, Francine, Haley, and Steve are having an extremely slow race to see who will hit the living room wall last. After Roger trips Haley, causing her to knock over Francine, he then defeats Steve by simply mentioning the word 'boner', causing Steve's penis to hit the wall with an audible thump.
* In one episode, Roger tries to come up with an excuse for Bullock and attempts to do this.
* In one episode, Ros and Lucas try to defuse a bomb in restaurant. Actually, it's a converted Italian landmine. No wires are attached, so Malcolm's solution is to pop it in the restaurant microwave for twenty seconds. It works.
* In one episode, Rose has a coworker that cannot stand her. Her efforts to make him like her only worsen this, naturally, and quite frankly, border on harassment.
* In one episode, Rose says, "Guess what I did!" Dorothy guesses, "A Danny Thomas spit-take?" When Rose answers in a surprising manner what she really did, Sophia actually
* In one episode, Ross attempts to quote "Whassup?" to Chandler. Chandler simply replies "Seriously dude? Three years ago."
* In one episode Ross's old friend from high school comes to visit. Turns out he is the president (and only current member) of the Anti-Rachel club. He was played by
* In one episode, Roxy, who is a very large dog, had a crush on Dylan.
* In one episode, Sam gets nicknamed "Dr. Love" after he's unable to identify any parts of the female reproductive system in health class.
* In one episode, Sam leaps into the body of a war vet who has lost both his legs. Al warns him not to try to get up. When Sam does get up at the end of the episode, the other person sees a guy with no legs floating in mid-air.
* In one episode, Sarkona, a Vulcan, joins the Maquis because she agrees with their position and believes their rather crude and barbaric actions to achieve "peace" to be logical... but she's called out by
* In one episode, Satan puts Thomas in solitary confinement. Not as a punishment, but because it seemed fairer on everyone else.
* In one episode Satan throws a Halloween party, and at one point starts to complain to what he thinks is a guy dressed as Steve Irwin, complete with a stingray embedded in his chest, telling him the costume is in bad taste so soon after Irwin's death. When the guy protests that he's actually the real Steve Irwin, Satan then throws him out of the party for not wearing a costume.
* In one episode, Sayoko tries to extract Belldandy's secret from Keiichi by letting snails crawl on his chest and smashing toy cars with a hammer. These are obviously ineffective, but her line of reasoning had some sense: snails tend to be general

* In one episode, Scratchensniff is trying to train the Warners in proper society manners. When he tells Dot to 'make a little curtsy', Yakko and Wakko make fun of the phrasing. And then perform it themselves (using Wakko's sweater and Yakko's overly-baggy pants).
* In one episode, Scully (the MD) declares that someone has a heartbeat but isn't breathing, and then begins chest compressions.
* In one episode set during the Earth Alliance blockade of the station, Ivanova threatens to throw a reporter out an airlock. The reporter isn't happy and complains to Sheridan. Sheridan rips into Ivanova - for not specifying that the reporter would be "
* In one episode set in an insane asylum we see a number of the inmates... including
* In one episode set in the future, Ben's son subverts this: instead of just randomly fiddling with his own Omnitrix, he transforms into the alien with
* In one episode, Seven of Nine designs Borg-tech shield enhancements, which appear on the outer hull in standard Borg green. These useful modifications vanish after this episode, never to be seen again.
* In one episode, Shake killed himself so he could prank Meatwad through a
* In one episode, Shampoo attempts to use a literal magical red string to bind Ranma to her romantically.
* In one episode, Shawn's date confesses that she has a boyfriend, but plans to dump him because he's cheating on her. When she lists the evidence, Shawn realizes that her boyfriend isn't cheating; he's actually planning to propose.
* In one episode, she accuses her younger daughter of having sex with her boyfriend (who spent the night). Darlene asks why on earth she would even risk doing it in the next room. Her mother counters that she could have been quiet.
* In one episode, she comments that she intends to go home, put on some sexy underwear, and rip out her sink so as to have an excuse to invite the sexy new building superintendent over.
* In one episode she demonstrates her ability to cram for a test with a single all-nighter; she manages to get the same good score as Kagami, despite of that the latter studied for the same test well over a week.
* In one episode she gets cloned off about ten times. When faced with her giggling doppelgangers she calmly takes in what she's seeing for a moment before declaring them self-evident shams. Although the laugh sounds identical to the originals to our untrained ears, Naga critiques everything wrong with
* In one episode, Sheldon mentions that in Thai culture, the last morsel of food is reserved for the most important person. He reaches for it, but Penny beats him to it and says "Thank you for this high honor."
* In one episode she pimp-slaps a stuck-up noble girl, who instantly becomes her submissive servant (bringing with her the equally masochistic bandit chief and sorcerer whom she "enthralled" in the exact same manner) and proceeds to teach
* In one episode, she reveals that she paid her last electric bill by sending the landlord a few pictures of her in a crop-top.
* In one episode, "Sherri Bobbins" is immediately recognized to be an obvious
* In one episode, Shifu's old flame Mei Ling comes to visit whom he dumped in their youth because she was a conniving thief. She tries to get back together but he refuses.
* In one episode, Shredder gets his hands on a ray that makes people afraid. He uses it on the turtles and Krang angrily calls him a fool, saying something to the effect of "this does not work on mutants!" Of course,
* In one episode, Shredder uses this trope as the basis of the plot. In a rare case of savviness, Shredder opens a pizza joint that specializes in weird pizzas, planning to stay in business until he gets an order for a pizza that only a mutant turtle could love. Then, he would follow the pizza to the Turtles' lair through a tracking device. The plan falls apart when he a) hires a disguised Michelangelo, and b) the Rat King steals the tracking pizza.

* In one episode, Sideshow Bob traps Bart in a coffin on a belt slowly being fed to an incinerator. When the rest of the Simpsons arrive to stop him, he turns up the speed from "Gloating Speed" to "Kill Him Already".
* In one episode, Sisko responds to the use of biogenic weapons on Federation people by having a quantum torpedo modified with Trilithium and firing it on a planet, effectively launching a "Dirty Nuke" on an inhabited world. The result is that the planet has to be completely evacuated as it will be uninhabitable for decades.
* In one episode, Skwisgaar calls him "... the best butler we've ever had..."
* In one episode, Slade blackmails Robin into being his apprentice by infecting the other Titans with nanomachines that can kill them literally with a push of a button. Robin gets around this by infecting HIMSELF with the nanomachines, thus giving Slade the choice between killing all the Titans thus removing them as a threat but losing Robin as his apprentice, or potentially getting Robin as his apprentice at a later date, but leaving the Titans around to get in the way of his plans. Naturally as per this trope, he does the latter instead of the much more sensible former.
* In one episode, Slappy Squirrel's quiet meadow is colonized by the Woodstock hippies. Slappy takes the stage armed with an accordion and announces into the mike: "Hey, everybody! Let's polka!" Not even
* In one episode, Smithers is ill and Mr. Burns vows to save him... because otherwise, he would have to teach a new assistant his filing system.
* In one episode, Smurfette found Hogatha's locket, which was more like an
* In one episode Snake comes into Dr. Nick's surgery with a bleeding stomach. His reasoning: "I like, fell onto a bullet, and it like, drove itself into my gut..." Not missing a beat, the receptionist casually ticks off "liquor store robbery" on her clipboard. Dr. Nick tells him to save the stories for the courts and leads him back to the office.
* In one episode, someone accused Jimmy Carr of being "the chairman of the Pedantic Society." Jimmy replied, "
* In one episode, someone else gives the punchline instead (responding to "Stardoo" with "It twinkles!"),
* In one episode, someone has been breaking into the record store, so they set up a camera, and they find out Fez has been living there.
* In one episode, someone pitches ideas for an "inaction figure" based on Perry the Platypus, one of which is "The Mad Marauding Marsupial of Death." Right continent, wrong kind of mammal. The platypus is a monotreme, not a marsupial. Ferb also once stated that the platypus is the only mammal that lays eggs; this is inaccurate, as the
* In one episode, Sophia does this. There's even one thing she tries to take, but it's secured to its table, so it doesn't work. It's some kind of container that looks like a closed clamshell.
* In one episode SpongeBob is making a snail-shaped house of cards modeled after Gary, when Patrick comes barreling in and knocks it down.
* In one episode, SpongeBob is trying to get paint off Mr. Krabs' first dollar by blasting it with water as Patrick holds it. The water leaves a hole through Patrick, and as he lifts it up to see the dollar, we see that the area covered by the dollar and his hands are left intact.
* In one episode, SpongeBob prepared one of these when he ran away in "Life of Crime". Patrick was unable to carry his, as it had his
* In one episode, Stabler finds out that a man he put in prison for rape was innocent after a similar crime was committed while the accused rapist was in prison. He goes to visit the guy in prison to eat his crow, apologize, and tell him as soon as they can get the real rapist before a judge, he'd be released. But then the real rapist jumps (or possibly is pushed) out of a window, which means they can no longer prove the convicted man's innocence.
* In one episode Stan and Steve are having a really sweet moment, then Steve says: "Are we having a father-son moment?"

* In one episode, Stan decides he has to know that he "won" over Francine's old fiancé and so fakes his death while watching the house via hidden cameras to see how Francine will react when her ex comforts her. Francine discovered the cameras, figured things out, and pretended to be close to her ex (but never went all the way) in order to yank Stan's chain
* In one episode, Stan feels self-conscious about the fact that he's only ever slept with Francine while she
* In one episode, Stewie gives out his email address, loismustdie@yahoo.com. The address was registered to someone working on the show and was set up to answer fan mail, although it's no longer in use.
* In one episode, Stormer has a line that love has been hard for her. This was originally supposed to lead into a song, however the song was scrapped.
* In one episode, Stu gets this line from police after he's caught trying to break back into Drew's house after getting locked out by the former during a costume party.
* In one episode Sunny ditches Kim so he can change into a superhero (don't ask) with the excuse "I gotta go...can some peaches."
* In one episode, Suzanne and Anthony share a motel room with only one bed. Initially, Anthony tries to sleep in the car (at Suzanne's insistence), but she relents after the temperature outside drops well below freezing.
* In one episode, Tama thinks Constable Solosolave will inspect Ranjeet's foot when he says that something is "afoot".
* In one episode, Telly calls Baby Bear a "show-off" because Baby Bear's parrot Ralphie is
* In one episode, Temperance thanked a chiropractor for his help but couldn't help noting that he wasn't a "real medical doctor". As she left he pointed out that she isn't a medical doctor either (she's an anthropologist).
* In one episode, the aging actress who committed the murder has six months to live due to a brain tumor that also leads to her forgetting she committed the crime. Even sadder is the fact that she had killed her husband for refusing to finance her comeback, which he had done because he knew the stress of returning to the limelight would cause her to die sooner.
* In one episode, the boys are forced to attend the Museum of Tolerance. One display shows a stereotyped young Asian with a calculator, to show that even
* In one episode, the boys download music illegally and are taken to the police station for it. When the chief talks to them about their crime, he mentions they downloaded hundreds of songs from famous bands and artists... and
* In one episode, the boys use a duplication device to double their pocket change so they'll have enough money to buy ice cream. But due to a bug in the duplicator, the cloned coins keep copying themselves. Soon, the town is flooded with coins, hyperinflation runs wild, the cheapest things cost millions of dollars, and Scrooge's own fortune can't even buy a pack of gum.
* In one episode, the bullies do this with Bart's "Junior Campers" uniform. Bart actually wants to quit so he starts to walk away, telling them to keep it. Jimbo then tells him that he'd better
* In one episode the Canadian ambassador and Meg Thatcher reflect that they could probably replace Turnbull with a waxwork dummy.
* In one episode, "The Captain's Hand", Roslin finally addressed an Elephant that had gone ignored for a while- whether or not humanity even
* In one episode, the character roles of Spongebob and Squidward are briefly reversed when Squidward wins a crane game, and won't stop bragging about it to the point where Spongebob gets annoyed and starts snarking at him. Squidward then
* In one episode, the crew has to deliver a packet to a planet inhabited by
* In one episode the crew visits Monument Beach, where a character mentions that New New York had a "supervillain governor" who stole the world's most famous landmarks, such as the Sphinx and the Eiffel Tower, and put them on the beach at Coney Island.
* In one episode, the defendant reluctantly agrees to plead guilty (while still privately denying guilt),

* In one episode, the detectives get a search warrant to look for a pair of shoes that left a distinctive footprint at the crime scene. They don't find them until the suspect comes home wearing them. The last line of the episode is Detective Stabler saying: "Nice shoes".
* In one episode the diplomat in question had a slave. (Or rather, he claimed immunity for the charges against him, but when accused practicing slavery, he claimed to have no idea what they were talking about, even though it clearly seemed to be debt slavery.)
* In one episode, the Enterprise's main computer becomes sentient. Benignly so, but the mechanism by which it achieves sentience is given a
* In one episode, the farmer get injured and the animals try to do his chores in his stead. One of them is gathering eggs from the hens, whom they fed milkshakes made with what Freddy thought was pepper but was actually dynamite powder, so the resulting eggs become explosive.
* In one episode, the favored cigarettes of notorious badass Brock Sampson is revealed to be Marlboro cigarettes — which in the Venture Bros.-verse are called "Manboro".
* In one episode, the gang are pretending to have a magic lamp and take turns making wishes. Gonzo wishes he had a "great, big kiss from Piggy", but what he gets is a kiss from a
* In one episode, the gang have a lorry of empty crates, which they're selling as crates of smuggled cigarettes. One of the crates really contains cigarettes, and has a distinctive logo on it. Apparently, arranging things so that
* In one episode, the gang visit a Retirement Home. One man eventually tells TJ about a time he was a POW, and we cut to a flashback of people who are simultaneously
* In one episode the Ghostbusters were falling toward a body of water from high enough to kill them on impact. Egon's solution? Have them fire at the water and cross the streams; the resulting explosion kicks up a huge column of water which breaks their fall enough for them to land safely. Upon landing safely, one of them asks how Egon knew it would have that effect. Egon's response? He didn't; he just thought it might help. We
* In one episode, the GI Joes attack an unknown COBRA base which turns out to be a "recreational facility" (On the south pole...), and we see a bunch of COBRA mooks in a
* In one episode, the girls start making Aunt Martha's Old Fashioned Salad Dressing, only to find it costs more to make than they can charge. In the second commercial, a randomly picked studio audience member (Lucy) disses the product. But this effort to "un-sell" the salad dressing only increases orders to a level three times as much. Lucy and Ethel even get notes saying "Keep up the comedy bits making fun of the product! We love it!".
* In one episode, the GPS from Homer's car says "So cold, so cold..." after Homer rips it out and throws it in a nearby fountain.
* In one episode, "The Grass is Greener", Timmy overhears his parents say that they'd be able to afford so much more nice things if they didn't have a son, but missed the part where they said despite that there's nothing that would make them wish they didn't have Timmy. Later, he sees what they're up to through a magic mirror, which is throwing all of his clothes and stuff away; Timmy promptly smashes the mirror and walks off in a huff just before his parents reveal that they threw all of his stuff out so they would have room for much nicer new stuff they bought for him.
* In one episode, the idea of "not being able to shake" your soul mate is posited. After Peggy and Miranda have called Declan's girlfriend's cell phone for the umpteenth time trying to reach him, said girlfriend says "Seems like you can't shake either one of them." That's about the strongest ship tease you get, though.
* In one episode, the insufferable and obnoxious Major Frank Burns slips and injures his back in a "normal" accident on the base which requires routine intervention. He browbeats Colonel Henry into accepting the logic that, as the 4077 M*A*S*H* is officially a front-line military hospital which shares front-line perils like occasional shelling and sniping, his "wound" was sustained in the front lines, and therefore merits a Purple Heart. Henry, grudgingly, gives in and writes the citation. Meanwhile, Hawkeye and Trapper are dealing with a real American hero: a fifteen-year-old boy who lied about his age to enlist in the Marines. Hawkeye wrestles with the ethical dilemma about breaching a patient's confidence, but exposes the youth to the Military Police. He is to be discharged from the Marines and sent home to his parents. Hawkeye and Trapper sweeten the pill by stealing Frank's medal and re-presenting it to a soldier who really

* In one episode the Jaffa scoff at Earth weapons since they still use mere bullets instead of energy blasts. After Major Carter promptly demonstrates the P90's superior accuracy and firing speed, Colonel O'Neill explains that the Jaffa staff weapon is a weapon of terror, designed to intimidate the enemy, while the P90 is a weapon of war, designed to kill the enemy.
* In one episode, the Janitor bets his van against Cox's sports car that he can get a date with Elliot "Blonde Doctor" Reed. Cox only accepted the bet for the joy of destroying Janitor's van in front of him. When Cox eventually wins the bet he ties a brick to the gas pedal and crashes the van into a wall. Ted assures the Janitor that the damage is minimal and it can easily be fixed when the van explodes spectacularly.
* In one episode the kids take a field trip to a pioneer-themed living museum set in 1864, where the actors are under
* In one episode, the killer was a gang member telling everyone that he was getting messages from the boss. Turns out he had killed the boss and caused the death of other members in the gang along with a Marine. Unable to pin him for the crimes, Gibbs shows what he has done to other members of the gang and tells them that he would never be convicted. He then drops the man off at the gang's place. You see him slowly being surrounded by other members. Cue next scene at NCIS headquarters where on TV it says his body was found ridden with bullets.
* In one episode the main characters have to travel back to the present day to disarm a bomb set to go off in their time...
* In one episode, the main characters need to quickly earn some money to repair a leaking roof. One, the titular Ted, comes up with the idea of holding a raffle, and asks fellow priest Dougal if he's thinking what he's thinking. Although Dougal claims at first that he is, it soon becomes apparent that he isn't when his first question is "Where will we get the guns?"
* In one episode, the mother of a vacationing college student kills the gang-wannabe who'd murdered her son as an initiation.
* In one episode, the murderer is covered by diplomatic immunity. The lab crew comes up with a scheme to get around it, but Booth shuts them down, on the grounds that the standard of diplomatic immunity is too important to be damaged. It's then subverted by the fact that the immunity only applies to
* In one episode the naked ghost of an old man walked through (literally) a group of schoolgirls, causing the observing grim reaper to remark, "Oh, that's so not right for them."
* In one episode, the narrator is tired of his voiceovers and just says, "London, city of millions...blah blah blah blah." Colonel K pauses in mid briefing to say, "Did you hear someone going 'blah, blah, blah' just then?"
* In one episode, the "other woman" turns out to be an old war buddy of George who
* In one episode, the parents actually DID achieve the goal of stomping out all evil everywhere in the world...except that MORE evil had popped up back in the place where they started, so they had to do it all over again!
* In one episode the patient claims to have been abducted by aliens. It turns out to be a hallucination, just as House repeatedly insisted.
* In one episode, "The Phantom Head-Shaver of Brighton" was revealed to be...Wallace Greenslade, the narrator.
* In one episode, the prank-victim was fooled into thinking he was trapped in a
* In one episode, the protagonists have to deal with a perp who, it turns out, was allowed to enlist instead of going to jail. This has been illegal since the Vietnam War, and she certainly doesn't want to be in the Navy, so the protagonists go before a judge to get her off their hands.

* In one episode, there are seemingly random killings, and the team believes it to be a homeless person. It turns out to be a former soldier with severe PTSD, who still believes he is in combat and feels terribly guilty about killing a young man from the other side. In the end, he's gunned down for apparently trying to kill a young boy, but with his dying breath, asked if the boy was safe.
* In one episode there is a delusional man claiming to be King Arthur, they figure out that he isn't who he claims to be because he speaks modern English. Seems strange, as earlier
* In one episode, there is an intense argument between Dr. Wen and Turk during a crucial surgery, but it turns out they're discussing what music to listen to when they operate.
* In one episode there's a group of colonists who had too few people to successfully build a colony, so instead of sex the went the cloning route. Now due to
* In one episode, there's a running gag with a busboy who says "It was kinda funny" after someone says
* In one episode, there's a woman who buys a monkey's paw from Yuuko. Even when warned of its danger and reminded that the original story ("
* In one episode the Robot Devil is destroyed and temporarily becomes a digital ghost, before opening his closet and possessing one of his several spare bodies.
* In one episode the science teachers slides feature pictures of him having sex with his wife. It's quickly turned into a subversion though as he tries to encourage the class to look at them.
* In one episode, the Smurfs are a victim to a spell that petrify them and half their forest (which resulted from Brainy foolishly testing said spell to see if it worked or not), and would have stayed that way had Peewit not been able to convince two feuding sorcerers to stop fighting with each other and recite the incantation together that reverses the condition.
* In one episode, the stargate was inside a dome created by a force-field, and the atmosphere outside actually was toxic. The twist was that the computer controlling the dome was running out of power, and had to slowly shrink the dome and kill off some inhabitants (mind control through their neural links to make them walk outside) in order to save the rest. Eventually the humans were all evacuated to another planet.
* In one episode, the Taleons develop a way to extract emotions from humans and turn it into a physical substance, which they can then absorb into their bodies so they can then feel those same emotions.
* In one episode the team allowed themselves to be captured so they could get a message to a Tok'ra deep cover agent posing as a minor Go'uld. Though no one told the fanboyish scientist who tried to "rescue" them, much to Jack's annoyance.
* In one episode, the team asks a vet so many questions that they have medical and non-medical histories going back to the patient's great-grandparents, leaving the patient with literally no excuse for not mentioning he once had an issue with nosebleeds and had his nostrils cauterized; which, of course, was the clue they needed. "Didn't ask", indeed.
* In one episode the team finds a civilization that has given up all weapons except a mythical "sentinel" that is supposed to "send away" their enemies. The Goa'uld who have pretty much taken control of their planet understandably believe the "sentinel" doesn't exist. Turns out it's just broken
* In one episode the team jury-rig a flamethrower, but fail to jury-rig a pilot light. Instead the instructions are: throw the cigar in front of you, then open up.
* In one episode, the townsfolk enter a huge argument with themselves over the Iraq war. They eventually decide to split the town into what Skeeter calls the "Pro-War side" and the "Unpatriotic side" (to which Randy responds they should call the Anti-War side the "Rational side" and the Pro-War side the "Redneck side"). Very quickly they realize the flaw in their plan as the town only has one school, post office, grocery store, etc. Eventually, they make a realization that they're behaving foolishly:

* In one episode, the two girl characters discuss "your dad" jokes and agree they will never catch on.
* In one episode, the US Marshals are tipped off about an escaped con hiding with his girlfriend. Guess how they find them...
* In one episode, the victim of the week was missing an eye. He had apparently gouged it out and swallowed it. During autopsy, the eye was recovered and found to be fully intact.
* In one episode, the villain known as Chuck, The Evil Sandwich-Making Guy, passed a sandwich above the screen, and the Narrator ate it.
* In one episode, the wife of the victim had suspected her husband was having an affair with another woman who was also involved in a communist movement like him. She felt that she as a simple housewife couldn't compare to this exotic foreign woman. The woman in question would later reveal to Detective Rush that while she confessed her love for the husband, he remained faithful to his wife and family.
* In one episode, they are interviewing a patient of the victim (a shrink) who is commenting on how ironic it is that she is now dead and is not available to help him. Castle points out that this isn't ironic, it would be ironic if her death made him feel better, it is actually just sad.
* In one episode, they are launched in a block of ice. Near the end of the episode, they are seen, still in the ice block, floating in the water. They then say the phrase they say in a somber voice, with Meowth saying "With no sparkle..." a bit after.
* In one episode, they imprisoned Earthbenders on a rig out in the middle of the ocean, made of pure metal (thought to be unbendable at the time). Unfortunately for them, they overlooked the fact that the rig is powered by coal, which the Earthbenders
* In one episode, they make a plot point of Kansas City, MO and Kansas City, KS. Despite their proximity and sharing a name, they're across a state line from each other. This gives the FBI jurisdiction on a technicality when the local authorities don't want to investigate a case.
* In one episode, they meet the queen of Mexico, and she complains she is the only queen who has to go to the bathroom outside the palace. And then we see her doing so.
* In one episode the young aardvark decides he doesn't wish to take any more piano lessons. Naturally, the TV that day features nothing but programs about playing the piano.
* In one episode, they're trying to get to Tarn-Vedra (the lost capital planet of the old Commonwealth) by following a ridiculously complicated sequence of slipstream routes. Several of the steps are jumps between
* In one episode they start talking about who the most genuinely heroic character in the
* In one episode, they state that the word "ask" has been replaced by "aks", as in, "I want to aks you a question." The writers were consistent with this from then on. Of course, there are some American dialects where it's already
* In one episode, they subjected William Donahue, the leader (and apparently only member) of The Catholic League, to a
* In one episode, they try to use this to their advantage. One of Elaine's friends has a ridiculous hairdo, but none of them have the nerve to tell her to change it, so they decided to introduce her to Kramer, reasoning that he won't be afraid to say what they're all thinking. It backfires when it turns out that Kramer likes her hair. In fact, she had been considering changing it, but Kramer convinces her not to.
* In one episode this ends up being a good thing as when Guren is defeated by Suzaku and blown off a Britannian aircraft its eject fails, which looks like it might mean Kallen is going to fall to her death, but reinforcements arrive and are able to send her both repair parts and a flight pack that let her save herself and get back into the fight eventually getting past Suzaku to save Lelouch from the crashing ship. If the eject HAD worked on the other hand, Kallen would have been launched to safety but the Guren would have been destroyed and lost and Lelouch would have died because Kallen wouldn't have been able to save him.

* In one episode, this happens between Joey and Davy the monkeys because Joey ate one of Davy's bananas.
* in one episode. This isn't getting into all the times he's taken shotguns to the back, fallen several feet, and taken a shot from a tank.
* In one episode, this other guy is following Max around and is interested in his job. He keeps borrowing Max's "the old X trick" catchphrase, which annoys Max.
* In one episode this was apparently being done to Jimmy Olsen. Items were moved around in his house and the painting in the living room kept changing.
* In one episode, this was discussed when Tylor has a debate with Yamamoto about what happens if all plans against the enemy fails. Tylor's point was that sometimes all plans can fail and you must think fast at that point to win. Yamamoto dismisses Tylor as being an idiot, only to look in shock later in the episode, as Tylor's attempt to escape the Raalgon fleet pursuing them - after all before plans failed - resulted in the whole Raalgon fleet getting wiped out by their own actions. Leaving the crew wondering, if Tylor was just lucky, or used an Indy Ploy against the Raalgon Fleet.
* In one episode, Thor specifically uses bullets as an example of the human race's
* In one episode, three people witness a child abduction, and none of the statements they give to police are consistent with each other. For instance, they can't agree on what color the kidnapper's van was, or even what race the kidnapper might have been. In this case, the viewer actually has the whole story, as they saw the abduction as well.
* In one episode, Timmy discovers that mixing Cosmo's sweat into lemonade results in a drink that grants rule free wishes. You'd think after Cosmo had a chance to rest (he was run dry making it) he's use it to solve more problems, but it never comes up.
* In one episode Timmy drinks a smoothie too fast and get a brain freeze, which Cosmo replies to with "Brain? What is this "brain" you speak of?" and then proceeds to drink the whole smoothie in one slurp. "Nope.. nothing."
* In one episode, Timmy goes to a "Wishing Well" boot camp with two other kids, Molly and Dwight, to learn to deal with things without wishing. One of the challenges has all the kids face their fears. While Timmy and Molly have reasonable fears (
* In one episode, Timmy has to jump through several books in pursuit of
* In one episode, Timmy's dad becomes an astronaut. Built into their spacesuits is a compartment that you can go to the bathroom through. When you go about your business, it makes a beeping sound. When a monkey is told that he has to go on a mission all by himself, his spacesuit makes the beeping noise.
* In one episode, Timmy's daily routine became so ingrained that he was literally stuck in a rut— a rut that he himself engraved through the school's linoleum floor because he does the exact same routine every day.
* In one episode, Timmy turns his parents into superheroes. When he inevitably
* In one episode, Timmy wishes Chester were a great baseball player, causing
* In one episode, Timmy wishes to be the most wanted boy in the world, only for the bus driver to crash into his kitchen in a desperate bid for his attention.
* In one episode, Timon is put on trial where he endures continuously crazy tests to prove if he's guilty or innocent. Eventually, Timon has enough, snaps, and admits to the crime that he was accused of. Then the judge reveals that Timon was going to be pronounced innocent before his outburst.
* In one episode Toby is assigned to show up at a town hall meeting for anti-globalization protesters, who are depicted as people being more in love with the sound of their own loudly expressed self-righteous outrage than the actual issues at hand. Within seconds of Toby introducing himself and being asked the first question, the audience start shouting over the top of each other to insult him, before the entire gathering degenerates into chaos and splinter groups in-fighting with each other. Toby, for his part, watches with amusement until he gets bored and leaves, everyone having forgotten he was there. Of course, this being
* In one episode, Todd says that while "Afternoon Delight" was a very popular song at the time, nowadays nearly everyone agrees that it was absolutely terrible.

* In one episode told from Pinky's point of view, the viewer sees his train of thought leading up to his non-sequitur, and it makes perfect sense.
* In one episode, Tommy's great-aunt Miriam visits; at the end of the episode, we find out that, as a child, she had the same relationship with Grandpa that Angelica has with Tommy, and even mentions "those two kids from down the street, Bill and Jill". It's even lampshaded when she says that Angelica is just like her.
* In one episode, Tomo finds a photograph of a woman dropped by Mr. Kimura, who explains she's
* In one episode, Tom recreates a 20th-century movie theater in the holodeck so he and B'Elanna can watch
* In one episode, Tom's girlfriend from Doctors Without Borders was going to Rwanda. He complains that, "if I know anything about Rwanda — and I don't — I bet it's full of rich guys who will buy her whatever she wants."
* In one episode, Tom Tucker is dating Peter's mom and acts like a father figure towards him. He even
* In one episode Tony and McGee do this by using cookies. Their target is a silent mercenary type and nothing they tried fazed him. So, they offered him cookies As they rattled over what some set of numbers could be, a breath of surprise and recognition he could normally control becomes an obvious cough with all the cookies in his mouth. He gets very flustered as they piece together the information from his denials.
* In one episode, Tori tries to help Cat in a class about applying monster make-up to actors. This results in Tori getting make-up put on her face that makes her look like a zombie. However, Cat isn't able to get the make-up off before Tori has to perform in a play, forcing her to perform while looking like a zombie. Tori is able to get the make-up off partway through the play and the audience assumes the make-up was
* In one episode, Trapper tries to subdue a sleep-deprived Hawkeye with a syringe. He accidentally injects Frank Burns, and a few seconds later he drops to the ground, passed out.
* In one episode, trying to figure out who stole money from a poker game of rich kids, Veronica stops by one suspect, finding his dad answering the door. When she relates how the kid stole the money, the others are baffled as he lives in the biggest house in town and dropped off by limo at school every day. Veronica says she found it odd the dad was home in the middle of the day in a huge mansion but then figured out that it's because he wasn't the rich guy, he was the butler/driver and the kid has been playing up being rich this whole time.
* In one episode, Tsuruya gets this when she gets an idea about the leftover chocolate.
* In one episode, Tully gives George advice on how to get a date with Nina. Said advice pretty much boils down to crudely hitting on her (Tully...isn't the most refined person) and George does not realize why that might offend a girl. Nina, being her
* In one episode Turk tells JD a patient is racist because he offered him his fried chicken.
* In one episode two characters are talking in the foreground. In the background, a hanging corpse is visible through a doorway for several minutes before the characters draw attention to it.
* In one episode two mob thugs come to beat up Joe Swanson, bringing a message from their boss that if he doesn't pay his debt to them, he'll make Joe into a "Swanson frozen dinner." Joe can't help chuckling a little at that.
* In one episode, two mooks are sent to look for Batman in a house. Batman is waiting for the two mooks to enter the bedroom he is hiding in. When one of them looks inside, Batman gives him a daring look. The other mook asks if anyone is inside the room.
* In one episode, two Narn ships try to make a hyperspace escape and fail; the Shadows disrupt their hyperspace jump-points and cause the ships to get mangled as they try to leave.

* In one episode, Uncle gets a fax machine, but doesn't understand it and tries to exorcise it. But, we find out at the end, he can cast spells over the phone just fine, despite his catchphrase that "magic must defeat magic" (apparently technology can still assist).
* In one episode Van jokingly slips in a request for a convertible when praying for something. He later finds a toy convertible in a box of cereal, which he takes as a good omen.
* In one episode, various characters had excuses such as kel'no'reem (Teal'c) important translation (Daniel) writing a report (Sam) and...something important (Jack).
* In one episode, Violet assists the fourteen year-old Princess Charlotte in writing letters to her betrothed, Prince Damian, who is twenty-four years old, where their marriage is arranged by their countries. Charlotte reveals to Violet that
* In one episode, Waddles the pig eats an intelligence enhancing mushroom and becomes a genius, building a speaking machine so he can communicate with others (he's voiced by
* In one episode Walter lies about having explosive diarrhea as an excuse for not helping Hank investigate his boss who is distributing methamphetamine.
* In one episode we enter a scene wherein people at a dinner party are telling jokes. The orphaned punchline is "... and then the French guy says 'Deodorant? What's that?'"
* In one episode, we have a guy stuck behind Marge's gigantic hairdo at a football game. She tells him to just push through it.
* In one episode, we see Kirino's Stardust Witch Meruru figure collection, which contains a Meruru Nendoroid. This was made into an upcoming Nendoroid.
* In one episode, when a drunken Rachel responds favorably to his "How you doin'?" line, he tells Ross not to let her drink any more.
* In one episode when Baloo and the others are on the run from the law and being chased through the sewers, the police try to stop them by stuffing things from stop signs and lights to a tree down manholes. Baloo then comments that the police used everything but the kitchen sink. They then dodge a kitchen sink, after which
* In one episode, when Crow and Servo want to get away from Mike, Crow says "We need to go...feed the cat. Well, get a cat, then...feed it."
* In one episode, when Eddy leads the other kids in breaking the rules, Double-D tells everyone's parents to restore order. Unfortunately, this results in Kevin, Rolf, and Johnny to throw the Eds into a cage.
* In one episode, when Garfield is taking a nap, Odie slurps him, causing Garfield to wake up shouting "Lifeguard, help! I'm drowning!"
* In one episode when he and Marge go to a marriage counselor, he's asked to list the most important people in his life, which are: Homer, Homer J. Simpson, and Captain McCool (which is what he calls himself).
* In one episode, when Lynn comes back from a date, he asks, "How did you two make out?", laughing suggestively. Willie and Kate are disgusted.
* In one episode, when Monica gives Chandler a crash course on how to please a woman (before they end up together,) she maps out several erogenous zones and tells him to mix them up and "always keep them on their toes," to which Rachel enthusiastically exclaims, "Ooh, toes!"
* In one episode when Sam (Major Samantha Carter) visits the Air Force Academy, a shot of cadets marching is shown. Unfortunately, the drill sergeant can clearly be heard shouting "kiri, kiri, kiri kanan kiri" and there are statues of garudas in the foreground, leading to the conclusion that the clip is from Indonesia.
* In one episode, when the Killer Bass were forced to wake up Duncan (
* In one episode when the station is under Dominion control, Quark and Ziyal try to bring a soufflé to a group of prisoners. Naturally, the guard demands to investigate it, and is only made further suspicious when Quark gets nervous and invokes this trope as the reason... giving Ziyal a chance to get behind him while he's distracted and knock him out with the
* In one episode, when Zapp encounters a genderswapped Fry, he thinks

* In one episode where Candace is teleported to Mars, the person working the Mars rover at NASA goes into a rant on the futility of the project, saying there is no life on Mars and shuts down the project, just when Candace was trying to get his attention. Even moreso, the citizens of Mars come out of hiding just
* In one episode, where Cartman is made a police officer, he immediately starts to abuse it, doing things like stopping Stan's dad for speeding. He was driving the speed limit.
* In one episode where Dr. Cox has to call the hospital dermatologist, he rants to the patient:
* In one episode where everyone thinks that Trapper is going back to the States due to an ulcer, the camp is throwing him a "farewell" party. At one point Hawkeye gives a heartfelt speech about how they'll all miss him as a friend and colleague, and in the ensuing silence, a drunken Colonel Blake is overheard trying to pick up a nurse in a corner of the room.
* In one episode, where J.D. is assigned with surgical teams, he gives them all nicknames. They all sound strangely phallic.
* In one episode where Jones the Steam (and a sheep) are stuck on a ledge down a cliff Jones sends Ivor and Nell the sheepdog to fetch help. The first person they find is frightened of the strange dog that suddenly comes up to him barking loudly and ends up stuck in a tree trying to get away. The next person they find is more aware that Nell is trying to tell them something and follows her to Ivor, and then panics when the driver-less locomotive sets off under its own power.
* In one episode where Marge was in a hostage situation, the criminal later broke out of jail to go after her... with a newspaper he was holding giving the address of the Simpson home
* In one episode where SpongeBob visits other people's dreams, Patrick's dream just consists of him riding a stationary kiddie ride. Even when SpongeBob points out Patrick can do anything in a dream, Patrick just sticks with his kiddie ride. When the ride stops and Patrick loses his last coin, he just sits there doing nothing.
* In one episode, where the titular character suddenly goes missing, Sandy Cheeks rallies the whole town to find him (he was hiding underneath a rock, specifically Patrick's house). When they couldn't find him, Sandy gets more desperate, forcing them into hazardous, potentially deadly environments like "leech farms". One of the exhausted townsfolk invokes this trope, and Sandy says "That's a good idea!
* In one episode where they have to use it twice, it all but empties the tanks.
* In one episode, while discussing giving up alcohol for a while, Adam and Ders both propose a time. Adam's is two days and Der's is a month.
* In one episode while he's being held prisoner by the Injustice League, one of Batman's moves to disrupt their unity is to seduce Cheetah... What
* In one episode, while Marshall and Lily were still broken up, Marshal finds a new guy friend in a similar situation and they get the idea to do things together that the would normally only be allowed to do with girlfriends, like having brunch. Marshall gets much teasing from the rest of the gang and he eventually gets uncomfortable with how much this feels like a real relationship. Yet at the end when the other guy gets back with his girlfriend, Marshall is hurt as though he'd been cheated on or dumped.
* In one episode, while the gang is using their imagination, Gonzo magically makes a rainbow bridge across a ravine and claims it to be "his nose". Unfortunately, as the other babies were walking across it, Gonzo let out a sneeze, and the sneeze caused the whole bridge to disappear causing everyone to fall down the ravine.
* In one episode, while the group is dodging traps set for Angel on their way to Guild, they are gradually all "killed" off, leaving only the two most central protagonists. Except, of course, they're already dead, so it's impossible for them to die;
* In one episode, Wiggum agrees to "arrest" Bart in order to give him a bad-boy reputation if he goes to Ralph's birthday party. He later offers the same deal to Fat Tony in exchange for ignoring their drug dealing at the local high school.
* In one episode without Andy, Sandi Toksvig starts making height jokes about him.

When the others start joining in, she says "If I'm in charge of the edit, that's the only bit that'll go out."
* In one episode with this premise, in which Chuck and Sarah pose as a just-married couple in order to investigate a suspicious neighbourhood. This actually forms part of the larger plot between Chuck and Sarah, in that both of them realise that it's the life they want to have together but never can.
* In one episode, Woody refuses to bowl because he once injured a bowling alley maintenance man, leaving him unable to work there anymore:
* In one episode, Worf claims to dislike swimming as it's "too much like bathing". Is the joke that Worf
* In one episode, Zod does this to Oliver, only to find that Oliver's crossbow bolt is tipped with kryptonite.
* In one ep, Potter was delighted by an accidentally-delivered can of tomato juice, something he hasn't had in a long while. Radar wants to get him a whole case, so he, Hawkeye and BJ engage in a load of horse-trading and just plain grief to acquire it. When they get their goods, Potter reveals that he remembered why he had gone so long without tomato juice - he's
* In one example documented during beta testing, one NPC was assigned to rake leaves and another to sweep, but the raker was given the broom and the sweeper the rake. Rather than trade their respective instruments, the one with the rake killed the other, looted the broom from its corpse, and began sweeping.
* In one experiment an ice cream bar was placed inside the safe and the door closed. Three hours later it was taken out again. It had not melted at all during that time.
* In one extent or another this is case in most of the strategy games, with the "good" fraction having shiny, or at least well-structured and regularly-shapped buildings while those of the "bad" one tend to be gritty, ominous-looking and/or battered or even cobbled together. The biggest offenders are Orcs (in
* In one extremely strange episode, the action is paused to take viewers behind the scenes into the making of an episode - but everybody is (sort of) still in character. One segment involves Scott and Tenaya 7 practicing their moves and explicitly stating that they do this so neither of them get hurt. Scott might not want to hurt Tenaya cause he's
* In one fabled incident, someone threw a live chicken onto the stage at an
* In one fairy-tale, Hans trades all the way up to marrying a Princess.
* In one fan remake it's possible to find a Monolith Burger behind a machine in the restaurant. Sitting at the empty booth and eating the burger
* In one Fantastic Four story, Reed Richards and his family go to Latveria and take it over briefly so they can dismantle Doom's assets while he's suffering from a temporary death. They're eventually challenged by
* In one fantasy sequence, Janitor cuts off J.D.'s arm with a circular saw. As blood comically squirts from the wound he simply replies "Aw, man... Give it back" while Janitor slaps him in the face with his own hand asking him "Only after you tell me why you're hitting yourself"
* In one, Father Mulcahy becomes highly tense when he learns that the head chaplain of the army was coming to inspect his good works.
* In one fell swoop, "Remembrance of the Daleks" completely undid years of increasingly lackluster stories with a well-plotted, tightly-written homage to the series' twenty-fifth anniversary and immediately redefined the Seventh Doctor from a bumbling incompetent who hangs off ledges for no apparent reason during his first season into a dark and mysterious figure who walks like a man and talks like a god.
* In one filler arc, Ichigo indignantly demands to know how the members of two noble clans didn't figure out that the others were noble in spite of using their distinctive clan names.
* In one filler episode, Goku and Piccolo save a schoolbus of children from falling off a cliff during their driving tests. Of course, they still fail the test.
* In one film, Harold attempts suicide by gunshot. It turned out to be a water pistol. He then stood in the way of a trolley — which took a different track.

This was quite common in silent films.
* In one first-season episode, Maxwell, distracted by problems at home, turns away dozens of women auditioning for a new Broadway show. He complains that he's looking for a big-name Broadway veteran with a ton of experience and an instantly recognizable voice...and that's when Carol Channing shows up. She gets one note of "Hello, Dolly," her
* In one folk song, the two characters are in love with each other, but the woman's father has made her promise to say "No" to any request a would-be suitor makes of her. Once the man realises this, he asks her to
* In one French tale, a man helps the Small Folk gather their crops and livestock (which they are allowed to do during a single night in the year), and later, to spread out their gold on the ground so it will see daylight and won't get spoilt. A large amount doesn't (luckily, the man isn't blamed for this), and the Small Folk throw it out, considering it mere trash or poison. Since the "spoiling" is merely the gold turning red, the guy becomes
* In one French translation of the book, the first word is actually spread over
* In one futuristic episode, MAL (Dr. Blight's AI sidekick) gets one in
* In one gag by French Canadian comic artist Garnotte, a newly liposuctioned woman discover than her fat is sold to the very fast food chain that made her fat as frying oïl.
* In one gag, Homer makes a powerful bomb out of a can of soda pop and a packet of pop rocks, based on the
* In one game of the site, Homestar's favorite snack the Bronco Trolley: peanut butter spread on a Triscuit and topped with an orange slice (with the peel intact). He also once seemed to enjoy Strong Bad's "Great Uncle Pawdabber's Pre-tend Ice Cream Showdown", until Marzipan told him that it was "like, cottage cheese and The Cheat's hair". Homestar is immediately grossed out because he was told
* In "One Good Scare Ought to Do It", Dr. Doofenshmirtz takes inventory of all the things in his escape jet:
* In "One Good Turn", during the Dance of Contrition, the mayor of Gimmelshtump moves to France and refuses to speak French. He paints the digit 9 over a sign with the word "neuf" ("nine" in French"), and exclaims "Nein!" ("No!" in German).
* In "One Good Turn" everyone blames Bill and Ben for the incident with the turntable, when the narrator very clearly said that it was the foreman's mistake.
* In one "Gorilla Glue" ad, a householder is contemplating re-hanging a garden gate, considers what fixings to use, and a very large gorilla walks up and just stands there looking down at him meaningfully. The threat is implicit, and the gorilla is visibly happy to see him using the ape-approved glue on the repair. However, the gorilla isn't always so threatening in other ads; sometimes he just hands them a free can of his glue.
* In one Greyhawk novel, a group sets out to cross the Sea of Dust, using a ship outfitted with huge inflated wheels. This becomes a subversion when the wheels get punctured by cacti and the ship is left immobile, something that
* In one guest comic, he goes for a more "realistic" solution when his roommate
* In one Halloween episode, Homer entered "the third dimension" and became CGI 3D, as did Bart when he went into that dimension to rescue Homer.
* In one Halloween 'toon, "3 Times Halloween Funjob", Homestar encounters this problem when Strong Sad's seance appears to cause a blackout.
* In one Halls cough drop ad, the personification of Winter - an old man, gets tackled by the personification of the cough drop - a football player.
* In one Hanes commercial, a character tells spokesman Michael Jordan he finds it unrealistic that random people would show him their underwear.
* In one, he correctly drops the grenade down a cliff, but it's bounced back at him. He then drops the pin... and another grenade is bounced back at him.
* In one, he partakes in the all-American activity of eating corn dogs, first by sticking his hand into a deep fryer to retrieve one, and then "eating" it via the magic of visual effects:
* In one, he's teasing her, saying "maybe you were lying when you said you could put it inside by yourself?" It turns out

* In one his letters, Tolkien pointed out that Elves and Men being able to interbreed means that they must be the same species. While unstated in that letter, this logic must also mean that the Orcs and Men are the same species — the Uruk-hai are, after all, * in one hit, except for a small number of bosses that are immune or are only sent to the next phase of the fight, and it also can't be used against players. Deathtouched darts can only be obtained as prizes during special events or occasionally they may be purchased for 5 million gold from the Traveling Merchant's Shop.
* In one horror comic, a mysterious stranger convinces a man to let him give him immortality, only for the man to decide he doesn't want it and return to the stranger seeking to be restored to mortality. Instead, he's run through a device that converts him into a liquid form and put into a sturdy pressurized metal container where he's constantly regenerating only to die from being crushed and suffocated to death in an endless cycle, and he's aware throughout every second of it and will be trapped like that for ages.
* In one humorous scene, a Protodeviln gets a "brilliant idea" for shielding himself against the humans' singing.
* In "One If By Clam, Two If By Sea", when Peter and friends end up in prison for a
* In one incident in series 1, David's oven shorted out and Ruth offered to share her own (which would have hurt her own cooking due to having to open the oven door more than necessary), though it didn't ultimately prove necessary to do so.
* In one, Inspector Winters asks for bicarbonate of soda for an upset stomach while in a bakery. The baker says she doesn't have any; this leads the detective to deduce that the bakery must be a front for smuggling, since bicarbonate of soda is baking soda and no real bakery would be without it. Except there's the possibility that the baker was unfamiliar with an antiquated term for baking soda (even more egregious today than when it was originally written: many modern
* In one instance a necron ship made it dangerously close to Holy Terra itself (close enough as in it could have landed on the planet) and bypassed an imperial blockade specifically designed to stop it. How? Because the blockade expected it to use warp drives to jump across the stars and were ready to intercept it during the jump. It jumped...just that it never entered the warp. This is in stark contrast to the Tau, who also have non-warp based interstellar travel, but can only make tiny "hops". The necron ship was only stopped because what little defenders were left at Terra managed to damage it enough to cause it to phase out (something that's also incomprehensible to the Imperium at large).
* In one instance, a trumpeter said he would "die to play [with amazing skill and moving ability]" and so he played as described before collapsing dead on the floor once the song was done.
* In one instance, Batman was talking with Catwoman after the Gang War storyline, which devastated the city
* In one instance, Black Hat instantly believes one of Megan's alternative scientific theories without even hearing the explanation, because he's "been looking for a weird hill to die on," then adds, "and all the real ones are too far from my house."
* In one instance, Bobby wants to impress two Czech models (whose accent is
* In one instance Captain America lost the strength and agility that was given to him by the Super Solider serum, turning him back into "that skinny kid from Brooklyn". While being intimidated by some newly super-powered thugs, Cap tells them that while the serum gave him physical strength, his skills are the result of years of training and discipline.
* In one instance Darla wears a red dress while Angel and his leather jackets get blue highlights under stage lighting.
* In one instance Haruna gets overexcited and summons her ship form to welcome some visitors to the hotel she works at, much to the chagrin of everyone there.
* In one instance, he asked a roadside merchant "Where are your legs?" No idea what he was trying to say. Immediately afterwards, he said "I'll eat your souvenirs." This one is actually somewhat understandable, because there is the possibility that he might have been told that souvenirs could be a generic term for shop goods, or at least that would be the only word he'd have. And then the English can say things like "I'll eat" to indicate that they would like to order a dish.

* In one instance, he considered just abandoning a wounded Chell away from GLaDoS's wrath just to save his own skin, but relents at the last second.
* In one instance he noted that poets were the most carefree, happy-go-lucky fellows alive... in contrast to their writings, which were invariably somber or morose.
* In one instance it represents Kyoko accepting the death of her husband and deciding to remarry.
* In one instance of particular annoyance, Leonardo restrained Raph from doing this... so he could smack Mikey himself.
* In one instance, one path is taken by the player and two mandatory party members, and the other by three party members of the player's choice. At another point, the main character gets kidnapped and must be rescued by two party members of the player's choice. Then there are at least three moments when one predefined party member must win a fight without assistance from the rest of the party; more were planned, but those
* In one instance, Ron was fighting Kim (his body controlled by a bad guy) when they argue about a misunderstanding. The dialog includes the lines "Oh, this is our first fight," and "I never meant to hurt you," as Ron throws Kim over a table.
* In one instance, Sakaki is gloating that he can help Kenichi out without "That meddling mustache" interfering, upon which we cut to Akisame sneezing,
* In one instance someone asked him how much he knew about the Vincent motorcycle he was riding. The talk show host demonstrated his knowledge by opening up the oil tank and dipping a finger in it. This would cause severe burns in most vehicles after use, but Leno knew the oil in the Vincent would be at about room temperature, even after a long ride.
* In one instance, there is a sign saying "Do Not Break Wall". Ryōga breaks it.
* In one instance they had to disable the safeties on an elevator. Adam eventually reported, "Anticlimactically enough, I believe I've disabled the entire mechanism
* In one instance, two accountants are seen working inside Peter's skull as he suffers a hangover. In another, we cut to the inside of his brain, as the last brain cell after Peter's heavy drinking killed the rest (in homage to
* In one insurance commercial a tree falls on a couple's car and they nervously call their insurance company to make a claim. The operator tells them their low rate plan only covers damage from a
* In one intermission flash, it's possible to control Damara beyond the first area as an
* In one interview, Marc Brown said that the character of Marina was a "variation of a dog," despite looking like a rabbit. In a discussion with fans, producer/director Greg Bailey said that Marina is a rabbit, the designers had given her a dog nose by mistake, and it went unnoticed until after the fact.
* In one interview, Neil Innes said that the most important part of writing the music for
* In one interview, Stephenie Meyer supposedly said that she was going to write a book about "
* In one interview, the cast is asked 'Who is The Most...' questions about each other. It's
* In one interview while he was promoting his old-school slasher flick
* In one investigation of a man's disappearance, the authorities were first clued in to him and his wife not having the best relationship when they saw clear evidence at the home that one of them had been sleeping on the couch. Sure enough, it turned out he had been murdered and his wife was the culprit.
* In one IRN-BRU advertisement, a man is walking through the rain in the countryside, whilst cartoon animals cower when he comes near. Then he opens up a can of IRN-BRU and the suns starts shining. He starts whistling, and walks along whilst the cartoon animals happily follow. He then leads them into a shop. Before shutting them in he pulls down the shutter to reveal it is in fact a butcher's whilst grinning very evilly. To make matters worse, you see some cartoon eyes blink in the dark to then cut to cartoon pieces of meat dancing cheerfully around the can at the end.

* In one issue early in his time as the Flash, Wally West expresses contempt for a homeless man who seeks shelter in his apartment building. Then
* In one issue Homer gets an idea and a bulb appears above his head, but it actually belongs to a lamp Marge is cleaning.
* In one issue Morpheus grants an audience to a group of children on a cross-dimensional adventure to find their parents, they appear for half a page before the king of Dreams sends them on their way.
* In one issue, Nelson stops bullying the kids at Springfield Elementary for their lunch money, which allows them to buy the cafeteria's food such as Cream of Lard. After eating this on a regular basis, Bart, Milhouse and most of the other kids have gotten so fat that they can't fit in their desks.
* In one issue of Gold Key's Pink Panther, the titular feline finds a laundry bag filled with money. "I've heard of filthy lucre, but I never knew it needed to be laundered!"
* In one issue of Jason Aaron's run, Thor escorts a young SHIELD cadet at her graduation party, after she sent a letter asking him (she didn't seriously expect him to respond, but was thrilled that he did so).
* In one issue of the manga Togusa (in that version a cyborg like the rest of them) uses a 50-cal anti-tank rifle.
* In one issue: Sonic vs. Scourge vs. Shadow vs. Amy vs. Rosy vs. Rob 'O vs. Metal Sonic vs. Silver... with absolutely no real clear way to tell who's fighting who and when. Though it quickly turns into everyone vs. Scourge when he
* In one issue, Spidey is kidnapped and is being looked after by a sultry villainess who offers him "anything he wants." He requests a solid cage thingy so she'll leave him alone — as he is
* In one issue there is a story that the world was once run by cats the size of men and humans were the size of cats and were just playthings and servants. Dream told a human that if enough of them dreamt that things were different they would be. After most of humanity dreams that they were in charge the universe is rewritten so that cats had never been the dominant life and nobody remembered these events (except for Dream who naturally tells a cat this story and that they can change it back with enough belief).
* In one issue, the villainous Dynamo Boy, having tricked the rest of the Legion into quitting, held his own auditions — and while he was largely met with the same type of also-rans who show up to other Legion try-outs, he turned down a couple of decent candidates for petty reasons. His reasons being that, using some future technology to get a scan of their personalities, judged they were too decent and wouldn't be converted to evil so easily.
* In one issue, the villainous Kadabra is caught in an explosion. A cop says, "There's no body. The blast must have incinerated the corpse. Guess that's the last we've seen of him."
* In one issue, Wally West uses a fellow speedster's mental speed-formula to get an extra boost and save people in a copter. Time comes to a near-dead stop. Wally freaks out until Max Mercury somehow correlates his speed with Wally's (but...Wally is going so much faster than him...
* In one issue, when told of possible evidence Spidey is behind a robbery, J. Jonah Jameson surprises his staff by refusing to print it. As he states, he may believe Spider-Man is a crook but "how many times have I printed it, he's proven innocent and I end up with egg on my face?"
* In one Italian tale, the King isn't happy about having promised his daughter's hand in marriage to a peasant, so he technically fulfills the request, but stations guards in the room, makes them keep all the lights on, and makes the peasant and his daughter
* In one, it shows the saints being media sellouts and producing a B-movie grade deal, after taking the affable option, giving up revenge for their friends, and playing up their name for it. The hypocrisy of of playing game where where you routinely kill people for fun while still trying to be a "good guy". The other one shows the captive die and the saints basically give a dare against a military force to bring it on. Much less in this ending, as you are playing the game more or less as intended, but compared to the rest the game it's rather dark and completely serious.

* In one Jewish midrash, a young Abraham was brought before King Nimrod for refusing to worship idols, and cast into a furnace. His brother Haran, watching this, thought to himself that he would support Abraham if he survived but side with Nimrod if Abraham died. When Abraham miraculously emerged unscathed, Nimrod asks Haran where he stood in this debate. Haran said that he sided with Abraham, was thrown into the furnace, and did
* In one Jewish tale, a bunch of rabbis are contradicted by God about the correct way to perform a certain ritual; He appears and His voice comes booming out of the sky telling them they're wrong. The rabbis confer with each other for a moment, and then turn back to God and tell Him that the decision falls under rabbinical jurisdiction and that according to the rules, it's their ruling that counts, not His. God concedes the point and
* In "One Joke to Rule Them All", Zecora has a brief scene, after which a caption appears, reading "And we'll never see Zecora again... A fate worse than Luna."
* In one José Carioca story, José gets out of an American jail by paying his bail with Sugarloaf Mountain in Brazil. Later he gets himself a disguise by trading a random key, which he claims is for the Sugarloaf Mountain cable car, for a random person's clothes. And in another story aliens come to Earth to sell the moon to humans, when they try selling it to José, he ends selling the Sugarloaf Mountain to them.
* In one "Kermit at Home" sketch, Oscar the Grouch installs a "Bus Stop" sign in Kermit the Frog's living room, which results in the Grouch Bus plowing its way to the newly minted bus stop.
* In one known case in the annals of the history of the Third Age, Sauron manages to indirectly gain control over the corpses of the dead by utilising the Barrow-Wights. According to the supplementary materials they are evil spirits (not the souls of the original deceased) sent by the Witch-King of Angmar, Sauron's
* In "One Krab's Trash", Mr. Krabs sells a soda drink hat to SpongeBob, and then, after finding out that it's apparently worth a million dollars, attempts to scare it off SpongeBob by telling him the hat is cursed and unless he returns it to the grave of its previous owner,
* In one Krazy Kat strip, there is a Spanish-language poster that changes with every frame (and changes fence side for one frame), but is always a word or phrase in Spanish with an image that matches the text. Special props to the one on Ignatz's side of the fence that reads "Ratón Muerto", Dead Mouse.
* In one Lakota creation story, the first two people are both male, so they take wives from the animal kingdom. Eventually, they stop doing so when this
* In one later arc, Calvin creates a good version clone of himself to go to school and do all his chores. However, the arc starts off after this initial event has happened, so the audience is dropped into it just as suddenly as Calvin's mother, who, just like the viewer would be, is extremely confused why "Calvin" is suddenly polite and well-groomed.
* In one "Learning Elite English" stream with Coco and Sakura Miko that involved asking an English speaker how to get to the Statue of Liberty and then for Miko to ask Coco (who is a humanoid dragon) to fly her to the top, Miko introduces herself by saying "Ecuscuse me, Freedomu", describes the statue as "Freedom Lady", then asks to go to the top with "Me! Me statue lebady, top, toppu go!" After Coco correctly translates that, out of nowhere Miko says "go butterfly patapatta, patta patta top, jump patapatta butterfly", which Coco translates as Miko wanting to jump off the top to kill herself. 10 minutes later Coco realises that she's confused the word "butterfly" with the basic form "fly". Pattapatta was an onomatopoeia for flapping wings.

* In one letters column in Nation Lampoon, a baseball player finally achieves his dream of getting signed to the majors, and says "pinch me!" Someone does...
* In one level of the fourth game, choosing to backtrack into the building you just exited is physically impossible. Apparently, this one side of the building is capable of withstanding bullets, grenades, C4, missile launchers, and even rail gun fire.
* In one live performance (one of the concerts he did in the USSR in 1987) he noticed that audience members who were enjoying themselves became uncomfortable when the lights fell on them, as the film crew documenting the show kept turning on the lights so they could get film of the audience. He lost his temper, and ended up flipping over his
* In one London production Max had a good old moan about the refreshments on offer in the theatre: "What? THREE POUNDS for icecream?! It's tiny! Where's the proper spoon? What are you supposed to do with this little wooden thing?"
* In one loop, everyone at the bar is talking about some of the weird variants of Twilight Velvet (Twilight Sparkle's mother) that they've seen. Then someone mentions a time Velvet was a ninja. And then everyone realizes none of them said it...
* In one loop, Twilight and her friends wake up as dinosaurs—with half of them carnivores. They immediately jump in the nearest volcano and just deal with the
* In one manga chapter, for reasons that make as much sense in context, Nozomu brings in his "second opinion" of his students, who are (mostly
* In one manga chapter of the first dramatic arc, Usagi tells her father that she is Sailor Moon, despite the fact that clear photos of her senshi form has appeared all over the news, he doesn't believe her.
* In one man is sent to Hell for liking butts and is sentenced to being crushed by giant sweaty asses. Naturally, he is delighted.
* In "One Man's Treasure", Alexis tells Beckett, "I know my dad can sometimes be a handful, and by sometimes I mean all the time".
* In one Mario animated video online called "The Color of Envy", Luigi(who wears a green hat and shirt with his blue overalls), jealous of Princess Toadstool favoring Mario, frees Wario from the dungeon, kills all the guards who oppose him, and throws Mario in the dungeon.
* In one Marvel/DC graphic novel, Two-Face stole a prototype biological computer chip from Wayne Tech, then high-tailed it to New York City. Batman encounters Daredevil while in pursuit. While chasing Two-Face and his primary accomplice down, Daredevil mentions
* In one Mattel commercial from the 90s, an atypical Old Master teaches his young student how to play
* In one memorable sketch, Hugh Laurie stopped in the middle to protest that this was one of those sketches where Stephen's role just got sillier until there was no way to end things properly, and it was just abandoned. Stephen protested that of
* In one minor gag/plot point, an immigration officer doesn't believe Aang is the Avatar because people have taken to dressing up just like him in hopes of getting free passage. (Why he doesn't demonstrate with some bending, nobody knows...)
* In one mission of "Heart of the Swarm" the Hyperion is capable of launching "tac fighters" to help deal with swarms of enemies too numerous for just the main guns.
* In one mission, two nobodies are chased halfway around the world and declared public-enemy heretics because they have tiny, tiny snippets of information against a super-cult. One of them is suicidal (and has been since she was 14), the other doesn't even know the password to the tablet PC he stole, or what is on it.
* In one mission, you're required to steal one of Madame Geisha's dresses for Murray. However,
* In one moment in particular, Captain Hero demonstrated his powers of immortality by
* In one Mountain Dew commercial, a guy finds out his car remote can transform objects. Since he just broke up with his girlfriend, he conveniently uses it to turn his best friend

* In one movie alone he stole a submarine, a large nuclear fuel source, a space shuttle, and a satellite full of money.
* In one Muppet News Flash, after an interview with a woman who's trying to break the world record for the most jumps in a row (motivating herself by standing on a hot plate), the Newsman calls someone to ask "Where do we get these nuts?" In many other sketches, while he doesn't say it aloud, his expression just
* In one Muppet News segment, The Newsman reports that an airplane was forced to throw out some sports equipment, which falls on The Newsman. In another, an airplane was forced to throw out some musical instruments, leading to a piano falling on The Newsman.
* In one murder case the perpetrator did actually leave his calling card at the scene of the crime, by dropping a case of them not far away. Unsurprisingly, he was the primary suspect from the beginning to the end of the case, and the prosecutor had an
* In one myth, Thor encountered a strange house while on a journey to recover his stolen hammer: five small rooms letting off a single much larger room. It turned out to be a giant's glove.
* In one non-canon episode (which could theoretically describe the majority) Homer dies and is told to perform one good deed to get into heaven. After a lack of success, Homer saves a baby from a runaway carriage — the empty carriage proceeds to roll down the stairs he was sat on, into the road where a couple of cars narrowly avoid hitting it, then tipping over and
* In one notable case he gave an artist who had been painting landscapes on an island during an H-bomb test a new body to save him from radiation poisoning. He died anyway from brain cancer but not before completing one last painting.
* In one notable example, he got into an argument with Hank Pym when he claimed that he knew more about Pym particles than Hank did. Hank called him a bitch for that insult.
* In one notable instance, a man flips a car after a plant makes him delirious. Clark's father pulls the man from the car just before it blows up in a miniature MUSHROOM CLOUD explosion. Seriously.
* In one notable storyline, Charlie Brown's baseball team actually wins a ballgame for once...only for the PTA to take away their victory due to a scandal involving Rerun and Snoopy betting a nickel on the game.
* In one novel, a Klingon refugee mentions that he had served a tour of duty in the Klingon Navy as a drafted engineer, but all battle glory earned on his ship (against pirates, not the Federation) tended to be assigned to the officers and those who worked directly with the weapons systems. And G'Dath was a
* In one novel, the ship's AI, Holly, used to be too intelligent to believe in it, but several million years of senility have led him to adopt the idea with unshakable faith. Kryten destroyed his intended replacement by
* In one novel, we find out that the Central Command has their own intelligence-gathering branch. Naturally, the Obsidian Order sees them as inferior. This is likely intended to mirror the
* In one novel Worf is with a detachment of Klingons trying to breach a heavily shielded base. They can't get through with their normal weapons, so Worf replicates a
* In one occasion, a Diabolik copycat had his hired accomplices recycle some of Diabolik's schemes... And Ginko promptly identified him as a copycat
* In one occasion, a Soviet submarine was caught in Italian waters and surrendered, explaining they had suffered a breakdown. There
* In one occasion, one led a frontal attack on enemy lines, and while it's unclear if it was successful the battalion suffered exactly
* In one occasion the police found a man that looked like Diabolik with bleached hair, and brought him in. Thankfully, the accidental switch was discovered before he could suffer Diabolik's pending capital punishment... But then he met the title character, and as they had reasons to help each other they freely took advantage of the trope.
* In one of Angus Fangus' short stories, our reporter has been captured by the mysterious

* In one of Anthony Sullivan's commercial for some cleaning product, as he was cleaning the carpet, he said the stuff he was using was good, "if you have kids, if you have animals, if you have kids that act like animals."
* In one of Betty Neels' romance novels, her heroine is very frustrated while trying to read the hero's writing and claims it looks like a spider fell in the inkwell and walked across the paper. Yes, the hero is a doctor.
* In one of Carla Kelly's Regency romances, this is done to the heroine because she married well beneath her station.
* In one of Chuck Jones' 'Three Bears' cartoons, Junyer inadvertently electrocutes his Paw, then gets the idea to plug two lightbulbs in the dazed Paw's ears (and they light up!) then places a lampshade over his head. Mama anxiously says "Henry - what will the neighbors think?"
* In one of Daniel Silva's novels about an Israeli spy, the hero is captured by Palestinian terrorists who want to place him at a suicide bombing in France they carry out as a False Flag Operation framing Israel for another, like the odious conspiracy theory Israel was behind 9/11. Sadly, it works at least temporarily all too well.
* In one of Danish writer Jorn Riel's books, a parasitic worm leaves its host's body through his tear duct. It's not particularly painful or dangerous...at least for the host. Most of the damage is incurred by his mates, who argue about it so much the whole thing ends up in a fist fight.
* In one of Dr Asimov's short mystery stories, the culprit is a Québécois person using a false identity of an American. The detective tricks him into revealing his true identity by asking him to write the word "Montréal", and he writes it with an
* In one of Harlan Ellison's short stories, he has the protagonist trapped in a situation that, judging by the description, there is absolutely no way he could logically escape. The author then stops the story to tell us that the protagonist remembers a time he once bought a pulp novel that ended with a
* In one of her earliest appearances, Celia blasts Nale with a lightning bolt to punish him for pranking her into thinking her family was dead. Later strips have established her as an
* In one of her "off again" phases, we got to see her current boyfriend. Who was dumb as a post and pretty self-absorbed. He was
* In one of his appearances, Sideshow Bob is convicted of voter fraud for fixing the mayoral election - and is sentenced to Springwood Minimum Security Prison and joins the prison rowing team to race against Princeton.
* In one of his books, critic Joe Queenan's response to a (hypothetical) request of this nature was "do my taxes."
* In one of his books, he says that xkcd were random letters he chose for a domain name he had bought long before and kept for no particular reason.
* In one of his comedy bits, Jerry speculates that the reason so many people are unemployed is because they're too easily disgusted:
* In one of his DC crossover fatalities, Raiden uses his electric powers to burn off all the opponent's flesh, leaving behind their smoking skeleton.
* In one of his decoded letters, the Zodiac Killer wrote, "I like killing people because it is so much fun it is more fun than killing wild game in the
* In one of his early sportscasting gigs as the play-by-play announcer for the American Basketball Association's Spirits of St. Louis, Bob Costas tried to say that the team didn't want to blow their lead as they had in the game they played the night before. But he fumbled it a bit and said "They don't want a repeat of last night's blow job." He got reprimanded but kept his job.
* In one of his flashbacks, Ted talks about working with the Malombo tribe in the Peace Corps. Everyone is dark-skinned and wear cloth wraps and beads, and the men brandish spears and wear feathered headdresses and face paint.
* In one of his forewords he said that the book contained no map but readers should feel free to draw one if they wanted to. A reader named Stephen Briggs took him at his word, which is how the various Discworld maps ended up being drawn. In the forewords to the maps Pratchett expresses surprise that places he made up for the sake of a joke and then forgot about fit together so neatly.

* In one of his notes, Watterson himself called TV "the favorite drug of the 20th Century".
* In one of his novels, Bayard Kendrick has his blind detective explain that you kill the first person because you absolutely have to. Then you kill the next person because they know too much. Then you kill again because there are loose ends. In the end, you just keep killing because you've gotten good at it.
* In one of his other series "I Spy" has a book focused entirely on the spooky house (Which may or may not be the same house as above, as he is known to reuse images in various books)
* In one of his routines, Tim Steeves opined that Americans think Canada is so cold because weather maps measure Canadian temperatures in Celsius and American in Fahrenheit, extrapolating that to a scenario where colonial explorers demarcated the border between the US and Canada because the temperature abruptly dropped forty degrees.
* In one of his short stories about Hollywood, "The Castaways", screenwriters are portrayed as random people who were tricked into signing a contract; the process is compared to
* In one of his songs, singing comedian Stephen Lynch portrays Satan as completely and
* In one of his stand-up routines Irish comedian Ed Byrne noted that there was an increasing strain of anti-immigration rhetoric entering Irish society ... before pointing out that, given the prominent history of Irish immigration to other countries, the Irish might not have much of a leg to stand on about this:
* In one of his travel memoirs, P.J. O'Rourke once described visiting a souvenir shop in another country and seeing a sculpture the row of monkeys with the accompanying slogans below them, but with a fourth monkey with its hands firmly grabbing its crotch, and the slogan, "FUCK NO EVIL".
* In one of his TV specials, George Carlin appeared with a cardboard cutout of his suit-wearing clean-shaven younger self from his early days in comedy. He said, "I used to be this guy. He used to be me."
* In one of his wordy-books Scott Adams expressed irritation with all the astronomy jokes about Pluto, and insists that Uranus will forever be the comedy king of the solar system.
* In one of Howie Mandel's stage shows, a dog was supposed to come out and bark like
* In one of Jeanne Robertson's videos she describes interviewing her Administrative Assistant who opens a closet before Jeanne can warn her "and the sporting world fell out upon her."
* In one of Jerry Stiller and Anne Meara's sketches, Stiller's character (a Jewish bagel baker) uses a bagel in lieu of a ring.
* In one of Jill Paton Walsh's detective novels, the police inspector states that they almost never get enough evidence to perfectly unambiguously convince the jury and win a trial; instead, they get enough evidence to convince the murderer that they could, at which point they confess.
* In one of Kevin Meaney's stand-up routines about housekeeping at hotels, he mentions the fact that room service sometimes leaves chocolate on your pillow and that the first time this happened to him, he thought he had pooped in his bed. This routine also appeared on an episode of
* In one of Kirk Mitchell's mysteries starring FBI agent Emmett Parker, Parker is
* In one of Liara's "non-critical correspondence" files, two Alliance interrogators are warming up to start this routine on a captured Cerberus phantom... and then
* In one of Lukyanenko's short stories, there's two of those going on, as well as rapid technology escalation. A grey arrives into a rural farmland and offers people gifts, but they already have their village utopia. Then he tries to invade Earth, but is thwarted with the use of this trope. Then he reveals himself to be
* In one of Ralf König's comics, there's a parrot whose previous owner had spent all his free time watching porn films. Consequently, it was very hard to find an owner who could tolerate the parrot's utterances...

* In one of Sasha Nein's memory vaults, we see that he was traumatized as a child when he read his father's mind in order to see his dead mother and accidentally saw her naked, and we know that Elka, one of the campers, foresaw one of her parents' having an affair.
* In one of Sideshow Bob's schemes to kill Bart, he places him restrained on a conveyor belt, which apparently includes the option of "gloating speed" for Bob to give a triumphant verbal bashing long enough for his family to arrive and save him.
* In one of specials he begins complaining about thrift stores and the like that slap stickers all over video games, or used games in general that are in terrible condition, and yells "Who would do this?! I take good care of my games!" When he's saying this, however, it shows the clip from his
* In one of the alternate endings in Disgaea D2, she has so much love that she unleashes some sort of ultimate love attack and causes Barbara to retreat out of inability to fight the love. Unfortunately, she can't stop causing whatever effect she's making, resulting in unleashing so much angelic power and love that she accidentally turns the entire Netherworld into a second Celestia (think "Heaven"). Not only does this entirely negate every single thing the main characters were working for, but it results in Flonne personally apologizing to every demon in the Netherworld...while still trying to promote love to them.
* In one of the apocryphal Infancy Gospels the whole world stopped for a moment when baby
* In one of the audio dramas, Saruhiko visits Misaki at his job, which is wearing one of these at an amusement show for kids. He's the monster that the superhero fights. He isn't very enthusiastic about it.
* In one of the biggest aversions of this trope (and therefore a pretty biting case of irony),
* In one of the black books for the [[Horus Heresy]] series, it's mentioned that Autek Mor of the Iron Hands Legion destroyed Bodt, the World Eaters' main recruitment world, by dropping the planet's moon onto its surface.
* In one of the books, a cosmetics company has taken Erzebet Bathory's
* In one of the books, Greg explicitly says he had intended to become this to Manny and treat Manny the same way Rodrick treats him. But he could never really do it because he can't get away with a thing with Manny, due to his parents being extremely protective of him.
* In one of the books, Maverick learns that Maniac was passed over (again) for promotion to Lieutenant Colonel. The narration notes that
* In one of the books, Rodrick locks Greg out of his hotel room while the latter is in his underwear.
* In one of the books, Rowley brings some home videos and suggests that he and Greg watch some. They're titled "Rowley's 5th Grade Play", "TRIP TO [obscured by the DVD]LIA", and... "Rowley's Birth".
* In one of the books, two feuding families have been going at it for generations. One side even cursed the other so that female children are sometimes born as mermaids who cannot conceive. This all comes to a crashing halt when one side gets a hold of Farslayer, a sword which does exactly what it sounds like it should do. Most of the two sides are wiped out in one night.
* In one of the books, Wanda and Arnold are seen observing mold growing on slices of old bread. It's learning to talk.
* In one of the books, White Wolf has an encounter with Caine, the first vampire in
* In one of the chapters, Loose Change tries to explain the question of Starswirl's place in the timeline, as he was recorded to live in two different time periods centuries apart. Loose Change says that Starswirl had a son, also named Starswirl the Bearded. But then this is complicated by the fact that she brings up that Starswirl specifically said he was infertile. So instead, Loose Change
* In one of the Civil War quests, the Dragonborn poses as an enemy courier to deliver disinformation (forged documents) to an enemy commander. If s/he is wearing an enemy uniform, the commander will accept the documents without question. (If s/he is wearing anything else instead, the commander

* In one of the comics, Arthur Crandall(the ventriloquist behind Gabbo) prevents Krusty from renewing his character copyright so he can take over as the new Krusty the Clown. After failing to take his identity back legally, a new scheme is hatched where Krusty takes Sideshow Mel's place as Arthur Krusty's sidekick. When Arthur tries to fire Krusty on the spot, Krusty informs him that there are provisions to firing him like two-week notice. Krusty boasts that sidekicks have a great union, and you can see behind him
* In one of the comics, Faith and Robin Wood meet a group of children who have been turned into vampires by their mother. They destroy them all.
* In one of the Completing the Mission scenes, Henry will try to get on a train while hiding in a bush. The guards joke on whether or not someone might be in it...and then set it on fire.
* In one of the conversations before the Eden Prime mission, Shepard can describe Nihlus as "carrying enough weapons to kill an entire squad."
* In one of the coolest uses of this trope seen in the wrestling biz,
* In one of the Crisis Missions on the PS2 version, you have to fight without the ability to take cover. All enemies only go down if shot three times in rapid succession. Landing fewer shots will result in this trope, and it's always a 'crisis bullet' that will hit you.
* In one of the cutaway gags involving Quagmire (more specifically the one in the episode "
* In one of The Discovery Channel's "Know More Than You Should" ads, a woman witnesses a squirrel run out into the street. She remarks to a coworker, "Great, now there'll be cats everywhere." Her coworker gives her a funny look, but as she predicted, a car swerves to avoid the squirrel, a truck swerves to avoid the car and tips over. Said truck was a tank-truck full of milk, and as milk pours out onto the street, hundreds of cats arrive to lap it up.
* In one of the Dragon Magazine exclusive strips, Durkon and Vaarsuvius conceal themselves from a couple of pursuing wights with a
* In one of the earlier books, a girl gives her new hair ribbon to a boy who's about to fight another boy for insulting her.
* In one of the earlier books in the series, Sparta muses that at the same time that humans are trying to make Venus more like Earth, Earth is becoming more like Venus, thanks to extensive use of coal power, coupled with humans' over-reliance on air-conditioning.
* In one of the earlier cases, the killer's motive for killing his grandfather, etc. was because he fell in love with his cousin, and the older man forbids them from marrying. The killer's parents were also cousins, and the patriarch reluctantly agreed to their marriage.
* In one of the earlier episodes, Castle takes Beckett to a fancy ball. After being introduced to the mayor, Castle asks Beckett if she wants a drink, her reaction was very much this trope, though she tried to back out of it (Castle ignores her).
* In one of the earlier episodes, when the main four are setting up their own news channel, Stumpy is tasked with being a news reporter. When he asks what to do, Mr. Cat says "Hit me with the news!" Stumpy responds by picking up a newspaper and throwing it so it hits Mr. Cat in the face.
* In one of the earliest examples, Barry Allen was a big fan of the Flash from
* In one of the early Death Knight quests, the fledgling Death Knight is instructed to steal a horse to earn his steed. A tauren stealing a pony and riding it back to the Scourge base camp is one of the funniest things you will ever see. It's too bad that when he gets his Deathcharger, they are all standard horses, scaled appropriately, and they don't get to keep the one they steal.
* In one of the early episodes her uncaring attitude was being used against her in a court case. Booth has the attorney bring up her vanished parents in order to show this trope to the jury.
* In one of the early shorts, Bart wants Grampa to tell a scary story. As Grampa starts telling it, he suddenly dies.

* In one of the early Sunday strips, Daryl and Zoe are passing by a fat construction worker, who's yelling over the noise of a jackhammer and swearing like a sailor... Until he spots Zoe in her little stroller, undergoes a complete personality shift, and coos to her like a mother. In Daryl's words to her, "How do you
* In one of the early Warhammer 40,000 novels by Ian Watson (before the background fluff had been set in stone) the Imperial assassin Melindeh has been conditioned to withstand any form of torture, but she is helpless when the villain takes to overloading the pleasure centers of her brain.
* In one of the ending shots in "Chutney Dam", specifically one where Samosa, Vada, and Jalebi are sitting next to each other, the swirl on Jalebi's head is noticeably bigger than it's usually depicted.
* In one of the endings, you do this by willing yourself out of existence. That's one of the
* In one of the episodes, Fargo finds a strange device and, naturally, turns it on. It turns out to be a force-field generator, whose field is constantly increasing in size, threatening to destroy Eureka. When Carter finds out that someone gave the device to Fargo, he berates that person, who claims he didn't think that Fargo would activate it. Carter looks at him incredulously and points out that it's Fargo they're talking about.
* In one of the episodes in the second half of the first series, the Cures completed their demand for the creature of darkness to return from whence it came, only to discover that the creature of darkness
* In one of the episodes, Shane is mugged in Mexico and loses his badge. For the next several episodes until he is discovered, he uses a counterfeit one. A fake of a fake.
* In one of the Expedia ads where the guy is predicting everything that's going to happen while he's walking down the street on his trip, this is one of them. "Embarrassingly transparent."
* In one of the featurettes aired prior to the start of Season 1 to introduce the world of Westeros to viewers,
* In one of the few happy cases of changing the film's original name in Mexico, the movie was renamed
* In one of the few non-cheating examples of this, Nanase is introduced in
* In one of the few, non-main character examples, a lieutenant gets a captain's position in the episode "The Siege of AR-558," though she loses it when Sisko arrives.
* In one of the few times that he hits a woman, Marv from does this to Wendy in order to
* In one of the first issues, when Spider-Man defeated Electro for the first time and unmasked him, he thought "If this was a movie, I would be saying 'Good Heavens! The
* In one of the first lines in the entire saga, Raymus Antilles tells Vader that the
* In one of the funniest sequences in the entire history of a very funny show,
* In one of the Futurama-Comics, Fry, Leela, Bender and Zapp Brannigan escape from a Farm-Planet in a rocket made of corn.
* In one of the games, shortly before the Aliens come into play, there's a piece of ventilation in THE EXACT SHAPE of a Xenomorph head that drops quickly in from above and hangs there.
* In one of the gravest public blunders of the Italian judiciary system, Enzo Tortora was wrongfully sentenced to ten years in prison after accusations of being a member of the Camorra involved in drug trafficking, based on paper-thin evidence and the claims of a mentally unstable
* In one of the greatest upset victories in US election history, the 1948 presidential election between
* In one of the guest comics, Frank hosts a barbecue, and when Wayne and Guy ask about it, there's a flashback to a version of Frank time-traveling from the future and murdering his past counterpart to prevent him conducting an experiment with apparently unfavorable outcome. Wayne has no idea what this story has to do with the barbecue, but

* In one of the Halloween episodes, Homer attempts to smuggle souvenirs out of an unidentified Middle Eastern country without paying export duties. When he is caught, he is surrounded by armed policemen who demand he pay a fine "... of
* In one of the Horde's plans to defeat She-Ra, they created a female golem that copied the heroine's powers. It backfired because the golem copied She-Ra
* In one of their first undercover missions, Asano and Shinohara from
* In one of their other games, Black Ops, this is the justification given for why the rulebook has things statted up and advice on running games despite being framed as an in-universe document- if its leaked, it can be passed off as simply an RPG supplement.
* In one of their vague meetings, the not-cultists mention hiring two ponies to catch someone named "Star". A later chapter reveals the two are
* In one of their videos, they defend lootboxes as not gambling because you cannot cash out your winnings. Except you can—some provide an interface for doing
* In one of their website posts explaining about new use of smart pings, the developers' chosen image was of the '?' ping over a dead player character - a common site in-game when players are demanding to know what someone thought they were doing when they got themselves killed.
* In one of the Johto episodes, Misty is excited to meet the Nurse Joy who comes from a line of Joys who specialize in treating Water Pokémon... only to discover that this Joy is afraid to even touch Water Pokémon because she hates them so much. Needless to say, as Misty is a Water type specialist,
* In one of the King Features Syndicate cartoons, Popeye foils the Sea Hag's plan. He's conflicted as to what to do with her afterwards, as he
* In one of the last comics published before the strip ended in 2000,
* In one of the last pre-Crisis stories, Mr Mxyzptlk dumps Argo City (
* In one of the later chapters, Terezi attempts her hand at insane troll logic when she finds the
* In one of the later episodes of the season, as a result of Will and his girlfriend getting back at Carlton helping scorned lovers get back at him, he ran screaming
* In one of the later EU novels, Data admits to Wesley that he'd been doing this on purpose from the very beginning, in an effort to understand human psychology better.
* In one of the later strips, this accidentally happened when Charlie Brown met Peggy Jean at camp. He got nervous, and introduced himself as "Brownie Charles". She called him that all the time from that point, and he actually kind of liked it, so he never corrected her.
* In one of the Legion pre-patch cinematics, Gul'dan has Varian Wrynn on his knees, already impaled on several demons' swords.
* In one of the live-action Scooby-Doo movies, Daphne does this to Fred to keep the school principal from recognizing them while they are in disguise, so they can sneak into their school (after being suspended) to investigate.
* In one of the many, many attempts by the DC writers to counteract the whole
* In one of the many risque, only tangentially related to real estate, banned Tough Spot commercials for the site rebaterentals.com, one girl gives another a wedgie in her bikini as they fight over a guy at the beach.
* In one of them, Don is on the elevator with a couple of younger guys who start talking in fairly graphic detail about a sexual conquest. The elevator stops and an older woman, presumably a secretary, gets on... and the guys don't stop. Don, ever the
* In one of the "Messing with Bigfoot" commercials for Jack Links, Bigfoot gives a guy a wedgie before throwing him into the air after he and his friends offered to let him kick a football,
* In one of them, Hitler seizes on the delay caused by the Balkans campaign of 1941 to invade the oil-rich Middle East through Turkey, then launches a two-pronged Operation Barbarossa in 1942. Soviet resistance collapses within several months, while the U.K. is forced to sign a peace treaty because of the threat Germany then poses to India.

* In one of the minor adventures the protagonists have while traveling from place to place in
* In one of the more infamous moments of the 2002 election season, Georgia Senator Saxby Chambliss ran an ad against contender Max Cleland — a Vietnam war veteran who'd lost three limbs to a grenade — questioning his dedication to national security... and framing his photo between Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein. He was called out by both Democrats and Republicans for the ad, but still won the election.
* In one of the more literal applications of this trope, trying to burn brown mold causes it to grow explosively.
* In one of the more poignant scenes, it is established that Colette will have to sacrifice her life and become an angel to save their world. Lloyd doesn't like this, and is just barely convinced by everyone,
* In one of the most bizarre examples (which in hindsight, was also tactless and kinda stupid) the already-young Cabbage Patch Kids had a line of Cabbage Patch Preemies, even smaller versions of the dolls. In a move that everybody except the Cabbage Patch People saw coming, making a cute little doll out of frail and weak premature babies
* In one of the most dramatic moments in Muppet history, when Captain Smollet is about to be introduced in
* In one of the most effective applications of this trope, the show had the black oil. This living substance violated your organism through various orifices. Eyes turning black meant the substance took over.
* In one of the most famous plays in NFL history, the Green Bay Packers defeated the Dallas Cowboys 21-17 in the 1967 NFL Championship (better known as the "Ice Bowl") on a last-second quarterback sneak from the goal line for a touchdown, when a short field goal would have tied the game and sent it to overtime. (They then advanced to the Super Bowl, which they also won.)
* , in one of the most heartbreaking instances of this trope in fanfiction.
* In one of the most interesting cases, the musical cue for the Silence briefly plays during Amy's introduction in "The Eleventh Hour", a season before they become a threat.
* In one of the most meta moments in the series, Pankraz makes the mistake every player has in a 2D RPG: accidentally stepping back onto a stairs icon and ending up in the previous screen. Jarring for him as one step sent him down an entire underground stairway and hilariously awkward for you as the party member who follows without a word. This was sadly not as funny for the remake, where there is no longer a 2D icon to fumble with on the way to Coburg.
* In one of the most tragic examples of this trope, railroad enthusiast Richard Jensen had save quite a number of steam locomotives from the scrapper's torch, including the famed Chicago Burlington and Quincy 4-8-4 5632, it's smaller sibling, the 2-8-2 4963, Grand Trunk Western 4-6-2 5629, and a handful of other engines. His intention was to restore and operate excursions with these machines, beginning work with most of his collection out of a rented Chicago and Great Western roundhouse. Work was well underway by 1969, but it was around that time that the railroad decided to kick him out, giving him little notice to move the equipment. Without warning, they took everything he had and sent it to a scrap yard, where most of it was cut up on sight, including 5632! Jensen sued the railroad for damages and won, but the equipment lost could not be brought back. Only one piece of this equipment, 4963 was spared thanks to the Illinois Railway Museum, and even then it was at the expense of trading three Grand Trunk Western 0-8-0s they owned to accomplish it.
* In one of the most triumphant recent examples, Italy sending glam-rock band Måneskin with "Zitti e buoni" in 2021, which went against their usual grain and earned them their first victory in over thirty years.
* In one of the movies, a Purist poisons Emily and Susan with infected flowers, and he's shown buying them at a stand and asking specifically for live flowers as a gift for Newcomers. The cut flowers Matt brought to the hospital were especially inappropriate because of the Tenctonese practice of surrounding a sick person with living things, even animals.

* In one of the movies, Bender joins a secret society of robots bent on killing all humans, only to find that they've grown soft over the years and just hang around drinking. According to Hedonismbot, "We haven't killed a human in over 800 years, and
* In one of the movies, the Don Bot catches his wife cheating on him with Bender. Both are shot with machine guns and buried in the desert. Bender later explains that the Don Bot did this twice as a warning.
* In one of the "neutral zones", talking to a certain enemy agent would result in him telling you to "Get the heck out of here, you nerd!"
* In one of the newer episodes it appears that "Robosexuality" is the 31st century equivalent of homosexuality. At one point it's stated that not only a man and woman are allowed to marry, but also man and man, fembot and manbot, interracial, interplanetary, and even a ghost and a horse.
* In one of the new Who episodes, the Doctor took Rose with him for a year of "our time", though it was hardly any time for them. (The Doctor simply made a mistake in his calculations.) When they came back, Rose's boyfriend said he'd been arrested several times by police who believed he had kidnapped or murdered her. Other people react realistically to someone simply
* In one of the non-fiction books by Michael Veitch in which he interviews Australian WW2 flyers, he interviewed a turret gunner who barely avoided shooting a menacing plane that loomed out of the dark, only for it to turn out to be another Lancaster bomber. When he reported this to his commander however, the latter was furious that he hadn't fired the moment he saw a threat, regardless of who it turned out to be.
* In one of the novelizations, when her Aunt Vesta insists she'll pick Sabrina's prom dress, Sabrina panics at the thought that she'll be forced to wear one of these. She has a
* In one of the novels, Quark is persuaded (after much foot-dragging and whining) to hire a Dabo
* In one of the novels, the Doctor helps Hitler to prevent other aliens from making things worse. Another criticised the whole "kill Hitler before the War" theory as a hypocritical exercise in futility, since the only person who would ultimately be able to kill Hitler before he'd
* In one of the novel stories, William uses the name "Willy" to hide his identity while running a scam with Moran, a choice which is simply too embarrassing to comment on.
* In one of the OAV's, it turns out Ai is a dead-ringer for child actress Grace Aihara.
* In one of the Paramount shorts, when Bluto is carrying off Olive, she yells, "Let go of me you... you
* In one of the Parker Pyne stories, a maid is revealed to actually have been her employer's sister, having lost her memory in the boat accident that killed the actual maid. Her memory had been coming back in bits and pieces over several decades, which is why she killed her sister (who'd masterminded the "convince my amnesiac sister she's the maid so I can inherit" plot) and started
* In one of the prequel books she awakens a guard while stealing a large diamond. She is able to convince him that he is still asleep and that she is just a rather Freudian dream.
* In one of the prequel books, Travis complains about a no-win scenario he was observing. He notes that the trainees lost to an Opposing Force armed with a weapon that was physically impossible to produce. He then goes on to explain exactly why this so-called "Multi-Drive Missile" could never be made, earning him the ire of the officer who came up with the simulation, as he'd been trying to get the funding to develop said MDM. While it was eventually developed, Admiral Sonja Hemphill had an additional 400 years of further R&D to build on to make it practical, and even then one of Travis' objections — that an MDM would be significantly larger than a single-drive missile, and thus have a different sensor return — still applied.

* In one of the real life videos, Ben was surprised that nobody recognized him from his show at a gaming convention. Then he remembered he had never shown his face in his videos...
* In one of the sequels, Bobby Shelton, a struggling musician who sold his soul to the devil, prays to God that He would give him a sign. He receives it in the form of a rainbow that appears bright in the sky at night. And the colors are reversed (red on the inside, blue on the outside).
* In one of the series' famous sets of parallel events, Marty is knocked out cold in each movie, followed each time by a scene of him recovering with Lorraine (in
* In one of the several instances of 'Frank in charge', there was a downplayed example when Frank decides that the medical staff is getting too alcohol-dependent, and declares the 4077 'dry'. He's a jerk about it, overbearing, and shows all the signs of the trope...
* In one of the shorts of "Treehouse of Horror XXI", Marge and Homer are getting romantic and a "Sproing" sound plays repeatedly, Homer says it's a phone call. Later, when Marge puts on sunlotion to distract Roger, he smiles and a similar sound is played. This time, it's Homer's phone's notification about an SMS.
* In one of the short stories set in the same universe, a character is revealed to have disguised herself as a boy and ran away from home because her stepfather wanted her to be veiled like the other females in their country and was going to arrange a marriage for her.
* In one of the show's famous gags from its' early years, a talk show hosted by Diane Simmons features a dating couple. The male was really a woman in a mask, but then confesses that she is not even a woman, and unzips
* In one of the show's goriest moments, Beavis gets his index finger cut off while playing with a table saw in wood shop. It gets reattached later in the episode, but he breaks it off again while picking his nose.
* In one of the sidechapters, the completion goal is to make it to the other side of the map and talk to the boss,
* In one of the sketches from Walfas Station Wagon's The Walfas Halloween Spooktacular called Magic show by Full Hit Points, Marisa and Reimu put on a magic show to the audience. And when Marisa accidentally saw's Reimu in half and so was the table and tries to convince the audience it's a new trick, this causes this trope to happen.
* In one of the specials, Pine Hollow favorite horse Delilah dies from an incurable virus.
* In one of the specials, Timmy gets trapped inside his TV and goes through multiple shows. The final one is a mix of
* In one of the spin-off graphic novels, King Arthur references this trope: "All things are true; few things are accurate."
* In one of the stories, Kuno purchases a phoenix egg from such a shop.
* In one of the stories of Fantomius (of whom Paperinik is a sort of
* In one of the strangest cases, Will Horton was born in November of 1995 and E.J. DiMera was born in February of 1997. By the mid-2000s, E.J. had been rapidly aged to a man in his mid-late 20s, and contemporary in age to Will's mother. Will lagged behind in the rapid aging, resulting in him being older than his own stepfather out of universe, but younger in-universe.
* In one of the supplement 4-panel strips, after Sakaki gets drunk and falls asleep, Shiho doodles not only on his face but on his
* In one of the "Supplementary Materials" strips written for the manga's tenth anniversary, Chiyo-Chichi gives Sakaki the following advice: "Keep moving forward. Then turn left at the second corner."
* In one of the time zones, a robot shoots you with a tranquilizer dart the instant you arrive. After it leaves, you have to make an antidote, but it only truly knocks you out if you leave the room you're in, recall to the present, or
* In one of the trailer moments in "Meapless in Seattle", Ferb does this for Candace.

* In one of the translations, Lust actually says this line to-a-T to Cornello in the first volume of the manga... Right before she impales his head with her ultimate spear. (See page image.) In the 2003 version, Gluttony eats Cornello instead, but the idea is the same.
* In one of the Transmrogrifier arcs, Calvin believes that he's been
* In one of the Two-Minute Mysteries, a man's death is taken not to be suicide because he had recently suffered a heart attack, so a salt shaker on his table would mean another person was present, since the man himself would not be adding any to his food. A man intending to take his life could easily have ignored health concerns.
* In one of the Two-Minute Mysteries, the suspect was caught after Haledjian said the (diamond?) was hidden in the cupola because the murderer was the only one who ran up towards the attic instead of to the kitchen. Because only a murderer could know that a cupola (usually "KOOP-ul'uh", but the pronunciation varies by person enough that "kupp-ola" wouldn't be suspicious) was a term for the little domed thing on top of the house and not just an annoying term for a cappuccino maker, that only someone who had killed the house's occupant would assume that the stairs going up lead to the roof level, and that it's impossible to see a cupola from outside the house.
* In one of the universes present in the Perpetual Testing Initiative of
* In one of the vid-comics, Qwark is watching one when he's interrupted by the arrival of his trainer, Helga. Hilariously, it seems to be the exact same one Nefarious broadcasts.
* In one of the video game adaptations, there is a disintegrator grenade
* In one of the What-If machine episodes, a recently turned human Bender tried to "fix his antenna" down there. But Fry quickly stopped him from doing it because it'll "make God cry."
* In one of the "Where in the World" games, Herman would sometimes pull a huge book out of his coat and close it on the thief, flattening them.
* In one of Thomas Sanders' vines, Thomas whistles at a girl, who is rightfully offended. Thomas rapidly explains that he was whistling at her dog. Cue the dog's offended rant.
* In one of those anti-drug PSAs, a girl passed out on the couch gets drawn on and used as a puppet by her "friends" to mock how dumb she is, and then said friends ditch her to go back to the party.
* In one of Yuma's duels against Vector, Vector is poised to win, as he has a Trap that will destroy Yuma's "Rank-Up-Magic Limited Barian's Force", which is the only card left in his deck, as soon as he draws it and then inflict enough damage to beat him. How does Yuma avoid this? He uses Shining Evolution to
* In one old comic book, aliens show up to a futuristic-looking Earth and contact the planet. When nobody answers, they take it as an insult and attack. In the last panel, we learn that humans are now living on Mars, and Earth has been uninhabited since the Nuclear War of 2000.
* In one old Got Milk? commercial, a man is about to drink all of the milk left in the fridge. He imagines what will happen when his family finds out he drank all the milk. Various horrible scenarios, including divorce and
* In one old joke, a gorgeous woman in a low-cut, slinky dress sidles up to the craps table as a shooter. She leans forward and pushes a large stack of chips toward the betting line and says, "I always feel a little luckier without this dress." She lets it drop, grabs the dice, and throws. The woman screams out, "I won, I won!" while jumping up and down, then hastily scoops up the chips and her dress. After she leaves, the croupier says, "Hey, what did she roll?”
* In one old strip, Garfield pounces on a chicken in the first panel. Then Jon appears, and shouts, "Garfield! Did you eat my chicken?" Then, he calms down and says, "No, of course not, if you had, there would be some bones left." (Cue
* In one Open Gaming License product, "mind flayers" and "illithids" were referred to in the supplement as brain-eating tentacle-faced things. The
* In one op, Michael's mom steals data from a detective's computer while Michael distracts him. He can only stall for so long before the detective returns, to find a guilty looking Maddy. "You caught me!" she says, as Michael and the viewers' hearts stop. He caught her sneaking a cigarette, that is.

* In one origin story that tells how the boys joined the Junior Woodchucks, they are first given a booklet-sized "light version" for applicants, which is said to "contain only the equivalent of a couple encyclopediæ".
* In one other occasion, Ginko is searching for Diabolik and Eva, who have committed a heist in the Italian city of Lucca during the local
* In one pair of episodes, Phil and Lil were absent from the A-story and Chuckie and Kimi were absent from the B-story.
* In one panel, a faraway Karkat is drawn with less detail and no visible arms, making him look like he's wearing pants up to his neck.
* in one panel, rather than saddled with the health problems his real-life counterpart (plus his parents) had to deal with.
* In one particular case from season 3, an armed robber wore a special raincoat designed to reflect light into and dazzle the security cameras, which showed the suspect's movements only as a vague, glaring-bright blob.
* In one particular episode, Michael, Sam, and Fiona dress in all black Armani to give a similar impression to that uniforms give in the battlefield. That is, the impression that one belongs to a larger organization and of unified force. They succeed, of course. Also, they look fantastic.
* In one particular episode, Michael's plan to capture a bad guy relied on getting close to him and using that position to maneuver him into a position in which he could capture him with little difficulty. When that failed due to Michael being exposed as a fake, he decided that they didn't have enough time to come up with a new plan (which probably wouldn't work anyway since the bad guy had seen everyone in Team Westen), broke into the bad guy's hotel room, clubbed him over the head and dumped him into a truck for delivery to the authorities.
* In one particular episode she lectures Sabrina about using a short-cut to finish her book report (zapping herself into
* In one particular forest, wolves were killed off by hunters and farmers who believed they would attack livestock. The wolves disappeared from the forest entirely, and as a result, the population of deer exploded and they caused massive damage to places where people lived. Oops. This was eventually fixed by the reintroduction of wolves into the forest.
* In one particularly bad example of director James Nguyen refusing to
* In one particularly hilarious subversion, a Tau world was under attack from a Tyranid splinter fleet. A Necron fleet appeared in orbit and proceeded to slaughter everything alive. The Tau celebrated, and as the Necrons landed, sent a welcoming party with their highest Ethereals. The Necrons proceeded to slaughter everything alive.
* In one particularly memorable scene, Superman and Batman are fighting a group of anonymous masked criminals while casually talking about
* In one particularly odd example, "Rich Girl" by Gwen Stefani (also known as the lead singer of the band
* In one particularly problematic instance, Hasbro discovered that it had lost the trademark to "Bumblebee" shortly before the first of the
* In one particular mission you have to get a fish for a krogan at the Citadel. In the shop, you can hear a turian and asari talking about getting a fish, and the turian said that maybe they shouldn't get a fish because they only live for a few years. This is pretty much what happens.
* In one particular occasion Diabolik did this to murder the director of a newspaper that
* In one particular Spider-Man instance, he was fighting a costumed mercenary in a secure medical facility. The mercenary didn't realize that he was out-matched, until Spidey tore a reinforced steel fire door from the wall and threw it at him.
* In one particular story, God allowed all of the animals to change their names. Except for Coyote, because Coyote was His friend and He didn't want Coyote's name to change.
* In one part of the game there is also a quest line that goes as follows,

* In one part of the story, goblins take over an old elven tree-fortress. Goblin Slayer just seals the entrance and sets the whole thing on fire. His business is
* In one peculiar occasion, Diabolik adopted a different modus operandi: he sent the woman who needed a new identity to
* In one production, an aria was sung by the main character, while he became more and more impatient with the orchestra and frequently signalled for a cue to leave the stage.
* In one Progressive ad a motorcycle fetches the guy who sometimes accompanies Flo because she's in trouble. The "emergency" turns out to be her needing change for a dollar.
* In one Progressive Insurance ad, Michael Buffer claims he broke his spleen after being forced to hold the last syllable of "Let's get ready to bundle".
* In one PSA, Grif states that "some games are serious business." Apparently, he once "played Donkey Kong so well that he cured kidneyism. It was the best day ever. The End."
* In one puzzle, Jesse has to craft something that can be used to hit a pressure plate at the opposite end of a room. The most obvious solution is to create a bow and arrow, but creating a
* In one Q&A, Cucumber makes an offhand remark that if she's the hero, Almond would have to carry him.
* In one Q&A, Ian Flynn described Guru Emu as his favorite Downunda Freedom Fighter to write, given that his peace-loving, mystic ways are such a departure from the other members of the group.
* In one quest, Ryder runs into the representative of an independent colony, not affiliated with the Exiles, living elsewhere on Eos, who left because they didn't want to work for Tann. Fortunately, they're peaceful, just preferring to be left alone.
* In one quickie, Wade sang "Home On The Range", and the words in the song appeared before him.
* In one quite amazing moment of the 2016 presidential election, Trump
* In one radio commercial, a little boy tries to buy a hot dog with a dime. When the counterman gently tells him it's not enough, he says "Oh. [beat]. Never mind the mustard."
* In one reality show commercial, a preteen boy and his older sister go in for a chest bump. However, the older sister is definitely outside of his age range and looks suitably more mature. So they go up for the chest bump normally, but he winds up on the floor.
* In one Roman gladiator match, a group of Retiarius (gladiators armed with tridents and nets) fought a group of Secutors (gladiators with swords and shields meant to completely counter the Retiraius). The Retiarius dropped their weapons and pretended not to fight. The Secutors dropped their helmets and shields and the Retiarius killed them all. The Roman Emperor at the time was not impressed and probably had them executed.
* In one round of "Pick-up Song" (where each panellist has to sing along to a well-known song which is then muted, and tries to still be in time with the recording when the sound comes back) Hardy managed to sing more or less in tune and the song ("Heaven Knows I'm Miserable Now") came back on to reveal he was quite close to staying in time. Everyone reacted with astonishment.
* In one route, they literally end up causing the EXTINCTIONS OF THE QUARIAN RACE...through declaring war against the Geth, who would have surrendered if they literally had just asked.
* In one run of pre-Christmas strips, Sally is playing a shepherd in a Nativity play. She tells Charlie Brown that "I give my line, 'Hark!' and then Harold Angel starts singing." Initially Charlie Brown thinks she's making a malaprop, until the end of the arc where he meets Harold Angel.
* In one Russian newspaper, there was an article where a woman instead of "gryzun" (rodent) typed "gruzin" (Georgian) Some time later, a comment was published, explaining that Georgians and other people from the Caucasus Mountains have a reputation for being passionate lovers, and that lady apparently lacked something in her life.

* In one scenario, they're only able to spend the money by transforming into a secret alter-ego of their choice. Wanting to experience life as the exact opposite of herself, Lindsay chooses the alter-ego of a large black man.
* In one scene, a bosun beats up a recalcitrant sailor. Hornblower is grateful that he is a Captain and too exalted to do such things as he is probably not a good enough fighter.
* In one scene, a very upset Lelouch abuses his power to command some street punks to dance, do push ups, and so on for his amusement. The
* In one scene, a wounded soldier who is no longer a threat is seen being choked to death.
* In one scene, Chuck has developed a toothache during his stay on the island and is considering his options about extracting it (without anything close to the proper dental tools available), bouncing ideas off
* In one scene, Cutter sends Angier and Borden to watch a Chinese magician and figure out exactly how the man makes a heavy goldfish bowl (filled with water and goldfish) appear from under a cloth. Borden immediately deduces that the old magician is doing kayfabe: he's holding the bowl between his legs under his skirt, hiding the strength required to accomplish the trick by always appearing frail in public. Borden admires the way the Chinese magician goes to such an extreme that he "lives" his performance at home,
* In one scene during the extended cut, the film crew is attacked by a swarm of large aquatic centipedes while rafting down a swamp. All the centipedes abruptly retreat at once, and after a moment of discomforting silence, the rafts are now attacked by a
* In one scene, Gru tells Dr. Nefario over his cellphone that he wants him to make a dozen cookie robots. Nefario mishears him and makes
* In one scene, Homer criticizes the quality of South Korean animation, and for the next few seconds his mouth is detached from his face and floating in front of him.
* In one scene Leo loses his temper at Max and calls him "FAT!". This insult doesn't work very well when Nathan Lane has been replaced by the much slimmer Tony Danza, causing Tony to look confused and Leo to say, "Well, you
* In one scene, McNulty and Rhonda Perlman present their request for a continuation of their wiretaps to Judge Phelan sees the judge delighting in making Jimmy squirm by listing his various spelling and grammatical errors, before granting them what they asked for without a word of complaint.
* In one scene, Michael's mother gives him a look and then indignantly walks out the door. A few seconds later, Fiona (his partner in
* In one scene of the episode "Moderation", Socrates is seen stepping in a puddle of mud, much to Aristotle's annoyance.
* In one scene of "The Wide Window: Part 2", the Baudelaires, Mr. Poe, and a disguised Count Olaf are heading to a
* In one scene, pirate Billy Bones threatens Dr. Livesey with a knife and later uses it against Black Dog.
* In one scene, Shikimori Kazuki appears to be having sex with an offscreen female while Kamishiro Rin's voice offers encouragement such as "more" and "faster". The camera then shows that Rin is standing next to Kazuki, making him do pushups.
* In one scene, Stretchslow calls Hushpad "Squashpod" and then "Peachpit". He isn't interested in her or the fact she's gone missing.
* In one scene, the bad guy gets his hand blown off with a shotgun, meanwhile his 30 years in the future counterpart is shocked to see that same hand wither away into a nub while strangling his original opponent's son.
* In one scene, the Count watches Albert leave his ship, quite peeved with him. Although we're led to presume that the guy is deep in grief over the event, we quickly see him break out into hysterical laughter. And from then on, he's out there, madly pursuing his revenge.
* In one scene, the teacher bans both Sara and the girl she uses as a slave from having any meals the following day after they let the other girls into their bedroom (they are forbidden from doing so).

* In one scene, Vanellope causes Taffyta to briefly "glitch out" like she does when she physically touches her.
* In one scene where he is playing checkers against Peter and Cindy in the family room and the siblings win. Bobby gets mad and knocks the game board and checkers off the table before stomping out of the room. Bobby employs a similar quitter attitude after losing to other siblings in a ring toss game and in free-throw shooting.
* In one scene where Morty shoots Rick in the head. Then Rick shoots the villains to death while they're gloating and reveals Morty's gun had a label reading "FAKE GUN - SHOOT ME IN STANDOFF". Morty nervously chuckles and says "
* In one scene, which takes place at the start of Duster's chapter, is a repeat of a scene from Flint's chapter, with Flint actually saying something this time around, to symbolize the role of player character moving to Duster, who doesn't speak for the rest of his chapter.
* In one sci-fi story, Christmas Creep had gotten so out of control that laws were passed to make it illegal to even so much as hum Christmas carols except on the day itself. On penalty of death.
* In one season 3 episode, Blaine is hit in the face with a slushie laced with rock salt, and injures his
* In one season 3 episode Sara recollects how at one time she found a bag of something (which turned out to be her brother's weed) which she showed to her parents and unintentionally got him in big trouble. Said brother is never mentioned again, and indeed some later episodes strongly imply she is an only child.
* In one season eight episode, Clark seems to kick it into overdrive as
* In one season finale, a really ticked off Nate practices using his father's gun, intending to shoot the man who killed his father. Everyone else on the team tries to persuade him not to.
* In one season, Gretchen fell down in a cave and was shown with blood on her face from a head wound. Her response was more of "I always wanted a facelift."
* In one season six episode, the Wright Brothers are interviewed (offscreen) three years prior to the Kitty Hawk flight, while
* In one season, the fresh contestants saw video messages of some people who were on the show previously and were told what to do and not do in order to survive the show. Try and guess if any of them actually listened.
* In one season twelve episode, the whole team gathers to watch Gibbs in the interrogation room with his ex-wife and her lawyer, who is also her fiance, who
* In one segment, a baby monster asks various monsters what the word "is" is, not understanding when they say the word is "is".
* In one segment, Mike is at the plate with Servo pitching and Crow as the umpire. Crow seems to know nothing about baseball, as two pitches thrown - one that nearly hits Mike and another that
* In one segment, there's Pat's equally-ambiguous parent, Frances, whom Pat refers to by first name, due to the fact that Frances had to act as both mom and dad to Pat after Jean left the family.
* In one series got people mad was when the misspelling appeared on the freakin' dustjacket of one of the books.
* In one series of strips, Andy buys a "MomVo", which does things like shutting down the TV after showing a certain amount of cartoons, or forcibly changing the channel from "trash TV" to PBS. Eventually she gets rid of it when it blocks out her soap operas too ("You should have seen how fast she yanked the cables," Jason remarks).
* In one Sex-Ed PSA after two teenagers get magically transported to a gameshow style realm. After declaring that
* In one, she draws a tsukutsukuboshi as a little guy wearing a cap (because in Japanese, "boshi" is a homonym for "cap").
* In one short, a worker explains to another how their goal is to put a precise, uneven number of chocolates into each box. Said chocolates are dispensed in smaller boxes containing 1,000, 100, or 10 chocolates, with the final dispenser dropping singles. Thus, to put 3,947 chocolates into a box, the simplest way would be to dispense three boxes of 1,000, nine boxes of 100, four boxes of 10, and seven singles. After the first box, one dispenser randomly fails, and another dispenser has to be adjusted to compensate for the failure; e.g., the thousands dispenser fails, so the hundreds dispenser has to dispense 39 boxes of 100 to cover the same amount.

* In one short, Daffy Duck marries a rich widow... and finds himself having to put up with her bratty kid and
* In one short, Danny and Future-Worm go back in time to stop Danny from slipping on a
* In one short, "Moon over Minerva," a smitten Minerva Mink's head turns into a balloon
* In one short story, a detective looks into the murder of a rock singer. The singer grabbed his guitar as his final act and broke two strings. Questioning the singer's girlfriend, manager, and two of his band members turns up nothing.
* In one short story, an assassin kills a man who turns out to be a serial killer (which is a part of a larger plot between gods — Loki has survived to modern times and uses serial killers to gather human nails that he needs to build his ship) — the assassin enters the man's house and starts retching when he finds a whole wall of jars full of eyeballs staring at him.
* In one short story, Belters (asteroid miners) are said to temporarily lose their minds while staring at space, similar to "highway hypnosis". They continue to function somewhat, much like sleepwalkers.
* In one short story Colonel Hammer comes home and takes over as a military dictator.
* In one short story, Eddie Cantrell comes up with blueprints for an ironclad based primarily on research he did as part of a historical wargame.
* In one short story, Holly is able to enter a tent because, as a non permanent structure, it doesn't count.
* In one short story, the main character sees her fairly unpopular best friend give a presentation that doesn't go well, resulting in the teacher criticizing the friend for not having prepared well enough. The popular crowd then gives the girl sarcastic applause, and after a moment, the main character joins in, thereby betraying her friend to join the "in" crowd.
* In one short story, two similar-looking girls work in a library. One of them murders the other, but claims she has an alibi—she was accepting a book return from a student at a certain point before the murder. The detective deduces that it was the other librarian who had accepted the book, because the student shared a name with the author of THE chemical reference, period. A professional chemistry librarian could no more forget the name "Beilstein" any more than a conductor could forget an applicant named "Ludwig van Beethoven". The student recalled that the librarian had smiled at hearing his name, but the surviving librarian didn't recall anything unusual about the student. Not much evidence, but since she confesses later, that's what would matter in court.
* In "One Shot One Kill", a male character's inability to eat with chopsticks is made to sound like an inability to perform a sexual act upon a female coworker.
* In one side story, available if you're cheeky and have advanced knowledge of the game's system,
* In one side-story, it was told how there was a clan dispute that was to be solved by an Aslan style (with claws) duel to first blood between two female Aslan. One of them was completely untrained but she held steady while her opponent circled around. Finally, her opponent nicked herself on the newbie's claw and said "I submit to the
* In one sketch, a character reads a newspaper which has an advert for a breakfast cereal as the banner headline and main story, with "World War III declared" squashed in the bottom of the page.
* In one sketch, police are stationed at the football game to prevent a riot. However, they end up provoking one instead after one of the officers pepper-sprays the goalie of the team he doesn't support. Quality polis indeed.

* In one sketch, the North American Man-Boy Love Association (NAMBLA)
* In one sketch, they were reading letters they had been sent from people responding to their asking viewers who had met someone with an odd-sounding name to write in. The people who had written the letters were oblivious to their own bizarre names:
* In one skit, a group of college students on an MTV show claim to have traveled all over the world, showing a crayon map of the places they went in Europe. "Europe" is drawn in the shape of the continental United States, divided up into countries such as "Germany" and "Europe."
* In one skit, an elderly security guard (Amanda Bynes) gives Jack Desena a wedgie when he tries to get past her.
* In one skit, he pointed out that rental cars are good for those moments that you've always wondered "what would happen if", but were afraid to try in your own car. Such as one of your buddies suggesting what would happen if you suddenly kicked it into reverse on the freeway. His answer? "
* In one skit, Kermit tries to interview some people who are waiting in line to watch a game. He talks to the woman in the back, but she assumes that he's also waiting to watch the game so she can't be last. A similar thing happens when Kermit tries to interview the man at the front of the line but this time it's a woman in the middle of the line who believes Kermit is first. To add to the confusion, the man who's second in line believes he ought to be first because initially, he was, but he went off somewhere.
* In one skit, the actors admonished a studio audience member for bringing a sheep into the studio. He protested, saying "I didn't see a sign!" At that point they indicate a large "NO SHEEP" sign on the wall.
* In one Slappy episode, Slappy and Skippy are dealing with a dog named Stinkbomb. After climbing their tree, Stinkbomb follows them up. Leave Slappy to bring up one important fact that Stinkbomb forgot about. Dogs can't climb trees.
* In one Slavic tale, such an ointment attracts the attention of a bandit when he accompanies his leader to a peacemaking meeting at the local lord's palace. Using it reveals that the palace is a ruin, the other guests are dead trees, the lord's men are hounds, and the lord is
* In one Smackdown segment, she referred to Tamina Snuka as Naomi's "boyfriend" and suggested that she belonged in the wrong division.
* In one "Sniz and Fondue" short, Fondue is addicted to Solitaire on the computer. He comments that he needs to tinkle, but continues to play. He soon notes he no longer has to go.
* In one song he wrote, he compared driving on the Miami section of I-95 to skydiving and deep-sea diving in terms of thrill/danger level.
* In one Spanish comic strip, an atheist climbs into a tree to escape a bear. An angel flies down to meet him, and the man insists he's not going to convert just because an angel saved him (although this example overlaps with the
* In one stand-up special, comedian Greg Behrendt acknowledged that his book
* In one story, a criminal found himself facing Montoya, Bullock and
* In one story, a group of former victims or friends and family of some of Wolverine's
* In one story, a man claimed an item of his had been stolen during a thunderstorm. The house was dark because the power was out. He was awoken by a thunderclap, then saw the burglar
* In one story, a man's wife gets rid of an evil genie by wishing he would straighten out a single hair. (In today's age of salons, this wouldn't work.)
* In one story, Andy and his family end up in a naturist camp by mistake.
* In one story, a 'Rap McNasty' demeans their style as nothing more than 'bubblegum rock'. The Archies fight back by making a music video of them surrounded by bubbles while chewing bubblegum, in a 'We're bubblegum and proud' manner. The video is a huge hit, and as apology
* In one story arc, Calvin plays baseball at school. He gets assigned to play the outfield, and goes so far outfield that he doesn't even notice when it's his team's turn at bat (he can see the teams switching sides but nobody bothers to tell him to come in). Someone hits a fly ball in his direction, and he catches it to get an out—and only afterwards realizes it's his own teammate at bat. The rest of the team turns on him for this mistake, and Calvin quits the team in response.

* In one story arc, Daniel and Vala put on bracelets that create a link between them, so that to be any more than a few feet away from each other can cause them extreme physical discomfort and eventually death.
* In one story arc, he enlarges his brain to make his homework easier and becomes so intelligent that, within moments, he mentally calculates the purpose of the cosmos and all reality into a single, simple answer. However, he is unable to figure out why girls are so weird.
* In one story, Archie is called by the department store he works at during summer vacation and is assigned to work at the swimsuit department. At first, he is overjoyed at the opportunity to ogle at girls in swim suits, but his sales techniques work too well, and the customers start to fight over the swimsuits he recommends. By the end of his shift, he's sick of bikinis and swimsuits and is ready to go to bed. However, his female friends, who had gone to the beach, decide to drop by and visit in their swimsuits (because they felt sorry for him at missing the beach eye candy, not knowing about the department he's working at). The story ends with him rushing up to his room screaming, while his mother and girl friends looks on, completely perplexed.
* In one story arc Hobbes sends Calvin insulting messages through the mail. When Calvin finds out, he's furious, but as soon as he declares he and Hobbes are through, Hobbes suggests sending insulting messages to Susie. Calvin immediately forgives him.
* In one story arc Ryo had been made impotent by the antidote to the poison of a killer bee. At the end of said story arc (and after a successive version of the antidote restored Ryo's Gag Penis), Ryo punished the ones who had the killer bees created by having them stung with the killer bees and giving them the initial version of the antidote, with obvious results. Doubles as
* In one story (as in, within the past 10 years - not exactly yesterday, but well after
* In one story, a supercomputer shuts off all the input and reshuffles the data inside itself for a couple of hours every day, which essentially makes it an AI unable to express itself otherwise than in piles of data. Accidentally fed a WWII-never-happened alternate history novel, it treats its content as any other dataset and starts spitting out statistical data with lots of people who died in World War II alive, well and hugely successful, and most of primary timeline's political elites (
* In one story, a young man is having an affair with one of his father's concubines (who's his own age), even conspiring to murder his father so they can elope in peace. An unbelievably pissed-off Dee tells him in barely-disguised terms to kill himself (note that the man's father was very much an
* In one story, Bart tries to tell on Homer to get out of his own legal troubles but Chief Wiggum refuses because he already has someone on Homer, who quickly guesses it's Lenny. Upset at being discovered, Lenny rips his wire.
* In one story, Betty gets a pimple and acts like she has a huge cyst on her cheek, demanding to be allowed to stay home and throwing a tantrum when her parents make her go anyways. She frets all the way there until she literally bumps into Archie. The nurse gives her a band-aid to cover her zit.
* In one story, Bun-bun the evil mini-lop rabbit is stuck with the annoying animated shadow of the groundhog who's the
* In one story, "Did You Hear The One About..." we meet Josie Bauer, a "humor groupie", who had taken to going home (and having sex) with whoever won Punday Night or Tall Tale Thursday.
* In one story, Donald actually manages to find a piece of information in the book that's not only missing, but flat-out
* In one story, Frank has been brainwashed by his archenemy Jigsaw and is set out for blood. He starts killing jaywalkers, red light runners, and litterers.
* In one story from Christopher Anvil's Interstellar Patrol setting, a human colony of pacifists not in the main human government is targeted for conquest by a nasty species. Turns out the colony is composed of people who don't want to fight because they are so badass that if they don't keep themselves under tight control they'd waste their own planet.

* In one story he went to the home of an outsider criminal who planned to move to Duckburg to steal,
* In one story, Hippolyta, current queen of the Amazons, has a fling with Heracles but winds up dead due to Hera's meddling. However, another story has Hippolyta marry Theseus (Heracles' cousin and sometimes companion), and dies when the Amazons invade Athens. Then another account says that a generation later the Amazon queen Penthesileia accidentally killed Hippolyta during a hunting accident, meaning that Hippolyta potentially died three times! Admittedly, these accounts aren't too hard to reconcile...which is probably why there are about half a dozen stories that try to do it, with varying versions of which hero Hippolyta was involved with, how this affected her standing with the Amazons and how she died.
* In one story it decides it has to self-destruct, because it predicts that humans will be dependent on it, which in turn means harm to humans. In another story, it creates a universe after the original one goes to a state of minimal energy. Yeah.
* In one story John the incubus finds himself falling for a noblewoman he was assigned to seduce, but who is able to resist his abilities.
* In one story, Jughead is chosen to be a contestant in a game show,
* In one story, Jughead's baby sister Jellybean is taken for a ride when some balloons are tied to her carrier.
* In one storyline, Linus is expressing his excitement over an upcoming total eclipse, telling everyone about it and warning them to not look directly at it when it occurs. Finally, the big day comes, and there's a torrential downpour.
* In one storyline, one of the guys runs Sara's character in her absence. After
* In one storyline, the Eradicator, in his "Krypton Man" persona, alters the Lincoln Memorial so that Honest Abe is instead standing and wearing Kryptonian robes.
* In one storyline, the lawyer defending a mobster who had murdered someone in front of dozens of witnesses used a "superhero defense", pointing out known cases of crimes actually committed the accused's
* In one story mode fight, Jax and Jacqui encounter Cetrion, an Elder God. The only way they can stand a chance against her is by using
* In one story, the criminal had to lie low for longer than expected because his time spent overseas does not count towards the statute of limitations.
* In one story, the staff of the Daily Planet have to deal with a rival publisher. Perry White spies the owner of said rival setting fire to his own paper-warehouse, realizes that it's a fire insurance scam, and prepares to print the story. However, a nearby Superman sees that the arsonist is just an actor posing as the owner; the real scheme was setting up Perry to commit criminal libel and be forced to legally close down his paper as witnesses could prove the real owner was elsewhere.
* In one story the title character's alter ego Bruce Banner makes this comment to a screaming Doctor Doom right after helping to take him down.
* In one story, the X-Men find themselves in the Savage Land, in the company of a white-haired but not-too-old-looking man. Eventually he puts on
* In one strange but relatively harmless SG-1 example, a group of Jaffa are retreating through a Stargate in a panic, and the gate shuts down just as the last one runs through; the end of the
* In one strip, a boy is waiting with his mother in a dentist's waiting room. Through a glass panel in the door, he sees that the dentist is actually a monster whose human face is only a rubber mask.
* In one strip, a character orders some "lesbian cuisine." The waiter informs him that they have
* In one strip after quite a few occurrences he suggested turning it into a
* In one strip, after Roger spends part of his and Andy's bank account to buy a
* In one strip, a nameless woman working at a supermarket shows up. A while later she begins dating one of the main characters and became one herself. When the author went back and titled some of his earlier strips he called the one she appeared in "She'll Show Up More Later".

* In one strip, a soldier orders the cheapest drink the bar has: a low-cost brew called "Old Sergeant". When he asks why it's so cheap, he gets the following explanation on its name:
* In one strip, a very dumb character has his skull x-rayed, revealing a moth instead of a brain.
* In one strip, Calvin asks his father, "Dad, how do soldiers killing each other solve the world's problems?" His father has no answer for him.
* In one strip, Calvin has the hiccups and Hobbes says eating a spoonful of sugar is supposed to help. Calvin does so, and Hobbes asks if he's cured. Calvin happily says no, he'd better eat some more.
* In one strip, Calvin opens the door, shouts that he's home, and Hobbes doesn't tackle him into the yard like he usually does. Calvin finally finds Hobbes sitting nonchalantly, and gets no more reaction out of him than an acknowledgment: "So you're home." Another later strip is similar, although in that case, it was because it was so cold out Hobbes didn't want to get out of bed.
* In one strip, Calvin says he will "go for the gusto" at school and the next strip shows Calvin telling Hobbes about how he got in trouble at school but not wanting to specify what for. It could be that these two strips are connected, but they could also be about two separate incidents.
* In one strip, Calvin's dad finds him not doing his schoolwork, and Calvin claims to be visualizing it. Calvin's dad then tells him to imagine being the only 40-year-old in first grade.
* In one strip, Calvin's mom can only get Calvin to eat a stuffed pepper by convincing him that it is actually monkey heads — and then his dad refuses to touch it.
* In one strip, Calvin tells his dad how he's noticed slang's tendency to evolve over time and announces his intention to use it as a way to deliberately make it harder for their two generations to communicate.
* In one strip, Calvin throws an enormous hissy fit after losing a game of checkers to Hobbes, culminating in him passing out in exhaustion. When Hobbes points out that it's just a game, Calvin cheerfully replies: "I know! You should see how I act when I lose in real life!"
* In one strip, Charlie Brown is trying to fly a kite with Lucy coaching him the whole way. Much to their surprise, he actually gets it into the air, and Lucy is cheering about how it's finally flying... and then it
* In one strip, Dilbert and his co-workers are drawing straws to decide who has to murder an annoying co-worker. Dilbert gets a long straw, but is told they weren't drawing for short, they were drawing for the differently colored straw (which he, of course, had).
* In one strip, Dogbert and a buffet waiter got into an elaborate argument over whether or not "all you can eat" applies to food that you take but don't eat.
* In one strip, Dogbert comes up with a program to randomly create new names for the company by combining words from astronomy and physics. The first suggestion is 'Uranus-Hertz'. The pointy-haired boss, of course, likes it. (The translators of
* In one strip, Dogbert gives a variety of strange solutions to problems with everyday life. For the problem of television evangelists, he suggests throwing your television out the window. His theory is that if everyone does it, someone will get lucky and brain a passing evangelist.
* In one strip Emperor Nero mentions "a cute boy wouldn't be bad all all" when talking about Roman woman lovers being scary before leaning towards Anicetus who pushes him away.
* In one strip, Garfield and Jon and lying on their backs in a meadow looking at the sky:
* In one strip, Garfield and Jon are looking for a restaurant, and Garfield points to a place called "Ernie's Eat Till You Explode". ("Let's just say I have good feelings about it," says Garfield.)
* In one strip, Garfield chases a mouse as Jon cheers him on, only to step on the mouse by accident. He promptly stops and revives the mouse before sending it off unharmed, his dialogue basically explaining it was all an act for Jon's sake.

* In one strip Garfield is getting ready to scoop him some ice from a container into a bowl he asks himself, "One scoop or two?" he then scoops all the ice cream into his bowl save for one scoop saying, "I think I'll
* In one strip, Grace spends a few panels trying fruitlessly to escape from a full nelson before realizing that she's a
* In one strip, he managed to burn his silhouette onto the wall trying to light the furnace.
* In one strip he pushes the computer off the desk because it told him the hard drive needed backing up.
* In one strip, Hobbes turns Calvin's improvised skateboard ramp into a catapult with expert timing.
* In one strip Irma gives Garfield and Jon what looks like ice cream cones? It's actually scoops of mashed potatoes in cones.
* In one strip, Jason tries to rollerskate, but rolls down a hill and into a yard with a sign that says "Beware of Dog." Paige, naturally, enjoys this.
* In one strip, Jeremy and Hector are caught driving their unregistered van on the streets. Jeremy's dad asks three questions: "Are you okay?" "Was anyone hurt?" and "How did it handle?"
* In one strip, Jeremy comments on Pierce's stylish "socks", which are actually tattoos, while they're getting changed in the locker room. Pierce explains that they cut down on laundry, and goes on to say that he's considering replacing his underwear as well.
* In one strip, Jon can't figure out how to get the meatloaf inside the danish...
* In one strip, Jon drinks something at the vet's, and the vet says, "Congratulations— you're going to have a litter of puppies", causing Jon to think, "
* In one strip, Jon had a blind date with an older woman. He called her to let her know he found her teeth.
* In one strip, Jon has just woken up when Garfield pops out of his dresser to scare him. Jon walks away, gets coffee, and comes back before he screams in fright.
* In one strip, Jon reads that 'a cat sneezing is a sign of rain'. Garfield sneezes, and a personal raincloud opens over Jon.
* In one strip, Lucy blows a bubble gum bubble during a baseball game. She floats past Charlie Brown and over the fence, and then her bubble pops and she lands behind the fence.
* In one strip, Marten and his girlfriend Dora take a long lunch, and return with
* In one strip, Matt imagines strangling and screaming at an overexcited roleplayer who can't stop telling strangers everything about his character, because
* In one strip, minor character Yaz Pistachio asks Opus to give her just one name worse than her own.
* In one strip, Orson (as the "Book Fairy") approached Roy, Booker, and Sheldon with a book he claimed would make them "stop watching television". After Booker voiced his skepticism, Orson broke the television screen with the book.
* In one strip Peter punches a guy at school for making a joke about Denise and is told his parents will be called:
* In one strip, Randy throws a snowball at Nate, to which Miranda responds by hitting him with another snowball, only so she can hit Nate again.
* In one strip, Sally imagines herself as "Mrs. Sally 95472" but can't see it happening.
* In one strip, Sally shows her school report to Charlie Brown and asks him what grade he thinks it'll get. His response: "Do they give out Zs?" It appears that "Z" grades do exist in the world of
* In one strip, Sarge is dreaming about eating a bowl of things that look like Beetle's face smiling at him. He wakes up and swears to never put baby peppercorns on his pizza again.
* In one strip (September 8, 1989), Dogbert plays the word 'neans', not for the points, but simply to get rid of some N's. Dilbert responds with "

* In one strip, she even explains to her son Peter that she does it because, as an English major and professional writer, she values proper use of the language. He replies, "You're coming through real clear." (Andy: "Obviously not.")
* In one strip, Snoopy is asleep while playing second base, with an alarm clock behind him. It rings, waking him up, and he catches the fly ball coming towards him. A confused Charlie Brown says, "How do you set the alarm for a fly ball??"
* In one strip, Snoopy is sleeping on his doghouse as Woodstock walks in, whistling happily. Then Snoopy is woken up by an angry shout from inside, followed by Woodstock storming off. In the last panel, Snoopy says, "I ate the last piece of cheesecake!"
* In one strip, the Cat is reading a newspaper, headlined "THE PRESIDENT BEATS HIS WIFE". He then unfolds the paper, letting us read the rest of the sentence: "AT SCRABBLE".
* In one strip, the guys are playing a football video game. Gabe criticizes it for not being an accurate simulation of the sport, since there's no ice.
* In one strip, the law of perspective is repealed, meaning that the sizes of objects no longer depend on how far away they are, making it impossible to tell where anything is. This is all happening in Calvin's imagination, of course.
* In one strip, the sight of Fighter apparently flying under his own power after "slaying gravity" breaks Red Mage's brain, causing him to babble nonsense and then faint.
* In one strip, three dogs do this to make an attempt to catch a cat they were chasing who went up a tree. The dogs disguise themselves as a woman and have the fire department get the cat down for them.
* In one strip, Violet tries to imagine being married to Charlie Brown and says, "Mrs. Violet Brown..., Nope, I just can't see it."
* In one strip, Walt gets angry at a song Jeremy is listening to, resulting in this exchange:
* in one strip when Irma tells them something very unpleasant about what they're eating. Garfield looks at Jon: "Spit take on three..."
* In one strip where Garfield, Jon, and Odie went to a restaurant while vacationing on an island.
* In one strip, where he sleeps on his hair and wakes up with the front part matted down. He decides he likes it so much, he gels it to stay that way. Hobbes suggests he gets curlers for the back, but we don't see that.
* In one strip where it starts to rain, Lucy suggests that Charlie Brown call it because her cake's getting wet.
* In one Sunday comic, a leaf pile comes to life and tries to eat Calvin. Calvin fights back with a rake, and resolves to spread the leaves across the yard so the pile can't eat anyone else. The last panel is of Calvin's mom and dad talking.
* In one Sunday strip, after Lucy strikes out while playing baseball, she says she deserves four strikes because she's a girl. They give her one, but she misses again. Then she says she should get five because she was sick yesterday. Again, they give her one, but she misses again. Then she smarmily says she should get six because she's so cute. But they don't give her one. She storms off saying, "What kind of stupid game is this where you only get six strikes?"
* In one Sunday strip, Peter is seen wolfing down bowl after bowl of cereal until the box is empty. He sheepishly turns to Jason and asks "Did you
* In one Superboy story set during Clark Kent's teenage years, his family returns home from vacation to discover most of Smallville's young adults have suddenly grown obese. Clark suddenly comes down with the same affliction and it turns out it was due to the local milk supply being affected by an experimental energy ray created by a local scientist. The story was redone several years later in an issue of
* In one "Super Grover 2.0" sketch has a bird say Super Grover's "unleash my powers of investigation" line.
* In ones where the victim's actual friends are the roast board, such as James Franco's, it's even more enforced.
* In one Sylvester and Tweety cartoon, Sylvester is hiding in Granny's knitting basket, and his fur gets caught up in her knitting. Sylvester knits his fur back in place, along with Granny's scarf, and he ends up with multicolored checks on his bottom half. Upon seeing this, Granny cleans her glasses and blames her astigmatism.

* In one tale, the cosmic entity Kubik was educating the younger cosmic entity Kosmos on the structure of the universe by
* In one TELUS ad, Danny the TELUS installer is hooked up to a lie detector and asked about Optik TV. The test confirms that Danny is telling the truth about Optik TV.
* In one Thanksgiving episode, Robin (in her twenties) dated Bob (about forty). However, as Ted is telling the story, he pictures him much older and he's portrayed by Orson Bean who was 79.
* In one Thanksgiving episode Ross fails at a game of listing as many of the States as possible in one minute. He declares that he can get them all before dinner, and doesn't get any food until he's done. By 3AM he's so hungry he decides he no longer cares that his list is still one short and tucks into the leftovers.
* In one that flew completely under the radar, Old El Paso, a brand primarily known for making salsa, began advertising their "New and improved zesty flavor". What they really did was doubled the salt and nothing else. Please note: "zesty" is completely meaningless.
* In one three-part episode set in the future a mutagen bomb has gone off mutating everyone and making the world a
* In one time during the Battle of Waterloo, Cavalie Mercer, commanding a battery of British Horse Artillery cheered his men's morale by exchanging insults with a French skirmisher.
* In one timeline, KNYFE, after stealing a ship to pursue the retreating head of a marauding alien monster, enjoys the extraterrestrial lifestyle so much she makes it a full-time job.
* In one timeline, the Great Depression occurring in 1922 creates societal unrest that leads to a rebellion by an alliance of communists and Southern blacks. This "Revolutionary Front" eventually drives the federal government out of the continental US, leading to them ending up settled in Honolulu, from where they still run Hawaii, Alaska, and the overseas territories.
* In one timeline, the military forces in France's African colonies refused to accept the legitimacy of the Vichy regime, allowing for a new government to be set up based in Algiers, which persists to the present after the Axis and Allies negotiated a ceasefire that left the former in control of Europe. This government isn't an outright junta but is still heavily influenced by the military, which aims to one day retake France proper from German control.
* In one, titled "The Addams Family Hopper", the smell of Lurch's poop is so strong the paint peels off the bathroom wall, then Gomez farts so badly that the walls lose their plaster and Morticia
* In one Tom Chapin song, two girls tell the other kids not to play with Bruno because he's "a dweeb". When pressed for the definition of "dweeb", they define it as "like Bruno".
* In one TOS episode Uhura flirts with Spock, asking him what his planet looks like under a full moon.
* In one traditional Cree story, two children are being chased by the severed head of their mother, and they start a wildfire behind them to stop her. However, she rolls straight through the fire, and then they're being chased by the
* In one "Treehouse of Horror" episode, Bart and Lisa are sucked into an Itchy and Scratchy cartoon by a magic remote. They manage to escape, but Itchy and Scratchy follow... only to find that the "real world" is quite different from a cartoon world — for example, pets with all their bits aren't very tolerated.
* In one Treehouse of Horror segment, Mr Burns is a vampire and his mansion has a spiral staircase slide. Bart gets so much of a kick out of it that when they're trying to escape, after running up the stairs they had earlier slid down, upon seeing the leaver that turns them into the slide he says "I really shouldn't, but when will I get the chance again?" and proceeds to pull the leaver sliding himself and Lisa right back into Mr Burns' grasp.

* In one Treehouse of Horror wherein Homer travels through time, Kang and Kodos turn into Mr. Peabody and Sherman from
* In one Tums commercial, George gets heartburn from a chili dog pill with the works.
* In one "Turkey Day" bumper segment, Forrester actually tries out various responses to being called mad, like, "I'm MAD, damn you! MAD!" and "Mad? Why I've done things you've never even dreamed of!"
* In "One, Two, Buckle My Shoe", two girls are repeatedly shown playing hopscotch while singing the titular rhyme. However, their voices are dubbed over by grown women trying to sound like young children while also singing the rhyme in a slow and creepy manner (despite the girls clearly being cheerful on camera).
* In one two part episode, Kenny is killed as normal during the first part, then simply appears out of thin air during the second (getting the
* In one underground comic, the marriage of "Dino-Boy" (yes, he's a human with a dinosaur body, or a dinosaur with a human head) falls apart. They both hire lawyers — who happen to be partners, and they decide to milk both spouses for all they're worth.
* In one unique (and particularly harsh) example, the video for “I’ll Call Ya” by unknown girl group M.O.A was banned from broadcast due to
* In one Unova episode, the victims of having their memories altered by Beheeyem have their faces become Beheeyem-like.
* In one Valentine's Day ep, we see Ned serenade his wife, playing the ukulele wearing a heart-shaped costume:
* In one variant, if a registered organ donor's life is ever in jeopardy, then they will be murdered by doctors through substandard medical treatment, except doctors in the United States don't check donor status until an individual has been declared dead. Furthermore, the doctors treating the living and the transplant teams work independently from one another. And where are all the medical malpractice lawsuits alleging this urban legend? If it were true, then litigation lawyers would have fortunes to make.
* In one version of "Beginning to look a lot like Christmas", the second chorus of 'and mom and dad can hardly wait for school to start again' is immediately followed by the female backup singers doing a not quite sane laugh just like the parents finally snapping due to holiday stress.
* In one version of the fluff, whatever happened to end Rogal Dorn's life apparently left his hands behind, the skeletal remains of which have the names of various Imperial Fist champions etched (in minute detail) into them over the millennia.
* In one version of the Hyacinthus myth, his death isn't an accident. Zephyr grows jealous that Hyacinthus chose Apollo over him, and purposefully blew the discus off-course to hit him. Needless to say,
* In one version of this joke, the act is actually an elaborate group suicide, and the whole family dies.
* In one version, they first appeared as maggots in the corpse of Ymir, whose body was then made to form the Earth itself. In this light, the stated origin for the dwarves seems an appropriate metaphor, what with their penchant for tunneling and living beneath the surface of the Earth.
* In one "Veteranarian's Hospital" sketch, Dr. Bob declared his intention to take out a patient's snew. Earlier in the episode someone asked how to get to Carnegie Hall.
* In one video exercise for teaching French, two boys are talking with each other about a girl, whereupon one asks if she has a boyfriend, and the other gives a very flattering description the boyfriend, leading to this exchange.
* In one video game, Tidal Wave, a massive Decepticon who becomes an aircraft carrier
* In "One Way to Get Off", the detectives and Joan are interviewing a man in his home. Sherlock hears something, smashes down a (fake) wall, and reveals a woman the man had been holding

* In one webcomic about a place called Booger County, one of the residents goes to another state for college, and...this trope ensues.
* In one web game in which you throw water balloons on passers-by, if you hit a police car, the police show up to arrest you.
* In one which is an inversion, Irn-Bru has had "Original and Best" on its cans for years, but the formula has never been substantially changed. The reason for this is that it was the first and most prominent iron brew to be produced.
* In "One White Rose for Death", Jessica's friend in the British Secret Service scrambles to rescue a spy (the brother of an East German violinist) after his cover is blown.
* In one, Wontkins, who hates the coffee advertised, is hit by a regular pie by Wilkins the frog:
* In Online, cars both armed and armored are introduced in the Heists update. Specifically, we see an armored sport sedan (Karin Kuruma), an off-roader with a machine gun mounted on it (HVY Insurgent Pickup), and a pickup truck with a gun mounted in the bed (Karin Technical).
* In Online Multiplayer Games, cheaters are usually subtle so other players will not report them, and many cheaters, rather than winning too much, will stop cheating for a while so they don't get caught. But there's always that dumb cheater that does stuff like headshotting invisible players, leveling up too fast, and making high scores that you can't possibly achieve. And there's always games with little moderation where cheaters almost never get banned, and you can find cheaters that make no effort to hide it, like using invincibility hacks and then standing still while the other players repeatedly headshot them. Not to mention achievements unlocked at the exact same time when they have no business being able to do so.
* In "Only 2% Of Rape Accusations Are False???", he calmly breaks down the actual statistics behind this claim and the uncomfortable truth that in the vast majority of cases, there's no conclusive proof either way.
* In only the first season, for example, one of three Federal inmates in a prison van is murdered during transport to court in Manhattan, leading to NYPD detectives and FBI agents bickering over who has the jurisdiction to question the other two prisoners while the deceased is
* In on of the gaiden episodes of Season 14, one of the FUNHAUS Reds makes the suggestion of doing a "desert dance" to distract the Blood Gulch Blues, before demonstrating. A minute later, Caboose appears, summoned by the desert dance as it turns out.
* In Ontario, volumes of the edited version ranged from a G all the way up to a 14A rating, despite every episode of the show running with a C8 rating on television. The
* in on their spouse, since continuing to have sex would be evidence that the spouse condoned their affair.
* In open episode, Benny gets arrested for helping with a robbery thirty years ago. Because George wouldn't say anything to exonerate her, she shouts "I never want to see you again!" as she's is carried away by police. George responds by saying "But how are you going to get bail?", so she comes back in (with the officer still holding on to her) and says "I'll see you one last time!"
* In "Opening Day", Elan Oberon (Sally) was the girlfriend (later wife) of the director
* In "Opening Night", when the final scene of the big school play goes awry and leaves Fluttershy in an awkward position, either Sunset Shimmer, Applejack, or Twilight Sparkle needs to help her.
* In "Operation Anvil," Muttley rushes to catch a plummeting Dastardly with a bed mattress but he's a tad late—Dick bounces off the ground and lands on the mattress
* In "Operation: B.R.E.A.K.-U.P.", Numbuh Four's mother tells him that if he breaks one more vase, she will send him to a place even worse than military school:
* In "Operation Bumblebee, Part 2", when Agent Fowler contacts the Autobots' base to discuss MECH, the conversation is interrupted by Ratchet, who is currently recovering from stasis:

* In "Operation: B.U.T.T." after Numbuh One quits the team (for no apparent reason) his teammates are upset, confused, and in Numbuh Three's case, crying. Then they find out that the reason was that
* In Operation: C.A.K.E.D.T.W.O., where Numbuh 1 boards the Delightful Children's airship, only to find that it's a decoy, with Lizzie and four other kids posing as the Delightful Children:
* In "Operation Crumbcake", Adyson of the Fireside Girls gets caught in the mail system while looking for Isabella's letter that's being sent to Phineas.
* In "Operation: D.A.T.E.", the Delightful Children From Down The Lane hold a party, inviting every kid in town. They then lure the kids into having their photos taken, using the "camera" to brainwash them. When discovered by Numbuh One and Lizzie, the brainwashed victims all chant "Join us"
* In "Operation F.A.S.T.F.O.O.D.", Numbah 3 wants to lead a mission for her birthday. Because 3 is
* In "Operation: F.L.U.S.H." there's a coffee house that would seem just like Starbucks if not for the fact that it was villain-exclusive.
* In Operation Gnomeregan, the players encounter a sergeant who drills them in certain emotes. He gives the standard insulting introduction but who drops the Drill Sergeant Nasty mannerisms after that.
* In "Operation M.O.V.I.E.", this is done when an usher takes Numbuh 4 away for sneaking into an R-rated movie.
* In "Operation Noselift," Hawkeye introduces his friend Stash to Frank (Stash is a cosmetic surgeon who is there to operate on a soldier's nose but Frank doesn't know it).
* In "Operation: P.O.O.L.", the villain often threatens to send people to work in the broccoli mines.
* In "Operation: R.E.C.E.S.S.", salad oil is discovered under the school playground and so the adults transform the playground into an oil field and force the kids to work there during recess. After the KND sabotage the adult's plans to sell the oil, the playground is returned to normal,
* In "Operation U.N.C.O.O.L." had a part where Numbuh 2 asks one of the nerds what he's done with the other operatives- we then see those operatives strapped to a chair forced to watch a
* Inopportune Voice Cracking: Puberty causes a character's voice to crack, squeak, and deepen.
* Inopportune Voice Cracking: Puberty causes your voice to sound funny.
* In opposition to the style of the trope type, it did appear that there is lots of work and effort being put into building and strengthening these friendships, since she's not the main character, it's not been focused on though.
* In "Option Two," the alien Confederacy assaults the Lighthouse, teleporting a group of
* In Oran "Juice" Jones' "The Rain", he kicks his girlfriend out after finding her cheating. Beforehand, he took all the money out the bank, cancelled the credit cards he gave her, and took back the clothes he gave her.
* In oratorios, however (basically operas without sets or costumes and meant for church), the parts of God and Jesus were often sung by basses.
* In "Orbit", Avon tries to airlock Vila when they're both stuck on an escape pod that
* In order, Alvin, Theodore, Simon and Dave stand on each others shoulders in
* In Order of Disappearance has a Serbian crime syndicate in Norway, who get into a mob war with the local Norwegian crime organization when the son of the former's boss is assassinated.
* In Order of Disappearance, Nils Dickman works his way up the chain of the drug gang that murdered his son. Three consecutive mooks, having had the identity of the next guy up the chain beaten out of them, try to salvage their egos by threatening Nils' life, whereupon he kills each one and dumps the body in a remote mountain river, never to be found.
* In order, there's Finn's mom and Kurt's dad getting together, Rachel and Puck hook up once again (as well as the

* In order to actually dig to China, one would have to start in Argentina or Chile.
* In order to afford all of these cool toys, travel to glamorous locations, and otherwise generally live the high life, he may be a member of the
* In order to avoid this trope, Yoh's name was changed to Yuu in the Spanish version of
* In order to bail Ted from investigation for fraud, Skyler persuades Saul to give him some of Walt's drug money using his "Great Aunt Brigitte" inheritance. Ted ruins it by leasing an expensive Mercedes as well as attempting to re-open Beneke Fabricators, which tips off the IRS.
* In order to be able to both do his school teaching duties and go through a
* In order to become a Core Pattern Item, a Major Pattern Item must have existed for at least a year and a day.
* In order to become an Avatar for any Entity, you have to literally die
* in order to capture him after he is read a letter from his father, Prince Elfangor.
* In order to combat fully-cyborg individuals (like the protagonists), paramilitary organizations in
* In order to concentrate on the main love triangle, the musical version of
* In order to construct the Panama Canal, US President Theodore Roosevelt encouraged the Panamanians to revolt against their Colombian rulers, promising assistance from the US Navy. The rebellion was successful mainly because USS
* In order to counter the allegedly less-than-flattering portrayal that the 1996 film adaptation of
* In order to counter the misconception that rock music and conservatism are wholly incompatible, the magazine
* in order to defeat their enemies, sometimes spending no more than a couple of seconds before transforming again.
* In order to dispose of the Venom sample and Carnage (not at the same time), Peter drops them down a smoke-stack.
* In order to distinguish it from the generic "coke", the South has since developed the colloquialism "co-cola" when you're specifically talking about Coca-Cola.
* In order to emulate the comic series on which it was based, gibs were used in
* In order to ensure humanity's continued survival, every year the Organization must
* In order to escape, they must drive a car through the window at just the right time so that the explosion propels them to the next building.
* In order to finally pacify the Ironborn, the royalist forces which invade the Iron Islands during the Greyjoy Rebellion
* In order to get enough A.I. to properly test (they were only provided with one), they tortured it until it * in order to get Michael to pick up the gun. Michael realizes he did this right after he returns fire.
* In order to get out of Kureha's extortionate medical bills, Cross makes a deal with her that if he can get the armory open, without using the key that Luffy destroyed in his fight with Wapol, without leaving his bed, within five minutes, she'll cancel all of the payments, let them go,
* In order to get the highest possible scores, you need to enable Rank Mode, which gives you a
* In order to get the then-broke/starving Endorsi to sign Hatz's friendship list, Bam provides an
* In order to give their staff some time off, some networks will play a video of a
* In order to head off accusations of slut-shaming for the show's annual "Hookerween" special, Nash explained that they aren't making fun of women who choose to wear sexy Halloween costumes, but rather the very concept of the
* In order to help her colleagues with the NYPD, Beckett goes against her Federal partner McCord and provides the press with an anonymous tip. McCord later tells her that she thinks Beckett did the right thing, but their superiors disagree, and Beckett is fired.

* In order to help Martin win a competition with Carolyn, Douglas, who had previously agreed not to tell Martin the correct answers, has to resort to this. And since it's Martin, some of those hints are very blatant.
* In order to hide their naturally blonde hair, Kaunians in Harry Turtledove's
* In order to illustrate the roughness of the frontier and to cement the heroic status of the title character in the
* In order to justify some of his later, softer technologies, Heinlein came up with the phlebotinum of Shipstones, basically awesome batteries that recharge themselves using cosmic radiation, invented by a guy named Shipstone. There are plans, there was a prototype, and there aren't just back-ups, they're produced on an assembly line! However, the process for how they're made is a closely guarded secret (the inventor didn't even patent the technology, as that would require putting schematics on public record) so that he can maintain a monopoly, and somehow no one can reverse engineer them (they tend to explode if anyone tries).
* In order to keep a Pokémon Center running during a blackout, Brock is trying to power up a generator using a bicycle. Twice, he gets too exhausted, until Nurse Joy urges him to do his best (and he imagines her in
* in order to keep him from dying completely, his soul was bound to the closest substitute in the immediate vicinity his body.
* In order to keep Lavan sane and his Firestarting talent under control, Kalira needed to lifebond to Lavan as well as the normal Companion-Herald bond. When Elenor developed a crush on Lavan, this trope ensued.
* In order to keep the some of the cast still in high school past graduation,
* In order to keep up the ruse that she's a Baroness with a child, Claudette Colbert's character has to pretend to talk to her on the phone. Of course, no one is on the other line. One of the funniest scenes from the film,
* In order to keep up with changing American trends, the comic added some ethnic characters in the 70's: African-Americans Coach Clayton, his son Chuck (who, like many Africans of the day, sported a righteous 'fro), and Chuck's girlfriend Nancy, as well as the Hispanic Frankie Valdez and his girlfriend Maria. As of 2010, the former three continue to appear quite regularly (and Chuck has naturally lost the 'fro). The latter two,
* In order to keep up with him, the rest of the cast, as well. However, Lupin is the best. Everyone else has had their disguises fail utterly at one time or another. Lupin
* In order to kill Duke Paolo Ortega, both in retaliation for an offscreen attack in the previous book and because he
* in order to lower their opponents' expectations, then catch them off guard by pulling off advanced techniques.
* In order to make Battleworld, Doom killed the Beyonders, who were able to kill every cosmic entity in every universe.
* in order to make him escort her son Damian to Batman while she betrays her father.
* In order to make his ex-wife jealous, Jack has Liz pretend to be his girlfriend. This, of course, in an early episode where there was UST.
* In order to make his favorite magazine legal, the Hippy from Hell in
* In order to make sure Sapphiron couldn't break free from his weakening powers, Arthas in
* In order to make up for Bretonnia’s somewhat limited unit choice in the tabletop material, CA ended up flat-out inventing a number of units, such as footsquires, holy water trebuchets and hippogriff knights, to fill out its roster and make it more competitively viable.
* in order to not push the limits of the Comics Code too far as a necessary step of returning Black Talon's unwilling superpowered zombie servants to rest after feeding them salt.
* In order to permanently destroy a zombie and set its soul free to go to its destination, it must be burned to ashes and buried in consecrated ground.
* In order to protect himself from Homer, Bart hid behind a sign reading "Report Child Abuse".

* In order to protect themselves from a pissed off attacker, Keima pretends to be Tenri's lover in
* In order to qualify for advertising awards, it had to be shown in 1983, so Apple ran it beforehand locally on some tiny local outlets on the last commercial break before the new year so almost no one would see it except a few hundred to a few thousand who lived within the broadcast area of that one small station.
* In order to reach the Devil to strike the deal in the first place, Tonin had to, once again, outsmart the spirit. The spirit was unwilling to help Tonin in any way other than doing his job (answering questions). Tonin then asked if he'd make a good deal with the Devil. Since the only way to know was having Tonin meet the Devil, the spirit had no choice but to take Tonin to hell. Also, when Tonin proposed the deal to the Devil, Tonin offered his "
* In order to reply directly to a message in Facebook's Whats App mobile app, you need to drag it towards the
* In order to restore Jason to the throne of Iolcus, Medea tricked Jason's cousins, the daughters of his evil, usurping uncle Pelias into murdering their father. She did this by performing a magical ritual where she slaughtered a decrepit old ram, cut it into bloody pieces, and placed the remains into a boiling cauldron, whereupon a young, frisky lamb leaped out. Thinking that Medea would restore their father's youth and vitality, the girls eagerly butchered their father and dumped his remains into Medea's cauldron, only for Medea to not cast the spell again at Jason's behest (and horror).
* In order to save colony survivor Newt, Ellen Ripley straps an automatic pulse rifle/grenade launcher combo to a flamethrower
* In order to scare criminals into compliance, he staged "mock hangings" that may have contributed to his reputation. Basically, he took a sentenced criminal, usually drunk from free rounds at his saloon, set up the gallows, and then conveniently "let" the criminal escape right as they were about to hang. If he ever saw them again, he'd pretend he forgot all about it unless they committed another crime. He was well-known for never having sentenced any criminal to prison; most criminals were either sentenced to do odd jobs in town, work in Bean's saloon for a few years, or pillory them in the hot sun from dawn till dusk.
* In order to stop Dr. Gearck’s conquest of the entire world with the power of the evil gears called the “Warugiano” in the
* In order to stop Ranma from trying out for the role of Romeo, Happōsai covered him in chains, encased him in concrete, and buried him in the yard. Later, Ranma very casually
* In order to teleport someone, Obito must lay a hand on them. Teleportation is fairly quick, with only instantaneous abilities like Flying Thunder God able to evade it.
* In order to turn the Rolls-Royce Phantom into "the ultimate luxury car", BMW was considering fitting it with a 9.0 V16 engine. However, such a car would be too expensive and complicated for production. The only prototypes known to the public were the ones starring in
* in order to win awards. Even youth-oriented awards shows like the Teen Choice Awards (whose 2017 ceremony was held the day after the violent protests in Charlottesville) and the Kids Choice Awards (whose 2018 ceremony took place the day of the March For Our Lives protest) got in on the act. In addition, the 2017-18 awards season was marked by the sex scandals that hit the film, television and music industries. Many celebrities, who previously tried to be very quiet about their politics beyond showing support for some associations linked to either party, were more explicit about those beliefs than before.
* In Oregon, Angela McAnulty tortured and starved her teenage daughter, Jeanette, to death in 2009. She was sentenced to death.
* In "Orgy Pants to Work", Maze joins Linda at birth class which has them watching a video of a woman giving birth. Linda stares in horror while Maze again munches on popcorn. Presumably even the pain of childbirth doesn't match the torments of Hell! Or maybe one of the torments is to give birth...

* In "O.R.", Hawkeye notes that Trapper didn't return to their tent the previous night and inquires as to where he ended up instead. Trapper's response: "Ten bucks to anyone who can tell me." Hawkeye then makes reference to Trapper trying to
* In Original Generation Gaiden, first we have Folka's Iadabaoth which one move start with
* In Original Generation Gaiden, when Ryusei asks him a name for his new move, he dubs it
* In Original mode, your multiplier builds up as you destroy enemy waves. However, for each enemy that escapes, your multiplier decreases by one. If you die, you also suffer the same penalty...but during the time it takes for your ship to respawn, a whole wave of enemies may leave the screen, and depending on how high your multiplier is that means five to ten past minutes of hard work thrown completely out the window.
* In "Origin Of Species," a group of students is brought to the future
* In "origins", Strong Bad suggests that Strong Sad received his navel because of a new drill that Young Strong Bad received for his birthday.
* In Origins, the guild called The Mages' Collective can be this. While their primary goal is to support mages, Circle or Apostate alike, they maintain a hard distinction between Apostates and Maleficarum, and you can take on missions from them requiring you to kill blood mages or cultist groups. As well as this, they are aware that they sometimes require
* In Ork society, the pint-sized Gretchin are treated as little more than gum on the shoe of their bigger, Orky brethren. Unless they undergo a transformation into a
* In "Orla's Birthday", Oswald tells Omar about Odd Squad's Great Cake Wars back in ancient times, which Orla fought in and lived through. The illustration presented during his explanation depicts a bunch of bakers jumping out of a cake, targeting the Sprinkle Queen.
* In "Orpheus", Carter picks apart the poor planning on the part of the aliens in
* In "Orpheus" Lorne sings to an unconscious Faith, who hears the song in a dream she's having, playing on a jukebox.
* In Orthodox Judaism, it is not kosher for a man to touch a menstruating woman — even his wife — until her period is over and she's been ritually cleansed by bathing in a mikveh. Naturally, this means one or the other can't sleep in the bed. Which one departs is supposed to be up to the couple. Most contemporary Orthodox Jewish couples simply use
* In "Osama Bin Laden Has Farty Pants" in a shout out to "Russian Rhapsody" as mentioned above after getting blown up by a stick of dynamite his teeth play like piano keys and he say "Terrorists is the cwasiest peoples".
* In "Oscar of All Trades", when Owen, Oren and Octavia ask Oscar to fix their gadgets and place them in his arms, Ms. O interrupts them with an "Everyone,
* Inose and Kurosaki wear hoodies instead of the mandatory shirts, vests or sweaters.
* Ino-Shikamaru-Chouji is a better fit. They've been best friends for so long (since before they became ninjas), Chouji is able to pick up Shikamaru's strategies and prepare well before anyone else, Shikamaru knows just how to set up Ino's powers, and likewise Ino knows how to cover Chouji's weak points. By the time of the 4th Ninja World War, the trio's practically invincible.
* In "Osmosis", Logan's healing factor will not save him from Jubilee's ramblings.
* Inosuke is motivated by the death of his parents at the hands of Douma, Zenitsu eventually gets serious in his duties as a Demon Slayer once he hears his master committed suicide, Sanemi is motivated to exterminate Muzan and co. cause he turned his mother leading to deaths in his family, Shinobu is motivated by the death of her sister at the hands of Douma, Gyomei is motivated by the deaths of his students, Mitsuri is motivated by the death of her parents, Muichiro is motivated by the death of his younger brother, Giyuu is motivated by the deaths of his sister and his best friend, Obanai is motivated by the death of his family, Tengen is motivated by the deaths of his siblings and Kagaya is motivated by the deaths of his ancestors due to Muzan cursing the family. This is ultimately why all of them join to kill Muzan, because he's the source of all the tragedies in the series.

* In "Oswald in the Machine", Oswald delivers one to the leader of the robots working inside the factory just before the agent zaps it with the rescued Float-inator. It's quite awesome to see, considering he is the
* In Otaria, the Cabal replaces severed limbs with new ones, albeit usually involving some level of
* In other bits of background fluff, this is why the Imperial Guard tries (unsuccessfully) to adopt a standardized uniform across the countless regiments raised from across the galaxy - there have been occasions when two loyalist forces ended up fighting because they looked so different, each assumed the other was the enemy (the "standard" green uniform is originally Cadian, with most regiments following their example).
* In other cases it may be perfectly justified. As an example, fully functional refrigerators from the 50's and 40's are still widely available due to what may be superior construction vs modern designs. While they may be less energy-efficient than the modern competition, it can be argued that the extra electricity costs are more than offset by not having to replace expensive parts (or entire units) on a regular basis.
* In other cases the trope is averted. If the place they are posted to is relatively safe, they can bring their family with them. After all, "cover" basically means lying about one's job—the vast majority of agents make absolutely no attempt to hide their
* In other countries, it includes such names as Spherovite, Isopor and Styropor.
* In "other days", Strong Bad answers an email from a Polish viewer asking him "Please to be untieing that shoelace on the back of your head."
* In other election news, a lizard-suit wearing Homer Simpson seems well positioned to win a mayor recall election to replace Quimby, since no one else seems to be good enough. The suit turns out to be his downfall when it shrinks in the wash, and suddenly no one likes him, and since no one gets enough of the vote, Quimby stays in office.
* In other episodes, he did "cheat" at horse races on a limited basis, just so he could pay the bills.
* In other episode, there was The Meat Locker, a club owned by a mobster. (It was actually a lot better than its name made it sound.)
* In other Getter Robo media, some of their transformations are justifiably uninterrupted because they either make use of obstructions to combine outside of the enemies' field of vision, or because they have become skilled enough to combine their Getter Machines at extremely high speeds, faster than their foes can track accurately.
* In other instances, he manages to stop himself just before pulling a classic supervillain move. In one scene, he's being laughed at by some prison guards, which gets him so annoyed he begins to retort by saying "You won't be laughing when I..." Then he stops, and chides himself for always giving away his master plan.
* In other languages, such as LISP, the preferred convention is caravan-case, as LISP does not use infix syntax (thus freeing the hyphen), and caravan-case is generally seen as easier to read
* In other levels in the game, there's a massive wall between the start and finish line, with the majority of the level in a cave underneath it. Which means anyone with the P Wing can just fly straight up, right over the wall and down to the finish block.
* In other Mario games, Bowser's size changes virtually every second or third game. One time the issue of the floor breaking beneath was during the final battle of
* In other novels sky colors are occasionally mentioned. Not a color as such, but it's said that Coruscant, with all that pollution, has an unbelievably beautiful sunset.
* In "Other Olympia", main-character Olympia ends up losing her cool at Odal (called Olympia prior to this episode) when the latter steals the former's cake slice. Fed up with their names being the same, main-character Olympia goes to confront her, and when it's made clear that Odal isn't leaving Odd Squad, she declares a name-off and attempts to fight to keep her name.

* In "Other Olympia", Odal — renamed from Olympia after the name-off competition — harbors no ill feelings towards the main character Olympia when Coach O names her the winner, instead congratulating her with a handshake.
* In "Other Olympia", the Olympia from "Assistant's Creed" refers to the main character Olympia by the titular nickname, as well as by "Triple O". Ms. O also refers to her as "Other Olympia", which she is forced to do because former-assistant Olympia is main-character Olympia's senior. However, the affection is one-sided, as main-character Olympia doesn't want to be referred to as anything other than...well, Olympia.
* In other segments, he's had suits tailored for specific purposes, like one with a hoodie for his
* In other shows, expect Wolvie vs. Sabes to always come down to wrestling matches in which claws never connect with flesh.
* In other SRW titles, the party gets dedicated heal/resupply units, like
* In other stories it's used for effect rather than to hide the twist; for instance, the well-known story
* In other strips, he's forced to watch boring shows like "The History of Norwegian Flowerpots", because the remote is lost, doesn't work, or he's just too lazy to reach it.
* In other tales, Lugh joined the Tuatha Dé Danann because while the gods had a master smith, warrior, bard, sorcerer, and harper, they did not have among their number someone who excelled in them all
* In other versions, Miku was either awakened early or never drugged. In these versions, Kaito corners her and hesitates or at least ties her up before the scene pans away.
* In other versions, the thing left inside the box was the ability to foresee misfortune (the opposite of hope, in other words) or else that hope would have been a terrible evil had it been released, but a force for good since it remains inside.
* In Other Waters follows a xenobiologist exploring the oceans of the exoplanet Gliese 667 Cc, documenting its many bizarre species. Their notes, unlocked via observing creatures and collecting samples to analyze, go into quite a bit of detail regarding the anatomy, ecology and behavior of the local wildlife.
* In other words: a traveling theatrical troupe is visiting, and they would be disappointed if you didn't show some hospitality and extend a warm welcome to make your guests feel right at home.
* In other words, a Utilitarian judges things as good or bad based on whether they make people more or less happy.
* In other words, Gunnerkrigg Court supports technology and freely uses it, while it tries to deny or at least hide things that it cannot explain with technology. A major theme in
* In other words, imagine you take two cards: the ace of spades and the ace of diamonds. You shuffle them, give one to your friend, then fly to the other side of the solar system. By looking at your card you know instantaneously what card she had (because it needs to be the opposite of yours), but no information was transmitted.
* In other words, merely being silent doesn't invoke the right to remain silent, since voluntarily and knowingly remaining silent constitutes a waiver of the right to remain silent, and a suspect has to invoke one's Fifth Amendment rights orally and unambiguously in order to properly remain silent.
* In other words, no matter how hard you work you can't earn your way to Heaven. This sounds pretty bad at first, until you realize that Paul's meaning in this is that because
* In other words, not so much repudiated as saying, "It isn't for you to exact yourself, but a judge. And you may be better off waiting for The Judge, i.e., God." Also, the repayment of an eye is not itself an eye, but the
* In other words, the best NCO candidate has enough sense to make sure he or she has correctly received an order (especially when it makes no sense), and having

* In other words, the experiment was a bust simply because NASA - being NASA, who invented
* In other works in the 40K universe, an Inquisitor's rossette is possibly one of the most dangerous objects in the galaxy. Mainly because it gives them the authority to do pretty much anything they like up to and including forcing entire armies and fleets under their direct command or blowing up entire planets. This said, most of them are actually pretty careful in how they exercise such power.
* In Oto x Maho, Kanata imposes a race against the clock on HIMSELF, transforming to start fighting, then telling the student council president on the other side of the door to the roof to count to 10, then open the door. If he does not kill the enemy in 10 seconds, then transform back to his normal form, his job as a
* Inoue Miyako is pretty handy with computers — and for that matter, anything technological — but tends to be a fiery
* Inoue's co-star Ryouta Murai got this quite literally. As a child he was a huge fan of
* Inoue, the titular father of the main character is a 38 year-old man, yet looks like a little girl.
* In "Our A-Story is a D-Story", he deduces that BoJack stole the D from the Hollywood sign by following a series of clues, using deduction, puzzle-solving skills, and forensics...and the fact that BoJack left him a drunk voicemail saying that he did it.
* In "Our Dearest Blood", the Rigellians are physically identical to humans.
* In "Our Mrs. Reynolds," Saffron makes a point of cooking delicious meal for Mal who
* In "Our Neighbor's House", the girls' father leaves for the woods to go hunting, instructing that they leave for their neighbor's house if he doesn't come back in three days.
* "In Our Own Image": An android programmed to be a soldier who wants to live a life of peace escapes from the lab and gets a ride from a random lady he carjacks. She helps him escape and attempt to get the items he needs to remove his safeguards and be free. At the last second before he's truly free, she reveals she was one of his programmers and shuts him down. She wanted to see what he could do before she stopped him. Unfortunately for her and humanity, he had identified her beforehand, turns himself back on, kills her, and starts a robot uprising. This may also count as him giving a
* In "Our Selena is Dying", Debra Brockman, who is in her late 20s, has her * in our world. His ability to thus notice the remaining animal features of transformed spirits is what drives the plot, and allows him to effectively fight the evil spirits...
* In "Out and Out Rout", Wile E. Coyote sets up a glue trap which he gets stuck in and gets flattened by a steamroller.
* In "Out in a Limo", Lincoln wins a free limo ride for a day and begins to act like a stuck-up jerk after hanging out with a rich guy all day.
* In Outland, Hellfire Peninsula is a shattered, dusty battlefield whose wildlife is universally violent, predatory and often demonically possessed. Flames erupt from hellish chasms, undead soldiers roam the ruins of their fortresses, the only water available is from swamps of mutated poison slimes, and one of the major local landmarks is the Path of Glory, a road the Horde made from the bones of slain Draenei.
* In "Out of Gas" it's revealed that Mal bought Serenity from a literal
* In "Out of Gas", the gang makes an entire birthday cake for Simon out of protein. They try to make it mock chocolate-y.
* In "Out of Skin" a woman living alone in the woods discovers a pit with at least half a dozen bodies in it. The next day, where the pit was a strange new tree is growing,
* In "Out of the Eons'', a Gardner F. Fox "Niall of the Far Travels" short story, the evil deity Adonair has wide fire-red eyes.
* In "Out of the Frying Pan", after their youngest child Baby Sinclair proves to be a popular advertising mascot for frying pans, Fran becomes obsessed with making

Baby a star. Earl's warnings of valuing Baby's success as a star over living a decent life aren't heeded until Fran eventually has an
* In "Out of the Picture", Liam claims that there was a boy named Marty Malach who wasn't in the yearbook, so he's now forgotten and lives behind his barn. It's unclear if this is true, or if it's just a sort of
* In Outsiders Miss Martian is the charismatic leader of the team, acting as sort of a
* In "Out to Launch", all of Phineas and Ferb's attempts at simulating a rocket launch end in catastrophic failure until Ferb points out that their equation includes them dividing by the square root of a
* In "Out with the Old Characters", Dr. Whooves says he changed his name to Time Turner to comply with copyright.
* In OVA 2, Ceilia gets jealous when she catches Takeru fondling Ms. Aki and uses her Inversion ability to change him into a girl. When he regains consciousness and realizes
* In "Over a Barrel", Fluttershy mentions how she'd like to be a tree, which
* In over half the seasons, Rupaul brings back either a queen who was eliminated earlier in the season, a queen from an earlier season, or in some cases, both. In fact, at this point it's no longer even a surprise to bring back
* In "Over Logging", Randy has gone for weeks without masturbating to internet porn, eventually near the end he sneaks into the camp's computer room, looks at a bunch of perverted things, and eventually ejaculates all over the room, everyone comes in thinking he was grunting in pain and with his pants down, he tells them that he was doing that because "a ghost was attacking him and left his ectoplasm everywhere".
* In "Over the Hill", when Pooh prepares to go on an adventure, he carries things like
* In Overwatch's Animated Short "Honour and Glory", two German soldiers are
* In "Over Your Ed", Edd is counting grains of sugar to add to their energy drinks. He asks Eddy to help him. While Edd is looking away, Eddy adds one full bag of sugar into the energy drink. The end result? The energy drink has tons of sugar in it (unbeknown to Edd), Edd tastes tests it and goes hyper due to sugar rush.
* I Now Pronounce You Chuck and Larry (2007) features this trope as its central concept. Two men that aren't gay get gay-married for health insurance.
* I Now Pronounce You Chuck and Larry, anyone who disagrees with gay marriage (or homosexuality in general) is noticeably unattractive. Watch again and you'll see. Characters who are borderline attractive are also on the fence regarding gay rights, and invariably back up the titular couple in the end. Obviously, this isn't so much "good and evil" as it is "backing up our message with visual cues," but still.
* I Now Pronounce You Chuck and Larry. Bonus points for Kevin James wearing a fireman's hat.
* I Now Pronounce You Chuck and Larry, but they're interrupted by the fire station bell going off. The second time, Chuck and Larry are about to kiss during the deposition when the Fire Captain bursts into the room.
* I Now Pronounce You Chuck and Larry (gay supporting characters; subject matter inlcudes homophobia, coming out story, gay marriage)
* I Now Pronounce You Chuck and Larry has a scene where Alex and her gay brother are guessing who of the titular duo is Femme and who is the Butch, which for them apparently is the same as Bottom and Top.
* I Now Pronounce You Chuck and Larry, which tries the task of being pro gay rights and one big gay joke at the same time
* Ino Yamanaka, similarly to Naruto, can be very smart when she wants, given that she was the one who concluded that Pain's real body must be around the village for his technique to work during the latter's invasion.
* In pagan, medieval and Early Modern Europe (and also in North America) 'thunderstones' were occasionally unearthed: peculiar looking stones that were thought to be literally fallen thunder. They were believed to have magical properties due to being associated with thunder gods, and were used in amulets and other magic. In Scandinavia they might even be worshipped as household gods. As it turns out, the people who found these stones were half right in believing there was no way the stones could look this way through nature; while some of them were likely fossils, many of these weird stones were indeed not natural: they were neolithic stone tools.

* in page six of the comic by showing up out of nowhere to decapitate the helmeted stranger, bursting out of a portal in Allison's dorm room to do so.
* In Pain And Blood: Aksel killed his father but made it look as if he died of his bear attack injuries, instead of poisoning.
* In Pain And Blood: There's a ten year age gap between Elsa and her husband. It's mentioned that the gap is unusual but Elsa is attracted to Halvard's maturity.
* In "Pain King vs. Cleopatra" Kim and Ron are fleeing from an ominous mob in an alley only to reveal that they're attending a wrestling promo event at the mall.
* In "Pain Strikes Underdog", the conveyor belt is part of a candle-making machine that the villain Riff-Raff is using to disguise stolen swords as candles; in this case, both victims are bound with the wicks and hardened wax, the wick cutter intended to be used like a guillotine. (It even
* In "Painted Ladies", the male characters are surprised to learn even respectable women visit the cosmetician; the times are changing.
* In "Painting the Town," Yang returns to Junior's club, only to be greeted with several guns, since she was so violent the last time. A volume later, in "Fall," Yang is surrounded by guns because she was being violent.
* in pain whereas normally taking hits in VR was more an annoyance than anything else and the same had become true for being devirtualized by that point.)
* In Pakistan, spiders trying to escape floodwaters were driven into trees, creating
* In "Paladin of the Lost Hour", Billy Kinetta is a Vietnam vet who is haunted by the fact that a Marine whom he didn't even know died saving his life while he was hiding from the Viet Cong during an ambush in Da Nang.
* In "Paladin of the Lost Hour", Billy Kinetta refers to Gaspar as "Dad" before he learns his name. He continues to call him that as a sign of affection after they get to know each other.
* In "Paladin of the Lost Hour", there is a more than thirty year age gap between Gaspar and Billy Kinetta but they quickly become very close friends.
* In "Paladin of the Lost Hour", two members of a youth gang mug Gaspar while he is visiting his wife Minna's grave but Billy Kinetta manages to fight them off before Gaspar is badly hurt.
* In paleontology, "zombie taxon" is the term for an extinct species for which fossils dating from an earlier period have been displaced into a more-recent geological context (e.g. if a trilobite fossil from the Permian erodes out of a rock face in the Cretaceous, lands on a dead dinosaur, and is found among the dinosaur's bones in the present).
* In "Pandemic" and "Pandemic 2: The Startling", Craig is dragged along on the boy's adventure, and gets stranded with them in Peru. They find ancient ruins
* In Paolo Bacigalupi's story "The People of Sand and Slag," posthuman cyborgs who mutilate themselves for fun inhabit a ravaged wasteland of a world where no normal organic creatures can survive. One day they miraculously discover a sickly old-style dog, and keep it as a pet for a short time —
* In "Papa Has a Rollin' Son", when Joe starts to cry, Peter says he'll start crying. Then he cries this way, saying, "I cry like Snoopy!"
* In "Paperino e la card mania", Donald accidentally talks Scrooge into a business decision that ruins the market of telephone card collecting. In the final panel, Donald is chased by furious collectors and quips that, for once, it's not Scrooge chasing him.
* In "Parade", his attempt to cop off with a barmaid by using his Falklands story is ruined by Eddie ("This is all a load of bollocks") and an
* In "Paradise Lost" Sisko walks into the office of the Admiral who planned a military coup (and was also Sisko's former captain), yanks the combadge off at phaserpoint, and says that he has come to ask the Admiral for his "resignation".

When the coup is stopped, the Admiral finishes the job by laying his rank bars on the table. Again, as combadges are both communicators and tracking devices, and Sisko was essentially holding Layton hostage, this was as much pragmatic as it was symbolic.
* In Paradox Development Studio's Grand Strategy Games, the focus is on the Strategy side, as the outcome of battles and even wars are often predictable once they begin. What matters is your preexisting ability to mobilise and supply your troops, and an outnumbered or unprepared army often doesn't stand a chance.
* In Paragon Tier, Gibnaf is slowly becoming Unscrupulous. To the point that the other players begin tracking up his 'anti-hero points.'
* In paranormal stories of Shadow People (or, alternatively, Shadow Men) a commonly reported apparition is called the Hat Man, because of a fedora-style hat that he is reported to wear.
* In "Parent Teacher Night", an ad for aspirin GIR watches features a guy whose back gives out, causing him to yell "
* In part 11 of the Curse of Strahd replay, the werewolf Emil plans to build an army of werewolves against Strahd by attacking the town of Vallaki and turning all of its inhabitants. It is subsequently pointed out that his plan is doomed to fail on
* In Part 1, Apollo 15 can be seen launching on TV during Ryan's 11th birthday party (July 26th, 1971).
* In Part 1, Dio Brando pretty much ignores the fact that he's been vertically sliced in half for nearly a whole chapter. Once he gets the opportunity to
* In Part 1, it is to kill Dio (who is an evil vampire) and destroy the
* In Part 1, Lisa (recently promoted to station manager) gets sick of Bill constantly doing as he pleases, which Dave can relate to. They get the idea to make Bill boss—assuming he'll do an awful job and learn a lesson. Instead, he proves to be a magnificent boss, everything runs perfectly for the first time ever, and he abdicates his position after rubbing Dave and Lisa's noses in it.
* In part 1 of the Season 8 premiere "School Daze", this was done three times in a row in the "School of Friendhip" song; first by a random mare, second by Sandbar, and third by Twilight.
* In Part 1, President Richard Nixon is seen declaring his intention to travel to communist China in 1972 - the speech was made on July 15th, 1971.
* In Part 1, When Ryan leaves for boarding school, a newspaper article announcing the end of the Attica Prison Riot can be seen at Baltimore station - the riot was quelled on September 13th, 1971.
* In Part 1, Zeppeli explains that this is sort of how his Zoom Punch works: he temporarily dislocates his arm to extend the range of his punch, while using
* In Part 2, it is to kill the Pillar Men, the creators of the Stone Mask, and to stop them from obtaining the Red Stone of Aja.
* In part 2 of "Snow Wade and the 77 Dwarves", Roy is refusing to kiss Snow Wade so she wakes up, but then reads the story and is happy to do it because he learned he gets "20 million gazortniks".
* In part 2 of the 2001-3 Christmas trilogy, Del Boy and Rodney decide to give their beloved Uncle Albert a burial at sea, by scattering his ashes from the boat they were on (Albert was, before, during and after the war at separate points in the past in both the Merchant and Royal Navy). After doing so, they notice Rodney's wife Cassandra's contraceptive tablets at the bottom of the urn, where Del Boy's son Damien had hidden them as a joke, resulting in Cassandra getting pregnant while they were all dirt poor. As well as desecrating his great uncles ashes, Damien also
* In part 2 of the manga, Ganondorf says these words after being defeated by Link for the first time:
* In Part 2, when Andy is trying to show his mom the haunted voice that came from the basement closet:
* In Part 2, when Joseph knocks out some Nazi guards to infiltrate a base in Mexico, they cry out "TACOS!"